Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that it shouldn't. However, we live in a day and age when those who want to rid the world of resource development will use just about any kind of an incident to play up a situation. I think what we have to put into context is that we have literally millions of barrels of oil leaving this province every day by pipeline, and the incidents are very few and far between, as this one was. So I don't see an impact in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Corporate Tax Advantage for American Companies

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. American companies operating in Alberta not only pay Alberta and federal income tax but American corporate tax as well. This is because of a tax treaty which subjects Canadian earnings of American companies to U.S. taxes if the tax rate in Canada is lower than the rate in the U.S.A. The difference in tax rates is then pocketed by the U.S. Treasury. My first question is to the minister of finance, please. How much corporate income tax is paid to the U.S. Treasury by companies operating in Alberta due to this treaty arrangement?

Mr. Snelgrove: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I don't have that number at my hand.

Mr. MacDonald: That's unfortunate given the billion-dollar deficits that this government has racked up.

Now, if this is such a significant transfer, as is reported in the media, how much, again, in Canadian dollars is being collected by the U.S. Treasury that should remain in this country and in this province?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we'll be happy to get correspondence from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Besides looking at other loopholes that corporations use, we are engaged with the federal government in trying to recover money that's wrongly run through offshore companies. It's an ongoing process. I'm happy to get information from the hon. member and follow it up.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the record that was in the Globe and Mail last week. [interjections] Of course it's true.

Again to the minister of finance: will the minister order the finance department to look into ways to close this giveaway to Uncle Sam and put an end to this voluntary equalization that Al-bertan taxpayers are providing to the U.S. Treasury?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I checked recently. We're still a part of Canada. We'll remain a part of Canada for quite some time, I hope. We will work with our counterparts across the provinces and with the federal minister to address any of the said loopholes that he's identified.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Agricultural Trade with China

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week a delegation of government officials representing Heilongjiang province in China visited our province and were introduced here in the House to commemorate the 30th anniversary of Alberta's twinning with Heilongjiang. My question is to the minister of agriculture. Certainly, that relationship is important to agriculture producers inasmuch as it expands trade. Market access is primarily a federal responsibility in terms of the negotiations, but is there anything that the province of Alberta and the minister of agriculture can do to expand trade and market access with China?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I was honoured, actually, to be involved in the meeting with the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations and the Heilongjiang delegation: a 30-year relationship with our province, a 60-year relationship with China with respect to our wheat exports. These face-to-face meetings are absolutely necessary with government officials in order to open up those opportunities in those countries.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the minister of agriculture visited China last year. I'd be interested to know on behalf of cattle and agriculture producers: were there tangible results that came as a result of that visit?

Mr. Hayden: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely. In June 2010 we secured a breakthrough with the Chinese government officials into their market for beef and tallow for animals under the age of 30 months. Our trade mission to China gave us an opportunity to talk about what type of trade irritants there were and to gain important insights into what the government of China wanted from us. Of course, it's huge for us. In 2009 our export market was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $8 billion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question will be directed toward the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What is the overall potential of the Chinese market? We know it's significant, but what is the future look of the Chinese market for Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we've had such a tremendous amount of opportunity, as cited, in agriculture. Certainly, culturally we have been building a market that is both tourism linked and also with the building of a stronger Alberta, and economically PetroChina visited and has become a very robust partner in our sustainable resource development. Through education, built by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, is a tremendous amount of buoyancy on advanced education, innovation, and technologies. So on several fronts we're doing things that build the Chinese market.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in a letter to the Calgary Herald Dr. Tim Winton, former head of lung surgery in Edmonton, said that legal assurances offered by the Health Quality Council review are not adequate to allow him to speak about allegations of intimidation of doctors or about those who may have died unnecessarily on cancer wait-lists. Dr. Winton, who was named in the Dr. McNamee statement of claim, would likely have key insights into this matter. To the health minister: how can you continue to claim that the Health Quality Council can get to the bottom of this scandal if those like Dr. Winton, who know what happened, cannot be protected nor subpoenaed to testify?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can assure this member and all Albertans that the Health Quality Council review is at the highest level of integrity. In the words of the Health Quality Council president and CEO himself, he said that their review will be equal in gravity to a public inquiry. He says that with confidence, knowing that no one has ever refused to participate when asked by the Health Quality Council for their input.

Mr. Anderson: Well, he just refused the Health Quality Council, so that's not true, Mr. Speaker.

Given the following quote from Dr. Winton, who says, quote, despite assurances advanced by the Health Quality Council, the Premier, and the health minister, I remain constrained by contractual arrangements, but I recognize the interest in securing my participation and would welcome the opportunity to provide evidence, unquote, will the minister please reconsider his position and call a judicial public inquiry with the powers to compel evidence and both subpoena and protect witnesses so that we can get to the bottom of this scandal for all Albertans? Do the right thing, sir.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council may not have what he describes as legal authority to subpoena anyone to attend, but they do have extremely high credibility, the highest in this province I would submit, for relating with medical people. Whenever medical people have been asked or, for that matter, any members of the public or anyone else has been asked to participate, the Health Quality Council has never been refused that particular . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Given that this minister has clearly lost any shred of credibility with the public that he's acting in the best interests of Albertans on this matter and given that he is obviously more concerned about the health of his own political career and that of the PC Party and given that Dr. Winton states that the re-establishment of public trust in health care demands that he and others be free and protected to speak out about the truth, will this minister call a public inquiry, or if not, will he resign and pass the baton to someone in that caucus over there, if there will be any left, that is still committed to transparency and putting the health of Albertans first?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council is a very respected, very reputed, nongovernment, directly involved type of organization. They are very independent. They will listen to whomever wants to come forward. If the doctor referenced just now by this hon. member wishes to come forward and bring information, he's welcome to do that. If he chooses, on the other hand, not to for whatever personal or professional or private reasons he has, that is up to that particular member because we respect their privacy as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Residential Building Inspections

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. The Minister of Municipal Affairs said in this Assembly that municipalities are responsible for building inspections. However, the public safety division of the minister's department is the third-largest provider of safety code services in the province. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will the minister kindly acknowledge that the province plays a major role in building inspections and must accept its share of responsibility for the failure of the system that we have seen in the Penhorwood incident in Fort McMurray?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in past comments here in the House, the responsibility for home inspections falls under our purview with Municipal Affairs, but we accredit municipalities, and the municipalities hire their inspectors, and they are responsible for the actions of their inspectors. The larger centres, the cities, basically, across Alberta, do hire inspectors to do that work.

Now, in those municipalities that are unaccredited, we will do the inspections on their behalf.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. It's not right to put all the blame on municipalities, sir.

Can the minister please explain what kind of inspections are conducted during the construction of a home or a condominium project?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the Safety Codes Council is the one responsible for accrediting municipalities. We accredit municipalities, and we accredit agencies that do the inspections, that hire the particular inspectors. There is no doubt that the inspectors have a mandate to follow, and we expect that. We continue to keep on working with our municipalities to make sure that the inspection services or those individuals that they hire are doing an appropriate job.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. It's this government that's not doing an appropriate job.

Given that there's a particular concern about the current value of inspections, what value could a homeowner expect from just one inspection?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt that there are building codes that need to be enforced, and, you know, we want to make sure that those codes are being met. The inspectors will go through a particular process. Again, as I've indicated, if there's a need to change that particular process to meet the changing needs of Albertans, I'm prepared to look at that. If there's a need to do more inspections, for instance, they're in the envelope portion or construction portion . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Strathcona Community Hospital

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems like a day doesn't go by when my constituents don't ask me about the Strathcona community hospital project. I know the Member for Sherwood Park gets as least as many. Can the Minister of Infrastructure provide an update on the Strathcona community hospital project? Specifically, can the minister explain what work has been completed so far and what work remains?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to inform you and the House that the project is moving ahead full speed. Phase 1 of the construction is under way and scheduled for completion in the latter part of 2012. The site services are completed, including the sewer and the waterlines, and also the paving and the landscaping. The foundations are completed. The steel structure is near completion. The building envelope is well under way. The move-in schedule is for 2013, and we're currently planning ahead to ensure a seamless transition from phase 1 to phase 2.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First supplemental to the Minister of Health and Wellness: knowing how important this project is in meeting the health needs of constituents, can the minister confirm what services will be provided at the Strathcona community hospital?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the services will include a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week emergency department, diagnostic imaging, community laboratory, ambulatory clinics, including IV therapy for teens' and for seniors' health, allied health services, chronic disease management services. It will also have medical consultant specialists. They'll be there along with all the support services necessary. That's all part of phase 1, which is full steam ahead right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Supplemental to the same minister: what will phase 2 of the project offer area residents?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, phase 2, which will be proceeded on immediately after phase 1 is completed – and some planning is already under way – will see approximately 72 in-patient beds as well as surgical suites, and those surgical suites will have all the supports and services necessary for that hospital to function as an in-patient facility. The precise details and components will be still input into by the community and by other health professionals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Protection of Children in Care

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the Easter weekend an adoptive father reported that his child had once again been apprehended. However, due to the revolving door children and youth catch-and-release system, if the child again submissively played the system for 72 hours, their previous escapes, their previous assessments, their birth family's history of illness and abuse would not be taken into account. Instead of a secure treatment facility, they'd be back to another easily escapable group home. To the minister: why is a 72-hour-only assessment the equivalent of a get-out-of-child-custody-free card?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had an opportunity to discuss this with the member, I think about a week or so ago, and I know from that discussion that this member has become very involved in the situation. I can assure you that the child that you have brought forward is being well cared for, hon. member, and I'm hoping that that helps.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Three escapes so far. At what point, if ever, in the current catch-and-release Children and Youth Services system does a child's cumulative assessment file get opened and acted upon?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our workers do provide supports and resources and services to the child, to the youth, to the family, and files regarding children's services and supports are kept open when necessary by workers. I can assure you once again, hon. member – I know that you explained to me that this has become very personal for you – that this child is being well cared for.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much hope so.

How is it in the best interests of a child or their parents to revolve through the system and land back onto the street without receiving sustained treatment or support?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated previously in the Assembly about this young person, hon. member, our very senior staff are working closely with that person, with the family, and they are receiving support that's exemplary through our services. I would be pleased to discuss this further with you once again if you'd like to. As I said, I know how important this is to you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Distracted Driving Legislation

Mr. Allred: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the last session Bill 16, the Traffic Safety (Distracted Driving) Amendment Act, was passed but still has not been proclaimed. To the Minister of Transportation: given that this is now the spring of 2011, when is the proposed legislation on distracted driving going to be proclaimed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our province's new distracted driving law is the most comprehensive in Canada and will be proclaimed in the coming months. There are several steps that must be completed before this law will take effect and the police can start enforcing it. These tasks include updating related regulations, developing and installing highway signage, and, very importantly, educating Albertans. It is coming soon, so stay tuned.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that there's been widespread public support for this present legislation for several years now, what is the delay in proclaiming the legislation?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, there is no delay. We always said that it was going to be mid-2011, and that's still the plan. The new law is about safety, and Alberta is leading the way. We look forward to implementing this new legislation soon. I know that this new law is supported by our traffic safety partners and many Albertans, and together we will make the roads safer.

Mr. Allred: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that when the legislation was introduced, you spoke about a public education program on distracted driving, what has been done to educate the public on the implementation of the penalties for distracted driving?

Mr. Ouellette: We have excellent information on the Alberta Transportation website, and many Albertans are visiting the site, Mr. Speaker. Also, we have had many e-mails and letters looking for information. As he said, that's great. In the coming weeks the province will have an education awareness campaign to help everyone understand the details of that new legislation and what is permitted and how to comply with it. The awareness campaign will . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Auditor General Recommendations on IT Services

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General's most recent report has a list of 19 outstanding recommendations for Service Alberta, most of them to do with IT services. Some of them are identified as key recommendations, and some are six years old. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why is the minister taking so long to respond to key recommendations, particularly a key recommendation on improving IT services to the rest of the government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Service Alberta has been working very closely with the Auditor General to ensure that some of the areas that have been raised with respect to IT have been put in place. One of the things we have completed is the chief information officers across all the departments and the chief information officer residing in Service Alberta. We continue to follow through and work with the Auditor General on some of the other recommendations as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of the Treasury Board. In 2010-11 Service Alberta's budget to mine for gold through shared IT services was $15 million. The forecast was nearly double at $29 million. How does the Treasury Board justify this kind of speculative budgeting?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have been working over the last years internally with all of the departments and under the great leadership of the Minister of Service Alberta to make sure that the government of Alberta is operating on a common domain. With regard to any of the specific expenditures I'd be happy to get back to the hon. member if he can identify them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: given that Service Alberta is ignoring the Auditor General, is unable to control the cost of services to the government, and overspent on its technology services by 30 per cent last year, does the Treasury Board need to offer more discipline to this ministry?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I will have to go reread that section of the Auditor General's report. The Auditor General gave us a lot of help in moving forward to make sure we had secure sites, that we were providing the right amount of protection, balancing our operational costs, and we've done a very good job of that. We simply have spent more time making it better than we have clearing up the old recommendations so they could be reaudited and removed from the Auditor's report. We have committed to work with the Auditor this year to review as much as possible all of the existing recommendations and clear them off the books.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 18 members were recognized today. There were 108 questions and responses.

We'll continue with the Routine momentarily, but at the moment might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 54 grade 6 students from Norwood elementary school in Wetaskiwin as well as their teachers and parents. The teachers are Ms Melissa Jones, Mrs. Marcie Hofbauer, and teaching assistant Mrs. Marlene Richards. The parents are Mrs. Louiza De Wet, Mrs. Glenda Coutney, and Mrs. Shauna Satre as well as Mr. Gordon Watt. These bright, young future leaders have come up today to watch the Legislature in action. I'm really pleased they could be here, and I want to congratulate their teachers and parents for making this happen. I'd ask that they all stand now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be chastised today. First, I forgot Les's birthday, and then I forgot to recognize another of their friends with them. Ms Gail Homeniuk is sitting beside the Stelmachs, and I would ask if she would please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: We'll continue now with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Right and Responsibility to Vote

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's an old curse that says: may you live in interesting times. I think we do. The federal election is six days away. Certainly nobody in the chattering classes expected when the campaign started that the polls would show what they are now showing. Whether it delights you or terrifies you or anything in between, it appears that change is in the air, at least in terms who the polls show might end up as the Official Opposition federally or not.

While the polls are showing a clear shift in voter intentions, which may or may not hold up on election day, what they aren't showing us yet is whether that's just a shift in the intentions of the people who voted the last time out. There's no clear indication yet that those who didn't vote in the last federal election are any more likely to vote in this one. Maybe they will. It happened in the last municipal election in Calgary, and it happened there because mayoralty candidate Naheed Nenshi was able to make a sizable chunk of disengaged voters care about politics, enough of them, in fact, that he is now the mayor.

There's talk, Mr. Speaker, of making it mandatory to vote in Canada or of lowering the voting age to 16 so that we can coerce the kids into democratic participation while still in school. Interestingly, the kids, college-age voters in this case, were on MuchMusic last night in a sort of televised town hall meeting, and some of them were making the point that in this campaign, even when the politicians make promises that are relevant to their lives like around the cost of postsecondary education, they do so in a way that speaks not to them but to their parents, many of whom don't vote either.

I stand today in this Assembly to urge all members to encourage their constituents to vote next Monday, but I know that people who don't vote aren't going to vote until and unless someone allows them to see that their votes do count by making politics relevant to them. It may be the democratic duty of our citizens to vote, but it's our responsibility to give them a reason to care to vote, and on that count we can all try harder.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Spruce Grove Saints Hockey Team

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand today and speak to the Assembly about a focal component of the Spruce Grove sports community, the Spruce Grove Saints junior A hockey team. In a province where hockey is a topic of year-round discussion, the Saints have been a coveted institution and subject of sports conversations for decades.

The Saints are the only surviving franchise still playing from the Alberta Junior Hockey League's inception in 1963. They've played in a number of locations, but collectively these teams have taken home seven AJHL championships, a Centennial Cup, and a western Canadian championship. Now that the Saints have settled back in Spruce Grove, they are doing what they do best, winning hockey games. As season ticket holders my wife and I have watched through this last season and the season before the Saints fight hard and take home two consecutive AJHL championships, the Enerflex Cup, a tremendous accomplishment, Mr. Speaker.

While many were relaxing over this long Easter weekend, the Saints were locked in a repeat battle of last year's Doyle Cup championship with the Vernon Vipers. However, both of these series ended with a Vipers victory in game 7 despite the tireless efforts of the Saints. Mayor Houston of Spruce Grove and I watched a great game on Sunday evening played by both teams.

This fantastic season has not come without the hard work and skills of great athletes over the years. More than 50 players have come out of the Saints' program to play in the NHL, including Stu Barnes, Mike Comrie, Fernando Pisani, and NHL hall of famer Mark Messier.

In addition to their efforts on the ice, the Saints are very active in the community. Speaking to local school classrooms and assemblies about the importance of education is just one of the ways the Saints are positively impacting my constituents. From annual city games with local youth to supporting special-needs citizens, the Saints' participation never goes unnoticed nor unappreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the members of the Assembly join me in recognizing the Saints' outstanding dedication to the game of hockey as well as their dedication to our community.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that the following bills proceed in the Assembly: Bill Pr. 1, Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties Amendment Act, 2011; Bill Pr. 2, Galt Scholarship Fund Transfer Act; Bill Pr. 7, Hull Child and Family Services Amendment Act, 2011.

The committee recommends that the following bills not proceed: Bill Pr. 3, Auburn Bay Residents Association Tax Exemption Act; Bill Pr. 4, Cranston Residents Association Tax Exemption Act; Bill Pr. 5, New Brighton Residents Association Tax Exemption Act; and Bill Pr. 6, Tuscany Residents Association Tax Exemption Act.

Mr. Speaker, I request the concurrence of the Assembly in these recommendations.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion. Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: Would all members in the Assembly who choose to concur please say aye?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Those opposed, please say no. The motion is carried.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you have a petition?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. I have a petition signed by 259 individuals from Sherwood Park, Beaumont, Edmonton, Devon, Fort Saskatchewan, and Ardrossan, to name a few of the communities. This petition reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to initiate an independent, judge-led inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act to investigate the issue of intimidation of health care professionals in Alberta.

Thank you very much.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to give oral notice of a motion.

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 10, Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, is resumed, not more than five hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: I have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness down. Go ahead, please.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, on his behalf I am pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the following annual report, the 2010 Alberta College of Social Workers annual report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The people whose names I am about to read do not share the minister of sustainable resources' enthusiasm for either water or habitat protection in the Castle-Crown. They are as follows: Joe Ward, Rosamund Downing, Janet Jamerson, Sofie van Veen, Jane Lewis, Gina Capra, Wes Bailey, Martha Milne, Carol Jurczewski, Ana Rudolph, Kate Kenner, Jessie Rosenthal, Bruce Donnell, Ronda O'Bryant, Paul Goris, Phyl Morello, Lisa Banik, Jared Cornelia, Sarah Stewart, Karen Linarez, Mark Giese, Jdoy Newman, Robert Handelsman, William Lee Kohler, and Carol Collins.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition I have two tablings. One of them is a tabling from the Canadian Association of University Teachers re the culture of mistrust and fear at the University of Alberta's medical school.

The second one is a quote from former Conservative minister Ernie Isley on the culture of fear and intimidation within the Tories.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter I received from the President of the Treasury Board. I appreciate the information. It's a letter that I received on April 11, and it's a response to questions I had regarding the supplementary retirement plan for public service managers.

The second tabling I have is a letter that our constituency office wrote on April 19, 2011. It is seeking information regarding the closure of the Grey Nuns community hospital's therapeutic warm-water pool. We're still awaiting an answer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 14 reports from long-term care workers collected by the Alberta union of public employees indicating specific problems on shifts that were short-staffed. These reports indicate that residents were left in bed, were not returned to bed on time, and didn't receive their baths.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling two letters today. The first is from a constituent of mine, Mr. Ryan Robertson, who is in my office every couple of weeks advocating for an increase in AISH. In this letter he goes through his difficulties living on the $1,188 he gets a month and what he pays for rent accordingly.

I also have another letter I'd like to table, from Mr. Roger Gagne to the Minister of Energy in regard to his concerns about transmission plans for Alberta. He is also part of a group called Citizens Advocating the Use of Sustainable Energy.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have nine tablings. The first is Alberta Health Legislation: Moving Forward, phase 1, which is about building public confidence. Phase 2 is about private insurance and doctors working in and outside of the public health system, which is really the Americanization of the health system.

The second document is Alberta Health Act: Timing and Process Map. This is a document not viewed by anybody in government caucus, but it's the minister's document outlining the timelines for phase 1 and phase 2 implementation of the privatization document.

The third document. I had asked the minister a question last session, and his answer was that he didn't know which meeting I was talking about. It's an e-mail showing the timelines for that particular meeting on, I believe, July 2.

The fourth tabling is a tabling of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health's progress in implementation of recommendations, the 44 recommendations from the Mazankowski report, the recommendations that have been acted on and those that haven't.

The next five tablings are pertaining to performance of our health care system in expenditures. The first one is on historical expenditure, the two big expenditures, which are health care and education. Health care spending has gone up almost at a 55-degree angle, with education spending being cut.

The second tabling is the number of ALC bed days, alternate level of care days, that seniors are spending in acute-care facilities in Calgary. That number has gone up about a 55-degree angle as well since 2006.

This one, the third tabling, is about the health care system measures from triage to discharge at the 95th percentile for patients admitted to acute-care facilities in the Capital health region from 2006 to 2010. The international standard is four hours, our goal is eight hours, yet we're accomplishing this from 55 to 70 hours over the last three, four years in Alberta.

The fourth document is from the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, OECD, health data, 2010. It's figure 44, private-sector health expenditure per capita in U.S. dollars in 26 selected countries. The U.S. is number 1, Switzerland is number 2, Canada is already number 3, yet we are not amongst the best health care systems on the planet. The better systems spend less in private health care spending.

The last tabling is from the Canadian Institute for Health Information, a national health expenditure database. It's about private health insurance expenditure per capita, which has grown more rapidly than other sources of finance from household insurance to private insurance and nonconsumption as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Appropriation Act, 2011

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board and minister of finance.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2011.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Briefly speaking to the appropriation, Bill 17, as a former teacher I have grave concerns about what is happening with the Education budget this year. The Minister of Education has basically met contractual obligations with regard to increases that were negotiated, weekly income being the determinant factor for teachers, support staff, and also custodial staff. Beyond that, the budget is very weak. The minister has explained that he felt bad with regard, for example, to cutting AISI, the initiatives program, in half, but sorrow is not sufficient. What these programs need is funding. The Education minister also expressed concern over the ongoing freezing of special-needs funding. Also, to his credit, he expressed regret over the enhanced funding for English as a second language students.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the minister had regrets, but what I would like is a stronger commitment from not only this minister but other ministers to protect at all costs the service ministries such as Education, such as health care, such as Children and Youth Services. That, clearly, has not been done in the case of Education, where the minister has got out his calculator and looked at the bank accounts for school boards across the province and has come up with the figure of approximately $500 million in surplus and reserve funds. He has encouraged the boards to follow the government's example; that is, if necessary, run deficits. Though Premier Klein suggested that that would never happen under his watch, the idea of running deficits has occurred.

Now, a concern I have is with the minister and other ministers claiming that this was a tough year and that we're experiencing a recession, conveniently ignoring the fact that the price of conventional oil as well as the price of bitumen have increased dramatically. Yes, I understand, Mr. Speaker, that there are other considerations such as our Canadian dollar, when we sell our goods to foreign countries, being higher than our main trading partner's, the States. But surely the point of the stability fund or the sustainability fund is to make sure that programs aren't subject to the ups and downs, the whims of externally set prices for non-renewable commodities such as oil and gas.

Mr. Speaker, the idea of being penny-wise and pound-foolish, of continuing to use the price of a barrel of oil to determine the funding for Education, Children and Youth Services, or for health care, is a very flawed system. Other provinces, that don't have the nonrenewable resource wealth that we have, still manage to provide top-notch social programs for their citizens. We need to re-evaluate our progressive tax system, which basically allows $5 billion to go uncollected each year. This is at the expense of the social programs. So I have that concern.

Another concern I have is with regard to the amount of money that we're spending on health care. It's not the money, Mr. Speaker, but it's the management that's the problem. When we're keeping approximately 800 seniors in acute-care beds at a cost of $2,000 a day, that does not make sense in dollars or sense in terms of doing the best for those seniors, many of whom should be placed in long-term care. So in the case of health care it's the manner in which the five years of supposedly sustainable funding is allocated.

It is frequently said that health care increases are going out of control and taking up approximately 40 per cent of our budget, Mr. Speaker, but as a portion of GDP they have yet to exceed 7 per cent. But it's not just the amount that's spent; it's how it's spent. As I say, keeping seniors in their homes as long as they possibly can be, making sure they're in the appropriate care facilities, long-term care as opposed to being nickelled and dimed in assisted care facilities, is extremely important.

The need to invest in our advanced education system is an equally important follow-up to that of our public education system. The fact that the previous minister of advanced education indicated that costs would be kept at inflation but then allowed the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta to significantly raise their tuition costs because the government didn't provide the funding is a concern of mine. Another concern I have, Mr. Speaker, is the government allowing institutions to create institutional fees that have no direct bearing on their educational outcomes. These are the facility fees, approximately $500 for both the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we're fortunate in this province to be able to have our nonrenewable resource wealth. But the extra givebacks that we have for industry: we earn the money and improve land lease sales, we create a very entrepreneurial, competitive circumstance, and then we return large portions of the money we've received back to the companies. It's time for the companies to have long-term investments in the quality of life of Alberta citizens, whether that's endowment funds to a larger extent to innovation funding at the postsecondary institutions, whether it's paying for chairs at the various institutions for undertaking studies that will benefit the industry directly and Albertans as a result. It's extremely important.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, somewhere between $7 billion and $11 billion remain in our sustainability fund. Far be it from me to suggest that we burn through that money, but I would say that strategic investments in our social services – education, health care, seniors, children and youth services – would be a good, ongoing, sustainable recommendation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to debate the appropriation, Bill 17.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if I'm pleased or not to speak on Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2011, but I would like to actually make some comments if I can, please. I'm one of those MLAs that have been around the Legislature for some time. I got elected in 1993 and chose to run because I liked what Premier Klein had to offer when he spoke about the deficit and paying down our debt, the deficit elimination, and the thought of providing a future for our grandchildren at that particular time.

I am somewhat like he is. He's been quoted previously in the paper that during that time period there wasn't a day that went by that at some point in time we didn't have a process. Not an easy time, actually, for a first-time MLA, who came into this Legislature thinking that life was good and that it was going to be a fairly easy transition from the business world into becoming a politician. I soon learned otherwise, what it was like to be receiving hundreds and hundreds of phone calls from angry people right across this province when we started to attack the deficit.

I remember one time walking into Government House and being surrounded by people that were protesting outside the Legislature. In my mind, it was quite frightening, for that matter, because they were very, very angry and didn't like what the government had done. But we had a goal, and we had a plan. I know, Mr. Speaker, you were there with us at that particular time, as were some of the other people still in this Legislature. We had a plan, and we wanted to provide Albertans with the opportunity down the road to be able to say that they had been part and parcel of this huge plan and wanted to get our debt under control.

I also remember standing in Calgary with Premier Klein at that particular time when we unveiled that we had paid this off. We had this huge announcement, and I was very, very proud to be part of that.

We fast-forward to 2011, and here we are with five years of spending that, in my mind, has not been planned very well. I happened to be a member of government at that time, so I'll take the responsibility of that. I actually was a minister in that period of time for a little bit, before the new Premier came onside, and it just kind of went from bad to worse. We had some good times in that particular time, where, in my mind, when oil and gas was good and everybody was working in this province, quite frankly, we spent like drunken sailors.

Mr. Speaker, I came from a family where my dad taught me that you don't spend what you don't have. I came from a family that didn't have a lot of means. We were the last people on the block to get a TV, and there was great excitement in our house when we happened to have that. So you come from that era. We have based our whole married life on not spending what we don't have, and again we were the last people on the block when we got a VCR. We probably wouldn't have been buying that VCR except that my son was a Cub and ended up winning that, so it was a bonus for us.

I look at a clear act that we had in place under the leadership of Premier Klein, and that was the Deficit Elimination Act. That act is gone now, never to be found. I was very proud that we had that act in place. It was very clearly articulated what we could spend, what we couldn't spend. We had a law in this province in regard to the Deficit Elimination Act.

I look at the budget now and go through some of the expenses and capital investments and nonbudgetary disbursements that we're putting out. As a member of the Wildrose I have five critic positions that keep me busy, health being one of them. When we voted on this, I voted against this, probably one of the main reasons being that – one of the things that we do when we're discussing the budgetary items is have the privilege of asking the minister questions in regard to the budget. Through the five critic positions that I have – we only have 10 minutes, so we try and get the questions out that we think are a priority to Albertans and which Albertans have told us are a priority.

In those questions and sometimes answers that we get from the government, we've also articulated that we'd like to have our questions answered by written response. It's towards the end of April, and from not one of the ministries that I'm responsible for, which are Health, Seniors, Solicitor General, Service Alberta, and Employment and Immigration, have we received any responses in regard to some of the expenditures that we've questioned them about.

We know as members of the opposition that this budget is going to pass. I, like the member that just briefly spoke, have some real problems. I think one of the ones that I have is the continuing questions that we ask the government in regard to providing us with the information that we need in regard to long-term care. They continually stand up and they brag about their 1,300 continuing care spaces, and there's nothing wrong with that. I think it's a good goal, and it's a goal for a transition that the government keeps talking about, that when you're in independent living, you move to assisted living, and then your next step is into long-term care. To this date we still haven't had an answer in regard to long-term care.

As the critic I've had the opportunity to talk to many, many seniors and their families, those seniors that are struggling in assisted living when they should be in a long-term care space. They move from the assisted living space back into the hospital, and they sit there, or lay there, I guess, in an acute-care setting until somewhere along the line, unfortunately, a senior will pass away and they fill that one little space available in a long-term care facility. You know, the government can brag all they want in regard to what they're doing for the seniors in this province and what they're doing when they talk about their continuing care plan, but we still haven't got answers in regard to those seniors that are in limbo between assisted living and where they move forward. So it disheartens me that we have such an attitude in regard to how we're treating people, our seniors, in this province.

I'm dealing with that with my mom at this particular time, who was in independent living and now is in assisted living. I look at some of the seniors that she has become friends with in assisted living, watching them as they deteriorate and trying to help them navigate the system. There are those seniors that just need to move from that assisted living. The wonderful people that take care of our seniors in assisted living can't handle these seniors if it's a senior that has dementia and is starting to lash out not only at the staff but their own spouse, you know. The Premier talks about keeping seniors together. Well, you can only do that for so long until you have a senior that becomes violent to their own spouse. I'm dealing with one of those at this particular time, where he doesn't even recognize his wife. He's just violent.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, we would have no problem supporting the budget if we could get the answers that we require. We think there's a lot of spending in this budget that needs to be explained. We think there's waste in this budget that could be utilized by some of the other departments. Children and Youth Services probably could use some extra money, the seniors, so many.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to have on the record that we're realists, and we know that this budget is going to pass. I think it's important that we look at how we're spending, what we're spending on. Is it a want? Is it a need? Or is it something where the government truly has to look at what they're spending on, how they're spending?

I look at the number of ministers across the front bench. I think there are 23. In reality we don't need 23 ministers. We could certainly look at some of the ministries and combine them like we did previously in government under Premier Klein. It's gotten bigger and bigger and bigger. Unfortunately, all we can do as members of the opposition is to continue to hold the government accountable, and we will continue to do that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Is this under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Boutilier: It is.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. My questions are to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I know you made reference to the allocation for infrastructure for seniors, and I know that all members of the Assembly certainly recognize the importance that seniors had in actually building this province. My question – and I know that she like many Albertans is caring for her mom right now – is relative to the fact that commitments were made to help seniors. As you know, one of them was in the riding of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo as others. The announcement of funding was for new projects, but the projects that had been previously announced by the government have still not been fulfilled. So my question to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek: do you think that is correct and right relative to commitments that were made that have still not been honoured?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out that if you've got, as the member has indicated – I think he talked about a 103-year-old senior that's been in an acute-care setting for the last three years versus what the cost would be to have that particular individual in a long-term care. You can recoup those costs very easily. I don't have the numbers in front of me, but I can tell you the numbers we've crunched, and when you look at it, if you want to talk about a senior in an acute-care bed versus what it would cost for long-term care, you can't compare the numbers.

If the government has made a commitment and said that they're going to provide long-term care facilities, whether it's in Fort McMurray or Carstairs or Calgary, I think that they owe Albertans that commitment because Albertans look to us as a government to honour our commitments. We're held in a manner of trust. They've obviously failed on that commitment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity under 29(2a).

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm very aware, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has great concerns for our most vulnerable Albertans, whether they be seniors or children. I'm wondering if the hon. member has concerns about the growing caseloads of Children and Youth Services workers and their ability to provide the important services that they provide for children.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, as a former Minister of Children and Youth Services I have a great deal of respect and admiration for the staff, that deal with some very, very difficult situations and in very difficult times when they're dealing with children that are coming into the system.

I can tell you, though, in reference to your question earlier in question period, that one of the biggest disappointments I have with this government is that in 2007 I stood in the Legislature as a member of the Conservatives and carried an amendment forward on the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, an extension for children being held, and to this date it still hasn't been honoured. We have children – I'm well aware of the case that he's dealing with. We deal with many, many families that are dealing with children that need to be in secure treatment. I think that's probably another one of the biggest failures of this government: not protecting our children.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member in her remarks indicated that one of the things that could be done in order to spend less money is to streamline the size of cabinet. I'm wondering if the hon. member would agree or disagree that back in 2001 cabinet grew in size. At one particular instance the Ministry of Justice and Attorney General was split so that a new portfolio of Solicitor General could be created out of that in order to allow the political leadership for things to happen; for example, the creation of the sexual offenders registry and other things like that. Was that a bad move to have a political leadership be able to focus on high-priority areas rather than combining it and creating a stronger bureaucratic leadership and less ability to really focus on some of those important agenda items?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, this is a good question from the former Minister of Justice. When he was Minister of Justice, I was the Solicitor General, and we happened to work very well together. His big thing was moving the age of consent from 14 to 16. You didn't have to have a separate ministry at that particular time because, you know, if you have a good minister and he's able to listen to the people . . .

An Hon. Member: Or she.

Mrs. Forsyth: Or she.

. . . that are around him – that's his caucus colleagues – I'm sure this minister would have had no problem bringing forward the high-risk offender registry.

The Speaker: Unfortunately, the time for this section has now left us.

Additional participants in the debate? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly appreciate all members' comments up to this point relative to Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2011, that has been put forward by the President of the Treasury Board. I would like to speak relative to the bill and some of its detail within. Of course, it lists all of the 23 ministries and the dollar amounts that have been allocated. Again I remind all members that the dollars that have been allocated for this proposed budget are dollars that are obtained from hard-working Albertans, Albertans who pay taxes and who work hard.

Consequently, I am somewhat troubled by some of the details, and I'd like to take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to express my displeasure in terms of the important issues we need to deal with. As was mentioned earlier, first and foremost, I believe that it is fundamentally wrong to be freezing – freezing – special-needs funding for our children. That is fundamentally wrong. I know there are members in all corners of all political parties that do not accept that. Unfortunately, the government seems to accept that. That is very unfortunate.

The responsibility, as the Member for Calgary-Varsity had mentioned earlier, in terms of protecting at all costs our children that are directly impacted is fundamental. It's a value that all Albertans share. Therefore, witnessing how dollars are being allocated in one ministry and other ministries – the fact that there are 23 ministries, I think, is not something that Albertans can accept today. Albertans have had to tighten their belts when it comes to how the economy is today even though this government continues to be addicted to revenues. The revenues that this government is accepting today in terms of WTI, west Texas intermediate, are over $100 a barrel and the royalties, yet at the same time they are freezing the funding for special needs for vulnerable young people. That is simply not acceptable. I believe it's not acceptable as a value within Albertans, and I think Albertans will render their verdict on that in the next provincial election.

I also will say that I'm troubled by a government that has announced new expenditures in expense and capital investment but at the same time has failed to honour previous announcements that were made, based on the dollars I see in here for Infrastructure. The point that I would like to arrive at, as I mentioned earlier today, Mr. Speaker, is regarding not only our children but our seniors. Our senior citizens have built this province, and we must treat them with respect. When I speak of respect, I want for a moment to touch base on the dollar allocation that is for Infrastructure. I'm troubled by the government, by the fact that you made previous commitments, you failed to honour them, you let down your seniors. In the meantime you go out and announce provincial funding – for instance, an example is the provincial museum – of $365 million for capital investment. At the same time, as a businessperson, no business would ever go and do something else for another customer until they honoured their commitment to the previous customer.

For my voters in Fort McMurray and in other constituencies across Alberta commitments such as those that were made in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to senior citizens have not yet been reached. The commitments that were made have not been fulfilled, yet at the same time the Premier and the government are running out and announcing $365 million for new infrastructure. They seem to have lost their focus. They have lost their focus and lost their way when it comes to how the dollars are being spent.

Rule 1 in any economy, in any business is that you first honour the commitments you made to your customers. Well, commitments were made, but those commitments have not been fulfilled, yet at the same time the government is rushing out and now making new commitments to others. [interjection] In fact, the Government House Leader, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, is interjecting and heckling. I witnessed on Thursday night his heckling in front of an Albertan talking about the land-use framework. I thought he would have learned that lesson on Thursday night, but I will remind him of that lesson if he needs to be reminded.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I'm troubled by a government that has announced investment expenditures going into the future but has not honoured the commitments of the past. Our seniors have very proudly built this province. They have built this province, and they deserve better when it comes to infrastructure allocation.

In actual fact, I believe that by taking the Minister of Justice – actually, I was making reference to the Ministry of Justice and the Solicitor General. I like the idea of merging those ministries together.

For instance, the Ministry of Education and, I can say, the ministry of advanced education and the dollars allotted in the Appropriation Act: clearly, in today's economy both those ministries should be merged in a savings to Albertans. Albertans have tightened their belts when it comes to expenditures, and Albertans, with their Albertan values, expect no less from the government pertaining to the Appropriation Act. That is quite simply merging, dating back to 2001. The Government House Leader mentioned that earlier to my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek. I think it's very important.

That was then, and this is now, and Albertans are tightening their belts. We believe that the Appropriation Act, that has been put forward by the President of the Treasury Board, is failing to honour the commitments that have been made by this government in previous years. In fact, we have almost 60 seniors sitting in acute-care beds in Fort McMurray, with a population of 104,000 people. No other city in Alberta that has 104,000 – that's the size of Red Deer, a little bit larger than Lethbridge – presently has no long-term care facility, yet the government and Treasury Board made a commitment over three years ago.

My trouble with this Appropriation Act, Bill 17, that has been put forward by the President of the Treasury Board, is that it is failing to honour the commitments that were made previously. Nowhere is it reflected in terms of taking care of previous commitments, yet I learn and I read about new money for a provincial museum. I understand that even members of the very government party were surprised by it because some didn't share with them where the dollars were being allocated.

I think, clearly, there is trouble in River City when it comes to the allocation of dollars because of the fact that commitments have been made by this government that have not been honoured in the past. In any smart business or public institution you first honour the value of keeping your word rather than rushing out and politically making announcements of new infrastructure projects. As I look at the allocation for Infrastructure, Mr. Speaker, clearly, the fact that they're rushing out to spend more money on infrastructure without first honouring the commitments of the past, I believe, is an indictment on this government.

Clearly, in my observation, the Appropriation Act is violating, in my judgment, an important Alberta value. That Alberta value is living within your means and honouring commitments that were made to the very Albertans that built this province with a great degree of integrity and respect.

Now, in my community, just like in many other constituencies, in a city of 104,000 I have almost 60 senior citizens sitting in acute-care beds in a hospital called the Northern Lights regional hospital in Fort McMurray, where I had the proud honour of being its mayor as well as an alderman and city councillor. As the youngest mayor the commitments were being made even then. I continue to do my job as an MLA to ensure that the appropriations that are associated with honouring our seniors and honouring commitments that were made will be lived up to.

What I observe in here is, again, a loss of focus, a loss of focus because commitments that seem to have been made in the past appear to have been forgotten. Our responsibility as MLAs in this House, Mr. Speaker, is to never, never allow our citizens, our bosses, to be forgotten by government commitments that have been made to the people of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and to our seniors.

With those 60 seniors that are in acute-care beds, that is on average costing about $60,000 a day. On a weekly basis that works out to just under half a million dollars. That's just under $2 million a month, Mr. Speaker. Ultimately, at the end of the year it nears almost $14 million a year. The government made its commitment to my seniors in Fort McMurray over three years ago. In fact, for the cost a long-term care centre could have been built as opposed to these seniors now, presently, living in acute-care beds at the Fort McMurray regional hospital. Mr. Speaker, that is unacceptable.

The Appropriation Act, 2011, Bill 17, clearly, in my mind, has demonstrated to me that the Appropriation Act has lost focus in terms of its allocation of honouring commitments of the past rather than running out as politicians and making announcements for the future.

As the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, when I visit Mrs. Mitchell next Monday on her birthday, when she will be celebrating her 103rd birthday, I will proudly be able to look her in the eye and say that I have used every fibre of energy in my body to support her voice for a long-term care centre. That commitment, that was made by this Premier and this government, must be maintained.

Mr. Speaker, it saddens me that the government is running out with the allocations of this Appropriation Act and spending in new areas, literally like drunken sailors, yet we still haven't honoured the commitments that were made almost three years ago.

I want to say that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills also had a commitment that was made by one of the contenders in the leadership that's coming up. Mr. Speaker, with the Appropriation Act once again I know how frustrated he is with the fact that commitments were made but still have not been fulfilled, yet he is still with the government on that side of the caucus.

Mr. Speaker, when I go and visit some of those 60 senior citizens in acute-care beds at the hospital, I want to proudly be able to look them in the eye and say that what the government has done is not acceptable. The actions speak for themselves. No matter how much heckling or bullying or intimidation I receive or what punitive approaches the government may take, I refuse to sit down. It will be my last breath to continue to fight and honour these very senior citizens that built this province and built this province with respect and integrity. That's something that I think, that because of the nonactions of this government, with not so much as a shovel in the ground in the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo riding, not so much as a piece of land even bought in terms of honouring a commitment that was made three years ago, in my community of 104,000 people our seniors, over 60 of them, sit without any long-term care facility, which costs the government and the minister of health $60,000 a day.

We can clearly – clearly – be more fiscally prudent in the dollar allocation by having better use of our dollars as opposed to how this government has displayed and lost its way in terms of its focus on previous commitments. Mr. Speaker, I say to this government and under the Appropriation Act: honour your commitments from three years ago; do the right thing so that you can look at yourself in the mirror. I can look at myself in the mirror.

When I talk to Mrs. Mitchell when she celebrates her 103rd birthday on election day, May 2, and when I speak to Olive Woodward, who, in fact, on June 4 will turn 100 years old, as they continue to be in acute-care beds, I'm going to be able to say that I've done my level best to get what had been committed to and promised by this government over three years ago.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's much more needing to be said about this government revisiting its Appropriation Act. Looking at the infrastructure of new announcements yet failing to honour commitments of the past is simply not acceptable.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to say that I think that it is entirely appropriate for each member of this Assembly to honour our seniors, especially for what they've given to us here in Alberta, the opportunities and, of course, the challenges that come with our expanding economy.

I would like to ask the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo if he is aware that Alberta has one of the most comprehensive packages of seniors' benefits in the country, that the thresholds for direct financial assistance are the highest in the country, and so are the maximum monthly payments. I wonder if he knows that my ministry remains committed to assisting those seniors most in need, that there are 405,000 seniors in Alberta and that 148,000 receive Alberta seniors' benefit, and that in the Appropriation Act this year the government will provide almost $426 million to seniors through income supplements and assistance with expenses like dental work, eyeglasses, and education proper-taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to talk about continuing care because it's a commitment of this government to improve the choice and availability of continuing care accommodations. It's a top priority for me and for this government. Before I go any further, I'd like to say that we have provided for the area of the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. In fact, we had a request for a proposal, and we've approved 88 beds to go into the Didsbury area. We're close to having that ground being broken by the organization that was chosen in the bid, and that was the Bethany Care association. They will be having their continuing care facility built very shortly.

Now, I would also like to comment that I wonder if the member is aware that in the 2011-12 Appropriation Act $75 million has been approved for capital funding for the affordable supportive living initiatives to assist in the development and upgrading of close to 600 more new affordable supportive living spaces and that since 1999 the province has invested over half a billion dollars in capital grant funding to help build and modernize over 10,000 affordable supportive living spaces, that we have 6,000 of those 10,000 built and 4,000 in progress at this time, as I speak. I wonder if the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo knows that we have 723 licensed supportive living facilities, that we have 29,000 clients in supportive living, that there are 14,800 who receive long-term care services in 174 facilities, and that 107,000 Albertans receive home care.

Mr. Speaker, I think that there is quite a bit of funding for continuing care and for our seniors in the Appropriation Act. I just wonder if the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is aware of the funding that we are providing for our seniors, once again among the very highest in the entire country.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. God love the minister of seniors, the Member for Red Deer-North, for the work she tries to do. It's unfortunate, though, that sometimes she loses her votes at the cabinet table in fighting for seniors. I think this Appropriation Act, clearly, is an example of her loss fighting at the cabinet table for that, based on what it is I am witnessing.

It is clear to me that the hon. member poses a question in terms of expenditure. It's not a question of how much money you spend. It's about: are we getting value? In answer to her question, Mr. Speaker, what I'm troubled by specifically is: does the member think it's okay for the Premier to rush out and make an announcement of $365 million, when it wasn't discussed at cabinet or caucus, to be a legacy for him, yet he has failed, failed miserably, to honour commitments to our seniors, who built this very province, from three years ago? Commitments were made, yet we have over 60 seniors sitting in acute-care beds. Does the minister of seniors think that it is acceptable for seniors such as Mrs. Mitchell, who is turning 103, and Olive Woodward, who is turning a hundred years old, that commitments her government made over three years ago have not been honoured?

I'm glad to that see they're potentially going to break the ground in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Well, guess what? They haven't even come close to breaking ground in Fort McMurray because they don't have any land. This minister has said to me in the past that we have to find land, so I find her comments very ironic, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to join the debate on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and join in this occasionally animated debate around the Appropriation Act, 2011, Bill 17.

I'd like to start simply, I guess, by reiterating my agreement with some of the comments that have been made by previous speakers. Just generally speaking, I know it's a comment that's made every year, but it does warrant repetition – it is really quite significant – in that the amount of time that members of this Assembly are given to engage in debate on this roughly $34 billion budget is paltry. I would suggest that it really amounts to an insult to the taxpayers of Alberta because it truly is just a process of going through the motions by this government and that they truly aren't concerned about providing for a quality of debate that allows for true accountability.

I think I've mentioned before, in the past, my experience working in other jurisdictions, where estimates debates go until the opposition stops having questions. One of the neat things about that process is that it compels the government to actually answer the questions that they are asked by the opposition when engaged in debate. Instead, we have this ridiculous process here, where we get, you know, three hours for a budget that's worth a few million and three hours for budget that's worth $15 billion, which is absolutely contradictory to any kind of rational approach to this process, any kind of approach that's actually vested in a desire to provide accountability and transparency and good governance for the people of the province. We don't do that here.

On top of that, we have such limited time within which we can ask a minister for information. Some ministers are quite good at being fairly rational and brief and responsive in the questions that they get from opposition members during that very, very brief time where they're asked to talk about their budget to the opposition and answer questions. But many ministers have taken to using that brief period of time and saying, you know, that not only is it enough that we only have to answer to the public for our multibillion-dollar budget for three hours but that when we do do that, we're going to ensure that we engage in long, superfluous, vague discussions about things that have nothing to do with what they're being asked by opposition members in order to simply take up time and delay that brief amount of time that members of this Assembly actually get in order to address these issues.

We then have taken to asking specific questions of ministers, saying: "You know what? If you don't get to this by the end of your long, superfluous, self-congratulatory statements, could you please specifically write to us with answers to these questions?" As has already been stated, we haven't had any of those answers provided to us yet.

Now we're being asked to vote on a $34 billion budget, where the majority of ministers haven't bothered to respond to the specific questions that were made by members of this Assembly. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it amounts to I won't say a breach of privilege but certainly a thumbing of the nose at the privilege of each and every member of this Assembly in terms of our ability to actually do our job when ministers simply don't bother to answer the questions that they have been asked when we are having budget debate and when members of the opposition, in particular, are asking this government why it is that they believe we should vote in favour of a particular budget, that could be up to billions and billions of dollars.

It's profoundly disrespectful, again, not only to members of the opposition but to all people in this province. I really have to, as I said, reinforce that point, that has been made by previous members, because it really is a dysfunctional process, and it's one that's born out of 40 years of the same government and a level of arrogance which is unmatched anywhere else in this country.

Having said that, I'll start by saying that previous members have talked about, "Oh, you don't spend what you don't have" and all that kind of stuff, so we should therefore be very careful about what we spend and probably spend less. As you probably are aware, Mr. Speaker, our party and our caucus is the only caucus, really, in the Legislature right now that believes that this government is actually in the process – it's probably about 20 years into a process that will go on for maybe another 20 years – of selling down the river generations' and generations' worth of resources for this province to primarily multinational oil companies for a song and failing to collect the fair share of Albertans' wealth that is owed to them because we are owners of the resources in this province.

By failing to do that, we then create this false sense of: oh, we don't have enough money, so we've got to lay off teachers here, and we've got to make social workers manage 30 foster families instead of 20 foster families. We've got to do all these things which are bad for Albertans and bad for their future because we don't apparently have enough money even though in this particular jurisdiction of Alberta we are sitting on an amount of wealth which is unprecedented in any other developed world jurisdiction.

Frankly, a goat could walk in and manage this government's finances with those kinds of resources at their disposal, but I'm not sure that a goat could actually manage to kick it out the door as fast as this government without getting any kind of resources returned for the people of this province, not only for the people now but for the people in the future because, of course, this resource is not going to be here forever, and we all know that. We need to develop it responsibly in a way that we can create a province and a framework and a foundation that will serve not only this generation but generations to come.

But that's not the vision of this government. This government's vision is to kick it out the door as fast as you can and get whatever little crumbs from the table that you're offered and ask or demand nothing on behalf of the people of Alberta. As a result, we're in a situation where we have ministers saying: well, you know, it's a financial crunch, and people are going to have to pay the price.

Where are people paying the price in this province? Well, we're paying the price in terms of the postsecondary education of young Albertans. We're asking our young Albertans to take on more debt. We're asking them to go further through university and come out of university with more debt than we ever have before. We're asking them to pay more to go to university, and we're basically saying that only those young Albertans from middle- and upper-class, wealthy families will be allowed to enjoy the benefits of our postsecondary education system. We're decreasing access as we go.

What else are we doing? Well, we've talked about children's services, the fact that caseloads for social workers are continuing to go through the roof, that social workers are no longer social workers; they're actually case managers. They don't actually meet with the families and the kids that they're trying to be providing support to. Instead we download it onto contractors, who then have somebody else with half the training do it for half the money. The social workers are trying to manage this debacle, and as that happens, we have more and more instances of our collective failure in what is probably the wealthiest jurisdiction in the world to ameliorate child poverty. We fail every day in this province. If we can't deal with it with the amount of wealth at our disposal, who can? I, frankly, am not prepared to accept that it's a problem that can't be fixed. I think it can be, but this government has given up on it. They've just fundamentally given up on it.

What else have we done? Well, we've talked already about education. We're looking at a situation where we're going to be laying off teachers, where class sizes are going to be bigger, where we're going to be closing schools. I had an animated debate with the Minister of Education, during my very brief little 10-minute window of being able to talk to him about his budget, about the plans for special-needs education in this province. We have frozen funding to account for special-needs kids in our education system for four years now – four years – in this province. With the amount of wealth produced and taken out of this province every single, solitary day, we've spent four years not increasing funding for special-needs kids in our education system. Really, is this something to be proud of? I don't think so.

What else have we done? Well, Employment and Immigration: every day we hear the Minister of Employment and Immigration in photo ops go out to whatever media scrum he can find and talk about his new ministry, and one of the things he likes to talk about is that we don't have enough workers in this province. Well, what do we need to do? We need to increase immigration, and we need to bring more people to this province permanently, not temporarily but permanently. But at the same time that we're talking through our hat, shall we say, on that particular issue, we're cutting funding to immigrant services. We're cutting funding to the very services that would ensure that new Canadians are able to integrate productively and effectively into our communities. Is this future-forward thinking? No, it's not. It's the kind of thinking that comes from a government that's been in power far too long and has lost all sense of how to plan for next week let alone years down the road.

We have an Employment and Immigration budget as well that once again significantly underestimates the resources that are going to be necessary to deal with those living in the most and the greatest of poverty. They do that every year. Of course, I think that in the process of that they develop a systemic process to kick people off this kind of income support.

One of the things that happens in a Conservative-led economy is that when the economy does recover, typically those at the very bottom of the economy, those who are most in need, who are most suffering from poverty, don't typically recover with the economy. Certainly, that happens if you don't take steps to avoid that outcome. Nobody is doing that here, so there's no reason to believe that our obligations with respect to income support are going to go down. Yet, once again, the government is planning for it, and once again, I'm sure, we'll be asked in supplementary estimates to approve more money. I don't know why it is that we plan that way.

The environment: this ministry is probably the single biggest fundamental failure that I have observed in this government since I have been elected, nothing but vague platitudes while we essentially hand the keys over to industry and ask them to monitor themselves. Initially my sense was, you know, that we had a minister with sort of good intentions, who really thought some of this stuff was happening. But then I looked back. He made assurances to Albertans that we were doing tests, that we had the science, that we had every reason to believe, in our expert opinion, that we weren't contaminating the Athabasca River, that we weren't contaminating soil in and around oil wells, that we weren't jeopardizing air quality in and around Fort McMurray. He said, you know: "Don't you trust us? We're doing the work."

Well, then, finally, thanks to third-party people who just knew enough to know that this wasn't true, we find out that, in fact, it wasn't true. It's not just a difference in opinion, Mr. Speaker. It's not. When the story finally came out, it became clear that the minister had no evidence upon which to suggest that we knew the answer to these questions that people were raising to him.

He effectively misled Albertans time and time again, saying: "We've got the testing. It's safe. Trust us. It's all right. Don't worry." Well, no, we didn't have the testing. We weren't doing the testing. We weren't doing the right testing. We weren't doing enough testing. We don't have the equipment to do the testing. We don't even have the scientists who know what needs to be tested. Yet all the time, knowing that to be the case, the Minister of Environment said: "Oh, you guys are all just a bunch of silly alarmists. Trust me. We know it's safe. It's okay." Well, frankly, he should have had to lose his job for misleading Albertans like that for so long.

In the meantime he comes in here with a budget that we're being asked to vote on today, which is yet another cut to his ministry. So we will off-load even more monitoring, compliance, protection of our health, and protection of our environmental safety to industry to tell us, when and if they decide to, that they're keeping us safe. We won't check it, we won't monitor it, and we won't audit it because we're cutting back in that ministry at the very same time that we're budgeting to increase economic and industrial activity in this province.

Essentially this government has said, "We don't care about the environment. It's all about what PR we can create and ship out of the province whenever the going gets a little tough and people turn a little bit too much attention to us, but we aren't actually doing the job." This budget is a clear indication that we're not doing the job, that we haven't done the job, that we don't care about doing the job, and that we have every intention of going forward without doing the job.

It's all guns blazing. Bring industry in. Grow, grow, grow. But do not ask us to test whether we're doing it safely. Do not ask us to make sure the water is clean. Do not ask us to make sure that the air quality is clean. Do not ask us to find out whether the wells are being cleaned up or whether we have enough security for the clear environmental degradation that's under way right now. Don't ask us to do this because we don't have the resources to give you an answer, and we don't care. That's what's in this budget. That's what this government has decided to do.

Seniors: we've spent a lot of time talking about seniors already, but I will say this. In essence there are two fundamental failures when it comes to our planning for seniors. First of all, this government continues to intentionally mislead people by talking about continuing care when we talk about long-term care.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is for comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I appreciate the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and wondered if she would like to expound on the following topics. You might want to tell us a little bit more about the amount of time allotted for budget debates. I'm frustrated as a member of the Official Opposition with 30 minutes to discuss multibillion dollar budgets. You have to try and hit the heights within a 10-minute time frame, so I'd be interested in your concerns there and also in the timing and the scheduling of the debate, after a full day's scheduling in the Legislature then having to come back for three hours in the evening, the humanity of the process.

Also, with regard to labour issues you briefly touched on the need to have more individuals in the provincial nominee program as compared to the temporary foreign worker programs that provide no rights. You referenced the concerns over cutting of English language support, and you touched on a concern that we both share, and that's the Minister of Employment and Immigration sitting on a two-bit minimum wage increase. Those are topics. Feel free to expand.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to do that. I think I'll focus first just in terms of the amount of time that we have for debate. For instance, I was just talking about seniors, and there are concerns that I have around the seniors' ministry and the fact that we didn't get an opportunity to fully talk about that because we have a government that intentionally talks about continuing care when doctors and experts and people that wrote your election promises talked about long-term care. Then they turn around and talk about continuing care, and we all know that it's a different thing. We have the government saying: oh, we're not going to meet our election promise, but we're going to build continuing care instead. Yet continuing care means so many different things, and it's intentionally misleading and confusing to Albertans. That's the first problem.

The second problem is that even if you assume for the moment that continuing care is actually what Albertans need and that all those experts who say that we actually have a tremendous backlog of people who are sitting in hospitals for year after year after year because they can't get access to proper long-term care – even if you say that that's not the case and that continuing care and privately funded assisted living is what we need, even if that's the case, this government is still planning to be 9,000 or 10,000 spaces short based on their own demographic planning 10 years from now. So they're planning for a crisis.

In the meantime we're not putting any kind of significant investment in building the sort of home care that would be required to keep people from getting increasingly ill and having horrible experiences while stuck in their homes because they're unable to get the care they need or, alternatively, end up in our hospitals and further enhance that crisis. That's the kind of thing that we need to discuss in much more detail, and we don't get that time in terms of the budget time that we have.

The member talks about the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and he raises a very good point. If there was adequate funding, presumably in that minister's budget, he would be able to hire what is apparently the 20 people required to read a four-page report in order to come to a decision on whether to stop freezing the minimum wage in Alberta. Of course, we're on target right now to once again return to having the lowest minimum wage in the country. I believe we are right now the second lowest in the country, based on increases that other provinces are making.

Of course, an all-party committee recommended to the minister several months ago, back in September or October, that the freeze be lifted and that we start having regular increases. Here we are six months later. Every time we ask the minister, he says: oh, I'm reviewing the report. I swear to God that I don't what they need – if they need interpreters, if they need software that will blow up the report so that the minister can read it – how it can possibly take him six months to read a four-page report. It's really quite mind boggling. Yet at the same time we have tens of thousands of Albertans who are being asked to live on a sum which is clearly designed to ensure that they continue to live in poverty and that their kids continue to live in poverty. We are the most wealthy province in the country, yet we insist on ensuring that we have no protection for our lowest income earners.

One of the other recommendations in that report was that we put together an antipoverty task force or an antipoverty plan. Again, we've heard nothing about this from this government. Very unfortunate.

The Acting Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make a few comments. One of the things that I've been hearing is: are we getting value for money? I think I would like a definition because clearly my definition of value for money is probably different than other people that are sitting in this Legislature.

What I hear about is all of the millions and millions of dollars that are being thrown at this and thrown at that, but what I don't really hear about is what the real outcomes are. We speak about, particularly on the seniors side, beds and homes and rooms and all kinds of accommodations, and that's the bricks and the mortar. Bricks and mortar make money. What doesn't make money is the care. That's the part that isn't being addressed.

You can have all of the continuing care beds in the world, and you can say that you're spending millions and millions of dollars and that you've got X number of beds, but the question still is: are you really getting value for your money? And is the outcome people, seniors – and not just seniors. These are people who can be brain injured. These are people who can have MS and who are young and don't necessarily want to be in a group home or, in fact, perhaps a long-term care facility where they don't really fit.

So where is the value? What is the outcome? Do we really have people that are truly being cared for where they should be being cared for? The answer, of course, is no. The different classifications that we have, long-term care and continuing care – and under continuing care, of course, there are other classifications, but long-term care truly is a skill level on its own. Because of the fact that I'm the critic in this area, I really do hear from people from all over the province who have heart-breaking tales of parents who were not looked after, or uncles and aunts, or in fact from husbands and parents of people who need full-time, long-term care at a very early age.

Home care is great for people with MS, but home care is limited in the fact that people must get out and people must have socialization. Because someone comes into someone's house – and I could use my hon. colleague from Calgary-Buffalo. Because someone comes in and helps him in the morning and helps him in the evening, he gets out during the day, and he has a full life. There are many people who could have full lives if they got the care that they needed at the time that they needed it.

We can jump back to seniors. Many, many seniors go from one level to another. In fact, most will before they pass on. The idea of a continuum of care within one building is very, very laudable. However, a lot of the buildings that are being built are for profit. Even if they are not for profit, the rent that people are paying pays for the bricks and the mortar. The care is very expensive.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, are you going to pull this into the appropriation bill?

Ms Pastoor: I was talking about the fact that we don't have enough money and that instead of always talking about dollars, dollars, dollars, we should be able to put a value on those dollars. How I interpreted value was the outcome for those dollars. We can throw money at everything, but if we don't get good outcomes, then the appropriation bill is not doing what it should be doing. It isn't using money wisely.

One of the other things that I'm certainly concerned about is funding for schools. We have an organization in Lethbridge called 5th on 5th, which has been doing superb work, working with out of school students and helping them. Some go on to get jobs, and some go on to further education. In fact, many have to finish up high school. We have any number of immigrant adults, basically anywhere from 18 to 30, who actually go through 5th on 5th and become taxpaying, responsible citizens for Alberta. Then we have Career Transitions, that look after the children in school and help them transition from school into appropriate jobs that they would like, that they're going to enjoy but really don't understand how they can get there. Sometimes they look at that tunnel, and there's just no light at the end of it.

I think it's very, very short-sighted to have cuts on these particular programs. I think it's very short-sighted because we will pay in the long run. We'll pay in society, in health costs, and certainly in justice. In fact, even worse is that there's a possibility of many, many young people wasting what is their personal potential in, certainly, becoming citizens who are trained and have the confidence to be able to hold jobs that will allow them to raise families and enjoy a lifestyle that Alberta can provide.

One of the other things that I haven't noticed in this appropriation bill is – I know that AISH has received some increases over the last couple of years, but as always I really believe that AISH has to be indexed as our MLAs' salaries. Yes, they have had some raises, but they may not see anything of consequence over the next little while, and they're always in a catch-up position. People who are in a catch-up position aren't – it's difficult for them to be positive. It's difficult for them to see hope. It's difficult for them to be able to really go further.

We always hear the Minister of Health and Wellness saying that there's a five-year sustainability plan, there's five years' worth of dollars for health care. Okay. That's great. But where is the five-year sustainability, the five-year funding plan for people on AISH? I believe that there should be no difference there. People on AISH should know and not have to wait until year's end to find out if, in fact, they will be able to receive any money that would help them even just meet inflation costs.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my place. But I do believe that talking about dollars being thrown at something is not talking about the outcome that those dollars should be providing.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. I'm pleased to ask the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East some questions. I know her passion in regard to seniors, and of course her previous nursing experience has been extremely helpful when we've had some conversations, sharing their frustration in regard to what's happening on the continuing care model that the government keeps bragging about.

I'd like to, firstly, ask the member her thoughts on the continuing care model, and if she feels that our seniors are being treated fairly when they're stuck in that model of an assisted living facility when they should be in a long-term care facility. I know one of her frustrations is the fact that it would be nice if we could get any one of the government members to come with us while we visit the facilities so that they can see what kind of seniors are stuck in an assisted living facility or, for that matter, in a hospital, as the member from Fort McMurray has talked about, in an acute-care setting.

I'm starting to get calls from seniors and their families across this province, and the other thing I'd like to ask her about is their frustration with not being able to access home care or, if they are getting home care, not adequate home care.

The last thing, I guess, that I'm getting calls about. The minister from Red Deer-North has talked about the seniors' benefits that they're getting. I don't think anybody is arguing about that. I asked the minister of health a question last week in regard to the seniors' drug plan that they all of a sudden dropped and then they've put back, and he indicated in question period that they were looking at it, or there was going to be a report soon. It's always soon. It reminds me of the KPMG report that was, I think, scheduled to be brought out in October. It's now April, and our poor people in the disabled community, dealing with disabilities under PDD, are anxiously waiting to hear that report. You know, quite frankly, soon is something in the dictionary that we should try and explain and figure out, what exactly soon is.

If the member could talk to the Assembly in regard to the independent living versus the assisted living versus where the heck they go from there.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for those questions. I think that I'd like to go back to 2005 and the MLA task force. One of the things that came out of that was staffing, staffing, staffing, staffing. Yet within the last 20 minutes I have heard that there was a petition from staff saying how many shifts they've had to work short. Part of that is the problem not only in continuing care and long-term care and all the rest of it, but staffing is absolutely imperative, and each level needs a different kind of staffing. You can't bring someone in, give them a six-week course, and let them loose on a geriatric population. There truly is a different set of skills that have to work with that. Particularly – I could go back to the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo example – our seniors that are sitting in acute settings are being looked after by nurses who are highly capable, but they're acute-care nurses. Many of them don't have that extra geriatric training that you need to be able to look after seniors.

We're hearing about seniors hitting out. We're hearing about seniors who are misbehaving. Well, when I see somebody go into someone's room – they are short-staffed, and they don't have enough money – and they walk into the room, and they take over. They just yank them out of bed and do whatever it is that they have to do. Yes, no wonder we have seniors who are acting out. Wouldn't we all in the same circumstances? And who gets blamed? It's the senior that gets blamed. No, it's untrained staff that is the problem. Anybody that has worked with seniors knows that you have to have time to be able to give them the dignity and to be able to approach them and say: this is what we're going to do. You don't just go in and do it.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak on Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2011. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek started talking about 1993, and that brought back old memories of cutbacks. With those cutbacks we lost hospitals, and there were layoffs. To pay down I believe it was a $22 billion debt, everybody made big sacrifices. The idea behind paying down the debt was that once the debt was gone, we could live happily ever after.

Then we came out with the Ralph bucks: $1.4 billion gone just like that, spending like drunken sailors. That was not managing the money properly. Those Ralph bucks: I mean, Alaska does it, but they do it from the income of the trust fund. Here we were using the trust fund money. Had we had income from the fund, we could have given the money away. You know, that could have probably been acceptable but, still, not at that cost. We had I believe 13,000 hospital beds that we dropped down to 7,900, and our population was going up. We still haven't caught up.

We've got a big, big infrastructure deficit, and we haven't caught up from the 1993 cutbacks. We haven't been saving enough. Our heritage trust fund. You know, Mr. Lougheed had the vision to save the money, and he set it up in 1976. The Alaska permanent fund, I believe, and the Norway fund were set up a long time after we did it. And here our heritage trust fund savings are just still hovering around $12 billion to $13 billion. That's what we had back in 1986. I mean, we had about $150 billion, I believe, that came from royalties. All that money is gone, and we've got nothing to show for it.

Then we had this sustainability fund set up. That was the idea of Mr. Ken Nicol of the Liberal Party. That $17 billion we keep bragging about, that now we've got the money: I don't know; I think that money is gone, too.

Here we are laying off teachers again. We're laying off social workers. We are doing cutbacks to immigrant services. You know, there's a freeze for funding for special-needs kids. The whole idea to pay down the debt, that $22 billion debt, was that, you know, we were going to save on the service costs, and then we would be able to manage our economy better.

Had the government been taking into consideration inflation and population growth and had our budgets been going up accordingly, we probably could have been in better shape today than we are now. With a boom coming, everybody keeps talking about the next boom. Is it going to put pressure on our infrastructure? Is it going to put pressure on schools? Is it going to put pressure on hospitals, pressure on roads and bridges everywhere? We are running a deficit, and once we start to get more money into the treasury, then, you know, we're going to fall further behind.

I don't think this is a very prudent way to spend taxpayers' hard-earned money. You know, with all the money we are spending like drunken sailors, we are not saving for future generations. What will happen when our nonrenewable resources are gone? What are we going to do then? We have been depending too much on the nonrenewable sources of money, and we haven't been saving for future generations. Future generations own those resources and have a right to those resources as much as we have now. We should be thinking about future generations as well. If you want them to have a good quality of life and the same standard of living, if not better, as we have today, then we should be managing our money properly.

Again, with $150 billion gone, you know, we're in a deficit situation, and the government should have their priorities straight. We talk about Environment, and there are cuts there. Our environment is probably going to go down the tubes the way we are going at it. All those abandoned wells: we have billions and billions of dollars in liability in that. I don't see anything in the budget for taking care of all those abandoned wells.

So with the cutbacks we are laying off teachers. I see here the Education expense, but it is not an expense; it is an investment. When we spend on education, we are educating Albertans, and they have to compete globally now. We are not isolated anymore. We have to have state-of-the-art schools in our education system. We have to have state-of-the-art technical schools if we are to compete globally. You know, with these cutbacks who knows? Education is the best investment. If you educate Albertans, they will have good jobs, and they will be contributing to the economy.

You know, the federal government is talking about building jails and buying jets. I think there should be more money for health care and for education. Instead of spending money on jails, we should be educating people. If people are educated, then maybe young people will stay away from crime. Here we give them an out. Instead of building jails and remand centres and all that, we should be spending money where it's going to be productive in the economy.

What their priorities are. I keep on talking about the airport tunnel, and here when I was advocating for the airport tunnel, there was no money for the airport tunnel. I believe that had we been keeping our priorities straight and managing the money properly, we could have had money for all the programs that we run. With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I have two questions, actually. A growing chorus of individuals and groups are calling for a public inquiry over a variety of health care delivery concerns, including workplace intimidation due in part to a significant lack of whistle-blower protection. However, when the AMA, the Alberta Medical Association, the United Nurses of Alberta, and the health sciences group, the front lines of defence, added their concerns, they were chided by members of this government as only being concerned about their own contract-bargaining welfare. The government has suggested that a public inquiry would take too long and would be too expensive. Do you believe that the inquiry is needed and worth the investment in terms of creating an improved climate for health care delivery, including patient advocacy?

Also, Bill 1 will be debated a little later. Can you draw a direct connection between Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act, and the connection with the airport tunnel and the need for funding from both the federal and provincial governments, funding that, as you've noted, has yet to arrive?

The Acting Speaker: I hope we can draw the connection to Bill 17.

Mr. Chase: Funding.

Mr. Kang: Well, in talking about the public inquiry, I think the minister has said that he doesn't want to spend $30 million or $40 million. If we have the public inquiry on health care, that $30 million or $40 million that we're going to spend on the public inquiry, who knows? When the front-line workers and everybody come out to openly talk about what's needed to fix the health care system, it will probably save us millions. You know, we will not know until we have the public inquiry and we hear from all of the related parties about this. I strongly believe that if we have the public inquiry, we can probably fix the health care system. We are spending almost 40 per cent of our budget on health care, $14 billion or $15 billion. I think that if we spend $30 million and can save maybe $200 million or $300 million, it will be well worth the money.

Coming to Bill 1, you know, that money will be well spent, too, because we should not be depending on our friends to the south; we should be diversifying our economy. I will be talking later on about Bill 1. In India, China, and even Southeast Asia the economies are growing by 8 per cent a year. I believe that India's GDP is about $1.4 trillion and that by the year 2025 or 2030 their economy is going to surpass Germany's and Japan's. By the year 2050 they will maybe be number two or three. So we need to diversify our economy.

We need all of our infrastructure in place, too. That's why I keep on talking about bridges. That's why I keep on talking about the Airport Trail tunnel. Even the Premier has been saying, you know, that we should let the airlines from the Middle East, U.A.E., come into Calgary. We need more international connections coming to Alberta so that we can benefit from diversifying our economy. We need that infrastructure. We should be spending money on infrastructure now, and we should get our priorities straight. The airport tunnel will not only save money in the long run through businesses and all those people working there – you could even take the C-Train to the airport and that – but all Albertans would benefit. That would even be good for southern Alberta. It will contribute big time to our economy, too.

I strongly believe that we should have our priorities straight; we should have infrastructure for the future. Now it's going to cost us maybe $300 million to build the airport tunnel, but if you were to do it in the future, it's going to cost billions of dollars. It will be much wiser and more prudent to do it now than to do it five or 10 – I'm sure we're going to do it five or 10 years down the road, but we should be doing it now. You know, in the budget we should consider all that much-needed, vital infrastructure for Alberta.

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

[Debate adjourned April 21]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you adjourned the debate. Do you wish to continue, or are you finished?

Ms Notley: I'm finished.

The Speaker: Okay. Then the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to be rather brief because I am in favour of Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011. It creates a regulatory framework for a new class of petroleum production called in situ coal schemes, that produce synthetic coal, gas, and liquids through in situ coal gasification and liquefaction; eliminates the current regulatory regime of industrial development permits, which exist to prevent resource waste, as the regulations currently applied have been superseded over time by environmental regulation; expands the breadth of the oversight provided by the Market Surveillance Administrator under the Electric Utilities Act and the Alberta Utilities Commission under the Gas Utilities Act; and changes the definition of oil sands facilities.

Now, I am very aware, Mr. Speaker, that what we're talking about is an extraction from an underground source through heating up the source. The gas is produced underground and then collected. However, as we move forward into the future, it's been estimated that we have somewhere between the potential of 200 to 500 years of coal reserves. Unlike what a former Premier suggested, that this is clean coal, it may be to a degree cleaner than some other forms of coal, but its best use, as opposed to turning it into coke going up chimneys, causing a whole variety of chemical and CO<sub>2</sub> emissions, is the gasification process.

When we run out of our conventional oil and gas and when we run out of the less than conventional bitumen resources and we run out of the natural gas and the shale gas, then we can at least look forward to a slightly more expensive extraction process, turning that coal into a gasification process. Alberta is fortunate, depending on how we develop this resource environmentally and sustainably, to have this rich, nonrenewable resource on top of the gas, on top of the conventional oil resources that we have.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, how we extract that gas into the future needs to be carefully considered. We have had concerns about, for example, the fracking process for shale gas. While the same type of fracking isn't required to heat the underground seams to produce the synthetic coal gas, obviously we're going to have to do it with the most up-to-date scientific methodology going forward. We also have to be aware of capturing the majority of that gas, and for anything that we fail to capture, obviously we have to have some kind of a sequestering approach so that for what somehow escapes capture, if that case happens, we have an ability to sequester it so it doesn't simply become one more atmospheric pollutant.

Mr. Speaker, I think Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011, is a step in the right direction. As long as we balance it with environmental, sustainable methodology, then it serves as an economic resource that, hopefully, we can use into the future to help to sustain our programs. It adds length to the possibility of our nonrenewable resource revenue, but in itself it isn't a replacement for clean or green energy sources. Of course, I am not including nuclear under that category.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to debate Bill 16.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for comments or questions.

Anyone else wish to speak?

Mrs. Forsyth: I'd like to speak to the bill, not ask him questions.

The Acting Speaker: Yes.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up and speak in support of Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011. I want to get on the record that we support the intent of the bill to provide the regulations for in situ coal gasification, eliminate duplicative regulations of energy use already administered by Alberta Environment, and actually strengthen the powers of the Market Surveillance Administrator, known as the MSA. It's good to see that this bill reduces one of the thousands of cases of overregulation in the province; namely, the duplication of regulations governing energy use for the industry and manufacturing. I know that the mover of the bill has done a lot of work on this particular bill, and we appreciate all of the work that she has done in regard to bringing Bill 16 into the Legislature.

The other part of the bill clarifies and strengthens the power of the Market Surveillance Administrator. That person's role is to be an independent policeman for our power market. We did some research on the Market Surveillance Administrator, however, and we had trouble sort of finding any activity on this particular position, the MSA. We're concerned about exactly what this Market Surveillance Administrator will be doing, his independence, after all, because of the fact that he is appointed by the minister. We've got some concerns there, but second reading is just to get an idea of what people are thinking, and we look forward to discussing in committee what the role is of this particular administrator, some discussion in regard to his independence. While the minister appoints him, it's important for us to understand independence, reporting mechanism, et cetera.

With those short notes, I look forward to more discussion in second and probably more discussion after that in committee. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, any other members wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak to Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011. The act touches many different areas in our energy statutes and, therefore, has many separate objectives. It's going to create a framework for the Energy Resources Conservation Board to regulate in situ coal schemes in a similar fashion to conventional petroleum deposits.

The intent of the bill seems to be that it's going to streamline the regulatory process for conventional coal deposits to speed up, probably, the licensing for the companies to do business, and it will eliminate the duplication, like cutting the bureaucratic red tape. It will eliminate the duplication of the regulatory process for industrial developments that consume large quantities of energy resources, expand the oversight of gas distributors and default gas providers to ensure system safety and additional consumer protections by harmonizing regulations with electric utilities.

The bill's intent is also to expand oversight of the Alberta Independent System Operator by the Market Surveillance Administrator to ensure efficient operation of the Alberta electricity market and to reclassify downstream facilities that process oil sands products to encourage investment in downstream activities.

The amendments to the Coal Conservation Act will create a regulatory framework, and by changing the definition of coal and defining coal seams, it may turn some marginal coal deposits from mineral resources to pore space, potentially changing the ownership if mineral rights are owned by private interests, and allow the use of very low-quality coal formations as carbon capture and storage reservoirs. It will be very important to raise this in the House to seek clarification on this, Mr. Speaker. The creation of a regulatory framework for in situ coal schemes may encourage investment, research, experimentation, and development, and that may evolve into more environmentally friendly alternatives to conventional coal used over time, most likely for the generation of electricity.

This new in situ coal scheme I think will be good for the environment, too. It will bring more investment into the province. My concern is the boom-and-bust situations we've been in before. If this is going to create a boom, you know, how are we going to manage this? Are we going to have some kind of a management regulatory body in place? We don't want to get caught in the same situation we were in before with the oil sands: too much development coming in, and we couldn't find skilled labour, and the economy was heating up.

Also, eliminating industrial development permits may allow for rational self-interest to overrule collective interest at times. For example, preventing the burning of ethanol as fuel but reserving it for use as petrochemical feedstock may be more difficult than an environmental regulation. Reclassifying downstream oil sands processing facilities may change oil sands projects payoffs for a period and create tax and royalty regime advantages, which may encourage more value-added industry to be placed in Alberta rather than in other jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, this act is a mixed bag, as one would expect any amendment package of such breadth. In its totality the good elements outweigh the bad ones. The loss of industrial development permits removes an avenue for the rejection of large industrial facilities that consume Alberta's energy resources. This would be most significant if permits were ever rejected. While the Alberta Liberal government might wish to implement similar provisions that are being removed by this act, it is not a significant loss to the public good under the current government.

In situ schemes generating synthetic gas and oil is a developmental technology that may in the future become economical, which may present massive opportunities given Alberta's large coal reserves, and this regulatory framework is a rare example of the government showing a degree of foresight. The creation of a new regime to regulate in situ schemes also moves Alberta closer to being able to use coal for electricity generation in a manner that produces emissions much closer to the level of natural gas fired generation than current coal plants. A power plant fired by synthetic coal gas or liquid also shows much greater promise of being integrated into a successful carbon capture and storage system than a conventional coal-powered station.

The expansion of oversight by the Alberta independent electric system operator of gas distributors, gas default supply providers, and gas utilities will help to improve the function of the utility system as designed while increasing consumer protection. While we might object to the fundamental design of the system, most notably permitted profit margins and distribution of capital costs among market participants, there is no reason to object to the real marginal improvements of the existing system. So a vote for marginal improvements is not a vote for endorsing the current system, Mr. Speaker.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will adjourn the debate on Bill 16. Thank you very much.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011

[Mr. Mitel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Yes. Speaking in favour of Bill 15 . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we're on Amendment A1, which was moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Does everyone know what the amendment was?

Mrs. Forsyth: I do. I have it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, then.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm rising to speak in support of Amendment A1 under the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011. I want to put on the record, first of all, that I support Bill 15, and I think that there's no question that the Victims of Crime Amendment Act is designed to increase benefits paid to victims and improve their support programs.

What I like about the amendment that the hon. member is bringing forward is the statute of limitations timeline. I had the opportunity to talk to her about that, and she brought up what I considered some very significant information in regard to why we should support that. One of the things is that if as a child you've been sexually abused and finally decide to come forward – and I think someone that would be a very good person to look at is Theo Fleury, who was sexually abused, I think, starting when he was 14, by one of his coaches. I don't know how old he is now, but I would imagine he's in his late 30s, early 40s. Theo, forgive me if I'm aging you. I just want to tell you just how much I admire your courage to come forward.

There are incidents like that. If you have a child – and they could be someone like Theo Fleury, for example – a child that has been sexually abused when they were young, and they decide to seek some financial compensation maybe when they're 25 or 30 years old, it could be 10, 15, 20 years later. I think it's important that as a government we talk about one of our priorities being the protection of children in this province. The bill clearly indicates that it's for victims of crime and compensation provided to victims of crime.

I wanted to just get on the record that we support the amendment from the member and also support the bill, but we want to see the amendment supported.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak to the amendment, and I'll do so very briefly. The object of this limitation period is certainty. The member tries through the amendment to take it back to the injury rather than the commission of an offence. The commission of an offence is clear. It provides certainty in the subsequent period before the expiry. By taking it to the injury or the impact of an injury on an individual, it becomes again unclear as to when that appeal period or the filing, the notification period, actually expires. What we're attempting here is to provide certainty, which this doesn't do.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek brought up the incidence of a hockey player that was abused as a child. The amendment actually removes the 10-year extension from when that child reaches the age of majority. I don't know if that was intended or not, but I would strongly oppose that. It also removes a 10-year extension in the event that the person was unsure of the commission of an offence. I'm not real clear on why the 10-year exemption is completely gone now. But, again, the purpose of this moving from injury to the commission of an offence and such offence needing to be reported is that it provides absolute certainty as to when those timelines expire.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you. Well, I find it interesting that the minister suggests that somehow the amendment takes out what you refer to as an extension. My reading of this is that your proposed amendment to the legislation will impose a 10-year limitation period, a flat 10-year limitation period no matter what.

Your amendment is proposing to do three things. It's proposing to redefine the two-year limitation period from awareness, and it redefines it from awareness of an injury to awareness of an offence, which limits the scope. Then the next thing that it does is it proposes to add an absolute 10-year limitation period where there was none before. Your current act does not have a 10-year limitation period. Then it proposes to also add a 10-year limitation period from the age of 18, but your current act has no limitation period for 10 years. You simply have the two years from awareness.

What you're doing is that even if the person is unaware 10 years after the offence or the injury has occurred that they are a victim and have sustained an injury from that offence, they lose the ability to pursue any kind of compensation. Your act is very much limiting the scope of eligibility. The classic situation, as the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek already identified, is one where people who are victims of violence or crimes as children suffer psychological injury which they're not aware of until more than 10 years after they turn 18 or more than 10 years after the offence. Those people would no longer be eligible for compensation under your proposed amendment. My proposed amendment to change your act is to eliminate that so that you do not impose a 10-year limitation period on children who are victims of crime, who may not be aware of the psychological injury they suffer until after 10 years subsequent to the crime.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Speaking in favour of amendment A1, I very much appreciate the fact that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has a legal background and therefore uses that legal understanding and knowledge for the betterment of the amendment to Bill 15, Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011.

I agree with the hon. member's explanation as to why the 10 years, basically a statute of limitation for compensation, should not be part of the act, particularly if an offence occurs when a child is extremely young. For example, the onset of mental illness: if it's going to strike, it strikes 40 per cent of individuals by age 14. If you do the math, if a person is assaulted at age two, they're expected to somehow bring forward a claim or a victimization concern at age 12. That's a very large expectation. The continuing trauma, the result of an act of crime, should not have a time limitation on it in terms of the compensation.

The other part of the bill basically prompts the courts to act in a responsive manner. Within two years from the date of the injury or within two years from the date when the victim becomes aware or knows or ought to know the nature of the injury and recognizes the effect of the injuries: for those who are not minors and have an understanding of the type of assault or whatever the victimization was, they should expect that the wheels of justice and the compensation should roll out within a timely period. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is recognizing the government's original wisdom in the creation of that amendment.

Mr. Chair, I look forward to voting on the amendment and then moving ahead to debate Bill 15, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011, as amended because I'm supportive of the intent of both the bill and the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I hope that the government members are listening to this debate because this is really important. I know we go through a lot of kind of painstaking, technical things that we deal with in the Legislature. They're still important, but obviously some things are more important than others. This is an important amendment for many reasons. It is critical that you, please, do give it the time of day.

The issue I have with the amendments the government is bringing into their bill is that they put on a 10-year absolute limitation. That means that if somebody is abused as a child and they, say, were abused at age six or whatever and then it comes forward, you know, that when they're 28 or something, they realize that they've been abused in this way and they just start dealing with it, then they wouldn't be entitled to compensation under this act because it wouldn't come within the 10-year absolute limitation period.

This is a serious omission, and I personally don't think there's anyone over on that side who – well, I don't know. Maybe there needs to be some education in this regard. There are people out there that endure horrible things, and they bottle up those issues and those memories when they're children. They can be abused at ages two, three, four, five, six, seven, et cetera, even eight or even after that, and it is such a traumatic experience for them that they suppress those memories. It's actually a physical thing that happens. Physically, mentally they suppress those feelings. It's a bit of a survival mechanism, a coping mechanism, but it is a complete block off, where literally they forget or they just block it off in their mind.

I know it's hard for us who haven't gone through such abuse to understand it, but that is absolutely the case. That is what happens. There are many, many cases where an adult will all of a sudden have these memories start coming to them and will realize some of the awful things that have happened to them in the past and in explicit detail. They can go to counselling and actually work through these things and separate fact from fiction and make sure that they know and are able to bring these memories up in their mind and start coping with them and start healing from them. A lot of times this doesn't happen until age 25, 30, 35. It can go longer, but that's usually where it occurs, kind of in that early adulthood age.

It's a very serious and painful ordeal for those involved to have to go through, so I don't think that there's an understanding here. Maybe it was just an oversight, but I don't think that having a 10-year absolute limitation is right. I understand the need for certainty or the desire for certainty, but, you know, someone who was molested as a two- or three-year-old is just as much a victim as someone who is molested as a 16- or 17-year-old and who can remember the whole thing all the way through. We need to in our society make it very clear that we value these individuals as much and abhor the crimes committed against them as much as we do those who were abused later in life, which is also just as serious.

I feel that this amendment sends a message that for these folks, these victims who were abused early in their childhood and who are just coming to grips with that today or later on in their life, their victimization is somehow less serious or even, I would say, less believable. That's what a lot of these folks struggle with, that a lot of people don't understand how a child could forget such awful things happening to them. They don't understand that. So one of the things they have to cope with is trying to get people to believe them, that these things actually did happen in their young life even though they had forgotten it for a period of time through their early teens and on towards even sometimes into their 20s.

By passing this, again, it shows kind of, I think, a lack of sensitivity to these victims, who need to be believed. They need to feel that their victimization is every bit as serious as that that's happened later on in a person's life and has been remembered all the way through. That's critical.

There's no doubt in my mind that the Solicitor General of this province is someone that has zero tolerance for any kind of sexual abuse towards children and is very sincere in his desire to protect children and victims of abuse. There's just no doubt in my mind about that, but I do think that for whatever reason this amendment to institute a 10-year absolute limitation – obviously, I don't think this was thought out properly. That's fine. You know, there are a lot of things happening, and that can happen.

I would ask the Solicitor General to seriously consider leaving that absolute limitation out, to not put that in, to make sure that for our kids or our adults that have been abused as children and who have suppressed those memories or who weren't aware of the crime, et cetera, until later on in life, their rights be respected and guarded just the same as you would somebody who knew of the abuse right away.

Again, I know that it's very tempting to put limitations or – what's the word? You want certainty in the legislation. I understand that. I mean, we do want certainty in legislation as much as possible. But some things in life you just can't be certain about. Some things are so awful and evil that they don't conform. You can't deal with them in a conventional way like you can with things like fraud and other things like that. It's just too difficult to deal with these things. Even though it might mean some extra cases and some extra monies or extra uncertainty in this regard, I just think that we need to bite the bullet and realize that for these types of cases it's very critical for us to be as flexible as possible to make sure that we give the victims all possible flexibility, all possible ability to somehow find justice and somehow get compensated for the horrors that they had to endure as children. I just think that this is very critical.

Obviously, we have disagreements in this House about many different issues. One thing that I don't feel we have any disagreement about is the importance of protecting our children and the sanctity of their innocence. When that's violated, we have to make sure that even when it's a little messy and even when things are a little uncertain, we do the right thing anyway, and we give them all the time in the world to be able to get back on track. If this victims of crime statute helps them to feel like they're being restored a little bit – this, of course, will never take away the pain, will never fully compensate them for what's been stolen from them – it's a start.

The most important thing is the message from the Solicitor General, the Justice minister, the government of whoever they are on that day. It's an affirmation to them that their victimization was every bit as egregious and awful as anyone else's sexual victimization or any other victimization and that they will be able to be compensated and be treated in the exact same way as anyone else. I hope the government will consider this over the next little while as we debate it.

I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for bringing such a timely amendment forward.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I listened with intent and interest to the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and also the hon. Member for Peace River and, of course, the author of the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I think it's important, as we listen here, that this is an example of where we can reach agreement. Of course, I'm going to be watching closely for the support of the Solicitor General, the Member for Peace River, for the amendment that's being put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona because, clearly, she is on the right side with this amendment.

I heard with interest the Solicitor General talk about the issue of certainty, and I think we understand that certainty, but I think it's important that amendment A1 is providing even greater certainty of flexibility when it comes to victims and children who have endured something so horrible in the past. I would hope that the Solicitor General and Member for Peace River would be supporting the amendment that's being put forward, amendment A1, by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. No matter what political party, I think we can all have something in common when it comes to protecting our children.

It's also interesting to note that the current act does not have a 10-year limitation period in it. What's really important is limiting the scope of eligibility, which is, without question, a concern. It's an important concern of mine, and I would hope it is – and I automatically assume it is – a concern of every member in this House. That's why I would be looking for the Solicitor General and Member for Peace River to be supporting amendment A1. It is clearly on the right track in terms of providing that flexibility, and it therefore does not limit the scope of eligibility.

As was mentioned earlier, the prime example was that there should not be a time allocation, and the proposed amendment allows that to take place. The example that was used by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek of the former National Hockey League player is a prime example that if, in fact, what is being proposed goes through, the current act in its old, existing form, again, did not have a 10-year limitation period. This amendment, that has been put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, wants to ensure that examples such as what was mentioned earlier, the former NHLer who, you know, should not be penalized in any way, shape, or form because of a time allocation – A1 is providing, I believe, greater certainty, which was mentioned by the Solicitor General, but greater certainty of flexibility as opposed to what is being suggested. That's why I would anticipate and expect the government's Solicitor General to support the amendment that is being put forth by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona because, clearly, she is on the right side of right, and I'm convinced that the Solicitor General and government members want to be on the right side of right as well, to ensure that we do not restrict, do not limit in terms of a 10-year limitation period.

I don't know if it was intended, but the result of amendment A1 as it stands today, I believe, is an important amendment to ensure that that restriction is lifted, the 10-year limitation period. The current act does not have one, and it should not have one in any amendments that are being put forward by the government. This amendment is, clearly, an important one to ensure that limiting the scope of eligibility is simply not a noble principle in the issue of protecting our children.

The proposed amendment A1, Mr. Chairman, is a very good amendment. I would anticipate that every single member of this House will support this amendment that is being put forward so as to ensure that there is no 10-year limitation period and that we show certainty, we show compassion, and we show the flexibility to clearly indicate that in voting for this amendment, we'll be voting on the right side. We'll be voting for children who have experienced horrible things in the past, and it will not restrict – will not restrict – them from coming forward in years to come. The former NHLer Theoren Fleury was the example. He would not be able to come forward, in fact, given what is being proposed by the government.

I think that on this amendment, that is being proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the excellent comments by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, the comments by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek clearly – I welcome further comments by the Solicitor General to ensure that the principles of what is being proposed in this amendment will be followed through in protecting our children.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, am supporting this bill.

The Deputy Chair: The amendment.

Ms Pastoor: I'm sorry; the amendment. I just don't think that time frames can be put on these types of incidents. I think of some of the cases, the cold cases, that are now being looked at and actually solved. There is different technology, certainly, in terms of DNA.

We talk about this as compensation. Not everything is about money. I will use the example of the two hockey players. In fact, Sheldon Kennedy was one of the first ones to come out. His abuse was at the hands of the same coach that Theoren Fleury was coached by. These men had gone through hell, absolute hell, before they could come out and talk about these sorts of things in public. Both men have to be thanked profusely because maybe they have saved some other young men from this sort of abuse.

Sometimes it isn't about money. It's about being recognized that you, in fact, were a victim and that you, in fact, were right.

I read something in the paper just, actually, last week. It was about a 92-year-old black woman in the southern States, where 70 years later it was recognized that, yes, in fact, she was a rape victim by a gang of people. They had the names, but no one ever paid attention in those days. So 70 years later this woman has received the compensation for the dignity that she deserved and that it should have been recognized 70 years previous to that.

We have to recognize that if a crime has been committed, there is always a victim. That victim has to be validated, and there are so many different ways. It isn't just the sexual abuse of children, who forget about it, because both Sheldon Kennedy and Theoren Fleury did not forget about it. But what they had to do was realize that they were incapable of long-term relationships. They turned to drugs and drinking. They, basically, almost ruined their lives until there was that point where, in fact, they had help.

So, yes, there is always a victim that has to be validated. It isn't always about money. Sometimes an apology is necessary. Sometimes to be able to face that perpetrator years and years and years later helps the person who was the victim to go forward. Many people stop in their lives.

It isn't just young people. There are many women and, actually, there are men as well that are raped, and they know full well what has happened. They can't prove it, but they know it. They go forward trying to live a normal life when, in fact, life has not been normal, nor will it ever be again.

I think it's very important not to put a time frame on what happens in life. All we have to do is look at history and see how things can come out even within families, the family secrets, so to speak. It often comes out, sometimes in a second generation, 50 years later, 60 years later. Emotions and people and life: life is certainly not a certainty. Trying to put a time frame or a certainty on life I think is impossible, and I think it shouldn't be legislated.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do appreciate the opportunity to speak to this particular amendment. I want to start out by saying that I appreciate very much the hon. member bringing this amendment forward and highlighting the concern with respect to a particular area that I think all of us are very much hearing about and concerned about, and that's children who are affected by people who may or may not be people who are their parents or their caregivers or someone else who has a position of authority over them in their life, a hockey coach or whomever. The issue here is really one of: when can people apply for benefits, and what sorts of limitations are there on the application? I think the hon. Solicitor General has very clearly, through a consultation process with the public, talked about how we can improve the Victims of Crime Act, how we can create greater certainty around the victims of crime fund and its operation, and I think that's all very laudable.

We do have limitations in life in terms of how long something can go before you bring it forward, and in this particular act and this particular section 12, 12.2 in particular, it's really talking about the distance between the reporting of a crime and the ability to come forward as a victim of that crime and apply for benefits under the act. In the normal course one would assume that there should be some time limitation. You should know that you are the victim of a crime. You would know fairly quickly in most circumstances that you are the victim of a crime, and then you would be able to come forward and under the Victims of Crime Act look for the benefits that are there.

The particular circumstance that the hon. member has raised relative to children is more problematic because there may or may not be an appropriate opportunity for a child. Whoever was responsible for that child up until their age of majority may not have taken steps on their behalf, and they should not be precluded from that just because somebody else has not acted appropriately on their behalf. In fact, as has been said, there may be a circumstance where it doesn't actually come to light, come to their recognition or understanding for some considerable period of time. I don't think it's the intention of the Solicitor General, in bringing this forward, to automatically preclude all those circumstances. It's really the intention here to put some appropriate parameters around who can apply and when they can apply so there's some certainty to the fund and the operation of the fund.

As I said at the beginning, I appreciate the hon. member bringing this forward. My view would be that without a thorough analysis of this and how it impacts the rest of the operation of the act, it would be imprudent to pass this amendment at the moment. But I think it would be very prudent for us to say to the Solicitor General that he should have his staff have a look at the comments that have been brought forward and do an analysis on that particular circumstance of something which comes to light much later in a person's life about something that happened to them during childhood and see whether that fits within the Victims of Crime Act.

This is not a compensation act in the sense that it's intended to right all the wrongs. This is a victims' fund, and it's intended to assist victims through a process. So we're talking here about something which is a little bit disassociated from that but still very relevant, and it might be something which could be properly compensable. I would have thought it might have come up during the review that was done, but certainly statutes should be living documents. I think just because we pass this act today doesn't mean this particular concern shouldn't be dealt with over the longer term, and if there is a real concern there, that could be brought forward in an amendment at a future time.

I'd also indicate that I think this type of amendment – we get to look at acts on our side of the House, obviously. We develop them. Our committees look at them. We go through a very thorough analysis of what's happening and why we're doing it. I've always encouraged people bringing forward substantive amendments to bring them to my attention as House leader or to the sponsoring minister's attention early so that that type of analysis can be done to see whether it has an impact on other aspects of the act.

For today I would recommend to the House that we not pass this amendment but that the Solicitor General, having heard this debate, might take this back, take a look at it, and determine whether or not there's something which might be done at a future date if rights are being affected in the manner that the hon. member has raised.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This little conversation has been fascinating, quite frankly. I listened very intently to the Government House Leader and how he spoke about how the government has the opportunity to have legislation before them for a longer period of time than the opposition. It's amazing to me that if the government has this legislation before them for a longer period of time, they just can't get it right.

You know, he spoke about the Solicitor General having the opportunity to do some consulting. Well, I happened to be the Solicitor General from 2001 to 2004, and I'm struggling with the difficulty of both the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice missing this. If you go to the legislation – it's page 6 – it talks about an application for benefits, and it clearly says under 12.2(1): "An application under section 12 or 12.1 may be made only if the offence was reported to a police service within a reasonable period of time after the offence occurred." If you want to talk about applications for benefits, it's talking about a reasonable period of time after the offence occurred.

If you're a six-year-old and you've been sexually abused, a horrific thought, but say that the dad – as the former minister of children's services I hate to wake Albertans up, but there are lots of dads who have sexually abused their children with the whole family intact. If you go under application where the victim was a minor, which is 12.3,

If the victim was a minor at the time the offence occurred, an application under section 12 must, . . .

There are always those words within government. It's called must versus may. Must is a very strong legal term. I've learned that in my time in government.

. . . subject to the regulations, be made within 10 years from the date the victim reaches the age of majority.

You can fully understand why the member is bringing forward an amendment asking for that statute of limitation to be removed. The bill clearly states under application for benefits, 12.2(1), and then goes into (2).

- (a) within 2 years after the date on which the victim or applicant, as the case may be, first knew, or in the circumstances ought to have known, that the offence occurred, or
- (b) within 10 years after the offence occurred.

Under subsection (a) it talks about the victim or applicant, which could mean the child or the parent of the child. There again it goes to my point where I spoke about the fact that you've had sexual abuse in a family – and, unfortunately, in this province there are many, many cases where dad could have been the sexual abuser or mom, for that matter – and mom or dad on the other side are too embarrassed to report it or too afraid to report it.

One just needs to look at all of the work that the organization Little Warriors is doing at this particular time in regard to bringing the issue of child sexual abuse to the front. It's one of those subjects that people don't want to talk about. From many instances, when I was minister of children's services, in regard to sexual abuse, some so horrific that they're still etched in my mind, and from what I've read – I thought I was pretty knowledgeable after being the Solicitor General for four years till I hit that particular ministry. I've got to tell you that that one really wakes you up when you see all of the horrific things that are happening in this province.

Let's step away from sexual abuse. If we want to step away from that, let's talk about child pornography. You have a child that is subject to child pornography, and they have been filmed in some pretty horrific incidents by a family member, whether it's an uncle or a dad or an aunt or a grandma or a grandfather. When you're looking at the mind of a two- or three-year-old, you're not understanding. I mean, I remember, when I was the minister, dealing with a 17-year-old who thought at that particular time, after we apprehended her and brought her into care, that it was perfectly normal to have sex with her dad. She knew nothing different, knew nothing was abnormal in that fact till she reported it, coincidentally, to a janitor in the school.

These are the kind of things that I think the government has to realize. They have to understand that I think what frustrates Albertans more than anything, in my time involved in child prostitution, in any of that kind of stuff – child pornography, sexual abuse, drugs and alcohol – is that we're all talking about victims. They're all victims, and the government needs to stick up for these particular individuals.

I mean, I don't think people can appreciate, as we sit here in our suits and our ties and our dress clothes, how this paralyzes victims and the suffering that they go through. I go back again to Theo Fleury, watching him. I think he was 14 when it happened. It came out 20 years later, and he was still feeling extreme pain. I don't recall anyone at that particular time advocating for him. You certainly see all sorts of people now becoming advocates. I know the minister of children's services, for that matter, becomes an advocate for the children that are under their care when they realize that these children have been sexually abused.

In my time I have met children that had been sexually abused when they were five or six, and you're talking to them at a youth forum or something when they're 22 or 23. I think it's important for us to understand that of many of the children that are involved in child prostitution or, for that matter, that we've apprehended off the street, we've found that a very high proportion have been sexually abused when they were young.

It's interesting to hear the Minister of Education and House leader talk about and mention in his speaking that: let's pass this bill, and then we'll bring an amendment later. Well, it's always later, or it's always sooner. We're on the floor of the Legislature right now. It's what I consider a significant and good amendment, and we have the opportunity at this time in committee to accept the amendment from the member. She is hearing from people, advocacy groups, and I'm sure that in the Twitter world this will be followed now. I know we're going to start getting e-mails about it. So I'm again asking the Solicitor General to accept this amendment from one of the opposition members.

We look forward to continuing to debate this legislation. I know the Member for Calgary-Varsity as a former educator is very, very passionate about children. He has taken on a case himself in regard to the 15-year-old that we both know and are involved with, whom he has been advocating for in the Legislature. As the minister indicated, we've now got her in some secure treatment for a few days. It's like the revolving door he referred to earlier.

I think it's a time right now when we can do something on behalf of those who were abused when they were younger and provide them not only the protection that I think they deserve but the protection they need with the Victims of Crime Act. This way it'll provide them some compensation so that they can seek some counselling that they probably, without question, deserve.

Once again, we're in committee, and that allows us to speak as many times as we want, quite frankly, and we will continue to listen to what the government has to say. As I indicated earlier, I was somewhat disturbed, actually, to hear what the House leader, the Minister of Education, had to say. I know he advocates on behalf of children because as the former Justice minister we spent four years advocating at FPTs, the federal-provincial-territorial meetings, about raising the age of consent. At every FPT meeting he made darned sure that was on the agenda, so I guess what we're doing is asking the government to accept the amendment from one of our opposition colleagues and, quite frankly, do the right thing.

The Deputy Chair: Do any members wish to speak? The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think we're going to reach just a very brief stalemate here in that I wasn't made aware of the content of this amendment before we hit committee stage in this, and I in good conscience can't accept an amendment without an ability to review its full impact on the bill.

I understand very clearly the sentiment, and I think I hear that the opposition parties, all who have spoken, understand the issue of certainty. I also understand that maybe certainty is a difficult thing to achieve. Nonetheless, I want an opportunity to take the sentiment that I'm hearing over there and review this. Whether that is going to make me arrive at some comfort with the amendment or propose an additional amendment, I can't say right now, but I would like a very brief time with this.

So at this point I'd like to move that we adjourn debate, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 4 Securities Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Again, I'm quite supportive of Bill 4, the Securities Amendment Act, 2011. What Bill 4 does is that it makes further amendments to harmonize the passport system that originated from the 2004 memorandum of understanding between the federal and provincial governments, excepting Ontario. It brings forward amendments to support Canada's conversion to international financial reporting standards, creates a framework for regulating credit-rating organizations, and allows the Alberta Securities Commission to impose sanctions for late filing of disclosure that are more similar to the B.C. model. There are also further amendments to ensure that Alberta's registration regime is harmonized with other provinces'.

Now, there has been a degree of controversy, Mr. Chair, with regard to the idea of a single regulator. The Alberta Liberals have joined the government in expressing concerns about Alberta's financial interests not necessarily being well advocated for under a single securities regulator potentially operating out of Toronto. It doesn't matter so much where it operates out of; it's the singular aspect that causes concern. What we are seeing is a move to involve all the provinces in terms of having a say in the well-being of their own investments and their own securities. That's what Bill 4 attempts to do.

We have a trade agreement with British Columbia. We're moving to extend that agreement to Saskatchewan, so Bill 4 keeps in account our sort of economic provincial well-being but also, rather than simply building a wall or isolating ourselves, takes into account best practices in other provinces across this nation. For those reasons, Mr. Chair, I am supportive of Bill 4, the Securities Amendment Act, 2011.

I realize in saying that, Mr. Chair, that there may be other members within this caucus who have other concerns that they may wish to bring forward or even the possibility of amendments. But in general we are supportive of the direction the government is heading with Bill 4, Securities Amendment Act, 2011.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I think it's important that under Bill 4, the Securities Amendment Act, 2011, clearly, the passport system is an excellent system. It has served Canada and especially Alberta very well. The passport system is flexible to local needs and to the local economy like the energy sector. Of course, Toronto is a world leader in mining and metals, and they play to their strengths, but we also play to ours here in Alberta, and we're very proud of that.

In my constituency we belong, of course, to the – very seldom can you use the word “world”, but I'm very proud to say that I am the MLA for the oil sands capital of the world. We have something that the rest of the world wants. As I look around and look at the different strengths of different provinces and different cities, I'm very proud to say that the strength of Fort McMurray, Alberta, is that it's the oil sands capital of the world. Not only that, but to add balance to that is my son, who will be turning four in May, and that we care deeply about the environment.

We believe that we can work in harmony in developing our oil sands but also in sustaining and protecting our environment. I can say that unlike any other member of this Assembly because it is my home, no one else's in this Assembly but mine. It's my home, where my three-and-a-half-year-old breathes the air each and every day. So first as a father, not as an MLA, I say that I don't think anyone will question our motivation as parents, especially on the topic that we were talking about earlier regarding what the Solicitor General, I appreciate, is going to review.

Now, the passport system can also be improved and updated when warranted. No one asserts that it's perfect, but the passport system is effective at its goal and is internationally recognized by the OECD, the World Bank, and also by the Milken Institute. Clearly, we have to look at it in the manner that Canada and Alberta navigated very well the recent recession, better than most jurisdictions in the world. I applaud, certainly, the federal government because of its regulatory system, not in spite of it. The economies with the greatest recession and financial catastrophe were those with national regulators like Europe and America. So I think we need to reflect on that important point.

I think, also, that securities regulation has always been a provincial jurisdiction and that it should remain a provincial jurisdiction. So there is much common ground between our provincial systems, that have been harmonized to be efficient, but at the same time there is already a very extensive collaboration to ensure a strong regulatory system. There are not 10 completely unique regulatory bodies out there; they work in harmony as a single access point for our nation, and I think this is important. Therefore, ceding regulatory authority could be a precedent that Albertans, I believe, would not like to see at this point.

As much as financial matters are important at the national level – and I applaud the Prime Minister and his government for the good work that they have done in, certainly, the OECD countries – I would like to say that when it comes to the issue of provincial regulatory authority, Alberta has done very well in managing and harmonizing with other provinces in a system that is not broken. We always take the approach of “and then some.” And then some is really the attitude of Albertans. Not only can we do something; we can do it and then some. And then some really reflects the values of Albertans – Alberta seniors, Alberta financiers, Alberta farmers, Alberta oil and gas workers, Alberta teachers, Alberta nurses, Alberta doctors – that they will do the very best in what they do and then some. I think that's a value that all members of this Assembly can agree to: and then some.

Consequently, I would like to say about the local management of Bill 4, the Securities Amendment Act, 2011, that if securities regulations were centrally managed, it would likely be in Toronto. Its heart would be on Bay Street even if the suboffices were dispersed and scattered across the country.

I think it's really quite important that we can be very proud in Alberta in many areas, every province, of our leaders and the different attributes and what they do at their provincial governments, but Alberta is very, very good at asserting its responsibility with the provincial jurisdiction that it has pertaining to the Securities Amendment Act.

I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that I don't believe a national regulator would necessarily decrease the cost of raising capital through public offerings and other mechanisms as asserted. I would also like to say that for a graduate school in another state or province, the financial means of a Bay Street or a Wall Street down in the United States plays an important role.

It's also equally interesting to note that across this world today our world continues to grow smaller. In growing smaller, it means ensuring that we never lose what I refer to as provincial capital. Provincial capital is based on provincial decision-making that is the sum of our many municipalities and our financial leaders, and I'm very proud that we have that in the province of Alberta and also proud that they share that with the rest of Canada.

Clearly, Mr. Chair, I will say that I do believe that the Securities Amendment Act is something that we in the Wildrose are watching very closely and, as we go forward, will be watching with interest.

In this act, as well, there are important points that I think need to be referenced pertaining to the issues of the act. I just want to take a moment to talk about the fact that, of course, our provincial regulation, that we have utilized with great scrutiny and certainly with due diligence, is I think a model for others to follow.

With that, Mr. Chair, I would say that at this point these are some of the comments that I make, proudly representing the oil sands capital of the world, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to stand up and talk about Bill 4, the Securities Amendment Act, 2011, and offer some comments, if I may, on the bill. I think the bill's intent is meant to clarify and tighten up the passport system in Alberta and that it's looking at clearing the legal loopholes.

While mending our security legislation in this way is not controversial and is something that we can support as the Wildrose, obviously the issue of security regulations is highly controversial because of what we can see happening right now with the federal government creating a national security regulator, one kind of a system that I've been struggling with. I know the government is struggling with this for the fact that they've pushed this as far as they can. I believe, if I'm not mistaken, that they've taken it to the Alberta Court of Appeal. I'm not a lawyer, so maybe one of the legal beagles over on the other side can clarify that.

I think my colleague has spoken in the past about security regulations, that they have always been provincial jurisdiction, and I hope they'll continue to do so.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(4) it now being 6 o'clock, the House is recessed until 7:30 p.m., at which time we'll reconvene in Committee of the Whole.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of the Whole to order. We'll resume on Bill 4, where we left off at 6 o'clock.

Bill 4 Securities Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to say a few words on Bill 4, Securities Amendment Act, 2011. As has already been discussed, these amendments are made to harmonize the passport system that originated six years ago in a memorandum of understanding between the federal and the provincial governments. I think I'm correct in pointing out that the province of Ontario was excluded from that memorandum of understanding. Certainly, it is our view on this side of the House that these amendments support Canada's conversion to the international financial reporting standards. There's also, as I understand it, in Bill 4 a framework for regulating credit rating organizations. We are also allowing the Alberta Securities Commission to impose or place sanctions for late filing of disclosure, and we are adopting more of the British Columbia model on this. The last amendments ensure that Alberta's registration regime is harmonized with the other provinces.

Certainly, there has been a lot of talk about how we need to have a single regulator in this country. There has been a lot of debate on that. But there are many things that are different in this province than in other provinces. One thing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out is our electricity markets and our natural gas exchange in Calgary. The electricity exchange and the natural gas exchange in Calgary are certainly unique. I don't necessarily agree with their creation, but that's the reality. Some people are puzzled why we wouldn't want a single national regulator. My response is: well, we have set this system up; would you like to have our electricity market as it is regulated or our natural gas exchange somewhere other than Alberta? People stop, and they pause, and they think about that. That's one point in this that I think we need to consider whenever we have further discussions on this idea of having a single regulator.

Now, certainly, as I understand it, these amendments will allow for the harmonization or mutual recognition of securities regulators in Canada through the passport system. These ideas go back, I think, six years. In this province securities are regulated through legislation, which is administered by the Alberta Securities Commission. I'm sure all members have had a look at the details and the financial statements of the Alberta Securities Commission in the minister of finance's annual report. There's some interesting information for members of this House in this report.

The Securities Commission regulates individuals and entities in Alberta that advise in securities, trade in securities, or raise money through issuing securities. The basic element of a securities regulator is, of course, to protect investors. Investors have to have confidence in what they are purchasing or buying or supporting.

Now, the Securities Commission's power is with the registrants, the individuals or firms, of course, who deal with the securities.

The Securities Commission will look at the policies of the dealers, their training, will put firms on notice that they need to self-police if the Securities Commission finds any infringements, will call the firms to stand in front of the Securities Commission if they continue to infringe on policies or established best practices, and will periodically audit dealers, spot checks that are announced or in some cases unannounced to the dealer.

According to the Department of Finance officials Canada's securities regulation officers are very good at credential regulation, and Canada has a good record on this front. Each province and territory has a similar commission, each with their own securities regulator.

They seem to be getting along very well down in that corner, Mr. Chairman, a lot better than they got along last Thursday at the hall in Eckville. Could you get them to take a seat, please?

The Chair: Hon. member, please take your seat or have the conversation outside the Chamber. Thank you.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please continue on.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that.

Now, when you look at Canada's Department of Finance website, the two main products traded in the securities industry in this country are fixed income securities and equities. Fixed income products, which include bonds, asset-backed securities, and money market instruments, are traded, of course, in dealer markets. Equity products, which include common and preferred shares, are mostly traded on stock exchanges.

There are two ways of approaching securities regulation. One is a principles-based regulation, which is traditionally favoured in Canada and in the United Kingdom, and the other is based on prescriptive rules.

In 2004, as I said earlier, a memorandum of understanding was signed between the federal government and all of the provinces except Ontario to establish a passport system to provide market participants with a single window of access to Canada's capital markets. It was understood through this memorandum of understanding that securities regulation is provincial jurisdiction while also addressing the need to harmonize the individual systems in order to stay competitive and evolve with global capital markets.

In 2004 the first amendments were made to the Securities Act to begin implementing the passport system. There would be two phases to implement this system. In 2005, when the Securities Act was amended as Bill 19 – and I'm sure the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development remembers this well – more amendments were needed, and they were relating to prospectus and continuance disclosure. Again in 2006 and 2007 amendments were made to the Securities Act to enable a second phase of implementation for Alberta, which is being brought forward through this act. These amendments dealt again with prospectuses, takeover bids, and registration requirements.

The second phase for national implementation of the passport system was planned to be fully implemented almost two years ago. The Canadian securities commission has been working on this, as have officials here, and we need to proceed. Bill 4 certainly allows the process to continue.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that this bill, the Securities Amendment Act, 2011, does not address the idea of a national securities regulator. I think we need to put that on the record. That will come at another time, the debate and discussion on that.

Certainly, with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I would like to cede the floor to another hon. colleague. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for his work on this bill and other matters relating to this subject.

Thank you very much.

7:40

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on this bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on the bill.

[The clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 1 Asia Advisory Council Act

The Chair: Any comments or amendments on this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thought one of the other members was going to speak on it, but he was just standing to tuck in his shirt, so I'll leap into the fray here to debate Bill 1, Asia Advisory Council Act. A lot has been already said on this relatively brief piece of legislation, and while it's got some things to commend it, the comment has been made often that it seems a bit pale, a bit sparse for the flagship bill of this government. But, you know, I guess that's a matter of opinion.

The comments I'd like to make, I think, reflect, shall I say, the yin and the yang of this particular issue. Clearly, Asia is the rising superpower at the moment economically. I think we need to watch in the middle- and long-term other forces, culturally and militarily. I think we need as Canadians and as Albertans to recognize that and to understand that this is a huge opportunity and position ourselves to take full advantage of that opportunity, which this bill does or at least will contribute to.

But I do also want to speak a little bit about some cautions I have, Mr. Chairman, and I'm going to start on the potential rise of Asian military might. I don't know if that has come up yet in the debate, but it's something that we, I think, need to think about in the context of an Asia advisory council, which this act will establish.

A little bit of history here. We're all watching the news these days about the battle in Libya and how NATO has intervened and how Canada, the U.K., France, Italy, and the United States, among others, are engaged in military action in Libya. Of particular note is the role of the Americans, I think, for the comment I'm about to make. America is stretched very tight globally when it comes to military force, but it is the one real global military superpower. I will come back to Libya in a moment because that's the key to my point.

I was interested watching when the tsunami and nuclear incident and earthquake happened in Japan. Within a day the American Pacific fleet was there dropping off supplies and helicoptering people in and out and so on. They're doing that at the same time they're engaged in a very active war in Afghanistan, they still have a massive commitment in Iraq, and then the world, at least parts of the world, are asking them to be involved in Libya. There's no question that at the moment and for the past decade and probably for the next decade the United States is the only nation, the only society on the planet capable of that sort of military muscle: simultaneously supporting Japan, engaged in an active war in Afghanistan, engaged in a massive way in Iraq, and still capable of sending Predator drone aircraft and launching cruise missiles and submarines and everything else into Libya.

Why I started with Libya, Mr. Chairman, is to give this some historical context. For those of us who might know a few lines of the hymn of the American marines – I won't try to sing it here because I'd probably get chased out of the Assembly – the lines go, "From the Halls of Montezuma to the shores of Tripoli." Now, that Tripoli is the same Tripoli that's in the news today, but it's referring not to anything in the last year or two. It's referring to what was quite possibly the first American international military excursion, which was to . . .

Mr. MacDonald: After Niagara.

Dr. Taft: I think it was before Niagara. I need some clarification. If anybody can check the dates for me, I'd appreciate that.

The history lesson here that I want to reflect on, Mr. Chairman, is that very early in the 1800s – and I think it was before the war of 1812 – an American trading vessel in the Mediterranean or perhaps two of them were seized by pirates along the Barbary coast, which today we call Libya. While those pirates had an understanding with the British Royal Navy and the French that they wouldn't hassle each other, there was no understanding with the Americans. America at the time was a tiny little colony, but what did they do under President Thomas Jefferson? They sent off a military force, the marines, to the north coast of Africa, to Tripoli. They invaded Tripoli. They defeated the pirates. They freed their hostages and their ships and embarked on what became a two-century-long rise to where they are today, where they are the one global superpower.

Why do I say this, Mr. Chairman, in this context? Because I think a lot less than two centuries from now the global military superpowers will be from Asia, and I thought it was telling that the first real global expedition of the Chinese navy, at least in many, many, many centuries, was to where? The coast of Africa, not Libya but Somalia. There are Chinese naval vessels patrolling the Somali coast today. Now, that's the first modern excursion of the Chinese navy into being a global player. It's so tiny that most of us don't notice it, but I think it should be seen in the same context of that American excursion.

I have received the dates with the wonderful assistance of the members for Calgary-Nose Hill and Edmonton-Gold Bar. The Americans were involved in Libya initially from 1801 to 1805. If we look at how the Americans have risen from one little expedition to Libya 200 years ago to global dominance today, I think we will see the Chinese do the same thing from their one expedition to the coast of Somalia today to global dominance militarily, but it's not going to take two centuries. I suspect India won't be far behind.

In fact, just a few weeks ago I was in Lethbridge, Mr. Chairman. Every time I go to Lethbridge, I am absolutely astonished at what a sophisticated city that is. I went on a tour of a startlingly sophisticated satellite earth-monitoring program run out of Lethbridge. We got a very good tour, wonderfully extensive computing capacity. They sell their images all over North America, particularly into the oil patch in Calgary. The fellow giving me the tour there said: watch out for the Indian space program. He said: the Indians have multiplied their spending on space exploration, space launches, and space satellites way beyond anything we're doing in Canada and quickly way beyond what most other countries in the world are doing. So it's a different example of a rising power. We all know that that kind of technology is easily applied to military matters.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to raise that in the context of Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act, because this is not just about trade. This is about the potential of global domination.

I've mentioned military force. I would like briefly to mention cultural force. I think it's fair to say that the United States, along with its economic and military rise, has spent a better part of a century as a cultural powerhouse to the globe as well, whether it's arts or cinema or music or all kinds of other forms of culture. I shouldn't just say arts but, in fact, culture in the broader sense of the things that we value, the way we organize ourselves, the things that we want.

America has been predominant, and many of us don't realize that the modern Christmas, you know, where we have the Christmas tree with all the gifts and Santa Claus coming down with a sack of presents, is essentially an American tradition or at least an American invention patched together from many other cultures. You can go to Japan now, and in December they're celebrating Christmas. You can go to a Hindu country like India, and in parts of India they celebrate Christmas. That's the kind of cultural muscle that the west in general and the United States in particular has flexed, and we're so awash in it that we hardly even notice it.

Again, I'm going to raise the consideration here, Mr. Chairman, that the time will come when that tide is reversed, and we are celebrating holidays that originated in China or India, and we will be wearing clothes styled in Shanghai or Mumbai or goodness knows where else. When you turn on the news and you watch a meeting of politicians from anywhere in the world, they don't dress locally. They dress like they're from Fleet Street or something. They all wear a shirt and a tie and a suit. It doesn't matter if you're a Karzai in Afghanistan or whoever the current president is of China. They all dress like westerners. Well, it's quite possible that a century from now we'll all be dressing like Asians just because they will have flexed their global cultural muscle and reversed the tide. I would like this debate to occur in that kind of context.

There's one other concern I want to raise here for consideration. It might be more than one. We as Canadians are often like Boy Scouts when we go out and do business globally. We trust that everybody is going to be honourable and obey the law and have the greater good in mind and so on. We think everybody on this planet is a Canadian, and we're so darned innocent that we are easily taken advantage of. The fact of the matter is that Asian business and Asian governments and Asian military, which all work extremely closely together within their own countries, are far more strategic and are working on a different ethical basis, a different understanding of corruption and law.

There was an incident, I believe last year, when there was widespread concern, based on pretty solid evidence, that the Chinese government and Chinese businesses were secretly stealing technology, trade secrets and so on, from Canadian companies, and there was a minor scandal. I think we need to be alert to that kind of thing. We cannot go into these countries assuming that it's like, you know, going to Saskatchewan or Nova Scotia or something. It's a different set of rules. What's said to your face and what's done behind your back can be quite different. I may get flak for making that kind of statement, but I will say that, and I will stick to it, Mr. Chairman.

I hope this advisory council is giving us advice on that sort of deal as well. This is not new for me to put on the record, but I am concerned about the investment in our oil sands resource by Chinese and other national oil companies whose agendas are not the same as ours and who do not play by the same rules or the same time frames or the same laws as, say, Canadian-based oil companies. We are turning over a massive amount of a resource to companies who simply do not have our national interests in mind. It doesn't mean we don't deal with those companies and their governments and their militaries, but it means that we have to be shrewd. As Canadians, by and large, we're not terribly shrewd. We like to give people the benefit of the doubt, and I think that makes us vulnerable.

Mr. Chairman, those are some of my cautionary comments about Asia. I wanted this enthusiasm for partnerships with Asia to be in that context. I've travelled repeatedly to China. I've been repeatedly to Japan. Just a couple of years ago I was in Indonesia and Malaysia. I've been to Turkey. Someday I'd love to go to India. These are wonderful places to be, but we need to have our eyes open when we're doing business with these countries.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that with those comments my time will be soon coming to an end, so I'll see if I stirred up any debate. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is an honour and a privilege again to rise and speak, as it is every time in this honourable House, to add my comments to Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act, at this time. I will admit that since the time when this act came out – it seems to be a long time ago – my thoughts on this act have changed. I've gone to thinking a little more angrily, having those thoughts of saying: "Is this all that this government can come up with? Bill 1? Really, is this all you can do? A 40-year government has brought us back to discuss an Asia Advisory Council Act? That's what's really on the minds of the people of Calgary-Buffalo and the people in Fort Saskatchewan or even the people of Fort McMurray? An Asia Advisory Council Act?" I think not.

It's the sense of timing of that act. Other things have come on the plate that, I guess, have engaged my interest. I hear that the Education minister is going to put on the table the Education Act. I am very happy about that. I'm sad that it's probably going to die on the Order Paper and that he may be a judge by the time any of that hard work and effort he has done comes actually into force, but I am still pleased it hit the Order Paper.

I guess what I'm saying is that if I had talked about this Asia Advisory Council Act sooner, I would have had a little more animosity. I would have talked with a little more vim and vigour. I would have talked a little more about the lack of direction coming from this 40-year government. Like all things that feeling passes, and I've moved on to more important, or what seem to be more important, issues. I'll leave that on the record.

When this Asia Advisory Council Act did come out, I for one was rather disappointed. I was hoping for a little bit more coming back into this session. Now that I'm here, let's talk about this. I was quite interested in the speech made by the hon. former Leader of the Opposition, from Edmonton-Riverview. It was with interest as he brought up, I guess, a song done by the American military on their travels through the world. In 1801 they endeavoured for some time on the shores of Tripoli, their first venture off the coast. Now, I know that. If the hon. member was hearing that story I was bringing up, I was giving him full credit for it. I was working that into my synopsis of the Asia bill because your thoughts and ideas were very good and were something for me to build upon.

I do note that two songwriters of my generation, a gentleman named Tom Cochrane, who was the lead singer before that of a band called Red Rider, had explicitly on the shores of Tripoli in one of their songs. It came out in 1980. I assume it was a reference to the song identified by the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Again, it goes back to how this member, this Canadian lead singer of a rock band, was now touring the world, going to various places, including Tripoli, and that was Tom Cochrane and Red Rider.

I think, building upon the comments by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, that shows that Canadians have been embarking on this world-wide journey as well as the Americans. Our travels to other places are becoming more immediate, more every day. The average person in Calgary and the average person in Edmonton and the average person in the constituency of Little Bow are touched by the activities that are happening over in Asia, whereas in 1980, when Tom Cochrane was going over to Tripoli with Red Rider, well, that wasn't happening for people like me. But it's happening now on a more global basis by more and more people here in Alberta.

I guess on that note I think that it's wise – maybe not wise. Let's face it; there was more important government business to do. At the same time, setting up an Asia Advisory Council Act maybe wasn't the stupidest thing I've ever heard of, okay? It probably has some merit that actually goes to us becoming better purveyors of trade. Hopefully, when a pipeline is built over there, when we have our resources going over there, we can have negotiations in a manner that would be respectful to environmental regulations of both countries and look out for the best interests not only of Alberta but Canada and also the citizens of China as well as the rest of the world.

We're going to have a role to play in that given that we have 25 per cent of the world's petroleum resources, and given the rise of China and given the rise of India, more and more people, despite what we hear about wind energy and solar energy and the like, are going to continue to utilize a large amount of petroleum resources going into the future, in fact, even more than we do now despite our best efforts. Having a relationship with Asia is going to be very important to this province, very important to us going forward.

That said, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is correct. We are entering into negotiations with a government that is non-democratic, that can do things very quickly and very much one sided, that can move vast amounts of people, vast amounts of policies in a blink of an eye without democratic discussion or debate. Having that knowledge as we go into these negotiations is important.

I think it's important that we have, possibly, an advisory council over there, but it's also wise to take care of our own backyard. We see that right here. I, too, share the worry of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview in our oil sands development. Right now we have the Chinese government wishing to take large stakes in our oil sands, and the Norwegian government has taken large stakes in our oil sands. For some reason they find it economically viable and an opportunity for them to do so and make money on behalf of their citizens and secure oil.

I was having the discussion with the hon. Minister of Energy on how at one time we had the Alberta Energy Company here in this country, and we sold it for a song. Remember when oil and gas was at $12 a barrel? We decided to sell off the world's greatest collection of global assets under mankind for a song, at $12 oil, to get rid of a mythical debt that was really bothering no one, that could have been paid off in a slow and steady timeframe. That said, we sold it all off, and I wonder, looking back, whether that was the wisest of decisions. But that decision was made.

We're also building a pipeline over to Asia. I guess our Asia advisory council is going to take part in the negotiations. But before that pipeline is sent over, I'd like us to develop as many industries here as we can, do as much of that bitumen upgrading here in Alberta as we can. That may take this government incentivizing the market, doing things with some force and resolve to get things going on that front so that we're not just shipping raw bitumen to Asia. Those are some of the issues that we have to grapple with while at the same time looking at our markets over in Asia. We have to make sure that we're doing the best we can here in Alberta for our citizens not only for the short term but for the long term.

I appreciated that trip down the past. I will remember that now, going forward into my history, that the Americans' first foray, I guess, into world conquest was in 1801 on the shores of Tripoli, and I will go back and find out what song Tom Cochrane and Red Rider were singing when they were playing on the shores of Tripoli. Or at least I think it was that.

Nevertheless, I close. It was nice to come back to this topic, and let's hope that this advisory council holds us in good stead and leads to greater prosperity for the Alberta people.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary Fish-Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to stand up on Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act. Actually, I've been listening to the debate from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and I guess I was feeling about the same way as he was on this particular piece of legislation, that when it was tabled, the government probably had a hundred and one other things that they could make as Bill 1 before they brought forward the Asia Advisory Council Act.

I want to put on the record that I support the intent of the bill. There's no question that when you read the preamble, it's important to talk about the competitiveness. It's talking about the international strategies.

We've been trying to do some research in regard to how many councils are out there within the government, and we found quite a few, actually. Then we started doing a little bit more research to find out how many of those councils needed legislation to establish the council. When you start looking at that, the numbers coming back are very, very interesting. You know, you honestly scratch your head about why we need to have legislation to establish an advisory council when the things that are in the preamble of the legislation, quite frankly, the government should be doing right now. You wonder if they have to put in legislation something that they should already be doing, quite frankly. That's bothersome and troublesome, to my mind, because we've got, I think – what? – 10 international offices out there already. I'm not exactly sure. I don't recall in my tenure here having legislation to establish any of those councils or any of those international offices, to be quite frank.

When you look at the table of contents, it's a very small bill. It's all of four pages. The first page and a half contain the table of contents and then the preamble. When you start looking at the preamble, all of the things that they're whereasing as far as the government's plans are all things that they should be doing not only in Asia but, quite frankly, all over the world if we want to establish, you know, our mark across this world.

They talk about competitiveness: "competitiveness is core to the Government of Alberta's plan to position Alberta for long-term prosperity." Well, if you go back a year, I think Bill 1 was the Alberta Competitiveness Act, if I remember, another piece of legislation that I think: why in heck are we bringing forward legislation that in government we should be doing on behalf of Albertans already? Yet now we're having to set this in legislation that's saying: "Okay. This is the law. This is what you should be doing. You have to make Alberta competitive. We have to have some long-term prosperity."

We talk about: "Alberta's international strategy sets the overall course for the Government's engagement internationally with the goal of making Alberta more globally competitive." Well, what the heck have we been doing for the last 40 years that this government has been in power? All of a sudden the light goes on, and we're bright, and we're articulate, and we're bringing all these whereas forward in regard to legislation. I think: gosh, I've been here since '93, and I thought we were doing all of this. Yet under the Premier's mandate he's decided that this is going to be one of his legacies. I'm thinking: well, geez, I thought Premier Lougheed did a pretty good job of establishing Alberta in the oil and gas market, and now we have a Premier that thinks he's going to establish us internationally, in the global market, when it's something that we probably, I'm sure and I'm hoping, have been doing all along.

It talks about key markets such as China, Japan, Korea, and India, that they're the second-largest export market, following North America. Well, I sit on the Alberta heritage act committee. I remember talking to AIMCo in regard to where they were investing money. I will have to go back to read Hansard. When I was talking to Dr. de Bever, he was quite hesitant about investing in some of these markets because of the political instability and investing in stable markets. You know, sometimes to me the right hand isn't sure what the left hand is doing.

It talks about: "The Government of Alberta is committed to pursuing global advocacy, advancing Alberta's international relations." For goodness sake, Mr. Chairman, we have a Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. I guess that means that that ministry is all of a sudden redundant or that that particular ministry really hasn't been doing a very good job on what they're doing, or this bill is sending a clear message to the ministry that they haven't been doing a very, very good job.

It goes on to talk about our strong financial position, educated workforce. All of that, you know, is stuff that should be and has been and should have been done previously.

I notice the Member for Highwood listening very intently. It's interesting because he is the former minister of agriculture, and I know about all the time he spent on building the Asian market. I can tell you that that Member for Highwood didn't need a piece of legislation to realize that it was important for him to go to Asia, talk about our agriculture, encourage the Asian market to become involved in what Alberta produces. He did that all on his own. He didn't need to be directed by a bill. He had the brains and the smarts to realize that there was some Asian market in regard to the cattle industry that needed some expansion. I guess, member, now you have some clear direction on what you should or shouldn't have been doing when you were over in Asia expanding the global market in regard to the wonderful farmers and the horrific hit they took in our cattle industry.

It goes on to specifically talk about the 10 members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council for a term not to exceed three years and that you have to designate a chair and a vice-chair. Honest to goodness, Mr. Chairman, does government honestly think that Albertans are stupid and that they need to have legislation to establish a council, saying that there are only 10 members and you have to have a chair and a vice-chair, establish even their terms? No remuneration. They've put that in the legislation. We know that these council members are not going to get paid except for their expenses. They're going to make bylaws for the conduct of its business and affairs. Well, anyone knows that we follow Robert's Rules of Order when you're establishing.

It talks about: "the Chair of the Council shall submit to the Minister an annual report consisting of a general summary of its activities during the previous fiscal year." Well, it'll be interesting to see if that Asian council starts following some of the ministers as they travel abroad. I know our Premier and some of his colleagues have been to India. They've been, you know, all over the world, and at no time before they started their travelling did they need a piece of legislation to be able to tell them that this is what they were going to do when they were looking at the global markets and where they could travel, where they couldn't travel, what they had to do, what they didn't have to do.

Mr. Chair, my comments are brief. I just want to say on behalf of the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek that I can guarantee you that they would tell you that this is not a bill that should be the number one bill for the government for the spring Legislature. I have just done a survey in the constituency – it's the first time I've ever done that – because I wanted to make sure that I was on track with the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek. Guess what? Health care was number one, and education was number two. Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, we have an important piece of legislation that I understand is hitting this Legislature tomorrow, the Education Act. I think that's pretty darn important.

I'm certain that we as members of the opposition could probably come up with five, 10 pieces of legislation that I think would probably be a number one priority for Albertans, what they saw as a bill that they would want to see. I know that many of the people in the rural areas are upset with the land-use framework. We're going to be debating that a little later on I understand from the House leader, and I know that's going to be a bill that's going to cause a lot of debate in this Legislature.

I can tell you that as an urban MLA there are only probably three times that I can remember where we've taken a lot of calls from the rural areas on some of their priorities. Of course, one is the BSE. The second was the check-off, that was brought forward, I believe, by the Member for Highwood, and the minister from Drumheller-Stettler has changed that check-off procedure. Lastly, of course, on the land-use framework we're getting a lot of calls and e-mails in regard to that particular piece of legislation and, obviously, Bill 50, which is affecting a lot of rural Albertans, the residents in Sherwood Park, with the power lines, et cetera.

With those remarks, it's important that Asia understands that we as the Wildrose support anything in regard to improving international trade with not only Asia but India and any other country where we can establish ourselves globally in a market, where we can help them and they can help us. But, certainly, Mr. Chair, not as the number one bill in this Legislature.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, it's a pleasure to rise this evening to speak relative to Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act. My colleague and esteemed representative from Calgary-Fish Creek I can say touched on some very important points relative to this bill. I certainly respect her view and opinion relative to this bill since she served in this Legislature dating back to 1993 and, in fact, her indicating that she had never witnessed such a Bill 1 as the Asia Advisory Council Act.

Perhaps I can start by indicating that I first want to apologize. I am sending the Minister of Education a globe. I made a commitment in this House relative to that.

Mr. Hancock: Don't worry about it. I've got lots of globes. You're off the hook.

Mr. Boutilier: I appreciate that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has indicated he does not want a globe.

The reason I mention the globe is specifically because of the fact that I begin to wonder if the government knows where Asia is. I am somewhat surprised that we have universities from all over Alberta, Alberta businesses who are literally 15 years ahead of the government. They have been taking action. They have been taking a very strategic approach to Asia. We have a very powerful relationship with Asia on a variety of matters, and I really want to compliment Alberta businesses, businessmen and women, also Alberta universities because of the fact that they discovered Asia 15 to 20 years ago.

Here today we have Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act, introduced by this Premier and this government as bill number one. It is almost bordering on, I can only say, ludicrous. I can only say ludicrous because, as was mentioned previously by many hon. members, here we are, a government with the number one bill ready to say that we're going to form a committee to study Asia. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is bordering on ridiculous. I can say that's why I intended to send the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud a globe, because it appears to me that the government really needs a globe. I'm not sure if there are globes in the Premier's office.

Bill 1, to call this an advisory council, to form a committee. Yet I look and examine the number of committees that have been formed by this government. Actually, when I see a committee that is formed, sometimes I begin to wonder if that's not code to say: let's just allow the committee to take the heat off the government and maybe allow it to do something. Basically, form another committee, and ultimately nothing will be done.

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, the Asia Advisory Council Act is beyond their comprehension of the importance of Asia. Putting it as bill number one to form a committee really speaks of the lackadaisical approach that this government takes towards Asia. I think it is very unfortunate because we have the utmost respect for Asians and for their contribution in this global marketplace that we have and operate. To form a committee, to have a bill that talks about a mandate, a mandate of the council – let me say this: “the mandate of the Council is to advise and make recommendations to the Minister on measures to expand existing economic, research, educational and cultural opportunities between Alberta and Asia.” Well, let's catch up with the times. You guys don't get out enough. I mean, it's 15 or 20 years later. Albertans all over are out there doing that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, when he was a tenured professor at the University of Alberta, I know he had taken many missions to Asia. That was many years ago. Clearly, the hon. member and the university did not need a committee. They did not need a committee, nor do we now. Bill 1, really, defies logic.

We have the utmost respect for the Asian community and the important partnerships. A partnership is: what can we do for you that you can't do, and what can you do for us that we can't do? That's really what a partnership is all about.

“Without limitation . . . pursuing new market opportunities.” I would hope the minister is doing that as we speak. A bill that says, “Let's form another committee and make recommendations to the minister,” is at best weak.

“Promoting Alberta as an attractive destination for international investment.” Well, Mr. Chairman, we promote Alberta every day. We are all ambassadors. Albertans that are working in universities, that are working in research labs, that are working all over the globe clearly recognize that we do not need a committee. Again, I view the word “committee” as code for: let's just simply not do anything.

I believe that Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act, really misses the mark. I should share with the government that it is the 21st century. In fact, we have just completed the first decade of the 21st century. Asia and the partnerships that have been formed by universities, by Alberta businessmen and -women, by research institutions are strong, and that will continue to grow stronger despite this Bill 1 to form a committee.

One has to ask the question: what is the minister doing now if he is waiting for a committee to make recommendations to him? One has to ask the question, go back and take a look at and revisit his mandate letter relative to what the responsibility is.

You know, I support global competition for access to existing and emerging markets and for investment capital. People and skills are ever increasing, and I support strong financial positions, an educated workforce, entrepreneurial spirit, and abundant natural resources. Certainly, in my home in the oil sands capital of the world, in Fort McMurray, we have an abundance of natural resources. Clearly, the investments that we have demonstrated that are taking place in my community, which is part of Alberta – I know sometimes the government forgets that the oil sands are part of Alberta, but Fort McMurray and the oil sands are part of Alberta. As much as we never get our fair contribution for the resources that are extracted from my community – and that's why I still wait for a long-term care centre – I can say clearly that I support strengthening collaborations among Albertans, businesses, industry, government, and research institutions.

Mr. Chairman, this has truly not only lacked imagination, but it's really lacked everything. In all my years in this Assembly I've never seen such a weak bill as this Bill 1 because it represents: go and form another committee. I have mentioned in the past that, you know, this is really a symbol of the fact that not only are the inmates running the asylum; you've turned over the keys and lost your address, and that's unfortunate.

It's unfortunate because we are very proud of Alberta. We're proud of the resources we have. I'm very proud, and I want to thank everyone who has taken the time to go to Asia, who knows where Asia is, to strengthen the relationships that have been built over the last two decades.

Here we are two decades later seeing Bill 1, an advisory committee to a minister, to advise the minister about Asia. Well, Mr. Chairman, at best this is laughable. I will only say that I'm lost for words. I'll take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the bill.

Mr. Anderson: On the bill, yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. That was a riveting speech by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Indeed, we are in a situation where the inmates are running the asylum and they've lost the keys and they've forgotten their address. It is a serious problem here.

I'd like to stand on Bill 1 and say that again – and I've said this before – this really is a sham of a bill. There's no reason. If you go under all the different legislation, the cabinet is clearly empowered, the Premier is clearly empowered to set up basically any committee that they want to set up. So to waste this Assembly's time and, frankly, to insult the intelligence of the people in this Assembly as well as Albertans to say that we're going to use this Assembly as a way to pass some meaningless bill that allows us to form a committee, you know, it's just beyond all reason.

Now, I've spent some time in Asia. I spent two years in Asia, actually, in the little island called Taiwan, and it is an incredible area of the world. Obviously, the population of Asia is massive, most of the world's population lives there, particularly in the two countries of India and China. In Taiwan there are about 35 million people in an area the size of, basically, the Edmonton-Calgary corridor, and most of that land is mountainous and uninhabitable, so it was an even smaller amount. It's very built up.

Asia is a very productive place. The Asian peoples – it doesn't matter if they're Chinese, Japanese, Vietnamese, Cambodian, Malaysian, East Indian – are very hard-working peoples. They're very competitive, and they're very driven to succeed. Indeed, we do need to be competitive, and that's a good thing. By their people being that way and their countries and nations being that way, I think that it makes us stronger because we have to compete, and we have to become better ourselves. I think that it's a positive thing. Certainly, we don't want to get left behind.

There are some things that we can do right now. We don't need to wait for a committee to be formed by this law in order to become more competitive. Clearly, we need to be more competitive with regard to our regulatory framework. Our regulatory framework right now surrounding how we regulate business, industry, oil and gas, everything, frankly, has become very cumbersome. There's far too much red tape. These are things that we can do immediately to start increasing our competitiveness with Asia. That's one thing we can do.

With regard to establishing trade, we already know how important it is to diversify our economy, specifically our oil and gas exports, away from just the United States, which will always be an important customer that we need to develop and maintain a relationship with. We need to obviously have more customers, and Asia is a prime example of what's needed. But what have we done on that front? We're losing the debate on that front. I think this government is partially responsible for us losing ground in the debate on whether we should be able to export our resources to the west coast through oil tankers to China and India, et cetera, and to those hungry markets.

I think of, you know, our good friend Mr. Jack Layton of the federal New Democrats. I think of Mr. Ignatieff of the federal Liberals. You know, they have two very, I would say, anti Alberta energy sector strategies that would see a moratorium on oil tanker traffic going from the west coast, British Columbia, to overseas, and that's very troubling. Now, notice that I said: the federal parties. I'm not saying that that's the policy of the provincial counterparts here in Alberta. I'll let them speak to that. I don't think it is. But the point is that we're losing that debate on a national scale.

Even our own Prime Minister, Stephen Harper, has mused about a moratorium on oil tanker traffic. He's backed away from that, and that's good to hear. But if we can't even convince our friends in Ottawa and the federal Conservatives to understand our point of view on that matter, how are we ever going to protect ourselves from potentially – God help us all – a Jack Layton led coalition government, an NDP coalition government, which is actually not something to laugh at anymore because it's a possibility. I sure hope it doesn't come to pass, but it is a possibility.

We need to do much better on this file, and we have been asleep at the switch. In my head I'm wondering what the heck Gary Mar, one of the leadership candidates for the PC Party, has been doing in Washington for the last several years. I don't really know because we have gotten exactly nowhere with regard to our relationship with the Obama administration, with the United States, on the importance of our oil sands. In fact, the most recent comments from Mr. Obama, frankly, have shown a real lack of understanding of just how important the oil sands are to the future energy security of this country and indeed North America and indeed, by extension, because we are talking about the United States, the world.

We have not made progress on that file, so I would like to know what Mr. Mar has been doing to earn that large paycheque over in Washington. I, frankly, would like to see an accounting of what he has done for this province in that regard because I sure don't see many fruits of his labours in that regard. We've lost ground on that front, and I think that's ridiculous.

Now, bringing that back to the Asia experience, it's very important that we make sure that our oil and gas markets are open over there, but we do not need a committee. We certainly don't need legislation forming a committee to do that. We do that by developing relationships with the folks over in these Asian economies, which Alberta businesses have done. We continue to go over there. You'll never see me ever questioning folks like the former minister of agriculture going over to China, and there have been others that have gone over to China and India to promote Alberta. You will never hear me speak against that. The reason is because it is that important to build those relationships. There is no doubt about it.

You do not need a committee to build those relationships. You just go over, and you do it. You make sure that you have some tangible goals that you want to accomplish when you go over there. Paying a committee to come up with some kind of – I don't know – strategy: you just don't need that. Get together. The Premier can appoint his own advisory group on Asia, that would be very knowledgeable, and you go forward. Again, you know, there has been dilly-dallying in that regard.

We should clearly right now be putting a full-court press on opening up our multiple pipelines to the west coast and doing everything that we can to promote that, to get that oil tanker traffic moving to Asia, get it moving to India, not just energy exports but all sorts of exports, including agriculture. It's just critical that we get our agriculture exports to Asian markets in any way that we can.

We need to open up more partnerships between our universities, our postsecondary institutions. You know, it drives me crazy to watch skilled people coming over here from, in particular, India, frankly, with all kinds of degrees and learning, and then they have to sit and drive taxi for years instead of going straight into the professions they've been trained for, like being a doctor or being, you know, an engineer, just doing whatever it is. I understand there need to be standards and so forth, but we need to do a much better job of making sure that we're working with these universities over in Asia.

For example, why can't we set up a program that students in India and students in China can opt into and make sure that when they're done with that program, they can come over here immediately and their credentials are up to speed. They can be trained over there, and then when they come over here, they're ready to go. There's no five-year, 10-year wait while they, you know, drive taxi, lose their skills. Their skills kind of get a little dull if they're not working in their profession. We don't have to lose all that time, nor do we have to spend a ton of money training them over here or expecting them to be trained over here. They can be trained over there. They can make sure that everything transfers, that they have all the credentials they need, and then for the people that have that degree and that accreditation, we could expedite their immigration to Canada because they'd be ready immediately to contribute to society and to contribute to our economy.

These are things that we could do if we were willing to put the time in. It's important that this government start taking some practical approaches, taking some practical steps to open up trade and open up investment back and forth with Asia. But passing a bill in the Legislature saying that we're going to form a committee on this is a joke. It's as much of a joke, frankly, as the committee on competitiveness, that was set up last time. One of the first things they've done since then is raise by 150 per cent the cost of registering a new business. Whoa, what a great step in the right direction that is for small-business owners.

There's such a disconnect between what this government says that it's going to do and then what it actually does, and this is an example of it. When this passes – and I'm sure it will – this will mark one of many bills, certainly the second in as many years, where the Premier's flagship bill has been, frankly, a very useless piece of legislation that does nothing.

It's a shame because I think, you know, that when you have the opportunity, as this Premier has, with the massive majority that he has had, he would have the ability to put forward really meaningful legislation in the area of health care, making sure that we have proper health care reform and that we're getting away from this 1960s-style health care system that we've created, where innovation is punished or slowed down, frankly, and where doctors are intimidated and nurses are intimidated and so forth. He could be the guy that's leading the charge on this with Bill 1, a health care act, whistle-blower legislation, or something that would protect the rights of front-line health care workers. But that takes leadership, and that's something this Premier has failed on so many occasions to provide.

He could have been in here talking about democratic reform: Bill 1, a fixed election date act, or Bill 1, a free-vote act, empowering MLAs to vote their conscience on every single bill, free from intimidation or penalty or the caucus whip.

Mrs. Forsyth: A whistle-blower act: that would be a good one.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, whistle-blower protection. We were talking about that.

Or a property rights preservation act. He's had so many opportunities to do the right thing, to show leadership with his Bill 1, and each time it seems it's some kind of piece of feel-good, do-nothing legislation. It's been a huge disappointment to watch this Premier.

He has passed some tough legislation, but he's done it through cabinet ministers – some are sacrificial lambs, and they don't know it, and some know full well what they're doing – passing some of the most ridiculous legislation that this province has seen and certainly the most harmful with regard to the royalty framework legislation, property rights legislation, Bill 50, the way that health care has been handled, et cetera. You can go down the line. It's been very disappointing.

I hope that whoever follows suit – if it's Mr. Mar, hopefully he can explain what the heck he's been doing for the last three years or however long he's been in Washington so-called defending our interests.

Mrs. Forsyth: We didn't need a Washington act to put him in there.

Mr. Anderson: Maybe we should have put a Washington act in place, the United States trade committee act. That's right. We should strike a council to figure out how to be, you know, better friends with the United States. Clearly, that's ridiculous. You just go down, and you do the job. You make sure that the people who are in place actually know what they're doing, unlike Mr. Mar, who has done very, very little to take the Alberta story to Washington, DC. It has fallen on deaf ears, and we are way back from where we were even just a few short years ago in that regard, which is just very demoralizing. It affects our economy, and it affects our oil and gas and our energy workers, and it affects a great deal of things.

With that and on behalf of the Wildrose, I'd like to make sure that we push the government to actually accelerate and to push even harder to make sure that folks like Jack Layton and folks like Michael Ignatieff know that a moratorium on oil tanker traffic is completely unacceptable, that we will oppose that in every way possible, through the courts, politically, in any way we can, because it's wrong, and it's an attack on our province. It's a unilateral attack on our province. We should be out there making sure that that's heard and making sure that if the rest of Canada, particularly the folks down east, wants to continue to have the fruits and the benefits of Alberta money in their coffers through the equalization program and other programs that we give them, then they need to respect our rights to export our products to markets like Asia.

I don't think that case has been made enough by this government. It's been made. I will give them credit. They have attempted to make the case, but it has fallen on deaf ears, and they have not pushed it hard enough. They need to start pushing harder and being louder, and that's just the way it is.

We need to start with our own friends in the Conservative Party and make sure that they continue to say what they've now come around to saying, which is that they will not support a permanent oil tanker traffic ban. What they will support is making sure that oil tanker traffic is properly regulated, that there are double-hulled ships, that there are two-pilot boats or multiple-pilot boats, however many are needed. No cost is too high to make sure that it's safe and we don't have a disaster. There are ways that people have learned throughout the years, after the Exxon Valdez oil spill, et cetera, of how to make sure those things do not happen.

We can make sure that we have the safest export market of oil and gas to Asia that can be possibly imagined, but we need to make sure that that is the case. I haven't heard anything about that, any plan, any suggestions from this government on how we make that oil tanker traffic ironclad and make it completely safe going forward. I'd like to hear that. I'd like to hear them make that case to the federal Conservatives and, obviously, to Jack Layton and Ignatieff, who haven't seemed to have gotten the memo about who is paying for so much in Confederation.

Mr. Boutillier: We're not going to Windsor to shut down the auto industry plants.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. It would be much like Mr. Layton going to Ontario and saying, "We're going to shut down the auto industry," or: "We're going to put a moratorium on automobile traffic because they produce emissions of CO<sub>2</sub> and that's going to kill the earth. That's just as dangerous as an oil spill, so we're going to ban the sale of cars to the United States for that reason." Of course, that's lunacy. So why is it any less lunacy to say that we're going to ban the main export of the province of Alberta, that pays for so many of the programs and the care and benefits that Albertans and Canadians coast-to-coast enjoy and use?

With that, I will not be supporting this useless bill, but I will be supporting the government in any action that it takes to open up our borders to the Asian market, to make sure we get our exports diversified over there, and to make sure the hon. Minister of SRD has an opportunity to go over to China and understand a little bit better what property rights do and do not mean.

With that, I will sit down, and we will hopefully have a vote on this soon.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to also join in some discussion on Bill 1, the Asia Council Advisory Act. Now, of course, Bill 1 is historically a flagship piece of legislation introduced by the government to signal its broad leadership within the province, and there have been many pieces of legislation introduced in Alberta as Bill 1 over the years.

Of course, the first bill introduced by the Lougheed government when this political dynasty first began was Bill 1, the Alberta Bill of Rights. It was a flagship piece of legislation, Mr. Chairman. It was a key piece of legislation that set very clearly the government's agenda, which at that time was a progressive agenda compared to what had existed under the previous Social Credit regime. The election of the PC government at that time under Peter Lougheed was a step forward for our province. It was a modernizing government, and it believed in human rights. It believed in the rights of the individual, and it put forward a piece of legislation that set that out very clearly for everyone to see that this was a government that believed in the rights of people, that believed in protecting people, and which was a progressive and modern government for its day.

We've seen other excellent pieces of legislation in the past, but one of the things that I've noticed, Mr. Chairman, is a steady decline in the vision that is evident in the bills that are introduced by this government as Bill 1. There's been a steady drop in the inspiration, I guess, evident in the selection of subjects for Bill 1.

I'm getting a really funny look from the Parliamentary Counsel, Mr. Chairman. Have I violated some legal norm? No? Okay. Well, then, I'll carry on.

It really seems to me that in this particular bill we've hit a new low in terms of vision from this government. If this is the best that they can come up with for a flagship piece of legislation, then this government and the province as a whole is in more serious trouble than I thought. The lack of inspiration, the lack of vision contained in a bill to set up a committee to improve our relationships, our trading relationships particularly, with Asia is not timely, Mr. Chairman. That's the main thing that I would say about this bill. If this bill was introduced 20 years ago, it would have been timely. It would have shown vision. It would have shown that the government actually got what was going on in the world.

If you look at the history of the development of Asia economically, you'll realize that, in fact, the opportunities to build these relationships properly took place a long time ago. Fortunately, there are a good deal of economic and cultural and other relationships between Alberta and Asian countries, but to now set up a committee to promote this strikes me as absolutely unnecessary and long past its due date.

Mr. Chairman, back in the period between 1405 and 1433 Admiral Zheng He of China set out on seven separate expeditions into the Indian Ocean. China, of course, had traded with Southeast Asia for a long time. They actually travelled on these large-scale expeditions by ship all the way to Africa. They sailed right through the Indian Ocean. They had contact with Arab countries, with Persia, and visited the African continent and, indeed, brought back specimens of African wildlife like giraffes and so on. At that time China was very much looking outwards. That didn't last because the next emperor then banned those kinds of expeditions, and China became much more insular.

Similarly, Japan throughout the early 1800s was very closed to outside societies and didn't want to trade with anyone. Commodore Perry of the United States visited Japan in 1853 with a number of ships, and he essentially forced Japan to open its borders and to sign an agreement, a trade agreement with the United States. That's really when trade with Asia and North America had its start, Mr. Chairman, and it's gone up and down since then.

I wanted to just point out that the great growth in the Japanese economy began in the 1960s, and it boomed all through the '70s. I still can remember the Expo in Japan. I think it was the world's fair in Osaka which really marked the emergence of Japan as a leading industrial and trading partner. So from 1970 until 2011 is about 41 years since Japan began to emerge as a major international trading country and a major industrial power in the world and a financial power. That's 41 years.

Now, you turn to some of the other countries in Asia; for example, the original Asian tigers, which are Hong Kong, Singapore, South Korea, and Taiwan. They developed very high growth rates and rapid industrialization in the early 1960s. Again, they continued as major growth areas in terms of economic development right through the '90s.

Mr. Chairman, a committee to improve relationships with Asia, and trading relationships in particular, back in the '60s or '70s would have been a progressive, forward-looking step, but that was decades ago. It was decades ago.

If you take a look at the development of China, which came a bit later under Deng Xiaoping, who was the leader in China in bringing in economic reform, it began in 1978. The rapid development under a market economy, or market socialism as they called it in China, began in the late '70s and built up steam all through the '80s and '90s. Mr. Chairman, again, this is 30 years ago – 30 years ago – that China began to emerge as a major industrial power and opened its doors to the west. If this government had brought forward Bill 1 to establish this committee 30 years ago, it would have been a forward-looking step. It would have indicated that the government really got it and was open and had lots of thought about advancing Alberta's interests.

Mr. Chairman, I could go into others. I could talk about Malaysia or Vietnam or the rapidly emerging economy in India, that's been building up steam for over 10 years, and the Philippines, but in many cases these economies have been modernized and became major sources of trade in the world decades ago. So for the government now to come forward with Bill 1 to strike this committee to look at diversifying Alberta's trading partners is really trying to close the barn door, you know, after all of the horses have long since gone. It really speaks to the bankruptcy of ideas of this government, Mr. Chairman. They are out of ideas. They are tired. They have no more imagination. They don't have any ideas left for the future of this province. They're a government that has exhausted itself.

It's not a government that has not made a contribution to this province. It has. This government in its day was a modernizing, progressive force. When this government was elected, Mr. Chairman, I was in grade 11, and that's a long time ago now. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo was two years old when this government was first elected. Some of the people from the Wildrose Alliance were not even born. So this government has been around for a long time, and one of the things that is apparent to me is that every government has a shelf life and that this government's shelf life was exceeded many years ago. Somehow it's managed to convince people that these old cans on the shelf in the supermarket are the only products that they should buy.

I think that's changing as people realize that they really should look at the best-before date of this government before they purchase what it has to sell again. I think that we're going to see some significant changes at the next election in this province because a government for which the best it can do, the best it can come up with in terms of new, fresh ideas is a committee to improve diversifying trade with Asia is a government that is a spent force. You know, I think it's really an indictment of a government that has completely run out of ideas, has run out of its ability. Its capacity to make a positive contribution to our province has expired. Its ideas are deceased. They are no more, Mr. Chairman. They have ceased to be. Like the proverbial Monty Python parrot, you can bang this government against the counter, but it will not wake up and move. It will not squawk because it has expired in terms of its imagination. It has ceased to be. I think the skit with John Cleese and Monty Python is apt in describing this government's lack of imagination and lack of ability to move our province forward to the next level.

Mr. Chairman, I do think that there are some places in the world that are emerging – for example, Brazil, Latin America, and other parts of the world – where there is some future, and I think the government should look at this more broadly. It shouldn't pretend that some advisory committee is going to do the trick. It needs a comprehensive approach on a world-wide basis.

Asia continues to be a major area of investment and trade and finance, but there are other parts of the world as well that are now emerging. I think a more comprehensive approach would be appropriate. Simply appointing an advisory committee is no substitute for an economic development strategy that includes international trade as a key component. We need to get beyond this idea of setting up some committee which is symbolic in the government's mind, I think. I don't see how it is any sort of a solution for developing a sophisticated, modern, broadly based international trade strategy for this province. That's something that the government should be working on. This is not encapsulated in this piece of legislation.

This is just setting up a committee to look at trade with a certain part of the world, and it is completely inadequate to the tasks, I think, that face us. If we want to remain a competitive province in the world economy, we need to be finding trading partners and opportunities around the world, and we need a sophisticated and comprehensive strategy, not an advisory committee. It seems to me that not only is the government lacking vision, but it is also lacking any sense of how to accomplish a strategy. Setting up an advisory committee could be a tiny piece of the development of a more comprehensive foreign trade strategy with future orientation, but it is completely inadequate as a means to get there, Mr. Chairman.

I just want to close by suggesting that what the government is trying to sell Albertans in Bill 1, being a dead parrot, is not what is needed. We need, frankly, Mr. Chairman, a new government. That's what we need in this province, a new government, and I think that there's a good chance that we're going to have a very interesting Legislature after the next election in this province. I want to indicate that the Alberta New Democrats are going to be coming forward with strong, progressive proposals. We're prepared to work with other political parties in order to accomplish the goals of creating a new direction for this province to get away from the stale, dead parrot that is now lying on the counter of the pet shop of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to join in? Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you want to be back on?

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Well, I was listening intently to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and I couldn't help but overhear his comments on the Monty Python skit with the dead parrot and his relating it to this bill and the fact that it seems to be more representative of something that has passed on than something that is alive because, obviously, one of the neat things about being alive is that, hopefully, you're reacting to change or you have ideas about how to better the place you're living in and the things you're going to do.

I, like him, commented in my first address, but I'll comment that I, too, was rather disappointed with this being the lead bill from this government. In fact, when the first bill came down – and I think it was from the throne speech that we knew that this was going to be part of the thing – I just said, "Oh, my goodness, can we not do anything better?"

But the movie it reminded me of was not so much the John Cleese Monty Python skit although I'm well aware of that. In high school there was a movie called Weekend at Bernie's. Okay? When I was in high school Bernie had died, yet they took him to parties and said: "Oh, no, no. He has not died. He's partying. He's still having a good time." They put sunglasses on him, and they dressed him up and carted him around for a while and said: "Oh, no, no. Bernie's having a great time." He'd fall down. Bernie went water skiing when he was dead. Bernie did these things when he was dead and all that sort of stuff. So I really appreciated the analogy that the member from the third party used, but I liken it more to the Weekend at Bernie's metaphor as more of a symbol of a government who is dead, who has not recognized that it has stopped really being relevant to people's lives.

I will point to the time when the Hon. Peter Lougheed took over this province. He was really a visionary, moved the province forward in vast ways, started its own oil company, the Alberta Energy Company, started its own airline. He actually banked 30 per cent of our royalties and said: goodness, this is something we're going to need for future generations; this is something that sets us apart as a country. He recognized long before other jurisdictions, like Alaska and Norway, that this was our one-way ticket to prosperity and that once it was gone, it was gone for good.

What we've seen since that time is that somehow we've lost our way. We've spent now $180 billion of nonrenewable fossil fuel wealth that has come into the coffers of this government, and we have virtually nothing to show for it except for, I guess, an Asia advisory committee, that is going to take us forward. Well, I hope that this next round of elections actually inspires some people to look into something and say: let's hope for something more than an Asia advisory committee when governments come in, something to move us into the 21st century, something that maybe we'll look at, as the hon. member said, like a broad-based trade strategy.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak. Don't worry about renting Weekend at Bernie's. It wasn't really a good movie, but it served its purpose here for these debates. From there I'd encourage any and all members to speak if they wish on the Asia Advisory Council Act. The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo might have some more thoughts.

Anyway, thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak in Committee of the Whole on the bill?

I just want to remind hon. members that in Committee of the Whole we're talking about the clauses of the bill and the title of the bill, and at the end of it the chair will ask the question on approval.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a privilege to stand in Committee of the Whole to talk about the title of the bill, Asia Advisory Council Act. I guess I'll start there, with the title. This bill isn't deserving of a title like this. It has been said by so many that it is nothing more than a council that could be put together. We have lots already that has gone on, that is continuing to go on in Asia.

To think that this is the vision of this government, that this is the important bill for this session is quite concerning for most Albertans that are faced with other problems, whether that's the huge deficit that we're running, whether it's the lack of the rule of law and respect for property rights, whether it's a shortage of teachers to help those in need in their schools. There's just such a long list. When you go out door-knocking and talking to constituents, this isn't the number one bill that they think: "Oh, the government is putting together an Asia advisory council. All of our woes, all of our problems will now be swept away, and life is going to be great."

There are so many areas, Mr. Chair, that could and should be addressed by this government, that should be the number one priority. Again, maybe I'll just throw out a few ideas if we were to switch over. The environment has been a big issue. Water has been a big issue. Perhaps Bill 1 should have been the water storage amendment act, about what we are going to do in order to capture and store the immense amount of water that we continue to lose every year through our waterways because we haven't looked forward enough.

There are a couple of good things about Bill 1, and I need to point that out. The most important one is the fact that this one does have a sunset clause for 2014. I have to appreciate that the government is aware of sunset clauses.

Mr. Anderson: They won't even have to repeal that one, Paul. They'll just let it expire.

Mr. Hinman: That is right. This one will just die on its own and go forward.

The other one is that there is no salary for those on the council. But, again, you have to ask the question: what are the costs to the Alberta taxpayer of these junkets? They are paid junkets that allow the council to travel and to visit and go forward. If we look at previous trade missions to Asia, we had the mission to Korea and Japan, November 4 to November 15, 2010, at a cost of $16,000. We had the India junket from November 1 to November 7, 2010, with a tab of $87,000. Then we had the mission to China and Japan, that totalled $137,000. We had another one to India on January 2, 2009, for $27,000 and a mission to Asia, June 13, 2008, for $20,000.

One of the points, Mr. Chair, about bringing that up is that we already have government acting and working and developing these areas, so why do we need to have this, their flagship bill, to bring forward an advisory council? For me, the reason they've done this, Mr. Chair, is because they don't know what else to do, and this just seems to be the first idea that came up. "Oh, we've got all this work going on in Asia. The tiger is awakening. We need to get more government over there. How are we going to respond to that? Oh, let's put together an advisory council that will do that."

You just have to ask yourself: wow, is this what this government has come down to, putting committees together to run around and try and promote Alberta business? In fact, if we were to be more competitive and continue to lower taxes, Alberta businesses would venture over there and find new trading counterparts, whether it's selling our beef – you know, BSE hit, and what did the government do? It's interesting. My understanding is that the Japanese contingent that came over here was sent home. We need to involve them more. There's no question about it. We've got sister cities and provinces over there. Work has been going on.

The bottom line is: what is this government doing, having the Asia Advisory Council Act as the number one bill when we have so many concerns here at home, whether they're environmental, whether they're educational, whether they're the deficit? I mean, just today we had the vote on the Appropriation Act, and the opposition were the only ones, and naturally so, to say that this government's budget isn't good enough, that it's not prioritized right. Again, this bill emphasizes their failure to prioritize properly and to address the concerns here at home in a proper and efficient way with the Alberta taxpayers. I just have to say that this act, this bill, is a no go for many of us. I'm one of those who thinks that where we are going to go is disappointing, that there's a lack of vision.

I just have to say that this is almost as astounding to me as to listen to the health minister get up day after day, with all of our problems and everything else, and say: "Well, the solution is simple. We have five years of sustainable funding now, and therefore it's going to be fixed." Again, is this the simple solution, that we now have an Asia advisory council, and therefore all of our economic woes and challenges will be effectively managed, and we can go forward? I would say that, no, it will not help. It's going to be more taxpayer money thrown into the wind with no way of measuring to know what the accomplishments are.

It's always interesting. They always talk about using other people's money. Government is notorious for using other people's money to go on these junkets to do these, you know, trade missions and say, "We're going to do wonderful things," when I think that it can all be done without Bill 1. This should go the way of the wind, and we should go back to worrying more about what's happening here in our own country. What are we going to do to ensure that we have a sustainable environment, that we have sustainable education, that we have a budget that – what would I say? – the taxpayers would be able to support and not have a burden of a mortgage?

I still vividly remember back in 1992, when the debate was all about the deficit. How are we going to get control of our $25 billion deficit? I don't believe that Bill 1 is going to address that in a meaningful way. There's no question that the current spending this government has is not sustainable. It's going to consume our sustainability fund, and then what are we going to do? That's what we need to be addressing, Mr. Chair, not the Asia advisory committee but how we are actually going to ensure that Alberta will continue to be the place where we want to live, raise our children, start a business, and enjoy a great quality of life, knowing that we have a health care system that's second to none, that we can get into when we need it and not 18 months later if you survive till then. No, let's have a province and a health care system that people can actually use when they need it and not be told: "You know, you're going to be on a long wait list. Yes, we have the infrastructure built, but, gosh, we don't have any operating money. We don't have any doctors, nurses, to run these facilities, but look at our wonderful infrastructure that we've built."

The planning was wrong, and Bill 1 is wrong in the same way. We haven't addressed the real needs of Albertans. This is just a band-aid or perhaps some smoke and mirrors to say: look at this wonderful work we're going to do, all in a pipe dream to Asia when, in fact, I think businesses can do that with the current legislation that we have. We can also look at, you know, the federal government when it comes to international trade agreements in those areas.

I have to speak against this bill, Mr. Chair, and I hope that others will continue to speak out, that we'll come to some common sense in realizing that this isn't the answer. It's not going to accomplish what this government seems to think it will, and there is a better way in order to promote the province and to ensure that we have a great business and trade relationship with those in Asia.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on the bill.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to get up and talk about Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act, or the Hey, We Really Ought To Set Up a Committee Act, in Committee of the Whole. Look, I'm not going to take a great long period of time here because I don't know that I have really very much to add that hasn't already been said tonight, but I do want to get on the record as supporting the arguments that have been made by many of my colleagues so far this evening about Bill 1.

Bill 1 by tradition is supposed to be the government's flagship legislation of every new year's session. It just boggles my mind. I'm gobsmacked, Mr. Chair, to think that the best that they could come up with for Bill 1 is a bill, four pages in length, that seeks to set up a committee.

Now, I may not be any expert on parliamentary law or parliamentary procedure. In fact, there's very little that I'm an expert on. I know a tiny little bit about an awful lot of things. Usually that suffices as enough to allow me to ask one or two intelligent questions, and if I listen real hard for the answers, maybe it gets me somewhere. So maybe I'll ask a couple of questions here, and maybe someone on the government side will step up and give me some answers.

Like I said, I'm no expert on this, but I don't think you need a bill in the Legislature, and I certainly don't think that you need to make it Bill 1, to set up a committee, an expert panel of 10 people, to make recommendations to the government on what they should do about this big land mass called Asia. I believe it was the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere or it may have been one of my other colleagues in the House who made the comment, "Wow, the government has discovered Asia," or "They've discovered Asia exists." There are only — what? — 3 billion people living there, something like that. It may be a little shy of 3 billion. It kind of comes across that way, Mr. Chair, that the government has just woken up and discovered that there's this big, massive continent with all these potential customers, and, my gosh, how do we tap into them?

Well, that's what it looks like on the surface, but it seems as though the Premier and the cabinet have been working towards setting up trade with Asia for quite some time with elaborate trips to set up trade negotiations in Asia. Back in October the government announced that they were spending about $90,000 to send a pair of ministers on separate trips to Asia. The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development was to spend a week visiting Beijing, Shanghai, and Tokyo in an effort to boost trade and investment. He was going along with his counterpart from British Columbia in an attempt to drum up business for agriculture, seafood, and aquaculture products from the west. Also, at the time the then Minister of Advanced Education and Technology was supposed to be sent over to visit three cities in China as well as Hong Kong and Singapore to sign partnership agreements with a number of education and research institutes. Those two trips together were expected to cost about $90,000.

The Premier was in China last year to boost our trade relations in Asia. That trip cost about $40,000 for the Premier and a staffer who accompanied him plus $78,000 for events and promotion.

They've been doing this sort of thing for a while. It kind of begs the question: if they're already doing this, why do they need 10 of their expert friends? Who knows? Maybe they're even picking adversaries to sit on the panel. It would be a first, but it could happen. Why do they need 10 experts to recommend to them what they should be doing unless they're failing miserably at what they're doing now, and I suppose that's a possibility? Why do we need this piece of legislation to set this up? I'd like an answer from the government about that. Why do we need a bill, especially Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act, to set up this committee, to set up the Asia advisory council?

My gosh, how much time do we spend? It's not that we spend a lot of time relative to all the time available in a calendar year debating anything in this House. But of the limited time that we have here, how much time do we spend debating and criticizing and back-and-forthing about the government's predilection for bringing in legislation that is either amending acts to existing legislation, housekeeping bills, or bills that set vague and very broad, mile-wide and inch-deep directions, and then leave it to cabinet and the bureaucrats to make all the regulations? Keep all that annoying little detail out of the hands of these pesky legislators who might actually want to get in here, you know, because they think they represent their constituents and debate this stuff and vote on it and maybe change the government's grand design. Heck, we'd be happy just to see the government's grand design.

It looks here like the government's grand design has run absolutely out of steam, and I think the parrot has expired. I think the macaw has met its maker. I think that the budgie has failed to budget for quite some time. I think this Bill 1 is evidence of that. My goodness. Please, somebody explain to me why it is that a government so bent on doing so many things behind closed doors in cabinet, on setting up so many important things that should stand the light of day of scrutiny and questioning in this House brought to this House this bill.

Mr. Chairman, you know, as I talk about this, as I think about this, I'm going beyond gobsmacked. I'm offended. I'm insulted. I think this bill wastes the House's time. I think this bill wastes the time of the people of Alberta, who sent us here to debate relevant, meaningful stuff that has something to do with their lives.

I'm not suggesting for a moment, Mr. Chairman, that setting up and establishing better trade relations with Asia — with Japan, with China, with India, with anybody else we want to trade with, that we think we could trade with, that we think we could sell stuff to — that getting the Northern Gateway pipeline built and getting our bitumen through that pipeline onto tankers to take it across, either in relatively unprocessed or upgraded form, to China and India and Taiwan and Singapore and anywhere else that needs it wouldn't be an advisable and an excellent thing for us to do. I mean, Economics 101 tells you that if you've got a product to sell, it's real stupid to restrict yourself to one customer, because then the customer gets to set the price. If you've got two people competing for your product or three customers or multiple customers, you're going to do a heck of a lot better on the price side and a heck of a lot better in terms of calling the shots.

Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why this province, with its expertise in oil and gas, with its expertise in energy, whether it's oil and gas, whether it's oil sands, whether it's wind power, whether it's solar, whether it's building wind turbines, or whether it's developing the technology, developing the expertise – we have the knowledge base here already. The province of Alberta should be the world's energy superpower, and the decisions about energy should not be made in Houston or Dallas or Abu Dhabi; they should be made in Calgary and Edmonton.

But this bill doesn't get us there. This bill says, "We're nowhere near where we should be." This bill says, "We've been just messing around when we could have been getting down to business and establishing trade," or "We're already getting down to business and establishing trade," as I refer back to the various junkets that have been taken at taxpayers' expense, "and we just don't have any better ideas as a government about what we could make Bill 1." You know, we could have made Bill 10 Bill 1. That seems to be a much more pressing issue to the people of Alberta than Bill 1 is. So I don't know. Maybe someone on the government side can explain to me and to my constituents why they shouldn't be insulted that this is all that this government could come up with for a Bill 1 in 2011.

Hey, life is good in this province. There is no place else that I would rather live. But I don't think it's that close to perfection that this should be the flagship legislation of any legislative calendar year. I really don't. I think there are things. As wonderful a place to live, as wonderful a place to work, as wonderful a place to play, as wonderful a place to raise a family as this bloody awesome province is, we're not perfect. We've got things that we need to work on. The government has got a real credibility issue on their hands with Bill 36, Bill 19, Bill 50, and Bill 10, which I understand we'll get into debate on in Committee of the Whole a little later on this evening at least a bit, at least on the surface. We'll try and make a little bit of progress before closure kicks in tomorrow.

I think this government would be better advised to tackle issues around land use and regional planning as its flagship piece of legislation, given the amount of controversy and contentiousness that exists around that, than to be giving us this. This could be done by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. For all the times that I've gotten up in this House over the last six and a half years and said, "Why are you doing this and that and the other thing by regulation, determined by cabinet behind closed doors?" this is one time when I'm saying: "Why are you not doing this by regulation? Why are you not doing this by an order in council?" This, Mr. Chairman, is wasting this House's time.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak in Committee of the Whole on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[The clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 11 Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: Any hon. member wish to speak on Bill 11? You want to continue on?

Mr. Prins: Just very briefly, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to make a couple of more comments after I spoke the other night, just to maybe give a couple of examples of what amendments A and B refer to.

Amendment A talks about: "For the avoidance of any doubt, the Minister may not prescribe for the purposes of subsection (1) any activity to which section 18.01 relates." Really, it talks a little bit about hunting on elk ranches. The type of hunting that would be allowed would be if a person had an elk ranch and somebody wanted to hunt ducks or geese there. They could do that. There's not a total ban on hunting. It's just a ban on hunting of farmed animals. If you were hunting, say, upland game birds or ducks or geese, you could still do that on an elk ranch.

The other one, section B, talks about the condition that no consideration is receivable in respect of shooting a stray. Sometimes an animal would get out of an elk ranch. Rather than having it come back in, somebody could shoot that animal on the outside or even back in, and nobody could pay the rancher to shoot that animal. So if somebody would be contracted to destroy that animal to avoid or prevent any disease or unwanted activity there.

These are a couple of examples of why these amendments are put in. I spoke to the other examples the other night, but this is something that I left out. If anybody has any questions, I can answer questions about the amendments and about the bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. member, we have amendment A1, so we should continue on with that amendment.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on amendment A1 to the bill.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. Thank you for the kind offer to answer some questions. I do have some questions about that because I actually have received quite a few e-mails on this. People are concerned, the folks in my constituency.

I've got a lot of hunters in my constituency, tons of them. I got to talking with a couple of them the other day about this, and we just talked about whether they thought a hunt farm would be a good idea or not. They had some very interesting feelings on it. One of them was that when you're out in the wild, it's almost like this honour code thing. You know, you go out there. The animal does have, obviously, a chance of not being seen and a chance of getting away, et cetera, whereas if you're going to have a hunt farm, so to speak, if there's a guarantee that the animal is going to die, you want to make sure that it's done in the most humane way. Those are kind of the things that they were chatting about. They thought it was kind of a cop-out to have a hunt farm, all this sort of thing, and there were some other issues that they raised.

I wanted to ask the member opposite, Lacombe-Ponoka: with the amendments right now, is there anything under this bill, after this amendment comes into force, that allows for a hunt farm, where people can go and hunt? I'm not so much worried about birds and stuff like that but, specifically, large mammals, elk, these types, deer, et cetera. Are hunt farms going to be allowed under this legislation?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, please.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much. The question is: will hunt farms be allowed under this legislation? The answer is no. That was specifically not part of the consultation with the elk ranchers. They were not asking for that. They wanted to take the whole business of the LIDA act, which is the Livestock Industry Diversification Act, out of SRD and ARD and put it strictly into ARD.

This is a mature industry. Elk farms have been around for probably 20 years. They know what they're doing. There are a number of administrative advantages to having it just strictly under one ministry and not both. The legislation under these – I don't have the paper in front of me now, but the amendments clearly indicate that there will be no hunting on elk farms or deer farms, on cervid production farms. The amendments clearly state that if in a case where the minister would allow certain hunting to happen, it would be hunting of predators or hunting of game like ducks or upland game birds, that are not related to elk ranches. They could be hunted in these areas. The other ones are for pest control and for strays. So there will be no actual hunting on elk ranches.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the amendment.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. Again, just a few more questions of clarification for the hon. member, I guess. Is a cervid farm the total acreage that an individual might own, or is it just the actual enclosed areas? If you're raising cervid animals yet you have, you know, a woodland patch a mile away that there are wild deer or elk on, could you explain the parameters and if that's a problem? Is it inside the enclosed area, or is it all the area that one owns?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Yeah. Thank you very much. That's a good question as well. I think that certainly the licensed portion of the elk ranch would be the enclosed part. Years ago I had an elk ranch, and we had a section of land. On the first part there were a hundred acres fenced. That was the licensed part. Then if I added more fence, I would have to get the inspector out again to inspect the whole area to make sure that the fence was adequate, that it was properly enclosed, and that we had the proper facilities to handle animals so that we could actually capture animals and treat them or tag them or identify them. They could be audited that way as well.

The elk ranch itself was always just defined by the area that was fenced to hold the animals. If you had, like you said, several quarters of land, one of them might be licensed. The other quarters are not licensed. You couldn't go out there and hunt on those. It wouldn't be part of the licensed elk ranch.

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate that clarification.

There are a few other areas. Again, the hunt farm is definitely the centre of controversy in most all of this in the e-mails that I receive. A few more points of clarification on, again, allowing an industry that has had its challenges over the last 20 years – and I still see it faced with a lot of challenges going forward just in the fact of the size of the market and the marketing of their produce.

The question that I have for the hon. member is, you know, that we've got farmers' markets, and we have farm gate sales under the agricultural act. We've allowed a lot of that to come forward again. It's been a real challenge, especially for those in the organic or natural products. They're trying to sell those items, yet there's a challenge. I personally find a challenge for those people in the cervid industry being able to have those farm gate sales. What process do they go through?

My understanding right now is that if you wanted to have some farm gate sales, whether it's broccoli or asparagus or beef that you're producing, if people come and ask, you can get that and harvest it. But if you want to try and develop a farm gate sale of cervid animals, which I think is the best market available, how are they supposed to process them or allow someone to come in and, again I want to say, harvest them in an ethical way? In shooting them, which seems like the most ethical way and the most humane way to bring them down and to harvest them, we're limited to five animals per year. That is my understanding. Do you have any thoughts? Is the market really restrained and not allowed to grow because of that? Any explanation you could give on that?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much. That, again, is a very good question. It starts out with the amount of animals that you're allowed to kill on farm so that it's not really hunting. That is five animals per family per year. If you have a large family or if you like to eat a lot of elk meat, you can actually shoot an animal on your farm. You could take it probably to one of these mobile abattoirs or something and have it slaughtered, but you couldn't sell that meat. If you want to sell meat to the public or at a farmers' market or for farm gate sales, you would have to transport your animals to a licensed abattoir.

If it stays in Alberta, there are lots of provincially inspected abattoirs that can handle elk and, say, bison or deer or these odd or exotic or alternative animals. You would take it to one of these abattoirs, have it slaughtered and cut and wrapped in an inspected facility, and then you could take that meat to a farmers' market or sell it at your farm gate. So the public could actually access some elk or deer meat. A lot of people would like to eat elk, but they don't want to eat the whole elk. They just want part of an elk, 50 pounds or 100 pounds, so that's how you would do it.

If you want to export elk meat, you have to take it to a federally inspected plant. To my knowledge, there are at least two, but there might be more. There's one down in Fort Macleod at Bouvry packers, and then there's another one in Lacombe, called Canadian Premium Meats. Both of these plants are federally inspected and EU inspected so that the product that comes out of those plants could go to Europe or to some international markets, probably Japan, but mostly to Europe and maybe the U.S.

There is a very healthy market for elk meat right now. I know the industry has gone through some ups and downs, and it was partly because of CWD. Then there were some tariff issues with antler product going into Korea. But a lot of that has been overcome. The CWD problem is completely under control. With any animal that's slaughtered on farm or in a provincially inspected plant or a federally inspected plant, the heads are examined so that for every pound of meat that's sold commercially or even through on-farm slaughters, all animals that die that are over a year old have to be inspected. Any meat from these animals or any by-products have to stay on the premises till the results are back, and there has been no CWD found on an elk or deer ranch for many, many years now. The meat is very good. Every animal is inspected.

The markets are improving. In fact, the price of elk on the hoof right now is probably double what it was a year ago. I was at a sale just a few weeks ago, and the top bull went for $6,000 or $7,000, so there is a very lively market for breeding stock again. I think the industry is back on its legs, so to speak, and has a very bright future. That's why this is a very good time to move forward with this legislation, to have a one-window approach to elk farming or deer farming, cervid farming in Alberta.

One of the other benefits of the legislation is that we now are going to a five-year licence for an elk ranch or a cervid ranch. It used to be one year, so every year you're back in there paying your hundred bucks to get your licence to operate your farm. That will be reduced to five years.

There are a number of these issues that'll be looked after under the legislation, and the farmers are very happy with this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. It's very much appreciated to have the hon. member's experience and knowledge in this area, and I'll continue to try and answer a few more questions from people that have sent e-mails to me and questions that I have been asked and I didn't have the answers.

Going back to farm gate sales, it's great that the breeding stock demand is coming up again, but that's going to be very limited to the actual market demand of the consumption of the meat of these animals.

Well, let's go back first to just the hunters that want to go out. When I was, you know, young and got my first hunting tag when I was 14 years old, I think it cost me a whopping $50 to buy my gun, buy the ammunition, buy the tag, and go out and harvest the deer. I shot it, dressed it myself, brought it home, and that was very reasonable and cheap and wonderful meat. I think there are still many, many Albertans that look at hunting and approach it on an economic basis. It's the thrill of the hunt, the sport, yet the cost of it they try and control.

One of the, I guess, exciting things with domestic cervids is the opportunity for people to be able to go to a farm gate sale and purchase that. Again, in the organic market, you know, if people want organic beef or natural beef, they can go to a farm gate sale, and they can actually purchase that animal and harvest it themselves, much like a hunter.

This is the challenge that I see for the industry. Why would we not allow those same regulations, to allow someone to go to a cervid farmer and say: I would like to buy that animal and then be allowed to harvest it and take it home and not have to go through the expenses. When you have to go to these abattoirs, they're very expensive to process, and it becomes prohibitive for many who would like to eat that. Again, as you say, having to harvest the whole animal can be expensive whereas if they're hunters on their own, they know how to dress an animal properly and want to wrap it, freeze it, and take it to their home. It just seems to help the industry that we would allow these farm gate sales and allow the harvest to be taken.

You mention that they're allowed to shoot five a year, but there is no provision for myself or some other Albertan to go to one of these farms and buy that animal, then – is that what you're saying? – without taking it to an abattoir that's provincially or federally regulated. Is there any current way for someone to go to a cervid farm and buy and harvest that animal themselves, bypassing the expense of government and industry being a go-between, saying: "Well, you can't handle this properly yourself. You can go do it in the wild, but you can't do it here at a farm gate sale"? Any explanation on that?

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Yeah, that is a good question. I think if you were to go to a farmer to buy some beef, and you said, "I just want to shoot that animal in your pasture" or "I just want you to put it down humanely, and I'm just going to take it home and cut and wrap it myself," that probably would not be legal. I'm sure it probably happens from time to time. Somebody might go out to a friend who's a farmer and acquire some meat that way. But I don't think it's legal for farmers to be selling cut and wrapped meat or half carcasses or whatever off the farm unless it's gone through a provincially inspected process.

This is exactly the same as the legislation in Bill 11. It will not allow for Joe Public to just go to an elk farm and pick out an animal and just shoot it down and say: let me take the carcass home and slaughter it or cut and wrap it myself. That will not be part of this process. There is other legislation that deals with the inspection of meat and products for sale, and I think that this will come under the exact same legislation as selling pork or chickens or beef or any other kind of animal that's being sold on the marketplace.

Basically, if you want to buy part of an elk or part of a deer, you're going to have to go to a local abattoir and have the farmer bring his animal in or go to one of these mobile slaughtering operators and put the animal down on the farm humanely. They'll put it in a squeeze or something, and they'll kill the animal, slaughter it there, and a mobile operator can then cut half of it or a quarter of it or a part of it for you. You might want to say to him: "You know what? Give me the quarter of the animal. I'll take it home and cut and wrap it." But it has to go through a process. I think you could probably do that somehow, but you'd have to know the people and make it happen.

We are not going to do anything illegal here, and we're not going to cut any corners or make it easier for people to pretend that they're going to go out there and shoot an animal and turn it into a hunt ranch. This is not the intent of this bill.

Mr. Hinman: It just begs the question for me, hon. member: why the arbitrary number of five? Why not two? Why not 20? Why not 50? Why do we allow it for five, but we do not allow any more than that? Like I say, we allow an individual to buy a hunting licence and a tag and go in the wild and shoot and harvest an animal, yet they're not allowed to approach a domestic cervid operator and say, "I would like to purchase that animal" and then all of it.

I understand if we're going to just take a section of it and try and sell it. I have no problems understanding that. But if someone wants to come, try and save a dollar, get some very choice meat, healthy meat, they hit this expensive wall saying, "Oh, they cannot harvest their own" or "The farmer is not allowed to assist them."

They're allowed to do five. How did we come up with five and not 10 or 20? Why five?

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You know what? The number five: I don't know where it comes from. They probably thought that an average family with a couple of relatives or brothers and sisters with families could consume five elk. Elk are big animals. I don't know if the number is the same for deer, but for elk the number is five. These are big animals, and that's lots for a family. I don't know if I have enough relatives that could eat five elk in one year. This is just an arbitrary number that has been picked.

It's the same as the licence lasting for five years. You could make it 10 years if you wanted, I guess. Maybe if there's enough demand for 10 animals, who knows? I don't know if that's part of the legislation or the regulation, but I believe that's part of the regulation.

Mr. Hinman: That's the crux of the problem that I see, that, okay, if you've got connections and you're a family member, you have access and can go and get an elk, yet we're closing the market to the rest of Albertans. Unless you're a family and have this connection, you can't go there. Again I just have to ask: why would we say that family is okay but a friend isn't? Or do the rules have enough latitude that you don't really have to be a family member; you can just be a friend, and you can have kind of like the different communications program, MY5. You can pick your five and allow those to benefit from domestic elk or deer, but that's it. You're limited to that. How strict is the legislation?

Mr. Prins: You know, I can't answer that question. I think if people aren't messing around with the rules, there will be no problems. When you turn it into 25 or 50, that's when people are going to start asking questions. I think if people just use their heads and stay reasonable, I think everybody that wants to get a piece of elk meat can either buy it at the farmers' market or if they know somebody that has animals – there has to be a way to make this work. But I think the best thing to do is to go back to the market, buy the meat that's inspected, stay safe. That way, you'll also know that the animal has been tested. I would suggest sticking with the rules, and if you really like it, build your own farm.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on amendment A1.

Mr. Anderson: My last question. Thank you, hon. member, for answering my first question with regard to the hunt farms. There will be no elk hunt farms under this legislation. I think that's clear.

The other issue that I've heard is that – and I read this in the bill. There seems to be a clause – I should have found it here a second ago. I thought I had it written down. Anyway, in one of the clauses it talks about the ministry having the power to unilaterally, essentially, change – you know what? That's a different clause in the bill, so I'm just going to sit down and I'll ask him when we get back to the bill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on amendment A1.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I again would like to discuss a few more possibilities. I mean, what we want is the Alberta advantage. Last session that was the government's Bill 1, to restore the Alberta advantage, a little bit more admirable of a bill to say that, you know, we've got a problem here. We've undermined it.

It was interesting. Just on the weekend – and I wish I had brought the article with me; I meant to cut it out – there was a fine lady who has gone through two and a half, three years to get a mobile processing unit for chickens in British Columbia. I don't know if the hon. member saw that article. Two and a half years, and it was continually no, no, no, no, no. She just kept asking: well, what do we have to do? She charges $3.50 an animal to process. Again, these mobile abattoirs are a great blessing for many small producers that couldn't justify any other way of existing than these mobile processing units.

Again, though, the regulations are amazing. The hon. member says: well, if you want more, build your own farm. I'd say: well, okay; buying one is probably easier than building one. If it hasn't been a successful business, it's kind of like buying a golf course that went under. I think the capital costs to build one are immense.

You can buy them at a pretty good discount compared to what they actually cost.

Again, the nagging question that I have is about these rules and regulations that government put in place, always declaring the safety of the people, which undermines many of our industries, and they leave and go offshore to other areas. This isn't an industry that's going to be driven offshore, yet it can be driven into a position where there's no longer an advantage, no Alberta advantage to raising elk or deer in Alberta because of the rules and regulations surrounding it.

You mentioned that, you know, this bull elk sold for $6,000. Well, even if you're a small elk producer, if it's only one and you've got 25 because half of them are bull elks, what do you do with the other 24?

I remember when I was very young and they first brought over the exotic Simmental, Charolais, and the other ones, I mean, people were paying $60,000 for a bred heifer, just exorbitant prices. That finally went bust. People who had paid those high prices at the end – finally, there was enough of a supply that there was no more real demand for the breeding stock – had to go back to what the business really is, selling beef by the pound. A $60,000 bull or heifer: there's no justification for that.

Because deer and elk are, you know, domesticated wild animals, someone who wants to have access to them should be able to go to a farm and just say: I'd like to buy one. Just to clarify again. If I was a relative and I went there, it's okay to use a rifle and shoot them in the pen, up to five animals. Can you even sell them to a family member, or does this have to be a gift? Do they actually go through the harvesting practice of using a rifle, or is there some other method that they have to use to harvest these animals?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you again, Mr. Chairman. You're asking some questions that are very difficult to answer, first of all, because I'm not out on those farms, and people have different ways of operating their own farms. My view on the question: how would you kill five animals? I would put them in the squeeze, and I would use either a captive bolt gun to shoot them so that you don't wound the animal or shoot a big hole through it, or you'd want to use a small calibre gun to kill an animal from a very close range so that you're not destroying a big part of the animal. Plus you don't want to destroy too much of the brain because the brain is what they examine to test for CWD. There is a way to do this. If I were selling an animal, I would never shoot it in the field because you're going to destroy meat. That's just not a good way of doing that.

10:00

I think that if you're going to shoot it on a farm, you need to have a mobile abattoir, and if you're going to sell meat, it must be inspected. So unless you're giving it to your family members, you'd have to make that arrangement yourself. I can't speak for other operators, but there's no way to sell meat without having it inspected. There's no way to kill an animal on a farm and have it slaughtered there without a mobile abattoir, and those abattoirs are inspected as well. So it's a very regulated business, and that's to protect the consumers. If you start cutting corners somewhere, somebody's going to get hurt. What I mean by hurt is that they're going to get an unsafe product that doesn't meet the standards. So we're just protecting the consumers.

On the other hand, you can say that it adds to the cost, and that's true. But the fact is that there's a good market for elk meat internationally. We don't have enough elk meat. What's happened is that the price was down for so long, yet we were developing markets. Now the markets are developed, but we don't have enough animals. So we want to grow this business back up to supply the international market. There is a huge market for venison and elk and deer meat in other countries, so this is actually a prime time to get going.

We might be a little bit late on the numbers of animals because too many animals have been lost due to farmers quitting and selling off their breeding stock and maybe not breeding animals in the last couple of years because of the low prices. This is a cyclical thing that happens in all industries. It happens in the beef industry. It happens in the pork industry. It's just part of agriculture that you go through these cycles. People make decisions to get in or get out, and it's just business. It's a business decision that people will make, to stay in or get out or to supply the market or not to.

It's much the same in the bison market today. The bison market has probably doubled in value. The animals themselves have doubled in value in the last year because people have acquired a taste for this type of meat. It's healthy meat. They say it has ZIP: zinc, iron, and protein. It's very, very healthy, and this is what people want. Peoples' diets are changing, and they're going to this type of meat.

We want to have a strong industry that is regulated under Agriculture, and we want to protect consumers in the health of the product. We don't want to cut corners. We want this industry to survive and prosper.

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate those answers. Just to clarify, then, when you're allowing family to come in, you're not allowed to receive any money for that? And did you say that you'd bring them into a chute, and then you'd possibly shoot them through the lungs or the heart, or is it just an area that you don't have enough experience in so you won't comment on it? How do they process these five animals that we allow? Again, can we actually sell them to family, or do we have to give them to them under this legislation?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I don't think the legislation addresses on-farm slaughter. I think that's probably regulated under a different act. How they do it is entirely up to the operator. If I were to kill five animals, I'd bring them into a squeeze, and I would humanely euthanize them and have them slaughtered. I think that every operator would have their own way of doing it. But if I didn't do it on a farm, I would bring them into a provincially inspected abattoir and have them kill them in the normal way that they would do cattle and pigs and any other animal.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak on amendment A1?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: The committee shall now get back on the bill as amended. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the bill as amended.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. The other questions I've been getting regarding Bill 11 surround section 10 of the bill. It says there in 10.1(1), "The Minister may issue a permit authorizing a prescribed activity." [interjections] Never mind. Question answered.

The Chair: On the bill as amended?

All right. Seeing no other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill as amended, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 11 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is a pleasure for me to stand here tonight and open debate in committee with respect to Bill 10, amendments to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. The bill, of course, is entitled the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011.

A little bit of background if I might. I think that everybody understands that the province of Alberta has had a period of time when there was a tremendous amount of growth in the province. In fact, if we look back in 2006, '07, and '08, that growth in certain areas of the province, particularly in Wood Buffalo, was at a point where many Albertans were indicating to the government that something needed to be done in order to be sure that we had the proper type of facilities in place and the proper infrastructure in place in order for us to continue to develop our resources in the province. And it wasn't just there. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chair, if you look at Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, Red Deer, Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Edmonton, areas around Fort Saskatchewan, the city of Calgary, the growth was tremendous, and the pressure was also tremendous.

We have to realize that the economic engine of Alberta and Canada is the investment in the energy industry and particularly the energy industry in Alberta. There was $172 billion invested, capital deployed in the province of Alberta in five years, from 2005 to 2010, and this is in conventional oil and gas plus the oil sands. That's a tremendous amount of capital for an area that has a population of about three and a half million people.

What happened along with this is that the economic engine also fuelled population growth. The population growth in the province of Alberta over the five-year period of time from '01 to '06 was about 315,000 new Albertans, and we're now attracting about 60,000 people to the province of Alberta per year. So you can see that I think in 13 or 14 years we've increased the population in Alberta by about a million people.

This is a busy place. It's a busy landscape. There was economic and human pressure on the land. There was a need to manage our land and multiple land uses. There was also a need to manage the combined impact of all of the work that was going on, whether it was development of resources, building homes, building highways: all of the kinds of combined impacts that we needed to have managed. We needed a new planning concept.

Mr. Chair, this new concept is the land-use framework. We started consultation with Albertans in 2008, working on the land-use framework. It came with a number of, I think, very good and solid potential planning tools. First of all, a need and a requirement to balance our economy, the environment, and social objectives that people in the province of Alberta need and desire, want, I think have been provided with respect to social requirements for living and working, raising their families in the province of Alberta. Social requirements like health care, education, social services programs, the opportunities for recreation, the opportunities for touring and tourism: the land-use framework was laid out to provide these types of things.

We also have there the development in the framework of seven regional planning areas, the seven regions based on major watersheds in the province. Each region had unique challenges and unique needs. So we divided this into seven areas and started the work on the lower Athabasca region first. Of course, as I said, the majority of the pressure that Albertans were feeling was because of a tremendous amount of activity, probably in the neighbourhood of $40 billion to $50 billion worth over a couple of years there, development that was taking place in the Wood Buffalo region.

We have regional land-use plans that were spawned from the land-use framework. Regional land-use plans, Mr. Chair. They're regional in their concept, regional in their development. They're regional in the strategies that were deployed to put them together, and they will be regional in their implementation. There's nothing centralized about this issue at all. The regional plans start with regional advisory councils, individuals from the areas that they represent, bringing forward an opportunity for them to give government their vision and their advice with respect to how a regional plan for their particular unique area should roll out and should look for the future of Alberta. These plans will be tailored to regional needs.

There was a requirement, when we started into this, for legislation to enable regional planning, and we needed legal support to implement regional plans, and we needed certainty of regulation. We have the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. The intent of the legislation – the intent of the legislation – is very clear. We intend to respect private property rights. We intend to respect statutory consent holders. We intend to respect existing compensation and the appeal mechanisms that people have toward compensation. We have respect for local governments and the work that they continue to do and are responsible for. Many rights are defined in other Alberta statutes. ALSA doesn't provide these rights, Mr. Chair, and ALSA does not take them away. They exist in other legislation.

But there was a need to clarify this intent. ALSA and this government and this Premier required clarity. I was asked by the Premier to go out and listen to Albertans. While we were doing the consultation around the first couple of regional plans that we were working on, particularly lower Athabasca, I heard a lot from Albertans. The Premier asked me to go back and listen, and if necessary, to make adjustments. The result of that listening and the adjustment is Bill 10.

Bill 10 clarifies the respect for existing rights that Albertans have, and it creates some new processes. There is a commitment in Bill 10, right in the front end of it, to property rights. There is a refined scope to the regional plans. There is a very solid and firm explanation that statutory consents exclude land title, and there are no changes to the right to compensation of any entity or person in the province of Alberta relative to something that may be put in place with a regional plan. All of the rights to compensation that existed previously are maintained and clearly spelled out in Bill 10.

Local decision-making by municipal governments and co-ordinated planning with municipal governments is another one of the things that Bill 10 very clearly spells out. We as a government cannot make laws under municipal authority. Mr. Chairman, the municipalities are great partners for the province of Alberta and for the Alberta government. We respect them, and we have no intention of interfering with municipal authority. Municipal development permits, for instance, cannot be cancelled or changed once work has commenced on new projects. Bill 10 very clearly respects all existing rights.

Statutory consent holders: if there is any impact on statutory consent holders, they must be provided with notice of compensation, under what laws compensation applies to them, and how that compensation will be determined.

With respect to private landowners, Mr. Chairman, the regional plan cannot – cannot – remove a title. It can affect an interest in property – that's very true – but if it does, it would be very limited and in cases where you might have something like a conservation directive. In the case of a conservation directive it would be very likely that the landowner would agree. In most cases landowners already understand what special pieces of real estate they actually own. Conservation directives do not include your title and would not remove title from the land. All it would ask is to put a directive in place. By the way, compensation is paid if that directive has any negative effect on the value of the owner's real estate.

Where there is a right to compensation, compensation is paid. The legal term "compensable taking" was included in Bill 10 to make it very, very clear that the right that we're now giving titleholders in the province of Alberta goes well beyond the right in almost any other jurisdiction in North America. It is a very, very solid addition to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. Landowners also for other reasons can apply for compensation, and they can appeal the compensation to the Land Compensation Board and, Mr. Chairman, also to the courts if that is their desire.

There are some new provisions in Bill 10 that would be added to ALSA as we move forward. Of course, these plans are region-wide. There is a tremendous amount of work that goes into this, but these plans on purpose, Mr. Chairman, have a five-year review and a 10-year renewal. You could not foresee every circumstance and every situation when you start developing a regional plan. There are cases where this could affect someone's existing use. What we've done with this is said: "Okay. This could be a case. This is possible. Let's give people an opportunity." So they can apply for a variance. They can apply for a variance to land-use designation in a regional plan. Titleholders and leaseholders can apply to avoid unreasonable hardship on themselves and still honour the intent of the regional plan. I think these are very, very solid movements forward with respect to planning in Alberta.

Also, you can apply for a review. Anyone directly and adversely affected can apply for a review to a regional plan. They would apply to an appointed panel. The results of such a review would be made completely public in a transparent process. These, I believe, are new checks and balances that add to the strength of land-use planning in Alberta.

We also have as checks and balances in the amendments a public consultation requirement. Previously that was not the case. I heard very strongly from Albertans that they wanted public consultation. There is now consultation required. The consultation report would go to cabinet, and the draft regional plans, also another check in the system, will be filed at the Legislature.

Mr. Chairman, I think that there's some very solid meat in the amendments that we're bringing forward in Bill 10, and I am going to encourage that, again, people take a good look at this. I hope that all Albertans take a look at what we're doing with respect to land-use planning for the future in Alberta. Again, it respects, I think, the existing rights and all rights of Albertans, it respects existing compensation, and of course it respects our existing methods of appeal.

There are new provisions to review regional plans, new provisions that make it more transparent in a more transparent planning process. There is very strong support for regional planning across the province. I found almost no people that did not feel we needed to move forward with regional plans. I think it's very essential that we do this with respect to multiple land use that is going on and will continue in the province.

Mr. Chairman, I will end by saying: it's your land, it's your plan, and it's your future. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. That was an interesting speech from the hon. minister, and I listened intently to it.

Certainly, it's only two years since we dealt with Bill 36 in the Assembly, and of course it was quite a comprehensive piece of legislation. It was viewed by many different people across the province with suspicion, and certainly I wasn't confident enough to support it at third reading. Here we are two years later, after the public is beginning to figure out this government and this government's habit of wanting to do so much without public consultation, behind closed doors. It's a cabinet decision. "The cabinet is benevolent. It knows what's best for the citizens. Don't worry. We will look after your interests." That theme is, unfortunately, quite popular with this government, Bill 36, and now we see the companion piece of legislation two years later, Bill 10, and we see the problems.

It's interesting to listen to the hon. minister talk about the need for land-use planning and a land-use framework, and the hon. minister would be right. But when this government was cheered on wildly by the Deep Six, a group of MLAs, one of whom is in the Premier's chair at the moment, whenever cuts were made and programs were dismantled, well, I would remind hon. members of this House that the regional planning commissions in the term between 1993 and 1997 were abolished: we didn't need any regional planning commissions; it was a waste of time; it was a bureaucratic exercise; let's get rid of them. Look what happened. Look what happened.

Now, I know the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development is too young to remember all this, but when Steve West was here and cut and slash was the theme, the regional planning commissions went. They disappeared, and we have the same party now indicating that we need them.

I couldn't help but notice at the AAMD and C just how defensive the Premier was in his lunchtime remarks. He was talking about silk-suited lawyers running around the province spreading misinformation, causing trouble. I wondered: who is the gentleman talking about? [interjection] Well, I had the opportunity, hon. member, of attending the ag society and the Eckville Chamber of Commerce debate that they hosted between this very silk-suited lawyer, Keith Wilson, and two of your distinguished seatmates. There was a rumour circulating in that community hall before the meeting started that you, hon. minister, were going to arrive by plane. It was a large meeting. I didn't see you there, and I didn't hear the buzz of an airplane over the community, but that possibly could have happened.

The government is certainly very defensive about these issues around planning, land use, and they're very defensive now about Bill 19, Bill 36, and, of course, Bill 50. They're all related. They all have the same issues. This is a government that has a tendency to want to make decisions behind closed doors: don't ask us any questions; we're doing what's in your interests. But the public knows, clearly, that it's not in their interests.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one of the things I would suggest we need to do in committee is . . .

Mr. Knight: If you're not going to make sense, I'm going home.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, before you go home, I would like you to consider giving Bill 10 some public consultation, a round of public consultation. We could send it to a policy field committee, the Resources and Environment Committee. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka was at the meeting on Thursday night in Eckville. Let's let that committee have a series of public meetings and public hearings across the province in central Alberta, northern Alberta, southwestern Alberta.

Citizens have a lot of issues about the direction you're going in with Bill 10. If Bill 36 was so well drafted, we wouldn't have it here less than two years later, amending the thing, trying to make it sellable to the citizens. That's why I think we would be better off with the policy field committee going around and having a public hearing in a place like – oh, dear. I'll say: let's just stop in Red Deer. We could go to the Legion in Rimbey. There are a number of places we could go if we would not want to go to the ag society, where the meeting occurred on Thursday night. That's one thing we could do. We could ask the people. We could ask the citizens how they feel about regional planning and regional planning commissions and what role they should play. We could also ask the citizens, the property owners, if they're comfortable with the explanations that this government is providing regarding these companion pieces of legislation.

No one denies that we need a form of planning. We had a perfectly good one, but we decided: "Hey, we don't need it. What's that doing?" Then we realized that we've got problems, and we've got no one to blame but ourselves, and ourselves in this case is the Progressive Conservative caucus.

Now, also with Bill 10 there are a few other individuals that indicate – one is a citizen acting on his own, Mr. Sam Gunsch. He has a publication dated April 20, 2011, and he indicates that Albertans deserve a public hearing on the Bill 10 amendment act before the provincial government proclaims it into law. Well, let's give it to the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and let him go across the province and hear directly from citizens.

Mr. Gunsch goes on to say:

Albertans deserve to have [a] public review in plain language of proposed Bill 10 Amendments Act before it becomes law so they can participate on an informed basis in the making of law in Alberta. Albertans have a democratic right to know whether this proposed Bill 10 law is an American-style law, a type of takings legislation which could insulate, by threat of lawsuits, the industrial corporations using Alberta's public lands and forests from enforcement of environmental regulations. Albertans deserve a hearing to determine whether Bill 10 is American-style takings legislation, before the Alberta government proclaims it as law. As citizens, our ability to have control of our democracy, to serve the common good and potentially millions of dollars in lawsuits and payouts to corporations are all at stake.

That's one gentleman. That's one gentleman's request.

I heard many requests in Eckville on Thursday night. The Minister of Education heard many requests there. What is the response of this government? What is their response? It's not to have a committee of this Legislative Assembly have public hearings across the province. No. The response is an oral notice to have closure on this bill. Five hours. We're going to limit debate on this bill to five hours. That's the response of this government.

An Hon. Member: Make it count.

Mr. MacDonald: Tell that to the citizens. If you had been at the meeting the other night, hon. member, and said that, I don't think you would have left that community . . .

Mr. Hinman: He wouldn't have been able to walk out on his own power.

Mr. MacDonald: He might walk out on his own power, but I think he'd need some rugby players to assist him to his vehicle. Or maybe some rodeo hands could help him out. To the Minister of Education: what would have happened if you had stood up at the end of that meeting and said: "I'm going back to Edmonton, and I'm going to restrict and limit the debate on this bill. I'm going to invoke closure"? What would the citizens have thought?

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have a democratic deficit in this province. It's evident as a result of the behaviour of the hon. Government House Leader this afternoon with his oral motion that we're having . . . [interjection] Yes. That's a good point, hon. member. We do have a democratic deficit here, and this is another example of it. "We know what's best. We're this benevolent group. Don't worry. Trust us." Well, the citizens no longer trust this government.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, when you look at the Conservative leadership race – I wanted to check out their websites the other day, so I went on a couple. Pretty nice websites. Very well done, professionally done. I noticed one, the former Minister of Justice, one of the front-runners in that leadership race.

Mr. Hehr: Is she a legal scholar herself?

Mr. MacDonald: A legal scholar, of course. She wants to get rid of Bill 36, wants to go back to the drawing board on this, wants to have a second look at this. Not this Bill 10, not this excuse of public consultation; let's have a second look at this.

I can't imagine the discussion internally in the Progressive Conservative government caucus about this matter, but I'm sure there are other members of this Assembly who are in that leadership race who also have opinions one way or the other on whether this is good or bad legislation and whether we should proceed or whether we should go back and have some public consultations which are meaningful. But no. Here we are. We're going to have a limited time to debate this. I would like to go back to that ag society hall and hear what the citizens would think. Five days later this government restricts debate to five hours.

An Hon. Member: What would they say?

Mr. MacDonald: What would they say? I would say that they're going to start shopping around for a new government is what I would think. They're weren't impressed, and they're going to be unimpressed with this latest action.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we look at this bill and we look at the government's view, we can say . . . [interjection] The hon. member is trying to heckle me.

The spin is that this allows for a wider consultation process both before our regional plan is developed and when plans are being amended. We heard that with the previous speaker. We're going to allow for compensation for those who were directly impacted, in this case the landowner or the property owner. It allows for appeals regarding either a regional plan or an amendment to the regional plan.

Well, it was put to me the other night at a separate meeting in Stony Plain on this issue where a gentleman came up and said: the government wants nine acres of my family farm to widen the approach to highway 43, and they have offered me $36,000 for the nine acres. He said to me: can you find me in the county of Parkland nine acres of land for $36,000? If I had been quick, I would have said: you should see the Minister of Education; I'm sure he can find it for you. But I didn't think of that. He said: there is no place in this county where such a deal exists, yet this is what the government wants to provide me for relinquishing my land for this expanded right-of-way. He didn't think this was fair. He didn't think this government was listening to him. You know, Mr. Chairman, he's absolutely right to think that, because you're not listening, and you don't care what his view is.

You have this idea – you're almost like the English royalty – that you have a divine right to rule, but you don't. You don't. To hear, hon. members across the way, what you heard in Eckville on Thursday night and then to come back to this Assembly and five days later restrict and limit debate to five hours is, I think, very disrespectful of democracy in this province, and it's very disrespectful of the people who came and politely listened to both sides of the debate on this bill and on the whole approach that this government has taken on Bill 19, Bill 36, and Bill 50.

In fact, I don't know who put that billboard up on 104th Avenue, Mr. Chairman, but I drove by there slowly on Easter Sunday, and I saw on the right-hand side of that billboard "Edmonton Stickmen," whoever they are. Maybe they're just a group of people who own a lot of property in rural Alberta. I don't know. But they certainly have an opinion, and they're certainly willing to place their money with an advertising agency and express that opinion, and that's their right. That's their right. But we have to be very concerned in this province about this government's approach: they know better. In reality it was clear to me the other night that the citizens have caught on. The citizens certainly have caught on.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, with this bill I would really urge this Assembly to please consider giving the field policy Committee on Resources and the Environment some work to do over the summer, allow them to travel across the province, consult publicly with citizens who certainly have an opinion about this and other legislative issues that the government has implemented, and then come back to this House with a bill that is acceptable to property owners regardless of whether they live in urban areas or in rural areas.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Anderson: That was an excellent, excellent speech by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. That's where I live when I'm in Edmonton, Edmonton-Gold Bar. That was a great speech.

I'm going to start tonight by getting something on the record immediately. I've talked about this previously, but since we're going to be in here together for the next couple of hours, a few hours, five hours, I guess, tomorrow, likely, I think there needs to be an understanding of where I'm coming from on this bill. My parents always taught me growing up that when someone makes a mistake, they need to fess up to it. They need to correct it. They need to admit to it, and they need to try to make up for it or make restitution for it as fast as they possibly can.

In 2009, when this bill was passed, I spoke in this Legislative Assembly in favour of Bill 36, no doubt about it. My good friends over there have put it on YouTube. It's there for the whole world to see. I absolutely spoke in favour of it, and I did so of my own free will and choice. I could sit here in this Assembly and say: "You know what? I didn't have enough time." And there's truth in that. I didn't have enough time to look over the bill. I don't think any of us did over there. It was rammed through very quickly, very short time period, very thick bill, and I don't think we had anywhere near the time we needed to consult with our constituents, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. I could say that. That is an excuse. [A cellphone rang] That's not me, by the way.

I could also say that I trusted the opinion of the minister and the Justice minister at the time as well as the Premier. I thought that they had more thoroughly reviewed the bill and gotten expert legal opinion on it, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, and I trusted them. I could use that as an excuse, but I'm not going to use that as an excuse.

I could also say that when I was over on that side of the House, all votes were whipped. We all know that that's the case, especially for any kind of important legislation or any kind of government legislation.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, I know. It's hard to believe. It's hard to believe.

I could say that that's why I voted for the bill, but I'm not going to say that.

I voted for the bill because I made a mistake, and I want to apologize to the people of Alberta for standing up in this Assembly and speaking in favour of a bill that absolutely is a harmful bill, is not what Albertans want. I made a mistake. I fess up to it fully. No questions asked, no excuses.

Our former Premier, Ralph Klein, taught Albertans, I think, a lot of things. One of the things he taught us, one of his lasting legacies – and he'll have a lot as opposed to the current Premier – is that when he made a mistake, he acknowledged it. Whether it was a personal issue or whether it was a policy issue, he'd say, "I made a mistake," and he would back away. He would say "Sorry," correct it, and move on. That is what made that man so popular in this province. Even though no doubt everyone agrees that he made quite a few mistakes, by and large he stepped back when he made a mistake. He listened to the people of Alberta. He would step away, and he would say: "You know what? I made a mistake there." Obviously, you can't make up for all your mistakes, but he would sure try, and that made him popular and beloved by most people in this province. There is a lesson to be learned from that politically. There was a reason he was able to be so popular for so long, because when he made a mistake, he was willing to say sorry and make up for it and make restitution.

In contrast we have this government, which is absolutely unable to admit when they have stepped on a snake and made a mistake. They just physically cannot seem to be able to do it. It's like it's beyond their capacity. I don't know where that started, but for some reason it's the case. We saw that with the royalty framework. We saw that, clearly, it was an absolute disaster. It was a botched policy that cratered thousands of jobs in this province, sent billions of dollars fleeing to Saskatchewan and British Columbia and the United States. It did so at the beginning of a recession, when we needed all hands on deck and all the economic stimulus possible. They had every excuse in the book to say: "You know what? We made a mistake to jump on this too quickly. We're entering a recession. We need to stabilize things. We need to take another look." No. Full steam ahead, no questions asked, and Albertans suffered because of it.

I don't care what the bloody intentions of the government opposite were in that regard. Yeah, there were a few of us in that caucus that spoke out against that royalty framework, but every single time we did, we were shouted down, belittled, told to just relax, et cetera, et cetera, ignored, ignored, ignored. They went forward with that new royalty framework, and it was an absolute mistake. They started to back away from it slowly but surely, step by step, eight different changes, and they still wouldn't admit that they had made a mistake, and they still don't today. They blame it on the former finance minister, Dr. Oberg, or whatever. I mean, it's just incredible. Just admit that a mistake was made and move on. Make up for the mistake. So there was the royalty disaster.

There was the health care disaster. I mean, the centralization of health care delivery and the superboard has been a total train wreck, and everybody can see that. I mean, costs have escalated out of control, double-digit increases in less than two years. There have been virtually no efficiencies made in health care due to this superboard amalgamation. It hasn't worked, but has there been a mistake? Did Mr. Iron Hands over there, you know, Energy Minister Iron Hands make a mistake? No, he didn't make any mistakes. Absolutely not. Good grief. Of course he made a mistake. Government made a mistake. They should back away from that and realize that the centralization of health care did not work.

We see this with the public inquiry. Mistakes have been made. Mistakes have been made with regard to the public inquiry. Clearly, people have been bullied. They've been intimidated. Doctors, nurses, physicians, specialists, health care workers have been bullied time and time again, and there has been no admission of a mistake by this government. They're not even necessarily involved in it. We don't know. It would be nice to know. It would be nice to have a public inquiry on it. Then they could absolve their names. But no. Here we are. No mistakes. Full steam ahead. First it was: "No. We don't need the Health Quality Council." Then it was: "Okay. Yeah. We need the Health Quality Council but not a public inquiry." I mean, they just don't seem to understand what Albertans want, and then they don't react to it accordingly. They don't respect the will of the people in this regard.

And here we are with these property bills: Bill 50, a brutal bill. Absolutely no question that the Energy minister at the time, now the SRD minister, made a huge mistake with Bill 50. There's no doubt. I know the debate that went on in caucus there. That was one of the few bills that there actually was a debate on in caucus. It was blasted through, and every single person in this Legislative Assembly except for a few who abstained from the vote voted for it. You know it's a bad bill. You know we shouldn't have usurped the role of the Alberta Utilities Commission. Everyone here knows that. Everyone knows the mistake that was made. Everyone knows these lines are probably not needed. We all know that, yet we barrel ahead with it.

We had a chance to repeal the bill here with a motion just the other day, the motion that I brought forward to the House. No, we're not going to do anything. We had people here that I know voted against it in caucus standing up to vote for it here. What a joke. What an absolute joke that is, so dishonest with people's constituents that they would vote for it in the House and against it in caucus. It's worse than the people that are voting for it in caucus and in the House. Anyway, it's just unbelievable.

Bill 36 is the next example. That was a mistake. I was part of that mistake. I voted for it. I spoke to it. It was wrong. Everywhere we go in this province – take it to the bank, guys – you're going to lose dozens of seats in rural Alberta because of this bill. Take it to the bank. I mean, we could start naming names. We won't, but I guarantee it's going to happen because you won't admit that a mistake has been made and that you need to correct course. Your constituents are not going to put up with it. You have a chance here to put this to a committee, do the right thing, and regain some of that lost support. Just do the right thing.

We were in Eckville the other night, as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar put it. It was an incredible night, and 400 or 500 people showed up. It was a healthy, good debate. There was no doubt in my mind who won the crowd that night. Then all the comments I heard from the ministers after, from the Minister of Education and others: "The fact was that it was a Wildrose crowd. You know, they put a whole bunch of Wildrose people in." Come on. Good grief. You guys have been the government for 40 years, for Pete's sake. You can't fill a room? Holy smokes.

We didn't put out any call or anything. We knew about this about 10 days ago and decided that, well, we'd better go see that; that sounds interesting. So we went. And guess what? So did 400 to 500 Albertans. And guess what? Frankly, the former Minister of SRD was booed out of the room by 500 rural Albertans. You know what? I guarantee that of those 500 rural Albertans – guarantee – 90 per cent of them voted Progressive Conservative the last election. I guarantee you that 90 per cent of the people in that room will not be voting Progressive Conservative in the next election. Take that to the bank. And their families and their friends and their neighbours won't be either because this government won't listen.

So I would ask the government again to learn from that very noble man Premier Klein, who came before the current Premier. When you make a mistake, admit it, back away from it, and do what your constituents want. That's why we absolutely need to re-examine this bill, take it back to the drawing board and see how we want to proceed going forward.

One thing the Minister of SRD and the government is right on is this. Everybody wants good regional planning. No one is arguing against good regional planning, good conservation practices, making sure we take into account cumulative effects when we're approving new projects, making sure we have enough water in the South Saskatchewan basin: all that stuff. We all agree on that. But Bill 36 and Bill 10 as an amendment to Bill 36 do not do that.

It is a central planning document; it is not a regional planning document. I don't care. In the bill itself it specifically says that these regional commissions, that the government appoints, by the way, these RACs – what are they called? – regional advisory panels, commissions, whatever they are, are appointed by the government, so that's not democratic to start. Aside from all that – say that it was democratic and that these were locally elected officials – they don't have to take into account anything that these people talk about, anything that they advise, anything where they say: here's what we advise the government to do. They don't have to listen. The government doesn't have to listen to a word they say.

You know, it's great that they say, "Oh, we'll take it under advisement," and "We're doing consultation." No. That just means that the central planning government is going to talk to local people, a few people that they appoint, about what they think should be in the plan. That's not democracy. That's not regional planning and decentralized decision-making. That is socialistic central planning, and it's wrong. It's not what we should be doing. There's no doubt we should be giving these folks tools. One of the reasons I voted for the bill in the first place was, quite frankly, because I like the idea of transferable development credits and these types of things, but I like them as tools. They should be tools that municipalities and regional authorities have to use in order to compensate landowners. It should be a tool in the tool box, et cetera, and those are good. Let's talk about giving the municipalities and giving these local authorities those tools in their tool box. That's a good part of the bill.

Where we went way wrong on this, where the big mistake was made, clearly, was by enshrining all power to plan land use in this province in the hands of cabinet ministers behind closed doors. We have 13 individuals that, essentially, have dictatorial power over every land-use planning decision in this province. They can do whatever. Shake your head, Minister of Education, but every single decision has to comply with the regional plan. Whatever you say from cabinet, you may allow them to do stuff, you know, by your good graces, allow the municipalities to have some autonomy and do some things, but it's completely at your discretion. If you want to come down with the hammer and plan, you can do it. You're allowed to do it, and they have to comply. That's just the way it is. Every landowner, every company, every individual, every municipality has to comply with what the government says the planning should be in that area.

Everyone should know that intentions don't matter in this case. Do you honestly think that I think or that any of us over here think that the master plan of the former Minister of SRD, the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, who's running for leader right now, is to take and expropriate people's land and not give them any compensation? Clearly, it's not. There's no way I believe that, and I won't ever believe it, but the problem is that he's not always going to be SRD minister – clearly, he's not right now – and neither is the current SRD minister.

When you give people power, politicians will abuse the power. When you create a position of power, it can be abused, and we have given the cabinet unfettered power to plan every piece of land in this province. It's ridiculous. There's no check or balance. They say that you can appeal these decisions of the cabinet. No, you can't if the cabinet will say what you can and what you can't appeal, and they appoint the committee that's going to hear your appeal. I mean, it's just asinine to say that the cabinet doesn't have total power in this case.

Anyway, it's very frustrating to watch. If Eckville taught us anything – and it's not just been Eckville. Look, 300 people came out to Crossfield, for crying out loud. I went to a meeting in Trochu. There were 250 people in Trochu. I went out to Beiseker as well for a different meeting that Joe Anglin, the former Green Party leader, put on. He put on something, and it was a little different. It was on the power lines, but this was in the middle of the day in Beiseker. There were over a hundred people there. It was incredible.

I mean, how can you deny those numbers? The people don't want these bills. They don't want them. Your intentions could be good and wonderful and all that, but they don't want them. They've looked at them. They've had time to look at them. They don't want them. This will be your Achilles heel for the next year until the next election. I guarantee it. But it doesn't have to be that way. All you have to do is stand up and say: "Look, you know what? We're going to do some more consulting with the people of Alberta. We're going to put this thing to a committee, and we're going to have all kinds of experts through to talk to the committee to thoroughly vet this bill, to thoroughly vet Bill 36, and see if it needs to be repealed or if it needs to be taken back to the drawing board or what have you."

The other thing that's amazing to me has been the arguments that I've heard from the SRD minister regarding the original Bill 36 and then its changes regarding section 11 of Bill 36. I'm just going to read the bill with regard to this. Section 11 says that "a regional plan may, by express reference to a statutory consent or type or class of statutory consent, affect, amend or extinguish the statutory consent or the terms or conditions of the statutory consent.” Okay? It’s in Bill 36.

Now Bill 10 changes Bill 36, and instead of “extinguish” the statutory consent, it’s “rescind.” They changed the word to “rescind.” So now it reads: a regional plan may, by express reference to a statutory consent or type of class of statutory consent, affect, amend, or rescind the statutory consent or the terms or conditions of the statutory consent.

Okay. Now, what is a statutory consent? There’s this argument that I keep hearing from the SRD minister, who says: well, statutory consent doesn’t apply to a land title. It doesn’t apply to any kind of land title or interest in land in that regard. Well, that’s malarkey. Look at what statutory consent means. It’s in the definition of Bill 36.

I’ll come back to this point many times.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Some interesting comments by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

An Hon. Member: Really?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, really, hon. member. There were some interesting comments there.

One of the most interesting comments, I think, touched on this whole notion that the government for whatever reason is refusing to acknowledge, refusing to listen, refusing to understand what’s going on out there in the hinterland. The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere was right. It does so at its peril. There’s something going on out there that is big, really big. You don’t get hundreds upon hundreds upon hundreds of people out to meeting after meeting after meeting and have nothing happening. You don’t get those numbers out to these sorts of meetings and be able to completely dismiss it as just: well, you know, that’s all the people who are interested in the subject. People talk to people, and as they talk to people, they’re going to be telling people how the government has treated them on these issues. The word is going to spread that you guys on the other side have done really a horrendous job of wrapping your heads around and understanding and comprehending the depth of the opposition to Bill 36, and that opposition continues with Bill 10, I’m afraid.

Alberta’s land-use framework was visionary, in my opinion. I think I can say that with some credibility, hoping now that I don’t have to go down the same road as Airdrie-Chestermere and apologize for a mistake that I made in the past. I did in 2007 bring forward a private member’s bill, Bill 211, the Planning for the Future of Communities Act. That was not my title. That was the title that Parliamentary Counsel gave the bill for whatever reason. We brought this forward, and it was, in fact, a first attempt at a land-use and regional planning bill for the province of Alberta. Of course, it was defeated because that’s what the government did at the time to Official Opposition private member’s bills. They defeat them, and then they look at them and go: but, you know, there were a lot of good ideas in there, so we better get on with doing something of our own.

Well, out of that came the land-use framework. As I said, Mr. Chair, it was a visionary document. It was full of ideals and principles and, more specifically than that, I think, real clear directions in terms of what we needed to do around land use and regional planning in the province of Alberta. Then the government took those visionary principles of the land-use framework, ran them through a sausage machine, and turned them into Bill 36, a law that, in my opinion – but it’s an opinion shared by very many Albertans – is fundamentally undemocratic.

It gave too much power to cabinet: complete plan-making authority; the ability to override plans; the ability and the power to make decisions, to ignore a plan, to ignore a regional advisory council, to ignore the secretariat; no checks or balances; a lack of compensation for landowners; a lack of consultation requirements; no appeals to the court; the extinguishing of statutory consent in section 11, which the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere touched on a few moments ago; all kinds of things like that. I guess the government did hear the groundswell of opposition, primarily in rural Alberta but I think to a much lesser extent but to some extent in urban Alberta as well, to the extent that they went: “Oh my gosh. We have to amend Bill 36. Let’s bring in Bill 10.”

Well, can Bill 10 be repaired? I have my doubts, but I think we have a duty to try to the extent that the government is going to allow us to try by bringing in time allocation and limiting debate at committee on Bill 10. I think we have to try and amend this bill because I think Bill 10, as introduced by the government, is a flawed attempt to amend a seriously flawed act that was based on, in my opinion, quite a remarkable land-use framework.

In my opinion, where it all went off the rails and into the rhu-barb where Bill 36 was concerned is in applying those principles in a way that gave cabinet virtually all the say in how this should be done. That certainly wasn’t my intention in Bill 211. My intention and the intention that I think existed in the land-use framework and that I would even go so far as to suggest or assume was probably the intention – and we all know the road to hell is paved with good intentions – of the former Minister of Sustainable Resource Development was to give local decision-makers the authority to make their regional plans.

If this had been done right, I would submit, Mr. Chair, the regional advisory councils would have been constructed and comprised in such a way and the contents of the growth plans of the regional plans would have been spelled out in such a way and the principles and process around consultation, real public consultation as opposed to sham public consultation, would have been spelled out in such a way that the regional advisory councils would have done a proper job of consulting with the public and would have designed the regional plans on that basis and, quite frankly, would have brought the regional plans forward to cabinet pretty much to be rubber-stamped.

If cabinet said, “Hey. We’ve got a problem with this. We’ve got a problem with this section and this section. We’re sending it back to you” then the regional advisory councils would have had the authority to say: “Well, okay, cabinet. We’ll go through the hearing process again. We’ll go through the submission process again. We’ll hear from the public again, and now that we’ve done that,” jumping forward 90 days or whatever the consultation period would be, “we’ve found out that the public really thinks that you should go pound salt. You’re sitting in Edmonton, sitting in judgment of what the regional plans should be in this area or that area. We actually live in that area. We have to live with this every day. Our plan respects the principles, and now you’re niggling over the details, so we’ve decided, based on putting this out to the public again, that you’re wrong and we’re right. We’re going to sing the ‘I was right’ song, so here’s the original plan back to you for ratification. This time ratify it.”

That’s how it should have been done. That would be true regional planning. The current Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, when he started debate tonight, made quite a speech where he tried to convince this House that this is not about centralized planning; this is all about regional planning. Well, the land-use framework, Mr. Chair, was, I believe, all about good, responsible land-use principles and establishing a process or establishing a context within which good regional planning could be done. But by the time it went through the Bill 36 sausage machine, it came out the other end looking like something that the Kremlin could have come up with, not to put too much torque on the story. But it's like: really? We've got cabinet deciding what can go where?

Mr. Hehr: Not the Kremlin, the politburo.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. The politburo. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo says it was the politburo. I'm not up enough on my Soviet politics to know whether he's right or I'm right, but you get the basic message.

Bill 10 attempts to address the need for further public consultation on regional plans before those plans are approved by cabinet and to enhance the compensation scheme for land expropriation, but in my view those attempts fall well short of the mark. What are we going to do about it? Well, I don't know. Part of that depends on how long we go tonight, I suppose, because we know that tomorrow the government will use its majority to pass the time allocation motion, the notice of which the Government House Leader gave this Assembly this afternoon. He's required to provide 24 hours' notice of that motion, so in about 16 hours from now or a little bit less that time allocation motion will click in, and from that point on the meter is running, and we've got five more hours in committee to debate this bill.

That's significant, Mr. Chairman, because the committee stage is the stage at which we can propose amendments. We can't really do that except in terms of bringing forward amendments that would seek in one way or another to kill the bill altogether in third reading, nor could we have done it in second reading. What we really have to do if we want to amend the content of Bill 10 in whole or in part is to propose amendments and have a full and fair debate on those amendments in committee stage. You limit debate to five hours, it clearly limits the number of amendments that can be brought forward, and that does limit debate and democracy as concerns, well, certainly one of the most unpopular bills that this government has brought forward in recent years, certainly not the only one but one of the most unpopular bills. It limits not only our ability but the government's ability to try and improve a flawed bill.

I think what's going to happen, Mr. Chairman, over the next however long we have in committee to debate this bill is that various members of this House will put forward or will attempt to put forward some amendments to Bill 10 to at least try and make it a more worthwhile piece of legislation than I think it currently is. I know that if I have the opportunity, I would like to bring forward amendments, if I have the time, that will seek to include rangeland and agricultural land within the definition of land to be considered in a regional plan to make it a little more specific there, to further clarify the proposed public consultation process, to create a process for appealing ministerial decisions so that cabinet no longer has absolute power over land-use planning in our province, to ensure or to try and ensure that fair principles guide the compensation process.

I hope to ensure as well that all regional plans are developed and approved in sync with one another. I'm not sure how I'm going to do that one yet, but I think that there's a need not only for seven regional plans to be approved individually; there's a need for a cumulative final ratification of the seven plans together to ensure that the last regions to go through the regional planning process are not negatively impacted or in some way held hostage, if you will, by decisions made in earlier regional plans. It's entirely possible that the seventh region to develop its plan will be – maybe held hostage is the wrong way to put it – in a sense held captive by decisions made in the previous six plans. I believe that needs to be addressed.

Well, because the government is bringing in closure to limit debate on Bill 10 in Committee of the Whole, we don't know if we'll run out of time to present all our amendments. I don't think any of us who may be proposing amendments do know that. If time runs out or our amendments are defeated, well, then we'll have a decision to make in third reading as to whether we're going to support Bill 10 as a flawed piece of legislation or whether we're going to vote against it because it just doesn't do the job that it's supposed to do. I believe as it sits now it doesn't do the job that it's supposed to do.

There is, of course, a way to avoid all of this. There's a way to avoid bringing in the closure motion, going through five hours of very limited debate, a way to avoid partisan contentiousness, if you will, around some of the amendments that may be proposed. That way is that the government – and at this stage I believe it can only be the government that can do this because at this stage we can amend sections of the bill, but we can't propose an amendment, really, about the whole bill – could decide, the minister could decide to refer Bill 10 to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment.

According to the standing orders there is a process which that standing policy committee will follow to put this through another round of public hearings, of appropriate and worthy public consultation. It's one thing to consult with the public. It's another thing to consider what the public has told you and to consider it thoroughly and honestly and openly and to take those consultations into consideration in a meaningful way as you're developing a regional plan or anything else that you consult with the public on. There is no point, Mr. Chair, in consulting with the public if you have no intention of listening to what they say in the first place. There is no point in consulting with the public if you're only consulting with the public so that you can listen to those members of the public who happen to agree with your point of view and discount everybody else's. That is sham public consultation.

You put it before the all-party, by nature at least somewhat bipartisan or multipartisan policy field committee, the standing policy committee. The process of inviting and taking in public submissions, the process of holding public hearings, is not an ironclad guarantee by any stretch of the imagination, but it certainly has at least as much of a shot at getting to the truth of how people feel about Bill 10 and Bill 36, what they feel is right and what they feel is wrong about the bill and how to improve it, really improve it as, for instance, the Health Quality Council has of getting to the bottom of the allegations of fear and intimidation around health care professionals in this province. It's not a guarantee, but it's at least as good a shot as the health minister's Health Quality Council investigation into fear and intimidation.

That's what the government should do, Mr. Chair. They should – I'll be nonsexist about this – person-up tonight or tomorrow at the very latest and refer Bill 10 to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment and let the standing policy committee do its job, do the job that those standing policy committees were designed to do, which is to take proposed legislation, whether it's government or private members' legislation, that we all know misses the mark as written right now and fix it and come up with something better.

I know that it's very important to some members of the government – I don't know to how many, but I know to some – to get this bill passed. Maybe it's a legacy for the outgoing Premier. I don't know. I don't quite get how this is a legacy in any respect other than that he gets to put another check mark beside another in a very long list of items on his to-do list without regard to prioritization of any of them. I think that's been a problem for this government since the current and outgoing Premier became the Premier, quite frankly.

There are others, I know, in government who really think, who really believe that they got it mostly right with Bill 36 and that it just needs a few tweaks to get it just about perfect. I think they're wrong, but I respect their opinion. I would just implore the government to respect the wishes of many, many, many Albertans: individuals, landowners, businesspeople. I believe the term is disinterested observers; in other words, those Albertans who may not have a direct and personal stake in any of these regional plans in that nobody is going to come necessarily, or at least they can't see that anybody is going to come, and take their property and knock down their house but who are as citizens of this province disinterested observers in the process who may wish to comment on this. Give them a fair hearing and another chance to tell the government how to do this right.

By pulling this bill off the legislative agenda and referring it to the Standing Policy Committee on Resources and Environment and using the standing orders that are in place, giving it to the standing policy committee to hold another round of public hearings, I think we'll get a much better bill out of this. We'll certainly get a much better bill out of this than we will by limiting debate to five hours and trying to fix a flawed bill that in itself tries to amend a very flawed Alberta Land Stewardship Act.

With that, I will cede the floor to the next person who wishes to continue debate at the committee stage. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It never ceases to amaze me that we can spend an hour and a half or so in debate on a bill, lamenting the fact that we have no time to debate a bill, and during a portion of that discourse indicate, "If I had time, I'd bring forward an amendment," yet we've seen no amendments come forward. There are so many things that were said tonight that could be responded to and need to be responded to because of the inaccuracies of it, but given the hour I think we'll leave that for another day. I would move that we adjourn debate.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, April 27, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. We give further thanks for the gifts of culture and heritage which we share. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, today in the Speaker's gallery and the members' gallery are a number of distinguished spouses and partners of Members of the Legislative Assembly. As I mention their names, I would ask them to rise, and I'd ask for no applause until I conclude, please: Alberta's first lady, Marie Stelmach; my wife, Kristina Kowalski; Fiona Beland; Estrella Benito; Jennifer Blackett; Julia Carter; Jackie Dallas; Wanda Doerksen; Sherry Drysdale; Angeline Goudreau; Barb Grodaes; Judy Groeneveld; Rose Horner; Diana Knight; Janis Marz; June Mitzel; Debbie Oberle; Mardell Olson; Pauline Prins; Jan Tremblay; Trish Vandermeer; Christine Zwodzesky. In the members' gallery: Marge Allred, Stacey Brotzel, Jennifer Burns, Sue Griffiths, Beverly Snelgrove, Lanny Fritz, Bob Jablonski, Wade Klimchuk, and Steve Sarich. I would ask all members to join with me in welcoming these individuals, who, while not formally elected, put in as many hours serving constituents as those of us whose names appear on the ballots. [applause]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 57 students from two grade 6 classes at Lilian Schick school in Bon Accord. The students are accompanied by their teachers Melissa Zacour, Shannon Campbell, and Tricia Hurst and by parent helper Kevin Inkster. I had the opportunity to talk to these students a few minutes ago. They're very excited to be here and are extremely well informed, no doubt due to the excellence of their teachers and their dedication but also due to the fact that both of Melissa's parents were former MLAs. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you a group of grade 6 students from Lymburn elementary school in my riding; their teacher, Barbara Hall; teacher assistant Birgit Braid; and a mother, Glenda Yarwood. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first is a group of 25 visitors, exceptional students from Rideau Park elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They're here today to observe question period and learn more about the democratic process, and they asked some very intelligent and probing questions during a photo session earlier today. I'd ask all those visitors from Rideau Park elementary to please rise and receive a very, very warm welcome from my colleagues in the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April marks the launch of Parkinson's Awareness Month in Alberta and Canada. A hundred thousand Canadians, including over 8,000 Albertans, are living with Parkinson's disease today. It is one of the most common brain conditions. It's chronic, progressive, and it results in increasing disability that, unfortunately, dramatically impacts individuals, families, communities, and health care across our province. Parkinson Alberta and Parkinson Society Canada are committed to positioning the brain as a priority health, social, and economic issue in Alberta and Canada, one that warrants significantly increased research and policy investments.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly five people seated in the members' gallery, I believe, that are working hard at eliminating Parkinson's. They are Dr. Oksana Suchowersky, professor of neurology and medical genetics at the faculty of medicine, University of Alberta; Doug Darling, board chair, Parkinson Alberta Society; Bruce Strachan, board co-chair and treasurer, Parkinson Alberta Society; Helen Mak, board member, Parkinson Alberta Society; John Petryshen, CEO, Parkinson Alberta Society. I would like to also acknowledge 12 others, also seated in the members' gallery, who are helping to make a difference in dealing with this insidious disease. Please join me in giving our guests the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Chia Yi Liao, or Nicole as she's known in English, visiting all the way from the city of Tainan in Taiwan. Nicole is 16 years old and visiting Canada for the first time on a one-year youth exchange with Rotary. Nicole loves to travel and has been to New Zealand, China, and Japan. She's also an accomplished musician, artist, and badminton player. Nicole's family owns and operates Sun Lung Gear Works in Taiwan, and their company recently celebrated their 50th anniversary. After Nicole has obtained her bachelor of business degree, she will take over sales for the family business in North America and Europe.

Mr. Speaker, accompanying Nicole is the man in my life for the last 38 years, my husband, Gord. I'd ask the members to join in the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce my brother-in-law, who is visiting here from Burlington, Ontario. Jeff Bowden is a consultant based in Burlington, providing marketing and communications services to corporate and government clients. He was in Edmonton today helping organize events for his client the Canadian Council for Public-Private Partnerships. The event occurred this morning and featured a keynote address from the hon. Premier as well as a panel discussion including the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary. The event was organized to discuss opportunities for municipalities to develop strategic infrastructure and services using public-private partnerships.

Jeff founded Nexus Communications & Consulting in 1997. He has a variety of clients, including small business, municipalities, and provincial ministries. He is grateful to have the privilege to attend the Legislature today and witness the important work that we are all doing here. I would ask you to give him the warm traditional welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For my second introduction today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members Catherine Ripley, a trustee with Edmonton public schools. Catherine is well known in my constituency and throughout southwest Edmonton for her commitment to public education but also to meaningful consultation with the community. Together with the hon. Minister of Education, our city councillors, and the trustee for the Edmonton Catholic school board as well as our Member of Parliament Catherine has done a lot to enable us as a group to discuss and act on issues of mutual concern to our constituents. I would ask Catherine Ripley to please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: In the list of introductions that I gave earlier, I inadvertently missed Alice Yang. If she would rise, please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've received information that a group of students from Senator Patrick Burns school in the Calgary-Varsity constituency are touring the Legislature. If they are here at this moment, I'd like to introduce them to you and through you and have them stand and be recognized.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Taking the Legislature into the Classroom

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today we are taking the Legislature into the classroom. Yesterday I had the honour of speaking with a group of grade 6 students from Roland Michener school. The students are keen about learning about the political process and our democratic institutions; however, unfortunately, they could not visit the Assembly. Therefore, their teacher, Meredith Bly, and myself thought that we would take the Assembly to them, so this afternoon they are watching the proceedings live in their classroom. I would like to welcome them to our proceedings and assure them that if I, born in Penbrooke and raised in northeast Calgary, can be a representative of the people here in this Assembly, so can they.

Mr. Speaker, since I cannot do a formal introduction of the group here in the House since they are joining us by Internet, I want to use this time to formally introduce those students to this Assembly. Welcome to their teacher, Meredith, and to Fatima, Symone, Marina, Mohamad, Kate, Jahfeena, Aya, Dylan, Nathan, Alyssa, Matthew, Chay, Brianna, Ihama, Iloha, Dustin, Skylar, Marwa, Hilton, and Gina.

I would like to say to the students that this Assembly is a place which, as we discussed yesterday, should represent the greatest of human ideals and the greatest of human potential, but far too often, just like any classroom, it's consumed with bitter chatter that takes place at the end of the hallways or at the very back of the classroom. However, I assure this class that today they will see the most uplifting, well-behaved, and respectful behaviour of any adult in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Oh, hon. member, my greatest dream in life.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Government Accountability

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sir Walter Scott famously said, "Oh what a tangled web we weave, when first we practise to deceive." Today Albertans find themselves bound up and confused by complicated yarns this government spins about land rights, energy transmission, and health care. No one can make head or tail of it – what is true, what is false, who said what – but these past sessions will be remembered long into the future not only for the issues we've discussed in this Assembly but for unprecedented defections and expulsions of hon. members who stood up for their constituents and spoke the truth and of government members going to other parties after their constituents' concerns were ignored by their own team and even for brave Albertans who dared to speak up against those who tried to silence and intimidate them.

Some will try to convince you that it has only been about political football, theatrics, and baseless allegations. While that has been prevalent, Mr. Speaker, it is thanks in large part to the leadership of the government caucus and their refusal to bow or listen to any will but their own, not to their elected colleagues, not to the citizen organizations, and not even to the entire medical community. From the very beginning all of this has been about promises, responsibilities, and values and the kind of society we all want to live in.

We have a society like that described by the great Tommy Douglas in Mouseland, where mice elect cats who make laws that are good for cats but not very good at all for mice. Just as he said that "you can lock up a mouse or a man but you can't lock up an idea," so too do Albertans have an idea of the society and government they want.

There are some of us who believe their government should be honest with the people who elect it. Others believe that the government must represent and consult the people on a regular basis, not ram through in the first two years of their mandate an agenda developed by an unelected few and then spend the other three spending taxpayers' money to convince them why it was good for them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Daffodil Day

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fight against cancer is an ongoing battle that has touched the lives of many Albertans. This year alone over 15,000 people across Alberta and the Northwest Territories will be diagnosed with some form of cancer. That is why it is an honour and a privilege to rise and acknowledge that the Canadian Cancer Society has announced April 27, 2011, as Daffodil Day, which is today.

Mr. Speaker, the daffodil is the Canadian Cancer Society's symbol of hope and courage, and when it comes to fighting cancer, it is essential to have both. Every spring society volunteers in Alberta and the Northwest Territories are busy delivering and selling bright yellow daffodils to help raise money in support of the fight against cancer.

The Canadian Cancer Society does commendable work in trying to eradicate cancer and improve the quality of life of those who deal with the constant struggle. They achieve this through funding the most promising cancer research, offering supportive community programs to help people live with cancer, providing comprehensive cancer information, supporting prevention initiatives, and advocating healthy public policies.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Albertans to buy a daffodil on April 27, which is today. Show your support towards this wonderful society and what it stands for.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Democratic Reform

Mr. Anderson: When politicians talk about democratic deficits, people's eyes sometimes glaze over. Maybe it's because accusations between parties in Canada are so commonplace. Parties accuse one another of being antidemocratic, yet they both seem to forget about democracy once elected. Despite this, as the father of four wonderful boys and as one who loves this province, I would be remiss not to speak to just how eroded and vulnerable our democracy, both in Alberta and Canada, has become.

This week will likely be the end to one of the shortest legislative sittings in provincial history. Over the past 12 months MLAs have been in this House exactly 48 days. There have been a few good questions, very few answers, and little debate on important issues. The most controversial bill of this session, Bill 10, will be passed after only six hours as this government cuts off debate, no time to discuss meaningful amendments or give sober second thought. This Legislative Assembly and its proceedings are a sham, nothing more. It's a show, a very poorly written play with far too many extras reciting lines given to them by others.

We could be so much more. We could be a place where thoughtful debates thrive, where important bills, instead of railroaded, could be introduced in the spring, vetted by all-party committees talking with stakeholders over the summer, and passed with solid amendments or rejected where appropriate in the fall. We could be a bastion of free votes, where MLAs were free to vote based on what is in the best interests of their constituents, our bosses, rather than based on what the Premier, his chief of staff, or some other special interest wants.

Our democracy is broken, but we here in this Assembly can change it, and I hope we do. I'm tired of this charade. Our kids and all Albertans deserve so much better. If the current majority is unwilling to do so, I implore Albertans to select a new majority that will. The Wildrose is committed to doing just that, and I hope others in this House will join us in achieving this goal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Instead of being able to spend time treating patients, we have another doctor who has been forced to use his time, energy, and money in defending himself from this government's culture of fear and intimidation. Without warning the distinguished physician Alan Thomson was forced out of his position at the U of A and alleges he was harassed, bullied, and that irreparable damage was done to his professional reputation. The Premier likes to hide the fact that physicians at the University of Alberta are joint appointments with Alberta Health Services. When will the Premier listen to doctors and allow them to focus on patient care, not lawsuits? Call a public inquiry.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said many times in the House, the Health Quality Council has begun its review. It's open to all physicians and health care providers that want to appear before the council and talk about improving the system. They may even want to bring some of the issues that they've experienced personally in delivering health care to the quality council. The invitation is there.

Dr. Swann: The Premier knows that only a public inquiry can get to the bottom of a culture of fear and intimidation that this Premier has contributed to. Concede the Health Quality Council will not help doctors such as Dr. Thomson.

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, that's not true. Now for two days there have been these allegations brought forward to the House, no proof whatsoever. In this particular situation, I think, there's a statement of claim by the physician that was just named by the member that is pursuing through the courts, I believe. But if the doctor wants to come forward and talk about his personal experience, so be it. That's why the Health Quality Council is there to listen.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, cases of Drs. Thomson, Sauvé, Candler, Al-Ghamdi, Garbutt, McNamee, and many others demand a full public inquiry. How many more cases of intimidation are required before the Premier does the right thing?

Mr. Stelmach: You know, it's interesting. Maybe Dr. McNamee and Dr. Winton can appear before the Health Quality Council and actually tell them why Dr. McNamee was suing Dr. Winton and Dr. Winton was suing Dr. McNamee. We all want to know. So appear before the council and tell all of Alberta why you were suing each other while you were in the employment of Alberta Health Services.*

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's clear that Albertans have no confidence in this government's mismanagement of our health care system. The evidence of deep-seated mismanagement, daily accounts of physician intimidation, cover-ups, financial misconduct is alarming. Now with 27,000 health care professionals from the AMA and the Health Sciences Association joining the deafening chorus calling for a public inquiry, it's time for the Premier to act. Why do you continue to ignore 27,000 health workers, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government does not ignore any health care worker. They're all free to come forward before the Health Quality Council and deliver evidence, ways of improving cancer treatment, reducing emergency waiting times, ensuring that the good health care system is sustainable and is here well into the future. The opportunity is there. We welcome all of them to come forward.

Dr. Swann: The Premier knows the Health Quality Council is completely inadequate to deal with these issues in a culture of intimidation. Only a public inquiry can satisfy the needs of these 27,000 workers to have confidence in the system again. Do you want confidence back in the system or not, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: We have great confidence in the health care system in this province. There are thousands and thousands of health care workers that are working very hard every day delivering services to Albertans and non-Albertans. Non-Albertans are coming here for very specialized care. I believe the only people that do not have confidence in the Alberta health system are those people sitting across.

Dr. Swann: Well, take a look.

Mr. Speaker, given that a public inquiry is the only way to restore confidence in the system, will the Premier find the balls to call a public inquiry?

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Well, actually, that phrase has been ruled out of order ages ago in this Assembly, and I have no idea how that works into the vernacular of this Assembly. It doesn't even work into the vernacular of the school that the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose talked about, so we're moving on.

Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Land Stewardship Legislation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Last Thursday evening over 600 Albertans listened to a debate on property rights in Eckville. Yesterday this government decided to restrict and limit debate on the floor of this very House on the same issue. This government, Mr. Speaker, has limited debate at least 40 times since 1992, and they're at it again, shutting down democracy in this province. My question to the Premier: who ordered the closure motion after the debate occurred in Eckville on Thursday night, you or the House leader?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have even a better question for all Albertans. Where were you, where were you, and where were you all in the opposition the other day when the bill came up for second reading? There wasn't one person in the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere rose on a point of order, I believe. Then I saw the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Then I saw the hon. Member – okay. [interjections] Sit down. [interjections] Sit down. [interjections] Okay. All right. Airdrie-Chestermere, would you just cool the jets? Would everybody else as well?

We now have four points of order, and we'll deal with Airdrie-Chestermere, then Edmonton-Centre, then Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and then the Deputy Government House Leader at the conclusion of this. [interjections] Airdrie-Chestermere. [interjections] Airdrie-Chestermere. Okay. I want quiet in this Assembly. [interjections] I didn't hear that. I don't know what it was.

An Hon. Member: You didn't hear that?

The Speaker: No, I did not hear that last comment.

Is there another point of order? Well, we've got four now.

Mr. McFarland: I dare you, Rob. Say it again.

The Speaker: Little Bow, it's okay. Relax.

Are we all ready to resume? The clock is running.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, supplemental question, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I could ask the Premier where he was and why he wasn't in Eckville the other night, but I won't.

The Speaker: Okay. That is the question. Edmonton-Gold Bar, sit down, please. That is the question. You asked the question.

Proceed.

Mr. Stelmach: I was here in the House, actually, doing my estimates. Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: That's not true, and it's a reflection of how little the Premier knows about this issue. The meeting occurred on Thursday evening, and you should know that, hon. Premier.

Now, given that the former Justice minister now running for Premier has admitted that with the property rights issue this government needs to take a step back and fix the process of the Land Stewardship Act. Why would the government now restrict and limit debate on such an important matter when PC leadership candidates want to cancel it and start over?

Mr. Stelmach: Whoever will be seeking the leadership – who knows, there may be more people coming forward – is certainly free to talk about different ideas that they might have with respect to the future growth of the . . .

Mr. Anderson: We chased you out of the province. That's why. Because you're chicken.

The Speaker: Okay. Please. Airdrie-Chestermere, I heard that. You're going to apologize right now for that remark. Stand up and do it.

Mr. Anderson: I will not. I will leave this House, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: No, no, no. You don't have it that easy. Will you apologize for that last remark?

Mr. Anderson: Which remark, sir?

The Speaker: You know which one. You said it.

Mr. Anderson: Which one?

The Speaker: No, no, no. Don't play the game with me. Will you withdraw that last remark that you made about somebody being a chicken in this House?

Mr. Anderson: I withdraw the remark that the Premier is a chicken. I withdraw it completely. Withdrawn.

The Speaker: Three times now you've withdrawn it.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Maybe a jellyfish out of water. I don't know.

Mr. Speaker, I recall the passionate speech delivered by the Premier at the 2011 AAMD and C conference, where he declared that there would be no land confiscated in Alberta under his watch. I know he was sincere, but his watch is now coming to an end. What he is leaving behind is a central planning tool by which the future Premiers can easily confiscate property. Given that we have no assurances that the next Premier will be as personally dedicated to protecting property as he is, why is the Premier rushing these amendments through rather than referring them to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, nowhere in the legislation that's before us will there be any land taken away from any owner without compensation. That is very clear. A lot has been said on this particular bill. There are issues facing Alberta. Those issues are unprecedented growth; they're pressures on water; they're pressures on environment, you know, on agricultural land base. All of these are serious issues. We should all come together as Albertans and decide as Albertans what we want to see in our province, not allow some federal court to make that decision.

Mr. Hinman: He should allow the debate to go on here, and he might learn a few things.

The best litmus test of a law like this is whether you would support it even if your opponents are in charge. Can the Premier assure all the property owners in his caucus and across Alberta that they would truly be protected even if, say, the Member for Edmonton-Centre were the stewardship minister?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that this is a very sensitive topic to many in this Assembly. It is sensitive because some of us come from a heritage when, during a very difficult period of time in Alberta's history, land was actually taken away from new immigrants. They were, of course, put into camps, and they never did get their land back. There are many people in this Assembly that have historical evidence of that. Let's not bring up what happened in the past. Let's look to the future.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, if he understood that, he wouldn't have passed this legislation two years ago.

Given that the best way to protect property and Albertans is through good legislation, not relying on benevolent politicians always being in charge and given that many members of your own caucus, some even publicly, are calling for the bill to be referred to the committee, will the Premier do the right thing and listen to them and protect Albertans, or do you truly believe in central planning and think that you know best?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that last statement just proves that the hon. member has not thoroughly reviewed the bill. The decisions coming forward in terms of evidence put together, ideas, and also recommendations come from the community. I'd sooner have the community make those recommendations than leave it up to others. Those others may not even be Albertans. They may be federal judges. They may be NGOs that don't even live in the province dictating what we are going to do in our own community. That is not the right . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Education Funding

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This provincial government's financial policy is forcing school boards to cut hundreds and hundreds of staff across the province. Calgary is being forced to cut up to 400 positions. Edmonton will have to cut $23 million – that's hundreds more staff – and rural boards are looking at making long bus rides even longer. My question is to the Minister of Education. Why has this PC government failed Alberta children by forcing school boards to lay off hundreds of teachers and other important educational staff?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the premise is wrong. This PC government has not failed Alberta students. In fact, this PC government has been the government for a period of time in which Alberta has moved to among the best in the world in education. Although we have a tough fiscal time like everybody else in the world, we're moving through that fiscal time in a prudent way, and we're asking school boards to work with us using their operating surpluses, looking at all of their programs and making sure that the Alberta education system, which is among the best in the world today, will be among the best in the world tomorrow.

Mr. Mason: Fine words, Mr. Speaker, but this minister doesn't put his money where his mouth is.

Given that class sizes will increase and given that special-needs students will not have their basic needs met as a result of this budget, will the Minister of Education please explain why this PC government has let Alberta students down?

Mr. Hancock: Far from letting Alberta students down, this PC government has made sure that we have had a very thorough look at our education system because we're not content with being among the best education systems in the world for today. We want the best education system in the world for our students long into the future. The needs of special-needs students are being met across the province. There are times when you struggle to make sure you have the right professional in the right place at the right time. It always takes resources. Class sizes: we've met the class size guidelines in all except the K to 3 level across the province . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister claims to put children first yet he is robbing school boards of the funds they need to do the work and given that teacher layoffs and large class sizes will hurt children's success, why is the minister making children pay the price for this government's fiscal mismanagement?

Mr. Hancock: Children in this province, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, have one of the best education systems in the world. There is no danger that that is going to collapse overnight because of tough fiscal times. Yes, school boards have to look at their budgets very carefully. Yes, they have to examine their administrative structures. Yes, they have to look to their operating circumstances. And, yes, there may be circumstances in which there might be fewer teachers. All of that is not going to create distress or a calamity in the education system. It is going to be tight. They know that, and they're working with us to make sure it's always done in the best interests . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, despite the Minister of Education's bluster to the contrary and ridiculous suggestions that budget shortfalls can be made up by the use of reserve funds, teachers and support staff across the province are being given their pink slips because of the sleight of hand budget that significantly cut grants to school boards. This means one thing. Alberta school-aged children will face larger class sizes and fewer learning opportunities. Accordingly, when will this minister do the right thing and find the money to prevent cuts to our education system?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing would give me more pleasure than to have a whole lot more resources for the education system. We could scale up our one-to-one laptop program. We could ensure class sizes across the board. Nothing would be better. But that's not a reality. There is not a full bag of money someplace that we can just draw on. This hon. member knows about the budgeted deficit this year. We've told Albertans we're going to reduce that deficit and balance the budget within three years. We have to do that while we still have money in the sustainability fund, and everybody has to be part of that solution, including school boards who have $350 million . . .

Mr. Hehr: Given that the Minister of Education has publicly admitted that this is not the time to be eliminating teachers from the system, why are school boards still announcing teacher layoffs despite the minister's directive to simply use their reserve funds? Could it be that reserve funds are actually reserved for something else?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, one of the interesting things in this province is that we have school boards, and school boards get to design their own budgets. So I can't give them a directive as to how to do it. I can make suggestions to them. If they choose to do other things – quite frankly, it wouldn't be fair of me to suggest that all of them will be able to work within their budgets without perhaps reducing the number of their staff. They're operating within the class size guidelines process, they're operating with what they believe is in the best interests of the students in their area, and they're operating within a strong fiscal regime.

Mr. Hehr: Given that teachers will be let go from the Alberta school system and will no doubt seek work elsewhere and given that the minister has admitted we will need teachers in the very near future, is he not worried that these cuts will irreparably harm our ability to find qualified teachers in the future?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, every year the schools of education across this province, the three residential universities and some of the other universities in the province, all of whom have a very good reputation, are turning out new graduates. It would be great if all of those new graduates who want to be teachers and who have a passion for students could be engaged each year. Going to university doesn't guarantee you a job at the end of the year, but what I can tell you is that as we move forward with a 100,000 new students in this province over the next 10 years, we're going to need those graduates, and they're going . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Livestock Traceability Pilot Project

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development released the results of a pilot project that examined the feasibility of traceability systems in Alberta's auction markets. Prior to the pilots I met with auction markets in my area that were very concerned about the logistics required and the question of accuracy in the long term. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. I believe I understand why something was needed, but can the hon. minister say if this project was really successful?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As an exporting jurisdiction it's critical that we have a traceability system that works, one that not only works but doesn't impede the speed of commerce in our province. We needed to determine if the technology with respect to the sensors was working properly and had the capability to be read. We did close to a quarter of a million cattle this past fall in the fall run and had a success rate of 95 per cent reads, which was very, very encouraging.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. Considering that no two auction markets in Alberta are the same and they are subject to different economic and environmental demands and different methods of operation, how can the results of this pilot project be replicated in the real world?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The way that we had to do it was of course to use different areas of the province so that we could replicate the conditions that they face throughout Alberta. They face different weather conditions. They face different market conditions and different sizes of operations. We customized the reading systems to match the areas of the province. As I said, our results were very, very good and had very little impact on the speed of commerce.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the same minister. Now that we have these results, can an effective traceability system be also of benefit in other situations, not just the production and sale of livestock?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the biggest reasons that we undertook this as a nation and as a province and worldwide was for the control and traceability of species because of the risk involved with health. What we found out just recently was in the hon. member's constituency when we had a flooding situation, a benefit that we had no idea would occur. We were able to locate eight cattle herds that were at risk due to flooding. So there are a number of benefits.

Corporate Tax Advantage for American Companies

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, U.S. tax law requires that American corporations operating in Canada pay a 35 per cent tax rate. If they pay less than 35 per cent in Canada, the difference is collected in Washington. In Alberta the combined federal-provincial tax rate is only 26.5 per cent, so the entire 8 and a half per cent difference is paid to Washington rather than to Alberta. The people of Alberta send an equalization payment to Washington of about $2 billion a year. Is the President of the Treasury Board aware of this issue?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it is an issue. It's just that the numbers are nowhere near what the hon. member has brought up. There certainly is a difference in how the tax is put onto different businesses that operate in Canada and the U.S. The realistic figure: if it were in the hundred million dollar range, about 2.8 per cent of the total corporate tax we collect could be involved in this exchange. It is nowhere near the numbers that were quoted yesterday or today.

Dr. Taft: Well, again to the same minister: given that the Minister of Education has just lamented that school boards across Alberta are laying off hundreds of teachers, why is this government sending a professionally estimated $2 billion a year in tax breaks to Washington instead of investing it in the well-being of Albertans?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is taking an editorial comment and trying to suggest that those numbers reflect Alberta corporate tax. They do not. It's very clear. There are choices. There are parties that try to make prudent decisions in difficult times, there are parties that will continue to spend more, and there are parties that want to drastically cut the systems we have. Those are choices that Albertans can make at election time, and we're proud of the choices we've made.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister: given that this widely recognized, quote, treasury transfer effect, unquote, means Albertans are cutting schools, choking universities, and draining their savings while sending billions of dollars through the back door to the U.S., is it a deliberate position of this government or an unintended consequence this government will fix?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's not a correct statement that the hon. member has made. If the hon. member wanted to read a little further from such noted economists as Jack Mintz or others about this thing, he will realize that the numbers are put out there from different formulas. At the top edge it might be .28 per cent, realistically .01 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Carbon Capture and Storage

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Energy. In January allegations were made about the safety of the carbon capture and storage, or CCS, project in Saskatchewan. Given the safety concerns that have been raised, will Alberta continue to move forward with our CCS technology?

Mr. Liepert: First of all, the member is correct when he said that there were allegations. I think some subsequent reviews of studies have determined that there was no evidence that there was any leakage that could be attributed to the CCS project in Weyburn. I should note that the Saskatchewan government just announced yesterday that they'll be contributing another 1 and a quarter billion dollars towards CCS projects in southern Saskatchewan. I think that the science has been proven world-wide, and we're confident that it is safe.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the government has recently announced the province's first large-scale CCS project, the Alberta carbon trunk line, how will the government ensure that CCS projects like this one are done safely in Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Well, one of the things that we have taken on is to create an international regulatory assessment committee. We have members on that committee from, I know, Australia and the U.K., and we want to look at the regulations as they exist around the globe to ensure that we develop the best here. As I said in my first remarks, there are more projects coming online, so the more that we have to learn from, the better we'll all be.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much. To the same minister: will the public be consulted about how this technology will be used in Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: There has been consultation under way since the projects first were announced, in 2007, but since then there has been a significant move relative to specific projects that are either approved or about to be approved. One of the things that we are going to embark on this summer and into the fall is a very extensive informational session with Albertans in communities across the province, and we'll see if there's additional information that needs to follow from that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Sand and Gravel Extraction Management

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Improve inspections and enforce land reclamation requirements, assess sufficiency of security deposits, verify the amount of resources removed so the province gets the revenue it's due, and strengthen the ability to test compliance with legal obligations: these are recommendations from the Auditor General to the government on the sand and gravel industry, yet another industry that this government is failing to monitor, enforce, and receive revenue from. To the Minister of SRD: why has this minister and this government been so lackadaisical about gravel mining in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that the aggregate business in the province of Alberta is a very important business for Albertans. We do monitor, we do measure, and we do collect our fees with respect to the aggregate business in the province. Again, like with many of these things, the Auditor General has seen some deficiencies in the system, and we're working with him and working forward to correct those.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: how can the minister approve or consider approving any new gravel operations when this government continues in many cases to have no idea what's coming out of the ground, no idea how much revenue they are owed in certain circumstances, and no idea what level of reclamation has taken place at deserted gravel pits around the province?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, honestly, that's a bit theatrical. The fact of the matter is that we do have a pretty darn good idea what's coming out of the ground, where it's being processed, where it's being used, and where it's being consumed. Again, as I said, the Auditor General did point out what he thought were some deficiencies. We're working with him, and we'll correct those in due course.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. This question is to the Minister of Environment. Given that gravel and sand mining, aggregate mining, is intimately connected to aquifers and clean water for Albertans, why hasn't the government taken a leadership and coordinating role instead of deflecting to local zoning and ad hoc decision-making?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think it's perfectly appropriate that the first decision that needs to be made in any development is whether or not the municipality will approve it from a zoning perspective. We respect the authority of the municipality to make such decisions. Once that decision has been made, then it falls to Alberta Environment to determine whether or not there would be adverse effects on groundwater and the like. That's the process that we use.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Secular Public Education in Greater St. Albert

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For several months now the Greater St. Albert Catholic regional division has been refusing to provide a secular education program to students in Morinville despite being a public school division with a constitutional obligation. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Why is it taking months to solve this problem?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's fair to say that GSACRD has refused to provide a program. They've met with the parents, and we've met with them to ensure that they understand that as a public board they have an obligation to provide a secular program. They're now in the process at our request of doing a census of parents in the area to determine what the need or demand for a secular program is.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: can the minister tell the House how the parents of Morinville got into this situation in the first place?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that's one community which exists as a bit of an anomaly. The Greater St. Albert Catholic board is actually a public board because in that jurisdiction when the board was established, Catholics were in the majority. The minority faith board in St. Albert is St. Albert Protestant. There is no minority faith board in Morinville, so the public board in Morinville is Greater St. Albert Catholic. But they are a public board, and they have an obligation to provide public education, not religious education. They can provide religious education, but they have to make sure . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: given that many parents are concerned about faith-based education in Edmonton, what is the minister doing to ensure that the parents in Edmonton and elsewhere in the province have access to their choice of education, which they are entitled to?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've seen across the province a number of people writing in and asking for assurance that this government supports a faith-based education, particularly the separate school boards across the province. We've made that clear time after time after time. We believe in choice in education. We have an excellent system of education in the province that consists of a public system, which is available for all students; in certain places in the province where it's been established, a minority faith board, mainly a Catholic board, except in St. Albert, where it's a Protestant board; and then charter schools, private schools, and other options.

Business Revitalization Zones

Ms Notley: Business revitalization zones build communities, but the minister of community spirit doesn't care. First he claimed that he was cutting BRZs from CIP funding because they're funded by municipalities. Once he finally understood he had that wrong, he questioned their auditing even though their auditing often exceeds that of other recipients. In Strathcona alone Ice on Whyte, the SOS Festival, and Return of the Magic are all in jeopardy thanks to this minister's failure. To the minister: why won't he reverse his irrational decision and let the BRZ applications be considered on their merits like every other group?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, our community investment funds are given to organizations that are deemed not-for-profit and are registered through the Societies Act. Business revitalization zones are constituted by the municipalities across this province, and as such they fall under different regulations. We looked at whether or not we could make an exception for them, but as we tried to get to the bottom of the information, each different BRZ under each different municipality runs under a different set of rules and regulations. Ultimately, their operation is dictated by the municipality.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, given that last fall the minister promised BRZs that they'd be eligible to apply for grants and given that BRZs started planning, falsely assuming they could rely on the minister's word, and are now left out of pocket for events that may be cancelled, will the minister explain why Albertans should ever trust his assertions? Or is he hoping that this particular broken PC promise will be lost amongst all the others?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I went to that meeting with all the best of intentions. I was led to believe by the representatives of the BRZs that they were not-for-profit organizations just like any community league, just like any other community organization. As I found out through further research from my department and work with Municipal Affairs, that was not the case.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I believe he was at a different meeting.

Given that this minister likes to wax poetic about leveraging private money with public money to maximize benefits to the community and given that BRZs are specifically designed to apply private dollars to exactly that purpose, why is this minister determined to penalize small businesses for the very act of paying to support community development initiatives?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, as much as I like small businesses, our community investment programs were not designed to support small businesses. They were designed to support those worthy communities and those organizations in our communities; to build stronger communities and safer communities; and whether it is a sports organization, whether it's a community organization, to help plan, to help operate and maintain those worthy facilities and organizations, not the small businesses.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Personal Gaming Profiles

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission along with Caesars Palace and other famous Las Vegas names is a gold member of the international Gaming Standards Association, which recently announced a plan to enable members to develop profiles of each customer across their entire operation, including how often and when they visit, how they spend their money, and how they gamble. To the Solicitor General: is the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission planning to develop these fully integrated customer profiles of its Alberta clients?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The development of our new gaming products, new machines is exactly that. We're out for a market review right now. What we do plan on doing is incorporating that technology in our safe gambling and problem gambling programs.

Ms Pastoor: I guess my question would be: voluntary or automatic? There's a big difference.

Given that the industry-wide standards promote the sharing of information, what assurance can the minister provide that profiles of Albertans will not find their way into gambling operations outside of Alberta and, in particular, outside of Canada?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're talking about a voluntary program. I think the member would agree that we do need to deal with problem gamblers. Maybe the member should be aware that we have privacy of information legislation in Alberta, and my department will adhere to it.

Ms Pastoor: Since the most recent annual report of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor commission states that the commission grossed nearly $23 billion in revenue from gaming – that is grossed, of course – considerably more than oil and gas royalty revenue, what's the minister doing to encourage the commission to ensure a balance between revenue generation and our social responsibility?

Mr. Oberle: Well, nobody in this province is forced to gamble, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission's mission is to provide a safe, well-regulated product, and I think they're doing that in the marketplace.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. [interjection] Calgary-Buffalo, did you want to get in? [interjection] Whoa. No. You're not talking. Period. You're listening right now, okay? Shall I recognize you? You be a good boy and be quiet.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Sturgeon General Hospital

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. The Sturgeon general hospital is in the midst of several phases of renovations, the first stage of which is to expand the emergency department. Can the minister please advise what improvements have been made and what the schedule is to complete the renovations of the emergency department and the public access thereto?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The short answer is that the facility has been expanded, redeveloped, and refurbished to the tune of about $43 million, all of which means that the expansion and upgrades will provide far better services now to far more people. Treatment space has been increased by more than a hundred per cent, and the ambulance bay there has been increased exponentially as well. There are a lot of improvements coming, and there are still more on the radar.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that my first question was a little bit long, so perhaps the minister could address the schedule of when the improvements will be completed.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, over the next several days Alberta Health Services will actually be working with the city of St. Albert to see what else needs to be done to continue providing the outstanding service that they have. As part of that they're looking at the smoother flow through of emergency medical services and how the additional third ambulance bay will be accommodated there to provide even better and more services for the large catchment area that the Sturgeon general serves.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That answer leads me to my final question. Given that the transition of the emergency response service from the city of St. Albert to Alberta Health Services has been ongoing for two years now and AHS has finally added a third ambulance, will this addition of the third ambulance be permanent?

Mr. Zwozdesky: My understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that, yes, it will be permanent, and it will enhance the already expanded emergency department. That department, as the hon. member might know, includes 13 more treatment spaces over and above the 38 that were there, so the ambulance needs to be a permanent feature of that to help accommodate what has become a rapidly growing area of need. It also helps many other people from Edmonton, from Fort Saskatchewan, from northeast British Columbia, and from the Territories.*

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

2:30 Health and Wellness Follow-up Questions

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago in this House I questioned the minister of health in budget estimates. It's often the only time to ask detailed, specific questions. Many of the questions I asked that day went unanswered and appear to be totally ignored or unacknowledged. Today as the health critic for the Wildrose I'm asking questions to you, Minister, on behalf of Albertans. To the health minister: given that the Premier stated that we must look at a different model to reimburse health CEOs and that a new model may be necessary, when can Albertans expect the promised review of health bonuses?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we've looked at this issue quite carefully. In fact, a couple of independent, external firms were engaged, one by Alberta Health Services a few years ago and one by Alberta Health and Wellness just a few months ago. That final report should be coming to me very soon, and it will have a very thorough set of recommendations, I hope, that will address performance incentives, what other people might call bonuses or pay-at-risk or the like.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know what the government thinks about “soon.”

Given that Alberta Health Services began activity-based funding in seniors’ homes on April 1, 2010, what progress has been made, and when will you table a report?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there was a pilot over the last year with respect to activity-based funding in long-term care facilities and perhaps elsewhere. I’ll just check on what the progress is on that. I haven’t seen the final conclusion of it, but as soon as I do, I’ll be happy to alert the House to that.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, he’s talked about tabling reports in this Legislature before. Given that this government started a three-year children’s mental health plan for Alberta in 2008, when can we expect reports to be tabled in the Legislature?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I indicated to a question similar to this earlier that we have a very comprehensive provincial mental health strategy that is being developed with numerous stakeholders. That will be coming out very shortly as well, but in the meantime I just recommitted our support of $19 million over three years to help improve children’s mental health in schools. That will result in many more counsellors and other help aides to assist those children in need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Highway 63 Emergency Services

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In rural Alberta volunteer firefighters are our emergency first responders. Last year when emergency services on the dangerous highway 63 were withdrawn by the small and dedicated Wandering River fire department due to burnout, other small communities – Boyle, Grassland, Plamondon, Hercules – stepped in to pick up the slack. Can the Minister of Municipal Affairs tell us what immediate steps have been taken to support these volunteer firefighters and assure Albertans that we have first responders on the north and remote section of highway 63?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this month my colleagues and I joined Athabasca county to improve emergency response in the highway 63 region. In the near term government is working with the county to recruit full-time emergency responders to support the volunteers and purchase portable speed indicator devices for use at accident scenes to slow traffic and improve responder safety. This is a community-based solution that was brought forward through the work of municipalities, emergency responders, and, naturally, the local MLA for Athabasca-Redwater, also supported by the MLA for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the strain from situations like this last weekend, where volunteer firefighters from Boyle and Thorhild responded first to a rolled super-B loaded with ammonium hydroxide and then a rolled super-B loaded with sulfur, all while responding to grass and structural fires in the same area, what’s the minister doing to ensure that there’s a sustainable long-term model for first responders along the highway 63 corridor?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the challenges with recruitment and retention of volunteer firefighters are certainly not unique to this particular area, but our investment recognizes the heightened situation faced by these municipalities, the first responders, the motorists along this important road, and the need for a long-term strategy. That’s why we are continuing our partnership with our municipalities, our first responders, and industry while a regional approach is developed over the next year. We’ll consider a number of solutions, including traffic enforcement, driver awareness, public safety, and volunteer recruitment and retention.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Given the great announcement that was made a few weeks ago involving this section of highway and emergency first responders up there, obviously it was a real team effort. What role did your ministry play in this announcement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Culture and Community Spirit was pleased to provide a grant for $325,000 to the Wandering River Agricultural Society through the community initiatives program. The project provided funds to support the ability to help provide direct services to communities throughout Alberta. This grant not only produced community capacity but will help to actually save lives. We’d like to congratulate the local MLAs, reeves, mayors, the community organizations, and the volunteers on working together to find sustainable community-driven solutions to improve highway safety.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Logging in Castle Special Management Area

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The 1965 Alberta Forest Reserves Act, the 1974 NRCB recommendations, the 1977 eastern slopes policy, the 1985 Castle integrated resource plan, 1993 NRCB recommendations, the 1998 special places committee recommendations, the revised 2001 integrated resource plan, and the 2004 minister’s task force report from the southeastern slopes all emphasize watershed protection and species diversification. To the SRD minister: why does this government continue to ignore decades of recommendations against allowing clear-cutting in the Castle?

The Speaker: The hon. minister, please.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, that was quite a litany of things that have happened in history. We do learn from that. One thing that we have learned is that the area in question, C5, with respect to harvest of timber has been extremely well managed. Indeed, you hear a lot of things now about the situation where it’s a great place for tourism, super recreational opportunities. The viewscape is tremendous.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Why does this minister continue to ignore expert advice and public opinion and refuse to protect this area?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the expert advice we have is that the management of the forest land-use zone that this particular region falls under has been, I think, very proactive and productive. Two-thirds of the area today is off limits to logging, and of the remaining one-third that can be harvested, the area harvested in annual allowable cut is about 1 per cent of one-third of the area. I think that is, you know, a very good management program. To go forward, I could also say that when you look at this area . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Chase: Given that there is no regional plan in place in the Castle and the cumulative effects have not been determined, will this minister halt all logging and new energy development, do the assessment, and designate the Castle as the Andy Russell I'tai Sah Kòp wildland park with at least the same protections the area formerly had within the Waterton national park boundaries before it was pulled out in the 1930s?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, how could that possibly be the answer to anything? We have very good hard-working Albertans that are out there earning a living and supporting their families. What should we do: chuck them out on the street instead of taking a look at a hundred years' worth of proper management? The trees that people look at today in that area in many cases are regrowth from areas that have been harvested previously. There does not appear to be a lot wrong with that. There are very dense, high-growth older trees in the area that require some forest management to keep us from a situation of forest fires and pests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

School Trustee Pecuniary Interest

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think there is any doubt that parents have the greatest stake in the success of their children. That's why it was a little bit of a head-scratcher last week when Calgarians learned that parents who serve as trustees for the Calgary board of education are not permitted to participate in that school board's budget debate. Considering that budgeting is a significant part of a school board's work, can the Minister of Education please explain this decision?

Mr. Hancock: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's fair to say that parents who are trustees are not permitted to participate. Every individual, whether in an elected position, whether in this House or on a school board or at a municipal council, has to make a decision as to whether or not they are in a conflict of interest. I think the rules are pretty clear on conflict of interest, that it's a direct pecuniary interest, and if you have a direct pecuniary interest, you should withdraw from the discussion and the vote. However, boards should be able to arrange their affairs so that's not on broad issues like a budget but on very narrow issues relative . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's quite well known that the CBE has obtained a rather lengthy legal opinion on the subject that seems, on face value at least, to bind the trustees' hands. Is the minister prepared to do anything about this? What are these trustees exactly supposed to do under these circumstances?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'm not privy to a 13-page legal opinion. I'd be surprised if that legal opinion suggested that a trustee who was also a parent could not participate in budget discussions. Again, if it's a direct pecuniary interest, that interest has to be declared and the individual withdraw, but they can organize their affairs and the agenda of a board meeting to ensure that parents or any other person who has a direct pecuniary interest in a subject that comes before the board can participate in the broad discussion of issues and just withdraw from the narrow issues . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Rodney: I've had a number of conversations with the trustee in question, and I'm sure that she wasn't expecting pecuniary interest to be in her vocabulary at this point. But considering all of that and the answers to the two previous questions, is this minister contemplating changes to the School Act to address the issue and put it to rest for good?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we anticipate introducing the new Education Act later on today, but I can say this. The rules with respect to conflict of interest are pretty clear in the act, but if there's further discussion – and this bill will be available for further discussion – and there are things that need to be clarified, that could be contemplated and done when the bill goes through the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 18 members were recognized today. That was 103 questions and responses.

I understand, Minister of Health and Wellness, you wish to supplement an answer. Please identify from whom the question was asked, and they will have an additional question permitted.

Sturgeon General Hospital (continued)

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to clarify an answer I gave to the Member for St. Albert with respect to the third ambulance that's being provided. It's stationed at the Sturgeon community hospital, but it's being provided for the community of St. Albert. The exact location and its permanency will be determined over the 90-day period to see if it's more effectively placed at that hospital or somewhere else in the community, but at the moment it's being placed there.*

The Speaker: Hon. Member for St. Albert, that permits you an additional question if you wish.

Mr. Allred: Yes, Mr. Speaker, just a little bit of clarification on that from the hon. minister. He says that it will be placed within the community. Does that mean within the community of St. Albert, for instance in a fire station, or does it mean in the greater community, being Edmonton?

Mr. Zwozdesky: A very good question. The answer is that the city of St. Albert is working with metro Edmonton officials right now to see what the most appropriate location for that would be, assuming it would become permanent. Clearly, the level of need is there, hon. member, and they're looking at a few different locations. At the moment the Sturgeon hospital appears to be the best place to house it, but in 90 days we'll have more information on it regarding its future.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 15 seconds from now we will continue with the Routine.

The Speaker: We will continue with Members' Statements. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Parkinson's Awareness Month

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today each member in this Assembly has been presented with a tulip from the Parkinson's Society of Southern Alberta to commemorate April, which is Parkinson's Awareness Month. Since 2005 the red tulip has been the world-wide symbol of Parkinson's disease, signifying solidarity with those affected and the need for increased awareness.

As one of the most common neurodegenerative disorders, second only to Alzheimer's disease, Parkinson's affects nearly a hundred thousand Canadians. Mr. Speaker, this disease attacks cells in the brain which produce a chemical called dopamine. As a result of this cellular degeneration those who suffer from Parkinson's experience tremors, slowness, muscle rigidity, and balance issues. Over time Parkinson's begins to take control of the body while leaving the mind untouched. While there is no cure, non-profit organizations like the Parkinson's Society of Southern Alberta are dedicated to raising the money and awareness that are both integral in its pursuit.

In addition, this organization provides much-needed support to those living with Parkinson's and their families, acting as a lifeline as these individuals manage the daily struggles that come with the disease. Just a few of the services they provide include counselling, support groups, learning resources, speech therapy, and community awareness programs.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my hon. colleagues and all Albertans to do whatever they can to help raise the awareness that is needed to find a cure and make Parkinson's disease history.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Highway 63 Emergency Services

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In rural Alberta we rely on our neighbour. It's part of the fabric that makes this province so strong. Some of the strongest threads of that fabric are our volunteer firefighters.

I'm very pleased that earlier this month our government was able to work with Athabasca county and several other municipalities and partners on solutions to the serious issues along highway 63. I want to particularly thank the ministers of Municipal Affairs and Culture and Community Spirit as well as the AAMD and C for their leadership on this file. But, Mr. Speaker, I really want to thank our volunteer firefighters, some of whom are with us here today. They signed up to fight fires, but the reality is that they're often the first to arrive and the last to leave very serious accidents.

Mr. Speaker, their importance, their actions, and their impact are best summed up in the words of a real-life victim. My sister-in-law Gillian Berg and her young family were in a devastating car accident that claimed the life of my brother-in-law Myron four months ago. In her blog this is what she wrote about the volunteer firemen who were at the scene that day.

Men who in the act of answering a call came that horrible day to lend us their strength. Firemen who in their commitment to duty rushed away from their own lives to enter into ours. The words "Cedars of Lebanon" sprang into my mind as clearly as if they had been spoken to me directly. The bible tells of the massive trees God directed to be used to build His temple, a place where His people would know he is a God of love, of protection. As I was surrounded by these towering men, I couldn't help but believe that these had been our cedars of Lebanon, being towers of strength to shelter us in that terrible storm. You literally saved our lives that day. You are friends of my heart and I can never thank you enough for your protection. May God bless you and your families, men of courage. Know that you are loved.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'd ask that tomorrow you table the document that you quoted from as well, please.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Bill 18 Education Act

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 18, the Education Act.

Mr. Speaker, nearly three years ago this government began a process for transforming our province's education system to enable it to better meet the needs of the 21st century student. We began by engaging Albertans in a broad community conversation about a vision for education. This was a dialogue unique to Alberta, and it challenged citizens to think not about what our education is now, what was for us, but what it could be and should be. This bill, the Education Act, will provide a foundation for how we will proceed with our transformation based in great part upon what we learned from Albertans during our engagement process.

The legislation will maximize the opportunity for the success of all students. The Education Act will be one more instrument that will enable everyone – students, parents, teachers, schools and school boards, and the broader community – to focus on student success and move forward with educational transformation. It will enhance student access to education and will empower local school boards to be more responsive to the diverse learning needs of students in their communities.

Through Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans, chaired by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, we heard about a vision of students being inspired to achieve success and fulfill these engaged thinkers and ethical citizens with an entrepreneurial spirit. This legislation is a very important step towards achieving this vision.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. minister of finance.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board annual report, highlighting the good work that they do. In fact, it includes a 5 per cent reduction in premium levels for basic coverage.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition, in reference to a question of today, I'm tabling five copies of the statement of claim between Alan B.R. Thomson, the governors of the University of Alberta, the University of Alberta hospital, and Alberta Health Services.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling e-mails from the following individuals who are seeking the preservation of the Castle wilderness, all of whom believe clear-cutting will damage the ecology, watershed, wildlife, and natural species and must be prohibited at all costs: Ray Kodama, Lindsay Coulter, Antonia Mills, Eva Gersbach, Robert Fyfe, Ernie Siemens, Mark Holmes, Virginia Robinson, Brandon Johnson, Stephen Wright, Valerie Mayes, Eddie Chau, Lynn Brooks-Holtz, Catherine Brown, Mel Burkholder, Trevor Reeves, Garry Pierlot, Evan Sorestad, Ted Mann, Donna Gill, Paula Vopmi, Kayla Goguen, Randy Romano, Colin Herbener, and Mark Jobin.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed to the purported points of order, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 19 volunteer firefighters from the Athabasca-Redwater constituency and our provincial fire commissioner. I'm very pleased to serve these constituents, but really it's they who serve us. I'm very happy they took the time to come and have lunch with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and myself.

I'd ask them to rise one by one as I say their names. From the Grassland fire department we have Ken Kearney, the fire chief; Mel Peterson, deputy chief; Ernie Stasiuk; Wayne Melvin; Travis Johnson; Paul Ponich; Kari Petersen; Mickey Stasiuk; Richie Melvin; John Riley; Sue Ball; Dennis Schryver. From the Wandering River Fire Department we have Maureen Haugen. From the Boyle fire department we have Joshua Anderson. From the Gibbons Fire Department we have Chief Eric Lowe. From the Thorhild fire department we have Chief Nick Kuzyk. From the Redwater fire department we have Harco Middelkamp. They're accompanied by the reeve of Athabasca county, my friend David Yurdiga; Ron Jackson, the director of emergency services at Athabasca county; and, of course, our provincial fire commissioner, Trent West, who does a lot of great work.

I'm glad that they're here to join us today. I'd invite the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have several points of order to deal with. Earlier this afternoon in question period at one point in time when a question was directed to the Premier, the response was: "Mr. Speaker, I have even a better question for all Albertans. Where were you, where were you, and where were you all in the opposition the other day when the bill came up for second reading? There wasn't one person in the House." As soon as that was said, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood all rose, and at almost the same time the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs rose as well. I subsequently received a note from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who says that he need not proceed at this point in time.

So hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, if this is what the point of order is about, I'll deal with it very quickly.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Mr. Speaker, I refer to, well, two citations. The first is in Standing Order 23(1) as well as in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 614. I'll quote from that. It says:

Allusions to the presence or absence of a Member or Minister in the Chamber are unacceptable. Speakers have upheld this prohibition on the ground that "there are many places that Members have to be in order to carry out all of the obligations that go with their office."

So naming them is not appropriate. By saying, "Where were all the members of the opposition?" clearly he was informing the public in this House that we were not here for second debate.

Mr. Speaker, it has to be made very clear, though, how misleading this statement was. I will table copies in this Legislature tomorrow of the e-mail we as opposition members in small caucuses get from the House leader, a projected business of the day e-mail that clearly states what is going to be debated that day. As members of small caucuses, with two and four and nine – specifically I'll just speak for the Wildrose experience with four – we rely on the truthfulness, the accuracy, and the trust that we have with the government leader that that will be respected, that projected business of the day.

On the day in question the projected business of that day in the afternoon and in the evening was estimates. In the afternoon it was the estimates for Executive Council, for which I am the critic. So I was here for those estimates, and I had a back-and-forth exchange with the Premier on his estimates. After that was finished, I did indeed leave the House to go to attend to other matters that I have as a member and apparently so did the other opposition parties as well.

So at the end there was about half an hour or thereabouts before 6 o'clock that day where there was nobody in the House on the opposition side. At that time, breaking with all convention and breaking any trust that we had in this government that they would be truthful with the e-mails and the projected business of the day, they brought Bill 10, which was on the Order Paper, brought it back up and passed it through second reading. The most controversial and important bill of this Legislature this session: passed it without even a modicum of debate. It absolutely goes against every convention in the House to do that. Not one member spoke to it.

As an opposition member if we totalled up all of the hours in this House, Mr. Speaker, how much time each member speaks in this House, I guarantee you that the folks on this side are in this House more than any other. We work darn hard. I know this because when I was over there, you know, there was no comparison between the work we had to do over there and the work over here as members. That's just a fact. It's the fact that you have 68 seats. Okay?

The point of the matter is that it is so completely misleading and hypocritical for this government to stand over there and point to us and say: you weren't in the House at that time. They misled us, they broke that trust, and because of that, yeah, we were out doing other things for the last half hour that day. They took a very important piece of legislation, that they knew was going to be debated, rammed it through, and then they had the audacity to call us on it.

It's an absolutely shameful, shameful practice by that Premier and that government, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, is your point of order on the same subject?

Ms Blakeman: It is, and I would like to be allowed to augment the comments of the previous speaker.

The Speaker: To augment?

Ms Blakeman: Yes.

The Speaker: So we'll deal with it as one item, then, instead of two separate ones.

Okay. Proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll add to the citations mentioned by adding in Beauchesne 481(c) and M and M 522 to House of Commons 614, all of which make a point of saying that allusions to the presence or absence of a member are unacceptable and that the Speaker has noted that members have a number of other places that they need to be to carry out their obligations.

What the Premier did was he did not indicate verbally, but he definitely indicated through gesture, and as the House moves more and more to the use of electronic technology like the television broadcasting, the internal closed-circuit television, and the live streaming of video, this becomes increasingly important. The Premier is no fool, Mr. Speaker. He clearly indicated through his gesture the three leaders of the opposition parties. So he did make it clear to anyone watching who he was referring to, and it would be easy and obvious for anyone watching that or here in the room to understand who he was commenting on the absence of.

The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere also talked about the fact that on the day in question the government brought up bills. Now, Mr. Speaker, they are allowed to do that. They are allowed to go to any government business that's on the Order Paper. We do generally work day by day on the House leaders' agreement. But the government is allowed to do it. They've done it before. It's perfectly legal. It's not respectful. It's not honourable behaviour. But it's perfectly legal according to parliamentary protocol.

It would not have been difficult for the Government House Leader or any member to step outside, make a quick phone call, and say: we are going to proceed from the debate in Committee of Supply, and we're going to rise and report and continue on with government business in the time that is left during the day. It would have been polite. It would have been collegial. It would have been respectful. The government chose not to do that. They proceeded, as they were allowed to do.

We had two conditions this year, Mr. Speaker. When we met at night, we were meeting in a policy field committee, which had a specific timeline to be followed. Also, if the business was concluded before the end of that timeline, it was written into the standing orders that no additional business would happen. Because in the afternoons we were meeting here in the Assembly in a Committee of Supply situation, the government was in control and was able to move to government business.

What they did was perfectly legal, just not very honourable, Mr. Speaker. They certainly took advantage of the fact that the members of the Official Opposition were relying on the memo that was received from the Government House Leader and the deputy chief of staff through their staff that was sent out to us, and we had gone off to do other things, all of which needed to be done.

I believe that the Premier should withdraw his commentary on who was and was not here at that time. There's nothing I can do about the fact that they managed to pass in very short order and with no debate seven bills through second reading on that day, which is difficult and certainly does not uphold the transparency that the government likes to say that it's all about, seeing as we have no idea how people really thought about that bill or whether they've raised it in caucus or not because, in fact, there was no government debate on those bills. In second reading there was no debate at all.

People like me, who weren't scheduled to be on duty, didn't even get an opportunity as the Official Opposition critic to speak to Bill 10, for example, and that has certainly put a strain on me. It was a very effective tactic but not very honourable.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask that a point of order be found.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, just a second, please.

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, you rose, too. On a separate point of order?

Mr. Denis: On a separate point of order, sir.

The Speaker: Okay. Then let's proceed, Government House Leader, on this one.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel somewhat aggrieved that the members opposite from Airdrie-Chestermere and to a lesser extent, I have to admit, from Edmonton-Centre have called me as a House leader not honourable, not respectful, not truthful, not trustworthy, breaking the trust.

What actually happened that day and what happens in the ordinary course of business, Mr. Speaker, as you will know having been a former House leader, is that the Government House Leader works with opposition House leaders on an ongoing basis, sometimes directly and sometimes with staff, to bring together an order of business for the day that the House can anticipate dealing with. Usually what we try to accomplish is to have a compatible order of business because we do have other things to do, and everybody is not always here. We try and make sure that if we're bringing forward a bill, the opposition critic is available to speak to it, or if they've already spoken to it, then it's alive and available for others to speak to. That's an ordinary course of business, back and forth.

There have been occasions in the 14 years that I've had the privilege of serving as Deputy Government House Leader or Government House Leader when we've run out of business in an afternoon or an evening, where we've actually proceeded faster than we anticipated, that there weren't as many speeches on a bill or we were able to make arrangements for bills to move ahead more quickly or whatever. What do we do in that circumstance? What have we always done in that circumstance? Trot over to the other side of the House, sit down with the opposition House leaders, and say: what else can we bring onto the agenda?

Imagine my surprise, Mr. Speaker, on April 12 when the Premier's estimates in Committee of Supply were completed and there was nobody to talk to about what we could do at 4:30 in the afternoon. Four thirty in the afternoon and nobody to talk to about: what other government business? What does a House leader then do? Do we say that, well, in the interests of openness and transparency to the people who are following along at home, we should probably adjourn and take the afternoon off, that that's probably what we should do? Or do we do the next prudent thing and say that every week we do Projected Government Business, and in Projected Government Business we always put in there "and as per the Order Paper?" It's always alive to go to business as per the Order Paper.

What happened on April 12? We went as per the Order Paper. Bill 1 was called. Bill 4 was called. Bill 5 was called. Bill 6 was called. Bill 7 was called. Bill 8. Plenty of time for anyone paying attention, if it was inadvertent, to show up. Plenty of time for people to show up. But nobody showed up. So for them to come back and say that it's distrustful or not honourable or that I broke trust, I find that quite appalling, actually. Quite appalling.

It is a fact that we do have other things to do and that we keep duty rosters. We make sure that on this side of the House we have enough people here to make sure that there's quorum all the time while people go to other meetings and do other things. Absolutely true. You wouldn't want to keep 83 people in the House at all times on all aspects of business when not all 83 can participate.

However, it is incumbent on each party to keep an eye on what's going on. It is incumbent on House leaders to keep an eye on the business of the House or to deputize someone else to keep an eye on the House. It's not the government whip's job to make sure that the opposition is in the House at any given time. He's got enough trouble keeping track of the 63 or 65 or however many people. I can't even count how many people are on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, you know, certainly, I can understand the embarrassment, particularly for Airdrie-Chestermere. I can understand his embarrassment because they profess to say that these bills are really important and then do not show up to speak to them when the opportunity is there. That being said, it's not dishonourable or misleading or distrustworthy to say, "Here's what we anticipate doing for the business of the day" and then, when that business is done, to arrange for additional business to be transacted. If it was 5:30 – and I have done this in the past, adjourned at 5:30 and gone home half an hour early. But at 4:30 in the afternoon to take the rest of the afternoon off because they can't be bothered to show up?

Mr. Speaker, I was anticipating, actually, being very respectful of the rules in the House until the members opposite indicated, again, that they weren't here that afternoon. When they opened that door, it was open for me to comment on it. If they hadn't opened that door, what I would have done is got up and said what the Premier ought to have said, instead of that they're not in the House, that they weren't available to speak when it was called. That would have been appropriate, I think. Maybe not.

In any event, it is clearly not appropriate in the rules to mention the presence or absence of a member. Therefore, on behalf of the Premier I would withdraw those remarks.

The Speaker: Well, that certainly provided clarity.

Now I'll give you food for thought. We'll be away next week. I want you all to read Standing Order 10. I'll tell you what it is. "Every Member is bound to attend the service of the Assembly unless notification has been given to the Speaker in accordance with the rules of the Assembly." So it could be interpreted that nobody can leave unless you get a note to me. How would you like us to interpret that into the future?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. I do rise on a separate point of order. It gives me no pleasure to do so. In fact, I'm quite saddened that I have to bring this up, but I have heard nothing but inappropriate phrases from the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere today. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) as well as Beauchesne's 489.

In that exchange with the Premier, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere referred to him as a joke. He referred to him also as a liar. If you refer to Beauchesne's 489, page 146, prohibited phrases do in fact include "joker" and "lie", and the instances of "lie" are about half of the page gone, so obviously this is, in fact, a prohibited word.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure, as you know – and I will just mention this for the edification of the members here but also for anyone who may be watching – Beauchesne's 35 indicates that one of the Speaker's roles is to maintain order and decorum. I ask the standard: what would the average person think, especially when, as the Member for Calgary-Montrose mentioned, students were here today? We had young students here today, and to hear this particular type of language.

Mr. Speaker, in my previous career I learned very quickly that it was very important to try to be collegial with other members. There are members that I consider friends here, members which I don't consider friends, but it's always best to try to consider people as colleagues and to try to maintain some decorum here as well. I appreciate, you know, that if I had only practised law for a couple of months, I may not have known this.

I have to say that this particular member's use of this prohibited language is flagrant, and it's, in fact, common, Mr. Speaker. If you look at Standing Order 24, it indicates that "if a Member, on being called to order for an offence, persists in the offence or refuses to follow the Speaker's direction in the matter, the Speaker shall" – not may but shall – "name the Member to the Assembly."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm not suggesting that this is happening because it's very obvious to me that this particular member simply wants to get kicked out of this House to make himself conspicuous for some political gain. That is not what this Assembly is about. This Assembly is about doing the business of the people, and we have many people watching in the three galleries. We also have many people watching, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre noted earlier, through electronic means. I think the citizens of Alberta deserve better, and I would ask you to rule accordingly and have this member go and withdraw these offensive remarks.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I would note, Mr. Speaker, that he did not cite the Hansard, and until I see a copy of the Hansard, I'd like to say that he has no evidence. I'd like to see a copy of the Hansard, and we can discuss it.

The second thing is . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: That is important, that we see what the record states. There were comments going back and forth from a lot of people during that time.

There is no doubt, as we talked about earlier, that the Premier was certainly, I believe, spinning – I'm trying to use parliamentary language.

An Hon. Member: Misleading.

Mr. Anderson: I don't think we're allowed to use "misleading."

Spinning the facts to state that we were not here because we obviously didn't care about the bill . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, that matter has been dealt with. Let's not get in deeper. Deal with what we've got before us.

Mr. Anderson: Anyway, my point is that until I see it in the Hansard – you know, if for some reason I am in the Hansard saying that, then I for sure will withdraw those remarks. I would say that this member should spend a lot less time talking in this regard to this House and more time door-knocking given the poll I just saw in his constituency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you're involved in this?

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this point of order. While I do not always agree with your decisions, I recognize the authority granted to you by this House to make those decisions, and I don't think you require a member of the government to make those decisions for you. I do not like poor decorum, but I don't like tattletales either, so I don't see the point.

The Speaker: That was on the point of order?

Mr. Chase: I just said that I didn't see the point of order, if you like.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Beauchesne 486 is clear on this point.

Remarks which do not appear on the public record and are therefore private conversations not heard by the Chair do not invite the intervention of the Speaker, although Members have apologized for hurtful remarks uttered in such circumstances.

In this case, unfortunately, I did not hear the remarks that the hon. Deputy Government House Leader is alluding to, so there was no intervention. On the one remark that I did hear, there was an intervention, and there were three apologies that followed through that.

Quite frankly, you know the way the question period operates. We generally go on average 18 questions. In the first six questions people try to be really, really aggressive because it's usually the leaders. The first three questions go to the Leader of the Official Opposition, the fourth question goes to the leader of the second party, and the fifth question goes to another party leader. Those five, six questions always have an aggressiveness attached to them, an enthusiasm, sometimes misplaced. Some histrionics are part of it. Theatrics are part of it.

Then, you know, in the second phase in the question period, questions six to 12, the tone reduces itself pretty dramatically. There are fewer preambles. Then we go from questions 12, 13 to question 18. Actually, most of the questions dealing with fact and information follow in that category. The first ones, basically, want to have debate, which are all violations of the question period. Of course, somebody brings in the question with a debatable thing instead of a policy question, and then that just relates to something else. If people actually knew the rules and followed the rules, we wouldn't have had what happened today in the first six questions. I really look forward to hearing what that school group from Calgary-Montrose has to say today. I do know that I've certainly been getting a lot of comments from people about the performance of certain members in this House, none of which has been very flattering, I might add. Nevertheless, they certainly do come.

This happens periodically. I'm not entirely dismayed by the fact. I just wonder sometimes why it's taken so long. Maybe this is the one excuse for people to behave in a way that I'm sure they would never want their children to behave. They would say to a child that it would be quite childish if they behaved that way. As a matter of fact, they would probably take them for a walk and sit them down and say: if you don't want to listen to me, I'll have your mother talk to you about this to try and improve it.

Look, I get comments from people saying, basically, that members in committee put their feet on their desks. I have never seen that, but I have people saying that. Members are using their computers. You know the infamous picture that came out of I think it was Delaware, where they were having a budget debate, and they took a picture of the members, and three of them were playing cards on their computers. It circulated through all of America and said: what a waste of time and money and everything else that was all about.

The childlike interjections: yeah, okay; they are childlike, and nobody can say they're not.

Members have got to have respect for one another. If they don't have respect for one another, they won't have respect for the chair. Members get up and just walk away. Members stand up, look around; they don't speak through the chair. They don't acknowledge the Speaker. Should the Speaker stand up and remind them every time? Wouldn't that be quite arrogant? I'd be interjecting every 12 seconds, but we can do that.

Oh, there's going to be lots of mail coming after today.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

The Speaker: Is it the hon. Deputy Government House Leader on Motion 15?

Time Allocation on Bill 10

15. Mr. Denis moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 10, Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, is resumed, not more than five hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There were some comments earlier – I forget which member mentioned it – that there wasn't a lot of debate on this. I want to actually just set that record straight because, in fact, there has been a substantial amount of debate on this. As all members are well aware, Bill 10 has already received almost two hours of debate in second reading. That's two hours of debate in second reading. [interjections] Even though I'm mocked and heckled over here by members who have no respect, I will continue.

In addition, last night in this very Assembly there was close to another two hours of debate on Bill 10. Last night another two hours. Further, Bill 10 will now receive an additional five hours' debate in Committee of the Whole today, and that will be followed by perhaps another two hours of debate in third reading. Just so that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere can actually know what that adds up to, that's actually 11 hours of debate. Of course, in addition to that, Bill 36 received countless hours of debate in this particular House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, given that this is only an amendment to the original bill, I'm confident that all members, no matter what their political stripe, what caucus they belong to here, will be more than able to raise their points of concern over an 11-hour period of debate. It's also important to note that by providing notice, all members can actually plan as to where exactly they want to go with their particular debate as well. There have been a lot of empty chairs, I've seen, in the past on this particular bill. I have to suggest that I do believe that there is ample time here to actually debate this particular item.

I also just want to refer to an item in Beauchesne's that I was looking at earlier today, which appears on page 162, and that deals with time allocation for stages of a bill. Pursuant to Beauchesne's 534, "A motion for the allocation of time may set out in detail some or all of the provisions which are to be made for the further proceedings on the bill." Mr. Speaker, if you go back to Beauchesne's 529, this type of time allocation is not new in this parliamentary tradition. In fact, as I'm sure you're aware, this goes back to 1927, the first instance of this.

Just in conclusion, I don't want to belabour this point, but we're in a situation here where after this motion is passed, if it is passed, we will have 11 hours of debate on this particular bill. It's my submission to you and to every member of this House, Mr. Speaker, that in fact we will have ample time for debate and for further amendment.

Those are my submissions, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 21(3) reads: "A member of the Executive Council may outline the reasons for the motion under suborder (1)," which is this one, "and a Member of the Official Opposition may respond but neither speech may exceed 5 minutes." So who would like to respond on behalf of the Official Opposition? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to stand and speak on Government Motion 15, the oral notice that was given by the hon. Government House Leader yesterday afternoon. Certainly, I must say that I was surprised at this restriction and limitation of what, in my view, is free speech and the democratic right of all hon. members of this Assembly to express their opinions and, more importantly, the opinions of their constituents regarding, specifically here, Bill 10.

Now, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader started by talking about how often this is done and why it is wonderful and things of that nature, but I would like to say that if we had perhaps slowed down the debate and the discussion on Bill 36 to start with, these amendments that we are now discussing in committee, which is Bill 10, perhaps wouldn't be necessary if the legislation had been drafted properly in the first place and citizens had been consulted. Citizens, clearly, in Eckville last Thursday night indicated that they felt this government did not consult with them. I'm sure that when they learn that five days later this government, instead of listening to their reasonable suggestions and their reasonable comments on this property rights issue, invokes closure and takes the guillotine to open free speech and restricts and limits it to five hours – now, certainly this is not the first time.

The hon. member went on a historical vignette regarding closure, but we need to point out, Mr. Speaker, that this Progressive Conservative government has limited the debate at least 40 times – at least 40 times – since 1992, and here they're at it again with Government Motion 15 this afternoon. Certainly, this is a contentious issue not only within the province in rural and urban areas. We only have to look at the billboards that are popping up all over the city and what they say about government MLAs.

Mr. Denis: What do they say?

Mr. MacDonald: You read it yourself.

Mr. Denis: What does it say? Just tell us what it says.

Mr. MacDonald: You read it yourself. Go over to Grant MacEwan. You're not that busy a gentleman that you don't have time to go to 104th Avenue. There's a question and an answer.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hold on. It seems to me that I heard the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs waxing eloquent just a few minutes ago about respect from members. I have recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and he was making his comments to the Assembly through the chair. Through the chair. Then the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs made a few comments, but he didn't go through the chair. He went directly over there, which diverted, then, the hon. member's concentration away from the chair.

Let's just forget about the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs at the moment, speak to the chair, who will listen very attentively and will convey your message and thoughts through himself as the medium to the Assembly.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, and I appreciate that guidance, Mr. Speaker.

This is certainly a contentious issue within the government caucus and also with the public in rural and urban areas. One only has to look at the billboard on 104th Avenue to realize that, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the former Justice minister, who was probably – I'm not sure – involved in the drafting of Bill 36 in 2009, has such reservations about it that that hon. member of this Assembly would like to see this bill put back on the drafting table. So what happens? Instead of listening to that hon. member, we have a government that wants to limit debate at committee to five hours.

We need to do a historical comparison of this era of Progressive Conservatives to the initial era that was started in 1971 by the Hon. Peter Lougheed. Our research indicates that only once did Peter Lougheed as Premier invoke closure like we're seeing this afternoon, only once in a long period of time, 15 years or 14 and a half years. Closure was invoked once. Since 1992, our research indicates, this is the 40th time that this has occurred. If the citizens of Eckville and all other areas of rural Alberta are concerned that their voices have not been heard by this government, there are reasons why.

The Speaker: Well, thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 15 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:27 p.m.]

3:40 Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, the Committee of the Whole is now called to order.

Appropriation Act, 2011

The Chair: Any comments to be offered?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Chairman, finally, we've reached a point in the day where we can deal with something that we pretty much all should agree on, and that's the budget that was presented and has spent countless hours in the Assembly being debated. It's a budget that reflects the economic reality of today. It's a budget that funds health care and education and seniors and Albertans that are most vulnerable. It's a budget that commits to continuing to build the infrastructure that Albertans need to grow the economic pie. It's a budget that is balanced, and it's certainly a budget that's right for Alberta right now, and I look forward to the passing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. Certainly, when we listen to the minister of finance, it's interesting to listen to the contents of his speech. When we consider this budget, we have to point out some things that are not exactly as the hon. minister indicates. Now, the hon. member in his short speech indicated that this is a balanced budget. Well, it's not. It's the fourth year in a row that this government has run a deficit, that is now totalling $10 billion. Whenever we look through the fiscal plan of this budget, we can see where there is an indication of a $2.4 billion budget shortfall.

This government is essentially living off another good, sound idea from the Alberta Liberals, and that's the sustainability fund. Fortunately, the sustainability fund was adopted by this government. But when we look, Mr. Chairman, at the budget and we look closely at Bill 17, we can see where there are some assumptions or sensitivities that were made in February or maybe sooner, in January, that have changed, and there are going to be significant consequences as a result of that.

Now, certainly on the positive side we've seen the dramatic increase in the price of crude oil. The government projected that over the fiscal year we would see an $89 barrel of oil. It's gone up to $107 a barrel, and when I was driving to work this morning, it had gone up an additional I think 13 cents. Who knows what it is, but it seems to be settling around the $100-plus per barrel level in U.S. dollars.

Now, what does that mean to the budget projections? Well, of course, if we're only to look at that, we could potentially, if we do the calculation on the sensitivities in the fiscal plan for crude oil, see an increase of $2.4 billion in royalties. But that's only half the story because whenever you do the calculation on the exchange rate, where you gain with one sensitivity, you lose with another, unfortunately, Mr. Chairman. In this case that is what has happened with the target for the exchange rate, which is out by 6 cents. If this was to continue for the entire year, it would mean we would have $850 million to $900 million less. So what we gain in royalties, we're losing in the exchange rate.

And then we have, of course, the interest rates, which are going up. I asked the hon. minister last week in the House how those increases may affect the government, and I was disappointed that I didn't get an answer. I got the brush-off. Yes, hon. minister, I got the brush-off. It's quite important because what has happened in the last four years with your wasteful spending habits, hon. members? We have a deficit. We have borrowed money. We have borrowed billions of dollars.

I'm sure that the Minister of Infrastructure is keenly aware of the interest rates and the borrowing that has happened and the borrowing that will happen and how it will affect the government. I would encourage all members to have a look at the consolidated financial statements. You can clearly see in the schedules where interest rate payments by this government went down under the leadership of the former Premier, Mr. Klein, and now they're in- ching back up under this regime.

Mr. Knight: Smart money, Hugh.

Mr. MacDonald: Smart money. I wonder what that means. Mr. Chairman, I believe the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development may be referring to smart debt, which was a fashionable slogan a couple of years ago. But smart money: I'm not so sure. Fortunately, we have a very low public debt in this province, and we are a lot better off than many jurisdictions despite this government's mismanagement, particularly in health care.

We look at the transfers that are discussed in section 5 of this bill, Mr. Chairman.

5(1) A minister may, with the approval of the Treasury Board, transfer an amount

- (a) from the Capital Investment vote administered by that Minister to the Expense vote administered by that Minister, or
- (b) from the Expense vote administered by that Minister to the Capital Investment vote administered by [the same] Minister.

In other words, this is allowing money to go from capital to expenses back from expenses to capital. But there's a limit on this, as I understand it, of $5 million.

Last year there was a significant amount of money that went unexpended by this government. I think the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development – it might have been the former fiscal conservative, who is currently running for the leadership, who was running that department. It was a significant amount of money that was unexpended and turned back over to the minister of finance. I could be wrong on that, and I would stand corrected if I am, but certainly there were many departments that turned significant amounts of money back into the general revenue fund at the end of the year, March 31.

But this transfer is certainly interesting.

- (3) The Minister of Infrastructure may, for the purpose described in subsection (4), transfer an amount, not to exceed $65 000 000, from the Expense vote administered by that Minister.

I don't know why the sum of $65 million would be selected here. In the past in that department – and Infrastructure and Transportation would be the departments . . .

Mr. Danyluk: From Alberta Health Services.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I think there was $500 million unexpended that went back into general revenue.

Mr. Danyluk: A changing of responsibility, hon. member. Alberta Health Services.

Mr. MacDonald: Changing responsibilities, so we have a different number.

Mr. Danyluk: Of capital.

Mr. MacDonald: Of capital. Okay. I can appreciate that.

Certainly, it is interesting to also note that the Minister of Transportation is involved in this, and the Minister of Transportation has an amount transferred. It's $10 million more, so we must be going to build more roads and hospitals leading up to the election. That would probably be the reason why Transportation has a transfer that's not to exceed $75 million. But, certainly, these are interesting.

Now the President of the Treasury Board is going to get in on the act. The transfer, the amount in the Treasury Board, is not to exceed $19 million from the expense voted and administered by the President of the Treasury Board to the capital investment. The Treasury Board certainly has been downsized in recent budgets. There has been some fiscal discipline exercised there. The President of the Treasury Board has certainly led by example. But I still would like to remind all hon. members of this Assembly that perhaps it's time to eliminate the Treasury Board and put it back in the ministry of finance, have a smaller, smarter government rather than this rather large front bench that we witness this afternoon.

Certainly, we are going to be transferring money. There was a while, as I understand it, when if we were to have these transfers occurring, it would have been simply against the law. We had more rigid discipline fiscally than we do now. But that's not the case. There are certainly reasons for these transfers. I'm not convinced they are needed, nor are they necessary.

Accountability: we heard in question period today about accountability. Now, in the last section of this bill under Accountability is one sentence; it's not a very long one, Mr. Chairman. It reads, "The due application of all money expended under this Act shall be accounted for." Well, certainly that doesn't apply, in my view, to Health and Wellness if you look at Health and Wellness and the entities that are receiving vast sums of money under that department. I would look at the old regional health authorities and use them as an example. I could certainly use Alberta Health Services as an example.

Some of the accounting practices that had gone on in the old regional health authorities certainly were flagged by the former office of the Auditor General. And we have all these outstanding questions, particularly with the old Capital health region, as to why so much money over the years, over $300 million to be precise, had been just casually mentioned as other expenses. If you total other expenses in the former Capital health region between 2003 and 2009, you will see where there is a sum of slightly over $300 million. Taxpayers have every right, and they should be very interested, to know what that money was spent on. Why is it listed under Other? Why can't it be in more detail? The former Calgary health region – you know the region, Mr. Chairman – that racked up deficit after deficit after deficit year after year after year would give a more detailed, comprehensive list. Certainly, it could have been improved, but at least they made an attempt. At least they made an attempt.

Meanwhile we have all these filings from the courts that are being tabled almost daily in the Assembly. These are filings from health professionals who for one reason or another have gone to the courts because they feel that either Alberta Health Services or the University hospital or the former health regions – when they spoke up for their patients, suddenly there were rules and allegations that these rules were being jeopardized, or there was inappropriate behaviour. The list goes on, Mr. Chairman. There were settlements. We know there were settlements. Taxpayers are curious to know where in those other expenses of $300 million those settlements would be. And were they paid out?

Accountability is not just one little sentence in one section of one bill. This government has to be accountable to the taxpayers and to the citizens, but in my view it is not. With Bill 17 here we have this one short sentence that reads, "The due application of all money expended under this Act shall be accounted for." Well, you don't have a very good track record, hon. members. When we look at the schedule of votes here, we look at what's in the Legislative Assembly, $115 million. We're looking at amounts from the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. We have $25 million. I thought we put the money in there last year for the pending election, but obviously I was wrong.

Now, under Aboriginal Relations, Advanced Education, Agriculture and Rural Development – we can go through this list alphabetically, and of course we end with the Treasury Board, looking at a capital investment of $137 million and expenses of $62 million to run the ministry. We will also have other votes under the lottery fund and, of course, under section 2, the capital investment. Essentially, we're looking at three requests here under Bill 17. It is a lot of money. When you look at our revenue stream and you look at our spending requests, I'm surprised we can't get them a little bit more balanced.

Now, I know this is a government that loves to spend money before elections. We know there is an election coming within a year for sure. It could be sooner; it's hard to say. It's the last thing that we on this side of the House have any control over. When we look at the past history of this government in the run-up to the election and we look at what's left in the sustainability fund, I think we could see a lot of spending announcements, a lot of cheque presentations, a lot of photo opportunities where politicians can grip and grin and tell the citizens, "This is PC money" and "I'm doing my job" and "We're looking after you" and "Things are great."

The citizens are sitting in a community hall, and they're listening intently, watching. They know what these presentations are all about, and they remember that this is a government that without any reason, without a cost-benefit analysis, without any internal or external consultation decided they were going to consolidate nine health regions and two other boards into the Alberta Health Services Board. We know what has happened. Budgets have ballooned. Service has declined. The system is fraught with confusion and chaos. That is what citizens are going to remember. They're going to remember what a mess this government has made of our public health care system through their mismanagement.

Mr. Danyluk: Where would it be better?

Mr. MacDonald: What would be better? Well, certainly, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has suggested – and I hope you heed his advice – to go back to five regions. You had nine. You wrecked that.

An Hon. Member: Where?

Mr. MacDonald: Where? Well, you look at Alberta Health Services' website, and I'm sure that if the Minister of Infrastructure is cutting cheques over there, he's got to be looking at that website to see how they're internally organized. That's how it is. It's five regions, just like this hon. member has suggested in the past. You've got to have some sort of local control and autonomy.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore was talking earlier in question period about, I think, the centralized planning of this government, how they're fond of central planning. I'm not sure, Mr. Chairman, about the reference, but there was mention of central planning and central power and the concentration of power. That's what occurs when governments are out of touch with the citizens that elect them, and I can confidently say that this is a government that's out of touch with the citizens that have been gracious to it in the past. I can certainly say that. When you look at what happened after the 2008 election, when you got this big majority, it went to your heads.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's an honour and truly a privilege to be able to get up and speak on a bill. Last night I waited here for hours to speak on Bill 10, and just as it was getting close to our turn, the Government House Leader got up and adjourned debate. It's interesting with the accusations they've made today that we're not here. We wait hours and hours to speak on these bills.

The thing that I really find incredible, Mr. Chair, is that Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2011, is time allocated. We have three hours in which to debate each of the different ministries and to go through and ask questions. But just so that people out there understand the procedure of what goes on, the first hour for that back-and-forth discussion with the minister is with the Official Opposition. They get one hour. Then after that, the Wildrose gets up, and we have 10 minutes – 10 minutes – to respond, and then the minister has 10 minutes to respond.

Mr. Chair, as we go through the appropriations, to think that 10 minutes is all the time that a Wildrose member would get to ask any of these questions. It's very undemocratic. It's not a process by which a government can be held accountable.

What I really find offensive, though, is that after we have our 10 minutes, then the NDs get their 10 minutes, then the Alberta Party gets their 10 minutes, and then the independent gets 10 minutes, and the three hours are up. In between all of that, the government members can stand up, and they can take their 10 and 10 because the minister gets to respond. So you can wait an hour and a half, two hours. With the rotation that goes through, with three hours to debate on this, what you end up with is that it comes back to the Wildrose, and they'll have five minutes at the end in which they can ask a question.

If we're lucky enough, Mr. Chairman, we get 15 minutes to speak to the appropriations in these bills. It's not enough. It's undemocratic. They can't be held accountable. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar brings up a very important line in here, section 6, accountability. "The due application of all money expended under this Act shall be accounted for." Well, it certainly isn't accounted for at any length or in any detail here in the House. Again, if you look at the line items that we are given and you try to ask questions in a 10-minute period, there's no way of holding the government accountable in such a short period of time.

I have to say, first of all, that I didn't appreciate the minister saying that this budget is something that he thought we could all agree on. This is a fudge-it, not a budget. They're fudging it in saying that we've got a balanced budget. There's nothing balanced. They're going into their savings, their sustainability fund, in a big way. They have a cash deficit of I believe it's $6.6 billion. Anybody who's running a business would know it's your expenses going out versus your cash coming in, and at $6.6 billion, you know, that is – what? – roughly 25 per cent over budget. I mean, that's huge. How long could a business stay if they were using up their cash reserves at 25 per cent of their budget? They couldn't. Not only would that company go under; this government is going to put Albertans under in short order if they don't start to balance the budget in a realistic way.

I want to talk in a few areas about balancing the budget. The Wildrose has been very explicit on the $2 billion that this government wants to – I don't know – bury with CO<sub>2</sub> at this point, saying that this is the technology of the future that's going to save the province. Again, if we even look at that just for a minute, how do we spend our tax dollars to be the best for Albertans and Alberta business and for the environment? Two billion dollars to store CO<sub>2</sub>. If you sat down and, again, prioritized, which is what the Wildrose is all about, always prioritizing where you're going to spend your money, there are many, many other areas, whether it's public transportation, whether it's a natural gas strategy plan, where we could spend that money and have a true impact on the environment. This is all speculation right now with billions of dollars. For what? We don't know. We could do some positive things with that money if, in fact, that really was the goal.

I wanted to talk a little bit today about Infrastructure because, again, that was one of the nights when I was in here. I sat here for the full three hours, and then I had a whopping 13 or 14 minutes to speak in three hours. And the Premier has the gall to say that we're not here. What is really just insulting to Albertans and everyone else is that even, Mr. Chair, when you're sitting in here – again, we do have other business. I got a phone call from an individual with a concern, and I said to the chair: "I'm sneaking out. I want to be up there." With the government members, who are taking their turn to speak, as soon as an opposition member steps out, all of a sudden they have nothing to say, and they sit down. The same thing happened here. They think they're being cute and say: oh, that's what it is. But if we're sitting in here and want to speak, they'll get up and speak all afternoon. Mark my words, when we go into Bill 10, the government is going to get up and speak, when last night they wouldn't. They wouldn't even allow me to.

In Infrastructure, trying to have a discussion with the minister and getting the best bang for our buck here in the province, there wasn't enough time to go over that, so I want to ask a few questions right now, seeing as how we're in Committee of the Whole. The province does spend billions of dollars on infrastructure, and the question is: are we tendering it in a way that we're getting the best value for our dollar?

What I find when I talk to different construction industries and everything else is that they often set up the parameters such that they eliminate many businesses from bidding on things, and they set it up in a way that's not advantageous or competitive for all businesses to get in on that. Specifically, with Infrastructure what we find over and over is that they have a cost-management fee to build these facilities, whether it's the south hospital, whether it's the university additions up here. These companies put in a bid on what they're going to charge as a management fee, but then there are many areas underneath there that they don't actually tender out.

One of the most expensive is the concrete. If they get the cost-management fee, then they can just start to do their own concrete costs and then a lot of in-house concrete because they actually get to decide what they tender out and what they don't. The government doesn't put the parameters in there and say: "Here's the locked-in cost-management fee. Now tender everything out." They get the cost-management fee, and then what they get to do is decide what they want to tender out, and then a lot of the in-house costs they go with.

It's very frustrating for taxpayers, but it's even more frustrating for many businesses who want to put in a tender. Again, the system is flawed. It needs to be discussed, and we need more than three hours' time. Once again, the time allocations are ridiculous, they're not democratic, and they do not allow us to fully hold the government accountable on how it's spending its money.

Mr. Chase: Construction without contracts.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Isn't it interesting that the Auditor General, again, in his report says: why are they continuing to start projects without contracts? Who in business would do that other than this government? They would say, "Oh, let's start it; let's build it" and then down the road say, "Oh, I guess we should have a contract; we don't know what the costs are." It would be interesting for the Infrastructure minister to get up and to share with us what the actual cost over the last three years is on cost overruns and to be asked that in committee, where we'd have some time, but because of time allocations there are just so many questions that we can't ask. It's difficult.

Mr. Anderson: They don't give a rip.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. As the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere says, they really don't give a rip. They've got the bank account. They've got the signatures. They can just sign it off. They're using other people's money. "We don't need to be held accountable. They're not going to be able to ask us many questions."

On we go to Transportation. How many times have we asked? Again, the nerve of the minister, Mr. Chair, to get up and say: here's the list. They announce what's been announced. They don't get that a priority list is what you're going to be doing next. What are the next five structures, infrastructure projects or highways, that are coming out of the bin? Say that this is the next one. Which is the next school that's going to be built? That's what a priority list is. That's what putting it out is.

Mr. Chair, they give this pathetic excuse – and it is; it's truly pathetic – saying that if we were to put that list out, it would be demoralizing to one of these other counties or other school districts or something else to think: oh, my goodness, we're 15 down the list, and we're never going to get in there. It's a pathetic excuse. Albertans don't buy it. I hope that they keep putting it out there right through to the next election so that Albertans can send a loud, clear message, like they did in Calgary-Glenmore, that we don't accept what this government is doing, that we don't accept their expenditures, that we don't accept their self-serving interest. A number of things that they do are very disappointing to Albertans.

Again, we can talk, you know, on Infrastructure and Transportation and Service Alberta. The problem that we're going to have is that this government is budgeting billions of dollars for power lines that it's highly unlikely we'll ever use or need unless, of course, they build them. Then someone could say: oh, well, now that we've got this billion-dollar line, we might as well put up a power plant here that otherwise we never would have done, but because we get uncongested line usage, we can afford to compete with someone who's close and on-site and be fine. What this government doesn't get, Mr. Chair, is that there are going to be a lot of industries that will go offline, so we'll need those power lines even less once they go offline.

The problem is that with the set-up . . . [interjection] Oh, maybe we should listen for a minute to the former Minister of Energy, listen to his excuses on the royalty framework, that he refused to change. Go in and talk to CEOs and tell them: oh, there's nothing we can do; it's the political will.

It's just shameful, again, the things that this government has passed, Mr. Chair, when they know – they absolutely know – it's wrong. Yet they'll come out and defend it, just like Bill 10, Bill 36, Bill 24, Bill 50. They know it's wrong. They say that it's wrong to their constituents and to people who corner them outside of the House, but in here they have the gall to stand up and say: this is the right thing to do; we're pushing it through. It's amazing how they collectively all seem to vote the same way. It's very disappointing for Albertans, and they're frustrated with it.

To talk just a little bit more about the line items, again, going back to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the accountability, section 6: "The due application of all money expended under this Act shall be accounted for." As a lump sum it is accounted for, but what is it being spent on? What are the actual contracts? I mean, so many of those things, Mr. Chair, are hidden. We don't know. They say: oh, it was tendered out. But if there are three or four tenders that come in, they often will not open up and make those public. They say: oh, under legislation we don't have to. That's wrong. It should be made public for all to see, for all to make a judgment and, more importantly, for those industries that weren't in on the bidding to see what happened.

I haven't been able to verify, you know, Mr. Chairman, but SRD, to my understanding, just put out a one-hour time frame to renew I believe it was a hundred-million dollar contract for fire-fighting. Again, if we had more time in Committee of Supply to ask the minister and to get the details of that tendering . . .

Mr. Liepert: It would be nice if you showed up.

Mr. Hinman: Oh, keep mumbling about that. It's always interesting to have the Minister of Energy mouthing off: if we show up, if we show off.

Well, it's interesting that you won't even admit the boondoggle that the two of you, sitting side by side with the smirks on your faces, did to the Alberta economy. What was it that you signed, Mr. Minister, with the teachers? Six billion dollars of unfunded liability. Again, we're in trouble in education, which has been questioned time and time again. Yes, we of this province – you guys don't even consider that because you've got your little fat retirement funds and you've got your little fat houses that you're going to retire to. Mr. Chair, Albertans are truly disappointed with the front bench of this government and their disregard for taxpayers' money. This budget shows it.

The former Minister of Education signed a deal that we can't afford, and now we have major cutbacks because of the deal that he signed because of the Premier five years ago, a five-year contract at an inflation rate that we cannot afford because we hit hard times. Who'd ever think that this province would ever hit hard times? We've never done it before. Oh, yes, actually, we have had cyclical problems in oil and gas, but they don't know that. They don't understand. It's taxpayers' money. So what if we sign on for $4.2 billion of unfunded pension plans?

They should have paid it. We can go back and look through Hansard to when I asked them, requested when they had their surplus money to pay off the unfunded liabilities. Would they do it? No. They were playing politics. The former minister and now Minister of Energy puts on his glasses, and he's sitting there yapping again. I can't quite understand him, but it wouldn't be anything that's legible or sensible anyway. Just signing away more money for taxpayers. It's very disappointing.

Mr. Chair, the problem that we have here is that there is no accountability. Because of their situation they can sign the cheques, go into debt, not do a good job in having tenders for the infrastructure, for our schools, for transportation, all of those areas. We struggle here in the province because of the lack of this government's accountability and responsibility.

You know, there would just be one thing that we really need to do, in my mind, that would change all of this – and a Wildrose government will do this – and that is accountability through recall. If there was recall, I doubt that the former Energy minister and the current one would be sitting in this House. Albertans were upset – and they knew it – but there's nothing they can do with our current democratic process here. But with accountability through recall that would change. When governments want to spend ridiculous amounts of money, the citizens could actually go in and say that – you know what? – we don't want this and start getting a petition signed. And all of a sudden they'd wake up.

The Premier talks about missing in action. He wouldn't even go for a request to speak to landowners in his own riding on the accountability of the power lines going through there and what Bill 36 was doing.

I would also venture, Mr. Chair, that if you actually go back and look through Hansard for the Premier giving his eloquent defence, he says that he knows and he understands, which obviously he doesn't. He talks about history and the tragedies of the past, yet he's enabling future leaders to do exactly what happened in his heritage. He doesn't understand history, and we're going to have to repeat it here because of his misunderstanding of the problem.

He wouldn't even attend an open forum in his own riding. That's pretty sad when you won't go and attend those things in your own riding because – well, I guess we can't use a farm animal like a chicken because that was ruled unparliamentary, but I don't know what else you'd call it. [interjection] Yes, scared. Scared to face his own riding. Scared to face the voters next time. So he resigned unexpectedly just three weeks after he made . . . [interjections] Yes, we're talking about the Premier and cabinet and the misappropriation of the money that they're spending.

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Mr. Hinman: That's the problem. You guys don't understand the relevance of a $16 billion power line. It's shameful, Mr. Chair, that they want to go on with that rhetoric that there's no relevance. It's all about the money. It's the money that they're spending. They failed to tender things out. They failed to go through due process of a needs process on a regulated industry, and they don't understand these things. It's shameful.

Sustainable Resource Development. Let's go back to firefighting. They need to put the fires out. I'd love for the minister to get up and to inform the House on the process on the tender that went out for sustainable resources on the firefighting suppression. Like I say, verify it for us. They have the information. They won't give it to us. Was it only open for one hour? How many people did they send it out to so that they could have competitive bids? It's truly amazing.

The amount of lottery fund transfers to be voted on under this section is $1.4 billion. Again, I see that whole area as, what I call, a political slush fund, Mr. Chair, the $1.4 billion. What we need to do is to have a much better system where they're formula based when these things go out to different communities, to different organizations. The amount of money and time that I hear these organizations spend as they struggle to put in applications to the minister, hoping to win his good favour, so he will say: "Oh, I think this is a neat application. I will grant that." That is a very poor way to govern. It's a very poor way to see that things are working out.

Mr. Chair, there are just so many areas when you go through here where the money could and should be spent in a much wiser way. I'll go back for a minute to the Executive Council expense. It's $28 million. Twenty-eight million dollars to run Executive Council. Let's have a few line items to see what they really do with $28 million and if some of that couldn't be transferred over. They love to talk about education.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. One of the things that the government fails to recognize is liability versus investment. Yesterday in speaking to Bill 17, I talked about the importance of investing in education. It's unfortunate this year that the minister has used the recession as an excuse for cutting back education and punishing not only teachers but punishing students by creating larger class sizes and then suggesting to school boards that $500 million of surplus money will solve their problems.

The government doesn't seem to understand, even though they accepted the Liberal idea of creating a stability fund, the idea of continuous investment instead of: we'll put some money in when the oil prices are right, but if they go down, tough luck. You can't govern based on internationally set, nonrenewable prices.

This morning in Public Accounts in terms of investment we had an opportunity to speak to the ministry of advanced education. One of the questions I asked had to do with why the ministry of advanced education cut the budget for bursaries and grants this year by a whopping 50 per cent. Education produces a 3 for 1 investment, yet opportunities that postsecondary education provides to diversify are, unfortunately, not funded by this government.

The government figures suggest that there's a 17 per cent participation rate for 18- to 24-year-olds in the postsecondary system. Other StatsCan figures put it at only 14 per cent. When the ministry of education was asked, "Do they track the number of students who are turned away from postsecondary institutions or who fail to complete or drop out?" there was no statistical data to provide that. My concern is that the investment in our youth is not being recognized as important.

What the government has done, instead of bursaries and grants, is that the government has forced students to take on greater debt loads through the loans they have been provided. Also, again in terms of expense and cost to students, which Bill 17 does not address, is the fact that with Bill 40 three years ago the ability to raise tuitions went out of this legislature into the minister of advanced education's office.

The former minister of advanced education, who is now seeking the leadership of the provincial Conservative Party, said that he would not increase tuition beyond inflation. Then when the universities of Alberta and Calgary came cap in hand and said, "We need to raise our professional faculties' tuition rates," permission was granted even though it was absolutely contrary to what the minister had said. When the universities and postsecondary institutions said, "We need more money," instead of the government providing sustainable operating grants, what they did was say, "Okay; we'll let you hit your students with a $500 facility fee," that has no direct bearing to their educational outcomes or their quality of life on campus. Again, the former minister of advanced education put it to the students in terms of $500 in extra fees. Mr. Chair, this is something that students from the CAUS group, that represents universities, and from the ACTISEC group, that represents colleges and institutes, are extremely concerned about.

This government has not found it important in terms of advanced education to provide on-campus student housing near to the degree which is standard in eastern Canada at eastern universities of being able to accommodate, on average, 21 per cent of their students on campus, thus saving the students the transportation and overhead costs. Again, this government is not recognizing advanced education as an investment, which produces tremendous returns.

Likewise, the government has fiddled with the innovation fund, and as a result a number of research chairs that have been doing extremely important research in a variety of fields, whether it's engineering or whether it's medicine, no longer know whether their research grants are going to be continued.

In terms of accountability and oversight again with postsecondary institutions this government got caught, as did a number of the postsecondary institutions, the U of A and U of C in particular, with investing in asset-backed commercial paper, and that caused terrific losses to their endowment funds.

In the government's so-called wisdom this year they didn't have the oversight to regulate the universities on their investment procedures. But this year they said: we're no longer going to match your endowment contributions. Again, a large source of funding for the universities was taken away because the government, obviously, doesn't see postsecondary as worthy of investment.

Mr. Chair, another problem I have is within Employment and Immigration. Employment and Immigration drastically cut back, as did Education, the funding for English as a second language for worker training and upgrading. That was a very short-sighted circumstance. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has talked about bringing in temporary foreign American workers, who have no rights, to deal with the upcoming boom.

Now, to his credit, and something I agree with, is the need to increase the provincial nominee program. We don't need more temporary foreign workers. We need Alberta and Canadian citizens, and that's only going to happen if there is greater support – I know that has to be worked out with the federal government – to allow more individuals to be nominated. Unfortunately, this year the federal government as part of its fiscal restraint or constraint has reduced the number of immigrants that will be allowed into this country, particularly with families. That's having a very detrimental effect across the country not just in this province.

Something I've mentioned before, that affects the most vulnerable individuals with jobs, is our low minimum wage. For over seven months there has been no movement from the minister on the minimum wage. The committee on the economy, for which I'm the vice-chair, recommended over seven months ago a small quarterly increase. Now, the government doesn't pay that increase, but the government regulates and requires that that increase be made. So here we are in this resource-rich but regulation-poor province with a minimum wage which will soon be the lowest in the nation, yet Alberta has among the highest costs in terms of housing, food, transportation.

There's no tremendous benefit to us as the owners of the non-renewable resources of oil and gas when you go to the pump to fill up. Unfortunately, we're not seeing that. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar indicated how much money we're transferring down to the States from Albertans' pockets to provide subsidies to American companies. That certainly has to stop.

Yesterday I talked about the need for sustainable funding, and I talked about the current tax rate, and I talked about progressive. What I didn't speak about was the alternative that we see in this province to a flat tax. The flat tax provides forgiveness at the lower end of the scale, puts the majority of the responsibility for taxation on the middle-class individuals, middle-income earners, and to a large extent it exempts the people who are benefiting to the greatest extent from this province in terms of just a flat tax rate. That forgives approximately $5 billion of income that would have gone into education.

Now, we have different points of view in terms of smart debt, smart money, smart investments. I realize that if you carry debt for a short time to support institutions like education, like health care, then it can be a good investment, especially in education, as I say, where by educating individuals, they now become part of the employment of the province. They pay the taxes, and we derive the benefit of their education, not only from the jobs they carry out with their improved education but from the taxes they pay for having the privilege of that improved education.

Mr. Chair, there are areas where this government very much needs to cut, and that's in the number of ministries. For example, while the government talks about cross-ministerial initiatives, Sustainable Resource Development and Environment and parks, for example, should all be within one ministry and definitely be talking to each other so that they get it right. We don't have that balance.

There is a terrific amount of money, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore mentioned, being spent on Executive Council: $23 million. Similarly, large amounts are being spent for the Public Affairs Bureau, which is not information; it's propaganda control that continues to operate out of the Premier's office. This was an initiative that former Premier Ralph Klein undertook to make sure that the so-called arm's-length informational aspect of it became the government's propaganda way. One of the things a Liberal government would do and, I would expect, a Wildrose government or an NDP government would do would be to get rid of the Public Affairs Bureau because it's strictly a propaganda issue.

Mr. Chair, with regard to reducing ministries, we would reduce subsidies. We would stop propping up, for example, horse racing with $35 million worth of subsidies. We would provide greater funding and support for education so that we didn't depend on slot machines and VLTs to provide more money for our coffers, under questionable circumstances, than conventional oil does. This business of: now we're going to track the addicts, pass along their information so that every gambling institution not only in this province but throughout North America can zero in and send them attractive offers over e-mail about online opportunities to lose their money. You can lose it at home. You don't have to go to the casino.

Mr. Chair, we could be using the money that is currently being wasted in this government by its overadministration and putting it towards Education, putting it towards Seniors, putting it towards Children and Youth Services. In every front-line care delivery circumstance people are burned out. In health care they're burned out because of a lack of trust for them to do their job. There's no whistle-blower legislation for them to report, and if they stand up, they get smacked down. We've seen that over and over again, and that's why we've called for a public inquiry, which I believe would be a good investment because it would clear the air. Then we could have a new starting point, and people would regain their trust in the system.

The smacking down of individuals isn't just in the health care circumstance. The intimidation happens in education. Former minister Gary Mar, through his henchman Kelley Charlebois, tried to silence me when I was sending information and concerns to the minister when he was Minister of Education. Twice through this individual Kelley Charlebois, the man who had illegitimate contracts, I was called before the superintendent of the Calgary public board and had to explain why I was communicating with the Minister of Education. That's the type of intimidation that happens far too frequently in a variety of professions. That is not a good investment.

We need to be working for a sustainable vision in this province, and we need to get rid of our dependency on externally set global prices. We have to diversify our economy within this province, and the route to diversification comes back to education, Mr. Chair.

I appreciate this opportunity to speak about where we could save money and where we could better invest money. This should be a collaborative, collegial process. I'm glad that time allocation is not being set on this particular Bill 17, the appropriation bill, although time allocation was certainly the case in each of our budget debates. There was very limited opportunity to ask the questions, and I received no sense of commitment that for the numerous questions I asked in Tourism, Parks and Recreation and in Children and Youth Services and in Employment and Immigration I would receive the written answers that I have requested. Of course, we will soon recess, and I don't have those answers. I could have been asking more directed questions today, for example, during this debate, but without that feedback it's very hard to do so.

Thank you for this opportunity, Mr. Chair. I'll allow other members to participate and look forward to again rising.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Chair. At this juncture I would move that we adjourn debate on this bill.

Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to speak today to Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. As a former Minister of Municipal Affairs and a local councillor and a reeve I would like to address some specific aspects of this bill that pertain to municipal powers and responsibilities. But first, as a current rural landowner I would like to make some general comments about the importance of this legislation.

Agriculture has been the backbone industry of our province and still is, only now it is reinforced by the energy sector, making Alberta an economic powerhouse on a scale we never could have predicted. Because of this, there has never been a more important time to put the necessary plan in place to accommodate the impending growth. Albertans recognize this and have clearly told us that they support and expect long-term planning. They have told us to make plans to help preserve our air, our land, our water, and the rural Alberta way of life for future generations.

As growth continues, our major cities will continue to expand and industrial activity on our landscape will increase. Our government is working hard to make sure that this happens in a strategic, well-planned way. As this planning occurs, our government is committed to ensuring that the landowners who are affected are being treated fairly and that as few of them are being impacted as possible. That is what the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act and other planning legislation is about.

The need for co-ordinated land-use planning makes ALSA a very valuable legislative tool. Economic and population growth are putting pressure on the landscape. Albertans have told us that they want a more co-ordinated approach to managing growth in our province. ALSA provides the authority to develop regional plans that will help guide local and regional land-use decisions to balance economic, environmental, and community objectives. We need to plan now to manage future growth, and ALSA lets us do this. This legislation is about ensuring that the land Albertans have a deep attachment to is preserved for future generations.

Mr. Chairman, my family has farmed land in Alberta since 1896. My land is not only my livelihood; it is my legacy for my children and my grandchildren. I need to say to you that it wasn't very long ago when I wanted to purchase some extra land, and my family said, "Do we really need it?" I answered them, "Well, the value of land will not decrease and will maintain its value." The comments from my family were, "You would never ever sell it, so maintaining value really means nothing." In fact, one of them said that I would possibly be in the grave still holding on to the last piece of grass, making sure that that land stayed in the family.

That is the attachment that I have for the land. That is the attachment that landowners have for the land in Alberta. That is why I believe strongly that we must be good stewards of the land and we must always protect the rights of landowners. I have always worked to protect these rights, and so has this government. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I have worked as a surface rights advocate to deal with well spacing, soil protection and compensation, and the need for regulators to work together. I have worked to protect the land that my family has farmed all of my life. This is why I support the land-use framework and why I support Bill 10, which strengthens and enhances landowners' protections.

Unfortunately, there has been a lot of misinformation circulating about this law and other legislation. Bill 10 is intended to clarify that the government will respect the property and other rights of individuals and that it must not unfairly infringe on those rights. The amendments in Bill 10 make it clear that nothing in the act or regional plan takes away an individual's existing rights to compensation under Alberta law, and the amendments further ensure that the landowners are treated fairly.

Section 1(1) emphasizes that government must respect property rights and other rights of individuals and must not infringe on these rights except with due process of law and to the extent necessary for the overall public interest. New sections outline mandatory consultation requirements before regional plans are adopted. In addition, new sections 15.1 and 19.2 strengthen and clarify rights to request variances and reviews of plans. Mr. Chairman, these are meaningful clarifications and improvements to the landowner protections already present in the Alberta Land Stewardship Act.

I would now like to discuss in greater detail some of the other provisions of Bill 10 that relate to municipal government. Municipalities are key partners in land stewardship along with the province, private landowners, and other stakeholders. They have a long record of working co-operatively to protect our air, our water, and our land. I would like to discuss how that partnership will continue under ALSA as strengthened by Bill 10.

Mr. Chairman, this government recognizes the critical importance of municipalities through the development of the land-use framework. Government held consultations with municipalities from the start of the process in 2006. A total of 237 municipal decision-makers participated in consultation sessions that year. I need to repeat: a total of 237 municipal decision-makers participated in consultation sessions that year. Nearly 30 municipal representatives were involved in stakeholder working groups in 2007 and 2008. We have continued to value municipal contributions during work on the regional plans.

The two regional advisory councils so far have each had three members with a municipal perspective. In the lower Athabasca region these representatives included the mayor of Wood Buffalo, the deputy mayor of Lac La Biche county, and the director of planning for the city of Cold Lake. The South Saskatchewan representatives include the mayor of Airdrie, councillors from the town of Nanton and from the municipal districts of Foothills and Taber, and the director of water resources for the city of Calgary.

Last September the government held three sessions that included all municipalities in the lower Athabasca region. This was on top of nearly 60 municipal representatives who had been part of the previous consultations on the South Saskatchewan region. These ongoing discussions demonstrate the value this government places on our relationships with municipal leaders.

Respect for municipalities is also demonstrated in specific amendments contained in Bill 10. Bill 10 proposes changes to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act that will strengthen the relationship between provincial and local governments and will provide better planning in Alberta for present and future generations. This relationship is important when you look at the goals of long-term planning and the purposes of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act.

When the government started work on this planning process, we heard from Albertans about the need for decisions made by different groups to be better co-ordinated. I draw your attention to section 1(1)(c), which states the purpose of the act. The purpose includes "to provide for the co-ordination of decisions by decision-makers concerning land, species, human settlement, natural resources and the environment." I'm pleased to see this clarification. It is important that the legislation encourage provincial government and local bodies, including municipalities, to co-ordinate decisions about the land and land use-related planning and decision-making.

The proposed change recognizes that all decision-makers need to work together to achieve these purposes. While there is a need for co-ordination, this does not mean that the provincial government is taking away the authority of the municipal government over local decisions and resources. The success of this process depends on municipal governments' detailed knowledge of their local areas' challenges, attributes, and priorities. For example, Bill 10 repeals section 9(2)(f), an earlier provision in the legislation that allowed a regional plan to make laws about matters that municipalities are authorized to do. Section 11(3) also makes it clear that a regional plan cannot change or rescind a development permit or approval granted by a municipality. I need to say this again, Mr. Chairman. In section 11(3) it also makes it clear that a regional plan cannot change or rescind a development permit or approval granted by a municipality if the project has already progressed to a point of actual improvements on the land. These changes emphasize our respect for the existing role of municipalities and our support for the authority of local governments.

We also have been responsive to municipalities' need for time to co-ordinate their planning with the regional plan. They asked for a five-year window to do that, and we have agreed.

Finally, the proposed amendments in Bill 10 give municipalities the ability to request a review of a regional plan. Mr. Chairman, that gives municipalities a say in the future. Bill 10 makes it clear that the provincial government respects the authority of municipalities. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act will ensure that regional plans become a way to align decision-making and provincial policies. The act will ensure that all provincial ministries and agencies and local governments work together towards a common vision and common objectives within each region. Local governments will retain decision-making authority but will need to ensure that their plans, bylaws, and policies align with the regional plans. This reflects what Albertans have said they wanted from regional planning. This is what this bill does. Albertans said that they wanted everyone to work together to manage the pressures of the present and future growth. The government is committed to working with municipalities and other decision-makers to create that alignment.

Mr. Chairman, we all live in this province. We all work here. We all drive on the highways. We rely on power to be there when we turn on the switch and on water to be there when we turn on our tap. It is important that we work together for the preservation of this province as we see it and as we know it today. We need to work together, all forms of government. We all want our natural heritage and our rural way of life maintained and strengthened for future generations.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I've made it very clear that I don't have any intention of selling my land. My land is to be passed on to my children and to my grandchildren. It is important that we are stewards. There are 30 members in this caucus who have and own land. If we look to my left, the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development has been on his farm for over a hundred years.

An Hon. Member: How long?

Mr. Hayden: No wonder I'm tired.

Mr. Danyluk: He was. He may have not been physically there, but he was a twinkle.

This is just as critical to our future as infrastructure and public services, and we have a responsibility to plan for it. As we do so, we are committed to maintaining our long-standing respect for property rights and for those who own them. As a government we have understood and protected Alberta's rural way of life for the past 40 years, and we will continue to do so. That is our responsibility not only as members of this Assembly but as landowners, as parents, as grandparents.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for giving me the opportunity to say a few words about how precious and passionate I am about the land that I farm. If you went around to landowners, you would not find many that look at that land as an opportunity for an investment for the future that is monetary. It is an investment for the future of their children and their grandchildren. We need to keep in mind that this country is very young, this province is very young, and land is our most precious commodity.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. A pleasure to rise in committee on Bill 10, Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. Thank you to the minister for his heartfelt message and his acknowledgement that he is precious. I concur that all of us are precious, and the future is precious. We need good leadership, and we need to rebuild a sense of trust and integrity and relationship with those in the province that have carefully placed their trust in us and given us the responsibility to plan well into the future.

A famous Liberal once said that trust is the only currency in politics. Indeed, it is the element that allows for relationships, for authentic communication, for decisions to be made, and for collective actions to be taken in the public interest. Trust is the foundation of all that we do in our lives and particularly relates to public policy and the role of representatives in the Legislature. The foundation of trust is respect, integrity of purpose, and honesty in dealing with all people regardless of their position and place in society. Trust is not only the glue of civilization; it is the essence of business, education, health care, environmental stewardship, and indeed progress, all progress, Mr. Chairman.

This government has squandered its capital in trust over this past decade with poor planning and consulting, marginalizing, dismissing, and ignoring science, intimidating dissenters, and weakening the institutions that hold elected people accountable. This government's sense of entitlement and arrogance, its stifling of dissent have created a climate of fear and silence even in the last election, where only 40 per cent of people felt their vote was significant enough to turn up. This government has become the butt of jokes in Canada with its disrespect for democratic process. Average citizens are alienated and cynical. Even our esteemed health professionals have disengaged and are fearful of retaliation in this one-party state, this one-party health system. Such is the loss of trust in Alberta that we now see our most revered professionals cowed into frustrated silence as they attempt to restore some semblance of confidence and competence in our health care system.

Similarly, the good citizens of Alberta are attempting to address this gross attempt to correct inadequacies in land stewardship, Bill 10. Let me be clear, Mr. Chairman. The Alberta Liberals do not support expropriation of land without due process, including a public process, a formal appeals process, and an appropriate compensation mechanism. The bill does not address these issues in a comprehensive way. While the Land Stewardship Act does offer some positive mechanisms for long-term planning in the development of our key resources and our land, this must be done with a transparent public process. The power should not be exclusively held in the hands of cabinet and decisions made behind closed doors.

The Alberta Liberals believe in the protection of Alberta's Crown land, sustainable development of our resources, and growth of our urban and rural communities. Bill 36 is one of the most important bills passed in this House in the last decade, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. It put land stewardship – that is, proper land-use planning – at the forefront of government responsibility, a responsibility ignored for over a decade. I acknowledge this attempt. It is a positive if inadequate beginning in a province with the largest growth in population and industry yet with low freshwater supplies. This kind of planning document is long overdue, and this opposition party has been pressing for land-use planning throughout that decade.

Government is charged with setting priorities ensuring protection for the long term of our natural places, food production, and efficient transportation as well as protecting property rights and freedom of citizens and business to operate. Without a thoughtful plan based on our water systems, the continuing free-for-all land scramble would continue since the Klein-era dissolution of regional planning commissions. Instead of bringing in the best evidence from around the world, including Europe, where they're right up against limits of growth and land and water, we ignored the experience of other jurisdictions and charged ahead without ensuring Albertans were meaningfully consulted in establishing their values in terms of land stewardship, sound economic development, and property rights.

Let me be clear. Bill 19, the land assembly act, and Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, or what I like to call the Transmission Lines White Elephant Act, are not the same category as land stewardship. We must be careful not to throw out the baby – that is, the land stewardship – with the bathwater, Bill 10, which is inadequate in dealing with the land stewardship shortcomings. We need to retain Bill 36 with proper amendments, not these poor excuses for public accountability and landowner rights.

I supported Bill 36 as a beginning. It needs amendments to ensure a proper appeal process, open consultation before final decisions, and a compensation process that is not going to tie everything up in courts indefinitely. Bill 10 does not provide this assurance.

I'd like to quote someone who has been very thoughtful in analyzing this bill and has no axe to grind, University of Calgary professor Nigel Bankes, an environmental lawyer.

The Bill will encourage the adoption of timid plans that will not achieve the noble purpose of the legislation. I [believe] the amendments will create significant uncertainty and encourage litigation. The big winners from this Bill will be lawyers; the environment will be the loser.

We can do better than this, Mr. Chairman, and we must do better than this in the interests not only of our citizens but, as the hon. minister has said, our children and our grandchildren.

After 40 years of rule by the PCs, however, there is such a sense of entitlement and transparent self-interest along with a lack of objective scientific analysis of key issues that the result of the Land Stewardship Act is not better land stewardship but confusion and mistrust now in the land. The government's effort to stem this distrust by following with Bill 10, this amendment act, is inadequate. It purports to deal with the lack of an appeal mechanism, lack of respect for landowners and those affected, and fails to address the government's growing appetite to control all decisions irrespective of the will of the people living in these regions, and so it fails. This government cannot hide the fact that they have lost the confidence of the people, and these frantic efforts to fix land stewardship are one misguided push.

Now, in addition, we see the limiting of debate with closure to these debates, and the government demonstrates its arrogance again for proper democratic process and the intimidation and silencing of opposition views. This is not acceptable. It's not adequate. It's hardly believable in 21st century Alberta. Once again, the public trust is put second to power and control. The changes, then, Mr. Chairman, in Bill 10 could actually worsen the province's ability to provide real leadership on land use, and it fails to ensure conservation values are protected along with agricultural land and sustainable economic development into the future.

This is a travesty of governance. Instead of proper consultation and understanding the concerns of Albertans, we are left with no choice and will be voting against the amendment and Bill 10.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to speak to the rights of deeded landowners and grazing lease holders under the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and more recently the proposed amendments to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act in Bill 10. These remarks are based on meetings and correspondence that I have had with landowner groups like the Alberta Beef Producers and Western Stock Growers and meetings and conversations that I've had with concerned Albertans in town halls across the province. These groups and individuals are concerned about Alberta's future, and so are we. They have raised concerns about property rights, compensation, access to the courts, and public consultation. We have listened. To answer these concerns, we have proposed the amendments to Bill 10.

I'd like to begin with deeded landowners, individuals who hold land titles. The alleged threat to their property rights posed by section 11, authority to extinguish statutory consents, was based on a highly improbable if not absurd interpretation of statutory consent as including deeded land and freehold mineral rights. Nine out of 10 lawyers would have told anyone who wanted to listen that this is not and has never been the case, and that was attested to by Nigel Bankes, a University of Calgary law professor.

However, just to put this whopper to rest forever, Bill 10 adds a definition of statutory consent that makes explicit what was always implicit, that a statutory consent does not include deeded land or freehold mineral rights. But Bill 10 does more than this for deeded landowners. It amends section 19 of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act to create a new right to compensation for any compensable taking suffered by a landowner as a consequence of a regional plan.

Compensable taking is broadly defined to cover not just the extinguishing of a property right but any negative impact on the right, title, or interest for which there is compensation in either Alberta statutes or common law. This represents a dramatic expansion of landowners' rights to compensation for any negative economic impact that a regional plan might have on their land. Indeed, the new section 19, in effect, extends the principle originally found in the conservation directive sections of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, section 35 through 43, that landowners should be compensated not just for expropriation of land but for the negative impact on that by a new regulatory restriction and the effect that might have on the economic value of the current use of that land. In the new regulatory environment of the 21st century this type of regulatory taking is a much greater threat to landowners than expropriation.

Last but not least, the economic interests of landowners are further protected by the new section 15.1, that authorizes the stewardship minister to grant a variance to a landowner whose current use is adversely affected by a regional plan. This is just a safeguard against possible unintended consequences that a boundary line in a regional plan might have on a landowner. A landowner who has a parcel of land that sits right on the boundary line of a special-use zone and who thinks the value of his land or the use of that land has been adversely affected can now petition the minister to exclude or include that parcel in the zone. The minister may grant that request so long as the exclusion or inclusion does not diminish the purpose of the regional plan. This is a simple but important new safeguard against any unintended consequences.

In summary, these three amendments should put to rest concerns about the potential for a future regional plan under the Alberta Land Stewardship Act to have a negative impact on property rights. Indeed, the new provisions for compensable taking represent a giant step forward for Alberta landowners, a new level of protection against regulatory taking not found in the laws of any other Canadian province or U.S. state. Indeed, I would challenge anyone to find a jurisdiction anywhere in the world where property rights are better protected.

In turning, then, to the impact of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act on grazing lease holders, I would first note that it is virtually impossible in Alberta for a person to hold a grazing lease without also owning deeded land. All leaseholders or landowners will enjoy the expanded protection of property rights authored by the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. With respect to status of grazing leases it should be remembered that prior to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, under the Public Lands Act the Crown always had the authority to cancel a grazing lease for cause or without cause. In the latter case, however, section 82 of the Public Lands Act required the Crown to compensate the affected leaseholder for the loss.

The same people who spread the falsehoods about the definition of statutory consents in section 11 also falsely allege that the Alberta Land Stewardship Act would cancel this right to compensation. They pointed to section 19, which stated that "no person has a right to compensation" under the Alberta Land Stewardship Act except under the conservation directives or "as provided for under another enactment." In this case the other enactment is, of course, section 82 of the Public Lands Act. To purposely suppress the Alberta Land Stewardship Act's protection of landowner compensation under other enactments was but a cheap political trick, perhaps good enough to fool and scare non-lawyers, but it would have been laughed out of any court by any Alberta judge.

But the Alberta Land Stewardship Act did more than just preserve the policy status quo. Section 11 of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act actually improved the position of leaseholders and all holders of other forms of statutory consents by imposing new requirements of due process, procedural fairness, on the Crown.

Under section 11 if a regional plan is going to amend or cancel a grazing lease, the Crown is now required to provide reasonable notice to the leaseholder, state the purpose for the change, and give the leaseholder the opportunity to propose and negotiate an alternative way to achieve the same results. This improved protection of statutory consents was actually proposed by the stakeholders after we first introduced Bill 36, and the government was happy to accept it.

Going forward, the amendments now proposed in Bill 10 will further improve the legal position of leaseholders. Under the new section 11(2)(c) if the Crown plans to change a statutory consent as part of a regional plan, the Crown is required to notify the holder of the statutory consent of any proposed compensation and the mechanism by which compensation will be determined. In the case of grazing lease holders this means section 82 of the Public Lands Act.

To summarize, then, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act always protected grazing lease holders' rights to compensation under the Public Lands Act and added new procedural protections. These procedural protections are now further strengthened by the Bill 10 amendments that shift legal responsibility to the government to notify the affected cattlemen of the compensation provided under the Public Lands Act.

Mr. Chairman, with the clarifications and the amendments described above, I am confident that fair-minded Albertans will agree that both landowners and grazing lease holders are now better protected by the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and Bill 10 than they were before.

Further proof of this is found in the recently released South Saskatchewan Regional Advisory Council report, with its call for enhanced protection of Alberta's remaining grasslands, continued use of stock grazing as the best way to manage these grasslands, and a repeated emphasis on the protection of property rights as a guiding principle. In there they also suggest that for water protection, purity, quality and quantity grazing, those specific native grasslands are the best use, and the statutory consents should be amended to lengthen the tenure. I think that's a very positive thing.

There's no going back to the good old days, Mr. Chairman. Since the Leduc 1947 discovery there have been 50,000 new Albertans per year. That's half a million people every decade. In six decades we've gone from half a million people to 3.7 million people in this province, and 80 per cent of them live along the highway 2 corridor between Edmonton and Fort Macleod. They're going to keep coming at 50,000 to 60,000 people per year and keep settling along the highway 2 corridor in Foothills, Rocky View, Willow Creek, Mountain View, all the way up and down the line. We project to be at 4 million by 2015 and 5 million by 2030. That means more subdivisions, more acreages, more cars, more trucks, more roads, more quads, more OHVs, more hikers and campers, more transmission lines, more drilling rigs and pipelines, more gas plants and tank farms.

Do we really want no plan to deal with another 2 million new Albertans in the next 20 years? No. Mr. Chairman, failure to plan is planning to fail, and this is way too important to allow to fail. Do we have a plan? Yes. We're getting there. We have the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, supplemented by the clarifications and amendments in Bill 10, a plan that supports the development of seven regional plans based on our major watersheds and incorporating the most expansive and generous protection of property rights of any Canadian province or U.S. state.

To close off, Mr. Chairman, I'd just like to quote from a printout from Fraser Milner Casgrain LLP, who have reviewed Bill 10 and put forward their opinion, their concluding paragraph.

In conclusion, Bill 10 and the Proposed Regulations have written a new chorus of property and procedural rights protections into the revisited [Alberta Land Stewardship Act]. How these changes will play will, of course, depend on the interpretation given to the new lyrics by critics and the reaction of folk fans.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat. I appreciated the opportunity to address the Legislature this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Once again it's an honour to be able to have a few minutes to get up and speak to this because of what this government has done, invoking closure on the discussion of the most important bill that we have before the Legislature. They seem to think that five hours is ample time. But what's most remarkable is that we're going to see the government members pop up now and speak and take two and a half hours of that time to not allow us to be able to address the concerns of this bill. The concerns are really deep.

You know, to listen to the Minister of Infrastructure get up and say that he'll never sell land: well, never is a long time. If you go bankrupt, you won't have a choice, Mr. Minister, so hang on to that grass. It's just pathetic to listen to the gibberish that's coming out of these government members saying that there's nothing to worry about. It's amazing to listen to them speak of property rights when they have absolutely no respect for them.

The minister talked about the importance of protecting property rights. I ask you: how do you protect property rights? It's interesting, Mr. Chairman, when we look around the world and we see where there's real peace, where there's real prosperity. It's where there is rule of law. It's where property is protected. It's also interesting because, again, there are areas in here where they're well meaning – there's no question about it – but they don't understand the intent, or they have the intent, but they don't understand the wording and what it is doing to property rights with Bill 36 and, again, the lack of proper amendments coming in.

The Premier and the Minister of Education want to accuse us. "Well, where are the amendments? Where are the amendments?" Let's first talk about the problems. But, again, we won't be able to bring forward very many amendments because of the time allocation, the closure, that this government voted on. Again, it's just truly sad that they think that this is the democratic way. They have a majority, and they say: "Oh, we don't want to listen to the opposition. They're just full of gibberish."

Well, I would say, Mr. Chair, that there isn't a better judge of what we have to stand up and speak to in here than the people of Alberta. To allow us to stand up and to speak and to disgrace ourselves, as the government wants to say: that is just absolutely wonderful. Give us the rope to hang ourselves. If you're so bold and you think that you know what you're talking about, give us the time to speak, and let Albertans judge us rather than the House leader or this caucus saying: "We don't want to listen to these individuals here anymore. We know what's best."

To listen to the Member for Livingstone-Macleod talk, if I didn't know where I was at, I would think I was dreaming and living in a communist country as we listen to central planners say: "We're going to look after everything. How many people are going to be here by 2050? How many more oil rigs and how many more wells?" These great, great central planners are going to fix the world. If you look anywhere in the world where central planning has taken place, that's where they looked after the environment the worst, did the poorest job. Central planning has never worked. Even with a benevolent dictator they're not going to say: "This is what's best for your land. This native grass may not be touched. This wonderful woodland may not be touched."

It's amazing how opportunities change. We can just look at the oil sands and realize what wonderful potential has changed in the last 50 years, where people have been up there. They've tried to be innovative. They've tried to extract the oil from the sands, and it has been a huge challenge. Yet the entrepreneurs have cracked that challenge. They've got some incredible businesses going up there that are going to again allow the world to continue to prosper and live in peace because of the availability and the entrepreneurs that have developed that.

Mr. Chair, today we put out the Wildrose caucus's six steps to regional planning. This isn't an amendment that we can bring forward, but I want to bring the six points for the government to listen to. What's the purpose of this debate? The hope is – and again there's always hope until the judgment day or until the vote – that they'll come to their senses and realize that, you know, this really should go to a committee, that we need to get it right.

The comical thing is that they got Bill 36 right. Wow. What a repercussion once Wildrose got on the scene and said that we will stand up for property rights. Then we have such I want to say patriotic Albertans like Keith Wilson, who has sacrificed so much to go out and educate Albertans on what's really in this bill.

Isn't it interesting that we have the Minister of Transportation laughing and cackling in here like a chicken who just laid an egg? It's pathetic that they have those types of feelings towards a patriotic Albertan sacrificing so much to make sure that this government gets it right. He's their best friend because if they were to listen to the advice that he gave and make those proper amendments – and there's no reason why we couldn't do that with this bill – they could save themselves. But they won't even save themselves. They've been thrown the rope to climb back up, but will they do it? No. Their arrogance doesn't allow them to. They've dug themselves into this hole.

There's a six-step approach, and it isn't about amendments. The first one is that we need to repeal and entrench.

Immediately repeal the Alberta Land Stewardship Act (Bill 36) and pass an Alberta Property Rights Preservation Act. When private property is used for a genuine public need, there absolutely must be full, fair and timely compensation with full recourse to the courts.

This isn't in the amendment. It's not in the old bill. There isn't recourse to the courts. It's carefully crafted and worded so that the minister can say: "Oh, you can bring a variance to me, the minister. Trust me. I am like justice. I am blind." Boy, they are blind. They don't see it when it's right in front of their eyes.

Step 2, honour existing deals. This government is unbelievable. They seem to think we can just throw one or two under the bus, and it's okay. There's nothing wrong with that because everyone else is okay. It's a very small number. "Grandfather existing leases and licenses and establish conservation areas, or 'no-go zones,' before issuing [these licenses]. Investor confidence in the Alberta economy depends on it."

Yes, they can look at the percentages and say that they are small, and those companies that aren't affected can say: well, it's okay; it didn't affect us. But there's always a risk factor when a government for the third or fourth or fifth time breaches contracts, and there's nothing these companies can really do because they have them over a barrel. We should be honouring those contracts. They haven't. Again, very, very disappointing that in Committee of Supply and in question period we've asked the minister – they spent $1.9 million on the Athabasca plan, the Athabasca draft. Isn't that interesting? In here it's a draft. When they're out there, it's a plan. The only draft is between their ears, Mr. Chair. It's just blowing through, and there's nobody home.

The problem is that they don't even know, and I think they do. Again, it's a cover-up. They're not going to tell Albertans how much. There are 24 leases that have been affected. Just tell us the dollar value of the lease land that is being rescinded. I would expect that they're going to try and save face and at least reimburse the actual lease funds that they received as they leased out those lands. But they won't give it to us. Unbelievable.

Step 3, use what we've got. "Let Alberta Environment perform cumulative effects analysis on impacted areas. They've got the experience and expertise, let's put it to use." What kind of an excuse is it to say: oh, we can't do cumulative effects? That's ridiculous. Put it under the Minister of Environment. He's passionate. He's worked hard on it. They're very capable. The workers that they have, hundreds and hundreds of workers, have been going around the province monitoring, doing all these things. Give them the mandate to do the cumulative effects. There's no reason we couldn't do it under the current Environment minister. But, again, no, we need to create all this new bureaucracy, all of this other area. Very, very disappointing. Let's use the Environment minister. Again, we've heard the government so many times. This is the first government in North America, I believe, for sure in Canada, to have an Environment minister, yet we don't allow him to be capable to do cumulative effects. That's shameful that we don't do that.

Step 4, let the Water Act work. We have a Water Act. It was reworked in 1992 or 1993, yet the government seems to want to step in and do it. This law has allowed for a stable water supply for those with water licences in Alberta for decades. We need to get it out from under ALSA and promote it. It's been thoughtfully put forward. We have a great opportunity. Why don't we use it?

Step 5, cut the red tape, find the best models for a streamlined regulatory framework that is balanced between Alberta Environment's authority over the stewardship of air, land, and water. You know, nobody says that we want to go out and just willy-nilly have these developments pop up and say: oh, we have no plan. We have an extensive environmental protection act – extensive. To say that there is no plan – the point is that they don't use it. I mean, how many times have we heard . . . [interjection] Well, the hon. Leader of the Opposition says that they don't have the resources, that they'll spend it foolishly in other areas. The point is that we've got so much red tape and such a mess that it's not being efficient, effective, and it certainly isn't being environmentally friendly. So we need to cut the red tape.

Step 6, involve the community. This is the most critical point. How many times have I heard this government, the Premier himself, say that if we didn't do something, Ottawa is going to step in and do it to us? Really. Really. We're not going to stand up and fight Ottawa? What we're going to do is rescind licences and contracts here in Alberta so that we can have this facade to say: oh, we're looking after our area. It's a joke, Mr. Chairman. What we need to do is involve local community because if they're going to say – and again, yes, they've put these RAC, regional committees, together for the different areas, but then they just abandon them. They put it in there. This is a total disconnect with the community.

In my own personal experience in business life, back in the early '80s, I found that out. You go to municipal government, and you ask: "Oh, what's the act? What's allowed to be developed here?" Here it is. I took it at face value. They said that no more subdivisions are going to go on in this area. So I thought: "Oh, well. You know, I don't want to buy this land if there's no potential for subdivision." Six years later, two elections later, all of a sudden subdivisions were allowed, and I thought: "Wow. Why didn't I realize that people can change these things, that these laws aren't set in stone." And, again, to think that central government can do it.

So step 6, involve the community. Let's invite locally elected officials, landowners, industry stakeholders, and other regional and government representatives to work together to guide regional development in a sustainable way, and recognize that central planning does not work. If we're going to follow the Premier . . . [interjections] They're just like chickens that have laid their first egg, and they're cackling away. It's quite a sight to see. You hear all those hens cackling, and you go in there, and there's one or two eggs.

Mr. Anderson: Explain how the RACs aren't binding.

Mr. Hinman: They seem to think that these RACs can be put forward and be part of the planning, but it's not binding. The minister can say, "I appreciate that; great work," and then do whatever he wants. There is nothing binding in this bill or the amendment. When the RAC puts forth a recommendation, the minister can say: "Thank you for your time. We're going forward. We appreciate that." It's about locally elected people and the landowners and industry going forward.

Mr. Chairman, there are so many areas in this bill that are so flawed. We need to go back to step 1. We need to repeal it, and we need to entrench the Alberta property rights preservation act. Without doing that, we are on an extremely slippery and steep slope that's all downhill.

Yes, I was here in Edmonton when the Premier, speaking to the AAMD and C, was so passionate and talked about his heritage and where they came from and not being able to own land. Why? Why, if he understood that, would he pass this bill? To sit there and say, "I am the king, and I wouldn't do that" doesn't matter, because he's gone. In five months he's gone. Who's the next king, and what is that king's agenda? What are they going to do?

I mean, I was astounded when they talked about taking back 30 per cent of the lower Athabasca because this is a great thing to do. Yet the total disregard for those leases that have been put out there is shameful. Again, these contracts are written.

I mean, it's interesting, too, because in 2008 many of the regional areas were saying: "Make this a no-go zone. Do not put this land up for auction." What was this government's response, this very government, this very Premier? Oh, no. We don't know what our regional land plan is yet, so we're not going to – what would we say? – restrict our pocketbooks. If we can sell some of these leases, it's okay.

I truly believe that they had this plan all along, that we will eventually pass a plan because they understood that if they pass a plan and it's a regional plan, it becomes government policy, and it cannot be challenged in the courts. That is the key of this whole LARC and every other plan, that because it's government policy, it's therefore not challengeable in court.

That – that – Mr. Chair, is the biggest dilemma with this problem. To say that, "Oh, we're going to change section 15.1 and allow variances to come to the minister," that's a joke. What good is a variance going to the minister? That's like if a person just beat you up, and then you go in there and say: "I'd like fair compensation, please, for the beating that you just gave me. What are you going to give me?" "Oh, well, here it is." It doesn't work.

Under section 11, cabinet's regional plans can amend or rescind existing rights – they changed extinguish to rescind; that isn't good enough – including development rights, resource extraction rights, mineral rights, water licences, grazing leases, and any dispositions, approvals, or permits issued by the Alberta government.

Section 13(1): "exclusive and final jurisdiction over its contents." It doesn't matter what the big letter giveth; it's the small letter. If it taketh away, it is gone. It's in the contract. So, Mr. Chair, it isn't good enough. "Exclusive and final jurisdiction over its content" is pretty clear, and people cannot go forward.

Section 15(1). It's binding on municipalities and all Albertans. It's binding. It even goes on to explain that municipalities that don't accept this – and, oh, they keep talking about if it's already been started, it gets to continue, one area where they actually grandfather it, which is great to see that they, I guess – what would I say? – thought they could slip this through by saying that we'll grandfather any existing municipal plans. Boy, after this is in there, and they start to bring a new one that doesn't go along with the minister, they can smack him down in a minute and say: "No, you can't do that. Rewrite your bylaws." Even more disgusting is that they can say: "You know what? We're not going to transfer your money back to your municipality. You're not listening to our regional plan. You bad, bad person. Listen up, and if you don't, we're going to strangle you to death economically. No money. We'll get you knuckled down. You'll get down on your knees begging to come onside. We've got all the authority because there's nothing binding."

Sections 15(3) and 15(4): no rights to make a claim against government. The regional plan does not create anything with a cause of action or create any claim exercisable by any person or confer jurisdiction on any court or decision-making body. There's absolutely no recourse for compensation. So when the minister has made his decision, it's done. I do not know of a place in the world where I would want to live where a minister of the government can be the final jurisdiction and no courts can intervene or that you can appeal to. I'll say it again and again: this is the crux of the problem. Jurisdiction has to stay in the courts. Appeals have to be able to have a process to the courts. This bill is so carefully crafted to say and make sure that there is no appeal to the courts. They can shut it down, and the door is slammed shut.

Section 17(4). Bill 36 trumps all other acts. What does that mean? Pretty clear to me. Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, trumps all other acts. So it doesn't matter what it says in the Mines and Minerals Act, it doesn't matter what it says in the Water Act, and it doesn't matter what it says in the environmental protection act because Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, trumps all of those, and there's no amendment coming forward to that.

Section 19: restricted right to compensation if government approvals, water licences, grazing leases, subdivision approvals, mineral leases, timber rights, et cetera are amended or rescinded. I mean, it's very restricted on what they can decide. How can you say that this is protecting property rights when, if someone has something they want to develop, the restriction is: that doesn't go along with the minister's idea of what we're going to have go on in that little region. That isn't good enough, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I stand today to speak to Bill 10, Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. Perhaps one of the most important things to point out about the amendments in Bill 10 is the fact that this legislation is and always has been about protecting landowners' rights and making a better quality of life for Albertans. This is the fundamental reason I got into politics. As I suspect, it is also the reason a lot of my colleagues did as well. This government has heard from Albertans about the need to reinforce the protective mechanisms in the wording of Bill 10. The reason Albertans wanted this is because the previous wording did not sufficiently safeguard against individuals misinterpreting the information and spinning it to advance their own personal or maybe even political interests.

We heard from many Albertans that the language in the legislation was being misinterpreted by some and needed to be clarified, and that is exactly what this government is doing with Bill 10. We have listened, and we are acting. What the wording in the amendment does is safeguard against some wild lawyers creating a culture of fear among Alberta landowners when there is nothing to fear.

Mr. Chairman, what also needs to be clarified is that Alberta is the most compensating jurisdiction in Canada. Albertans need to know that our government understands, perhaps better than most governments, that land-use planning is intended to benefit all Albertans in the province as a whole while making sure that individuals always have a say in the process.

The Premier ordered a review of the legislation to make sure the words clearly reflect the intention of the act. Some key points are: consultation would become a legal requirement before a plan or amendment is made; any person who believes he or she is directly and adversely affected will be able to request a review of a regional plan; titleholders will be able to apply for a variance to a regional plan; the amended act makes it clear that nothing in the act or a regional plan takes away an individual's existing rights to compensation. This supports the intention of government to stay out of the lives of Albertans by giving them as many opportunities as possible to represent their own individual needs and interests in the land-use planning process, and I believe the amendments achieve that, Mr. Chairman.

I would like to also say that when you listen to the other side, they mustn't read the plan because they get a completely different interpretation out of the act than I do when I read it. Mr. Chairman, that's what I guess the law is all about. Some lawyers interpret something one way, another lawyer interprets something another way, and then there's a judge in the middle that makes a decision. When I'm out speaking, there doesn't have to be a judge there that gets to judge me, and when they're out speaking or their great wild lawyer is out speaking, they don't have a judge there to make a judgment either.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I have to admit, I do always enjoy watching the hon. Transportation minister speak. It's very entertaining, so thank you for joining the debate. That's for sure.

We don't obviously have much time. We only have about 30 seconds left, most likely, but I thought I would stand and – maybe at this time I can adjourn debate till we get back tonight, and we can pick up where we left off. Can I make a motion for that, a motion that we adjourn for the afternoon?

The Chair: Well, in fact, it's 6 o'clock, so the Chair doesn't need a motion to adjourn.

The committee will be in recess until 7:30 p.m.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order. The Committee of the Whole has under consideration Bill 10. Continuing on from this afternoon, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Bill 10 Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's good to be back. Obviously, I want to continue on with some of the comments about Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. Yesterday I started speaking a little bit about it, and I went through several things on the bill. I talked about one of the important things that we need to realize, that when we make a mistake, it's important to fess up to that mistake and say: "You know, we made a mistake. We need to correct it, and we need to back away." That's what Premier Klein really taught a lot of politicians, that when you do make a mistake, it's important to admit to it, try to make up for that mistake, and make restitution as quickly as possible.

I find myself feeling somewhat like that with regard to Bill 36 and so forth. One of the things that I didn't read or understand, I guess would be a better way of putting it, in the first go-round with Bill 36 was the issue around statutory consent and the power that Bill 36 gives the cabinet to revoke property rights and to extinguish – this is the language used in the act – property rights, things such as land titles. Obviously, Bill 10 works to correct that. The government says clarify, but let's look at what Bill 36 says and then how Bill 10 clarifies, hopefully, what their intent is.

In Bill 36 under section 11 it says: "A regional plan may, by express reference to a statutory consent or type or class of statutory consent, affect, amend or extinguish the statutory consent or the terms or conditions of the statutory consent." Now, there was some argument about whether statutory consent in Bill 36 meant land titles and other forms of licences, and there was quite a debate around that. In Bill 10 there was an effort made to clarify that, but the government continues to say that the original Bill 36 never did allow the government to unilaterally extinguish land titles. Well, this is just simply not the case. This isn't just a matter of one lawyer disagreeing with another lawyer. As any first-year law student would know, when you're trying to look for the definition of something in a bill, the first place you look to – it's not the only place you look to – is the act. You look to the act, right? Isn't that true, hon. members? You look to the act first.

What does the act say about statutory consent? According to section (z) of Bill 36 statutory consent means a permit, licence, registration, approval, authorization, disposition, certificate, as in a certificate of title, allocation, agreement or instrument . . .

Titles are instruments.

. . . issued under or authorized by an enactment such as the Land Titles Act or regulatory instrument.

So there's really little doubt in the definitions section of what statutory consent is and that it can include land titles.

If one looks to what instrument means, we can go further to instrument. They even clarify it further. Instrument means

(i) a grant, certificate of title, conveyance, assurance, deed, map, plan, will . . .

Et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

It also includes a judgment of the court, so that could include a maintenance enforcement order or a marriage annulment, or

(iv) any other document in writing relating to or affecting the transfer of or dealing with land or evidencing title to land.

That's the definition of instrument, okay? So this whole idea that it did not apply to land titles or mortgages or these types of things is garbage. It did.

This government, that is famous for not understanding, you know, the unintentional consequences of its actions, has come and said: "Okay. Well, under Bill 10 we're going to make a difference. We're going to make some exceptions. We're going to make it clear in section 3(2)."

For greater clarification . . .

This is kind of funny.

. . . the definition of statutory consent does not include any permit, licence, registration, approval, authorization, disposition, certificate [et cetera, et cetera, et cetera] under or authorized by

(a) the Land Titles Act,

They put it right in there.

(b) the Personal Property Security Act,

(c) the Vital Statistics Act,

(d) the Wills Act,

(e) the Cemeteries Act,

(f) the Marriage Act,

So they can no longer get rid of your marriage. That's good.

(g) the Traffic Safety Act, or

(h) any enactment prescribed by the regulations.

It's pretty clear when we look at this clarification that the fear that people had that the government would be able to unilaterally take away their land titles when this bill is passed – that will not be the case. Under the law right now under Bill 36, indeed the government, the cabinet can seize people's land titles. I don't know how you missed that. You obviously did.

Now, let's be very clear. Was it ever your intention to seize people's land titles? I certainly hope not. I don't think it was. But the fact is that that is what the act, Bill 36, clearly authorized or else why would you be passing Bill 10 and one section to clarify that?

That lawyer in a silk suit, as the government always likes to say, that was running around Alberta telling people that the government had just authorized giving itself the power and authority to seize your land title if they felt it was in furtherance of their regional land-use planning, was correct. He was not lying at all. Thankfully, he pointed it out because now it has been dealt with in Bill 10.

There are many things that Bill 10 does not include. For example, it does not specifically exempt the Mines and Minerals Act although it does now exempt the Land Titles Act from extinguishment of a property right. We saw that in action. We saw what happens when you don't have something exempted under this act, that in fact the government can come and seize. It is doing so right now with the lower Athabasca regional plan. It is seizing a couple dozen mineral and mine leases that belong to these companies. It's unilaterally coming in there and seizing them.

Now, there is still a question around what the compensation would be, which is amazing, that the government would allow that kind of uncertainty. But there still is a question. We don't know much the government plans to compensate these companies if at all. We don't know if they plan to give them the value of the lease when they bought it and that's it or if it's going to be the value of the lease plus interest or if it's going to be — who knows? I mean, it's kind of weird. You'd think that when you take somebody's land, if you expropriate someone's house, you don't pay them what they paid for their house. You pay them what the house is worth when you expropriate it. Fair market value. But we don't know what the government wants to do. Are they going to pay fair market value for it? Who knows? Unintended consequences. It's banana republic stuff is what it is.

According to the former Minister of SRD at the Keith Wilson event in Eckville the other night, when Keith Wilson was going at it with the former Minister of SRD on this, the former Minister of SRD actually gave me credit for moving international stock markets with the power of my words. It was incredible. My banana republic comment was the reason the international stock market fell 150 points according to the Member for Foothills-Rocky View. I didn't know I was that influential, hon. members, but I guess I am. I guess I caused the stock market to go down 150 points.

Ms Blakeman: That was an unintended consequence.

Mr. Anderson: That was an unintended consequence. Banana republic: whoosh, stock market crash. Well, I said it, so it must be true. Anyway, that was an interesting argument to say the least.

What it does demonstrate is that because there's uncertainty in the market, because the market did not understand what was going on, because they didn't understand what the value of their assets were on their balance sheet for some of these companies, the market got jittery for sure. But, as the minister says, the market came back up. Well, you know what? That may be true, but you have to understand that just because the market comes back up, just because people realize, "Oh, you know what; this doesn't affect a lot of the mineral leases up there; it only affects a few of them," it doesn't make it right. It's still a Mickey Mouse, banana republic way of doing things.

Property rights are property rights. You hold to them. You respect them. You respect the licences that you give out. If you want to make a no-go area or a conservation area, you make sure that existing licenses and leases are allowed to proceed, that the land is reclaimed, and it becomes part of the no-go zone if that's what you're going to do. But that's not what this government does. They just go ahead, bulldoze ahead, damn the torpedoes, and then Albertans can be left paying the bills and the uncertainty that comes from it.

So there are many problems with Bill 10: the fact that it does not include that specific exemption to the Mines and Minerals Act. I think we have an amendment coming forward later on in the evening.

Before we get there, I would like to touch on another issue, and I'd like to do so by proposing an amendment to this act. This is the first amendment. The Wildrose has roughly 20 amendments that, I guess, we'll have to read into the record at the end of this because we've been cut off on our debate. This is the first one, and hopefully we'll get at least one or two on here.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we'll pause for a moment while it's brought up here.

Hon. members, this is amendment A1.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. A1 is the amendment. Section 5 currently deals with before a regional plan is made or amended, so after cabinet decides they want to change a land-use plan or, you know, change the zoning, and say: "You know what? We didn't get that right. We actually want to protect this area. We want to change everything here again." So they make a change.

Well, before a regional plan is made or amended, the stewardship minister must (a) ensure that appropriate public consultation with respect to the proposed regional plan or amendment has been carried out. Okay? So, basically, the stewardship minister is going to have to settle it in his own mind through whatever process that means. I don't know. Maybe he calls his mom. Maybe he googles a few things. Once he's sure in his own mind that this is the right regional plan, so a regional plan is made or amended, then he needs to present a report of the findings of such consultation to the Executive Council and then (b) lay before the Legislative Assembly the proposed regional plan or amendment. Okay? Well, that's really great. That's warm and fuzzy. They're going to tell us, according to this act: here's the regional plan for this area or here's the amendment to the regional plan. They're going to lay it down before the Legislative Assembly. Fantastic. It's always good to have disclosure about how you're going to be changing everyone's property rights in an area or dealing with them. That's great.

Unfortunately, I don't think it is enough. What I'm proposing is that Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, be amended in section 5 of the proposed section 5(a) by striking out "and present a report of the findings of such consultation to the Executive Council" and substituting "lay before the Legislative Assembly a report of the findings of such consultation for the Assembly's approval."

Now, the reason for this proposed amendment is simple. All the folks in this House are the elected representatives of the people of Alberta, okay? So it seems pretty important, in my view, that a decision to alter land-use planning in an area should be left to the people's representatives, not 22 or 23 or 24, however many there are of the day, cabinet ministers behind closed doors making the final decision on something.

There needs to be accountability to this House, to the people's representatives, and the only way to do that is to say: okay; we've made changes to this plan. Let me be very clear. I don't agree with the stewardship minister having the authority to bring these plans forward. I think that should be left to regional planners at the local level. But if we're going to go this way, if that's what we're going to do, if this is the way the government wants to do it, then at least have the accountability and the transparency to take the report and to bring it to this Legislature and to lay it before this House so that we can examine it and make suggestions, et cetera, and so that we can ultimately approve it in this Legislature. I think that is a fair thing to ask, and it's a fair transparency and accountability measure that I think the people of Alberta are owed in this regard.

These are big decisions. I mean, look at the LARP. Look at the lower Athabasca regional plan. You're talking about a monstrous land area there. You're talking about revoking mineral leases of industry holders. Who knows with the South Saskatchewan and these others how many private landowners it's going to involve? You're talking about extinguishing or rescinding property rights, changing property rights. You're talking about putting in conservation areas and no-go zones. You're talking about a lot of different things: cumulative effects management, water management, et cetera. These are life and region altering decisions that are being made by cabinet.

It makes sense that before those plans go forward, the people of this Legislature, the people's representatives, would have the ability to sit here, debate it, make sure there were no unintended consequences, make sure that the government wasn't going to accidentally seize someone's land that wasn't needed, things like that. You know, have the opposition throw some things at the wall. Let's do some more research on this. Let's talk a little bit more about this so that we make sure we get these plans right or we make sure that the amendments to these plans are right, okay?

I mean, I look at some of the members in there: the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. I know full well you trust the people's representatives to make a good decision here. I think that it's important that we let them do that. To just say that the government is going to come here and, you know, is just going to plunk the regional plan or the amendment to the regional plan in front of us and say, "Okay; this is what we decided; here you go," is not accountability at all. I don't even know why that's in the act. They would do that without this act, without it saying that they had to lay it before the Legislative Assembly. Of course, they're going to put the plan out there. They've got to give it to somebody to implement.

So that's not really an accountability measure. But having the Assembly have to actually vote on it elevates it and at least makes sure that the people in this House have the final say.

I mean, we have the Speaker of the House, remember, who goes through every month and tells us all the recognized days that come up, you know, like basket weaving awareness day and kiss your lawyer day and all these different days that we . . .

Ms Blakeman: Administrative support day is today.

Mr. Anderson: Administrative support day is today?

Ms Blakeman: Yes.

Mr. Anderson: There you go. Administrative support is important, I'll tell you, especially when you've got the resources and the office that we have. I mean, you really rely on that staff.

The point is that he's making us aware of that. That's all this is saying right here. This is saying that somebody is going to come and make us aware of this report. It's basically at the same level of importance as the Speaker standing up and telling us all these different days and awareness weeks, et cetera, that are out there.

Now, the difference is that this amendment, if passed, will make sure that the people's representatives have the final say on whether they want to go ahead. I think this is a reasonable amendment. I would like to hear from government the reasons. If they support it, that's great, but if they don't support it, why not? Why is it not important that the people's representatives have the power and authority to make the final decision with regard to one of the seven regional plans in this province? Why wouldn't that be important to you, or why would it be important to you? I'd like to know that.

With that, I'll leave this amendment for some debate.

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment. Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks for the opportunity to speak on amendment A1. I agree with the attempt to remove the reporting in section 5 away from presenting a report of the findings of the consultation to Executive Council, which, of course, is the cabinet, and trying to widen it to a larger group. That I agree with because I think that too much of what's wrong with the amending act, Bill 10, is that it has tried to address some issues, but it didn't address them enough. The original Alberta Land Stewardship Act had concentrated too much power in the hands of cabinet. I think that Bill 10 did not address that enough. So this amendment is trying to take it a step further, but where my problem is with this amendment is in having it come back to the Assembly for the Assembly's approval.

We're in a time of change, I hope, and we have no idea what is coming and how the political structure is going to look, who is actually going to have the balance of power, the majority of it. We have a lot of experience in this Assembly and in this province with a party that gets into power for 40 years and counting and is dictatorial in the way it sets about writing legislation.

We have a number of things that come back to this Assembly for approval. Frankly, Member, look around. So what? Lots of things come here for approval. You still have a government in power that does basically what they want to. I understand that you're trying to protect the integrity of the plans and to involve the elected members, but you could end up with the same thing happening that you've got right now, and that is a majority that just barrel rolls stuff through.

So there are two things that you need to have in place, I think, to make this plan work better. One is – and you always should default to this – more local control, more local input because communities really do understand how to take the one-size-fits-all that you're trying to build as a provincial plan to make sure that we are moving forward and implementing general policies as a province. They understand how to take that overall policy and augment it to make it really work locally. They can't be allowed to say, for example: well, we're not going to have environmental protection in this particular area because we just choose not to. No, no. They have to. There are certain things that are required, but they can say: "You know what? This little bit extra would really make a difference for us because we've got a lot of forestry here or a lot of this." They can fine-tune it to make it work on a local level, but you still need that sort of broad province-wide policy setting that you want everybody to use.

My problem with the way this is put is that we could get exactly what we've got now. It could come to the Assembly, and look how many decisions and how many times – I'm getting into trouble with my dentist for grinding my teeth, which is a relatively new problem for myself, but part of it is from when I hear the Premier stand up and say things like, "Well, it's going to an all-party committee," and, you know, "That will be wonderful because it's an all-party committee."

Well, I was at the negotiating table when these all-party committees were established, and believe you me, the second, third, and fourth parties may have something to say occasionally. I've actually been in the position where those all-party committees have passed, duly debated and passed, a motion I put on the floor only to have at the next meeting a member come forward and basically rescind my motion on the instruction of government. So much for all-party discussion and all-party approval of something. That rarely happens. So you're basically putting back in place what we have now, and that's the problem for me, I think. Yeah.

Additionally, you're not clear on what you're going to do with 5(b). You're going to amend 5(a), but are you leaving 5(b) there? Because that's the same thing again, to "lay before the Legislative Assembly the proposed regional plan or amendment." I think you're right in trying to draw power away from the cabinet. I just think the way it potentially could play out here is problematic for us in that it basically puts into place the same institution that we have now, that's already causing us problems. You'd end up with something that read the same way. You're going to present a report of findings to the Assembly for its approval, and then in 5(b) you're going to lay the plan before the Legislative Assembly, the proposed regional plan or amendment.

I'm not quite sure how that works, but I definitely think you're right to make the point that you need to draw some of that power back into a wider base, back into the Assembly and away from cabinet, definitely understanding the place of local decision-making.

So to make the point, you know, I'm willing to support this amendment because of the discussion that it's put on the floor, and I urge – well, I'm not looking around with great hope, but I urge the members of the government to respond to the amendment that's been put forward and explain why they feel those decisions need to stay embedded in the Executive Council. We could actually have a debate about this bill instead of calling each other names. We're doing this for five hours, of which we've got three and a half left, so we might as well have the debate, folks. Minister of Energy, you like to debate. No? Okay. Well, I tried.

Anyway, I think it was a great idea to put this on the floor, and I'm happy to have had the opportunity to speak to it. I'm willing to support it for the issues that it has tried to address.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an opportunity for me to get up to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011 . . .

The Deputy Chair: On amendment A1.

Mrs. Forsyth: . . . and particularly in regard to A1 – I was getting there – the amendment that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has brought forward on section 5. As he's indicated before, there are several amendments that we're going to be bringing forward in regard to what I consider a very flawed piece of legislation.

I have been around, and I've always spoken about my length of time and the opportunity to serve in this Legislature. I can tell you that it's one of those pieces of legislation where I've received enough phone calls and e-mails and letters that it starts my spidey sense saying that the government has done something wrong.

If we specifically talk about section 5, which is our first amendment of many for the night – and it's unfortunate that, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre has mentioned, the government has brought closure in on what I would suggest the Premier has considered one of his legacy bills, which, quite frankly, to me is a piece of crap. But I guess if that's what he wants to go forward on as a piece of legacy, so be it.

When you talk about a regional plan that is made or amended, and it talks about the section about the report ensuring that – [interjection] Obviously, Edmonton-Castle Downs is going to be speaking after me because I can hear him.

The Deputy Chair: I'm listening.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'm sure I'll look forward to him standing up and speaking on this right after I finish and sit down.

We talk about ensuring the appropriate public consultation with respect to the proposed regional plan or amendment that has been carried out. Our amendment is referring to "and present a report of the findings of such consultation to the Executive Council" and eliminating that. I think that's a good step because of the fact that the people that should be getting this consultation – and I struggle with the word in Bill 10 when they talk about appropriate public consultation because what we would probably consider appropriate versus what the government considers appropriate are two different places. It goes on to say that we take out "report of the findings of such consultation to the Executive Council," and then we're going to "lay before the Legislative Assembly a report of the findings of such consultation for the Assembly's approval."

I like what the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is presenting, quite frankly, because then it gives everyone in this Assembly the opportunity to debate and talk about this, similar to what we're seeing a little bit of right now when we saw the government just prior to the 7:30 break, when they were talking between 4:30 and 6, knowing we've only got five hours of consultation, and a couple of the members stood up. I found that very interesting from my time here, and I'm sure for the Member for Edmonton-Centre. The last time I saw anything like that happen – I'm scratching my head – I think was Bill 11. We had speeches from the government.

I'm quite excited. Even though it will limit our debate to somewhere between two and a half to three hours, we're looking forward to getting their comments on record because that's what Albertans need to hear. They don't need to hear just because of the consultation that people were making fun of Mr. Wilson and some of the groups that he's getting in Eckville or the Premier at an AAMD and C meeting talking about his silk suit.

So when we talk about the amendment that we're presenting the report findings and consultation on, we're eliminating that to the Executive Council. We're bringing before the Legislative Assembly a report of the findings of such consultation. The people that were elected by the people in Alberta have the opportunity to stand up and speak in this Legislature and talk about whether they approve what has happened under the regional plan, the consultation. I think it puts the onus on everybody, as it has put the onus on myself to spend hours and hours and hours, quite frankly, bringing myself up to speed on not only Bill 36 but Bill 10, going through the tons and tons of research that has come forward from people, Albertans, our voters, telling me what is right about the legislation and what is flawed about the legislation.

For us to start and have the government come forward and support this first amendment that the hon. member has brought forward in regard to having the Assembly approve, I think is a good step, and I think it's an important step. I want to have on record, first of all, that it's a small step. So if the government accepts this, I don't want them going out of this Assembly tomorrow with a huge press release bragging about how they accepted an amendment from the Official Opposition or the Wildrose saying, "Well, we listened to what they had to say, and we've accepted their small amendment" in regard to something that should really have been written into the legislation in the first place. Instead of going to the cabinet or the Executive Council it comes right back to the Assembly, and it can be consulted on with people. It says: consultation for the Assembly's approval.

As I have mentioned I think two or three times, the importance of having the ability for MLAs to first of all be able to talk to their constituents, and secondly, to find out what they like about the consultation process or what they didn't like. Did they think it was long enough? Did they think it was short enough? Was it done adequately? Was it not done so adequately? Did they feel it was an appropriate public consultation?

I'm hoping, Mr. Chair, that the government will give some thought to this amendment A1 and look at voting for this, keeping in mind that it's a small amendment. It's a first step.

We look forward to bringing forward, in our small time allotment that we have of five hours, more debate and more of our amendments. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd briefly just like to stand and speak in favour of this amendment. I think it's quite straightforward. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere summarized it and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre as well as the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. What this is about is section 5(a). "Ensure that appropriate public consultation with respect to the proposed regional plan or amendment has been carried out, and present a report of the findings of such consultation to the Executive Council." There is the problem. Again, this is just solely at the minister's discretion, and what we need is to have it reported to the House.

Not only that, the government members always get up and say: oh, we've done all these consultations. We've done this. We've done that. We've had 238, I think, people that they talked about earlier. Present the report to the Assembly so that we can actually see and ask questions about it and verify what they're actually saying rather than just vague comments and commentary on what their so-called consultation is. We need to have the consultation. It needs to come.

I'm looking forward to the vote. We'll see. The government says: what amendments? We have several that we want to bring forward. We feel this is a good and plausible one and hope that the government will vote in favour of this.

Perhaps we can have the question now.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am also standing up in favour of the amendment. I have heard the Member for Edmonton-Centre, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I don't think that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is asking for much. It's just bringing the process more into the open. I do believe that the decisions or any changes we want to make into regional plans or anything should be done here in the Legislature, not by 23 or 22 or 16 Executive Council members.

Here with Bill 10 the government is trying to address what was not done in bills 36, 19, or 50. I think they should do the right thing. You know, those bills gave the cabinet too much power. Here the government is still trying to keep all the power with the cabinet.

What this amendment is trying to do is take the power away from the Executive Council and have everything come to the Legislature so that we could have reasonable debate in the Assembly and make the right decisions. This amendment may not address what the member intends to do with this, but still I think it will be better to have a decision made by the majority in the Legislature, by the elected representatives of Albertans. Well, I think it still will be better to make the changes here in the Legislative Assembly after a reasonable debate instead of making a decision, you know, behind closed doors. It should be up to the elected representatives to come up with what is good for all Albertans. For those reasons, Mr. Chair, I'm supporting this amendment.

I don't think the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is asking for much. The government with the majority will still be able to blow through whatever they want, but we want to have everything in the open so that everybody knows what we're going to do. For those reasons I'm supporting the amendment.

Thank you.

8:10

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I will just add my two cents' worth briefly to this because we have a lot of business to get through in a limited period of time tonight. I would not normally support this amendment. I would not normally say that this is something that the Legislative Assembly needs to consider and vote on in terms of regional plans for each region.

I think that there is a real interest, obviously, on the part of MLAs from that particular region for which the regional plan is being prepared to have a say in this, but as to whether all 83 of us need to weigh in on it or not, under – maybe I shouldn't say normal – ideal circumstances I would say that if we had done all the preparation work properly, this would not be necessary. Unfortunately, Mr. Chair, we haven't done all the preparation work properly, and even the government recognizes this, which is why they brought Bill 10 forward in the first place.

The amendments that are put on the floor tonight, whether we all agree on them or not, I think will all be put on the floor sincerely with the effort to try and improve this bill further. I think absent a whole process that we cannot amend because it's not in Bill 10, you'd have to go back to the ALSA itself, which would change the way in which these regional plans were prepared, change the way in which the regional advisory councils were constructed and put together, and that sort of thing. I think there is a need for elected representatives to weigh in before these plans were approved and vote on each one of them.

To just lay the plans before the Legislative Assembly as it reads in section 5 of Bill 10 right now, which says exactly under 5(b), "lay before the Legislative Assembly the proposed regional plan or amendment" – okay. That says we're tabling the proposed regional plan or amendment for the interest and edification of all Members of the Legislative Assembly, but it does not allow for any input from the MLAs or any decision-making power. That power still rests with cabinet. I think that's a problem. That's a problem because of the way in which we go about under Bill 36 and Bill 10 creating these regional plans without enough democratic participation going into it. I think for that reason rather than leaving the power with cabinet to approve these regional plans, I can support this amendment, which gives that power to the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for St. Albert on the amendment.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Chair, just speaking briefly to the amendment, I appreciate the intent of the amendment, but if you look closely, the amendment replaces section 5(a), but by doing so, it makes section 5(b) totally redundant.

For that reason, I don't think we can support the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak?

I will call the question on amendment A1 as proposed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll move on to the bill. We're back to Bill 10 and the next speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much, Mr. Chair. I appreciate being recognized. This is my first opportunity to really speak to this bill given the interesting progression of Bill 10 through this House. What we have is what people commonly call Bill 36, but of course each year we start over in our numbering, so we need to start referring back to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, which was passed in 2009. It hasn't gone over well. This, what we have before us today called Bill 10, is an amending act to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act.

Let me talk about the intentions of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and then relate back to that what I think about this amending act. The way I approached the Alberta Land Stewardship Act from the start is that we need a planning tool. We need a planning tool in this province that allows all of the user groups, who are often in conflict with each other – and their activities may conflict with other groups' activities over the use of a piece of land. We need a planning tool to be able to sort this out in the province.

Of course, we're referring to the use of what we call Crown land, or public land, the land that is held in stewardship by the province. How do we determine who gets to use it and how they use it? Here are some of the groups whose activities start to conflict with each other. We've got conventional oil and gas exploration; conventional oil and gas production; mining, including aggregate mining, so gravel mining, in aquifers and river basins and things like that; coal mining. We've got an application right now in the Castle Crown area to mine magnetite I think it's called, which is a product that is used in conjunction with coal.

We have conservationists that are saying: "We have some very precious land here. We should leave it alone. We should not allow anything to happen on it and preserve it." We have people that say that it should be used for recreational purposes by horseback riders, by hikers, by cross-country skiers. There are others that say: "Well, we want to have motorized vehicle access. We want to use ATVs," that my family calls quads. "We want to go in the winter and snowmobile; we want to go heliskiing." How do you put those two groups together, and do they conflict?

We have municipalities that want to expand their boundaries onto prime agricultural land. Well, at what point do we the province, we the people lose our ability to say no? We need to protect prime agricultural land. We need to be able to say: you can't keep building subdivisions, precious little acreage parks for the wealthy, farther and farther out from our cities, which stresses the resources of the cities to put the services in and, of course, the roads to bring everybody, you know, into town to work and all of that stuff. At the same time, they're building it on the very land we need to produce food.

There are immense conflicting groups and activities, and we need a planning mechanism. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act was supposed to be that mechanism.

Now, I agree with many others that have criticized the original act. Actually, in our caucus there are people that were in favour of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act in 2009 who are not in favour now and, the reverse of that, people that have never been in favour of it at all. We've certainly had even some hearty discussions in my own caucus about that particular bill.

The real criticism you've heard quite a bit about was that the government concentrated too much power in the hands of the cabinet and, in particular – and this offended me at the time, and I was, to put it mildly, blown off by members of the government – the use of what they call the Henry VIII clause, which literally said that a minister can change legislation without bringing it before the House. "Oh, this is common," they said. "This is used all the time to fix little things, and we should be able to do this." No, not in conjunction with our land, Crown land. Public land is the other way that that space is referred to. It's public land. It's held in trust by the government, in trust on behalf of the people of the province. So too much power held in the hands of the cabinet.

There was no compensation offered when the Crown indicated that it was going to do something and that it was going to take somebody's land to do it, or in some cases activities that are currently going on on Crown land or expected to go on on Crown land would be curtailed; for example, conventional oil and gas development leases or oil sands leases or forestry. All of that's possible. All of that goes on now on Crown land, and the government makes money from it. It's revenue, and that helps offset the taxes that Albertans pay. It's not that this is particularly new activity here.

The idea that the government would extinguish somebody's property rights or the money that they were making from their activity without any kind of recognition of compensation just goes against the heart of fairness, of justice, and it really bugs people. When a province gets beyond itself, gets too big for its britches, gets too high on its horse, or flies too close to the sun, you know, the wax melts, the feathers come off, guys, and you plummet to Earth. That's essentially what has happened to the government in this whole process. I'm sure that there will be a master's thesis and maybe a PhD or two based on the process around this Land Stewardship Act and Bill 10. So those of you who are currently pages who tend to be particularly brilliant students: there's your master's thesis because you sat here and watched this happen. It has not gone well for this province and for this government.

The third thing is that there was no right of appeal. So too much power in the hands of government, no recognition of compensation or ability to compensate people, and, three, no avenue of appeal. There is always avenue of appeal; there has to be. Mistakes get made, you know, Friday afternoon screw-ups. People make mistakes: deliberate, benign, whatever. You've got to have the ability to say: "Whoa, whoa, whoa. Something went wrong here, and I need to be heard. I need my day in court. I need to be able to appeal the decision that was made." Not because you don't like it. I mean, you don't get an appeal process just because you don't like the finding. You get an appeal process because something went wrong in the way the process worked, and you need to be heard. Your case needs to be heard and re-examined for a good reason. So those are the three things in this particular bill that really offended the core of the Alberta psyche.

The other interesting thing that developed out of this was public knowledge and public participation. This I actually find very exciting because increasingly Albertans, Canadians have been saying to their politicians: "We want in. We want access to this process. We want to be able to tweet you and tell you what we think of the comments you just made in the House. We disagree. We want input from the beginning on this." That's what happened. People started to get access to real knowledge, to factual knowledge. This is what the bill says. Here is the interpretation from the lawyer. Here is the interpretation from the government. People could go to town hall meetings and hear well-versed people talk about this, and they could learn it, too, and be able to understand it, to hold the bill in their hand and look at what it said and go: "Okay. I understand that. I get it, and I don't like it. I don't agree with the decisions that have been made here."

People got an opportunity to get educated on the process, to get educated on the content of the bill itself, and then to be able to push back with government. So not just, you know, yelling and screaming, not just carrying placards with rhetoric on it, but very specific points being raised in a well-informed manner by the public back to the government saying: you have chosen to use certain words in this language – a word like extinguish is a very, very specific and powerful word, and it carries with it a lot of action that goes behind the word extinguish, especially when that word is held by government: to extinguish your right, to stop it, to put it out. That's a very powerful word, and it was a deliberate choice by government. So we have people that became involved in the process, as they should, as they always should, and I found that very exciting.

Then things really went sour for this government. This is the hubris that I was accusing the government of. You know, you've been in power for 40 years. You still have to listen, and you didn't on this one, and it's costing you big time because people did get educated on this. They have held you accountable for the decisions you've made. What you've said is: "In Bill 10, trust us, we fixed everything. Just trust us. Just believe us." Clearly, the evidence is that Albertans do not trust you anymore. You have burned some bridges on this one. They don't trust you. They will not take your word on faith. They've gone out and got educated. They've sat in those town halls. They've given up their Wednesday nights to drive 50 miles to sit in a community league building that had the heat turned on a 6 o'clock, and they're still freezing their butts sitting in those stupid wooden chairs with the little splinters on them and the metal backs. Oh, my goodness. So they put in the work, the public, and they've been really clear with the government that they don't like this process.

Frankly, the last time you really heard members of this government get booed – my understanding was that when Peter Lougheed walked into a football game in Edmonton, I think, and got booed was the day he turned around and said: "Okay. I'm done. At the point when people boo me at a public event, my time is over. I'm done. I no longer have the trust and the belief." Very quickly after that he started to move to step down as Premier.

You guys got booed at a public forum in rural Alberta by people who were informed. Frankly, they booed someone that's quite well respected. Now, I don't agree with the hon. Member for – is it just Rocky View?

An Hon. Member: Foothills-Rocky View.

Ms Blakeman: Foothills-Rocky View. Thank you very much.

I'm hard pressed to think of anybody that's further away from me on the political spectrum than the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View. Nonetheless, I will admit that . . . [interjection] Yeah. Okay.

I believe that he is a fairly well-respected individual. He has a PhD. He's not a stupid man. He does his homework. He's a fairly good administrator, from what I've seen of the departments he's administrated. This is not some newbie. This isn't somebody that was elected six months ago. He knows his stuff, and he got booed pretty near to home stomping ground. You guys have been given a serious boot in the behind here. You didn't listen, and it's made this whole process much more interesting. Of course, I'm thrilled because I like to see that kind of engagement from the public, but it's serious for you folks.

I wasn't at all surprised to find out that – last week we were sort of ambling along, taking our time. We'd be back after the constituency week, no big hurry. Then the Member for Foothills-Rocky View got booed in Eckville on Thursday night last week, and come Tuesday, when we're back in the House, we now have a time allocation motion on Bill 10. Those things all track one after another. So here we are with a time allocation.

At this point what I would like to do on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar is move an amendment onto the floor for discussion. That amendment is adding after section 18 in the amending act and is amending section 67. They have it at the table.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll pause for a moment. Please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. In our caucus, as I said, we have had different opinions on the original land stewardship bill, but the more we looked at and the more we thought about Bill 10, which is the amending act, the less we liked it. It's just not going far enough.

8:30

Then there are the inevitable discussions about: "Okay. Do we all get together and do a hoist? Do we do a million amendments to try and slow things down? Do we even bother trying to fix this thing? Is it fixable?" In the end what we decided to do was to bring forward – because let's face it. There's a majority in here. The government has 68 seats. They're going to pass this damn bill. We're going to talk to it for five hours, and the government is going to pass it. It's not going to make a whole heck of a lot of difference what we do here. The government is still going to pass it.

So what is the most effective thing that the Official Opposition caucus could do around this bill? Well, let's try and mitigate the unforeseen consequences. Let's try and get a process in place that would allow us to come back and correct any truly egregious problems that roll out as a result of the amending act.

The amendment that is put on the floor by myself on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is asking for a review of the act. It is inserting after section 18 of Bill 10 a section that would actually come in after section 67 of the original Land Stewardship Act so that within two years after the bill comes into force, a special committee established by the Legislative Assembly shall begin a comprehensive review of the act and shall submit to the Legislative Assembly within 18 months after beginning the review a report that includes any amendments recommended by the committee. So it's what we would call a select special committee that reviews legislation. [interjection] Oh, crap. I'm sorry. All right. I'm looking at an earlier version of what we had. I'll just look at the one that you all have in front of you.

Within 3 years after Bill 10, Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, comes into force, a special committee established by the Legislative Assembly shall begin a comprehensive review of the Act and shall submit to the Legislative Assembly, within 18 months after beginning the review, a report that includes any amendments recommended by the committee.

The idea behind this was to be able to look at the act fairly quickly and deal with the beginnings of it because the way the regional plans – remember, let's go back to the original act here, which was to put in place a series of consultations and regional plans, seven regional plans, that covered the province. We've started on the first two, the lower Athabasca and the South Saskatchewan. They are now positioned to come in two years apart. So with seven of them, it's going to take 14 years before we essentially roll the last one into place. We thought: "Yikes. Do we really want to wait until a couple of years after the last ones roll into place? Even if they get better at the process and speed it up, which is not a good idea because that would be foreshortening the public consultation section of it, which is the lengthy part of it, do we want to wait that long?" Of course, the answer is no. Good heavens. You could be 15 or 20 years out, right?

It's a little arbitrary to say three years. I agree there. But we really wanted to find a point where we could say: Okay; once the amending act comes in and is passed, presumably out of committee tonight and out of third reading possibly tomorrow or in the middle of the night or maybe after we come back from our constituency week – I can't tell anymore – that three years from that date we would start a review, which would allow us at that point to look at the first two and possibly the first three of the regional plans and how they've actually worked. That would allow us to put recommendations forward which could influence how the final four are implemented.

That's the thinking behind the amendment that we've brought forward. We know the government is going to pass this amending act. It's not what we wanted. It's not good enough. You're always debating in political terms: is the glass half full or half empty? I think the realization we've come to in our caucus is that the glass is half empty. It's not good enough. We're not willing to hold our nose and vote for it and all of those other euphemisms for: we're willing to support a bill that we're not incredibly happy with. We're so unhappy with the lack of things that have been put forward under Bill 10, which is the amending act where the government is trying to fix the mistakes it made. They're just not fixing enough of them. There's not a serious attempt to do things.

So I've moved that.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Hinman: I would just like to briefly comment that I appreciate this amendment that's been brought forward. I would have to say that, you know, if we even just look at the Oregon factor and their first land assembly act, if you want to call it that. It's the only one in the States that's come forward in I don't know how many years it's been now, and it's been a disaster. So I think that they bring out very valid points. Let's see how this works before we enact a bunch more. I think that we should heed this amendment and vote on it and bring it forward.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Mr. Kang: I'm also standing up in support of this amendment. I think it would be a good idea. We will get a clear picture, you know, if we do one or two regional plans, of where we want to go with it and all the mistakes we made with them. We can correct those, and if we cannot continue on, maybe we can scrap the whole thing and start afresh.

For that reason, I'm supporting the amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to Bill 10. The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to rise today and speak to Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. Some people believe that provincial land-use planning is something new, but of course it really is not. Way back in 1948 the Alberta government under Premier Ernest Manning created the green forested areas and white settled areas of our province, and in its day that was a land-use plan. Another example, perhaps a little better and more recent, was the Lougheed government in 1978 with the eastern slopes policy. It was to address the development during the last period of rapid growth.

Over time Alberta leaders with foresight like Ernest Manning and Peter Lougheed have responded to the growing population and economy by putting in place new land-use guidelines. Of course, that has come again.

We all know that today's decisions shape tomorrow's realities. That is especially true with decisions involving land use. For instance, once a subdivision is approved, once we build a new highway or interchange or approve a new cement factory or any other sort of development, it is difficult if not impossible to undo. The new land-use framework provides a strategic blueprint for all levels of government so that we can make the right decisions today.

Now, like many members of the Assembly and all sorts of Albertans I do not believe in change simply for the sake of change. The justification for initiatives like the land-use framework must be strong, indeed. It will change the way that we manage land in our province, and that is pivotal. The burden of proof is high. I believe it's justified and it's what Albertans have asked us for.

We've experienced hypergrowth in this province all across the province. In the last 25 years we've seen the population of the province grow by a million people, from 2 million to well over 3 million. In Calgary alone, of course, we have more than a million people now. The Edmonton capital region is not far behind. In our lifetime, in fact by 2026, Alberta's population is projected to hit 5 million people, and at this rate of growth our population will double, to over 10 million, this century. Obviously, more people mean more activities on the land. Not only that; we now have 2.6 million cars and trucks on our roads.

An Hon. Member: How many?

Mr. Rodney: That's 2.6 million cars and trucks on our roads. You can compare that to 1980: 1.6 million.

Now, Mr. Chair, when Albertans aren't working, we know they're out and about. They're hiking, they're backpacking, they're fishing, they're hunting, they're cross-country skiing, and, of course, they enjoy motorized recreation in great numbers. In fact, here are some of those numbers.

An Hon. Member: How about mountain climbing?

Mr. Rodney: They do that, too, sir. Sometimes on all-terrain vehicles.

I do want to point out the fact that when it comes to ATVs, the use has more than quadrupled in the past 20 years, from 17,000 to over 82,000. Add to these the almost 29,000 registered snowmobilers in Alberta, which have increased by two-thirds from 17,000 back in 1987.

On top of this spike in population and recreational activities, we have to layer on a corresponding increase in industrial activities. Last year 26,000 wells were drilled in Alberta. That's double just 20 years ago. One decade ago there were no wells being drilled for coal-bed methane, but today there are over 12,500 CBM wells, 11,000 just since 2004.

With respect to agriculture, Albertan farmers and ranchers own and use about one-third of the province's land, but from just before I was born, back in 1960, until just a few years ago, 2006, the number of cattle in confined feeding operations increased from well under 3 million to well over 6 million. With respect to hogs, they've increased from less than 1 and a half million to well over 2 million as well.

With respect to forestry, back in the early '80s Alberta's forest companies produced a billion board feet of lumber, but today our province produces annually 3.2 billion board feet of lumber, more than triple. Alberta has gone from producing no oriented strand-board in the early '80s to becoming the third-largest source of OSB in North America, with more than 3 billion square feet produced every year in this province.

Mr. Chair, while the number of people keeps growing, the size of our province does not. There are more and more people doing more and more activities on the same piece of land, and we have reached a tipping point. Sticking with old ways of doing things, some might say a laissez-faire sort of approach, just won't work. Allowing anyone to do anything any time anywhere may have worked to some degree at some point in the past, perhaps when there were 1 million or 2 million Albertans, but with 3 million or 4 million or 5 million or more it's just not going to happen.

If we want to keep what we value in this province, we have to change the way we make decisions about land use. The goal of the land-use framework is to ensure that in 20 years we won't have to tell our grandchildren or, in the case of some of us, our children: I wish you could have seen what Alberta looked like 20 years ago. That is why we are bringing in the land-use framework. We're establishing six new land-use regions with a land-use plan for each, and these are congruent with our major watersheds to facilitate co-ordinating land use with water policy, which makes all kinds of sense. There's the South Saskatchewan and the North Saskatchewan, south-central; upper Athabasca, north-central; lower Athabasca, northeast; upper Peace, northwest; lower Peace, north. And this has just never been done, Mr. Chair, on this kind of a scale in Canada or anywhere else for that matter.

We're working to respect public lands and private lands. We're working to conserve ecologically valuable lands – wetlands, wildlife corridors and habitats, viewscapes, traditional agricultural lands – not to tell landowners how to manage their land but to give landowners the tools and market-based resources to conserve important natural features. We can share the cost as well as the responsibility for conservation and stewardship. Some examples include transfer of development credits, conservation offsets, land trusts, conservation easements, and environmental goods and services.

At this point I would like to highlight a certain place that's very special to me and many people that I know. It's very close to my home; it's very close to my constituency. That, of course, is the OH Ranch, which is an incredible example of great things that can happen in our province. It consists of 10,000 acres of heritage rangeland. That's 10,000 acres of private deeded land with conservation easements from land trusts.

Mr. Chair, we're not talking about stopping growth. We're talking about facilitating smart growth. Some might ask: does this mean trampling on the property rights of rural landowners? As one myself, I can say no. I can assure you that the protection of property rights will be respected in any land-use policy. But protecting this land will require government leadership, not the kind of leadership that imposes choices on the public. They don't impose choices. It's the kind of leadership that gives residents the opportunity to make choices and expenditures that they wouldn't have otherwise.

The Alberta government has primary responsibility for making decisions that meet the economic and environmental and social goals of everyone in Alberta. The government of Alberta expects that regional plans will reflect provincial interests and priorities, and that planning and decision-making must take place at different levels of government. These decisions simply must be aligned, or else they won't work. The land-use framework leaves local decision-making authority with the same officials who currently exercise it, but in the future these decisions will have to be aligned with provincial policy set out in regional plans. Stronger provincial leadership, however, does not mean creating a heavy-handed, centralized bureaucracy in the capital of the province.

In closing, Mr. Chair, Albertans are grateful for the natural wealth and beauty that they've inherited. I know that personally. We acknowledge our collective duty to pass this natural bounty on to the next generation and to the ones that follow, and as my dad taught me, we've got to pass it on as good or better than we received it. Now, at this moment in our short history as a province we have an opportunity for national, even global leadership on sustainable resource management, and we have the capacity, the expertise, and the wherewithal. I ask: if we can't do it in Alberta, who can do it and where? I say that we can do it. I say that we will.

I thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. That was an interesting contribution to the debate from the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. I'm not going to question his sincerity in delivering it. I'm just thinking that if I was a landowner in rural Alberta and I had just listened to that, I would say: "Well, that's all well and good. It's very nice that you've said all these things, that you've assured me, but I'm just not buying what you're trying to sell unless you can come up with something a little more concrete than some of those" – and please don't take offence; it's the first word that comes to mind – "platitudes."

I think there's a real credibility problem. There's a credibility problem with Bill 36 itself, with the ALSA itself. I think the government recognizes that, Mr. Chair, and I think that that is why Bill 10 is being debated tonight. The government is trying to fix some of the problems with the ALSA and trying to repair some of its lost credibility at the same time. The credibility issue is exasperated – I'm sorry – exacerbated. There are many people who are exasperated by all of this, but the credibility issue is exacerbated by some of the other bills that have been referenced over the course of this debate and in the lead-up to this debate, in all those meetings in places like Eckville and Crossfield and so on and so forth, that hundreds and hundreds of people have attended. Bill 50 and Bill 19 are two that come to mind.

You know, I look back to the creation of the land-use framework and its expression as law, as legislation in Bill 36, which, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre indicated in her contribution to the debate a few minutes ago, a number of people in this House initially supported, and since they've had the opportunity to live with it a while longer, they have grown to have serious problems with it. Bill 10, as I indicated I think last night, when we were starting debate on this in Committee of the Whole, is a flawed attempt to fix a seriously flawed piece of legislation. The intentions may be as honourable as the day is long. It is spring; the days are getting longer. Intentions may be getting nobler. But the rubber still needs to hit the road here, Mr. Chair, and the government, I think, really needs to take a second look at this because I don't think that as it sits, it's going to do the job.

There are a number of problems, of course, with not only Bill 10 but Bill 36, the bill that it seeks to amend. There is the issue of phenomenal cabinet power – I won't say absolute, but it's pretty darn close for a democracy – complete plan-making authority, the ability to override plans, no checks or balances. There's lack of compensation. There's lack of consultation requirements, no appeal to the courts. We've talked about all this, and we've also talked about how Bill 10 seeks to address a number of these issues.

You know, listen; I'm not here to suggest for a moment that it's a total, abject failure. I'm just suggesting that in terms of the problems that it seeks to address, in some ways it falls short of the mark. In some ways, I think, Mr. Chair, this bill almost bends over backwards to try and convince people that the government surely does have their best interests at heart. Yet sometimes less is more. Sometimes less is more.

I'm looking at section 14 in Bill 10, under which section 19 of the ALSA is repealed and the following is substituted. The new section 19 deals with compensation. "A person has a right to compensation by reason of this Act, a regulation under this Act, a regional plan or anything done under a regional plan," and it goes on from there. The bill is a matter of public record, and time for debate tonight is limited, so I'm not going to read the whole thing.

Section 19.1, the right to compensation for compensable taking, subs (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), (10): again, I think the intentions were honourable here. It does seek to spell out the matters of compensation, which are of great concern, Mr. Chair, to landowners, property owners who might be affected and, in their opinion at least, negatively so by regional plans coming into force in their area under the ALSA, under Bill 10 as it amends the ALSA, and, of course, by the regional plans themselves. There's a great concern that they will not be fairly compensated or not compensated at all for the compensable taking or the easement or whatever.

As we all know, there's reality and then there's perception, and in politics perception often is reality. I'll even go so far as to say that if the government is right and the people have become convinced that the government is not right, it's the responsibility of government to do what their bosses, the people, want them to do. If the government truly, honestly believes that what the people want it to do is the wrong thing, then the government has the responsibility, having done what the people told it to do, to go back, consult with its experts, consult with its spin doctors, consult with its image consultants and everybody else that they can pull in, and say: "Okay. The people want us to do this, but the people are wrong this time. How are we going to convince the people to change their minds?" Then come back at it again.

Mr. Chair, that's a very natural approach for me to take. I'm an only child, and when you're an only child, no never means no. It just means: no, not now; come back with a better argument and try again. It's rather like growing up to be a lawyer, I think. That was a lawyer joke, but I was looking at a lawyer across the way, the Member for Calgary-Egmont.

I think it's not a bad philosophy in life that if you're truly convinced that you're onto something here and you haven't persuaded people that you are, to keep trying until you do. In the meantime, because we're elected by the people of Alberta, we work for them, not the other way around. We can represent ourselves to them till the cows come home, but once those cows walk through the gate and the people say, "Hey, that's just great, hon. member, but I don't agree with you; I want you to do it the other way," we have a responsibility to do it the way our bosses tell us to do it.

So back to the notion that perception is reality and back to the notion that I put on the floor here a moment ago that section 19.1 represents an effort by the government to bend over backwards to try and persuade people that when it comes to compensation for losses suffered under regional plans brought in by the ALSA, the government really has their best interests at heart. A lot of work went into writing this bill when we already have a model, I would argue, that does the trick, that largely if not hugely has the buy-in and the support of the people of Alberta, that has been used time after time after time to resolve issues of compensation when government needs to take land from property owners, that is respected at the municipal level, that is respected by landowners, and that serves as, I think, a fine template for how we should address this.

Mr. Chair, with that in mind, I would like to put an amendment before this House for debate and vote. I have the amendment here.

If the pages would distribute it. As soon as they have, I will read it into the record.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll pause for a moment.

Hon. members, this is amendment A3.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I will mark it on my copy as amendment A3.

I would hereby move that Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, be amended in section 14 in the proposed section 19 as follows: (a) by renumbering it as section 19(1); (b) by adding "Subject to subsection (2)," before "A person"; (c) by adding the following after subsection (1): "(2) A person's right to compensation under this Act shall be determined in accordance with the principles of compensation outlined in Part 2 of the Expropriation Act with all necessary modifications."

I will speak briefly to my amendment, Mr. Chair. I'm certainly not going to read into the record part 2, Procedure for Compensation, from the Expropriation Act because, well, I would run out my time and most of my colleagues' time if I did that. It is a somewhat lengthy section, but it pretty much covers the issues of compensation where expropriation of private land is concerned under a number of different scenarios, and it has done for quite some number of years. It is well-understood legislation. It is legislation that has buy-in from the people of Alberta. It is not legislation where people go: "My God, what have you foisted upon us? You're taking away my property rights. Your taking away my right to compensation. You're taking away my right to appeal. You're taking away this, that, and the other thing." This is something that is well understood, that works well, and if it ain't broke, folks, don't fix it.

Now, Bill 10 is not totally broken – I'm not suggesting that it is totally broken – but it does not go all the way to fixing Bill 36 by any stretch of the imagination. But it's worth trying to improve from the form in which the government presented it to this House. It is worth trying to improve because as someone in this House said – and I'm sorry; I can't remember who it was, so I can't give proper credit. But somebody said earlier today that, otherwise, we are throwing out the baby with the bathwater, quite frankly.

I refer you back to what I said in this House last night. I refer you back to what I suspect you have all heard from numerous people as you've done your consultations about the controversy around these bills, and that is that there is, I think, a widely held belief among the people of Alberta that the land-use framework was a visionary document full of a number of visionary principles and a number of land-use principles and initiatives that we need in this province, that we require in this province if we are to manage future growth. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed touched on some population projections, and I've got no quibble with what he has said there. He touched on some history as well, one of the last times that we were under incredible growth pressures, and the Lougheed government brought in some land-use planning around the eastern slopes.

Remember, this all started, Mr. Chair, because in 2005, 2006, 2007, around about there, we were in a situation where virtually every square inch of land in this province had competing potential uses, competing interests trying to use that land. Without good land-use planning and good regional planning and good land-use principles to guide those regional plans, that's only going to get worse as our province grows and as there is more demand for everything that Alberta has to offer the world across all platforms.

So there's no quibble on this member's part with the land-use framework.

There are some serious quibbles with the application of that land-use framework as expressed in the ALSA. There are some concerns on the part of this member that this attempt in Bill 10 to fix the ALSA doesn't really do the trick, doesn't go far enough. Sometimes it doesn't go far enough because of what it doesn't say, and sometimes it doesn't go far enough because, in the case of section 19, it says so much that it is a little bit like, as Shakespeare said, "The lady doth protest too much, methinks." It has the effect of looking, to a very skeptical population, as though the government is trying to say: "Look here. We've got it all laid out for you. We have your best interests at heart."

Well, the Expropriation Act, Mr. Chair, I think, is an ongoing expression of best principles and best interests and a way and a process that's well understood and well respected to manage those interests and to manage those conflicts around fair compensation. As I hear it, as I travel around the province, as I talk to Albertans, the question of fair compensation is one of the primary concerns around our Land Stewardship Act and around the Land Stewardship Amendment Act, and it's not the only one by any stretch of the imagination. If we didn't have these time limits on debate, I'm sure that there are many, many people in here who would bring in many good, well-intentioned, well-reasoned, well-thought-out amendments that would address all those other concerns. If I have the opportunity, I'll bring another amendment or two over the course of the evening as well.

On this particular amendment, Mr. Chair, I think this addresses the issue of compensation, the issue of fairness around compensation, the issue of the conflicts around compensation in an open, transparent, well-understood way, and I would urge the government to accept this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on amendment A3.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I'd like to just speak briefly on amendment A3. Again, this has been a major concern for the Wildrose caucus, that basically the authority has been given to the minister to decide what he thinks is fair compensation. There are so many acts, and this was one of the amendments that we also wanted to bring forward, that was on the expropriations. So we naturally are going to support this.

We have an Expropriation Act. It is very lengthy and detailed on what proper compensation is and more than just the investment money but also future possibilities. It's very extensive, and we would urge the government to accept this and take it out of the minister's decision-making authority and power to say: oh, this is the proper and full compensation. Let's use the Expropriation Act. This is what we're talking about. For the greater good of society when the government does need to take some of these lands or whatever it is, let's follow the Expropriation Act and not give that discretion to the minister.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to the amendment?

I'll call the question on amendment A3 as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to the bill.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to rise today to speak to Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. I'd like to focus my comments on section 1(2)(c), which states that the purpose of the act is "to provide for the co-ordination of decisions by decision-makers concerning land, species, human settlement, natural resources and the environment." I want to talk today about the bill not so much from the perspective of the legislation but more its impact to someone who has for a long time worked in the resource extraction industry and, in my case particularly, forestry.

Coincidentally, my former employer, Millar Western Forest Products, which operates in the Al-Pac forest management area, is a party to the lower Athabasca regional plan. They are party to it, Mr. Chair, but they are not afraid of it. Not only do forest workers plan the removal, regeneration, and production of the forest, but they also, in order to turn conifers into lumber and deciduous into pulp, live there, play there, and they work side by side with people in other industries with very different priorities. Right or wrong, the hydrocarbon extraction industry has much shorter markets and capital-driven timelines than forestry. Conflicts exist. They've always existed, and they're managed.

In Boyle today, unlike 20 years ago, there's virtually a house on every quarter section. Hobby farms and the smallholders work resource extraction to, as they say, pay for the tractor. People involved in agriculture, forestry, oil and gas, and recreation all come together on the land because, by and large, it's the same people who use it for more than one purpose.

Temporary market-driven cuts in production to my mill in 2008 were felt across the region. A reduction in an annual allowable cut would likely also be felt across the region, but it would not be a temporary one. Now, I don't know that a mill closure would necessarily be a big deal to people except for those who happen to have some skin in the game, but to them it's a very, very real problem. So when you decide to let your opinions be dictated by the legal community, you need to be very careful to make sure that you find one who understands where you live and knows what you do. There is a very real need in Alberta, Mr. Chair, to get everyone at the table, and land stewardship is the way to do it.

World-leading research such as the EMEND project in the Peace River constituency, which stands for ecological management emulating natural disturbances, or the water resource research done by Dr. Ellie Prepas at Meanook in Athabasca actually prove that the first step in landscape management is to determine what you want to manage the landscape to achieve. It is possible to manage the landscape for many outcomes: water, roads, fish, timber, caribou, spotted owls, highways, power lines, agriculture, grazing, recreation, conservation, country residential, even urban expansion and residential development.

Only the unwise are going to say that moose are more important than fish or that gravel is more important than mushrooms or that my tree is more important than your SAGD operation, and please just go park your quad and hang up your gun because you're making too much noise and you're scaring the deer.

There are those whose knowledge of the lower Athabasca is obtained from the passenger window of a Citation when they're flying from Calgary to Fort McMurray. They may believe that spreadsheets will tell you everything you need to know and that likely in the corporate universe any plan is going to be the wrong plan if it didn't pass the bottom line or, more importantly, shareholder return on equity. Their review really isn't saying: I don't care about the land base. What it's saying is: "Let me know what it's going to cost. I want to be a good corporate citizen, but I want to know what it's going to do to my costs to play with the lower Athabasca." Frankly, that's fair enough.

Without a comprehensive and, in fact, more impartially reliable planning process those whose offices overlook the Bow River will have a great deal of difficulty justifying to their own shareholders and investors that a SAGD investment in Alberta is somehow better than a SAGD investment in Saskatchewan.

Corporate industry loves certainty of supply and of regulation, and the world is full of examples where certainty has been absent and the results have been, frankly, disastrous. If I were to talk potash in Saskatchewan, Mr. Chair, I think you'd know what I mean. In 1975 the NDP government in that province nationalized that industry. After bleeding money to the tune of $800 million, a Conservative government took over, gave the industry back to the private sector, and frankly that same industry to this day now controls 25 per cent of the world's potash market. Even today, the current NDP opposition sums up private ownership as – quotation from their website – that they would require guarantees that the potential corporate owners not only accept Saskatchewan's current royalty and taxation regime but also accept the rights of the people of Saskatchewan to change royalty and taxation regimes in the future at their will. Now, that is not what I would call a climate for investment certainty. It may, in fact, explain to us to some extent the proliferation of green and white licence plates in the province of Alberta. But in saying so, we know that we not only compete for our resources, for money, and for people, but we even have to do so with our neighbours.

Our economy is based upon price makers. We're not price takers. We sell commodities, and we have to compete with producers who have a variety of cost models. I could not run my mill in Boyle if I did not have a reliable, consistent, and cost-effective fibre supply. We will achieve this in the long run by creating a framework where everyone with a role is involved. Everyone has input and has understanding of the objective for the plan.

The property owners who are party to the lower Athabasca plan or, indeed, to any of the particular projects talked about in either Bill 36 or in the amendment in Bill 10 have no greater or lesser right of property than anyone else in the province of Alberta. I believe and I continue to maintain that a regional level of planning creates cost efficiencies and certainties that will encourage and enhance the assets of the area by promoting things like the integration of industrial footprint, improvements in the reclamation regime, minimizing disturbances with a multipass approach. Planning leads to certainty. Every Albertan has property rights; of that they can be certain.

Nature, of course, does not care who owns what. Those who will remember the House River fire in 2002 will appreciate the comments by Greg Baxter of the Forest Engineering Research Institute of Canada when he said, "The House River fire was important to Alberta, as the fire behaviour was somewhat unanticipated . . . The big question to be [asked] is: is fire behaviour in aspen slash different than in pine or spruce slash? If so . . . how?" The significance was that the House River fire behaved differently than the Chisholm fire the previous year, in 2001. Greg's research indicated that the difference was largely due to the fuel loading of the aspen and conifer slash from harvesting activities.

The report also commented on the extensive oil and gas salvage in the area: 248,000 hectares later a lot was learned that makes regional planning in the area just that much more relevant. Impact on the landscape led to impact to the landscape. The reason we don't lose more forest, Mr. Chairman, more well sites or more trucks on shared roads is because industry has been planning for years. Forest companies have the best geographic information systems, and they share it because it makes money by reducing road conflict, by reducing construction costs, and by reducing safety risks.

The regional planning model works. The amendments in Bill 10 make it work just that much better. We can lead by standing up for what we believe, or we can hide behind what we are opposed to.

On a landscape basis the co-ordination of decision-making means we don't have to pick winners and losers. The people who want gravel or the person who wants a 300-horsepower V-drive boat on the lake will have the same say in the future. We have very sophisticated spatial data and systems available to us and can manage landscape influences if we have a consistent, considerate, and common approach to data management. Every user has a bit of data, and we need to bring it all together. When challenged, people who don't understand the competing interests on a landscape, on any landscape, will respond with anger and fear. Once we get over the noise and get into the details, it is impossible to argue that a co-ordinated approach is not better than a free-for-all. We have been moving in relatively unco-ordinated steps in this direction for a long time. Bill 36 and the amendments in Bill 10 support a strong and comprehensive model for people to follow.

Noise about extinguishing rights is nonsense. It's based on political fearmongering. More importantly than that, by deliberately taking words out of context, we create troubling and inaccurate interpretations. We don't like it when people cherry-pick Bible quotes or deliberately distort a speaker's comments, typically because it is self-serving and attempts to give the speaker some advantage over the audience. You can't call it outright lying, but certainly the opportunity to deceive exists.

Mr. Chairman, Albertans want to live, work, and play on the landscape, and they want to know that development makes sense. People like things that make sense. Leadership and planning, commitment, and a long-term view that benefits everyone makes sense. I urge all of my colleagues to support the bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to continue where I left off earlier, when my time ran out. We talked about section 19, the restricted right to compensation if government approves.

We want to go on now to section 20(1). "Every local government body affected by the regional plan must . . . review its regulatory instruments" and bring them into compliance. This is like telling your son or your daughter that they can do whatever they like as long as it complies with what your plan is for them to do. It's nonsensical. What's the purpose of saying that they have these regional areas when the regional plan is dictated by the minister?

Section 23. If the minister determines that a trigger or limit has been exceeded, the minister must direct the appropriate official to the minister's government department to initiate a management response consistent with the framework. The person responsible shall comply with the lawful direction of an official in respect to the management response referred to above. Essentially, if the government doesn't like what you're doing with your land, a government bureaucrat will be designated to come up with a management plan to tell you how to run your farm, and you're going to have to comply.

These are all major concerns, Mr. Chair, with Bill 10 and the inadequate amendments that they're making to Bill 36. We need to do a better job. It just doesn't work. The idea that for whatever arbitrary reason the minister can send someone out and say, “We’re revoking your licence” is concerning. The government’s response to section 2 in their amendment is to put in, I think, seven areas, seven different acts to say: well, this power doesn’t go into the Land Titles Act. This is section 2(2)(a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), and (g): the personal property act, the Vital Statistics Act, the Wills Act, the Marriage Act, the traffic act, and the Cemeteries Act.

The problem is, Mr. Chair, that once again this government is trying to rush these things through and is realizing – it has been brought up so many times – that the pressure is growing in Alberta as they understand the latitude that the minister has. They’re wanting to rush this through, hopefully thinking: if we get this through and there’s nobody talking about it, this will have a quiet death here in the province, and on we can go. It just doesn’t happen that way. The problem is that Bill 36 is 18 months going strong and causing problems. Again, when we saw LARP come out, this was exactly the suspect that industry and other people felt was going to happen, where licenses are rescinded. It just isn’t good enough.

So we would like to bring in another amendment, and I’ll hand this off to the page to bring up to the table.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we’ll pause for a moment while the amendment is passed around.

Okay. This is amendment A4.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. In law there’s something that’s very important. Once a list is started, it becomes exclusive. We want this to be inclusive. Because it’s exclusive, those bills that aren’t mentioned are therefore not part of it.

In section 3 in the proposed section 2(2) by adding the following after clause (a):

- (a.01) the Water Act,
- (a.02) the Mines and Minerals Act,
- (a.03) the Forests Act,
- (a.04) the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act,
- (a.05) the Public Lands Act,
- (a.06) the Fisheries (Alberta) Act,
- (a.07) the Agricultural Operation Practices Act,
- (a.08) the Oil Sands Conservation Act,
- (a.09) the Oil and Gas Conservation Act,
- (a.10) the Coal Conservation Act,
- (a.11) the Highways Development and Protection Act,
- (a.12) the Animal Health Act,
- (a.13) the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act,
- (a.14) the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act,
- (a.15) the Animal Protection Act,
- (a.16) the Pipeline Act,
- (a.17) the Dairy Industry Act,
- (a.18) the Farm Implement Act,
- (a.19) the Pharmacy and Drug Act,
- (a.20) the Gaming and Liquor Act.

We hope that we’ve included all of the acts that should be under this bill that have failed to be listed under section 3. We feel that this amendment is critical. We cannot allow these other acts to be in the arbitrary decision of the minister.

In section 3 of Bill 10 statutory consent authorized by a certain act is excluded from those which Bill 10 can rescind. One of the most notable is the Land Titles Act. It is reassuring to know that Albertans will not simply have their land titles extinguished. The Marriage Act is also enumerated. It’s reassuring to know that the SRD minister can’t decide to annul my marriage when they pass the South Saskatchewan regional plan. There are a number of acts missing from section 3. They say that it’s comical, but the fact is that it was put in there. Obviously, there’s a reason why they put it in yet missed so many more.

There are a number of acts missing from section 3. Our amendment seeks to add 20 relevant acts, ones that grant various sorts of permits, licences, registrations, approvals, authorizations, dispositions, certificates, allocations, agreements, or instruments upon which people’s livelihoods depend.

One of the most basic yet fundamental roles of government is the protection and preservation of property rights. Without such protection our peace and prosperity would be jeopardized. Property rights are the foundation of each individual’s and family’s financial security and quality of life. For example, farmers and ranchers need to know that their investment in their land and livelihood is protected, that it will not be devalued by others, including government, without just compensation. Those owning residential or commercial properties in urban and rural areas need to feel confident that not only will wrongdoers be criminally prosecuted for trespassing and vandalism but also that the government won’t pull the rug out from underneath their investments without fair notice and compensation.

In order for Alberta’s economy to prosper, businesses need to know that their investments are stable. They need to trust that the government won’t suddenly reverse course and confiscate their land or rescind leases after these companies have spent their time and money developing projects in Alberta. The way to do this is the rule of law, predictable and precedent based, not arbitrary ministerial decisions. Rights which are subject to the discretion of a politician or bureaucrat are not rights at all.

The current government has shown a lack of respect for basic property rights with Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act of 2009. The government granted itself the authority to freeze large tracts of private land for public purposes without having to compensate landowners for the cost of forgoing development, business interruptions, relocations, or other related damages.

Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, eliminated the role of the Alberta Utilities Commission to determine Alberta’s needs for electrical expansion and allowed the cabinet to declare unilaterally that a 16-fold increase in capacity is urgently needed. Last fall the PC government passed Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Amendment Act, 2010, which went against the common law understanding of property rights, and simply declared that the government owns all underground pore space, pores that they want to pump CO<sub>2</sub> into. These are two more examples of the current government passing laws that consolidate the decision-making authority in cabinet while undermining your property rights and the rule of law.

Now we have Bill 10, which proposes various amendments to ALSA, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, 2009. ALSA divides the province into seven land regions and authorizes cabinet to implement sweeping regional plans for each area of the province that override whatever had previously been in place. This means that central planning at the Legislature rather than by locally elected and accountable municipal councils and landowners will ultimately decide what types of activities are going to be permitted or prohibited on private land in every region of the province.

The act allows cabinet to extinguish or rescind, whatever word the government wants to use, rights held under these licenses, permits, leases, and approvals with limited or no compensation. Because they classify the decisions made in the regional plan’s policy, there is no right to appeal the decision to the courts.

That is why this amendment is important. These acts are designed to give licences to Albertans to operate businesses. Whether it’s the Forests Act or the Public Lands Act or the Water Act, each of them is mandated to distribute their licences for various industries in a sustainable way. The Forests Act, for example, is explained on the SRD website. “This Act establishes an annual allowable cut in coniferous and deciduous forests. It prohibits persons from damaging the forest in any way and allows the Minister to construct and maintain forest recreation areas.” So there are conservation provisions in it, and those who get a tree harvesting licence assume that they are granted the freedom, the right, the licence to harvest certain trees. This would be a reasonable assumption until now.

After LARP came out, the lower Athabasca regional – again, whether it’s a plan or a draft, which I always find comical, they want to say that it’s a draft. We know that these licences are liable to be extinguished if the minister decides suddenly that for whatever reason, because nobody can appeal or demand the rationale, he wants to extinguish their licences in his regional plan. The point is that all kinds of industries and professionals rely on the acts to plan their business, hire employees, raise capital, and even base their decisions on whether they want to come to Alberta to do business and hire people on the reliability of this framework.

As indicated, there are stewardship provisions already built into these other acts, so there is no need for a huge new act to trump all of this and throw it out and throw everything into doubt, no economic reasons and not environmental ones. We just need to use the acts that we already have. Some of the acts we are talking about even have “conservation” in the title: the Coal Conservation Act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, the Oil Sands Conservation Act. If they’re not doing their job, Mr. Chair, why not bring each of them in to make the adjustments, like the government is doing with Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act?

We need the rule of law, not a superlaw that overrules everything else and gives all kinds of arbitrary powers to the minister and cabinet. There has been an undeniable trend in the current government to concentrate power in the executive and undermine all the checks that exist on their prerogative. This is something that we should all expect when one party has ruled for 40 years. Everyone in that party starts to utterly trust the government and lose the vigilance they owe their constituents as MLAs. They forget the reason why independent commissions, property rights, local governments, and the rule of law are essential.

These checks are in place to ensure that government doesn’t go too far, but when you give utter trust to a centralized government, you begin to see these checks and balances as nothing more than a nuisance. Bill 36, or ALSA, undermines, supersedes, or eliminates all these competing authorities and centralizes decision-making authority in cabinet. The amendments in Bill 10 do little to change this fact as the government embarks upon the admittedly difficult task of engineering a new framework for land-use planning. Whenever they encountered attention, they decided: let’s just give that power to the stewardship minister.

A government that respected local authorities, independent commissions, existing legislation, and the right of Alberta property owners to have recourse to the law would have come up with a much more balanced land-use framework. ALSA, even as amended, not only pushes municipal authorities aside; it utterly undermines their authority. Not only does it direct municipal councils to rewrite their bylaws to suit the minister’s plans; it make provisions for the stewardship minister to withhold transfers to the municipalities or to rewrite the municipal bylaws directly if he’s not satisfied with what they have done.

9:30

As with the regional advisory council, that governed land planning from 1955 to 1995, we need to empower local municipalities in the decision-making process in order to have actual democratically based regional planning instead of central planning under Bill 36. The minister does not know how to plan for a region better than the regional authorities. Vague promises of giving the locals a hearing is not good enough.

It’s always interesting to me, Mr. Chair, that they start off by having a regional advisory council. This is where they’re going to ask advice on what they should do. Why don’t we just leave it there, in those regional areas, with the so-called council that they’re looking for?

Alberta currently has a number of respected, experienced bodies that regulate growth and development: the Alberta Surface Rights Board, the Energy Resources Conservation Board, the Alberta Utilities Commission, the Land Compensation Board. These independent bodies have been in power to balance economic growth with property rights in the overall interest of Albertans. For the most part they have been doing a reasonable job. Reforms should be made within the existing framework to address problems so that Alberta’s regulatory system is open and fair for all.

When ministries override these independent authorities, the results are often disastrous, as we are seeing with Bill 50, where the current government took the power line needs assessment out of the hands of independent experts. The Wildrose caucus believes that government should resist the temptation to overrule and undermine independent bodies. They are there precisely to serve as a nonpolitical check that acts in the public interest while treating individuals fairly, but this government seems incapable of seeing the value of independence. They don’t appreciate that there need to be checks and balances to ensure that the government is limited and accountable and does not either trample the rights of the individual or set the whole province back by pursuing misguided ideological projects, with all kinds of dangerous and unforeseen consequences.

We also have a great deal of existing legislation, passed by this House over the years, that has evolved to handle growth and conservation issues. The most troubling act that Bill 36 overrides, in my opinion, is the Water Act. The Water Act is designed to manage this precious resource. We need to work within it rather than let the stewardship minister trample the water rights it bestows. Water licences, especially in southern Alberta, are a valuable piece of property. The first in time, first in right principle has been working well, and it has handled our shortages for decades. All this is threatened to be overturned. The Water Act is predictable, and we know when and how and in which priority the water is going to be allocated.

Organizing our regions along watersheds makes some sense even if they are too big in the current model, but we don’t need to generate a whole new provincial department under the sustainability minister to duplicate what it should be doing in the Environment department. Under the Water Act and under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act the Environment minister sets overall limits, guided by consideration of cumulative effects. Local authorities are empowered to make decisions for their communities within these broad limits established by the province. This should continue to be the basis of land-use planning. The Wildrose believes that we should let the Water Act work and let the Environment ministry do its job of monitoring specific emitters and setting overall parameters based on cumulative effects.

We also believe that the most offensive aspect of Bill 36 is the utter disregard for individual rights. This concern was not adequately addressed by the window dressing of this Bill 10. The provincial government has a leading role in protecting the environment and establishing the powers of local authorities. It has been doing so for a century. There are many established practices and rights that have been conferred over the last century. It is important that these not all be overturned for the sake of ministerial expediency. The land-use and development framework in Alberta must be stable and predictable for the sake of investors' confidence and property owners' peace of mind. Instead, Bill 36 enables, even encourages the stewardship minister to wield arbitrary power.

The Wildrose caucus believes that the government must establish conservation or no-go zones in advance instead of revoking leases and permits after companies and individuals have invested in development. The government should respect licences and permits as allowances that cannot simply be rescinded. Revoking a permit should only be done in very rare circumstances if at all, and there should be safeguards in place to ensure that this is not done capriciously and that full compensation follows. These safeguards must include recourse to the courts.

The Wildrose caucus also believes that we should immediately repeal offensive legislation like bills 19, 36, 50, and 24 and pass an Alberta property rights preservation act to ensure full, fair, and timely compensation to property owners and full recourse to the courts.

Mr. Chair, we need to accept this amendment. We need to add these other 20 acts under section 3 of Bill 10 in order to protect all these others so it's not just arbitrarily given to the minister to say: you know, we're going to revoke this licence; we're going to revoke that licence; we'll decide how much compensation. Because they've started the list, let's accept these amendments and adopt them into Bill 10 and at least safeguard these other areas so that the government can't in its arbitrary decisions rescind licences and investments in businesses at their discretion.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any hon. members wish to speak to amendment A4?

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, of course, will rise and support amendment A4. You know, it's funny. The folks over there, opposite, are the ones in charge of this amendment, including the Minister of SRD, who's joined us here tonight. He continues to say – and I've heard this around the province – that the original Bill 36 never once allowed the government to expropriate or extinguish land title rights. It just absolutely wasn't the case. Just absolutely wrong, he would say. Obviously, he would say that it's just completely nuts to say that we could extinguish a marriage licence or that we could extinguish anything under the Wills Act or the Traffic Safety Act or anything like that. This just could never happen. Yet, amazingly, in Bill 10 here are these amendments. It says:

For greater clarification, the definition of statutory consent . . . That apparently doesn't apply to these things.

. . . does not include any permit, licence, registration, approval, authorization, disposition, certificate, allocation, agreement or instrument issued under or authorized by

- (a) the Land Titles Act,
- (b) the Personal Property Security Act,
- (c) the Vital Statistics Act,
- (d) the Wills Act,
- (e) the Cemeteries Act,
- (f) the Marriage Act,
- (g) the Traffic Safety Act, or
- (h) any enactment prescribed by the regulations.

I find it funny that he decided to put those things in there. Now, it's, of course, for greater clarification, I guess. Obviously, in the law nothing is one hundred per cent, but the fact is – and we went over this earlier – that there's no doubt that statutory consent under Bill 36 could easily be interpreted as a land title. I do find it funny, too, that this minister would argue so voraciously that this act clearly did not empower the government to do these things, to extinguish a land title, yet here we are a couple of months later. Bill 10: there it is. It's like magic. It just appears. It's so clear that you didn't know what you were talking about, Minister. In fact, Bill 36 did allow you to extinguish people's land titles. Now, of course, would you have done so? I hope not. I sure hope not. I don't think you would have. I'll give you the benefit of the doubt. But the fact of the matter is that you empowered cabinet to do so. That's just a fact.

Now, you've clarified that no longer under this bill can you seize someone's land title or extinguish someone's land title. That's good. I'm very happy about that. Neither can you extinguish their rights under the Personal Property Security Act. That would be a real problem for banks. It would be a real problem for business and industry in general as well as for the residents of Alberta if you could, and you did have that power under the law that you passed. But now you've taken that power away, graciously. That's fantastic. We could go on.

The problem that you have now is that you've specifically cited several acts under this law that this law does not apply to. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont would know this, that when you specifically in an act cite some inclusions to the exclusion of others that do the same types of things – i.e., issue permits, licences, et cetera – the problem is that that means you're saying that although it doesn't apply to these acts that you've listed here, it does definitely apply to the acts that you don't list here. That's just basic statutory interpretation, and I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont could even verify the truthfulness of that. He is, after all, a QC and would know that.

If that's the case, what that means is that because you've specifically not listed these acts that the amendment that has just been brought forth by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore speaks to, it means that you specifically do mean to have the power to rescind permits, licences, registrations, approvals, authorizations, dispositions, certificates, allocations, agreements, or instruments issued under the Water Act, the Mines and Minerals Act, the Forests Act, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, the Public Lands Act, the Fisheries (Alberta) Act, the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, the Oil Sands Conservation Act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, the Coal Conservation Act, and so forth. So you specifically do have the power to rescind licences under that act.

In fact, we saw that. We saw that with the oil sands leases and the mines leases that were just extinguished or rescinded or will be extinguished or rescinded up in the lower Athabasca regional plan. You do have that power. You've said continuously to Albertans that you didn't have that power, and then you come in here with an act and say: "Oops. Well, for clarification we're going to make sure we can't extinguish people's land titles, but that's just for clarification." Then it turns out that you, in fact, do use this act to extinguish the mineral and mine leases of several dozen companies up in the lower Athabasca. That really is quite shameful, a shameful display of misinformation.

We talk a lot in this House about misinformation and how there are silk-suited lawyers running around rural Alberta giving misinformation, yet here it is by the minister's own pen. Right here is proof of what he was saying, certainly prior to Bill 10, and you can now see why he was so concerned. If it wasn't a concern, you wouldn't have changed the act. When you look at rural Alberta and you look at the incredible loss of support that you're experiencing there right now, the reason for that is because you've lost the confidence of those people, what used to be the Progressive Conservative base, because you haven't listened to them. I think they've been misled by this government, and there's a breakdown of trust. That's why you're in the mess that you're in in rural Alberta.

The Water Act, in particular, is troubling. Why would you want to be able to rescind under the Water Act a water licence? Do you not intend to hold to the principle of first in time, first in right? I know the Environment minister always speaks about how important that is. Is that not what you're doing? If you're going to extinguish or transfer licences, maybe that's needed, maybe it's not, but let's let regional authorities decide that. Is the best way for that to happen for you to be able to rescind those water licences and give them out to new people or sell them to new people, or do we work on a way of transferring those licences or use what's already under the Water Act to transfer those licences? I would say that you should use what's in the Water Act already. There are tools in there that allow for you to transfer water licences. Let's make sure that that's done. Right now there are many people that want to do that, but they can't get approval from the government to do so because they're waiting on the government to pass the South Saskatchewan regional plan. It just doesn't make sense. It doesn't add up. It's certainly not a very wise way of doing things, and it's very disconcerting.

There's, obviously, the Mines and Minerals Act. We saw that earlier. That brings me to a point of mine. When we're talking about the Mines and Minerals Act, what I find distressing and confusing, frankly, with regard to this lower Athabasca regional plan is that I don't understand why on earth the government would release the LARP and not have any kind of cost estimates attached to it. Like, what type of incompetence – it defies logic that you would put out a document saying, "This is a consultative document; now we want stakeholders to give us feedback on this draft lower Athabasca plan" and you don't include in there your cost estimates.

Now, why would you include cost estimates? I don't know. Because maybe taxpayers are a stakeholder in this? Maybe the taxpayers would like to know how much the government is going to spend on paying companies to not develop our resources. That's a new concept. How much is that going to cost taxpayers? Is it going to cost a million dollars? Is it going to cost ten million? A hundred million? A billion? Ten billion? What's it going to cost and over what period of time? Right? We don't know. Nobody knows because it's not in your plan. Where is the estimate?

I know a fiscal conservative like the Member for Edmonton-Calder clearly would like to know that information, would you not? Would you not like to know, Edmonton-Calder, what the estimate is for how much this is going to cost taxpayers? I'm not saying you'd reject it out of hand just because it costs money, but wouldn't you like to know what it might cost before you put your hand up and vote for it? I don't know. That would seem like a pretty reasonable thing. There is nothing in the lower Athabasca plan.

It's almost like the royalty framework, where there was all of this basic back-of-the-napkin math on all the new royalty revenue that the new royalty framework was going to bring into the province of Alberta, and then the exact opposite happened because they drove business out of Alberta, and the price of natural gas tanked and a whole bunch of other factors. None of the calculations added up. The back-of-the-napkin calculations were malarkey.

You're telling me that you can make a back-of-the-napkin calculation, but you can't even make an estimate on this at all? Not even an estimate? It seems pretty transparent that you don't have a clue what you're doing, and you don't have a clue – certainly, the Energy minister doesn't, nor the Minister of SRD – on how much this is going to cost. You know, I just don't understand how that's responsible to taxpayers. But let's leave taxpayers out of it. Let's pretend taxpayers aren't important to this government. With their budget deficits and so forth, that's very clear.

Let's talk about industry, then. We don't want a banana republic. Obviously, we want a place where industry can come and they can feel that when they purchase or they licence something from the government, that's a contract. That's an agreement that is signed. They can put that on their asset sheet, their balance sheet, and develop it within the terms of the licence and eventually reclaim the land, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

You would think that it would be important for the industry to have that confidence in the government of Alberta. Well, they've just shattered that confidence. Now they don't know that because this plan, this lower Athabasca plan, can be changed at any time by this government. Even for those going into the lower Athabasca who buy a mineral lease now, it can be changed. So you've taken out more certainty. It would be okay to take a little bit of certainty out of the equation if they knew how much money they would be compensated for should the government expropriate or take back or rescind that lease, but the government failed in their LARP, in their lower Athabasca regional plan, to give an estimate or any kind of indication on how they are going to compensate industry or these licence holders who are having their leases rescinded. They failed to give any estimate to them on how much that's going to cost them. Nobody knows. Nobody knows.

It's amazing to me that you would come out with a plan that oversees the most important economic region of the province, the lower Athabasca, and you wouldn't put any kind of fiscal estimate, any kind of financial estimate into what it is going to cost to do what you're doing, not to industry, not to taxpayers, not to neighbouring municipalities, not to anybody. There are no estimates. Nobody knows what it's going to cost, who's going to pay for it, how compensation is going to be calculated. And you want feedback on that? Jeepers. Well, here's the feedback. The feedback is that you're paying the people in your departments enough money. Maybe they should do a calculation on this. Rather than just say that this is arbitrarily where we're going to put the conservation zones, this and there, maybe you should actually think about how much this is going to cost people.

It's amazing to me. There are so many folks over there that claim to be fiscal conservatives. Everybody wants to be a fiscal conservative, right? Well, maybe not everybody. But most of us want to be fiscal conservatives, certainly over there. Could you imagine if someone came to you with a business plan and said: "I've got this great plan. We're going to do all this stuff, and it's just going to be fantastic. You're going to get a big return on your investment." And people say: "Okay. Well, can you show me the numbers?" "Oh, we don't have the numbers. Just trust me. It's a great plan. We're going to do this, that, the other thing. We're going to make this new widget. It's going to be fantastic."

Well, I don't want to invest in it. I don't want to approve it. I don't want to be a part of it if you don't have some basic cost estimate in there of how much this is going to cost. Then Albertans and this House can do an estimate and say: "You know what? We're going to take a look." We're going to say: "Is this $1.5 billion worth it to the people of Alberta? Is it worth it for attracting investment, et cetera, et cetera? Is it worth it to spend this kind of money in order to extinguish, rescind, these leases, et cetera?"

I mean, even though the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and myself may have a disagreement on how many conservation zones should be up there in the LARP – I'm just saying that it's possible in theory; I'm not saying that there is – I think that she just as much as I would like to know how much it's going to cost. I mean, isn't this useful information to have, an estimate on that? Shouldn't we at least know how much it's going to cost so we can at least budget for it? I don't know. I think any sane fiscal planner would like to at least have an estimate. No estimate.

I know that this is a bit of a tangent on this, but it needed to be discussed, and I thought this would be a good time to discuss it. It's absurd. Hopefully, the Energy minister, when he goes back and reads the Hansard tonight – I know he will; I know he likes to read the Hansard – will remember, and he and the Minister of SRD might put their heads together and decide between them: "You know what? When we put out the south Saskatchewan regional plan, perhaps we should put out a cost estimate on what this is going to cost industry, the taxpayer, and all stakeholders involved." It's just a suggestion.

You've specifically given yourself power to extinguish water rights, mines and minerals rights, timber rights, anything under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, the Public Lands Act, the Fisheries (Alberta) Act, so it's a fishing licence, the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, anything to do with oil sands, coal, animals, livestock, pipelines, dairy, farm, the Gaming and Liquor Act, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. Since you've given yourself power to extinguish any licences or permits or anything else given under these acts, perhaps you should do some kind of cost estimate for when you do take away those things.

You decide: "You know what? We're going to go and rescind these fishing licences because we want to make this lake a conservation zone." You want to make it part of a provincial park or something. "So we're going to extinguish people's fishing licences or outfitters' hunting licences or whatever. We're going to do that, and that's the plan because we want to conserve." Great. Okay. How much is that going to cost? What are you going to pay? What's it going to cost taxpayers? Let's do the assessment.

Alternatively, you can do what we're asking here and add these acts to the list of acts that are excluded that do not apply to the Land Stewardship Act. I think, Mr. Chair, that the people of Alberta would feel very confident to know that aside from their land title under Bill 10 not being able to be extinguished, which is now the case under Bill 10, that same protection will apply to their water licence, to their mineral licence, to their mining licence, to their fishing licence, to their oil sands lease, to their pipeline permits: all these different things. They can have confidence that if the government is going to come in and take and rescind their rights on that, they're going to do so under those particular acts, under the heads of compensation, et cetera, that are under those acts and that they can only be rescinded for the reasons given in those acts.

For example, I was just reading through the Mines and Minerals Act. There is a way that you can lose your mines and minerals leases, but there are criteria involved. If certain criteria have not been complied with, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, then you can lose the lease. That would be good to know, and it would be good for people to know that when people's lands or rights are expropriated, that the Expropriation Act is going to apply. That would be nice to know with regard to compensation.

This would be a good first step. I hope that the government was clearly riveted, and I hope they'll support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to amendment A4?

I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. With time allocation being in place, it's hard to get your two bits in here. Thanks very much for recognizing me. There are a couple of other things that I want to get on the record about Bill 10 overall and a couple of themes that I'm hearing in response and from some of the debates that we've heard tonight from members of the government caucus. Thank you very much to the two individuals who did speak. It's nice to hear, particularly the Member for Edmonton-Calder. I know that it's all in Calder. Here are some of his reactions to the bill.

Let me start where I left off at the end of my last speaking. I think the process that we have watched the government and others go through has been an interesting test of democracy but also an illumination of the government's hubris. When I talked before about Icarus flying too close to the sun, I mean, the point was that he believed that he was beyond – there are a number of examples in Greek tragedy, actually, of hubris, where the individual believes himself literally above the gods. They just think they're the bee's knees, the end-all, and the gods strike them down for that. It's not a pretty picture. They're a pretty violent bunch, actually, and they do some pretty wicked things to the individual who has placed themselves above the gods.

I find that this government often does that. They are too willing to believe that they are right and not to question themselves.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, if you wish to discuss, please sit down beside the colleague and talk with them there rather than standing.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: I'll continue. Thank you. I think we have seen that process of hubris start to play out in what has happened to the government, and I think this is going to carry over to the election if it doesn't actually trigger the election.

What's happened is that this has started to become two issues that I don't find incredibly related to the point of the bill. For my hon. colleagues in the Wildrose Party and others it's become an issue about property rights versus something, and it's moved away from the essence of what the bill is supposed to be about.

I believe that what we needed it to be about was public good and a planning process, to be able to decide with a reasonable process how we wanted to make decisions. It's a decision-making process about how we would treat our public land or our Crown land. We've moved into this other place, where that's not what it's about at all. I think we need to remember what the original act was about and go back there.

Now, my whole good intentions about this and all the good thoughts about that planning process have been completely subsumed under this other discussion about property rights, and it's become an issue that is rural against urban. I can tell you that when people in Edmonton-Centre, who are well educated, bright people, you know, hear the words "property rights," they think: "Well, what's that all about? I've got a little condo. I own 1,700 square feet. Why are they going on about property rights? That's a rural issue." It's been cast now as a rural issue, and it's not. It is an Albertan issue, but because it's turned into this high-profile what I call billboard kind of politics, it's all coming down to a five-word sentence that can be put on a highway billboard that you can read as you drive by it at 120 kilometres an hour.

That's not what this was supposed to be about, but because of the way the government has carried itself, the hubris it has carried itself with, it's allowed them to be set up and shot down by my colleagues in the Wildrose around an issue of property rights. Yes, property rights are important to Albertans, but so are a lot of other things.

Frankly, this moves me on to another point I want to make. It's not all about money, and I've heard so much talk tonight about money: money, money, money, money, money. It's not all about accumulation of wealth. Yes, that's important, and I'm not saying that it's not, and don't misquote me and say that I did. It's about more things. I mean, even this planning document is supposed to be – I mean, where's the money in recreation? That's about people getting outside and enjoying themselves, a little physical exercise, time with their family. That's not about wealth generation. That is about quality of life. We've become so positional in this discussion. It's become about property rights. It's become about money. That's not everything Albertans wanted this planning document to be.

It was to be about things like food security. It was to be about things like the municipality's ability to control urban sprawl using good agricultural land. That's what this was supposed to be about. This whole discussion has boiled down to billboard signage on property rights and accumulation of wealth – money, money, money – and that's not what Albertans were looking for. They were looking for an opportunity to have reasonable recreational experiences. I'm a snowmobiler. I understand that it's not possible for me to ride my snowmobile in every single square inch of this province. That is not reasonable. There are areas that it's not responsible for me to go into for a number of reasons: because it upsets the wildlife balance, you know, because there are certain areas of land that just shouldn't be gone into. There are lots of reasons for it, guys, but this discussion has descended into a rhetorical, positional discussion.

I still believe in the underpinnings of this, that it was about a planning process that we wanted to put in place that was about land stewardship. It was about looking after public land.

Now, the Minister of SRD and I are never going to agree on where in that continuum we set conservation. The minister is very pleased that in the first plan that came out for the lower Athabasca they were talking about setting aside 11 per cent and possibly as much as 20 per cent and now 23.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, would you mind taking any chair? Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. It doesn't bother me, Mr. Chairman, except that the interruption has knocked me off my rhetoric. That's okay.

I can't go everywhere in the province. I can't cover all areas. There has to be a reasonable balance here. So the minister and I disagree on the continuum of conservation and him being pleased about 11 per cent conservation, but even under that conservation rule he's still going to allow various kinds of development.

Again, I find that falls into the money position, that, you know, if it doesn't make money in this province, the government is not interested in it. That's just too narrow a focus to be taking about something as important as everybody's access to the land that they own. This is public land, Crown land. So I think there should be more conservation. I'm always going to argue for that.

I still argue that at this point we still don't really understand the effect of our activities on the land. People can say: oh, you know, we've got lots of studies. Well, yes, but every day these studies are showing us that we really didn't understand how much water we had and that we don't really understand how much fracking and CCS, carbon capture and storage, are going to affect water aquifers. If we put it down there, is it going to come back up again through some other hole we've poked in the Earth? I mean, things like that we still don't really understand. I would argue that we have not reached the end point in that, so we need to err more on the side of environmental protection and conservation. I don't think we give the conventional oil and gas sector or the oil sands sector enough credit in their ability to step up to the mark and be creative on this one.

The last piece of this act is the ability of the government to govern. We have to have legislation, and everything we do in this House is weighted in favour of the government in order to get stuff done. We can't be in here forever arguing the same point. That's why those rules are in place to say: if it's already been decided, you've got to move on. Ultimately, you do need legislation that says that the buck stops. We all need that kind of certainty. So we need a good land stewardship act.

My problem is that this whole process and what has happened has been, I think, subsumed under a number of other discussions that were not as helpful. The government, in making the choices it has made, has alienated its own backers in rural Alberta, and its attitude has caused a whole upheaval that didn't need to happen and which obscured the actual debate here about land stewardship plans and regional planning and the ability of the local authorities and the people that live there to influence a regional plan and to make it work for them. That's my disappointment in what's happened over the debate of this.

Bill 10 addressed some of the most egregious things the government had implemented in the original Land Stewardship Act. It truly was egregious. I mean, there's way, way, way too much power given there, in the same way that, you know, in the next bill we're going to debate, Bill 8, they take way too much power around collecting information from people. So the government just oversteps all the time, but after 40 years they believe they have a right to do that.

My last points on this are that our caucus is really quite concerned about the issue of democracy in what's happened to this process. We're very concerned about the government overstepping its bounds in a lot of those cases. I still continue to say that we need to have built into this process markers, targets on public good, and the discussion should be about public good. When we talk about including things in Bill 10 like taking away some of the power granted to cabinet and we talk about compensation – in other words, reintroducing the expropriation, that there be an appeal process, which was missing from the original act – I think the other thing we need to include here is the public good and that discussion of public good and public interest being part of the larger discussion on land stewardship.

What's happened is that my caucus is no longer willing to support Bill 10. It's just not enough. The government didn't work hard enough. I'm sorry about that. I'm sad about that because I think we've all missed the mark on this one, but the choices the government made just did not fix enough of the problems that have so offended Albertans. Yes, mostly rural Albertans – fair enough – but ultimately this does affect urban Albertans. It is part of an urban agenda because we're all interested in how the land that we share in trust is treated and in what kind of access we have to it.

Thank you for allowing me to put that on the record. There's a lot more I could have said, but we're time allocated here, and other people need a shot.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, and its commitment to transparency in regional planning. The government's commitment to transparency started long before regional plans and Bill 10. From the very beginning the Alberta government has been committed to an open, accountable, and consultative approach to land-use planning. We have worked to keep people informed and have worked from a solid base of consultation with the public and with stakeholders. The result is a land-use planning process that is transparent and responsive. Bill 10 strengthens both.

Let's remember that a regional approach to land-use planning is itself the outcome of public input. The land-use framework is a bold new direction for Alberta, the first of its kind in Canada. We could take that bold direction because that is what Albertans wanted from us. Back in the spring of 2007, four years ago, our government announced and conducted public consultations. We were seeking public input on what we'd already heard from consultations with stakeholders that included municipalities, aboriginal communities, agriculture, recreation, industry, and environmental sectors and groups.

The public sessions were designed to gather input on a vision and guiding principles for land-use planning, to identify land-use issues of great public concern, and to seek direction and outcomes from Albertans. We backed the consultation with a resource publication, Understanding Land Use in Alberta, and with a workbook. Both were available in all MLA constituency offices, including those of former government members. The resource was also available in most municipal, provincial, and regional government offices and online. We promoted the consultation with paid advertising and highlighted the website.

More than 3,000 Albertans provided input during those spring consultations. People were engaged, and they participated. In October 2007 the government publicly released and posted a 50-page report that summarized the input. Highlights of the summary report were a greater balance between development and the environment; more co-ordinated planning for land, air, and water; more provincial leadership in land-use planning; and support for regional planning. So it is clear that from the start this whole process has been open and consultative and that government has been responding to public direction.

For certain critics with an agenda to suggest that any of this was behind closed doors is to deny the dedicated input and participation of more than 3,000 of their fellow Albertans and is to suggest that the input was immaterial. It wasn't. The outcome of all of that input was the draft land-use framework, that was released for further public and stakeholder consultation in May 2008. Based on what we heard during the earlier consultations, the draft framework made a commitment to cumulative effects management, to conservation and stewardship, to creating an information and monitoring system that supports land-use decisions, to including aboriginal peoples in land-use planning, and to regional planning.

That further consultation resulted in adding a new strategy to the land-use framework, making efficient use of land. As a result of consultation the final framework also added a seventh planning region to the six originally proposed and identified the development of supporting legislation as a priority. I repeat that a new priority to develop legislation to support the land-use framework, including regional planning, was the outcome of public consultation. All this, of course, is available online at landuse.alberta.ca for anyone, including our critics, to see.

I'd invite the members of this Assembly to consider that and to consider the extensive consultation and open access to information at every step as I turn now to discuss the legislation. At the same time that work started very publicly on the first regional plan for the lower Athabasca, work also started on the supporting legislation. Again, both processes were very transparent and highly accountable.

We released the final land-use framework on November 3, 2008. A month later, to the day, we announced the Lower Athabasca Regional Advisory Council. Members were appointed from stakeholder nominees to bring expertise and experience to this important advisory role. Treaty 6 and Treaty 8 First Nations named their own representatives. The news release included biographies of all advisory council members. Terms of reference and a regional profile were posted online. The land-use website carried the minutes of all meetings.

On April 27, 2009 . . .

Bill 10 Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011 (continued)

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Campbell: I'll just say again that on April 27, 2009, we announced Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. The news release included a backgrounder that outlined the regional planning process and one that provided a full history of public consultation going all the way back to May of 2006. I bring this up in the interest of showing transparency in a public process that has had wide public participation. That public participation continued and continues today.

Two days after announcing the legislation, we announced province-wide public open house information sessions on Bill 36. Eleven sessions brought Bill 36 to public attention and discussion from Grande Prairie to Wainwright to Pincher Creek. Sessions were added for Edmonton, Calgary, and Medicine Hat. These were followed with community sessions in the lower Athabasca and neighbouring communities on the lower Athabasca regional planning process and Bill 36.

Over the course of May and June of 2009 government officials were in 26 communities discussing Bill 36. This was all fully transparent. It was publicly announced, posted, advertised, and promoted, and it was all done in the spirit of and commitment to accountability. In the meantime the bill was going through debate in this Assembly, during which every MLA, including those now on the other side of the House, had full opportunity to participate.

In fact, a number of amendments were made to Bill 36 before this Assembly voted to pass the legislation. Those amendments defined the term compensation board for appeal to the amounts of compensation. They clarified how regional plans would apply to Métis settlements. Changes were made to ensure that any tax-based conservation and stewardship tools developed under the act are not implemented without the approval of the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Another amendment required that the Minister of Infrastructure and the Minister of Transportation receive prior notice of plans to register a conservation easement. To my recollection property rights were not raised as an issue to be amended during that original debate, and there's no reason why it should have been because property rights were always protected under Bill 36.

I note that the news release, when we tabled Bill 36, was titled Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, Sets the Bar for Responsible Regional Planning. The news release was subtitled Proposed Act Respects Property Rights and Local Decision-making. That is important because it shows that right from the start this government was committed to property rights and was acting to protect them.

Land titles were always excluded from the definition of statutory consent, so it would be very clear that although both are instruments of an enactment, they are very different instruments. A statutory consent is permission to access a public resource. A land title indicates private ownership. Owned by the public or owned privately: very different.

It is true that Bill 36 did not provide for compensation if a statutory consent is rescinded under a regional plan. That's because those provisions already exist in other legislation; for example, in the Mines and Minerals Act, the Forests Act, and the Expropriation Act. Bill 36 respected those provisions and took nothing away from them. Bill 36 actually created a new market-based compensation provision if a landowner retained title but a portion of the land was subject to a conservation directive under a regional plan.

The Alberta government has good reason to be committed to property rights. First, this is a Conservative government. The rights of the individual is a basic principle of Conservative ideology. Second, many MLAs in this government are landowners.

Some, including the Premier, are landowners for the third or fourth generation. We have a personal interest in seeing property rights protected.

In spite of the protections in the act and the government's reasons for protecting property rights, critics with an agenda succeeded in scaring or angering a lot of people over a situation that never existed, and they claimed that we did all of it behind closed doors in spite of a history of consultation going back to 2006, in spite of a populated and accessible website, in spite of public advertising and open houses and information sessions.

The Premier responded. He ordered a review of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act because the intent and the language clearly were being misinterpreted. He made a promise. No regional plan would be approved until the act was clarified to show full respect for property rights, including compensation and appeal and respect for the right of Albertans to be consulted on decisions that affect them.

That brings us to Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. The wording of Bill 10 has been clarified specifically to show that all existing rights under other legislations are respected.

In particular, I wish to speak to section 5, entitled Consultation Required. This section creates new checks and balances to ensure a transparent consultation process. As a result, regional plans under the land-use framework must be developed through a transparent and accountable process that requires public consultation. We were already doing that, but we weren't required to do it under the law. Now the law is being changed to require what we were doing anyway as a good practice and out of respect for the opinions of Albertans.

Government recognizes that regional planning needs to be informed by regional representatives and by people who live in the planning region. Regional advisory councils of Alberta have provided advice to the government in the development of the first two regional plans, for the lower Athabasca and the South Saskatchewan regions. Many of the people on these councils live and work in their region, representing a broad cross-section of experience and expertise. They generously provide local perspective and wisdom.

In the lower Athabasca the government conducted three rounds of consultation with the public, stakeholders, and municipalities. The first round was the sessions I already mentioned, in May and June of 2009. Those awareness sessions were held in a number of communities in the lower Athabasca and the adjacent upper Athabasca and North Saskatchewan regions. More than 250 people were involved in 13 public and stakeholder sessions, including two in Fort McMurray. The other communities were Lac La Biche, Bonnyville, Cold Lake, Vermilion, St. Paul, Fort Chipewyan, Fort Smith, Athabasca, Smoky Lake, Wabasca, and Fort Vermilion.

For the second round, in September of 2010, the government sought input on the regional advisory council advice in lower Athabasca and in nearby communities in the adjacent regions and in Edmonton and Calgary. Just under 800 people participated in public open houses and stakeholder sessions in the following communities: Bonnyville, Cold Lake, Fort Smith, Fort Chipewyan, Fort McMurray, Lac La Biche, Elk Point, St. Paul, Athabasca, Edmonton, and Calgary.

At this very moment the government is once again consulting with Albertans on the third phase of consultation, this time on the draft lower Athabasca regional plan.

In the South Saskatchewan region the government conducted awareness sessions in 16 communities in the fall of 2009. More than 850 people participated in the stakeholder and public sessions throughout the South Saskatchewan. Sessions were held in the following communities: Calgary, Vulcan, Strathmore, Claresholm, Cochrane, Okotoks, Airdrie, Canmore, Lethbridge, Brooks, Fort Macleod, Pincher Creek, Medicine Hat, Taber, Cardston, and Milk River. The advice to government from the South Saskatchewan regional advisory council has been recently released for public scrutiny, and consultation with the public will occur through an online workbook.

Aboriginal consultation is also critical and has been conducted in an ongoing and continuous fashion throughout the planning process. For example, aboriginal consultation for the lower Athabasca regional planning has been very extensive and inclusive. Since the regional process began in January of 2009, a total of 79 meetings have been held with aboriginal groups. Twenty-five different First Nations aboriginal groups have been contacted, and an additional 16 meetings will be held this April and June with aboriginal groups to discuss the draft plan.

We are doing all this without the law saying we had to. Now under Bill 10 we have a legal requirement to do what we are committed to doing anyway, consulting with Albertans in developing a regional plan. Furthermore, section 5 of Bill 10 requires that the findings of these public consultations must be presented to cabinet. That's accountability. This ensures that the thoughts, concerns, local wisdom, and the special knowledge of regional residents and other Albertans are brought to the cabinet to assist them with responsive decision-making.

Proposed regional plans or amendments will now be required under the amended section 5 in Bill 10 to be laid before the Legislative Assembly. This is all before cabinet can make a final decision about any plan. This gives all members of the Assembly an opportunity to review a regional plan, the same opportunity they had to review the original Bill 36.

All these aspects of section 5 of Bill 10 contribute to a more open, transparent, and accountable process that engages and involves Albertans. It's what we were doing anyway. Bill 10 makes it the law. By doing so, Bill 10 responds to concerns about accountability and strengthens that commitment to Albertans.

For the sake of increased transparency and accountability I ask you to support Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to Bill 10, an act to amend the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act. This, of course, is a bill that has received a great deal of political attention over the last few weeks arising from a fairly animated debate within the public about what the implications of the bill are to all Albertans and, in particular, to those who are concerned about property rights. This is something that has been discussed at some length throughout communities in the province, and it raises some legitimate concerns.

Probably the key thing to point out at this point, however, is that those concerns that have been expressed throughout Alberta relate not solely to the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act but really relate as much or, I would suggest, more to the former Bill 19, the land assembly act, and Bill 50, which is related to issues of transmission lines. If any two acts were actually directed at undermining the rights of property owners, particularly in rural Alberta, then it was really those two acts.

It's very disappointing to see the government come here today, in this session, claiming to address concerns but not actually addressing the two acts, which had much more wrong with them in many respects than the third act which has been lumped into this so-called property rights discussion and concern that has been generated in parts of rural Alberta. So it's really quite disappointing to see that neither Bill 19 nor Bill 50 has been addressed.

Just briefly to identify, to go back to that. With respect to Bill 19 we saw situations where we had the ability of the government to designate certain project areas that could easily overlap on private land and put land under a project area order for an indefinite period of time and, thus, substantially impact the rights of the people who own that land. That was a significant concern, and that continues to be a concern that remains entirely unaddressed by any of the efforts that we see reflected in Bill 10.

Bill 50, of course, we talked quite a bit about. That was a key bill that limited transparency and limited public accountability and limited the opportunity for property owners and other members of the public who have an equal interest in many of these decisions, property owners or not property owners, to engage in a discussion about the merits and the degree to which a particular initiative actually met the public interest through the AUC process. That was clearly more evidence of this government's trend towards moving everything behind closed doors and making all their decisions amongst their little group of friends and excluding Albertans from the major decision-making processes in this province.

Bill 19 and Bill 50 were probably the most critical bills, quite frankly, that generated or sparked off a lot of the controversy. Those are the ones that the government is absolutely unwilling to touch because those are the ones that are so important to folks in industry, so the government won't touch them.

Well, what was Bill 36? What was the Alberta Land Stewardship Act? What was it supposed to do, this bill that the government is now proposing to amend? As we said when that bill first came through, it was premised on several years of consultation, and it was premised on the notion of a land-use framework, which included a number of worthy principles and ideas and policy initiatives. When that bill came forward a couple of years ago, we identified that, certainly, it grew out of a very positive process that was designed to achieve good things in the best interests of all Albertans. Unfortunately, at the time we said: hear this; there are some real problems with how you're planning on going about it. We had some very significant concerns.

One of the concerns that we had at the time, which continues to this day, was that there were far too many mechanisms through which the government would be able to keep ultimate control of what the outcome was and to make those decisions about what the ultimate outcome was behind closed doors, with a tremendous and profound lack of transparency, you know, notwithstanding that we're going to set regional advisory councils, appointed, of course, hand-picked by the government. Those regional advisory councils themselves would just simply make recommendations, but then the government would certainly have the ability to review and revise and have more meetings behind closed doors and then change what those advisory councils were putting forward. That was the kind of thing that actually went directly against the very transparency that the government claimed was part of the original land stewardship approach.

Indeed, what we've seen since then is exactly that kind of thing. We have the lower Athabasca regional plan. We had an advisory panel, that was appointed very much by government. Although there were some good people on that panel, it was definitely a panel that did not fully reflect the broad range of groups and stakeholders whose public interests were at stake in terms of the outcome of that plan. Nonetheless, the regional advisory committee did come up with a plan and submitted it to the government, and then the government, behind closed doors, clearly had more conversations with people. We don't know who. We don't know on exactly what. We can make assumptions. But we certainly didn't have it all on the public record. Then changes were made.

Then we brought out another draft land-use framework for that area, which, strangely, accorded much more with the wishes and desires of industrial players in that area and ignored a number of the concerns put forward by community members, First Nations groups downstream from major industrial activity sites, and scientists who were concerned about environmental implications. Those things were mostly ignored, and then we sort of went back to what it was that industry had been advocating for most of the time. Of course, that whole process: we didn't see exactly how that deliberation was done. That was all done by cabinet and by the minister. Now we have another draft report, and we don't know exactly what's going to come of it. We won't be at that table when those decisions are made. It'll just be provided to us.

That was one of the problems that we had with the Alberta Land Stewardship Act in the first place. It was absolutely founded on very good principles, but at the end of the day there needs to be a level of trust with this government, and this government has not earned the trust of the majority of Albertans for years and decades. We simply don't have enough trust in this government to let them go behind closed doors and make these kinds of decisions. As a result, some of the concerns around this Alberta Land Stewardship Act have inflamed people from all different ends of the political spectrum because there are so many opportunities for government to fiddle with the process in a way that does not reflect the public interest.

The question now is whether Bill 10, which we're talking about tonight, deals with any of these problems that we first identified when we said: listen; a good concept, good principles, but you're not implementing it in a way that's going to be the best for Albertans. I would suggest that, in fact, Bill 10 does not address many of the concerns that have been raised throughout this process.

What are some of the failures? Well, generally speaking, I think it's fair to say that what Bill 10 will do is it will cause more confusion and more delay and more opportunities for legal wrangling that will extend this period in-freaking-definitely. It is really quite unfortunate because as it is, although there were grand pronouncements and fabulous articulations of good principles around the Land Stewardship Act and around the land-use framework, the fact of the matter is that the government is way behind schedule in terms of moving forward with any of the land-use frameworks.

When I first got elected, in 2008, we had all of these great, shiny timelines that we could all look forward to, and we are well behind all of them. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development tells us that maybe by 2017, all things being equal, we'll be there. Well, I think we all know that he's dreaming in technicolour, and I think he knows that, too.

We don't have the resources dedicated to the work, the Ministry of Environment is completely unable to provide the sort of support that's necessary to do the work, and it's clearly an intensely political process, where we go through sort of the facade of public consultation. Then the draft report is picked up, and everyone scurries behind closed doors and meets with countless vested interest groups, and then we come up with another version. Then we delay and delay and delay, and more conversations are had.

We've been waiting around for two years for the first LARC, and we're still not there. I can't even begin to imagine how much longer it will take for that to be complete because I know that it is an intensely political process. I suspect it will be subject to unprecedented levels of ongoing lobbying before we get anywhere with it.

Does Bill 10 change that? No. It just opens the door for that many more opportunities for behind-closed-door lobbying to take place and for more delay to be suffered by Albertans. The thing of it is that, you know, I've heard people argue: well, you know, it's okay because we've got a legal regime in place that sort of deals with the unfettered, unplanned, chaotic development that we see in this province. But the reality is that even that has been put on hold. Whenever we say to representatives of government, "Gee, you know, you do have this other piece of legislation here, and through that maybe you could engage in some form of planning, some form of conservation, some form of disposition, depending on whatever it is that you want done," we're told, "Well, we could, but let's just wait for the regional land-use framework to come into place." "When will that be?" "Well, sometime between now and 2000-and-whenever." In fact, we've actually now succeeded in some ways in crippling the current legislative regime that's in place. That's sort of the general gist of what Bill 10 does.

Now, we see the new section 15.1 under section 12 of Bill 10. It talks about this whole new process. It injects this whole new process, that after we've gone through this five-, 10-year process, however long it is until we actually get to a land-use framework plan in a particular region, well, then there's the opportunity for applications for variances to be made.

The trigger or the basic level that makes one eligible to make a variance is so low that we will probably see nothing but variance applications for another two years afterward, which will effectively render the regional plan unrecognizable in many cases. Even if it doesn't, it will ensure yet more delay. So I'm not really entirely sure how well thought out that process is, and of course it all goes to the minister, who's not having public hearings. You know, we're not seeing what the arguments are in public, in a transparent way. There's just an application, and the minister kind of goes: maybe, maybe not. This actually puts more discretion back to the cabinet, back to the minister, which is exactly the kind of thing that everybody said was one of the fundamental problems with this act when it first came through. So that doesn't fix it.

Then we have this whole question of: what triggers the ability to apply for a variance or for variance reviews? It's no longer the kind of thing where we're looking at simply sort of the loss of a land right, but we're now looking at any kind of – I think language is diminution of property value. That's a tremendously vague term. Again, I think what we're going to end up doing is opening the door to copious applications, that will invariably delay the whole thing and ultimately mean that this act dies an untimely and very early death. I mean, it's already on its way because it's very clear that the political will and the resources to support this initiative are only partially supported by this very divided government caucus. It's very clear that it's already, you know, starting to heave its last breaths, but this will ensure that it really does.

You know, another point that I came across in doing a little bit of reading around Bill 10 and what it stands for is this notion that we have the new 19.2, which allows persons directly affected to request the review of the regional plan. I find it very concerning that people who are directly affected, i.e. the property owners, have yet another opportunity to request a review of the regional plan, but other members of the public remain unable to do that. We have responded so intensely to what you perceive to be your political threat in rural areas.

This is so clearly such a political document. We've long since departed from good public policy here. We've responded so reactively to the concern about property rights that we've given yet another forum for property owners to raise a concern, and maybe that's fine. But we've just been so mindful of just that issue that we have not provided an equal opportunity for a review or a request for a review by somebody who is representing a different public interest. Theoretically, there are a number of public interests that are to be balanced in the drafting of this land-use framework, but it is only one player in that process that gets to access yet another review process.

You know, communities that need water don't get to do it if they don't happen to have an ownership interest in the water, for instance. Industries that require a certain amount of environmental integrity – you know, the tourism industry or whatever – don't get to do it because they don't actually have an interest in the land. They don't get to request a review. But the actual landowner has yet a whole other regime of review request there.

Why is it just one of the parties to this whole land-use planning process that gets this whole new review regime, only one, but not the other parties to the process? It seems to me to be a very reactive kind of bill that's very much responding to political issues, that has not really looked at the totality of the act and referenced itself to the overarching multiplicity of interests that are supposed to be reflected in the land stewardship approach and, instead, has very much just reacted in a very political, thoughtless kind of way to one.

Some other concerns that I have. I did see that there was an amendment that I believe one of my colleagues from the Wildrose Alliance put forward. I've missed the conversation about this, but I did note that section 5 of the bill talks about there needing to be a consultation with respect to any amendments to a plan and that the new plan or amendment has to be put before the Legislative Assembly, which was certainly interesting, but of course the actual consultation does not have to be put before the Legislative Assembly. I noted as well in my reviewing of the act that that, of course, appeared to be a pretty significant failure. I understand that there was an amendment put forward to actually ensure that that consultation would be put before the Legislature, but I presume that that amendment failed.

Then I noted as well that section 8 talks about amending section 11 that deals with the policy of regional plans and that it talks about the fact – oh, darn. I'm already finished. Who knew?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise today in support of Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. It's very important to the future of this province that we pass this bill and get on with the job of restoring a system of land-use planning in Alberta. Last week at a forum in Eckville I heard lawyer Keith Wilson praise Alberta's system of regional planning that was in place under the former Planning Act prior to the abandonment of our regional planning commissions that were the implementation arm of our system of regional planning prior to 1995. I hear similar endorsements from the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore about the former planning regime.

Mr. Chair, I likewise have extolled our system of regional planning pre-1995. As the former chair of the Edmonton Metropolitan Regional Planning Commission, in 1995 – actually, in view of the demise of regional planning in Alberta, I now refer to my former title as the chief pallbearer of the EMRPC – anyway, as I was about to say, I often used to refer to the Alberta advantage in terms of our system of land tenure. We have the best and most modern system of survey in the world, being the Dominion Land Survey system, which in Alberta is part of a uniform system across western Canada. We also have the best land titles system, modelled after the Australian Torrens system. We have the best system of regional planning, built and created right here in Alberta, starting shortly after we became a province.

Mr. Chair, these are systems that fit together to make a most efficient system that facilitates inexpensive and efficient transfers of land, an efficient rural addressing system, and a simple, rudimentary co-ordinates system, which allows us to develop comprehensive land information systems and efficient land management practices. This system also allows for a simple, efficient system of subdivision of land as well as an organized municipal and resource development. To put it simply, we have at least had the basics of a very efficient system of land tenure and management, which allowed our economy to function well in times of high growth.

The former Planning Act set out a planning framework, which established a hierarchy of plans with the regional plan as its foundation, moving up through the municipal plans, area structure plans, land-use bylaws, and plans of subdivision. The regional plans were prepared and adopted by commissions composed of elected officials from all municipalities within the boundaries of the region. The system was financed largely by municipalities themselves through an annual levy, with a token contribution from the province. By and large these regional planning commissions were very successful, with great co-operation and collaboration amongst both rural and urban municipalities. Granted, Mr. Chair, there were some exceptions although relatively few.

The former system was not, however, without its shortcomings. One element that I always thought was necessary for a complete planning framework was to move the foundation of the hierarchy up and build it on a base of provincial policies to make it a provincial plan as opposed to just a regional plan. Another shortcoming was the lack of integration of resource development planning with municipal development and infrastructure planning, which has resulted in a hodgepodge of pipelines and transmission lines and utility corridors that have impeded the development of our urban centres.

A third shortcoming, Mr. Chair, was the fact that not all of the province was included in the regional planning system. Several areas of the province were left to the whim of provincial planners to provide direction as opposed to municipal and regional management and control.

I would suggest that the demise of the regional planning structure in 1995 set this province back 25 years. Fast-forward, Mr. Chair, to 2010, when we introduced and passed the Alberta Land Stewardship Act as the basis for the land-use framework and the subsequent adoption of seven regional plans, actually nine if we include the capital region plan and the Calgary partnership. Now we're debating Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, which was introduced solely to clarify a number of issues that have arisen out of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act reintroduced regional planning to Alberta in a forward-looking attempt to bring rational land-use planning back to our province to aid us in planning for the growth that is bound to come to our province over the next 20, 30, or 40 years. Bill 10 reinforces the intent of that legislation.

This total package of planning legislation – the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and Bill 10 along with the land-use framework and the regional plans – cures some of the ailments of our former planning scheme. It covers the entire province, and it reintroduces a hierarchy of plans, but this time it has a firm foundation built upon a provincial plan, which will integrate provincial policies into regional land-use decision-making. It also includes the resource sector, which will be the major driver of our growth in the next several decades, and it includes local stakeholders in the regional advisory councils and regular, legislated updates of the regional plans. And, Mr. Chair, it does not infringe on individual property rights. In fact, it bestows more rights on individual landowners than the former legislation did.

In this regard, Mr. Chair, I'd like to quote two prominent southern Alberta lawyers, who had this to say in a recent Calgary Herald article: "The Alberta Land Stewardship Act, plus the Bill 10 amendments, put Alberta ahead of any other province or U.S. state when it comes to protecting landowners' property rights." That quote is from Stan Church and Dan Smith, who are both members of the South Saskatchewan Regional Advisory Council.

Mr. Chair, Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, the land-use framework, and regional plans across the province are essential elements that are necessary for the forward planning of the province of Alberta as we move into a very prosperous future. These regional plans, together with the ALSA and the land-use framework, will be the road map that will co-ordinate the planning of our province as we move forward in the 21st century. Without sound planning we will experience another 15 years of haphazard and disjointed growth similar to what we see in our neighbour to the south.

Mr. Chair, this government is not alone in championing the need for the restoration of a strong and vibrant system of land-use planning in Alberta. The Environmental Law Centre has recently stated their "support for a strong, integrated, binding land use planning and management system for Alberta." Similarly, the mayor of the city of Red Deer has recently written and stated: "Regional planning is critical to ensuring sustainability and facilitating regional cooperation that will benefit all Albertans." Further, in a rather poetic statement a leading Canadian law firm, Fraser Milner Casgrain LLP, waxed eloquent: "Bill 10 and the Proposed Regulations have written a new chorus of property and procedural rights protections into the revisited ALSA."

Mr. Chair, Bill 10 supplements the Alberta Land Stewardship Act by clarifying the intent of the original legislation to make it abundantly clear that the property rights of Alberta landowners will be respected. Unfortunately, there's been a lot of rhetoric and misinformation about both the original Alberta Land Stewardship Act and Bill 10. Considerable consultation, discussion, and debate has taken place over the past several years, which have addressed and resolved these issues to my satisfaction. This is good legislation that will return the Alberta advantage to our system of land tenure and land-use planning.

Mr. Chair, I urge all members of this House to support Bill 10. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Let me just take a quick sip of water here although I promise that's not because I'm going to talk for all that long, but I think it would be nice if you would be able to understand what I'm saying at all.

I want to try and put one more amendment on the floor tonight for this House's consideration in terms of Bill 10. This will go to further clarifying, I think, section 5 on consultation required. Just in the interests of time, because I know that there are other speakers who would like to try and get in on this before closure raises its ugly head and shuts down debate, before I go any further, I will pass these amendments to the pages and let the pages pass out copies to everyone, and then I will speak to the amendment. This time I will actually give the page the original copy. There you go.

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause for a moment while the pages deliver the amendment. Hon. members, this will be amendment A5. Okay.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. With amendment A5 I move that Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, be amended by renumbering section 5 as section 5(1) and by adding the following after subsection (1):

- (2) To fulfill the requirement for appropriate public consultation under subsection (1), the Stewardship Minister must
  - (a) advertise the development or amendment of a regional plan in one or more newspapers circulating within the boundaries of the regional plan, and such advertisement shall include
    - (i) the details regarding the proposed regional plan or amendment and its effect on the region,
    - (ii) an invitation to review the proposed plan or amendment and any supporting material at specified times and places, and
    - (iii) an invitation to the public to submit input;
  - (b) provide not less than 45 days for responses from
    - (i) the council of each municipality within the regional plan;
    - (ii) any local authority whose powers extend to any part of the regional plan, and
    - (iii) any other person or organization that the regional advisory council considers necessary;
  - (c) following the period provided for in clause (b), hold public hearings;
  - (d) consider the input received under this subsection in the preparation of his or her report;
  - (e) carry out any additional consultation processes that the Minister considers necessary.

What this does is add to the section 5 that is proposed in Bill 10. You know, the section 5 that is proposed in Bill 10 repeals section 5 in the ALSA. That, Mr. Chair, in my opinion, is an excellent move on the part of the government.

The original section 5 in the ALSA presently says – and I won't read the exact words because you all have the bill in front of you – that a regional plan may be made or amended, whether or not a regional advisory council has been appointed, whether or not a regional advisory council has provided advice about a proposed regional plan or an amendment, whether or not that advice was considered or followed and irrespective of the advice given; if the secretariat provides advice with respect to a regional plan or amendment and irrespective of the advice given and all the rest of that, the minister can just charge ahead and do whatever he wants. The Lieutenant Governor in Council can go ahead and do all that. Well, that's been repealed, or at least once we pass Bill 10, that will be gone out of the ALSA. That's a good thing. That's an absolute good thing.

As far as it goes, the proposed new section 5 in Bill 10 is a good thing, too. It says:

Before a regional plan is made or amended, the Stewardship Minister must

- (a) ensure that appropriate public consultation with respect to the proposed regional plan or amendment has been carried out, and present a report of the findings of such consultation to the Executive Council, and

- (b) lay before the Legislative Assembly the proposed regional plan or amendment.

It's not for the Assembly to debate the amendment or debate the plan or vote on it. It's just basically tabling the plan. Okay. Fair enough as far as it goes.

The key phrase here in all of this is, I think, "appropriate public consultation." The issue here is: how do you define that? Who defines that? That's what this amendment seeks to do. It seeks to bring clarity around this concept of appropriate public consultation, and it does so in, I think, a pretty clear and transparent way so that all who have concerns can see what the process is to fulfill the requirement for appropriate consultation under subsection (1).

You've got to advertise the development or amendment of a regional plan. You've got to include certain things in that advertisement. You've got to provide not less than 45 days for people who are affected, you know, and that includes members of the general public as well as stakeholders like councils of the municipalities affected by the potential plan, so on and so forth. You've got to give them at least 45 days. You know, if the minister wants to give them 90 days to respond, 60 days to respond, 120 days to respond, even, at the risk of incurring the potential wrath of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, six months to a year to respond, I'm cool with that. You just have to give 45 days, and you have to give 45 days to the councils of each municipality and any local authority whose powers extend to any part of the regional plan and any other person or organization that the regional advisory council considers necessary.

Then after that notice period, which has to be not less than 45 days – it can be more – you've got to hold public hearings. You've got to give people the chance, if they wish, to present to the regional advisory committee or to the minister. Then the minister has to consider the input received under this subsection in the preparation of his or her report. That is spelled out in the government bill in what is numbered in Bill 10 as 5(a). The minister must "present a report of the findings of such consultation to the Executive Council." What we're adding here is that the minister has to consider the input received.

This is much the same as the process that a standing policy committee would go through when it holds hearings on a government bill or a private member's bill or anything referred to it by the minister for review or study or investigation, that sort of thing. We invite submissions, written submissions. We then make the decision at the policy field committee as to whether we're actually going to go so far as to hold public hearings, but that's because it could tend to involve the committee going on a bit of a road show. In these sorts of circumstances they're going on a road show to one particular region sort of thing, or at least the regional advisory committee is already in the region, theoretically, I think. Then that input is considered in the preparation of the report to the minister or the report to the Assembly, making certain recommendations by the policy field committee. You know, we're doing the same thing here. Basically, that's what this is.

And, finally, "carry out any additional consultation processes that the Minister considers necessary." Mr. Chair, I think my spidey sense is pretty good, but I'm not psychic. I can't say in the case of every single regional plan and every single amendment to every single regional plan as we go forward in time that I or anybody else can in an amendment like this preconsider, if you will, every single consultation process that might be required. So all I'm doing here is giving the minister the opportunity. If the minister in his or her wisdom feels that in addition to what we've laid out here, there is some other consultation process that could happen, whatever that might be, then we're saying that the minister can go ahead and carry out whatever they consider necessary.

The purpose of this amendment is just to bring clarity, clarity that I think everybody can wrap their head around, can look at this and say: here is the process that the government will follow or that the government will cause to be followed in the development of regional plans and in the handling of any proposed amendments to regional plans. You look at that, and you go: "Aha. I got it. I see what this is all about. I see how this is going to be done."

You know, the message that keeps coming through to me from people I talk to across all walks of life, across all areas of interest in this province is that it's not particularly important to most people whether we as elected officials propose ideas that they're going to agree with or not. What's more important to them is that they want to know what the guiding principles will be that inform the policy and the laws and the plans that we develop.

In addition to the guiding principles – and I think those guiding principles are in the land-use framework, and they have carried over with some success to the ALSA – people want to know: "What's the process you guys will follow? Let me see how you do it. I don't necessarily need to agree with everything you do as long as I can understand why you did it." We'll disagree. People disagree. That's the great benefit of living in a democracy. Everybody knows that we disagree, and nobody expects that we have to agree all the time. That's fine. But everybody, I think, has a reasonable expectation that their government should be able to show them the road map, the process in terms of how you get from A to B.

That's what this amendment is about. I'm going to sit down now and let anybody else who wants to speak to the amendment get in on the act. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to amendment A5?

I will call the question, then.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to the bill. The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to rise on some brief comments on Bill 10 as we are debating it here, of course, the amending formula to ALSA, Bill 36, which has previously been passed by this Assembly.

Land-use planning in the form of municipal zoning has always existed for subdividing land, and this will not be affected either by this legislation. Municipalities will retain their authority for municipal development plans, area structure plans, land-use by-laws, and making decisions on subdivisions and development standards . . .

Clearly, land-use restrictions and planning have been an ongoing Alberta project. The new regional planning does not mean creating a heavy-handed, centralized bureaucracy in Edmonton. It does mean, however, that the government will provide the kind of policy direction and guidelines and opportunities that local levels of government cannot. That being said, the most local level of government is the Alberta landowning family. There is no one better placed to determine the best use of their land than the owners who reside upon it . . .

Conservation efforts driven by landowners is the finest example of who we are as Albertans. We are stewards and conservationists at heart. This bill will not change that. This bill will not disrupt these grassroots efforts. The government will not get in the way of the good work done by groups such as the Nature Conservancy of Canada, the Southern Alberta Land Trust Society, and Ducks Unlimited. This legislation will not get in the way of generous Albertans who want to responsibly steward their land.

Another tool in this bill is the conservation offset, that can replace, restore, or compensate for the effects of an activity on public or private land . . .

Literally, it basically gives the government of Alberta the power through a regional plan to take an interest in any piece of private land for conservation purposes. However, all this will be accomplished with appropriate compensation. None of this will happen without landowners being properly compensated for a public good they are asked to provide. This is an important and, in fact, a groundbreaking proposal that ensures that landowners are compensated for being asked to provide a public good even in cases where their land is sometimes not directly affected.

The act protects property rights. Landowners will be compensated for any loss in market value based on principles under the Expropriation Act. This is an improvement over the status quo that placed the costs of conservation for public good on what I would define as the private treasury. The private treasury consists of the funds, monies, and savings that families have privately, of course.

Some critics may argue that providing mandatory compensation will be a disincentive for government to use conservation directives. Well, that is exactly the point. These decisions have to be done responsibly and must respect the private costs borne by Alberta families that are associated with conservation. No other jurisdiction proposes to protect the rights of landowners the way Bill 36 [and this Bill 10 amendment do.]

Another major benefit to landowners is the regional plans themselves. They will provide consistency, stability, and predictability. [In fact,] lands determined to be candidates for conservation directives will be identified in the regional plans. Formal notice will be provided that will outline the land affected, give a description of the directive, notify the landowner of the right to compensation, describe the application process to the Land Compensation Board, and inform the landowner of the right to appeal any decision.

No longer will landowners be surprised by having parks or other conservation areas created at their expense and at the whim of politicians. If the only way to protect the land is to impose a conservation directive, then the value of the land will be appraised, any impact assessed, and landowners will be compensated for any loss in market value. Landowners will retain title to their land. Often in the past they were expropriated outright, losing lands that may have been passed down through several generations . . .

The process I have just outlined is game changing. It is an unprecedented victory for the rights of landowners in this province. It will ensure that our province's precious viewscapes, landscapes, and lands that we all know and love are preserved for generations to come. I am very excited to see this bill [and the amendment] proceed. I support it, and I urge all members of this Assembly to support it as well.

Now, of course, Mr. Chair, these are not my original words. These are the exact words of the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on May 13, 2009. It is self-explanatory. It is interesting how this member changes his opinion by way of the caucus that he joins. That is self-explanatory.

An Hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Denis: The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. These are his words verbatim, Mr. Chair. I will not belabour this but, again, it's the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. You can actually see this on YouTube, where I think there are several hundred hits already, of him enunciating these exact words on May 13, 2009.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. It's quite comical, Mr. Chair . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has the floor. [interjections] You have the floor. [interjections] Just a minute. [interjections] Just a minute.

Just a minute, hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. [interjections] Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere . . . [interjections]

Hon. members, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has the floor.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Obviously, the former Energy minister and the current SRD minister have a lot to be embarrassed about. The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere got up and he said: "Yes. I did say those words." But these guys are still saying it two years later and don't realize the problem.

Mr. Chair, what I want to finish off in the short five minutes, I think, that are left to debate on Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, is to go back to the importance of local government. This government has gone to great lengths, this current government, to say that it's so important to have the RAC committee, the Regional Advisory Council, to tell the minister what needs to be done. They say that it's so important that we act on this in order to protect this area so that the federal government doesn't act.

I guess what I find amazing in the deductive thinking of that process is that if Edmonton somehow in its ultimate wisdom has greater knowledge and authority for a regional area and therefore we need to have a provincial oversight with the stewardship minister, then would not that same thinking say that Ottawa should have the oversight over Edmonton? It's ironic that they don't recognize the importance of local government, property owners, industry in making decisions locally, yet they want to extrapolate that power to the minister and say: "Oh, we know so much better than you do. We'll take that on." It doesn't work.

You know, there are many acts that got rewritten as this very thick Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, passed two years ago, and when you go through it, you talk about those omnibus bills, with all kinds of things embedded in there. Yes, they can pick out a few sentences that give some rights here, but then they take the rights away a few pages later. What we want to concentrate on at this point is municipal government. They've got up and they've reiterated time and time again: oh, if there's already a plan in place, we'll grandfather that. We're not talking about the grandfather. It's the next one that's coming up, what it can do.

Under the Municipal Government Act, section 570.01(1), if the Minister considers that a municipal authority or regional services commission has not complied with an ALSA regional plan, the Minister may take any necessary measures to ensure that the municipal authority or regional services commission, as the case may be, complies with the ALSA regional plan.

We're talking in the future. These guys like to talk in the past. They've got 40 years of past. In the next 40 years they can think about that. But we need to worry about the future, and this bill has a major impact on the future and especially on local government.

In subsection (1), all necessary measures includes, without limitation, an order by the Minister

- (a) suspending the authority of a council to make bylaws in respect of any matter specified in the order;
- (b) exercising bylaw-making authority in respect of all or any of the matters for which bylaw-making authority is suspended under clause (a) . . .

- (d) withholding money otherwise payable by the Government to the municipal authority or regional services commission pending compliance with an order of the Minister;
- (e) repealing, amending and making policies and procedures with respect to the municipal authority or regional services commission;
- (f) suspending the authority of a development authority or subdivision authority and providing for a person to act in its place pending compliance with conditions specified in the order.

This is a problem. This should be amended. It should be struck from there, but it isn't.

In the amendment in Bill 10:

- 20(1) When a regional plan is made, every local government body affected by the regional plan must
  - (a) review its regulatory instruments, and
  - (b) decide what, if any, new regulatory instruments or changes to regulatory instruments are required for compliance with the regional plan.
- (2) Every local government body affected by the regional plan must, within the time set in or under, or in accordance with, the regional plan,
  - (a) make any necessary changes or implement new initiatives to comply with the regional plan, and
  - (b) file a statutory declaration with the secretariat that the review required by this section is complete and that the local government body is in compliance with the regional plan.

Mr. Chair, this government has closed debate on this. The debate is long from over. If we even had recall, Albertans would be rising up, and you would see these guys being knocked off one at a time by Albertans, but they don't have that courage to give the power to the people to stop them from these notorious bills that they push through in short order and declare there's no problem with.

The best example is the ridiculous new royalty framework, and we have the two ministers sitting here, smugly chewing on their gum or whatever it is, saying that we didn't do anything wrong, that it's good, that this is fine. And they know. They changed it after two and a half years. They changed the new royalty framework, and still they never said that they did anything wrong. This government is notorious for passing bills that hurt Albertans. They strip away the Alberta advantage. Bill 10, the amendment to Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, is just a ridiculous bill. This government doesn't have the foresight, the understanding, the knowledge of history or of the future. That is why they're pushing this through, just like with Bill 50 and the power lines. They have no respect for independent commissions. They think that they know it all.

This is the problem with central government, central power, central economy, run by those who think that they're better than the rest of the world, aristocrats. They're arrogant, they're above reproach, and it's a real problem. The truth does hurt, Mr. Chair – I realize that – but it's supposed to. That's when people go and have to recover, and they confess. It hurts. That's why this government won't do it. Ralph was big enough to do that. I don't know anybody over there. They sit back smugly, saying that these things are great, that the future of Alberta is great. It isn't. The only thing that's great is that there's going to be an election. These individuals are going to be held accountable for these things.

In here it's supposed to be honourable, and it's okay to mislead and to put out intentions and to guide because they're protected. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just a caution. The word "arrogance" is unparliamentary. "Misleading" is unparliamentary. Just a caution, please.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you for that caution. Like I said, the truth does hurt, and I can appreciate that.

The web that's been woven on this is a web that these individuals are stuck in. They're not going to be smart enough to get out in time. The bottom line is that this bill should be repealed. The next best thing that this government should do is that they should be voting against this. They should be sending it to the Committee on Resources and Environment. They're not going to do that.

Mr. Knight: You're talking about Bill 10? Repeal it?

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Absolutely. Repeal Bill 10, Minister.

The Deputy Chair: Speak through the chair.

Mr. Hinman: Well, then, tell the Minister of SRD to talk when it's his turn. He's had lots of time. They get to get up and be smug about it whenever they want, and they go around talking. It was kind of interesting that the Minister of SRD didn't show up at Eckville last week. He sent the previous minister. It would have been enjoyable to have had him there and to see him defend it. I do enjoy that.

Mr. Chair, Bill 10 is not acceptable to Albertans. It needs to be sent to the committee. It needs to be suspended. Do anything, but do not pass Bill 10. It's not in the best interests of landowners. It's not in the best interests of industry. It's not in the best interests of the people of Alberta. This is a step in the wrong direction. It's undermining democracy. Yet this government seems to be just bullheaded, saying: "We're going full steam ahead. Nothing is going to stop us. We'll invoke closure. We don't want the debate to go on." By smothering the debate, the discussion, they think this will die a quiet death. I look forward, Mr. Chair, to see where it goes from here.

The more the people of Alberta study it, the more they're educated on this, they realize that this bill is not at all what has been proposed by the Premier, by the minister, by the cabinet, by the MLAs. When they go out and try to explain this to Albertans one on one, they lose. In a forum they lose. In here they don't want to do it anymore, so they're shutting it down. I would urge all members to take a hard second look at this and realize that this bill is not the answer.

They said for two years how wonderful this is, that there's nothing to worry about, yet they come in with all of these amendments. Bill 36 is going to go down as one of those notorious bills in history. It's always kind of fun to go back and read in history, especially in old English law, European law, about the different bills that they passed on what colour of material they can weave in their different regions, how much they can do, how big a house can be, the size of windows, the different taxes that government puts out. There are so many notorious tax bills that have come forward over the centuries. You'd think that in a democratic society government would realize how self-serving and undermining it is for the country or the province as a whole.

It's interesting that as the United Kingdom started to fall apart, you know, back in the 1700s, they couldn't pay their soldiers or anything else. All of a sudden the free market took over, and that became the great era of England because government had overgrown itself, the taxation, the property rights.

Let's just go back to that for a minute. The Magna Carta in 1215 was the start of property rights, where the king, on threat of his life, decided: oh, we'll protect property rights. Here we are 800 years later, and coming up in three years, we're going that full circle, where we think that the king should be able to make the rules and say: "This is what's best for these areas. This is what we're going to invoke, the plan." Again, like I say, it's so comical to think that they would go to a regional advisory committee and say, "What do we need to do there?" and then pass that off to the minister to say, "Now it's yours, and you can go" when they supposedly are relying on a regional advisory committee. Yet they're empowering the minister to make those decisions, to have the discretion to say: "You know, we're not going to listen to the regional advisory committee. We've listened, we've consulted, but we don't have to do."

The most important thing, if we really want to have accountability, is to pass recall. A Wildrose government will have recall, and when government steps out of line, we can stop something. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is shaking her head, afraid of allowing the people to hold the power. There's nothing more important than power in the people's hands and accountability 24/7, not once every four years.

Ms Blakeman: Recall doesn't do that.

Mr. Hinman: It does. People haven't researched it. They don't understand it.

We need accountability, and this bill doesn't give accountability. It's just the opposite. It empowers the cabinet. It empowers the minister to make arbitrary decisions over land, over development, over industry, and basically instead of extinguishing rights, they now say that they're going to rescind rights. [interjection] Isn't it interesting that the Minister of Energy is now commenting that he likes to support the Liberals. We've always known that, that they're closer to the Liberals' thoughts.

Again, big government is better government in their mind. This bill absolutely shows that. We understand the intent, what they want with this, Mr. Chair. It's a sad day for Alberta that this bill is going to pass out of Committee of the Whole this evening with no amendments accepted though the government has brought forward numerous amendments because of their shortfall. It's very disappointing.

With that, I'll sit down, and the Energy minister maybe now wants to pontificate on why it's so great.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I don't believe I have too much time left to speak here, but I just want to get a few comments on the record. I'm happy to speak to this Bill 10 because I am a third-generation rural landowner. I have a passion for my land, and I know all of my neighbours around me have a passion for their land. I'm also a lawyer, and I'm familiar with a circumstance where lawyers don't agree on any number of issues. With that in mind, you know, I want to talk a little bit about what motivates me to support this bill and also to have supported Bill 36.

This is difficult because anytime you're talking about planning, you are potentially talking about limiting people's rights. When I go to a meeting of landowners who have concerns about property rights, I'm thinking they probably drove on a highway that went past somebody's house, that maybe limited their rights because maybe there wasn't always a highway there. The fact of life is that we have to plan for the future in Alberta. This legislation is about planning for the future, and we have to create a balance between protecting property rights, which I am passionate about, while at the same time planning.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, but pursuant to Government Motion 15, agreed to on April 27, 2011, the time allotted for debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, has expired. I must now put the following question. On the clauses of the bill, are you agreed?

[The voice vote indicated that the clauses of Bill 10 were agreed to]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Securities Amendment Act, 2011

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be able to move third reading of Bill 4, the Securities Amendment Act, 2011, on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta continually ensures that its securities regulatory regime remains at the forefront of modern securities regulation. In light of the federal government's proposal, a move that Alberta and five other provinces opposed, to change the current decentralization to a national securities system, we need to take action on this issue and not stand idly.

Bill 4 builds on the work that Alberta has done since 2004 to further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta's securities laws and also to ensure that Alberta supports Canada in meeting its international commitments. This bill strengthens protection for investors and fosters confidence in Alberta's capital markets.

I encourage all members of the Legislature who want to continue to attract investment and protect investors to support Bill 4. With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll leave it open for other members of the Legislature.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and say a few words regarding Bill 4. Certainly, we had quite a discussion on this yesterday, I believe, in committee. The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill is absolutely right in his summation of the bill. When you listen to the hon. member's comments, one is hopeful that this latest amendment will do precisely what the hon. member has suggested it will do. This is another in a long series of amendments to our securities regulations, and I certainly at this hour am not going to go into any detail on the national securities regulatory body or anything of that nature. We have supported this bill in committee, and it's also a pleasure at this time to support it at third reading.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I'd just like to briefly speak on this in support. It's always interesting to see the government when it makes the proper steps and realizes the importance of securities and investment here in the province. It's good to see that they're making some efforts to secure that. I just wish that they'd have respect for all contracts and not undermine those people that are thinking to invest in Alberta and to raise money, whether it's for oil and gas or some other project that the minister might want to rescind those different licences for that have been given out. It's good to see that we're going to have strong Alberta securities, and I just wish the government would follow that consistently and respect the rule of law so that we would indeed attract the best, the brightest, and the smartest people here in the province in investing and developing our resources and our people.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions to the last speaker.

Any other members wish to speak?

Does the Member for Calgary-North Hill wish to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

Bill 5

Notice to the Attorney General Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move third reading of Bill 5, the Notice to the Attorney General Act.

This legislation consolidates and updates notice requirements that ensure that parties notify the Attorney General about certain matters. It is very important for the Attorney General to receive timely notice about and, if necessary, to be heard on these issues, allowing the Attorney General to be able to protect the interests of Albertans and be in a position to defend the constitutional validity, applicability, and operability of Alberta's legislation, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 5 clarifies the requirements for adequate and timely notice to be given to the Attorney General. It includes regulation-making powers to ensure this legislation stays up to date with evolving litigation trends. It includes a specific provision to ensure the Attorney General is notified about allegations of inadequate consultation with aboriginal peoples.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank all my hon. colleagues for their continued support of this legislation and look forward to its passage. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we have had previous discussions on Bill 5. I would just like to say to the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon that he has done his homework, again, on this bill, and I on behalf of my colleagues appreciate your efforts, sir. Certainly, the Notice to the Attorney General Act is everything that the hon. member has suggested in his remarks that it is. Hopefully, it will resolve some of the matters that concern our First Nations people. Thank you for that.

I hope this bill is voted for this evening by all members of the Assembly at third reading. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon to close?

Mr. Rogers: I call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:51 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 28, 2011

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: We have a prayer to say today. On this day let each of us pray in our own way for all who have been killed or injured at the workplace. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted. In a moment of silent contemplation may we now allow our thoughts to remember those taken before their time, those who have suffered through tragedies and reach out to the families, friends, neighbours, and communities most immediately impacted. May God provide them eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a very high honour for me today to have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two members of my immediate family who are sitting in your gallery. First off, my uncle, Jerome Hauk, resides in St. Albert and is a father of three, grandfather of three. He is a retired physics teacher from St. Joseph school in Edmonton. Interestingly enough, I think he might have done a pretty good job with one of his students as one of his students from years ago is, in fact, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In addition, my second introduction is a woman who lives in Calgary-West. Her name is Marguerite Denis, and she is a mother of one, namely me. She is a retired educator and now operates a property management company in Calgary. I can say that no one has put more volunteer hours over the last few years into my particular association and campaign than my mother. Thank you very much. Would you please join me in giving them a warm welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 54 students, teachers, and parent helpers from Sherwood Park, actually. I'm introducing on behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Again, 54 students, teachers, and parents from Westboro elementary school are here today to tour the Legislature. We've got teachers Ms Theresa Cartmell, Mr. Bill Stetzenko – I apologize for that pronunciation, Bill – Mrs. Erin Tompkins, Mrs. Kari Dahus, Ms Wendy Thomson and parent helpers Mr. Brent Schmidt, Mrs. Sandra McFadden, Mr. Chris Stirling and the students. I ask that they rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you two outstanding Albertans. Today we have a very good friend of mine, Mr. Tom McGee, a former member of Drayton Valley and currently with the ERCB. Also, joining Tom McGee today is Mr. Brady Whittaker, a real friend of the forest industry, a friend of this Legislature, and executive director of the Alberta Forest Products Association. It's wonderful this afternoon to have a chance to catch up with both of them, and I would ask these two fine gentlemen if they would rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: I just have another introduction under guests, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few years I've of course seen many introductions of military personnel here. Well, I want to introduce some people from another type of army, and that is the Salvation Army. It would be difficult to list everything that the Salvation Army has done for this province. Instead, I simply want to say thank you to each one of them for their very terrific work and service for vulnerable Albertans. I would also ask the Assembly to join me particularly in welcoming Major Fred Waters, Major Wendy Waters, Vice-chair Bruce Bowie, board member Antoinette Alleyne, and Karen Diaper.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, I was informed by the Sergeant-at-Arms the other day that he is, in fact, a member of the Salvation Army board. These people have done excellent work. In particular, I want to say thank you to both Majors Waters, who, unfortunately, will be leaving Alberta soon, going to Toronto on their next assignment. Thank you very much for the hard work that you do. Please rise so we can give you a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly three people from the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta who have contributed to the creation of the proposed Education Act, who have given trustees all across the province an opportunity to give their ideas and discuss the principles and values as well as the details of the act. They're here to watch the introduction for second reading of Bill 18, the Education Act. I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House. Patty Dittrick, MaryLynne Campbell, and Maurice Fritze: welcome today, and please continue to do the good work that you do for us.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two introductions to do today. It's certainly my pleasure to introduce two people that are very, very important in my life. Raymond Fortin is my nephew and godson, and he is accompanied by his fiancée, Kathryn Wasele-nak. They're both from here in Edmonton and both students at the University of Alberta. Raymond has just finished his fourth year in honours physics, and Kathryn is finishing her fourth year in business finance. They're anxious for the weather to warm up so they can take out their golf clubs. They're very, very anxious about golfing, and both are very avid golfers. I'd like both of them to stand and receive the warm tradition of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is Ryan Gauthier and Rhonda Clarke-Gauthier. Both are from my constituency. Ryan is very much involved in 4-H and has been here many times with the TUXIS Parliament. Ryan is just graduating as well, from grade 12. He's accompanied by Rhonda Clark-Gauthier, also very much involved in 4-H and our SARDA board, which is an agricultural producer board. She's involved with other groups, including the church, and is a very important member of the executive on my PC association.

All four of them are accompanied my wife, Angeline. I'd like those three to stand up and receive the warm traditional welcome.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 14 outstanding youth leaders who are representatives of the Métis Settlements Youth Network Society. By speaking to your peers about the effects of family violence, bullying, addictions, and other social issues, you've helped many young people face the challenges that they have. I would like to thank you for being here. Each youth has travelled quite a distance in order to be in the Assembly today. I'd especially like to thank you for this beautiful gift of a sash.

We have society president Matt Belhumeur from Buffalo Lake; Delaney Cunningham, western co-chair, from Peavine; Kayla Fayant from Fishing Lake, the eastern co-chair of the society; Dayna Thompson, secretary, from Kikino; and Neil Lamouche from Gift Lake Métis settlement, the treasurer. We also have Waylon Sparklingeyes from Buffalo Lake, Kayla MacDonald from Kikino, Adriaahna Faithful from Fishing Lake, Tori Stewart from Peavine, Tristyn Haggerty and Greg Patenaude from East Prairie, Cody Chalifoux from Paddle Prairie, and Karla Lamouche and Brian Tallman from Gift Lake. As well, we have three mentors for these fine youth: Joy Ohashi, Louise Okemow, and Maurice Trudel. Please join me in giving these wonderful young people the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some great children from a wonderful school in my constituency. I think a few of those children from that school are from the hon. Member for Red Deer-South and some from the hon. Member for Red Deer-North also. I don't believe they've arrived in the Chamber yet. They are touring the Leg. today. I just had a picture with them downstairs. They're 12 students from Destiny Christian school in Red Deer county visiting us today. I'm sure at some point they'll be in the members' gallery. They have with them their principal, Glenn Mullen, and a parent helper, Miss Roberta Bechtold. As I've said many times, it's very important for these children to visit the Legislature and have some dialogue with us because we know they will be our leaders of the future. I would like them, if they are here, to rise. If not, I'd still like my colleagues to give them a great round of applause.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of my constituents, starting with Mr. Aaron Falkenberg. Aaron is chairman of Mercantile Trust. He's also a businessman who has been involved in poultry farming for most of his life as well as real estate development and many other endeavours. He serves on a number of boards, including the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation and Alberta Innovates. He's accompanied today by Todd and grandson Conor Newberry. I met Conor a couple of times. I know he's a real political keener, so he'll really be enjoying the tour and watching question period this afternoon. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mary Philipo. Mary should be in the members' gallery. She's accompanied by my wife, Shirley. Mary is a worker with the Kids Cancer Care Foundation of Alberta, and she's been in the Edmonton area for training at the Stollery hospital. As mentioned, she's with my wife of 37 years, Shirley. I'd like you to give them the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you 50 great students from Gibbons school located just north of Edmonton within my constituency. Gibbons is a community that my great-grandfather came to when he came to Canada and settled in in 1912, about the same year the Legislature was built. I'm very pleased to have them here. It was nice meeting them on the steps. I'd also like to welcome their three teachers: Colleen Lowe, Stephanie Thimer, and Amylia Soetaert. I'd ask these two fine school groups to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other introductions? The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Dave Nelson. Dave is one of the very capable trustees of the Buffalo Trail school division, which is the regional division that serves the vast majority of my students, and they do a very good job. Mr. Nelson is currently the vice-chair and is here today to also view the second reading of Bill 18, the Education Act. I think it's important to note that over the past several years the Buffalo Trail school division has had one of the highest percentage rates of students graduating from high school and also one of the highest rates in the province of students transitioning to postsecondary education. I would ask Mr. Nelson to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

National Day of Mourning

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is the National Day of Mourning for workers who were killed on the job. This special day reminds us of how precious life is and how quickly it can be taken away. One hundred and thirty-six people died in our province from job-related injuries or illnesses in 2010. Of course, we're talking about more than just numbers. These are people with hopes and dreams, people with careers and aspirations, people with friends and family, fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, aunts, uncles, cousins, friends, and neighbours, who are also profoundly affected by such tragedy.

Of those 136 deaths, 43 were tragedies at a workplace. That's 43 times, Mr. Speaker, that my BlackBerry actually buzzed to deliver the news. That's 43 descriptions of the final few minutes that led to someone's life being taken away, 43 names and ages, from a 19-year-old who died of injuries just west of Edmonton last June to two 74-year-old workers, one near Stettler in January, the other near Carstairs in October, and there were 40 others. Add to this the occupational disease and motor vehicle related fatalities, and we have 136 Alberta workers who deserve so much more than a moment of our time today. They deserve workplace conditions that are healthy and safe. They deserve their lives back.

I assure all of my Legislature colleagues that every one of those BlackBerry messages that delivers the dark news of a workplace tragedy only strengthens my resolve and the resolve of this government to continue to work harder to ensure that the role of government when it comes to workplace safety is second to none. Mr. Speaker, as the minister responsible for workplace health and safety I stand before my Legislature colleagues and all Albertans to say: there are no excuses. Government, industry, employers, and workers must pick it up a notch and do a better job of protecting our most valuable resource, our people.

As a government we are in the midst of creating a stronger balance between enforcement, compliance, education, and awareness. Since delivering a National Day of Mourning message in this Assembly at this time last year, we have updated our compliance and enforcement procedures. We have launched an employer records website listing the safety records of 140,000 employers in Alberta. We have launched an internal software program enabling us to collect and analyze OHS data better than ever before. We have hired additional occupational health and safety officers, including a hiring plan for the next three years, and increased our focus on northern Alberta by adding a third regional office right in Fort McMurray.

Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful, now more than ever before, that we are on the path to ensuring that taking part in unsafe work is no longer acceptable. We will have a culture of positive health and safety practices that is commonplace regardless of where you work or what you do. In just a few days I'll be releasing the full occupational health and safety data for the year 2010. In addition to the total number of fatalities, there are many other measures that help determine whether our province is becoming healthier and safer.

Several more announcements will be made over the coming week as well, all of which lend themselves to ensuring that Alberta remains an attractive, healthy, and safe province in which to work, especially as we begin our approach to renewed economic activity. I expect Albertans to hold my feet to the fire, just as I challenge Albertans and Alberta's employers to ensure that their workers remain healthy and safe on the job. I also encourage workers to know their rights and responsibilities. This is truly a team effort, Mr. Speaker.

One hundred and thirty-six fatalities. It's an overused cliché, Mr. Speaker – I know that – but it's truly 136 too many. Hard-working men and women like Travis, Wade, Juan, Erin, Josh, Eugene are all more than just numbers. They are people who have left a mark on our province and will not be forgotten soon. Our hearts truly go out to those whose lives have forever been changed by workplace injuries and fatalities.

I thank you all.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, let me ask for the unanimous consent of the House to complete this particular section of business in the interests of respecting the National Day of Mourning.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, sir. On this National Day of Mourning Alberta Liberal MLAs offer our condolences to the many friends, family members, and co-workers who have lost someone as a result of a workplace accident.

Fatalities on the job are avoidable tragedies, making such losses all the more heart-rending and difficult to come to terms with. The Official Opposition strongly believes that the Alberta government must do more to protect workers from workplace injuries and fatalities. In the last 10 years there have been over 1,200 occupational fatalities in Alberta. That's like losing an entire small town, Mr. Speaker, to an utter disaster. I also note, with respect, that the number of Alberta workers killed on the job jumped by 24 per cent last year. One hundred and thirty-six workers lost their lives in 2010, up from 110 the previous year.

The hard work of Albertans is responsible for the growth of our communities, provides essential services, funds public institutions and needed social programs. Labour is the bedrock, the foundation, of our prosperity, but Alberta still lags behind other jurisdictions when it comes to workplace safety and fatality rates. Despite years of Alberta Liberal questions on the issue farm workers, for example, still work without the protection of the Occupational Health and Safety Act. All paid workers in Alberta deserve the same, equal rights, Mr. Speaker. New cases of needless deaths and injuries of paid farm workers appear in the news, unfortunately, on a regular basis, yet this government remains unmoved. It's callous, unfeeling, and bad public policy.

We will never stop pushing this government to do the right thing on this issue, nor will we stop calling for other legislative changes to improve worker safety, including requiring workplaces to post health and safety rules at the job site and the implementation of mandatory health and safety committees for work sites that employ 20 or more individuals. Making accident investigation reports admissible as evidence at trials and public inquiries would also help. These three improvements could save countless lives and dramatically reduce the number of workplace injuries.

Alberta Liberals respect Alberta workers. Every day they provide for their families and keep Alberta's economic engine humming along. We have a duty as members of this House to make their workplaces safer by vigorously enforcing the laws and improving those laws where they prove to be inadequate. We must always remember to support families who have already needlessly lost a loved one as a result of a workplace accident.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have requests from the other parties, who wish to respond to the ministerial statement. I seek unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the colleagues in the House. I'm honoured to rise on behalf of the Wildrose caucus to commemorate this day of mourning.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a dynamic province blessed with an abundance of natural resources and economic potential that is the envy of the world. Every morning thousands and thousands of men and women all over Alberta wake up, grab their tools, put on their gear, and make our economy work. They are the fuel in the gas tank of the Alberta economy.

Tragically, Mr. Speaker, last year 136 Alberta workers went to work but did not come home. It's the other side of our economic coin. Along with the thousands of well-paying jobs Alberta offers in the trades, in forestry, in agriculture, and in oil and gas comes the inherent danger in carrying out the tasks associated with them. That is why we as legislators must always be vigilant in protecting and increasing worker safety, ensuring that as many men and women, moms and dads, husbands and wives as humanly possible can arrive home safely after a hard day's work.

Unfortunately, here in Alberta we consistently have one of the highest fatality rates in Canada in the workplace. Workplace fatalities are on the rise, and it seems like Alberta is once again lagging in sanctioning workplace safety violations. Over in Saskatchewan, a province with a workforce a quarter of ours, workplace safety cases are prosecuted at five times the rate they are in Alberta.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, these figures suggest that the current system is failing our workforce in a serious way. As I said before, our economy is held up around the world as one to emulate. There's no reason why our safety record should be any different.

To the families of those who have been lost on the job site: we remember your loss on this day, and I hope that all members of this House will pledge to do better. We must do better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today around the world we take time to honour the lives of those people who have been hurt or lost their lives on the job. In our own country Alberta continues to be one of the most dangerous places to work, and the situation is only getting worse. Much of the responsibility rests squarely with a government that does not take seriously its responsibility to ensure that people who go to work can do so with confidence that they will be safe and healthy there.

This PC government looks the other way when children are working illegally; underfunds inspections and enforcement of laws that do exist; stubbornly refuses to protect farm workers by the same laws as other workers; blatantly continues to ignore the well-accepted practice in other parts of the country of having mandatory workplace health and safety committees; leads the battle across the country to prevent improvements to CPP that would offer decent pensions so older workers are not forced to stay on the job past when it is safe; treats labour unions dedicated to ensuring that workers are treated safely as hostile antagonists; avoids adequate actions to protect temporary foreign workers, who often lack sufficient language and cultural familiarity with Alberta workplaces to advocate for their safety; procrastinates in making clear information about employers with dangerous records from being easy to identify despite the urging of the province's Auditor General; and finally, undercompensates injured workers and the families of deceased workers through an employer-dominated Workers' Compensation Board.

It's a sad litany of Tory disregard for the well-being of working people and their families. No smooth platitudes from a cabinet minister saying that one death is one too many carries any weight as long as there is a continued disregard to undertake the practical actions that will make a positive difference. Every year too many workers lose their lives as a result of work-related injury, illness, and disease. Workers shouldn't have to risk their lives or their health to go to work.

Alberta's NDP is committed to the changes that are required to keep our workers safe. We need to hire more inspectors to ensure that employers comply with the law. We need to ensure that workplaces have mandatory joint health and safety committees.

We need to introduce new protective standards that deal with known dangers in today's workplaces, including workplace violence, exposure to toxins, repetitive stress injuries and injuries caused by poor ergonomics, workplace harassment, and stress. We need to remove the employer escape clause that says, quote, as far as practicable, end quote, from the health and safety act.

Every workplace death or injury is preventable, Mr. Speaker. A government that truly cared about worker safety would take the necessary steps to make it so.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some excellent points have been made by all speakers so far in this House today, and I would just like to add a couple of comments of my own, if I could, on behalf of the Alberta Party.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity with the Minister of Employment and Immigration yesterday to attend the Work Safe Alberta young worker video contest awards. One of my constituents, Vincent Varga, a grade 11 student at St. Mary's high school in Mission, was the second-prize winner, and his video, which is up on the ministry's website now along with the first- and third-place videos, is a powerful piece of work.

Mr. Speaker, the minister has said that Alberta is walking into a perfect storm in worker shortages: the combination of our growing economy, our low birth rate, and the looming wave of retirements as boomers start turning 65. We could be facing a shortage – and I think these are the minister's numbers – of 77,000 workers. Some that I've talked to in the workforce have said that it could be as much as 110,000 within the next 10 years.

Here's where this relates to the National Day of Mourning, Mr. Speaker. As the minister knows, workplace deaths and injuries occur for a whole variety of reasons, and they do not need to occur at all if everyone involved is sufficiently experienced, sufficiently supervised, sufficiently personally motivated, and sufficiently committed to the notion that on the job site and on the way to and from the job site safety must always trump everything. But the reality is that safety in Alberta does not always trump everything. People cut corners. Businesses cut corners. Young, inexperienced workers, the workers who are statistically most likely to do dumb stuff on the job because they don't yet know any better, aren't always and in some cases are not often sufficiently supervised.

Mr. Speaker, I know the minister spends a lot of time thinking about how we might address and prevent this looming labour shortage just as he thinks about how to make the workplace safer. But where there are labour shortages, where there are not enough workers with enough experience on the job site, and where there are too many pressures to get the job done on time, on budget, under budget if possible, there will be more corners cut, more shortcuts taken, more mistakes made, and more lives lost.

We need as a province to take the advice that we give to our workers – stop, think, observe, plan – and then we need to act to protect their right and ability to work safely in Alberta.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Irfan Qureshi, an orthopaediatric surgeon from Fort McMurray, is the latest in a lengthy line of doctors victimized by this government's culture of fear and intimidation. Dr. Qureshi was forced to file legal action against the health region after his medical privileges, quote, were wrongfully discontinued without sufficient cause and without investigation and caused irreparable harm to his professional reputation. End quote. How can the Premier deny that a culture of fear and intimidation continues to exist under this government's watch as lawsuit after lawsuit comes forward?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there is a process in place. The profession has the College of Physicians & Surgeons to review all matters with respect to issues tied to the practice of medicine. Whatever the college did in terms of reviewing the case has been done. Now I believe that particular doctor has taken this to the courts, and the courts will decide.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, when will the Premier finally tell Albertans the full truth, that only a public inquiry can get the truth and restore public confidence and protect doctors like Dr. Qureshi?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's the same question that was asked a number of times. I suppose it could be important to go back a decade or so and look into the matters that some doctors have had. But I must remind this House that over 90 per cent of the AMA doctors signed on to bylaws in partnership with Alberta Health Services, and that is to clearly put a plan in place, a program, the steps for what doctors can do in terms of advocating for their patients. That is the right thing to do: advocate for patients; put patients first.

Dr. Swann: Well, clearly the bylaws are being violated, Mr. Premier. How many more hundreds or thousands of health professionals like Dr. Qureshi does the Premier have to hear from before he concedes that a public inquiry is the only way to address the government's culture of fear and intimidation and cover-ups?

Mr. Stelmach: Unfortunately, the hon. member is wrong. The case that he is bringing forward was well before the bylaws were agreed upon and signed, and I haven't heard of any recent case since the bylaws have been signed of any doctor coming forward saying that the bylaws aren't fair. If there is such a case that I'm not aware of, certainly that physician can go before the Health Quality Council and deliver the evidence and say that the bylaws aren't fair.

The Deputy Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Quality Council Review

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, regarding the culture of fear and intimidation in the health care system the Premier admitted yesterday that "we all want to know." He fails to say what he knows, that not only will no one ever find out what is said behind the Health Quality Council doors about individuals like Dr. McNamee and Dr. Winton, but the quality council can't compel testimony from individuals subject to nondisclosure agreements. Neither can it subpoena ministers. Why does the Premier continue to be economical with the truth by saying that doctors are free to come forward when he knows full well that doctors can't say anything if they've signed a nondisclosure agreement?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, that's not true again. Any physician can come to the Health Quality Council and bring forward their opinions on how to improve the system. What would be in a disclosure document that would not allow a doctor to talk about how to best improve the health care system of Alberta? That's absolutely ridiculous.

Dr. Swann: I think I speak on behalf of many Albertans and professionals who are frustrated with the non answers we get from the Premier time and again.

What damning evidence is the Premier afraid will emerge from a public inquiry that can require doctors, bureaucrats, and even ministers to testify under oath? What are you afraid of?

Mr. Stelmach: In fact, Mr. Speaker, anyone that has been asked by the Health Quality Council to appear before the council has not refused, number one. Number two, all those individuals that appear before the Health Quality Council will be protected under the Alberta rules of evidence. They will be protected in terms of what they're bringing forward to the Health Quality Council. There is nothing here to hide. The report will be public. We will have one report within three months, the second within about six months, and the final report in nine months.

Dr. Swann: Again, Mr. Speaker, the Premier is very disingenuous when he knows that people like Dr. McNamee and Dr. Winton have already said that they cannot come forward to the Health Quality Council. What are you hiding, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not hiding anything. I don't know what those two physicians do not want to bring forward.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I did make an inaccurate statement. I did say that Dr. McNamee was suing Dr. Winton and that Dr. Winton was suing Dr. McNamee. Actually, Dr. McNamee filed a statement of claim against Dr. Winton, and Dr. Winton filed a statement of defence against Dr. McNamee. I want to make that very clear. I'm not a lawyer, so please excuse that small inaccuracy on my part.*

The Deputy Speaker: Third question from the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Memorial to Fallen Workers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Today on this National Day of Mourning I would like the Premier to please commit to building a permanent, visible monument that can be seen from this Legislative Assembly so that all members of this House are reminded each and every day of the year of what happens when our occupational health and safety laws are not enforced. To the Premier: will the Premier please commit today to building this monument in memory of all the workers whose lives have been lost as a result of a workplace accident in this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as you know, we can only advise the Speaker of this Assembly and, of course, the minister that's responsible for the Legislature Grounds. There have been a number of recommendations or requests that have come forward for statues. The Speaker and the minister are responsible for reviewing them all.

This is a very good idea. It is one that will remind us of the many tragic events. The minister may want to give further detail.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Mr. Speaker, this time to the Minister of Infrastructure: given that there are 27 monuments already located, or sited, in various places on the Legislature Grounds and there's a very small plaque just to the south of us to honour workers, that was installed in 1991, can we now have a permanent memorial to those who have unfortunately lost their lives on a job site in this province?

2:10

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier has said and as we had the minister's statement today and also members of the opposition, it is very tragic, the individuals that we lose. I would be very happy to meet with the hon. member to discuss this further.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that this was a request that was made over 10 years ago, is it possible, please, to get a commitment from this government so that we can permanently remember those who have unfortunately lost their lives on a job site in this province? It's the least we can do for the families.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I have offered to meet with the hon. member. I will also defer to the hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, not only is this a good idea; it's an idea that already has been discussed. My office has actually been approached by individuals from organized labour who also share that desire. I am more than willing to discuss that idea and share it, obviously, with the Speaker, the Premier, and the Minister of Infrastructure. Frankly, because I know you have been such a big advocate for occupational health and safety, perhaps members of the opposition would care to be involved in creating – it's quite a creative process, but I think it would be very becoming to commemorate those who have built this province for the last 100 and some years.

Property Rights

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in a recent poll of almost 20,000 randomly selected Albertans the question was asked whether this PC government had adequately protected the rights of property owners, and 69.1 per cent of those polled answered no. The numbers are even worse for the government in rural constituencies. Whether this government agrees or not, Albertans want bills 36, 50, and 19 repealed, and they want them repealed now. Why does this Premier continue to ignore the common-sense judgment of everyday Albertans who rightly feel that this government has failed to protect their property rights?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, on the contrary, the bills that have been passed are there to protect property owners. As I said yesterday, this is a very sensitive topic for landowners that are in this Assembly. It's also a very sensitive topic for Albertans because this is one province where at the beginning, about 1917, 1918, many pioneers lost their land, taken away without compensation. The families moved to camps in different parts of Alberta and Canada. That is Alberta history.

The bills that are passed are here to protect property rights and offer compensation for those properties that may be needed for public infrastructure.

Mr. Anderson: That's why you should know better, Premier.

Given that this Premier refused to attend a town hall of 600 landowners in his own constituency and given that he hasn't shown up to one town hall in Alberta on these landowner rights issues in his entire premiership and given that he has cut off debate on amendments to Bill 36 in this Legislature, with dozens of proposed amendments ready for discussion, and given his surprise and pending retirement, will the Premier just admit that he's afraid of facing voters now and in the next election because of his failure to protect Albertans' property rights?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one just has to look into Hansard and read the eloquent speech that was given by the member in support of Bill 36. Might I remind this House that the total debate on Bill 36 was about three and a half hours. I think, Mr. House Leader, we've had at least eight hours or even more on the amendments. Now, isn't that a little bit of theatrics? Pass a bill in three and a half hours and take 10 hours to pass amendments to a bill that he so eloquently supported in the House?

Mr. Anderson: Given that your former Justice minister, a current PC leadership candidate who oversaw the drafting of Bill 36, has come to the same conclusion that I have, that we made a mistake to support Bill 36 in 2009 and that it's time to go back to the drawing board and fix it, will you, like her and like me, do the right thing, admit your mistake, just like Premier Klein would have done, and repeal these bills that Albertans clearly want scrapped? Why won't you admit your mistake and just do the right thing?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the one bill, Bill 19: previous Premier Peter Lougheed had a tremendous vision for Alberta, and that was to build ring roads around Edmonton and Calgary. But what the governments did at that time is that they sterilized the property where the road was going to be built, and those people that had money to go to court fought the government in court and many won. Okay? So what Bill 19 has done: any time that the government through full public consultation decides this is where the next ring road has to be around the two cities, the government has to purchase the property within two years or remove all restrictions on the land. That is the best property protection in Canada.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Education Funding

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While the Education minister struggles to perfect legislation that may never see the light of day, in Calgary hundreds of teachers will be laid off thanks to this government's budget cuts. Catholic schools in Fort McMurray are cutting out one day of instruction per week to save money. Will the minister explain why his priority is an Education Act which may never be passed instead of making sure there are enough teachers in Alberta classrooms?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in government one has to always look to the horizon while they're doing today. One cannot choose between planning for the future, preparing for the future, and working on the legislative framework for the future while they're struggling with the fiscal issues of the day. In the end there will be enough teachers in the classroom because it's the quality of teachers we have in this province which makes a difference, not the time in front of the students and not the number of students in front of the teacher.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Our teachers aren't miracle workers, and they can't make up for this government's mismanagement.

Given that this new Education Act, of which this minister is so proud, will do nothing to restore needed resources to schools and given that Lethbridge public school division could lose 35 teachers thanks to this government's budget cuts, why can't the minister see that education isn't inspiring under his watch; it's expiring?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, just another clever and very rude comment from the hon. member opposite. Nobody is impressed.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure not impressed by this minister's funding of schools.

Edmonton school boards are short $23 million, leading potentially to the loss of hundreds of teachers. Given that the Prairie Rose school division's kindergarten students will only get a half-day of class next year thanks to budget cuts, why won't the minister admit that the real problem with education is the shameful PC budget cuts?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, had the hon. member been paying attention, he would know that there have not been budget cuts in education but, rather, a 4.7 per cent increase in education funding. Now, it is certainly fair to say that that translates through and that there has been no sleight of hand. It was clear from day one – I explained it to the boards' trustees on budget day – that some school boards have a little bit less money than last year, some school boards have a little bit more money, and all school boards have some increased cost pressures that they have to deal with. But we are well funded in this province. We have a tough fiscal budget this year. The school boards will do well. There may be some job loss, but it's not going to be a catastrophic disaster for one of the strongest educational systems in the world.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Payday Loans

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2009 this government edited the rules that regulate payday loans in Alberta. The modifications included caps on fees and interest rates, eliminating rollover loan costs, and requiring lenders to clearly post their costs in their outlets. These measures were supposedly put in place to help prevent companies from preying on vulnerable Albertans. Now I want to see if they're working. To the Minister of Service Alberta. One of the most important commitments the government made was to educate the public on payday loan rules. Could the minister give an update to this House on the progress of those education campaigns?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An excellent question. Since this regulation was passed, we've been able to regulate and follow up and have inspections of all the payday loan companies that are operating. Working within the rules, at any time – we do have investigations ongoing with some, but at the end of the day we know that consumers are much better prepared when they go in and choose to take a payday loan.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In addition to promising education campaigns, Service Alberta also committed to conducting random audits of payday loan companies to ensure that they are following these new regulations. Has the minister commissioned these audits, and what are the results, please?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, we do audits on a regular basis of all the payday loan companies that are operating here in Alberta, and that goes from the larger companies all the way down to the smaller companies. At the end of the day we are looking into those, and I'd be prepared to follow up with some further information for the hon. member on that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that offer from the minister. I will take her up on that.

Before these changes were adopted, a general lack of understanding of payday loan contracts, I think it's fair to say, was the norm. Can the Minister of Service Alberta offer any concrete measurement of how borrowers now have a greater understanding of the contracts they sign given Service Alberta's commitment to ordering companies to use plain language in contracts?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another excellent question. At the end of the day consumers now know when they go in that all their rights have to be posted. They have to ask questions. We've had some concerns expressed about the rollover of cards and charging extra fees on cards. We are looking into that. We've also, with the homeless ID program that Service Alberta and Housing and Urban Affairs is working on, empowered people to get ID so they can open a bank account and perhaps not make a choice to go to a payday loan company.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Electricity Pricing

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The regulated price of electricity in Edmonton went from 7.09 cents a kilowatt hour in March to 11.76 cents in April. This created a lot of media excitement and headline news as well as questions here. The Minister of Energy said at the time that he expected power rates to go back down. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Can he give us an update on the regulated price of power for the month of May?

Mr. Liepert: Yes, I can, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Utilities Commission announced yesterday that the regulated rate for the price in May would be 6.3 cents in the city of Edmonton and between 6 and 7 cents across the province.

I know that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and the Member for Calgary-Buffer do their daily research in the Edmonton Journal and rarely get past page 1. So at the appropriate time in the House I will table copies of the story on the front page of the Journal a month ago. I'll also table the very small story in today's paper, in the Edmonton Journal, because I doubt that they would have gotten to page B3 today.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. What has resulted in power prices coming down as quickly as they have?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: There's a point of order from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. After QP we'll deal with it.

The hon. minister, then.

Mr. Liepert: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to that point of order. That'll be an interesting discussion.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of factors that go into the regulated price, including supply and demand and, you know, unexpected supply interruptions, which increase price fluctuations, but I think overall where we are for the month of May will be fairly consistent with the historical price that Albertans have had to pay for electricity.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. What options do consumers have with their power bills?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I have said in the past that consumers, like they can do with their home mortgages, can lock into a contract. But if they choose not to lock into a contract, we do have the regulated rate, which is set every month. It tends to go up and down but generally is fairly consistent with what the price will be in May.

Education Funding Initiatives

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, after talking to school trustees, parents, students, teachers, and support staff alike, it is apparent to everyone that these cuts to education funding will have a detrimental effect on our children's future. In my view, balancing our current budget on our province's future prosperity is foolish. Accordingly, here are three solutions that could provide our children with the future they deserve. Will the Premier allocate an extra $110 million, the amount cut from the expected grants to school boards, from the sustainability fund to cover schools' shortfall funding?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon we will vote on third reading of the Appropriation Act, which will put some finality on this year's budget. It's totally inappropriate to make any changes to a budget while it's in the House. You have to then refile the whole budget. I'm sure the President of the Treasury wouldn't want to do that. The hon. member ought to know through the two months of discussion we've had on the budget that the deficit that's projected for this year comes from the sustainability fund. The deficit that's projected for next year comes from the sustainability fund. When we balance the budget in a fiscal trajectory over the next three years, we will utilize that sustainability fund. It cannot be utilized twice.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, all I know is that he's shortchanging Alberta's students.

Will the Premier reduce his cabinet to the economical size of 17 from 24 to free up money to cover school funding shortfalls?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this just goes to show the difficulty that some people have actually in understanding budgets because you'd never find $107 million by reducing the size of cabinet from 24 to 17.

Mr. Hehr: Here is another suggestion. Will the Premier undo his panic flip-flop on alcohol taxes and reinstitute the proposed wine and beer tax that Albertans will be more than willing to pay to cover the cost of school funding shortfalls?

Mr. Snelgrove: Once again, this is why you have choices. You have parties that are absolutely willing and love to tax and spend. We've seen it in the federal election right now. There are some people that are not grounded in financial reality, and they can't help themselves from saying: well, if we just tax a little more and spend a little more, it'll get a little better. And it never ends. That's the choice, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Emergency Preparedness

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In this province volunteers are a key part of fire services. In many rural areas in this province we face a shortage of volunteers who can provide fire and rescue services. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. How is the minister helping municipalities get the volunteers they need so they can provide emergency services?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We support all Alberta's volunteer firefighters. They make our communities better and safer places to live. That's why we've been working with the Alberta Fire Chiefs Association on a province-wide recruitment and retention plan. That's why we provided $50,000 last year to establish a working tool for all departments and an additional $36,000 this year to further develop these tools. That's in addition to the $500,000 we provide each year to firefighters and their training programs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister. During a disaster emergency responders are the first on the scene. Given that next week is Emergency Preparedness week, what steps can Albertans take to help emergency responders do their job?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, there are things that Albertans can do to help all of our emergency first responders so they can help the most critically affected and injured people first. All Albertans should have a family plan, so everyone knows what to do in case of a disaster, as well as a 72-hour kit and a ready-to-go kit in case they need to evacuate. This particular kit will give Albertans the items they need to keep their families safe until emergency responders can reach them. The Alberta Emergency Management Agency website will provide a lot of information on what can be useful in a kit.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: what else are you doing to ensure all Albertans are prepared for emergencies throughout the year?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, it's very important to be prepared for an emergency. It takes more than just a single week in a year. It's a behavioural change that should be part of every Albertan's daily life. The Alberta Emergency Management Agency works with stakeholders and continues to work with our municipalities to change behaviours so more Albertans are ready in case a disaster strikes.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Quality Council Review (continued)

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Repeatedly this government has assured Albertans that those appearing before the Health Quality Council of Alberta are protected by the Alberta Evidence Act. In fact, the only protection that the act affords is against being asked a question about a health quality review in a subsequent court action; medical malpractice, for example. Nothing in the act protects those who have signed nondisclosure agreements from being sued in breach of contract and breach of confidentiality. To the minister of health: why does the minister continue to present the protection of the Alberta Evidence Act as something it is not?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not doing any such thing. In fact, there are protections under the Alberta Evidence Act. I've read them here in the House, and if you would like, hon. member, I'll read them to you again.

In addition to that, however, I also asked the Health Quality Council to make sure that they took into consideration any other protections of privacy or confidentiality that might be necessary so that people would feel encouraged and comfortable coming forward, and I understand that people are. So we'll wait to see what the report says.

Ms Blakeman: He's just wrong.

Back to the same minister: given that only a public inquiry can compel evidence and protect doctors from liability, why does the minister continue to refuse growing demand for a public inquiry?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to reiterate and keep the record straight that the Health Quality Council of Alberta has already indicated very publicly that their report will be based on fact, that it will be based on public input and on input from people in the practice, and that they are creating an atmosphere of participation. I hope that anyone with any information might come forward. Perhaps somewhere we'll get to the bottom of all of this if any evidence exists, if any proof exists to the allegations that were made. So far I'm not aware of any.

Ms Blakeman: Well, the Health Quality Council can offer whatever they want, but they cannot protect those doctors. So if the government is serious about getting to the bottom of allegations of government intimidation and a culture of fear, why does the minister persist in offering a process that will not allow those doctors with the information we need to speak out freely? Why is that?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no one is denying anyone from coming forward with whatever information they want. In fact, the exact opposite is true. We on this side are encouraging doctors to come forward if they have issues that pertain to the allegations. What we've seen so far is a bunch of statements of claim that are basically disagreements between professionals and their employers. That's all that we've seen. A lot of it is not relevant to the points that were alleged in this House, and this hon. member knows that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Range Road 20 Improvements

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Within Whitecourt-St. Anne range road 20, located south of Onoway and south of highway 633, is a very busy industrial roadway. It sees a lot of commercial traffic and helps support the construction activities across this capital region. However, this roadway is not paved, and it's in bad shape. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. When will you and the province step forward to support the improvements needed on this important roadway?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, I'd like to be able to tell this hon. member, who works so hard for his constituents, that the last mile of this important roadway is going to be upgraded. My department is providing Lac Ste. Anne county a grant of up to $755,000 to pave the final stretch of this road. Funding comes from the resource road program, which provides a 50-50 cost share to rural municipalities for upgrading local roads. This funding is about supporting areas with increased activity because of economic development. We are building a better Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, that's great news. If you continue with those kinds of responses to my questions, I'm going to ask you more.

I'd like to know: when are you going to actually cut the cheque, and when is this work going to be done?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, under the resource road program the province provides the grant funding to municipalities and the municipalities prioritize those road projects. The projects are then managed by the municipality. By providing this grant funding in early April, it's very possible that the municipality could have construction under way this year. But he'll have to check with the municipality.

Mr. VanderBurg: I'd like to thank the minister for that good response. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the minister, please lower your volume.

Hon. minister, respond to the question.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you. Thank you. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Questions about Government Accountability

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When asked about reports, pilot projects, and program reviews, the government is notorious for answering with, "Soon," "Very soon," "As soon as we can," or "It's forthcoming." Albertans are tired of being delayed and denied real answers to serious questions about their government and their vital programs. My first question is to the Government House Leader. When will your government stop the delay tactics and dodges and table reports that Albertans have been promised?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question is inappropriately directed to the Government House Leader. It's not within my purview, but I will answer the question. This government makes sure that all reports are made available at the most appropriate time, after thoughtful consideration has been put into them and responses, if necessary, have been prepared.

Mrs. Forsyth: Okay. Well, now we'll add "most appropriate time" to that list.

Given that there are over 80 pieces of legislation passed by this House awaiting proclamation, that were debated for hundreds of hours, and that this government has the audacity to limit Bill 10 debate to five hours, will the government make sure to proclaim all of the other legislation before proclaiming Bill 10?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member would know, having been a minister in government, albeit for a short period of time, that once bills are passed in this House and receive royal assent, then a considerable amount of work goes into providing the regulatory framework. Sometimes, as the hon. member ought to know, preparing the regulatory framework which supports the bill and puts the rules and regulations in place in terms of how a bill operates also has to be the subject of public consultation and discussion because this government values the input from Albertans at every stage of the legislative process.

Mrs. Forsyth: This minister is full of gobbledegook, quite frankly.

Given that the Premier demonstrated a shocking lack of understanding around what is going on in health care, so much that his office had to make a statement on his behalf to get him out of trouble, how can Albertans have confidence in this government about our public health care system? Call a public inquiry, health minister.

Mr. Zwodsky: Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that the health care system in our province is absolutely excellent. If it were any different, we wouldn't have 400 more international medical graduates coming to us from around the world. We wouldn't have 460 more brand new specialists working in this province. We wouldn't have 23 additional cardiologists. We wouldn't have 3,000 more RNs, over 800 new doctors than we did just a few years ago. We're a magnet for wonderful health care experiences right here in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Highway Signage

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We see them more and more. I'm not talking about dandelions or mushrooms; I'm talking about highway direction signs that don't talk about where you are going but, instead, talk about roads you are on and which roads they connect to. Most people don't navigate like this. I'm certain tourists don't look for highway 1 west; they look for the sign pointing to Banff. To the Minister of Transportation: has there been a change to highway signage policy to account for these changes?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, if I understand that hon. member correctly, I would have to say that, no, there hasn't been a policy change to highway signage. What I will say about highway signage, though, is that it's about creating a balance between clear and effective signage or having signs that have too much information on them. We want to make sure that our highway signage doesn't create distracted driving or doesn't create a problem for drivers. Alberta's highway signage policies and practices strive for consistency, and they mirror North American . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: I think that's exactly what the minister is trying to do. He's trying to confuse the travelling public here, Mr. Speaker.

To the minister again: given that most people won't be looking for a sign to Stony Plain Road west from Henday but, instead, for an exit to Jasper, why are signs pointing to Jasper absent from the Henday southbound exit? Why was it changed when it was working just fine?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to be able to tell you that Stoney Trail is a great addition to our highway system. I want to also say that Stoney Trail is an actual circle. We put our signage for Banff on there at the exit of it, not the beginning because otherwise people would go in a circle. We want to get them to their destination. Tourism is very, very important to us.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member, please, the volume of noise in this Chamber is so high that the Speaker cannot listen to the eloquence of the member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that's exactly what the minister is trying to do. He wants people to go in circles instead of trying to give them directions. To the minister again: given that, is the government so lost that they can't even get highway signs right?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that this hon. member isn't hearing very clearly. We're saying that the sign says at the exit where to get off at highway 1. It says Banff. It doesn't say it when you get onto the Stoney Trail because the Stoney Trail does go in a circle.

I will say that this hon. member always does try to do the very best for his constituents and Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Education Funding

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As someone that is concerned about the effects of Budget 2011 and the effect it may have on the classroom, my questions to the minister are whether or not the following ideas, that could possibly prevent cuts that affect students in the classroom, have been explored. First of all, Minister, have you considered reducing from 4 per cent to 3 per cent the amount of money school boards can devote to headquarter and trustee expenses?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker, we haven't at a provincial level considered changing the guidelines which provide for up to 4 per cent for urban boards and up to 6 per cent for rural boards. It is an area which could be looked at. Quite frankly, I would expect as minister and we would expect as a provincial government that each board would look at their administrative expenses and try to keep their administrative expenses as low as possible in order to direct as many resources as possible to the classroom.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question. Some claim that year-round schooling has the potential to reduce costs by requiring less capital and operational dollars. Mr. Minister, has that been explored further in these circumstances?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of projects around the province looking at different ways of doing schooling, and I think it's incumbent on school boards to look at and talk about issues within their communities as to how they might better provide an educational program for students in that area. I think that has to be first and foremost. Certainly, there are educational benefits to year-round schooling in terms of educational outcomes for some students. In fact, we do have a considerable amount of school capital around the province which could be better utilized, perhaps, if we could look at longer days and using it for more months. That wouldn't mean that every student would have to go all days in a longer day or that every student would have to go every month in a longer year, but you could use your capital better if you looked at those opportunities.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister. Minister, although we have many different school boards, we have one taxpayer in the province. Have we explored the simple idea of bulk purchasing? For example, we spend about $35 million on textbooks alone each year and large sums of money on technology. What have we done to pursue bulk purchasing at a provincial level?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through the Learning Resources Centre annually we not only buy textbooks in bulk, but we also to a certain extent subsidize the cost of those books for school boards across the province. I do think we need to do a better job, whether we do it as a provincial government or whether we do it through the School Boards Association or through just a conglomerate of school boards, of looking at how we purchase technology, how we purchase technology licensing, how we make a provision for cloud computing, those sorts of things, which could I think have incredible benefits for boards, not only in terms of the services that they get but also the cost of those services.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Occupational Health and Safety

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we learned of yet another serious Calgary incident of falling work debris. Fortunately, no workers or the general public were injured. This is in a long series of construction safety incidents that have plagued Alberta. To the minister of Employment and Immigration: government efforts to increase awareness and improve job safety aren't working; why not?

Mr. Lukaszuk: It would be very presumptive of the member to say that they are not working. As the member knows, just a few months ago I had ordered a concentrated review and inspection of commercial construction sites, particularly in Calgary relevant to falling objects from construction sites. I have used some very strong language describing the outcome of that particular inspection. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have enhanced enforcement, and we'll continue to do so. At this particular site we are investigating right now, if there is any culpability on behalf of either workers or the employer, we will deal with those proprietors or the workers accordingly.

Ms Pastoor: These at this point in time appear to be short term. It's increased work-site safety inspections, that we saw earlier this year, but it still failed to achieve a long-term change in poor practices at commercial construction sites. I'm looking for outcomes. How do you evaluate good outcomes?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member says that my recent actions have failed to achieve long-term goals. Well, how do we know what the long-term outcomes will be? Let's get there first, and then we can assess it. I can tell you that whatever it is that I'm doing, I'm doing it with the best intentions.

I have to tell you that we have the full co-operation of Alberta employers, Alberta organized labourers, and all industry safety associations. We're all in the same boat. All we want to do, Mr. Speaker, is make sure that the culture in the province changes, that it improves, and that it is unacceptable for anyone to either be provided with a place of employment or to create a place of employment that's dangerous to themselves or their co-workers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister making a commitment to increase the overall number of work-site safety inspections in Alberta? These short-term safety blitzes, again, are not having the desired outcomes.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I respect the fact that this member is sincerely concerned about occupational health and safety, but she mustn't have paid attention. Over the last few months I have more than doubled the number of safety inspectors, by 52 per cent, within this and the next budget year. In addition to our regular inspections of all work sites in Alberta, for example, we're now completing inspections of forklifts. We're starting with young and inexperienced workers, probably next month. After that, we will be spotlighting the residential construction industry. We have increased both inspections and the number of occupational health and safety officers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

High Prairie Health Care Centre

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On again, off again; on again, off again: that's how my constituents felt about their new proposed High Prairie replacement one-window-service health facility. The people in my area have waited patiently for many, many things and, most importantly, recently the new land agreement which was signed. I'd like the Minister of Infrastructure to please give my constituents an update as to what's been happening and what it means for securing that land for that specific facility.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I'm glad to report that we have reached an agreement with the town of High Prairie and the Peavine Métis settlement for the location of the new hospital. The agreement expands the site from 14 acres to 20 acres. It provides new space for future hospital needs.

Also, the town and the Métis can better meet the future development plans . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, that was a really good answer, but I'll give him another question. Given that my community and my constituents have worked hard to ensure the needs of our region are met and worked on a new design in 2008, can you please,

Mr. Minister, explain why new design work is being undertaken now?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the project is moving ahead at full speed. We have an aggressive schedule. However, we want to get this right from the start. We will make sure that this hospital meets the health needs of the community now and for years to come. This includes the incorporation of the latest technology innovation and expertise available. We also have to make sure that the design reflects the most up-to-date service delivery.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations going on. We've done consultations in the past. Given that all these consultations have occurred, can the Minister of Infrastructure please explain the value of and why more consultations are needed in order for that facility to finally be realized, and what role is Northern Lakes College going to be taking in terms of making sure that their views are also addressed?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I think it's critical that Alberta Infrastructure has consultation with the community. We need to ensure that we deliver the hospital that works for the High Prairie community. We rely on having active participation and local knowledge and expertise. In fact, we're having doctors and other stakeholders at the table to ensure that we get the most reliable information about their community and what they feel is necessary.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I will say to you that once the design has been built, we're going to go back to the community . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Corporate Tax Advantage for American Companies

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Reports from TD finance as well as data from Statistics Canada show that corporations make profits in Alberta at consistently double or more the rate in other provinces and the U.S., and a huge amount of that profit flows out of Alberta at very low tax rates, never to be seen again. At the same time Alberta public services are squeezed, teachers are laid off, and roads blossom with potholes. To the President of the Treasury Board: why does this government let unprecedented flows of wealth go from Alberta to Wall Street, where it's taxed by Washington at a rate of 35 per cent?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, his statements aren't completely true. The article that he's trying to refer to wasn't able to differentiate between corporations that are run through Canadian subsidiaries or that are run through their American head office. If they are run through a Canadian subsidiary, they pay all of their tax in Canada. The only time there would be a double taxation or a drop in taxation is if they're operated through their American head office, which only applies in approximately 10 per cent of the corporations operating in Canada.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the minister referred to Jack Mintz as a source of policy information on tax rates, is the minister aware that Dr. Mintz was paid $130,000 in stock options last year by the largest energy corporation in Canada, Imperial Oil, to serve on its board of directors?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, that's totally irrelevant to what goes on in this House. If they want to ask questions based on corporate tax law, that's terrific, but to somehow suggest that either Jack Mintz or this government would be making comments in a paper based on some of the boards they sit on is just simply not fair to Jack Mintz, and it certainly offers nothing to the discussion about the tax laws.

Dr. Taft: Well, then, given that this government relies heavily on Dr. Mintz for advice, why is the government ignoring his letter of June 2008, which he wrote as chair of the government's financial planning commission, advising that the government needed to have $215 billion in net assets in 2008 to maintain current public services and tax rates? Why is that being ignored?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's not being ignored. We get information. We consult with dozens of very respected financial consultants or business consultants. What he is simply saying is that to sustain the spending at levels we have without resources, we're going to have to have more assets, more money in the bank. It shouldn't be a shock to the hon. member. We cannot continue to spend on health care, with growth of 10, 12, 13 per cent year over year, when business is only growing at 2 or 3 per cent in good years or in many years at zero. To somehow suggest that Jack Mintz's report is contrary to what we're trying to do in growing the economic pie is also untrue.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we just ended our question period. We had 102 questions and answers. We have a few seconds before we continue on.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Dr. Lorne Tyrrell

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to stand up today and express my utmost admiration and respect for Dr. Lorne Tyrrell, an icon in this province as well as the national medical community. Today marks a very special occasion for Dr. Tyrrell. Tonight Dr. Tyrrell will be inducted into Canada's Medical Hall of Fame, a truly inspiring accomplishment. He will be honoured for his outstanding dedication to medicine and acknowledged for a number of awards, too long to list in this House.

Dr. Tyrrell is truly a pillar in Canadian medicine. Upon receiving a medical degree with distinction from the University of Alberta and a doctorate from Queen's University, he propelled himself into the medical community. Dr. Tyrrell served as the chair of medical microbiology and infectious diseases from 1986 to 1994 and for the next 10 years as dean of the Faculty of Medicine and Dentistry at our very own University of Alberta.

While serving in these positions, he was also making incredible breakthroughs through his research in viral hepatitis therapy. In 1998 Dr. Tyrrell's lab licensed Lamivudine, the first-ever oral treatment for the hepatitis B virus, which helps 350 million people in 170 different countries. What an astounding achievement.

Among many other awards for his brilliant contributions he has received the gold medal of the Canadian Liver Foundation, the Alberta Order of Excellence, and has been named an officer in the Order of Canada. Dr. Tyrrell is also the chair of the Health Quality Council of Alberta as well as of the Institute of Health Economics and is director of the Li Ka Shing Institute of Virology at the U of A.

Countless Albertans, from students to patients, have benefited from and been inspired by this tremendous individual. I would ask the members of this Assembly to join me in recognizing a true Albertan hero and one of the world's most brilliant medical minds.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Western Cup

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm very honoured to present this on behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Speaker, for nearly three decades the members of the Calgary LGBT community have hosted the Western Cup, one of the premier gay multisport events on the continent. When the Member for Calgary-Buffalo spoke about the Western Cup last year, he noted that Alberta has thousands of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered citizens, people who are doing incredible work every day to strengthen and grow all aspects of our social, cultural, and political progress.

Over the long weekend Calgarians celebrated the successful completion of the 29th Western Cup. This year the closing dance, Calgary's largest LGBT dance, was held at the beautiful Hotel Arts. For a second year in a row the Member for Calgary-Buffalo checked it out, and he had a wonderful time. I know how good he is at those social occasions.

Mr. Speaker, nearly 500 athletes participated in the Western Cup, North America's oldest LGBT multisporting event. This year athletes competed in curling, volleyball, bowling, and dodge ball. Events like this one demonstrate how Albertans in the LGBT community are really giving back to their province with events that draw tourists, promote physical fitness, encourage healthy competition, and promote universal human rights.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo is very proud of the participants, and I join him in being proud of the participants, volunteers, sponsors, and organizers who made this event possible. Well done, everyone, and we all hope to see them again next year.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: It's 3 o'clock. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the time that was spent on the very appropriate and necessary statements with respect to the National Day of Mourning, might we request the unanimous consent of the House to continue the Routine notwithstanding the standing orders?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: We will continue on with Members' Statements.

Literacy

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today and speak about the importance of literacy in Alberta classrooms. Literacy is the foundation for continuous learning and a vital characteristic of the highly skilled population needed for Alberta's next generation economy. Literacy has benefits for individuals, society, and the economy. Stronger literacy skills are associated with higher income, better health, and greater social and civic engagement.

In the kindergarten to grade 12 education system students need to develop a broad and deep range of literacy skills so they can have the literacy future they deserve, optimize their lifelong learning potential, and become active, participating members of their communities and the wider society.

Literacy has always been the keystone of learning. Changes in society and the rapidly evolving technology of the 21st century have increased the intensity and complexity of literate environments. The 21st century challenges us to rethink what being a fully literate person means. In the 21st century literacy is more than reading and writing. Today and in the future learners must develop expertise with a range of literary skills and strategies to acquire, create, connect, and communicate meaning in an ever-expanding variety of contexts.

Alberta Education has developed Literacy First: A Plan for Action. This action plan has supported key Alberta Education initiatives, including Setting the Direction, Inspiring Education, and inspiring action on education. It also supports the vision, values, and goals of the provincial literacy framework, Living Literacy. This framework co-ordinates the efforts of the government of Alberta and our many partners to improve literacy levels for all Albertans. In addition, Literacy First supports the Council of Ministers of Education Canada literacy action plan and Learn-Canada 2020.

As you can see, literacy is an important priority across Canada.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Primary Care

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to health care, a frequent comment I hear from constituents is that the care and treatment provided in Alberta is excellent once you get in the door. I would be willing to wager that colleagues on all sides of this House and in Legislatures across the country frequently hear similar feedback.

The door to which our constituents refer is primary care, the foundation of our publicly funded health system. I believe that what Albertans want from this House is a focus on helping them get through that front door. Primary care refers to a citizen's first point of contact within the health system. Traditionally this has been through a family physician, but today primary care increasingly means individuals, families, and communities accessing a broad range of health and, I might add, wellness services delivered by multidisciplinary teams dedicated to serving the community's needs over the long term. In Alberta over 2.7 million citizens, more than 70 per cent of our population, live in communities served by our 40 primary care networks.

Mr. Speaker, the value proposition for primary care teams is usually expressed in terms of better, more frequent access to front-line health providers. It is true that much progress has been made in Alberta on this over the last eight years, but the real challenge before us and the one that calls out for debate is how to open the door wider and use primary care as the powerful tool it is to improve care across the system and, in doing so, the health of future generations. Co-ordination of care in the local community, same-day access to physicians and other professionals, dedicated links to specialists, faster access to locally delivered home care and continuing care, and proactive screening and management of chronic disease are just a few of the possibilities within our reach right now.

This vision for primary care is not new, it is not unachievable, and it need not be costly. But it will only become possible when we as representatives make a conscious choice to engage in constructive, informed discussion with our constituents and with one another.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore

Education Act

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Minister of Education with pride and thanks tabled the new Education Act yesterday. The proposed legislation represents a three-year journey and the contributions of thousands of Albertans to arrive at the current destination.

Looking back over the past few years, the government had set a very aggressive agenda to address a number of important education issues and undertook several significant initiatives such as Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans, Setting the Direction, the Speak Out student engagement, the Inspiring Education discussion paper, and the School Act review. All of these separate initiatives provided the basis for what could be referred to as an informed transformation in the education system.

Transforming a complex system such as education requires careful thought, research, analysis, and, above all, meaningful interaction with all Albertans. Just as local conversations with friends and neighbours build community, the public engagement initiatives that were undertaken have truly shown that teachers, school leadership, parents, students, and the public want a true voice in guiding the future transformation of education in our province. Albertans provided input through online discussion papers and facilitated online discussions, blogs, tweets, and videos as well as community conversations. All of these contributions, Mr. Speaker, helped in drafting a new Education Act.

As one of the four MLAs who served on the Inspiring Education Steering Committee, I feel that we can proudly acknowledge the significant contributions of all Albertans. We sought new ways to reach out to Albertans and involve them in meaningful, in-depth discussions about education. Community participation was extensive and essential in producing the new Education Act.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the next steps of our transformation are not ones that the government will take alone. That is why the dialogue will continue within our communities amongst Albertans who care about the future of education for children and youth in our province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Education Funding

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The list of Alberta school districts in tough positions making decisions to deal with underfunding is growing. In the past few days we have seen reports from the Fort McMurray, Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, Grande Prairie, Medicine Hat, and Battle River areas about some of these difficult situations.

When we talk about the Education budget, we are dealing with children and youth to whom we owe responsibilities. Young people will also ensure a strong and prosperous province for all the rest of us in the years to come. It is no cliché to say that we invest in children. What is spent to ensure they receive good education in safe and stimulating environments is creating our future.

This Progressive Conservative government has found billions of dollars to chase ideas like carbon capture and storage or to subsidize horse racing. They give big energy companies windfall profits from the oil sands through inadequate royalty formulas that cost us billions in lost revenue. But when it comes to schools, the PCs' inadequate funding means teachers and other skilled professionals who work with our children will be losing jobs, and it means young people eager to be educators, who have invested in years of education, will not get jobs. It means class sizes will increase, vital local community schools will close, children with special learning needs will miss individualized attention, and rural children may be in more multigraded classrooms and spend more of their lives on long bus rides. These are all situations which harm the education of Alberta children.

It is shameful that we have a PC government and a Minister of Education wanting to talk about abstract ideas in legislation while walking away from real action to address the challenges our education system is facing. The children of Alberta deserve better, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Emergency Preparedness

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to talk about an important annual event that reminds Albertans and, indeed, Canadians about the importance of being prepared for emergencies. Next week is Emergency Preparedness Week across the nation. It is an opportunity to remind everyone that by preparing for emergencies and disasters, we can save time, reduce anxiety, and perhaps even save a life.

As we know, emergency response in Alberta is first handled locally by our municipalities, but just as important is the individual responsibility each of us has when it comes to emergency preparedness. During this year's Emergency Preparedness Week the government of Alberta is encouraging all Albertans to create a 72-hour kit. Having this kit will give Albertans and their families the essential items to keep them safe, and having a similar to-go kit will assist everyone in the event they need to evacuate.

Mr. Speaker, that's what emergency preparedness is all about: knowing the hazards and planning ahead. The planning we do now can save our own life or that of a loved one. Just as important, when we're prepared for an emergency, it means first responders will be able to help the most critically affected and injured people first.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that everyone will take the time during Emergency Preparedness Week to review their family emergency plans and stock up on their own 72-hour kit. Together we all have a role in enhancing this province's public safety, and together we can be a province prepared.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: May we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour for me to have this opportunity today to introduce three constituents from the Rocky Mountain House constituency. They are Ray Ahlstrom from Alhambra; Gord Sanders from James River, Sundre; and Neil Godlonton. They are here to meet with the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly an incredible group of people from the Department of Alberta Education who have committed themselves to public service. More specifically, this group has dedicated countless hours in numerous ways to the transformation of our education system through the Inspiring Education process and through the development of Bill 18, the new Education Act. Their task to this point has not been an easy one, and I have nothing but the utmost of respect and appreciation for each and every member of our department staff who offered their skills and talent in helping to create an education system in Alberta that will continue to lead the world and provide our students with every opportunity to find their own happiness and success in life.

We have with us today Rick Baker, Sheldon Bossert, Laura Cameron, Chelsea Evans-Rymes, Donna Fedoration, Bette Gray, Terence Harding, Keray Henke, Mark Kay, Amanda Krumins, Paul Lamoureux, Peter Malcolm, Allison Matichuk, Carol McLean, Rob McPhee, Caroline Nixon, Rakhi Pancholi, Greg Rudolf, John Rymer, Sandra Shepitka-Boyle, Lorraine Stewart, Carolyn Stuparyk, Kathy Telfer, Angela Town, and Maureen Towns.

There are many others, of course, who aren't able to join us, but I want to on behalf of all of us in this Legislature say thank you to these individuals and through them to all staff in Alberta Education, in fact all of our staff in the government of Alberta, who do so much every day to make it work for the people of Alberta. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair wishes to use this occasion to recognize that April 28 is a special day for the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill as it is his birthday.

Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to give oral notice of a motion for leave to introduce a bill, being Bill 19, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2011.

I would also rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) to advise the House that on Monday, May 9, 2011, written questions 14, 19, and 20 will be accepted, and written questions 15, 16, 17, and 18 will be dealt with.

Also, on May 9, 2011, motions for return 13, 14, and 16 will be accepted and motions for return 12 and 15 will be dealt with.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the required number of copies of the blog post The Towering Cedars of Lebanon from Gillian Berg's blog, posted on January 8, 2011. I quoted this blog entry in my member's statement yesterday to highlight the impact that volunteer firefighters can have in someone's life.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated, I have three tablings. My first is the required number of copies of an April 26, 2011, media release from the Sierra Club, CPAWS, the Castle-Crown Wilderness Coalition, the Natural Resources Defense Council, and the Alberta Wilderness Association calling for a boycott of lumber products from the Crowsnest forest until the government and the sawmill in question have reformed forest management to protect the watershed.

My second tabling is a March 22, 2011, newspaper article from the Missoulian addressing a judge's decision to block selective thinning in the Kootenai national forest because Montana Forest Service was unable to show it had properly assessed how the projects would affect grizzly bear populations. It's a shame, Mr. Speaker, that grizzlies don't require passports to cross our endangering border. My final tabling is from 25 individuals who are concerned about the upcoming June fate of the Castle-Crown area, when clear-cutting is set to begin. They are as follows: Susan Ellis, Judy Wright, Linda Martens, Casey Brennan, Nicholas Engelmann, Devon Smead, Rebecca Haynes, Dennis Francis, Marilyn Goode, Gail Matwichuk, Nancy Cooley, G. McElree, Peter Morgan, Erika Sullivan, Bella Zimbalatti, Allison Forsythe, Chris Lee, Mona Gudjurgis, Armand Boisjoli, Annie Ryan, Gaile Carr, Eric Edwards, Mary Rausch, Camille Gilbert, and Brian Gibbons.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Yes. Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my answer to a question earlier today, I'm going to table the required number of copies of the Edmonton Journal front-page article of a month ago, April 3, which talks about power bills increasing, and today's copy of the Edmonton Journal, page B3, a three-paragraph, fairly buried article about electricity prices that are dropping sharply. I would strongly encourage the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to take a look, and maybe he'll have a question on May 9.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yes. It is not permitted to table newspaper articles in the House. It may be his research, Mr. Speaker, but it's not in order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition I would like to table copies of court documents that he referred to during his questions in question period today specific to the case of Dr. Qureshi against the Northern Lights health region.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a letter received from a Marion Leithhead. She is from Bawlf, Alberta. It's a very good letter. She talks about her displeasure with regard to Bill 50 and the fact that the government voted down a motion from this hon. member to repeal that bill.

Mr. Liepert: One letter.

Mr. Anderson: This is just one, but it's very much worth . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I think the hon. Energy minister wants to hear the letter, so I think I'll read it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, just table it.

Mr. Anderson: Are we not allowed to do that?

The Deputy Speaker: Just table it.

Mr. Anderson: Sometimes those Q-tips fall in the ears, you know. You've got to read these things for him to understand.

The Deputy Speaker: This is tabling time, so just table enough copies.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Well, we'll table five copies of that for his viewing enjoyment. Maybe I'll come in next week with a few more just to help him understand how serious his silliness is.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, do you have some tablings?

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table copies of 35 different reports from individuals who work in long-term care. They've been collected by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, and they indicate specific problems in caring for elderly patients on shifts when they were short-staffed. These reports indicate that residents often missed bathing, did not receive their meals on time, and bells, when they called for help, were not able to be answered in a timely manner. I'm happy to table these, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mrs. Jablonski, Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, responses to questions raised by Ms Pastoor, hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, and Mrs. Forsyth, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, on March 8, 2011, Department of Seniors and Community Supports main estimates debate.

3:20 Projected Government Business

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this point according to Standing Order 7(6) I would ask the Government House Leader to share with us the projected government House business for the week following next – next week is a constituency week – so the projected government business for the week commencing Monday, May 9.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, May 9, under Government Bills and Orders in the evening we anticipate dealing in Committee of the Whole with Bill 8, Missing Persons Act; Bill 15, Victims of Crime Amendment Act; Bill 16, Energy Statutes Amendment Act; for third reading Bill 6, Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act; Bill 7, Corrections Amendment Act; Bill 12, Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act; and Bill 14, Wills and Succession Amendment Act.

On Wednesday, May 11, 2011, in the afternoon third reading of Bill 1, Bill 8, Bill 10; Bill 11, Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act; Bill 16, Energy Statutes Amendment Act; and as per the Order Paper; in the evening third reading of Bill 10 and Bill 11 and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, May 12, 2011, in the afternoon third reading of bills 10 and 11 and as per the Order Paper.

The Deputy Speaker: Now the chair will deal with the point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will cite Standing Orders section 23(h), (i), and (j). That is to say that the rules state that members would be called to order by the Speaker if in the Speaker's opinion the member

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- [or]
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Now, as unlikely as that may seem given the hon. Minister of Energy's history, he claimed that I and the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo used the Edmonton Journal as our source of research. I just want to correct the record here, in particular, and I hope that the hon. minister will recognize the error of his ways and, hopefully, stand up and apologize.

First of all, we employ top-rate research staff in our caucus, and we have plenty of sources of information beyond the newspapers. In fact, often on this subject the newspapers are covering what we say rather than the other way around. I just want to indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, that we have tabled documents from the organizations Alberta Direct Connect and the Industrial Power Consumers Association, both of which have made it very clear and have given considerable analysis, which we have used, which shows that this minister and this government's plans to impose transmission infrastructure on this province will make Alberta industry uneconomical and will result in a 65 per cent increase in the transmission component of everyone's bills.

This information is what we've been asking the minister about. It's been very clear and we've made it clear that we got this information from our own research and from these organizations. We've also been in touch with RETA, which I think is the Responsible Electricity Transmission association as well as the Consumers' Association of Canada. They are all reputable organizations that do good research and with whom we are in contact on matters relating to this and other things to do with electricity deregulation.

When the minister tables, against the rules, by the way, in this Assembly newspaper articles in an attempt to illustrate his point, which is false, that we in fact get our research from the newspaper, he is doing a disservice to this Assembly. In fact, in suggesting that we get our research from the newspapers, he is misleading the Assembly.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you rule that the minister should stand up and apologize for his attempt to besmirch the reputation not only of myself but of my caucus and, of course, all of our excellent staff.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, some targets are just too easy.

Let me very briefly respond to this member. I go back to Hansard of April 14, where the member asked me a question and stated, “Yesterday the Minister of Energy claimed that after a massive 62 per cent jump in April,” and he goes on. Now, going further through the front-page article of the Edmonton Journal, it didn’t say 62 per cent. It actually said 66 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I want to also reference the fact that in that same Hansard of April 14 this particular member said, “I will certainly put my position as critic on the line.” That was followed up by my comment: “I think I heard the member say that if the price of electricity in the city of Edmonton averages 6 or 7 cents a kilowatt hour in the month of May, he’d be prepared to put his job on the line.”

Mr. Speaker, it’s obvious, because the question quoted a 62 per cent increase and the Edmonton Journal story says a 66 per cent increase, that he’s done his research elsewhere, so I would withdraw the comment that the member does his research on the front page of the Edmonton Journal. But I do want to ensure that the member is prepared to uphold the other commitments that he made to the House as we proceed through this session.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, I think the chair shall now make a ruling here. First of all, I think this is a point of clarification. You had the floor. You have already explained. Then we also have the withdrawal of the statement by the minister.

So let’s go on. Let’s continue.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Education Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s with great pleasure that I ask for leave to introduce Bill 18, the Education Act, for second reading.

The course of history turns on events both large and small. Often no one can truly understand the significance of what has been achieved in the past until long after events have occurred. For example, more than 570 years ago Johannes Gutenberg perfected movable type, and we are all beneficiaries of the revolution in access to learning that his invention helped to initiate.

More than 290 years ago Wapasu, a Cree trader, brought a sample of bituminous sands to the Hudson’s Bay Company post at York Factory on Hudson’s Bay. That was indeed a small event, Mr. Speaker, but 84 years ago it resulted in Karl Clark of the University of Alberta perfecting a process for separating bitumen from the oil sands, that has become one of the pillars of Alberta’s economy today.

Fifty years ago this month Yuri Gagarin was rocketed into space and orbited the Earth. His 108-minute journey signalled that technology was going to drive the future. We can show now how these events set the stage for many things to come. But at the time they occurred, just what they meant to the future wasn’t immediately clear. Today we’re witnessing far more than just the mere tabling of legislation. We are witnessing an event that has the potential to change the lives of generations of Albertans to come.

When the School Act of 1988 was introduced, it was intended to bring education into line with the world that existed at the time and to provide Alberta and its students with an effective foundation for the future. The current success of our K to 12 system and the acknowledgement that it is one of the best educational systems in the world shows the wisdom behind the changes that were made to the School Act in 1988.

However, the world of 1988 was a much different place than the world in which we exist today. In 1988 one of the important technological announcements was the release of an advanced scientific calculator. Technological advancements have turned that much heralded calculator into not much more than a battery-operated paperweight. In 1988 the Internet was six years old, and it was not nearly the Internet that we know today. Personal computers were just starting to be available. Mobile phones were still in their infancy. In 1980 there were about 11.2 million mobile phones in the entire world. Now there are more than 3 billion mobile phones. The world has changed dramatically since 1988. Alberta has changed and is changing still.

One of the things our education system must do now is to respond effectively to a far greater diversity in the native languages and cultures of our student population. Alberta has drawn newcomers from Africa, India, Pakistan, China, and indeed all parts of the world. These newcomers rightfully expect Alberta to educate their children in a way that equips them for success in their new province and country.

In addition to responding to newcomers, we must also better respond to the needs of our First Nation, Métis, and Inuit peoples. This is the fastest growing segment of young people in Alberta. We must ensure that they, too, have the same opportunities for success and are equipped to perform at the same level of achievement as the rest of the population.

Our system is doing well now, but we must ensure that it does well by every child and that all children are provided equal opportunity for success. Given the rapid changes that we’re seeing in Alberta and in the world generally, we cannot be complacent about our education system and the role that it will play in our future prosperity. The world of tablet computers, smart phones, Smart boards, text messaging, video chat, and Internet-connected game consoles was the stuff of science fiction in 1988.

As Daniel Pink, the noted American author, has said, it is our responsibility to educate our children for “their future, not our past.” Though we cannot predict the future, we can help shape the future through education. Our education system must continue to evolve if we are to continue to be leaders in education today and tomorrow. That is why we’ve introduced the new Education Act.

Alberta has experienced tremendous economic development through the past decades since the School Act was introduced. Fundamental changes are occurring in the global economy. Our province must change, too, if it’s to flourish in the new economy just as it did in the old. As was stated in this year’s throne speech, “Of all of Alberta’s natural resources, none is more valuable than our people. It is our ethical citizenship, engaged thinking, and entrepreneurial spirit that have made Alberta prosperous today” and which must be the foundation of education if the children of today are to realize their promise tomorrow.

Ethical citizenship, engaged thinking, and entrepreneurial spirit are the qualities of our education system that must be instilled in our children as they grow into young adults. It is those qualities that will enable them and our province to reach our full potential. Though Alberta's education system leads the world today, we must not be complacent. We must redouble our efforts to maintain and remain a world leader in education.

Through the Education Act we will equip the education system to offer students more flexible, engaging, and personalized learning. We will continue to build the teaching profession. We will recruit, prepare, and support the best and brightest in becoming and remaining teachers. We will continue to build an education system in which all students have value, a system that recognizes that all children have some capacity for success regardless of their ethnicity, place of birth, or the physical or psychological challenges which they may realize in reaching their full potential.

When looking at the achievement of Yuri Gagarin, it is important to remember that it was not a rocket that took him into space. It was his education, an education that allowed him to identify and follow his passion and enable a man who was only five foot two to become a giant of achievement and to take on the mantle of Columbus of the Cosmos.

Through the new Education Act we are making a commitment to all Albertans' children that they, too, will be able to find and follow their passion. We will create schools that are safe, caring, and respectful places in which to learn and grow. This will be the responsibility not only of communities, boards, schools, and teachers but of the students as well. Students will be required to refrain from, not tolerate, and to report bullying directed towards others in the school, whether or not it occurs in the school, online, or during the school day.

One significant change of the Education Act that will also affect students is the school leaving age being changed to age 17. This change sends a clear message about the importance of education and the need to complete high school if one is to take full advantage of the opportunities Alberta has to offer, and it implements a portion of a private member's bill brought forward by the Member for Little Bow a number of years ago.

Another change is that our young people will have access to a high school education until the age of 21. This acknowledges that not all students work at the same pace and that many students who now leave high school early find themselves blocked on the basis of age when trying to return to complete their studies. This change, too, acknowledges the importance we place on education and our willingness to support those who leave and want to come back. Their being able to do so will not only be a benefit to them but to Alberta.

The new Education Act also creates residency for students based on where they live rather than on where their parents live. This change is based on the belief that an eligible student who is a resident of Alberta and who has a parent who is a resident of Canada is entitled to an education here. In essence, the new education system will adapt to the student and not the student to the system. As we have seen through successive generations, it's education which will enable our children to recognize their maximum potential.

Though the Education Act was drafted here in the Legislature, its content actually comes from the people of Alberta. The Education Act is the result of almost three years of unprecedented dialogue with Albertans about how our K to 12 system needs to be transformed for it to equip our students for success in the 21st century. All school jurisdictions in the world, including the top-performing systems in Finland and Singapore, have recognized that their models for education must be changed and their systems must be transformed.

We can be proud of the fact that Alberta is taking a bold step forward when it comes to transforming our education system. There is something that I must make clear, however. It is not legislation that will transform our education system; it is people that will do that. Our success will be based on the engagement in education of trustees, teachers, students, parents, and the broader community. The Education Act is predicated on the basis that education is of benefit to all and requires the support of all for its success.

Mr. Speaker, it is not by chance that we are not introducing a new School Act. The School Act of 1988 was about the operation of the system of education. The new Education Act changes the focus from the system and the buildings to the student. The focus moves beyond seeing learning as only taking place in the school and will allow learning to take place at any time, in any place, and at any pace. We will also continue to build capacity for local decision-making and foster broader community engagement.

The Education Act, unlike the School Act it is replacing, is less prescriptive and is more descriptive, or enabling. The education system does not tell students what to be; it enables them to be what they can, want, and need to be. In the same way, the Education Act won't tell stakeholders exactly what to do but will enable them to do what needs to be done. The Education Act describes the desired destination; it does not describe the specific route for arriving there.

It provides boards with natural person powers that they have said are critical for their success and enables them to act as true leaders in the quest for educational excellence. Boards will be able to do any legal thing a person can do that is consistent with board responsibilities as outlined in the act. Natural person powers will enable boards to be more responsive, nimble, and adaptable in meeting the needs of the communities they serve. If anyone believes that these powers will somehow unduly politicize school boards, I only need to remind them that trustees are elected every three years precisely to ensure that the views of the community shape the work of the school boards.

It will also create the conditions that will allow boards and the ministry to work together with all educational stakeholders to transform education. The act clearly indicates the responsibilities of boards, parents, teachers, and students in creating educational success. The responsibilities of boards reflect a student-centred focus and the principles of inclusiveness, diversity, and excellence. Because education is foundational to the future, it matters to the whole community, and the whole community has a responsibility to engage in the education of its children. The new Education Act makes engagement possible across the system.

3:40

Though many things have changed in the new Education Act, some things remain the same. The act still shows a commitment to a publicly funded education system that provides a choice of educational opportunities – public, separate, francophone, charter, and private schools as well as home-schooling options for parents – and it continues to honour the rights guaranteed under the Constitution of Canada with respect to minority language and minority denominational education via public, separate, and francophone schools.

But we should be clear that our transformation neither begins nor ends with legislation. Make no mistake. School boards and teachers are already changing their work to fulfill the vision of inspiring education and the needs of our students. No one can reasonably expect that a large, complex system like the education system of Alberta, with a $6.4 billion budget, 600,000 students, over 40,000 teachers, thousands of support staff, and almost 1,700 schools, is going to change overnight because of the passing of an act.

That's why as we transform the education system, our conversations will continue. Albertans are shaping the changes we're making, and we welcome their continued involvement in shaping this legislation. Every Albertan who has a comment or suggestion about this act can join the discussion at www.education.alberta.ca/engage or learn more about this act at www.education.alberta.ca/educationact.

It's an exciting time for education in Alberta, a time when we have a clear direction that we need to take and a willingness and ability to travel there. Today, Mr. Speaker, in a small way we are making history in Alberta. Just as Yuri Gagarin showed us that we are no longer limited to this planet and could explore amongst the stars, we are now showing that our education will be bound only by the possibilities we create for ourselves.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Appropriation Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 17, the Appropriation Act, 2011, for third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on Bill 17.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as this is our last opportunity to stand in the House and talk to the budget, essentially, I'd like to stand on behalf of the Wildrose Alliance caucus and explain again why our caucus does not support this budget. We feel that this government has over the last several years severely damaged the economic standing of Albertans.

There was a lot of work done prior to this administration to establish a heritage fund and to establish a sustainability fund. We did those things. Should more money have been saved during that time? Yeah, it should have. Should spending have been controlled more during that time? Absolutely, it should have. No doubt about it. But what has happened since then over these last several years has been an absolute non-Albertan, frankly, way of doing things. This is not the Alberta way.

There have been billions and billions of dollars in cash shortfalls: this year $6.6 billion; last year $7.6 billion – in other words, that's how much money is going out compared to how much money is coming in – and close to $8 billion over the last two years in actual deficit numbers on the books according to the government's own numbers. There is no excuse for this.

The government can say all they want – and they do – about how the economy is in the tank, et cetera. The economy in Alberta is not in the tank. Our unemployment rate is very low, not necessarily compared to where it was in 2006 or 2007, but certainly historically it is very, very low. If you want a job in Alberta, generally speaking, you can get a job in Alberta.

That's not to say that things are always wonderful for everyone, but things are good. We have near record royalties coming into the coffers. There have been one or two years when overall royalties have been as high as they are now, yet here we are with a $6.6 billion cash shortfall and a $3.5 billion deficit. It's a shameful display of fiscal irresponsibility by this government.

Albertans deserve much better than this. We have over and over again stood in this House and explained that if we had begun earlier to cap program spending and operational spending and capital spending to the rate of inflation plus population growth, if we capped it at that amount, we would not be in the situation we're in today, where in order to balance the budget, we would have to essentially freeze spending, frankly, in order to do it at the rate we're going right now, and we wouldn't be able to account for those increases in inflation plus population. That's because this government failed to control their spending even in the last few years. If they had started back in 2004-2005, yeah, we'd have huge surpluses even today. But even if they had started at the beginning of this current Premier's administration to increase spending by only the rate of inflation plus population growth, we would have a balanced budget today. It shows a complete lack of ability to prioritize.

Why are we building new museums when we have a $6.6 billion cash shortfall? Why are we building new MLA offices and offices for civil servants when we have a $6.6 billion cash shortfall? Why are we giving cabinet 34 per cent raises when we have a $6.6 billion cash shortfall? Why are we doing these things? Why can we not spend on capital the same amount as B.C., Ontario, and Quebec do on average per person? Why can we not do that? How is that unreasonable? That's a right-wing idea? Are you kidding me? That's a fiscally responsible idea. That's what fiscally responsible or at least fiscally competent governments do. But here we are, spending bucketloads more money than any province in the country per person on capital, and here we are, in the cash shortfall position that we find ourselves in.

This government is not conservative. I challenge anybody in this House to identify something conservative that this government has done over the last three years of their administration. Look at their property rights record. Look at their record on the budgets. Look at their record on health care: the centralization, the top-down, the lack of democracy. It's ridiculous, and it needs to change.

There are many priorities that Albertans have. We need to build the schools that our kids need. We need that. We need to build the roads that we need. We need to finish twinning that road to Fort McMurray. We need to finish those ring roads. We need these things. Absolutely, we need them. But can we not do so in a way that will not fiscally mortgage our children's future? The Wildrose says that we can do that. I think that we can do it. I know there are members over there that probably in their heart of hearts know that they can do it.

We can't mortgage our kids' future anymore. What are we going to say to them in the year 2020 or 2030 when they come to us? What are we going to say if the heritage fund is still worth, as it is today, as much as it was in 1981? At that time, let's say, there's a replacement for oil, or the price of oil isn't nearly as high as it is today, and we're not able to fund the social programs and the things that we fund because we refused to be fiscally responsible and to put a little bit away so that that ocean of nonrenewable oil and gas in the ground could be turned into a mountain of permanent investment capital, replenishing the books of the government every single year with interest.

We could do that. We could have started it long ago. We could start it today, but we're not. I just fear that, you know, when we're long gone, out of this Legislature anyway, our kids will look at us when the price of oil is at 20 bucks and say: "What on earth were you guys thinking? You had the chance to save. You had the chance to give us a legacy fund to allow us to keep taxes low and keep people coming up here to start new businesses and new industries. We could have had that seed capital to do that, perpetuating over and over every year regardless of what oil and gas does. That's what we could have had, yet you didn't." That's what they could say to us if we don't get our fiscal house in order.

The government says that centralizing health care has saved money. It hasn't. In the last two years there's been another double-digit increase in health care: 6 per cent this year, and I believe it was 17 per cent last year. It's just an absolute falsehood that centralizing health care has delivered any kind of efficiencies in the health care system, and because that's such a large part of the budget, that is why we find ourselves in the fiscal hole that we are in today.

We have not controlled our costs. We have not signed appropriate contracts. The teachers' contract: do we want highly paid teachers? You bet we do. We want to have competitively paid teachers. We want to attract the best to Alberta. But you cannot in the middle of a recession give a 9 to 10 per cent increase to teachers over a two-year period when the cost of living goes up during that same time by less than a third of that. You can't do that and balance your books. If you do do that and try to balance your books, you're going to be cutting teaching positions.

That's exactly what has happened. Even with the 4 and a half per cent increase in education spending the boards around the province have to cut teaching positions because of the blinking contract that the Minister of Energy signed with the teachers when he was Education minister. When we sign contracts that are not sustainable, we have to pay. Our kids have to pay. It's wrong. We can make sure our teachers are paid well. We can make sure that there are cost-of-living increases.

I met with the ATA table officers yesterday, and we got to talking about this. I said: "Wouldn't you rather have a sustainable, gradual funding increase so that you knew you could make sure that you hired teachers each and every year and could keep your teachers and not have cuts? Or would you rather have these unsustainable pay increases and then have the government not giving you the money to fund the contract and then you having to lay off teachers?" Guess what? It was an easy answer for them. But they also said: why should we be expected as teachers to keep our pay increases to the rate of the cost-of-living index, inflation, when the government MLAs' salaries are tied to the average weekly wage index, which greatly outstrips inflationary costs? That's a good point. How can they? Teaching is every bit as important as being in this Assembly. That's for sure.

So how can we do that? Well, not only did this government tie our own salaries to the average weekly wage index, which is wrong – it should be tied to the rise in inflation – but furthermore, aside from that, it gave us a 34 per cent pay increase as its first order of business when it got back after the 2008 election. We all know in this House, specifically us new members, what that was. That was a wake-up call.

Mr. Hinman: Tell us about it.

Mr. Anderson: Well, it's another story for another day. It was shocking, but what do you do?

Mr. Hinman: Wasn't that the Premier's promise to individual candidates?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, it was, hon. member.

The point I'm getting at is this. If we want to have a sustainable budget, if we want to be able to save, if we want to be able to bring our budget into balance, we have to make tough decisions. That doesn't mean we have to slash and burn. What it does mean is that we have to prioritize. We cannot have everything right now.

I've got four little boys. They want everything right now. Everything. It's all good stuff. They want ice cream. They want a baseball glove. They want a hockey stick. They want this book, that book. They want the candy and the pop, and they want everything. Guess what? As a parent you've got to make sure that you give them what they need and that you give them the best that you can give them, but you don't give them everything all the time, whenever they want it. You prioritize. You make sure that they're registered for their baseball and for their hockey so that they can have some sports to play. If that means not getting them a whole bunch of new toys, then that's what it means. You prioritize. You make sure you've got food for them and heat and that the mortgage is paid. You make sure those are done first before you go to Hawaii for a $10,000 vacation, right? Is that not what you do?

You make sure that you can afford to pay the mortgage and the car payment before you go off and upgrade to a Mercedes or something, right? You make sure you can pay your bills. You look at your income, and you make sure, and you plan for the future.

But this government doesn't do it. They just keep on throwing around money like candy at a parade. Whatever you need. If you're going to vote for me, here's some money. That's all it is. It's not conservative; it's not fiscally responsible. I expect the Liberals and the New Democrats to be more fiscally responsible than these guys right now.

Mr. MacDonald: We are.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar sure seems to be. I like some of the ideas in his alternative budget. He seems to have it down.

The Liberals: are they extreme right wing, too? I guess they're extreme right wing because they want to control spending. Good grief. Get a grip. When the Liberals and the New Democrats are running to the right of you on fiscal issues, isn't that a sign? Of course it's a sign. When you go back, you're probably going to have one more budget before the next election. Maybe. I don't know. Who knows when the next election is? But if you are going to have one more budget, please – please – whoever the new Premier is, hopefully that Premier will be truly fiscally responsible. I'm looking at the group you've got there right now, and I'm not very hopeful on that.

Let's hope that that occurs. If it does, make sure to hold that person's feet to the fire. Make sure that they show leadership and get our books balanced and put a savings plan in place that is going to make sure we can save and build that heritage fund over the next 10 to 20 years to a hundred billion, to a hundred and fifty billion so that when the oil and gas goes back down to 20 bucks and when we're sitting in our armchairs enjoying our grandchildren, we can enjoy our grandchildren because they'll still be here in Alberta, because they can still get a job, because we can keep the Alberta advantage here instead of having to talk with them at Christmas by Skype because they're down in some other jurisdiction out east or out west or down south because Alberta blew it, spent all the money, had to raise their taxes, and drove all the business out of Alberta so the place isn't a very good place and not a land of opportunity like it is today.

That's what we're risking. It's pretty easy for us to sit here in this Chamber and say: oh, well, we'll be long gone by then. Yup. You're right. The Minister of Energy will certainly be long gone by then. In 2030, I would hope – meaning out of this Legislature, of course. But what legacy will he have left? What legacy will this Premier have left? What legacy will the next Premier in this party, the PC Party, have left? Will they be the party that bungled the future prosperity of Albertans, or will they be the party that did the right thing and got their spending in check, reconnected with Albertans, and went forward?

I'll tell you that if you don't reconnect with your fiscal conservative side, you're going to see a new government sitting over there at the next election. That is what will happen. When you don't stick to your principles, when you get all wishy-washy and try to be everything to everybody, you're not going to be successful. It didn't work for Paul Martin. It didn't work for a whole bunch of different leaders and different parties in this country and across the provinces. You need to stand for something. You need to stand on your principles. Fiscal responsibility used to be a principle of this PC government, and it's not anymore. Please find it in the next year for the good of all Albertans, and if you don't, the Wildrose will find it for you. I'm sure the New Democrats will try to help out and be fiscally responsible since you are more fiscally responsible than this crew is over here from all indicators right now.

With regard to this budget, again, we would ask the government to please not just balance the budget but balance the cash shortfall. Let's not spend anymore of our sustainability fund, which is down to something like $6 billion this year from $17 billion just a few years ago. Let's have a savings strategy put in place, once we do get the books balanced, to grow that heritage fund by controlling spending to the rate of inflation plus population growth and investing those surpluses, or large chunks of them, into the heritage fund, not just for inflation-proofing it, like you've been doing the last 10 years, but growing it to where it can be a mountain of permanent investment capital, replenishing our province with compound interest each and every year. That's important.

We can prioritize. We can be responsible. We can make sure that our health care needs are taken care of, that our education needs are taken care of, that vulnerable Albertans are cared for, but we have to get rid of the things that we don't need. The carbon capture and storage fund: we've got to get rid of it. We've got to get rid of those ridiculous pay raises for cabinet ministers and so forth. We've got to make sure we stretch that capital plan, even just another year, and stretch that over a little bit longer. We can have everything we want. We just can't have it today, right now, and that's okay. [interjection] Yeah, we do need a school in Airdrie. Absolutely we do. We need a school in Beaumont, too. We don't need $2 billion in carbon capture and storage spending being pumped under the ground. We certainly don't need today a new museum or new MLA offices. We can wait for those things because, yeah – that's right – Airdrie needs a school, and so does Beaumont, and so do a few other places.

This is obviously going to pass third reading, this budget. I hope that next budget this government will find its courage, will find its principles again, hopefully, if they ever had them, and that they will put forward a budget that is the Alberta way of doing budgets, which is balanced, which is saving for a rainy day, which is saving for our kids and caring about more than just our own political aspirations, our own political health for the next election but caring for the financial health and well-being of Albertans and our children for generations to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened carefully to the inaccuracies of the former speaker here from Airdrie-Chestermere. We've corrected a lot of those things already in our estimates debate, and other speakers have already spoken to some of the facts that are in this budget, so I'm going to support third reading of the Appropriation Act when the vote comes.

With that, I would like to move adjournment of debate on this Appropriation Act.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

[Adjourned debate April 26: Mr. Kang]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is weightwise probably the second-heaviest bill we've had this session. There's a lot of stuff in this. Just given a number of different factors and timing of schedules, my caucus has not been able to get a briefing yet. I've worked with the sponsor of the bill, and I appreciate her flexibility in still trying to provide us with a technical briefing, and we will take advantage of that. I've tried to read her notes in comparison with the bill.

I just want to note for everybody that this is an omnibus bill. This is amending every act that has anything to do with energy. Here are some of the things that are getting amended: the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, the Coal Conservation Act, the Electric Utilities Act, the Gas Utilities Act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, the Oil Sands Conservation Act, and the Pipeline Act. This is no small stuff. This is the energy sector in Alberta. There's a lot going on here.

I know the government is in a hurry and wants to get this all tied up with a bow by the end of the next week that we're in session here, but I think we have to be careful. We need to understand this really well and understand what the consequences are that roll out from these changes. I'm going to walk my way through some of the questions that I have, and the sponsor has kindly agreed to either provide me with answers or to bring them up at the very beginning of Committee of the Whole here. I apologize if the sponsor has answered that in her notes that she's provided to me, but she hasn't structured her notes in the same way that the bill is structured, so I was having a bit of trouble going back and forth between the two this afternoon.

I'm going to walk through the bill and ask the questions based on that. I'm going to start with the Coal Conservation Act, which starts on page 2 of this omnibus bill. Now, part of what's happening here in section 2 is that it's changing the definition of coal, and it essentially is redefining it as "sedimentary rock that contains at least 50% by weight organic matter formed from plant or algal matter." I apologize for pronunciation on that.

What it's dropping out of that definition includes "manufactured chars, cokes and any manufactured solid coal product used or useful as a reductant or energy source or for conversion into a reductant or energy source." There's quite a difference there. What it essentially does is drop out, as I mentioned, the manufactured stuff. It's possible now that with the redefinition you're going to have some regulations that no longer apply that we think will apply, but if you've changed the original definition of coal, they may not.

I'm wondering if the changing of this definition changes the ownership of the lower quality coal under the mineral rights, so the stuff that you sort of crush together to make something that burns. I'm sorry. I'm using layperson's terms here, so I hope I'm not offending anyone. I'm wondering if redefining it changes the ownership of that under the mineral rights, and I'm wondering how this affects the classification of the pore space. That pore space is getting more and more important, and I wonder how this change in definition is going to affect or be affected by the change in the definition of coal.

In the same bill under subsection 14, which appears on page 7 of the original bill, the entire section 14 has been repealed. I'd like to know why the sponsor or why the Minister of Energy felt that it was necessary to remove the industrial development permit and if the sponsor of the bill could describe how similar objectives are going to be met under other existing regulations. Or do we just not have them anymore?

Moving on to the Electric Utilities Act amendments on page 17 of the new bill, in section 3(2)(a) it's adding a new ground under which the Market Surveillance Administrator could object to the Independent System Operator rule. I'm wondering why the government felt the need to allow the Market Surveillance Administrator to object to rules that are not in the public interest. Is it coming out of this?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, that's part of it, but that's a really skimpy document.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. What I've just had plunked in front of me is the MSA, Market Surveillance Administrator, report to the minister in 2010, which the sponsor of the bill has been kind enough to supply to us. It is quite thin. Oh, my God, look at the typeface. Crikey. This is, like, seven-point font. The actual report itself is 14 pages long.

It strikes me as really odd that you would have the one talking about the public interest. "The Market Surveillance Administrator may object to an ISO rule . . . on one or more of the following grounds," and then "that the ISO rule may have an adverse effect on the structure and performance of the market" or a ground set out in a different subsection. You think: what on earth is going on here? "Does not support the fair, efficient and openly competitive operation of the market" or – here's the one – "that the ISO rule is not in the public interest": I'm looking for an explanation of that.

I'm wondering how this relates back to those public-interest hearings at the Alberta Utilities Commission. Was removing those a problem, and are they now finding a way to put them back in again through this amendment?

Moving on to the Gas Utilities Amendment Act, which appears on page 20 of this new act, it's removing ministerial regulator power and replacing it with a section that empowers the Alberta Utilities Commission to make rules in its place, so rules on standards, on service outages, maintenance requirements, customer care, billing in call centres, et cetera. It's actually quite a long list. I'm wondering: does the minister believe that the rule-making capability on customer care and call centres covers outbound calls to sign customers into long-term contracts, for example, to entice people to switch gas distributors? How does that get covered? Is it in fact covered under that section? That actually does appear under 28.3(1)(e) on page 21 of the new act.

I'm also wondering if the maintenance and repair standards of gas utilities will improve given the rule-making capability, or is it more about setting uniform standards across the province?

To the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, which starts on page 22.

The section I'm looking at is on page 23, which is section 5(3), empowering the Energy Resources Conservation Board to exempt in situ coal scheme wells from specific provisions in the existing regulations, which indeed it does, "exempting wells that are included within an in situ coal scheme from the application of specified provisions of the regulations." Why does the government feel it's necessary to give the board power to exempt in situ coal schemes from regulations, essentially as it sees fit?

I would have thought that it should set regulations that are proper for in situ coal schemes . . .

Mr. Liepert: Why don't you read the answers we gave you?

Ms Blakeman: Well, because this is what I was given an hour ago, and I just can't read that fast. It's fair for me to put these on the record.

Mr. Liepert: You got it long before then.

Ms Blakeman: Well, she has not given it to me in any way that relates back to the act.

Mr. Liepert: It was how it came up in questions. You asked the same questions as your partner there.

Mr. MacDonald: No. Her questions are totally different.

Ms Blakeman: That's what this is for, to ask the questions. If you've got a problem with answering them, deal with your person. Thank you.

Under the Oil Sands Conservation Act amendments, which start on page 27, changing the definition of oil sands products: with the use of the oil sands derivatives to produce ethane, are the products produced from the ethane, including polyethylene, now considered oil sands products? Does this change the potential tax class of the assets that produce this? Could it affect the payoff period for future oil sands products if they're to include petrochemical facilities that use oil sands derived products as feedstock? Those are tiered questions, that hook into each other.

1:30 p.m.

Monday, May 9, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. As we begin our deliberations in this sitting of the Legislature, we ask for the insight we need to do our work to the benefit of our province and its people and to the benefit of our country. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we're now going to proceed to the singing of our national anthem. I would like all to participate and feel free to sing in the language of one's choice. I'm going to call on Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Introduction of Visitors

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm thrilled and indeed honoured today to introduce to the members of this Assembly His Excellency Zhang Junsai, the ambassador of the People's Republic of China to Canada, accompanied by his wife, Yin Guomei; also, the consul general in Calgary, Madam Liu Yongfeng; Mr. Jiang Shan, minister counsellor from the embassy in Ottawa; Mr. Lei Jianzhong, from the consulate general in Calgary; and Mr. Li Kezhen and Mr. Yang Zhiqiang from the embassy. It's our great privilege to host His Excellency. We have been working harder than ever to make our relationships with China work in this year of the anniversary of Heilongjiang. Since 2003 our work with trading with China has more than doubled. With the ambassador here to speak at the Global Power Shift conference, we know that many Albertans and many guests will be honoured indeed to hear the ambassador's message.

Would His Excellency and other guests please rise and enjoy the warm welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two outstanding Albertans. The first is someone many of us in this Assembly know very well, Dianne Nielsen, formerly Dianne Mirosh. Dianne served as a Member of the Legislative Assembly from 1986 to 1997 and held cabinet positions under both Premier Don Getty and Premier Ralph Klein. She has contributed to our province in so many ways, both as an elected official and as a volunteer. Please join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction is a true pillar of the Airdrie community. Brenda Moon is currently the president of the Airdrie & District Agricultural Society and has served as a volunteer with numerous organizations over the years such as the Airdrie Rodeo Ranch Association, the Airdrie Chamber of Commerce, and of course the Airdrie Festival of Lights. She's a shining example of what makes this province great. I would ask that you join me in extending to her the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two introductions here today. On your behalf I'd like to introduce through you to members of the Assembly 15 grades 5 and 6 students from W.R. Frose elementary school located in Fawcett. They're participating in the School at the Legislature program this week. They're accompanied by their teacher, Kim Miller, and parent helpers Terry Boyd, Kathy Fauque, Hazel Schneider, and, of course, the bus driver, Jim Laughy. They're seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce to you and through you today some friends of mine, the mayor and council from Redwater, who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. These officials have been great for me to work with over the last several years. It's been a real privilege to be able to work with all my elected councils and boards, which add up to about 25 in my constituency alone. I've come to rely very heavily on their counsel and direction and have found them to be very focused and straight. At least, most of them are. In any event I'd like to ask these folks from Redwater to please stand as I call out their names: Mel Smith, the mayor; Debbie Hamilton; Jack Dennett; Les Dorosh; and Lori Lumsden, who was not able to make it here today. I'd like to invite the Assembly to please give them the traditional warm welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House some very special guests from the Echo Valley Christian school, which is located just south of Bluffton in my constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka. There are 12 students and their teacher and their parent helpers. The teacher is Mrs. Cynsee Colberg, and the helpers are Mr. David Colberg, Mr. Merv Wohlgemuth, Mrs. LeAne Wohlgemuth, Mr. Darryl Giesbrecht, and Mrs. Sue Giesbrecht. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the grade 6 class of Michael A. Kostek school. I had a very great chat with the students from the three classes. Today they came here with their chaperones: Meagan Rempel, Paola O'Connor, Bob Shulko, and one parent, Mr. Ron McDonald. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to introduce to you and through you today to all members of this Assembly several distinguished Alberta researchers, CEOs, and board chairs from the four Alberta Innovates corporations. These individuals are really remarkable ambassadors for our research and innovation system here in Alberta, and I'm pleased to welcome these experts who are top researchers. They are Gary Albach, Alberta Innovates Tech Futures; Kristina Williams, Alberta Enterprise Corporation; Yaman Boluk, nanofibre chair in forest products; Steve Kuznicki, University of Alberta chemical and materials engineering. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce some young Albertans. Our party believes very strongly that it's important for young people to be involved and learn the intricacies of government. We think it's also important to learn those intricacies before you get elected. We have in the gallery today three summer students who are employed with my constituency office. I would ask them to stand as they're introduced: Charlotte Hall, Cooper Matheson, and from the Edmonton office Duncan Webster. They're accompanied by my constituency assistant, Laura Frank. I'd ask them all to stand and be recognized by the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three outstanding members from the strategic health policy group in my Ministry of Alberta Health and Wellness. This group plays an extremely important role in strengthening policy capacity within the ministry and also in developing policy for research and analysis. Here with us today are Jennifer Jabs, manager of health strategic policy; Chris Emmerling, policy analyst; and Meghan Horn, also a policy analyst. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, and the hair is rather catching.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four individuals that keep my office running but don't necessarily control me all of the time. Denise Kalwajys actually was complicit in the little display I have. It is in support of prostate cancer. Both Denise and Warren Singh from my office, my executive assistant, actually have special people in their lives that are touched by this illness. I would ask my staff Warren Singh, Denise Kalwajys, Stacey Leighton, and Chad Barber – they're all in the members' gallery – to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the honour of introducing one of my constituents from Drayton Valley-Calmar, Mrs. Beverly Simpson Headon. Beverly has volunteered with the Girl Guides for years, in her words, first for her children and now for herself. I would also like to point out that today is Beverly's birthday. I want to thank her for joining us here at the Legislature, and I would ask her to now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a constituent from Banff-Cochrane, Mr. Rob Hatch. Mr. Hatch is the dealer of the Cochrane Canadian Tire store and chair of the Calgary Jumpstart chapter, which I will be giving a member's statement on later today. Mr. Hatch has been with Canadian Tire for 13 years, has been a resident of Banff-Cochrane for 10, and has been on the Jumpstart board of directors for six years. Sitting with Mr. Hatch in the members' gallery is Vivian Smith from Strathcona county, who is a member of the Edmonton Jumpstart chapter. I'd ask that they now stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House two wonderful staff members with the Wildrose caucus team. First, Lauren Armstrong is a political science student with the University of Alberta and has been with us since the start of this session, working as a legislative researcher. We also have Darren Woods, who just joined us last week. He is a student at the Bissett School of Business in Calgary and will spend the summer working with us as a communication assistant. I do not need to explain to anybody in this House how valuable our support teams are that work for us back in the office. I would ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, later or now?

Mr. Olson: Now is good. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of people who are here representing the Boomtown Trail organization. The Boomtown Trail is basically highway 21 from New Sarepta in the north to Bassano in the south. This is a tourism region, and it's bringing the history of Alberta and rural Alberta to life. We have people here dressed as historical characters. I'm going to introduce them by their historical name and then their real name. If they'd just rise and give a wave: Sarah Brown, who is Glenys Smith from Camrose; Gabriel Dumont, who is Bob Willis from Stettler; Miss Anne Morrison, who is Sue Backs from Drumheller; Miss Alice Rogers, who is Nora Smith from Delburne; Mary Alice Tayler Presant, who is Rosalie Lammlie from Three Hills; Lily Pithouse, who is Marianne Lippiat from Hay Lakes; Mrs. Eugene Bashaw, who is Laura Graham from Bashaw; Dollie Williams, who is Twyla Chitwood from Bashaw. Portraying themselves from the Boomtown Trail organization are Ken Duncan, CEO; Verity Webster; and James Reckseidler. I'd ask that all of my colleagues in the Legislature offer them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. members, two ministers have advised that they wish to proceed with ministerial statements today, and we have Standing Order 7(1.1), which states: "At 1:50 p.m., the Assembly shall proceed to Oral Question Period with the balance of the daily routine to follow." It's not my desire to interrupt. If we recognize one to proceed with a ministerial statement, I have no doubt whatsoever that others will want to participate as well. So we're going to need a couple of motions, one that would ask for unanimous consent to proceed beyond 1:50 with this section of the Routine and a second one requesting an opportunity for other members of the Assembly to participate as well.

I will sit and I will wait to hear such a motion. First is the motion about the 1:50 time frame.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we give unanimous consent to allow the ministerial statements to proceed beyond 1:50 and that question period be begun at the conclusion of the ministerial statements discussion.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Okay. We can proceed with that now.
The second motion. The Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the indulgence of my colleagues in the House to allow members of other caucuses to respond to the ministerial statements today.
Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: We'll proceed with that as well.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

National Culture Days Alberta Arts Days

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in Vancouver was the official media launch for national Culture Days, starting the work of preparing events across Canada to celebrate arts and culture. I'm pleased to inform the House and all Albertans that the fourth annual Alberta Arts Days will occur from September 30 to October 2 in celebration of national Culture Days 2011.

Here in Alberta we are far along in our planning for three wildly creative days in cities, towns, and villages across our great province again this year. The goal of Alberta Arts Days is to ensure all Albertans have access to a wide range of cultural experiences and to encourage a greater love and appreciation for the arts while helping to foster new partnerships within our own communities. All Albertans are encouraged to participate in Alberta Arts Days. Participation can be as simple as adding an artistic element to an existing event or attending one of the hundreds of free family-oriented events throughout the province.

Last year thousands of Albertans discovered, experienced, and celebrated our unique culture, heritage, artistic diversity, and provincial pride through 681 events in 91 communities. Participation wasn't limited to our artists and cultural community. Organizations like the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues added cultural elements to activities they were having in support of community leagues throughout the city.

Public libraries across the province participated by offering cultural programming over the weekend to their patrons. The participation of libraries is especially worthy of noting as for many new Albertans and those in a lower socioeconomic strata libraries are a key place in their community where they meet, learn, and share experiences while learning about their new home and having access to those services they otherwise wouldn't.

Schoolchildren in their schools and throughout the community were also involved through our partnership with Alberta Education. Each one of them received a flyer from their school to take home to their family, which was entitled Get Your Parents Out of the House for Three Days. And they did, Mr. Speaker. During my travels I met a family from Spruce Grove that had used the flyer and looked online at albertaartsdays.ca to see what events were taking place in Banff, where they had planned to go as a family for the weekend. This family visited the Banff Centre, toured backstage and in the costume rooms, and even enjoyed a free lunch and musical performance as their way of celebrating our fabulous culture. That is one of the thousands of great stories of Alberta Arts Days.

In addition to these and many other locations, there were five feature celebration sites across the province which received support from the government of Alberta. This year, using the same level of funding as in 2010, the government of Alberta is committed to financially supporting a minimum of 60 designated celebration sites.

Mr. Speaker, though some parties would suggest that we don't spend enough and others would suggest that we don't spend any money at all, we think it's important as a government to celebrate families and their communities. My department has received interest from communities and organizations across the province to be part of this celebration. The applications are being reviewed now, and I will be announcing the names of the designated celebration sites by the end of May.

Hosting an Alberta Arts Days event is a wonderful opportunity to foster relationships and develop new partnerships, strengthen our community spirit, and showcase local talent. It is also a great way for organizations and communities to boost the impact and reach of the existing efforts to promote value and availability of cultural programming.

The idea of building events in communities through local support, both financial and in volunteer time, is taking hold. I would be remiss if I didn't mention the recent decision by the city of Grande Prairie to contribute $5,000 to support Alberta Arts Days events in their community. It is this kind of support from municipalities, from private business, and from Albertans that will grow the spirit of Alberta Arts Days each and every year.

I hope all Albertans take the opportunity to discover, experience, and celebrate Alberta Arts Days 2011 in their communities between September 30 and October 2. Information about events, how people can participate, and downloadable information to help you organize your events is available on our website, albertaartsdays.ca.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: On behalf of the Official Opposition the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to respond to the ministerial statement on the national Culture Days and on Arts Days. I know the minister should be congratulated on his work with Alberta Arts Days. I know it's a project close to his heart.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian culture has grown in vibrancy and diversity since Confederation, maturing right along with the nation. Canadian music, literature, film, dance, photography, and other art forms are gaining widespread appreciation and acceptance around the world.

Alberta artists have made key contributions to our growing world renown, and I'll be celebrating them when I celebrate Alberta Arts Days when it rolls around. But I still believe that a government with foresight would do more to invest in Alberta's arts and culture both to bolster a very important economic sector, that contributes tens of millions of dollars to our economy, and to fuel our artistic and cultural growth. Remember, every dollar invested in the arts generates triple that figure in economic activity, something this government seems to have forgotten given the wild inconsistencies in funding to Alberta's arts groups over the last few months.

Alberta is overflowing with world-leading artists, from emerging artists to established masters, and Alberta Liberals believe we help these artists achieve even greater heights with sustainable funding for the long term. An Alberta Liberal government would immediately double the budget of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts and establish a $500 million endowment fund for the arts, social sciences, and humanities similar to existing endowment funds for medicine, engineering, and sciences.

We would also work to improve the status and legal protection of artists, most of whom remain among the most underpaid workers in our economy. Many of our artists work full-time in a variety of other sectors so they can afford to work in the arts. In effect, they're generously subsidizing our arts and cultural sector.

We would also reach out to help Alberta's publishing and film industries, which have demonstrably suffered under this government. We would establish an Alberta film and television tax credit system and a $15 million three-year Alberta publishers' fund to reinvigorate our provincial publishing industries.

The Alberta Arts Days are a wonderful way to celebrate our grassroots and amateur artists, and I look forward to all of the events, but we must do more to support our professional artists, who play such a vital role in the province's social, economic, and cultural development. Culture breathes life into Alberta. Let's breathe a little life into our professional artists.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure to rise on behalf of the Wildrose caucus to share our support for Alberta Arts Days. Arts are very important to Albertans. There are more than a million amateur artists across the province. Some paint, some make elaborate quilts, and some sing. In the latest issue of Maclean's they declared Alberta to be the most musical province in all of Canada. Apparently 71 per cent of us are able to play an instrument, some better than others, I'm sure, and 50 per cent say that playing music is their favourite hobby.

The Alberta Foundation for the Arts supports 40,000 events across the province, for which annual attendance exceeds 12 million people. That's more than three times the population of Alberta. One of these excellent groups or initiatives is found at the Rosebud Theatre in the constituency of Strathmore-Brooks. I think many of us here have been and have enjoyed the plays that are put on there. It's an excellent example of how the arts can reinvigorate and diversify the economy and grow economy in rural Alberta as well as provide wonderful education opportunities for our youth.

Then there are the tens of thousands of other artistic events that are entirely detached from government funding and which thrive solely based on the artists' dedication and the support of patrons. These events are just as important, and hopefully they, too, will be acknowledged and promoted by the government leading up to Alberta Arts Days this September.

While the arts are important to Albertans as an enjoyable pastime, for others a healthy arts environment is essential to their livelihood. According to the Professional Arts Coalition of Edmonton more than 3,500 Albertans work full-time in arts-related jobs, and hundreds of millions of dollars are earned and spent in Alberta's arts communities and at Alberta arts events. That's why it is important that the government support initiatives like Alberta Arts Days and, indeed, why the arts should be promoted throughout the year.

The Wildrose caucus encourages Albertans to get out and support even more arts events this summer than they did last year and, in particular, to make sure they go out with their families and enjoy some of the events on Alberta Arts Days, which will be held across the province from September 30 until October 2.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and to join the minister in congratulating the many volunteers, artists, and community members for their commitment to Alberta Arts Days and for their subsequent contribution to the success of this event. Support for arts and culture in our province is vital to developing vibrant and diverse communities.

There is no doubt that arts and culture enrich our daily lives and help give meaning to our experiences. That is why Alberta's NDP opposition advocates for support for the fine arts and cultural activities year-round rather than simply on a few limited showcase days. While showcases have their place in arts and culture programming, they are meaningless without sustainable and predictable support to artists and cultural groups throughout the year, support that this government has consistently cut. Over the last three years this minister has overseen over 50 per cent cuts to his ministry's budget.

Rather than taking the advice of the arts community in terms of the needed programming and funding for sustainable arts and the cultural production sector, this government is content to declare a three-day public relations showcase to raise awareness of the work of the artisans who struggle throughout the year due to a lack of government support. The superficial nature of the PC government's commitment to the arts is demonstrated by the fact that the minister has just announced an increase in designated celebration sites, from five to 60, but has not announced a corresponding increase in project funding.

The minister's call for students to get their parents out of the house for three days is particularly frustrating in light of this government's ongoing disregard for the role of fine arts within the education system. The image of the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit lauding a three-day event as promoting arts appreciation to schoolchildren while at the same time the Department of Education consistently underfunds the fine arts, considering it an expendable luxury rather than a crucial pillar of a full education, is disappointing.

Alberta's NDP opposition believes fine arts and culture should be fully integrated in the school curriculum from kindergarten through grade 12, provided by skilled and qualified teachers, complemented by other artists and experiences to encounter professional fine arts supported with the necessary resources. Our vision of the fine arts in education sees every student having opportunity to not only develop skills but also to grow an appreciation and pleasure for the significance of fine arts in the living of a full and complete life.

Alberta's NDP opposition is proud of the wonderful tradition of arts and culture in Alberta and will work to ensure it remains accessible to all Albertans via their education throughout their lives and through increasing sustained, predictable funding for professional artists. Unfortunately, for the moment Alberta's vibrant arts and cultural sectors survives in spite of the PC government, not because of it.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Energy, please proceed with the second ministerial statement.

Oil and Gas Regulatory System

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in the House today to announce significant progress in creating a more competitive regulatory system for Alberta's energy resources through the establishment of a single regulator. The means to accomplish this are contained in a draft discussion document entitled Enhancing Assurance: Developing an Integrated Energy Resource Regulator, which will be tabled in this Assembly later today by my colleague the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. This document is the culmination of a process that included extensive engagement with the energy industry, aboriginals, and a broad range of stakeholders.

Mr. Speaker, energy is Alberta. It provides a standard of living for this province that is among the best in the world. Some two years ago the government embarked on a very rigorous undertaking to determine our competitiveness with other similar jurisdictions. That report, entitled Energizing Investment, was made public on March 11, 2010, and the report had two major recommendations. Alberta needed to change its fiscal regime and reduce its regulatory complexity in order to regain its competitive advantage.

Government followed through with the fiscal changes in March of last year, and after further consultation with industry, additional changes were announced at the end of May 2010. We also announced that those would be the final adjustments to the fiscal regime because investors needed predictability and stability. Now, one year later, this stable fiscal policy has resulted in $2.6 billion in revenue from land sales, the highest fiscal year on record, Mr. Speaker, and a 42 per cent increase in well completions from 2009-10. Our changes have worked and will continue to work.

Getting the fiscal structure right, however, was only half of the answer. The other initiative was streamlining our regulatory structure, and an MLA committee comprised of the members for Drayton Valley-Calmar, Red Deer-South, and Livingston-Macleod conducted an extensive review and engagement with stakeholders during much of 2010. Their recommendations in Enhancing Assurance: Report and Recommendations of the Regulatory Enhancement Task Force, were released on January 28 of this year. Government promised to follow through with action, and that is what is proposed today.

This draft discussion document calls for the use of best practices in the operation, functions, and processes of a proposed single regulator. The regulatory system needs to support the development of Alberta's energy resources while ensuring that vital environmental resources – air, water, land, and biodiversity – are managed appropriately. Regulatory enhancement is not about reducing environmental standards, nor will it diminish the ability of the system to respond to the needs of those affected by development such as landowners.

The document will be tabled in the House later today by my colleague from Drayton Valley-Calmar and is designed to elicit feedback in the coming months and form the basis of legislation at the next sitting of the Legislature.

The Speaker: On behalf of the Official Opposition the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the first thing we need to remember is that this government caused the regulatory royalty problems. Can they really be the ones to fix it? We'll see.

Way back in 2009 Alberta Liberal MLAs engaged in a vigorous year-long consultation process with key players in the energy sector. The overwhelming message we received from the people working in oil and gas was that above all else the industry wants certainty and stability. That's why regulatory reform is front and centre in the oil and gas policy we released way back in January 2010.

Once upon a time Alberta had the best regulatory framework of any oil-producing jurisdiction, allowing the industry to succeed, but what was once an efficient and effective regulatory system has become cumbersome. It used to take a year to get regulatory approval. It now takes three.

Alberta Liberals recognize that this approach does not work, so our policy calls for a simplified regulatory system with a one-window approach to approvals, permits, inspections, and so on. We would also improve co-ordination in oil and gas matters between the ERCB, Alberta Environment, Alberta Energy, and Sustainable Resource Development, and with the federal government and our First Nations. It sounds as though the Energy minister is taking some small steps forward by stealing some great ideas from our playbook, especially our one-window approach and our belief that industry must be consulted regularly.

Though I'm looking forward to carefully re-examining the minister's draft discussion document, to be sure, you can bet we will be watching to see if the government follows through. The one-regulator approach is all well and good, but we'll also be watching to make sure that there is no reduction in environmental remediation or financial security standards, and rest assured that we'll be pushing the government to give the public enhanced opportunities for public participation in the regulatory process.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose caucus is pleased to see that this government has finally moved toward streamlining the regulatory framework for Alberta's energy sector; however, there is no way that it should have taken this long to take the first step toward simplifying the process. Nevertheless, we along with the energy sector are eager to read and consider the draft discussion document from the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. The details will be very important, and we hope that this document will live up to its billing. We have heard that there has been consultation with many different groups and that this discussion will facilitate further input in the discussion going forward. It is our desire that the end results will in fact incorporate what the government has heard from landowners, oil and gas companies, aboriginal groups, environmental groups, and other stakeholders to the benefit of all.

In terms of the government's heralded fiscal policy we take exception to the idea that this government is the driving force in regaining Alberta's competitive advantage, especially when they themselves are directly responsible for messing things up in the first place by tearing up mineral lease contracts and by creating chaos and instability for over three years. It was the innovation of Albertans and the tenacity of our oil and gas industry along with the recovery of the global economy which has driven our prosperity as a province, not the faulty fiscal policy tinkering of this government. This government ran over the industry and its workers with a dump truck and with runaway spending and is now claiming victory for hauling them to the emergency room after much money and work.

However, we acknowledge that regulatory reform is both necessary and long overdue, and we will thoroughly examine the government's conclusions and proposals in this area. We believe that there is still much more work to be done, and the Wildrose caucus believes much more can be done without compromising the regulatory requirements or placing undue burden on our most prosperous industry or our environment.

Predictability, stability, rule of law, or final adjustments: this is a farce, Mr. Speaker. The government has been nothing less than an economic wrecking ball for the last three years.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The prosperity and stability of this province depends on Alberta developing our important oil and gas resources in a safe and smart way to ensure our markets are strong and to ensure a good quality of life for all Albertans. The message the minister is delivering is not that Alberta is seeking to become more competitive but that this government is seeking to make it easier for the oil industry to do what they wish and to rake in maximum profits as fast as they can.

We have ample evidence, even as recently as the past few days in regard to a massive pipeline spill in northern Alberta, that the current regulators are not doing a satisfactory job of regulating, monitoring, or communicating about the issues. Now the proposal is to reduce even what is now in place. Replacing three rubber stamps with a single rubber stamp does not improve environmental protection or protect the public interest.

Alberta's NDP is committed to ensure that we have regulations that are meaningful, that the compliance with those regulations is well monitored, and that violations are vigorously prosecuted. Unless we do this, jobs and economic strength for tomorrow are put at risk. Unfortunately, we cannot expect this from a PC government that is largely financed by the very industry it purports to regulate. Mr. Speaker, this is the tail wagging the dog. It is just more of the same.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to this afternoon's tabling by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. As I recall, the announcement of this extensive review of our energy industry's regulatory framework was made at the same time that the hon. minister finally put the royalty framework for oil and gas back together. The minister is correct. Certainly, on the fiscal side certainty has returned and along with it Alberta's competitiveness in oil and gas relative to Saskatchewan, B.C., and other jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, it is very clear – and it was very clear as I did my own consultations with top people in the oil and gas industry in the months leading up to this government seeing, if never exactly apologizing to those who lost their jobs or their businesses over it, the error of its ways on royalties – that another big drag on our competitiveness with other jurisdictions was Alberta's regulatory regime. It was and is in need of some simplifying, of becoming more of a one-window approach, where a company that wishes to develop the resource could jump through all the necessary hoops at relatively the same time, not have the process dragged out for years and years.

But the standards that we set must not be compromised. The minister has just told us that they will not be, and the discussion document that the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar will table soon will show us whether the minister is correct or not.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier has vowed to hold Plains Midstream Canada's feet to the fire over last week's Rainbow pipeline spill. We need only think back about a year to BP's blowout in the Gulf of Mexico or a couple of decades to the grounding of the Exxon Valdez in Alaska to be graphically and painfully reminded of the devastation that oil can cause when there is not appropriate regulatory oversight in place both at the front end in setting the environmental health and safety standards and at the back end in making sure that those standards are in fact enforced.

The energy industry is a positive force in the province of Alberta. We cannot get to where we dream of being or to what we dream of Alberta becoming without a healthy, competitive oil and gas industry. Our regulatory standards and processes in the past were the envy of the world, and in streamlining them, we need to make sure that they are once again in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll conclude the question period if we continue after 3 o'clock. I will not rise as per Standing Order 7(7) until we conclude the question period, so we'll have the full 50 minutes.

Secondly, should there be a question addressed to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, as the result of an unfortunate accident that he got himself involved in last week doing things that younger men should do and snapping an ankle or something, he will be able to stay in the comfort of his chair rather than being required to rise to respond should a question come. So that's the soft side today.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over 30,000 health professionals have made it clear that only a public inquiry can get to the bottom of this government's culture of fear and intimidation. This Premier and his minister of health have no interest, however, in finding the truth. Well, Mr. Premier, we're not going to stop until the truth about your government's mismanagement of public health care and its disgusting tactics of fear and intimidation are fully exposed. Albertans have no reason to trust you. Will the Premier finally come clean and tell Albertans why you'd rather cover up the truth and keep the skeletons in the closet than call a public inquiry?

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Pretty strong language in there about accusing a member and saying: covering up the truth. I'm not sure that's exactly what the Leader of the Official Opposition wanted to say, but he did say it.

Hon. Premier, if you wish to proceed.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of times when the opposition have used language that's unparliamentary. You know, notwithstanding the behaviour of the opposition, there have been a number of times I've risen in the House and said that there is a very robust review being done by the Health Quality Council. I understand that today there were a small number of doctors that took part in a news conference and spoke to the media about their experiences in the health care system. I am sure that if these doctors that were at the conference today want to say the same things, express their opinions to the Health Quality Council in terms of how they can improve the system, they're there to listen. [interjection]

Dr. Swann: Well, is the Premier saying that 30,000 health care professionals, including doctors, are wrong in calling for a public inquiry and that the doctor Premier from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville has the prescription for Alberta's ailing health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I just heard that there was a comment made that the doctors wouldn't be protected. They took part in a news conference. They spoke publicly. So why is it they can't take those same opinions and express them to the Health Quality Council?

Dr. Swann: Will the Premier finally find his backbone and tell Albertans why he insists on covering up the truth instead of calling a public inquiry?

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Okay. That's the second time for the unparliamentary phrase: covering up the truth. That's a direct accusation against a member. It's unparliamentary. We're going to move on to your next question.

Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Services Local Decision-making

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, despite firm opposition from experts and stakeholders in 2008, the government went ahead and forged a superboard to manage and deliver all of Alberta's health care system, a failed experiment costing Albertans over $1.2 billion. Now, after wasting precious health care funding on a transition nobody wanted, Alberta Health Services is shifting back to increased local decision-making. Since the Premier has flip-flopped on government policy again, will he admit that this government's centralization of health care has been an epic failure?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again a total misunderstanding of what Dr. Eagle announced. There were always five management regions in the province. What happened is that the doctor, through listening to not only what MLAs and ministers brought through suggestions in terms of better decision-making at the local level, has reorganized. Now there'll be more decision-making at the local level which will deal with very simple situations like when to put a light bulb in a surgical suite, all of those things that will now be taken care of through a common-sense approach.

Dr. Swann: Common sense, Mr. Speaker: what an innovation.

Given that in response to the opposition the Premier has said in this House, "I know they're still upset over the changes to the one superboard; we're not backing off," will the Premier admit that the needless instability created and $1.2 billion in overspending was a huge step backwards for the health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, it was a very positive step forward. It has minimized the number of people in management in terms of dealing with management issues, put more money into where money was necessary, and that was to front-line health care services. We see waiting lists improving throughout the province. We see more surgeries being done. That is a direct testament to the changes that were made.

Dr. Swann: Will the Premier apologize to the many health care workers who have been threatened and demoralized when they challenged this colossal failure of planning resulting from the creation of the superboard? Will you apologize, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, $600 million going to one health board in the province is $600 million worth of savings that have gone directly to front-line services. That's $600 million that previously went to management and board expenses, et cetera, that is now going directly to nurses and doctors that are practising medicine in this province.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. deputy Leader of the Official Opposition.

Plains Midstream Canada Pipeline Leak

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday computers for a pipeline company detected a problem on a 40-year-old line at 7 p.m. While it triggered an initial shutdown, this was overridden, and the line was restarted several times. At 7:50 a.m. the next day the company confirmed that there had been a release of what would later be reported at 4.5 million litres of crude. This will affect the local ecosystem for decades. To the Minister of Energy: does the government share the concern of Albertans that it took the company 12 hours to confirm the leak and even then got the facts wrong?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the appropriate thing to do – and I would ask the indulgence of the member. The Energy Resources Conservation Board was on-site shortly after being notified of the leak on Friday. Part of the role of the ERCB is to do an extensive review of what transpired. That is about to be completed and will be released shortly. Until that review has been completed, I don't think we should be jumping to conclusions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why is there no requirement for the company to physically check the line prior to several attempts to restart after systems have repeatedly triggered a shutdown?

Mr. Liepert: As I said, Mr. Speaker, these are the kinds of accusations that the Energy Resources Conservation Board will be looking at through the course of their review. We want to make sure that we're dealing with fact and not possibly what may have been gleaned out of a newspaper article. When that report is completed, we'll release it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why did it take until late in the day on May 3 for the ERCB to publicly release the actual scale of the spill when the spill took place on April 29?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think the member would probably understand that this particular spill was in a very remote area of the province. The ERCB does not engage in hypothetical situations, as some others might. They wanted to be assured that the information that they were making public was, in fact, correct. I'd just as soon, Mr. Speaker, have the correct information than have them rush out the door with incorrect information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Long-term Care

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We hear from the government how important seniors are and how they get the care they need in the right place at the right time. This year's throne speech told Albertans that seniors would be given more choice and greater independence, yet hundreds wait in hospitals, assisted living, and at home for long-term care. My questions are to the Premier. Seeing as Alberta health policy forces seniors in assisted living to take the first available long-term care bed no matter where it is, how can you claim to be keeping seniors near their home?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we're well ahead of the schedule that we had articulated to Albertans in terms of construction. We thought we'd have about 800 continuing care beds built in the province, and now we're in excess of 1,100. We'll probably reach 1,300. We do have to build about a thousand additional continuing care beds a year to keep up with the aging population in the province.

Mrs. Forsyth: You didn't answer the question, Premier.

Given that the Premier continues to say that seniors now have more choice and greater independence, can he tell us how many seniors in assisted living end up in a hospital bed first before getting the long-term care that they need?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are seniors that are still in . . . [interjection] The reason the member didn't hear the answer to the first question is that she's listening to her partner sitting next to her.

Mrs. Forsyth: My last question is to the Premier again. How can you say that seniors are getting the best care in the best settings when a senior asks for help to take their loved one to the washroom, and they're told to let them go in their diaper?

Mr. Stelmach: That's absolute, ridiculous nonsense. We have very, very good, quality care in the province of Alberta for seniors, and to bring stuff like that to the floor is absolutely wrong. There are many dedicated health care workers in the province that are doing their best to look after our seniors, who are very deserving of good, quality care. We'll continue to improve in Alberta what are some of the best programs in the country of Canada, and we're also going to be able to do that at very, very affordable prices, you know, the costs that seniors pay. This is a huge problem for us right across the country of Canada with an aging population.

Critical Transmission Infrastructure

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, documents leaked to the NDP show that as early as October 2010 the Tory caucus was informed that this government's proposed $13 billion transmission infrastructure program was unaffordable and based on inaccurate and unreasonable power demand projections. Can the Energy minister tell the Assembly why this government believes that power consumption will rise by 27,000 gigawatt hours in the next eight years when it only rose 5,000 in the last 10?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, when deregulation took place in this province, about 10 to 15 years ago, what was created was something called the Alberta Electric System Operator, commonly known as AESO. AESO has two responsibilities. One is to ensure that we have an effective and efficiently run system. I think every member would agree that the power system in this province is run very effectively and very efficiently. Their second role is to do long-range planning. It's from part of that long-range planning that some of these projections have come out. AESO will be releasing a new long-range plan in the near future, and hopefully it'll be similar.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that a homeowner who uses a thousand kilowatt hours per month will pay between $256 and $413 more per year because of this unnecessary infrastructure plan, how can the Energy minister be so out of touch with Alberta families that he does not understand the burden that this will place on household budgets, especially for those on fixed incomes?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, talk about spreading fear and intimidation. That is absolutely false. The projections from the independent operator are that the actual cost as a result of the four critical transmission lines will be the equivalent of $1 per month per residential customer for every billion dollars billed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you need an interpreter to understand that answer.

Given that this government has already spiked increases in pensions for seniors and given that this transmission white elephant will jack up power bills for seniors by hundreds of dollars, why won't this minister admit that the government would rather see seniors out on the street than stand up to the big power companies and their puppet, AESO?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think what the member is attempting to do is reopen the debate under Bill 50, and we can go back and have that debate if we like. We want to ensure that we have critical transmission so that in the year 2020 all of those who are living south of Red Deer do not have to worry about the access to power, and we want to ensure that industry remains competitive in this province. [interjection]

The Speaker: Are we dancing? What are we doing?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2005 a massive oil spill at Wabamun Lake exposed this government's pathetic lack of emergency response plans. At the time the government's response was: we can do better. Well, you didn't, and unfortunately it appears that the government's focus again is on controlling the messaging rather than dealing with the problem. As we saw in 2005, the initial reaction from government and industry is: this can't be a problem; keep going. So the flow of oil rather than the double check is not a problem for the environment. To the Minister of Environment: what has actually changed?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, a significant amount of change has taken place. Lessons were learned since the Wabamun incident. In this particular case there was a response like none other to first of all control the release, to stop the flow of oil within the pipeline, and then to maintain as small an affected area as possible. Beyond that, there is a 24-hour, round-the-clock effort now under way to ensure that it's cleaned up as best as it possibly can be.

Ms Blakeman: You must be blessing those beavers.

Back to the same minister: given that I've raised the issue of how and what the government tests for in air monitoring repeatedly and given that the First Nations are again raising health concerns resulting from oil industry activity, how can the minister say that without a doubt there are no negative impacts?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the statements that I make are based upon Health Canada's air quality standards. Those standards apply across the entire country. I can definitively say that the air quality is well below health quality standards. I cannot in all good conscience say that there cannot and will not be an impact on health to any individual. I can say that they are well below accepted Health Canada standards.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister: how much of this cleanup and the cost of long-term effects like the destruction of wetlands will be shouldered by the taxpayer?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, nothing. Nothing will be borne by the taxpayers other than, of course, the role that the regulators are playing. We have staff that are on the ground, ERCB has staff on the ground, Alberta Health has staff on the ground, and those costs are minimal. Those are employees of the department. All costs associated with the cleanup and remediation are the responsibility of the company.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question today is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, responsible for the WCB. In Alberta we have approximately 3,500 full-time firefighters, that do just a great job for us. A number of years ago we passed legislation that allowed them to collect WCB if, in fact, they had certain types of cancer. I see that there are some more cancers added to the list. To the minister: I'd like to know what kind of scientific . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister, please.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, there were a number of cancers that had a presumptive clause in the WCB act through regulations deeming them work-related cancers when firefighters developed one of those cancers. Recently I added four more. There is scientific evidence obtained by firefighters and their association that shows that there is a causal relationship between the chemicals that they're exposed to and the development of cancer. They develop cancer at a much more prevalent rate than the general population does.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that there are approximately 10,000 volunteer firefighters, that are exposed to the same kind of carcinogens, I was wondering if the municipalities have given any indication of this concern that they might have.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. About 80 per cent of Alberta's firefighters are volunteers, and they do important work in many of Alberta's communities, and we need to support them.

This issue is important to all our firefighters, whether they're career or volunteer, and to the municipalities that they serve. Volunteer firefighters have talked to me on numerous occasions about this important issue, and that's why our fire commissioner's office has been working with all fire departments as well as Employment and Immigration and other partners in the discussion concerning presumptive cancers.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, back to the first minister. It would seem to me that it would only make sense, since these 10,000 are exposed to the same carcinogens, that they, too, would be covered under the WCB. So to the minister: are you considering doing this? If not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Rocky Mountain House has been very supportive of an initiative of expanding this protection to volunteer firefighters, and I thank him for his ongoing support. I am definitely considering it, and at this point in time I can tell the Member for Rocky Mountain House to stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Protection of Children in Care

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fourteen-month-old Elizabeth Velasquez had already suffered two broken legs when her desperate grandparents contacted police and Alberta Children and Youth Services in March of last year. Some six weeks later paramedics rushed the toddler to Alberta Children's hospital but were unable to revive her. The cause of death, we now know, was nonaccidental asphyxiation. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services. Given that the police child abuse unit recommended that it do so, why did the department not take Elizabeth into protective custody before it was too late?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a very tragic situation, as the member has said to you. I did learn on Wednesday as well that the Calgary Police Service are investigating a toddler's death, that was determined to be an accident a year ago, as a homicide. Given that the Calgary Police Service are investigating, you can understand that I cannot share all information about this case, but I can confirm to you, hon. member – you asked about the staff – that we were actively involved, the child and family services authority in Calgary, from March 15 to May 2, 2010. Given the seriousness of this new information, that I learned on Wednesday, I have put forward a number of initiatives to address the situation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the minister: why only now, when Elizabeth's grandparents have gone public, has the department decided to launch an internal review into the mishandling of the case?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, as I indicated to you, I did learn about this on Wednesday. I have discussed it with the police service, the deputy chief responsible for the area, the chief of police, and others in the field. I have a number of initiatives, as I indicated to you. One is an external review of expert people on a panel, who will take the information from Health Services, Calgary Police Service, and our child and family services authority over that six-week period. They will take note of the police advice that is on the file, and they will make solid recommendations as to how we can learn from the tragedy. Once that review is completed, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, it will be submitted to me, and it will become part of an overarching internal investigation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. My final question again to the minister: in the interests of transparency will the minister undertake to make this review public?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you also, though, that one of the initiatives is that I've directed each of our 10 regional authorities to complete a detailed review as well of all the detailed information that's on active files for our children under the age of six who have experienced abuse or neglect.

Your question, that third question, about transparency is very important, and I want you to know that although I'll be respecting the confidentiality of the child and the family and that this is an ongoing police investigation, lessons to be learned from this will be made public.

Ms Calahasen: In the early hours of April 29, 2011, a portion of the 700-kilometre pipeline that runs through my constituency ruptured and resulted in the release of approximately 28,000 barrels of crude oil. Oil spilled onto traditional lands impacted wildlife and caused justifiable concern to the MD, the two First Nations, and the Métis communities in the area. My question is to the Minister of Environment. During our site visit on Saturday – and thank you for that – we observed significant activity to recover the product and clean up the spill. First Nations elders, however, expressed concerns regarding long-term effects and wanted to ensure that the cleanup is done. How will you commit to ensuring that this is done right . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister, please.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is absolutely correct. The elders that accompanied us on a tour of the site on Saturday expressed good support for the work that is under way but were concerned, however, that the long-term impact would not be addressed adequately. I gave my assurance at that time that we will rigorously pursue this company to ensure not only that the immediate cleanup is successfully done but that remediation takes place in an appropriate way, and we will ensure that that happens.

Ms Calahasen: To the same minister: given, by your own admission, that initial communication with First Nations, Métis, and the MD could have been better, what will be done now to ensure that leaders and elders in my communities are provided with the information they require?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the visit that we made on Saturday was truly a first step in what I believe to be a long process in establishing lines of communication between the government, industry, the two First Nations, as well as the elders and community members within that region. We recognize that in the short term, at the initial stages, communications could have been and should have been better. That doesn't mean that they need to be that way the rest of the time, so I also gave my assurance that I would return to the region this fall to ensure that they are comfortable with the work that has taken place.

Ms Calahasen: My final question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that the Energy Resources Conservation Board will ultimately decide when the pipeline is reopened, what will you do to ensure that this is done as responsibly and collaboratively as possible with the people of the area?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, as I said earlier, the Energy Resources Conservation Board has been on-site since Friday and was part of ensuring that the pipeline was repaired very quickly. It's been about 10 days now, and there are some other consequences here that need to be put on the record. The town of Norman Wells in the Northwest Territories, as an example, has declared a state of emergency because its natural gas supply has been cut off due to this line not being up and running. So the ERCB has to take those considerations into account along with ensuring that the safety and the regulatory requirements will be met. I anticipate that to be fairly quickly.

New School Construction

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, as a result of this government's misguided cuts to education, the cuts will lead to fewer teachers in classrooms and through-the-roof increases in busing fees. The reason for this increase is this government's complete inability to build neighbourhood schools. Instead of doing this, the government's solution is to bus children, sometimes more than a one-hour ride, to the school they are going to. To the Minister of Infrastructure: when will this government start building schools when communities are built, not a quarter of a century later?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member opposite does know that we are building schools. In fact, in ASAP 1 we built 18 schools: nine schools in Calgary and nine schools in Edmonton. Last year we initiated to build 14 more schools. That was 10 schools under ASAP 2 and also four high schools.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that many Calgary families will be forced to pay an additional $670 in busing fees to get their kids to school because they do not have a neighbourhood school, when will the minister take ownership of the problem and commit to building schools in neighbourhoods where these children live?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're doing that. Last week, in fact, I was in Calgary, and we opened I believe it was four schools in Calgary, ensuring that individual students had an opportunity to get their education right in their communities.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that there are another 10 schools in Calgary and given that there are another 10 schools in Edmonton and other places in this province that need schools, that answer isn't good enough. Will the minister commit in the short term to covering the cost of this additional busing until these neighbourhood schools are built?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, we are building schools. This government is very, very responsible in trying to build schools in areas where they are necessary. This government is also looking at where the necessity of schools will be in the future. We work with the co-operation of school boards and with the co-operation of communities to make sure that this does happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Research and Innovation Funding

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Economic diversification is a hot topic these days, and no matter where you stand on this issue, you can't help but recognize the important role that research and innovation will play in our future. The Alberta Innovates system is a big step in this direction, but many researchers have questions about how the system will fund or support their work, especially if it doesn't neatly fall within one of the system's priority areas. All my questions are for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. As Alberta Innovates continues to focus our research investments, researchers like those in attendance today, Mr. Minister, want to know if basic, curiosity-driven research is being left by the wayside.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have this question today. Curiosity-based or basic research continues to play a very, very important role in research in this province. Much of it is conducted on the campuses of our colleges and technical institutes and universities. It's funded through those institutions. It's a very important part of it, but we also have an important role to play in directed or specific research that impacts the entire province, things like the nanotechnology area, where we've set a policy in place that helps us to direct research into nanotechnology. Assistance for those things in Alberta that will benefit the taxpayers in the province is also critically important.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the government is setting the overall direction for these arm's-length Alberta Innovates corporations, the researchers would like to know: how is the minister going to ensure their objective approach to research and innovation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the province does set some general guidelines or areas of research that we believe would benefit our province. Some of those would include agriculture and forestry and bio or energy and the environment or health, which are all critically important to Albertans. We do help set the direction, but these boards of businesspeople, of researchers do work at arm's length to government and help set the direction of research, where it's going and which projects will be funded.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, can the minister please respond to concerns that this approach will see the government invest only in research that's commercially viable and that will potentially make money?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. We do hear a lot about commercialization, and we do hope that research that's occurring in Alberta does turn into viable opportunities, turns into an investment of capital, and turns into real employment here in Alberta. But that's not all that it's about. It's about finding solutions to making healthier Albertans. It's about finding solutions to delivering health care more effectively and efficiently. These are important. We often say that it's not just selling products; it's from the lab to the bedside, making people's stay in hospital safer.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, on April 29 the Plains Midstream pipeline began leaking, and the ERCB advised only that a leak of undetermined volume had been detected. The next day government was told that the spill was the worst in 35 years, yet they kept silent for four more days. All the while, the community members were kept in the dark. Will the Minister of Energy explain why the ERCB breached its duty to the public and, particularly, to the Lubicon people by waiting until the day after the federal election to alert the public to the true severity of the spill?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the spill was in a remote part of the province. It was important that the information be correct rather than quick. The Minister of Environment did mention that there were discussions with the First Nations on the weekend, that he did apologize for the breakdown in communications, and we acknowledge that they could have been... [interjection] The member seems to have the answer, so I'll let her answer.

Ms Notley: Given that the ERCB was advised last Saturday, two Saturdays ago, that this spill was the largest in 35 years and then waited until after the election to tell anybody, will the minister responsible for the ERCB advise this House what exactly he knew about the spill and when he knew it?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, to draw a comparison to the federal election is absurd. It just shows that this particular member is completely out of touch when a situation like this happens.

One of the things that you have to ensure takes place is that we work with the company to get the issue resolved as quickly as possible. That was done. As I said earlier, there probably was some additional communication within the communities that could have taken place, but you can't fix history, and we have assured that we will in the future.

Ms Notley: Well, given that having the ERCB review the appropriateness of a response by the ERCB is actually more ridiculous than having industry police its own safety standards, will the minister commit to releasing all documents relating to the cause and the extent of the spill, its cleanup, health and environmental damage, and all communications so that Albertans can judge for themselves the appropriateness of this response?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, nobody said that the ERCB was going to review the ERCB. What I said earlier was that the ERCB was conducting a full inquiry into this particular incident, as it would under any incident like this. The information, the review, will be public, and the member will have every opportunity to look at it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Workers' Compensation for Injured Transit Driver

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Tom Bregg continues to heal from the brutal assault which occurred on December 3, 2009, while operating a city bus for Edmonton Transit System. He has permanently lost the use of his left eye and still requires further facial surgeries. The WCB has been threatening to cease wage replacement for noncompliance. My first question is to the minister in charge of the WCB. Why is this man, an innocent victim of a vicious, violent crime, having his benefits threatened by the Workers' Compensation Board at this time?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, what has happened to this gentleman was despicable, and from occupational health and safety purposes I hope something like this never happens again.

Now, with respect to his recovery he, thankfully, is recovering and under the good care of medical doctors here in the province. The Workers' Compensation Board reviews medical reports that are submitted by his treating physicians, and ultimately there will be a joint decision made on whether he is capable of returning to some form of employment. Ultimately, I imagine he also would like to return to some form of employment. But I cannot comment on the decision because no decisions have been made at this point.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: given that in a message to stakeholders the minister said, "I am pleased to work with the Workers' Compensation Board to ensure this province's workers and employers have a strong and stable source of support when workplace injury strikes," how is the WCB's threat to cease wage replacement for Mr. Bregg a strong and stable source of support when workplace injury strikes?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the WCB does not threaten. They make decisions. Either they make a decision to remove benefits or to not. Then there is in place a due process for appeals if a worker is not satisfied with the decision. Having said that, no such decision has been made. I firmly believe that a decision will be made based on medical evidence in the best interests of the worker, making sure that when he is able to return to some form of modified employment, that opportunity will be extended to him.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister. I have spoken to Mr. Bregg and his family and have permission to discuss this matter.

The Speaker: But you don't have opportunities for preambles in your question.

Mr. MacDonald: Why are the city of Edmonton's director of labour relations and the Workers' Compensation Board spokesperson discussing the case of this innocent man, who was the victim of a violent crime, in public?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is quite ironic because, unlike this member, I will not discuss this case in public. Hence, I will not be making any comments to that specific case. If the worker chooses to divulge the details of his case, he's always more than welcome to do that. Workers' Compensation has not been discussing this case in public either.

I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if there are any issues on the file, there is a course of appeal that a worker can undertake, and the decisions are made based on the medical evidence. I will make sure that the right decisions are made because the process is such that it leads to proper decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Adverse Possession of Land

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural constituents have recently contacted me with concerns about the common law doctrine of adverse possession, or squatters' rights. Apparently, they are having disputes with neighbours who are claiming part of their quarter section because of a misplaced fence that is robbing them of as much as five acres of their land. To the hon. Attorney General and Minister of Justice: why does this archaic practice of land grabbing still apply in our modern society?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I acknowledge the hon. member's significant knowledge in the area of surveying and I also spent 30 years practising real estate law, I'm well aware that there are often boundary disputes. We do have a system that is based on the Torrens system of land registration, British common law, and we have the Limitations Act, adverse possession law, and so on. Some of it goes back to 1870. It is also true that there is a way that people can get title by having occupied land for long enough, but I'm not aware of any great problem there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Really, this is more than just boundary disputes. Given that adverse possession is a common law remedy from the Northwest Territories inherited from England in 1870 and given that the land title and property boundary demarcation system is vastly different in Alberta than in England, does the minister think this law should be applicable in Alberta?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this practice, this system, has been in place, as I mentioned, for many years. I think the hon. member himself would acknowledge that there have been very few of these cases over a hundred years, less than one a year. I'm not convinced that there is a burning need for a legislative change here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question again to the same minister: given that our Torrens system of land titles guarantees title to land, does the doctrine of adverse possession not undermine our guaranteed title system?

The Speaker: Well, you're asking for a legal interpretation here, which is not the purpose of question period, but if you want to, proceed shortly and briefly.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, maybe I'll just suggest to the hon. member that he spend some time with me. We can talk this over, and I'll have the information for him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has a knack for creating problems and then taking far too long to fix them. The best example of this was the new royalty framework. After running the dump truck over our energy sector, it took this government three years and too many tries to finally get it back to where we were. They are still at it. After paralyzing our health care system in 2008, they finally decided to begin a long process of decentralizing the health superboard. To the health minister. Five zones and you still don't have a plan to properly empower local health care providers. Why don't you just admit that you don't know what to do and you're slapping on another Band-Aid?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's the kind of misinformation that needs to stop by that member and by other friends of his in that caucus. When the Alberta Health Services was created, it had already established right soon thereafter five zones. Just like the press release says, geographically those five zones don't change. What is changing is more capacity for local decision-making because the circumstances today are vastly different than they were two, three years ago.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: No, it's a placebo.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the now Energy minister brought in the superboard three years ago and he said it would "ensure a more streamlined system for patients," are we to conclude based on last week's announcement that the government has finally concluded that the superboard has failed in this regard and now doesn't know what to do?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think this demonstrates extremely well that the Alberta Health Services Board knows exactly what to do. Now that they don't have to worry about $1.3 billion worth of deficit, now that they have stable five-year funding guarantees, now that they have the five-year health action plan and all the other accountability measures, it's possible to move on with the next phase of this local decision-making. That's what we've got, and it's looking really good so far.

Mr. Hinman: Three years of confusion is going to turn into five years of confusion.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed changes to the superboard structure don't go nearly far enough, and they don't truly allow for local health care decision-making. Can the minister give us a rough idea of how many revisions he'll be making before he finally gets it right by dismantling the superboard and giving up the dream of a centrally planned health care system? Follow the Wildrose plan.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't think anybody is going to be following the wild plan at all, and certainly I won't be. But I'll tell you that what we're going to be doing is continuing to improve access to the system, and we're going to continue to reduce wait times. Let me tell you that as of today the emergency inpatient numbers have been reduced very significantly, by about 69 per cent in Calgary alone, and that member should know it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Workers' Compensation Accountability

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike other jurisdictions, the government of Alberta has opted not to have a statutory review provision in the Workers' Compensation Act, but rather it responds on an ongoing basis to issues as they arise. To the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration: why has the government of Alberta chosen not to follow suit and have a mandated review of the WCB act in, say, four or five years?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct. Some provinces have chosen to have sunset clauses in their WCB legislation, which demand that the provinces every three or five years do an overhaul of the act. Unlike those provinces, we have elected to respond to needs on an ongoing basis, so one doesn't have to wait for three, four, five years to address an issue. That is why, for example, the firefighters' cancer legislation was amended midstream. We have the ability to respond to issues as they arise.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: given that the WCB disability insurance system involves 1.7 million workers and 137,000 employers, with what information and how does the ministry ensure more accountability and fairness to injured workers in the administration of the Workers' Compensation Act and the WCB policies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In reference to the last question about WCB, indeed, that's how vast WCB is. I have to tell you that a majority of cases are resolved and workers return to work as they want to return, and that's what the system is based on. But there is accountability. There is a board of directors that's appointed by the minister. I have recently appointed a member to the board that has thoroughly reviewed WCB and will provide the board with input. They file their statements of investment and statements of audit with the Alberta Legislature, but ultimately they're responsible to the stakeholders, being employers and workers of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister. More than a decade has passed since the last review of the WCB in dealing with injured workers. Would the minister consider having such a review more regularly, perhaps this year or next?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I look at the act often myself. A thorough review: I'm not sure if it's required. I have to tell you that I made reference that I have appointed to the board a member who partook in the last review of WCB, and I'm sure he will bring many of the matters that he has found in his review of WCB to the attention of the board of directors. In the interim I will be responding to issues as they arise, be it from employers or workers, and make sure that WCB manages itself in an accountable way to both stakeholders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, and then the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Residential Building Inspections

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to serious concerns from Albertans about the Penhorwood catastrophe in Fort McMurray and similar problems faced by condo boards in Edmonton and Calgary, the Minister of Municipal Affairs has indicated that he opposes the licensing of builders and developers, doesn't require accountability from safety code officers, allows contractors and architects to cut costs with impunity, and only demands limited warranty protection for homeowners. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how can the minister say in all honesty that he's really doing anything of substance to protect home and condo owners from shoddy construction practices? The evidence suggests otherwise.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we are working with all of our municipalities to ensure that proper inspections are taking place. There's no doubt our municipalities, those that are accredited, are out there looking at individual buildings, and they certainly are closer to the local situation to make better decisions. We will continue to work with them to ensure that the inspectors that they hire are doing the right jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the problem is getting worse by the day.

Will the minister release a follow-up report to the April 2008 Building Envelope Survey so that Albertans can get a better sense of what changes are being recommended to the province's building construction and inspection system, and if not, why not?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, just the fact that the chief building administrator has requested additional information on existing situations across the province is an indication that we are trying to do things differently and better. There's no doubt that we are requesting all of that information under the Alberta building code and that we assess through the chief building administrator the needs. If there is a need for changes, we'll do that as part of our ongoing duties and responsibilities.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: will Alberta follow British Columbia's lead by requiring builders to provide longer warranties to homeowners, sir?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, that's again a part of our ongoing discussions. I've indicated in the past that we are working with the construction industry, our municipalities, and our own individual staff and various ministries within the government of Alberta to see if we can make some changes. We are aggressively pursuing various alternatives. I suppose over the next few months we hope to have some information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Cumulative Effects Environmental Management

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard several times in this House that the cumulative effects approach is the future to environmental planning and management in Alberta. The Industrial Heartland, which is right beside my constituency, was the first to begin implementing this new approach for protecting our air, land, and water. My question to the Minister of Environment: what have we actually achieved from the cumulative effects management approach in the Industrial Heartland?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a significant, major success story as we have the first truly functioning project under cumulative effects environmental management. It's the first of its kind in Alberta. It creates a system that supports water demands and improves water quality in the North Saskatchewan. Last week I had the honour of recognizing our multistakeholder group – the city of Edmonton, Lamont county, Strathcona county, Fort Saskatchewan, industry – as well as a significant number of very dedicated employees of Alberta Environment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: given that we already have water frameworks in the province, what's different about the Industrial Heartland water management framework, and how is it actually a move towards cumulative effects?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, what's different about this project is that it brings everything under one umbrella, surface and ground-water along with industrial and municipal water users. There's a common, sustainable goal for the river and for the region. Above all, it was created by a multistakeholder group, where everyone is actively engaged in putting the process together. We've developed scientific methods for water and air to help the environmental management within the entire capital region based upon a lot of the work that went into this project.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second supplemental to the same minister: while the creation of this framework is great, what are you doing to expand our reach beyond the Industrial Heartland and demonstrate that we're serious about province-wide cumulative effects environmental management?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, members will be familiar with the lower Athabasca regional plan and some of the references in that plan to environmental limits and cumulative effects. What we've learned through the development of this plan allowed us to draft the management frameworks for air, water, and groundwater for the LARP. Similar frameworks will be created for each of the other regional plans as they move forward, and each framework will identify limits and triggers to achieve regional environmental objectives. We intend to build upon existing environmental policy, legislation, and regulations.

The Speaker: Hon. members. that concludes the Oral Question Period for today. Eighteen members were recognized. That's 107 questions and responses.

I must now advise the Assembly of Standing Order 7(7), which reads, "At 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly." Now, that means that I should be calling Orders of the Day unless someone wants to rise with respect to a motion that says we should conclude the Routine, which has about seven different sections to deal with.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise to make such a motion given that we have members' statements, some very important members' statements, particularly affecting some of the people that have joined us in the gallery today, as well as the tabling of the report referred to earlier in Ministerial Statements. I would move that the Assembly give unanimous consent to allow the Routine to proceed to its conclusion.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Bashaw Centennial

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This summer from August 19 to 21 the town of Bashaw will celebrate its 100th anniversary. Bashaw is located in central Alberta about half an hour east of the highway 2 corridor on the junction of highways 21 and 53. The Bashaw area is known for its prosperous agricultural community, productive farms, and diverse livestock industry along with a thriving oil and gas sector. Tourism based on its natural beauty and nearby lakes and golf courses enhances Bashaw as a prime destination on the Boomtown Trail, which is a well-developed series of tourist stops located along highway 21.

The centennial homecoming weekend will host many activities, including music, meals, and historical characters from Bashaw's founding days that will provide a fun and interactive way to learn about Bashaw's history.

As another part of the centennial the Bashaw Historical Society has created a beautiful, two-volume history book called Over 100 Years of Memories that contains more than 1,200 family and business stories about the settlement and development of the Bashaw area. Earlier today copies of these books were donated to the Legislature Library so that the stories of Bashaw will be preserved and available for all to read.

Several members of the Boomtown Trail characters in period costume were with us today, and they tell some of the real stories of the history of the area with very realistic and colourful theatrical acting. Two members of the theatre group are here today. Laura Graham and Twyla Chitwood are from Bashaw and play the original historical characters of Mrs. Eugene Bashaw and Dollie Williams.

I attended a centennial kickoff event earlier this year, and the August centennial weekend promises to be a great success and an enjoyable weekend for all in attendance.

I would ask all members to join me in offering congratulations and best wishes to Bashaw as they celebrate their centennial year, and I would encourage all Albertans to come visit Bashaw this summer to experience a real taste of rural Alberta hospitality in a beautiful, relaxing, scenic area.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister for Calgary-Varsity.

Democratic Renewal

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Democracy lost. As this Alberta government does not believe it is necessary to set or stick to either a legislative session or fixed election dates, approximately half of Albertans who cast their vote for alternative voices are effectively disenfranchised. In 2008 our first past the post system saw government complacency rewarded by voter apathy. Twenty-one per cent of eligible Alberta voters, barely half of the 41 per cent who took the time to exercise their hard-won democratic franchise, gave this government a majority.

As another typically abbreviated parliamentary session draws to a close, a growing government rumour chorus suggests that there will be no legislative sitting either this fall or next spring, which from the Alberta government's perspective effectively prorogues the pesky parliamentary process for over a year. Considering that their federal Conservative counterparts, whose current leader twice prorogued Parliament, whose party was recently found in contempt of Parliament, and whose escalating taxpayer-shouldered debt includes the purchase of motorless military jets, were recently awarded with a national majority, why should Alberta government members concern themselves with the democratic process? Why just limit debate with time allocations or closures when you have the majority power to shut down the people's parliament for over a year, thus avoiding calls for transparency, accountability, or, worse still, a reputation-damning public inquiry?

From 2008 forward or backward, depending on your point of view, this government has consolidated its dictatorial power by using its deliberately shortened sessions to ram through bills which move debatable legislation to behind-closed-doors ministerial regulatory control. This government's bulldozer attitude is executed with devastating effect across the province from wholesale clear-cutting in the south to growing tailing pond pollution in the north.

To paraphrase the lines from a once-popular song which has become a Conservative government anthem, the rich get rich and the poor get poorer; in the meantime, in between time, ain't we had fun? Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Holocaust Memorial Day

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Sunday, May 1, 2011, in accordance with the Jewish lunar calendar, Albertans along with citizens around the world remembered the countless victims and survivors of the Holocaust and those who fought to defeat tyranny and genocide on Holocaust Memorial Day. Holocaust Memorial Day, or Yom ha-Shoah, is a time to remember the senseless and systematic annihilation of millions of Jewish people between 1933 and '45 and the many other victims and survivors of genocide, hatred, and discrimination past and present around the world.

In Alberta communities and families observed this day by remembering and recalling the victims of the catastrophe. On Monday, May 2, a commemorative service organized by the Jewish Federation of Edmonton was held at the Holocaust memorial on the Legislative Grounds. Survivors told their stories to educate children and future generations and to reflect on the enduring lessons of the tragedy.

Yom ha-Shoah is an opportunity for Albertans to reflect upon the tragedy and to look for ways we can each make a difference in our world today. On Holocaust Memorial Day and every day I urge all Albertans to recognize this very important day and, in doing so, reflect on our individual and collective roles in the fight against religious, racial, and other forms of hatred. Yom ha-Shoah is a call to all people, not just the Jewish community, to fight for the common goals of societies that value diversity and protect human rights.

In our province Yom ha-Shoah was officially proclaimed Holocaust Memorial Day by the Alberta Legislature on November 16, 2000, with the passing of the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. Let us never forget the atrocity that was the Holocaust, those who suffered and those who lost their lives in such a horrific way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Federation of Calgary Communities

Ms Woo-Paw: Mr. Speaker, the earliest community associations in Calgary were formed during the 1920s to provide formal recreational programs and facilities such as outdoor skating rinks and also social programs. The first official incorporation of a community association, the Elbow Park association, was formed in 1930, and two more, Mount Royal and Scarboro, were registered prior to World War II. The dramatic population growth after the war correspondingly increased the number of community associations.

During the 1950s one unified voice was seen as necessary to co-ordinate and liaise with community services to address common concerns. The Federation of Calgary Communities was an initiative of 47 community associations. Incorporated in 1961, this new, large support organization gave its members a way to increase their effectiveness while remaining autonomous.

There are currently 147 community associations in Calgary, with 97 per cent being Federation of Calgary Communities members. It's estimated that annually 20,660 community association volunteers contribute 2.4 million hours of public service at an equivalent monetary value of over $28 million. These volunteers operate, manage, and maintain facilities and amenities with a value of more than $250 million. They come from a diverse population base, with about 15 per cent of the city's population supporting the associations through paid membership.

Today the federation supports its members and communities in urban planning, managing their finances, building awareness around volunteerism, celebrating community life, and administering the associations. The Federation of Calgary Communities is committed to enhancing the ability of community associations to provide necessary social and recreational services. In 2010 the federation was recognized by the Governor General.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mental Health Week

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise today in recognizing that this week in May all across Canada is Mental Health Week. This is the 60th anniversary of Mental Health Week, a time that is dedicated to encouraging Canadians of all demographics to learn, talk, reflect, and engage with others on all issues relating to mental health.

This year the theme for this important week is Mental Health for All, which focuses on key topics for a better understanding of our mental health. Those two words, "for all," are key because in today's busy world we must understand that our children also have many stresses. Striking a balance between school or work and families, our physical wellness, and our emotional wellness is extremely important for each and every one of us.

Mr. Speaker, the Mental Health for All fact sheet lists some simple ways to promote good mental health. These ways can range from physical exercise to socializing with others to reading or taking up a hobby; in other words, activities that are relaxing and enjoyable. I personally enjoy relaxing after a busy day with a nice cup of tea and some quiet music. I recommend that we all choose to take some personal time every day to nourish our emotional well-being and our mental health.

One of the key initiatives of our government's five-year health action plan is supporting people with addiction and mental health issues. This includes early intervention with youth who may be susceptible to addiction or mental health issues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Canadian Tire Jumpstart Day

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise in the House today to recognize Canadian Tire Jumpstart Day, which will be held on May 28 this year. Canadian Tire Jumpstart is a community-based charitable program that helps financially disadvantaged youth participate in organized sport and recreation by covering registration fees, equipment, and transportation costs. In Canada an estimated 1 in 3 families struggles to include their children in organized sport and recreation.

Canadian Tire Jumpstart supports local kids in need through direct anonymous contributions as well as its network of regional chapters and community partners such as Big Brothers Big Sisters Canada, the YMCA, and parks and recreation. Most importantly, 100 per cent of customer donations to Canadian Tire Jumpstart are reinvested into the local community. Since 2005 the Jumpstart program has helped over 315,000 kids across Canada get involved in activities like hockey, soccer, swimming, and ballet. In Alberta alone over $2.2 million has helped more than 22,000 kids.

Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Banff-Cochrane is part of the Calgary Jumpstart chapter. Mr. Rob Hatch, whom I introduced earlier, is the dealer of the Cochrane Canadian Tire store and chair of this chapter. His team has distributed over $700,000 to support over 8,500 kids in just the last six years. This is truly an amazing accomplishment. I would like to thank them for their efforts, congratulate them on their success, and ask each member in the House to join me in recognizing the great work Canadian Tire is doing for families across our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Prostate Cancer

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Prostate cancer affects 1 in 6 Canadian men. More than 90 per cent of prostate cancer cases are curable if detected early. However, far too many incidents are not caught early enough. More than 4,000 Canadian men will die of the disease this year alone. An additional 24,000 men will be diagnosed in Canada this year, not including cases that go undiagnosed due to men failing to go for annual checkups. Prostate cancer has no symptoms in its earliest, most curable stage, and it is important to note that the incidence of prostate cancer is increasing due to the aging of our population.

Mr. Speaker, it is recommended that men who are 40 years old talk to their doctor about a prostate examination. However, more awareness needs to be raised on just how important it is for men to get checked. Awareness and fundraising efforts are already established in our province. Look no further than our own Minister of Sustainable Resource Development's blue hair campaign for awareness.

Each Father's Day Safeway supports a walk or run for dad, raising more than $1 million last year, and each November the fundraising event Movember challenges men to grow moustaches to raise money. All Alberta MLAs participated on November 1 of this past year by wearing prostate cancer ties and scarves in the Legislature.

I would like to reiterate that while fundraising and awareness efforts are very much appreciated, more can always be done when tackling such a serious issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to give oral notice of a motion for leave to introduce a bill being Bill 20, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 19*Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to request leave to introduce Bill 19, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2011.

Bill 19 contains a number of noncontentious provisions. I'll just briefly list those acts which are affected by this particular bill: the Emergency Management Act, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act, the Business Corporations Act, the Cooperatives Act, the Land Titles Act, and the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Bill 207*Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 207, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act.

Mr. Speaker, this act may allow more seniors to stay in their homes for a longer period of time, remain independent, and help ensure that they age in the right place.

Thank you, sir.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a first time]

3:20      Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to table five copies of the vital statistics annual review 2009. This review is a summary of all vital statistics events during the 2009 calendar year and contains information involving births, stillbirths, marriages, deaths, adoptions, and changes of name that occurred in Alberta. Completion of the review often takes upwards of one year as the information provided by hospitals, municipalities, and other organizations is compiled and verified before the review can be finalized. The review is produced primarily to provide the public and health care related professionals with a resource document of provincial statistical data. Once the review is tabled today, Service Alberta will make copies available to medical examiners, hospitals, research clinics, medical associations, universities, colleges, funeral homes, and libraries.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon on behalf of the Minister of Energy to table five copies of the draft discussion document Enhancing Assurance: Developing an Integrated Energy Resource Regulator. The document has been created to provide insight and greater detail regarding the operation, key regulatory functions, and processes of the proposed single regulator. The document is designed to elicit feedback on the design structure of the empowering legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A number of individuals continue their concerns with regard to clear-cutting in the Castle wilderness. Among those individuals who have raised their concerns are Richard MacInnis, Charmaine Hollings, Wayne Seibel, Christopher Thomas, Rick Oliver, Skylar Kozak, Mackenzie Devereaux, Laurie Cartman, Susan VanMeter, Michael Pound, Georgia Braithwaite, Bruce Cohen, Hal Trufan, Dale Must, Viviane Tits, Nicola Gunter, David Mondoux, and Wendy Ponomar.

Mr. Speaker, it becomes counterproductive to table pounds of tablings, when you're opposing clear-cutting, that would provide the pulp for the tablings, so I am tabling over 500 names of individuals opposed to Bill 29 that were not previously tabled due to the short fall session. And I'm tabling a letter with over 60 signatures from M'n'M Calgary Senior Outdoor Club who are opposed to Bill 29.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I need to retable some documents. It was brought to my attention, rightly so, that I had included a letter, but it was unsigned. It was actually an attachment to an e-mail. I'm resubmitting this tabling of the five copies of both the e-mail and its attachment together. I've received hundreds of e-mails and letters, et cetera, from people against Bill 50 and who will be voting against this government based on that, but this one I'm tabling in particular because I was asked specifically by the individual to table it, who was not a constituent of mine.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, we had a purported point of order.

Point of Order
Factual Accuracy

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I rise on my point of order, please, under Standing Order 23(h), "makes allegations against another Member," and (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." In question period today the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration indicated in an exchange with myself regarding the matter of Mr. Bregg and the WCB – you have to understand, Mr. Speaker, that there's a lot of noise in this Assembly, but I do believe I heard the hon. minister indicate that the Workers' Compensation Board, or the WCB, did not discuss this case publicly, and that is simply not true.

There are various media reports, not only from this week but last week, where this is discussed. I would quote – and I'll table this at the appropriate time if necessary. I'll start with today, Monday, May 9, from the Edmonton Sun. A WCB spokeswoman has told the Sun that Bregg's case is under review. So it has been discussed publicly. Also, last week in the same newspaper, I believe on the 4th of May: "WCB spokeswoman Jennifer Dagsvik said the case is under review, and believes Bregg is being compensated while his file is looked over." The Workers' Compensation Board, it also indicates here, "has declared Bregg fit for work and will likely suspend his benefits after he failed to start a new job Tuesday." This is according to the city of Edmonton.

It's clear that this gentleman, who was working hard, was innocent of any wrongdoing. He was the victim of a violent, vicious attack. The man was doing his job. Now that he's injured, now that he can't earn a living at the moment for himself and he needs further rehabilitation and care – I would certainly urge the hon. minister to withdraw that statement that the Workers' Compensation Board had not discussed this issue publicly.

In conclusion, I would urge the hon. minister to please use his authority, that he certainly has, to get to the bottom of this and ensure that this man is looked after. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration on this point of order.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me start by saying that there is no point of order. One, the citation to which the member refers would allege that I have somehow put words into his mouth or have ascribed some actions or beliefs to him, which obviously is not what he argues, then, in the body of his argument. I have said clearly in question period that the Workers' Compensation Board does not comment on files that they manage, and that is for a very good reason. While the member in question period rose and has expressed a degree of dismay with the fact that, in his opinion, the Workers' Compensation Board discusses the details of this particular file, what he actually has done through his line of questioning in question period and now through his commentary in this particular point of order is discuss the details of that very case, which the Workers' Compensation Board refuses to do and will continue to refuse to do, as will I.

Mr. Speaker, the quotations that the member has just elaborated from the newspaper are clearly cited to the city of Edmonton. The only comments made by the WCB, which are routine comments, are that this file is under review. By no means would the WCB in any respect discuss any particulars relevant to a claimant or an employer in any case that it manages. If that was to be the case, this member knows very well – he's a well-seasoned member of this Chamber – that he should and could and probably would go to the Privacy Commissioner and address that issue through the Privacy Commissioner.

Mr. Speaker, let me say this. What has happened to this particular individual, without knowing the details of the file – all I know is what I read in the media, and what appears does seem despicable, and I hope that the perpetrators are being dealt with properly. Relevant to the WCB file, any worker who is injured in any way on the job is compensated by the WCB. Decisions are made on medical evidence, and in the event that a decision is made that is perceived to be wrong by either party, there is a process of appeal. In some cases, yes, the minister may review a file and ask for additional reconsideration, but at the end of the day those decisions are made based on factual medical information.

If this member is indeed concerned, as he purports to be, I would suggest to him that the proper course would be to pick up a phone and call my office. Perhaps he wants to advise me of details that I may not be aware of. But there is no point of order, Mr. Speaker. All he is doing is soliciting a debate and creating himself another forum for further disclosing private details of a file that should not be discussed in a public forum.

3:30

The Speaker: Well, I've listened very carefully to both members, and I let it go on much farther than I should have. In addition to the point being made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, there was a petition to the minister to do some additional intervention with respect to this. Then I allowed the hon. minister to go on forward basically clarifying what this is all about and providing some guidance or opinion on this. I think it served the purpose of everybody being listened to and everybody paying attention to it and everybody understanding what this is. It strikes me that this is what the minister said. "Workers' Compensation has not been discussing this [matter] in public either," and "I will not discuss this case in public." From the position of the hon.

Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar the mere fact that the minister said that means that the case is under review. Okay. That clarifies a lot.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Special-needs Student Assessments and Supports

Q14. Mr. Hehr:

How many appeals were filed in Alberta concerning the assessments and supports provided to special-needs students in each of the years 2005-2010, and how many of these appeals were successful?

Alberta Creative Hub

Q19. Ms Blakeman:

As of March 11, 2011, what is the current status of the Alberta Creative Hub that the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit announced in June 2010 and which had received $1.4 million from his ministry's budget?

Postsecondary Education Spaces

Q20. Dr. Taft:

How many postsecondary spaces in government of Alberta priority areas were created by funding from the enrolment planning envelope before the funding became a part of the Campus Alberta fresh start grant in budget 2010-11?

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

PDD Support Qualification Rate

Q15. Ms Pastoor asked that the following question be accepted.

As of March 11, 2011, how many people qualify for supports under the persons with developmental disabilities program but are unable to access these supports?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the minister for seniors I would like to propose an amendment to this question. I understand that copies of the amendment have been circulated to all members. For the record the amendment reads that Written Question 15 be amended by striking out "March 11, 2011" and substituting "February 28, 2011." The amended written question will read as follows: "As of February 28, 2011, how many people qualify for supports under the persons with developmental disabilities program but are unable to access these supports?"

Mr. Speaker, the PDD program gathers wait-list information from community boards at month end, not mid-month. For this reason we are unable to respond to the question as originally written because that information is not collected and not reportable in the manner requested. I would ask that all members accept the amendment to this question.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With that amendment coming forward, I am pleased to accept that amendment, and I'm hoping that the information will be coming to me very readily as the date is the end of February.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Written Question 15 as amended carried]

Edmonton Hospital Occupancy Rates

Q16. Mr. Chase asked on behalf of Dr. Swann that the following question be accepted.

In 2010 how many days were the University of Alberta hospital, the Royal Alexandra hospital, the Misericordia community hospital, the Grey Nuns community hospital, and the Stollery children's hospital operating at over 100 per cent occupancy, broken down by hospital?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister of health.

Mr. Zwoddesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I'm pleased to inform this member and all members in the House that we will be accepting this question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I look forward to your response.

[Written Question 16 carried]

Comparative Hip or Knee Procedure Costs

Q17. Mr. Chase asked on behalf of Dr. Swann that the following question be accepted.

What is the average cost per procedure of privately delivered hip or knee procedures and the average cost per procedure of a publicly delivered hip or knee procedure?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister of health.

Mr. Zwoddesky: Thank you very much. Thank you again for the question. I'm pleased to inform this member and all members that we will be accepting that written question as well.

[Written Question 17 carried]

Continuing Care Wait-lists

Q18. Mr. Chase asked on behalf of Dr. Swann that the following question be accepted.

What is the number of people on wait-lists for continuing care in Alberta, broken down by zone, with individual lists of how many are waiting in acute-care beds and how many are waiting in the community?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister of health.

Mr. Zwoddesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with what I've said on 16 and 17, I'm pleased to inform this member and all members that we'll be accepting Written Question 18 as well.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, while I very much appreciate the acceptance, I'm not sure why that information wasn't provided earlier so that we could dispense with this to and fro, so to speak.

[Written Question 18 carried]

Motions for Returns

[The Acting Clerk Assistant read the following motions for returns, which had been accepted]

Proposed Alberta Pension Plan

M13. Mr. MacDonald:

A return showing a copy of all reports, studies, financial forecasts, or materials prepared for Finance and Enterprise regarding the creation of an Alberta pension plan.

Northland School Division Board of Trustees

M14. Mr. Hehr:

A return showing copies of all documents that illustrate the Ministry of Education's attempt to work with the board of trustees of the Northland school division prior to the termination of the board in January 2010.

Child and Family Services Authorities

M16. Mr. Chase:

A return showing copies of any evidence that was used in the decision to transition child and family services authorities to an outcome-based service delivery model.

Infrastructure Hosting Expenses

M12. Mr. Kang moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of all hosting expenses under $600 for the Ministry of Infrastructure, itemized by event and amount, for each of the fiscal years 2004-05, 2005-06, 2006-07, 2007-08, 2008-09, and 2009-10.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This motion for a return asks for an itemized list of Infrastructure's hosting expenses under $600 for the last six fiscal years. It is simply not feasible or reasonable to provide this information through a motion for a return process. First of all, Infrastructure did not exist as a stand-alone ministry between 2004-05 and 2006-07, and for those years that we did exist as a stand-alone ministry, providing that level of detail would take an inordinate amount of staff time, time to retrieve and restore archived information, time to analyze and review that information, time to itemize the detailed records, time far better spent serving Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this is a time- and labour-intensive request, which will take time away from the services Albertans expect from their government. If this information is so important to this member, I would suggest that he make a FOIP request and pay the considerable cost required to gather that information.

Mr. Speaker, I recommend that members reject this motion for a return. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

Mr. Kang: Mr. Speaker, this is all about accountability to the citizens of Alberta, the people who pay our salaries. That's why we ask for this type of information. Light is the best disinfectant, and knowing how much the ministry has spent on hosting – and that is food and drinks – helps to keep politics out of the backroom and works to assure the people that their money isn't being mispent.

You know, that shouldn't be an excuse not to provide this. Other governments across Canada are more proactive about releasing this information, something we hope to see from this government in the future, not only now releasing a summary of the expenses but actual cost breakdowns, including receipts and how many individuals were present, to help better determine whether expenses were reasonable.

That we need to use a motion for a return to bring this information to the daylight is something we want to see fixed, Mr. Speaker. I urge all the members to accept my motion for a return and have the information released. This information should be readily available. You know, with one touch of the button we should be able to get it, Mr. Minister, an efficient minister like you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has closed debate.

[Motion for a Return 12 lost]

Proposed Calgary Maternal/Newborn Centre

M15. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Dr. Swann that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents containing planning information regarding the Calgary maternal/newborn centre, which was part of Health and Wellness's three-year capital plan in Budget 2009.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 15 we will have to reject this particular motion. It's not a rejection of information. It's simply a rejection because we're already doing this project, and I'd just like your permission to proceed to briefly explain why.

The Calgary maternal/newborn centre project did not go forward, actually, because Alberta Health Services in their 2011 to 2014 facility infrastructure capital submission did not identify the need for this project, particularly because Alberta Health Services had already included a high-priority request for the women's health program redevelopment project at the Peter Lougheed Centre, the hospital in east Calgary.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, in December 2010 as part of the 2010 to 2013 health capital plan the Alberta government approved capital funding in the amount of $11.6 million from the capital transition initiative for the women's health program redevelopment project at that particular Peter Lougheed Centre. Therefore, the dollars allocated for the design phase of the Calgary maternal/newborn centre, roughly $196,000 as part of Budget 2009, were never spent by AHS because they did not require those dollars. Why not? Well, the planning phase for that project as worded in the motion did not have to occur; therefore, there is no planning documentation the way that the motion requests.

As a result, I should say that the next opportunity for Alberta Health Services to identify the need for any additional maternal/newborn related capital projects in Calgary will actually come forward as part of their Alberta Health Services 2012 to 2017 facility infrastructure capital submission. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we expect to receive that particular documentation in June or July of this year.

It's important to note that there are projects under way that have already added or will be adding maternal services and capacities in that regard in Calgary. I've already explained the women's health program, a redevelopment project at the Peter Lougheed Centre. I think it's important to note that this redevelopment project is actually proceeding right now, and it's expected to be completed by 2013. It will provide a much-needed increase in clinical capacity. It's also important to note that Alberta Health Services has not yet finitely determined the exact number of new beds for maternal services, but they have confirmed that they are adding five more delivery rooms and one operating room.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the east Calgary health centre and the Cochrane health centre are now open, and both of them have some basic ambulatory, maternal/newborn services available.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Calgary south health campus. This is an extremely important project in southeast Calgary, as we all know. At that location clinical programming has been revised for the south health campus to accommodate maternal/newborn services. In 2008 a service utilization review was completed and recommended the inclusion of maternal health in phase 1 of the south health campus. In fact, the Calgary south health campus will now include 28-bed in-patient units for maternal/newborn services and 16 special-care nursery beds and two labour and delivery operating rooms and one outpatient module specifically for women's health.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, when these services and programs actually come on stream is still a little bit in flux, but we're well along the way with the planning and the design and the construction, all of which is nearing completion over there for an opening sometime next year. It is all net new capacity.

It's for those reasons, hon. member, that we do not need this particular motion accepted. It's important to note that it's already being done elsewhere, elsewhere.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on behalf of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to conclude debate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The reason for this question is that the idea of a maternal/newborn centre was a controversial discussion in the city of Calgary. There were two schools of thought. Possibly having the newborn centre centred at the Children's hospital was one of the considerations, and then the alternate consideration was that this service, as the minister explained, be provided at a variety of centres.

One of the concerns that led to this question was the fact that with the closure of the General hospital and the closure of the Holy Cross, access to these formerly provided services was no longer provided. Likewise, although the Grace hospital didn't provide birthing opportunities, it did provide excellent care for mothers leading up to delivery and care of mothers following the delivery. The concern was: what had the Alberta Health Services finally determined with regard to centralizing the services? From the minister's answer it sounds like the Peter Lougheed will be the primary location for the newborn services but that there will be backups at the south hospital and also potential supports in Cochrane.

I appreciate the minister's clarification. I wanted to provide the background for the question.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 15 lost]

3:50                      Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 204 Justice System Monitoring Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to my private member's Bill 204, the Justice System Monitoring Act. The goal of this bill is simple: track the criminal justice process so we can identify bottlenecks and delays in the justice system. This act was borne from the safe communities task force, that I was honoured to chair. The committee included a judge, a police chief, and those in the rehabilitative field. I travelled the province listening to experts and Albertans so I could give voice to their concerns. They wanted to know why it could take years for a court case to reach a verdict, why accused persons are not showing up for their court dates, and why lawyers are consistently asking for more time. All of these issues lead to one thing: delayed justice.

The Premier accepted our recommendations. I sat in on a press conference as he said that implementing the recommendations was a top priority for his government. It was a priority of this government to streamline the criminal justice process and to track indicators and results of the system. Neither one has been accomplished.

Much like our health care system makes patients wait, our justice system makes victims wait. I believe that justice delayed is justice denied. Victims cannot move on without closure. An emotional toll is taken from victims. The dream of justice often turns into a nightmare as the case slowly works its way through the system. While it is true that criminal laws are made by the government of Canada, it is the provincial government that administers justice. Albertans are concerned that this government is ignoring its duty to administer justice in a timely manner. The Ministry of Justice must do a better job of handling court cases in a reasonable amount of time.

Victims of crime are not the only ones to suffer from chronic delays in our justice system. Our remand centres and courthouses are overflowing. Crown prosecutors and judges are overworked. Quite frankly, we need to take practical and tangible action now.

The first step towards a better system is understanding the challenges we face. We need to measure progress so we know when we started and how far we've come. Bill 204 will mandate that the Ministry of Justice track and present different measures of efficiency for the people of Alberta. The suggested measures are a great start to cover the major aspects of the justice system. Too often performance measures are created by a ministry that sets the bar too low, with standards that are not even relevant. The Justice System Monitoring Act will track the length of time from laying a charge until a concluding verdict, the total time of court hearings in a case, the length of time between reporting an offence and laying a charge, number of delays exceeding three months, number of prosecutors involved on each file, number of adjournments granted, number of trials that begin on their designated date, approximate cost of delays in terms of peace officers and prosecutors as well as witnesses, victims, and jurors.

A problem cannot be understood without the proper information. It is easy to speculate about a solution when the necessary information is unavailable. With the passing of this bill we will have a starting place so that we will know how far we've come or, for that matter, how far we've fallen. The data will fuel a debate in and out of government on how well justice is being respected and delivered in this province.

The workings are simple. The ministry will have six months after the calendar year-end to present a report online providing the statistics outlined in the act. If the House is not sitting, the report must be tabled within 15 days of the next sitting. The tabled report will be referred to the relevant committee. Six months after the committee receives the data, they will report to the House. The minister will have three months after the committee's report to respond. The process is quite simple and quite straightforward.

Much the way Albertans anticipate a report from the Auditor General, they will look forward to the latest data on the justice system. They will finally have a way of gauging how well the courts are operating.

Frankly, the importance of justice has been forgotten. For some, reminding the government of its duty and its obligation implies revenge. Why someone would think this is beyond me. Nothing could be further from the truth. Justice is about fairness, and it's about balance. When your home is broken into or you are threatened at knifepoint, something greater than money or property is at stake. Your sense of safety is shattered.

When someone is victimized, they need to heal. Having their pain dragged through the courts, bogged down with adjournments and delays leaves a victim helpless. Delays break the faith that people have in their government. Not only do we have delays in our justice system; we have delays in the victims of crime fund. Funds are set aside for these victims, who have trouble financially and emotionally recovering from a traumatic experience. Recovery can be a financial hardship. Applicants to the fund are waiting 11 to 12 months for any kind of compensation. Victims of violent crime need the justice system, and it just doesn't seem to be there.

Having been the Solicitor General, I greatly admire the staff that work in our justice system. Crown prosecutors, judges, and other court staff sometimes feel overwhelmed. The government has not made the justice system a priority. New laws have been passed session after session, but the tools and the resources to follow through are not there. No one in the legal system has time to waste. Verdicts should be delivered so that everyone, especially victims, can move on with their lives.

Delayed justice doesn't just hurt victims. Witnesses often take risks by stepping forward to see that criminals are put behind bars. I know many of my constituents who want to do the right thing, and they want to testify. They take time off work at their own expense and go to court, and a lawyer will ask for an adjournment or a delay of some sort, often on a small procedural ground, and it is granted. Now a well-intended citizen has been financially penalized for doing the right thing, ensuring that the justice system can do its job.

Albertans are asking: "Where is the accountability? Where does the buck stop?" Frustrated victims, witnesses, and others see everyone point fingers at someone else. The buck stops with the government. The provincial government's responsibility is the administration of the justice system. They must answer for delays. They must deliver justice. Bill 204 is a necessary first step to making that happen.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise today and join the debate on Bill 204, the Justice System Monitoring Act, which is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. This bill proposes to implement a tracking system for the Justice department that would monitor various measures of efficiency within the criminal justice system.

Some of the proposed data to be measured would include the number of cases where there is a delay of more than three months, the number of prosecutors involved on a file, and the approximate cost of trial delays. An efficient justice system is important to all Albertans and should be a top priority. However, Mr. Speaker, I don't think Bill 204 would provide us with the necessary means to create a more efficient system. This is because it does not provide any relevant information on how excessively monitoring these measures will help meet efficiency goals.

Bill 204 has too many variables that would need to be considered in each of the areas that it proposes to measure for it to be an effective tool for the justice system. The processes that are being proposed in this legislation are also time consuming, and there are already resources in place that are being developed to make the justice system more efficient.

For example, Mr. Speaker, the justice system already has a program in place called the court case management program. The objective of this program is to more effectively manage criminal cases in provincial courts. This program makes it possible for Provincial Court judges and Crown prosecutors to only appear in court for significant or more serious cases while more minor ones can be delegated to paralegals and justices of the peace. As a result, cases are dealt with in a hierarchy that ensures only the means necessary are used when processing them. This secures more resources for the other cases.

As well, the court case management program enacts a process of Crown file ownership. This means that the responsibility for a file is vested in one prosecutor, who is then accountable for its progress from the beginning to the end of the court process. Mr. Speaker, this ensures that time is not being wasted as several people do not have to review and become familiar with the file as it is passed through the criminal justice system.

This program also makes use of specialized courts, which, in turn, allows more time to be allotted to cases that do not fall into these specialized categories. This, in turn, ensures that the judges and prosecutors in these areas are able to gain experience and expertise on the issues, which ensures more consistency in the treatment of cases. Initiatives such as these make our court system more efficient and more fair for all Albertans.

Similarly, another program that is employed by the justice system is the justice innovation and modernization of services initiative. The goal of this initiative is to streamline the system through the use of modern technology. The implementation of a new, modern system will likely improve the effectiveness of the system. Through the use of this program the public has greater access to information. Similarly, this program works with other divisions to develop baseline measures and to identify bottlenecks within the system. Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, the justice innovation and modernization of services initiative already provides solutions to issues that Bill 204 raises.

Bill 204 could also be considered time consuming and extraneous because the Alberta justice system already has a business plan in place that has very similar objectives to this piece of legislation. The business plan makes use of the Ministry of Justice annual report, which tracks several different performance procedures in order to measure the proficiency and efficiency of the justice system. Some of the measures included are the median lapse time from the first to last appearance and the number of days from when a charge is laid to disposition. Also, the department tracks the length of time from the laying of a charge until a final judicial determination is made on the matter. This report is available to the public and provides statistical data which analyzes performance measures of the criminal justice system.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it is important to note that Alberta is doing well compared with other jurisdictions that are measuring similar provisions. This shows that Alberta has a commendable and efficient justice system. It also shows that the provisions that are already in place are working.

Finally, Bill 204 does not take into account the many factors that influence time to trial. Some of these important performance indicators include whether a bail hearing is necessary, if the accused is retaining counsel, Legal Aid Alberta's processing times, and the time that it takes for the defence to review the case. Without looking at these multiple variables, it would be difficult and time consuming to create a tracking system that is both effective and accurate. Ultimately this legislation would require extensive data retrieval, which could be a very costly procedure. There are only so many resources available to collect and track this data, resources that could be more useful if employed elsewhere. Also, Mr. Speaker, as I stated before, this bill does not give a clear understanding of how these specific pieces of data will create a more efficient criminal justice system.

Bill 204 is also redundant because we already have an extensive collection of data at our disposal. We need to work with the mechanisms that are already in place and give them an opportunity to work. We must make sure that we are efficiently using the resources within the department rather than forcing the department to gather statistics.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for introducing this proposed legislation for debate. Although Bill 204 aims to address relevant issues, I think that it has drawbacks, and I don't think it is an efficient use of our resources. I'm in full support of efficiency in our justice system, and that is why we should focus on improving our current system and support the procedures that are already in place.

For these reasons I will not be supporting Bill 204, and I urge all my colleagues to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I want to clarify that I am supportive of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's Bill 204, Justice System Monitoring Act. That does not mean that all members of my caucus are necessarily supportive. We as Liberals take pride in the fact that we're individuals and that we make up our minds individually as opposed to being whipped collectively into a decision.

I support this bill on a number of counts. One, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that I tried to create a degree of efficiency within the children and youth court system when I brought forward Motion 511 calling for a unified family court. That was the common practice in the majority of other Canadian provinces. Now, the Children and Youth Services minister of the time suggested that I needn't worry, that the efficiencies existed, and that the family enhancement act would cover all these circumstances. Despite that and with the support of the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, who amended my motion to say "unified family court process," the concept was unanimously accepted by this House. Unfortunately, here we are in 2011, and the complications within Children and Youth Services and court processes continue.

One of the concerns with regard to justice delayed, justice denied is the number in my particular portfolio of children involved in the court system for a variety of reasons – whether it has to do with delinquency, whether it has to deal with guardianship, custody, the result of divorce, et cetera – who are forced to seek Legal Aid lawyers, who are not specialized in children and youth services. As a result, when the preparation is done and the information is presented, because of the lack of experience that these individuals have, the whole court process is delayed.

Mr. Speaker, I have gone to court a number of times as an observer with regard to cases involving Children and Youth Services where the case could not continue because important documentation evidence was not available, and therefore dates had to be reset. So the time of all the individuals involved – the prosecutor, the judge, the representative of Children and Youth Services, the representative of the various individuals seeking custody, the legal representative appointed for the child – was all wasted because the information hadn't been provided.

A number of times individuals have sought the professionalism required to argue their case, and that individual because of their authority and reputation has so many cases that when they go to try and argue their particular case on a particular day, if they can't present that information before the judge on behalf of their client, then more bookings go. So the lawyers basically scrum and compare notes with the judge and find out what the next available date will be. It could be months down the road. The child could be removed from their family for no reason other than the court having trouble getting various bits and pieces of its act together.

The first step in solving a problem is to define what the problem is, and this is what Bill 204 is indicating, a statistical analysis of the problem. You have to know what your problem is if you're going to attempt to resolve it. The first step in healing, or in this case correcting or beginning to address the problem, is admitting that you have a problem.

Now, the hon. Member for St. Albert, in his opinion, didn't believe there was a problem, and therefore he felt that Bill 204 was the remedy for a nonexistent problem. Well, I would suggest to all members, when they have an opportunity to support a constituent, to go in and witness some of the obstacles to justice that people experience, whether it's witnesses failing to show up, whether it's the accused not being able to get the legal representation needed or trying to represent themselves when they don't have the capability of doing so, not having sufficient legal aid lawyers because the government has cut back on the funding, the ability of the legal aid lawyers to specialize as opposed to having the best of intentions in terms of working for a pittance of what a regular trial lawyer would receive. They have the best of intentions and large hearts, but being unable to provide the specific information delays the process.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want to delay the process, but I want to highlight some of the concerns in Bill 204, the Justice System Monitoring Act, introduced by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who has had years of experience in the ministry and various ministries related to justice. The act would require detailed statistical reporting on a range of matters that affect the time it takes for a criminal matter to proceed through the court system. The minister would be required to table a report for review by a legislative committee. This is all about transparency and accountability. It's about timelines. It's about shining a spotlight on a problem that I and, obviously, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek believe exists in this province.

It's generally agreed that court delays are an important issue. According to the most recent Statistics Canada data, 2006-07, Alberta had the second highest mean elapsed time to complete a case in adult criminal court: 270 days. Quebec was even worse at 294 days. The model for a program to address court delays in Ontario, justice on target, JOT, requires the dedication of resources, but it does not require reporting at the level of detail proposed here. It addressed the problem but doesn't require the reporting of it. Here we're looking for reporting as well as addressing. Alberta Justice has a performance measure on this matter, a measure reported by Statistics Canada. It is the median elapsed time from first to last appearance, that is currently reported.

The importance of timely administration of justice. Delays pose risk for the administration of justice. Delays may result in the loss of evidence or issues about the chain of evidence, as I have previously provided an example of, the disappearance of witnesses, and the unreliability of testimony, especially eyewitness testimony, after long periods. Since the Supreme Court of Canada decision in R. versus Askov unreasonable delay has serious consequences: charges can be stayed, i.e. suspended.

We've also seen the lack of justice being provided for both the person accused and the victim. In the case of the person accused we've seen cases of double and triple bunking in remand centres where the person has been accused but not found guilty and receives no educational counselling and very little psychological support or counselling while they're facing a highly crowded condition regardless of whether they have actually committed the crime. In the case of the victim of the crime, if the person in remand is later found guilty, then it's an additional delay, so justice isn't carried out.

Public safety. Accused persons released on bail may reoffend, an issue in a recent Alberta case of impaired driving, or flee.

The rights of the accused. Accused persons may be held in custody in remand without having been convicted for possibly even longer than the sentence for the offence. Accused persons released on bail may be subject to conditions, limited freedom of movement, be unable to obtain employment, and may have difficulty renting a home while charged with an offence. Persons held in remand are subject to harsher conditions than in correctional institutions: crowding, no access to rehabilitation programs, as I mentioned.

Then, of course, the rights of the victims. Victims can be distressed or intimidated as a result of coming into contact with an accused released on bail. Victims may not be able to get effective access to victim services until there is a conviction, have no possibility of restitution until sentencing, and often cannot move on with their lives until the matter is settled.

Efficiency. Delays can be costly for all participants. [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the second reading debate on Bill 204, the Justice System Monitoring Act, proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. The purpose of Bill 204 is to implement the tracking and presentation of various statistics in relation to the criminal justice system at the end of its calendar year. Specifically, these statistics would be accessible to the public and would include but not be limited to the approximate cost of trial delays, the number of prosecutors involved in a file, and the length of time from the laying of a charge until the final judicial determination of the matter.

Although the intentions of this bill are commendable, I do not support this bill because it is an addition to modernizations that have already been implemented in the criminal justice system. Mr. Speaker, as we know, the provincial government is accountable for the management and administration of Alberta's criminal justice. Therefore, it is in the best interests of the Justice department to streamline its processes in order to efficiently use resources and time. This is what Alberta Justice is already working towards through the justice innovation and modernization of services initiative, or JIMS for short.

I would like to take this opportunity to discuss one of the JIMS initiatives, the court case management program. The aim of the court case management program is to increase public trust in our criminal justice system by more effectively handling criminal cases in Edmonton and Calgary provincial adult courts. The goals of the program and the goals of Bill 204, proposed by the hon.

member, are very much on the same track. Given the similarity between the programs under way and the Justice System Monitoring Act it may not be a responsible decision to implement Bill 204 as it would take time, money, and other valuable resources that could be better allocated.

Mr. Speaker, the court case management system is an effective program already in place in our justice system, which even further diminishes the need for additional spending on publicly available data compilation. The program was brought into place to increase confidence in our justice system as well as to respond to increased pressures and demands on judicial clerks and Provincial Court judges. These are matters that the government is taking very seriously, as evident through the implementation of this program.

In response to these concerns the court case management program encompasses many features to improve our justice system. With regard to the increased demand on judicial members the case management office counter has been put into service. This program appoints administrative court matters to appropriate and qualified professionals, which in turn frees up the Provincial Court judges and Crown prosecutors so they can concentrate on more significant matters. This improved allocation of valuable resources is just one method the court case management system employs to streamline the system.

In addition, the case management office counter deals with adjournments. With many adjournments not occurring in court, tracking the number of adjournments granted to Crowns and defence, like Bill 204 would do, may not be a practical or useful measure of court efficiency. Mr. Speaker, that is why initiatives such as the case management office counter are what the Provincial Court of Alberta in Edmonton and Calgary require to evolve.

I would also like to comment on the advanced system introduced in response to file ownership in the courts. One of the statistics Bill 204 aims to track and publicize is the number of prosecutors involved in a file. The court case management program already addresses this topic with the Crown file ownership system. This system assigns management of a court file from commencement to termination to one Crown prosecutor. This ensures accountability for one prosecutor and decreases the amount of time and energy required to review files that may otherwise be passed through several individuals. However, it is often necessary for more than one prosecutor to be involved in a file due to various factors. That is why tracking the number of prosecutors, which Bill 204 aims to do, is probably not the best measure of efficiency in the courts. Appropriate and well-executed changes to the criminal judicial system such as the Crown file ownership system are what boost confidence in our courts, Mr. Speaker.

I would also like to address some of the technological modernizations brought into play with the court case management program. In accordance with the Crown file ownership system the prosecutor information system manager, or PRISM system, has been introduced to allow access to trial dates, criminal records, and client information. Also, a remote, web-based scheduling system allows for more convenient and efficient court bookings.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the successful advances to the Provincial Court, the court case management program has also introduced a day-of-scheduling approach. This grants a greater number of cases to be processed and a more even distribution of trial work. For example, in Edmonton and Calgary courts unless all witnesses are present and accounted for the trial will not proceed. If the trial is unable to begin due to something like an absent witness, the court case management program's day-of-scheduling method eliminates any wasted court resources by accommodating other cases. So the Minister of Justice is already doing something to increase the number of trials that start on time.

Mr. Speaker, I am obviously in favour of improving our Provincial Court system. Increased efficiency and better use of court resources are an important initiative. This is exactly what is being done through the court case management program. The tracking and publicizing of statistics, some of which are already public through the Ministry of Justice business plan and annual report, on their own are a way to improve our courts. For this reason I will not be supporting Bill 204, and I encourage other members of this House to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and participate and join in on this debate on this private member's bill, the Justice System Monitoring Act. I appreciate the work and the commitment that the member has demonstrated in bringing this bill forward. It, I think, reflects a concern that many of us here in the Legislature hear from our constituents day in and day out in that Albertans want to know that their communities are safe. Albertans want to be safe, and they want to know that if something happens and that breaks down and if, heaven forbid, they or someone they know becomes a victim of crime, the system which we have in place to address that is effective and will address and stop and prevent that crime from occurring again.

We need a system that is responsive to the factors which drive the occurrence of crime in our communities. Certainly, ensuring that the justice system functions more efficiently and effectively is one part of that.

One piece in this bill that I think is helpful for me is that by having these pieces of information publicly available, it ensures a greater level of accountability on the part of the government for failures within the system that would negatively impact the statistics that this particular bill would ensure that we regularly keep and publicize. Because so many people's interactions with the justice system are often driven by much bigger issues, much bigger systemic things that we are not paying adequate attention to, I think anything that we can do to keep accountability in place and to ensure that we can itemize and touch and talk about places where the system is not working as well as it could is a good thing.

Now, if I had my way with this, in the best-case scenario I'd like to potentially see it referred to a committee so we could review the particular statistics that are being asked for in this case and perhaps do some consultation with various people within the community, not only within the current bureaucratic system of providing and managing the court system but also in terms of law enforcement personnel as well as victims' groups as well as legal groups as well as community groups and other stakeholders to ensure that we're getting at all those different measures that matter to Albertans, who are concerned about living in safe communities.

Notwithstanding that, I think the idea, again, is important for the purposes of tracking our law enforcement efforts. But I have to say that, you know, this was one of the recommendations that came out of the 2007 safe communities task force. I will say that there were a lot of things that were in that set of recommendations that, quite frankly, the government has not addressed. What I see this bill doing – it's a way to consistently keep the government accountable for failing to address those components.

So what are some of the big ones? I mean, there are many because, of course, the existence of criminal activity within our communities is – obviously, there's no simple answer. It's a very complex issue.

But there are key things that I know we haven't been able to respond to as much as I think we should. The whole issue around the availability of mental health services in a preventative way. The availability of addictions and treatment services in a preventative and post-incident manner because you can have someone who gets into the justice system for a relatively – I don't want to say minor – less serious offence that's primarily arising as a result of an addictions issue. Then they get suckered into a system which is completely incapable of providing the kinds of addictions support that they need in order to actually rehabilitate and indeed may well enhance the addiction issues while they're in the system. Then we have somebody leaving the system even more inclined to potentially engage in even more serious levels of criminal activity. You can see that the delays in the system are only one small part of this dynamic, yet these kinds of measures would identify that kind of problem.

Another issue which is really important is the whole issue of having representation within the system both from the prosecutorial side as well as from the defence side. I'm aware that, you know, we have at times faced shortages in terms of finding and keeping consistent, experienced prosecutorial staff. We're currently in a situation where Alberta's Crown prosecutors have a differential salary system where people simply by virtue of when they were hired are paid a differential salary, notwithstanding the fact that they will have been called to the bar at the same time and have exactly the same experience, but they're paid differently. Well, these kinds of silly internal problems, of course, are going to result in our having a problem keeping adequate numbers of prosecutorial staff there to ensure that the system works effectively.

On the flip side, on the defence side, well, I've talked before at much length about how our legal aid system is a nonexistent entity at this point. I mean, it is shameful how we manage legal aid in this province. Of course, the piece of information that we all heard about on the weekend about how a pensioner, who earns less than a thousand dollars a month, who's about to have his house stolen from him by someone who was able to apparently go into court and overrule provincial legislation, couldn't get a lawyer through Legal Aid. You think: oh, wow, if you can't get it there, my goodness, when do you get legal aid? I would say that the answer is often: not ever.

Many of the delays that we see in our justice system come, clearly, from our profound inability to deal with our failure to provide access to legal assistance and legal resources. At least what this bill would do is help identify the number of times that we've seen delays occur because justices are trying to manage the unjust situation of having people come before them without proper representation. Often many justices will simply delay the trial or delay the process because they can't tolerate the idea of someone being prosecuted without some type of legal representation.

Those are some of the kinds of things that we need to deal with. The safe communities task force talked about hiring more police officers. Well, we never hired all the police officers that they said we should hire nor did we hire all the police officers that the government promised we would hire. So, again, if there are delays, it's because we don't have enough people able to be where they need to be in the system to make sure that it doesn't go off the rails.

What are some of the other ones that we've talked about? Well, those are some of them, and I don't want to get into too much detail because I want to let people speak. The only thing that I would say, though, about this court management program that I see some of the government members speaking on from their speaking notes – what I would suggest is that if that truly is the answer or the alternative to this piece of legislation, then that thing ought to be tabled on a regular basis and maybe could even be tabled tomorrow in this House so that we could get a sense of what it is that we're looking at, and it could be regularly published. Then perhaps we can have an opportunity to look at its construction in order to determine if there's better information that we could get from that process, and we could refine that. But since it's not something that appears to come before this Legislature very regularly or certainly isn't commonly discussed with the public in terms of those measures, I don't see how it would fulfill the purpose that this particular piece of legislation would otherwise.

At the end of the day I think the issues that we need to address in terms of providing our safe and caring communities are really the bigger ticket items that were originally identified in the safe communities task force, many of which – you know, there were some announcements around them, but if you look sort of globally in terms of the on-the-ground services that we've been able to provide – are still a very small drop in the bucket. We haven't been able to move forward on the kinds of things that we should have if we were really to see measurable reductions in criminal activity in the areas that we targeted. Those are the most important things. I do see the potential for this bill to give members of the public who are concerned about these issues a tool to keep the government accountable.

It's not by any means the panacea, and as I said, I might well myself want to revise the criteria that they were measuring. It's an interesting idea because there is no question that at this point there are a lot of problems in our justice system in terms of how we're able to get cases through it and in terms of the resources that we're able to dedicate to it. We're not seeing the kinds of improvements that we need to, and we are seeing a significant deterioration in terms of the availability of certainly legal aid, that being the most direct area. So this is a good start.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and support Bill 204, the Justice System Monitoring Act, put forward by my esteemed caucus colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. She deserves so many accolades for the work that she's done with regard to the Solicitor General's file both as Solicitor General and while in opposition and for not just the Solicitor General file but the Justice file, particularly as it relates to children, child protection, but also just on issues of criminal justice and transparency in the system and so forth. She's been a wonderful advocate for that, and she's probably done more in that regard for legislation than all the folks in here put together. So I'd like to thank her for bringing this forward.

I'd also like to say that, you know, there's been a lot of talk in the previous speeches by members of the government. They've talked about, you know, that all this reporting is going to cause all kinds of costs and diversion of resources. You know what? Transparency is a great thing. Sunlight and transparency actually is a very small amount of money to put forward. It does cost money to be transparent, but transparency leads to efficiency. When things are being done and there's not light been shone on it, that's when waste and corruption and mismanagement, et cetera, occur.

We see it rampant with this government at this time. They don't like transparency, whether it be in the health care system, whether it be in multiple different files, and because of that, there's massive mismanagement of the system. So investing in transparency and accountability is always worth the money. If you didn't go by that, then what the government might want to do is say: let's just shut down the Auditor General. That costs money to run the Auditor General's office. Well, no. We do that because it's an investment in transparency and accountability that saves money down the road. So, too, with this bill.

The goal of this bill is simple. It's to track the criminal justice process so that we can identify bottlenecks and delays in the justice system and thereby not only make sure that our justice system is strong and beyond any kind of disrepute but that also we do save money in wasted resources by that transparency.

My support for this bill is simple. The justice system must do better for the people of Alberta than it currently does. Justice is an issue close to my heart as I previously served as parliamentary assistant to the Solicitor General, and I know that the police officers and peace officers as well as the Alberta sheriffs do an amazing job serving and protecting the people of Alberta. Sadly, though, the follow-through is absolutely abysmal. It seems like the hard work of our officers goes to waste as justice is off in the distant horizon. Bill 204 will help us pinpoint exactly where this government and where the system is failing Albertans so that we can remedy it.

We do know this much is fact. Alberta has the second-longest court case line in the country at 270 days. Alberta is also first in defendants not showing up for their court date. A third fact is the most damning. Fifty-six per cent of people in custody have not been convicted of a crime. It is astounding that in this day and age most people in prison haven't even faced a judge and jury yet. Obviously, some have to stay in the system while they await trial and so forth, but 56 per cent, over half? Very unreasonable, especially when compared to other jurisdictions. If they are innocent, they need to be released. If they're guilty, get them tried, convicted, and going to prison. Any time in remand is a credit to convicted criminals. This cannot continue going forward.

A quicker justice system is a better justice system. It's a more trustworthy justice system. The memories of all parties involved are still fresh. Evidence is at hand and ready for investigation. Whether you're a victim or a witness, we are all better served by an efficient and time-efficient justice system.

There are many reasons why our system is clogged, but the number one reason is gross mismanagement by this government. Simply put, the government did not keep pace with the growth in this province. Our population and economy has been booming. A growing economy doesn't just attract the best and brightest. It does do that, but it also attracts low-lives that want to make a quick buck and prey on the weak.

A growing criminal population demands more courts, prisons, judges, and Crown prosecutors. The government has fallen behind. It's been years since new judges and prosecutors, promised in the last election, have been hired. This is another reason we have a clogged justice system. Waiting has become the way of life in Alberta. Patients wait for the health care that they need, and victims of crime wait for their day in court. Delayed justice is justice denied. The average case, as I said, takes 270 days to complete, 270 days. If the defendant doesn't show up or the case has an initial delay, the cases take 338 days, almost a year, to complete. This is simply unacceptable.

Alberta doesn't control the Criminal Code. That's created, of course, and passed in Ottawa. Administering justice is, however, the duty of the province. Edmonton is where the buck stops, this capitol building is where the buck stops on the justice file. Albertans are tired of excuses and finger pointing just like in health, just like in the energy sector, et cetera. They just want a competent government to administer a system that works.

Step 1 is more information. You cannot find the cure for something if you don't know what's ailing the system specifically. Otherwise, you're flying blind. Only by consistent measuring of the justice system will we know where we've come from and where we are going. Bill 204 mandates that the Ministry of Justice track and publish measures of efficiency for the people of Alberta. The first measures are a fantastic step to cover the major aspects of the justice system. They won't be cherry-picked so that the bureaucrats can look like they're doing a great job as we've seen over and over in our health care system.

The Justice System Monitoring Act will track the following deliverables: first, the length of time from laying a charge until a concluding verdict – obviously, we want that to be as small as possible – the total time of the court hearing in a case; the length of time between reporting an offence and the laying of a charge; the number of delays exceeding three months; the number of prosecutors involved in each file; the number of adjournments granted; the number of trials that begin on their designated day; and the approximation of costs of delays in terms of peace officers and prosecutors as well as witnesses, victims, and jurors.

The way this bill works is simple. Alberta Justice will have six months after the calendar year-end to present a report online providing the statistics outlined in this act. When the House is not sitting, the report must be tabled within 15 days of the next sitting. The tabled report will be referred to the relevant standing policy committee. Six months after the committee receives the data, they will report to the House. The minister will have three months after the committee's report to respond. Imagine that: actually doing work in our standing policy committee.

Albertans anticipate the biannual reports from the Auditor General, and they will look eagerly to read the latest data on our justice system and discuss ways that we can build a stronger justice system for all Albertans. At last Albertans will have a way of gauging how well their courts are operating.

Tragically the importance of justice has been forgotten. Advocates for justice reform are too often smeared as vigilantes. Nothing could be further from the truth. Frustrated Albertans want their government to work for them. It's perfectly natural to be upset when you took a day off work at your own expense and the hearing or trial was adjourned. Of course you'd be upset if that happened. It happens all the time in our system. A lawyer will ask for an adjournment or a delay of some sort, often on a small procedural ground, and it is granted. Well, now a well-intended citizen has been financially penalized for doing the right thing, ensuring that the justice system can do its job.

Not only is our justice system blocked; so is the victims of crime fund. Badly needed funds are set aside when victims are having trouble recovering physically and emotionally from a brutal crime. Some victims end up permanently disabled. Recovery takes a financial toll. Victims wait 11 to 12 months for compensation. Victims of violent crime need the justice system, and it just doesn't seem to be there.

I look forward to a further discussion on Bill 15, when it is brought forward again today, I assume, by the Solicitor General, to see if some very reasonable requests made by the NDP as well as the Wildrose and Liberals were in fact followed, that victims who were molested as children will not have the 10-year mandatory cut-off that is currently being proposed by the Solicitor General.

I hope this is just the start, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to say a few words today about Bill 204, the Justice System Monitoring Act. First of all, though, I want to acknowledge the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for the work that she did on the safe communities task force. This committee did great work for Alberta. She was the leader of that committee. Their report has really framed a lot of what this government and Alberta Justice have been doing for the last few years. I think the hon. member can be very proud of some of the accomplishments that have been achieved.

I want to say a few words about this legislation. I agree with the intent of it, but I'm going to have to respectfully disagree with the method by which the information is acquired and disseminated. The proposed bill calls for the Ministry of Justice to prepare and present an annual statistical report which would include statistics ranging from the length of time from the laying of a charge until final judicial determination all the way to approximate cost of delays in the commencement of proceedings, delays relating to cost of peace officers, prosecutorial staff, court staff, witnesses, victims, jurors, and so on.

It would be tabled in the House and then sent to a committee for review. The committee would then produce another report within six months of the tabling, and then within three months of that the Minister of Justice would have to file yet another report responding to the response to the original report. So by my account that would be three separate reports within nine months, then just another three months until the process starts again, and on and on.

Again, I appreciate the intent. I do have some concerns about the practicality of enshrining this bureaucratic process in legislation. Some of these measures were in fact brought up in the 2007 Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force. I think there were 31 recommendations, and if my memory serves, 29 of those recommendations were accepted. As I say, a lot of the good things that we've been doing in safe communities is because of those recommendations.

We've been developing a robust internal tracking system. Again, I'm not so sure that we want to see more bureaucracy added to that tracking system. It may be counterproductive. If we're not bound by legislation, we can maybe be more reactive to changing circumstances to gather information that would be more relevant. I notice that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said that she wouldn't mind revising the criteria that are referred to in the proposal. That would be my point, that the criteria may change from time to time, and then we would be having to amend legislation in order to keep the criteria and the statistical information relevant. So flexibility, I think, is important.

I think our time and resources would be better devoted to just going ahead and making the improvements, and I would like to make a point about that, too. I don't think there is much debate about the fact that we do have some court delays that we're not happy with. I don't think there's much debate about the fact that we don't like to see a whole bunch of prosecutors handling one file. There are all kinds of things that are already acknowledged, and we're working on them.

As has already been mentioned in some of the earlier comments by some of the other members, we have, for example, a court case management program, which is making a big difference because new and innovative methods of scheduling are being incorporated, and we're taking some of the pressure off the courts in terms of just spending time on scheduling. Crown prosecutors are becoming much more efficient in terms of file ownership, so a prosecutor is taking a matter through from beginning to end. These types of efficiencies are already being done, they're already being worked on, and I think the proof will be in the pudding. I think we will see an improvement in court waiting times and some of the other frustrations that people have.

I would like to say that we have added more judges. We have added more courtroom staff and prosecutors. In terms of legal aid, some comment has been made regarding legal aid. I again acknowledge the importance of legal aid to our system of justice, but I want to point out that our government has not cut funding to legal aid. As a matter of fact, in the last year we've increased funding to legal aid by about 10 per cent, and since 2006 the funding has increased, I'm told, by some 84 per cent.

That is not to say that there isn't an issue with legal aid funding. I have indicated in this House before that I'm very open to carrying on discussions with the stakeholders – the Alberta Law Society, Legal Aid Alberta, and the federal government – in terms of how we can make our legal aid system more sustainable.

It has already been mentioned, but I'll just reinforce that we do in our business plan make reference to tracking some of these performance measures, and we will continue to do that. We continue to be committed to doing that. There would be no reason why we would not want to make our system of criminal justice more efficient and more responsive. As I mentioned, many of those things are already being done. I just am not convinced that legislating this and creating a heavy bureaucracy or at least a heavy system of multiple reports is necessarily going to get us where we all want to be.

Once again, I would like to acknowledge and thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for raising this issue and bringing this on for debate.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have five minutes? What's the timeline?

The Acting Speaker: Ten.

Mr. Hinman: Ten. Okay. Excellent. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, we've all become a little too familiar with how governments are prone to waste. Usually they waste money, but we're standing here today to support a bill that would help reduce the wasting of time as well as money. Time is valuable to everyone, but we need to be aware of how valuable it is to those who are affected by crime.

The Alberta justice system is fraught with delays. This is true in many jurisdictions, but in recent years Statistics Canada has revealed that bench warrants that are issued here in Alberta are for 27 per cent of all criminal cases. This is by far the highest rate in Canada, and it's just about twice the average. It is a big waste of time, and frankly it's a provincial embarrassment.

The evening news loves to talk about serious crime. They report on the crime, then they report on the investigation, then they report on the arrest, and then they report on the trials. Albertans have understood that there needs to be a well-planned process to do all of this, and it should never be rushed, but, Mr. Speaker, Albertans wonder why they hear about repeated delays and why justice is not being done more swiftly. They also feel sympathy for the victims of crime, who are denied the peace of closure during an ongoing legal process.

Mr. Speaker, many have already said it, and we'll say it again: justice delayed is justice denied. To help make improvements in the administration of justice, we need good statistics on how we are doing. To this end, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has brought forward a private member's bill, Bill 204, the Justice System Monitoring Act, which we very much support.

Bill 204 is a simple, realistic, and efficient method of tracking the criminal justice process and eliminating these delays. When the safe communities task force was chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, they came out with many of these recommendations, and the Premier expressed his support. He said in a press conference that implementing these recommendations was top priority. Unfortunately, to date the government has not implemented a single one of our recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, it is my job as a duly elected representative to ask on behalf of Albertans: why hasn't the government been tracking the system and eliminating the delays? Why are these problems continuing unresolved? On principle why were these recommendations not implemented even after the Premier offered what appeared to be such genuine support for them? Hollow words, just like those that were spoken in Strathmore and Fort McMurray on ensuring that seniors were going to have a facility in their local towns. Why are Alberta's adult criminal cases amongst the longest in the country? Why are these cases taking so long to move through the justice system? These questions can be answered, but we need to implement Bill 204 in order to do this because the government has failed to do it.

The system must be streamlined to bring these criminals to justice faster. These delays cost judges, lawyers, civilian witnesses, police officers, and court staff their valuable time, time which we do not have enough of. Many of these people's jobs are paid by taxpayers, so their time is also our money. Why isn't the government working to speed up this process? Nobody seems to know or understand.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it gets even more embarrassing. A Canadian who is charged with a crime has the right to a bail hearing within 24 hours of their arrest. If there is a delay in the system, the defence lawyer may launch Charter applications to have their client's charges tossed. This is a rare occurrence, but much more common is a defendant avoiding jail time because of a lengthy pretrial custody. It's sad for me to report that currently 56 per cent of all prisoners in Alberta provincial custody have not yet been convicted but are only waiting to go on trial. Until the federal government finally reversed this policy, the sentence of these people was reduced by double or even triple for the time they spent in remand centres. Law-abiding Albertans get pretty upset when they watch those convicted of crimes collecting credits for time they served while they were waiting for the court hearing.

Mr. Speaker, this system is being treated as nothing more than a joke: 50 per cent off for time served. The number of adults behind bars is growing too fast because people are being held in custody while they are waiting to go on trial. Our remand centres have run out of room much faster than our prisons. We are also not keeping up with the number of judges, prosecutors, and courtrooms. Prosecutors in our province are overworked, and this adds to the delay problems.

It cost Albertans $620 million for the new remand centre. Considering that the number of adults waiting to go on trial increased by 55 per cent between 2006 and 2009 and that they'll probably continue to do so, how much will it cost Albertans before the government addresses these inefficiencies?

Bill 204 contains some practical recommendations on what to track within the Alberta justice system. We believe that by tracking several significant variables in the process, obstacles will be identified and removed. The criminal justice process will be streamlined, and other delays will be reduced.

The Justice System Monitoring Act will track the length of time from laying a charge until the concluding verdict, track the total time of court hearings in a case, track the length of time between reporting an offence and the laying of a charge. It will track the number of delays exceeding three months, it will track the number of prosecutors involved in each file, and it will track the number of adjournments granted, a very important number. It will also track the number of trials that begin on their designated date, another important number. It will track approximately the cost of those delays, perhaps the most important in terms of peace officers, prosecutors as well as witnesses, victims, and the jurors.

Mr. Speaker, this bill was created with the experienced insight of the safe communities task force by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. The committee includes a judge, a police chief, and some in the rehabilitation field. The hon. member took the time to travel across the province and to speak to Albertans about this issue to get a good sense of their concerns.

Albertans want the answers to the following questions. Why are the accused getting away with not showing up for court dates? Why are lawyers frequently asking for more time and receiving it? Why does it take so long for a verdict to be reached? And when they ask, "Why so long?" they're referring to trials that are taking years when they should be taking weeks or months. Of course, what about the victims of those, who need the issue dealt with? It's bad enough that innocent people are made victims of criminal acts. I think it's absolutely sickening that a victim, who may be dealing with the psychological trauma of the crime against them, can be victimized again as they wait years for justice to finally be done. These victims often have a dreaded appointment on the witness stand, where they have to relive their trauma, and to have this hanging over their head longer than is needed is absolutely unacceptable.

It's time to put an end to the injustice. It's time to stand up for the victims of crime, who are being made to wait in pain while the justice process is drawn out too long. It's time to put an end to the delays that allow criminals to treat the system as a joke and drain the public purse while they do it. It's time to pass Bill 204 and get back to distributing justice swiftly.

Mr. Speaker, we can do better and we will do better if we pass Bill 204 and implement the tracking and reporting of the number of incidents and the activities occurring in our justice system. It's important that we address these issues. It's always amazing to me how when the government wants to act, it can rush through a bill, like Bill 50, Bill 36, to do with power, to do with land acquisitions, to pass many bills quickly. I've forgotten the name of the task force of the hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Safe communities.

Mr. Hinman: The safe communities task force. That bill, again, was passed years ago, and it hasn't been implemented. These are the types of things that are very frustrating to Albertans.

Do we have a justice system? The number one complaint that I get from Albertans as I go around and meet with them is that they're concerned that we have a legal system that allows loopholes for criminals to continue to play the system and victimize the victim over and over again. Mr. Speaker, we need to address it. Keeping our communities safe: that's what Albertans want. That's what we as government want, so why don't we act and do it?

We have a great opportunity here to pass this bill, and I'd urge the government and the government members to reconsider, and let's move forward. They always say: if you really want to make improvements, you have to start measuring and reporting. That's what this bill is about. We're going to measure, we're going to report, and we're going to do better for the people of Alberta, the taxpayers, but, most importantly, for those victims of crime, who just feel like they're being assaulted time and time again as these cases draw out.

I'd urge all members to really sit back and ask themselves: what is it really going to harm to pass this bill?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, there are 30 seconds left. I can call on another member before we conclude debate on this. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, do you wish to speak?

Mrs. Sarich: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but are you waiting for a response from the Assembly regarding the 30 seconds, or would you like me to continue?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the time has concluded for consideration of this item of business, and we will continue on.

Before I call on the hon. member, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a few moments I will be introducing Motion 505 to encourage visitability in homes, allowing people with limited mobility increased access to private residences.

Today we have guests joining us in the House to listen to the debate, and it's my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature two individuals from the Canadian Paraplegic Association, Brian McPherson and Ross Norton. These individuals are dedicated to expanding opportunities in our communities for persons with disabilities, such as broadening social activities and finding meaningful employment. I'd like to thank them for their hard work and welcome them to the debate in the Assembly this afternoon. They are seated in the public gallery, and at this time I'd ask them to wave and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Single-family Home Accessibility Standards

505. Mr. Dallas moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to utilize incentives to encourage visitability standards in all newly constructed single-family homes, including one zero-step entrance, wider doorways (minimum 32-inch clear door opening), and a main floor half bathroom.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and begin debate on Motion 505. I'm introducing this motion because I believe that it has the potential to help people with decreased and limited mobility interact more fully with their community. In addition, if homes are built with visitability standards, people recovering from injuries or as they are aging can have a continued ability to visit friends in their homes. The wind is at our back today. Albertans from across this great province and, indeed, across Canada have voiced their support for this motion.

Before I begin, I'd like to acknowledge the support of my good friend Marlin Styner for the technical advice, the support, and the encouragement that he has provided in developing this.

Creating incentives to encourage these standards helps build strong communities and enhances the quality of life for Albertans. Visitable is a technical term used to describe a house that is easy to visit for a person in a wheelchair. In order for a house to be visitable, it needs to include three basic design components: one, a zero-step entrance or ramp; two, wider doorways with at least 32 inches of clearance – Mr. Speaker, this means that the space between the door frame is at least 32 inches wide, not that the door itself is 32 inches wide – and, finally, that there is a main floor half bathroom. These are the minimum requirements needed for a person with a wheelchair to visit a house.

I'd like to establish clearly that Motion 505 is not urging any regulation or legislation change. The people of Alberta deserve and appreciate choice in the design of their residence. Any attempt to legislate a standard house design would be very heavy handed, which is not my intention in bringing this motion forward. Rather, I would propose the use of incentives to encourage people to look at the long-term benefits offered by visitable homes. To be clear, I am mindful of the economic climate in both Alberta and abroad, and I'm not proposing incentives with a significant financial impact to the province. Mr. Speaker, there is a history of using incentives to encourage building standards, including recent initiatives designed to promote energy efficiency. I would argue that the long-term benefits of implementing visitable housing warrant promotion of this idea.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to be clear that the intent of this motion is not to target existing homes. That said, we have funding programs to modify homes and provide support. These include the residential access modification program, or RAMP, for wheelchair users to increase accessibility in their homes as well as Alberta aids to daily living, providing financial assistance to Albertans with long-term disabilities or illnesses to buy medical equipment and supplies.

Returning to newly constructed homes, if a home is designed from the onset with visitability in mind, the cost is reasonable. Many of the changes required to meet a visitability standard are both affordable and, really, unnoticeable. Increasing the size of doorways, for example, is a seamless change that most would be hard-pressed to notice. Likewise, many homes already include a half or a full bathroom on the main level. In fact, walking into a visitable home should be no different than walking into any other home. While the appearance may not be any different, the long-term benefits can be quite astounding.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Alberta are aging. The baby boomer generation is nearing retirement, and as they age, their mobility can become limited. The simple reality is that many of the houses we live in today will be inaccessible to us in the future. I would reason that many of us in this House today can recall someone in their lives effectively losing a large section of their home simply because they were unable to access it.

Now, to be clear, visitable housing is not accessible housing. It is not a substitute for homes designed to accommodate everyone. However, visitable housing, by virtue of its three design principles, provides increased opportunities for those with mobility challenges to maintain contact with friends and families in their own homes. Also, during interim recovery periods for Albertans with injuries homes built with visitability standards allow for the increased possibility of recuperating in their home.

Mr. Speaker, the benefits of living in a visitable home are evident, and I believe that many people would choose to reside in this type of accommodation if given the choice. However, as a relatively new concept visitability is largely unknown to both Albertans and the building community. I believe that by introducing incentives as proposed by Motion 505, we can promote this new form of housing design. This may in turn inform Albertans and get them to look for visitable characteristics when moving into or designing a new home. And if the people want something, the building community agrees and adapts. In fact, I believe that over time, once people start to see the benefits of visitable housing, we could eliminate any incentives and let the quality of this concept speak for itself. The key is simply to start the process.

I'd like to stress again that Motion 505 is not about legislative or regulatory change. It's not about telling people what kind of house they should live in or requiring that a home be accessible to all. Rather, Motion 505 is about encouraging a practical concept, a concept that has the potential to greatly assist our population as it ages. With visitability standards in place, not only will people with mobility concerns be able to visit friends and family, but as they age, they will also not lose the use of their home. I believe that Motion 505 is a practical initiative that does not overreach or unduly interfere in Albertans' lives. I also believe that it has the potential to improve our long-term quality of life.

With that, I'll conclude my remarks, and I look forward to hearing the comments of my colleagues on both sides of this House. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise and speak in favour of this motion on visitability brought forward by my hon. colleague from Red Deer-South. This is truly an idea that I am supportive of, that many other people in the disabled community are very supportive of. In fact, many individuals in the seniors' community and other individuals are waking up to the idea that an accessible Alberta, an accessible future may incorporate changes such as we see in this act into everyday living situations here in Alberta.

If you look at the changes that are coming to the playing field here in Alberta, we have an aging population. We have more members who are reaching into their golden years, living longer, people who will be using accessible means of getting around. Whether that is wheelchairs, strollers, walkers, or what have you, these require more easily visitable sites, visitable whether they're a public building or a private residence. There is no difference. If a person with a disability or a senior with an adaptation to get into a home can't get in, that essentially keeps them out of the societal mix, which makes them less healthy, less vibrant. And those are things that government should be concerned about.

In my view, this motion sort of starts the education process as well as the incentive process to get Albertans and Alberta businesses providing this type of option available out there to people who are constructing a home, people who are constructing other developments that go forward. I see this as a beginning point for us here in Alberta to continue to go down.

5:10

Now, as I point to this as being one of the positive aspects coming out in the future, I look around, and this motion does bring up some things we could be doing better, in my view, here in Alberta. For instance, our building codes act is a pretty good act, but it lacks enforcement. You have a lot of things pertaining to disability or even visitability that are so far being unregulated, unchecked, not followed up on. So we have a lot of people who are unable, then, to get into buildings that are currently being constructed, that should be done the correct way. These are concerns that are out there.

By no means is this motion, brought forward by my hon. colleague, a cure to those current things that are not right, not enforced, not holding Alberta out to be on a level playing field for those seeking a truly inclusive society. That said, a motion like this isn't supposed to rectify all of society's problems in one fell swoop, so I appreciate that. I just wanted to get those concerns on the record, that right now in Alberta there are many challenges with disabilities, whether that's aging, whether that's home care, whether that's accessibility to economic opportunities. Those challenges are out there, and they're massive, and at times I don't believe that the government takes them seriously.

That said, when I look at this motion in its totality and it being a private member's motion, it provides some of that rugged incrementalism you like to see out of our Legislatures. We're continuing to push the ball forward, continuing to open up our eyes to how a really inclusive community works. It doesn't work simply by having one house accessible. It works by having an entire community accessible, an entire city accessible, an entire province accessible. That's what the concept of visitability is working towards, a sort of entire society with inclusivity being the model, the goal, the norm, that people can live in a beautiful home that just simply allows for a difference of people to come through the front door.

I applaud the Member for Red Deer-South for it, and I would ask all members of this House to pass this motion. I think it's a good, forward piece of legislation, and I think that with the passing of this, we could see it incorporated into future acts and into future building codes and the like. But the work starts today. So if we keep remembering this stuff when we redo those things – "hey, didn't we pass something on this?" – then we can incorporate that into our future legislation.

I thank you for the opportunity to speak on this motion. Again, I'd urge all colleagues in this honourable House to speak in favour of it and, hopefully, to vote in favour of it.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and join discussion on Motion 505, which is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. The objective of Motion 505 is to increase visitability and accessibility within Alberta's homes. Visitability is a key indicator when determining how easy it is for a person with confined or restricted mobility to visit or access a home. Visitability and universal access are two priority concerns for the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. The members of the Premier's council, including the chairman of the council, Marlin Styner, are pleased that the MLA for Red Deer-South has sponsored this motion and look forward to the results.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder how many of us here in the Legislature would be able to welcome their friends and family members with restricted or limited mobility into their homes. Motion 505 proposes to increase visitability standards in Alberta's homes by introducing incentives that could encourage people to implement these standards when constructing new homes. Specifically, Motion 505 would increase visitability by encouraging three specific designs that include one zero-step entrance, wider doorways, meaning a minimum of 32-inch-clear door openings, and a main floor bathroom. These three factors are widely regarded as the minimum standards for creating a visitable home. These three guidelines will ensure that everyone, regardless of mobility, will be able to at least visit a friend's home, use the washroom, and exit the home.

Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports I can tell you that Motion 505 could go a long way to making life easier for those with limited mobility. This can be especially relevant when looking at our province's aging population as has been mentioned by both previous speakers. Having newly constructed visitable homes fits in well with our department's directive.

In fact, our government already has the residential access modification program, known as RAMP. This truly is a very good program that helps promote greater accessibility. RAMP is a program available to eligible wheelchair users to modify their homes to be more wheelchair accessible. All wheelchair users within the program guidelines can apply for a RAMP grant of up to $5,000. While I feel that the RAMP program is a great government initiative, I still think that more can be done to make our homes more visitable.

Looking at statistics, numbers show that visitable housing is needed now. We know that by 2030 the number of seniors in Canada over age 75 will grow by 277 per cent. That would bring the number of Canadians over age 75 up to 4 million from just 1.5 million in 1995. Mr. Speaker, it's safe to assume that many in this growing seniors' population will have mobility limitations.

While increasing visitable homes is sure to benefit a large segment of the senior population, it's important to look at how this motion could positively affect those with disabilities as well and, really, all members of our society, like mums with strollers, for example.

Our department's continuing care system also provides Albertans with the health, personal care, and accommodation services they need to support their independence and quality of life. Motion 505 will certainly help in this regard. The Alberta continuing care system provides both home living and supportive living facilities. Home living is for people who live in their own home, and supportive living combines accommodation services with other supports and care. In both cases it's easy to see how beneficial visitability standards would be.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to highly commend the hon. Member for Red Deer-South for bringing this motion forward. Motion 505 proposes to increase visitability standards in Alberta's homes, and this is a key issue faced by many seniors and those with disabilities, which make up a large portion of my ministry's mandate.

I'm pleased to speak in support of Motion 505, and I urge all my hon. colleagues to do the same. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up in support of Motion 505, "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to utilize incentives to encourage," and it goes on. What I find very interesting in this particular motion is that it's urging the government to encourage the standards in all newly constructed single-family homes, as the member said, including one zero-step entrance, wider doorways, which is a 32-inch-clear door opening, and a main floor half bathroom.

What is interesting to me in this particular motion is that the government has the ability right now, without even listening to this particular motion, to make those standards available immediately. I mean, after all, they are the government. The seniors minister talked about the Premier's council, and she eloquently spoke about this as something that they've been after. I think that if the government sees this as important as it is – I mean, they're the government. They can bring forward legislation. They can bring forward regulations. They can even bring forward a bill to make these changes immediately instead of going through this process of a motion. I'm struggling with that, Mr. Speaker.

What I am not struggling with is how quickly things have changed. Personally, I'm in the process of looking for new office space, and if you're going into new office space, there are regulations that have to be adhered to to deal with people with disabilities. That's wheelchair access, a wheelchair-accessible bathroom. If you are looking at an older space – and we're just starting to try and figure out what the rules are and what the regulations are because we weren't expecting to have to be moving out of my constituency office, but it's being gutted, and the whole mall is being renovated. What we're finding is that if we continue to stay in the mall we're in at this particular time, we have to have wheelchair accessibility. We have to have a wheelchair washroom, and it talks about wheelchair accessibility for getting into the building.

You move further into some of our older areas, and you don't need any of that. So you struggle with that fact if you're in a new building. It doesn't preclude the fact that I have constituents that come and see me that have disabilities. I'm thinking all of a sudden: how the heck do I have a constituent into one of the older buildings that I am in that can't even get into the office doors? It's a struggle.

The minister also talked about the aging population, and there's no question that we have to think ahead about some of the homes to deal with some of our aging population. I've spoken in this Assembly before about my mom currently being in an assisted living facility. You see at times where you've got a senior that's walking down the hall, and then, you know, several months later they're into a walker, and from there they go into a wheelchair. I know for a fact that if my – I'm blessed. My mom is still walking without a walker or even in a wheelchair at this point in time. If we went to where she had to go into a wheelchair, I'd be struggling in my own home as we were after she broke her hip in just dealing with her in her walker and getting up those stairs in the one-step level.

I guess it's like the Member for Calgary-Buffalo said: you really need to start working on this inclusiveness. You have to start looking ahead. I think what we have to do is start looking at the disabilities that are out there, how you accommodate. I think it's important.

I was somewhat taken aback, actually, listening to some of the conversation, that the builders now don't even have to adhere to, from what I understand, minimum standards when they're building a home. You can't particularly fault the builders, I don't think, at this particular time because they go by what the government tells them under the building code. What I think strikes me more than anything is the fact – and I stand to be corrected by any one of the government members – that if there is a building code, the government is responsible for that building code. I'm sure that they should be talking to the builders at this particular time, asking them to change the building code. It sometimes makes me wonder why we bring motions into the House when the government has the ability to be able to make these changes instantaneously, as far as I'm concerned, in regard to the changes that need to be done.

You know, we heard from the minister of seniors about the Premier's council, and I have a great deal of respect for the work that the Premier's council does. I think it was the former Minister of Justice that used to be the chair of the Premier's council, if I may stand corrected, so it isn't something new to either the Minister of Justice or the minister of seniors. I would expect that if we started going through some of the council's former recommendations, that they have presented before the government, working with people with disabilities is something I know they've been advocating for many years.

I myself personally have learned so much by just watching the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. It amazes me what he has done in this Legislature and how he gets around. You know, he's in the Annex with us, and he goes like a bat out of hell from the Annex over to the Leg. I've kind of asked him if I could catch a ride with him sometimes. I think he has brought something to this Assembly in regard to what people with disabilities can do, and it's amazing how he just gets through here and by some sort of squeeze manages to get out of here. Huge admiration for what he does.

So we will support this motion. I think it's important. Again, I want to repeat that the government is the government. They have the ability to be able to make these changes very easily by bringing forward a change in the regulations or a change in the building code, for that matter. It's unfortunate that we have to have the Member for Red Deer-South bring it as a motion when he's in the government and could just go to the government and suggest that they make some changes with the code. I don't know if maybe there's some hesitation in regard to some conversations that have to go on with builders. I know he talks about an incentive, if I remember right. Yes. He does say: the government to utilize incentives to encourage standards within the builders. I think that's a great idea because I think most of the builders in this province – and I know several of them – I'm sure would be willing to do all of the things that are mentioned in this particular motion.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that it's a good motion. It's unfortunate that, you know, it hasn't been done through a government bill or regulations or through the building code. I have a great deal of respect for what he's trying to accomplish here, and I hope for that member that the motion passes.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to rise today to say a few words and address Motion 505. This motion asks government to provide incentives to encourage visitability standards in the design of newly constructed single-family homes. While these are not the same standards under the Alberta building code, which are mandatory construction requirements, the spirit of this motion is admirable. Homes built with visitability features allow persons with disabilities to live in and visit these properties with greater ease and safety. As was indicated, these features include improvements such as wider doorways, entrances without steps, and accessible bathrooms.

Visitability standards in this motion speak to the broader principles of universal design, Mr. Speaker, designing products and environments that are usable by all people, including persons with disabilities. There's no doubt that as the population ages, barrier-free accessibility and universal design will become increasingly important. That's why Municipal Affairs is actively involved with the Premier's council for persons with disabilities. The department sits in a working group to promote universal design. In partnerships with key stakeholders the working group researches opportunities to promote universal design, whether by educational, financial, or other means. Through this work Alberta will become a model for best practices in universal design.

I need to emphasize that while a homeowner presently has a choice to use visitability designs, the Alberta building code requires accessibility in buildings especially used by the public.

These building code standards allow persons with disabilities to have safe access to public buildings, and over time, Mr. Speaker, we would hope that we would slowly move into residential homes.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I am speaking in favour of Motion 505 and thanking the Member for Red Deer-South for bringing forward this very forward-thinking idea. It's being framed as a motion, and I understand the reservations expressed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek in her preference for a bill as opposed to a motion because a bill would have greater weight, and the government has that opportunity through legislation to instead of talk about it actually begin to make things happen.

5:30

I want to talk about the circumstance of visitability from a very personal standpoint. Members of this House have frequently heard me brag about my father, Bryce Chase, whether it be his hunting prowess, whether it be his golfing capabilities. My father has been recognized, as I say, by a number of individuals. He'll be turning 88 on June 6. For example, the Member for Edmonton-Calder, who sat beside him at Alberta Fish and Game, commented on my father's vitality. I was very pleased when the Member for Red Deer-North, after I was talking about his Dieppe national golf winning experience when he was 85, sent me a note, and I passed those notes on to my father.

While I've spent a lot of time bragging about my father, I want to talk a little bit about my mother because it relates directly to visitability. Up until basically just about the mid-80s my mother and father would camp out at Little Elbow. They had a 10-mile circuit, and my mother would faithfully chug along at a pretty good rate with my father, and they would enjoy that circumstance. About five years ago my mother and father came out to Cataract Creek, where my wife and I were running the campground. Because my mother had been such a fit individual, I didn't stop to think about the effects of a fairly significant eight-kilometre roundabout hike in some fairly challenging terrain.

My father took the lead, and I was in the backup position for my mother, and together we managed to get her through a series of roots and rocks and obstacles. As we were coming back, I thought, "My God, I may have killed my mother" in terms of thinking that she could take on this kind of situation. At one point, when she was trudging up a fairly steep incline, I didn't have quite the support I should have had, and I called out to my father: here comes mother. Fortunately, he was ready and was able to catch her and support her.

As my mother's muscles started to atrophy, her home was no longer visitable. Her home no longer was accessible. My father tried a variety of circumstances to make it more visitable and accessible in terms of the standard procedures of the walker, but my mother, as well as her muscles atrophying, also was losing her balance ability. My father, to his credit, tried to overcome that by doing what I'd call the seniors' shuffle. There are many seniors who understand that shuffle. The more able senior reaches behind, puts their arms around his or her mate's waist, and basically sort of shuffles along behind, trying to keep them supported.

That allowed my mother probably an extra eight months in her house, but it got to the point that even with chairs that pushed her up and out and assisted her and my father, neither my father nor myself was able to negotiate either the two stairs at the back or the walkway up the front. So the idea of visitable housing is to me a very progressive consideration.

Now, the hon. Member for Red Deer-South in putting forward this motion made it clear that he's not talking about legislated, regulated retrofits. He's not suggesting that people spend thousands of dollars to redo their house. What he is suggesting, although not necessarily directly, is the idea that when we purchase a house, we need to be thinking about how that house is going to suit our needs not only now but into the future. For example, the house my parents lived in was a bungalow, but even though it was a bungalow, there was still stairs access. In the case of the house that my wife and I live in in Calgary, it's a split level, so it wouldn't accommodate the requirements. There would be no first-floor bathroom, so visits from various friends are eliminated.

In the case of my mother, because of the accessibility, the visitability, she ended up in Cedars Villa, and all the family activities were then focused in one of the rooms in Cedars Villa, where we tried to accommodate. We brought in the food, we tried to make the circumstance as homey as possible, but the reality is that in an institution, no matter how friendly it is, you can't accommodate or parallel what you can in the comfort of your own home.

Mr. Speaker, I think the idea of suggesting that builders build homes with doors that are sufficiently wide to allow wheelchair access is extremely important. Obviously, people have the choice of what type of home they live in. If it's a two-storey home, that presents problems, but if there's a lower bathroom, so be it. People choose whether they live on hillsides, they choose whether they live in walkups, and we can't change that, but what we can do is suggest to builders that they take into account the needs of inclusivity to the greatest extent possible.

I commend the hon. Member for Red Deer-South for bringing forward Motion 505. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo suggested, for a society to be inclusive, we also have to be proactive.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise and join with my colleagues in the debate on Motion 505. I first want to congratulate the hon. Member for Red Deer-South for bringing this issue to the House and into the public ring. I am hopeful that our debate today will help to bring more public awareness to the issue of visitability standards, which is an issue that will affect more and more Albertans in the future.

As co-chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities I am indeed very pleased that this motion will bring to the fore some very real and distinct challenges faced by many people across this province. It is extremely important that we look to the future in an effort to identify, examine, and rectify issues that are faced not just today but tomorrow as well. I want to discuss today what exactly the main components of visitability are, what makes them distinct, and why they are very important.

The concept of visitability is to make sure that single-family homes have minimal levels of accessibility so that wheelchair users and others who have mobility issues can visit those homes. There are three key design elements that make up the concept. They are, one, at least one zero-step entrance or ramp; two, wider interior doorways and minimum 32-inch clear door openings; and at least one bathroom on the main floor of the home.

Mr. Speaker, I want to share some of the things that I've learned about these three standards and how they are essential. Since I started looking into the concept of visitability, I've tried to take note of some of these design elements when I'm out in my constituency. The first thing that I look at is whether a home has a zero-step entrance or a ramp. A zero-step entrance is a door that is at ground level and does not have any steps leading up to it. If a zero-step entrance is not possible, then a ramp could be added to allow an option for those that are not able to climb those stairs.

Now, I have noticed that many homes do not have zero-step entrances or a ramp. The lack of these features in some homes prevents people in wheelchairs or others who have restricted mobility from being able to visit these homes. These steps, which many of us barely notice, literally act as a barrier to many of our fellow Albertans. Putting a zero-step entrance or a ramp into a new home is not a large burden, Mr. Speaker. Homeowners would be able to incorporate these features into any entrance to their home, and these components are not very expensive. Also, by offering tax incentives, homeowners could recoup the costs.

Now, once you have someone that is in a wheelchair in your home through a zero-step entrance or ramp, they need to be able to manoeuvre through the home freely. There are many different types of wheelchairs and power scooters that aid people with their mobility. Ensuring that they can move through the door is critical so that they are not restricted to one room.

This is where the second concept comes into play, which is ensuring a wider interior doorway with a minimum 32-inch opening. These wider door openings allow wheelchair users to move freely, which not only is more convenient but also safer. Making sure that the door's width could accommodate a wheelchair allows those people to be able to evacuate a home using the quickest and safest route.

As I was reading about this, I found out that a 32-inch door opening is not much wider than most standard doors found in homes today. The standards would make sure that the designs of new homes would not have to be drastically altered to allow the extra-wide door. It seems to me that this would be a subtle change, but the effect would be very positive.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the third component of visitability is to have at least one bathroom on the main floor of the house. Wheelchairs, obviously, can't climb stairs, so ensuring that those who use them can use the washroom is not only practical but essential.

Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to the hon. Member for Red Deer-South for bringing this motion here today. One purpose of having these debates is so that we can educate each other and Albertans about this issue in this province. I do not think that this subject is widely discussed in the public, and I'm happy that we can hopefully bring it to the attention of more Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise this evening and to speak to Motion 505.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to utilize incentives to encourage visitability standards in all newly constructed single-family homes, including one zero-step entrance, wider doorways (minimum 32-inch clear door opening), and a main floor half bathroom.

There are more and more individuals in our society that are wheelchair bound. I had the opportunity last Friday to actually go over to the Canadian Paraplegic Association, and I signed up to be in a wheelchair for a day. I think perhaps one of the most important things for a society is to be aware of others and to understand the challenges that others have. Again, when I was over at the Canadian Paraplegic Association, we talked about, you know, those barriers and the challenges and how to get around and all those things, and I think we've come a long way in our society about how we're addressing accessibility for those people that are in a wheelchair.

When I was in that wheelchair, one of the first things I said when we were having our early morning session to discuss a little bit about what we were doing and why we were there was for us to be grateful that we have the mobility of our legs versus those people that don't.

Mr. Speaker, I too, like the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, want to become a little bit personal at this time. My mother is in a wheelchair, and she struggles in that wheelchair. When I built my home, I wanted it wheelchair accessible. I built wider hallways. I built wider doors. I actually put in 36-inch doors. Thirty-two is accessible, but it's kind of nice to have a little bit of extra room. Yes, it did cost a few extra dollars, but to this day I do not regret it.

So often when we want to pass legislation or do things, we don't always understand: what's the domino effect? One of the things that really frustrated me is that I wanted my zero threshold to come from my garage into my house because my mother has a van. She can drive in. She can get out the ramp in her van, much like the ramp that the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has, and then drive right into my home. But the regulations were such that because of carbon monoxide they want the garage lower than the door going into a house so that if there is a vehicle running or whatever, it drifts lower and doesn't drift into the house. It's always amazing how even when we want to do something, when we're made aware, often we're told that we can't do it.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity also talked about split-level homes. There are just many areas that when we don't really think about it, we don't realize the implications when we pass such standards. As much as I want the visitability – I support this in the fact that we're just urging – I don't think we should just be urging government. We should be urging, you know, builders. We should be urging citizens to become more aware, just as we have on many other subjects in the past. It's about education. It's about that awareness and what we're doing with it.

Another area that frustrated me. My grandmother passed away at the age of 93. She had moved into a seniors facility for the last two years, and I was astounded when I'd go and visit her there at the number of times that the one elevator they had in that facility was broken. This was a new facility down in southern Alberta, but the struggle that they had and my fear for her having to go down the stairs to go to eat because of how many times the elevator was out of order.

I know that we passed legislation for seniors facilities and also for those public facilities, and we continue to work on it. But the real struggle that we have is that we're not aware yet, whether it's engineers, designers, all those other ones, and don't realize how easily we can adopt these things when we're doing the building of a new facility, a new place.

I also remember, Mr. Speaker, going to one of the early debates for the mayors of Calgary, and my hon. colleague from Calgary-Buffalo wasn't able to participate in that because it was in a public facility that was not accessible for him. There's no question that we definitely struggle and have problems with accessibility for those people in a wheelchair. It is discouraging when you have a loved one in a wheelchair who cannot participate or go to a function because when you check, you find out that it's not wheelchair accessible. All of a sudden: oh, why did we fail to check that before we booked this place for a family or for a public forum that we find isn't accessible for those people in wheelchairs?

It is interesting that they've got just three points in here. We want the wide door. Like I say, I've struggled over the years to get my mother into various friends' homes with narrow 28-inch doors. You clip your fingers when you're trying to push them through, and you do damage on them. The zero threshold is probably the biggest barrier that you run into most frequently, this area where you just can't get over and the struggle and the danger when you try to push these individuals through and hit the bumps and try to lift and the door is narrow.

The intent of this motion is a great one. It's something that I think all of us as Members of the Legislative Assembly should be more aware of. I would urge all members that if they have not participated in a wheelchair-for-a-day event, they should seriously look at that for next year, go to the local Canadian Paraplegic Association and say: what can I do so that I'm more aware and understand the challenges of people in a wheelchair? We need to be more considerate. We need to be more mindful, and that usually happens when we're more aware of those individuals. I think that as elected members of this House we are pretty aware. I especially remember the hon. member Weslyn Mather, who was another wonderful example of someone who just made a great effort and did not let the wheelchair inhibit her ability to work for her constituents and to be a wonderful advocate of those people in that same situation.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that we're more aware of those people that have physical disabilities and are stuck in a chair. We need to be more aware of it. I think that it's by talking, by having these debates that we can and will become more aware. You know, when we lay concrete in these new communities, that we have curb cuts. I remember going back 20, 30 years, it was a rare occasion. Even though they might have had a wheelchair facility inside a building, you'd park the vehicle and there was no curb cut simply to get into the parking lot. Now we're aware of those things. We have the legislation. So awareness and education really is what it's all about.

Like I say, I'd really continue to urge all members to take up the challenge of the Canadian Paraplegic Association and try a wheelchair for a day. You'll be amazed. Even such simple things as going up to a door and realizing the challenge of opening a door, that it exists. Then if you have that little threshold in there, it can really be a challenge if that door swings shut on you. Such things as even getting into the elevator: is it large enough that you can back in? Can you turn around? There are just so many areas that, if we're thinking about them, if we're aware of them, are easy to overcome. But if we're not aware of it, all of a sudden we've created a barrier for those people who can't participate, though they might dearly want to.

I applaud the Member for Red Deer-South and his motion. Like I say, it's always good to bring these motions to the floor so that we can debate, become more aware. It'll be interesting to see if the government actually grabs hold of this and moves forward or not. The government is in a situation that caucus could easily make this a bill. This could have been bill 21 if that's what the government wanted to do, yet it hasn't been brought forward.

I've never been in the government, so I don't understand your priorities or why some bills go forward and other ones don't. This one, like I say, has a lot more to offer many Albertans than such bills as Bill 50. In saying that, "Well, we don't know if you have to have a zero threshold for a door, but you do have to have $16 billion in power lines because we know better," it seems like sometimes we get our priorities mixed up in here and want to spend a lot of taxpayers' money for the benefit of everyone but the taxpayers.

This one, I think, the intent is good. The motion is good. I understand it. Like I say, we do want that freedom for people to realize that when they're building a home, they can make that conscious decision and be made aware, and we'll go from there.

I thank you very much for the time and look forward to any other points that are brought up on this motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I realize that time is late getting to the voting. I did want to offer just a couple of comments here as well. I think this motion is a good idea, and I think that it's good that we have this type of conversation. I want to thank the sponsor of this motion.

Just before I get into a couple of comments, I don't think anybody here really fully understands what it's like in a wheelchair. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore mentioned about being in a wheelchair for a day. Well, maybe a lot of us, including myself, should consider that next year. At the same time the Member for Calgary-Bufferford understands because he lives that every day. I also look to people in my own family who do understand, like my aging grandfather as well as my aunt who passed away last year who had her mobility issues.

We want to imagine how difficult it must be for people who have limited mobility to get around on a daily basis. I'm not just talking about moving from point A to point B; I'm referring also to in their own private homes. There can be a particular issue in a lot of housing codes. As I've travelled this province, I've actually seen over and over how expensive it can be to retrofit some of these homes. In fact, it doesn't actually cost a significant amount of money to look at widening doors in some of our places, as simple as that, or having a more barrier-free design in some of our new homes. I've been to some places we have with our affordable housing programs, Mr. Speaker, where we have actually been able to change lives very positively for individuals who may suffer from disabilities. Again, it doesn't cost a lot when you actually go and plan it, but when you go and retrofit it, it can cost a significant amount of money.

With accessible housing people can access most of the necessities within a home, including a kitchen, bathroom, and bedroom. While we're quite familiar with the term "accessibility," that's not necessarily the case when you have the term "visitability." I'll just touch on that briefly. Visitability is an indication of how easy it is for a person with confined or restricted mobility to visit a home that is in fact not their residence. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that sometimes we take this for granted every day. It's a concept which seeks to provide single-family homes with a bare minimum level of accessibility so that a wheelchair user can feel comfortable within a home.

I do think that this is something that we need to discuss. This is a motion that I will be supporting. If we look at a bill, though, we also have to look at the cost and balance the cost to the benefit because at the end of the day it all is passed on to the consumer. We also want to look at not inordinately affecting consumers when it comes to a bill like this. It does warrant some further discussion, and I'm hoping in the future that we can see some more specifics in a bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, but Standing Order 8(3) provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate.

I'd invite the hon. Member for Red Deer-South to close debate on Motion 505.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and offer a couple of closing comments on Motion 505. I thank all of the members for their contribution to the debate this afternoon.

I introduced this motion because I believe that it has the potential to help people with decreased or limited mobility interact more fully with their community. Obviously, the discussion here today and the discussion that I hope ensues, creating awareness for all Albertans about the value to our families, to our friends, to our neighbours in terms of the prospect of making our homes more visitable, I think has some great upside. I also think that while there's been some comments about the cost of this and whether we should regulate it or legislate it, we need to think in terms of the context of if we can get Albertans talking about and seeing the value of making these homes more accessible, there's actually a resale value or a return on investment that potentially Albertans can receive for making these investments. If you look at our aging population and the demand for what these homes can offer, there's a great deal of upside there as well, Mr. Speaker.

It may not be a well-known concept in our province or, in fact, in our country, but I think it's a trend that is on the move and a trend that we'll want to be discussing with all of our colleagues going forward, how we can help support this concept moving forward.

I appreciate all of the comments and the debate today, and I ask that all members provide their support to this motion. Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 505 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, May 9, 2011

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 16

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

[Debate adjourned April 28: Ms Blakeman speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I know my colleague for Calgary-Buffalo is very eager to speak on this bill because he is our Official Opposition critic, but I did raise a number of issues and put them on the record the last time I spoke, with the request that the sponsoring member provide me with answers, preferably in writing, before we came back. True to her word or to her acknowledgement in the House, because she didn't actually say anything, she did provide me with a number of statements in regard to her position in an attempt to address some of the issues that I'd raised. I can't always say that these are answers to the questions, but they're certainly statements around the government's position.

Our concern about this bill is that it's 35 pages long. Next to the education bill this is the heaviest bill, weight per page, that we've seen in the Assembly. It is an omnibus bill. It does address a number of different acts, and although there is assurance from the sponsoring member that there are no consequences, there are no nefarious dealings involved in this, we're still having a hard time believing this. After much to-ing and fro-ing we did get a briefing, which was literally 35 words long, in which they said that there is nothing in here that would affect the tax consequences or something to that effect, and that was the end of it. I do know that my caucus members, as we discussed it in caucus this morning, continue to have some suspicions about the longer term consequences of this act.

To be honest with you, I haven't had time to digest the notes that were sent to me by the sponsoring member. I got them printed off my computer this afternoon and haven't had time to chew on them appropriately, masticate appropriately. I don't really want to spend much more time just flah, flah, flah-ing up here. I'll give over some time to the government members to respond to this bill, and I will chew on the responses a bit. As I said, I know my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo had wanted to address this in second reading.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on Bill 16.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and address Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011. This bill will amend seven different acts, and the majority of the changes are in order to facilitate coal gasification development by updating existing legislation to authorize the regulation of extraction of coal through in situ gasification or liquefaction. It would remove the existing permit system under the ERCB and the Oil and Gas Conservation Act and repeal existing permits for the use of large amounts of energy for industrial and manufacturing operations. It will enable the ERCB to make regulations directly rather than going through the Lieutenant Governor in Council and will also allow the Market Surveillance Administrator to raise complaints about the ISO.

I think that there have been a number of task forces that have made these recommendations. In December 2010 the Task Force on Regulatory Enhancement published a report aimed at improving the system's efficiency and effectiveness.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate some concerns, I think, with respect to some of these developments. I noted the other day that the Premier's task force on competitiveness outlined a strategy for the province's future that was very much based on high-carbon energy sources. I had to say that I was disappointed with that direction because it's the opposite direction to which the rest of the world is headed. Now, to be clear, we certainly recognize that in the medium term there is going to be a tremendous demand for hydrocarbon fuels in particular, but to base a whole new industry, a whole new industrial strategy for the future of this province on increased use of coal and coal products I think is not the direction that we should be taking the province. We should be doing research and development and, indeed, commercialization of research into renewable energies because that in the long run will provide sustainable prosperity for future generations of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the Pembina Institute released a report on the potential benefits and risks associated with in situ coal gasification, or ISCG. It found that ISCG has the potential to access significant reserves, is approaching commercialization, and can produce electricity with less impact than coal generation. There are risks that must be addressed: groundwater contamination, CO<sub>2</sub> emissions, and carbon capture and storage. Emissions associated with ISCG will be about 25 per cent lower than conventional coal generation but 75 per cent higher than natural gas generation, so that's a concern.

There's a risk of ground subsidence. Like other mining activities ISCG will create cavities underground, which will lead to ground subsidence. This subsidence can impact surface water flows, shallow aquifers, and any above ground infrastructure such as roads or pipelines. There will be land-use impacts. It will affect wildlife habitat. We believe there is an important requirement that large or multiple ISCG developments should be considered in regional land-use planning. As well, ISCG development will lead to incremental increases in air emissions wherever it's built.

Mr. Speaker, those are some of my comments because one of the key functions of this bill is to outline a regulatory framework for in situ coal gasification. That's the first thing. It will also amend the Coal Conservation Act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, and the Oil Sands Conservation Act, and repeal the requirements for permits for the use of large amounts of energy for industrial and manufacturing operations. Industrial development permits were introduced in the 1970s, and their primary activity was to enable the ERCB to make public interest decisions with respect to the security of supply and allocation of energy resources. According to the minister's office when we contacted them, the original objective, dealing with the allocation of energy resources, is now met with competitive market forces and is no longer considered necessary by the government of Alberta.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, another difference, I think, between the NDP and the PC government is that they believe the market forces will in all cases, in all ways produce the very best result. Of course, we don't believe that that's borne out in practice. In fact, not even close.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 16 fully removes the existing permitting system in section 43 of the Oil and Gas Conservation Act and cancels existing permits. Consequential changes are made to other acts.

I want to get to another important point, Mr. Speaker, and this has been raised by the people at the Environmental Law Centre. They have a number of questions. First of all, does Alberta Environment's procedure reflect all aspects of directive 025 of the ERCB? Do the differences between Alberta Environment's procedures and ERCB's directive 025 have different points of jurisdictional mandate that are relevant in approving and regulating developments?

Mr. Speaker, I think that one of the problems that we have with this approach, transferring the responsibility for oversight in some of these areas, is that one of the major changes would revoke the role of the ERCB in industrial development permits and put the full responsibility on Alberta Environment. Now, we have a problem, not with Alberta Environment per se, but this is a department that has been the subject of ongoing reductions. It has suffered consistent budget cuts and increasing demands on its work.

For example, in the 2011-12 fiscal year the government has budgeted $11 million less than last year. Since 2007 the Environment budget has been reduced by 30 per cent. Mr. Speaker, that in and of itself is a very, very serious issue, and it really demonstrates clearly the lack of importance this government places on the environment. A 30 per cent cut in the last five years is very dramatic, and now we are being asked to transfer additional responsibilities onto this department. Quite clearly, it really lacks the actual capacity to oversee this. It really brings into question, in my view, whether or not they intend this function to actually be provided with oversights. We really question how Alberta Environment will be able to cope with this increased responsibility with regard to IDPs.

The last point that I wanted to make with respect to this legislation is the amendments that allow the Market Surveillance Administrator to make complaints and to challenge the Independent System Operator, otherwise known as the Alberta Electric System Operator, or AESO, which is supposedly an independent group of about 250 technicians and engineers set out in the Electric Utilities Act. I just want on a side note to remind members of this Assembly that it is the AESO group that is behind this cockamamie scheme to spend $13 billion on unnecessary transmission infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, one thing I learned in my time on city council is that if you let the engineers have a blank cheque to build all the stuff that they think would be neat and fun, you're pretty much going to be bankrupt in no time at all. I think it's important that we recognize that just because you can build something and you can have very interesting technological solutions to problems, it doesn't necessarily mean that you're going to have the most effective use of taxpayers' dollars.

I think that what has happened is that there's a combination of political influence from the big electricity generating companies, but also you've got this group, AESO, who have been given free rein to design their dream system for electricity transmission, and it is the ratepayers of this province that are going to pay the bill. Already we're seeing the large electricity consumers rebelling against this, and I think we're soon going to see smaller electricity consumers – homeowners particularly, small businesses, farmers, and so on – also rebelling.

Mr. Speaker, the ISO is established in the Electric Utilities Act as a corporation to operate a market for the exchange of electrical energy in Alberta. The Electric Utilities Act requires that market participants must comply with ISO rules. If the ISO suspects that a market participant has contravened one of the rules, it must refer the matter to the Market Surveillance Administrator.

The amendment will allow the Market Surveillance Administrator to object or to complain about a certain rule that would impede the functioning of a proper market and bring it forward to the AUC for consideration. It begs the question of why a publicly funded body such as the MSA would need to get involved in the AESO complaint and rule change process if the Independent System Operator is supposed to be fair, independent, and a free market agent. The MSA is itself supposed to hold market participants accountable to the ISO and enforce the rules they set out.

Mr. Speaker, according to the MSA's latest annual report in 2010 the MSA issued a significant financial penalty to a single market participant composed of 332 notices of specified penalties, totalling $655,000 for infractions of the ISO's dispatch rules. The MSA issued 46 other notices of specified penalties, totalling $75,000.

The question I have is whether or not the MSA will be lobbied by the regulated electrical utility companies to bring forth certain complaints. If the MSA is getting involved with the AESO to conduct surveillance and investigate the working market, then this change makes some sense and fits within its mandate. However, the MSA itself is mandated to receive complaints, often from electrical operators themselves, who are direct market participants. Perhaps there ought to be a boundary between the MSA's genuine complaints and those that are brought to the MSA from electrical utilities providers themselves.

Now, again, the Environmental Law Centre has some concerns with respect to this, and they suggested that in amending this piece of legislation, there should have been a specific exception related to the market rules related to feed-in tariffs that would allow a level of support for renewables in electricity generation. These feed-in tariffs basically operate to allow electrical generators to charge a premium for renewable power generation. An express power to allow for feed-in tariffs would take the form of a regulation-making provision that prescribes instances where the market rules may be varied to allow for feed-in tariffs.

The area of tariff setting is a complex area, Mr. Speaker. However, the general view is that the current framework is a barrier to more rapid adoption of renewables. It should also be recognized that feed-in tariffs may cause price increases and, as such, may need to be accompanied by programs to assist those with lower incomes. Also, there are several questions about whether a feed-in tariff would be upheld under the current system as something under the regulated rate under the act. The concern, however, is that any such rate would be openly challenged.

Those are my concerns, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments and questions.

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a privilege to come in here tonight and speak to Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011. As we see in this act, it proposes to create a regulatory framework for a new class of petroleum production called in situ coal schemes, that produce synthetic coal, gas, and liquids through in situ coal gasification and liquefaction. It apparently eliminates the current regulatory regime of the industrial development permits, which exist to prevent resource waste, as the regulations as currently applied have been apparently superseded over time by environmental regulations in play in this province. It expands the breadth and oversight provided by the Market Surveillance Administrator under the Electric Utilities Act, the Alberta Utilities Commission under the Gas Utilities Act, and it changes the definition of oil sands facilities.

When you look at these overall amendments and how they've taken place within the energy structure, it's difficult to see the pattern and direction that this government is going in and how it is going to fit with our energy future. From what we have structured here in Alberta, we have great skepticism on this side of the House as to the way many of our electricity statutes have come down the pike and how they've been developed. Primarily, this has been since the inception, when we privatized the industrial market some 15 years ago, and it's proceeded on from that front in a way that hasn't always been noticeably of benefit to Alberta citizens. I guess we take that healthy dose of skepticism as we continue down that path, and that's expressed here in some of my views that I will place on the record here tonight.

If we look at this, what we have, especially with the first goal of this, when we're looking at creating synthetic coal gas and liquids through in situ coal gasification, this is essentially what appears to be an older form of technology dressed up in a new sort of bow. If you look at it, this is some of that stuff that was talked about in World War II. When Germany was running out of fossil fuels, they were going to see if they could get to the oil reserves out in Asia. They had no more production in that country, so they were looking at the development of the gasification of coal. It appears that as we are here in this area running out of fossil fuels, we appear to be looking at ways of trying to get our coal reserves into more usable fuel resources, and that may be a reasonable and laudable goal.

As I just heard the member from the third party say, it seems like we seem to be going backwards in time almost to where we're developing coal resources, where we're looking at alleged clean-coal technologies when these, in fact, may not be the correct type of technologies to be investing in in this day and age. We may be better off looking at other ways to in fact be greening our grid instead of old technologies such as coal and situations of that nature. I put that concern on the record, that we may actually be going down a path where it may not actually be in our long-term interest as a province to really be looking at that stuff.

That said, you know, we do have an abundance of coal, and I understand that if we are going to develop this industry, it's got to be developed in somewhat of a reasonable fashion, so at the same time putting down a regulatory framework may not be the worst situation in the world. I just offer a little bit of balance to both those perspectives, that, in fact, sometimes we lose here in this province in a rush to get things done, seemingly, as quickly and expediently as possible, often to get the resources out of the ground without necessarily understanding the long-term consequences of what is actually going to happen.

We also see that this has been somewhat of a concern as this has generally been described to us as a housekeeping bill. At least from our side, it looks like there are some major changes to some things that are going to be happening in our province. Primarily, we see this from the change in what the definition is of an oil sands facility and how these are going to possibly have ramifications on the definition of what gets processed in Alberta, how it's going to be incented, how the incentive is going to be calculated for taxation purposes, and how the like is going to be formulated under that.

We have been assured that despite what appear to us to be relatively clear changes to those definitions, the redefinition of things usually attributed to this type of industry are now being included in the new definitions. To us it looks like this will definitely affect the tax regime. We have been told by the ministry – and we take them, I guess, at their word – that this is not going to be affecting the tax regime. Now, from our view, we think that we're going to keep an eye on that. We're going to see whether that is, in fact, a true case, whether that will be happening, and we're going to worry quite a bit about that, considering that the oil and gas industry provides a great deal of revenue to us.

As well, we want to know what type of industry the government is into promoting or incenting. Is this the right type of industry to be incenting in Alberta? Those are the types of things we need to know and need to understand. To date we don't have a clear indication other than the word that this apparently doesn't. We haven't really seen a good explanation as to why the changes would be other than if it affected the tax and regulatory bodies that are in play.

We also note that this act changes the definition of coal and defines coal seams, that may turn some marginal coal deposits from mineral resources to pore space, which potentially changes the ownership if the mineral rights are owned by private interests and allows the use of very low-quality coal formations as carbon capture and storage reserves.

You know, we're looking for clarification. We received some clarification on this, and hopefully that will be clarified in the future. Again, as it pertains to this act, we're concerned about carbon capture and storage. It appears to be one possible piece to the puzzle that many pundits and many experts believe will have a great deal of relevancy, yet we have placed a large deal of our reduction strategy into this one technology. We're putting almost $2 billion, an unprecedented amount of money, into this type of technology, and this is obviously going to continue, as we see it's being formulated to do under this act, from a technology that is relatively unproven in the eyes of many people, in the eyes of many experts on the other side of the issue, who believe this is more of a boondoggle than science that works. We're very concerned that we continue to go on that path when we're still in the early stages of whether this technology will work in the long run not only for lowering our emissions as a province but also for getting value for the money out of what we spend on reducing our carbon footprint.

We have a responsibility of playing that fact even though we're going to continue to be large players in the production of oil and gas products. I think that gives us even more of a responsibility to be doing our environmental fair share, and that's going to cause us to do some things of a very high quality that produce results. The world isn't just going to look at our jurisdiction and say: well, you guys get a pass because you're producing oil products that the rest of us use. No. Unfortunately, the microscope is going to be on us even closer. We're going to have to produce results, in my view, at a pretty substantial rate in order to get on the right side of this issue.

This act is going some ways to try and do that. If it's going the right way – well, hopefully it is. If it goes down a path of carbon capture and storage, then we have a lot of questions and a lot of concern about, especially, the rate that we're spending money on it, it appears, and the rate that we're changing the bills in the industry and the going forward of our regulatory systems to have this play a larger role in the Alberta landscape.

Let's also just comment briefly on the expanded oversight of Alberta's independent electrical system and the ISO. Again, the member of the third party brought up the concerns that this is the group that brought in, essentially, the changes to our electrical infrastructure that could see the end users of electricity in this province pay substantially more for their electricity. One has to look at whether they are truly an independent body or if they're an arm of this government.

We look at how they changed their prognostications for the expected use of electricity by Albertans and their plans for transmission outlay in this province in 2007. Virtually overnight it was changed in 2008 to something that didn't appear to be thought out, voted on, or discussed at any level other than by the tall foreheads in this organization and some members of this government. It changed the perspective overnight to all of a sudden have a large transmission line extending from various parts in northern Alberta down to, allegedly, places as far-reaching as California.

This group has been part of that push, has been a backer of this push, has been a supporter of this push and a supporter of this government lock, stock, and barrel with relatively few questions or concerns that you would think an independent operator would have of not only government but of other institutions. You have concerns about their expanding role as to whether they truly are an independent arm or whether they're being . . . [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much. The hon. member certainly raised some very important points. I'm wondering if his constituents, like other Albertans that have been mentioned by other parties like the leader of the New Democrats, who is here tonight – relative to the issue of the potential raise in rates and what this could mean in a very negative way to consumers in terms of what they will face in dealing with the AESO and, of course, the electrical conveyance operator, are you concerned about that?

Mr. Hehr: Well, I think that it would behoove any member of this Assembly to view power as almost an essential good not only for industry but individual users here in Alberta. It's a commodity that modern life runs around, that we produce our goods with, that people heat their homes with, that people cook their meals with. Really, whether you're the wealthiest family in Alberta or one of its poorest citizens, at the end of the day electricity has a direct role to play in your daily life, from the production of your meals to getting to work. Of course, this resource and how it's managed and how it's produced in this province is important to everybody.

If you look at the way that this transmission system was built, the sort of seemingly overnight switching of the independent Alberta Electric System Operator from one form of plans to another that supports the government vision for a large, substantial investment in these transmission lines by the consumer, not by them but by the consumer, would be a cause for concern. No doubt when you have those extraordinary expenses, there's only one person who is going to end up paying for it, the end user. Whether that will have a substantial bite on our end users in Alberta: I think it's naive to suggest that it won't at least have something beyond a de minimis level. It will most likely have something more significant, something that will take a substantial monthly contribution to it by the ratepayers of Alberta, which at least in the short term and probably in the long term will lead to a competitive imbalance for our citizens. If you looked at it, many of the criticisms are out there.

Although I hope that is not the case, many people have put a fair question as to whether this is needed at this time. There's a strong case to be made that you should be doing this when and if the electricity is needed in a certain community, when and if the operators of the system want to build those things, and when and if the citizens are willing to do it.

No doubt, I guess, the proof will be in the outcomes. Let's hope that some of the forecasts don't come to the front where we're paying substantially more in power for a boondoggle. Let's hope some of the smaller government estimates for price increases are more true than some of the substantial price increases that I've seen come up.

Thank you for the question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A follow-up. Obviously, the hon. member is making reference to the comments made by the Minister of Energy. Am I to assume that this member is not accepting the premise and the comments made by the Minister of Energy in terms of his looking through rose-coloured glasses?

Mr. Hehr: It is often easy, I think, for the minister or, actually, anyone who is in government to tend to get caught up in government rhetoric and maybe, as it is on the opposition's side, trying to see what is needed and what is in the true long-term interests of Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on Bill 16?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

Private Bills Second Reading

Bill Pr. 1

Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay on behalf of the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Ms Woo-Paw: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon I move second reading of Bill Pr. 1, Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties Amendment Act, 2011.

This bill serves to modernize the act and provide clarity to its statutory provisions. For example, the definition of a rural municipality is added to the act to give clarity for the purpose of membership eligibility. This bill also strikes out the portion where it says that the association's purposes include promoting the interests of "all municipal districts and counties" throughout the province and substitutes "rural municipalities." Given that the association's membership includes 69 municipal districts and counties, there would be times when the association would end up promoting the interests of the majority of its membership but not all, as it is now explicitly stated in the act.

This bill also seeks to remove the provision which states the identity of the directors of the association at its incorporation in 1923 as this section is irrelevant given that those people are no longer directors. Instead, it would simply state that "at all times there shall be a minimum of five directors."

I encourage all members to support this bill and in turn help the AAMD and C work under an act that is more relevant and functional for the work that they presently do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wish to speak on Bill Pr. 1?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 2

Galt Scholarship Fund Transfer Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill Pr. 2, the Galt Scholarship Fund Transfer Act.

Mr. Speaker, Pr. 2 is one of those good-news stories that I'm sure we'll have no trouble passing in this House. The origin of this trust fund can be traced back to 1909 as a bequest from the late Sir Alexander Tilloch Galt to the Galt hospital in Lethbridge. Over the years and many legislative acts later in 1954 the funds were to be used for scholarships for nurses at the Galt School of Nursing. In 1986 the Galt School of Nursing was closed, and finally in 1995 the trust was taken over by the Galt School of Nursing Alumnae Association. This group of nursing alumnae nursed those dollars very carefully. If only these nurses were looking after our provincial funds or if, in fact, the heritage fund was looked after with such care. The principal is now valued at $144,000, and thousands of students have received tuition to help them become the health professionals that we so rely on in today's world.

However, also over these many years the ranks of the alumnae have been thinning, and the ladies are of the opinion that it's time to transfer these funds to the University of Lethbridge for their nursing student scholarships. The understanding is that the $144,000 will remain intact, and as has been the practice, only the interest will be used for the scholarships. It has been roughly estimated that $5,600 would be available for scholarships each year now and into the future. A wonderful gesture. The Galt School of Nursing alumnae are to be thanked and congratulated for keeping the trust of the Galt family. I'm sure the Galt family would be very satisfied.

I would ask all my legislative colleagues to pass Bill Pr. 2.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 7

Hull Child and Family Services Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to rise today to move second reading of Bill Pr. 7, the Hull Child and Family Services Amendment Act, 2011.

The purpose of this private bill is simply to shorten the name to Hull Services Act to accurately reflect current mandates and activities of this world-class organization, which I believe is a jewel in the crown of Calgary-Lougheed. Way back in 1962, thanks to the legacy of Alberta pioneer William Roper Hull, Hull Child and Family Services opened its doors to children who were disadvantaged, abandoned, neglected, or abused. Today Hull is respected as a leading-edge agency with expertise in issues that challenge children, families, and entire communities.

Many times children who are brought to Hull are afraid, upset, angry, and hurt. Often they struggle with adverse childhood experiences, including maltreatment, mental illness, behavioural disorders, sexual victimization, addiction, developmental delays, poverty, and depression. No wonder so many feel so helpless, and no wonder so many believe their futures are also hopeless.

Through individualized assessment and treatment combined with compassion and commitment, these children begin to understand that someone truly cares for them and that they're worth while. They take control of their lives. They overcome their pain and their challenges. They build on their strengths. They focus on their future, and they succeed, Mr. Speaker. I've seen this with my own eyes on many occasions. From first-hand experience I know that Hull carefully selects and delivers well-researched, proven practices to ensure the highest quality of care and the most beneficial of outcomes. Best practices create the best results.

Today Hull's service continuum ranges from prevention and early intervention through to residential programs and it includes mental health and addiction services, in-home support, mentors, educational programs, family therapy, foster and kinship care, residential treatment, and supported independent living. Hull contributes significantly to the well-being of children and the enhancement of their families as well as to the health of the entire community. Amazingly, Mr. Speaker, over 3,500 people are touched by Hull's services each and every day.

Hull will be celebrating 50 years of miracles very soon. In fact, 2012 will be marked with significant celebrations, progressive professional development, enhanced fundraising efforts, and a profile building, all focused within Alberta. The proposed new name, Hull Services, will provide a fresh, inclusive, and easy to remember moniker for the entire community, and that's why it's so important that we do this now, in time for their celebrations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wish to speak on the bill? Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 7 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The Committee of the Whole is now in order.

Bill 15

Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: I believe amendment A1 is on the table. Any hon. members wish to speak? The Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak again. When last we discussed this bill, I adjourned debate because of issues raised on behalf of the ND opposition and the Wildrose Alliance opposition relating to the absolute length of time when an application could be brought forward from a victim of a crime.

The bill worked rather hard to put some fences around that, put some certainty into it because of our experiences with age-old applications where it's very difficult to obtain medical records, if any. You know, the criminal records were difficult to access. We had tried to put some certainty around it. I remain convinced that we need to have some certainty around that. Because of that, the current amendment before the House is, in my view, problematic.

It also deals with victims and their injuries. The timing has to be around the commission of the crime.

I'm not prepared to support this amendment, and I would ask the members of the House to join me in defeating this amendment. However, in saying so, I have to tell you that I was swayed strongly by the arguments of both the ND and the Wildrose Alliance opposition, and I am prepared, based on discussions with the three opposition parties, to bring forward an amendment that, in my understanding, meets their needs nonetheless.

So I think the first order of business would be to defeat this current amendment, and I'm going to ask support of the House to do that.

The Chair: Any other member wish to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Mr. Chair, I just beg the House's indulgence. I don't have that amendment before me.

Mrs. Forsyth: It's A1. Rachel's amendment.

Mr. Mason: Yes, I know, but I don't have it.

While they get it, I'll just speak on it, Mr. Chairman. I know that there is a great deal of concern that has been expressed about someone who has had reasons why they couldn't bring forward these concerns within a short period of time. For example, according to the amendment:

2 years from the date of the injury or within 2 years from the date when the victim becomes aware of or knows or ought to know the nature of the injuries and recognizes the effects of the injuries.

This is an insufficient period of time, particularly with respect to children and also with respect in many cases to women.

I think that the problem is that we have not seen the amendment that the minister proposes to replace this, and I think that that is a difficulty. It might be easier for us to deal with if we knew what the intention was with regard to this, but I think there are real reasons why the period of time needs to be extended, so I would urge members to approve this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on the amendment.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise today on the amendment pertaining to Bill 15, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011. It is interesting that in indicating that in terms of what has taken place, I heard the member from the New Democrats put forward what I thought was a very insightful amendment, and I'm pleased to say that I observed that the Solicitor General was listening intently to the motion that was put forward. Obviously, he would have gone back to speak with his administrative staff and the caucus relative to that, so I'm somewhat surprised by the fact that he now does not want to support the amendment pertaining to the victims of crime because, you know, of all the cutting of red tape that goes on, any obstacles that impede compensation for victims really have to be eliminated.

Victims of crime are often the odd person out, so to speak. There is a lot of attention paid to police officers and prosecutors and so on, but I would be the first to offer my praise for the hard work pertaining to administering the justice system. In doing so, criminals would not be brought to justice otherwise. This is a provincial responsibility. The work is demanding, often dangerous, even for lawyers and judges and, of course, our police, which the Wildrose caucus clearly support. We believe it's a conservative value and something that Albertans support and that the Wildrose caucus has put forward in the past and will continue to in the future and will continue to do as a government.

We must cope with the different threats and intimidation that go on. There's a lot of attention that has been focused not on the victims of crime but on the perpetrators of crime. Millions of dollars are spent on programs for those who have broken the law, but no one here takes issue with a program that will help someone treat their addiction to drugs. We want to see those who break the law move forward and contribute to society rather than drain it for their own selfish benefit.

Now, what frustrates Albertans most is seeing innocent victims, some paralyzed or suffering from other long-term disabilities, suffering indignity. They struggle, I want to say, with the emotional and physical toll taken by violent crime. Some may never work again, and those who support a family also have children to worry about. So one violent crime can be a life-altering event to a family. It's not just a concern to me but, I believe, to members of this House and all Albertans who are victims of crime, and they must be respected and treated with respect. Therefore, I do believe that the amendment that has been put forward is something that is very important.

The amendment, which I thought was very, very well thought out, was put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who also, of course, is a lawyer by training, and that is a complement with her background and the experience she brings.

I am surprised that the Solicitor General and the government do not accept the amendment that has been put forward. In my view, it is kind of like, shall I say, we need to deal with a situation. We want to improve it. I know the Solicitor General wants to improve this. Some of my colleagues, to the Solicitor General, I think actually will support this, so I'm going to be interested in the detail of what is coming forward from the government side on this as the Solicitor General intimates that there could be some positive moves made. I'm assuming those moves were made based on the work that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has put forward and that perhaps we will take a look at them, you know, and we'll look at an idea that like health care it's very important that we achieve a high quality.

8:30

Of course, the fund that was spoken about in this House earlier is there for a reason and is there for the benefits to be able to help families who have suffered from brain injuries. Those with lesser injuries receive a lump sum based on the severity of their injury. The funds also go to victims' groups on a grant basis, and I think the victims' fund is a great start and a great program.

Sadly, though, the issue here is access. The crime fund now has assets that I believe are totalling over $15 million, and it has long-term liabilities of something like $30.6 million. But it's hard to swallow that money dedicated to victims of crime sits in a bank account as opposed to going to good use, so I will be watching very closely. It's my hope that we can right this ship and that in any amendments coming forward such as what I'm speaking of, we can get back on track and put crime victims first.

I want to say that the amendments that are being put forward by the Solicitor General, of course, we will look at and not rule anything out. I'm just very pleased that the Solicitor General has listened to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, from the New Democrats, because I believe that this is a conservative value, a conservative value that Albertans connect with the Wildrose caucus. Clearly, I think I'm glad to see that this one minister, the Solicitor General, is listening to what opposition are saying. It's amazing: the skill to listen, to be willing to stand up and say that we can do better based on that.

Consequently, I will be listening intently to other speakers this evening prior to coming to a decision on what I think will be best. I'm looking forward to being convinced by comments from the government side and other opposition members relative to the benefits and the weaknesses, potentially, of the amendments that are being put forward.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Mason: I wonder if before we vote on this, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Solicitor General would share with the Assembly the general intent of the amendment that he would like to propose as an alternative.

Mr. Oberle: I believe I'm prevented by parliamentary process to do exactly that. We're discussing an amendment, and the normal process here would be to table a subamendment, which was not possible, though I can inform the member that I've discussed my intentions this evening with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Again, my intent – my amendment is not an amendment until it's tabled in this House, and it can't be done until this amendment is disposed of. So I'm deeply sorry that I can't help the member in that regard, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mason: Okay. Mr. Chairman, I'm going to put forward the arguments in favour of this amendment, then, being in ignorance of what the hon. Solicitor General has in mind. The amendment put forward by my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona would accomplish three things. It would keep the language currently in the act around the two-year time limit within which victims are eligible to apply for financial support; two, it would strike out the bill's proposed 10-year limit from the date of the offence within which the victims are eligible to apply for financial support; and three, where the victim was a minor, the amendment would strike out the 10-year time limit from the date the victim reaches the age of majority regarding eligibility for applying for financial support.

Mr. Chairman, in the current act the two-year time limit applies from the date of the injury or the date of the victim's realization of the nature and effects of the injury. Bill 15 would apply a two-year time limit from the date of the victim's realization of the offence. This amendment would maintain the language currently in the act about the victim's realization of the injury in place of the bill's language concerning the realization of the offence. It is important that the act maintain its current language on this issue because women who are victims of domestic violence do not often recognize that they are victims of a criminal offence.

As the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters position paper published in February of this year, following the Solicitor General's consultation on the bill, states:

Women in situations of domestic violence commonly do not identify themselves as victims of crime. Even in situations where repeated and extreme abuse and injury occurs, women often do not perceive their experience this way.

It is, therefore, extremely important that the act maintain its current language, stating that individuals become eligible for financial support upon realizing the effects of the injury rather than realizing that they are victims of a criminal offence. This amendment is needed for women who are victims of violent crime to have equal access to the victims of crime fund and not to be disadvantaged by the effects of patterns of abuse by intimate partners.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment would also strike out the bill's 10-year limit from the date of the offence for eligibility to apply for financial support. The minister has said that the limit is needed to reduce the number of applications being made to the fund, but it is an arbitrary and unfair limit which will prevent some victims from receiving the help and support that the fund was set up to provide. Similarly, for victims that are minors, the bill imposes a 10-year limit from the date the individual reaches the age of majority. Again, the limit is arbitrary and unfair and will prevent some victims from receiving the help which they need.

So I would urge all members of the House to continue to support this amendment A1. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm rising to support the amendment brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. In listening to the exchange that's gone on over the last 15 minutes or so, I have to say that I am irritated that we have to keep fighting the same battle over and over and over again and that the government persists in demolishing the good work that has been done. We have so much work that shows that particularly women, almost exclusively women, who are victims of abuse, whether that is long-term emotional or psychological abuse or physical abuse, can take years to come to the point where they acknowledge that that was what was going on, that their lives have been affected by it, and to be able to apply for assistance. And they are perfectly entitled to do that.

I understand that the Limitations Act in Alberta says: two years from the date of the crime and that that applies to everything else. Fair enough. But that's not what we're dealing with here. We are dealing with a very specific and specialized group of people who suffer abuse in a way that is not customarily suffered by any other identifiable group. Interestingly enough, once again it's women who are this identifiable group and which the government is repeatedly in a position where it wants to take away what we fought so hard to gain, and that is the understanding of how long . . . Sorry. Let me stop.

What we're trying to do is make sure that those women have access to the funds that they are perfectly entitled to get access to. The problem that exists for this very specific group is that they may not come to terms with what's happened to them. They may not psychologically be able to identify that and acknowledge it and be able to go forward and claim the funding that is there in a government program for them. It often takes time to get to that point for this group of people. So why the government persists in coming back to us and doing this – this is the second or third time I've been involved in this debate in the 14 years I've been in this Assembly plus the time before that, when I was involved with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues, that I keep hearing this debate and the government keeps trying to do this.

8:40

It's, well, irritating is not a strong enough word, quite frankly. It's a persistence by this government of failing to acknowledge all of the documentation that is available to say: "This is what happens to this particular group of people." We have to recognize that. We have to go on the evidence and on the scientific knowledge that's available that tells us how long it can take women to recover and to be able to get to the point where they can apply for funds. [interjections] Gentlemen, if you are not able to contain your discussion, please, I invite you to step outside.

Thank you.

An Hon. Member: Are you challenging them?

Ms Blakeman: Well, I'm inviting them to step outside. If the conversation is that interesting, they should continue it out the door. Thank you.

Perhaps the chairman could be a bit quicker on his feet next time so that I don't have to do it. [interjections] Well, if this amendment hadn't had to keep coming forward, I wouldn't be quite so prickly about it, you guys.

I don't understand why you keep trying to do this. Maybe it's because of the legal basis for this that you want to line everything up with the Limitations Act and its two-year gates, time limits. It's annoying for me and irritating for me, and that's nothing compared to what the women and children that find themselves in this situation must feel when they look at the government persistently trying to deny them access to benefits that they're perfectly entitled to get and that, in fact, the fund was put in place for.

I went to the initial announcement of whatever the first version of this particular fund was called, and it's gone through about three incarnations now and been called a couple of different things. Here we go: the Victims of Crime Act, that came into force on August 1, 1997. That'd be exactly right. The Victims of Crime Act replaced the Victims' Programs Assistance Act and the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act. Then in 2005 it incorporated the Canadian statement of basic principles of justice for victims of crime. So now we have the victims of crime fund.

We have to acknowledge this, and that's what this amendment is trying to do. Once again the government has taken that acknowledgement out. We're trying to see it put back in. I have a statement of intent from the Solicitor General that he's going to deal with the issue again, but because of the process that we're in in this Assembly, we don't know what that is. We have to take the word of the Solicitor General at this point that his amendment will do, in fact, what we are seeking. He urges us to vote against the very amendment that actually does include what we'd like to see.

So I am going to go forward and vote in favour of the amendment that is on the floor before us because it does what I want to see done and tries to acknowledge and deal with that compensation. I'm sure the rest of you will vote according to whatever you believe is right, but I'll tell you that it's darn . . .

An Hon. Member: Frustrating.

Ms Blakeman: Well, frustrating doesn't begin to explain why we're back here for at least the third time arguing the same point in front of this government. We have an institutional memory in this place. Why isn't it operating?

I urge the rest of my colleagues to follow my lead and the lead of others that have spoken and to support this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: On the amendment, Mr. Chair. I am absolutely still supportive of the amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona as I said in my remarks previously, and I am very much in agreement with the previous speakers about this on the opposition side. This is the exact wrong message to send to those victims, in particular those victims that were victimized when they were children. A lot of the time those memories are suppressed. A lot of those times they live in fear. Whatever the case their mind literally does not allow them to unlock it, unlock those memories, until later in life. A 10-year cut-off date with regard to a limitation sends the message to them that their victimization is somehow less legitimate or less important than those who were victimized a little later on in life and haven't suppressed it and have remembered it. This is an absolute fact. It does happen, and it happens more than I think any of us know. I would hope that most of us, if not all, haven't had this sort of victimization. But so many have, and literally they cannot remember what happened until after years of therapy. There's something wrong, there are usually signs, and then they go into the therapy, and the mind literally unlocks the stuff.

I really feel that it's a big mistake on the part of the government not to see this, not to recognize that that 10-year kind of statute of limitation just does not properly account for those victims. It just sends the wrong message. It just sends the wrong message to our kids, to those kids and to those adults who were kids when they were abused as well as to those who out of fear or whatever feel that they can't bring it forward for a 10-year period.

I know that the government wants certainty, and I understand that. Certainty is good. But there are some things so heinous and so wrong and so debilitating and awful that conventional thinking around certainty in the Criminal Code just doesn't apply, and it doesn't apply here for this victim of crimes fund. You need to really think this through.

In fact, I misspoke. I think criminally, if I'm not mistaken, there is no limitation. That's right. There is no limitation on the 10 years or any years on that for a victim that remembers it later on in life. So why wouldn't you follow that same principle when you're talking about the victims of crime fund?

Now, I am looking forward to see what the Solicitor General is bringing forward. That's not to say that me speaking for this amendment right now would preclude me agreeing to a different amendment if it improves the bill. But unless it specifically improves it, specifically does what this amendment is asking here, then I don't think it will be as good an amendment as what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is talking about.

Again, I have no idea what the bureaucracy has said to the Solicitor General, to whoever to introduce this limitation. I don't know. I have no idea. But I know that it's not correct. I sure hope that if this doesn't go through now, hopefully in subsequent years or perhaps after the next election maybe we will look again at this and try to get it right. If anything, just think of the message that it sends. Everything else aside, think of the message it sends to those who were abused when they were kids, suppressed the memories, and then remember them later on in life. It says to them that their victimization is not as legitimate as the victimization of someone who suffered it later in life. It's the wrong message, so please reconsider.

I will be still supporting this amendment. I do hope it passes, and if not, we'll look to see what the Solicitor General is proposing.

8:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. At this point this might be the definition of piling on, but at the same time I, too, must speak in favour of this amendment, proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. It's a very good amendment, essentially, for many of the reasons we've heard expressed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, and in fact all members who have spoken on this issue who at least from the view from this side of the House feel there are both scientific reasons as well as reasons of equity that say that imposing a 10-year statutory limit on recognizing the pain and suffering by victims of crime in these situations is wrong and antithetical to what the act is actually trying to instill.

If we actually just left it at the amendment the hon. member is proposing here, the original act that is proposed in the Limitations Act, which states, “within 2 years from the date of injury or within 2 years from the date when the victim becomes aware of or knows or ought to know the nature of the injuries and recognizes the effects of the injuries,” this is essentially the reasonable man test. People would objectively look at the circumstances, apply the situation that the victim was in, and see whether it was reasonable that he or she was applying for the compensation so late or so early or whenever the fact the victim got around to applying for the compensation.

By no means is this a blank cheque or something to that effect that allows a victim some loophole. What it does is it just applies the reasonable man test to their circumstances, and in my view it recognizes a much more fair balance that identifies some scientific circumstances that exist to victims of crime when they’ve been in situations where they’ve been exposed to often horrific and repeated and extended abuse in all sorts of situations that this honourable House may not be aware of.

Again, I don’t pretend to be Kreskin, so I can’t tell you what the hon. Solicitor General’s amendment is going to be, but I look forward to it and hope he does come up with it.

An Hon. Member: Is he like Houdini?

Mr. Hehr: No, Kreskin wasn’t like Houdini. Houdini could escape from things. Kreskin could say whether you had 21 or not in your cards, so that’s what it is, hon. member. No, I am not Kreskin, but I will tell you that I hope the Solicitor General’s amendment is similar, if not identical, to the one being proposed by the hon. member of the third party, and we can go from there.

This is a good discussion tonight on a very important issue. I’m glad we were here for this debate, and I’m glad we had an opportunity to discuss this. I guess now the institutional memory of the Member for Edmonton-Centre says that this is the third time this situation comes up. At least maybe if we have this discussion a few more times, we’ll no longer see it being written into legislation here in Alberta if the reasons were valid that we brought up here tonight.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak, Mr. Chair. I invite other people to speak, or I hope the Solicitor General sets us all at ease and can calm our jittery nerves here on this side of the House and go forward in that vein. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on A1.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I’m pleased to rise yet again on Bill 15, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011. I recall specifically speaking in regard to the amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona about two weeks ago and brought forward what I thought were some important things. At that particular time, I talked about incidents like Theo Fleury, who was sexually abused, I think, probably at the age of 14 as a young hockey player and decided to come forward probably 20 years after the fact and has now, obviously, become someone who has become a Canadian idol, as far as I’m concerned, in regard to championing the issue of sexual abuse.

I know the Solicitor General has brought some amendments forward and has shared those particular amendments late in the afternoon with the House leader for the Wildrose and the NDP and also the Liberal opposition. You kind of feel like you’re caught between a rock and a hard place, where you kind of like the amendment, but you know that if you don’t support the amendment, you’re screwed.

He put his initials on this amendment. Then we have the Government House Leader coming over and reminding our House leader that, you know, you did sign this particular note supporting the Solicitor General on the amendments in regard to what he’s bringing forward, which he has already said that he can’t table because we’re debating the A1 amendment, but we will be able to discuss that after.

In my life in politics, which has been interesting to say the least, as a former Solicitor General and minister of children’s services I always used to look at doing the right thing and what’s best for Albertans. As people have said previously in this House, I have made my political history talking and advocating on behalf of children. So when I’m looking at a bill in particular, I look at what the bill contains, what it’s going to do for Albertans, what is right for Albertans, and what is wrong for Albertans.

Then when an amendment hits the Legislature, I always look at: where we were, which is the bill that was originally tabled in the Legislature; where we are now, which is an amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona put before the House; and where we’re going. You know, when we go to where we were, we have Bill 15 that was brought before the Legislature and tabled in the Legislature a few weeks ago, and it was the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011. It was interesting that as this particular piece of legislation made its way through the House, an amendment hit the floor on the 21st of April, which was an amendment from the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, so that’s where we are right now.

As someone who’s new to being a member of the opposition, I thought it was important that we talk to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to find out, as the critic for this particular piece of legislation, where she was going with this amendment when she talks about 12.2(2), striking out everything after “made” and substituting “within 2 years from the date.” I found the conversation actually quite fascinating because it really starts putting your brain in gear. You start thinking about all of the things that the government talks about in their throne speech and what the Premier has spoken about. They’re all for families. They talk about children. They talk about the protection of children. We’ve seen some of the legislation and private members’ bills hit the Legislature, and I know we’re going to be talking later on in the evening about, I think, Bill 8, the Alberta Missing Persons Act.

In the conversations with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and in talking to some of the people that I always feel are my best resources – and that’s people and stakeholders and the police and people that work with victims of crime, et cetera – it started to make a lot of sense to me. Then you dig a little deeper, and you start talking to or reading about or listening to a wonderful organization called Little Warriors, that has been advocating over the last, I would say, year in regard to the sexual abuse of children and how you should start talking to people, and that it’s not an embarrassment. They’ve put together a very, very good campaign, in my mind, encouraging people, adults or children, for that matter, who have been sexually abused to start to speak out and to talk to someone that they trust, even though a majority of the time the people that they trust are the same people that are sexually abusing them. It’s not your fault that you’ve been sexually abused.

I have to say, Mr. Chair, that I like the amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has brought forward. I’m a realist, and I realize the chances of this particular amendment passing in this Legislature when you have a government that is intent on defeating this particular piece of legislation. I really, really challenge the government to think about this legislation and this particular amendment in regard to what they’re defeating and why they’re defeating it and then go home and explain to their constituents. The nice thing about Hansard is that it's all on record, quite frankly. We've been very fortunate in being able to provide a lot of that through our web pages in regard to what particular individuals in this Assembly are saying about a particular piece of legislation.

What I find quite interesting is the silence of the government on this amendment and not speaking, whether they support it or they're against it. Silence is an incredible tool, especially when you don't have anybody speaking at all, so that obviously means that they don't support this amendment. We'll continue in committee as Wildrose caucus to speak in support of this amendment as I'm sure the Liberals and the NDP will. We know what is going to happen to amendment A1, but we're going to continue to advocate on behalf of Albertans, quite frankly, and on behalf of the children who at this particular time, at 5 after 9 somewhere in this province probably and if not in this province somewhere in this country, unfortunately are being sexually abused and may not understand what's happening until they get a little older and a little wiser. So I again am going to be on the record that I support A1, and I'm going to encourage all other members in this Legislature to support it.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak on amendment A1?

Seeing none, the chair shall put the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would love to rise to speak if I could, but I can't. At this time I would like to table an amendment. I believe it would be amendment A2. As that's being circulated, I would just maybe make some introductory comments.

I think every opposition member over there would know the process that bills take, going through various committees and discussions, and they're a long time in the making, including some public consultation that was involved. We believed that we had arrived at a bill, and we firmly believed there was some need to put certainty around the issue of applications. We're concerned about fraud in applications and other issues, and I tried to articulate that.

However, discussions in the debate in the House, most notably from the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, raised what I thought were some legitimate and heartfelt concerns about the harsh termination of anybody's rights. They reminded me, quite rightly, that we are talking about victims of crime here for the most part, and how would my proposed bill address the issue of somebody that was sexually abused as a child and came to that realization or came to understand those issues and those injuries much later in life or of somebody that was, for example, the victim of a long-term spousal abuse situation and really only came to understand those issues at some later date? Both of those are not only plausible; they happen regularly. Those are people that are known to be victims of crime that have interacted with our system, people that would find themselves in that circumstance.

So we adjourned debate on that division, as it were. I went back to my staff to craft something that would meet the needs. There is still a thought amongst the community that there needs to be some certainty, and what we have crafted here I think represents a reasonable compromise. It provides some certainty, but it puts no fences around the end date in cases where these realizations come in later life. The amendment actually goes back to what was the previous wording. We had a director's discretion clause in there that the proposed Bill 15 would have eliminated, so we've reinserted it. It would now say, "Notwithstanding sections 12.2(2)(b) and 12.3, the Director may extend the period of time for making an application where the Director determines that there are compelling reasons to do so."

If I was to guess right now, I would say that probably provides more flexibility than the original intent was, but it certainly captures the issues such as sexual abuse of a minor or spousal abuse. It captures people whose realization of their injuries and their circumstance comes later in life and where their grappling with the effects of those injuries comes later in life. The science is – and I agree with the members for Airdrie-Chestermere and Edmonton-Strathcona – abundantly clear that these circumstances arise, that they exist, and they certainly would represent a compelling reason for a director to determine that the dates should not be adhered to.

I believe this represents a reasonable compromise. Not wanting to infringe upon the privilege of any member over there, I'll say nothing more than that I did discuss it with a few members in each of the parties, and I think I've got some level of agreement on that, but I look forward to the debate, Mr. Chairman. I'll retire my comments there.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on amendment A2.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. You're absolutely right, Mr. Chairman. We're speaking directly to amendment A2.

I listened with interest to the debate on amendment A1, as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Certainly, this amendment is a compromise. I received a handwritten note from the hon. minister regarding this amendment A2, and I certainly appreciate that. A2, as I understand it, will allow for an extension of time. This is going to be inserted or added following section 12.3 of Bill 15. Section 12.3 certainly provides instruction or whatever we want to call it on an application where a victim was a minor, but this application is new and allows an exception to the general limitation periods. If the victim was a minor at the time of the offence, an application for benefits may be made within 10 years of the date the victim reaches the age of majority.

Now, I thought – and I could be wrong – this provision is consistent with the Alberta Limitations Act, which extends limitation periods for minors in a similar way, but if this amendment is further clarification to that, we are now going to allow that the director may, not shall, “extend the period of time for making an application where the Director determines that there are compelling reasons to do so.” Well, I think that is a step further. I could be wrong, but certainly that would be my interpretation of that.

It’s important that we understand and be mindful of section 12.2(2)(b), but certainly it would be my view that this changes the application deadline. It certainly changes it beyond the two years, which is noted in section 12.2, from the date of an injury or death or two years from the date when a victim knew or ought to have known the circumstances.

I think this certainly is a step in the right direction. Is it everything that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere or the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had discussed? I’m not certain about that, but I view this as an improvement. I think that at this time I would be quite willing to support this.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on amendment A2.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I’m pleased to stand up in regard to amendment A2, that the hon. Solicitor General has brought forward. I do so with some hesitation, I guess. I understand that our House leader has indicated that we will be supporting this amendment, and I will also be supporting it but, if I may say so, with some reluctance.

I guess I’m going to start off with some of the comments that the Solicitor General made when he was bringing forward the amendment. He talked about the public consultation that they held in bringing forward Bill 15. I find with some difficulty that through public consultation no one – no one – thought about what was contained under 12.1, 12.2, and 12.3. When they did public consultation – and he talked about that – of all the people in this province, it struck no one’s mind that we have had people who have been sexually abused as a minor and that 20 or 25 years later they come forward in regard to the sexual abuse. I keep referring back to Theo Fleury, who has come out very publicly over the last two years. Within this public consultation you would think that at that particular time, whether it was stakeholders, the police department, or even someone within the ministry’s office, they would think: well, maybe we should kind of look at that particular section.

The minister also referred in his introduction of his amendments to the uncertainty in the community. I guess my question to him is: what is the uncertainty in the community? He never really elaborated on what he meant by uncertainty in the community.

The other thing he mentioned when he was speaking – and I look forward to reading the Hansard or maybe to some clarification from the minister – was that this regularly happens. I’m assuming that when he refers to “regularly happens,” he’s talking about sexual abuse. I look at his amendment, where he talks about 12.4 and the extension of time. It says, “Notwithstanding sections 12.2(2)(b) and 12.3, the Director may” – I always love the word “may” in legal terms; there’s always a big difference between “may” and “must” to anyone who is a lawyer here, and I’m not a lawyer – “extend the period of time for making an application where the Director determines that there are compelling reasons to do so.” I guess my question to the minister is: what is considered compelling?

He talked in his briefing notes about the sexual abuse of a minor. He talked about the realization of the victim’s injuries that comes later in life. I started putting my thinking cap on, and I’m thinking: well, there’s no reason why anybody would even question the sexual abuse of a minor, nor would they question the realization of their injuries that comes later in life.

But what about somebody that’s sexually abused as an adult? Now, that may not strike anybody here, but from my time as the Solicitor General and the minister of children’s services I go back to when I brought a motion in front of this Legislature many, many years ago about a wonderful drug that was hitting the scene at that particular time called Rohypnol, the date rape drug. When I brought that motion forward several years ago, I think I caught everybody off guard in the Assembly in regard to Rohypnol because it was just hitting the scenes. As the Solicitor General we were just starting to get police reports about this drug that was hitting the bars and scenes like that and in regard to women, the majority of them women, that had some very fuzzy, fuzzy kinds of stories that they weren’t sure whether they were raped, that they weren’t sure whether they had had sex. At that particular time, if I recall – and I was the Solicitor General from 2001 to 2004, so I’m going to say 2001 and even prior to that – it was brand new on the scene. It was just hitting the market.

Then, of course, we go into gang rapes. Gang rapes are a very interesting scenario where you have a young adult, and what we consider a young adult in Alberta is 18. They get involved in drugs, and they get involved in the gangs, and some of the initiation in the gangs is gang rape. It’s all maybe very exciting and thrilling at that particular time, when we’re talking about an initiation into a gang, but somewhere down the line, when that particular individual is 25, 26, 28, that 10-year period that is involved in this particular legislation – I would suggest that that’s 28 – they all of a sudden think: what the heck have I gotten myself into? They’re dealing with a lot of emotions.

What’s particularly interesting to me is that in the amendment to Bill 15 that the Solicitor General has brought forward, under application for benefits, 12.2(1) stays the same. Under that 12.2(2) stays the same as does (a) and (b), which talks about within 10 years after the offence occurred. Section 12.3 stays the same. And then he’s adding in there 12.4, which says, “Notwithstanding sections 12.2(2)(b) and 12(3), the Director may” – again I want to repeat, may – and talks about “compelling reasons.”

We as the third opposition realize that when you’re given seconds, you take it. It’s kind of like you want first place, and that particular first place to me was the amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona brought forward. Now we’ve got second place, and that’s the amendment that the Solicitor General brings forward. It kind of reminds me, like, you’re second choice or you’re second fiddle or whatever. For us this particular amendment is that second choice. I guess in life you can pick first, second, and third, and if you have to, you take one of the top three.

Unfortunately, we’re now put in a situation where the government has defeated our first choice, which was the original amendment from Edmonton-Strathcona, which I think encompasses everything that people are seeking under the Victims of Crime Amendment Act to try and get some counselling. It fits and encompasses, you know, sexual abuse of women or men, for that matter, who have been abused in a relationship. It encompasses the whole thing.

Now we're into what I call second choice. We have that little word "may." Another word that strikes me is "compelling," and I would love to look at the dictionary to really actually get into what compelling means. I know that the Solicitor General's intentions are probably – I don't want to use the words well thought out – I think thought out, and he feels that this is going to encompass what he feels is important to get this legislation through. We will obviously support this amendment with some reluctance, with some second sobering thoughts, if I can use that, and I'll listen to the rest of the debate.

It will be interesting to – again, the government through this whole debate on the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, whether we talk about our first choice, has virtually been silent. I'm looking forward to the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose maybe standing up and speaking in regard to why he felt compelled, if I may use that word – and he was going to law school – to turn down amendment A1, which I think encompassed everything, and now he feels compelled to support amendment A2. I guess to me that's exactly what compel can mean. You know, it's different things to different folks.

With that, I'll sit down and let other members speak.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a privilege to rise and speak to this amendment, which is amendment A2, to Bill 15, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011. As previously noted, this has been brought up to replace some of the concerns that were underneath the act, primarily some of the limitations that were brought in by this government on what would be known as the drop-dead rule, that an application must be made to the victims of crime board within 10 years of some occurrence of an event happening or that victim would forego their opportunity to forever get compensation back under the bill.

We see, then, that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona brought forward an amendment that changed this, that eliminated this 10-year drop-dead rule and brought in the reasonable man test, where people would judge a situation on what a victim had been through, what a victim was dealing with, whether it was reasonable that he or she had taken so long to get their application in to the court, and make a decision based on science, based on understanding, based on a recognition of the human frailty and faults that lie within the human makeup at times. I thought her amendment was essentially an affirmation of where both the law is as well as the sentiment of what I believe this Legislature viewed as being a reasonable approach, to being a compassionate government as well as representing a compassionate citizenry that recognizes that people who are victims of crime don't always fit into neatly fitting definitions and 10-year rules and regulations and time frames.

The situation we noted as being especially difficult was the area of sexual assault or sexual abuse or spousal abuse, where victims take a lot of time to really internalize those, to recognize that they have been victims of crime, and often take years, if not a generation, to process those internalizations, what they mean and how they've affected their lives and their children's lives. In my view the amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona captured that.

The Solicitor General in his wisdom has not adopted that but has come with a provision that, in my view, goes some of the way to giving these victims of crime some opportunity to be heard, and that's through his amendment, which states as follows: "The Director may extend the period of time for making an application where the Director determines that there are compelling reasons to do so." One would assume that an applicant would not fall outside of the 10-year drop-dead rule, that was prescribed in the legislation, and would be forced, then, to get any compensation under the act at the sole behest of the director.

At this time in this Legislature we have no idea who this said director is, who has appointed him or her, what their viewpoint is, what evidence will be presented to them, what the forum is for presenting to them this information, all of that stuff. We are here left with a picture of some all-knowing, all-seeing being who's going to sit out there and decide compensation to deserving victims and those who are not deserving. In my view that's a very difficult position to put us in here, to really wholeheartedly get behind this amendment and say that this eradicates the unforeseen consequences that were in the other bill. Yeah, it does offer one more opportunity for the victim to be heard, but by no means is that an assurance that the right steps would be followed or the right tests under the law or what the minister said that the act is supposed to cure are followed. It puts an awful lot of power in the hands of one individual.

9:40

Upon looking at this as an objective toward the act, yes, one can say that this is incrementally better. Could it be a lot better? Yes, it could. In my view, it would be a lot better if we would have been adopting the amendment put forward under Bill 15 in the first amendment to this act. Nevertheless, because I'm a believer in incrementalism, I will be supporting this, although with the reservations I have. I hope that people faced with this situation are getting a fair and adequate hearing to present the evidence as it may be to the powers that may be at the time and if they should be receiving compensation under the act, that the act is getting them the benefits they so deserve. We've noticed some situations here where opportunities may have been missed in the past and may actually be missed in the future because of the way this legislation is written. I hope that is not the case.

Nevertheless, those are my comments. I would thank the Solicitor General for at least going away and working on the amendment and listening to what was brought up. Oftentimes I think there are situations where we put things through, and we get them done: let's not worry about it till the next time we open up the act six, 10 years from now. So I will say that. It's not everything we wanted, but like the Rolling Stones once said, Mr. Chair, "You can't always get what you want . . . you get what you need."

Anyways, thank you very much for allowing me to speak on this issue, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on amendment A2.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Pertaining to the amendment to Bill 15, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011, I appreciate the previous speaker and his comments about, you know, "You can't always get what you want," but you can certainly try for it. I do believe that the original amendment that was lost earlier tonight, put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, was a far stronger amendment and a better amendment. I do believe that, clearly, under the act as it still reads, there is way too much wiggle room because it says "may." It does not say "must." In the amendment 12.4 says an extension of time notwithstanding 12.2(2)(b) and 12.3, the director may – he may not as well – consider to extend the period of time for making an application where the director determines there are compelling reasons to do so. Once again, the inmates running the asylum.

There's way too much wiggle room in this, and I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. I have a question for the hon. minister, Mr. Chairman, and I hope he would answer it to help me make up my mind. What is the right of appeal from a decision of the director under this section?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, an applicant can appeal a decision of a director to the Criminal Injuries Review Board, as has always been the case. That's their right of appeal.

Mr. Mason: From there to the courts?

Mr. Oberle: I would have to look that up. I'm sorry. I don't have that answer at my fingertips. I believe that would be only if an error in law was made in the decision of the board.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, this amendment has the advantage of providing an exception to the rules that are set out in the legislation, but in my view the provisions of the legislation set the overall direction that should be followed. It doesn't set out under what circumstances an extension would be provided or any criteria really that would be used to make that decision. So my concern with this is that it introduces an element of arbitrariness into the administration of this. That concerns me. I think, therefore, it is quite a bit less satisfactory than the amendment that was just voted upon made by my colleague for Edmonton-Strathcona. I don't really believe that this does the trick, and I would be very concerned that the fact that this provides for an extension at the discretion of the director doesn't ensure that it is properly provided to people who legitimately need it. So I think, Mr. Chairman, that the minister's amendment falls short of what's needed.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on amendment A2.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to first commend and thank the Solicitor General for bringing this amendment forward. You know, I'm going to respectfully disagree with my colleague from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. We agree on 99 per cent of things, but I think that on this one, although it is not a perfect amendment, it's certainly better than what's there right now. I want to be very clear, though. I think that the original amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was better, that it hit the point better, it protected what we're trying to get at better. We're trying to protect individuals who address this issue of abuse that they've had earlier in their lives later in life after discovering it or remembering it or having the therapy, et cetera, that they need to remember it and deal with it or they feel protected to now deal with it or whatever have you. That's what we're trying to get at.

I hope that this amendment allows for that. I hope it does. It allows for it if the director determines there are compelling reasons to do so. That's very vague; it's too vague. It leaves a lot of discretion with someone who is not really accountable to anyone on a day-to-day basis. I don't think that's probably the best way to go, but it is certainly better, miles better, than not having it there at all.

In the Solicitor General's comments I think what he's clearly said in Hansard – and I think that it's key for the director, whoever that is, to remember and look at what the Solicitor General's intent and this House's intent were when this amendment was brought forward – is that this is specifically for those instances where individuals are abused and then later in life are in a position or able to remember, et cetera, that abuse and deal with it at that time. One of the things that you need to look at when interpreting legislation, of course, is the debate in Hansard, and I hope that between what the Solicitor General has said and what other members of this House have said, clearly the director, when these situations present themselves, will use his discretion given in this amendment to do exactly what we're talking about here.

I would hope that other members of the government, particularly the former Justice minister and the Justice minister, would hopefully get on record as perhaps saying that that is exactly what the intent of this amendment is so that the director can feel emboldened to use that discretion in every situation where there has been a victim of abuse in their youth or a victim of abuse in an abusive relationship, and they can't deal with it for more than 10 years after because either they didn't remember it or they didn't feel safe or whatever the reason is.

With that I will support this amendment. I do thank the Solicitor General for bringing it forward. It is rare in this House that somebody on the government side actually listens to something that comes up in debate and actually deals with it. Clearly, it's not exactly how I or others on this side of the House would deal with it, but he did deal with it, and he did make an attempt. I think that's noteworthy and commendable.

I would also note that in this House and in this Wildrose Party we have free votes, so we are completely able – I don't think the sky will fall if there's some disagreement on our side of the House as to whether this amendment goes far enough or not. With that, I will sit down. Once again, I thank the Solicitor General for the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I felt compelled to just stand and make one point today regarding the amendment to the victims of crime legislation. When I first entered the House, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek will remember that she asked me to conduct a review of the victims of crime legislation. I spent six months out there travelling the province and consulting, and I think one of the things that surprised me the very most in that consultation was to find that there was abuse of the fund and that people were actually making claims that were abusive to the fund and that was actually diminishing the fund for those who needed it.

So I want to commend the minister for creating some certainty around this but also creating a methodology for people that do repress memory and do need longer. I would say that both happen, and I think the thing that surprised me the most in the review was the nature of some of the people that were abusing the fund and how they were abusing it. It was quite surprising to me. I think that this is a good compromise. It gives certainty but also allows a way and a methodology because I do think there are repressed memories or some of this stuff really does take time to be able to come to a point where somebody is willing to access help. I would like to support this amendment. I think it's a good piece. I think it adds to the legislation, and the other maybe opened it too wide and would have actually diminished the very fund that we're trying to protect for victims of crime.

Thanks.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chairman, I had to get up right away on this because I do remember the Member for Calgary-Shaw when I was the minister and asking her to review it. You know, I guess for me if you're talking apples to apples, I would be all right with that. I remember as the former minister talking to the member and the members of the committee, actually, on the victims of crime and talking about the abuse.

What is before us on this particular amendment isn't about abuse of the victims of crime. What we're talking about is one section, and it talks about how those who have been abused in the past have the right to come forward. The minister has acknowledged that. In fact, he has listened very intently to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who brought this forward, and then my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere, credit to him, has realized that there is a hole within this piece of legislation and talks about compelling reasons. He didn't argue at all about the abuse in the system whatsoever.

We're talking about a statute of limitation on section 12.2, and it goes on to (a) about two years and (b). The minister then brings forward an amendment, and at no time during his speaking notes does he talk anything about abuse of the system. What he does talk about – I took some notes – is the public consultation process. He didn't mention anything about abuse in the system. He talked about uncertainty in the community, which I asked him. He talked about the fact that this regularly happens, and then he went into some considerable discussion about what is considered compelling. He went on from there to talk about what he considered compelling was the sexual abuse of a minor. The realization of their injuries comes later in life. At no time did he talk anywhere – and I've listened intently because, as everyone knows in this Legislature, this is a bill that when I was the minister was, quite frankly, dear to my heart. We have spent several hours speaking about this particular piece of legislation, and I don't think anyone at any time will criticize.

There has probably been some abuse in the system. If the Member for Calgary-Shaw remembers, the piece of legislation that we brought forward – and I can't even remember – was brought to address that. What we're talking about at this particular time is with the entire bill. If you want to go . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Continue, hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, we've got some chatter in the back, and the member that was originally giving us heck for chattering is just back into the conversation with some of her colleagues, so she can maybe address her own colleague instead of us.

Ms Blakeman: Take it outside.

Mrs. Forsyth: Take it outside.

When we talk about Bill 15, which was tabled in this Legislature, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011, clearly spells out the ability for the process to be speeded up so that victims who are victims of crime can access their crimes quicker.

I guess I felt – and our new word of the night is “compelled” – compelled to jump up and make my comments after listening to the Member for Calgary-Shaw because, quite frankly, we're not talking apples to apples.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose on amendment A2.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to affirm some comments that have been made by other members specifically with respect to direction to the director. Compelling reasons, in my eyes, are people awakening or realizing after the said time frame the harm that was caused them.

I think it's incredibly important that we very much stress the fact that while we know very well, Mr. Chair, that victims of child sexual abuse, in particular, often do not realize or awaken to the fact of such abuse until many years later. We've heard testimony from folks that have referenced victims who are in the public light who have come forward with such realizations many years after adulthood.

I just felt the need to rise and confirm once again that based on the dialogue here today and the dialogue that we have heard from the minister, any such directors in this position shall hopefully reference our discussions here today in this Assembly.

Mr. Hehr: May. Not shall.

Mr. Bhullar: Not may.

They may consider the very serious intent of the folks in this Assembly today. The victims of child sexual abuse need justice. They need healing, Mr. Chair. They need an opportunity to receive whatever benefits are so afforded to them.

Also, Mr. Chair, I think it's imperative that we do take a second. Although this discussion, the amendment and so on, deals with discussions of a financial nature, this is really, truly about healing and about justice. Quite frankly, I think we live in a society that is often terrified to discuss such issues. However, they are incredibly prevalent issues in our society, and they are the underlying cause of much harm in our society, the underlying cause for many people, quite frankly, not living up to everything they are, many people suffering in many different emotional, spiritual, and mental capacities in addition to physical capacities.

Mr. Chairman, by us passing this amendment, we are not just saying that victims are so afforded financial rights; we are also saying that we as a society, we as a people recognize that it is incredibly difficult for victims to step forth. We are saying that we side with them, we stand with them, and we as a society, as a population, as a whole will work with them to ensure that we, number one, help them heal.

Number two, I profess that all members of this Assembly join in a wish, quite frankly, join in a movement by which each of us does what we can to spread awareness of such issues to prevent this from happening. The harm associated with such acts is often irreversible. It is up to us as members of this Assembly, as people with a voice in this province to step forth and to offer our voice, our commitment, our resolve to help people have those difficult conversations and to prevent this from happening in the first instance.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I just want to make sure that it's clear because I've heard a number of members speak now, and their reference point is always about childhood sexual abuse. I want to make very clear that the scientific information that supports this does include childhood sexual abuse – absolutely correct – but the other place that we see it, unfortunately commonly, is around abuse from faith leaders. Let me put it that way. It also includes women and spousal or domestic abuse, particularly long-term abusive situations, which can be psychological abuse, financial abuse, and severe physical abuse.

I want to make clear that the intention of this was to include all of those categories and that we're not omitting anyone. We're not promoting one category above another. It may well be that some of the speakers previous to me are more comfortable talking about or referencing children. Fair enough. If they will come to the discussion based on that, I'll take it, but let's be clear that it's not narrowed to that group and that it does include – and I want to make sure we're clear – those women that are victims of abuse. I will also add that I'm well aware that there are men and gay and lesbian partners who are also a part of that unfortunate grouping of spousal partners who have been abused, so it's not limited to women, and I'll be clear about that.

Part of the other thing I want to address here is the impassioned speeches from people that have spoken before me talking about recognizing the underlying causes of harm and giving direction to the director here. None of that is actually in the amendment. Unless the regulations give that or unless there is an annotated version of the act, none of that will go forward, and 10 years from now nobody is going to look up the Hansard. My experience has been that it just doesn't happen. So unless there's another way like an annotated version of the act that is regularly used by people that administer the act, this kind of information doesn't fall forward to them. If you really want something to be happening here where we're recognizing underlying causes of harm, loss potential, and underemployment and recognizing how difficult it is for victims to step forward, part of that is government support for those agencies that actually provide services to the victims that have been described.

That is about adequate funding, adequate, predictable, long-term funding for the NGOs that supply those services in this society, and that includes sexual assault centres and domestic abuse shelters. So I want to underline that to the members. This stuff doesn't happen magically; it doesn't happen by good fairies. These services are developed and administered by the NGOs in our society, and they need to be funded appropriately by government because they are providing services that the majority of citizens expect are provided by government, and that funding needs to be adequate, sustained, and long-term, which I would argue is not currently the case.

Thank you for allowing me to put those couple of points on the record. Now we can get on to voting on this amendment.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried unanimously]

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, could I please speak to the bill at committee?

The Chair: You would like to speak? Of course.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Now, I haven't had an opportunity to speak on this bill at committee yet other than on amendment A2.

The Chair: On the bill as amended.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, there's a lot in this bill.

Now, I have some specific questions for the minister. Of course, other members have discussed this, but the victims of crime fund, according to the estimates in this year's budget, will have net assets of over $47 million, and that's to March 31 of this year. The minister, in accordance with the act and the regulations, uses the fund for grants for programs that benefit victims of crime, costs incurred by the Victims of Crime Programs Committee and the Criminal Injuries Review Board in carrying out their duties, remuneration and expenses payable to members of the committee and the review board, financial benefits payable under the act, and, of course, the cost of administering the act.

I have questions around the financial benefits payable under the act. Now, earlier today we had a discussion in question period, and it relates to this, Mr. Chairman. There are two core programs operating under the act, the financial benefits program for eligible victims who have suffered injury as a result of a violent criminal offence and grants. It's the violent criminal offence and the financial benefits program for eligible victims that I would like to discuss.

Certainly, all hon. members, I believe, would be of the view that the gentleman that we discussed in question period today, Mr. Tom Bregg, was an Edmonton transit bus driver who was doing his job and was viciously, violently assaulted by a passenger. The gentleman is still getting over those injuries. He has a WCB claim. There are issues with the WCB. I'm not going to get into that, but my question to the minister at this time in debate would be: what happens to an individual such as this who is getting workers' compensation benefits? Are they also eligible to make an application to the victims of crime fund for their injuries?

In the case of this man it is hard for us to understand exactly what he is going through as a result of the injuries that he received from this violent assault. He still needs more surgery to repair the damage from the assault. But what happens in this case, where he is or was receiving WCB benefits? It remains to be seen whether he's going to be on full or partial benefits. Can an individual like this apply to the victims of crime fund?

Thank you.

10:10

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to clarify those remarks. I will speak with great care here in that it would be improper for me to indicate whether or not the individual in question had in any way applied to the fund, and I certainly would be in no position to know what the status of his WCB compensation situation is. I have certainly not spoken to the individual. If I knew anything about his case, I would feel extremely constrained in speaking about it on the floor of the House. So in general I could say that, yes, the individual could apply to the victims of crime fund.

Interesting that this particular case is used as an example not just because it's timely – it is – but because it really illustrates a difference between a compensation program. The victims of crime fund is not a compensation program. So an individual in his situation would be hoping for compensation for lost work or the lost ability to work and other things. That would typically be dealt with through the Workers' Compensation Board. But an individual in this situation could apply to the victims of crime fund.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister, for that. I appreciate that.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on Bill 15?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 15 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 8 Missing Persons Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today to move Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 8, the Missing Persons Act. The Missing Persons Act will allow a police agency to access the personal information they need to help find missing persons in cases where the police have no reason to suspect a crime has been committed. Currently in these situations a lot of the information is left unavailable to them. To try to locate that person is very difficult. Many times this information would be vital to bringing these cases to a timely and positive outcome.

Mr. Chairman, over the last month I've had a lot of telephone calls, and a lot of articles that have been written in the papers have supported this bill. In one copy, the March 1 Edmonton Journal, Brent Wittmeier and Jana Pruden had some interesting comments, and I'd like to read them to the Assembly. The deputy chief of the Calgary Police Service chairs the law amendments committee for the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police that recommended these changes last spring. Murray Stooke is that deputy chief. He said that "the bill will go a long way in helping police track down . . . Albertans currently missing. Since proving a crime is difficult, police were unable to access telephone, bank, or even health records" to help locate people. Also in that article a mother whose son disappeared said that "she understands some people may have concerns about the release of personal information, but she thinks the legislation's potential benefits far outweigh any risks."

When I had the opportunity to brief the opposition members, I felt pretty good about where this legislation was going, and I felt pretty good support. Mr. Chairman, Alberta is leading the charge when it comes to the missing persons legislation. No other province has initiated detailed legislation specific to this issue. I'm proud to stand in this House and push for this legislation, push for the missing persons, push for their families, and push for their friends and for the police agencies who hold the responsibility to bring these people home. I'd like to thank the members of the opposition for hearing me out and, like I say, for the most part being very supportive.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about some of the ways that he thought may strengthen the bill. In fact, I know that he'll be introducing an amendment that I do believe will strengthen the bill and that I will support.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I'll sit down. Let's deal with those amendments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First, I would again like to thank the hon. Member for Whitecourt-

Ste. Anne for his work on this bill. I have received correspondence and phone calls from people in this province in support of the bill and from others that have had questions about this legislation in this Assembly, and I did my best to answer their questions.

I know the Missing Persons Act is a legislative first. I think it is a good step, but we have to have limitations and, certainly, controls on this bill. This act, as we all know, will allow a police agency to compel the production of personal information about a missing person in cases where the police have no reason to suspect that a crime has been committed, and we are the first jurisdiction in the country to contemplate legislation of this nature.

Now, at committee there are a lot of details that we should discuss in the sections analysis of Bill 8, but certainly we recognize that a government agency cannot refuse to disclose personal information to a police service that compels production of that information. In some cases legislation governing sensitive personal information may include a confidentiality provision that would be in conflict with this provision. That's outlined in section 2.

Section 3 is dealing with orders regarding records and the right of entry. We talked earlier about the role of the JP, or justice of the peace, in this. Section 3(3) empowers the JP, the justice of the peace, to make an order if satisfied that the order is necessary for an investigation. I asked in our discussions on this bill: why is that necessary? I didn't realize that in a lot of cases it is very difficult to track down a Queen's Bench justice to get this work done, so I can live with that. I have some concerns about that, but as it was explained to me, I can certainly live with that because sometimes you don't have a lot of time.

Now, I realize that this provision, section 3(1)(b), could be controversial because it allows a justice of the peace to authorize police in some cases to go right in. The only safeguard here, as I understand it, is the test of reasonable belief. But I'm not so sure, Mr. Chairman. I hope this applies only to the one location.

I'm sure there's going to be a lot of discussion on this over the evening. This is new legislation. It's in some ways innovative legislation. We've got to be careful whenever we are providing additional powers to our police forces that there are checks and balances here. Certainly, when we go through this and we look at some things that would improve this bill, I would suggest that we need to have provisions to ensure that the Information and Privacy Commissioner has the power to investigate complaints and that a whistleblower has the right to report a breach of this act.

My amendment, that I'm going to propose here in a minute, would deal with section 7. I know that all hon. members of this Assembly have been waiting a significant amount of time to deal with Bill 8, and I do hope to bring some of the concerns and questions that have been addressed to me from various interested parties on Bill 8 to the floor of the Assembly. Section 7 of the Missing Persons Act limits the disclosure of personal information collected about a missing person. The section begins with the clause, "Despite section 40 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act," which makes this act paramount over the FOIP Act with respect to the disclosure of personal information. Despite, I should say, Mr. Chairman, is like notwithstanding in legal parlance. Now, the legal question is: does the language remove the ability of the commissioner to investigate a complaint or a report of improper use or disclosure by a whistleblower? I'm told it does.

Now, there is legal precedent in order F2005-007 issued in 2006. The commissioner considered a case in which the Maintenance Enforcement Act limited the disclosure of personal information collected under the act. The following is from the case summary published with the order on the commissioner's website. I'm not going to go through that in detail, Mr. Chairman, but certainly I think there's a lot we can do with this bill. There are a lot of questions about it, and I think those questions are valid.

Again, whenever I think of missing persons – and I don't know what the hon. member had in mind, but if B.C. had a bill like this, would that horrible crime that occurred in Pitt Meadows have been solved sooner? Certainly, there were reports of missing persons down in the lower east side of Vancouver. This morning on the way to work at the Assembly I heard on the radio that the Edmonton police had taped off an area around the mooring dock of the Edmonton Queen. It was Project Kare of the Edmonton Police Service looking for women who had gone missing over the last number of months and years in this province. All hon. members of this Assembly are aware of some of the cases in the county of Strathcona. So there certainly is an expectation that this bill, hopefully, would resolve some of those or speed up the investigations of those individuals who have been reported missing.

The amendment that I have this evening for this bill I think is necessary because it corrects or clears up deficiencies in both section 6 and section 7 of the proposed act. I think that we see as we proceed that we need to ensure that the Information and Privacy Commissioner retains jurisdiction over personal information that is used and disclosed under the Missing Persons Act.

At this time I have the signed copy for the hon. Clerk, and I have additional copies for each and every hon. member. I'll just wait until these are distributed. Fair enough?

The Chair: Sure.

Hon. member, please continue on amendment A1.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I was speaking earlier about how this would work with section 6 and section 7 and certainly the commissioner's order going back to 2005. That order specifically would be F2005-007. The commissioner found – and I was talking about the Maintenance Enforcement Act – that section 12(3) and section 15(1) were inconsistent or in conflict with disclosure provisions in section 40 of the FOIP Act because section 40 contemplates numerous other disclosures that the limited disclosures allowed under the Maintenance Enforcement Act. It is also interesting to note that the commissioner held that section 12(3) and section 15(1) of the Maintenance Enforcement Act governed the disclosure of the information. The FOIP Act did not apply, and it did not have jurisdiction over the disclosure. This order had been used to explain how the FOIP Act is interpreted by the commissioner in a government of Alberta publication, FOIP Bulletin 11.

This bill, Bill 8, introduced by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne: the hon. member indicates, and I certainly have every confidence that his view is correct, that he believes this act preserves the right of an individual to make a complaint to the commissioner in the right of a whistleblower to report improper use and disclosure. I believe that the commissioner also finds that this is acceptable. I haven't heard the commissioner publicly speak on this act. Sometimes there's a press release that comes out. I have on other statutes, but I haven't seen it if it has this time.

Certainly, whenever we look at this amendment, that is generally what is proposed. I think this amendment will give greater certainty that the commissioner has jurisdiction to investigate a complaint about the use or disclosure of personal information under the FOIP Act and also that whistle-blower provisions apply.

It is common to add provisions to acts for greater certainty, and I think A1 does that when there is likely to be a misunderstanding, and hopefully there will never be any misunderstandings about this. It is critically important that an act allow the police or the police forces to collect, use, and disclose personal information in a way that is unprecedented in Canada, but it must be subject to oversight by the Privacy Commissioner.

That's why we propose this amendment, and hopefully it will be agreeable to hon. members of this Assembly because I think it clarifies some of the issues that we have discussed in our remarks. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne on amendment A1.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I want to assure individuals who believe, you know, that their personal information is collected, used, or disclosed inappropriately under any act: the information officer will take that seriously. I think that by stating this in the act the way that the member has proposed strengthens the act, and I can assure everyone out there that nothing in this act does limit the powers or the duties of the Information and Privacy Commissioner under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. I do support the amendments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on amendment A1.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Chair, actually I, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, will support this amendment. My preference, actually, would be to speak on the bill in its entirety, so I'd be prepared to vote on this particular amendment if you could put me on the speaking list.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A1.

Ms Blakeman: That's correct. I have a number of comments to make on this bill, and the table is already holding some six amendments, I think, that I'm proposing to bring forward tonight.

Speaking specifically to amendment A1, that has been brought forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, in fact our caucus's official critic on this bill, I want to support what he has done here. It's a wise move. This act is important because it's the first, and everyone else will use it as a guidepost and develop their legislation based on what's proposed in front of us. The act quite deliberately set itself up outside of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act because, in fact, it sets out to collect personal information.

It was very important to our caucus that we have a ground of appeal, that we have an avenue of oversight, of monitoring and evaluation, and that, obviously, in the province of Alberta is the office of the commissioner of freedom of information and protection of privacy. They have the expertise and knowledge there, and we in our caucus, as put forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, have an expectation that those services and that expertise would be available to the citizens of Alberta if they felt that their information had been inappropriately collected, used, or disclosed. It's very important to me that we have that avenue of appeal if you want to view it that way. I hope that this section also casts itself across the wider understanding of this act.

I'll speak later about my extreme reservations on what this act is proposing to do, but this amendment does go some small way toward addressing some of my concerns about what's needed to be able to hold these powers of collection of personal information in check and to be able to rely upon the expertise of the commissioner's office to be able to investigate and, particularly, to protect whistle-blowers who bring forward information.

I urge all of my colleagues in the Assembly to support amendment A1. I'm sure the chairman already has me on the speaking list because he knew about the amendments.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: On amendment A1, any other hon. member wish to speak?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Now we go back to the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I thought it was important as a member of the Wildrose and the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek to get on the record how I feel and how, actually, the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek feel about the Missing Persons Act.

I'm actually pleased and quite honoured to rise and speak to Bill 8, the Missing Persons Act, and I want to thank the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne for his hard work on this bill. Again, I think this is the second time he's brought something through the Legislature. The time is late, so my mind isn't working as quickly as it should, but I believe it was the establishment of a task force on sexual exploitation through a motion that he brought forward. He continues to be on a bit of a roll.

I guess I'm encouraged to see that this legislation was requested by the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police and that the government has responded to their request. Why I say that: as a former Solicitor General I had the honour of working with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, and I always listened and respected what they had to say when they were making suggestions because, after all, their officers are on the ground and know the pulse of what's happening on the streets, or what I like to call the dark side. I think that this is a response from the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, and I respect the government for that.

As has been noted, if the Missing Persons Act is passed, Alberta is going to be the first province to pass missing persons legislation, and I think that's something Alberta should be proud of. I know the hard work that I had to do when I brought the Amber Alert to Canada. As we all know, Alberta was the first province to adopt the Amber Alert, and then I went across the country, actually, making all of the other provinces aware of the Amber Alert. Now it's Canada-wide, and it's something that I think not only Alberta should be proud of but Canada.

What I'm going to suggest to the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne is a challenge to him and to the Minister of Justice. When the minister is at his federal-provincial-territorial meetings, his FTPs, he has the ability to certainly take the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and this legislation, and they can push this across the country.

I think that what's important about this, as with the Amber Alert, is that when someone is missing, time is of the essence. I support this bill particularly because it gives police the tools to speed up the process of finding missing people. With the ability to find more information more quickly, police will be able to assess whether a missing person is, in fact, a missing person or someone who simply does not want to be found. It grants police access to information, including credit and debit purchases or text messages, when someone is missing, but it cannot prove whether or not a crime has been committed. At that moment police need a production order to get information which they can only obtain when a crime has been committed. This has been an obstacle when trying to find a missing person, and I think that the bill will certainly address some of that.

I'm glad that this bill was crafted from the standpoint that a person has the right to disappear if they choose, and this is, essentially, important if a person is fleeing an abusive situation. I think that if people remember, I brought forward a horrific situation where I was dealing with someone that had actually left a very, very abusive situation, went through all the procedures to have a name change, and then no sooner had they gotten their name changed than Service Alberta decided to post that, and the whole process started again. For Jane and Janet Doe it's still very, very difficult to communicate with them. They won't leave a number or anything, and to me that's very sad.

As people in this Legislature know, I do a lot of research when I'm going to stand up and support a piece of legislation or if I'm not going to support a piece of legislation. The Wildrose caucus doesn't have a lot of money for their research budget, so we end up writing a lot of our own speeches or doing a lot of our own research, which makes our days, if I may say, very, very long. In that research I had some statistics, and interestingly enough, when I pulled this data off – when did I do it? – in April 20 of 2011, I went to the Missing Children Society. I know this particular bill deals with adults, but there were 51,000 missing children at this particular time in Canada. They go on to break it down by provinces. This was from 2009, so I imagine the numbers have gone up quite a bit. In Alberta alone we've got 5,172 missing children.

In my research I decided to go and dig a little deeper, and lo and behold if I don't come up with Alberta Missing Persons. We have 198 missing persons in Alberta alone. I found that fascinating, to the point where, you know, our latest missing person has been covered all over the Edmonton news, the young soldier that has just disappeared. He's got family combing the riverbank and wondering where he's gone. Has he fallen into the river? What tragic thing has happened? I mean, no one can second-guess what happened to him. Of course, before that was the elderly couple, Lyle and Marie McCann, an elderly couple who disappeared and whose family is still looking for them.

Mr. Chair, when you start going through the website Alberta Missing Persons, it's very, very sad because some of these people have actually been missing for years, some of them not so long ago. You know, you have a fellow by the name of John Armstrong, who disappeared March 21, 2009. Some of them go back for years, and to me it's important to have some closure. I can quite frankly say that if I had one of my children, who are not children anymore, who are adults, go missing – or maybe I can use my husband, for example – just all of a sudden disappear off the face of the Earth, I would like to know. I know probably tonight sometime we're going to hear about a spouse that has decided that they just can't be in a marriage anymore or that they just have to get away from the things that they're suffering in the day. Well, that doesn't preclude for the family that is left behind the ability for some sort of tracking.

I know the Minister of Justice has guaranteed that all information gathered will be separate from the rest of the police intelligence and will only be used for missing persons cases. I know that there is a fine balance between finding victims and intruding on the private lives of innocent people, and I believe that this legislation strikes it by ensuring a narrow focus on what information will be accessed and how it will be used to find missing people.

The likelihood that this legislation could be the difference between life and death is to me quite striking. It allows individuals, if they choose, to disappear in relative peace, but it also makes this legislation a worthwhile endeavour should an adult go missing under very, very strange circumstances.

This legislation also states that police will not reveal any information or location of the person to someone who filed a missing persons report but will only confirm that that particular person has been located alive. I think that's probably safe because, quite frankly, if it was my husband, that's probably the only way he would stay alive if I found him. It's a good thing that he has that protection. I personally find it quite cowardly, if someone can't stay in a relationship, to do something that, I think, is important so that the family has closure.

I think what's also important to consider for me is those who suffer from dementia and the difference it will make to the people who love these people. I see that quite often as the critic for seniors. I've brought up in this House on numerous occasions my mum in a seniors' home. They have several levels of care in that particular home. I don't know how many times, quite frankly, I've walked a senior back to their room or taken one of the seniors to the dining room table. For that matter, if a little senior has decided to go for a little walk, even if it's to the drug store, and I'm driving over to see my mum and I see them wandering around, I realize that they're confused. It's quite easy for them, in a city as big as Calgary, as far as I'm concerned, especially – you know, I live along Calgary-Fish Creek, so we have the Bow River that's very, very close. For them to take a walk and get lost in Fish Creek park isn't out of the question.

Mr. Chair, for the 198 missing people that are on this website that I happened to locate – and, quite frankly, there are probably, I can think, three or four that need to be added to this particular website. I really don't know the last time this website was updated, but I would bet that we could probably add to this particular website at least a dozen people. For the family of Lyle and Marie McCann and, for that matter, the family of the soldier that went missing a week ago, maybe this will help them; maybe it won't.

I can tell you as the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and the critic responsible that we will be supporting this. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Each year in Alberta our law enforcement services receive over 10,000 missing persons reports. I do believe that based on the members who spoke previously and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek as a former Solicitor General, this legislation will be another positive step towards optimizing the efficiency of police and perhaps finding those that are missing.

There certainly is a fine balance between finding victims and intruding on private lives of innocent people. I think all of us in this Assembly of all political stripes believe that it's important to ensure that there is a narrow focus on what information will be assessed and how it will be assessed pertaining to helping find missing people. But the likelihood that this legislation could be the difference between life and death and also allow individuals to disappear in relative peace, shall I say, will make this legislation an entirely worthwhile endeavour.

Also, it's important to recognize that it's important to consider those who suffer from a variety of illnesses that perhaps could create the ability of getting lost. In reference to what we've been seeing on the national news as of late, certainly I want to say that legislation of any sort that can help, I think, a family and a loved one to be found, it is my hope that this would be an intended spiritual help towards that even though this will become law.

As I look and see the story of the Chretien family, where Mrs. Chretien was found after 48 days of being lost, of course, our prayers and thoughts are with her family. The officials are looking for her husband now. Mrs. Chretien was travelling from Penticton, from British Columbia down into Nevada. You can imagine the human spirit of being in your van for 48 days and surviving and doing it in very good shape. Certainly, that must have been quite a Mother's Day present to the son, who we saw on television tonight. He was reacquainted with his mom on Mother's Day. Can you imagine being missing for 48 days? Our prayers and thoughts are with the Chretien family, especially while they're in search of his father and her husband. Of course, our prayers and thoughts are with them.

I'll just conclude by saying that I believe that this legislation states that police will not reveal any information or locations of the person to someone who filed the missing persons report but will only confirm that the person has been located alive. I think that is truly music to all of your ears, to get a phone call indicating that your loved one has been found and that they are alive. I believe this is another essential component of the bill, and I support it.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I'm encouraged by this. It was requested by the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police. The government responded to this request, and I'm pleased to see that. Therefore, I want to thank all those who were involved and have had a role to play in this. As the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo I'm pleased that this legislation has been brought forward, and I look forward to supporting Bill 8, Missing Persons Act.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I don't think there's a person in the world who doesn't have that moment, when you hear on the radio or you see the tickertape news go by on the television or you pick up a newspaper or you walk by the newspaper boxes and see it on the front of the newspaper box, who doesn't have that little gasp, that little clutch at your heart when you see a news story about someone that's gone missing. Everybody reacts with that: "Oh, no. Oh, dear. That's a terrible thing to happen. How frightening for the individual. How terrible for their family." It's a genuine emotional response. This bill also generates that kind of emotional response. I think it was developed with the best of intentions by the sponsoring member.

In this society that we live in, we have increasing capture of information in electronic form. Our cellphone captures information. I just found out, to my horror, that my prized iPhone is tracking my every movement. They're quick, quick to get out news releases saying that, oh, they're not going to do anything with the information, but they're collecting it. Uh-huh. Oh, yeah. I'll trust them as far as I can throw them. But we're also tracked with our credit card usage, bank transactions. We have GPS in cars that track where we've been and how long we've stopped and where our favourite gas station is and how often we make a detour to the Dairy Queen. We're tracked on things like land titles and utilities and where we shop and entertain and where we work and at home. We're tracked everywhere.

We were all badgered into getting loyalty cards for the grocery store because that was the only way we were going to get discounts now, and of course we all duly sign up. Everywhere that we shop, we've all got a loyalty card. It tracks what we buy, what kind of toilet paper, and how often we buy shampoo. You can figure out an awful lot of information from people based on that data that is collected through electronic means.

There is no reason for us to trust any commercial collector of that information, that they're going to use it in a way we hope they're going to use it. That's why we need government to put strong regulation into place about the collection, use, and disclosure of personal information. Government is the only agency that we can trust on this one.

When I heard about this legislation coming forward and I read in the news that the FOIP commissioner was all in favour of it, I thought: well, really? Because that didn't seem like the kind of information that the Privacy Commissioner would be gung ho on, that we would be opening up personal information on people who had done nothing wrong, who had broken no law, who had no reason to be under scrutiny or surveillance by the police, that their personal information would be opened up for them to be looking at. It seemed a bit odd to me that the Privacy Commissioner would be keen on that, so I phoned him. In fact, he was carefully reserving his opinion, but indeed his office had been made aware of the legislation, and they had made some comments on it. I think if I look back, I can see that the commissioner has spoken a couple of times, saying: hey, just let's calm down and not be quite so quick to collect information on people all the time.

One of the ones I can think of was around a proposed bill on junkyards so that we could get at people who were stealing copper wire and things like that. They wanted everybody to register when they brought in stuff so that they could backtrack them. You know, if something was wrong, they could find out who was stealing copper wire, that kind of thing. Ditto for pawn shop registries, the same thing.

I think we have to be very careful when we create legislation, particularly first-of-kind legislation, that we get it right. I often find myself in a struggle. Do I accept legislation that I don't entirely agree with because it's probably the best thing that we're going to get and we won't be able to reopen it? There won't be enough demand to reopen it for – who knows? – 10 or 20 years. Can I live with it for 10 or 20 years? Is it good enough to get it started? Or do I say: "No. It's not good enough. We can't accept this. We should either start over, or there should be modifications to it?"

11:00

When we look at the PIPA Act, which is the act that regulates the private sector and its collection of personal information, PIPA allows police to request information from organizations to investigate, but it has a number of provisions in there that curtail police activity. My issue with the legislation that's being proposed here is that it's a great idea. I think there needs to be some legislation to help us find missing people. Let's be very clear here. This is a situation where there's no criminal activity expected or anticipated around the disappearance. There's nothing that would allow police to use the other means, and they've got extensive powers of investigation. There's nothing in the disappearance of someone that allows the police to use all of the other powers that they have available to them under the criminal acts part of their investigative tools. They can't use those tools, so the police are asking for other tools to be able to investigate when somebody does go missing and there's no criminal action around it.

My reading of this bill is: right idea, wrong bill because what has happened with this legislation is that it's casting the net too wide. What it's done is essentially make it illegal for any person to go off the radar screen for any period of time. It makes law-abiding Albertans into not criminals but certainly brings them under scrutiny of the police for things as simple as stopping to visit their mom or taking a detour to visit their mom on their way back from a trip, deciding to treat themselves and going to a spa instead of going directly home. A friend of mine was driving to Calgary during a snowstorm and just thought: "You know what? I'm not enjoying this ride. I'm going to check myself into a hotel, and I'll start out again tomorrow in daylight."

Any of those situations, according to what we have before us in this act, would open that person up to now coming under the scrutiny of the police and having their lives opened to the police to start looking for them because the way it's set out in this legislation, if you don't report back to literally those people who would normally expect to be hearing from you, you could be deemed to be a missing person, and all of this kicks into place.

So if you don't take the time when you decide to stop at the Jasper Park Lodge and treat yourself to a night there or you pull off the highway in Red Deer and go into the Super 8 there or you pull over and you go on a detour and stop and see your mom, you know, who lives out of town, before you come back into town, and you don't call the people, not one person but all of those people who would usually know where you were, then you fall into the definition of where this act could start to run in your life.

That's what it says. In this section it says:

- (b) "missing person" means
  - (i) an individual who has not been in contact with those persons . . .

Not a person, not a spouse, not a family member, but those persons. . . . who would likely be in contact with the individual.

So your best friend, your boss, your spouse, your neighbour, any of those people that you would regularly speak to. If you haven't informed all of them that you're going to stop and stay overnight with your mom, you could be deemed a missing person, and the police could then insist and could get access.

Here's what they could get access to: records containing contact or identification information, your telephone and electronic communication records, including without limitation records from wireless devices, the GPS in your phone that I was just talking about with the iPhone. They could get your cellphone records. They could get inbound and outbound text messages and what you browsed, you know, on your website archive. They can get access to all of that because you didn't phone all six people and tell them you were stopping over to see your mom.

They can also get your global positioning system tracking records. So if you've got a TomTom in your car or a BobBob or whatever the heck they're called, a GarthGarth, they can get that information. They can get video records, including any closed-captioned television footage that you may have gone through. So you stopped and got gas. They can go and get that footage from the gas station and see that you bought Cheezies as well as gas. Now you're in trouble. They could get your employment information: where you work, how much you were paid, what hours you work, what your classification is.

Now, remember, folks, that all you did was stop and stay overnight with your mom, and you didn't call all the people that would expect you to regularly be in contact. That's all you did. You pulled off the highway in Red Deer because the weather wasn't great, but you didn't phone all those people. That's all you did, and now they're looking at your employment records: how much you make and how long you've worked there and what it says about whether you're a good employee or not or whether you've got any letters of reprimand in your employment records. That's what they can get access to.

Let me go on. Any records about health information. Okay. So now they've got your GPS, your positioning, your telephone records, your health records, your employment records, any closed-captioning footage that you may appear on. Oh, wait. We're going to go into your school and postsecondary attendance information. The police can get records about travel and accommodation information, your financial information – how many bank accounts you have, who your co-signers are, how much money you deposit into your bank account – and any other records that the justice of the peace considers appropriate. These are very, very wide powers and tools that we are giving to the police with this act.

We want to do the right thing. Anybody in here could tell you the people that have gone missing that have been big stories in the last six to eight months in Alberta. The couple that went off in their motorhome from St. Albert. Now, to be fair, they should not qualify under this act because, in fact, their motorhome was found by the RCMP burned out, but an investigation did not ensue from that. They didn't follow up on it, but they should have. They would have been considered a criminal investigation, and they could have done more work to find out what the heck happened to them. We still don't know what happened to those people.

We don't know what happened to the military officer who was running on the same running track along the river valley that I use who disappeared.

There's another couple that left another place in Alberta to go somewhere in B.C. We don't know where they are.

It's one of those horrifying nightmares. It's like the nightmare of having your child taken. That missing person nightmare really affects us. It's a very emotionally based fear that we all have, that we or a loved one will go missing, and we will do anything to find them.

But we didn't do it right with this legislation because in this legislation what we've done is say that for anybody that isn't where we and the key people in their lives would expect them to be, where they don't report in, the police can now go and pull all of this information on them. Once they've got it, kids, it's in an electronic database. "Well, that's okay because it's in the police's electronic database, and they wouldn't release this information. No, no, no. Nothing is going to change there."

11:10

Well, it does change. We just had a bunch of different police forces, each with their own databases, which now got combined into a general database called TALON, and now it can be accessed by people that we didn't expect to have access to that information when it was first collected. Now it has access to a variety of levels of security officers and possibly first responders and a number of others that we didn't anticipate when that was collected by that police force in Calgary or Edmonton or Calmar or Fort McMurray. Who knew that it was going to turn into a gigantic TALON database and have access by a bunch of other people? We never anticipated that. But once information is in an electronic database, it's in there, and it is so easy to combine with other databases and move on far beyond our control.

I have a number of amendments that I would like to bring forward because I understand how much people want this bill. They want to be able to look after missing persons. But to me this bill is almost unacceptable in the powers that it gives police to investigate our lives when we haven't done anything wrong. We're still decent, law-abiding people: my friend who stopped in Red Deer on a bad driving night, you know, my cousin who decided to treat herself to a day and a night at the Jasper Park Lodge and just went there and had a wonderful day in the spa and swam in the pool and walked around. She had an absolutely fabulous time. It was a great break for her. But she didn't phone every single person in her life that might hear from her on a regular basis and tell them: I've decided to do this.

You have to allow people to make decisions to go missing, to play hooky, to bugger off, to sneak away, or to do stuff perfectly legitimately: to pull over and visit your mom on the way home. We have not allowed that to happen with this bill.

A couple of things I'm going to try to do to make the bill stronger so that I can deal with it. It's already been signalled to me that the sponsor of the bill is not keen on this, but the first amendment I'd like to put forward is one that amends – the main report of this is to have the police reporting back on the information that they have collected.

I can see that the table is handing this over to the pages to be distributed. I'll just pause briefly while she gets some help and gets that distributed to people.

The Chair: Okay.

Hon. member, please continue. Now you have a minute and a half.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. This amendment is really to add the following after section 11 requiring that the police service have to provide a report to the minister who is the minister designated under the Government Organization Act. They would have to report on a number of categories of information. It was a way for us to be able monitor that the information the police were collecting was appropriate, that they weren't collecting too much of it, that they weren't using it in a way that wouldn't be considered allowable under what was here, you know: the number of times that the records in each of the categories were demanded to be made available, how many times the records in the categories were made available, how many times the police made an application or a demand under the act to get information, the outcome of the missing persons investigations in which the police service had made an application or a demand to get information under this act. So it's a long series of that.

I'm sure in Hansard the actual amendment will turn up. I don't have to read it into the record.

That's what I was trying to do was to give us a basis from which we could evaluate how successful and how helpful and targeted the information the police were collecting was.

So this would be amendment A2, and I would ask that the members support it. Thank you very much.

The Chair: We have amendment A2. Any hon. members wish to speak on amendment A2?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We'll go back to the bill.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the bill.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 8, the Missing Persons Act. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for his hard work on this bill.

I'm encouraged to see that this legislation was requested by the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police and that the government responded to this request. Obviously, I've spoken many times in this House about the shortcomings of the government in responding to Albertans' needs. In this case, I'm pleased that this legislation has been brought forward, and I will be supporting it.

If passed, Alberta will be the first province with missing persons legislation. Alberta was also the first province in Canada to have the Amber Alert program, which the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was instrumental in. This is important because when someone is missing, time is of the essence. As a father of four and I'm sure for anybody who is a parent in this Assembly – and there are many. The ultimate nightmare for any parent is to have a missing child. I know that's not all that this act deals with. There are obviously missing seniors and people with mental health issues, et cetera, but for me, personally, certainly where I come from on the bill is with regard to children.

I do support this bill because it gives police the tools to speed up the process for finding missing people. With the ability to find out more information more quickly, police will be able to assess whether a missing person is in fact a missing person or someone who simply does not want to be found. It grants police access to information, including credit and debit purchases or text messages, when someone is missing but it cannot be proven whether or not a crime has been committed.

At the moment police need a production order to get information, which they can only obtain when a crime has been committed. This is an obstacle when trying to find a missing person. I am glad that this bill was crafted from the standpoint that a person has the right to disappear if they choose. This is especially important if a person is fleeing an abusive situation or leaving certain acquaintances behind in a bid to improve their quality of life.

From a civil liberties perspective I support this bill because it states that collected information must be kept separate from other police agency records in compliance with the protection of privacy act. The Minister of Justice, it appears, has guaranteed that all information gathered will be kept separate from the rest of police intelligence and will only be used for missing persons cases.

There is a fine line of balance between finding victims and intruding in the private lives of innocent people. I believe that this legislation strikes it by ensuring a narrow focus on what information will be accessed and how it will be used to find missing people. Both the likelihood that this legislation could be the difference between life and death and that it could also allow individuals to disappear in relative peace make this legislation, in my view, an entirely worthwhile endeavour.

This legislation also states that police will not reveal any information or locations of the person to someone who filed the missing persons report but will only confirm that the person has been located alive. I believe this to be another essential component of this bill. It is also important to consider those who suffer from dementia and the different avenues that police would have to find them if they should wander away. This bill will make it easier, in my view, to find missing persons who suffer illnesses such as dementia and allow their family members to rest a little easier.

Each year in Alberta our law enforcement services receive over 10,000 missing persons reports. This legislation will go a long way toward optimizing the efficiency of police and finding those who are missing. Again, Mr. Chair, it's every child's worst nightmare for their aging parents or grandparents, and it's every parent's worst nightmare if their child was ever to go missing. So I am very glad that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne has taken the time along with the Justice minister and, presumably, the Solicitor General to work together on a piece of legislation that I feel will benefit Albertans.

You know what? I think that civil liberties have been adequately protected in this legislation. There is always a balance. There may be a need to come back and look at it again someday if there are some abuses going on, if there are some unforeseen circumstances that arise that are not addressed or contemplated by this act, but for the time being I think that this act has the potential of saving lives and doing so with minimum intrusion into people's personal lives.

I will be supporting this bill. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Thank you. I'd like to indicate as well from the point of view of the NDP caucus that we will be supporting this bill.

There is a very serious situation in our society with respect to missing persons. This legislation comes out a year after the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police passed a resolution asking the government of Alberta to develop missing persons legislation. Both the Edmonton and Calgary police services along with the RCMP were involved in developing the legislation and support this bill.

The bill is considered groundbreaking in that Alberta has no missing persons legislation, and no specific legislation has been adopted elsewhere in Canada. However, in 2009 the government of Saskatchewan passed The Missing Persons and Presumption of Death Act that allows a court to appoint a property guardian, who controls the missing person's estate as well as helps police gain access to information.

This bill was introduced by the MLA for Whitecourt-St. Anne, where an elderly St. Albert couple, Lyle and Marie McCann, disappeared in July 2010 under suspicious circumstances. In the early days of their investigation no criminal activity could have been suspected, meaning police did not have access to potential leads in the investigation. Obviously, in a missing persons case time is crucial and can often make a difference.

There are 10,000 missing person cases a year in Canada. Some of those are duplicates, but that's an enormous number. Furthermore, the vast majority of missing person cases are never linked to criminal activity or presumed to be criminally related. Examples of noncriminal missing persons often include heart failures or those with Alzheimer's and schizophrenia who go missing and who make up a significant portion of missing persons cases.

We were in touch with people representing aboriginal organizations, and I think that this is important specifically for aboriginal people. I think that we would like to encourage and allow police to act more quickly on missing persons cases. There is a perception that these cases are sometimes ignored by police when the missing person is aboriginal. In particular, missing aboriginal women have been a major concern that has often been overlooked by police and government. It's perhaps best outlined by the Native Women's Association of Canada through their sisters in spirit report on aboriginal women and girls who have gone missing or been murdered in Canada in the past generation. They found a total of 582 cases across Canada. Of those, 392 died as a result of murder or negligence, and 115 remain missing to this day. Mr. Chairman, the majority of disappearances and deaths of aboriginal women and girls occurred in the western provinces of Canada.

In 2008 police services across Alberta received about 8,000 calls from people and families looking for missing persons. Of these cases only about 200 used substantial police resources in an investigation. That means that only about 2 and a half per cent of missing persons calls, not including duplicates, are actually closely investigated.

With this legislation more hours and investigative efforts will be required to adequately respond. It really raises the question, then, of police resources, and I think that's something the government should consider when they're looking at their budgets.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to echo some of the comments from Airdrie-Chestermere about the balance that is struck with respect to this legislation. We think that it's a progressive piece of legislation, a step forward for our province, and I am very hopeful this legislation that we are dealing with in this Assembly tonight will save lives and reunite families. I think it is something well worth supporting, and I urge all my colleagues to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to make a few comments on this bill. I certainly support this bill. I think it's a very good bill, well thought out.

Mr. Chair, there's been considerable reference to Lyle and Marie McCann from St. Albert. They were two of my constituents. They were last seen in St. Albert at a service station. Interestingly, one of the previous speakers spoke about some of the privacy intrusions we have. One of the only clues they've got of their disappearance was from a video camera at a gas station where they filled up in St. Albert before they left. It was several days later that they found their burned-out vehicle, and the investigation, as was indicated, didn't really commence immediately, so it's questionable whether this legislation would really have helped in this situation.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chair, whether it would have helped in that particular situation or not, there are many instances where it would have helped or certainly may have helped. I think it's important that we pass this bill for those situations where it may provide some clues and may provide that clue that will prevent a tragic event or at the very least solve a case.

Yes, there are privacy issues, but, Mr. Chair, we've got to put some trust in our protection services. This legislation is put out here, and it is, as has been indicated, the first in Canada, perhaps the first in North America. I don't know. It is a piece of legislation that is needed, and we've got to put some trust in the police officers that they will use this legislation – they won't use it very often – with the trust of the general public in mind. I don't personally believe that it will be abused at all as has been suggested.

I think, Mr. Chair, we've got to move on and pass this legislation and put it into effect. Let's make use of it. If there are some problems with it that arise, there could be amendments at a later date, but let's get on with it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I just briefly want to address some of the things that have been raised where members have said that this proposed legislation that we're seeing under Bill 8, the Missing Persons Act, would somehow distinguish between those people that just wanted to absent themselves or go missing or skip out or take off or whatever of their own free will, that somehow this legislation distinguishes that. It doesn't. It very clearly defines a missing person. If you follow the legislation, the definition appears under section 1(b). A missing person means

- (i) an individual who has not been in contact with those persons who would likely be in contact with the individual, or . . .

Not and, or.

- (ii) an individual
  - (A) whose whereabouts are unknown despite reasonable efforts to [find] the individual, and
  - (B) whose safety and welfare are feared for given the individual's physical or mental capabilities or the circumstances surrounding the individual's absence.

I think all of us could accept the last definition, the individuals whose whereabouts are unknown despite attempts to try and find them or whose safety and welfare are feared for. We can accept that as a definition for missing persons, but it's not and; it's or. So any individual who doesn't report in – and I'm putting air quotes around that – to those persons who would likely be in contact with the individual can be deemed to be missing. There is no distinction made in this act that would allow my colleagues to be saying: "That's okay. Anybody that just wants to make themselves gone or missing can do that." No, they can't. That's not what's in this bill. That's not the way it's written. It does in fact cover all Albertans, and it now makes it mandatory that any Albertan that wants to go missing must contact those who would regularly expect to hear from them. That's what is in the section. That's what it says. It doesn't say "and." It says this is what you're supposed to do or the police can apply.

Now, the police can apply in two ways. I already talked about orders regarding records and right of entry, but also under emergency circumstances, they can go under section 4(1). If there are reasonable grounds to believe that immediate access to records is necessary to prevent imminent bodily harm or the death of a missing person, the police may serve a written demand on any person requiring that person within a reasonable time period to make available to the police service a series of records. So they could go to a phone company. They could go to a roommate. They could go to a parent. They could go to a spouse. They could go to the gas station for the closed-circuit stuff. In emergency circumstances they can require this.

Now, you can get into an argument about whether the word "require" is the same in the law as "compel." I think most people, if you went to them and said, "We're requiring you to give us this information," and it was a police officer standing at your door, you're going to give the information. You're going to believe that you have to rather than get into a protracted legal discussion with an armed person standing at your door saying: we require you to give this to us. I mean, to be fair, if the person refuses, the police can still under section 5 go to a justice of the peace and get an order that does insist that the person, whoever that is – the gas station, the roommate, or whoever – hand the information over.

I think that there continues to be a number of misunderstandings and mistakes about this act. We need to be able to go back and look at this legislation and review to see if it did what we expected it to do. I would love to be proved wrong. I would love for it to be proved that none of this happened, that the examples we have of the police force and members of the police force going in and collecting personal information out of information that they held, for purely personal reasons that had nothing to do with why they had the information, I would love to believe that that's not going to happen. But I certainly have the examples in front of me that tell me that they do happen.

I have an amendment in front of me that is amending section 11 and adding in: a special committee of the Legislative Assembly must begin a comprehensive review of the act within five years of it coming into force and submit to the Legislative Assembly within one year after beginning the review a report that includes any amendments recommended by the committee. In other words, it's a five-year review clause, which is very common for us.

It's actually often less than five years. We've certainly – I've sat on the reviews – done the legislative reviews for the Health Information Act, the Personal Information Protection Act, and the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. All of those had legislative reviews in them, and I would like to see the same kind of legislative review in this Missing Persons Act which does allow us to look at it once it has been in play, in use for a period of time, and allow us to see whether it's working the way the sponsor of the bill intended that it work.

Clearly, there's a lot of support in the Assembly for the act and a lot of people that want to see it go forward. So there should be no fear in putting in a clause that allows us to review whether it worked the way we expected it to work.

That is what my amendment, which I assume would now be amendment A3, should cover. So I urge all to support amendment A3. Thank you.

The Chair: We'll pause for a moment for distribution.

On amendment A3, any hon. member wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on amendment A3.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Having reviewed the merits and heard the reasoning for this amendment, I think it is reasonable and prudent to do so given the concerns raised by the hon. member. Of course, many members of this House do want to see this bill get into place, and it has some valid reasons to do so. I don't know if that's in debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has brought up concerns. They've been brought up to her by many organizations. As we're well aware, government legislation can contain in it consequences that we are unsure of at the time that are actually there. She brings up enough for me to understand that this could be some of that legislation that has that slippery slope to it: where will this end, and what will happen, and have we really run this up the flagpole as far we should go? So I would support this amendment. It allows us to look at the act. Five years from now it comes back, and we can hopefully have a report to the Legislature on how it's working, on whether it has had some of these consequences that the Member for Edmonton-Centre has brought up.

I think we might be prudent to put this in almost every new legislation, especially one of this innovative kind. It's the first of its kind in Canada and, I believe, North America. It would only be prudent of us to do so at this time given the nature of the path we're going down and, frankly, to look if other jurisdictions are instituting other similar legislation over the course of the next five years, for us to learn some best practices from those Legislatures who maybe have done things a little bit differently.

So I speak in favour of this amendment. I think it's a good amendment and we'd be prudent to follow the Member for Edmonton-Centre's advice on this. I urge all my colleagues that this would not stop the bill. It would merely allow for us to contemplate it five years from now and to look at it again with a fresh set of eyes, with a fresh set of ears, to whatever problems may be existing. Or maybe everything will be running tickety-boo. Who knows.

Anyways, I thank you for allowing me to speak on this, and I'd urge everyone to vote in favour of this amendment.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I only want to say, very briefly, that I can support this amendment. I think it's reasonable under the circumstances given that we're breaking ground here with some legislation that isn't seen in a lot of other jurisdictions. We're very confident with this legislation, and we're very confident that a review five years down the road is going to support what we've been saying all along about the value of this legislation and the value for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on amendment A3?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Chair: Now we'll go back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on Bill 8.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I have another amendment that I would like to bring forward, and that amendment is amending the section that I referred to very briefly last time, which is section 4, the emergency circumstances section. Essentially, it's striking out "demand" wherever it occurs in that section. I've sort of gone through it, and wherever it said that the police may serve a written demand on any person requiring the person – it's striking out "demand" wherever it occurs and substituting "request."

I think the pages are already handing this out, so I'll just keep going.

11:40

The Chair: Yes. Continue, please.

Ms Blakeman: It's also striking out the word "requiring" and substituting "requesting", and striking out "to be provided" and substituting "may be provided", and striking out "shall" and substituting "may".

Under the emergency circumstances section it is making it much more of an option and less obligatory in the way police are presenting the demand – it would now be a request – and allowing people much more of a wider option to say: no; I'm sorry. This could be persons or businesses, as I said, like phone companies providing phone records, financial institutions providing financial records. Just so people understand, I mean, they may sometimes be doing this because it's a cost and a work burden on them to have to go through their files and find this. They believe it to be an imposition on them, and they don't want to have to do it, or they want to get some kind of compensation for it. It's differing levels of requesting and demanding and whether somebody is required to answer this and give them back the information they've requested under the emergency circumstances.

The information that can be requested here, as compared to the section that I reviewed earlier, is records of contact and identification; communication records, including signals on wireless devices, cellular telephone records, text messaging, browsing records; GPS; employment records to the extent that they indicate when the person might have been last seen and when and where and how the person is paid. So this one's a little more detailed in this section, the emergency section, than it was in the demanding records section that was earlier.

Health information also appears here to the extent that records might indicate if the person has recently been admitted to hospital and including the information of which hospital and the date and time, that kind of thing, reasons for admission. It is health information that they're requesting here. So even if you just decided not to show up somewhere, they could under this provision be asking for that kind of information, which might include that you had your appendix out recently. That's information that could be asked for.

School or postsecondary attendance information. Financial information, including credit cards, their usage, if the records indicate where and for what purpose the credit card was used for. So don't go using it for anything that might be misinterpreted by anybody because they're going to see it. So the Love Me Tender video store, if it shows up on your bank statement and it's really just an Elvis Presley video collection, could be misinterpreted as something else. Any bank accounts that were accessed and records about where and for what purpose they were accessed. And any other prescribed records that the police may decide they want to get.

So this is all of the information under that section, and this is where I'm trying to amend that compelling of information because, yes, they might be addressing a gas company that has closed-captioning, and they would probably be approaching them during business hours, but they could be approaching a roommate or a spouse or an employer after hours, and I think that's kind of scary. If a police officer showed up at my door wanting access to records about somebody I had records on, I would tend to co-operate just because I would believe that I had to. I think we need to be clear that that's not required. It does go further into the failure to comply section, and it strikes out "demand" and replaces it with "request" there and "demanded" and replaces it with "requested." It does still allow a justice of the peace to give an order directing the person to comply, so it's still possible to get the records. You just have to go to a justice of the peace and make the argument with the justice of the peace that this is why they want to get the information from that roommate or parent or adult child or gas company or telephone record company.

I just think it makes the legislation less scary. Probably in more instances people would refuse to give them the information, and the police would have to go to the justice of the peace and plead the case there. I don't see that that's a problem. In emergency circumstances they're not requiring this to be a judge. It is allowed to be a justice of the peace, which is much more accessible 24 hours a day, seven days a week. I don't think it's going to impede or place that much of a barrier on getting the information fairly quickly under this emergency circumstances clause.

I would ask for support for what would now be amendment A4. I thank everyone for their co-operation.

The Chair: On amendment A4, any hon. members wish to speak further?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: Back on the bill, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. My next amendment, which could be distributed, is actually striking out sections 4 and 5. This would be amendment A5. It's actually getting rid of the emergency circumstances and the failure to comply section. Then under section 12, which is the regulation-making section, which empowers the Lieutenant Governor in Council, in other words the cabinet, to make regulations – so this is sort of consequential – it strikes out "and 5" under that section. It's saying: "respecting applications under sections 3 and 5." It would strike out "and 5" – so it's essentially consequential – and strikes out clauses (b) and (c), "respecting the service of a written demand under section 4(1)" and "prescribing records for the purposes of section 4(2)(h)."

If these sections are removed, it still allows the police to apply to a justice of the peace for an order that does require a person to make available to the police copies of records. Then it goes through the list that I read out in the first place, which was, again, the whereabouts, the identification information, the telephone records, the GPS, the browsing history, the video records, the employment. Everything that's found under the order regarding records and right of entry under section 3(1) and (2) would all still be there. They're all still available. They can all still be accessed. It's just that they would have to go and get the order through the justice of the peace first. They can't just show up at somebody's door and say, "Give me this information about this person" and demand it because it's emergency circumstances. They would have to go through that extra step.

The justice of the peace can make the order under the subsection if they're satisfied that the applicant requires the order in aid of investigating the whereabouts. It particularly, then, goes on to talk about minors or represented adults under adult guardianship and about people for whom an effort has been made and where they can't find any records, to prove that they looked and that they can't find any records.

To my reading of this, it still allows all of those records to be asked for, but you have to go before a justice of the peace and explain why you think you would need it. It takes out any of the demand sections that are in here under the emergency circumstances section, so the police could no longer demand or require someone to turn over these records. They'd have to go through the JP.

That's amendment A5. Thank you.

The Chair: Any hon. member wish to speak on amendment A5?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question on amendment A5.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the bill.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. This is amendment A6, that I would ask be distributed now, which is amending section 5 by striking out subsection (3) and substituting the following, which is that an order under that subsection could be subject to any terms or conditions respecting the production of the records demanded, including terms and conditions as to the costs of producing the records, that the justice of the peace considers appropriate in the circumstances.

I'll allow that to get distributed.

The Chair: Hon. member, please continue.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The way that section 5(3) currently reads is for an order under subsection (1), which is the written demand, and if the person doesn't comply, the police service can apply to the justice of the peace for an order directing them to comply. Under subsection (3) an order under that subsection, which I just read, "may be subject to any terms or conditions, including terms and conditions as to costs, that the justice of the peace considers appropriate."

I'm proposing that that be redone so that it reads that the order may be subject to any terms or conditions respecting the production of the records demanded, including terms and conditions as to the costs of producing the records, that the justice of the peace considers appropriate in the circumstances.

The real difference there is in the beginning of that, respecting the production of the records demanded. It allows specific boundaries around what's going to be provided as well as recognizing that there may be costs that are considered. Again, this is around getting the records out of, you know, the oil and gas company, around closed-captioned videos, or around any company that's holding records that could say: well, we don't want to give them to you because it's going to cost us money. This would be respecting the production of the actual giving over of those records, so a fairly small, simple amendment here.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Any other speakers on amendment A6?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. My final amendment tonight, which would be A7, is amending section 4(3), which, again – I'll just remind everybody – is the emergency circumstances section. Subsection (3) currently reads: "A person on whom a written demand under subsection (1) is served shall make the records available, or provide copies of the records, to the police service within the time specified in the demand." It's the must-comply section under those emergency circumstances.

Again, I've read into the record the kinds of details that are expected here: the health records, the financial records, the employment records, the credit card stuff, the GPS, all of those kinds of information that can be asked for. It's adding into it that the person shall make these records available or provide the copies within the specified time "unless the person has reasonable grounds to believe that the records will not aid in the investigation of the whereabouts of the missing person."

What it does is it allows the individual, who, again, could be related to the person, or it could be a company – let's say that the police go to them and say: we want the health records and the employment records and the credit card records that you have. It allows the individual to say: "Well, I don't see why you need their health records. They haven't, you know, been admitted into the hospital recently. I know that. I don't think you need to see the health records. But, you know, I'm going to give you their Visa bills recently, and I could give you their bank account numbers." It allows the individual that's been requested to give over the information to argue about whether or not they're going to give them everything and to reasonably state that they believe they shouldn't need to give over all because they have reasonable grounds to think this isn't going to make any difference. I think the key there is that the individual has reasonable grounds to believe that providing that information isn't going to help, and they don't want to provide that information. Fair enough.

I think we're playing with a lot of information here and a lot of different aspects of somebody's life. I know that we want to solve this stuff as quickly as possible. We want to get to the bottom of it as quickly as possible. We're talking, potentially, about missing children, you know, parents with dementia or people with mental health problems or a history of mental health problems, but it can also just be people that played hooky, that took off, that are having a romantic tryst. I mean, that's not illegal. It's not nice – we don't approve of it – but it's not illegal. But under what's happening in this act, that could be grounds for somebody to start going through and demanding these kinds of records. This section allows somebody to say: "You know what? I really just don't see why you're asking for that, and I don't want to provide it."

I ask for support on this amendment. I wouldn't do these amendments if I didn't genuinely believe that there was reason to do them. Having sat through years of my life now in various committees looking at protection of private information, I think we have not been careful enough with this bill to ensure that law-abiding Albertans won't have their personal information gone through unless it can be proven to a justice of the peace that there's a reason to do that.

I understand the emotion that goes behind this as much as anybody else. My heart squeezes when I hear those reports on the radio or on the television or in the newspaper as much as anybody else, especially when you can imagine yourself in that situation. As I said, I run the same track that that young military officer disappeared along. Any time you feel a personal connection to this, your heart just squeezes, and you want to think that the best has happened, not that the worst has happened, and you want to be able to help the family members and friends and the co-workers, the people that are around them, because those are the people that turn out to do the searches and put the posters up on the telephone poles and really worry about what's happened to this person. We want to do the best by them, but I think we have to be very, very careful, and the only organization that can make sure that we're careful about how much information of an individual is exposed or collected by an organization and whether there's good cause to be collecting that information is this Assembly, to be able to put that context in place and to put those checks and balances in place.

I know I've been the only voice that's been asking for support for these amendments. Fair enough. I wouldn't waste your time if I didn't think this was important, and I do. I ask for support for amendment A7, which is allowing that an individual can challenge and question why they would have to provide all of the various records that they've been asked to supply on the reasonable grounds that they don't think it's going to aid in the search for the individual.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: We have amendment A7. Any other hon. member wish to speak on it?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question on amendment A7.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: Does any hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 8 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee now rise and report Bill 15 and Bill 8.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill 15 and Bill 8. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 6 Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to move third reading of Bill 6, the Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At third reading, certainly, I would like to get on the record on behalf of the Official Opposition. This bill updates 29 statutes to make the language in those statutes consistent with the Alberta Rules of Court, which came into force last fall. These amendments are mostly technical. We had quite a discussion earlier in debate on this matter and on this bill, and I would just like to say that I think we should proceed with this at this time.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close the debate.

Mr. Olson: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

Bill 7 Corrections Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General on behalf of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Olson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security I move third reading of Bill 7, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2011.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With Bill 7, as I understand it, we are permitting the disclosure of the health information of inmates in correctional institutions to the institution for specific purposes. The amendments, as I understand it, are needed to address problems that arose when the scope of Alberta's Health Information Act was expanded.

We had a discussion at our caucus table, and it was rather robust, to say the least.

Mr. Hehr: Very robust.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is correct. It was very robust.

The decision to expand the scope of the Health Information Act was a questionable policy decision. However, some of the most serious concerns have been addressed in exclusions from the now general rule that health information is subject to the Health Information Act.

Now, it was pointed out that it was problematic that the policy reason for the expansion of the Health Information Act, protecting the electronic health record, is likely to be compromised by the proposals that can be expected to amend legislation to get around the impracticalities of the expanded Health Information Act. At this stage the most practical approach to the issue is to review the amendment proposals on a case-by-case basis. At third reading in this particular case the reasons for allowing the disclosure of health information to correctional institutions seem reasonable.

Before recent amendments to the Health Information Act the act applied primarily to health service providers operating in health care settings such as hospitals, nursing homes, clinics, and physicians' offices as well as pharmacies. As I understand this amendment, if I am understanding it correctly, then, of course, this is going to change, and in the Corrections Amendment Act, 2011, we will have the first case where it is proposed to amend an act governing a specific program to address concerns raised by changes to the Health Information Act.

We have spent time in committee and in second reading on this. There have been a lot of remarks put on the official record. With that, Mr. Speaker, I would conclude my remarks on Bill 7. I know we can support this. It was discussed. There were a lot of good points made in our caucus regarding this bill, and I think it's with reluctance that we can support this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

12:10 Bill 11 Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment on behalf of the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 11, Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I don't know if they're going to be providing elk on the menu of some of the corrections institutions in our province or not, but we certainly had questions regarding this legislation. The amendment, I am confident, has satisfied the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. The amendment that was provided and voted through the Assembly at second reading certainly clarified the issues, not only what the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East had questioned but also other hon. members of this House. Certainly, at third reading Bill 11 will move the responsibility for elk and deer farming from SRD to Agriculture.

We're looking at the Wildlife Act, an amendment to that, the wildlife regulations; the Livestock Industry Diversification Act; and consequential amendments to eight other pieces of legislation. Certainly, there were reservations on this side of the House. I believe the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka has satisfied those reservations. Hopefully, the proposed amendments that are designed to transfer legislative responsibility for deer and elk farming as identified in the Wildlife Act will work as has been presented to this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a third time]

Bill 12

Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater on behalf of the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Johnson: Yes. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Member for Red Deer-South I'm pleased to rise and move third reading of Bill 12, Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think we're going to be here for a while. Bill 12, Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, certainly adds the requirement that the directors and officers act honestly and in good faith. When you look at that, it seems like a very harmless bill but at the same time a very worthwhile bill. We talked about this earlier. This bill will clarify the government's ownership structure of the corporation supposedly to remove any ambiguity.

Language around the directors' conflict of interest will also be updated to match industry standards, we're told, adding an amendment to make it clear that AIMCo must act in the best interests of its clients when delivering their investment management services.

We do know that AIMCo is essentially just getting started. We do know that we have been going through some turbulent times financially. Any questions that are directed AIMCo's way, well, the answer is, of course: "Give us time. Things are going to work out. You're going to get a real return on your investment with us." It is unfortunate that the transition from Alberta Finance to AIMCo was made while we had some of the most difficult times since the '30s in the financial markets.

I'm not satisfied with some of the explanations I get from AIMCo on their investment style. We were talking about this in committee, Mr. Speaker, but when we compare AIMCo's internal and external costs, there's always someone else to blame: well, these are things that happened before we took over. When we look at a comparison of internal and external costs, regardless of how we look at it, there's $542 million externally that was lost. "How can we say it's lost?" someone questioned. Well, this is value-added net of expenses. For the year ended March 31, 2010, that's exactly what happened. We lost $542 million.

That didn't stop the performance fees. Performance fees were over $25 million. Other investment costs. Well, they were $126 million in this external category. They were much less in the internal category. Of course, the minister of finance is quite willing to compare the internal costs to the external costs, but whenever you look at these external deals, you have to question: who signed them, why did they sign them, and how come there is such a difference between what's managed internally and what's managed externally?

Now, we look at that and look at some of the fine print in AIMCo's annual reports and how they have set this up so that the bar, Mr. Speaker, to achieve a performance bonus is set really, really low so that regardless of how much wealth is created or generated with this $70 billion plus fund, there are going to be bonuses paid out, or performance incentives, whatever you would like to call them. You have to really look through the fine print of the annual report to find these numbers. You can see for yourselves if you would like, hon. members, on page 47 of the annual report, where you can compare the long-term incentive compensation and how this would work. The long-term incentive plan or grants, as they're called, as described are quite a deal. Of course, the argument with AIMCo is: oh, well, we need this to attract high-quality, competent staff.

Then there's another program in here as well. Who gets these bonuses or these performance fees? Well, there are not that many people eligible. In fact, I think it indicates that there are – I'd have to find it – probably 60 or 65 employees that are collecting this annual incentive plan. It comes in various forms, two that I'm aware of from the annual report. Why would AIMCo set this up in this way? I don't know, but in my view the bar is really low. Regardless of what kind of performance there is going to be money set aside for bonuses.

Now, there should be some additional caution before this bill is fully supported. One would only have to read the Auditor General's report, not the last report; let's forget about that report. You know, if the Auditor General's reports were classified on a best-seller list, that one would have been on the list for perhaps 10 minutes because, unfortunately, I didn't find there to be that much in it. It was just sort of an update on what had happened before. But, certainly, previous reports from the office of the Auditor General had highlighted serious concerns with AIMCo. While it is desirable to have AIMCo at an arm's length from the government, until the concerns raised by the Auditor General have been sufficiently addressed, the government should not entirely set AIMCo free, if I could say that. We know the minister of finance is ultimately responsible for the pension and endowment funds under management; thus, it is the minister's responsibility to ensure that AIMCo is properly functioning.

We know the motivation behind turning AIMCo into a Crown corporation was supposedly to remove politics from investment decisions. I'm doing a little bit of digging around, and I'm not going to say too much more, Mr. Speaker, because I'm sure in the department of finance the minister is going to read Hansard, and he's going to say: what kind of digging around is he doing? Well, I'm doing some interesting work on this. The whole idea was to remove politics from investment decisions, and I'm not sure that the reverse hasn't happened, that it is more political than it was in the past.

I really don't think it was that political in the past, but my suspicions were increased when I had difficulty finding some information that I used to find routinely on the Internet. It disappeared. I know the Minister of Transportation is quite concerned about this. It disappeared, and it took a lot of effort to find it. If investing in an oil company, for example, makes sense from an investment management perspective, it should not be impacted whatsoever by politics. AIMCo's mandate, as we've said before, is to maximize returns for pension plans and endowment funds and, supposedly, not to worry about the political leanings of the day.

Whenever I look at this bill, I question: why has it taken so long to include these amendments? What instigated this legislative change? Have there been any conflict-of-interest issues by the directors previously that have motivated this change? Why was the section not put in the act in the first place? Again, it's not that long since we – in fact, it was Dr. Oberg, I think, who brought this before the Assembly in his time in this Legislature. Why would AIMCo not have already been working in the interests of clients? Given that the Auditor General has raised concerns with AIMCo's lack of an internal audit group and the need to improve financial reporting, how will this bill impact the ability of the finance department to ensure that the problems raised by the Auditor General are not only addressed but are addressed immediately?

Now, I was looking at some of the internal audit functions of Alberta Health Services here just in the last hour and a half, and I thought it was quite an unusual arrangement that was going on there. I certainly hope that the same is not going on with AIMCo.

With those remarks I'm going to keep my eye, certainly, on the $70 billion plus. I'm disappointed with AIMCo. I'm disappointed in the fact that this bill doesn't put, for instance, some of the individuals who in the past have worked perhaps in this Legislative Assembly and who have pensions under the local authorities pension plan – I don't understand why the government wouldn't ensure that there are a few representatives from the pensions on this board. That doesn't happen, or it hasn't happened to date. I'm disappointed that there's not a broader representation on the board to include individuals who have a pension. They have a direct interest in the performance of the AIMCo investment strategy. I'm not suggesting, for instance, that we should have the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on there, not at this time. But, certainly, there are individuals who I think would make very good representatives on that board.

Those would be my comments, Mr. Speaker, on this legislation at third reading. I cede the floor to any other hon. colleague who would like to speak on this matter.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to speak to this bill and bring up some comments, much of them based on listening to my hon. colleague and hearing what concerns him. The openness and transparency of AIMCo and its ability to carry forth its mandate on behalf of the Alberta people is extremely important to our future, the future of not only our pension funds but also the future of our Alberta heritage trust fund, which, as you know, has languished from a contribution standpoint under this government. Since approximately 1987 there have been no new contributions to it. Really, it's worth less now than it was back then in real dollars. That's concerning when we have investment vehicles set up and they're not doing what they were originally intended to do.

If we look back at the heritage trust fund, what it was supposed to do was actually to set us up for the future, to readily take 30 per cent of our income that came from oil and gas revenues and put that away for the long-term future. The reason why it was established to do that was because the creators of that fund recognized this as a one-time gift. Yeah, you know, you can blow it to your peril, and you can have a good time while you're doing it. But at the end of the day they realized that the Alberta advantage was oil and gas and this windfall revenue that would come into the coffers of the Alberta government. It was recognized that this had the opportunity to set us apart from other jurisdictions of the world who were not as blessed as we are here to sit on still 25 per cent of the world's petroleum oil resources.

If there's one thing that this government has shown the ability to do over the course of the last 40 years, it's to snow through oil and gas revenues. It's been estimated that $180 billion has come into the coffers of this Legislature, and with how much saved? Fourteen billion dollars over in the heritage trust fund, that is run by AIMCo. If you look at it, it's grim, and really it has been a squandering of resources and wealth that I think will go into the annals of history as squandered opportunity lost by a government.

Nevertheless, we're here discussing the merits of this going forward and how it's going to affect things like AIMCo. AIMCo is going to be there. I believe in the one thing, that it should be separate and apart from this government. So we applauded the initial move when it appeared to be moving in that direction, when it was handled by an outside group of consultants. Nevertheless, concerns brought up by my friend from Edmonton-Gold Bar are very true. We have an Auditor General's report from a couple of years ago that lists some serious deficiencies in the openness and transparency of how that board runs and the auditing functions.

Generally speaking, fees for financial services, depending on how the contract is written, can borderline from the sublime to the ridiculous. Money managers have been known to even recently make out like bandits when they're able to set the rules and regulations of their own compensation. They know how to craft those rules and regulations and how to inflate their pay in good times based on short-term economic results that may not be in the fund's long-term interest but more for a financial manager's short-term gain.

I think we've seen examples of that very clearly since 2008, since the downturn. People call it a downturn. I call it the melt-down of the financial system that we've basically been on, having no rules, no regulations. Sooner or later, well, there was nothing left to hold it together because the people started stealing from what was in the long-term best interests of the society. We've got on be on guard for that at our own place, at AIMCo. If the Auditor General flags it as an issue, I think it would behoove this government to take it seriously, to act on it, to try and have the minister direct AIMCo to act on some of these issues that are outstanding.

It also is a fair issue brought up on compensation. We all know that with $70 billion in assets under management we can command a fairly reasonable price for people to manage those assets that may not be available to the rank and file owner of mutual funds and stocks and bonds at your local investment agency. I suggest we use that power to limit the fees.

From the things I read about the market, almost the best you can do is what the market returns. Yeah, some people do a little bit better, produce a couple of points ahead. Some don't do as well, are a couple of points behind. But by and large you're doing pretty well if you stick with what the markets do on a year-to-year basis, and almost anything outside of that is to be worrisome because you're making some unwise bets in that regard.

If we take that as knowledge, sometimes we should follow that general principle and look at that and provide the rules and the regulations that guard our investments going forward on that front, where people get paid reasonably for a reasonable day's work, but the lion's share of the money is being returned to the people of Alberta, the people who have saved their money, who will want to build a province for a better day in the future.

I leave those comments for the record, and we'll go from there. Hopefully, the minister will act on some of these suggestions given by me and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to better AIMCo and have it go forward on a more solid ground in the future.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members wanting to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a third time]

Bill 14

Wills and Succession Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater on behalf of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti it's my pleasure to rise today and move third reading of Bill 14, the Wills and Succession Amendment Act, 2011.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I've been waiting all night for this bill.

An Hon. Member: God help us.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope He does. You're going to need all the help you can get.

The amendment will remove a misunderstanding which has led parties to hold up legal processes relating to the wills of persons already deceased in order to take advantage of the new powers of the court to interpret wills. Although technical, this amendment affects legal rights.

I think it was earlier today that we saw the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act introduced, and it was suggested at one time that perhaps this is where this amendment belonged, but I don't think so. This amendment is to correct a transitional provision, as we said earlier, and I just wasn't comfortable with allowing this to be moved through the Assembly through the miscellaneous statutes process for the following reasons.

The Wills and Succession Act, which consolidated a number of acts and codified law made in the courts, was passed in the fall of 2010. The act is expected to come into force next January, but the changes relating to the wills in the Wills and Succession Act focus on meeting the testamentary intent of the deceased. This reform is a modernization of the existing approach.

The key changes. This is why I don't think it was acceptable to just move this through the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act. The courts will be able to validate a will where the testator's intentions can be ascertained even if the will does not perfectly meet legal formalities. When interpreting wills, the courts will now be able to rely on outside evidence for the intentions of the testator. Rules on the interpretation of commonly used words and phrases are updated. For example, the definition of child now includes all the children of a testator regardless of parentage. When a marriage or partnership ends, a gift in the will to the spouse or partner is deemed to have been revoked. The previous interpretation that a will is immediately revoked upon marriage or the establishment of an adult interdependent partnership is repealed, and rules addressing situations that affect a will but are unlikely to be covered by the will are modernized. An example of that is, unfortunately, where a beneficiary would murder the testator.

That would be why I think this may be considered a small but important fix. I'm pleased that this bill has gone through the Assembly in the manner that it has. It should not have been included in the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act as was originally suggested.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor to anyone else who is interested in speaking. Thank you.

12:40

The Deputy Speaker: Is there any other hon. member wanting to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we've made some significant progress in moving business through the House tonight, and given that significant progress I would like to move that we now adjourn until a little bit later today at 1:30 p.m., when the House will resume session.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:41 a.m. on Tuesday to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 10, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of the Rockies, the denseness of our forests, the fertility of our farmland, the splendour of our rivers, the richness of our resources, the energy of our people. Then let us rededicate ourselves as wise stewards of such bounty on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to introduce to all members today 76 students who are here as participants in Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program. The participants arrived yesterday for a tour of the Legislature, a presentation on the role of an MLA, and dinner at the Royal Canadian Legion, after which they prepared for a debate and then spent the night in a local hotel with their chaperones. This morning they debated a resolution in the Assembly Chamber, visited their members' offices, attended a session in the Chamber with myself, and had lunch with their members. Following Oral Question Period they will take part in an activity related to the electoral process. The ultimate aim of the program's activities is to further develop the interest and understanding of our parliamentary system among Alberta youth. The Royal Canadian Legion Alberta-NWT Command is sincerely commended for their support and cosponsorship of this program.

Seated in the Speaker's gallery today is vice-president, youth chair, Legion Alberta-NWT Command Ms Bobbi McCoy. Accompanying as student chaperones are Legion leaders Tim McCoy, Rod and Joyce Stewart, Ted and Donna Latimer, Karen Bruens, John Ferguson, Sharon Fedak, and our 76 shadow colleagues, who are seated in the members' and public galleries today. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a person that we know quite well, the recently re-elected Member of Parliament for St. Albert, seated in the Speaker's gallery, Mr. Brent Rathgeber. Brent, of course, as you know, is the former MLA for Edmonton-Calder. He lives there; so do I, proving once again that it's all in Calder. On May 2 Brent was re-elected as a Member of Parliament, receiving 63.5 per cent of the popular vote in the riding of Edmonton-St. Albert, nearly 22,000 votes more than his nearest competitor. I'd like to both welcome Brent here today and wish him well as he begins his second term as a Member of Parliament and give him the traditional warm greetings of the Assembly. Brent, please stand up.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a very esteemed honour for me to rise today and introduce the former Member for Calgary-Montrose, Rick Orman. Rick served as minister of career development and employment, Minister of Energy, and minister of labour in his time here in the Alberta Legislature. Since leaving the Alberta Legislature, Rick has had a very active and rewarding career in Calgary's business community, specifically the oil and gas industry, being involved with companies such as Daylight Energy as well as NOR Energy. Rick is somebody who I have known for many, many years. In fact, I still remember that the very first political sweatshirt I ever wore, many years ago, was that of Rick Orman.

An Hon. Member: Does it still fit?

Mr. Bhullar: It still fits. Mr. Speaker, it does.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask Rick to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly the 2011 Manning awards nominees for northern Alberta. Creativity knows no professional, geographic, or cultural boundaries. People of any age or walk of life or professional community generate ideas that can change the world. Since 1982 Manning awards have been awarded in our province. With us today are Mr. Sol Rolingher, a Queen's Counsel from Edmonton; Ryan Clarke; Tanya Bach; Randy Marsden; Gautam Rao; Brad Murray; and Dr. Joseph Mitchell. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, Mr. Speaker, thank you so much. I have such an honour today, and that is to introduce the family of one of our very special pages. Her family is sitting in your gallery. I would like to ask Lloyd Clarke, who is Regan Coyne's grandfather, to please stand. Joining him are Sharon Clarke, Regan's mother; and Craena Coyne, her aunt, who is also her godmother. I want to say thank you so much for giving us such a wonderfully organized, hard-working, pleasant, warm, and smart young woman with a great laugh. She's treated us very well. Thank you so much for letting us have the experience of working with her. Please join me in welcoming Regan Coyne's family.

Mr. Speaker, I have a second introduction. It is a special day for me because today I get to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Stéphanie O'Brien. Now, Stéphanie is from Quebec City. She is quite a world traveller, having been to France, Paraguay, Peru, and Ireland. And as I joked, but not really, she's now joining the twilight zone of the Liberal caucus staff. She is going to be our Quebec exchange student for the summer. We are very grateful to have her help, and we're hoping she has a wonderful experience in Alberta. Stéphanie, would you please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise again. This time I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several very special guests seated in your gallery. With us today are Al Schram, fire chief for the town of Edson and first vice-president of the Alberta Fire Chiefs Association; also Peter Krich, fire chief for the city of Camrose and second vice-president for the Alberta Fire Chiefs Association;

Patti Boone, a firefighter with Yellowhead county's Wildwood hall; Jim Olson, a firefighter for the town of Edson; and Bill Purdy, executive director of the Alberta Fire Chiefs Association and deputy fire chief for the Wabamun fire department. Mr. Purdy knows these halls well as he served as MLA for the constituency of Stony Plain from 1971 to 1986, which I know you very well remember.

These five guests represent over 10,000 Albertans who serve as part-time firefighters in the province. They are with us here today for the introduction of Bill 20 a bit later on our legislative agenda. With them is Bob Jones, district 1 director of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, whose members are the employers of many volunteer firefighters throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, we also have with us today a representative from Alberta Municipal Affairs. I would like to introduce Spence Sample, deputy fire commissioner and director of public safety initiatives for the Alberta Emergency Management Agency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through to this Assembly a constituent of mine, Megan Jakeway. Megan is here today to celebrate last week's announcement of the midwifery degree at the Mount Royal University in Calgary and is currently applying to that program. Megan is here today with her husband, Bruce, and her two children, Esther and Gabriel. I'd ask that they rise to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a wonderful group of women who represent midwives across Alberta. Last week the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and I had the pleasure of visiting Mount Royal University for the announcement of Alberta's first bachelor of midwifery degree. I understand there is already a wait-list for that program, which is wonderful news. Last Thursday was also the International Day of the Midwife, which recognizes the value and important role that midwives play in the health of women and newborns around the world.

I'd like to introduce to you some of the wonderful women involved in midwifery: Monica Eggink and her son Louis, Jackie Michaels, Amanda McEachern, Claire MacDonald, Heather Beaudoin, Pamela Aloisio, Barbara Scriver, Marie Tutt, Joanna Greenhalgh, and Heidi Coughlin. If they would please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two exceptional young women, Crystal Kirton and Kimberly Bellerose. Earlier this week they started their positions under the new Aboriginal Relations internship program. It's an initiative that we are piloting with Employment and Immigration and Finance and Enterprise. Ladies and gentlemen, Crystal and Kimberly were the successful candidates among over 100 applicants. They both have great resumés, and we are very excited to have them. Also in the members' gallery are their supervisors, Carolyn Fewkes, Ellen Tian, and Paul Wyminga. The goal of the Aboriginal Relations internship program is to help aboriginal youth develop their professional skills and leadership capacity. I'd ask that they all please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

I have one more introduction if you don't mind. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you two women who drove up this morning from my Calgary-Foothills constituency. The first is my very hard working constituency assistant, Lou Winthers. Lou has been working for me for a number of years now, and I'm thankful for her commitment to keep my office running so smoothly. She is a registered nurse and a board member with my association and is also a past executive director of Hospice Calgary and Meals on Wheels, just to mention a few. With her is Ms Donna Gee, who is also a board member of my association. She is a practising lawyer and a registered nurse as well. She is also president of a local community association in Calgary. I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you today two young friends of mine, Jeff and Arlene Carlson. They are a very busy young couple. They farm in the Trochu-Olds area. They also have a business in Innisfail. As well, Arlene teaches, and Jeff has his law degree. I guess that all helps to feed the farming addiction. Jeff assures me, though, that their seeding operation is in full swing today and that they're able to keep the crew busy, so they've had time to come up and experience the excitement of question period today. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five outstanding leaders in the Child and Adolescent Services Association. CASA is the lead organization working with my ministry, Health and Wellness, and Justice and Attorney General on the infant/preschool trauma pilot project, which is a direct result of our children's mental health plan. It is so good to have you all here. I would ask that our guests please rise as I introduce them and remain standing. We have Gwen Harris, chair; Nicole Van Kuppeveld, executive director; Germaine Dechant, chief executive officer; Jaret Farris, executive member; and Dr. Carole Anne Hapchyn, psychiatrist and therapist. Please join me in thanking these outstanding individuals for the good work they do. Thank you for being here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly constituents of mine, Mrs. Tascheleia Marangoni, her daughter Isabella Marangoni, and their guests, Lana Atkinson and Jane Carr. They work with the postpartum depression awareness project and are here today to hear my member's statement on postpartum depression. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine and one of Alberta's young, aspiring political minds. Aisling Pollard-Kientzel is very interested in the political process here in Alberta as can be gleaned by her recent involvement in Brent Rathgeber's Conservative federal election campaign, her run for municipal council in St. Albert, and, of course, her attendance here today. I would ask Aisling to please stand, and I would ask all members to join with me in giving Aisling the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the Assembly Austin Mardon. Austin will be well known to many members of this House. He is an academic, an author, a researcher, and most importantly, the work for which he is known best, a strong advocate for the disabled community in Alberta, particularly those suffering from mental illness. Austin holds a doctorate in geography and many awards of distinction, including companion member of the Order of Canada. He is currently a member of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities and a board member of the Alberta College of Social Workers. Dr. Mardon has many accomplishments, as I have said. Many of us have relied and will continue to rely on his advice on issues that affect the disability community in this province. He is very deserving of our recognition and respect. I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. First of all, I am pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature two students who are currently studying midwifery in Edmonton through distance education at the Midwives College of Utah. For some time now the Midwifery Health Disciplines Committee has been unclear about granting registration to graduates of the Midwives College of Utah. Given that there are currently 11 MCU students in Alberta and Mount Royal will not graduate a midwife for another four and a half years, the situation needs to be resolved in favour of students and the goal of increasing the midwives. I would now like to welcome the students, who are seated in the public gallery, I believe, to the Legislature. I would ask that Tracy Kennedy and Carly Beaulieu rise as I read their names to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

I'm also pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature two members of my constituency, Kelly Carter and her daughter Erin Carter. Kelly and Erin are here today to raise public awareness about the real impacts of this government's decision to cut education funding for special-needs students. Erin's community living skills class has been eliminated, and she will be forced to attend school in a larger classroom with children up to four years younger than her. I would now like to welcome Kelly and Erin, who are seated in the public gallery, to the Legislature, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: I still have two more on my list of introductions. We'll proceed, and then we'll go immediately to question period.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very bright constituent of mine. Mark Koeppen has his master's degree in communications and technology from the University of Alberta, and he's here today to help me capture photos and video clips of all the excitement of the MLA for a Day program that you brought in. He is seated in the public gallery, and I would ask him to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine, Mr. Oscar Fech, who lives in Kingsland. Oscar ran for mayor of Calgary in 2004 and came in second and frequently reminds us that it's all about the accountability in this Chamber. Let us take his words, and please give him the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Nondisclosure Agreements with Physicians

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, over the last three months we've been asking this government how many lawsuits filed by doctors have been settled, how much money was paid out, and what the circumstances in the nondisclosure agreements were. Government always has the same response: Alberta Health Services have the answers. Well, I spoke with a senior official from Alberta Health Services, who told me that neither he nor other officials could discuss these lawsuits because they were sealed with nondisclosure agreements. To the minister: will the minister now admit that Alberta Health Services cannot discuss the agreements covered by nondisclosures?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services functions like an independent corporation, and they can do whatever they want to do or whatever they feel is necessary to do. I think we've made it abundantly clear in this House because they keep asking the same questions over and over and over, so of course the answers are going to be the same. It's the same question; you get the same answer. Nondisclosure agreements typically would require both parties to agree before they are opened. That's my understanding.

Dr. Swann: Well, given that because of nondisclosure agreements neither Alberta Health Services nor the government nor the doctors can talk about these settlements, how can the Health Quality Council possibly get the whole truth about this government's culture of fear and intimidation?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this government has no such culture whatsoever. I can't account for what this hon. member went through in his private life before becoming elected, but if he wants to make his severance package available to everybody, let's have a look at it. That would be a good start.

Dr. Swann: Duck and dive. Duck and dive, Mr. Minister.

Given that Albertans deserve to know about their health dollars, how their health professionals have been muzzled and intimidated, and given that the only way to discuss the details sealed in these settlements is through a public inquiry, will the health minister do the right thing? Stop dancing around the issue. Call a public inquiry.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we have a very good process in place with the Health Quality Council, which this member along with numerous others just a few months back were championing as being a wonderful place for an investigation or an inquiry or a review to be done. So that's exactly what we did. We asked the Health Quality Council of Alberta to come in, and they've got some incredible people there who are doing a great job, I'm told, helping to find out if there's any truth to the allegations that were given. Whoever wants to is welcome to appear before them.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Facing mounting internal pressure from health care professionals, Alberta Health Services has implemented an internal patient advocacy committee in efforts to improve a doctor's ability to advocate for his patients. Dr. Lloyd Maybaum is a member of that committee, and he pointed out, quote: it doesn't address any of the past history. Only an inquiry can get to the bottom of what has happened. End quote. Again to the minister. To learn from past mistakes, we must first investigate the mistakes. Does the minister not agree with Dr. Maybaum that it's in all Albertans' interests to get to the bottom of these issues of intimidation and mismanagement?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, all I can say again to this hon. member is that we have the Health Quality Council of Alberta doing this work right now, and if things were really that bad, I don't think you would have seen the satisfaction ratings that we just saw in December. Eighty-three per cent of Albertans said that they had excellent care in our health system in the hospitals.

Dr. Swann: And less than 25 per cent of professionals have any confidence in this government's ability to manage the health care system.

How can doctors expect to see any change from an internal health services committee when the committee is powerless to address external intimidation coming from this government?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what intimidation this hon. member is referring to. What I can tell you is that we have a very open process. In fact, the recent restructuring by Alberta Health Services would tell you that there's going to be a lot more local decision-making and that that includes much more physician engagement, physician input, physician involvement. That's what we're trying to do, get more people integrated to help out with this excellent health system to make it yet better.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, 30,000 health professionals in this province have said that the only way to get to the bottom of this culture is a public inquiry. Why don't you do the right thing and honour your commitment to health in this province? Call a public inquiry.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we are doing the right thing. We're providing 37.3 million medical services per year. Thirty-seven point three million services per year. We're providing 59 million lab tests – 59 million lab tests – per year; 165,000 MRIs per year, and we've just added another 9,000. We're doing 250,000 surgeries per year, and we've just added another 5,000. So, please, hon. member, suck it up. Admit that we're doing a lot of things very, very well.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Deputy Leader of the Official Opposition.

Plains Midstream Canada Pipeline Leak

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2005 the former Premier said that the government's response to the Wabamun spill was poor because no one could have thought we would have a disaster. Now the Minister of Environment is stating that there's no need to take advantage of information on environmental performance of companies working in Alberta, information that could alert us to keep a closer watch on some companies with poor records elsewhere. To the Minister of Environment: why wouldn't the government want to have all possible information on a company desiring to do business in Alberta, especially on their environmental performance?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I made the statement yesterday – and I stand by it today – that we have a rigorous regulatory regime in this province. We expect all companies that operate in this province to stand up to the rigour that we would put them under. Frankly, while it might be interesting to the opposition to see what their environmental record is elsewhere, it doesn't compare because we don't know what the regulatory regime is elsewhere.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, Mr. Speaker, back to the same minister: how can the minister claim that a company's environmental record elsewhere is not interesting or is irrelevant when the company has just spilled 28,000 barrels of oil into a wetland here, and that company was recently fined over $3 million by the U.S. government as a result of 10 leaks over the past several years?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I might suggest that the question might be better directed to the minister responsible for the ERCB because they are the regulatory authority that is responsible, but the fact of the matter is that we have a rigid regulatory regime in this province that requires ongoing inspection and maintenance of pipelines, and I think our record reflects that we have a very enviable record when it comes to ensuring that we do not have incidents such as the one that we had last week.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, back to the same minister: given that this government will not learn from the experiences of others, will it at the very least implement the recommendations from this government's own review of our environmental and emergency response capacity following the last of our own environmental disasters at the Wabamun spill?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, let's look at the facts. The Wabamun spill that she refers to was admittedly not reacted to as quickly as it could have been or should have been. As a result, there was an entirely new division that was instituted in Alberta Environment, the ASERT program. That program stepped up to the plate, did the job. In this particular case it's because we had the capability to get onto the incident immediately that we were able to contain it within a small area, and we are now rapidly cleaning the mess up.

Government Policies

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in the recent federal election we saw two-thirds of Albertans vote for free market, fiscally responsible, small "c" conservatives. This PC government has been anything but conservative. They have governed these past four years to the left of any NDP or Liberal government in the country. Now the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy is proposing tax increases to pay for this government's reckless spending while funnelling our royalties into several government-run slush funds and programs. To the Premier or whomever: why doesn't his government just make it official and appoint the leader of the NDP behind me as their finance minister going forward?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the government has received the report tabled by the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, and we will individually examine those areas that pertain to our ministries and give a full response. I think the exciting thing is that they're looking 30, 50, and 100 years into the future for ways that we can set a template and chart a different course. It is not yet government policy, but our Premier has committed to bringing it forward to the caucus in due course.

Mr. Anderson: Well, to the Environment minister, then. Given that the Premier's council report also calls for increased carbon pricing and given that while I was in the PC caucus the Environment minister and this Premier were actively supporting the idea of signing on to a national cap and trade system that would mandate that Alberta businesses purchase billions in carbon credits from outside of Alberta, that's causing billions more in wealth to be transferred out of this province, is the government planning on jacking up the carbon tax they already slapped on industry, entering into a cap and trade deal, or both?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, this government has been very consistent. We were the first Legislature in Canada to institute legislation to deal with and regulate CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. We've indicated all along that we see it as being an opportunity to demonstrate to other jurisdictions how a system can work in the absence of cap and trade and how investment in technology is the way that we should be going, and I see no reason why we wouldn't continue in that direction.

Mr. Anderson: It's not what I heard when I was in caucus, Minister.

Given this government's persistent attack on property rights, its continuous centralization of health and everything else it can think of, its capitulation to green extremism, its hiking of taxes and fees on industry, its refusal to protect the rights of free speech, its deplorable record of intimidation of health workers, its disregard for democracy . . .

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. member. [interjection] Hon member. [interjection] Hon. member, please, if that isn't a preamble, I don't know what it is, but the hon. minister may respond if she chooses. [interjection] No. We're finished. [interjection] I'm finished with you. [interjection] Sit down. [interjection] Sit down. [interjection] Sit down.

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Speaker: We'll deal with the point of order at the end of the question period. [interjection] Sit down, please. [interjection] Sit down, please. If somebody wants to respond, they can. If not, we're moving on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Critical Electricity Transmission Infrastructure

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I would only consider the job under a New Democratic government, not under a Tory one.

Yesterday the Minister of Energy suggested that consumers will pay a dollar per month for every billion dollars spent on the transmission megaproject planned by this government. That's based on the most optimistic assumptions possible. So at a minimum the most frugal electricity consumer will still pay an extra $156 per year. To the minister: does he not understand the impact that an additional $156 per year will have on the household budgets of Alberta families or on seniors on fixed incomes?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I did say was correct. The projections are that for every billion dollars of construction it would be approximately one dollar per month on the bill. If you take $3 billion to $5 billion of construction and multiply that by 12, I don't think you'd come up with the number that the member is referring to.

Mr. Mason: Well, given that the minister admitted yesterday that $13 billion is more likely the total number and given that the minister's figures are the best-case scenario and that the actual costs are likely going to be much higher and given that billions of dollars of costs have already been approved without public scrutiny, will the minister agree to subject all transmission projects to a full public hearing so that they can prove that they're needed and in the public interest?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, in fact, one of those particular hearings is under way right now, and there will be hearings into the other lines in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that $1.6 billion in extra costs are about to be loaded onto unsuspecting electricity consumers without any proof that these costs are reasonable or even necessary, why won't the minister allow a public examination of these costs before allowing them to be passed on to consumers?

Mr. Liepert: That's exactly the purpose of the hearings that I just talked about, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Government Policies

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question is designed by the future MLAs from Edmonton-Meadowlark, Kathleen Robertson and Joyce Chiang. We have the best, hardest working staff on the planet. Once you get into care, it's great care. The trouble is accessing care. In the U.K. this was a major problem. They invested massively in home care, primary care, with the strongest performance and accountability measures on the planet. To the minister of health. You gave the largest investment in history to acute care with the weakest performance measures in the nation, that we are not even meeting. My question is: can you please explain to the future MLAs why you made the decision that has led to cutbacks in their education and the number of teachers they have in their schools?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I think he's asking a question to the Minister of Education, so I'd be happy to take that question under advisement.

Insofar as medical education is concerned we've actually increased those seats over the last few years. We have 180-some seats in Calgary and about 180 or so seats here in Edmonton so that people who want to pursue a medical career, specifically a doctor's career, will have a place to be trained right here in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we've invested in creating more doctors – and that's a good decision. The problem is that they're all specialists. The type of doctors we need are family doctors. To the minister of advanced education. Across the nation only 30 per cent of the doctors are becoming family doctors. We need 60 per cent. What are you doing, working with the minister of health? In which way are you going to create more family and geriatric doctors in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to try to answer this. The good news is that last year of the graduating class in Alberta 80 per cent of the doctors chose family medicine. I think that's a tribute to our young people and that they see the value in treating families across our province. Truly good news, and we look forward to more people choosing family medicine and rural medicine.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Eighty per cent is an incorrect number; it's actually 40 per cent. To the seniors' minister. Acute care cannot function if home care is not resourced and if you do not take long-term care patients out of acute care. You're only removing 200 patients. What are your performance and accountability measures to remove long-term care patients out of acute care?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we have some of the highest accommodation standards in the world. We inspect every facility that is in continuing care at least once a year, and if we have a complaint, we do a random inspection on top of that, so we do have some of the highest standards possible. We are building 10,000 more units, since 1999, to be able to facilitate care for our seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Daycare Accreditation

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 this government removed the 80-children cap on the maximum number of children that may be accommodated in a child care facility in this province. Now we learn that Education Learning Universe, or Edleun, the only publicly traded child care corporation in Canada, is about to construct a 2,300 square foot care house in Chestermere that will accommodate a whopping 247 children. To the minister of children: did the minister backtrack last month on the decision to make accreditation of daycares mandatory simply to facilitate this kind of warehousing of our children?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct. Three years ago there was a policy put in place where the cap of 80 spaces per facility was removed. That decision was made by staff, I understand, at the time based on what the child care association, members of the child care community – parents who had asked for flexibility in choice in child care found that that cap was a barrier to the development of new spaces.

I want you to know, though, as I said previously – I know you've mentioned accreditation here today . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Given the displacement of 12,000 children that the bankruptcy of Australian child care giant ABC Learning led to in 2008, can the minister assure Alberta parents that their children will not experience similar upheaval should Edleun's profits happen to ebb next quarter?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have nonprofit child care, and we have child care for profit. The member has mentioned a for-profit child care organization that did not succeed with their business. I go back to this. The for-profit and not-for-profit organizations follow the same rules. They're licensed, they're regulated, and parents can be assured that that's in place.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Instead of the PHD process for managing children – and that stands for piled higher and deeper – will the minister undertake to reintroduce the cap on the number of children that may be accommodated in this province's daycare facilities?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can also tell you that 2 out of 3 of our child care organizations that have over 80 spaces in child care, which is only about 1 to 2 per cent of all the child care spaces, are actually not-for-profit organizations. They're not-for-profit. I can also tell you that I won't be reviewing this cap at this time, but I will follow very closely what is occurring in the Chestermere community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Some Hon. Members: Happy birthday to you, happy birthday to you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane has the floor.

Midwifery Services

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from some constituents and others who say that they need help finding a midwife to assist with the delivery of their babies. Expectant mothers with low-risk pregnancies are looking for this option in ever-increasing numbers. My first question today is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. With a growing demand for midwifery services in this province, what are you doing to bring more midwives into our system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the minister of advanced education just indicated, we were in Calgary last week to actually bring into place a four-year baccalaureate program for midwifery. That will include at least 10 spaces in this first year, as I recall, and I think at least one in every 10 spaces starting this year and thereafter will be dedicated specifically to aboriginal health. So there's quite a lot of excitement and activity about that, and I want to again welcome the people who are here on that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you. My second question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Given the demand for midwives, can you tell us why it has taken such a long time to get a midwifery degree in place in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is an excellent question, and I know there are a lot of midwives in the audience and students that would ask exactly that same question. It has taken a while. It has been over 20 years since we first approved the use of midwives in Alberta and funded it. Mount Royal has come to the table and has developed a program, worked with my department to make sure the program meets the needs of midwifery students, and then in partnership with Alberta Health we've been able to come up with the clinical piece so that together we can provide a baccalaureate four-year degree in midwifery that'll meet the demands of that profession.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you. My last question is to the same minister. How soon can we expect to see the grads begin to take pressure off our growing waiting list?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We heard a little bit about it during the introductions. It will take until 2015 to see the new graduates coming out. The good news is that the very first class of students will enter this September. We will have a full cohort of midwifery students at Mount Royal University, and those students will graduate in 2015. They'll add to the group of midwives that we have in this province, and after that we'll see new ones every year.

Thank you.

Teacher Retention

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, this Conservative government has been obsessed about centralizing control of Alberta's public institutions, including hospitals, schools, universities, and colleges, but it's a clumsy approach because the left hand often doesn't know what the right hand is doing. Even as record numbers of new teachers are graduating under the department of advanced education, the Education minister is forcing hundreds of layoffs. To the minister of advanced education: can the minister explain why this government is cutting job opportunities for new teachers when Alberta is going to need more teachers, not less, to meet the oncoming demand?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we know that it has been an extremely tough budget year, especially in education. We have seen some challenges across the province, but we continue to educate teachers. We also, because of the economic times, had a lot of teachers that were able to retire this year that simply didn't. They've stayed in the workplace, so this has removed some of the potential for new jobs. We're hoping to continue to train our new teachers and that there will be positions for them in the future.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that we've seen this cycle of huge layoffs of nurses and teachers, followed by cuts to the institutions, followed then by shortfalls of nurses and teachers, when will this government learn that simply cutting these things at the ebbs and flows of the marketplace is not going to work for actually having sustainable, predictable teachers in the classrooms?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not only are we not cutting education positions, but we're actually working very closely with regional colleges, and some of the funding that we provided this year was to allow them to go out and create new degree opportunities. I know that in visiting with those colleges, one of the degrees that they most want to deliver locally is education degrees for new teachers for their communities. Teachers that train in Red Deer will work in Red Deer or in Medicine Hat or Grande Prairie. We like to see this happening. We're going to continue to work with our local institutions to train teachers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to correct the minister. We are cutting opportunities for these teachers to work in this province. Yesterday the Minister of Education offered this advice to Alberta's teachers: wait until next year. Can the minister of advanced education, whose department paid to educate these graduates, offer them any better advice?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're already starting to see some openings. Unfortunately, some teachers will be working within the subbing system this year, but over the course of the year we hope to continue to integrate our new teachers into the system and create opportunities for young teachers as they come out. Our young teachers are very energetic and well trained, and we want to work them into the system as quickly as we can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Children at Risk

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that at any time in the Edmonton area Children and Youth Services staff are involved with approximately 1,000 children under school age who may have suffered abuse or neglect. As an MLA I've had occasion to hear of several tragic cases often after a child has been permanently removed from a home or when an offender who has allegedly abused a child is before the courts. A number of my constituents have asked how we are assisting these children and how we are managing their emotional needs at a young age, before mental illness becomes an ongoing issue. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: what is your ministry doing to address this?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, the member is so right. Abuse and neglect can be devastating for our children. Earlier today I had the honour of introducing five outstanding leaders from the Child and Adolescent Services Association who are leading a very important initiative here in Edmonton, which will provide the assessment and the intervention services in partnership with health professionals and with our law enforcement personnel and my staff. That's a $400,000 new pilot project for our vulnerable infants and children.

Mr. Horne: Well, that does sound promising, Mr. Speaker, but given that early identification is key, how will the ministry identify the children who are most at risk, and what specific support will they be offered?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, this is an important question. Children will be referred to this new program by caseworkers from my ministry. There will be a multidisciplinary team that will assess their mental health, their physical and their developmental needs, and they will help ensure that appropriate treatment is offered as quickly as possible. But just as importantly, training will be provided to the biological parents and to parents that are looking after children in care, and this will help support the development of healthy relationships for the child.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister. Given that there are so many children in the system today who are in need of emotional and mental health supports, would the minister elaborate on what performance measures will be considered, and if the program proves successful, will you offer it on a province-wide basis?

Mrs. Fritz: I also told you earlier that this new pilot project is a direct result of the children's mental health plan, and the good news is that it really will make a tremendous difference. It will remove barriers, as I said, with the co-ordination of services. It will make a difference for an estimated 75 children who have been traumatized by abuse and neglect this year. Through the co-ordination of supports we anticipate better outcomes for our vulnerable children. Yes, we will expand this model as we know it will be successful.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Bladder and Uterine Prolapse Surgery

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm a nurse, and this topic was my job and doesn't embarrass me, but maybe there will be a few in the House that will squirm. Maybe that's why thousands of Alberta women are living in needless discomfort. Childbirth, heaving lifting, and, yes, lack of exercise can cause bladder and uterine prolapse of the sagging internal organs into a woman's birth canal. The condition causes incontinence, repeated bladder infections, and often severe pain. To the minister of health: why are women in this province waiting for as long as two years to receive the surgical procedures needed to correct the most serious cases of bladder and uterine prolapse?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, obviously there are some medical decisions that would have to be made to help those women in need. If you have some individuals that need that help, you can refer them to Alberta Health Services, or if you like, you can refer them to my office, and I'll refer them over. These are medical decisions that are beyond my control.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Will the minister undertake to add these procedures to the Health and Wellness online wait times registry so that women might track the wait time for them, which is two years?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we just added 5,000 more surgical procedures of various types into the permanent category, so we can take a look and see if this particular procedure she is referring to is one of those. Regarding the second request, I'd be happy to take a look and see what might be possible to help those women out.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you again. Where in the ministry's five-year action plan is this common women's health issue addressed?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's addressed in a number of places albeit perhaps not in those exact words. For example, one of the primary things that we're trying to do is increase access and reduce wait times. I've talked about that numerous times. We've talked a lot about it during estimates. I would refer the hon. member, because there's not enough time to do it right here right now, to estimates, where some of these issues were covered. If you have more, hon. member, I'd be happy to sit down and chat with you to help out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Labour Supply

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand the Ministry of Employment and Immigration has a number of services dedicated to helping Albertans find employment and employers to find workers. In the near future we're likely to find ourselves in a situation where our province faces a labour crunch and more must be done. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In order to be prepared for the next economic boom, what is your ministry's plan to quell the expected shortfall, which could be as many as 77,000 workers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it's a timely question. The plan involves both the industries, the employers of Alberta, and the government of Alberta. Our number one responsibility is to Albertans and Canadians first, making sure that we tap into the workforce of those who are chronically either unemployed or underemployed by way of providing them with educational programs and making sure that they have the skills that are required by our economy. Ultimately once the local labour force is tapped out, obviously we will be looking at labour from outside of Alberta and outside of Canada.

Mr. Benito: Also to the same minister: what specific strategies has your ministry outlined in order to support or encourage older workers to remain on the job?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that choice will always be in the hands of Albertans, whether they choose to work after their retirement age or post retirement age. It would never be the strategy of this government to force anybody to do so. Options must remain. Many individuals that I have met choose to work past the age of 65, and we want to make sure that neither provincial nor federal policies, particularly on taxation, are punitive and that they allow for that choice to be made.

Mr. Benito: My second supplemental is to the same minister. What is your ministry doing to incorporate aboriginals in the workforce, especially when dealing with concerns of labour shortages?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the issue of the engagement of our aboriginal community in our workforce is actually quite complex. From the perspective of my ministry and this government we have released a new report that was done in consultation with the aboriginal community, known as Connecting the Dots. Frankly, I think there's a lot of work that needs to be done from many different perspectives, not only that of this ministry. I think that now, at a time where there will be a shortage of workers, it is incumbent upon us to be as helpful as we can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Highway 63

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The MLA for a Day student from Westwood high school joined me today. She drove down highway 63 yesterday with her mom, and of course they were appalled with the condition of highway 63, an important economic link in the province. To the Minister of Transportation: can you give an explanation to the student and to her mom on the poor condition of highway 63?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we're talking about a region that is very, very important to this province. We've got $190 million in the budget to spend on improvements and to carry on with the construction that's been going on on highway 63. We're going to be doing twinning. We're twinning right now. We're working towards twinning south of Wandering River, north of Wandering River. We're carrying on with the interchanges within the town, and we're moving as fast . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, given that the student and her mom wanted to know why they haven't seen a drop of pavement on highway 63 in the last year and a half, can the minister please explain?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know the exact dates, but I think a year and a half might be a little far out. We have done some paving on highway 63. We've scheduled some new paving. That's supposed to be coming up this year, weather permitting. We're going to carry on. We're spending $127 million on the bridge there. It's something like $600 million in the last two years.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, given that we haven't seen any pavement in Fort McMurray in the last year, can the minister assure this Assembly and residents in the gallery, moms and dads who travel highway 63 like me and my three-year-old son, who will be turning four tomorrow, that you will commit to paving parts and twinning highway 63 this year?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we'll move as fast as we can with all the conditions that are put on us there. When we can get our permits from the federal government to move ahead in certain areas, we move ahead, and we're going to do it as fast as we possibly can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Tourism Marketing

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Official numbers estimate tourism in Alberta to be a $6 billion industry. The economic crisis, the recent tragic events in Japan, and the current strength of the Canadian dollar have made hotel prices go down and international tourists scarce. To the minister of tourism: given that the hotel prices have been increasing world-wide but steadily decreasing in Alberta, why hasn't the minister been able to stop this downfall and its negative impact on employment and on our economy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, tourism is a wonderful industry, and it's a very resilient industry. There have been pressures lately, we know, in the economy, and that has caused some difficulties in pricing of hotels. But that's a free-market piece. I think we'll see those prices go up. I have no control over what the rooms are and what they charge in a hotel.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why hasn't the minister, as have many other Canadian provinces, invested in developing the tourism marketing and original publicity campaigns to stimulate our declining tourism industry?

Mrs. Ady: That's a great question, Mr. Speaker. Actually, we're working very hard at that and have been from, you know, the beginning of time. We have a new campaign that's about to be unleashed this fall, and I would say to all hon. members: watch for it. We think it's going to be one of the best out there in the nation. We're going to continue to do the good work. We put almost $50 million a year into advertising this province across the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister answered part of my question.

To the minister again: why has the minister not been acting on this issue and not been inclined to prevent groups who wish to hurt the industry with negative advertisement campaigns from doing so?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, actually, when we looked at the numbers for last year, we found that those campaigns did not have a negative effect on tourism. It stayed as robust as we thought it would. You know, even though you're going to go out there and say my name everywhere, it actually helped us. It didn't hurt us; the economy did. We did find that Albertans actually picked up and increased the amount that they travelled in the province, and we think that that's going to also help us this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Housing for Immigrant Seniors

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some immigrant seniors who came under sponsorship are facing undue hardship, including lack of access to subsidized housing supports, when the sponsors fail to support them adequately. Our Housing Act states that all permanent residents of Canada are eligible for subsidized housing given they meet income requirements. My questions are to the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. Clarify the relationship between the federal government's policy for immigrant seniors sponsorship agreements and the procedure within his ministry for permanent residents and citizens who are immigrants.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our province does continue to welcome many people from outside the country. In fact, over the next couple of years our statistics do show that even more people from international origin are going to be coming here.

Now, moving to the member's question, if we look further, often people who come to this province are sponsored by a particular community organization or an individual. Those people do not qualify for our assistance. But if they fall out of this particular housing and particular sponsorship, then they can . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Woo-Paw: My supplemental to the same minister: will the process for resolving differences between your ministry and the housing management boards be reviewed to improve the response to these issues that cross different levels of government?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we look forward, we do have many private-sector management bodies throughout the entire province. If a dispute does arise, we do deal with it on an individual, case-by-case basis. These management bodies are very important to our local governance model and do create a great degree of efficiency and local input throughout the entire province. Problems do arise, but we do deal with it on a one-by-one basis.

Ms Woo-Paw: To the same minister: how do you respond to the perception that the right hand doesn't seem to know what the left hand is doing in relation to the work of your ministry and the housing management bodies?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's the second time I've heard that phrase today, and of course I do prefer the right hand.

There are 14,000 self-contained seniors' housing units in this province, and it can be a challenge sometimes to stay on top of it all. But it is important to always keep the dialogue going as to what may be happening at a particular end of the province, and that's what we will endeavour to do going into the future as well.

University of Alberta South Campus Development

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the U of A is telling neighbouring communities that it wants to revamp its long-range development plan by this summer. This is a huge plan with billion dollar implications, covering hundreds of acres in central Edmonton, directly affecting tens of thousands of people. Revising the plan in such a short time could preclude due process. Since the minister of advanced education has the final approval of this plan, will he ensure that it follows recognized and accredited planning processes such as those followed by Alberta municipalities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's true that I have met with the University of Alberta, and they are working on their new long-range development plan. It is a critical document. All developments on university sites must conform with their long-range development plans. The change of the 2013 Expo plans did create the opportunity for that property to look for some other options. So, yes, to answer the member, I have asked the University of Alberta to revisit that plan, to meet with the neighbours, and to follow good planning processes as they move forward.

Dr. Taft: Well, given that the U of A is planning south campus residences for 15,000 students, equal to the combined population of all the neighbourhoods around south campus and given that the GO centre plus the proposed arenas and field house plus many other developments will generate major traffic concerns in an already congested area, will the minister require the university to conduct a full, publicly disclosed traffic management plan as part of its LRDP?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In meetings with the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and some of the neighbours we did hear that issues around both parking and transportation are going to be critical through the area not just for the people who live there and the new 15,000 but also for people commuting in. So it's going to be critical that the University of Alberta in partnership with the municipality develop a proper transportation plan that will meet the needs of not just this site but the neighbouring communities and those commuting through the property.

Dr. Taft: Well, given the wonderful opportunity that the south campus and Campus Saint-Jean lands provide and given that a top 20 university needs a top 20 campus and given that universities are meant to welcome peer reviews of their work, will the minister make sure the upcoming university LRDP is opened to international peer review before he approves it to help make the plan a global leader?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. It's my understanding that there has been a plan developed at least to give some feedback and input on how a green site could be created there and how the development can be done in an environmentally friendly way and, in fact, as a world leader for development in environmentally appropriate ways. The university has got some of the finest people working on that, and I'm hoping that they will build those ideas into their future long-range development plan so that we can see a green site on the south campus.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Anthony Henday Drive Interchanges

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of Alberta Transportation's ongoing efforts to improve traffic flow along Stony Plain Road, the Yellowhead, and the Anthony Henday, a series of events have transpired that resulted in the elimination of two of four accesses to the Westview Village and Acheson industrial parks. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. Now that we've basically doubled the traffic on Winterburn Road, when will the 199th Street and 109th Avenue accesses be reopened?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're investing $168 million in the Stony Plain Road-Anthony Henday Drive interchange. The 109th Avenue access was temporarily closed last summer. We had hoped that it would open in late fall, but due to poor soil conditions and weather conditions we were unable to do that. We should have it open by early June. The permanent closure, though, of the 199th Street access is part of the construction of the interchange and will not be reopening as it's no longer safe for motorists.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Given that Winterburn Road south of the Yellowhead Trail crosses the CN main line, which is the busiest rail line in Alberta, why did planners decide to shut down our alternative accesses without taking into account the dangers involved in that crossing?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it was not our plan to have both accesses closed at the same time. The poor soil conditions that happened: we had some extra work to do, and we have done that now. Industry and community residents want this access open as quickly as possible, and so do I. That's why we're reopening the 109th Avenue access as a priority, and as soon as the asphalt plant is up and running, we'll be paving the access. We're looking to try and get it open in early . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's good news, indeed. Given that my constituents will make very good use of the interchanges at Stony Plain Road and the Anthony Henday, what can we do in the long term to improve access to Acheson and Westview?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I've said, we're going to reopen the 109th Avenue access once it's paved, and we're going to do that as quickly as we possibly can this spring. It's a top priority for us, and we'll proceed as quickly as possible and help relieve the congestion for motorists on Winterburn Road. We always do our very best to manage our construction projects as efficiently and as safely as possible. That's because we want to make sure that everyone gets home to their families every day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Water Allocation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's pet project, Shaping Alberta's Future, includes recommendations for our water system, including the creation of an Alberta water agency that will deal with water allocation and private industry building water infrastructure. This is another way for the government to continue to allow an antiquated Wild West system to determine who gets water. To the Minister of Environment: why would the government create another administrative authority behind which it can hide and continue to pull the strings, this time with our most important resource, water?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, as the member well knows, we have had a process under way to engage Albertans in a discussion about water and water allocation. The report that the member refers to is a report that is not a government report. It is a report that was commissioned by the government for independent long-term thoughts that could help the government and Albertans to think about the future. The specifics in that report may or may not someday form government policy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister. Why is the government encouraging private entities to build water infrastructure, which could be candidates for the new shaping the future fund? By my reading of that, the private sector once again can be eligible for subsidy to build infrastructure that they then own.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, it's not unusual in the least for private entities to participate in some form of water management structures. The EPCORs of this world are heavily involved, TransAlta is heavily involved in this province, as are municipalities in various forms: public, private, and government entities. So I don't think that this is anything that the member or any Albertan should be concerned about. This is just looking at opportunities that may arise in the future.

Ms Blakeman: Uh-uh. Albertans don't like that.

Back to the same minister. Why does the government propose again and again and again to set up a system for the future, which insists on protecting individuals based on the past and lets them sell water just because they happen to be on the land first?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. Albertans cannot and will never be able to sell water. Water is the property of the Crown. There are opportunities for individuals and companies to process water in one form or another, and it goes on all of the time. The Albertans that live in the city of Edmonton buy their water from a private company called EPCOR. That's not in the least bit threatening, nor do I think that other kinds of discussions around water should be any more threatening.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mature Worker Strategy

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In late April the minister released a document called Engaging the Mature Worker: An Action Plan for Alberta. In that plan he talks about ways to encourage older workers to remain in the workforce. There is a lot of confusion out there as to what this plan is all about. Do you realistically expect seniors to remain in the workforce well into their 70s and 80s?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, nothing can be further from the truth. I do acknowledge that there are some spreading the fear that this minister is promoting freedom 85, but that is not the case. All we are doing is giving Albertans choices. By all means, any Albertan who chooses to work past the age of 65 should not be precluded from doing so and should have that opportunity to make that choice for herself or himself. The age of 65 is the new 55, and many of us choose to work longer.

Mr. Vandermeer: To the same minister: how can a government influence whether or not older workers will continue to work in the workforce?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, all we want to do is create an environment where they have at least the option of working past 65, and that would include making sure that our provincial benefits structure does not penalize people who are benefiting past the age of 65 by earning additional dollars if they choose to do so and by making sure that the taxation regime, both federally and provincially, is not punitive to a person who collects his or her pension and then chooses to work past 65. There are a number of steps that we can take to give seniors a viable option if they choose to exercise it.

Mr. Vandermeer: Is this action plan going to negatively affect younger employees trying to move up in the workforce?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. Looking at the fact that we are now having baby boomers retiring en masse and that our population growth is slightly above zero, we are already facing a shortage of certain skill sets and will be short some 77,000 workers over the next few years. The fact is that we actually need to capitalize on some of that experience – these are fine, experienced workers – to teach our new workers the skills. For every worker that is retiring right now, only a fraction of a worker is entering the workforce, so these workers, if they choose to continue working, would not be taking jobs away from young people.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 19 members who were recognized today. There were 113 questions and responses.

Join me in wishing two members of the Assembly a happy birthday today, the hon. Member for Red Deer-South and the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

In a few seconds from now we'll return to the Routine with Members' Statements, and we'll all leave as we ponder the concept of freedom 85.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Asian Heritage Month

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Asian Heritage Month in Alberta and across Canada. In 1998 the city of Edmonton was the first municipality in Canada to officially recognize Asian Heritage Month, with the province joining in on that recognition. I started the festival in Calgary in 2001, which in turn led to the government of Canada officially designating May as Asian Heritage Month in 2002.

Asian Heritage Month fosters appreciation for the contributions that have been and continue to be made to our country and to our province by Canadians of Asian descent since the mid-1800s. Through those contributions members of Alberta's Asian community have brought acclaim to this province and stand as role models for all Albertans, people like Canadian Football League hall of famer and former Lieutenant Governor the Hon. Norman Kwong, who was the first Chinese-Canadian to play in the Canadian Football League and Alberta's first Lieutenant Governor of Asian descent, and people like award-winning playwright and author Marty Chan, who helped raise awareness through the arts about issues faced by Asian-Canadian youth growing up in rural Alberta.

I want to encourage Albertans to take part in Asian Heritage Month by experiencing and enjoying the rich and diverse cultural heritage of our Asian communities.

Our Legislature, through the support of the Speaker's office, is offering such opportunity with a photo exhibit entitled Builders and Patriots: A History of Calgary's Chinatown. This collaborative project between the Sien Lok Society of Calgary and members of the broader Calgary community has been created by the community and for the community with a group of committed volunteers, and that just reflects the essence which has kept Chinatown alive to witness its 100th anniversary in 2010.

During Asian Heritage Month many events and activities will be taking place across the province, and I invite Albertans to join with me in the celebration.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Tribute to Health Professionals

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since January 4, 2010, when I crossed the floor, I have sat in this House across from the government, with which I have some very profound disagreements. The government has held office for a long, long time. Over time it's lost touch with Albertans. Their big-government mentality confuses the people with the system, where the system is given credit for the people's achievements.

Let us shift our focus, Mr. Speaker, back to the successful, innovative, and capable people of this province. During the spring session there was one particular group of Albertans who have shown their bravery, their professionalism, and their dedication under unfair working conditions. I'm talking about our health care professionals. We owe these individuals so much gratitude that for me to stand here and try to express it in such a short time would be impossible. They serve in the face of hardship when their jobs are thankless, they serve in the face of unquestionable working conditions when the quality of the system is compromised, they serve in the face of fear and intimidation when these truths begin to emerge, and they endure these things for Albertans. For this they deserve all the respect we have to offer.

To say that they deserve better, Mr. Speaker, is a tremendous understatement. This government did not acknowledge them when they called for an inquiry simply to ensure that Albertans were getting the most from their health care system, and unfortunately this is why we have no reason to believe these abuses will stop at any time.

But I refuse to accept that there is no hope for our health care professionals. To them I can offer this. We in the Wildrose will continue to fight for them, and we will not stop until they finally receive the respect that they deserve from this government. Once they do, we will be one step closer to restoring Albertans' faith in our great province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Highway Cleanup Program

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand today and recognize a great initiative that took place this past weekend. On Saturday, May 7, the annual highway cleanup program was out in full force as participants contributed their time and energy in order to help clean up Alberta's highways.

The program has been set up as a fundraiser event, allowing all sorts of clubs such as Scouts and 4-H to earn money for their organizations while making Alberta a better and cleaner place to live. This has been made possible by Alberta Transportation, who very generously donated money to these clubs based on the number of kilometres of highway they cleaned this weekend. Last year $476,000 was awarded to 357 groups that took part in collecting an astounding 44,000 bags of garbage. I'd like to commend the Ministry of Transportation for taking part in such a valuable program. It's a true testament to the respect and value that we as Albertans place on our environment as well as the aesthetics of our beautiful landscapes.

Seeing these individuals out there this weekend was an effective reminder of the consequences that littering has on our province. We all need to think twice about throwing that piece of trash out of our windows or being careless with our refuse. Our highways and ditches are vital to Alberta's image as they are often a large part of the impression that our province provides to travelers as they pass through. Therefore, it's crucial that we keep them as clean and trash free as possible.

Again, I would like to ask the members of this Assembly to join me in thanking the annual highway cleanup program, Transportation Alberta, and all of the dedicated volunteers and participants who helped to keep Alberta beautiful this past weekend.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

2:50 Rutherford Heights Retirement Residence

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I had the honour of opening a new community-based adult day program for seniors at Rutherford Heights Retirement Residence in southwest Edmonton. This program offers local residents and their families specialized care, social programs, meals, and other supports geared to the needs of the participants. It will provide much-needed support to the growing numbers of Albertans coping with the early stages of Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia.

Mr. Speaker, like other hon. members, I know from personal experience the value that these programs deliver not only to participants but also in the form of much-needed respite to the spouses, sons, daughters, and family and friends that care for them. Sadly, despite their many benefits and relatively low cost I am told these programs are scarce. I will leave the analysis as to why this is to others, but I think one factor that contributes greatly is that when it comes to continuing care, our focus today is pretty much where it was 40 years ago, centred squarely on the institution.

Mr. Speaker, this is not to say that we don't need more facility-based care for seniors who can no longer be supported at home. On the contrary, my constituents have made it very clear to me, for example, that they don't want a plan for continuing care that places arbitrary caps or quotas on long-term care beds. But what makes a program like the one I've just described unique is that it looks to how the institution can reach out and work with the community to provide innovative, personalized support to seniors and their families, who are working hard to maintain their independence.

In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, if as members of this House we look at aging and continuing care only through the lens of beds and bedpans, I guarantee that this province, with all that we have, will never succeed in addressing the challenges before us. This is a public policy discussion worth having soon. Alberta's aging public policy framework is a very good place to start.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Postpartum Depression

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise today and speak about an important issue that impacts the lives of many Albertans, postpartum depression. Postpartum depression and other postpartum mood disorders affect approximately 15 per cent of mothers within the first year of giving birth. However, the majority of these mothers do not get help for a variety of reasons. Either they go undiagnosed, are unable to find help, or never come forward because of the stigma attached to postpartum depression.

It is important that Albertans acknowledge the significance of this form of depression and understand that there are resources available. The organization Postpartum Depression Awareness, or PPDA, is doing amazing work spreading this message of awareness to Albertans by providing resource-related projects to support those dealing with PPD.

One of the most impressive developments is the creation of a comprehensive website which endeavours to list all of the resources that are available in the Edmonton area relating to postpartum depression. They are trying to inform the public through their yearly awareness month and through other initiatives. The next objective of the PPDA is to implement a provincial awareness month, which would generate significant awareness of postpartum depression.

Mr. Speaker, knowledge and resources are very powerful tools to assist those who are dealing with the challenges of PPD. I would like to commend all the efforts and initiatives that have been undertaken by my constituent Tascheleia and her colleagues to generate awareness and support for postpartum depression. I would like to urge all Albertans to support these endeavours in every way they can, and I sincerely wish PPDA every success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Education Funding

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Alberta students are the future of this province. Their creativity, energy, and intelligence, if properly nurtured, will one day drive Alberta's prosperity and growth. But this government is shortchanging Alberta students and their parents with their short-sighted approach to public education funding. The chair of the Edmonton public school board has called this government's budget the worst budget for education and school districts in years. The Catholic board chair simply states: there's nothing left to trim.

Now parents are out of pocket hundreds of dollars a year in extra costs such as busing fees, and in return the children will have to make do with fewer teachers and larger class sizes. Parents in my constituency have contacted our office to explain how they have no choice but to resort to fundraising so their children can enjoy basic classroom necessities and important teaching aids such as library books, technological resources, and field trips.

Alberta Education's funding manual for school authorities notes that funding allocation changes for this year will expand class sizes, eliminate teaching English as a second language, and may eliminate or severely reduce funding for special-needs children. We don't know for sure because the document merely states that such funding is "under review."

The Minister of Education has dumped all the responsibility for his flawed budget onto school boards, who must now decide, in his words, what doesn't need to be done. I guess that includes having enough teachers to effectively provide sufficient personal attention to each and every student or helping children with special needs or providing English- or French-language instruction in an increasingly globalized world.

Public education is the single most important investment any government manages. This Progressive Conservative government has dropped the ball, and the students and their parents are once again paying the price.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present 2,077 signatures from concerned and committed parents in Calgary. These Alberta parents are petitioning in support of choice for their children's education through charter schools. Their request includes a fair and equitable process to establish charter schools through direct application and also the ability for charter schools to be granted earned permanence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition. I've looked into the eyes of young men and women with a five-year education degree from the U of L and two years' experience, and it wasn't a pretty sight as they will now lose their jobs. I'm presenting a petition signed by a hundred people urging the government to provide funding to "address the needs of every student, every day, no exceptions."

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Government House Leader I'm pleased to propose the following motion:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the 2011 spring sitting of the Assembly shall stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

Is that the motion that you're looking for?

The Speaker: That's not the information I have, that that was what you would be giving oral notice of a motion of today.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Bill 20

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 20, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011.

This bill, if passed, will allow volunteer and casual firefighters, categorized as part-time firefighters, to access the benefits of receiving compensation for a list of presumptive cancers without shouldering the burden of proof. Mr. Speaker, these same benefits currently extend to Alberta's full-time firefighters. I along with Albertans hold our province's firefighters in high regard. The bottom line is that part-time or volunteer firefighters can be exposed to the same hazards at a fire scene as a full-time firefighter would.

Bill 20 is reflective of the government's ongoing commitment to the brave men and women who put their lives on the line so that we can enjoy ours.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this, and I ask all members of this Assembly to support Bill 20.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 38 separate reports from long-term care workers collected by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees indicating specific problems on shifts that were short-staffed. These reports indicate that residents were left in bed, that baths were not given, and that bells were not answered in a timely manner. This is in addition to hundreds of similar reports that the NDP opposition has tabled over the last two years and indicates that the government cannot argue that it is unaware of the situation.

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, I must advise that under Standing Order 7(7) "at 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly."

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent from the members assembled to continue with the daily Routine past the 3 p.m. time.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Let's continue, then, with tablings. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The copy of the letter and my cheque, as I had promised on April 2, 2007, where I give half of my pay raise in support of AISH being indexed, as are our MLA salaries: I've sent it to the Medicine Hat food bank this month.

I also have tablings from Gwen Bodie, Sandra Leckie, Dave Birrell, John Clarke, and John Verlaecka, who are extremely disappointed with this government and very upset with the clear-cutting that will be happening in the Castle River area.

I have five copies of a letter from Megan Cummins expressing her deep dismay regarding the education cuts.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Weadick, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, response to Written Question 20, asked for by Dr. Taft on May 9, 2011, and on behalf of Mr. Allred, the hon. Member for St. Albert, a document dated September 30, 2010, entitled Court Case Management (CCM) Program Phase 1, Closeout Report, prepared by the Provincial Court of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, during the question period an hon. member rose in the House and said that he wanted to raise a point of order at the conclusion of the question period. There will be no such point of order even considered by the chair with respect to this matter as there are no points of order against the rulings of the chair.

The subject matter in question was the elimination of one question by the chair in terms of preserving decorum in the House and dealing with preambles in the House. The situation with preambles is very, very clear. It's been agreed to by all members in the all-party agreement, that was given on several occasions, that "preambles to supplemental questions are not allowed . . . A preamble [does] not exceed one carefully drawn sentence . . . A supplementary question should need no preamble." Included in the past documentation is a document signed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere adhering to this, in fact advancing it.

What was said today when there was an interjection. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere said, "It's not what I heard when I was in caucus, Minister," period, and then went on for about five more sentences before the chair said: no, no, no. "If that isn't a preamble, I don't know what it is," said the chair.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order.

The Speaker: There are no points of order against . . .

Mr. Boutilier: I raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Would you sit down, please? Would you sit down? Would you sit down? [interjection] Sit down. I'm standing up. Sit down. [interjection] Sit down.

Mr. Boutilier: I'm still raising a point of order.

The Speaker: When I stand up, you sit down, okay? Okay? If I recognize you, I will. If I don't see you, I won't.

I will preserve decorum in this House, and that's one of the responsibilities of the chair of the House. I've indicated this matter. I've dealt with this matter with respect to preambles. There are no points of order against decisions with respect to what the chair has given in terms of rulings in this House.

Now, Mr. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, what is your point of order?

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I raised a point of order under 13(2) pertaining to that a member may request of the Speaker "reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." What I observed in the exchange this afternoon is the fact that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere had started his comments by saying "given," which is a parliamentary procedure that has been widely accepted in this House.

The Speaker: No, no. Sorry. Please sit down. There are no points of order under 13(2). That's not a point of order. It's a request that can be made by any member at any time for an explanation by the Speaker. The Speaker shall give the explanation.

Just in the last few seconds the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo said: it's my understanding that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere started with the word "given." He did not. I have the Blues in front of me. Sorry. It says very clearly, very clearly in the Blues that there is no "given" with respect to the time the interjection came from the chair.

Furthermore, it's very, very clear what was said. The chair by way of explanation interjected with respect to the usage of a preamble on a third question. There was also a preamble on the second question. It was let go. But very clearly, everybody has agreed, including the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere – including the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere – who has signed a document with his name on it, with respect to not using preambles. This is not a question. We're not wasting the time of the House dealing with this anymore. It's been dealt with.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Adjournment of Spring Session

16. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the 2011 spring sitting of the Assembly shall stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rose prematurely with a motion that I needed to make, and since I read it incorrectly and at the incorrect time, I'd like to now read the correct motion at the correct time. My apologies to you and to the House for that error on my part.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this motion is not debatable. I'll call the question.

[Government Motion 16 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Justice I would like to move second reading of Bill 19, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2011.

Mr. Speaker, as I think all members of this Assembly know, miscellaneous statutes typically reflect provisions that are very straightforward, noncontentious – many would call them house-keeping in most cases – and it's for that reason that they usually receive the support of this House. I would encourage all members to please give their support to Bill 19 and its provisions at second.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek the unanimous consent of the House to proceed with the second reading at this time of Bill 20, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011, as brought forward by the hon. minister of immigration and citizenship.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're going to need unanimous consent to the question being asked, to move to this next stage of the bill on the same day.

Bill 20

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to this amendment act. Before us today is Bill 20, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011. If passed, this act will extend the same WCB coverage for presumptive cancers, that is currently offered to some 3,500 full-time firefighters in Alberta, to the 10,000 individuals who serve as volunteer and casual firefighters in this province.

Mr. Speaker, when the alarm sounds or the phone rings, these part-time firefighters drop what they're doing and voluntarily – and I underscore: voluntarily – go into harm's way to protect their families, their neighbours, and their communities.

For most people it's human nature to run from danger. No one can be faulted for it because it's simply a natural instinct. For firefighters, including part-time firefighters, their training tells them to run, Mr. Speaker, towards danger, to set aside concerns for themselves in order to help their fellow man. That kind of spirit and dedication deserves our respect, our sincere thanks, and, as proposed in this act today, our support through legislation.

Mr. Speaker, it is one thing to volunteer to coach a soccer team or serve on a library board. Many of us have been that kind of volunteer in our own communities. Those volunteer jobs are important. But it takes a special type of man or woman to be willing to put on a helmet, strap on a respirator, and hop onto a fire truck at 2 o'clock in the morning to help a neighbour. In many cases they might be driving a fire truck, not just riding on it. These individuals have tremendous community spirit, and they demonstrate it every day by putting their own lives at risk to help others. They might be a mechanic at a local car dealership or a farmer or a furniture salesperson, but they all have something in common. They all believe it's their duty to step up when they're needed.

I think that members of this Legislature will agree with me that all Albertans benefit from the goodwill and sacrifice that those volunteers have agreed to make. That is why I am glad that we can step up today and offer them something in return with this proposed act.

Contracting cancer through exposure to chemicals or other hazardous materials in the course of being a firefighter is, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, a known possibility. That is why we have implemented presumptive WCB coverage for 14 types of cancer, including four more just last week, for full-time firefighters. Part-time firefighters face the same risk as they are exposed to the same hazards as their full-time counterparts. They can be called out to fires at oil and gas facilities, explosions at remote utility installations, or chemical releases from motor vehicle accidents on the highways. In other words, they can easily come into contact with the same circumstances and the same hazards that full-time firefighters often do. Therefore, it makes sense that they should be offered the same WCB coverage as well.

Mr. Speaker, this proposed act has the full support of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, which passed a resolution suggesting to government to extend the coverage to volunteer firefighters at its own 2011 convention. These organizations have urged us to extend WCB coverage for presumptive cancers since their municipalities are considered the employers of firefighters even if they are part-time volunteers.

Passing this bill would also be in keeping with the majority of provinces and territories, that currently offer workers' compensation coverage to full-time firefighters, including British Columbia, Ontario, Nova Scotia, Manitoba, Nunavut, and the Northwest Territories. These jurisdictions have all extended coverage for presumptive cancers to part-time and volunteer firefighters as well. They have seen that it makes sense to support those volunteer firefighters who, unfortunately, contract cancer through their work and compensate them without forcing them to shoulder the burden of proof.

Mr. Speaker, we here in the Legislature have been given the task of representing Albertans. It is our job to act on their behalf. That is why I urge my colleagues to support this bill. Since we represent Albertans, then collectively we owe a huge debt of gratitude to those 10,000 part-time firefighters, who set aside their work and their free time to serve us in our time of need. The least we can do is to provide them with proper compensation coverage should they contract an illness in the line of duty.

I am proud to carry Bill 20, Mr. Speaker, and I encourage all of my colleagues in the Legislature to support it. Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, then the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I am happy to stand today on behalf of the Wildrose caucus to express our support for Bill 20, which adds presumptive WCB coverage for volunteer firefighters who are diagnosed with one of the 14 cancers linked to the dangerous work. Nobody has a workplace that is more dangerous day in and day out than our firefighters. Even if the whole crew makes it back after fighting a fire without any apparent injury, there are the countless toxins that they are exposed to. Studies are confirming what common sense would tell you: smoke from all burning material is full of cancer-causing agents.

Mr. Speaker, houses are not just made out of wood. As anyone who has thrown a plastic wrapper into a campfire knows, burning plastic smells awful. Now think about all of the things in a house that are not wood or paper: counters, carpets, paint, siding. Buildings are full of all kinds of materials that are not meant to be burned. Burning material can be even more toxic when it comes to industrial fires.

Last week four cancers were added to the list for regular firefighters, and that process should be supported. It's a shame that only eight years ago firefighters had to prove which fire caused their cancer to be eligible for coverage. Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, we are well past that.

Extending this coverage to the volunteer firefighters is also an important next step and one that we all need to support. These brave and generous people are essential to smaller communities across Alberta. Smaller towns cannot afford full-time forces, but fortunately smaller towns are blessed to have these wonderful people committed to rushing out in all hours and in all types of weather to contain any fires that break out in their community.

You know, people may be surprised – I was surprised, Mr. Speaker, quite frankly – at the number of volunteer firefighters that are in this province. I live in the city of Calgary, so I was quite taken aback when I started reading the numbers of volunteer firefighters that are in this province. They are truly a valuable safety net for our province, and they deserve our support. As we're hearing, they are facing some recruitment issues, and hopefully things like that combined with the proposed federal tax credit will help reverse some of the recruitment issues. The AUMA as well as volunteer firefighter groups have been pushing for this change. Good for them.

It's important, Mr. Speaker, and I say that as someone who growing up in Saskatchewan had a major house fire in their own home, where we lost everything. Believe it or not, they managed to save my two turtles and my dog out of that fire. We walked away with the clothes on our back.

I have always had a great admiration for the firefighters in this province, and I am extremely pleased to stand up and support Bill 20.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to Bill 20, Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011. Forty-two years ago as of August 30, 1969, Rob Tomlinson, a Calgary firefighter, stood up as my best man at my wedding. Rob has recently retired from the Calgary fire department, in which he was a captain. Rob served very diligently over those years for the department, and his service was very much appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the tradition started by a former Member for Calgary-North Hill, Richard Magnus, of extending the protection for firefighters due to a series of carcinogens has been extended to volunteer firefighters. As the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration pointed out, simply having a V on the front of your jacket, which represents volunteer, should not prevent you from receiving the same benefits as your counterparts in the city.

But we still have a ways to go. Firefighters are not supported when they suffer from posttraumatic stress syndrome to the same extent that either armed forces members or RCMP members are supported. Mr. Speaker, I have spent a number of years through the Calgary-Varsity constituency working on behalf of another captain of the Calgary fire department by the name of Greg McDougall. When Greg McDougall was forced by the city into early retirement based on posttraumatic stress syndrome, there was extremely little support for him either from the city at that time or from the Workers' Compensation Board. It has been an ongoing struggle, actually, with a forced recommendation from the Ombudsman to require the Workers' Compensation Board to apologize to Mr. McDougall and look after his financial concerns.

While I am pleased to see it and to support the passing of Bill 20, until firefighters are dealt with in all circumstances, including posttraumatic stress disorder, we will not be finished. Mr. Speaker, I am hoping that the same rights that have been extended to volunteer firefighters will be extended to all first responders. In rural districts the firefighter and the paramedic are often the same individual. Police forces, whether they be sheriffs, whether they be RCMP, are also on the same site directing traffic and risking their lives, and at some point their contributions along with their comrades, the firefighters, need to be recognized.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to rise and speak in support of Bill 20, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011. I think this bill recognizes that it is high time that we treat all professional firefighters in the same manner, and I stress the word "professional" because even though we have in this province full-time paid firefighters, a significant proportion of this province, including the community that I call home, the city of Leduc, is served by a volunteer force. As a matter of fact, the force in Leduc is a combination of both volunteer and full-time firefighters. I can assure you that when these brave men and women attend the scene of a fire, there is no difference between the volunteer and the full-time paid individual.

The risks that these individuals are exposed to are great, and it is something that we have recognized in this Chamber in previous amendments. I look back, Mr. Speaker, to Bill 201, that I was privileged to carry last year, the previous amendment act to the WCB act, that added additional presumptive cancers to the list for firefighters. Also, I was very pleased to see the recent addition of four new cancers by the WCB in the past week. I think that it is very fitting and it's a credit to the work of volunteer firefighters across our province that we would now, as proposed by Bill 20, offer volunteer firefighters the same level of protection, recognizing the significant risk that these brave men and women put themselves in when they go out to save our lives and our property on a day-by-day basis.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all my colleagues to support swift passage of Bill 20. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in recognizing the speaking order this afternoon, because of the time commitment of 20 minutes and 20 minutes, the person who introduced the bill, in this case the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration, would have had 20 minutes. Then the second speaker would have had 20 minutes. Normally under our protocol it's a member of the Official Opposition that would get 20 minutes.

Also, Standing Order 29(2)(a) did not apply because in this case I just recognized the first person who stood and the third speaker, and this was the Member for Calgary-Varsity. I did not offer 29(2)(a) because if he had been recognized as second, it wouldn't have happened anyway.

Now we've got the fourth speaker, and that is the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, who has participated, and we do have 29(2)(a) available. We'll start now with this one if anybody wants to participate under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Are there additional speakers? On the debate. Proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Bill 20, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011, is an unusual but a good request. I am glad that the Assembly is allowing this legislation to proceed quickly. Certainly, all Alberta firefighters must receive enhanced WCB cancer coverage. It was indicated in a government press release from last week that the list of cancers eligible for coverage will be among the best in Canada. Whether we have voluntary firefighters, Mr. Speaker, or we have full-time firefighters, no one denies that they should be protected under the Workers' Compensation Board for coverage.

Now, certainly, I have no problem supporting this bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity talked about the efforts by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill I think it was called in those days, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Richard Magnus. He worked very hard on previous legislation to ensure that firefighters were covered.

But I would like this Assembly at this time to consider what we have done today for voluntary firefighters and to give due consideration to better protecting the rest of Alberta's workforce who each and every day when they go to work are exposed to agents or toxins. It has been known scientifically that cancer can result as exposure to these toxins and agents increases. Essentially, I would hope that what we have done for firefighters in the past, whether they're full-time or whether they're voluntary firefighters, all hon. members of this Assembly would consider for the rest of the workforce who day in and day out are exposed to cancer-causing agents.

We can go through the financial statements of the Workers' Compensation Board, and we can see where there are millions of dollars set aside in the occupational disease reserve fund. There are examples, for instance, with welders – and we have brought this up in the Assembly before – where welders have an unusual rate of throat or thoracic cancer. We don't know the causes of that, but it sure would be, I think, good public policy if this government was to act expediently once and for all to get a study done to see precisely the long-term effects that welding has on those who are qualified to practice welding procedures.

Now, with that, I would just like to say that Bill 20 is the right thing and the fair thing to do, but we have so much work to do for the rest of the workforce in this province. I'm urging my colleagues: please don't forget that there are others that, unfortunately, are exposed to toxins and agents that produce cancers. It may not happen next week or next month. It may happen 10, 20 years down the road.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

There being none, the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House to participate in the debate, and Edmonton-Riverview to follow.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have the opportunity this afternoon to rise and speak on Bill 20, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011, as introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Now, we look at the situation in rural Alberta where most of the volunteer firefighters exist. You see them having to come in from work in many cases. Of course, fires and all kinds of emergencies don't happen at a convenient time. So they have to come in and suit up, go out and fight the fire, and in many cases then go back to work. Now, of course, this is very difficult for the whole family. To think that these people are putting themselves in harm's way to save the lives and property of other people, I think it behooves us to make this kind of an adjustment so that if they are exposed to carcinogens, like so many firefighters are, and they develop these types of cancers, the least that we could do would be to make sure that they have compensation.

When we look at the volunteer fire departments and the type of backup that they would have versus what we would find in the cities, where they have many, many stations, top-notch equipment, this sort of thing, I think that in many cases we don't appreciate what these volunteers are putting up with in order to save people's lives. It's not only the fires that they attend to but other types of disasters and vehicle accidents. At any kind of emergency like that you will find volunteer firefighters on the line helping people.

It was interesting. A week ago in the county of Lacombe all of the municipalities within the county got together and signed agreements to assist in emergency management. Well, when you look at the personnel that will be carrying this out, it is primarily the firefighters in all those small towns and villages and the county that have gotten together to provide this service. Now, I know that it's getting more and more difficult for the volunteer firefighting units to find the people. Of course, this has a good deal to do with the jobs that people have and the area that they have to cover.

I think that this is a great move. I was very, very pleased with the answer yesterday to the question that I asked the minister about this very issue. He told me that I didn't have to wait long or to stay tuned, something like that. So I was very pleased to learn today that this was going to be introduced. I want to once again thank the minister for bringing this forward. It's a great move.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should anyone wish to participate.

I see no movement, so I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to participate in the debate.

Dr. Taft: In the debate, Mr. Speaker, yes. I join with other members of the Assembly in supporting this bill. I want to make note of its admirable intent, which is to extend the protection offered to professional firefighters to volunteer firefighters under WCB. It's already been mentioned in this Assembly by the minister and by others some of the risks that all firefighters face, whether they're professionals or volunteers. If we expect people to volunteer for this position, we need to, I think, in some ways treat them even better than we treat professionals because they're not getting paid, they're committing their time, and they are after all risking their health and their lives on a volunteer basis.

I would like to get some questions on the record that the minister might address at later stages in the bill. These may be questions, Mr. Speaker, that I ought to know the answer to, but I'm going to proceed on the basis that there's no such thing as a stupid question. My first question is around the payment of WCB premiums. How will that be handled in this particular situation? Does the minister have a plan around this? Is there going to be a financial implication for volunteer fire departments, or does this flow through to the minister? Or are we going to expect these volunteer firefighters to now have to pay their own WCB premiums? I don't know what the issues are here, Mr. Speaker, but I will be looking to the minister to answer that set of questions.

My second question is just around the position of the Workers' Compensation Board itself on this piece of legislation. Has the WCB been consulted? If so, did they say anything? If they haven't, they should be. I'd be curious and I would think all members of this Assembly would be curious to know what the WCB might be saying about Bill 20.

I also want to raise the question just around costs, which probably relates not just to premiums but to the payment of benefits. Has there been any assessment of the cost of this legislation? Do we have any idea at all how many volunteer firefighters might qualify for benefits and how much those benefits will cost? Has anybody looked at that? It seems to me a basic question that we should all be asking. It doesn't mean that I'm opposing the bill. I just want to be informed when I vote on something. So that's a handful of questions.

I also want to echo the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. The intent of this bill, as I noted in my very first comments, is to extend WCB protection to a group of people who do not currently have that protection. It's a good intent. I think it's an intent that should be applied to paid farm workers, Mr. Speaker. Paid farm workers run some of the same risks, don't they? They handle chemicals that can be carcinogenic. They run physical risks in running equipment. We all know that farms are among the most dangerous worksites in the world, perhaps not as dangerous as going into a burning building but very dangerous.

Ms Blakeman: You still get dead.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. Either way you get injured or killed.

Actually, it would be interesting if the minister had any statistical information he could provide to the Assembly comparing the accident, injury, work-related disease, and fatality rates of firefighters versus the same figures for paid farm workers. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I won't be surprised if paid farm workers actually have a higher injury rate than firefighters. I don't know, but it wouldn't surprise me.

My point is that the intent here is to extend WCB benefits to volunteer firefighters. In that spirit I think everybody in this Assembly knows that I and other members of the Alberta Liberal caucus would like to see that intent flow through to paid farm workers. I just think it's an unacceptable failure – and I could choose much stronger language than that – that this government betrays an entire class of workers.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will wrap up by saying: good piece of legislation, let's get some more details, and let's take the intent of this and apply it to paid farm workers next.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there other participants?

I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a second time]

3:40

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 19*Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: Are there comments or questions on Bill 19?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: Question? No speaking? Wow, that's great.
All right. The chair shall now call the question on Bill 19.

[The clauses of Bill 19 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Private Bills*Committee of the Whole*Bill Pr. 1*Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on Bill Pr. 1.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I won't prolong this. I want to first of all commend the work of the Private Bills Committee under the leadership of its fine chairman, the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. On this bill we as a committee received a presentation from the petitioner, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. We did receive some useful background research and I suppose we'd call it advice from Parliamentary Counsel. There was no particular concern in the committee about Pr. 1, so I think you are well aware it deserves full support.

At some point, though, this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, I think it's just really important to remind members of this Assembly what private bills are about. I know there was a bit of confusion at one point, members mixing up private bills with private members' bills. They're actually two very different things. It took me a while as an MLA to learn the difference.

There is some documentation available on private bills, which I would like to bring to the attention of all members of the Assembly, particularly members of the Private Bills Committee. I know the chairman has worked at this. I'm just reinforcing the work of the chairman. Since in my position I'll never, ever be a chairman of a committee, I can only imagine and pretend and try to be helpful here. I would like members to take the time to study what a private bill is to understand how it differs from a private member's bill, to understand that the Private Bills Committee has a particular vetting role and questioning role, that private bills have a very long and ancient tradition, and that they need to be managed and approved through a due process, Mr. Chairman. It's that kind of background that I wanted to get on the table, that influences not just Pr. 1 but all of the other private bills we will be discussing today.

With those comments, I'll just wrap up by saying: glad to support Pr. 1.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to comment on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill Pr. 2*Galt Scholarship Fund Transfer Act

The Chair: Does any hon. member wish to speak or comment on Bill Pr. 2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I recall my colleague from Lethbridge-East having spoken in favour of second reading on this bill last night. She actually came in specially to do it because she was so impressed with this group and all of the wonderful work that it's done.

Essentially what we have is the Galt School of Nursing Alumnae Society transferring their trust fund to the University of Lethbridge, which allows the Galt scholarship fund to be continued and allows the administration of it to now be under the university. So it allows a very honourable family name in Lethbridge to continue and for the opportunities that are presented by the scholarship fund to also continue. It funds scholarships to students enrolled at the University of Lethbridge, specifically around encouraging students in health care, I believe.

I'm very happy to recommend passage of Bill Pr. 2, the Galt Scholarship Fund Transfer Act, in Committee of the Whole. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the bill?

Dr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, I wish to have the question put at this time.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 8 Missing Persons Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and move third reading of Bill 8, the Missing Persons Act.

The Missing Persons Act was brought about at the request of the police in this province and will allow these police agencies to access personal information they need to help find missing persons in cases where the police have no reason to suspect that a crime has yet been committed. This will allow for more efficient police investigations when searching for missing persons. This act also ensures that the information collected is protected if the former missing person does not want to be contacted once found.

All information collected under this act is confidential and can only be used in situations cited in the legislation. Records and information collected must be kept separate from other police agency records and will not be shared. Amendments have been made to ensure that there is a review of the act in five years and to clarify the powers and duties of the Information and Privacy Commissioner under the FOIP Act.

I want to thank my hon. colleagues for their participation in the debate on this bill and for their continued support of this important legislation. Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the bill.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in third reading on Bill 8, the Missing Persons Act. In third reading, of course, we're speaking to the anticipated effect of the act once it has been passed. It's no secret to anyone that read the Hansard or followed the archival video from last night that I brought forward a number of amendments. That's not to say that I don't agree with the principle of what's been presented in the act. I just think that the way the act has been drafted creates as much possibility for harm as it creates possibility for doing good. I wish that the government, in supporting the sponsor of the bill, had chosen a way that did not throw the net so wide, that didn't capture every single Albertan as part of going forward.

I live in a society which is governed by permission. We willingly acknowledge that there's a set of rules that we all agree to abide by, and we all agree that we will have paid people put in positions of authority to implement those rules upon us. It's by consensus. We agree to this. So I don't want anyone running around there saying that I've got some kind of a hate on or that I've got a problem with police forces. I don't. I live in this society. I approve of that. I agree with that. However, we are also living in a society where increasingly we are losing control – indeed, it can be argued that we've lost control – of our personal information. It's now being held by so many different sets of government agencies, private entities that we don't know who is tracking our movements.

We no longer really have the ability to go about our lives without being under surveillance in some way, shape, or form, including, as I pointed out last night, with my iPhone. I'm a big Apple fan, and I love using my iPhone. Now I find out that they've been spying on me and tracking everywhere I go and every time I stop and for how long I stop, and all of that information is duly kept. Of course, Apple as well says: this will be kept in a separate database; we will not use this information except for our own purposes. They don't tell me what that is.

All of this always starts out well. Let me be really clear. When we're talking about electronic databases that are in use that have in them personal information, it is very, very rarely a computer problem that releases personal information. The systems that have been developed are actually very good at being able to bar people from getting access to a security level that they're not entitled to, et cetera, et cetera. If you're given a code or as a certain level of individual you are given access to this level of information and no more, the computer systems are actually really good at that stuff.

Consistently where we have found a problem with these databases is human beings willingly, knowingly contravening the rules that are there and accessing those databases. We've had a number of examples here very, very close to home. I live in Edmonton. We had a terrible experience for everyone involved, including members of the Edmonton Police Service, when it was discovered that members of the police service had accessed information, including home addresses, and in fact had used it for surveillance on a member of the media and on an individual who was then chief commissioner of the Edmonton Police Commission. Shocking, and as shocking to members of the Edmonton Police Service as it was to members of the public that that information would have been accessed for reasons for which it was not collected.

Then as people started to say, "Well, was my information looked at?" we further found out we had a very well-known defence attorney in town who went through the appropriate channels and found out that his information had been accessed literally dozens and dozens and dozens of times by different individuals, by the same individuals at different times, to track his whereabouts, to track what he was doing, to get into his finances, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. So we know that these things happen.

That's my frustration. We are trying to create a good thing. We're trying to create a system by which we could find people who were missing, who may be in need of our help. That's a good idea, and the intent of that is good. But the effect of what I see that we've done in Bill 8 is that and a whole bunch of other things, in that we have also essentially, I think, criminalized law-abiding Albertans who either forget or aren't feeling well or make a conscious choice to not tell a bunch of people where they are.

According to this legislation that can trigger the local police service under section 3 to apply ex parte to a justice of the peace for an order to get access to an astonishing array of information from bank records, employment records, health records, GPS records, cellphone, et cetera, et cetera, to track this person down. That's a wonderful thing if you're trying to find a missing person.

It's not such a wonderful thing if you're an individual who just decided to take off. It means that we're not allowed to do that in Alberta anymore because we in this Assembly passed a bill that said that we're not going to allow Albertans to play hooky, to take off, to forget. That's the part that I object to in this bill. I don't object to trying to do a good service, to try and find people who are missing and need help.

I came from the cafeteria downstairs. As I went by, there was a bulletin board with a photo of a young man. It just jumped out at me. I stopped and went back and looked. I thought: boy, that's a very attractive young man. Well, there's a bias. I went back and looked at the poster and realized that it's a poster of the young man from the military that has gone missing recently in Edmonton. You just have that little gasp of air when you go: oh, no; that's just awful. Everybody feels that.

This is my struggle with this bill. It did what it needed to do, and then it did a whole bunch more. That's my objection to the bill. I think the effect of the bill is that we haven't done enough to make sure that it's very clear that anyone who does access any of these records that can now be collected on an individual and uses them for a purpose beyond what they were intended for, the consequences will be severe. I think that needs to be made very well known and needs to be put into practice far more often. At this point it's worth it for people that want to be able to gain access that they shouldn't be gaining because they gain the information. That's what they want.

Let me give you another well-documented example from health information. We had the other woman in a – what do they call them? – love triangle who was regularly accessing health information on her lover's wife's progress through cancer treatment to see, you know, how she was doing. Can you imagine what an invasion into the privacy of that woman it was? Trying to survive cancer treatment is one thing, dealing with a family breakdown is another, and now to find out that a perfect stranger to her is regularly accessing her health records to see how she's coming along, or more likely how she's not coming along.

So that's what we know. Yet this bill did nothing to deal with what we know about what goes wrong in the system. It's giving immense powers to the police to once again collect information.

Now, the act says that you can only use it for this purpose. Yeah, true. But we've also had other instances where information was collected for a specific purpose – we were told it wasn't going to be used for anything else – and lo and behold, several years, 10 years, a dozen years down the road it is in fact linked to other databases and eventually used for other purposes. That's exactly what happens. So although we're told that today, we have no guarantee that in the future it won't be used for other purposes. That's a bigger problem, I think. Again, this act did a good thing, and then it went too far and allowed too many other things to happen along with this.

People say to me: "Well, for heaven's sake. If you've done nothing wrong, what's your problem? What are you worried about?" Well, part of the issue that we found with collection of personal information and databases is that sometimes the information is wrong, and it's unverified or unverifiable. People are walking around looking at your information, using it for various purposes, and in fact it's wrong or it's misinterpreted.

A doctor codes an extra long visit with a patient as a diagnostic code for counselling on alcoholism because, well, that just gives him the half-hour billing, and that's close enough. In fact, that turns up in someone's employment record later when they're checked by an insurance company, and the person is denied a job. Again, these are real cases. A person is denied a job because it turns up in their health record that they've been counselled for alcoholism. Well, they weren't. They just had an extra long session with a doctor who decided to code it as a counselling session. You know, tick for alcoholism because it was a longer session and they wanted to be paid for it. But there it is. The information is in there. It wasn't correct, and it was misinterpreted further than that, and it had a huge effect down the line on somebody's life.

That's my concern when we start giving powers of collection of information to a group. This government has been very generous in giving overrides and exemptions around the collection, use, and disclosure of personal information to police services. There are a lot of exceptions that they already have in the health information bill, in the privacy and information protection bill, and under FOIP, a lot of extra power. More than any other organization the police services have those exemptions, so I think we need to be very, very cautious when we start handing over additional access to a very wide range of information.

Let's go back to that argument about, you know, if you're leading a good life and you're a good person, then what have you got to worry about? Well, we already know that things can be misinterpreted in a file.

Let me give another example with all those Google maps they're taking of people. Here's one. This happened to me. You all know in this House of my struggles with smoking and how it took me so long to quit and how hard it was. In the Google map picture of my home there is a woman sitting on the front steps smoking a cigarette. So I'm trying to tell my insurance company that I quit smoking, and there sitting on the front steps is a woman smoking a cigarette. Well, the woman is not me, but it's damn hard for me to convince the insurance company that it's not me because she's sitting on the front steps of my house. She's turning up in Google street view clearly smoking a cigarette on the front steps of my house. What the heck am I supposed to do with that?

Now I'm in an argument about whether or not I'm entitled to this health care because I'm a smoker and not a nonsmoker as I claimed. This is a true story, guys. I had to go through a number of things to prove that I wasn't blond and didn't weigh that much. "Here's a picture of me, and I don't know who that person was." It turned out to be someone who was visiting an individual who was boarding with me at the time. That's what happens to that information. It wasn't me, but she was smoking sitting on the front steps of my house. Therefore, I was in trouble with the insurance company that I had applied to to get a better rate because I went through all that hell and agony to quit smoking.

You start to get a picture here that this is not a perfect system, right? As people collect more – and I did nothing wrong there. I did everything right. I quit smoking. But I got caught in something that I couldn't verify, I had no control over, and there was information that they were using against me. So do you get a sense now? I've given you guys very specific examples, all of which can be verified really easily. That's why you have to be careful about, one, in how wide a net you allow people to collect information.

This bill collects a lot of information: closed-circuit television, bank records, employment records, health records, GPS tracking, cellphone, where you've searched, what archives you've searched in your web browser; what web pages you go to. Boy, you better be careful that when you were searching on your web browser, you didn't type in p-o-r-n. Oh, now you're in trouble, Mr. Minister of Infrastructure, because when they go looking for you because you haven't reported in, you've been on a porn site. Well, that wasn't what you were typing in. You know, the little numbers are . . .

Mr. Danyluk: I was looking for the corn site, not the porn site.

Ms Blakeman: That's exactly right. The little tiles that you're supposed to hit are so small for your fingers now. How many times do I make a mistake punching that stuff in?

That's the kind of mistake that happens. It turns up when they go looking for it, and they say: ho ho, the Minister of Infrastructure was surfing a porn site. And he's not. He was looking for something that was about oranges, and the O and the P are beside each other, and now he's in trouble. [interjection] A prune site. There you go.

I hope I've helped you understand why I think this bill is important and why I think we need to be so careful about doing this. It gets away from us literally with the click of a button. Once these are housed in electronic databases, linking them to other electronic databases, again, is done in a milli-microsecond and can be sent around the world faster than you can even think of doing it. That's why it's our responsibility in this House to be very, very cautious when we develop bills that empower any agency, including ourselves, to collect information on our public. We need to protect them. We don't need to be exposing them to wider opportunities, where someone else can be literally surfing through their life without that person being aware of it and without them having been able to give permission for it. I just want to make sure that what's a good idea in this bill doesn't turn out for us years later to be a bad idea.

How many times do we hear good stories about health records, and then how many stories do we hear about health records flying around in the wind outside of the back of somebody's garage? We find out about unencrypted laptops that have been picked up in your parked car and taken off somewhere. That's what we usually hear about health records. We don't hear about the good stories. We hear about how somebody's personal, private information is now out there, God knows where, being used for we don't know what, but it's not good.

Thanks very much for allowing me to put that on the record. You've all been very patient in listening to me. I wish I wasn't an expert on privacy, but unfortunately you all insisted on putting me on the committees in which I learned all of this, so you only have yourselves to blame.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. I certainly am not an expert on privacy laws, but they are developing. It will be interesting to see in a couple of years exactly where we are with the Missing Persons Act, Bill 8. We had quite a discussion last night on this, and it was interesting to hear from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Certainly, I would agree with her that it is a work-in-progress and we have to proceed with caution, but I think we have to proceed. I certainly respect her opinion, but I don't think that we are giving the police far-reaching, wide-scoping powers. I, like others, am concerned about granting special powers to police forces, but they have a special job to do. There are odd occasions where those powers are, in my view, overstepped, but we have police commissions and we have a number of ways of dealing with police detachments that overstep their boundaries.

I think this is, as technology changes, a very interesting concept. I note again that Alberta is the first jurisdiction in Canada to introduce legislation of this kind. I know there's a balance. I know there are people who are concerned about this act and how it fails to strike an appropriate balance between giving police the powers they need for missing person investigations and respecting individual rights. I don't think individual rights will be an issue here, at least I hope they are not.

We heard in the discussion previously on this bill about the role of the justices of the peace, and I'm satisfied, again, on the record, with the explanation that was provided by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne regarding this bill and the role that justices of the peace are going to play in this matter. But, certainly, there are organizations that have had issues with this approach. I'm sure all hon. members of the Assembly have heard from them as this bill was proceeding through the House. We do know this bill is a response to a resolution passed by the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police in spring 2010. We also heard of others who are supportive of this initiative. But we haven't really heard from those who have questions about it, and I think it's only fair that their concerns, Mr. Speaker, be part of the public record.

The chiefs of police, as I said, passed a resolution supporting this initiative. Calgary and Edmonton police services were involved in the drafting of the bill. But the Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association believes that only the federal government has jurisdiction to regulate telecommunications services. The Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association wants assurance that the proposed legislation actually fills a pressing need and does not merely duplicate current industry practices and/or existing legislation already available to law enforcement agencies.

The Canadian Civil Liberties Association and the Canadian Internet Policy and Public Interest Clinic, which is located, I believe, at the University of Ottawa, have reported the introduction of the act but have not yet provided detailed comment that I'm aware of.

Now, I think this act has good intentions, just like the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, and if it could be used to solve an issue around a missing person, then I think all the work from the hon. member will be recognized. But the Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association is one authority on wireless issues, developments, and trends in Canada, and it represents wireless service providers as well as companies that develop and produce products and services for the industry. They have CCed me on a letter with some of their issues, and this is a detailed letter. I think, with all respect to them, their opinions regarding this bill should be on the public record.

They have made general comments on Bill 8, and they note that they should not be construed as their recognition of the government of Alberta's jurisdiction to regulate the sphere of telecommunications services, which – and this is, again, the Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association – they respectfully maintain is solely under federal law. They go into detail about this.

They, too, have concerns about the justice of the peace. We talked about this last night, Mr. Speaker, but the Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association considers the test for access to subscriber records in Bill 8 to be overly open ended. In order to obtain an order from a justice of the peace for records – and that's in section 3 – the justice of the peace need only be satisfied the information is required to investigate the whereabouts of a missing person. There is no reasonable grounds test, which is more typical for warrants and other orders. We had a brief discussion on this last night. All that is required is a belief that the telecommunications service provider may have information relevant to a missing person case. We do know that the portable devices – there are all kinds of programs now available that can tell a lot about the owner of the device. It can tell what time they used it. There are a lot of interesting things that go on that hopefully will never be needed, but if they are needed to solve an issue around a missing person, it would be available.

The Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association: they were, I would have to say, quite concerned about Bill 8, but I don't share their concerns. Some of them I certainly do but not all of them. I don't think their concerns are a valid reason to delay this. I really don't, with all due respect.

They also talk about safeguards. The Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association is also concerned that there are no safeguards in Bill 8 to help ensure that the subscriber information production requirements will be used appropriately: only in cases where a person is reported missing by a family member or other acquaintance. Police only have so much time to do a lot of work, and I don't think any police association or police service anywhere is going to be in a frivolous or vexatious way looking at someone's information. I can't see this happening.

The Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association respectfully submits that Alberta should consider including in Bill 8 some safeguards contained in the proposed federal legislation, which was Bill C-52, dealing with lawful access as introduced in the House of Commons last fall. Bill C-52 had this, Mr. Speaker. The requesting officer must provide identifying information, badge number, agency, et cetera and state that the request has been made in exceptional circumstances. The officer must have reasonable grounds to believe that the information requested must be immediately necessary to prevent an unlawful act, serious injury, or crime.

The officer must report the request to a designated officer in the force, establishing the basis for the request, and the designated person must confirm with the telecommunications service provider in writing that the request was made in exceptional circumstances. A record must be kept for the request and the grounds for it. Internal audits of police and the national security agencies are required to ensure compliance with the subscriber information sections of the bill, with noncompliance being escalated to the minister. The Privacy Commissioner may also conduct such audits.

Well, that's a legislative wish list. Some of this has been provided, as I understand it, in Bill 8. But this is what the Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association considers to be the very basic safeguards necessary to ensure that the application of the statute remains consistent with its intent.

They also have some issues around privacy, compensation, and technical and reporting standards. In the time that I have, Mr. Speaker, I would like to note what the Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association had to say in conclusion regarding Bill 8. Of course, they're concerned about the general privacy implications for Canadian wireless subscribers given the low threshold, in their opinion, for obtaining an order for production of data under Bill 8 as well as the lack of safeguards to ensure that the power is not misused or used indiscriminately by Alberta law enforcement agencies. I can see why they would say that, but hopefully their concerns will be unfounded.

I'm hearing from hon. members that this is quite an important issue. The Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association notes that Bill 8 offers no compensation for telecommunication service providers for complying with potential numerous orders – I don't think there will be a lot of orders, but we'll see – particularly in cases where the person in question turns out not to be missing and/or in cases where no crime was about to be committed. It's essential that potential costs to the service providers be minimized by limiting the use of the order power in the first instance. The Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association is equally concerned about the technical and reporting standards that would result from complying with this legislation.

They conclude by expressing their appreciation for the opportunity to provide this submission in writing, and it is my privilege to present this to hon. members of this Assembly. That's one side of the argument. We heard, particularly in debate in committee, the other side of the argument last night.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I would like to say that this bill hopefully will allow a police agency to be able to do their work more effectively, more efficiently, and in cases where they need to have this, they will now have it. It will certainly be another tool for police services or police agencies to use to settle issues around missing persons. It could be a child. It could be an adult. It could be someone who, unfortunately, loses their way, and family members recognize after a period of time that maybe grandmother and grandfather are lost.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak under this 29(2)(a), five minutes of comments or questions? Anybody?

Seeing none, on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a third time]

Bill 15

Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. You don't have to stand up because your foot is . . .

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to sit today, I guess, instead of stand today and move third reading of Bill 15, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011.

I think we've had vigorous debate. The bill, with the able assistance of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, is amended from its original form. I think it's a better bill for it. I call the question in the absence of comments.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on Bill 15.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, this is legislation that we had an opportunity to deal with last night at committee, and certainly what we're looking at here with the amendment act is the clarification of the processes for applying for financial benefits for injury and for death benefits. We're setting out detailed procedures for reviews of decisions and applications, and these are consistent with procedures in other administrative tribunals. We're changing and removing some of the existing powers of review boards; for example, to call expert witnesses or to require a medical examination or a test by an approved physician. These amendments in the bill are mostly amendments that provide helpful clarifications. As I said, the amendments with respect to benefits for injury or death as a result of a crime add clarity for users of the act.

Certainly we must note, when we discuss the victims of crime fund, the amount, which is over $48 million in net assets as at March 31, 2011, while the victims received just under $14 million last year. While we applaud the diligent work of many of the not-for-profit organizations that receive grants to support victims' services, we do not wish to see a fund created for the benefit of victims either hoarded or diverted into government programs that do not directly benefit victims.

There was a review done on these proposed amendments by Alberta's Solicitor General and Public Security ministry, and that was done online before Christmas until the end of January. Six weeks later the amendment act was introduced in the Legislative Assembly. One could reasonably ask how there was time to consider the responses to the consultations, develop recommendations, and then have them approved and go through the legislative drafting process in a little bit more than seven weeks. I have not seen, Mr. Speaker, a report on the consultation or the review process that was published. It may or may not be an internal document, but I haven't seen it.

We have been working with this legislation since 1997, almost 14 years, except for provisions directly associated with financial benefits to individual victims of crime. That came into force a little later on. We do know that in May of 2005 the act was amended to incorporate the Canadian statement of basic principles of justice for victims of crime, which emphasizes the need to treat victims with courtesy, compassion, respect, and privacy. The principles state that the victim should be provided with information about the role they play within the system and acknowledge that a victim's views and concerns are important.

Last night we had a discussion about how an individual who was involved in a violent, vicious assault while he was driving a transit bus is currently receiving Workers' Compensation Board benefits. How does all of that work, or does it work? Would an individual, for instance, who is receiving Workers' Compensation Board benefits be eligible to make application before the victims of crime fund?

It's a regulated fund, a $48 million value, and it is administered by the minister of finance and operates under the authority of the VCA. The Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security is responsible, of course, for the fund, and the fund is financed through a levy on provincial and federal fines. The purpose of the fund is to provide grants to victims' programs and to pay benefits to victims who suffer injury or death as a result of a criminal offence specified in the regulations under the Victims of Crime Act or, where death resulted, to pay benefits to dependants.

We talked in committee, Mr. Speaker, about the administration of the act and the role of the director. We had a good look, a sectional analysis last evening. We had, actually, a good discussion on this, and I appreciated the participation of the minister even if it's under difficult circumstances.

When we look at this bill at third reading, I'm confident that the amendments will provide helpful clarification to make the act more user friendly for victims. We on this side of the House support the new procedures for review of a decision on an application for benefits. They are consistent with the principles of natural justice. These procedures will make it clear to applicants how to go about contesting a decision that seems unfair or unjust. The procedural changes not only promote clarity and fairness for applicants; they are likely to promote good practices in the review process, which is likely to result in fewer requests for judicial review.

We do however have concerns that the amendment act moves provisions as to who may apply for benefits into regulation. These provisions affect rights under the act and should be in the act rather than in the regulation. We know how this government likes to get enabling legislation and then write the regulations quietly, off by themselves. Sometimes they're public; sometimes they're not. That's how this government, unfortunately, is ruling. Yes.

We also have concerns about the power of the director of the act to collect health information – we talked about this last night – from health service providers without notice to or consent by the individual. We think – and I hope we're wrong – that this could discourage victims from seeking assistance.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I certainly would like to thank the minister for his work on this amending legislation. Hopefully, people who need to apply to the victims of crime fund can do so with confidence, knowing that they will be treated fairly and justly, and there will be support there for them and their families if it is needed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the bill.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to just get some comments on the record here in third reading. It's been clear that this is a piece of legislation that we've supported. Well done. I mean, it's a step in the right direction. It seems certain that it's going to pass, and here in third reading is an opportunity to speak briefly about the impact of this bill and about what the future might hold. What's the next step after this bill becomes law? I'm presuming that it will, which I think is a safe presumption to make.

I was reading very recently, Mr. Speaker, an article in The Economist magazine about a prison situation in the United States, and I was startled to read, although I had seen figures like this before – every time I see them they're startling – that in the United States 1 adult in 100 is in prison, which is astonishing. There are 3 million people, adults, in jail in the United States. That is startling. That's what I focused on initially, but then listening to the debate on the bill and this bill being about victims, I began to think: how many victims of crime are we looking at in a country like the United States, for example? Obviously, it's a staggering number. Many of those criminals will have had multiple victims, so we are looking at a huge, huge number of victims in the United States.

Now, we're lucky here, I think, although I'm just going on a hunch – I could be wrong – that the situation is somewhat different in Canada and in Alberta. But I'm just saying that on a hunch; I'm not sure. I am quite confident that Canada does not incarcerate people at the same rate as the United States, but I'm not as confident that there aren't as many victims of crime in Canada as there are in the United States.

Canada is sometimes labelled by some political and media commentators as being soft on crime. During the recent federal election I was reading that, actually, Canada's sentences are among the very longest in the developed world and that if you're going to go to jail for a long time for a crime, it's more likely to be a long time in Canada than anywhere else. Canada actually has some of the toughest sentencing procedures. Again, we have to remember, Mr. Speaker, that for each one of those there's a victim or multiple victims of a crime, and we can think of direct victims and indirect victims.

I think of a tragic case that came before this Assembly over the years for debate. I am trying to think of the name, and the name escapes me. Leslie Miller, I think it was. Her husband, if I have the correct name, was the victim of the crime. He was severely beaten.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Teskey was the guy who beat him.

Dr. Taft: That's right. He was severely beaten by a man, who ultimately was convicted, by the name of Teskey. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is helping my increasingly frail memory dredge up these facts.

You know what? Mr. Miller wasn't the only victim of that crime. From the moment he was left permanently and severely disabled, his wife also became a victim of that crime as did other members of that family. We're talking about a lot of people involved here, Mr. Speaker, and when we discuss victims of crime, I think we need to stretch our thinking a bit to really comprehend what's going on.

One other startling figure I saw reported on television. It was an interview with a so-called expert on the news, so I take that for what it's worth. The claim that this person made was that about 1 in 4 jobs in the United States now applies one way or another to security. The person was using that in the broadest sense, so they were including the armed forces, the police, the private security, and perhaps even indirect industries like weapons manufacturing, and so on; prison guards, for sure. It was a staggering portion in the U.S. of the number of jobs tied up in security. I believe the figure that this person put forward was 1 in 4. Again, what does that tell us? Well, that tells us that there are not only an awful lot of security issues; there are a lot of victims' issues.

I think I need to make a point at this time also, Mr. Speaker, about the future plans for prisons in Alberta and in Canada. There are going to be cost implications for this province if the federal prison construction program goes ahead, and this is all aimed at a point I want to make in a moment here. We have seen through the last federal election campaign and in the weeks leading up to it the current federal government proposing a multi multi billion dollar prison construction program even though the statistics that are generally reported show that crime is going down. When a former member of this Assembly was questioned about that – until this election he was in the federal cabinet, Stockwell Day – he said, “Well, those prisons are being built for unreported crimes,” which is a kind of contradictory thing once you think about it. If the crimes are unreported, how are we going to sentence people and put them into prisons?

There are cost implications to this for Alberta, and this issue undoubtedly is going to come before this Assembly because the cost of operating those prisons is borne substantially by provincial governments. Again, my point here, Mr. Speaker, is that we're spending money on criminals; we're not spending money on the victims. Too often the victims continue to be forgotten. This bill is a little step in the right direction. The victims of crime fund is a step in the right direction. What I would challenge this Assembly to consider as we move forward and maybe bring other legislation to the floor of the Assembly is to think about: how do we reduce the number of victims by reducing the number of criminals? That's the real challenge here. It would be absolutely fabulous if someday we don't have to make any payments to victims of crime because there are no victims of crime. Now, that's not going to happen, but we can certainly set that as a goal.

That raises for me some broader issues. How do we reduce the number of criminals? I think there are a lot of pretty widely accepted ways to approach that, and a lot of it comes down to investing in our children from the very youngest ages. There's a lot of good evidence that by grades 3 or 4 teachers and specialists can predict with remarkable accuracy which kids will complete high school, which ones won't, which ones are likely to run into problems with the law, which ones are likely to become criminals and, therefore, create victims of crime.

Do you know what's interesting, Mr. Speaker? It's that a lot of those people who become criminals, creating victims of crime, are themselves at some point early in their lives victims of crime. The victimization of children creates criminals, which creates more victims in a kind of vicious circle that we can break if we put our minds to it. I'm thinking of some basic things. An issue I've raised repeatedly in this Assembly is dedicated funding to feed hungry children in Alberta, dedicated funding for school nutrition programs, early intervention for kids who are identified as at risk, more aggressive than what we do now. That intervention might be all kinds of things.

I was talking to a teacher the other day who teaches grade 2. One of the children in her class has a particular behaviour problem. The teacher strongly suspects that this student has eyesight issues. But it's an impoverished family, and it's finding a way to get eyeglasses for that grade 2 student. To get that grade 2 student to an eye doctor or an optometrist to have her eyes checked and then to afford glasses, well, is something that most Albertans would handle. In this case and in many other impoverished families, families of immigrants, children of dysfunctional families they don't have a chance with something as simple as getting their eyes tested and getting glasses. So what's going to happen to that girl from grade 2 if this turns out to be the case and she has an eye problem and it doesn't get addressed? She's going to continue to flounder in school. It rapidly increases the risk that she is going to end up in the justice system and end up creating victims of crime. That's just one example.

When I look at this bill and I think about this issue – and I commend the Assembly for creating a fund and improving a fund that pays out victims of crime – I want to leave a larger challenge here, which is: in the long term how are we as MLAs going to reduce the number of victims of crime by reducing the number of criminals? What are we going to do? What is this government going to do through education, through our schools, through community supports, that are shown over and over and over to pay huge dividends? What are we going to do to act, to reduce the number of victims of crime?

I just want to leave those comments on the record, Mr. Speaker. Maybe next year we'll see something that goes beyond this current legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members?

Hon. Members: Question.

Bill 1 Asia Advisory Council Act

The Deputy Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of our hon. Premier I'm very pleased to rise and move third reading of Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act.

As you would know, Mr. Speaker, we've had some excellent debate since our Premier first introduced this bill in the Assembly a couple of months ago. In fact, a number of hon. members asked some very good questions, which spurred some informative discussion, and that, in turn, encouraged others to reflect and to realize precisely what the importance of Bill 1 is to the future prosperity of our province.

Obviously, I won't be repeating all that was said at that time, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to provide just a few minutes of brief overview regarding some of the more salient points. During our research and then the ensuing debate there was no question that further diversifying our markets will be a critical element of Alberta's future economic success. There certainly was no disagreement in the House, to my recollection, that Alberta needs to expand beyond our biggest trading partner, that being the U.S.A., of course, which receives about 85 per cent of our exports. The U.S.A. has been and still is our greatest trading partner.

Of course, there are some points to note that will provide some context to all of this, and I'd like to do that briefly. Today the U.S.A. struggles to recover from the global economic recession while some markets in Asia are pulling into the fast lane, so to speak, with China on track to surpass the U.S.A. in terms of GDP. India is predicted to eventually surpass China, so we can see where that's heading. That said, these Asian markets are already important to Alberta, and their importance will increase.

In fact, yesterday our Minister of International and Intergovernmental Affairs chaired a session at a conference that focused solely on China and India as two large and emerging economic powers for the entire world to note. There was a lot of excellent discussion, I'm told, on how these markets will impact Alberta and, of course, Canada and also about the many opportunities that this economic shift is going to present. As well, the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy's final report identifies specifically Asia as one of the main game changers in Alberta's future. That report, Mr. Speaker, confirms that with the establishment of the Asia advisory council as enunciated by this bill, we are right on track to tap into the tremendous opportunities available in these aforementioned Asian markets.

Of course, I don't think it's any secret to many that our Alberta government has long been cultivating this relationship with regions in Asia. In fact, we've been developing partnerships in China, in Japan, in India, and other eastern countries for decades, in fact, from the very opening of an Alberta office in Tokyo back in 1970 right up to last year's opening of a joint trade and investment office in Shanghai. Alberta has been twinned with a great many regions in Asia, and these relationships also continue to foster economic, scientific, and cultural ties, which is what this bill is all about.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, our missions to countries in Asia have established and strengthened Alberta's relationships with governments, with business leaders, and certainly with investors. Everyone is now looking to Alberta, and Alberta is looking back to them to partner where we can and to seek greater investment and other opportunities for economic ties wherever possible. That type of foundation, that we have built over many years, has in fact positioned Alberta for even greater success in the years ahead. So we are now at a pivotal time, at a pivotal turning point. That's why it's so critical that our next steps be very deliberate, very specific, very focused on behalf of the future of this great province.

Just a couple of final points. The Asia advisory council will in essence bring together the best and the brightest minds. These members will be experts in their respective fields, be that business or energy or technology or academia or a host of other areas, and they will also be experts on Asia. The council members will provide a targeted insight through this bill that will be of great value to the government of Alberta and, in turn, to Albertans in general. With the experience and guidance of this particular group of knowledgeable and committed people I'm confident that we will set new goals that reflect the new global economy, an economy, I should add, where the strength of our relationship with Asia will determine our future success.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting the creation of an Asia advisory council because of its immense importance. In fact, it's so important that having this legislation created emphasizes it most illustratively. With this bill we're signalling to Asia and to the world that Alberta is comfortable being out front when it comes to furthering our engagement with these rapidly growing markets.

I would like to conclude by thanking you for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, and all members of the House for their anticipated support of this new bill and also for the input and the good discussion that has occurred to date. On that note, I would encourage all members to kindly offer their support for Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the bill.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. There's been quite a lot of debate on this bill through its journey to becoming legislation, and there have certainly been challenges from some MLAs that for the flagship bill it's not particularly bold or visionary. Yet when the chips are down, I think it's better to do this than to not do it. In some ways it's reinforcing things that are already happening. It's kind of perhaps in the spirit of the former Premier, Ralph Klein, who talked about finding a parade and getting in front of it. Certainly, there has already long been a parade of business and tourism and academic exchanges and so on between Alberta and Asia, and this legislation is perhaps just trying to get in front of that parade, to run around, hurry up, and get in front of it. For all that, it's better to be done, I suppose, than to not be done.

There's been quite a lot of discussion in this Assembly about China. I spoke during committee, I believe it was, or perhaps second reading about China, and I reflected on China's rising power. I was trying to make clear in my comments that we should not be naive about doing business with China or any other Asian country. What I didn't have the time to say is that, despite my cautions, I still think it's a good idea that we proceed, we reach out, we build the relationships with Asia that this legislation envisions. I just don't want us to be, as I was saying at the time, sort of good-hearted Boy Scouts out there in a big bad jungle. We need to be sharp and astute and canny and shrewd. Sometimes Canadians don't do those things very well, and I think we need to.

I've also been struck with how much of the conversation or debate that I've heard on this bill has focused on China. We're forgetting perhaps some very important other countries. I look at you, Mr. Speaker, and I think of Vietnam or Malaysia or the Philippines. There are many, many tens of thousands of Edmontonians who are from the Philippines or Indonesia, which is a deeply impoverished but rapidly expanding economy. I visited there a couple of years ago. I was most impressed with what I saw and with the industriousness of the people, but I was also struck with the enormity of the challenges they face. And, of course, India. There are a handful of members of this Assembly whose ancestry goes back to India.

These are countries that are setting the global agenda. It's widely understood that the current global recession would be much more severe if it weren't for the demands of the economies of China and India and the rest of Asia. Particularly, this has been beneficial to Canada because the demand is for raw materials, but it has been Asia that has prevented this economic recession from becoming even more severe.

I also wanted to just make note briefly of the lessons from Vietnam. Now, I have not been to Vietnam – I'd love to go there – but there's a lesson here, I think, about trade versus war. We all know that there was a very long, multistage war between Vietnam and a series of colonial powers – the French, the Americans, the Chinese – and that that went on and on and on. Vietnam fought a valiant war that stretched probably 20 years or more – somebody here could correct me on that – and was flattened. Billions of dollars, probably hundreds of billions of dollars were spent. Hundreds of thousands or millions of people died. It was a horrifying war.

At the end of it what was achieved? I suppose the Vietnamese would say, "Well, we kept our independence," and so they did, and good for them. But when I reflect back on that war now, I think: well, okay; what's happened since? When we switched from war to trade, suddenly good things happened. Suddenly things are getting built instead of destroyed, people are flourishing instead of getting killed and maimed, societies are expanding instead of being pounded down, and friendships and bridges are getting built instead of enemies being made. So I think there's an important lesson to be learned from the experience of Vietnam and, by all accounts, of Southeast Asia. The country to watch, perhaps above larger, more populous ones, is Vietnam because of the industriousness, the coherence, the determination, the pride of the people.

When I look at what's happening in a different part of Asia, Afghanistan, I find myself wondering: gee, wouldn't we have been better off to have learned the lessons of Vietnam? Instead of pouring countless billions of dollars into war, what if we poured countless billions of dollars into trade and friendship, and if we had opened our arms to our enemies, might we have actually turned them into allies and even friends and had a much more constructive result? So as we look at Asia, those are issues I'd like us to be considering.

I want to talk, before we leave, about a couple of specific economic and, I guess we would say, engineering or scientific issues. One is renewable energy; the other is a pipeline. This week China announced that it is aiming at getting 50 per cent of its energy from renewable resources within the next couple of decades. It's a hugely ambitious objective. Right on its heels, I think yesterday – or perhaps it was even today; I lose track; things happen so quickly – Japan announced that because of the nuclear catastrophe that resulted from the earthquake and the tsunami, they're putting their nuclear expansion programs on hold, and they are shifting to renewable energy.

The Member for St. Albert came to visit a house I'm building about a week ago, and it's a house that's going to depend heavily on solar energy. I fully expect we'll be buying the technology, the solar panels that'll go on the roof, from Asia, or at least there'll be Asian components in them. That's clearly the way of the future.

Alberta will be one of the last to get on that train because we have so many fossil resources, but what's going to make our fossil fuels less and less valuable, I predict, in the 15-year range and beyond is the enormous innovation that's going to come out of Asia in terms of renewable energy supply: solar, wind, tidal, biomass, what have you. If we build relations with Asia and if we follow some of the ideas that other panels have recently put forward to create a more broadly based energy economy in Alberta, I think we're going to have to build those relations with Asia. I think we should even look to them to try to emulate some of their leadership on these issues because I think we're falling behind.

I will wrap up with one other point, which is the debate around a pipeline to carry Alberta's oil production or bitumen production to the west coast. As complicated as that is, as laden as it is with environmental controversy, with land claims from First Nations, and so on, I myself think it should be done. I'm not going to speak for others. I believe that in the end we need to do that. I think Alberta needs to diversify its market away from the United States to include an ocean port on the west coast of Canada. We could then sell wherever. It might go to Asia. It might go down the coast to California, as has been speculated. It might go to South America. It could go anywhere. But we need that port for our energy exports.

The other morning I was at a breakfast speech given by somebody who spent many years in here, former Premier Peter Lougheed, and in that speech he made a point that if he were the Premier, he would not sign another approval for an oil sands project that did not include upgrading in Alberta. He said – and I will repeat this – that if he were still Premier, he would not approve another oil sands project that did not include upgrading in Alberta. He said that publicly. He said some other fairly dramatic things as well, but I'll focus on that one.

You know, that was and, I believe, continues to be consistent with the policy of the Alberta Liberals. Why do I say that? I would be much less supportive of a pipeline to the west coast, Mr. Speaker, for just shipping out raw bitumen. I think that would be a travesty. I think that would be a sellout. I think that constructing a pipeline to the west coast should go hand in hand with an increased commitment to adding value here. If we ship raw bitumen to Asia, where they upgrade it at lower environmental standards, lower wages, lower labour standards, and then sell the crude oil or the refined product from where they are, we're foolish.

That goes back to my early comment about Canadians sometimes being a little naive internationally. We need to be every bit as far sighted and determined and disciplined as countries like Korea and Singapore and Taiwan were in creating Asian tigers and as India and China and other countries are today. Otherwise, they will eat our lunch for us, as they say. They will get our jobs, they will take our wealth, and we'll be left impoverished not just financially but politically and culturally and otherwise.

I wanted to make that point. Let's look hard at building that pipeline, but let's make sure that it's not just there for raw bitumen. Let's look at building bridges that reach into the renewable energy industries that are so aggressively developing in Asia. Let's look at building allies, friendships, joint ventures with countries across Asia, and through the process let's not just build a better Alberta, a better Canada, a better Asia but a better world.

Thank you.

5:10

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I realize that this is the last opportunity to speak about Bill 1.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you a fan of this bill?

Mr. Hinman: A fan? I think that the fan should blow the paper away that this was written on.

It's very disappointing when we consider that we just are pulling out of a recession, that we've got a $6.1 billion cash deficit year to year running here in the province, that we've got a third-year deficit running. The Premier's council just put out today or, I guess, yesterday, you know, their wonderful book here, Shaping Alberta's Future. Then we look at Bill 1. We're going to form a committee to go to Asia.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview brought up some very important points I just want to start with. There's no question that the two most important things for us to have that security now and in the future are to look at the oil and gas industry and where we're going and what we can achieve. There's no question we need a pipeline. I could see that being Bill 1. The government says: "We need a pipeline to the west coast. We're trapped. We have no place to take our commodities." This is a repeat of 2003 with BSE, when all of our customers went to the States. When they decide to shut that border, we're in big trouble.

There are many things, Mr. Speaker, that this government should have been looking at as a number one priority. I would say that because of our economy and our exporting, the number one priority should be a pipeline to the west coast. It's just hard to believe that the number two priority, that I look at, is that we need a natural gas strategy here in the province.

We have an abundance of natural gas. What are we going to do to capitalize on that, and how are we going to go forward? What are they capitalizing on? They're saying a committee to Asia and that we need a $2 billion carbon sequestration and capture program to see if this is going to pan out in the future. It's very disappointing how we're letting down Albertans and the future.

Let's just take the next step, if we want to do that, and talk about renewable energies – there are so many people in this House that are so passionate about it – and have a little bit of a breakdown. It's interesting. Back in 2010 – I believe it was December – there were quite a few protesters that were protesting the Copenhagen conference and what we were going to do there. It's interesting. The one individual drove a Prius and showed up at this rally I was at. I asked him: "Do you have any idea of the rare-earth elements that are needed and how much to produce this Prius that you want to drive around in? Where are our lithium mines to produce the batteries? How much mining do we need in order to build solar panels?" All of those are dependent on rare-earth elements.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about this. China hopes to get 50 per cent of their energy from nonrenewable. Well, they have 90 per cent – or maybe it's 99 per cent – right now of the mines and the rare-earth elements in China, and we're dependent on buying that export from them. If we move over, it's very true. The hon. Member for Red Deer-South is shaking his head, saying: it's not true. Do the research, and see where the rare-earth elements are and what the future is if we don't change our strategy.

I'm going to talk about that in a minute, what our strategy is here. With the lower Athabasca regional plan we just doused some opportunities for exploration and development of some possible rare-earth mineral mines. We're shooting ourselves in the foot on how we want to go forward by not thinking: where do we do that? I mean, it takes 500 pounds of rare-earth elements to build a two-megawatt windmill. Where are we going to get that? All of a sudden the table has turned, and we have to go to China to try and buy these rare-earth elements because we don't allow mineral operations to exist here in the province. I've been speaking to some explorers that are in there, and they say that Alberta is the worst place in Canada to try and open and develop a mine. We have to ask ourselves: why? If we're so excited about going into the nonrenewables, are we going to allow ourselves to be self-sufficient or switch over to these things and then find out that we are unable to go forward on them?

This idea that through Bill 1 the future of this province is going to be formed by a volunteer committee that's going to go over to Asia when we can't even get our number one export to the west coast is – I don't even know if you'd call it buying the wheel before the cart, before the horse. I mean, it's just wrong, Mr.

Speaker. So I have to again go on the record and say how disappointing it is for myself and for many Albertans that I've talked to that the number one priority, the number one bill that this government came up with is, in fact, a committee to go to Asia to see if we can open up exports when we can't even get our products there. There's a problem here. We're not thinking things through, and it's very disappointing.

Shaping Alberta's Future: Report of the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy. Everything in here goes against the Alberta Advantage. What they're saying is that government knows how to run businesses, pick the new businesses. It's interesting because when we even look at Texas, who built their wealth on the oil and gas industry, it's those people that have created the wealth who then turn around and invest in microchips and nanotechnology.

To think that the government is going to tax, whether it's $4 billion or $6 billion, $8 billion, $10 billion, $12 billion, out of our current industry to then put together a super slush fund and say, "This is what we're going to do," that these are the industries, whether it's nanotechnology or something, that the government is going to pick and choose where we're going to spend this money, it's going to collapse the Alberta economy to a greater extent. We're going to go back to run not just massive cash deficits but actual deficit budgets in two or three years if they're going to raise the taxes and say, "We've got an opportunity to go forward here; let's send the committee to Asia to see if we can export something" when we cannot get our products there or we don't meet their standards. It's disappointing.

The natural gas strategy: like I say, to me that's the natural direction we should be taking. We understand that we want to reduce pollutants. High-carbon fuels have more pollutants in them. Methane, a one-carbon fuel, is the cleanest, whether it's for producing electricity, whether it's for compressing that to become liquefied, compressed natural gas. There are many, many areas, Mr. Speaker, that we could be looking at and realizing that this is our opportunity.

Perhaps the most important natural strategy that we should be taking on here in Alberta is to make sure that we're not putting up rules and regulations – for example, a tax on CO<sub>2</sub> emissions – to the detriment of an industry that we have here. Too often government seems to see a lucrative business, and they rub their hands together and say, "What a great opportunity; we can now tax this business," only to lose it. Our strategy should be, as it has been for years, to be the most competitive tax regime in not just North America but the world.

We are competing with some giant countries out there that don't have universal health care, so we can't add onerous regulations, even onerous taxation, and then think that we're still going to have these other social benefits that we do and try to export to such countries in Asia or to India or other areas in the world. We need to come back home and focus on: what do we do well? Adam Smith's The Wealth of Nations: look at what your natural commodities are, your natural abilities. Let's make sure that we do it in an environmentally proper way. We as Albertans, I think, have one of the best environments in the world. Yes, we've made a few mistakes, but that doesn't mean that we haven't learned from those mistakes in going forward.

Another strategy that we should be looking at is water. For heaven's sake, we have flooding going on again, massive destruction, but are we filling up our reservoirs on and off the stream? Do we have enough? The bottom line is no. When are we going to wake up and realize that we need to have a water strategy that is more than just not using it wisely but actually storing and containing the water that we have? Still, 50 per cent of our water allocation is being lost and going out of the province, and then we say: oh, we don't have enough. I mean, who would cut their paycheque in half because they don't need it all this month and let it go out? You put it in a savings account.

We need to have a strategy, Mr. Speaker, for saving our water. Get some on- and off-stream storage; be looking at that. There are just so many areas. We need to have a strategy on how we are going to produce electricity cheaply, and $16 billion in power lines is not the answer to having an energy advantage here in the province. There are so many areas where we should be focusing and looking at: what is the Alberta advantage?

How do we encourage entrepreneurs and people with capital to come here and invest in our schools, invest in technology, and not say that the government is going to tax it? We're going to get some elite groups that are not able to raise their own money for their ideas, and they're going to pick and fund other ones. Yes, it works sometimes, but entrepreneurial start-ups and new ideas, whether it's energy, whether it's nanotechnology – let the university work, again, with some free enterprisers, with some wealthy philanthropists.

There are many directions that we should go, but increasing taxes, which is what shaping the Alberta future is about, is wrong. Putting together an Asia committee to go over there and see if we can do business with them is wrong. Until we get a pipeline, until we have our rules and regulations in order so that we can export to them, there are just so many areas that are a major concern.

Like I say, the other one I want to reflect on a little bit is our Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the way that we've attacked industry that would produce a lot of these things that we need, these rare-earth metals, gold, diamonds. There are many things like that that are being mined in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, the Yukon, the Northwest Territories, but the last place they look to come to is Alberta. Again, LARP has extinguished some of those opportunities.

I spoke with an individual today who said, you know, that to buy the mineral permit was only $675, but they spent probably $30,000 exploring, doing assay tests to see if it's worth while. The government is telling them, "Well, we don't know that we're going to recognize any of those expenses, but we'll give you back your $675" when they've got two years of exploring going in. They were told originally, two years ago, that this isn't part of the LARP plan, but because they changed it – they didn't even go and make any presentations so that we could perhaps have a hydro dam in the north. Again, it just shows the shortsightedness that we have here in the province. We need to be open to business, we want to protect our environment, and we're not addressing any of those critical and important issues with Bill 1 or any other bill.

We're undermining our future. We're losing the Alberta advantage. We're not going to have what I call cheap energy, and we're not even going to have good energy. We have to ask: why aren't we focusing on the big picture, Mr. Speaker? Why are we missing this and talking about bigger government, bigger programs, more taxes, more committees and thinking that we're going to somehow surge ahead in a province that is being undermined by this very government, that is picking businesses, picking industry rather than creating a level playing field and realizing what we need to do to be competitive with our neighbours, let alone our distance neighbors, let alone the rest of the world?

This bill fails to address it. It shouldn't be passed. We don't need an Asia committee. I would hope that the members in this House would speak against it and vote against it as third reading comes.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I appreciated hearing from the hon. member. I appreciated his comments on Bill 1, and some things he says I certainly do not disagree with.

Now, I know your party has had some issues with the centralized planning that was done with the Health Services Board by our friends across the way. It's interesting that a candidate for the leadership of the party of our friends across the way, Mr. Gary Mar, indicates that centralized health care was a mistake. He also notes that he's very uncomfortable with giving cabinet the power to decree the need for new power lines, and he feels that the land-use framework was imposed without proper consultation. I'm getting this information from the Calgary Herald. Mr. Mar indicates that regional planning makes more sense. This, of course, we know, was dismantled and cut when Mr. Mar was probably in the Deep Six cheering on Mr. Klein and Mr. West whenever they cut some essential services, including regional planning.

My question to you after that, hon. member, is: do you have any idea whether Mr. Mar as a leadership candidate supports Bill 1 or not?

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate the question. I guess I'd have to say that I haven't had quite the enthusiasm that you have in watching the leadership race for this PC, or, as I say, this phony conservative, government. I mean, they talk the talk, but they never walk the walk. They talk about being fiscally conservative, yet we have a $6.1 billion deficit. It's interesting that it's going to heat up here as we come to an end. I think we're going to see a lot of truth coming out on the dictatorship that we've been experiencing. These power lines aren't needed. They didn't go through a proper process.

The truth is that we don't need an Asia committee. We have a lot of companies that are already doing business there. The truth is that we don't need $16 billion in power lines. The truth is that we don't need a centralized, government-run, minister-run land-use assembly act that's going to say what can and can't be done. "You know what? I don't like minerals and rare-earth metals, so why would I allow that? We'll wipe that out." Or they like something else. They don't even understand what they're wiping out with their across-the-board legislation and placing it under the purview of one individual. Whether they're short-sighted or self-serving is a major concern.

It'll be interesting to see if any of the new PC candidates, these phony conservative candidates, come out and want to try and rein in this ridiculous spending, these ridiculous regulations, and these. . .

Mr. Zwodzesky: Point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Zwodzesky: A bit of latitude is accepted, but under 459 of Beauchesne this is not relevant to the discussion of Bill 1, so could I please ask the member to get back to the bill? A good try there, hon. members, to sidetrack this into a different issue. Relevance is of importance here, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a point of order. The chair noticed that the discussion has ventured out too far from Bill 1. Please, hon. member, stay on Bill 1.

Mr. Hinman: Excellent counsel. We'll wrap it back up.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hinman: There are all these important things, but these PCs, phony conservatives, want to talk about an Asia committee and think that that's going to somehow look at yonder star to shine bright, that that's going to save them when they haven't even looked after what's wrong here in our own home. They don't have the priorities on where to spend their tax money, where to use their intellectual intelligence to make decisions. Like I say, we're looking at some star way off in the galaxy, thinking we're going to be able to go there for the answer. We need to prioritize here at home, get our spending in order.

I mean, that could have been Bill 1, to educate Albertans on how important it is that we prioritize our infrastructure and our social programs so that we can afford them and balance our books. The dilemma that we've run into: if we can't afford to balance the books today, if we have to pay 10 cents, 15 cents, or 20 cents on every dollar as it's coming in and being collected, we'll afford less. We won't be able to have the health care that we have. We won't be able to have the education that we have, the postsecondary. We won't be able to build the infrastructure. Bill 1 should have been focused on one of those.

To say that the number one priority of this government is to look to an Asia committee and, again, to tax Albertans over the next 20 years to have the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy is plain wrong. It's failing Albertans. This government needs to vote against Bill 1 and refocus their ideas on something that's going to have some economic and social advantages for Albertans and not just a few PC, or politically connected, individuals to this old, tired government.

I hope that answers your question, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The Deputy Speaker: We have 10 seconds left, so I will recognize the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Boutilier: On the bill? Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's the end of questions, I guess, so I won't ask the member the question. I would have asked a question on the bill. You would think that rather than forming a committee, one of the top priorities on this bill would have been dealing perhaps with the economic engine of Canada, the oil sands, and perhaps twinning a highway that is an important economic link to the oil sands centre. Clearly, it's not Bill 1, and what a surprise that it's not Bill 1.

5:30

I want to say that Bill 1, if you can imagine, is a bill to form a committee. Let's think about that for a moment. That, number one, lacks imagination. Let's have Bill 1 to form a committee. Not only that; let's form a committee to allow the inmates to run the asylum.

Really, one thinks of the lack of imagination that goes around Bill 1, Mr. Speaker. I can only say that I could not support Bill 1 in third reading because it lacks imagination. My concern is simply this: one of the key components of any government is to govern and to govern properly. To come up with a bill to say: let's form a committee – there are 30, 40, 50 committees. Gee whiz. Are the next 50 committees going to be Bill 1 to come in front of the next Premier, whoever that may be? In my judgment it lacks imagination. Actually, it's often said that if everyone is thinking the same, then nobody is thinking, as quoted by Winston Churchill.

I want to say today that it's my observation that the front-bench thinking of allowing the Premier to come forward with Bill 1 lacks that imagination. Someone should have had the courage to stand up and say: "Mr. Premier, this is not a good bill. This does not represent the energy, the imagination that is required, of what Albertans are expecting of you."

Tomorrow this Premier will celebrate his birthday, and of course my son is celebrating his birthday tomorrow. I think you know what birthday I'm going to be at. Certainly, I wish the Premier a happy birthday, but I'm going to be with my four-year-old son tomorrow. The reason is because my son has imagination. My son has an imagination of a future, so that's why I'm going to be spending my time with him. I like to hang around people that have imagination, and that's what I'm going to be doing.

Bill 1 lacks imagination. It lacks energy. It lacks the creative thoughtfulness to come forward. It has no vision. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that if Bill 1 had been brought forward by the Minister of Transportation, who said, "I think Bill 1 should be that we will commit to twinning highway 63, an economic engine of Canada, an important connection to Alberta," – but the reality of it is that I think there's more paving going on in Sylvan Lake. Perhaps Sylvan Lake is the economic engine of Canada, and it's not the oil sands. I'm not so sure. I've just driven by there, and I saw a lot of work going on.

Mr. Mason: It's the waterslide.

Mr. Boutilier: It must be the waterslide.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to you that Bill 1 should have been a commitment by the Minister of Transportation to say that we want to connect the oil sands capital of the world with the rest of Alberta, and not only connect on the highway, since we haven't seen any pavement, but also we could connect in a pipeline.

In fact, I want to say that Premier Lougheed, who I met with not that long ago, clearly indicated that before any more expansion goes forward, we need to start committing to upgrading in Alberta, and we haven't seen that. Once again, it's an example of a lack of imagination, basically, after 40 years.

If I could use this example. It's kind of like a 60-year-old person getting a facelift. And if you can imagine, then they live for 40 years, it keeps stretching and redefining, but when the person turns 100, facelifts don't work anymore. It just really is time for something else. I think that is indicative of this government. They have run out of ideas. They have run out of steam. They've just run out of energy. Mr. Speaker, I believe that their time is up. Do not pass go.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I do not support Bill 1. I think you're saying, "Let's form a committee" to have some bureaucrats. We saw the committee work already, saying, "Let's come forward and raise taxes, so we don't depend on just oil revenues anymore." Well, that is really quite a solution, the creativeness of this government.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say this: I do not support in third reading this bill. I believe that, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar a few weeks ago mentioned, he wanted to know – I was going to send over to the Minister of Education a globe because they clearly do not even know where Asia is. Businesses are 15 years out in front of this government. This government is forming a committee, yet universities and research institutions and businesses have been out there for the last 15 years. Not only are they down the road; they're around the corner. This government with this bill forming a committee is not even at the starting gate. Clearly, members for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and Edmonton-Gold Bar, I want to let you know that I am sending a globe over to the esteemed Minister of Education since he was the one interjecting.

I observed his performance, of course, down in Eckville about two weeks ago, and that was 750. In fact, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake was there that night. I want to say that I thank the member from Sundre for taking the opportunity to introduce me and my colleagues there. It was interesting. It was the day before Good Friday, for those who are Christian, but I actually think the crucifixion started the night before. It was in Eckville, and it was really about the fact of celebrating. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was there as well. It was nice to see him there and others. Clearly, that night was quite an example.

On Bill 1, Mr. Speaker, the key is that given the fact that it lacks imagination, we have truly, truly seen a government that has run out of ideas. The gas tank is on empty. Consequently I will send that globe over. I would really wish the government the best in catching up with Alberta businesses and Alberta universities and Alberta research institutions who have been utilizing the important partnerships in Asia for the last 15 years. I'm glad to see that they're forming a committee. That means they're not even at the starting gate. It is an embarrassment to call a government that says that this is Bill 1.

I will not be supporting in third reading this bill. I want to say that I'll be spending tomorrow with my son because he has a lot more imagination. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

5:50 Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The Committee of the Whole is now back to order.

Bill 16
Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: Are there any hon. members wishing to comment or speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you. Committee of the Whole on Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011. I guess that we'd have to say, first of all, that we understand the necessity to update many regulations that the industry has. It has been tough. We support the intent of this bill, but the question is: is the content correct? It's a wonderful thing to say that our intentions are good, but are the actions actually wrong? Again, this has come forward. We would like to spend more time doing some research. It's to provide regulation for in situ coal gasification and to eliminate duplication in regulation of energy use already administered by Alberta Environment and to strengthen the power of the Market Surveillance Administrator.

In situ coal gasification has a lot of potential although it has its share of problems as well. I hope the regulatory framework finds the right balance of vigilance without overburdening entrepreneurs. It's obvious that it's important that there be a regulatory framework specific to this method of extraction because it's not the same as it is for coal mining. It's a bit ridiculous that this is the framework that the industry has been working under. I guess it's that old saying that it's better late than never, so here it is.

Speaking of better late than never, it's good to see that this bill reduces one of the thousands of cases of overregulation in this province; namely, the duplication of regulation governing energy use for industry and manufacturing.

The other major part of this bill clarifies and strengthens the power of the Market Surveillance Administrator. This person's role is to be the independent policeman for our power market. The power that he's given to look to the concerns of the Independent System Operator through the AUC for adjudication will make him better able to carry out this mandate. Doing some research on the Market Surveillance Administrator, however, we had trouble finding much activity.

This may be related to our concern about the Market Surveillance Administrator, who is of course appointed by the minister, which, again, is problematic for us when we see the centralization. It's going to be appointed by the minister; we have some concerns. Given the disturbingly close relationship between this government and the power industry, it's not unreasonable to be skeptical of whether this appointment will always be an independent policeman. We would like to see the Market Surveillance Administrator appointed by the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment and that in addition to his existing powers, he report to the committee once a year.

These are a few of the areas that are definitely of concern to us. We are always a little bit nervous with how fast this government loves to bring in a bill. To try and do research, I mean, we're not staffed well enough.

I think the other opposition leaders want some time. At this point I'll sit down and let the hon. member from the NDP put forward a few of his concerns.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to talk a little bit about Bill 16. I have spoken on Bill 16 already with respect to many of the specific aspects within the bill. I wanted to talk a little bit more about the intent of the bill with respect to coal gasification, which is a major component of this particular bill. This seems to be an emerging technology, but it also appears to be an emerging economic development strategy of the government, and it is cause for concern.

Now, it's clear that the process of in situ coal gasification will produce somewhat fewer greenhouse gases than burning coal directly, but I think there are still a number of concerns. It's interesting that this bill, in my view, paves the way for some of the components of the report of the Premier's task force on competitiveness. Shaping Alberta's Future: Report of the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy is headed, of course, by Dr. Emerson, who in the previous election was elected as a Liberal. Then before he even sat in Parliament, he joined Mr. Harper's cabinet as a Conservative. Of course, there was not a chance in Hades that he was going to be re-elected by his constituents after pulling that stunt, so he took on a stint here with the Premier's task force.

It is clear that this report is a very, very carbon-intensive report. This report has a brown future for the province of Alberta whereas the Alberta New Democrats want to see a green future. It's clear that the direction, at least in this report and, obviously, supported by this piece of legislation, is to depend more heavily on the development of our coal reserves as an energy strategy going forward.

I think that it is a matter of considerable concern, and I think it should be for all Albertans because they're going against the direction that's being set by science and they're going against the direction that's being set in the rest of the world. I think that when they talk about a carbon-intensive economic development strategy as envisaged by a global centre for energy that we have to express concern. It says:

The Opportunity: To become a leading innovator in making energy from high-carbon resources (such as bitumen and coal) more acceptable, and a global centre of high-carbon energy expertise.

The idea contained in the report is:

Create a Global Centre for Energy – a crucible for accelerating innovation to transform environmental and operational performance. Design it to be a catalyst and funder of collaborative research, a meeting place of diverse interests, and a showcase of achievement. Make Alberta internationally respected for pioneering research, with authoritative evidence and industrial-strength solutions.

Mr. Chairman, I'll just go a little further. It says:

We envision the creation of a Global Centre for Energy with a mandate to foster expertise in high-carbon development and make Alberta the global "go-to" place for ideas, products and services.

The Chair: Hon. member, it's 6 o'clock. I hesitate to interrupt, but we can continue this at 7:30.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 16 Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Chase: We all wish. It's not you wish; it's we all wish to-night.

With regard to Bill 16, Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011, I had already expressed my opinion that for the most part I was supportive of Bill 16. There is concern, however, in our caucus – and it's important to get that concern on the record – that this is such a complex bill that while we've received a certain amount of briefings and we appreciate the briefings that we've received, there are still unanswered questions as to the extent of this bill.

We continue to have concerns with regard to the sequestration aspects of it. We have a good understanding of the value of the coal resource, as I pointed out when I first spoke to this bill, and the idea of the gasification of coal I very much appreciate. The underground process involved is somewhat of a concern based on the sequestration elements involved. The government has chosen to spend $2 billion on carbon sequestration, which is not an absolutely solid-proof science, but that large commitment of funds is a concern to us. The federal government has kicked in approximately a billion dollars, so we've got $3 billion worth of taxpayers' funds riding on this, and we don't have a similar commitment from industry. In other words, there isn't a $6 billion pool out there should things not work as we would hope. Industry to a large extent has been left off the hook on this particular bill just as they're left off the hook when we get to be talking about Bill 10.

Those are the primary concerns that we have. The idea of the regulatory framework is important. Obviously, we need those regulations. We'd like to see the role of the ERCB in terms of the regulatory process strengthened. As I mentioned before, and I don't want to go into detail again: the possibility of the regular gasification of coal as opposed to putting it up the chimney, as is currently the process, and adding to the pollution. Despite Premier Klein's assertions there is no such thing as clean coal. We have cleaner versions of coal in Alberta, but it's a myth to suggest that there is no pollution associated with the burning of coal. Whether it's turned into a synthetic gas or not, there are still emissions that have to be dealt with.

Those primarily, Mr. Chair, are the concerns that I have over Bill 16. The complexity, as I say, will hopefully not come back to bite us at some point in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?
Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 16 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to all members for their support at this juncture of Committee of the Whole on Bill 16. I would move that we now rise and report the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011, otherwise known as Bill 16.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 16.

Thank you, sir.

The Acting Speaker: All those members that concur with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 10 Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development it's my pleasure to move Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, for third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Bill 10 is the equivalent of trying to stuff the winds back into Pandora's box and then keep them there when they should never have been released in the first place, as was the case with bills 50, 36, and 19. I will give the government credit for trying to repair three pieces of questionable legislation, but this doesn't quite achieve what the government had intended.

I have spoken in praise of the former minister of sustainable resources, who is now seeking the leadership of the Conservative Party, for dealing with land stewardship. Unfortunately, we just got basically to the opening chapters. A previous minister, prior to my time in this Assembly, Lorne Taylor, talked about the idea of water stewardship, the blue gold aspects. He is still sort of in the background in terms of being connected with the location and mapping of underground aquifers, which is part of the whole process of stewardship.

Unfortunately, what has happened is bills like Bill 50, Bill 36, Bill 19 are the equivalent of the cart before the horse because until the actual land stewardship is dealt with we have a series of one-offs. We have, for example, the one-off that is happening in the Castle-Crown area, and that's the clear-cutting where over a period of 30 years one-third of the Castle will have been decimated with this approach to clear-cutting.

Also, with regard to land stewardship in the north the government continues to approve ever-growing tailings ponds. The new methodology, whether it's the sun-dried, spread-it-out, scatter-it-across circumstances, is not keeping pace with the ever-expanding tailings ponds. This is another concern I have.

Also, the whole idea of land stewardship – the land-use framework is the term that I've been searching for – started off correctly in terms of identifying six regions based on water. Obviously, water has to be our starting point. The current system, where anything goes anywhere at any time, makes the whole notion of the land-use framework of no consequence.

This is a concern that Bill 10 is attempting to address but still does not provide sufficient relief, I guess would be the word I would use, for individuals concerned about the expropriation of their land. The highlights of this bill are that it allows for a wider consultation process, both before a regional plan is developed and when plans are being amended. It allows for compensation for those who are directly impacted, and it apparently allows for appeals regarding either a regional plan or an amendment to a regional plan.

Mr. Speaker, we're aware that there has to be a balance between private ownership and public good. For example, the Liberal Party believes that the rapid rail, the speed train from Calgary through Red Deer and on to Edmonton, is a very good concept. There are chances that, depending on which route is taken – and of course the people in Red Deer hope it goes by their municipal airport because they've purchased land there to develop a station, hoping that that will be the chosen route. But there is the possibility that individuals along whatever right-of-way is chosen will not necessarily agree with the land price that is being offered by the government.

Under certain circumstances for the good of the entire province expropriation has to happen. It's the scale of expropriation that concerns people, particularly with regard to the utility corridors. There is an awful lot of doubt, particularly with the route chosen from northern Alberta to carry electricity down south, where, despite a slight improvement in the price of gas, the idea of local production of electricity as opposed to lengthy line losses is still a preferable option. People aren't convinced, an awful lot of rural landowners aren't convinced that this isn't just taxpayer subsidized, whether it be $10 billion or $16 billion, for the company to export our power down south.

The people in Montana aren't exactly thrilled about what's happening either. We've seen what's happening in terms of Montana and Idaho with bringing up the heavy equipment for the Kearl project. So there are legitimate reasons for people to be concerned about who's benefiting from this Alberta Land Stewardship Act.

We still, unfortunately, create a lot of our energy through coal. It's not the gasified coal. It's the up-the-chimney, polluting variety. In terms of our bitumen processing developments we're putting out an awful lot of chemicals unscreened through the chimneys there. So what's happening is that we are benefiting the countries to whom we export, but we're basically, to use the bird analogy, fouling our own nest, and other individuals are reaping the benefits of our lack of balance.

Now, there is no doubt that we need to expand our exports. There is a concern – and it possibly is playing politics with President Obama – and whether the line down south is not only going to export bitumen but is going to export jobs, it is going to be a circumstance worthy of pursuing.

I believe most members in this House, Mr. Speaker, have seen presentations by Dr. Brad Stelfox where he takes us back to the first oil and gas discoveries, the first development of cities. In other words, he takes us back, rolls the clock back to about 1905, and then with a series of dots he brings us up to where we are in 2011. Then he expands the notion of, if we continue at the pace we're going, what Alberta is going to look like and what places, unfortunately, are going to be overrun if the industrialization continues at the pace it is going.

Land stewardship is about a balance between industrial growth and environmental protection. I think a number of us in this Assembly are either parents or some of us have reached that grandparent stage, and passing on a legacy of value to our grandchildren and our children is extremely important. The Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act attempts to make the process more open, more subject to appeal, but this government is going to have to do an awful lot of convincing, particularly in the rural areas affected, that it's acting in the best interests of landowners as well as the best interests of the province in terms of going forward.

Regardless of the concerns that opposition members will be expressing tonight, this bill will go ahead. The government will pass it, and Albertans are left basically holding their breath and once more, because they don't have much choice until the next election is called, trusting that the government is not going to steamroll their land acquisition.

As I began, Mr. Speaker, we've got bits and pieces. We've got a series of loose ends which are not going to be tied together by Bill 10. The whole land act remains basically on hold, so it's an anything goes circumstance.

Mr. Speaker, I don't wish to hold the floor. I have expressed the concerns I have that Bill 10 does not go far enough in relieving the pressure or providing the stewardship that its name suggests.

Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My colleague from Calgary-Varsity shed some light on Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act. This goes on to correct some, maybe all of the fears that were created by Bill 36, Bill 19, Bill 50. If we had had Bill 36 done correctly, we wouldn't be here today.

The bill is designed to take some power away from the cabinet, which was originally awarded to it not by a bit but in heaps, and allow compensation for those who were directly impacted by the regional plans. It also creates a public appeals process, all well and good. It also changes "extinguish" to "rescind" in section 8.

However, amendments to this bill do raise some concerns regarding the extent of future regional plans. Will what we see coming forward from regional advisory councils and later the government be too weak or have any real impact in protection of the environment? Is it out of concern that if they're too forceful, the government will face appeal after appeal?

The bill does remove some of the powers that had originally been given to the cabinet, which is a positive move, and it provides for a greater consultation and opportunity for compensation.

Section 5 requires consultation with respect to the proposed regional plan and requires that proposed regional plans or amendments be tabled in the Legislature. Further on section 14 amends section 19 of the act. This allows the person who is directly or adversely affected by either the region plan or the amendment plan to request a review again within 12 months. Section 5 requires a proposed regional plan or amendments to be tabled in the Legislature. Will this be debatable as a concurrence motion, for example, or will it simply be tabled, and we move on? There are lots of questions still that have to be answered.

We do not support the expropriation of land without due process, Mr. Speaker, including a public process, a formal appeal process, and appropriate compensation. This bill does address some of these issues, but we continue to have some questions about how.

While the Land Stewardship Act does offer some positive mechanisms for long-term planning for the development of our key resources and our land, this must be done with a transparent public process, and the power should not be exclusively in the hands of cabinet, with decisions to be made behind closed doors. We do believe in the protection of Alberta's Crown lands, sustainable development of our resources, and the growth of our urban communities.

With Bill 16, that we just passed, I don't know what kind of impact those developments in the province are going to have on the environment.

There are so many issues that Bill 16 has created. Even with Bill 10 I don't think we are going all the way. It must provide a fair expropriation process, a transparent process of determining the need for the project. Is it, in effect, for the public good? It must also include fair compensation when land is expropriated. There should be a clear process. With all those issues, you know, we're still not really clear with Bill 10. We still have our concerns, Mr. Speaker.

With that, thank you for the time.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some notations that I got from the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce, and I'd certainly like to share them on Bill 10. One of the comments was that the imminent passage of Bill 10 and the proposed process of adopting each regional plan independently represent a potential for significant economic instability which may generate a lack of investor confidence.

I believe what they're getting at here is that there will be long-term, cumulative effects, and if things are done piecemeal instead of looking at what should be anticipated as long-term effects, how these long-term effects would affect different regions.

In the long run, ultimately, the land-use framework will be the overriding legislation that will probably try to draw it all together, but in the meantime many of these regional plans have gone ahead and may well have to be adopted if the land-use framework is the umbrella that would be over top.

In section 19.1, which is the compensation, which is certainly one of the more contentious issues in bills 36 and 10, according to Section 17(4), the Alberta Land Stewardship Act takes precedence over all other legislation including the Expropriation Act. This is a serious concern for the Chamber of Commerce as this Act gives our government over-arching authority to affect the future value of property and impact property development . . . Simply stated, the government has the power under this Act to impact the value and marketability of real property, both in the short term, and the long term.

It's their opinion that this section of the Act needs to be enhanced to protect and preserve the interests of the private landholder and interested parties.

Certainly, in Crown land, et cetera, I believe that interested parties are actually sometimes always all Albertans, not just somebody that happens to be within a small radius of a particular problem. That small radius or that problem could well affect us all. I think the woman in Rosebud has already spoken to the United Nations about her problem and the fact that fracking has affected her water supply from the water well. So this is a concern. It should be all Albertans that really understand what's going on in each area and how each area would be affected both short term and long term.

The protection and the preserving of the interests of the private landholder and the other interested parties would recognize injurious affection and the concept of fair market value.

The definition of Market Value does not fairly consider that a forced devaluation is different from a sale [between] a willing seller and a willing buyer. A willing seller would choose the time to sell the property. [But] the case law under the Expropriation Act recognizes this difference and considers "highest and best use" in its deliberations by expanding the consideration beyond what would normally be considered in a market analysis. ALSA attempts to limit compensation to a "fair market analysis." This is a significant variance and places the burden of loss on individual land-owners and those with present or future interests in land, who are negatively impacted by the Plans.

The recommendations that the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce wanted the government of Alberta to consider were

- (1) Delay the third reading of Bill 10 and immediately conduct a thorough review of all other legislation that would be impacted by ALSA, since it is intended to take precedence over any other Act;
- (2) Prior to passing Bill 10, hold a moratorium on all Regional Plans under the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, keeping it open and active until all regional plans have been submitted and all issues related to procedural fairness have been fully set out and codified in the legislation;
- (3) Prior to adopting any of the regional plans, appoint an independent adjudicator to review each and all of the regional plans individually and collectively to ensure that appropriate public consultation has been considered; and
- (4) Prior to adopting any of the regional plans, conduct a thorough assessment of how any one plan may impact or interact with the plan of another region, and how all of the plans as a whole impact investment, development, and competitiveness throughout the Province of Alberta.

As we know, we live in a global economy, and I believe that investment, development, and competitiveness throughout the province of Alberta are important. However, they certainly will reflect, in the end, how we compete in the global market.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone who wishes to comment or question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. I know there is considerable concern about two situations happening in southern Alberta. One is the potential exporting of electricity to the States and the transmission towers that will be necessary to put in place, that will take up a significant footprint in southern Alberta. Then there is also the concern that has been raised in a number of local papers and by local citizens, and that's the clear-cutting of the Castle-Crown. I wonder if the member would like to comment on those two southern Alberta concerns.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Yes. The MATL line, which is a private provider line, has been for years trying to get that line to go through Montana. Yes, it will leave a huge footprint.

One of the concerns of the local farmers, of a lot of the potato farmers, is that because of the height of the towers, because the towers go right across their land – and I'm going to diverge for a moment. I've never really quite understood why, when we have road allowances, some of those towers can't go down the road allowance instead of through somebody's farm field when, in fact, it will definitely restrict the ability to be able to use crop-dusters. The planes are not going to be able to dust those crops – they're called crop-dusters – and are not going to be able to get into those fields and get down low enough because of the wires and the big poles. So that's a huge concern to farmers that use that way of protecting their crops from insects, et cetera.

As far as the Castle-Crown goes, I just can't believe that it's even going ahead. I don't think there's a great deal of money to be made. I believe that the government itself will be paid hardly anything for that. Bill 10 is about the Land Stewardship Act, and it is about good stewardship of the land in the Castle-Crown area. I happen to have a place very close to there, and I can assure you that I am one of the first ones to be saying that I really think that this is probably one of the worst decisions that this government has ever allowed itself to be talked into.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available.

Seeing none, any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on the bill.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. That's what I wish to speak on, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for calling on me to add my voice to the debate on Bill 10 in third reading. In third reading we are essentially debating the impact of the bill, the effect of the bill, to be passed. Now that we have moved it through the committee stage, the stage at which we can go through a piece of legislation clause by clause, section by section, ask questions on particular sections, sometimes even get answers to those questions, and propose amendments, that opportunity has come and gone.

I was in the House for the committee debate on Bill 10, which was conducted under time allocation and which was an interesting exercise in that members of the government caucus, who, I think it can be said, do not often eagerly enter debate at this stage, feel that they've taken government legislation thoroughly through the process – through cabinet policy committee, through their own caucus, et cetera, et cetera – and, of course, think that when a bill arrives on the floor of the Assembly, it's about as perfect as nature itself could make it and that, really, all our job is to rubber-stamp the darned thing.

Normally they don't get too engaged, but they were quite engaged that night, and many of them were taking pretty close to their full allotted time. You know, you got the distinct impression that they were taking part in an effort to run down the clock since we were under time allocation. The overriding theme that we heard from their prepared speeches was that Bill 10 is probably the best thing to happen since your mother gave birth to you, Mr. Speaker, and that anyone who questions Bill 10, anyone who questions the ALSA, anyone who questions Bill 50, anyone who questions Bill 19 is out there rabble-raising and fomenting fear and panic in the hinterland. If that's the way the government caucus sees it, I think they're going to be in for a surprise on election day.

I imagine that my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere, when he gets up to speak, not to put words in his mouth but just based on past behaviour, which is the best predictor of future performance, will probably have a little more to say about that, so I won't spend too much time on that.

The other interesting thing about the debate in committee on Bill 10 was that there were a number of amendments proposed by various members of the opposition. There would have been a number of additional amendments proposed had there been time, but of course under time allocation there wasn't. I know that I personally only had time to present two of our proposed four amendments from the Alberta Party caucus, and three others were proposed by other parties. All of them were soundly voted down by the government. In most cases nobody from the government even bothered to get up to debate the merits of the amendments, and since they were so engaged in the debate otherwise, that was a little surprising as well. But they didn't typically get up to debate the merits or the drawbacks of the proposed amendments. They just sat there and voted them down, showing absolutely no interest in engaging in any kind of real, reasoned debate over whether this bill was, in fact, perfect or whether it could be improved upon.

Mr. Speaker, normally when I and I think most people who do what we do for a living feel passionate about having gotten something right and somebody comes along and proposes that we change it, we'll get up and defend our position. We won't just sit there and vote it down. But that's what happened the other night when we were moving Bill 10 through committee stage under time allocation and the clock was ticking down. The government limited debate on Bill 10 in committee to only five hours. That's not a lot of time for 83 legislators to weigh in on making a bill that will affect land use and regional planning province-wide for perhaps decades to come the best that it can possibly be.

Let me go farther, Mr. Speaker, and suggest that it's not only about making it the best that it can possibly be, but given the history around Bill 36, Bill 19, Bill 50 at minimum, given the history around those three bills, the nature and content of those bills, the way in which they were driven through the Legislature, the way in which they were brought into effect, which certainly gave a great number of people in this province the impression that those laws were imposed upon them, with, again, the impression that there was a loss of certain rights, a loss of certain control over their own property and over their own destiny, if I can go that far, given that history it's not only important to make Bill 10, which I think by the government's own admission is an attempt to correct the flaws in Bill 36 – and I think it's pretty obvious that it's an attempt to turn down the political heat that the government has been taking over Bill 36 – the best it can be, but we have to make it be seen to be the best it can be. [An electronic device sounded] Somebody is backing a truck up in here by the sound of things. I hope they don't run over me before my time is up. I operated under time allocation last time, and I don't intend to do it this time.

It's not enough to just get it right now. I think it's important that the government be seen to get it right because there is a loss of trust. Perhaps I could even go so far, Mr. Speaker, as to say a breach of trust, a breach of contract, if you will, between this government and the citizens that it represents in the province of Alberta. If you could put it to a province-wide referendum, would Bill 36 pass in its present form? Would Bill 36 pass? Would the Land Stewardship Act pass as it will be amended by Bill 10? I don't know. But if it did pass, it would be, I'm pretty sure, by a pretty narrow margin, and I know there are some of my colleagues who believe that it would be crushed.

There is a tremendous amount of anger and distrust and despair and disillusionment out there in the real world, once you get out from under the dome here, related to Bill 36, related to those other bills that I mentioned, bills 19 and 50, and Bill 10 was an opportunity for the government to try and get it right. The government, I think, by limiting debate at committee stage to five hours, by making what sure looked like an effort to burn up the clock during those five hours during debate on the bill itself, showed absolutely no interest in trying to change or amend or even enter arguments as to why the bill should not be changed or amended when amendments were on the floor for debate and discussion. It's clear that the government is not interested in doing anything to fix this bill or doing anything more to fix the Alberta Land Stewardship Act than this bill proposes.

8:10

I think that's a problem, Mr. Speaker. I really do think that's a problem because there are some real key issues with Bill 36. There are issues around compensation. There are issues around consultation. There are issues around appeal. Bill 10 certainly does attempt or appears to attempt – the government is at least making it look like they're attempting – to address those concerns, but I don't think they really do address those concerns sufficiently so that, you know, if we pass this bill into law tonight, tomorrow the people of Alberta will wake up and say: "Well, there. Okay. Everything is fine. The land, the water, and all the creatures who live off the land and the water are now going to be protected. This province's natural heritage is going to be protected not only for my generation but for my kids and my grandchildren and generations to come. We now have a blueprint, a road map for orderly development that imposes limits on what you can do on certain parcels of land, but by the same token as a landowner my rights are protected, and I feel like I don't have to worry about anything that this government might try and sneak through the Legislature behind my back and impose upon me later when somebody wants to put a high-voltage power line through my backyard or, you know, whatever comes up."

This is a problem because Bill 10 is a flawed attempt to fix a seriously flawed Bill 36, a seriously flawed Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and the government has shown no interest in making it better or in addressing people's ongoing concerns. That is why I will vote against Bill 10 tonight. Of course, given the government attitude and given the government's majority it doesn't really matter how I vote – does it? – or how my colleagues in opposition vote because we know that Bill 10 will pass as is.

The government expects you and me and all the people of Alberta to sit back and take it. They expect landowners to sit back and take it and stop complaining that they're worried that their rights are being violated. They expect environmentalists to sit back and take it when environmentalists are worried that Bill 10, in fact, weakens the environmental principles in Bill 36. They want city folk to sit back and take it. They want everybody to sit back and take it. They are all-wise, all-knowing when it comes to matters of land use, and what do you little people know about it, anyway?

Well, Mr. Speaker, any good attempt at establishing land-use policy and regional planning has to walk a fine line because it must balance the long-term needs of all the land and the people in this province and all the water with the rights of individual land-owners. Any government attempt to protect or conserve or place limits on the use of land risks impacting citizens who use the land or who might use the land in the future for purposes, you know, other than what the regional plan will intend if that regional plan wasn't there.

The only way that land use and regional planning are going to work is if the public buys into it. The only way any law that we pass in this Assembly works, the only way that it works in the public interest, the only way that it works for the common good, the only way that it's enforceable, Mr. Speaker, is if you have a vast majority of the people in support of that law. There are probably some fairly scientific studies to give you an exact number, but my gut tells me that it's something in the neighbourhood of 80 per cent plus. If it's below 80 per cent, you've got enough non-compliance with the law that it's essentially unenforceable.

The Land Stewardship Act can be a supreme piece of legislation to which everything else is supposed to answer, and the Land Stewardship Act as I believe it will be amended by Bill 10 still has that supremacy, as I understand it. That doesn't necessarily mean that people are going to go along with it. That doesn't necessarily mean that people aren't going to shoot, shovel, and shut up on their own land. That doesn't necessarily mean that people aren't going to get upset at this government and, when they think nobody's looking, pee into the river. That doesn't necessarily mean that people aren't going to find all sorts of ways to violate the regulations and the rules and the laws put into place by our attempt at land-use policy and regional planning because they don't feel like they were listened to, they don't feel like they were consulted, they don't feel like they were respected, and they don't feel like their rights are being respected. They feel like their government is running roughshod over their property.

You know, that's enough to turn an environmentalist nasty. That's enough to turn an environmentalist into somebody who might just shoot that gopher rather than protect it.

About the most efficient way, Mr. Speaker, that I know to ensure that you do not get the kind of public buy-in that is necessary to make the principles, the very sound principles, in our land-use framework in this province work is to impose your will on people. Pretty much every ruler in our history, in the history of British parliamentary democracies and many other western European nations who, you know, have formed part of the heritage of our law and Constitution in this country, pretty much every one of those rulers who has tried the heavy-handed approach going as far back as King John and the Magna Carta, has found out the hard way that it doesn't really ever work to impose your will on the people on something as basic as this.

I'm not sure, Mr. Speaker, that the principles of Bill 36, that the principles of the land-use framework are all that out of whack at all with what we need, but the application is. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I would be very much interested in hearing from the Member for Calgary-Currie, who attended, along with a number of Calgary MLAs, the Enmax power presentation. While former CEO Gary Holden has gotten into some disrepute based on a rather lavish lifestyle, what seems to have been forgotten, at least by this government, is the importance of locally produced electricity as opposed to power lines coming all the way from the north. I would like to hear from the member his support for locally produced gas-powered electricity and his concerns about bringing wind-powered generation on from the south as opposed to transporting coal-fired from the north.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be pleased to answer that question. First of all, in principle, let me be clear. I don't have a problem with building a power grid that is primarily designed or certainly looks on paper like it's primarily designed to export an overcapacity of electrical generation from our province to California and to keep the slot machines running in Vegas so long as the people in Vegas and the people in California are paying the freight for those lines, not the people of Alberta. We should not have to pay for somebody else's benefit, and that's problem number one with Bill 50 as far as I'm concerned.

Secondly, it only makes sense to generate power as close to load, which is the term that the industry uses for where it will be consumed, as possible. Now, gas-fired power generating stations can be controversial. There's a huge controversy in Ontario in the Oakville area, I believe, about whatever Ontario Hydro calls itself today, their proposal to build a rather large, you know, about the size of the facility that Enmax will build in Shepard, the gas-fired generating plant there. The people of Oakville, Ontario, don't want it in their backyard. I guess that's their call, right? I don't hear a whole lot of opposition from the people of Calgary to gas-fired generating plants being built close to the city of Calgary as opposed to continuing to produce dirty electricity from coal and shipping it halfway across the province to the people who need to consume it.

Now, on the other hand, wind power compared to coal-fired power is much cleaner. It's not perfect. It has its environmental challenges, too. It's hard on migratory birds. There are concerns about the noise of the vibrations the turbines generate for people in other jurisdictions. We haven't heard those concerns in southern Alberta. There are problems with bats as well. So it's not perfect, but what in life is?

I mean, we attempt to make good law and good policy in this province, I would hope, on the basis of a number of shades of grey and going for the best of all possible alternatives, which is not necessarily perfection. In order to get that wind-generated power from southern Alberta to load, to where the people who need it live, we need high-voltage power lines to bring it from Pincher Creek, to bring it from Crowsnest, to bring it from Fort Macleod, from Taber and Lethbridge and Medicine Hat up to Calgary, where there are a million consumers.

I've never suggested that we don't need to upgrade or modernize our grid. What I've said is that we can do it Toyota class, but they're shoving Lexus class down our throats and making us pay for it, quite possibly so that a bunch of Americans benefit from it.

An Hon. Member: Or maybe a Rolls-Royce.

Mr. Taylor: Maybe Rolls-Royce, yes.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. Are you on 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hinman: Sure. Just interested, you know. Again, this Bill 10 being the amendment of Bill 36 seems to be part of a group, and Bill 50 being the root of all of this because they got caught up in the courts – they were spying on the people and felt compelled that, oh, we're in this emergency position – do you have any comment? You talked at length about the government calling closure on this so that we couldn't bring forward amendments and couldn't debate and then speaking on that. What's your thought concerning the way . . .

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: I guess I wasn't aware of the time left on that question.

I would feel remiss if I didn't get up to address Bill 10 for the last opportunity in this House, especially with the fact that the government brought in time allocation on this a week ago. I'm very, very disappointed in the government for doing this. Albertans are disappointed. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie pointed out, it's amazing how once they put in time allocation, all of a sudden they have so much to say. If you look at Hansard, they had so little to say, but they used up so much time of the five hours, Mr. Speaker.

I'm extremely disappointed, once again, not only in the bill brought forward by this government but by the behaviour of government members in having the desire to speak on this bill. Here we are now with time limitations to speak to this. I'm very disappointed that we weren't able to get any answers during Committee of the Whole on this because of the time allocation, which the government imposed. It's very disappointing.

It is interesting that just a short year and a half after Bill 36 was rushed through – and what a wonderful bill this was going to be. It would solve all of our developmental problems going forward to the future because what did we have? We had the intellects, the brilliance inside this government to be able to say: we can plan best for industry, for people, for the future, and we'll put all of that trust into a cabinet minister because he has that ability. That, Mr. Speaker, is the crux of the problem with Bill 10 and Bill 36 and why it shouldn't be passed. It's flawed. The main flaw is the idea of central planning and bypassing all of those checks and balances that we had in the past.

I want to just relate that I had an individual today who came into my office who is impacted by Bill 10, directly impacted by LARP, the $1.9 million study of the lower Athabasca regional plan. This government will get up and say: "Oh, no. At this point it's only a draft. It's only a draft." As I've said before, the draft is in the heads that think that this isn't the plan going forward and the willingness of these government members to just let this draft blow right on through without any thinking, saying that maybe there is a problem here. As the Member for Calgary-Currie stated very eloquently: yeah, take this to the people and see if it passes a referendum. I would say that there would be a resounding no, an in-your-face, slam-dunk rejection. This would be a one-yard-line stance, where they'd be pushed back to the 10-yard line if not creamed out. It's very disappointing, Mr. Speaker, the whole process of how this has come forward, the rush of getting this through.

To go back to LARP and this individual and the problem with central planning, he was assured. He's a geologist. He went out and staked a mine in an area that was outside the original draft and was told: "No need to worry. You go ahead and stake this out." He spent $675 for the permit on the minerals. That's a very reasonable price that the province lets these mineral leases go for. He didn't even go to the hearings because he was told by SRD: "No. That's outside of the area that we're looking at. You don't need to come and address us."

Lo and behold, a short two years later a huge section was inside the LARP plan. I believe that it was EnCana who approached them and said: we want to put in a hydro dam plan. Again, it's great to see industry come in and use our natural resources, but for some reason there was an amount, it seemed like: we have to make sure that we make this much acreage into a park. So they took another huge chunk.

This individual conservatively feels that he has probably spent $30,000 in the last two years doing mineral assays and tests in trying to see what potential there is for a mine there, just to have it swept out. SRD is telling this individual: "Oh, no. We'll pay you your $675 back.” Whoop-de-do. Big deal. Poke you in the eye. He has probably put out $30,000.

Bill 10 has this: if there’s a problem of how you’re being compensated for what we’re taking back – rescinding, extinguishing, whatever word the government wants to use – you can make a variation to the minister, and he’ll be happy to listen. We need the court of law. The minister’s office has already very much told him: “You know what? You’re going to get your $675 back.” That isn’t what it’s about. He has already struggled trying to raise capital to do exploratory mining here in the province.

Again, when mineral leases, mineral permits are rescinded at the whim of the minister, there’s no stability. He says that Alberta is the absolute worst place in Canada to try and open and develop a mine. This is one of the reasons why. It’s because of Bill 36 and Bill 10 and this government’s bulldozing. It’s interesting to use the term “bulldozing” because that’s what his family first did when he was very young. They had a D8 Cat and did bulldoze mining up in the Yukon to expose the rock. [interjection] It would appear that the Minister of Infrastructure wants to make a comment. I will really enjoy his time to get up and comment on this, seeing as how there is a time allocation. You’ll have your 15 minutes. You can answer it or ask me under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

It’s just really disappointing that this government doesn’t understand that there was a turning point in history – and the member brought it up – in 1215 with the Magna Carta where the people, the citizens of the country had had enough of the dictatorship. They wanted property rights, and 1215 was a turning point.

This bill is a turning point, but it’s a turning point in the wrong direction to where people once again no longer have the recourse to the courts. It’s a recourse to the minister, who is going to make his own judgments on his own bias and say: “Oh, no. We’re compensating you fairly. You never should have invested $30,000 in that mineral permit. Why would you do that?” When his friends went up to the Yukon or Northwest Territories, he said: “No. This government gets it, and I’ve been assured that this is a safe place to try and develop and to get the mining going.” It’s just extremely disappointing that this government doesn’t understand that. It’s screamed to investors throughout the world that it doesn’t in this Bill 10 in the fact that there is no recourse to the courts. It’s explicit in there that there is no recourse to the courts. It’s a recourse to the minister.

8:30

The other thing that they’ve done very, very well and the best legislation – and my computer, lo and behold, when you’re counting on it, won’t open up tonight in here, so I can’t get my notes that I need. There’s an individual out east who looked at Bill 36, and she says that she’s never seen such a well-written piece of legislation that crafts it to say that this is a plan, that this is a government policy. When they craft and use those words in legislation, which Bill 10 fails to amend, what it means is that there is no recourse to the courts because it’s government policy. When it’s government policy, you can’t be compensated through the courts on that. It takes the whole process out of the courts and lands it right in the lap of government and government ministries. At best, cabinet or maybe a few more people will debate it.

I was down in Eckville. I witnessed the government trying to defend this. I guess, you know, to show due respect to the government members who were there, none of us outside of the government MLAs were bright enough to understand that these amendments protect us. People just don’t buy it. If, in fact, we’re all wrong on this, then amend it into language that the common people – those who own property, those who have mineral permits, those who have oil and gas leases – can understand and feel comfortable with. But the bottom line is that those who want to invest in this province look at it, judge it, and they say: “You know what? There’s a red zone around here.” It’s a red zone.

I remember a conference down in Florida back in 2009. There is a red zone around the oil and gas industry because of the new royalty framework, and that red zone is a communist zone. It’s a five-year plan zone saying that we don’t know which oil and gas companies, which mineral leases, which properties are going to be rescinded by this government and protected from the courts. There’s no recourse to the courts.

It’s unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. We should not be passing this bill. Bill 10 is wrong. Albertans have spoken out throughout this province. I would ask the government, the Minister of SRD now: what other rallies, what other groups have been so outspoken and come forward since Bill 11? I can’t remember which year that was, when they were changing the health care, when people came out by the hundreds, by the thousands to oppose this. Yet this government just bulldozes ahead and says: “Oh, trust us. Trust us. We know what’s best for you.” History has proven time and time again that government doesn’t know what’s best for the people.

You know, we always get caught up in our passion. But if central planning is so wonderful and is the way to go, then why don’t we go to our senior brothers in Ottawa and say: “Oh, you’re more senior. You’re bigger. You’re smarter. Why don’t you look after our planning and tell us what we can and can’t do here in the province?” Better yet, why don’t we go to the UN and say: “You know what? You’re looking after world peace, world interests, and the environment, and you put out these edicts. Why don’t you be the ones to tell us what we can and can’t do here in Alberta?” I mean, is there any purpose in a sovereign nation with that attitude of centralization? I would say no. We’re giving up our sovereignty. The people, the businesses, the entrepreneurs are giving up their sovereignty in this bill to a cabinet minister, who is going to say: we know what’s best.

I kind of get a chuckle out of the idea that, you know, local planners sometimes will say: “You know what? There are not going to be any more bridges built across this river that divides our town in half.” They go through excruciating pain sometimes for 20 or 30 years before they finally admit: oh, well, you know, what we should have said was that there’ll be no more houses built outside this area and only up. But they limit something like a bridge across a river and say: there’ll be no more of those because we want to protect the river. Yet the people keep coming and building.

This bill is going to be the downfall of Alberta. It’s going to crush our economy. The question is: when? How long? Is it going to be death by a thousand cuts, or is this government going to do something drastic, like it did on January 1, 2009, when they implemented the new royalty program? They’d already done two years’ worth of damage to the industry and then said: “Oh, no. It was the economy.” No. It was the rules, the regulations, and the legislation that this government passed with its idea that centralization is best. Central planning hasn’t worked anywhere in the world. We all relate it back to the Iron Curtain countries, where central planners say: “We know what’s best. We’ll tell you what industries to build and what other ones you can’t build.”

We need to go back to the founders. We want peace. We want prosperity. We want pristine wilderness here. How do we do that? How do we create the wealth of our nation? Adam Smith wrote it right back in the 1700s. It’s by allowing those people to develop their resources, to use their intelligence, to have universities, to develop how they want to in a sovereign nation, develop and compete how they want to.

This government is squashing all of that. It's putting the fear factor over the entrepreneur through the individual who raises capital to have a new idea that might be something with new non-renewable energy, or it might be renewable energy. Can we do that? No. The government, again, with its new Premier's council on the future is saying: "We know best. We're going to tax a huge amount to go forward." This is all part of a package – Bill 19, Bill 36, Bill 50, Bill 10 now – of central planning at its absolute worst, which is not going to allow us to recover and to enjoy the peace, the prosperity, and the pristine wilderness that we have here. To step in and to write off a whole area might be the absolute best we have.

What are they going to do with shale gas? How are they going to implement this? There are so many areas, Mr. Speaker, we could and should be looking at, but it goes back to one important point, and that is the rule of law. Are we going to respect the rule of law? Are we going to have a constitutional democracy that protects the individual's life, their freedom, and their property, or are we going to have a government that says: "You know, it's in the best interests of the people that we're doing this, and it's okay to sacrifice a few"? This sounds like a war that's going on. A percentage of those first soldiers: we know we're going to have a loss. There's no reason to have an economic loss.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has a southern perspective. You farmed, I believe, in the Cardston area. What we have been proposing for a number of years in terms of land-use framework and sustainability is the idea of returning the land in the Castle-Crown, which is relatively close to where you were – it's kind of en route – to a provincial park, the Andy Russell I'tai Sah Kòp park, and the protection of areas, whether it be for parkland or environmental purposes; in other words, establishing a balance. I'm just wondering how you feel about some of the clear-cutting that's going on versus the preservation of parkland. Back in the 1930s this land was part of Waterton park, and I'm wondering how you feel about allowing one-third of it to be clear-cut and other questionable uses. As a landowner in that area how do you feel?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Yes? Oh, I thought that you were going to give me some counsel or something.

The Acting Speaker: I was hoping you could draw it into Bill 10.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I don't know how I can with that question. Perhaps you could give me some guidance.

Mr. Chase: Land use.

Mr. Hinman: He's saying land use, so I guess, Mr. Speaker, what he's bringing up and what I would point out in relevance to Bill 10 is that that is a watershed area. Again, you know, I think that the South Saskatchewan is going to be the next regional plan that's going to be coming forward.

The important part, I guess, looking at this and relating it back to Bill 10 and the problems that it causes, is that here we're having decisions made in Edmonton rather than by the local people. Those local people should have a far greater impact on deciding what is right and how they want to develop. Probably the most exciting part about having, you know, local regional areas decide those things is that they might want to try something different. Maybe there's an area further north that does want to clear-cut, and everyone else looks and watches and observes that and says: "Look at the problems that they're having. Let's not do that in our area. Let's have selective cutting. Let's have this boundary area."

8:40

Human nature is that we all want to progress and do better, and we love to live in wonderful, clean environments, but when you have a regional plan that's pushed down on you and they make those decisions, whether it's good or whether it's bad, there's nothing that we can do, and we don't get to try those things. I mean, many people have tried and failed, but others have looked at their failures and have been able to turn that into success. This is the problem with central planning. One area might come up with a new, innovative way or pass new laws or legislation saying: this is how you're going to care for the forest in this area. Then, we're all going to turn our eyes to that and say: wow, that's really innovative, and it really doesn't cost more. We can allow smaller lumber companies to come in and do selective cutting or to do those other areas.

The whole problem with this is the fact that what we're going to have is a central planner deciding everywhere, and what might work great in northern Alberta in a vast tract of 20 million acres for forestry to do some clear-cutting doesn't work down where you have major slopes, running water, fish habitat. Yet that person says, "Well, it worked here," and wants to impose that.

So what we need to do is to go back and respect property owners. We need to respect local people to actually make a decision: this is what we want. Whether they want more or fewer subdivisions, let them decide it, not have it imposed by some bureaucrat or higher government official saying: "Oh, why don't we step down and say that, you know, Calgary and Edmonton can no longer expropriate any land. You live within your borders. Done." That would change a lot on the development and the problems that we're facing if we were to do something like that. So it's just disappointing that we get to that point, that aristocracy where we know best, that we're entitled to make those decisions. That is so backwards. That is so wrong, in my opinion.

So many people have come and talked to me. They're so concerned about whether they're going to make this decision: oh, we need $16 billion worth of power lines. Why? Because the parameter that they've set up is zero congestion when they don't think we should be paying . . . [Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hinman: It's funny that the government member leaves when it's his opportunity to speak.

Mr. Anderson: Aw, who knows?

You know, I always find it really funny when we talk about this bill and the peanut gallery over there just gets so uptight and chaty. You know, if you have nothing to worry about, if you're not worried about losing your seats or anything like that, why babble? Why chat? Why chirp? Anyway, it's interesting. It's almost like they've got something to fear, and if they don't, they probably should.

There's a huge failure to listen on the part of this government, and a huge failure, in particular, by the rural MLAs to listen to their constituents. There's just a total, utter lack of respect for what their constituents have been telling them for the last months upon months and months and months and months. It's funny that the former Justice minister from Calgary-Elbow and the leadership candidate, an urban MLA, has actually listened and has actually done the right thing and decided: "You know what? We didn't look at this as closely as we needed to. We made some mistakes on this. We need to go back to the drawing board."

Mr. Hinman: She might actually want to be the Premier.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, she might actually want to be the Premier. Who knows?

It's just amazing to me that she would figure that out while the peanut gallery over there, the rural MLAs for the government, continue to be the biggest promoters of this act. It is absolutely ridiculous, in my view. We don't have any excuse anymore. From when this bill was introduced to passage, it was done quickly. It was done in just a couple of months. We barely had time to review it.

Mr. Hinman: It was a big, thick bill.

Mr. Anderson: It was a big, thick bill, et cetera, and it was passed.

You know, people can make mistakes. I certainly made a mistake because I sat in this House and supported it. I spoke to it and said that it would adequately protect land rights, as the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod still loves to point out. You know what? We all make mistakes, and I certainly did make a huge mistake there. I apologize to Albertans for supporting this bill. That was wrong to do, and I'm more than happy to be accountable for that moving forward.

But I'll tell you: I don't understand why after this year and a half that's gone by since then – I mean, it's almost been two years that have gone by – the rural government MLAs in particular still fail to get it. They're not listening to their constituents. The constituents have passed the verdict. They've gotten educated on it, and they've passed the verdict on the bill. They don't want it. It is too much of a central planning document.

That's what it is. It's a central planning document. Just because you go and talk to a regional RAC that you appoint does not make it a regional document. It's a central planning document, plain and simple. The minister doesn't have to listen to the RAC. There's nothing in the legislation that says that he does. As long as he feels that he has consulted properly, he can do whatever the heck he wants. That is not regional planning. That is central planning. And to say anything otherwise is just completely separated from reality.

I don't understand because I know that there are – you know, it isn't about the intentions. I know that the members over there, particularly the rural government MLAs, are not anti property rights, but they've gotten into this blinder thing where all they can hear is the drivel coming from their bureaucracy telling them that this is the right way to go and from this Premier telling them that this is the right way to go. [interjection] It's drivel, and you should know that, hon. member. You should know that.

I mean, how many times did we sit there and listen about the blue blobs? You remember those conversations we had with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and others about the blue blobs and how that would affect your constituency if they didn't have a veto over those things? You remember that? You were an advocate behind closed doors of that. So why not stand in this House right now and be an advocate for it? I don't understand.

I'll tell you: that's when I became absolutely aware that this was going down the wrong track fast, when we got into the nuts and bolts of actually how this was going to be implemented and who was going to be forced to join the Calgary regional plan, for example, the Calgary Regional Partnership, and we started talking about how that was going to be possibly imposed on our county, the one that the former agriculture minister represents, myself, as well as the members for Foothills-Rocky View and Strathmore-Brooks.

We started getting into that, and it became very clear very quickly that what was being talked about here was imposing a set of regional requirements, the density requirement that our communities would have to abide by and would have to build according to moving forward if they were forced into the regional plan, otherwise there would be no water for them, and that they were going to be forced to join this. Well, that scared the heck out of me because I knew that my constituents sure didn't want that, my rural constituents. So we talked as a group on that, and it became very clear that that is exactly where the government was headed.

Now, I don't know when they're going to force those counties to join the Calgary Regional Partnership or if they're going to do it before the next election. I don't know. But I'll tell you one thing. That's when I knew that this was a BS document. That's when I realized that this was nothing more than a central planning document that was going to enforce the will of cabinet and the will of the bureaucracy, frankly, on locally elected councils and locally elected officials. It's wrong. From that point on, you know, things started to go downhill. It certainly wasn't more than a couple of months after that that I crossed the floor.

There have been other things since then. In listening to the presentation from Keith Wilson, who I'd never even met till three months ago, when I went to Crossfield to listen to his presentation – I'd never met the guy. He's a lawyer. I went in to listen to him. He knew about property rights, and he's done these transmission bills before. He's been involved in those cases and those hearings before. I went and listened to him, and I'm telling you that is a convincing and compelling case. It is.

It's not just him talking about it. There's Richard Jones, who's going to be running against the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs in Calgary. Twenty years at the bar, a water rights expert, going to be running here for the Wildrose in the next election. Before he was running for us, he came to us and said, "Do they realize what they are doing here?" and went through the bill and tried to make people understand how this type of government centralized planning was going to affect those with water rights moving forward and the dangers that it presented.

These are not stupid people. These are people that are leaving huge amounts of money behind to run, to travel the province in Keith Wilson's case. As far as I know, he doesn't have any intention of running, but he's travelling the province on his own dime to get this message out. On his own dime, not paid as far as I know. He's not paid. [interjection] Not paid at all. Very sure.

On top of that, you have the member that is going to run there in Calgary-Acadia leaving a – who knows? – million-dollar-a-year job just basically on this issue because he's so ticked off at this PC government becoming a central planning machine. That's essentially what's happened here. That to me says all I need to know. That's commitment. That's not political. That's commitment. They really believe it, and they're case is compelling.

I know there are arguments on the other side. I understand that. Obviously, you know, not every lawyer and every expert is going to agree. There are arguments to be made on the other side. But just the fact that there's so much uncertainty – at a minimum the government could admit that there's a massive amount of uncertainty out there with regard to this legislation. Even that uncertainty shows that it is a poorly drafted bill, that it hasn't been thought through properly.

If you're going to draft a bill with such reaching implications as this one has, then it makes perfect sense to make absolutely certain that it's put through the proper committee and vetting process in our standing policy committee so that we can have the experts in, so we can make sure that we get it right. Because some of the things in that bill are okay. There are some transferable development credits and things like that. These are tools that we could give to municipalities and so forth to empower them, truly regional planning organizations, give them these things as tools so that they can use them to do their own regional planning. What's happened here is that we haven't given them these tools at all. We've taken over the entire planning process, so the province is going to be implementing these plans across the board. That's not the way we should be doing it. It's not right, and Albertans don't want it.

You know, aside from everything else, right or wrong – is my legal argument wrong; is the government's legal argument right, et cetera? Take all that aside. Albertans don't want it. Rural Albertans don't want it. And I'm telling you that if you don't think that this is going to be an election issue, you're smoking something really good. It is going to be a huge election issue. Huge. And there will be multiple MLAs on that side of the House that will lose their seats just based on this one bill. One bill, and Bill 50 as well.

Ms Notley: And 19.

Mr. Anderson: And 19. But Bill 36 is really the big one. Really the big one.

An Hon. Member: That's three times as many.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. It's three times as many. You know what? Maybe if it was just one, it would be only a few, but it's these multiple land-use bills.

You don't understand the effect that you've had. I'm just still waiting for people to stand up on that side of the House and show the courage to speak out against their own government. For those of you who think that this is something your constituents want, I don't know where you're getting your information. I mean, the best information we can have is talking to people. The best information we can have is obviously doing a lot of polling. I've done both, and I know what the people are saying out there. They're certainly not saying they want this legislation. They want it back to the drawing board. They want regional planning – no doubt about it – but they want us to go back to the drawing board and get it right. They do not want centralized planning.

People are going to lose seats. Good people in here are going to lose seats because of that huge mistake that they've made in that regard, misjudging the public's anger, particularly in rural Alberta where it will have the biggest effect.

Now, everyone in here, I think, agrees with the need for better regional planning. The question is not do we need better regional planning, but how do we accomplish better regional planning? The Wildrose, as I'm sure the other opposition parties have done, have put out some alternatives in that regard. How can we have better regional planning? Well, step one, you can immediately repeal the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and pass an Alberta property rights preservation act. When private property is used for a genuine public need, there absolutely must be full, fair, and timely compensation with recourse to the courts. There's step one. Let's get the legislation right. Let's go through the proper process and put landowners first.

Step two, honour existing deals. Grandfather existing leases and licences and establish conservation areas or no-go zones before issuing leases. Investor confidence in the Alberta economy depends on it. After you've issued a licence as a government, you cannot go and just take it away and then say: we're going to pay you back what you paid for it originally. That is banana republic stuff. It is absolutely not the way to do business, and on top of the old royalty framework debacle it's just another step that this government has undertaken to make our province less competitive and really hurt investor confidence when it comes to investing in Alberta.

Step three, use what we've got. Let Alberta Environment perform cumulative effects analysis on impacted areas. They've got the experience and expertise, so let's put them to work. That's what the Department of Environment is for, to oversee the provincial environmental regulations, et cetera. Why on earth can we not empower the Ministry of Environment to oversee cumulative effects management? We all agree it's needed. Why can't they do it? They should be able to do it.

Step four, let the Water Act work. The law has allowed for a stable water supply for those with water licences in Alberta for decades. We need to get it out from under ALSA and promote it. There are many tools within the Water Act – they're there – for the transfer of water licences and the use of water. They're there. But so many can't be approved right now because they're waiting on the land-use framework, particularly the South Saskatchewan regional plan. So they've got all these people that want to do transfers using these tools under the Water Act that can't right now. They're not allowed because they can't get approval from Alberta Environment because everything is being held up by this blinking central planning document, which is the whole problem with overregulation. This is not a Conservative thing we're doing here. We're slowing down commerce, agriculture, business, et cetera, residential, commercial development because we're just not using the tools that are in the Water Act. It's becoming burdensome and full of red tape.

That brings us to step five, cut red tape. Find the best models for a streamlined regulatory framework that is balanced by Alberta Environment's authority over the stewardship of air, land, and water. And I'm glad to see the government is looking into that with Bill 16. We've had some debates on that, and that's good. Very much too late in the game, but it's better late than never. You know, it's like this bill. You could repeal it tomorrow if you really wanted to – better late than never – but I don't think you will.

Step six, the last one, involve the community. Invite locally elected officials, landowners, industry stakeholders, and other regional and government representatives to work together to guide regional development in a sustainable way. Recognize that central planning does not work. This goes back to my first point. These RACs, these – what are they called? – regional advisory councils, are appointed by the government, by the minister, I believe. So, first of all, that's not democratic at all. Who knows what special interests and what favours are being paid back there, okay?

Mr. Hinman: Kind of like the Hunter report.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, that's right. Exactly. Kind of like the Hunter report with the royalties, very similar.

The point is that you have these people appointed by the government to give counsel on these regional plans, and even if it was a perfect mix . . . [Mr. Anderson's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. A couple of questions. You talked about the Calgary regional plan and the loss of local autonomy. You mentioned centralization quite a bit. Now, Okotoks, for example, wanted to set boundaries; they didn't want to expand. They saw the problems associated with gobbling up land. They also saw their water limitations and so on, and they were trying to restrict development. They've done some very smart things in terms of solar housing, very smart things with regard to 10 inches of topsoil because it holds the water. I'm just wondering how the Airdrie-Chestermere area is feeling about potentially being gobbled up by larger concerns as Calgary expands its 1.3 million. Is that a concern?

Also, because of your legal background, several government members seem to be very worried about courts being involved in the legislative process. So from your legal background, the relationship between courts and legislation: if legislation is done right, then courts shouldn't need to interfere and turn it over.

I'd be interested in your perception: regional planning, beating up on local areas, and legislation versus legal action.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you for that. I would say to the first part that, yeah, I am concerned about the loss of regional autonomy. It goes back to what we were talking about when that conversation was happening behind closed doors with regard to how we move forward to possibly force the counties of Rocky View, Wheatland, and Foothills into the Calgary Regional Partnership. Think about that for a second.

One of the reasons that the counties didn't want to get involved is because—for example, a place like Langdon in my constituency. There are about 4,000 people there. If they join the Calgary Regional Partnership, they would have to build to eight units per acre. In Langdon, okay? Now, if anybody knows about density requirements at all, that's insane. That means you'd have to have apartment buildings in Langdon, lots of them, in order to build towards eight units per acre. It's not reasonable, but that's what Rocky View county would have to sign on to if they are forced to join the Calgary Regional Partnership because that's what the CRP is saying: in order to get water out of the CRP, you need to build eight units per acre.

We all want better planning, and we at least want to limit urban sprawl. I don't think we all want to live in cookie-cutter houses that look the same. If I wanted that, I'd go live in Calgary. No offence to Calgary; Varsity is a very nice area and not really a cookie cutter. But if I wanted to live in Calgary, in a cookie-cutter house in suburban Calgary, I would. But that's not why people live in Airdrie, and it's not why people live in Langdon, and it's not why they live on acreages, and it's not why they live on farms. The point is that variety is good. We don't want complete urban sprawl. We want to protect the eastern slopes, for example. That's not a good place to have urban sprawl. I agree that we don't want to go any further west with urban sprawl.

Put protected areas in, do something, but why would you force communities to join this Calgary Regional Partnership, have the province force them to do so, and then have the province come forward and force those communities to build to a certain density and decide that this is what you will build to? How is that not central planning? How is it not? It is central planning in the worst possible sense.

Mr. Hinman: And how is it good?

Mr. Anderson: And how is that good? You know what? It's un-Albertan, frankly. That's what it is. It's got this Big Brother knows best, we're going to tell you how you can develop your land, we're not going to leave it to local people that, you know, have an actual stake democratically or with regard to property rights in the area—it's a top-down, centralized, quasi-socialist system, and it's wrong.

With regard to the legal question about letting courts decide land-use issues, I don't think anybody in here, as far as I know, is a legal expert on water rights or land use. That's why we need to bring people into these committees and actually listen to the experts. Imagine that. That's tough to understand, isn't it? That we're not experts on this. [interjection] I've never claimed to be an expert, hon. member. Never, ever. Quote me. [interjection] When did I? Exactly. Once again, you don't know what you're talking about. Revisionist history. That's clear. Anyway, it's just sad to see.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and add my comments to the debate on Bill 10 in third reading. This is an interesting piece of legislation because it's one that is intensely political and not one that comes from good policy planning or development. It's not a bill that comes forward in response to any sort of genuine outcry on the part of the public. It's not a forward-looking bill that represents sort of the best of good governance. It really is a slap-happy attempt to respond to a political crisis, some of which is quite legitimate and some of which is not entirely legitimate, in my point of view.

Nonetheless, it's an attempt to create an impression of responding to that political crisis, yet it doesn't respond to that political crisis, either the real one or the alleged one. It doesn't deal with the real issues that have been raised by a number of people around the concerns with respect to this government's approach to land development generally over the course of the next many years in Alberta.

I want to say that I approach this concern from the perspective of one of these, you know, scary socialists that's been referred to by colleagues in the opposition.

Mr. Anderson: I didn't call you a socialist.

Ms Notley: I think there's been reference to my being a socialist, but they've never actually called me scary, although I think it's implicit in some of the comments they make.

Nonetheless, what I think has happened with Bill 36, which Bill 10 is designed to amend, or with the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, and with Bill 50 and with Bill 19, because I see them all as being actually quite linked in certain ways, particularly as it relates to the politics, which I believe is the underlying rationale for this particular attempt at changing the Land Stewardship Amendment Act, is that this government has really given a bad name to thoughtful, consultative, responsive, community-based planning on behalf of the public interest as a whole.

Maybe that's wild socialist language that I'm talking about there, but that's what I believe in. I believe that when you're talking about land and economic development and environmental development and growing into the future, there's nothing wrong with actually planning. In fact, it's kind of a good thing in the long run. To do it thoughtfully in a well-informed way with reference to the environmental science and the demographic plans and the economic needs of the province is a wise thing. To do it in full, open, transparent settings in consultation with the people of Alberta where your primary mandate is one and one thing only, which is the overall public interest of the people of the province, is a good thing.

I think that some of the people that began to contribute, in particular, to the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act might have actually had those objectives in place as they worked on it, but the act itself did not meet those objectives. Certainly, the act in combination with Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, and Bill 50, the We're Going To Try and Make Sure Nobody Ever Has To Question Us on the Public Interest Around Building Transmission Lines Again Act – when you put them all together, what we've done is we've bastardized the goodwill that I think we were attempting to achieve, or some people in government might have been attempting to achieve, when we first approached the concepts inherent in Bill 36.

The Land Stewardship Amendment Act was designed to do some good things, but even when it came forward a couple of years ago, the NDP did vote against it. We voted against it for a number of reasons, probably the most important of which was that we were very concerned that the cabinet, as with all pieces of legislation that this government passes, was given an unprecedented amount of power under the act. It gave the cabinet complete control over the regional plans, and it did not provide for the type of accountability and transparency and sort of completion of the consultation or feedback loop with Albertans that was necessary in order for the kinds of decisions that were authorized under this act to be done truly in the best interests of Albertans after genuinely responding to their contribution to the discussion.

The act did not adequately, in short, reflect the land-use framework's commitment to public input and community involvement because, of course, the document, the land-use framework, preceded the land stewardship act. The land-use framework was quite genuine about public commitment. The piece of legislation that followed was a great deal more superficial in terms of the guarantees that were provided with respect to the public consultation that we were looking for. It allowed cabinet to create and amend regional plans without ever creating a regional advisory council, for example, the kind of thing that means that it was really mostly a lot of window dressing. Certainly, in what little we've seen happen under the authority of Bill 36 since then, we have seen that regional advisory councils are indeed hand-picked and that the reports are greatly massaged. Way too much happens behind closed doors, and it's way too vulnerable to behind-closed-doors lobbying to cabinet members that the public just doesn't see. The government is not held accountable for that kind of process.

Ultimately we didn't believe that Bill 36 actually provided adequate environmental protection in terms of what it required the government to do. It simply required a plan to describe a vision for planning and then to state one or more objectives for the planning region. It didn't actually identify the public interest, or it didn't identify preserving the environment. It didn't identify these things as mandatory components of regional plans.

9:10

At the time the NDP put forward a number of amendments to Bill 36 and focused particularly on efforts to honour the land rights of Albertans and also to improve the consultative processes that existed under the act. They were unfortunately rejected. So then what happened is that we had this sort of political firestorm that was developed through an analysis of Bill 36 and Bill 19 and Bill 50. The government decided to come up with Bill 10 and bring that forward and then say: "Look. We've addressed all of your issues." As I say, it's a highly superficial response, and most people who have evaluated Bill 10 and assessed whether in fact it deals with any of the issues that were originally raised around the concerns with Bill 36 have concluded that it doesn't really relate to almost any of them.

In terms of even dealing with the concerns that it did fundamentally impact property rights: really, truly, just superficial amendments there, so not addressing those issues. Then, of course, those people who particularly address property rights and who were concerned about property rights also always identified the combined authority that the government has given itself not only through Bill 36 but through bills 19 and 50.

You know, I mentioned Bill 19, or I sort of heckled Bill 19, and one of the members opposite suggested that that had nothing to do with this, but I think it really does. What I would have liked to have seen is the government come back and address some of those significant concerns because those are really the concerns that I think are probably the most substantive in many cases to the greatest number of property owners. In this case, I'm not thinking about potential industrialists. I'm thinking about Joe Average Albertan who currently owns property, maybe a bit of farmland, maybe an acreage, whatever. These are the folks that I'm thinking about.

When I think about Bill 19, you know, what did we have concerns about and what did many Albertans across the province – what were their concerns with Bill 19? Well, landowners whose land is part of a project area that can be identified through that bill don't get any compensation for the development restrictions that are placed on their land. Is that addressed through Bill 10? No. Could it be? Should it have been? Yes, because it's all part of the same discussion that generated this. [interjection] It doesn't matter. It's all part of the same political discussion.

My point is that Bill 10 is a superficial response to a political discussion. But the real substance in there as well included the concerns around bills 19 and 50. It also allowed the government to cancel project area orders at any time or without penalty. It allowed the government to choose the appeal body that a property owner might seek to have their rights assessed under. It allowed the government to impose an injunction where someone appeared to be about to commit an offence. It ultimately defined a public project without including the need for it to have any relation to the public good.

That's particularly interesting when you then combine it with Bill 50 and the fact that with Bill 50 – once again, part of this overarching theme of not consulting with Albertans, just as they don't with Bill 36 but also with Bill 10 – they've removed significant obligations on the part of the government to consult with Albertans. We've heard today about how power lines are going to be increasingly expensive. They are not in the public interest. Most Albertans would say that we don't want them, yet through Bill 50 the government has removed their obligation to consult with Albertans on it. They have given themselves more power to take it behind closed doors and have it addressed in cabinet.

This was probably the most significant complaint of Albertans. If this government thinks that this little Bill 10, this teeny-weeny little superficial bit of a bill that casually makes ever so minor amendments to Bill 36, is going to address the significant problems and concerns that have been raised by Albertans across the province with all three bills – with Bill 19, with Bill 50, and with Bill 36 – they are sorely mistaken.

They are going to, I think, suffer the consequences of that when it comes time for people to be campaigning about it in the next election. In every case they've taken the control away from the citizens of Alberta. They have given themselves the opportunity to make those decisions behind closed doors, and they will not give Albertans an opportunity to have public hearings about these very things which ought to be considered in their best interests, in the open, with them having every opportunity to insist upon accountability throughout the process. That's what we don't get from this bill.

So where are we left with Bill 36 and the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act? Well, I do want to put it on the record that the principle that is underlying that act is something that the Alberta NDP supports. The notion of understanding that there are competing interests, both collective and individual, around the future development of our land is a wise decision. But the question becomes: how do you address those competing interests, and how do you do it in a way that is most responsive to the best interests of the greatest number of Albertans? You don't do it by taking the whole thing behind closed doors. You absolutely do not. That's what still happens under Bill 36. That's what's happened with the two regional plans that we've seen so far. Most of the substantive discussions around what has happened with those plans have happened behind closed doors.

Then in the midst of that, we've got the situation where the Premier had his little panel come out and start talking about water markets and advocating water markets, when we still haven't managed to find a way to deal with the regional plans that are currently in stasis. You know, they're just basically on hold because the government doesn't give itself the resources to actually move forward with the regional plans, nor are they prepared to consult with Albertans adequately on these regional plans. So decisions around water are pending the land-use framework. Meanwhile, they're waxing poetic about the value of water markets, and it's just creating a ridiculous amount of confusion in a very important area, one of great importance to Albertans.

At the end of the day my concern is that the principles underlying the Alberta Land Stewardship Act have been abandoned for the most part by this government. They haven't been properly resourced. The staff resources necessary to do the work, to do the science, to do the consultation, to keep it out in the open, to provide adequate opportunities for Albertans to genuinely respond: none of that has been done. The secretariat for the land stewardship framework has been underfunded since day one. The Ministry of Environment: don't even start me on how completely underfunded and inadequate it is.

We haven't moved forward on this. We haven't moved forward on the good stuff, but at the same time the government has retained for itself a tremendous amount of power to do things behind closed doors. With that in mind, I can't support Bill 10.

I'd like to move the following amendment, and I'm wondering if I could just have a break in my time so that I could distribute this amendment to my colleagues in the Legislature.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. We'll pause for a moment.

Hon. member, please proceed. This is amendment A1.

Ms Notley: Yes. The amendment that I'm putting forward is that "Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

Do I have time to speak to it?

The Acting Speaker: No. I'm sorry.

The next speaker, please. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

9:20

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking in favour of the amendment, what it does is give the government a further six months to get it right. Bill 10 could not correct the wrongs of bills 19, 36, and 50. I agree very much with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, in terms of the balancing of divisive interests was very well intended. Unfortunately, we've had Bill 19 and Bill 50, which have torn apart the whole land-use framework process. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this government has no desire to see the land-use framework ever developed because then there would be an overriding principle that would govern all further land usages. We still have this piecemeal approach, where we're doing a variety of conflicting interests in various parts of the province.

Now, the main point of amendment A1 is that this bill not now be read a third time but be read a third time this day six months hence. As I say, I think it's a very good idea. It allows time for individuals to be consulted. It allows time for public forums to take place. While it does not potentially direct it towards a particular committee to call forward witnesses and experts, it does allow for the government to set up this type of consultative, collaborative circumstance, which currently is not the case.

A problem that I see, Mr. Speaker, is that this government has suggested that six months from now we're not going to be having a fall Legislature. That's what the government rumour mill has suggested, and the government has also suggested that we're likely not to have a legislative session next spring either. So, in fact, what this hoist bill would do is give the government a reason to actually have a session six months from now, to continue with the governance of the province instead of abdicating their role by shutting down the parliamentary system for the better part of a year. If only for that reason, six months hence would require the session to be on and the opportunity to discuss and debate, which is not likely to occur if we have no fall session or spring session.

My big concern and what A1 is suggesting is that we have to get the land-use framework right. We can't keep putting Band-Aids on bad pieces of legislation. What we need is not a Bill 10; we need a tourniquet. We need a land-use framework instead of the bits and pieces that go around the central issue, and that involves the land-use framework. So I'm extremely supportive of the call for sober second thought. I look forward to having further discussions with greater public input six months hence.

I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for taking the time out that is necessary as opposed to what we've seen. We're on day 32 of our spring session. That's hardly sufficient time to do justice to either the land-use framework or this attempted correction in the form of Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. It just falls short.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Anderson: I'd love to speak to this amendment on the bill, the amendment to hoist it. [interjections] Absolutely. Absolutely, hon. member. You know what, hon. member? You should really try to see this thing pass because this is going to help you in your re-election. It'll make a big difference.

Mr. Ouellette: I think that you should worry about you, and I'll worry about me.

Mr. Anderson: Are you sure we can't share those polling numbers?

Mr. Ouellette: You can show them all you want.

Mr. Anderson: The point of this, Mr. Speaker, is that we do need to show some sober second thought here. [interjections] I see that I've gotten into the head of the hon. minister. I'm sorry about that.

The Acting Speaker: Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor.

Mr. Anderson: It's all right. There's lots of time to campaign, hon. minister. The problem is that we do need that sober second thought.

One of the things that I remember after the 2008 election is hearing the Premier talk about these new standing policy committees and how these were just going to be great. You know, they would be part of his transparency agenda, which surely has not transpired. They did set up the committees. They do pay us a very large amount of money, and we have done very, very, very little in them. Certainly, I don't think the taxpayer has gotten their due out of it, has not gotten good value for money out of it because we don't do many substantial things in those committees.

There are a couple of little tweaks here and there on a couple of pieces of feel-good legislation or easy, agreeable legislation, but when it comes to real tough stuff like this or like Bill 50 or like Bill 19 or like what we were doing before we decided to centralize all the regional boards into the health superboard or before we passed, you know, Bill 24 to expropriate pore space from peoples' titles – before we did all that, it would have been nice to put those things into a committee because in committee it's a great opportunity for all the experts to come in.

You know, if you were to put Bill 10 or Bill 36, bring it up, and the bureaucracy and the minister do the best that they can, and you introduce the bill in the spring. Okay? Then at the end of second reading you pass it kind of in principle in the spring, and then you put it into the committee for the entire summer. Then let the MLAs earn their money and do their work with regard to legislation and go through it with a fine-tooth comb. Make sure experts are invited in, the whole bit. Talk to Albertans. Talk to your constituents. Get feedback from them, all that stuff over like a five-month period in the middle there. If we did that and then we came back and got real amendments together, and we polished up the bill or realized that the bill was just a bad idea and we're not going to go further with it, then you come back in the fall and either reject it or pass it with the appropriate amendments.

I think that if that was the process that this government actually used for their standing policy committees, we may actually have some very good legislation. I would also venture to guess that things like the royalty framework wouldn't have happened. Things like this Bill 36 wouldn't have happened. Or if they did, they would have been changed to essentially make them into actual regional planning documents instead of central planning documents. So many mistakes would have been avoided.

And I would venture to guess that the four MLAs sitting right here wouldn't be here right now because there wouldn't be a reason for us to be because you would pass good legislation that Albertans actually wanted. [interjections] Hon. minister, we will take advantage as much as we can. Absolutely. Through the chair.

The point of this is that if you want good legislation, you have to work for it, and this government doesn't work for it. They have the bureaucracy draft it. Then they get it, they run it through their little caucus procedures, which are a farce, and then they pass it in the House, a lot of times just cutting off debate on anything substantial. So what this would do, Mr. Speaker, is that it would allow us to put this legislation into a committee and actually really get down and try, if it is possible, to fix Bill 36. Or maybe we turn this into a repealing of Bill 36. Or maybe we change Bill 36 enough, using Bill 10, to turn Bill 36 into something that Albertans actually want.

Then the Minister of Transportation can keep his job at the next election. I want him in here because he's entertaining, Mr. Speaker. I want him in here. I want to hear him answer these questions.

But his constituents aren't going to re-elect him, partly because of this bill if we don't repeal it. I'm trying to help him because I like him so much. But, alas, I don't think that's going to happen.

9:30

I think that what we need to do is spend all the time and effort we can to get this legislation as right as we can, and we're not able to do that if we just ram through another piece of legislation like this. That's what we've done here again.

You know, I think of the process of how Bill 10 has come forward. I know the Premier named members and was sanctioned for doing so, people who weren't there for second reading of this bill when we were clearly told that we weren't going to have second reading of this bill. After his estimates they passed through four bills, including Bill 10, the most controversial piece of legislation during the session, when the opposition wasn't here. They used that politically to say: oh, look; the opposition wasn't here. How many times have we ever seen him for any votes? So we basically didn't have any debate at second reading, basically none. No debate at second reading.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, that's because you left.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. You're absolutely right. We did. [interjection] Because you're so ethical, very ethical, very democratic, incredibly democratic.

Anyway, the point is that we didn't have any debate in second reading, Mr. Speaker. [interjection] I'm really in the Transportation minister's head. I apologize. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members . . . [interjections] Hon. members, are you done? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has the floor. He's directing his comments through me. If you have any comments, any other members, direct them through me as well.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Maybe we could release the Transportation minister to go door-knocking. He'll feel better if he gets out there defending this bill. [interjection] Oh. He doesn't need to door-knock? Interesting.

What we need to be doing going forward is making sure that we get this legislation right. It's not right. We don't have it right. Albertans know that it's not right. I just cannot understand why, when the people overwhelmingly don't support something – I'll tell you what Premier Klein would have done. He would have stepped off this snake so fast. It wouldn't even have been two seconds. He would have left. He would have gotten off it because he listened to the people. You may not agree with everything he did, but the man listened to the people when they spoke out. That has not been the case here.

We had no debate in second reading – no debate – not even from the government members. "Oh, if you cared, you would have been here." It's not like any of the members here debated it in second reading either. Then it went to Committee of the Whole, and before we had even debated – we hadn't even begun Committee of the Whole – the government brought in closure, five hours of debate for closure. They spoke for half of it. Then they said: "Well, it's democratic. We've got to have our turn." Well, then why bring closure? Why not let every member over here speak to the bill? Why not let every member in the House speak to the bill – that would be fair – at least once? Maybe they could have brought closure in that way. That way we could have had at least had a good, thorough debate in that regard. But, no. They just pressed on forward, blasted it through.

Now we're in third reading, and we're going to actually get full time in third reading to debate it. But we can't go to the clauses. We don't have time. We introduced two amendments as the Wildrose. I know the Alberta Party introduced two amendments. Did the New Democrats introduce any? I don't know. Anyway, there were amendments introduced. I don't think you would have had time, frankly. There was no time to do amendments. It's such a slap in the face to the democratic process the way this is run.

One of the things that I know the Wildrose will be doing if we are lucky enough by the grace of the people of Alberta to be government after the next election is that we will absolutely change the way that we pass legislation. We will introduce it in the spring, go into committee in the summer, come back and pass it or reject it officially in the fall, making sure that all legislation is properly vetted throughout the process, that the opposition parties have full input into the discussion, that we hear the stakeholders out, slow it down, especially on major pieces of legislation like this, making sure that we do a thorough and good job, openly and transparently. And you know what? That's only going to benefit the government of the day. It's only going to benefit them and the people of Alberta because when government passes good legislation, the people of Alberta are happy, and when the people of Alberta are happy, they support the government. That's why I don't understand the self-defeating things that this government does.

Why not take the time to pass the right piece of legislation, and then you're not up you-know-what creek without a paddle. This wouldn't happen to them. The Wildrose Alliance wouldn't even exist if they did it that way – imagine that – instead of being neck and neck with the government in the polls. [interjection] That's right. Fine. Neck and neck: that's all I'll say. [interjection] Oh, hon. member, I will miss you.

Anyway, that is really an issue that we need to get through our heads, that as a government our job, our role is to pass legislation that is good for the people of Alberta. That's what we need to do, and we haven't done our due diligence. And you know what? I don't even blame the members for getting it wrong the first time. How can I? I got it wrong the first time. I don't blame them for that on any bill. If you're going to pass a bill and you get two weeks to look it and you've had no time to go to your constituents or ask any experts about it, you're going to make mistakes. Absolutely.

If you're going to make mistakes, it's fine to make mistakes on the first draft. That's why we have drafts. But then we go to committee. We have the experts in, and we listen to those experts. We make sure that the legislation rolls out the way that it was intended to, that it has the effect that was intended and so forth. But we haven't done that in this Leg., and because of that, mistakes were made. Instead of correcting them, we have gone forward with it, and now we have a government in its death throes. I love using that language, death throes. It's a good word.

It's a problem, and there's no reason for it. I think it's too late now, unfortunately, for this process to be reversed because I don't think there's a will. I hope I do see some indication. You know, there are at least some mumblings from the next leader, but of course the next leader always starts that way. That's the way the Premier started. [interjection] Yeah, one candidate.

The point is that I hope that whoever the next leader is, for the good of the province, will use this amending formula, these committees to make sure that we get the right legislation passed for Albertans, that we're not concerned with speed and getting it done right away and just making it happen, that we're more concerned about getting it right. Get it right: somebody should use that as a slogan. Get it right. If not the first time, get it right the second or the third time, and you can do that if you have a proper legislative drafting process.

But this government has gotten lazy. They've gotten too used to doing things the way they've always done things, which is ready, shoot, aim.

Mr. Hinman: No, it's fire.

Mr. Anderson: Ready, fire, shoot? I said "shoot" instead of "fire." [interjection] Come on, man; be supportive.

Mr. Chase: Cut twice; shoot once.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. Cut twice; shoot once.

Anyway, if we're very careful, if before we cut, we make sure we measure twice – there you go; I think I got that one right – then we would make far fewer mistakes in this House.

Again, I will say that this bill is a mistake. The people of Alberta don't want it. Every poll I've seen on this particular question is clear. I mean, it's like three-quarters of Albertans don't want this piece of legislation, meaning Bill 36. It's bad, and in rural areas it's worse. You're not winning here, government, so fix it by repealing this, by repealing Bill 36, and starting over at the drawing board, putting those great minds of yours together with the opposition minds in the committee. Get those stakeholders in. Let's not have the bureaucracy run our province completely. Let's at least try to have a little political check on the situation.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

Mr. Hinman: Well, this truly is an A1 amendment. I thank the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for bringing this forward. Once more, being a friend of the government, I say: look; here's the problem, and here's the solution. What's the solution here with this A1 amendment? To bring it back six months hence. We have the mechanism in place, Mr. Speaker, to do something with this.

The rumblings out there are incredible. Why do we have to wait for a tsunami? Why do we have to wait for an earthquake? Man, where are your political antennas to listen? It is our job as elected representatives to listen and say: "You know what? We really shouldn't push this through."

It's funny. I've been a long-time advocate of recall, accountability 24/7, and this is exactly the type of bill where people say: "Oh, we can't have recall because we couldn't push through bills like this. People would then have the power to do something to stop us. But if we can do this and push this through, in six months or in four years, if we do it early, they won't remember then, and we'll have other things." This is about accountability. It's been brought up.

The policy field committees: it's a solution for something like this. Why do you want to have the destructive fighting within that's going to go on during the leadership campaign? Should we toss it? Shouldn't we? This will really actually be quite an interesting phenomenon for me to watch, to see the leadership campaigns become divisive.

Mr. Anderson: Gary Mar spoke out against it.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah, I know Gary Mar spoke out against it. I know Alison Redford has. [interjection] Oh, I can't believe it. I got conned into that. The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow has spoken out against this and realized: let's go back and listen to the people. It's always the best thing to do when we're trying to pass divisive legislation, to take the time, and 32 days isn't time. Five hours of debate isn't time.

Like I say, it's just embarrassing to realize that here we are in third reading, and everybody can only get up and speak once, yet the government is not compelled to do so. When they had closure in five hours, they limited the opposition. Not even all the opposition members were allowed to speak during that opportunity, let alone bring forth our amendments. I was one of them because one of my colleagues really wanted to speak badly to it, so we almost had to draw straws on who gets to. Why? The government in all of its wisdom says: oh, we're going to limit debate on this because we can. They didn't speak during second reading. They didn't speak in Committee of the Whole until closure came in, which was the first thing they brought in, and then for some reason they were so compelled to speak, and we couldn't.

You know, perhaps the most important thing that can be allowed is to let the opposition speak if that's what they feel compelled to do. If they think that it's so bad, let us open our mouths and remove all doubt by speaking foolishness.

Mr. Lindsay: You're doing that now.

Mr. Hinman: Instead, what do they do? "No. It's closure. Let's not allow them to speak. Better yet, we'll all get up." They'll open their mouths and remove all doubt. The hon. Member for Stony Plain seems to think that that's what I'm doing, so I'd encourage the Member for Stony Plain to get up and open his mouth. When was the last time, since you got shoved to the backbench, that you've done anything to help the people of Alberta? It's very disappointing, Mr. Speaker, extremely disappointing, yet he'll yap now and say: that's what you're doing. Get up and do something. Speak about Bill 10. Tell us how wonderful it is for your riding and all the industrial use that wants to go on there. It's pathetic, truly pathetic.

Why no speakers tonight? They don't care anymore. They brought in closure. That was all they wanted to do. They didn't want any amendments coming forward. They didn't want any debate coming forward.

Here it is: policy field committees. It was the right thing to do when Premier Stelmach came in, but has he done the right thing with it? Oh, twice. I apologize: the hon. Premier. I apologize, Mr. Speaker. We get a little bit passionate here, and sometimes we forget that we have multiple names when we're in the House and when we get into the committee and things.

The problem is that this bill is upsetting to Albertans, and on that alone it should be going to the policy field committee. We should be going through this. If they're so convinced that it's so great, why did we have Bill 10, which is nothing more than an amendment to Bill 36, when they said: it's perfect; no amendments necessary? Yet here it is, again under a very quick time frame, pushing this through so that their regional plans can be implemented and not challenged. That's what this is about. It's about eliminating the challenge of industry, of landowners who say: "This is wrong. This isn't in my best interests." It's about the challenge of saying: "You know what? The parameters that you are setting up and are therefore making the decision that we need billions of dollars of power lines needs to be protected here." That's what Bill 10 does. It allows Bill 50 to go forward. There isn't the challenge there. It's just wrong.

Like I say, this is an ideal opportunity, but I don't think there are enough people listening or thinking here, as was mentioned earlier. If everybody is thinking the same, then it's highly likely that there is nobody on that side that's even thinking because they don't have any divergence of thought. It's just all the same: "That's what we're going to do."

We need to put the brakes on this. It's not a good bill. We already see with LARP the problem that it is. I've asked four times of the government: just tell us what the mineral leases have brought to the government's coffers. They talk about the $2.6 billion in land sales. Tell us what it was, the land sales that are being rescinded by LARP. They won't do it. It's very disappointing. Obviously, they have the numbers. Or worse, they don't even have the numbers, and they don't want to look at it.

I had an individual today with $675 in permits, $30,000 in investments, and he's basically been told by the department: "You know what? We're not going to recognize that, but go ahead and bring forth your best case." And why not? The minister gets to decide. It's faulty. It's wrong. It's unacceptable. It's un-Albertan. Why are we pushing this through? Vote for this amendment. It's an A1 amendment. That means top notch, A1. It's great. Let's do it. This is our opportunity to say: let's have that second thought; let's open it up."

One of the real problems is that this government – and I'll go back to the Hunter report. I mean, it was selected by government ministers. These are the people to do it. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood took my other pamphlet today – and he hasn't brought it back – on the Premier's council. What's that new one called? [interjection] Everything's been taken from me. I'm in shambles. He took it tonight, and he didn't bring it back.

The Premier's Council for Economic Strategy. The problem is that they pick these people, but they don't do what we do in a policy field committee, where we allow people to come in and present both sides. Yes, they've heard some presentations and this and that, but it's inside, where we don't get to make the full presentation, to have the debate.

This bill needs to be hoisted for six months. This is an A1 amendment. Let's grab it, and let's run with it. We're just being bamboozled here. I'm not sure by whom. Is it by bureaucrats? Is it by a Premier who says, "This is going to be a wonderful legacy that I've set up"? I don't know what Kool-Aid they're drinking, or maybe it's vodka in their Kool-Aid that they're drinking, and therefore they're not able to think clearly. [interjection] This isn't Jonestown. The lemmings are all just going to run off the edge because that's where their leader leads them and says that this is the way to go.

This is a very sad day for Alberta that we're going to pass this again. We brought forward Bill 10 to try and correct Bill 36. We're not doing it. They don't bring in both sides to listen. As the Leader of the Official Opposition says, they deny; they dodge. But what they actually do is duck and deny and deny and deny. It's 3-D dimensional. [interjection] There we go: 3-D demented.

This is an opportunity to say no to this bill and to come back six months hence, to say: let's have that sober second thought; let's actually listen. Why are we so uninterested in listening to the experts out there, in pointing out and saying why we don't need to pass this bill, this central planning bill, this empowerment of one individual to say, "This is my dream, my vision of Alberta" and squash one area or do something foolish in another area. We're not going to have our best potential here when you have central planning.

As I said earlier, you know, you need that entrepreneurial spirit. You need those different regions that are unique to say: yes, maybe that works up in northern Alberta, but it doesn't in southern Alberta. Even with the water: very different aspects of how much water we have in northern Alberta yet how little we have in southern Alberta. What we do with that resource is absolutely phenomenal. Allow the different development in those areas in how we're going to utilize our resources in our different regions, whether it's wood, water, crops, minerals.

What are we going to do? This is not going to solve what we're going to do. This is going to compound the problem of how we're going to be innovative, how we're going to reach out and do that next step. Again, just thinking of renewable energy, when you think of windmills, solar panels, all of those, the number one element that we need are rare-earth elements, yet this province is so against mining. It's so difficult to raise it. You know what? If we're going to drill and actually mine the ground for oil and gas, why would we not allow it for the rare-earth elements, that we've found are so wonderful in electronics and what we can do with them? This government doesn't have the vision to say: "Well, let's explore. Let's find. Let's raise the capital. Let's have those flow-through shares go as we're trying to develop our mining industry in the province." We could do it, yet with LARP we're reaching and grabbing out of an area saying: oh, no; we're going to protect this area. For what? What's the purpose?

The area that they've reached in and grabbed wasn't even supposed to be part of LARP, but because they caught the vision of possibly having a large hydro facility, "Oh, well, we'll grab the next section over there and just lump it in here," without doing their homework. That's what is wrong and why we need to hoist this bill for six months, come back with a lot more information, and do a better job.

This is going to hurt the Alberta advantage. It's going to hurt our future. It's going to hurt development. It's not going to allow that entrepreneurial spirit to reach out and to come up with a new idea. A regional plan could be such that they're going to say: "You know what? We don't want any more windmills." Yet some area in central Alberta says: "You know what? We've got a great opportunity. We're going to grow the biggest windmill farm anywhere." But the regional government could say that it's only going to happen in southern Alberta and put a block on it. What can they do? The problem with central planning is that it's flawed. It doesn't allow progress to go forward except in the vision of one or a few powerful individuals who had that responsibility land on their shoulders and their decision-making.

I will plead with the government to do the right thing, be all individuals and stand up and vote for the hoist of this bill to bring it back in six months. Let's send it to the policy field committee, where we can hear all the pros, all the cons, and know that at least we're going to be informed when we make this decision and not just take that attitude of: "Oh, I don't want to hear it. Oh, I don't want to see it. I don't want to speak it." Hear no evil; see no evil; speak no evil: that's just what this bill is all about, it seems like. We can't have that open discussion. We can't bring in the experts. We won't listen to them. We're just going to rush this through, be done with it, and we'll let it come back here, whether it's in eight months, 12 months, two years, and deal with this after we've done a lot of damage, after we've hurt our industry again.

Just like the new royalty framework. Two years of chaos, of inconsistency, wondering: what's the government going to do? Then we had to put everything on a fire sale and actually lose more. Had we just left it at a sustainable level, a good level, we would have been far better off. But we had to put in extra incentives to bring the industry back, and that's what we're going to have to do again here. We've slammed the door shut: "Out of business. Don't come here. Don't raise capital. We're not interested in your money. We know what's best. Don't try and do it."

Once again, I plead with the government members to open their eyes, put on their political antennas. I realize that you've got a leadership campaign on. Let's deal with it later, not rush it through now as supposedly some sort of fancy legacy, you know: "Look at the socialism that we've brought in here. Look at our wonderful Premier's Council for Economic Strategy. We'll force this down. We'll tax the people and put these resource revenues into a political slush fund. We'll shove this other stuff out here and tell you what industries to invest in. Whether it's windmills, solar panels, nanotechnology, I'm just really encouraged that government's going to know what to do best."

The Acting Speaker: Any other member wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: To the amendment, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just raise the question: what does the opposition think Bill 10 is intended to do? It's intended to clarify some issues that they raised over Bill 36. It enhances property rights. It strengthens property rights, the very thing they've been crying about for the last number of months. I could also ask: what is this amendment going to do? If this amendment is passed, Bill 10 dies. Then we revert to Bill 36, which they thought was flawed. Is that what they want? I would suggest that their intentions are flawed in this. It would probably be great if we went back to Bill 36, and then they would have what they didn't want in the first place.

That's all I have to say, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on the amendment.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the amendment, in response to the Member for St. Albert, I think if the member had been listening to what every member of the opposition, the combined forces of the opposition – well, should I use the term "coalition of the strange"? No, I won't. We joke sometimes among ourselves that we are the coalition of the strange. Here you have one caucus representing a party that represents the right of the political spectrum, another caucus that represents a party that represents the left of the political spectrum, another caucus, a caucus of one, that's steadfastly committed to the centre, and another caucus that's still trying to find its way – I'm not naming names – yet we are all speaking with one voice on this, not necessarily because we all agree that the problems that we see in Bill 36 and in Bill 10 are the same but because we do see problems. Paramount is that the problem we see with Bill 10 is that it does not do enough to clarify. I think we've been pretty consistent on that throughout the limited time that we have had to debate Bill 10, and it has been limited. There was virtually no debate at second reading. There was time allocation put on, only five hours of debate at committee.

An Hon. Member: They took half.

Mr. Taylor: The government members took half or thereabouts. I wasn't running an actual timer on it, but they took a substantial portion of it.

Now here we are at third reading, where there is no opportunity to fix this bill, this flawed legislation on the floor of the House, so now we're dealing with a hoist amendment, an amendment that says that Bill 10 be not read a third time now but be read a third time this day six months hence. You know, that doesn't necessarily have to kill the bill. Yes, usually a hoist amendment is designed to kill a bill. If this amendment passes, there is the opportunity for the Premier or the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to do the right thing. I'd like to see the Premier do it because everything that I'm hearing is that the Premier is the one who wants this bill passed before we adjourn this session because he wants it as part of the legacy.

Now, I'll concede what the Member for St. Albert has said. Bill 10 certainly addresses some of the major flaws in Bill 36. I suppose if Bill 10 were to die, we'd be left with a worse piece of legislation on the books than if Bill 10 were to pass and amend Bill 36. But it's degrees. It's degrees of badness. It's degrees of toxicity. It's degrees of failure and flaw. Bill 10 doesn't go far enough. That's the point that we have been trying to make in the opposition with those amendments that we were actually able to put on the floor in the time allowed. We had more amendments, but there was no time.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the opposition has done its job to the extent that we've been allowed to do our job. We've done our job, our collective job, on this bill in that we have attempted to make it better than it was when it hit the floor of this House. We've attempted. We've failed. We failed to engage the government members in debating our amendments. We failed to engage most of the government members in Bill 10 debate tonight because they just want this thing passed.

10:00

I mean, it's been a beautiful day, Mr. Speaker. I think it got up to 22 degrees today. It's forecast to go to 23 degrees tomorrow. I think Edmonton is the hot spot in the country right now. Everybody wants to get out and golf or just get out of here. It's like the last days of school, you know? You know you're a couple of days away from the last day, and you spend your entire day gazing out the window. Whoever designed this particular classroom we're in made sure that we didn't have access to windows to gaze out of, and it's probably a good thing because attention, I think, has been waning anyway. But that's kind of the way it feels. Everybody just wants to go home, just wants to get on about their leadership campaigns or get on about their golf game or get on about their travel plans or get on about fundraising for the next election because Lord knows, it's going to be a bigger fight than it was the last time around for a lot of you folks in here.

That's where we're kind of at right now, but it hasn't been for lack of trying on our side. We've tried to engage the government in a full and fair and reasoned and spirited debate about the merits and the drawbacks of Bill 10, which is designed, after all, to turn Bill 36 from a sow's ear into a silk purse, or maybe the best we can hope for, given what we have to work with is – I don't know – a polyester purse, something like that. We have tried, and we have failed. This is our last attempt to try and make this a better bill than what exists right now, make it a better bill than what we're about to vote on.

This is an attempt to not read Bill 10 a third time now, and this gives an opportunity to the Premier, to the government to do the right thing and refer this legislation to the Standing Policy Committee on Resources and the Environment and let them do what these policy field committees were designed to do: to solicit submissions from interested parties, to hold public hearings, to get input from everyone, from the experts to the man on the street, the woman on the street, and let the people of Alberta be heard. Then craft the kind of land-use and regional planning legislation that we need. The kind of land-use and regional planning legislation that we need, Mr. Speaker, clearly puts limits on what can be done on this piece of land versus that piece of land. That's what land-use policy is all about.

We have the land-use framework. We went after developing a land-use framework in this province because during the boom every square inch of land in this province and every square inch of water surface was subject to competing uses from competing interests, and you just can't go on that way. You need to bring some order to chaos.

Now, my hon. colleagues in the Wildrose Alliance like to raise the spectre of central planning, and I understand why they're doing it in this case. Because the application of a land-use framework in the legislation that we have dealt with so far and, quite frankly, the application of a lot of principles in a lot of legislation that we've been dealing with in this House over the last – what's it been now? – almost three years has had a whiff of central planning to it. But land use, land-use policy, and regional planning does not need to be central planning. In fact, if it's done right, it should be done as close to the local people as possible. [A timer sounded] We need to pass this amendment.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: I'm sorry. Your time wasn't up, hon. member. That bell was incorrect.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. I thought that seemed like an awfully short period of time.

The Acting Speaker: Six minutes left.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, sir. I will pick up where I left off, which is saying that we need to pass this amendment. We do need to pass this amendment because we need to go back and get this right. The concept, the principles behind land-use policy and regional planning, is of fundamental importance to the province and people of Alberta going forward. If we don't get this right, we're in a lot of trouble, but we need to do it in a way that gets it right. I'm not sure that I want to go so far as to argue that we're better off without any land-use framework and any regional planning than we are with Bill 36. I think if I felt that way, my participation in this debate around Bill 10 would have taken a very different tone, and I would have said: "You know, what are we wasting our time with this for? Why don't we just rescind Bill 36?"

Certainly, there have been some people, including at least one and I think more PC leadership candidates, who have suggested that we do need to go back to the drawing board. We need to kill Bill 36 and start again. Maybe they're right. We certainly need a bill that expresses land-use policy and creates a good regional planning process because if we don't have that, it's back to the gold rush days, the gold rush environment, the gold rush atmosphere that we had going on here during the last boom and that we have with every boom: you know, everybody grab just as much of the resource as you can in as short a time as you can, and sell it for as much money as you can because we all know this gravy train ain't gonna last because the price of oil always goes down and booms are short lived. In booms it can get real ugly because everybody is grabbing for their piece of the pie, and people and environments get hurt that way. So we need land-use policy. We need regional planning. We just don't need it the way it's being done.

We have an opportunity here to put Bill 10 on hold and over the summertime and perhaps into the fall let the policy field committee do its work, fine-tune this bill, come up with recommendations to make it better and bring it back to the floor of the House this fall. Presuming – and I'm going to presume because I'm going to assume for a moment that the government actually wants to do the right thing here rather than the politically expedient thing. I'm going to assume there actually is a fall sitting of the Legislature because it would be the right thing to do. Passing amendment A1 gives us, in fact, the opportunity to do that. It doesn't give us the opportunity to do that on the opposition benches; it gives the Premier, the government, the cabinet the opportunity to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment and let that committee do its work, which is to seek public input, to seek expert input, and to get this bill right.

This bill right now, Mr. Speaker, is not right; it is wrong. It is perhaps less wrong than the bill it seeks to amend, but it doesn't fix the problem. It doesn't fix the massive credibility gap that exists between this government and its people. It doesn't restore the trust that's absolutely fundamental to making land-use policy and regional planning work. It doesn't restore the trust that the people need to have in their government, that their government is actually out to operate in the public interest and, in fact, is not out just to get them. It's designed to make it look as though it does that, but when you drill down into it, it doesn't do that at all. That's why we need to pass amendment A1, and that's why I'll be voting in favour of it.

Having gotten that on the record, Mr. Speaker, I'll sit down and make room for anybody else who cares to join the debate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

10:10

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that there certainly has been a great deal of discussion prior to this, and I will not try to repeat many of the arguments. However, I would like a few comments on the record. From my personal experience – and certainly I have been hearing from people: letters, phone calls, e-mails, and by just attending different events. These people are ticked off. They are ticked off with Bills 19, 36, 50, and now Bill 10, and they are ticked off partly because they really do not trust this government. But interestingly, they're not sure that they trust the other side either, because they really don't understand it. They feel that even with the government road shows that go to these different large events where, in fact, the government gets booed and heckled in a public place, which isn't always probably the best thing for the government, these people are really, really unhappy. They just don't trust, and when the people don't trust the people who are governing them, we're in trouble. We're in big, big trouble.

I think the reason that this should be put off for six months is to give a chance for this conversation to calm down, to try to eliminate some of the rhetoric, to allow people to listen, and to allow people to perhaps understand. But the government would have to listen. Not just listen, they have to really hear what people are saying.

One of the last comments that I would like to make is that I believe that passing this amendment will be the smartest political move that this government could possibly do.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief, too, with my comments on amendment A1. I urge the members to pass the amendment. I think Bill 10 is trying to fix the flaws of bills 19, 24, and 50. I believe that to quell all the fears on property rights, we should approve this amendment and send the bill back to Albertans because Albertans are not on board with the government or with what the government has been trying to do. Let's have open houses. Let's have gatherings like at Eckville, and let's put those fears away for good so that Albertans have a say. Albertans know what is happening with their property rights, and Albertans know what the government is trying to do here. The fear that the government is coming through the back door: that fear will be taken away.

For those reasons, I think it wouldn't hurt, like, if we wait for another six months to pass this bill. Let's do it right. Let's not have another bill trying to fix Bill 10 in the fall session, if we're going to have a fall session. Let's send the bill to a policy field committee. Let's do a proper hearing, and do it right so we don't have to come back and say: oh, this bill is coming to haunt us, and let's bring another amendment bill to fix Bill 10 now. It will be a good idea to send the bill back to the policy field committee, take it to Albertans, and get it right.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting this amendment. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 11, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of students from Provost public school in the town of Provost in the constituency of Battle River-Wainwright. They are accompanied today by Mrs. Michelle Munro, their teacher, and by parent helpers Mrs. Karen Paulgaard, Mrs. Corinne Bachmann, Mrs. Diana Kroetsch, and Mr. Martin Biro. We had a great discussion, and they asked me exceptional questions when we were down getting our pictures. They are seated today in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have a second introduction if I may. I am very honoured today to have three constituents here in the gallery. They are Myron and Brenda Badry, and they were brought here today by their daughter Nicole. They have been exceptional agri-entrepreneurs in the constituency and a model for what the future of agriculture can be. They're fantastic community builders, who have done more for their community than a lot of people do. They have been close friends and helped me with my first nomination, and they were exceptional in helping to do that. I'd ask them, please, today to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure also to introduce three grade 6 classes from Timberlea school in Fort McMurray, who travelled the bumpy highway 63 to get here safely, and in doing so, I'd like to introduce them today. The teachers are Andrea Organ, Linda Nguyen, and Amanda Murray, and joining them today are teacher helpers Theresa Wells, Sheri Reid, Celina Whiteknife, Glen Noseworthy, Tammy Murphy-Becker, Sue Allen Dupreez, and Shauna Kendall. I'd like to ask the students and parents and teachers to rise in the members' gallery and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you several terrific Albertans who are here today visiting from the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Alberta. Of course, MS affects 11,000 Albertans, including my own aunt, Mora Louise Hauk, who died last year. I would also like to thank them for providing a red carnation to raise awareness of MS in this Assembly. I'd like to introduce Judy Gordon, the former MLA for Lacombe-Stettler; James Orr; Neil Pierce; Julie Kelndorfer; Garry Wheeler; and Darrel Gregory.

They are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you my executive assistant, Honor Humphreys, and our new summer student, Miss Courtney Edwards. Honor is a graduate of Haskayne School of Business and came to us from the fund development branch of the Calgary philharmonic and sat as a member of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts board. Our summer student, Courtney, is a fourth-year student at the University of Alberta working toward her BA in psychology. She is an Edmontonian born and raised and is such a loyal Oilers fan. In her spare time she likes to do yoga, run, read, and tweet. I'd like to ask Honor and Courtney to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests who have joined us this afternoon from Medicine Hat representing the Medicine Hat chamber of commerce. I understand they're attending meetings in St. Albert today and have come down to observe us this afternoon. I don't see them yet in the members' gallery. They may still be on their way in, but I'll introduce them anyway: the chairman, Milvia Bauman; the executive director, Lisa Kowalchuk; and Deanna Haysom, who is a director with the Medicine Hat chamber of commerce. If they are here, I ask them to rise and for all members to give them the usual warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure and an honour to introduce to you and through you the University of Alberta's clinical islet transplant program team. As the director of the clinical eyelet transplant program since 1998, Dr. James Shapiro, together with a dedicated team of internationally attracted clinical and laboratory staff, developed and tested a new protocol that dramatically increased insulin independence results in diabetics. This leading-edge research became known as the Edmonton protocol. The team has performed over 300 islet transplants in Edmonton, and 74 per cent of posttransplant patients are now insulin free after five years.

Mr. Speaker, with us today in the gallery are the members of Dr. Shapiro's team: Dr. Shapiro, accompanied by his wife, Dr. Vanessa Davis, and their two-month old son, Noah; Dr. Sonal Asthana, here from Delhi, India, now an Edmontonian; Dr. Boris Luis Gala-Lopez, here from Havana, now an Edmontonian; Dr. Toshiyasu Kawahara from Tokyo, Japan, accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Tomomi Kawahara, now Edmontonians; Dr. Samy Kashoush from Egypt, accompanied by his wife, Carmen Eissa, also Edmontonians; Dr. Alexandre Sarubbi Raposo do Amaral from Brazil, accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Isabella Elias Broggiato Raposo do Amaral; and their secret weapon, Cherry Robinson, who was my executive assistant for a number of years and now is Dr. Shapiro's executive assistant. I would ask them to rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure and an honour for me to introduce to you and through you today to the members of this Assembly four individuals who last Friday were among the recipients of our annual crime prevention awards. Each year these awards launch Crime Prevention Week and give us the opportunity to celebrate the achievements of people and organizations in communities across our province who have gone the extra mile to help fight crime. I would ask each of the recipients to stand as I call their name and remain standing. First, we have Constable Todd DePagie of Rocky Mountain House, who was honoured for his work creating the cadet corps in the Sunchild-O'Chiese First Nation, which gives youth there constructive options for their lives. We have Wendy Huggans and Kathleen Rousselle from Driftpile First Nation, who were honoured for their work with the Driftpile choices youth program, which helps youth in grades 3 to 8 with life choices and decision-making skills. We have Constable Tara St. Denis from Peace River, who was honoured for her work with the Woodland Cree First Nation and the RCMP on such programs as the Woodland Cree youth group.

There were six other award recipients who couldn't be with us today: Trevor Tychkowsky of Smoky Lake; Lyn Michaud of Turner Valley; the Calgary Educational Partnership; Nancy Hixt, a crime reporter with Global TV; the Medicine Hat Safe Community Association; and the encouraging positive informed choices program, also from Medicine Hat.

Mr. Speaker, they have all inspired us with their hard work and determination to make Alberta a safer place to live and raise a family. I ask this Assembly to please join me in congratulating and thanking them for their work in being outstanding community crime fighters.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure and privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to the House a very special guest and personal friend who joins us in the public gallery. Arif Khan is an active member of the Alberta philanthropic community through his work as president of the Autism Society of Edmonton Area, board of trustee for Project Shelter Wakadogo in Uganda, board member of Aurora charter school in Edmonton, and board member of Sturgeon hospital foundation, St. Albert. Arif is also the incoming president of the Rotary Club of Edmonton Mayfield. I'm also proud to add that Arif will be the Alberta Liberal candidate for Edmonton-Riverview in the next election. I'd ask Mr. Khan to stand and accept our heartfelt welcome to the Legislature.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased and honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members a number of great senior guests from Lacombe and central Alberta. They are travelling with Parsons Holiday Tours, and they are seated in the members' gallery: Mr. John Parsons, Gail Sissons, Eric Sissons, Ruth Craig, Kathleen Corkery, close neighbour and friend Evelyn Frizzell, Ben and Annie Gebbink, Frank Keough, Eleanor Denoncourt, Shirley Kole, lifelong friend Alida Harink, Dorothy Charlton, and Kathleen Smith.

Now, Mr. Parsons has been a great ambassador for the city of Lacombe and has been here many times over the years. He still runs his own holiday tour company. He is one of the younger and more spry seniors of the group, and I would call him a senior teenager at the age of 80. He's the bus driver who drives these people around. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of all the members.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you two members of our Alberta parks public safety team, Burke Duncan and Mike Koppang, and our area manager for Kananaskis Country, Dave Hanna. Burke and Mike are internationally certified mountain guides working around the clock responding to emergencies, everything from missing people to climbing and water rescues and avalanche incidents. Together our public safety specialists here today have a combined 47 years of service to our province. Their work is invaluable, and it is an honour to have Burke, Mike, and Dave with us. I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly six very special guests in the members' gallery from Queen Elizabeth high school, which is in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore. Queen Elizabeth high school and all their alumni will be commemorating their 50th anniversary milestone this year.

My guests this afternoon include Mr. Don Blackwell, the principal of Queen Elizabeth high school for the past three years; Brenda Scaddan, the social studies department head, serving in that capacity for 10 years; Mr. Terry Godwaldt, a teacher and coordinator of curriculum, advanced placement, and videoconferencing; Shawna Walsh, school council chairperson, who has volunteered with the school council movement for the past 18 years; Patrick Goodfellow, an enthusiastic grade 12 student who is an inspiring leader and is known for his community service and dedication to people; and finally, Diana Hadzizulfic, a grade 12 student, originally from Illinois, U.S.A., who has a passion for learning and leadership. I would now ask them to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you Mrs. Mary Ann Dobson. Mary Ann Dobson is a schoolteacher at J. Percy Page high school, located in the Edmonton-Ellerslie constituency. Of course, I taught with her for two years prior to my election. I recently attended an Edmonton public school event where she was named a semifinalist for the 2011 excellence in teaching awards program.

Mrs. Dobson teaches art and believes that art is for everyone, not just for the gifted. She has received funding to start Drawn Together, a travelling sketchbook project. These sketchbooks are travelling across Alberta, providing a networking opportunity for students and teachers. The theme for the book is Identity, where the hope is that the book will increase students' understanding of one another and reduce bullying through this understanding. I wish Mary Ann continued success. At this time I'd ask my guest to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature three staff members who have recently started working with the Alberta NDP opposition. First of all is Élisabeth Ricard, who is our new exchange student from Quebec. She hails from Montreal and is currently completing her MA in international studies. Next is Richard Liebrecht, our communications officer. He is from the great orange land of Manitoba, and he holds a degree and diploma in communications. Thirdly, Pascal Ryffel, our new outreach co-ordinator, who just started this week, recently returned from the United Kingdom, where he completed his MA in media and international development. I would like to welcome the staff members, who are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: The point of order will be dealt with.
Go ahead.

Homelessness Initiative

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to update you and all members of the Assembly on Alberta's plan to end homelessness. In 2008 the Premier created the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness. This secretariat recommended Housing First, a paradigm shift towards permanent housing, including extensive support to free vulnerable Albertans from the causes that lead to homelessness.

Last week the secretariat announced in the Ending Homelessness in Medicine Hat report a 10 per cent average decrease in month-to-month emergency shelter use from 2008 to 2010. Let's look around the whole province, Mr. Speaker. There has been a 16 per cent decrease in demand for emergency shelter spaces in Calgary from February 2009 to February 2011. The city of Fort McMurray has reported a 42 per cent decrease in the amount of homeless Albertans during the same period, and in Edmonton there has been a 21 per cent decrease in the number of homeless people during the same time frame. As of today 3,995 formerly homeless individuals have been housed with supports in just over two years.

Mr. Speaker, this accomplishment is a reflection of the great work from department officials and the tireless efforts from our partners with the community and private sector. Private sector and community partnerships are the foundation of Alberta's 10-year plan to end homelessness, and as taxpayers this program is in our interests. The cost to support a chronically homeless person with emergency support services is over three times the amount it costs to house the same person with the Housing First program. As the number of homeless people decreases, so does the cost to communities and governments to care for these individuals. We will continue to work with community-based and private-sector organizations to ensure that provincially supported initiatives align to local priorities and reflect local plans. This is especially critical to helping people regain or strengthen their independence.

Another initiative that we can all be proud of is making government identification voluntarily available to homeless Albertans. I'd have to again thank the Minister of Service Alberta for her leadership in this program. The identification can help get these people back on track as they work, rent an apartment, open a bank account, or apply for a job.

Mr. Speaker, we still have a ways to go, but we are definitely heading in the right direction, and we can be proud of the progress being made. Again, much of this is due to the incredible work being done by private-sector and community-based organizations and local groups across Alberta.

Some say that we're spending too much on this program even though I've been able to reduce our budget by 36 per cent and achieve the same results. Others say that we should be spending more even though we are meeting our goals with this leaner budget. To both, Mr. Speaker, I say that the measure of our success is in the results that we achieve, how many Albertans become independent, some of whom I had the privilege to meet personally.

I commend every member of this Assembly who has supported these efforts, both from the government and the opposition side, and the countless Albertans who remain committed to ending homelessness as we know it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On behalf of the Official Opposition the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberals support the Housing First approach to dealing with homelessness and are extremely heartened by the enthusiasm with which this province's seven community-based homeless management bodies in Calgary, Edmonton, Red Deer, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Grande Prairie, and the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo are addressing the issue of homelessness. They have really been at the forefront of the fight to eliminate homelessness in Alberta and are deserving of much of the credit for the significant decline in the province's homeless population. I also want to acknowledge the tireless efforts of this province's many faith communities and social agencies. It is because of their dedication and compassion that the laudable goal of eliminating homelessness in Alberta will succeed.

Mr. Speaker, the desire to end homelessness in Alberta is one that is shared by all parties in this House. It's one of the few issues where you get the sense that we're all in this together and where our common humanity matters most. It is in that spirit that I'd also like to recognize the good work being done by the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs and his department. Even though the Alberta government unveiled its 10-year plan to end homelessness a year or more after some of the community-based homeless management bodies, and some of those bodies are actually slated to achieve their goals well ahead of the province, the point is that the province did, to its credit, develop an overarching plan to end homelessness.

While I don't want to rubbish the progress that has been made in the ongoing fight to end homelessness in Alberta, I do want to briefly mention a few areas where, in my view, there is still room for improvement. This is based on discussions I've had with those that are on the front lines. Firstly, I think we need to do more to make the Housing First approach more inclusive and accessible to those with significant physical disabilities. I think there's a tendency to think of homelessness or the hard to house in a particular way. The reality is that the face of homelessness can be anyone, and we need to be mindful and sensitive to that. Also, I think we need to recognize that some people will require housing supports for far longer than the period of the wraparound supports that are currently being offered. In some cases support might be needed for a person's entire life. Mr. Speaker, we need to be flexible on how we approach the needs of the homeless and acknowledge that there are no two cases that are the same.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, to permit additional members to participate on this ministerial statement discussion will require unanimous consent of the Assembly, so I shall ask the question. Would all those in favour of allowing two additional speakers to participate, please say aye?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the minister for that update. To this government's credit the 10-year plan to end homelessness actually uses the right approach to service delivery. By utilizing a competitive bidding process, we've seen significant savings to the taxpayer while maintaining high levels of quality and service. What a novel concept. Of course, the question then is: why does this government refuse to do the same in other areas? In health care we could have saved billions by introducing competitive delivery into the system, but the Wildrose plan to make those reforms was met with ridicule and fearmongering from a PC party stuck in the 1980s. On transmission lines this government awarded an untendered contract for $16 billion worth of unnecessary upgrades to our transmission system that Albertans will be stuck paying for. Why does this approach work for homelessness but not for health care and not for transmission lines?

Saving money on construction is actually only one part of the equation. In terms of real taxpayer dollars what they save in bricks and mortar is probably covered off by what is wasted in needless bureaucracy. The fact is that seven Alberta municipalities already had their own homelessness plans. They were developed locally with real consultation with people on the ground living in their communities. In typical PC fashion this government decided that it wasn't good enough. They made their own 10-year plan because they know best, and they made other municipalities follow it. How much could we have saved if we simply financially enabled municipalities to tackle the problem themselves, as they were and remain prepared to do so? A Wildrose government would do just that.

We in the Wildrose have also questioned, several times actually, the need for this minister's particular department. He likes to talk about saving taxpayers money, and that's good, even taking credit for spending cuts in his department that were planned long before he took over. But I wonder how much money his ministry spends on bureaucratic administration simply by continuing as a stand-alone government ministry. The purview of his department clearly falls under Municipal Affairs. I suggest that if he truly respects taxpayers, he would reunite his ministry with Municipal Affairs and free up millions in savings. Mr. Speaker, that's money that could be reinvested in the very initiative that he spoke about, or it could be used to pay down the deficit, but I don't suppose anybody on that side of the House is interested in doing that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This PC government has hitched its wagon to a 10-year plan to end homelessness that's on a trail which assures that many Albertans will continue to struggle to have decent, affordable housing.

The government likes to talk about how many units of affordable housing have been created and about drops in the use of emergency shelters or in counts of homeless people, but there is no evidence that those changes are due to its actions or simply the result of a temporary drop in the vacancy rate. The government continues to ignore the need for a comprehensive plan for housing. Yet as long as the focus remains on the tip of the iceberg – that is, those people who are currently and in many cases chronically homeless – and does not develop a fully integrated plan to ensure that we have enough housing for the diverse needs of all Albertans, we will continue to see new people become homeless from various perilous situations that they're in.

The 10-year plan to end homelessness owes more to the changing economic circumstances in Alberta the last couple of years than to the government's funding commitment. Since the plan began, there has never been a commitment of the amount of money the government's own committee said was needed to properly address the issue. Indeed, the minister just bragged about a 30 per cent cut to this program. Shame, Mr. Speaker.

There continues to be too much reliance on the for-profit sector in addressing affordable housing needs and too little investment in this issue. The waiting lists for low-income affordable rental housing are years long in the major cities of this province. Meanwhile some of our most vulnerable citizens, including children, people with mental illnesses, and seniors, are left in housing that is either far too expensive or far too poor in quality, and they all pay the price in their health and in their safety.

This government eliminated funding of important social housing years ago, and a huge homelessness and housing problem soon developed in our province. With the return of a stronger economy under way and more people coming to Alberta's labour market, we will see more difficulties. This government has nothing to brag about. The human costs of letting far too many people remain homeless or in poor housing in our wealthy province is a sad illustration of a government that just doesn't care about Alberta families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've all heard stories from physicians and allied health workers about intimidation and punishment for advocating for changes in the health care system. Now we hear a story from a courageous registered nurse, Terri Reuser, who tried to speak up about procedures not being followed, abusive staff, compromised patient care. Instead of being listened to, she was silenced by her managers. To the Deputy Premier: why does the government ignore the growing evidence of a culture of fear and intimidation in our health care system?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, in any workplace it is unacceptable at any time to bully people. The responsibility to treat employees respectfully is across all industries. It is unfortunate that there are going to be times when nurses disagree with doctors, when doctors disagree with doctors. They have to work those out, and when they can't, the administration has to get involved. It is unfortunate that it happens. It certainly is our intention to allow any of those circumstances to come forward in the Health Quality Council review, and I certainly hope that this nurse does.

Dr. Swann: Clearly, the Deputy Premier hasn't been listening because 30,000 Alberta health care workers do not feel confident in the Health Quality Council to hear issues of intimidation and bullying. When are you going to get it and call a public inquiry?

Mr. Snelgrove: There's absolutely no question that someone hasn't been listening, Mr. Speaker.

You know, it's amazing that the Liberal caucus can take a letter from a very respected nurse and just input: oh, Tory culture of fear and intimidation. Nowhere in her letter does she mention Tory intimidation and fear. She talks about her professional association not listening. She talks about her colleagues and her employer, who is Alberta Health Services. That's why we brought forward the Health Quality Council. They will listen to people who are trying to make the system better, and then we'll make it better together.

Dr. Swann: Such disrespect from a man who says that he's representing Albertans when 30,000 of our top health workers are saying that this is a bogus investigation that cannot get to the bottom, cannot restore public confidence, and will not get professionals back onside.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I just recently got to visit my father in the hospital in Vermilion. He suffered a stroke. I can tell you that that health care system he's talking about isn't there. The nurses in that hospital, the doctors, all the people involved are treating patients with absolute care and respect. He has nothing but respect for the physicians and nurses. You know what he has for them? He wonders: are they starting to believe their own news releases?

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

2:00 Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Astronomical fee increases, teacher layoffs, special-needs program cuts: why this government's misguided cuts to education? Instead of cutting the Education budget and shortchanging children on their schooling needs, the government should be doing one of three things: cutting other government spending, dipping into the sustainability fund, or, God forbid, even reintroducing a small liquor tax. That's what governments do. They make tough decisions in order to protect children's futures. My question is for the minister of finance. Why does this government refuse to make hard decisions to protect our children's futures?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, he is partly right. They are difficult decisions we make in government when we have the needs of seniors and children in care. We have a health care system that we're managing to maintain. It's one of the best in the world. We have an education system that is amongst the best in the world that's raising students into a very competitive world. He's right. There are difficult choices to make. On the other end is the taxpayer, and we balance those judgments.

Mr. Hehr: Given that the sustainability fund was created for a purpose, why is there continual refusal not to put our children first and allocate an extra $110 million, the amount cut from expected grants to school boards, from the sustainability fund to cut these shortfalls?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, that's why we're in this House. We have to balance the elected members who would spend everything in the kitchen until the cupboard was bare and borrow more, a party that would spend little or less on education and then pay for it down the road, or a party that is thoughtfully dealing with the financial realities we're in and appropriately allocating the money to those departments.

Mr. Hehr: Given that the reality is that children are currently being shortchanged on their education, will this government do a couple of things and either, God forbid, pass a tax, go into the sustainability fund, or cut some of the bloated government departments you have to get our children the extra education dollars they need?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, there is a lot more to education than the money that they would like to add to it. Every now and then you have to reassess what we're doing in education, and the minister has very, very capably addressed that. We're looking at education in the next decade and for the next generation. Some of them seem to be hung up on what education might have been in the '50s or '60s. We're moving forward with a well-funded, very balanced approach to educating not only our young students but our advanced education needs as well.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Water Marketing

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I predicted, the government's weak-kneed approach to protecting Alberta's water has resulted in multinational corporations licking their lips over the chance to buy and sell Alberta's water. The chairperson of Nestlé says that they are actively dealing with the government regarding a water exchange because, and I quote, competition could be particularly fierce between farmers for water for crops and oil companies needing water for the oil sands. To the Minister of Environment: when was the minister going to share with Albertans that he is in discussion with Nestlé about how they can be involved in selling our water in the same way other commodities are traded?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated to this member on numerous occasions, Alberta's water is not for sale and will not be for sale. The fact that Nestlé talked about being in discussions with Alberta: I have no reason to believe it's wrong. There are all kinds of corporations and lobby groups that are constantly in discussion with the government on both sides of the issue. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in addition to Nestlé, we've heard from literally hundreds and thousands of Albertans who do not share that opinion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister. Interesting point. Why is it that Nestlé does not appear on the Alberta lobbyist registry? Is it because the minister approached them, and therefore the act doesn't apply, and they don't have to disclose?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, this minister did not approach them. I can categorically state that that is the case. As to whether or not Nestlé has directly contacted the government, I don't know. I cannot comment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister: why would this government throw our farmers into a pitched battle against multinational food giants to gain control of water, whether through water market or through sale? How on earth does that help Albertans' access to a clean glass of water?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, this government would never pit farmers against the industry. I'll remind this member that the policy and the laws of Alberta are made here in this Legislature, not by some European over in Geneva. That's the way we deal with things in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Taxation Policy

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has insisted that there will be no tax hikes on his watch, but the spending increases of this government have left us in terrible fiscal shape. Last week the outgoing Premier touted his economic council's report, which refers at least five times to the need to raise taxes in order to cover spending. Given that this administration has blown $45 billion in royalties in five budgets and is still running a deficit, it's true that taxes or spending must change. To the finance minister: when will you admit that you plan to raise taxes to cover your reckless spending?

Mr. Snelgrove: If this were a library, that would be the fiction department, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, we have invested in Alberta $50 billion in infrastructure. We have built and are running one of the best health care systems, one of the best education systems. We provide for our seniors like no other province. If the hon. member says that's wasting money, then he needs to stand up and tell them that.

Mr. Hinman: Well, it's not the library. This is our budget we're talking about.

Given that program spending – not capital, just programs – increased 32 per cent in your first four years, or nearly $10 billion annually, and given that you will have nearly vaporized the sustainability fund by the end of the year, when will you tell Albertans that tax increases will be necessary to cover your opulent, nation-leading spending?

Mr. Snelgrove: I guess he's been very busy, probably too busy to review the budgets.

Over the last few years that I've been with the Treasury, Mr. Speaker, our spending was below inflation. It has been reprioritized to priority areas like health, like seniors, like education and doing what most of the world says is the right thing to do, continuing to build infrastructure right now because we're going to need it in the future.

Mr. Hinman: Well, given that your government has increased its unfunded pension liabilities from $5.5 billion to $10 billion and given that your program spending increases have put us in a structural deficit unless bailed out by record oil prices every year, why do you deny that this government has mismanaged our finances so badly that we are now racing down the deficit highway, not unlike the fiscal mess that you were in 20 years ago?

Mr. Snelgrove: Because, Mr. Speaker, it's simply not true. The financial statements of the province are considered the gold standard in Canada. The Auditor General goes through the statements, and they are held up to the level of any other province. Our debt and our assets are all stated in the consolidated financial statements and in the budget. If they can't read a budget, that's not my fault.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If this was indeed a library, that would be the comic book section over there.

Yesterday in this House the Minister of Environment claimed that Albertans cannot and never will be able to sell water, yet today we have learned that the PC government has been in behind-the-scenes talks with Nestlé, one of the largest and most unscrupulous corporations in the world, to create a water market in our province. Will the Minister of Environment admit to Albertans that his government is conspiring behind closed doors with a foreign multinational to sell out Alberta's water and agree to fully disclose the content of all meetings between Nestlé and this government so that Albertans can see what . . .

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I've already stated that we meet on a regular basis with all kinds of interest groups. It should come as no surprise to any member of this House that those interested in water have been watching what has been going on in Alberta. We had three publications that have been part of the public record for quite some time now that have talked about possibilities and options for proceeding with water allocation into the future. So he can just put away all of his conspiracy theories, put them to bed, because they don't exist.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Alberta water authority proposed by the Premier's economic council is exactly what Nestlé announced that it has been working on with this government to develop and given that this demonstrates the government is taking its water policy directly from foreign corporations, again, won't the Minister of Environment admit that he and his government have been talking with Nestlé and other multinationals to create a water market that foreign corporations would control at Albertans' expense?

2:10

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we have been engaging in discussions about water allocation. That is not a secret. We've had numerous occasions to have that discussion in this House. I'll remind this member, just as I reminded the previous member, that the laws of this land, the policies with respect to water will be decided in this House and have nothing to do with Europeans.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the chairman of Nestlé has admitted that a water market will pit the water demands of big oil corporations against the needs of small farmers and given that in any market where access to water is determined by who has the deepest pockets, our farmers will inevitably lose. Will the minister do the right thing and protect ordinary Albertans' access to water against the demands of huge multinational corporations by stopping all Tory plans to create a water market in this province?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are protected and will continue to be protected by the best water legislation anywhere in the world. I'm here to tell this member that it will always stay that way as long as Albertans demand that it stay that way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. The Edmonton public school board chair has called it the worst budget for public education and school districts in years. The Catholic board chair has said that there's nothing left to trim. They have no options but layoffs to deal with budget shortfalls. To the Minister of Education. The experts are all predicting fewer teachers and larger class sizes in September. Does the government think the experts are wrong, or does the government think that Alberta's children should have fewer teachers and larger class sizes?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what the government knows is that the education system in Alberta is one of the best in the world and will continue to be one of the best in the world. The government knows that the public school board in Edmonton and the separate school board in Edmonton are boards which people come from all over the world to look at to see what they're doing and how they're doing it well. What we also know is that we're meeting the class size guidelines across the province and beating them in every area except K to 3, so we reprofiled money to deal with class sizes in K to 3. Yes, there may be a loss of teachers over the next year due to fiscal restraint but class sizes will still . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: since the minister has stated that the boards have to decide what doesn't need to be done, can the minister please give these cash-strapped boards a hint about what the minister thinks doesn't need to be done in our public education system?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, every organization that spends the kind of money that we spend on education needs to look at what it's doing on an ongoing basis to analyze whether we're getting value for money. That means looking at every aspect of what you're doing. We can focus on class size. People believe class size to be important. Now we need to look at that issue and say: "Where is it most important? How is it most important? How do those values with respect to class size match with the values for providing early kindergarten or junior kindergarten?" Those are choices that we make in the system. School boards are elected, as we were elected, to make those tough choices. But what I can say to the hon. member is that we have the best education system in the world, and we will continue to have it.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that effective September 1 money has been discontinued for class size funding in grades 4 through 6, ESL funding, distance education funding, and funding to cope with changing enrolment, how much money has been cut from each of these programs, and where is it going?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the givens are disingenuous. English as a second language funding has not been eliminated. We fund $1,155 per student for English as a second language. What has been eliminated is the enhanced English as a second language grant. The enhanced grant was a grant that was put in place several years ago for specific, targeted purposes, to deal with the extra issues related to immigrant students who are coming from difficult areas, war-torn areas, et cetera, to find ways to better include those children into our system. Guess what, Mr. Speaker? It's not working. We have to find a different . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Federal-provincial Relations

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 2 Canada was blessed with a stable majority Conservative government after almost eight years of successive minority governments. Prime Minister Harper has said that western Canada can breathe a lot easier. My questions are for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. With this level of stability what is the Alberta government looking for from this federal government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are indeed very hopeful now that the Prime Minister has a majority because a majority government has a track record of following through with commitments and promises. The belief of the western opportunity is that we are the centre of the natural resources for Canada. We know that the people in Ottawa recognize the importance of a robust economy properly and responsibly developed. We're looking forward to working with Ottawa to make that happen. The Gateway pipeline to the west coast and building a stronger relationship . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. With a strong majority government can we expect possible movement on other key Alberta priorities such as fair representation and Senate reform?

Ms Evans: We are highly hopeful, Mr. Speaker, for Senate reform and a proper allocation of seats to the province of Alberta. It's something which we look forward to along with Bill C-12. We understand that that's back on the table. We think that's very good news. We're hopeful that Ottawa will regard carefully the position we have on the single regulator for securities and will look at that in the context of the comments we've made following the Supreme Court decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: given that the Canada health transfer has been a major source of contention between our governments, will a majority Conservative government finally give Alberta its fair share of health funding?

Ms Evans: I know that the President of the Treasury Board and the Member for Foothills-Rocky View have advocated strongly. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I'm really glad that you want to listen me. Thank you. There are others, obviously, that don't.

We hope that the health care funding will be addressed in the manner in which we have been anticipating. The Prime Minister has acknowledged a 6 per cent escalator in the Canada health transfers, and we hope that that will start to make a difference where we haven't had it in past.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The late beloved Lois Hole said that the best of our achievements in the 20th century could be attributed to the public education system, but she had a warning that's relevant now. The education system must be adequately resourced and have the supports in place to help students reach their full potential. To the minister of finance. The minister of finance said in this Assembly on March 2 that in the next 10 years Alberta will have a hundred thousand more students. So on the basis of population growth alone how can this minister justify cuts to the Education budget?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, another disingenuous question. We're funding enrolment growth in our budget every year. This year the budget provides for 1.1 per cent growth in enrolment. That's over and above all of the other grant processes. We can talk about the grants that were eliminated after we analyzed whether they were achieving the purpose or not, but to suggest that we're not funding each and every child in this province effectively and efficiently with the resources of this province for their good education is just absolutely wrong.

Ms Pastoor: Actually, my third question was for the Minister of Education, so I'll try the minister of finance again. When Lethbridge not only needs a new school, but three of its existing schools need upgrades badly, projects that are now under threat along with teaching positions, how can this minister justify cuts to the Education budget?

Mr. Snelgrove: We had the answer on operation. Now let's look at capital cost. To put it quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, it's a great problem to have a province that's growing with young people. We had a presentation today from Beaumont where they have just about three times as many people under six years old in their community as they have seniors, and that's fairly rare. So this is a problem across all of Alberta, where we're going to have to bring forward an accelerated capital building plan to address those very good opportunities. To some it might be a problem. To us it's the future of our province, and we're going to fund it.

Ms Pastoor: Well, let me assure you that to us it does remain a problem, and portables are not the answer. To the Minister of Education: since the Lethbridge school district has 8,200 students in 18 schools and the board is facing a $5 million shortfall, is this government conceding that Lois Hole's vision of public education will be lost in the 21st century? How can this minister justify cuts to the Education budget?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this minister and this government embrace Lois Hole's vision for education in the future. We spent the last three years on a project called Inspiring Education. We're looking and talking about what it means to be an educated Albertan not just today with one of the best systems in the world but 30 years into the future. We're putting in place the plan for that, and we have in place the funding for that. We're talking about a 10-year plan with respect to building school capital, and we'll be moving on that. We're talking about how we ensure that every child is included in the system, and we're moving on that. Yes, we'll make sure that the appropriate funding levels are in place . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Child sexual abuse is an issue that causes great harm and suffering. Victims are forever left with a void in their innocence. My questions are to the Minister of Children and Youth Services. Minister, government must use its voice to help those without a voice and to help prevent child sexual abuse. Will the minister of children's services commit to establishing a time-specific, cross-ministry, stakeholder-engaged plan to end child sexual abuse in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member raises an issue that is critically important. It is one of the very reasons why this ministry exists, and that's to protect our children and youth from harm and to keep them safe. As the member said, there's no greater breach of trust than when someone that is known to a child interferes with them sexually or causes them harm through any other type of violence. We do work with nine ministries, and I can assure you that we will continue to do so on prevention, intervention, assessment, and treatment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since child sexual abuse is an issue many communities are very reluctant to discuss, what can the minister do to help break the veil of silence and prevent child sexual abuse?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, that is true. We have experienced that as well because child sexual abuse is a difficult subject to discuss, but it is still critically important to have that discussion with communities and focus on prevention. We do work closely with our stakeholders, with our community organizations. For example, we have 46 parent link centres across Alberta that offer resources and supports to parents. We will continue to support local strategies. Hon. member, I want you to know that this means that for your community as well there will be resources and support.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister. Many in the community that work with child sexual abuse groups believe that work has been done in the domestic violence area that we can learn from. Can the minister tell us what collaborative efforts to end domestic violence have been in place, are they working, and if they are not, whether the minister can commit to a strategy to ensure that they will work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do have a 10-year provincial plan through the prevention of family violence and bullying strategy. It's currently in its seventh year. We have nine ministries that have been working closely with our community partners. Annually there's more than $65 million that's allocated to this initiative. We continue to address our priorities to support our children and families in need. I want to thank you and I want to thank members of this Assembly for giving unanimous approval to our recent amendments to the Protection Against Family Violence Act because that will make a difference in a way that this member is talking about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Oil and Gas Regulatory System

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I am unnerved that the same member who introduced the health superboard as the health minister is now introducing an energy superboard in his proposed regulatory reform. The Alberta Liberals are supporters of aspects of reform, especially the one-window approval process and a reduction of red tape. But as the Environment critic I can tell the minister that environmental protection, monitoring, and compliance is not red tape. To the Minister of Energy: how does this energy superboard strengthen environmental protection and stewardship in Alberta? It didn't work very well in . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, in health there's an Alberta Health Services board. There is no superboard. There is no superboard being proposed in this particular case. What is being proposed in the discussion paper that's tabled in this House is one single regulator to streamline the process in this province for major project approvals.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry. It was your language. I used it.

Back to the same minister. Given that this will be the most powerful board in Alberta ever, dealing with approvals, carbon capture and storage, enhanced recovery schemes, all aspects of oil, natural gas, oil sands and coal, plus storage and disposal of water- and oil-filled waste formation, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, where are the checks and balances for the environment?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the issue that's laid out in this particular document won't necessarily change what happens today. What it'll do, however, is streamline, and it'll all be done in one process. Surely, this particular member isn't suggesting that we should make life more difficult when applications are before a series of regulators versus one streamlined process. As I said in the introduction of the draft discussion document, it is open for input, and I hope the member makes her points known.

Ms Blakeman: I expect you to make it better.

Back to the same minister. Given that this government already gets bad press for monitoring, for compliance enforcement, and for site reclamation and remediation, how does this superboard or proposal of his improve our record of poor performance?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it abundantly clear to this member that she's got it wrong. The concept of a single regulator is the on-the-ground administrative end of environmental protection: the policy development, the ability for the government to ensure that all of the policy, all of the rules that are being enforced by the regulator remain with the appropriate ministry, in this case Alberta Environment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Livestock Traceability Pilot Project

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Work on a livestock traceability system has been initiated by the cattle industry for its value to an advanced food safety system and the potential to expand trade. The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development recently released the results of a pilot project that examined the feasibility of traceability systems at Alberta auction markets. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. What is the point of the pilot project, and did it meet its goals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's critical that we have a traceability system that doesn't impede the speed of commerce in the market that we have out there. Our project was in several key locations throughout our province, so we were able to test it all in areas of differing weather and the worst conditions, and we did it with about a quarter of a million cattle this past fall, with a 95 per cent read rate on traceability, which is great because we have huge markets we need to go after.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how much input did the livestock industry have on this project, and are their concerns being addressed?

Mr. Hayden: Well, Mr. Speaker, we work very closely with the Alberta Auction Markets Association and also with the individual auction markets. The pilot project was implemented, as I said, in the fall, and it included auction marts that went through very extreme weather conditions. They participated throughout the province, and we customized the reading systems to each of the areas where we installed them and used the unique approaches that were necessary for each of the auction marts. It worked very well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Can the minister quantify the potential benefit of a traceability system? Why is it important?

Mr. Hayden: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's important because it's a long-term investment. When the young people that are in our gallery today are out there in the working world by 2020, we will be one of six countries in the world that actually export food. We have the potential to do amazing things for those people that are going to need that food, but we need a traceability system, and we need the confidence of those markets to make it work right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education has admitted that the Education budget is a hundred million dollars short of the funding needed to support an already struggling education system. These cuts compound the chaos created by last year's fiasco wherein teachers were laid off because of the government's refusal to make concrete funding commitments until the 11th hour. In the midst of Alberta's natural resource wealth how can the Minister of Education possibly justify his government's complete failure to ensure our children's future through the refusal to provide adequate, stable, and predictable funding to our schools?

2:30

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the premise of that question is absolutely wrong. First of all, the system is not struggling. The system is well funded, well operating, and one of the top five in the world.

Mr. Chase: Say that in a staff room and see what happens.

Mr. Hancock: I have been in staff rooms. I was actually on Sunday and Monday with the College of Alberta School Superintendents. They understand that it's a tight year. They understand that we have to look at our operations. They understand that in a free and democratic society people are willing to pay taxes, but they expect those taxes to be used well. They understand that investment in education is one of the best things we can do, and this government understands that as well.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the $100 million in education cuts will result in the loss of roughly 1,000 teaching positions and given that the minister's hazy, empty, bureaucratic justifications are not going to make any of those administrators make ends meet, why won't the Minister of Education just admit that his government has sold him out and that they are leaving him and Alberta's children holding the bag for an impending crisis in education?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there's no impending crisis in education. Yes, it's a difficult year. A thousand teachers I think is a very, very significantly escalated estimate of how many teachers we might not have. Most of the situation will be dealt with by attrition in most of the boards across the province. It is going to be a tough year. Some of the class sizes may rise modestly. It's not going to be a disaster in education. It is a difficult year in education, no question. Would I have preferred to have had more resources to do some of the exciting things we could do? Yes. But as a government we're fiscally prudent, and we invest in our children in a very dramatic way.

Ms Notley: Well, given that funding for special-needs students has been frozen for three years and given that special-needs students will be among the hardest hit by the sudden reduction of professionals in the classroom, will the Minister of Education tell us if this is the legacy he and his Premier are so proud of, that their government has completely failed to prioritize the education of our most vulnerable children?

Mr. Hancock: Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. We've been working very, very strongly on our action and inclusion agenda to make sure that every child every day, no exceptions, is included in our education system and has the opportunity to maximize their potential. To suggest that school boards across this province would target the most needy and the most difficult students is absolutely ridiculous. No cuts have been made in spending for special-needs students. We have had a significant amount of funding in that area, we're looking at how we can use that funding better, and we have included an additional $12 million in this year's budget so that we can implement the action on inclusion agenda.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Calgary Airport Trail Tunnel

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the city of Calgary is days away from, hopefully, finalizing a deal on the airport tunnel, but there is no guarantee until the deal is done and the ink has dried. Why is the city in this situation? Because of this province's wrongheaded decision not to support building an important access to Alberta's busiest airport. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why did the province continually refuse to support the airport tunnel, delaying work to the airport by years?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me first of all say that this is the responsibility of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. He did ask about why we didn't support it before. We have supported municipalities to the tune of $11.3 billion over 10 years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister is just trying to pass the buck to the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Given that without the construction of the airport tunnel the province's Deerfoot Trail will require major upgrades to handle the increased traffic, has the minister's department studied whether upgrades to the Deerfoot or support for the airport would be more expensive?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say to you that we have built schools in Calgary. Those schools are placed in communities where it is most important, in the communities where children have access to be able to use the facilities and for parents to have schools in their areas. This is where the school boards feel that the schools are most important. Again, it's the responsibility of the city of Calgary to decide what their infrastructure should be.

Mr. Kang: We are talking about the airport tunnel, Mr. Speaker. We're not talking about schools here.

To the minister again: given that short-term thinking more often causes long-term headaches, why would the minister not step up to provide support for this critical piece of infrastructure, construction that will not only save the province millions on upgrades on Deerfoot Trail but help make the Calgary ring road truly useful?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, $3.3 billion going to Calgary for infrastructure over 10 years through MSI alone. The city of Calgary has the responsibility and the choice to decide where that funding should go. I would also like to talk about the hospitals, about the cancer institute that is taking place in Calgary, the amount of funding that is being put in place in that city and the choice that we're making for hospitals, for health care, for education. Let me reiterate that the tunnel is the responsibility of the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Howse Pass Transportation Corridor

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Various groups in the province have recently been discussing the competitive nature of many of our industries, including trucking and transportation. Currently there are only a few routes to deliver Alberta goods to the west coast via truck and highways, the main route being the Kicking Horse Pass. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Are there any plans to develop an alternate route through the Howse Pass at any time in the future?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is all about opening up access to the west coast because it's important for our economy and it supports competitiveness. We need to look at building the most efficient transportation network that we possibly can. The Howse Pass alternative has been on the drawing board in one form or another for over 50 years, and I plan to bring this matter forward to my colleagues in British Columbia and Ottawa as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much. Again to the same minister: given the concern about safety, about energy efficiency, the carbon footprint, and other environmental impacts would it not make sense to finally develop the shortest, flattest, and most efficient route, that has been identified more than 200 years ago, for transporting goods through the Rockies?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I have to agree with everything that the hon. member said. I support this route in principle. Some years ago this government and a number of central Alberta communities did a feasibility study on this route which clearly showed that the route would have many benefits. However, most of the route lies within either British Columbia or the national park and is under the jurisdiction of British Columbia and the federal government. Obviously, we would need the co-operation of these governments before anything could get started.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: if the federal government has the main jurisdiction over this corridor, what is the next step that we as the government of Alberta could take to get this back on the radar and see what could be done to expedite the Howse Pass transportation project?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm hoping after what just happened a week ago that with a new majority Conservative government we can get this back on the radar. British Columbia and Alberta have two of the stronger economies in Canada, and a lot of goods and services move from here to the west coast and vice versa. This proposed highway would serve a national economic interest, and I plan to communicate this to the new federal minister as soon as I can. It's very important to plan for the future now because this will make both Alberta and Canada very strong.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Motor Vehicle Registry Database Access Fee

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recently, when the budget came out, the PC government without consultation added a $15 fee for when police officers issue tickets to violators. The municipalities are in fact faced with millions of dollars in fee increases, when in actual fact it's not $15; it's about 99 cents. To the Minister of Service Alberta: is she working on trying to eliminate this fee?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's really important to note with this fee increase that the municipalities will now pay that many other stakeholders were paying an $11 fee. So it has been increased to $15. At the same time, we were working with the municipalities to look for efficiencies on both sides to ensure that the IT system remains strong as it goes 24 hours, seven days a week. At the end of the day we want to be there to support the police when they're doing their good work.

2:40

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, given that the mayors and reeves I've spoken to indicate they're not at all pleased because they were not consulted, why did you surprise them and not consult with them in advance?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This was, indeed, part of the budget process that came out in February. All stakeholders were informed in March that there would be a change in this. I'm currently working with the five ministries involved, trying to work together to make sure that this is happening and to ensure that it's a good process and to look for opportunities to help them continue to get the revenue.

Mr. Boutilier: Given that charging more money is not a good process, I know that the minister of finance has indicated that he was going to work towards eliminating this fee in his constituency. Has he made any new progress on this?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I said was that it's very important that we allow the municipalities to maintain the funding sources that they have now. We're going to work with them to make sure that the services we provide to that agency or to any other agencies or municipalities are done on a cost-recovery basis. This is one step along the road to making sure that those that actually break the law – photo radar or red light cameras or parking tickets – pay for the cost of collecting those tickets. It's fair to those who don't break the law.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Elder Abuse

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of Crime Prevention Week the Minister of Justice was in Calgary this morning to announce a grant for two invaluable organizations in that city that support victims of crime: the Kerby Centre and the YWCA. The grants will help establish an elder abuse response team and establish a program that will help reduce the risk of domestic violence and criminal involvement in children exposed to domestic violence. My first question to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: what assurances do Albertans have that this government is working to support victims of crime year-round and not just during Crime Prevention Week?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fund that the hon. member is referring to is the safe communities innovation fund, or SCIF. That's a $60 million fund that actually was set up in November of 2008. It's been active, and it's been supporting projects since that time. The two projects that the member refers to this are both innovative projects in Calgary, but these kinds of projects are happening all over the province, and the provincial government is supporting them. One of the hallmarks of the safe communities initiative is that they are community led, supported by government. People on the front lines with great ideas are being supported by the provincial government.

Another hallmark is that we're talking about early intervention, prevention, getting to the root causes of crime as opposed to just trying to arrest more people.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Given the unfortunate fact that our seniors are too often victims of abuse, especially financial abuse, what are you doing to protect Alberta seniors?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, this government is very supportive of community efforts and provincial policies that address elder abuse. Last November we released a strategy on elder abuse. This strategy provides a collaborative approach that government and community partners can take to prevent elder abuse. Over the last several years my ministry has worked very closely with the Elder Abuse Awareness Network to develop resources addressing the financial abuse of seniors. This information as well as other resources can be found on my ministry's website.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the Minister of Service Alberta: what practical resources does this government have to protect Albertans from becoming victims of fraud?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Service Alberta has developed a number of resources and participates in many activities to promote fraud prevention awareness. One of the things that we do in partnership with the media is to issue consumer alerts when fraud happens. We also take a lot of calls at our consumer contact centre. Seniors call us on a lot of issues, and that's one of the major things we hear about. We also have many tipsheets available. Finally, we also do visit seniors' centres to talk about identity theft and how to protect your information.

Support for the Horse-racing Industry

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, since this Premier took office, $156 million has been channelled to horse racing in Alberta, an industry headed by former Deputy Premier Shirley McClellan, an industry that everyone except this government seems to know is dying. To the President of the Treasury Board: how can this government justify channelling $156 million to horse racing through a sweetheart casino deal while at the same time cutting education, cutting . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, someone who just came into this Assembly and just looked at one side of the budget could be forgiven for not understanding it. For someone who has sat in this Assembly for as long as that hon. member to not understand or recognize the simple fact – Horse Racing Alberta provides slot machines that give them a percentage of revenue to support the industry. It does not come from the taxpayers. It flows through the government for an accounting principle only and does not come from the taxpayers of Alberta. It comes through from the people who play the slots.

Dr. Taft: My next question is to the Solicitor General. Given that this government has arranged the sweetheart deal that allows the money to flow and given that millions of those dollars have flowed to privately owned Rocky Mountain Turf Club in Lethbridge on condition that it maintain the buildings it uses at the Lethbridge exhibition, how is it, Mr. Solicitor General, that most of those buildings are in disrepair and some are condemnable?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member doesn't seem to listen to the first answer. The fact of the matter is that the government doesn't funnel any money to Horse Racing Alberta, nor does it manage any buildings at any racetracks or the operations of any private corporation. The revenue that he's talking about is generated because of slot machine revenue at 'racinos,' which are minicasinios located at racetracks. That business wouldn't be there if it wasn't for Horse Racing Alberta, and they keep a portion of the money. It's not taxpayers' money, and I don't oversee the operations of any private corporation out there.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, given that the line item for the budget is in the Solicitor General's budget and given that as far as I know, he's responsible for his budget, will the minister do the people of Alberta a favour and order a forensic audit of the lottery funds channelled to the Rocky Mountain Turf Club and call in the SPCA to inspect the barns and facilities to make sure that they're safe?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, if this was a library, that would be the fantasy department, soon to be the history department.

The Speaker: That concludes the question period for today. Seventeen members were recognized. There were 102 questions and responses.

Page Recognition

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're coming to what I sense – and I only sense this – to be the conclusion of this session before too long. One of the things that is very important to do is to recognize the role played by pages. If you don't mind, I'd just like to have us do a recognition of the pages before we continue the Routine. [Standing ovation]

I wanted to read a very nice letter that I received from the retiring pages.

Mr. Speaker,

The end of Session signifies something different for everyone. For the Pages, the end of Session is accompanied by the realization that some of us will be moving on. We would like to express our sincere appreciation for the incredible opportunity we have had to serve the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

There are countless people who have shaped our experience into so much more than a job. We would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, the Table Officers, the Sergeant-at-Arms, the staff in 315, the Security Staff, and all the other staff of the Legislative Assembly Office. As well we wish to extend our gratitude to the Members of the Legislative Assembly, without whom our role in the Chamber would not exist.

Being a part of a team of so many talented individuals has been both a privilege and an honour. The opportunity to meet prestigious Albertans who have willingly shared their expertise with us is one that few are able to experience, and for this we are profoundly grateful. We leave this job with a better appreciation for the people who work so hard for our province.

As we reflect on our experiences at the Legislature, we recognize how fortunate we are to have had the opportunity to witness history firsthand. For no other part time job would we be able to see news in the making, before we turn on the TV or read the newspaper. We have been privileged to play a small role in our province's parliamentary system, and have gained a greater understanding and appreciation for the history and tradition of the democratic process. The memories and experiences we have gained have shaped us as individuals as we embark on our future endeavours.

It has been a great honour and pleasure to work with everyone in this Assembly, and for this we are deeply grateful.

Yours sincerely, Larissa Shapka, Brittany Bryce, Regan Coyne, Kelsy Edgerton, Matthew McGreer, Dmytro Muzychenko.

Thank you to them all.

Would the hon. Deputy Speaker continue the program?

2:50

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Deputy Speaker I would like to draw to the attention of all members that we will have to send off six of our wonderful pages at the end of this session, and they are, as the Speaker mentioned, Matthew McGreer, Regan Coyne, Kelsy Edgerton, Larissa Shapka, Brittany Bryce, and Dmytro Muzychenko.

I ask all hon. members to join me in recognizing the efforts of our pages, who daily show patience and understanding of our many demands. They carry out their tasks with attention to duty and in good humour and suffer many late nights working with us. We are honoured to have our pages working with us in the Legislative Assembly to serve Alberta.

On behalf of all members here I present to each departing page a memento gift. These gifts are from the personal contributions of every member of our Assembly. Along with the gifts are our best wishes. I would like to ask our Deputy Chair of Committees to hand the gift to Kelsy Edgerton, representing the head page, Larissa Shapka, and our six departing pages. [applause]

The Speaker: Thank you. We'll continue with the Routine in a few seconds from now.

Hon. members, we have six members who are going to participate in Members' Statements today, and I do not want to interrupt the process. Government House Leader, do you want to ask the question if we can have unanimous consent to conclude the Routine?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you very much.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Queen Elizabeth High School 50th Anniversary

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to commemorate the 50th anniversary of Queen Elizabeth high school, which will be officially celebrated on June 11, 2011. It was a pleasure to have welcomed guests from the school in the Assembly today. These guests represent different generations who have been engaged in the school community either as a student, parent, volunteer, teacher, or principal.

Upon opening the doors for the first time in September of 1960, with 628 students in grades 10 through 12, Queen Elizabeth high school has grown today to serve over 1,300 students. Mr. Speaker, the school has successfully managed to maintain the feel of a small school community atmosphere and offer the same advantages of larger schools.

Queen Elizabeth high school endeavours to instill within their students the values of Queen Elizabeth, which include academics, athletics, arts, and active participation. These values are a very important part of the high school program and school culture; however, it is important to balance studies with leadership building as well as community participation and involvement. Queen Elizabeth high school challenges and encourages its students to find a balance between the two so that when the students graduate from this particular school, they are ready to be leaders in all of their endeavours.

Special thanks to the innovative and forward-looking staff at the school as they offer 21st century learning technologies which allow the students at Queen Elizabeth high school to interact with and learn from students around the world. This gives the students an incredible advantage, Mr. Speaker.

Queen Elizabeth high school has set itself apart from others in several other ways. They were the first school to offer hockey programming for credit and the first high school in Canada to offer an aviation program.

Special best wishes, congratulations, and heartfelt thank yous to all those who have contributed to student successes over the past 50 years at Queen Elizabeth.

Thank you.

The Speaker: My schedule has the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, but the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, please proceed.

Patient Advocacy by Nurses

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be delivering the comments on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition.

As a physician it's been my honour, pleasure and part of my success to work with some of Alberta's finest nurses. This is National Nursing Week, and therefore an appropriate time to pay tribute to the hard work, compassion and dedication shown by Alberta's nurses.

But it must be noted that nurses have been asked to do more with less since the 1990s. Time and time again they have sacrificed their mental and physical health in order to cope with conflicting directions, government cutbacks and mismanagement of public health care. The culture of fear and intimidation created by this government compromises patient care and affects all health care professionals, including nurses.

And yet they speak out for their patients, advocating for better care even in the face of threats and intimidation from their managers. Today we heard the story of one nurse who experienced post-traumatic stress disorder and long-term disability because of the treatment she received after speaking out repeatedly for the patients in her care.

Nurses should be applauded for patient advocacy, not punished. In this case, a nurse with nearly twenty-five years service has left her career behind, and Alberta is the poorer for it.

Health care professionals – nurses, doctors, social workers, technicians, everyone – must work in an environment of trust, respect and sound management. But that's not what [we're] getting. . . . Nurses deserve far more respect than this government has shown, and they deserve a full, independent, judicial public inquiry to uncover the truth about countless allegations of intimidation.

We cannot fix health care without addressing the fundamental problems of a public health care work environment that has become toxic for all concerned.

Our nurses deserve better. Their patients deserve better. And this government must do better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Parks Public Safety Team

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to recognize the Tourism, Parks and Recreation Public Safety Team, which has been operating out of Kananaskis Country for more than 30 years, keeping Albertans and visitors safe. Our three public safety specialists are internationally certified mountain guides and professional members of the Canadian Avalanche Association.

The Kananaskis region is more than 26,000 square kilometres, and with a wide range of terrain to cover, the team has trained in all aspects of search and rescue. They're on call 24/7, 365 days a year for any type of emergency, and when needed, they assist in operations across the province from the Rocky Mountains down to Cypress Hills. They are also responsible for training the conservation officers who support them when they respond to public safety incidents.

An important responsibility is their extensive avalanche program. From November to the end of April every year they provide the public with daily avalanche bulletins, and they also provide the avalanche control program along sections of our provincial highways.

They respond to more than 350 incidents every year, and over the past 30-plus years they've responded to more than 10,000 incidents, including lost or missing persons; climbing rescues; avalanches; lakes and river rescues; skiing accidents; horse, bicycle, motor vehicle, and off-highway motor vehicle incidents; wildlife-human confrontations; and just about any other incident you can imagine.

This winter they started using Facebook and Twitter to get important information to the public immediately. Their Facebook site has logged nearly 400,000 visits since January 1, and there are hundreds of followers on Twitter.

I want to congratulate this team for their incredible dedication and skill and the compassion they show in their work, keeping my constituents and so many other Albertans and visitors from around the world safe every day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Seniors' Week

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to all members about an annual event that's very important to me, Seniors' Week. Every year during the first week of June we set aside time to celebrate and honour the contributions of our seniors.

This year's theme, Vibrant Leaders in the Community, reflects the many roles that seniors play in our province as our parents, our grandparents, employers and employees, volunteers, and caregivers, and in these roles and more seniors continue to be leaders in our community.

As our population ages, the rising number of seniors will contribute to a growing pool of knowledge, wisdom, and experience that's invaluable to our communities. We need to recognize this and pay tribute to seniors for all they do.

Events and festivities will be happening across the province from June 6 to 12, and I'm pleased that the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta co-ordinates and supports these events. Though our work focuses on raising government awareness of the issues and concerns regarding seniors in our province, we know that it's equally important to recognize and celebrate successes. That's why one of the highlights of the week for me is the minister's seniors' service awards. Presented by the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, these awards recognize Albertans who volunteer their time to make a difference in the lives of our seniors. This year over 60 nominations were received.

Award recipients will be honoured at a special ceremony in Edmonton during Seniors' Week. There are numerous other events occurring that week, and I encourage all members and all Albertans to take part in these celebrations. To find a calendar of events in your area, visit the Alberta Seniors and Community Supports website.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Tianna Rissling Peter Schori

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think the overabundance of water over the last two years has anything to do with this, and we in southeast Alberta certainly are not growing webs between our toes, but I'm pleased to rise today and brag to you about a constituent of mine, Tianna Rissling from Redcliff, along with her coach, Peter Schori. These two have just qualified for the World Swimming Championships in Shanghai, China, from July 24 to 31 this summer.

Tianna qualified by finishing second at the world championship trials in Victoria in April. Peter was named to the coaching staff based on her performance. Tianna is currently ranked 10th in the world for the 100 breaststroke. Tianna and Peter are the only swimmer or coach on the world championship team not from a major city, which is quite an achievement. They come from the Alberta Marlin Aquatic Club, which swims out of Medicine Hat.

The Alberta Marlin Aquatic Club is the number one swim club in Alberta outside of Edmonton and Calgary. Nationally in 2010 the club had swimmers on the Canadian senior national, the junior national, and the national prospects team. Provincially eight swimmers from AMAC were on Alberta provincial teams. Forty swimmers qualified for Alberta championships. They have over 100 swimmers in their competitive and precompetitive programs. As well, Mr. Speaker, every AMAC swimmer to continue swimming through grade 12 in the past eight years has pursued their postsecondary education. In 2010-2011 seven AMAC swimmers will compete for Canadian and American universities on full or partial scholarships.

The 2011 world championships will feature all five aquatic disciplines – swimming, water polo, diving, open water, and synchronized swimming – and 22 countries will come to compete. Portions of this championship will most likely serve as part of the qualifying for the 2012 Summer Olympics. I'd like to pass on my best to both Tianna and Peter for a successful event. I am confident we will hear many good things from them in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore

Government Accountability

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I reflect on what has gone on in this province since December of 2006, I have to say it is very disappointing. During the last leadership race our now-Premier and his opponents started down the socialist path of tax more and spend more. With the new royalty framework they promised to increase taxes and increase spending, a promise they kept to our detriment. They now declare loudly that it is a great time to spend on infrastructure, but they still fail to apologize for the billions that they blew when it was not a good time to spend.

A month before they entered the March 2008 election they announced $1.2 billion in vote-buying schemes on top of signing an unaffordable $4.4 billion contract with the teachers to fund their share of the unfunded pension liability. It typified this government's cavalier attitude towards taxpayers: spend now and have our children pay later.

Not long after the election the Premier and his cabinet colleagues gave themselves a massive wage increase, setting in motion a demand by all other public employees. Once again, this is leadership of the poorest quality. They say that those who don't learn from history are doomed to repeat it.

My question to the Premier would be: is there a country in which central government has worked? Of course not. But this government willfully ignores the painful lessons of history.

What about free speech? They have a zero-tolerance policy on MLAs who speak out on behalf of Albertans. Those who do are kicked out. Their culture of silence extends beyond the confines of the caucus room and into our valued public institutions, health care being the worst. Their centralization and consolidation of power and money have undermined the Alberta advantage. We have seen legislation which grants the government arbitrary authority to shred contracts and violate landowner rights without full compensation or recourse to the courts.

Mr. Speaker, only in Alberta could we survive as long as we have with such an incompetent and fiscally irresponsible government. Any other province would have gone broke a long time ago.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. We're on petitions.

Mr. Mason: Petitions, yes, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Mason: I have a petition that I would like to present. It reads as follows:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government to provide full funding to open the urgent care and family practice sections of the East Edmonton Health Centre no later than March 1, 2011.

The petition has 95 signatures, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have approximately a thousand signatures on a petition that reads:

We, the undersigned... [wish] the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to consider increasing the funding to the Ministry of Education so that sustainable and adequate funding is provided to address the needs of every student, every day, no exceptions.

Thank you very much.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Bill 208

Health Statutes (Canada Health Act Reaffirmation) Amendment Act, 2011

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to request leave to introduce Bill 208, the Health Statutes (Canada Health Act Reaffirmation) Amendment Act, 2011.

Bill 208 is substantial legislation to secure public health care in Alberta. The bill interprets the Canada Health Act to ensure that key principles such as comprehensiveness, universality, accessibility, and portability, vital to all Albertans are strengthened. It would amend several Alberta acts in doing this. The provisions of this bill address what Albertans are really saying they want, things the NDP caucus heard in its health care hearings, with meaningful content and not vague platitudes.

This bill would help ensure that the mess we're seeing with health care services now in Alberta will not happen again. These provisions include an explicit prohibition on extra billing. It would ensure that no health facility could provide preferred access to insured services for those who pay. The law already prohibits such preferred access to insured surgical procedures. The bill would extend that protection to all insured health services. It would guarantee access to real long-term care and home care for those who require it.

Mr. Speaker, in recent years important health services have been moved out of many communities, forcing people to go to Edmonton or Calgary for treatment. This bill would require the government to set out which services will be available in regional facilities throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, we need to stop the attack on public health care. Bill 208 expands insured health services by requiring the minister to present to the Legislature a comprehensive plan, including cost estimates, to meet two key objectives to improve health care: first, a prescription drug program that would ensure that access to drugs is not impeded by costs; and second, insured coverage for all dental services, except for cosmetic dental services, for those under 18 years of age or over 64 years of age.

An effective public health service would ensure that services are not only publicly funded but, as much as possible, publicly delivered as well. This bill would ensure that within five years all insured surgical procedures would be delivered in public or not-for-profit facilities.

The sustainability of our health system has been threatened by the lack of planning for infrastructure, capital spending, and human resources. Bill 208 would establish a health planning council so that planning is co-ordinated with clear timelines.

Finally, the bill would make the health care system more accountable by bringing transparency to the health budget and ensuring that the public is consulted through elected regional health advisory bodies.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is about the health services Albertans need and deserve.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Tailings Ponds Reclamation Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

3:10

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would move for leave to introduce a bill, that being Bill 209, the Tailings Ponds Reclamation Statutes Amendment Act, 2011.

Mr. Speaker, tailings ponds are a picture worth a thousand words of the struggle between developing Alberta's energy sector in the oil sands and environmental protection and stewardship. Given that, trillions of words are now across the world showing Alberta with huge, huge tailings ponds and more being added.

The government has created directive 074 through the ERCB to set out expectations and requirements on reducing existing and reducing the creation of additional tailings ponds. Bill 209 is designed to complement that, to strengthen the direction of it, and to close some of the loopholes that exist. One of the things that it does is require that the ERCB must prepare a report on directive 074 and include such things as every instance of an operator failing to meet the reduction of fluid tailings stipulated in directive 074; every instance where a project has significant changes to its overall tailings planned management under directive 074; any amendment granted by the board to a plan for a dedicated disposal area, an overall tailings management plan, or an annual tailings management plan, and the reasons for granting that amendment; as well as any instance where an operator has failed to meet or to submit a tailings management plan. And that includes dates that go along with each of those.

Amending the Oil Sands Conservation Act. Bill 209, the Tailings Ponds Reclamation Statutes Amendment Act, 2011, also sets out that there would be a report on directive 074 which would be delivered to the minister responsible and tabled in the Assembly. As part of that it would include that there would be no amendment, including repeal, Mr. Speaker, to directive 074 that could be made without the board publishing a notice of any proposed changes on a public website and the minister's departmental website, that the notice would comply with various parts of the section. Specifically, what I'm looking for there is that there would be a publication of the proposed amendment, that there would be a period that is set out very clearly for the public to give reaction to the proposed amendment, and that there would be a very clear closing date for the public feedback session as well as any other information that the board considers, and that those comments would then be reported to the minister with recommendations on what changes the board considers appropriate.

The last two points. There's also a very specific section on noncompliance, which requires that no amendment or waiver to the phase-in sequence of the reduction in fluid tailings or to the overall tailings management plan by an operator would be granted unless the operator can demonstrate extraordinary circumstances or undue hardship. That's trying to close one of those loopholes I was talking about. As well, it requires that any information submitted by an operator concerning compliance with directive 074 may be made public by the board itself.

I'm very proud of this bill, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to debating it in the fall session. As I said, I move first reading of Bill 209.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 209 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of my responses to Written Question 2 and Written Question 19, both raised by the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

For Written Question 2 I was pleased to indicate that all groups that have previously received funding through the Wild Rose program are indeed eligible to apply to the community initiatives program.

For Written Question 19 I was pleased to correct the member's error regarding the amount of government funding provided and, further, to direct her to the Alberta Creative Hub corporation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As minister responsible for housing and homelessness in this province I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of a recent Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness report. The report is titled Ending Homelessness in Medicine Hat and clearly outlines how the people of Medicine Hat can be proud of their community's collaborative work to foster, leverage, and deliver Housing First support to those most in need of help and, of course, with the province's assistance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to table the appropriate number of copies of 157 letters of support for the upgrading and modernization of Trochu Valley school. The letters are all in support of that project. This is also a project that is the number one priority of the Golden Hills school division and also the number one priority of myself.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today, three on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition and two on behalf of myself. I'm tabling on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition five copies of a letter from Terri Reuser, a nurse subjected to bullying and intimidation forcing her on sick leave and out of her work, and also copies of letters to Dr. Kevin Taft and Mr. Harry Chase thanking them for their extraordinary service to Albertans, this House, and the Alberta Liberal caucus.

On behalf of myself I am tabling five copies of letters from Michelle Tyslau and Sheryl Trimble, who are both upset about the education cuts, and in the case of Sheryl she will be losing her job.

I'm also tabling five copies of letters on behalf of Brent Harris from Calgary and Ann McLaughlin from Edmonton, who are more than upset about the clear-cutting that is happening in the Castle special area. Certainly, for someone who has spent the last 43 years recreating in that area, I too am more than upset.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling e-mails from the following individuals who have taken the time to write to us about their concerns for the future of education in our great province: Tina Smith, Charlotte Moller, Carol Sparks, Julie Nicholls, Leslie Chapman, and Ken Yasenchuk. I do have the appropriate number of copies.

I also am tabling letters from the following individuals who shared their concerns about our health care system with us. Those are Heather Millington, Sandra Caines, Kristine Wretham, and Caron McBride.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I am so glad you recognized me, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of my response to the questions raised during the review of Employment and Immigration's estimates in the Standing Committee on the Economy meeting which took place on March 14, 2011.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. First, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter received by the Alberta NDP opposition from Nicole Thulien, who is in grade 8 in Veteran school. Nicole is concerned that provincial education budget cuts will mean the school will have to teach three grades in one classroom next year, and she's concerned that the quality of education at Veteran school will suffer if it loses any more of its teachers.

As well, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of postcards received by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood signed by constituents who want to ensure that Catholic education in Alberta is preserved and that the government provides "adequate, predictable and sustainable funding for the education of . . . our children, without any dependency on fundraising by parents or children."

Then, thirdly, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of postcards received by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood signed by constituents who are urging the government to reverse the funding cut to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Weadick, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, responses to questions raised by Dr. Taft, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and Ms Notley, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, on April 12, 2011, in Department of Advanced Education and Technology main estimates debate.

3:20

The Speaker: Hon. members, at the point at which Ministerial Statements was introduced today and prior to the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs rising, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre rose on a point of order. I know what the point of order is going to be. I would like to sum up this matter and deal with it with the concluding statements that I make, so brief comments, please.

Point of Order

Advance Notice of Ministerial Statements

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much for recognizing me. I appreciate that the Speaker has been able to give me a little bit of advice. Aside from a direct citation, I can say from long experience in this House that I believed it to be protocol at best and good manners at the very least that ministers doing a ministerial statement would provide a copy of that statement to the Official Opposition and, one would hope, to other opposition members. Today the Official Opposition was notified there would be a ministerial statement done by the minister of housing, but when we requested it, we were told it would not be provided.

Our problem, Mr. Speaker, is that we do not have the same amount of resourcing available to us. It's very hard for us to assign members or staff to be writing a response to a ministerial statement when we don't know what the content of it is, we don't know the tone of it, we don't know the direction of it. It makes it very difficult for us, and our staff is already stressed trying to accommodate being asked to do many different things. So this caused an additional stress in our caucus staff today that we, frankly, just didn't need. There is no database of Speaker's rulings that I could access, so I prevailed directly on the institutional memory of the Speaker himself, if he could give us a reference or provide some clarity in this matter.

I would say that at the very least it's good manners to provide us. It doesn't cost the members anything to provide a statement of what they're going to present. To not do so I just found unnecessarily churlish.

Thank you.

Mr. Denis: I'll be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member's comments about good manners. I know she always endeavours to utilize good manners herself.

Beauchesne's 349 says, "It is the tradition and a courtesy for Ministers to advise their opposition critics," as we did, "when it is intended to make a ministerial statement in the House." It also says, "Nevertheless, failure to adhere to this [procedure] does not prevent a Minister from making a statement." Well, Mr. Speaker, we did advise at 9:13, as the member mentioned. We did receive the member's call at roughly 1 o'clock. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo had phoned over. We did indicate what the subject of the statement was.

I also refer you to the procedural orientation manual, page 18, section 6.

Ministers may make statements or announcements under this heading. As a courtesy, the Minister's office or Executive Council usually provides a copy to the Opposition Leader prior to the commencement of the day's sitting.

It says "usually." It doesn't say that they shall.

A Member of the Official Opposition, by convention, is entitled to a three-minute response, which they gave. Again, it says "usually provides." It doesn't say "is required to provide" or "shall provide."

I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that I mean no ill will to this member or the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. I want to commend the member's comment on good manners, which she always follows, and I would like to apologize for any inconvenience to her.

The Speaker: Just a couple of brief comments. This matter did come up in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta as long ago as 1984, when the then Speaker, Mr. Amerongen, said:

It's not a matter that I could deal with as being a matter of right. It would perhaps be something which falls [far] short of that. I don't think there's any requirement in the Standing Orders that that be done. I would have to leave it to the good sense of the members involved.

That was said in 1984.

However, on October 4, 1993, the following was stated by the then Deputy Premier and then Government House Leader:

It is the intent of the government . . . that in essence we would like to have delivered from members of our Executive Council to the Leader of the [Official] Opposition a copy of such ministerial statements as much in advance as we possibly can. Our definition of "as much in advance as we possibly can" is normally in the area of 45 minutes.

By coincidence, that Deputy Premier and Government House Leader is the person standing before you now. That was a statement made 18 years ago, in 1993.

In the most recent documentation, the procedural manual that we put out to all members on procedural orientation, the recent copy of which was published in the fall of 2009, on page 18 it deals with the daily Routine under the subject matter of ministerial statements, identified as section 6.

Ministers may make statements or announcements under this heading. As a courtesy, the Minister's office or Executive Council usually provides a copy to the Opposition Leader prior to the commencement of the day's sitting. A Member of the Official Opposition, by convention, is entitled to a three-minute response to every Ministerial Statement.

Now, these are statements we've used by convention in our House going back to 1993, so all the stuff that comes out of all these learned journals that have been published around the world, please remember, while important, is of a secondary nature to the rules we make in this Assembly for ourselves. It's just good courtesy and civility and being nice to one another. That's all.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 20

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Yesterday I made it very clear on behalf of the Alberta Liberal caucus that we were very supportive of Bill 20, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011, which extends the coverage of benefits, particularly for carcinogens, cancer-causing agents, from professional firefighters now to volunteer firefighters. It's a very good concept, and we're very supportive of it.

Mr. Chair, I would like to emphasize the importance of further extending this coverage, and that is to all first responders, whether they be the police on site who secure the scene, whether they're the paramedics that provide the backup. These individuals, whether they're professionals or the volunteers that support the police or the firemen, should receive similar coverage because they are on the same site, experiencing the same potential threats. I made that point, and I'd like to emphasize that point.

A second point that I wish to see at some point further to where Bill 20 has left off is the establishment of counselling for firefighters and not just for firefighters, whether they're volunteer or professional, but for all first responders in terms of posttraumatic stress syndrome counselling. A number of individuals, because of the experiences they have, whether it's pulling a victim out of a burning building or responding to a horrendous accident, are traumatized by the repeated experience. We saw this with I think it was the volunteer department out of Boyle on highway 63, that could no longer take the experience of the number of fatalities and the carnage experienced on highway 63. So I would like to see posttraumatic stress syndrome covered, counselling provided, as it is for all armed forces members and as it is for members of the RCMP.

In passing along the equivalent compensation and recognition for volunteer firefighters, the majority of whom – the number that the minister provided yesterday was approximately 10,000. He mentioned that there are 3,500 professionals in Alberta's cities and approximately 10,000 volunteers who risk their lives and provide a wonderful service in a variety of ways in rural jurisdictions.

There is a bit of a problem, Mr. Chair, and I want to address that problem. In the rural circumstances it's reasonable to assume that a number of these volunteer firefighters are farmers, and it is reasonable to assume that a number of these volunteer firefighters are also paid farm workers because they're in that area and providing the service. The shame, I would suggest the disgrace is that if these paid farm workers are hurt while helping to recover from an accident scene or if they are hurt while fighting a fire or providing emergency service, they will be covered. However, on the paid farms, the factory farms that they work, they don't have that same type of workmen's compensation. So they are considered, basically, second-class citizens. This is the only province that does not recognize the need for compensation for paid farm workers.

I do not know whether Kevan Chandler, who died in a silo on a factory farm, volunteered for the Black Diamond or Turner Valley fire department. But I am aware and I want to thank the Member for Foothills-Rocky View and a teaching colleague friend of mine, who actually ran against the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, and that's Herb Coburn, who lives out in Springbank, for putting together a fundraiser that helped the widow of Kevan Chandler.

Farm workers and their families, when they're injured or killed, should not be dependent on charity. They are doing a job, a valued job, and they need to be covered by workmen's compensation.

To summarize, Mr. Chair, we need to extend the type of compensation that Bill 20 provides to volunteer firefighters to all first responders, whether they be police or paramedics; we need to recognize the need for volunteer firefighters, police, and paramedics to have posttraumatic stress syndrome counselling and support from the WCB; and thirdly, whether they work on a volunteer fire department or not, farm workers must be recognized for their contribution and receive workmen's compensation.

Mr. Chair, it is a disgrace that in this wonderful country we are the only province that does not provide compensation for paid farm workers. That has to change. Whether it becomes Bill 21 in the fall or any other number, I hope to see it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'll be brief. This is a good-news story for those people who volunteer in our firefighting departments throughout this province. It extends them workmen compensation benefits that would be extended to a regular "firefighter" or person who's actively engaged in the line of duty, which is exactly what these people are. They are people we need to cover because they're doing a valuable service to us, and they should be recognized in kind.

I applaud the minister for bringing this forward. I hope he can look at other avenues to extend WCB coverage in like circumstances to people who deserve to be covered, of course, that goes without saying, the people who are paid farm workers, and the really fairly simple notion that if you're doing work on a farm or an industrial farm, you should be covered. It's not too hard to follow the logic along with that. Sometimes the mental gymnastics that I see being used by this government to get out of funding that option is actually borderline ridiculous.

Nevertheless, I think this is a good-news story today, talking about the extension of benefits to our volunteer firefighters. Hopefully, common sense will prevail on other situations that are similar to this, and we'll see dignity restored to many people in this province. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to this very important bill. Before I make my remarks, I have to comment on the remarks made by the Member for Calgary-Varsity. Perhaps I should have spent more time briefing him, as my critic, on the content of this bill. I thought it was abundantly obvious that the reason that this presumptive cancer legislation was extended to firefighters, first to full-time professional and now to part-time volunteer professional firefighters, is because of the fact that scientific evidence that is available clearly shows that these firefighters are exposed to chemicals, to substances, to agents, to molecules that appear to have a causal relationship with the development of the 14 cancers which are now covered by this bill.

The reason they're exposed to it is because they actually enter fire, enter where the combustion takes place, and are exposed to the smoke and to the combustion at very high temperatures. No other profession at this point has the scientific evidence that can show us that, indeed, their profession exposes them to such agents. Hence, police officers and paramedics, obviously, are not in a position that is similar to this, but if the member has any evidence or scientific data that indicates that they are, I will be the first one that would gladly look at it.

Today, Mr. Chairman, I rise to respond to the comments put forward yesterday in the Assembly regarding Bill 20, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011. I have to tell you that I was extremely gratified to hear the positive comments and support for this bill from my colleagues on both sides of this Assembly. The 10,000 part-time volunteer firefighters serving today in Alberta deserve the same level of support from the WCB and the same coverage as their full-time counterparts enjoy. We are pleased to be able to bring this proposed change forward.

Bill 20 proposes to extend WCB coverage for 14 presumptive cancers to volunteer firefighters throughout Alberta. They risk everything to protect their neighbours and their communities, so it makes sense that we back them with solid compensation coverage in the event that they fall ill as a result of their work. That's what really matters. At the end of the day verbal support for firefighters with cancer goes only so far; actions speak much louder. What they also need is financial support and peace of mind for themselves and, obviously, their families at a crucial time, and that's what we are offering here by this Bill 20.

Mr. Chair, I want to address the question that arose yesterday surrounding cost. That's always very important. Cost for any claims that might arise should any of our volunteer firefighters, unfortunately, develop cancer as a result of their work would be paid by the WCB, just like any other claim. There is no cost to the taxpayers of Alberta. WCB premiums for volunteer firefighters are already paid by their employers, which are the municipalities where they work.

The changes to the WCB coverage contained in Bill 20 are in keeping with what some jurisdictions in Canada have already done. We do not expect that the premiums for municipalities will be affected by providing volunteer firefighters with the same coverage as their full-time counterparts. In fact, both the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, Mr. Chairman, passed resolutions urging this government to do exactly what Bill 20 proposes to do.

At the end of the day this is not about dollars and cents. This is about protecting those who are running towards danger while most of us are running away from it.

Further, Mr. Chairman, on the question of the WCB's awareness of this proposal my answer is: yes, the WCB most definitely is aware of Bill 20. I can assure you that many of them actually are listening to us as we're speaking today. Consultations have been held with the WCB to ensure it was involved every step of the way. There is no way to know how many volunteer firefighters are going to qualify for this particular coverage. Of course, my sincere hope is that no firefighter ever qualifies for this coverage because that would mean that they haven't developed cancer.

The question yesterday regarding farm workers is somewhat outside of the realm of this bill. It's not unusual for some members to venture into matters that are totally irrelevant to the topic of discussion. I have to tell you that this proposal simply seeks to extend the same coverage for 14 presumptive cancers that already exist for full-time firefighters to volunteer firefighters. This is done not only because it is the right thing to do, but it's as a result of a number of new studies that point to a strong relationship between firefighters and what they do and the development of certain types of cancer.

Mr. Chair, I value the effort of Alberta's farm and ranch workers as much as anyone. However, Agriculture and Rural Development recently announced the establishment of a new farm safety council, that is working to improve health and safety on farms and ranches, including representatives from all sides of this issue.

There was also a comment from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I believe, about whether we should be extending this coverage to other professions, much like the Member for Calgary-Varsity has indicated, that might come into contact with harmful substances. Mr. Chairman, the occupational health and safety legislation sets out limits for toxic contaminants such as lead, cadmium, and magnesium. Workers should not be exposed to levels that exceed the limits. If workers' exposure may be higher than the limit, then control measures are required to protect them.

Finally, Mr. Chair, regarding coverage for paramedics for post-traumatic stress I can only say that today's bill is not the end of the process of continually improving WCB coverage for workers in Alberta. We're always seeking ways to improve coverage and respond to new research and are already open to further discussion with other professions. Having been myself involved in the capacity as a first responder in a fatal accident, I can tell you that indeed it does affect the persons that are involved. I am open to entering into discussions with the first-responder professions. These people are our friends and our neighbours. That is why it is especially important and gratifying for me to hear our rural members voice their support and, in fact, lead this drive.

I have to tell you that the Member for Rocky Mountain House has definitely been very active on this file in promoting the extension of this coverage to volunteer firefighters, and I would like to thank him right now for his leadership on this particular file. He has kept my feet to the fire and definitely advocated on their behalf behind the scenes. We all admire and respect our volunteers, like the member does, and we all want to do whatever we possibly can, Mr. Chairman, for them in terms of proper compensation coverage should they fall ill as a result of serving the communities.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank again all members of this Legislature for their support of this bill. I hope you all vote in favour of it. I have to tell you that your firefighters, particularly in the rural communities, communities that are primarily served by volunteer firefighters, will be thankful. Aside from the fact that it is the right thing to do, I have to tell you that it is the smart thing to do. We all know that attracting and retaining volunteer professional firefighters is a challenge. This will be one piece towards assisting municipalities in their continuous effort to attract and retain firefighters.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to this bill for the first time. I want to join what I'm sure is the majority of other speakers who've risen to speak about it in providing our support for the decision that was made to expand presumptive coverage to volunteer firefighters. I think that the concept of presumptive coverage is exceptionally important in the world of workers' compensation because the morass of establishing your case for complex compensable injuries is incredibly stressful and challenging to injured workers. Those few workers who benefit from the presumption, limited as it is in this province, enjoy a tremendous benefit.

There's no question that those people who commit to first responder work in the form of being firefighters are people to whom we owe a great deal of gratitude and our support. The rationale that's come forward in terms of including volunteer firefighters I think is certainly a very wise consideration because it's very clear that these folks are actually getting similar if not greater levels of exposure to the very hazards which underlie the decision to provide for this particular presumption.

So I congratulate the government, and I also congratulate the firefighters themselves for the good work that they have done and that they continue to do on behalf of their members in terms of advocating for their members' health and safety. I do think and believe and hope, anyway, that the successes that the firefighters are able to achieve for their members may well at least start to teach an otherwise recalcitrant government about the nature of health and safety and chemical exposure and gradual, progressive injury in the workplace such that other professionals may, hopefully, at some point experience similar levels of success in establishing presumptive levels.

Because this is, you know, an important issue, I think it is actually wise to talk about other people who might be covered by this kind of presumption. I think that that is within the ambit of this bill because we're talking about the whole concept of presumptive coverage. I think one member has talked about the issue of stress and posttraumatic stress as it relates not only to firefighters but other first responders and the degree to which we are able to provide that kind of support to people who are typically forced to deal with very traumatic situations as part of their work.

I remember that there used to be a principle in workers' compensation law which was referred to as voluntary assumption of risk and the idea was: well, you signed up for this dangerous work; you knew when you signed up for it, so you're responsible for the greater hazards that you're subjected to. Certainly, by moving to this type of presumptive situation, we are starting to chip away at that very antiworker and very old-fashioned legal concept, which only exists in the most conservative of courtrooms these days. It's an important issue because we have other first responders who also are subjected to tremendous amounts of stress and, quite reasonably, suffer from forms of stress and post-traumatic stress, whether we're talking about paramedics, whether we're talking about police officers, whether we're talking about health care workers.

It may not be something that the minister is aware of, but in fact the people most likely to suffer from a violent attack in their workplace are not actually police officers, are not actually firefighters, are not actually . . . [interjection] One might think it would be the NDP opposition, but we move fast, and we've avoided getting a lot of contact. They are, in fact, health care workers. Health care workers in this province and in every province are statistically, without question, far and away the most likely to be the victims of violent offences in their workplace. People who work in emergency rooms are commonly subjected to extremely stressful situations where they find themselves feeling as though their life is actually at risk and where also they are forced to see other people's lives very much at risk, and that stress level is very common.

Interestingly, the people most likely to suffer from some type of injury in the workplace are people who work in a form of psychiatric care or in long-term care, and in that case the victim is most likely a female health care worker, and the perpetrator inadvertently is mostly likely to be male and above a certain age. It's usually associated, you know, with senility of some form, so it's a function of their illness. Nonetheless, that's what the statistics show. That's who is getting injured. That's the severity of their injury. That's the consistency of their injury. Yet they have to fight tooth and nail to get workers' compensation benefits in this province.

If they actually suffer from some type of emotional reaction as a result of being victims of this type of violence, they had better have themselves one heck of a good lawyer because there is no presumption that works in their favour. Those people, who make up a huge number of claimants and potential claimants to workers' compensation, go uncompensated under our current system. That's one of the places where we need to look at extending some type of presumptive coverage.

Now, the minister said: well, there's actually no evidence to suggest that other professionals are subjected to particular hazards in their workplace. Well, I will tell you as someone who worked in this area for many years that that's simply untrue. I mean, I've talked about violence in the workplace, but there are piles and piles and piles of studies out there about the hazards associated with working with a number of different chemicals that, again, are commonly found within our health care settings, the hazards associated with working with a number of different chemicals associated with our oil and gas sector, the hazards associated with working at a number of different jobs and tasks within the construction industry. There are buckets of studies out there that show that there is a clear relationship between particular occupations and particular diseases as a result of what people are exposed to.

This government has stubbornly refused to acknowledge many, many, many of those cases. The minister suggested that when it comes to chemicals and people who are exposed to chemicals who work in other professions, they can enjoy the benefit of the limits which exist in health and safety. Now, that's interesting because, of course, we've seen a lot of evidence about how we're not effectively enforcing our health and safety rules across the province in a broad range of worksites. That's one thing.

Another thing is that even where we do find that a worker has been exposed to chemicals in excess of what the regulations suggest are optimum or legal, that person still has to go to the Workers' Compensation Board and hire a lawyer because, of course, we have no bloody legal aid in this province and spend tens of thousands of dollars on medical support in order to establish that that illegal exposure to a certain chemical is connected to the illness that they suffer. There's absolutely no presumption that if you are exposed to an illegal amount of a particular toxic chemical, it will be assumed that the illness that you subsequently get is related to that exposure. That doesn't exist. You can show illegality on the part of the employer and still have to spend tens of thousands of dollars on legal fees to get the Workers' Compensation Board to accept your illness as being something that is deserving of compensation.

The other thing that doesn't exist within our system is that we have ridiculously easy limits when it comes to chemical exposure. Most other jurisdictions have much more rigorous limits and bans on chemical exposure than does the province of Alberta. One of the things that we don't do a good job of is looking at the cumulative effects of multiple chemical exposure. Does that result in the amount of chemical exposure that a person can tolerate having to be reduced if they're exposed to it in concert with two or three other chemicals at the same time? Other jurisdictions have done a lot of work on that issue. Alberta has not. We really, really do have a lot of work to do in this area in Alberta.

The only other area that I'll try and mention very quickly is the area of repetitive strain. Again, in other jurisdictions we have presumptive and quasi-presumptive pieces of legislation that outline that for certain people engaged in certain occupations and certain tasks, when they subsequently suffer from a variety of different repetitive strain injuries and diseases, it will be assumed that that repetitive strain injury or disease is related to their work. We have these types of presumptive and quasi-presumptive relationships in other jurisdictions across the country, but once again we don't have them in Alberta.

Once again, we have a number of workers in Alberta who suffer from injury in the workplace as a result of repeated exposure to unsafe conditions and struggle to have that injury recognized by the Workers' Compensation Board, an organization which at this point, frankly, ought to consider renaming itself the workers' denial board or something like that. The WDB we could call it here in Alberta. It's actually not the workers' denial board; it's the employers' denial board. So we could call it the EDB, I guess, because that's really how it functions in this province and has done ever since we had a judicial inquiry actually recommending some wholesale changes to how our workers' compensation system works, which this government ignored, around 2004, 2005 I think it was.

Anyway, I digress, but it does all relate to the issue of how well we take care of those people who go to work every day in this province and expect to be able to do so safely and to come home to their families – to their husbands, to their wives, to their kids – and to do so in one piece and healthy and able to live their lives. We have a lot of work to do on that in this province. We are not doing a good job of it at all in this province. While I am very pleased for this particular piece of legislation and, once again, very pleased on behalf of the firefighters, who greatly deserve this recognition, and I don't want to detract at all from the success that they've achieved here, I think that they would agree with me and join with me in the call for this government to do much more for the vast majority of workers throughout Alberta.

With that, I will take my seat. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: I thank you for acknowledging me. I will speak, Mr. Chair, one more time. Again, I've said on the record here in committee that this is generally a good-news story, but after listening to some of the comments by the member from the third party, I too would like to offer some support for those comments.

There are numerous other fields where we should be using presumptions that extend coverage to many other people in this province. The member brought up numerous other activities, whether they're in farming, whether with oil and gas workers working with chemicals, whether they're with construction workers working with paints and paint thinners, countless examples of things that other jurisdictions have recognized where their work has contributed to illnesses in certain cases. Often these are common-sense linkages that other jurisdictions have taken for granted.

Another point that the hon. member made is perfectly correct. If most people who become sick and find themselves in a situation where they're given a denial by the Workers' Compensation Board, or the employers' noncompensation board, whatever you want to call it, they have no other means of getting to be heard unless they hire a high-priced lawyer. We all know that if rejected by the board, many people, because the price of hiring a lawyer is exorbitant not only here but elsewhere, effectively don't get justice with the WCB. I think we've made a pretty strong case here. In fact, a case has been made for quite some time in this province that the WCB is in shambles. It doesn't protect workers to the extent necessary to give them the rights and the compensation they need to carry out their daily lives, and that system should be looked at.

I'd like to just thank her for those comments and add that I think we need to get back to some of those principles. If we're going to have a Workers' Compensation Board, let's do it for the protection of workers, not the protection of employers.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. We'll move on from there.

4:00

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I also would like to speak in support of Bill 20. I'd like to applaud the minister for including the volunteer firefighters under workers' compensation for cancer-related illnesses. I remember when the Member for Calgary-North Hill brought forward the bill to cover firefighters for cancer. I think this should be extended, as we heard other members speak, to farm workers who work with chemicals like pesticides and herbicides and construction workers, too, who work with paints and you name it. It comes to mind that people working with asbestos had lung cancer as well. I think this coverage should be extended to more workers who may suffer from work-related illnesses and cancers.

Once again, I wholeheartedly support this bill because it will encourage more volunteers to come forward to be firefighters and maybe be in other fields, too. I think it's a step in the right direction, but it's not going all the way. We should be extending this coverage to more and more workers.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 20 agreed to]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 16

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move third reading of Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011.

It's been a very good debate, and I want to thank all members that have spoken to the bill for their comments. I believe this bill is a good piece of governance that is needed to ensure that both government and industry continue to operate efficiently and effectively. When it comes to energy development and energy utilities, it is important that we keep our rules up to date. Our economy and communities throughout our province depend on it. All Albertans depend on the agencies of government to have the authority to carry out their mandates.

Bill 16 is a responsible bill that updates a broad range of rules related to energy development and the operation of our utility sectors. In particular, this bill will ensure that the Energy Resources Conservation Board has the authority to regulate underground coal gasification. Currently legislation only refers to mining as a means to extract coal from the ground. Other provisions will remove duplication in approvals for the use of large amounts of energy for industrial operations and will enable the ERCB to make regulations and to approve amendments to coal permits in line with other industries that the ERCB regulates.

The functioning of a fair and efficient electricity market will also be strengthened and the quality of service standards will be harmonized between electric utilities and gas utilities to ensure that customers benefit from quality services across utilities.

In closing, these are necessary legislative amendments that provide our regulatory agencies the necessary authority to continue to operate efficiently and effectively. I thank all members of the House for their comments, and I look forward to the final passage of this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise and discuss further Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011. As the hon. member indicates, this bill is working with a variety of different acts and tries to pull together various themes, various things to deal with the production of in situ coal, deal with industrial development permits as well as looking at our Electric Utilities Act and the Alberta Utilities Commission and how it operates in our daily lives.

4:10

With all acts that act as omnibus acts, that tend to pull things together, it leaves a person on the opposition benches looking at it with, as I said earlier, a healthy dose of skepticism and concern. I will address those, and hopefully these will come to naught, and everything that the government says is going to come as a result of these bills will be for the betterment of the Alberta people in the long run. I am hopeful that that will be the case. Nevertheless, as it is my sworn duty as a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, I am under not only an obligation but a sworn duty to make some of those concerns noted and have the government prove its case over time. Hopefully, people will look back at this speech and say: well, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo was a little off that day, and the government was right once again. Nevertheless, it's better to be often wrong and with an opinion and to have concerns noted than to have not noted them at all.

So here we go on some of these things. If I look at this overarching goal and direction of the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, it's tying on a whole bunch of new brave initiatives going down here in Alberta. Of course, we have an abundance of coal that is still part of our legacy and, actually, probably will be used at some point in time. This is a new regulatory framework that is trying to bring into our regulatory systems the use of in situ coal schemes that can produce synthetic coal, gas, and liquids through in situ coal gasification and liquefaction. That sounds, you know, like a reasonable thing, possibly, for the government to be involved in.

There is a difficult thing when we start throwing around terms like clean coal. That stuff is often an oxymoron. We know full well at this time that much of the stuff that we do to clean and scrub coal and to put it to use in whatever fashion is simply not measuring up to what other things are doing out there. It's much cleaner and efficient to burn natural gas. It's much better to of course try and use wind and solar and other things that are available, no doubt, sir, with a higher cost. That is, too, what we always look at: a balanced approach as to what our citizens can afford and what is in fact the right thing to do for the long run. I have no illusions that these are often difficult things to balance. I'd just bring up here that at this time we're putting forward a scheme that looks like it's going to send Alberta down a path of coal development when there are recommendations out there from other jurisdictions saying – I heard an organization say that there should be no more coal-fired electricity plants. You hear that throughout the world, that maybe that day has come and gone.

Now, with technology available like carbon cap and storage does that make things different? I don't know. In Alberta that's another thing we've ventured down the path of, carbon capture and storage. Am I hopeful that this technology will work? Of course I am. God willing and the crick don't rise, this is going to be a very successful endeavour that is not only going to bury emissions for all time in a safe and effective manner but will also allow us to get more of our petroleum resources to the surface. Nevertheless, again, it's not a proven technology. Nothing says that this is going to work one hundred per cent. We're investing an awful lot of money, a lot of our future capital and earnings, into these projects that may not work out.

Other organizations, other pundits, other people with some expertise are saying that this money is better invested in other ways, into, as mentioned earlier, wind and solar and other things that may be in the long run more beneficial to Alberta citizens, maybe to citizens of the world but also even to us in diversifying our economy.

Am I an expert in this? By no means. I just bring that up as an observer of situations that we're doing here in Alberta as well as sort of reviewing some of the commentary that's out there that's of a more global nature, that we have to balance here in Alberta. I'm not sure we're getting that balance correct. This act tends to be carrying us further along on some of these things that I worry about. Hey, like I said earlier, maybe I shouldn't be worrying, but that's what I'm doing.

We've had many changes to our electricity system, the way we've delivered electricity in this province. Roughly 15 years ago we went away from a regulated system, that tended to smooth over some of the imbalances that can be out there when market forces are at play and the consumer is left to deal with the vagaries of the marketplace.

We've moved on from that, and the Alberta citizen has, in my view and I think almost anyone's view, paid higher electricity prices as a result of that change. We even saw this government tacitly agree with that by subsidizing electricity prices for a long time in this province. In fact, it was – I don't know – done for six or seven years as a way to say: "Okay. The citizens are now paying too much for electricity. Let's give them a subsidy." That was done, and I look at that as a tacit admission of things not working out when they privatized the market.

Now we're at a time where you're trying to make that system better, where we've gone now 15 years, and in many ways I look at that and say: yeah, you can't go back to 1995 when you're in 2010. Nevertheless, this is looking at how to make the system that is existing better.

Am I hopeful that this opens up a possibility for us to allow for better oversight of a marketplace that people are skeptical about, where people have been hooked into long-term contracts that have not been in their best interests and have been used to pressure sales by men and women who have strong-armed consumers into signing deals obviously not in their best interests and of that nature? Hopefully, this bill will do that. At the same time, you know, we can't be certain. I just put those concerns on the record.

It has just been brought to our attention that some of this stuff is coming at a time when changes under Bill 16 to unify the gas and electric service standards are seen as helping to move along the harmonization of the regulated option and the default gas supply regulation. This was being discussed at the Alberta Utilities Commission on regulation and harmonization. We note that this report hasn't been released yet. The question that could be raised is: why are we unifying standards, seemingly, in this Bill 16 when we haven't seen the report on unifying regulation from the Utilities Commission? That's another concern that has been flagged to us at this time.

You can see that a lot of my concerns are of a larger nature than just this bill. It's a concern over whether we in this province should be continuing down what looks like a path of utilizing more, not less, coal in our daily needs. It also looks at whether sinking more time, energy, and resources into changing statutes to incorporate carbon capture and storage is wise given the concerns out there. Hey, I hope it works – and a lot of people do – but we've got to be cognizant of the fact that we can't put all our eggs in one basket and that we should look at many ways to diversify the reduction of our fossil fuel emissions, not only through carbon capture and storage. End users of all kinds have got to do their part, and that includes yours truly sitting right here at this desk.

Those are my comments. I appreciate that although I can't point to one specific thing – it's more of a general feeling that there are some nagging issues out there for me – as a member of this Legislature I'm not confident enough yet in this government's direction to give a full sign-off to this bill. Nevertheless, on the God willing and the crick don't rise front, I hope it does work out.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to this bill in third reading. It was unfortunate and due to my 10-minute late arrival last night that I was unable to participate in the bill's discussion at committee. I believe we had a combined amount of about 20 minutes dedicated to it in committee, and we had some amendments we hoped to have considered. However, I guess you've got to take responsibility for showing up 10 minutes late when things get moving really fast around here.

We have some very significant concerns with this bill. The first piece of it, I guess, is that this is something that flows from the regulatory enhancement task force report. This is, you know, a small piece of that, but it is part of it. That task force report raises a number of red flags for members of our caucus in terms of the intentions of this government to proceed in anything bordering on a prudent basis to ensure that future oil and gas development in this province is done in a way that preserves and protects the public interest not only now but in the future.

My concern is that the talk of streamlining is actually talk about enabling and limiting the opportunities for the public to have oversight and also limiting the opportunities for those outside of industry, stakeholders shall I say, to ensure the best outcome for community development and environmental integrity now and in the future.

There's a whole raft of reasons why we would suggest that that's not the way to go, but of course one of them is this whole notion of there being a single regulator that's somehow tasked with the obligation to juggle multiple mandates. The problem becomes that when a regulator is tasked with the obligation to juggle multiple mandates, it starts horse-trading with itself, and it does so without us really understanding how it's doing that. It also does so not necessarily with a clear and consistent set of principles on how it horse-trades with itself.

You end up in a situation where, for instance – I believe it was a couple of days ago – the Minister of Energy was asked about, you know, what we could expect would happen and what assurances we could expect would be in place through the ERCB before the pipeline that breached adjacent to the Lubicon community was allowed to restart. How could we be sure that it would be done safely, and how could we be sure that there was adequate integrity in that pipeline as a whole given its history of breaching, given the history of the company generally speaking, and how could we be sure that the community and the environment were protected before we started putting oil down there again?

The minister responded: well, you know, we're going to do everything we can, but you've got to remember that the ERCB is also responsible for ensuring that such and such a community up north gets adequate energy supply. That's a legitimate consideration. I'm not in any way suggesting that that's not a legitimate consideration, but right there what you see is the example of the regulator horse-trading with itself.
