Now, a further analysis of this situation would have one learn that in Punjab there are over a hundred thousand children – a hundred thousand children – that go to kindergarten to grade 12, so primary education, outside of the state of Punjab but within India. They do that, Mr. Speaker, because they are in search of quality education. What that means for our postsecondary institutions is that now they have access to a new state in India that is hungry for quality education. So they have the ability to go there – and this is a commercial venture – and train teachers from primary school education systems because the people want that.

Mr. Speaker, that sort of knowledge comes about when those that have been working in Asian markets for a number of years come together, when various postsecondary institutions and commercial ventures, when the folks involved in those come together and say: "This is what we have learned. How can we now best ensure that we are advancing the interests of the Alberta public?"

Mr. Speaker, those are just small examples. Education and energy are obviously important.

Agriculture. The agricultural production in countries like India is very different in some ways from the agricultural production in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I'll be the first to profess that I am no expert on agriculture. However, what I do know is that the governments of these countries are moving forth to find new and innovative agricultural techniques. When they do so, they are knocking on our door and saying: how can you help us in this area? Now, on a council such as this perhaps you have a person, an individual, who has an in-depth understanding of Alberta's agricultural landscape who can assist such institutions.

The Premier's mission to India was discussed a little earlier. Mr. Speaker, let me say this. For the first time in Alberta's history Alberta and the state of Punjab signed a memorandum of understanding – for the first time in our history – during that visit to India. That is a powerful and profound first step in developing, I think, very financially as well as culturally rewarding relationships for both of our jurisdictions.

Now, when the whole world recognizes that nations like India, China, Japan, and Korea have incredible wealth and value to add to the rest of the world, what happens is that you have an abundance of western countries, European countries, and institutions knocking on the door of Asian companies, postsecondaries, and governments and saying: open the doors to us. So, Mr. Speaker, when you have an abundance of organizations knocking on their door wanting to forge relationships with them, you have to set yourself apart. By having an Asia advisory council that is empowered by legislation, that's a small gesture of friendship, a small step in friendship that we are taking, that sets us apart from other jurisdictions.

With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, when you have discussions such as this and you mock this, this does not send the right message to the folks we want to work with more in the future. I don't think that's appropriate. This is about new friendships and old friendships. This is about us moving forth together, saying: how are we going to ensure that we find win-win solutions for all of our jurisdictions, solutions that work for the folks of India, China, Japan, and Korea and that work for Alberta? That's what this is about. That's what this is about.

This is a powerful and profound first step in a new stature in our relationship, a new stature to say: we are jurisdictions that take you very seriously. Just as you bow when you meet people from various jurisdictions and, you know, greet people in various languages and traditional greetings, this is our way of saying: we get you. We get you. We understand that relationships in Asia are not just formed by economic interests. They're formed with respect, something that's so often lacking in this very Assembly. Respect. Acceptance. It's easy to say "tolerance." People can tolerate a stone they get in the bottom of their shoe. What we're talking about is acceptance. That's what we stand for on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, acceptance. We stand for the fact that it is the profound strength of diversity that gives us an edge in international relations. When you form the friendships and the relationships first and then have conversations around business, the business comes much easier.

This act is a profound and wonderful gesture of friendship. This says: yes, our institutions have enjoyed wonderful relationships and friendships in the past, and now we will as states – as states – enjoy new friendships on a state-to-state level, Mr. Speaker, not just on an institution-to-institution level, a strategic relationship based on mutual trust, understanding, and friendship, based on acceptance and respect. By putting forth this act, we are putting forth the best of us. We are putting forth our hand in friendship, the best of what the Alberta people believe in, not the minute dialogue that we far too often see in this House.

With that, I think that we are at a wonderful stage in our international relations with many Asian countries. We are taking bold new steps. I am very excited to see how we will capitalize on these new relationships culturally, financially. Mr. Speaker, this is the future. This government, I'm proud to see, is enacting something that will enable us to make great future progress.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much for allowing me to speak to this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose for those very insightful comments. When I had the opportunity to be with Premier Klein on a trade mission and we went to China and visited within China, I remember the reception we got and how important it was to have elected people and people from government.

We took a number of businesses with us. For example, the more interesting one – and I believe he probably ended up with a plant in China – was the person that grows sunflowers and processes them, the Spitz that you see in the stores. A very interesting type, he was along with us. I had the opportunity as a minister to meet with the third in command in agriculture and food in China. One of the very interesting things that he mentioned to me was the fact that to ship food products from Alberta over to China, where the bulk of the people are, was actually cheaper than them raising it in their own country and shipping it across. So I really appreciate that.

I would like to have the hon. member just expand a bit further on the types of businesses and the reception that you got on your trade mission to India.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member has a great understanding of agricultural industries, so perhaps at some point I'd like to further expand on some dialogue that we had with respect to agriculture. One of the dialogues we had in India was around agriculture and food processing. India today has a very large percentage of their crops being grown on soils that are very, very addicted, as they say, to chemicals. This is an area where the central government of India has placed a focus. They are concerned with the high percentage of chemicals being used in growing food in India. Now, it's my understanding that there are some wonderful companies here that have in fact developed organic techniques and technologies that help reduce the soil's dependence on chemicals. That in my eyes seems to be a pretty simple fit.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, you have great issues in India with respect to food transportation and food storage. Now, it's my understanding that these are two areas where Alberta really excels, food transportation and food storage. However, the challenge in India is the infrastructure. In many parts of rural India they don't have the infrastructure to allow, let's say, even tractor-trailers that could store and transport food from one region to another region, that would expand the life of the food. They don't have the ability to take a large tractor-trailer into a village in some parts of rural India where they need to. This is posing some very significant challenges in India because a large percentage of their food actually goes to waste. They're asking us now: "You are a leader in agriculture. How can you help us with these sorts of issues?" That's an area where I believe our two jurisdictions can again find synergies.

One more piece, Mr. Speaker, and that is water. Now, we have some great innovations coming about with respect to water in Alberta. For example, Olds College is working on some very innovative water treatment processes right now. Having an adequate supply of water . . . [Mr. Bhullar's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be able to rise and to speak against Bill 1, the government's Asia Advisory Council Act. I am, as with most of the opposition members, amazed that the government would pick this as their flagship bill and say that the most important thing that we can do is to form a committee in order to go forward. There are a couple of good things about this bill, and I'll start off with that, just to cover the one or two things. I always like to try and look at things first from an optimistic point of view and what it is.

The best thing is the expiry date, section 9. This act expires on December 31, 2014, so it's good that they're only looking at a three-year bill. That's good. The other good thing is that there's no salary for those. They're not going to actually pay them to go on a vacation. They'll just allow them to go on a vacation and pay their expenses, so at least we don't have to pay them to go on a vacation. It's interesting to me, though, that in section 4(5) the chair of the council may serve as a member for the council for more than six consecutive years. I have to ask: why are they putting in an expiry date, yet they have the provisions in here for this to continue on? That's concerning, that the real intent is that they're forming a council here.

It was interesting to hear the government member talk about this wonderful first step. I mean, good heavens, this isn't a first step. This is – I don't know – the first of a continual amount of blunder that we're going to have with the committee. I'm not sure if the government member is aware of the fact that we have five Alberta offices over in Asia now. We had a mission to Korea and Japan on November 4, 2010, that we spent $16,000 on. They had another trade mission to India on November 1 at $87,000; a mission to China and Japan on May 14 of 2010 at $137,000; a mission to India, United Kingdom, and Hong Kong on the 2nd of January 2009, $27,000; a mission to Asia on the 13th of June 2008, for $20,000. So this isn't a first step. This talk about it being this huge hand out in friendship: what I see this as is a huge hand out in friendship to 10 more friends of the PC Party. The government is going to say: "Well, here's my hand of friendship. Would you go on a vacation, all expenses paid, and come back and report?"

That's another ironic thing, Mr. Speaker. If they're going to come and report back to the House, why would they report back on the 30th of June, when for all intents and purposes I don't know a time in history when the House was sitting? Yet the provision in the bill talks about the importance of getting it to the House within 15 days of when it is sitting. Why couldn't they report, you know, on the 1st of March or the 1st of April, when the House could have some value from the report? But they want to report during the summertime, when no one is paying attention, when school vacations are on, June 30, when it's not going to be a big deal. The opposition can't speak up and ask: "What did we get for value? What was the cost of this council?" Again, you have to ask the question: are they going to make the numbers easily available to know what the actual cost is of these individuals going out? I would project that in all likelihood they won't.

The best thing that I could think of when the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo talked about this globe: what I see this as and what I summarize this bill as is a beach ball globe. I'll throw it over there, and they think, "Oh, what fun this game is, that we can bat this back and forth." Then I'll hand one of them a pin and say, "Five dollars to the first one who can pin where Asia is," and, poof, the beach ball will collapse. That's about as much value as this bill has. We're just going to have a little game. The government gets to throw it back and forth, and it's going to collapse, of no value.

You have to ask the question on these Alberta offices that we have in five different areas in Asia – Japan, Hong Kong, China, Taiwan, and Korea – wouldn't it make sense that those would be the people, that they would bring a report together? They're there. They're working. They're in the area. I mean, what we're doing is having a great friendship here of trade committees. Trade missions are great, but that's kind of restrictive whereas if we have a committee: oh, my goodness, we can just be travelling all over Asia and coming back and reporting on June 30, once a year, on what a wonderful time and how uplifting and the wonderful friendships that we've developed.

I mean, I just do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is the role of government. It certainly isn't what I would call a flagship bill. This is a flagship boondoggle of money being spent for no business plan or direction that they have in mind. It's just hard to believe that we would go forward and that this government would be able to bring this bill forward with great pride and vigour and say: "Look what we're going to do. Asia is such an important part of the world." It is an important part. The government has been there. We do have a presence. Why we need an advisory committee is beyond my understanding of the purpose of this.

It's interesting, though. You know, when you look back a year ago, Bill 1 was, in fact, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. The reason I want to talk about the last Bill 1 is because what we seem to see with this government more than anything else is that they are like paramedics flying around in an ambulance trying to run over pedestrians so that they can stop and pick them up and then be heroes when they get them to the emergency room and show that, "Oh, we've got priorities" and get you through there so that they can come and make a member's statement or something and say: look what a great job we did. But what was the reason for the job? "Oh, because of a total boondoggle, where we ran over somebody that was in a sidewalk area." For all intents and purposes they're doing the right thing, but government just creams them out to bring them up.

That's what they did with the oil and gas industry. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am so tired of listening to this government now stand up and say: look what land sales are. I spoke out so adamantly that you have to put A and B for revenue, A being mineral leases and B – this is about Bill 1. That's what we're doing, giving some historical reference on what Bill 1 should be and how this government just continues to put out Bill 1 to try and save what they've blown up previously. They're just blowing up their areas.

When it comes to the Competitiveness Act, they talk and talk about land sales and what a wonderful job they're doing. Why don't they show what land sales did after they brought in the new royalty framework? It devastated our industry. Again, with Bill 1 here, with the Asia advisory committee, what is the purpose of that? Are they going to run over all the work that's being done and then this committee is going to swoop in and say: "Look at what a wonderful repair job. Look at the friendship?"

The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House brought up a very good point. I do understand and see the credibility of having elected people from government go and meet others elected at the government level. That really is where you open up to new regions, new opportunities. Often a business cannot go over there without the government opening up the door and setting up the meeting and saying: "This is an accredited business. This is something that we want to work." But a committee is not going to do that. I know that they're going to argue and say: well, but the committee is going to be the frontrunner. We have many things that are already going on that open up those doors, and we've been doing it in the past. It just seems to me that this is like so many things. This is the government coming to the party late.

There are so many businesses that have been going over to China and Japan and India and Korea, the Philippines, all through that area, and opening up businesses. We're doing fine with that. Now the government wants to swoop in there and get credit and say: oh, look, it's our wonderful committee. [interjection] You do. You literally go in and say: "Look what we've done to the oil and gas industry. Look how great it is." You destroyed it. You ran over them. Then you bring back a new one.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please address the chair and on Bill 1.

Mr. Hinman: I'm sorry, but when we start talking about these things, Mr. Speaker, there's just no question.

Anyway, what we need to do is send this bill to a committee. I'd like to have a notice of amendment to Bill 1. Perhaps I'll sit down while this gets distributed.

The Deputy Speaker: Would the pages please have the amendment distributed to hon. members.

Hon. member, continue on your amendment.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I'd like to move a motion to second reading of Bill 1, that the Asia Advisory Council Act be amended by deleting the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 1, Asia Advisory Council Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

I'm going to explain to them that we already have a committee, and they want to mock this and make this rhetoric: "How much is that going to cost? How much paper is that?" So immediately it's being referred over to a committee that's already being paid to exist. If this is the number one priority of this government, I would think that that would be the number one priority of our Standing Committee on Resources and Environment, where we can actually go through these things and say: "What is the business plan? What is the purpose? What are we going to do?"

This is only a feel-good bill to extend a hand of friendship to 10 PC Party supporters. That is all that I see in this. By referring this over to the standing committee, which already exists, which already meets and gets paid monthly to exist, it would actually perhaps come up with a business plan on what they're really trying to do. Bill 1 is actually, I think, the thinnest bill that the government has brought out this time, which is commendable, that they can actually bring a bill that is that short.

What it talks about here in the preamble of this bill and why this needs to go to the committee to be studied is that it says: "Whereas competitiveness is core to the Government of Alberta's plan to position Alberta for long-term prosperity." Well, actually, this should go to the economic committee because, boy, with their plans and what they've done with health care, with the new royalty framework, with the ambulance service: everything that they've done to date is not about prosperity, and it certainly isn't about quality of life. It's about running people over.

Also: "Whereas the Government of Alberta's international strategy sets the overall course for the Government's engagement internationally with the goal of making Alberta more globally competitive." Wow. That sounds exciting, that we're actually going to go to a competitiveness Olympics of economics and see what we are doing here in Alberta that's preventing us from being able to export. When I think of that, the first thing I think of is: what are we doing in order to advance our exports to Asia? We need a pipeline to the west coast. Is the government engaged in acting in the best way possible to ensure that we have a second opportunity to export our biggest export? That's bitumen and oil from the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo area. No. They're not engaging in that.

Again, I could see if that was to be Bill 1, if it was to say: "You know what? We need to open up a route, an access for our products – agricultural, petroleum, industrial – to get to the west coast to ship things out." Mr. Speaker, they're failing to do those things. What we have is a bill here that is flimsy. There is no content to it. There's no thought on what we're actually going to do to be globally competitive. There's no thought on what we're actually going to do to ensure prosperity for Albertans. How are we going to trade with these individuals? What good is it to go over there and try and sell some oil or gas products when we don't even have a pipeline that we can ship it out with? I think that should be a priority.

Government understood that when they first came together. They built a railroad in order to connect this country. We are an export nation. Alberta is an export province. What are the transportation corridors that we have in place to export our products? More important, how good is that transportation corridor to the west coast, which, really, is our neighbours and the link over to Asia? It's critical. If all we have are north-south lines and roads and transportation, we're kind of limited in that we have to export south. This whole Bill 1 is about Asia. So what are we doing? What are our links to open up to Asia and allow it to get over there?

I've sat on these committees. We have a lot of interesting people bringing forward their views, their ideas, and I think it's a far better position for this government to be in, to have this committee listening to experts and bringing in ideas on how, in fact, we do connect with the Asian market and how we export our products. But to just say that they're going to appoint 10 individuals when they already have . . . [Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: We have the amendment. Those to join the debate on the amendment? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to talk a little bit about why I like this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I forgot about Standing Order 29(2)(a). Do you want to use that or continue on the amendment?

Mr. Anderson: Sure.

The Deputy Speaker: You want the five minutes of comments or questions?

4:20

Mr. Anderson: Sure. I'll ask a question of the member.

Hon. member, I was listening intently to your comments. [interjection] That's right. The one thing that I just don't understand about this government is – I was looking under, for example, section 7 of the Government Organization Act. It says:

A Minister may establish any boards, committees or councils that the Minister considers necessary or desirable to act in an advisory or administrative capacity in connection with any matters under the Minister's administration.

Then it goes on to say:

A board, committee or council established pursuant to this section may, with the approval of the Minister, make rules governing the calling of its meetings, the procedure to be used at its meetings, . . .

So there's an act here under the Government Organization Act that specifically allows the minister involved to set up a committee without needing to pass legislation, without having to waste people's time, in order to cut down on the amount of legislation that's being brought forward. I mean, if we used the same logic as we are now for setting up this committee that the government is using, we would have to establish a committee under every single committee imaginable. I mean, we'd have to use legislation to establish it, and that would be, obviously, a gross waste of time and resources.

I think of the homelessness secretariat, for example. Did we need to pass a piece of legislation to have the homelessness secretariat and the oil sands secretariat? That's not to say that committees aren't important and so forth, but it is to say that you don't need a useless piece of legislation to set one up.

So my question is: why do you think that the government would, I would say, almost abuse the legislative process to bring forward a piece of legislation that is entirely redundant, unnecessary, completely unneeded when they have so many other ways to do it? They could refer it, as your legislation says, to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment so that we could bring in people, experts, that could tell us what we need to do. We wouldn't have to pay an extra cent to anybody because we're already being paid for that. So why do you think the government would do that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you. I'm happy to express my thoughts on why I think they did this. I thought I did a little bit earlier. It's one that they want to shake hands with the friends of their supporters and put them in that position.

But I think you had some interesting points there about being tired, redundant, unnecessary, could be replaced. That kind of summarizes the position this government is in. It's not until they've run over something and wrecked something that they look back and say: oh, we need to fix this.

I don't know that they've wrecked anything in Asia yet, but it makes me very nervous that maybe there's something that's happened that we don't know about, some relationships that they're trying to mend. It just seems that the only plausible reason they would do this is because they couldn't think of anything else to do, and when you get a bunch of people together in government, these elected MLAs, they think: well, what are we going to do about this; what are we going to do about this? Government bloats because they say: let's form a committee.

The purpose of this amendment, Mr. Speaker, is that we already have a committee. That's why I want to in this amendment refer Bill 1 over to a committee that already exists and not need to go and spend – can I not answer his question?

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Your hand motions were . . .

The Deputy Speaker: There's an hon. member wishing to ask a question.

Mr. Hinman: I can appreciate that, but I need to answer the one that's up.

These committees have a purpose. The government has put in many committees in the past, like the oil sands secretariat. They've put together committees and commissioned reports. I looked at the report that they brought together for the ambulance integration that came forward. When they first came up with that committee and that report, they estimated it to be $50 million. That's why these things need to go to an all-party committee. Because this government seems to fail when they put their committees together and do the research.

It's like the ambulance integration research. They first came up and said that it was only going to be $50 million. [Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you. On the amendment that's put forward, that reads that, ultimately, it should be referred to a Standing Committee on Resources and Environment in accordance with Standing Order 74.2(1). I think it's important to recognize what a standing committee is. A standing committee is an existing infrastructure we have in place, where the costs of the standing committee are already absorbed. The time and effort by all members of this House who participate in that from all parties as well as the government, I think, is important.

I describe this amendment as one that really is like putting meat to the bones because at this point it's clear that the flagship bill does not have that meat to the bone. So in enhancing that, I think it's important that a standing committee, a standing committee that is very different than what is being proposed in this legislation, would actually get to the root cause and to the issue of building and strengthening the important relationships that Alberta businesses and universities and colleges have built with the Asian community over the past 15 years.

That being the case, I think this amendment, clearly, Mr. Speaker, in reference to going to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment in accordance with Standing Order 74.2 is a good one because I think it is one that, ultimately, will add meat to the bones of this skeleton. It's like when you have an idea; you at least have to think out the idea. Not only do you want to be down the road, but I have always taken the approach of being down the road and around this corner. So this is intended to help get this government around the corner because, clearly, they're not even down the road yet, let alone around the corner, where most Albertans are.

Businesses, farming communities, the Asian community and the relationships that have been forged over the last 15 years are already around the corner, and here we are with a piece of legislation that says: let's go down the road. Well, even members on that side – I certainly know the Member for Rocky Mountain House is down the road and around the corner. Maybe it's time for some of his colleagues to join him around the corner because, clearly, in my judgment, he is one that has the wisdom to be able to see down the road, unlike what's being proposed here in this Bill 1.

The amendment, Mr. Speaker, that has been brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore is one that is important. I think it will clearly put some meat to the bones and also help guide the government to a destination that most Albertans and some members are already at. Sometimes it's said that it's the destination; sometimes it's the journey to get there. But on this amendment I don't want one cent spent on the journey of a lame-duck Premier going over to Asia before he retires. I think it's more important that we get good value by going forward.

This amendment will put meat to the bones of something that really has not been clearly thought out. It will provide an opportunity to be able to use an existing infrastructure that's already in place, called the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment. I think that, Mr. Speaker, is a good use of our time under this amendment. It's of good use to peel back the onion. As Ross Perot used to talk about: peel back the onion and get to the core of what's being attempted here. That really, for those who may not understand it, is not only being down the road but around the corner so that we can join the rest of Albertans.

I do know there are some members in here, that I made reference to earlier, who are already around the corner, but it's time for the government to get around the corner with everyone else because, clearly, there are many that are just looking and peeking around the corner. The standing committee will provide some of the necessary infrastructure for being able to see what many of us can already see around the corner.

Mr. Speaker, that's why I believe this amendment is an important one. I'm certain that most of the members here will give the green light to this amendment today to go to, as you know, a committee that's essentially controlled by the governing party, the government. But that's okay. It's a standing committee. Fortunately, maybe, in talking to the wisdom of some of their senior members on that side, with their experience in the many ministries they've been in, they'll be able to understand the importance of going around the corner and realize the importance of this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I stand today regarding that

Bill 1, Asia Advisory Council Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment in accordance with Standing Order 74.2, because 74.2, I believe, is really an excellent provision for us to go forward, peel back the onion, and look and see what Alberta businesses and universities and colleges and many of the natural partnerships that some of the hon. members have talked about, the respect that we have for the Asian community, the billions of people who are impacted. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, let's put meat to this flagship bill . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member. We will continue this business at a later date.

It's 4:30. Pursuant to Standing Order 3(6) the House stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, April 11. You have good constituency weeks.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday, April 11, at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, April 11, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome back.

Let us pray. Life and health are precious. When they are lost, all of us are impacted. Let us remember those who are no longer among us with the most positive of thoughts, and let us reach out with compassion, understanding, and prayer to those who suffer. May blessings be upon them, and may they find eternal salvation in an eternity of peace.

Micheline Gravel

December 10, 1974, to April 8, 2011

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is with regret and deep sadness that I must advise members of the sudden passing on Friday last of Micheline Gravel, our manager of House proceedings. Micheline has been a valued professional member of the Legislative Assembly staff for over 12 years and a dear friend to many of us. She will be remembered for her cheerful demeanour and her dedication to serving the members of the Assembly. Our condolences go out to her family and friends at this very difficult time.

I would now like to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem, and I would invite all present to join in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, Mr. Paul Lorieau has now concluded a 30-year career singing the national anthem for the Edmonton Oilers. Mr. Lorieau had a very powerful, nationally televised send-off on April 8, 2011. I understand that one of the mementos that he received from the Edmonton Oilers Hockey Club is an opportunity to go to New York and sing at the Met, so he's now in training for this next big event. But I would like to advise all members that although Mr. Lorieau has concluded his career at Edmonton Northlands, he will continue to grace our House with his presence every Monday. [applause]

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Legislative Assembly a fine guest that I and a few members of our Legislature had the pleasure of having lunch with, and that is Her Excellency the ambassador of Morocco to Canada. Her Excellency Nouzha Chekrouni has been the ambassador of Morocco to Canada for some two years; however, this is her first opportunity to visit the province of Alberta. We have found that there are many similarities between the province of Alberta and Morocco, one of them being the fact that Morocco right now is getting into the business of oil and gas. I think we can develop many relationships on that front. Also our Faculté Saint-Jean is hosting a number of students from Morocco who are studying in our fine province of Alberta. I would ask Her Excellency to rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you 34 very special guests. They are here from Ryley school. They are seated in the public gallery, and they are accompanied today by teachers Dan Gillis and Monique Tremblay and parent helper Lonnie Lauber. I would ask all of our students to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour for me to rise on behalf of the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne to introduce 18 energetic visitors from St. Joseph school. They are accompanied by teacher Mrs. Jennifer Jones Shaver and parent helpers Ms Manon Lanthier, Mrs. Zenovia Wiwchar-Crawford, and Mr. Gregory Michael Ian Evasiuk. I believe that they are in the members' gallery. They have travelled quite a distance. I would ask that they would rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you two groups of students from St. Clement Catholic elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. I had the privilege of meeting them in the rotunda just a few minutes ago. Joining them today are their teachers, Jason Geis and Miss Lyndsy Skilton. At this time I ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly 35 parents, parent teachers, and students, home-schoolers, from Airdrie. They are seated in both the public and the members' galleries and are being chauffeured around here by their parents: Mr. Will Allen, Mrs. Rebekah Allen, Mrs. Carol Korsholm, Mrs. Julie Schroeder, Mr. Glenn Heslop, Mrs. Sue Heslop, Mr. Greg Lammiman, Mrs. Shauna Lammiman, and Mrs. Cheryl Roberts. A lot of these families are pillars in our community. They bring so much to our great city. I'd like all members to give them a warm, resounding welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 27 very bright and talented young people from St. Gerard school. They are accompanied by their teachers and group leaders: Ms Marcelle Labossiere, Mr. Adam Swap, Mrs. Rita Storti, and Mrs.

Edna Encinas. I would ask them now to please rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you three constituents of mine from Calgary: Mrs. Kelli Taylor, Dylan Taylor, and Ryan Barrows. I'm fortunate to know these individuals and to have them as active members of the Calgary-North West Progressive Conservative Association board. In addition to her political work, Kelli is a businesswoman and active member of the community, whose efforts were instrumental in raising awareness for the much-needed schools in the Calgary community of Tuscany. Dylan is a focused young man who joined the board when he was 15. He is now a young adult, graduating this year with a bilingual diploma. Ryan Barrows is a business owner in new media and a design specialist, whose skills are greatly appreciated and utilized by the board. I'd like to ask Kelli, Dylan, and Ryan to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two members of the Alberta Hate Crimes Committee. You'll hear more about the Alberta Hate Crimes Committee shortly in a member's statement by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, but it's my honour now to introduce Mr. Stephen Camp, who is the co-chair of the committee, and Mr. Kris Wells from safe and caring schools and a member of the committee. Both of them do fantastic work on behalf of their communities and their province. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you a Calgary-Mackay constituent, James Rouse, Miss International Pride Electronica St. Asia B'Alone Dynasty. Miss International Pride was crowned in December 2010, and part of her title responsibility is to raise funds for local charities of her choice. She has chosen the Canadian Cancer Society and Kids Help Phone antibullying campaign. Over the past decade she has raised over $45,000 for various charities like the Cancer Society, Pride Calgary, AIDS Calgary, and the Matthew Shepard Foundation. I ask Electronica to please rise and accept the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a constituent of mine, Murray Barker, and his wife, Arlene. Murray Barker served as a detective with the Edmonton Police Service for many years until he was forced to resign because of the onset of multiple sclerosis 15 years ago. Despite his condition Murray is an amazing man on his motorized wheelchair, visiting me often in my constituency office to update me on the current science related to the treatment of MS. I would ask Murray to give us a wave and Arlene to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's great pleasure for me to stand and introduce to you and through you to all members a group of 20 representatives of CCSVI, the liberation therapy group, including their president, Debbie Golden of Grande Prairie. These individuals are among 11,000 Albertans with MS or whose immediate families suffer the debilitating effects of this disease. I'd also like to recognize Dr. Bill Code, who has been working tirelessly for the past 20 years to improve the lives of all who suffer from MS. Dr. Code is the author of several books on the topic of MS, including CCSVI, and recently experienced personal success with CCSVI treatment. I'd ask all our guests to stand in both galleries and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three students and their host from Rotary International. Each year Rotary International sends over 8,000 high school students to countries around the world for one year to experience and understand another culture and way of life. Clubs send and receive students to encourage international understanding and co-operation. This year Rotary clubs in Alberta are responsible for approximately 40 outbound and 40 inbound students. Today I had the pleasure of hosting three students for lunch, as well their host, and then we attended the Premier's office and exchanged gifts. It's my pleasure to introduce Mathilde Bézy from France, and she's being hosted in Innisfail; Phoebe Ho from Taiwan, and she's being hosted in Red Deer; Praew Soithongpong from Thailand, and she's being hosted in Red Deer, I believe; and Mr. Bryan Walton. He's the host from the Rotary Club of Calgary South. Please join me in giving our guests the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I cannot tell you how delighted I am to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the newest member of our staff. Joining us in the public gallery we have Karin Kellogg. Karin is trained as a lawyer and came to us from the Health Law Institute. We are very grateful to have her joining our caucus staff, as I'm sure the rest of the staff are as well; we've been quite short-handed. Karin, if I could ask you to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

Hate Crime Awareness Day

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to recognize Monday, April 11, as Hate Crime Awareness Day. I congratulate the Alberta Hate Crimes Committee for organizing this day to mark the start of National Victims of Crime Awareness Week.

Hate crime is an important issue that must be addressed if Albertans are to continue to live in safety and security. By shining a light on what is being done to tackle hate crime, we send out a clear message that Albertans will not tolerate such behaviour. Hate Crime Awareness Day promotes mutual respect among Albertans. It helps them understand their role in ensuring that our communities are free from intolerance and that hate crimes have no place in today's society.

The committee has also chosen this day to launch a new website, albertahatecrimes.ca, that promotes the message that our social and economic well-being is based on the premise that everyone is equal regardless of age, colour, nationality, sexual orientation, or physical abilities.

As Albertans we pride ourselves on our patience, politeness, and tolerance, but we must not be complacent. We must all, through initiatives like Hate Crime Awareness Day, continue to work together to rid our communities of ugly hate and prejudice. This partnership includes individual Albertans and organizations such as educators, law enforcement agencies, media, community groups, and all levels of government. Part of this process involves ensuring victims report hate crimes to the police. Only 1 in 10 hate crimes is ever reported. Clearly, that must be improved.

Alberta is a beautiful place to live, work, and raise your family, not least because of the diversity of people who call this province home. I applaud this initiative to help eradicate crimes of hatred and prejudice.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Calgary Airport Tunnel

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week's announcement regarding plans for a new Royal Alberta Museum was very welcome. Assuming the government follows through, these plans will help the ongoing revitalization of downtown Edmonton.

Plans to include a high-speed rail link show the kind of foresight Alberta needs, but while the Premier tries to improve his legacy by making plans to improve long-term transportation links to Edmonton, the more immediate needs of Calgary are still being ignored by this government. Barlow Trail is now closed because of the expansion of Calgary International Airport, but this government continues to drag its feet on the airport tunnel issue. Actually, it's worse than foot-dragging. This Premier and his ministers seem to have stubbornly dug in their heels so that they can wash their hands clean of all responsibility for this very vital transportation issue.

Mr. Speaker, the window of opportunity for this government to step forward and do the right thing is rapidly closing. The provincial government has a duty to the people of Alberta to do its part in making the Calgary airport tunnel a reality. This is critical transportation infrastructure that will serve the needs of the province for decades to come. If this government has the foresight to plan a high-speed rail link between Edmonton and Calgary, a policy Liberals have advocated for many years, by the way, then surely you must also see that the airport and northeast Calgary will form part of the rail line.

Doesn't it make sense for the transportation links in northeast Calgary to integrate harmoniously? Let's craft a better future for our transportation infrastructure and invest in the airport tunnel.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Physicians

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This Premier continues to hide behind the Health Quality Council by misrepresenting the legal protection it provides. It fails to provide. Today prominent surgeon Dr. Ciaran McNamee is bravely stating that under a public inquiry, quote: I and other physicians who have left Alberta likely would be willing to help if invited to give our account and opinion, but the protection of law is needed to make the details public. End quote. To the Premier: why does the Premier continue to hide behind the Health Quality Council review when this government knows full well that only an independent judicial inquiry can provide real legal protection?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm very comfortable that the Health Quality Council can review allegations around physician intimidation. And if this particular doctor wants to come forward and has ideas on how to improve the system, I'm sure that good ideas won't need any kind of legal protection.

Dr. Swann: That's disingenuous, Mr. Speaker. It's very clear that under the law only a public inquiry can subpoena people and force them to testify. Is the Premier that afraid of the skeletons in the closet that would be exposed if doctors like McNamee and Winton had real legal protection to make the damaging details of their dismissal public?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the opposition is calling into question the reputation and the integrity of people like former Chief Justice Allan Wachowich and also former Deputy Prime Minister of Canada Anne McLellan, who are there as advisory members to the Health Quality Council. The review will be thorough, and obviously those providing evidence are protected by the Alberta Evidence Act.

Dr. Swann: Very misleading, Mr. Speaker.

Does the Premier have the courage to call an independent judicial inquiry that would allow doctors like McNamee to tell their stories of how government intimidated them, labelled them mentally unstable, and then pushed them out of the province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's an absurd allegation. The Health Quality Council has established their own terms of reference. The terms of reference are very broad, they're robust, and I have every confidence in the ability of the Health Quality Council to do a thorough review. They will have three reports that will come forward to this Assembly.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Government payouts, payoffs, whisper campaigns calling prominent doctors crazy all nicely packaged in legal agreements to silence critics forever. One would think this is the legacy of a foreign dictatorship, but sadly it's the legacy of this Premier and this government, their attempt to cover up their campaign of fear, intimidation, and corruption in the health system. Now they're trying to cover up the cover-up with the Health Quality Council review. This Premier is so afraid of Dr. McNamee that he's not willing to call an open, public hearing. What are you hiding, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, time and time again under the immunity of this House those that have made the allegations – they're also members of this House – have not brought any information forward. Now, if there is any information there with respect to two books or some other illegal activity, there are the police, and there's also the Auditor General. I don't know why, if people are sitting on such hard evidence, they would be sitting on top of it for months and not bringing it forward to the proper authorities.

Dr. Swann: Well, in direct contradiction to what the Premier has just said, the Alberta Medical Association is now advising its members that, quote: physicians subject to nondisclosure agreements will be at risk unless restrictions are lifted. End quote. How can the Premier continue to say with any credibility that doctors like Dr. McNamee can come forward to the Health Quality Council?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the government was never a party to the agreements reached between those physicians and Alberta Health Services, so how can the government direct opening those disclosure documents? Those are agreements between those two parties. They have no relationship to the government of Alberta.

Dr. Swann: So why, then, Mr. Premier, will you not call a public inquiry?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, because the Health Quality Council has very robust terms of reference that will hear all the evidence coming forward and their ideas on how to improve the system. Why would somebody need some sort of legal protection?

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Education budget reads like an insurance agreement in that what the large print giveth, the small print taketh away. A 4.7 per cent increase in the top line looks impressive until cuts to the school board grants are factored in. To the Minister of Education. School boards have indicated the result of cuts. Teachers will have to be let go, and this will lead to higher student-to-teacher ratios in the classroom. Does the minister deny that this is the result of his budget?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no question that this is a difficult budget. We're in tough fiscal times. There's been a 4.7 per cent increase to the Education budget, and almost all of that money goes directly out to school boards. Yes, school boards are going to have to look at what they're doing to determine what still has value and what can be done next year, how they can draw down operating surpluses. There are going to be challenges, and there is going to be an impact. But it's a fair budget, and it's applied fairly across the province.

Mr. Hehr: Given that Alberta's school-age population is expected to continue to rise and that this will no doubt be exacerbated by the high price of oil and the ramping up of our economy, experts indicate a need for more teachers, not fewer. To turn a phrase, are these cuts not the definition of penny-wise but pound-foolish given the future teaching needs of our children?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it has to be said again that there haven't been any cuts to education budgets. Not the Calgary board of education, but some jurisdictions across the province will have a lower overall grant when you take out some of the targeted grants, but their per capita per-student grants have all gone up. If they have an increase in student population, we're funding the increase of that student population, so a 1.1 per cent increase that's projected for the Calgary board of education will be totally funded.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Despite what the minister just said, given the shortfalls in funding to this province's school boards they're facing $150 million in deficit. Given that these cuts could be restored with some minor tinkering to a $45 billion budget, will the minister commit to meeting with the Premier and restoring this needed funding so the government does not balance their books on the backs of school-age children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, a couple of things. First of all, yes, there is an expected increase of student population of a hundred thousand students over the next 10 years, and, yes, we will be needing more teachers in this province. Secondly, I have met with the Premier, I've met with the President of the Treasury Board, and I'll meet with every person on this side of the House and on the other side of the House if it will help to get resources for education. That's my job, and I do it incessantly, and the President of the Treasury Board will tell you so. Nonetheless, we still have to put together a government budget, and I have to be part of that government budget, and we need to continue to look at the overall budget in the interest of all Albertans.

The Speaker: And it will become apparent to all that if they look at the Order Paper, on April 19 the estimates of the Department of Education will be debated in this Assembly.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Lower Athabasca Regional Plan

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maintaining investor confidence, particularly for entrepreneurial businesses, should be of paramount importance for any government. To keep the economy growing, entrepreneurs must have full confidence that the investment climate is stable, predictable, and favourable to success. We also believe that government should be giving industry incentives to continually improve the technology that they are using. To the Premier: why has this government attacked the heart of our industry for the second time in five years by threatening to break contracts with the energy industry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any contracts that have been broken. In fact, if he's referring to the previous accusation that they made a number of months ago with respect to royalties, those contracts were asked to be reopened by oil companies at least a dozen times beforehand. I assume – I assume – that this member is talking about the lower Athabasca regional plan. A number of investment firms out of Calgary have endorsed the plan and have said that it's good to ensure that we're always making sure we have a greener barrel of oil.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. That was just like the new royalty framework. They all agree. That culture of intimidation again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given the ongoing evolution of new extraction technology and given the industry's clear commitment to responsible resource development is the government suddenly slapping a ban on oil sands development to score political points with environmentalists, or is it because they do not believe these resources can be developed responsibly?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, maybe I'll answer that absurd question. There is no ban on oil sands development. In fact, it's the exact opposite. What we have done under the leadership of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development is lay out a plan, and within that plan there is a 20 per cent conservation area that we will uphold. I can table in this House, if you like, a number of documents that say exactly opposite to what those folks are saying. Those are inaccurate statements that are being made, clearly, to score political points.

Mr. Hinman: He can put out all the documents he wants, but the economic facts are clear. They destroyed the industry once; they're doing it again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This one is to the Energy minister. Given that he has been very vocal in promoting new technologies, does he agree with the government's decision to restrict oil sands development in the lower Athabasca and rescind leases, or does he believe that companies with existing leases should be allowed to develop their resources responsibly, using new technologies, before the land is frozen? This is unprecedented. It's wrong.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where the member is coming from, but I assume it's from a position of not having read the document. Let me read and let me table in this House the research from Barclays Capital. What Barclays Capital is saying is that new leases will not be issued for the land in the protected areas. Then it goes on to state which companies have leases in those areas and what the impact of the assessment is on them. Officially, there is very little impact, according to Barclays, and I'll table it in the House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

NHL Arena Funding

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is talking out of both sides of his mouth on the funding of a new arena for Edmonton. On April 2 the Premier said that Alberta will not provide public funding for an arena, but last week the Premier said that he's willing to consider public cash benefiting a billionaire owner. Will the Premier categorically and once and for all rule out any provincial funding for private NHL arenas in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I've been very clear on that particular topic, that there will be no direct funding to any private enterprise, especially a hockey team that is privately owned and a privately owned arena. What the member may be referring to is a plan that may be coming forward from the city of Edmonton mayor. I don't know what may be in that proposal. Our door is open, but in terms of direct money to a private enterprise, clearly, no.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think that sharp lawyers can have a field day with the loopholes the Premier just left them.

Given that every NHL arena built in Canada in the last quarter-century has been entirely privately funded, can the Premier explain why he would even consider giving directly or indirectly taxpayers' dollars, which they pay to support services for themselves and their families, to billionaire hockey team owners?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, today, presently, we are contributing through agricultural society grants to the operations of Northlands. Northlands owns the coliseum, and the Edmonton Oilers play hockey in the coliseum. The team is privately owned, but the arena is owned by the public. It's really owned by an agricultural society.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that handing tens of millions of dollars to benefit the Katz Group is irresponsible at a time when schools are facing cuts and layoffs right across this province, why won't the Premier focus on the priorities of Albertans instead of helping billionaires and categorically decline here and now any request for provincial money, directly or indirectly, for NHL arenas in Edmonton and Calgary?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have legislation passed by this government that is very clear. There is no money going to any private enterprise. Period. That's an issue that they're trying to make hay with, but there's simply no money going to a private enterprise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All government members know that no one presents to caucus pertaining to health issues without approval from the Health CPC chair, the health minister, the whip, and the Premier's office. After Dr. McNamee's presentation to caucus in 1999 and to Capital health, the government blew him off, questioned his competency and sanity, and then paved his way to Harvard. Now they all have collective amnesia. To the Premier: who opened the door for Dr. McNamee to present to caucus, and why did the caucus members, a few of whom subsequently became health ministers, ignore his concerns?

Mr. Stelmach: You know, I don't recall this Dr. McNamee making any presentation. I wasn't part of any kind of presentation or even listening to him, so I'm not quite sure where the question is going. In terms of the chair allowing and scheduling people to come forward, I would suspect that he made a presentation to the CPC at that particular time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government replaced Dr. McNamee and Dr. Winton, both highly respected and recruited thoracic surgeons, and then Dr. Winton's career mysteriously ended. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what happened to Dr. Ciaran McNamee's and Dr. Timothy Winton's hundreds of patients who were waiting for cancer surgery, and how is the Health Quality Council going to get to the bottom of this if they can't testify?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would assume that those patients were looked after by very qualified doctors in the system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the former Auditor General, Fred Dunn, and the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark have shown proof of Capital health's accounting irregularities, will the Premier finally allow a full, open, and independent public inquiry to restore trust in the health system and in government and conduct a forensic audit of Capital health?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Premier, Mr. Speaker, if I could, I would like to take this question. In fact, what the hon. member should be doing is reviewing page 127 of the Auditor General's report, in which he says: "Had the financial statements not been corrected" by the health authority of the time, "they would have been presented to the Audit and Finance Committee with a material misstatement." However, they were corrected, and the Auditor General subsequently signed off.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

CCSVI Observational Study

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I met this morning with one of our guests, the president of CCSVI Grande Prairie and district. On that group's behalf I have some questions regarding the government's position on CCSVI, or liberation treatment, for MS. To the minister: what is the current status of the three-year CCSVI observational study the government committed itself to last December?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I too met with the group. I want to thank Dr. Bill Code and others who attended, and I want to say a special thank you to all of those who are here supporting MS research and/or are suffering from it for their attendance.

The short answer is that we'll be releasing the details of the observational study very shortly, hon. member. There's a comprehensive database that had to be put together first. That's almost completed, and as soon as it is, Mr. Speaker, we will have a full press conference in that respect.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, what assurance can the minister offer that those MS sufferers who are unwilling or unable to wait the three years will not be denied follow-up treatment here after liberation therapy?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure people would probably want to know that some people still use the term "liberation" treatment, and others simply refer to it as the Zamboni treatment. There are medical reasons for that, which I won't get into right now.

However, people may not have to wait two or three years. We'll have to wait and see how quickly this evidence comes together. We are one of seven major international sites chosen by the MS societies of Canada and the U.S.A., the University of Calgary specifically, to further some research in this respect, and we, too, in Alberta are doing everything we can to help fill what the government of Canada called an information gap regarding safety and efficacy for this treatment.

Dr. Swann: Well, with respect, Mr. Speaker, the minister didn't answer the question. What reassurances can you give to those receiving that treatment that they will receive follow-up treatment in Alberta when they have any associated problems?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the question about waiting two or three years is what I had addressed because 30 seconds doesn't allow me to address everything. However, the short answer to this question here is that we are already committed to the observational study. We're also committed to a clinical trial once the ethics approval has been given. In general we're doing everything we can to help MS sufferers, so we'll address it as we can as quickly as we can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

CCSVI Clinical Trials

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, some multiple sclerosis patients have found relief from the so-called liberation treatment, which is more correctly termed venous angioplasty. Saskatchewan, Newfoundland, and now Manitoba have all agreed to go ahead with clinical trial research to study the efficacy of the Zamboni treatment. My questions are for the Minister of Health of Wellness. Will the minister join these other provinces in conducting clinical trials?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I'm not aware of any province that is proceeding carte blanche with a clinical trial regarding the Zamboni treatment. I think they all have certain conditions. Most of them tie in with something to do with ethics, safety, efficacy, and so on. The short answer is that I've indicated already that the government of Alberta through Health and Wellness will be there to help fund clinical trials. Probably $6 million to $7 million would be our commitment once these conditions have been met. We are all working very, very aggressively to help fill that information gap that I talked about in the previous question.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. What else is being done to advance the health of MS patients in Alberta and the use of the CCSVI interventional procedure?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we're working very aggressively with Health Canada through the public health division on filling information in. We're also doing an observational study, which is about a $1 million commitment. We also have the University of Calgary study by the Hotchkiss Brain Institute, led by Dr. Costello. We're also working with the community to establish an MS connector services group. In fact, we're pretty much done that process now. There are a few more people we'll be adding in very soon.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question has been partially answered, but I'd like to give the minister an opportunity to add to his comments on what is being proposed on the observational study.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the update is with respect to our database, and that is moving along very expeditiously. However, I want to assure all MS sufferers, including those people who are advocating for them, that we are taking action. We've taken it almost immediately. I was meeting with other ministers of health from across Canada. They, too, are taking action. I want MS sufferers to know that if complications arise from their treatment when they come back to Alberta, we will help them through that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The draft lower Athabasca regional plan, the government's response to it, and the initial public reaction seem to leave no one happy, which the government claims as a success. Now, under this version 16 per cent of new area will be added to the existing 7 per cent conserved land. That's 77 per cent of Crown land wide open for development and 23 per cent that will allow slightly less development. To the Minister of SRD: why does the government's version of conservation permit conventional oil and gas exploration infractions?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer is that, in fact, when you take a look at the lower Athabasca regional plan – by the way, it's out for consultation with Albertans. I don't know about these numbers. Everybody is chasing numbers. I don't know about the numbers, but what I will tell you is that the draft plan indicates that the region that would be set aside in the northeastern part of the province of Alberta is three times the size of Banff national park.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Back to the same minister. When even the big players in the oil sands industry say that land should be conserved with no subsurface activity, why has government not instituted a moratorium on land sales or lease of land for that purpose in this region until the plan is finalized?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will be taking a look as we go forward, and during this consultation period, in fact, I believe that the ERCB won't post land now that is in these conservation areas.

You know, we do have to address the situation here where the economy of this province needs to continue to move forward. This is a driver of the Alberta and Canadian economy, very important in North America. We're reaching a very fine balance here, and I have to tell you that the majority of Albertans are in agreement.

Ms Blakeman: Well, back to the same minister. I think the majority of Albertans would argue that conservation was conservation.

Now, will in situ development be allowed in the new conservation areas, or is it included under the nonpermitted oil sands and mining category under the plan? Is it in or out?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, that depends. Again, please read the plan and look at the matrix. It's all there. There's a matrix in the plan that indicates under which areas of conservation what would be allowed and what would be disallowed. It's there for consultation, for Albertans to look at. I believe they're going to take the opportunity to have a very good look at it, and in the 60 days I believe we'll get a lot more information and develop a proper final plan for Albertans in about 90 days.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Safe and Secure Affordable Housing

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our Home Next Door, a facility for families fleeing domestic violence, is being built in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. My first question is to the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, the minister responsible for housing vulnerable Albertans. Why is there a perception that the city of Edmonton was left on its own to fund this vital project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for this question. I'm not exactly sure why that is the perception because the province has actually spent 76 per cent, or 3 and a quarter million dollars, on this entire project. I'm not so much concerned about money because anybody can talk about money. Rather, I'm concerned about the 29 units that we have for women and children in need. We're helping break the cycle of domestic violence through our housing programs. That's something we all can be proud of.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: given that there's a need for these and many more spaces in Edmonton, what is the minister doing to assist more vulnerable families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again, thank you to the member for that question. Last year we spent $188 million on our housing programs in this province. That's $188 million. But it's not so much, again, how much we spend; it's the results. Over the last three years we've constructed 10,800 housing units across this province. We're making a serious dent in our homeless numbers and providing assistance to those who are specifically in need but also doing so on an open and competitive tendering basis in the best interests of the taxpayer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the Minister of Children and Youth Services: given that funding continues to be identified as a need, can the minister tell all Albertans what is being done to ensure the safety and security of women and children fleeing family violence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Family violence does have devastating consequences. What I'd like everyone to know is that if they are in an abusive situation, we do have resources available, as this member has mentioned here. We do provide $26 million for 619 beds and 29 emergency shelters for the safety and protection of women and children; $1.1 million of that is for programming and second-stage housing. That includes, hon. member, what you're interested in, the $500,000 that is going to WINGS of Providence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Registry Service Fees for Municipalities

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2011-12 budget dramatically increased registry fees. It also added new fees, including a fee as of April 1 for municipal law enforcement to search a motor vehicle registry for the name and address of the owner of a vehicle issued with a ticket. To the Minister of Service Alberta: what consultation did the minister undertake with the municipalities about the increase from zero to $15 to get the information the municipalities need to collect fines?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to clarify these fees that came into effect on April 1. The police are able to continue to access and do roadside checks and all those timely things they do, and there's no charge for those services. This is strictly to do with municipalities accessing information for such things as delinquent parking tickets, photo radar, and red light cameras.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's not answering my question. What consultation did the minister undertake with the Solicitor General on a way to cover any necessary costs through the budget for law enforcement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this was, indeed, part of the budget process, it was fees that we looked at across the province to see what was best. I think that with the fees we put in place – part of the challenge is that we have a technology system that runs 24/7. It's really critical to make sure the police have access to that information, that it's accurate, and that the system never goes down. So it's part of the technology services as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again. It's costing the city of Calgary $15 million. What consultation did the minister undertake with the Minister of Municipal Affairs about the impact this increase on short notice would have on the ability of municipalities to budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are approximately 800 searches for licence plates that take place every year. With respect to the budget increases in this area it was $83 million in total for all the fees. The $12 million is a portion of that $83 million. So during this transition phase you want to make sure that municipalities access the information for duplicate plates as well as looking for plates with missing information. So at the end of the day it's making it better for the police to use the service.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Royal Alberta Museum Development

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, after many years of discussions and plans for redeveloping the Royal Alberta Museum, last week my constituents and Edmontonians and, indeed, Albertans were thrilled to hear the Premier's announcement for building a new museum in downtown Edmonton. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what is the rationale for moving the museum out of Old Glenora and into this new location and for redeveloping on a single site?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an ideal location. It's close to LRT and transit. It's close to other galleries and libraries and theatres and concert halls. It's also close to where thousands of people live. The previous land created challenges, and this plan solves them. It really enables us to move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: how can Albertans expect the telling of the Alberta story and the portrayal of our history to be improved and expanded as a result of this very important project?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we have 36,000 square metres of exhibition space will allow us to showcase a lot of the artifacts that we were holding in boxes and in storage. Also, because we are going to be more connected using the SuperNet to connect to our other museums, historic sites, and interpretive centres, Albertans from all across the province, irrespective of geography or socioeconomic incomes, will be able to have access to our museum through distance learning and virtual tours.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation: what impact on the Alberta economy through tourism can Albertans expect this new project to enable?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is exciting news for the tourism industry. Obviously, this museum is going to be able to host even more important exhibits. People that might not have come might now visit and be able to go to the Winspear and other things that are critically being aligned with this. I think it's very, very good news for Edmonton's tourism industry, and I really look forward to the day it opens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again this government has shown its mismanagement of finances. Last week they suddenly started charging municipalities an extra $15 every time Service Alberta gives cities a name and address. Cities and police forces are now scrambling because their budgets have been passed. To the minister of finance: can you explain why you didn't at the very least warn municipalities in advance, both urban and rural, in terms of what was coming? I've heard there's been no consultation.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have not only an obligation; we have a responsibility to make sure that services we provide are provided on a cost-recovery basis. Most people or organizations that access this information were paying a fee of $11. This was still below cost. The municipalities are a user of this system. They have an opportunity, if they want, of raising the ticket prices to people, so it really will become a user-pay system that balances its cost.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, Mr. Speaker, you can send an e-mail for a cent.

Given that the Calgary police force chief, Rick Hanson, spoke out for many saying that he was blindsided and that Calgary aldermen estimated it could cost about 40 police officers, will the Solicitor General please explain how he let this happen and why he wasn't standing up for Alberta's police forces?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, let me make it perfectly clear. The fine revenue that is generated in municipalities is transferred back to those municipalities, and we're doing so in this instance on a cost-recovery basis. If those municipalities choose to transfer the cost impact onto their police forces, that's their decision, not mine, and I can't interject in that decision.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, a follow-up to the Solicitor General. He purports to support police chiefs and police officers across Alberta. Would he please explain to Albertans why he remains silent as his government continues to gouge, hurting police forces across Alberta and the safety of Albertans with this?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have not at all remained silent. I've responded to every interview request as I've just responded to the member's question. The fact of the matter is that the government is recovering costs of doing a service for the municipalities. Although they have talked about transferring that impact onto their police departments, I'm not aware that any have actually done it. But I stand here every day in defence of our police departments in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

PDD Administrative Review

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In June last year the minister of seniors announced an administrative review of the PDD program. The report by the consultants at KPMG was due on September 15, and my understanding is that it was delivered on time. To the minister of seniors. People in the disabled community are very anxious about this report since the department has said that savings may be diverted to other areas. When will the minister provide some clarity on that issue?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We did ask for an administrative review of the PDD program. We have received that review with its recommendations. We're going through the process right now, and when we are ready to make our recommendations from the report, that report will be released to the public.

Ms Pastoor: Basically, it's the same question. KPMG wrote it in three months, and it's been almost six and a half months. When will the minister release it?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I would say that we'll release the report in due course, as soon as it goes through the process. Everyone is aware that we are dealing with a population that is frail and vulnerable, so we have to make sure that when we look at the report and the recommendations, which is strictly an administrative review, not for the program itself, we're doing the right things.

Ms Pastoor: This really is a legitimate public interest in a report that will inform decision-making and really affect a lot of people who are worried. Will the minister commit to releasing the full report by June 10, 2011, which is a year from the date that she announced at a press conference this initiative of this review?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important report. It is important that we do things right with this report, and we will be releasing it in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In follow-up to the earlier questions about the Royal Alberta Museum, Albertans and, specifically, Edmontonians would like to know from the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: does the announcement of the new museum in downtown Edmonton end the discussions of two museums or any other museums to be considered in the future?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just want to be clear. There will now be one Royal Alberta Museum on one site. It will house both Alberta's natural and human history. As I mentioned, it is about 36,000 square metres of space. The museum will have the space to better profile more than 10 million pieces of natural history, specimens, and cultural artifacts, most of which are now in storage, as I mentioned before. We will move forward into this new space over the next four years and look forward to the results.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the Minister of Infrastructure: what planning considerations will be structured into the building construction to ensure that the new museum will be able to accommodate all of Alberta's history now and into the future, for years to come?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The new museum is designed and built for today's and tomorrow's history. It is also flexible. It has flexible and adaptable space for new technologies. It also has shelled-in space for growth and, really, the ability to expand into the future of the building if needed. This museum will be a building that works now and also into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the Minister of Infrastructure: many Albertans, and Edmontonians in particular, are asking what will happen to the Glenora site and the current museum once the new museum is open?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Glenora site will continue to be a public site. In fact, the museum on the site will continue to be active until the new one is completed. Government House will continue its functions there. Also, a new Lieutenant Governor's residence will be constructed on the grounds. There's a lot of potential for the existing museum, and the decision will be made in the very near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mental Illness Treatment Services for Children

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The road to hell is paved with good intentions. I met this morning with the father of a 15-year-old girl who has not only seen her share of hell but has made life hellish recently for those around her. Despite the best intentions and cross-ministerial efforts of Alberta Health, Children and Youth, and Justice, she has never remained in a secure treatment facility long enough to receive the psychological assessment and support she needs. To the minister of health: why is it that this girl and many other troubled children she represents do not receive the prompt and thorough assessment and support they need?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the children that he has just alluded to are receiving that treatment and support. In the particular case of the young lady that has just been referenced, I know that my staff followed up with that family. I'm hoping that they will not only identify her but that they will be able to help her and her family resolve the issues and that the young lady will receive the treatment and care she requires.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the minister. I very much appreciate the efforts of Fern Miller in your department in terms of explaining what can potentially be done, but the girl remains on the run.

Will the minister indicate when this government will produce a comprehensive plan for the improved treatment of mental illness in children?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Very soon, Mr. Speaker. As one of the undertakings of our five-year health action plan we've committed to developing a province-wide mental health strategy. It's moving along very briskly. Alberta Health Services has committed to creating an advisory council at that level. We've added about 65 additional staff to deal with the addictions and mental health issues, and we've added an additional 35 of these spaces across the province. Thirty-four new spaces were just added in terms of residential treatment type beds in Medicine Hat and in Fort McMurray. We'll continue to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this young lady doesn't have a whole lot of time left. She's out there. She's 15 years old. She needs the government's protection. When will the department fulfill the outstanding recommendation it received from the Auditor General in 2008 and provide a complete accountability framework for the provincial mental health plan and mental health services in Alberta?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, we are working on that right now, and we're also working very aggressively with the $500 million to $600 million that we spend in this area each year. Nineteen million dollars of that over the next three years is a partnership with Alberta Education, where we're dealing with children or youth in that exact age range. We're adding more counsellors. We're adding more support staff. We're adding more spaces. So there's quite a bit going on. If there are people who need help and if they want it, they can come forward. We'll be glad to do our best to help them out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Water Quality Monitoring in the Oil Sands

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government recently released a report on water monitoring in the Alberta oil sands. Meanwhile, the Minister of Environment is waiting for recommendations in June from the provincial monitoring panel on how to build a better monitoring, reporting, and evaluation system for our great province. To the Minister of Environment. The federal report adds to a considerable collection of work related to monitoring. What does this particular report accomplish?

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Environment, this is not a provincial matter. This is a federal matter.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, in fact, it is a provincial matter. The federal government initiated a panel that made recommendations that are of a very technical nature but are limited to data collection. We need to really understand better the impacts and the sources of emissions throughout this region, and that's why we have a provincial panel in place that will incorporate both the collaborative recommendations of the federal report as well as other information into a comprehensive system that will serve the needs here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is to the same minister. Since the federal report was produced in 90 days, why do Albertans, including my constituents of Bonnyville-Cold Lake, have to wait until June for the provincial monitoring panel to report?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, the federal report was very narrow in scope and is limited to technical information gathering. We're developing a much more robust province-wide system that takes in all of the various media: air, land, water, and biodiversity. We'll be making recommendations for technical and scientific governance as well as the funding aspects. So it's a much broader responsibility that the provincial panel has.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. Who has ultimate authority when it comes to environmental monitoring in the oil sands, the province or the federal government?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. The fact of the matter is that there is joint responsibility. It has always been the case. However, I need to point out that ultimately the resource belongs to the people of Alberta, and it is Alberta that is responsible for developing that resource. Therefore, we believe and have shown by evidence that we have a responsibility for the environmental aspects of the development of that resource. We'll continue to work and co-ordinate with our federal counterparts, but at the end of the day it's likely that most . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Exemption from Municipal Zoning

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, in the last question period the minister of advanced education said of the universities of Alberta, Calgary, and Lethbridge: "If there is any commercial activity or any commercial development happening on that campus, it must go through all the processes within the municipality for approval." I must tell this Assembly that that is simply not true. Most commercial developments on campuses never go for municipal approval. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: will he withdraw his statement, or will he correct it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is true that all commercial development in buildings where they're primarily for commercial purposes or separate commercial facilities have to go through the planning processes. Where a commercial thing, such as a Tim Hortons incidental, is inside of another facility, that will not go through the same development processes as those other facilities.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the minister is mistaken. The minister needs to review his own regulations and consult with them. Will he do that and return tomorrow to answer my first question more correctly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have reviewed that. I'd be happy to answer that question again tomorrow and talk about the potential for development on university sites.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister: is this minister aware that universities are now allowing their exemption from municipal zoning to flow through to privately financed, privately owned, and privately operated buildings constructed on university land?

Mr. Weadick: No, Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Gull Lake Water Level Stabilization Project

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents have expressed concern over the proposed elimination of funding for the continued pumping of water from the Blindman River into Gull Lake in order to stabilize and supplement water levels in the lake. Gull Lake is the home of Aspen Beach provincial park, the oldest and one of the largest provincial parks in the province. My first question to the Minister of Environment: why has the government stopped funding for this project?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we haven't ended funding for this project. We have committed to continue to fund the capital cost of this project. What we're asking the municipalities to contribute is the ongoing cost of utilities. This is a long-standing agreement that has been in place for some time. I understand that the original intent of the agreement was that the utility costs would be covered by the municipalities. For whatever reason, that has not taken place up until now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. What is the actual next step for these municipalities to ensure that the funding continues for this project?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the province is committed to continue to provide for the upkeep of the equipment itself. We've asked for a letter of commitment from the municipalities indicating that they are prepared to cover the cost of the utilities. We've asked for a demonstration of good faith that is needed to engage in these negotiations. Once that letter is in place, the pumping on this site will continue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation: given that recreation is the primary driver for the pumping, will the minister commit to sharing part of the cost to fund this project?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, low water levels are true across several of the lakes across the province. I would be really reluctant to make that kind of commitment as it would perhaps destabilize the funding that we have in parks across the province. So I could not make that commitment, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Infrastructure Costs

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ensuring that Alberta has sufficient infrastructure to accommodate future growth is an important goal of this government. The government has stated that building infrastructure now rather than waiting will save money in the long term. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure.

Can he tell us why it is prudent to spend money on infrastructure now rather than waiting until, say, we have a budget surplus?

The Speaker: Well, okay. We've got the budget for Infrastructure coming up on April 20. That really sounds like an opinion, but if you can put it into policy, go ahead.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to you that it's not an opinion. It's fact that this is a good time to build infrastructure. Prices are lower, skilled workers are available, and investing in projects today ensures that Alberta is ready for the next boom, not to touch on budget at all.

Ms Woo-Paw: These questions are from a constituent. Can he put a dollar figure on the amount that would be saved by completing projects now when the construction costs are low?

The Speaker: As I already pointed out, hon. member, a few days ago, before the break, questions from constituents are not the purview of question period.

Go ahead.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say to you that presently, right now, our tendering process is very open – right? – and transparent. We advertise publicly and are open to bidders from across the province and other provinces, and this ensures a competitive process. Just to speak about the finance end of it, I'm just going to say that Albertans get good value for their investment.

Ms Woo-Paw: My last question has been answered. Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. Twenty members were recognized today, 118 questions and responses.

In a few seconds from now we'll continue with Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Cold Lake Ice Junior B Hockey Team

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As spring has finally arrived, it may seem odd that I take this opportunity to talk about hockey, but as we all know, hockey is a 12-month sport around here. It is with great pride that I congratulate the Cold Lake Ice junior B hockey team on a great season.

The Ice came very close to not icing a team at all this year, Mr. Speaker, but the dedication of the team's board, management, coaches, players, and fans persevered. This perseverance resulted in a northeast Alberta junior B championship for the Ice and the team's first-ever appearance at the provincial championship held in Leduc earlier this month. Though they were not victorious, the boys represented our area with dignity, class, and the utmost sportsmanship.

Mr. Speaker, the Cold Lake Ice is a team made up of players from all over my area. In fact, three of the players were former students of mine. The neighbouring communities of Bonnyville, St. Paul, Glendon, Lac La Biche, and even Brandon, Manitoba, were all represented in this year's edition of the Cold Lake Ice. I would like to acknowledge not just the success on the ice but also the contribution to the spirit and pride of the community that the team helps to foster.

In all our communities, large or small, urban or rural, sports teams, clubs, and all organizations make up the life breath of our hometowns. I urge all Albertans to support teams like the Ice, whose season went a long way to bringing the communities around my constituency closer together, and they did so by exemplifying the character, class, and determination that made us all proud to cheer them on.

Again, congratulations on a fabulous year. Wouldn't you know it, the title defence begins again in five short months.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I'm sure we'll now hear from a real hockey team.
The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Stony Plain Habitat for Humanity Project

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently had the privilege to attend a dedication ceremony for an extraordinary affordable housing project in Stony Plain. It didn't involve hockey, but there was some being played in the background.

This build was a first of its kind partnership between Habitat for Humanity, the Good Samaritan Society, the town of Stony Plain, and Alberta Housing and Urban Affairs. This project provided 12 new homes for deserving and needy families. These homes are a new concept, Mr. Speaker, as they integrate young families and seniors in one complex. Built entirely through volunteerism and donors, Habitat for Humanity projects reflect the compassion and community spirit that is characteristic of Albertans.

For 35 years, Mr. Speaker, Habitat for Humanity has been making dreams come true by providing homes for the needy. I commend all who are involved in this project, especially the new homeowners, who invested a great deal of sweat equity during the build. These 12 homes are more than bricks and mortar. They are evidence of community pride and people helping people. As these grateful families accepted the keys to their new homes, they expressed gratitude to all who made their dreams a reality. They are indeed proud Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Sorry, hon. member. I anticipated that the hon. member was going to talk about the very prolific Spruce Grove Saints.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would talk about the Drayton Valley Thunder, but I'm not going to.

Tomorrow Project for Cancer Research

Mrs. McQueen: I rise today to share about a very important and cutting-edge project called the Tomorrow Project. I had the privilege of participating in the launch of the Tomorrow Project in Drayton Valley in my constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar on March 28. I was joined by Councillor Dean Schuler of the Drayton Valley town council, town staff, the Legion, and 157 Drayton Valley and area participants for the kickoff of this great project.

Most Albertans have been touched by cancer, be it a close family member, a work colleague, or a close friend. Shockingly, almost 1 in 2 Albertans will develop cancer in their lifetime, and approximately 1 in 4 will die of cancer. That is why researchers got together to try and understand more about why some people develop cancer and why others do not.

The current campaign is called Count Me in 4 Tomorrow, with the goal of enrolling 50,000 participants by 2012. Each participant must be an Alberta resident aged 35 to 69 and have never had cancer. Once a participant signs on for the project, they will be asked to answer questions about their health and lifestyle, to give simple physical measurements, and to give small amounts of urine and blood samples.

The whole process only takes about two hours, but that time commitment can mean a great deal to future generations of Albertans. The Tomorrow Project has a mobile unit that was used in Drayton Valley and can be brought to any location. This mobile unit ensures that the Tomorrow Project can reach all corners of this province to make it as simple as possible for Albertans to participate. The organizers hope to bring the mobile unit to the Legislature so that all members can see how easy it is to participate and help spread the word to their constituents.

I encourage and challenge all MLAs and indeed all Albertans to get involved with this worthy project because the commitment you make today can save lives tomorrow.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. I have to make another interjection as well about that hockey team that basically settles in the constituency of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. I don't know if they have won so far. They're not finished yet. They're going to Vernon, British Columbia, in the next number of days as well. We'll get them in here yet.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to say that the Leduc Recreation Centre hosted the junior B provincial championships exceptionally well and that the Beaumont Chiefs finished second. I congratulate them.

Child Care Awards of Excellence

Mr. Rogers: I did want to talk about an event last Friday evening, the Alberta child care professional awards of excellence. This was cohosted by the Ministry of Children and Youth Services. Mr. Speaker, 12 individuals were recognized for their outstanding service to Alberta children and families.

Mr. Speaker, our government introduced the child care awards in 2006 as a way of recognizing the tremendous talents and dedication of people caring for children while their parents attend school or work. Their care and skill have an essential role in supporting parents to successfully raise the next generation of Albertans. They offer a safe and caring place where children feel welcome and can develop their young minds. This year the child care awards were expanded to include the skilled professionals working in our network of 46 parent link centres, who serve parents in 160 different Alberta communities. These centres are instrumental in supporting Alberta's parents, who are their children's first and most influential teachers.

The recipients of this year's awards, Mr. Speaker, are shining examples of people who are making a positive difference in the lives of children each and every day in every corner of this province. I'm proud to say that child care professionals from my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont-Devon have been recognized with an award every year since 2007. I would like to congratulate Laura Grenning from Beaumont, who received an award this year in the licensed daycare category.

I would ask all members of this Assembly to show their great appreciation for all 12 of these outstanding professionals and their commitment to the children and families of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin, I could mention that perhaps our Red Deer Rebels are planning a comeback as we speak.

Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board Awards

Mr. Dallas: Today about 60,000 apprentices are learning and working in Alberta. They are part of Alberta's very successful apprenticeship and industry training system. The growth and success of the system and our apprentices would not be possible without the employers, individuals, and other organizations that work tirelessly to make our trades community the best in the country.

Every year the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board presents awards to apprentices, employers, and instructors who have demonstrated excellence in their field. This annual recognition helps foster strong role models and helps enhance best practices in over 50 designated trades and occupations in our province. It's a chance for apprentices, employers, and instructors to honour one another, to highlight their skills and talents, and shine a positive light on careers in the trades. Sixty-eight recipients received the 2010 awards in the top apprentice, top employer, top employer of aboriginal apprentices, top instructor, and chairman's awards of excellence categories.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to paying tribute to all of the recipients, I have the pleasure today of recognizing one of my own constituents. Mr. Tom Olson is the 2010 Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board's top instructor for southern Alberta. Tom received this award based on his motivational skills and his own best practices of identifying the best teaching methods and bringing out the best in his students. I'm proud of the amazing contributions Tom and his fellow recipients made to ensure the high quality of our apprenticeship and industry training system.

I would request that all members join me, please, in congratulating the 2010 Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board award recipients.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table five copies of the document I referred to in question period today.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to provide the requisite number of copies of the following reports: the 2009-2010 annual report from the Alberta College of Pharmacists, titled Healthy Albertans through Excellence in Pharmacy Practice; secondly, the 2010 annual report from the College and Association of Respiratory Therapists; thirdly, the 2009 annual report from the Health Disciplines Board; and finally, the 2010 annual report from the Alberta Dental Association and College.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, earlier today during the question period I was unsure completely if you did a quote from a document concerning the Capital health authority prepared by the Auditor General. If you did use such a quote, would you be kind enough to table that document tomorrow.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can certainly table the excerpt that I quoted. It's actually part of his annual report for the year in question, so it's already filed with the Assembly.

The Speaker: All right. That's fine. Then it's not required. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly five copies of the 2010 annual report for the Alberta Boilers Safety Association, or ABSA. ABSA is a delegated administrative organization that reports to Alberta Municipal Affairs, and Alberta's pressure equipment safety programs are administered by ABSA under the Safety Codes Act. I'd like to thank them for their continued dedication to pressure equipment safety in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my sad duty, I suppose, to rise today and table three documents with respect to the release of the Mayerthorpe inquiry report last week. On March 30 Mr. Lorne Gunter wrote an editorial in the National Post, and despite the preponderance of evidence to the contrary Mr. Gunter suggested, against the committee's findings, that this "could have been prevented from turning so deadly if officers and commanders had approached it with a more professional and less cavalier attitude." This is an affront to the police force, to the memory of those officers that died on that tragic day, and to the families of those officers. I table that for the information of members of the House.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I table a letter that I myself wrote to the National Post in response to that editorial, in which I pointed out how serious I feel about this and insisted that it was a dark day for our province and our country and that we need to move on. "We would like to do so with accurate understandings of what happened, and accurate memories of the honourable service of Constables Peter Schiemann, Leo Johnston, Brock Myrol and Anthony Gordon." I table the appropriate number of copies of that.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the National Post chose to publish my letter in an abridged version, as they always do. I'll table five copies of that as well.

I just want to say a thank you to all those who have been injured or perished in the line of duty in our province and our country. Thanks to all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The impending clear-cutting crisis in the Castle-Crown continues to concern Albertans, including Mary Reid, Marion Walls, Mary Louise Campbell, Terry Galvon, David Parbery, Crystal Schatz, Al Coats, Shelley Robinson, Stephen Fairley, Laurie Loro, Kata Jhukoutaiy, Tomas Ersson, Cayley Orton, Deborah Jasinoski, Linda McFarlane, Diane Volkers, Annika Nicholson, Catherine Chevalier, Rick Moses, Margaret Vrielink, Albert Russon, Angeles Mendoza Sammet, Alistair Des Moulins, Angela Stemmer, and Scott Green.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I table on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition the reference to the Alberta Medical Association concern that physicians under nondisclosure agreement will be at legal risk under the Health Quality Council review.

My second tabling is five copies of my letter and cheque to the Vulcan food bank, as promised in April 2007, to help AISH payments be indexed the same as MLAs' salaries. It's only fair.

My last tabling is from people concerned about the clear-cutting that is going to go on in the Castle special management area, probably a crime in itself. The names are Vanessa Vallis from Calgary; Teresa Rocheleau, Ron Chambers – if I don't mention outside of it, it's assumed they come from Lethbridge – Brittney Durston from Bradford, Ontario; Mary-Anne McTrowe from Lethbridge; Helen Henderson from Coaldale; Cordula Wenske from Dresden, Germany; Andrew Hurly from Monarch; Linda Stromsmoe from Lethbridge; Kevin Roll from Hays, Alberta; Tom Moffatt and Doug Saunders, both from Lethbridge. These people are very upset. Clearly, it isn't just an Alberta problem. These are people that have come from other places in the world to appreciate our tourism and our wonderful wild scenery and life that we have here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the members of the Legislature who were present when Dr. McNamee presented to the caucus in 1999 cases about lung cancer surgery wait times.

I'd like to table five copies of an excellent piece of investigative journalism, done by Charles Rusnell in 2007, about the financial irregularities and Auditor General Fred Dunn's critique of Capital health's accounting practices.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Klimchuk, Minister of Service Alberta, responses to questions raised by Mrs. Forsyth, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and Mr. Mason, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, on March 7, 2011, Department of Service Alberta main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Renner, Minister of Environment, responses to questions raised by Ms. Blakeman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and Mr. Boutilier, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, on March 22, 2011, Department of Environment main estimates debate.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Alberta Health Services RN Turnover Rate

- Q3. Dr. Swann:
What was the average turnover rate for registered nurses within Alberta Health Services for the years 2008, 2009, and 2010?

Foreign-trained Physician Recruitment

- Q4. Dr. Swann:
How many foreign-trained physicians have been recruited to Alberta in the last five years?

Foreign-trained RN Recruitment

- Q5. Dr. Swann:
How many foreign-trained registered nurses have been recruited to Alberta in the last five years?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Drilling Royalty Credit Program

- Q8. Mr. Hehr asked that the following question be accepted.
What was the total value of all tax credits expended pursuant to the drilling royalty credit program and the average value of tax credits claimed per company for the period April 1, 2009, to February 20, 2011?

Mr. Hehr: At this time I believe this information is pertinent for us, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, to have. We are in the midst of what could be considered on the cusp of another boom in Alberta. We have many projects up in the oil sands and in other areas of this province, much drilling activity going on all over the place. Obviously, that is spurred by world demand as well as some other things going on here in Alberta but also the price of oil. I guess the debate is, as always, that we need a stable operating ground for companies who do business while at the same time trying to balance what is a reasonable return to the taxpayer.

I know these are difficult things to balance, but having this information allows us to maybe try to get there and stay on top of that balance. For instance, I know in our budget debates with the hon. minister we were discussing, you know, the ups and downs of pricing of, in fact, the oil and gas industry and how it's very difficult to peg things at $120 oil or that sort of stuff. We were discussing, I remember, how maybe we could develop a system where if prices were stable for the period of a year, well, then, maybe you could factor some of these things in and out and possibly give companies stability while at the same time allowing for the province to get its fair rate of return.

Nevertheless, I think this information would go some way in providing us with some information we need to do our jobs on behalf of the Alberta people to continue to challenge our government to do the best they can and to provide both stability for the industry as well as value to Joe and Jane Albertan, who are the owners of the resource, which, we all know, is a very delicate balance and a fine balance that we have to adjust here in Alberta.

Those are my submissions, and I wait for the hon. minister's response.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like the member mentioned, the government is always ready, able, and willing to help this member with his understanding and research, but there are a couple of problems with the way the particular question is worded. I have sent to the hon. member a proposed amendment because in the question it talks about tax credits in Alberta under the drilling royalty credit regulation. There are no tax credits but, rather, royalty credits.

In addition to that, due to corporate structuring of some of the companies – some of them may be subsidiary groups branched from parent organizations – we do not collect the data with respect to the average value of credits per company. That being said, I would propose to amend the question.

What was the total value of all royalty credits expended pursuant to the drilling royalty credit program for the period April 1, 2009, to February 20, 2011?

If the hon. member agrees with that amendment, I'm more than happy to supply that information.

The Speaker: All members have received a copy of the amendment. Discussion on the amendment?

Mr. Hehr: I think this is a wonderful amendment proposed by the hon. minister. You know, it reminds me of how some people think he gets a reputation as such a cranky man. This is really an example of how he helps sometimes and how he gets us the information we need. I would thank the hon. minister for his assistance in this matter. When I hear someone besmirching his good name, I will be sure to speak up on his behalf.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Shall I call the question, then, on the motion as amended?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Written Question 8 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Crown Land Sold for Agricultural Use

Q13. Ms Pastoor asked that the following question be accepted.
What are the locations of Crown land sold for agricultural use between 2005 and 2010?

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My intent, of course, is to see exactly how much Crown land is actually being saved for agricultural land.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the hon. member has asked a question that's important to many Albertans, most particularly Albertans that are now directly involved or may want to be involved in the agricultural industry.

Mr. Speaker, the issue, of course, is that the question as it's posed is not something that we'd have a ready answer for, so I would like to propose that we amend Question 13 to read:

What are the legal descriptions and acreages of all public land managed by Sustainable Resource Development sold between April 1, 2005, and March 31, 2010?

Mr. Speaker, the amendment is based on the following reasons. Sustainable Resource Development sells public land that's considered surplus to government requirement. Municipalities regulate the use of land within their boundaries. We could sell pieces of surplus public land and not know at the end of the day whether or not they may end up being used for agricultural purposes. The Department of Sustainable Resource Development's records regarding the sale of public land are kept on a fiscal year basis, so that's the reason for the adjustments relative to the dates.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to propose that amendment.

The Speaker: Have all members received a copy of this amendment? If you haven't, raise your hand. Okay.

Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, do you want the floor?

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the minister for having this amendment out on time. Unfortunately, I just saw it this morning because we were away for two weeks, and it was sitting on my desk here. Thank you, at least, for that.

I was going to not accept it because I'm not exactly sure that what I'm trying to get at is what you're going to give me. But after your explanation it's a little bit closer to what I thought I was getting, so I will accept this amendment.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, do you want to say anything further to close the debate, or should I just call the question as amended?

Ms Pastoor: Question.

[Written Question 13 as amended carried]

The Speaker: You did not tell us, Lethbridge-East, where you went for two weeks.

Ms Pastoor: I worked my tail off in Lethbridge-East.

The Speaker: Aw. It catches my heart. That's so good to hear.

Motions for Returns

Bitumen Valuation

M6. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any recommendations that were prepared by Alberta Finance and Enterprise regarding bitumen valuation for the fiscal years 2011-2012 to 2021-2022.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move an amendment to Motion for a Return 6. The amendment would strike out "financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any recommendations that were prepared by Alberta Finance and Enterprise" and substitute "publicly available, nonproprietary information given by Alberta Energy to Alberta Finance and Enterprise" and, secondly, strike out "2011-2012 to 2021-2022" and substitute "2011-2012." So this motion would read:

A copy of all publicly available, nonproprietary information given by Alberta Energy to Alberta Finance and Enterprise regarding bitumen valuation for the fiscal year 2011-12.

I'm proposing this amendment for a couple of reasons, Mr. Speaker. First, our department can only answer with respect to information prepared by our ministry and provided to Alberta Finance and Enterprise. Secondly, as the member proposing this motion is aware, the information we provide comes from a number of financial forecasts and reports, much of which is confidential due to the copyright terms of our subscriptions or because the information is considered proprietary. Any material we provide to Alberta Finance and Enterprise, which is actually publicly available, we'll be happy to give to the member.

Also, the data from all of the forecasts and reports we receive are amalgamated and made publicly available in the budget, as are many of the identities of the analysts and forecasters that we use. If the member wants to see specific reports from, say, a bank or an investment service, he's certainly free to subscribe to those respective services.

Regarding the later time frames mentioned in the motion, we do not provide long-term projections for use in the budget, but long-term valuation projections are publicly available via the Energy Resources Conservation Board.

Just as a final aside, Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that our forecasting models are reviewed and are endorsed annually by the Auditor General.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I understand the minister's cautions or limitations with regard to proprietary information. We understand that. Whether it's ministers' notes or any other private information, we understand the FOIP regulations that cover that information. On the (a) part, obviously we're operating within the information that should be publicly available and asking for that information to be collected and accumulated and passed along to us.

On the second part of the amendment, by striking out "fiscal years 2011-2012 to 2021-2022" and substituting "fiscal year 2011-2012," what Alberta investors, the industry, and regular Alberta taxpayers are looking for is the idea that the government has some kind of a plan or a rough idea of where they would like to go given certain conditions heading into the next decade. Now, by this request we're giving the government credit for forward thinking, and that was why that extended evaluation and the direction the government would like to at least head towards are extremely important to us.

Again, we understand the nature of what's private and what's public, but we would like to get a sense of what the government's plan is as well, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Shall I call the question with respect to the motion as amended?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion for a Return 6 as amended carried]

Conventional Oil Valuation

M7. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any recommendations that were prepared by Alberta Finance and Enterprise regarding conventional oil valuation for the fiscal years 2011-2012 to 2021-2022.

Mr. Liepert: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move an amendment to this motion very similar to the last one, striking out "financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any recommendations that were prepared by Alberta Finance and Enterprise" and substituting "publicly available, nonproprietary information given by Alberta Energy to Alberta Finance and Enterprise," and, secondly, striking out "fiscal years 2011-2012 to 2021-2022" and substituting "fiscal year 2011-2012." This motion would then read: "A copy of all publicly available, nonproprietary information given by Alberta Energy to Alberta Finance and Enterprise regarding conventional oil valuation for the fiscal year 2011-2012."

The reasons for these amendments are identical to the ones mentioned with respect to the previous motion that we just addressed in this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I don't want to take up time from this Assembly. Obviously, we're not asking for private information. What we're asking for are recommendations that were prepared by Alberta Finance and Enterprise regarding conventional oil valuation. We're looking for the minister's and Alberta Finance and Enterprise's projections. We're not looking for proprietary information. We're looking for the information that has been shared between the ministries that will give, hopefully – and then I'll argue the second part of the amendment – some idea of where the government is headed not only now but into the next decade.

The conventional oil opportunities are potentially tremendously enhanced if the sequestration works. If we can pump carbon dioxide into old conventional sites and receive the increased value from formerly nonproductive wells all of a sudden being brought to life, then this is important information. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Energy doesn't have a crystal ball, but I would think that between Finance and Enterprise and Energy they would have a desired outcome, and based on that desired outcome, the information and the studies on carbon sequestration, the fact that we're no longer using potable water, that we're using saline, given all that information, which is not proprietary but actually belongs and is well known to Alberta Finance and Enterprise and Energy, it would be very helpful to have not only that information but the forecast for how conventional extraction can potentially be improved over the next decade. That's why we're projecting 10 years ahead. The Alberta Liberals are well known for thinking ahead, and we'd like the government to catch up to us.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Shall I call the question?

[Motion for a Return 7 as amended carried]

Natural Gas Valuation

M8. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any recommendations that were prepared by Alberta Finance and Enterprise regarding natural gas valuation for the fiscal years 2011-2012 to 2021-2022.

Mr. Liepert: Again, Mr. Speaker, what we're going to propose is that we amend this motion by striking out "financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any recommendations that were prepared by Alberta Finance and Enterprise" and substituting "publicly available, nonproprietary information given by Alberta Energy to Alberta Finance and Enterprise" and by striking out "fiscal years 2011-12 to 2021-22" and substituting "fiscal year 2011-2012." This would then read: "A copy of all publicly available, nonproprietary information given by Alberta Energy to Alberta Finance and Enterprise regarding natural gas valuation for the fiscal year 2011-2012."

Again, the reasoning remains consistent with the last two motions, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again, I don't want to sound like an echo, but what we're asking for is not what we're receiving. We've asked for a copy of all financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any recommendations that were prepared by Alberta Finance and Enterprise. I don't know whether it would have made it simpler if we'd said all Alberta Finance and Enterprise financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and recommendations. If we'd possibly put the producer of the information first, maybe it would have caused less confusion.

What we're getting from the minister is publicly available. In other words, he's willing to collect information he's already, I'm assuming, put out, which is not what we're asking for. We're asking him to give us an indication of the advice that he is recommending going forward based on, obviously, nonproprietary information. The government, I am sure, beyond the very hard-working researchers and bureaucrats within the organization also goes out to other individuals seeking advice, especially, I would hope, experts in the field. It's that kind of direction that we're looking for so that everyone understands the direction the government is going.

Now, Mr. Speaker, again with reference to 2021-2022 we know it's a historical fact that conventional gas for years has produced the highest royalties and the best return for Albertans. Well, now with the advent of shale gas and nonconventional gas our gas marketing basically has bottomed out, and we're hoping that the minister, in replying to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, could provide us with a sense of where we're going from here. Is there a hope that with certain planning or direction we'll be able to re-evaluate, regenerate the former conventional gas market? When the minister restricts the information to "publicly available" and for a single year, there is no forward prognosis. We don't know where the ministry is hoping to head or the information that would take them in that particular direction. If we don't know, then the Alberta public doesn't know, and industry is uncertain about the government's support for both conventional and new types of gas exploration involving shale, et cetera.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Shall I call the question, then?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion for a Return 8 as amended carried]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 201 Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very, very much, Mr. Chair. In previous discussions I've brought forward the concerns about the potential punitive action of sort of two classes of individuals: those that have indicated a yes, no, or possibly at some time in the future they would consider organ donations, and then there's the group who, if they don't respond immediately, may get the second mail-out of their Alberta health care cards. I wanted to bring up that concern, which was not addressed in previous amendments.

As I've indicated twice before in speaking to Bill 201, Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011, I am very supportive of not only organ donation but tissue donation, blood, et cetera. I indicated that I thought that a potentially better method for achieving this was an electronic health card complete with a chip, which offered greater privacy protection and was capable of being presented either by a person, for example, giving blood – their record would be part of that card – or in the unfortunate event of someone dying, there would be a go-to place which would clearly indicate an individual's wishes in addition to their health information.

Recently, Mr. Chairman, with regard to having a health card that would facilitate improved service delivery as well as declared donor information, it was pointed out to me by both a psychiatrist and a medical physician who came to my office this past Friday their concern about the government potentially pulling back the approximately $35,000 that helped their offices maintain their electronic data and record keeping.

Mr. Chair, in order to facilitate the information collection and the appropriate sharing between medical individuals of private, protected information, I believe that something beyond our simple paper card has to be devised so that physicians, regardless of where they are in the province, have appropriate access to the information that in the case of an injured person would facilitate their treatment and in the case of a person who has indicated that upon their death their organs could be harvested, that information would be available in a secure situation.

Mr. Chair, without going into a whole lot of repeat, I also mention the fact that Alberta Health, while improving on the number of Alberta health cards out, has not the tracking necessary to ensure that only Albertans are receiving these Alberta health cards. So the tracking of the card, to whom it goes and for what purpose, I would suggest needs to be improved in order for the wishes of Bill 201 to be taken into account.

I thank the hon. chair for allowing me to participate again in the debate on Bill 201. Donation I'm very much in favour of. Facilitating and improving the process, I think, requires further work than Bill 201 presents at this time.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today in Committee of the Whole to speak to Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011, as amended. The intent of this bill is to increase organ and tissue donation in Alberta, and I believe that various sections of this bill achieve that aim. I would like to focus my comments today on one section in particular, section 22.1(1). For the record this section states:

A certificate of registration shall include a declaration form concerning organ and tissue donation that specifies the following 3 options:

- (a) yes;
- (b) no;
- (c) undecided.

Mr. Chairman, the subject of organ and tissue donation can be a sensitive one. Many people find merely thinking about such matters extremely uncomfortable. While Bill 201 does propose to compel Albertans to make a choice as to whether or not they would like to be organ donors, it would not force anyone to become a donor if they do not wish to be one.

Section 22.1(1) stipulates that the options given in the certificate of declaration, which in this case will be the Alberta health care card, will be yes, no, and undecided. As such, should an individual not wish to become an organ donor, he or she has two options from which to choose. This individual can choose no or undecided, and then those choices will ensure that he or she will not become an organ donor. The undecided option is there to make sure that Albertans who are not yet ready to make a decision regarding organ and tissue donation are not rushed into doing so. Further, should an individual know whether or not they want to become a donor but do not wish to make that decision public, he or she can choose the undecided option to ensure that their privacy remains intact.

Mr. Chairman, it is not the intent of the bill to force Albertans into doing something they do not want to do, whether that is becoming an organ and tissue donor or simply disclosing their decision on the matter. Rather, the intent of this bill is to prompt some thought and discussion on the issue of organ donation.

The fact is that Canada's organ donation rates are some of the lowest in the western world. While there are no statistics available that are specific to Alberta, only 13 Canadians for every million actually become organ donors. This lack of donation means the difference between life and death for many across the country, including right here in the province of Alberta. With the requirement to make a specific declaration regarding organ donation, as outlined in section 22.1(1), we could ensure that, at the very least, Albertans think long and hard about this issue and their feelings towards it.

What's more, Mr. Chairman, it is my hope that Albertans will also have this discussion with their families so that everyone's wishes are known should the worst happen. It is important to ensure that our families are aware of our feelings towards organ and tissue donation because, ultimately, their permission will be required in order for us to actually become donors.

If passed, Bill 201 will help to raise awareness in our province regarding organ and tissue donation. Subsequently this could help to increase the number of donations which could in turn save lives. Mr. Chairman, it is remarkable how many lives can be saved or drastically improved by just one organ donor. According to Alberta Health Services one donor can save the lives of eight people and enhance the lives of as many as 75. For the thousands of people who are currently waiting, an increase in donors could mean the difference between life and death.

I believe that it is incumbent upon us as legislators to try to increase the number of organ and tissue donations in our province, and Bill 201 could be an effective tool to achieve this goal. However, the provisions in section 22.1(1) clearly provide Albertans with options should they not want to become organ donors. Because organ and tissue donation is an extremely personal decision and because, ultimately, Albertans should have the final say over what becomes of their bodies after they pass on, it would be unacceptable to not provide some alternatives. Rather, by requiring that all Albertans make an explicit choice between yes, no, and undecided, we can ensure that health care professionals know who agrees to be a donor while protecting the rights of Albertans to refuse.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that section 22.1(1) has created a win-win situation for organ donation in our province. We have an opportunity to know for certain who among us are potential donors, and there is also a possibility that by asking people to make the choice, they will choose yes. But for those who are uncomfortable with the idea of organ and tissue donation, there are two alternative choices available. Therefore, we have nothing to lose and everything to gain by passing this legislation. We owe it to those Albertans who patiently await a life-altering donation, and we owe it to those who may not be aware that they can help save lives. By being careful to leave the choice formally in the hands of Albertans, those who do not wish to become donors will not have to.

I believe that all sections of this legislation, including section 22.1(1), work together to ensure that the intent of the bill is fully realized, this intent being to hopefully increase the number of organ donations in Alberta and, by extension, to save lives. Section 22.1(1) specifically ensures that Albertans are not forced into becoming organ donors by providing other options to choose from. This section also ensures that Albertans are not forced into making decisions if they're not ready to do so by providing the undecided option. With these provisions, I cannot see a reason why this legislation should not be passed. Albertans could stand to benefit from this once it is implemented.

I would like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning for the thorough input into drafting this legislation, particularly the care that went into drafting section 22.1(1).

With that, I would conclude my comments, and I look forward to the rest of the Committee of the Whole debate. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to stand up and speak to the Alberta Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011, and I'm particularly pleased to stand up and speak to the amendments that were tabled in the Legislature I guess a couple of Mondays ago. I have spoken in this House on many occasions in regard to my support for organ donation and have made it very, very clear that I'm a huge supporter of organ donation. I think what we have to do is educate the public as much as we can, as I indicated the last time I spoke, and I ended my speaking notes with a comment that was brought to me when I had brought my original bill forward several years ago.

I want to state that the original bill stated it would try to increase the pool of organ donors by making it mandatory for people to answer their organ donor card when they register with Alberta Health and Wellness. I indicated just briefly that I do like the amendments to Bill 201 put forward by the member. I was concerned that vital medical care might be delayed or denied because of not answering the organ donor question.

I must make it clear that I have been a strong, strong supporter of organ donation since the 1970s. At that time, Mr. Chair, I underwent testing for blood and tissue type because that's how strongly I believed in it. I still carry the same card. I'm not even sure they even have them anymore. At that particular time when you signed up to be an organ donor, I went through the procedure. So I'm ready to go. If anything happens, they can have any organs they want. Some they might not want, but they certainly are more than welcome to have anything.

In 1998 I put forward the Human Tissue Donation Procedures Statutes Amendment Act. At that time I had collaborated with the kidney and liver foundations and the Red Cross as well as the human organ procurement and exchange program. The reason I put that bill forward then is the same reason we're having this discussion today. When you look at 1998 to 2011, that's 13 years, and here we are back in the Legislature talking about the same bill, talking about the same importance it has.

Quite frankly, the government hasn't done anything. They've had the opportunity since that bill came forward in 1998. I know the hon. Member for Calgary-West brought forward another private member's bill on organ donation, and it passed in the Legislature. Here we are again on April 11, 2011, talking about organ donation and yet again another private member's bill that is so important to everybody. The government hasn't acted on the bill that I brought forward in 1998, and I don't imagine they did anything on the bill that had been brought forward by the Member for Calgary-West. As far as I'm concerned, the situation is tragic. I can't even imagine how many organs have been lost as we've dicked around. We've talked the talk, but we certainly haven't walked the walk.

In my research I studied many jurisdictions in the world and was amazed at the progress that countries like Spain have made. In three short years their donation rates increased 75 per cent. Their reforms were a model around Europe and the world. While my Bill 206, which is the one I talked about earlier, the Human Tissue Donation Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, didn't make the consent reforms that they did, they have made incredible progress.

While I understand what Bill 201 is trying to accomplish – and it's a worthy goal – I can't help but feel that this is not enough to improve organ donation in Alberta, and I speak from other experiences. As I've said, I had the privilege to chair the Advisory Committee on Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplantation a decade ago, and I find it – I repeat this, and I think it's important to repeat – ironic that we're talking about this again in this Legislature. It just saddens me to no end that we're having this conversation again. Maybe this time the government will decide that they are finally really going to do something about this.

The committee that I chaired way back called for comprehensive legislation to improve organ and tissue donation in Alberta. Sadly, at no fault of the committee and the people that worked so hard on that particular committee – and I have to give them tons and tons of credit – the progress has been slow and uneven. I know that when I had the privilege of working with these people, the dedication that they showed when we were working on this committee was nothing but stellar. I have to even give once again credit to the member who brought this forward to maybe try and get the government to move on it.

The heartbreak for me is that time is critical for those on organ donation lists. I've been advocating for improved organ donation processes for most of my political career, almost 15 years, yet it just seems like we're moving in what I would consider slow motion or, if I can say even more bluntly, no motion.

The challenges of organ donation are similar to those of blood donation. They are necessary for saving lives, but people often have a belief that they won't ever need the service. We need to think ahead because in the middle of a catastrophe the last thing people think about is donation. The pain and tragedy of losing a loved one is overwhelming, especially when you're still in shock. Donations can't rely on grieving, vulnerable family members. It's simply just asking too much of them. The shock of earth-shattering news from a doctor is not the most appropriate time for the family to be asked for a donation. This is something that people should plan ahead for.

Over 400 people in Alberta wait for organ donation. While half of them will receive the needed transplants, many do not receive theirs on time. As the organs shut down, they must endure the pain, along with the family, of watching their lives slip away.

Canada has one of the lowest donation rates in the world. One dying person can have a huge, life-saving impact on others. A single donor can help as many as 80 people. Most people don't realize just how long people wait for donations. Albertans have a shorter wait time for kidney transplants, but the wait is still two and a half years. To get dialysis while they wait, people usually need to come in to the hospital for hours every day or two. Not only is there a human cost, but there is also a financial cost of waiting. Kidney dialysis costs $60,000 a year. The cost of the transplant, including the medication, is $130,000. When patients are on dialysis for years, the best option is obvious. Getting patients the best care they can get saves everyone pain and suffering, and quite frankly it saves them money.

A very simple but overlooked step to improve donation rates is education. Ontario and British Columbia have taken a leadership role by creating donor registration. Government agencies actively promote organ donation, and their results are worth examining. The committee I chaired called for a provincial organ and tissue donation and transplant system. While we have the workings of something great, we're just not quite there yet. The committee also called for a province-wide approach to public and professional education.

Our donation system relies on the goodwill of others. A living donation is a serious decision and needs greater support from the government. Alberta took a small step by allowing compensation for living donors so that their travel expenses and income loss could be covered up to $5,000. At the federal level caregivers are entitled to compassionate leave benefits for up to 15 weeks.

While sick patients wait for life-saving donations, our government is waiting for someone else to take the lead. Canadian Blood Services was directed to create a national strategy in 2007, and we're still waiting for the bold leadership on a vital issue. National organ and tissue awareness week is next week. I had hoped debate on this bill would inspire this government to be able to report to this House that they have taken concrete actions before another donor awareness week passed us by. I'm disappointed that it doesn't seem to be the case in front of us.

Ultimately, I say that I'm going to be supporting this bill because we all share the goals of increasing organ donation. If this is what this bill will take, once again – and, as I said before, I think this is probably, from what I remember, the third time – this is a good-news story for Albertans.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East because the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung isn't in his chair.

Ms Pastoor: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I will be brief because I think that most of the salient points have already been pointed out. Certainly, I believe in this bill. I think that we are way behind in Canada, as has already been pointed out, in terms of the acceptance of the idea of being able to help our fellow human beings when, in fact, we can share things that we have absolutely no use for anymore.

However, having said that, I know of a number of families who were fortunate enough to be able to share kidneys between daughters and sons and certainly amongst siblings. It's a very, very important ability to be able to do that. I have never spoken with anyone who has regretted having done that for one second. Both parties have recovered very well and have certainly gone on to productive lives.

I think another important thing that's slowly catching on and is in the same vein as this is using umbilical cord tissue and blood for research on stem cells. We've certainly seen the effect of stem cell treatment, in fact with a former member of this House, and it's been very successful. He, needless to say, was very pleased to have had that donor from somewhere else.

I think that education has been mentioned, and perhaps we should start doing a little bit more in the schools so that as the kids grow up, it's almost a given and is not something that people have to think about. I can understand that perhaps there may be some religious reasons, which I would have all the respect in the world for, but often people just haven't thought about it because the discussions aren't there. I believe that we should have those discussions, and I believe they have to start in school.

I think we can talk to children at this point in time in kindergarten, who actually can talk to us about good, nutritional food, where it comes from, and why we should be actually eating the hundred-mile diet. These children are quite knowledgeable about this, and certainly it's children I think that have helped their parents quit smoking because they've come home with the idea and the knowledge that it's not good for you. Again, I believe that the education towards this kind of thinking could happen in the schools.

The other thing is that I would like to see Canada, of course, be the leader in terms of free donation of organs. I so fear that at some time bits and pieces would be sold and that these bits and pieces would become commodities. That is a very, very dangerous precedent that is a possibility. The more we are generous and the more we understand, I think the better off all Canadians will be and certainly humanity as a whole.

With that, Mr. Chair, thank you for allowing me to speak to this very important bill.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Chairman, first of all, thank you very much for giving me the opportunity to speak on Bill 201. I'm really pleased to support Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011. The intent of this bill as amended is to increase organ donation in Alberta, and like my colleague from Edmonton-Manning I believe this bill as amended will achieve that aim.

I trust that, in particular, section 22.1(1) will contribute significantly to reaching that goal. Section 22.1(1) focuses on one specific aspect of the human organ and tissue donation process; that is, the declaration form that a potential donor must fill out before the rest of the process unfolds and, more specifically, its wording and design.

In fact, subsection (1) reads as follows:

22.1(1) A certificate of registration shall include a declaration form concerning organ and tissue donation that specifies the following 3 options:

- (a) yes;
- (b) no;
- (c) undecided.

This is a substantive change from the declaration form's current wording. As many Albertans are aware, this form is currently located on the back of the Alberta personal health card. Entitled Alberta's Universal Donor Card, it states, "In the hope that I may help others, I hereby make this anatomical gift, if medically acceptable, to take effect upon my death."

Then two options are displayed: (a) any needed organs and tissues for transplantation and (b) only the following organs and tissues for transplantation. This is followed by an opportunity for the donor to specify his or her anatomical gift. A signature is also required, both from the donor and a witness. This witness is preferably a family member. Potential donors are also encouraged to discuss this topic with their family members or next of kin.

Finally, transplantable organs and tissues are listed. These organs are heart, liver, lungs, kidneys, pancreas, and small bowel. Tissues listed are eyes, skin, bone, heart for valves, and veins.

Mr. Chairman, as you can see, there is a fair amount of information already available on the declaration card. Some would argue that it is too much information while others may see the benefit in adding further details, and others still prefer the status quo. But perhaps the amount of content is not as much a topic for discussion as the wording itself. At the moment nowhere can an Alberta citizen formally state that he or she is not interested in becoming a donor. Instead, this is implied by simply leaving the form blank and perhaps by letting their family members know. Also, the undecided cannot state anywhere that they are indeed undecided. This option is not currently available.

Mr. Chairman, in other words, if one wishes to become an organ or tissue donor, they must fill out the said form, and as an individual who believes in the value of individual initiative and personal responsibility, I am proud that individuals will take on that task of determining their own wishes and what happens to their bodies. By making that personal determination, I believe it makes it easier on family members as well as it may be very timely. We all know that donating organs or tissues needs to be done in a timely manner, and that's important because every minute counts, especially for those who need those organs or that tissue.

Perhaps the biggest problem with the way the current form is worded is that it does not help to further alleviate the organ and tissue demand by those Albertans in need. Indecision is okay, too. In fact, it is a sign that one has put some thought into the matter, but as of now on this issue there's nothing that separates undecided persons from those who have already made the firm decision not to become an organ or tissue donor.

Section 22.1(1) would likely help remedy that situation. It is also entirely possible that an increasing number of individuals will take the time to fill it out. These individuals alone may increase the pool of organ and tissue donors potentially available. That in itself would prove to be a great success for the donor program and, more importantly, for Albertans waiting for a second chance at life.

Mr. Chairman, I'm not opposed to a partial change on the declaration form as proposed in the amended bill. I believe those changes would be improvements, but no matter what the final format might be, it will be designed to inform Albertans of the importance of organ or tissue donations in this province.

To the Member for Edmonton-Manning: congratulations in bringing forward individual initiative and, especially, personal responsibility because I believe that that value should be taken seriously in whatever decisions we make for our lives. I for one appreciate that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today and join Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 201 as amended. Before I begin, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for all the hard work and effort he has put into this piece of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of sections to this proposed legislation. However, today I would like to focus my remarks on section 1, (c.1) of the bill. This section outlines the meaning of a certificate of registration, and for the sake of clarity under section 1 part (c.1) of the bill as amended reads as follows:

"Certificate of registration" means

- (a) a certificate of registration issued under this Act, or
- (b) any other document prescribed by the regulations as being a certificate of registration for the purposes of this Act or the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act.

Mr. Chairman, part (c.1)(a) makes it clear that a certificate of registration could be issued under this act specifically for the purpose of organ and tissue donation declaration while, on the other hand, part (c.1)(b) would allow pre-existing documents to be used for the same purpose. These subsections leave all options open to be considered for the purposes of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that there were some concerns brought up during second reading of this proposed legislation, and some of those concerns focused on what exactly would be used as the certificate of registration in Alberta regarding organ and tissue donation. Initially it was proposed that the Alberta personal health care insurance card be the certificate used for the purposes of this act. However, the question was raised: why not use drivers' licences? This bill as amended has left that option open so long as the individual's driver's licence could be classified as a certificate of registration under the act. To ensure that the most appropriate certificate of registration is chosen, all options must be considered, including drivers' licences.

Mr. Chairman, one of the benefits of using drivers' licences as the certificate of registration regarding organ and tissue donation is the fact that they must be renewed on a regular basis. This would afford Albertans the opportunity to reconsider and change their decisions with regard to organ and tissue donation every time their driver's licence came up for renewal. In fact, there are many jurisdictions in the United States that use drivers' licences as the certificate of registration for organ and tissue donation, and from what I understand, it is a system that works quite well. That is why under section 1 (c.1) does not serve to limit what can be used as a certificate of registration.

However, other legislation would need to be amended in order to utilize drivers' licences as the certificate of registration for organ and tissue donation in Alberta. That, Mr. Chairman, falls outside the scope of this private member's bill. Nevertheless, the way in which the bill as amended has been worded allows for such an option, making sure that all opportunities are left available in case other legislation was to be amended.

Bill 201 as amended is a good first step towards encouraging increased awareness regarding donation of organs and tissue in Alberta. Furthermore, mandatory declaration with regard to donation could result in an increase in donors within our province. After all, that is one of the goals this bill aims to achieve. Under section 1 part (c.1) of this proposed legislation leaves the certificate of registration to be determined without restrictions, and it makes sure to allow for full consideration and flexibility of options.

Yet, Mr. Chairman, I still feel that the best and most practical way to introduce a certificate of registration for organ donation would be through the use of our personal health care cards. One of the most significant reasons for this is because personal health care cards are issued to everyone living in Alberta whereas not all Albertans possess a driver's licence.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to point out that individuals who are under 18 years of age would not be included under the provisions of this bill. I think this is an important consideration as many young Albertans are unsure about their wishes regarding donation. Because of their uncertainty on the issue, using a personal health care card would afford young Albertans the opportunity to take their time to come to a decision. All they would be required to do once they reach legal age is indicate their wishes regarding donation on the back of their health care card.

This system would keep the entire process quite simple as there would be no need to issue any additional certificate of registration whereas if drivers' licences were to be used, individual choice regarding donation would need to be indicated somewhere on Albertans' licences. Thus, either a new card would have to be issued at an Alberta motor vehicle registry, or some kind of alteration would need to be made available to place on the licences.

Although the use of a driver's licence to declare one's donation intentions would be beneficial due to the frequency of its renewal, amendments would need to be made to other legislation, which is again beyond the scope of this bill. Further, not every Albertan has a driver's licence. So as you can see, Mr. Chairman, under section 1 part (c.1) of this bill would allow for a number of options to be considered with regard to the certificate of registration for organ and tissue donation. I believe this is important and, therefore, feel that this is a valuable section of Bill 201 as amended.

I would again like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing this bill before the House. It is an important issue that merits careful consideration with regard to organ and tissue donation in Alberta. I hope that my remarks brought some clarity to this debate.

At this time I will conclude my comments on Bill 201 as amended. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It is an honour and privilege to rise and discuss this bill at this time. I would like to congratulate the hon. member for bringing forward this bill, which has the intent of not only encouraging but increasing the number of organ and tissue donors here in Alberta. It was mentioned earlier that, really, we have rather low rates of participation here in Alberta, and that's something we should look towards correcting. We should educate the public and, if possible, make it easier for them to take part in this life-giving process.

I did listen intently to much of the debate that was going on, and it did bring me some sort of dismay that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek reiterated that this bill is now in its third – third – sort of revision before this House. It seems to me that it would behoove the government if that is true – and I assume, because she has been here for much of that time, that it is the third reincarnation of this bill – that, hopefully, we would see it sometime shortly in the future. Maybe you can go back and look at the best benefits of all three of these bills. I'm assuming that many people put a lot of work into it, and since this Legislature has passed it on all three occasions, the government has enough information to go ahead and put together a pretty good bill that would go forward to both educate the public as well as to increase the amount of people contributing to donations.

I can personally attest to some of the education tactics that people sometimes sort of need. As you may or may not be aware, I lived in my father's house for much of my life, in fact until I was 30. My sister and I went to university during much of our 20s, and I remember one day coming home from university – I happened to be 25 and my sister approximately 23 – and my father had beaten us home from work. He was a schoolteacher, and he proclaimed to us when we rolled in through the door that he had filled out our organ donation cards and enthusiastically said to us: by the way, Kent and Kristie, you are donating your organs to the betterment of humankind upon your leaving to your eternal reward.

I, being somewhat more accepting of my father's good wishes, merely rolled into my bedroom and said: well, dad made a decision. My sister, on the other hand, challenged my father on this point. She said: "How did you in fact do this? Was the letter not sent to me?" Yes, it was. My dad said: "Well, I made a judgment decision. I signed the form on your behalf, and I sent it in." Well, then a row ensued. Needless to say, my sister and my father disagreed on her giving her organs to donation after the fact. I really don't know whether my sister was uninformed or educated about the importance of donating her organs or whether she was just disagreeing about the fact that my father had arbitrarily made a decision for her at the age she was, but it's something we discuss from time to time, about how my father likes to still try to make decisions in our lives.

Needless to say, that brings up the education factor of this bill, that it could go a long way to informing individuals who may be reluctant to donate their organs that there is a true need out there, that people do value the contributions, that much of this could go to life-saving activities which go a long way to helping individuals and families who are faced with a difficult situation.

As this has been through this House before, I'm hopeful that this time we will pass it and that it will come into law sometime in the future in front of this House. I look forward to seeing that very soon.

I'd like to close by thanking the hon. member for putting forward this bill. I'd like to thank my father for actually doing that very entertaining stunt, filling out those forms for us, because it still brings a lot of joy when we discuss his actions of some 20 years ago regarding the filling in of those forms. It could bring an education process to Alberta's future generations who may wish to donate their organs to people in need.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for the wide latitude you gave me in making a point on this much-needed bill. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today in Committee of the Whole to speak to Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011. The intent, of course, of this bill is obviously a noble one, to facilitate Albertans in becoming organ donors should they wish to be. As amended, this bill works to accomplish that by explicitly requesting that Albertans upon becoming legal age declare their intent to either become an organ donor, to not become an organ donor, or to state that they are undecided in the matter.

Mr. Chairman, an important part of ensuring that the intent of this bill is fully realized is including provisions for the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations. Bill 201 as amended provides this through section 21(h), which states that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations "providing for any matter relating to the completion of declaration forms under section 22.1."

Mr. Chairman, in order to discuss the significance of amending section 21 to include subsection (h), it is important to first acknowledge the goal of section 21 as it stands in the Health Insurance Premiums Act. This section currently provides our province's Lieutenant Governor in Council the provisions to make necessary regulations pertaining to the other sections of this act. Essentially, section 21 currently includes subsections (a) through (g), which are tailored to support directives of the bill, including registration of residents under the act and circumstances where individuals are exempt from this registration, for example. However, due to the fact that Bill 201 as amended would establish a change in section 1 of the act so as to include a certificate of registration and a definition of this type of document, the current subsections under section 21 need to be updated accordingly. Further, the bill as amended stipulates that the certificate of registration include in its contents a declaration form regarding organ donation where a person may select "yes," "no," or "undecided."

Mr. Chairman, these provisions are important and perhaps are the crux of this bill as they embody its purpose. However, it is imperative that these provisions are supported by the necessary regulations to ensure there is a protocol in place stipulating how the goal of this bill can ultimately be achieved. Section 21(h) of Bill 201 accomplishes that.

As I said earlier, section 21(h) states that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations "providing for any matter relating to the completion of declaration forms under section 22.1." Section 22.1(1) of the bill as amended reads:

A certificate of registration shall include a declaration form concerning organ and tissue donation that specifies the following 3 options:

- (a) yes;
- (b) no;
- (c) undecided.

Mr. Chairman, the wording of Bill 201 presently makes it clear that the Lieutenant Governor in Council can make regulations pertaining to the certificate of registration form for organ and tissue donation. This would ensure that a process and the necessary administrative support can be put in place if this bill comes into force. These regulations could include, for example, how the form looks, how it is presented to residents, and how the declarations are filed.

Mr. Chairman, to elaborate on these points, the regulations could stipulate that the declaration form include the individual's signature so as to demonstrate their signed authorization regarding their intentions. Often documents such as this require the signature of a witness. The regulations could stipulate that, of course, as well. These details are not currently part of the amended bill. However, they may be established through regulation.

Mr. Chairman, for clarity, I'm not promoting any of these policies over another. I'm simply attempting to demonstrate that there are other factors to consider when moving forward with a piece of legislation such as Bill 201. Section 21(h) is appropriately worded to ensure that this bill, if passed, could be supplemented by regulation.

On another point, section 21(h) would allow the Lieutenant Governor to make regulations on the way in which the declaration form is presented to individuals. For example, a form could include a preamble about organ donation that serves to educate individuals on the purpose of the form itself. That would ensure that when Albertans go to fill it out, they are provided with some background information that can help them make a decision. Or the declaration form could be presented to an individual in front of an objective health care worker, who can support an individual in their decision-making. Alternatively, it may be desirable to have declaration forms mailed out to Albertans. In any case, these details are important, and it may be appropriate for them to appear in regulations. As such, I believe that section 21(h) is a vital part of Bill 201 as amended.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, it may be important for an individual's declaration to be filed or recorded. Section 21(h) ensures that should a filing or recording system be needed to support Bill 201 as amended, it can be outlined in the regulations if necessary.

Mr. Chairman, I want to stress that I'm not saying that these particular details should be included in regulations. Instead, I'm exploring the importance of section 21(h), which allows for these details to be addressed through regulations should it be necessary. Ultimately, I believe that this section is an integral part of Bill 201 as amended, and I believe that as it is worded, it ensures that the bill can be fully supported.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to thank you for the opportunity to speak today. I look forward to hearing the remainder of my colleagues' comments.

Thank you.

4:20

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise today in Committee of the Whole and share my comments on Bill 201 as amended, but before I begin, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for all the hard work he did in drafting this piece of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the amendments to this bill provide an excellent opportunity to rethink attitudes and approaches surrounding a very important issue, that of organ and tissue donation. Today I'd like to focus the majority of my comments on section 21(h). For the record section 21 is amended by adding clause (h) following clause (g), and it reads: "providing for any matter relating to the completion of declaration forms under section 22.1." I feel that the proposed amendments to the original Health Insurance Premiums Act will strengthen the overall intent of Bill 201.

More than 4,300 people are currently in need of an organ in Canada. As many as 6 per cent, or some 250 people, will die while on waiting lists. Bill 201 as amended seeks to address this reality and save lives. It takes a very noble and special person to donate an organ. It is a commendable goal. The objective of Bill 201 as amended is to encourage Albertans to make a clear yes, no, or undecided declaration regarding their organ donor status on the back of their Alberta health care card by presenting them with the question. This could see the supply of organs increase and help save the lives of those waiting.

The context of adding clause (h) relates to the regulations. Specifically, it outlines what regulations can be made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. This will be the eighth such regulation the Lieutenant Governor in Council can make. Such regulations already include prescribing the classes of dependants that a resident is required to register and governing the registration of residents with the minister generally. Others state that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make decisions with respect to the imposing of penalties on those who have not registered within the times prescribed under the regulations. Another prescribes the classes of persons exempted from registration.

Mr. Chairman, it's important to recognize the exemptions that these sections refer to. After all, virtually nothing is without exemptions. A resident is not required to register with the minister in two instances. The first is if the resident is exempted from registering by the regulations, as has been previously alluded to. Secondly, a resident is also not required to register with the minister if the duty to register is imposed by the regulation of some other person.

In general, exemptions are necessary to observe since there rarely is a one-size-fits-all approach. Seldom can something like an act or a law be universally imposed or applied without recognition of some exceptions. For example, with respect to those wishing to become a living organ donor, one must pass stringent guidelines set by Health Canada, and they must also sufficiently pass the donor suitability process. Donor suitability can be measured on a number of different levels, often including specific exclusionary criteria. Such exclusionary criteria may include persons who have used intravenous, intramuscular, or subcutaneous drugs in recent years or persons with hemophilia. Further exclusionary conditions include anyone who has HIV-, HBV-, or HCV-infected blood.

Additionally, Mr. Chairman, not everyone can become an organ donor even if they have declared the answer to be yes. Those who have declared their yes with regard to being a cadaveric organ donor are not automatically assumed to be an apt donor. This is because they may not have organs suitable for transplant due to the health of the organs or the nature of their death. There are a myriad of other reasons as well. After all, the safety of those who are to receive an organ transplant is of crucial importance. It is the reality of cases like these that makes exemptions necessary in the first place.

Regardless of exemption cases, if the purpose of Bill 201 proves successful, we could see a reasonable increase in organ donation rates throughout Alberta. If section 21(h) were not in place, we could potentially see a scenario whose ambiguity would cause a misinterpretation of the different regulations. Also, if section 21(h) were not in place, we would be missing an important link between exemptions and the regulations specifying different means by which every resident shall register with the minister.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, I would again like to stress the importance of section 21(h). Essentially, the section provides a necessary connection of the regulations subject to the power of the Lieutenant Governor with the exemption criteria. Without this section we could have a scenario where the bill was misinterpreted due to an inappropriate system being in place, and the effectiveness of the legislation could suffer as a result. However, with this amendment Bill 201 seeks to address the issue of organ donation and, ultimately, to save lives. It's important to recognize that certain exemptions may come into play. After all, exemptions are often necessary because there are rarely one-size-fits-all methods.

Once again, thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for the hard work that went into the drafting of this bill, especially the necessary addition of section 21(h).

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to join the debate on this bill. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing it forward. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is correct that we've debated this issue before; here we are again.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to ask my colleagues to imagine two scenarios, the first of which is a trade show that happens in so many communities across our province. In fact, it's spring, and they're happening now. Peace River's is next weekend, and I'll be very pleased to be home and attend the trade fair. The trade fairs are not just for businesses. Very often community service organizations attend these trade fairs.

Imagine, if you will, that the local organ donation information group has a booth in the trade fair. As happens in all trade fairs, everybody has got a little glass jar on the counter, and you put your business card in there or write your name in there and you'll be entered into a draw at the end of the day for a prize, typically a T-shirt or balloons, those sorts of things, very minor gifts. But the kids flock to it and put their names in, and most parents walk around and put their names in all the jars. At the booth where the organ donation organization is working, the glass jar on the counter is absolutely empty despite the fact they have a prominently displayed prize for a draw. It's empty; not a single person put their name in it.

Now I'm going to ask you to imagine a second scenario, a darker one. Mr. Chairman, imagine a mother in a hospital at 1 o'clock in the morning, and she's been informed by the doctor on call that her daughter has been killed in a car accident, and she is asked to authorize organ donation. Despite the fact that she knows for certain that her daughter had intended to donate her organs, the mother refuses permission for organ donation until she can attend the body, until she can touch the wounds to convince herself that her daughter is dead.

Both of those scenarios are true, Mr. Chairman. Those are not made up. That is the deeply personal and often irrational nature of organ donation. It is not for us to sit in this Legislature and tell people, "You should sign your donation card" or "You shouldn't sign” or “You should declare” or “You shouldn’t declare.” This does not come from me. This comes from organ donation people that I have talked to every year since I was elected to this Chamber. This is the absolute reality. It’s not rational; it doesn’t need to be. That’s not the point.

The point is that this is deeply personal, and people actually believe that by signing their cards, the doctors will kill them to harvest their organs. Whether it’s rational or not really doesn’t matter. If you believe that, it’s going to shape your behaviour, and it’s going to shape your mistrust of people that tell you to do otherwise. Imagine a mother needing to feel the wounds of her daughter before she can convince herself her daughter is actually dead before she’ll sign the form. I can’t imagine that situation, but thank God I wasn’t in it. Maybe I would be the same way; I don’t know.

What I can tell you is that I am not going to participate in furthering this cause. I’m going to vote against this bill simply because for the people in my constituency that are very active in organ donation – in fact, I believe my corner of the province has the highest donation rate in the province – it’s about education, and it’s not about legislation. They want us to stay away from legislation. I’ve been told that time and time again, and that’s where I’m going to go with my vote on this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m also pleased to rise today in Committee of the Whole and share my comments on Bill 201 as amended. However, before I begin, I’d also like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for all the hard work he’s put into drafting this piece of legislation. I know he’s put a tremendous amount of work into this and talked to many people around the province and to many colleagues.

I know it is a sensitive issue, and I know it does become potentially at times irrational. As a family member who has sat on the end of the bed of a dying 16-year-old boy waiting for an organ, when you’re begging and pleading and praying that someone out there has donated that organ and you’re waiting minute by minute in the middle of the night, which happened to me and my family, I can only say that I’m glad we’re having this discussion.

I think that education is the key, and I don’t think that with this legislation the hon. member is mandating that Albertans do anything but for us to encourage people to make a decision, ask them to make a decision, raise the awareness, have the discussion with your family. I think that’s a good idea.

While there are many sections of this bill that warrant time and consideration, I’d like to focus the majority of my comments today on section 6. This section is very straightforward. It’s found in many bills brought before the House, especially private members’ bills. The section reads, “This Act comes into force on Proclamation.” I believe that the importance of this section lies in the fact that its inclusion gives government the time they need to implement the changes proposed through the legislation.

After all, with a government bill departments have often been working towards the changes long before they see the House, Mr. Chairman, and that’s not necessarily the case with private members’ bills. Therefore, the government is better prepared to implement the bill as soon as the debate concludes and the bill is passed by the Assembly.

However, with a private member’s bill, like the one before us today, the departments affected have not had time to adjust their processes to seamlessly transition in the changes proposed by the legislation or to potentially tweak it, to work out any kinks that we may become aware of through deeper consultation with Albertans and stakeholders. As such, they need time to get things in order, so to speak.

Mr. Chairman, that’s where section 6 comes into play. With this section government can delay the passage of this bill until a point where they’re equipped to both implement it and enforce it. As I understand it, there really is no enforcement. There really are no consequences if you decide not to tick off a box or if you decide to tick off an undecided. That’s quite acceptable.

In order to understand why we need section 6 in place, we need to first look at the intention and goals of the amended bill. As stressed in second reading, the intent of Bill 201 is to increase the rate of organ donation in Alberta. Of course, this could save lives and reduce the costs in our health care system. However, it is the process that this bill proposes that truly warrants the need for section 6.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 201 proposes to increase organ donation rates by altering the way we are asked about organ donation. Under our current systems Albertans are not asked directly, and I think that would be a good change. I think it would be great to have a direct question asked to Albertans about their intent on organ donation and to encourage them to have that discussion with their families.

Conversely, the changes proposed by Bill 201 would make it so that a person would need to choose either yes, no, or undecided on the back of their Alberta health card. Seeing that there is no system in place to ask people this question today, there needs to be time to implement these changes.

As it stands right now, your health care card can be mailed to you, to your place of residence, when you turn 18, and there is no need to physically make a trip to apply for the card, which is good. But with the changes proposed by Bill 201, it may require that an individual pay a visit to a health-related facility and fill out some paperwork before receiving the health care card, and that maybe wouldn’t be such a great idea.

Mr. Chairman, this procedural change may require the organization of resources and staff, which cannot be done overnight. Therefore, the time allotment present in section 6 is clearly needed. Without this in place, this bill could come into effect before the resources to effectively administer the proposed changes are established.

Alternatively, this section could have been an arbitrary date, but I’m pleased to see the hon. member recognized the challenges that could be brought about by his proposed changes and has wisely opted to have this bill come into force upon proclamation and a little bit more due diligence.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to providing time to get the administration of a new health card in order, section 6 also allows time for our health care system to prepare for a possible increase in organ donation. If the intent of Bill 201 is successful, we could see a reasonable increase in organ donation rates throughout the province. Again, section 6 provides this time.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I’d like to point out that section 6 additionally is important because from the time a bill is passed to the time it is proclaimed, a great many things can change. Some things can transpire. New technologies, new treatments can come about. In essence, this section ensures sufficient time for implementation of the changes proposed by the hon. member and allows for the necessary system to be established to ensure the efficiency and effectiveness of the legislation.

I’m pleased to see section 6 included as part of the bill, I’m pleased to see the bill on the floor for discussion, and I’m pleased that the bill does not mandate that if you don’t respond, you are assumed to have responded yes. I’m encouraged that the bill is asking Albertans to make a decision and encouraging them to have that discussion with their family, which I think is a very positive step.

I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing that forward and for the hard work that he went to in drafting this bill.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will be quite brief. I've spoken twice already relating to the bill, and I won't reiterate what I have said. I am in support of the provisions of this bill because I think it would be a positive step to increasing the number of organs available for donation.

But I would like to clear up one thing. There seems to be a continuing misapprehension by some of the members in the House that in some way the directions given by a person antecedent to their death would be dispositive of the issue of what happens to their body. That is not the case. The next of kin always have control over the body of a deceased person. No organ donation could be made on the basis of one's wishes expressed on a donor card or a licence or an Alberta health card or any other form of indication.

What those are are expressions of one's wishes with respect to what would happen to one's body after the point of death. That's all they are. They are an expression of wishes. One would hope that the person attending to the body, the next of kin, would respect those wishes to some measure. I cannot see the difficulty in having one's wishes conveyed and communicated to those who are in actual legal control of the body after the point of death.

For those reasons, Mr. Chairman, I don't think that the oppositions that have been stated to the bill are well founded. I think that it's a positive measure, and it's one that we should support. I think it's a very, very positive thing for those who are waiting for organ donations.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is certainly an honour to rise today and share some of my thoughts about this particular bill, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011, brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. I would like to thank the hon. member for his hard work on this bill and his dedication and passion to a subject that he along with many members of this House are very passionate about.

Of course, having effective policies in place for organ donation can increase donation rates, thereby saving lives, and that is something that I know every member of this House is very interested in. I know that I'll probably be cut off, Mr. Chairman, because of time, but I want to share my comments on this amendment bill, and that's in regard to section 1 of the health insurance premiums act, which states:

- (c.1) "certificate of registration" means
  - (a) a certificate of registration issued under this Act, or
  - (b) any other document prescribed by the regulations as being a certificate of registration for the purposes of this Act or the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act.

Mr. Chairman, this section is definitely not self-explanatory at first glance, so I'll try to explain this section piece by piece to provide clarity. As you look at what the definition of certificate of registration is, we have to look at the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. According to section 4(5) of this act a certificate of registration under the Health Insurance Premiums Act is proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the person is a resident if the certificate was in effect at the time the service was provided to that person.

This proof of residence is, generally speaking, an Alberta health care insurance plan card.

In other words, what section 1, part (c.1) does is define a certificate of registration to be an Alberta health care card. This makes sense. After all, Mr. Chairman, Albertans are currently able to declare their wishes to donate organs by checking a box on the back of their Alberta health care card, so defining this certificate as an Alberta health care card is an obvious first step.

However, Mr. Chairman, this is not the end of the story. After all, under section 1 (c.1) has a clause which states that other documents can count as certificates of registration if prescribed in the regulations. This is an important provision. It's important because we're not familiar with mandatory declarations right here in Alberta, and as such we might find that there are better ways of implementing such a policy than requiring an individual's wishes to be filled out on the back of their Alberta health care card.

For example, Mr. Chairman, in New Jersey individuals are required to declare their organ donation wishes before applying for a driver's licence. While their policy is different than the one proposed in this Bill 201, as their policy only gives individuals a yes or a no option, it might be worth while to look into the efficacy of declaring organ donation on drivers' licences, which can be done in the regulations as a result of subsection (c.1) of this act.

Looking at even more jurisdictions, Mr. Chairman, one quickly discovers that there are a number of different ways whereby individuals can declare their donation wishes. Our neighbours just to the west of us, in British Columbia, for example, have an online and a by-mail registration system. For some of our provincial cousins to the east, in Prince Edward Island individuals can declare their wishes by placing a sticker on their health care card or having an engraving on their driver's licence. My point is that it's important that we are able to make changes to the definition of certificate of registration in the regulations so that we have flexibility to adopt the different policies to achieve the objectives of what the hon. member has put forward.

I think that with that, Mr. Chairman, in trying to provide some light on this particular section of the legislation, I'm going to conclude and allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning to conclude with some remarks on this bill in Committee of the Whole.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise today and close Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011.

Before I begin my comments today, I would first like to thank all the members that participated today and during the second reading debate. I would also like to thank all the members for supporting the amendment I introduced earlier.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the sections of this bill as amended work together effectively to address the intent of this bill. Section 22.1(1) clearly lays out that our health cards are to include three choices for organ donation: yes, no, and undecided. This three-choice approach does not compel people to choose their organ donation status if they are unprepared to do so, but it might encourage them to discuss their options with their loved ones.

In addition, section 21(h) states that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations “providing for any matter relating to the completion of declaration forms under section 22.1.” In my mind this section would be used to change the way we ask about donor status. So instead of mandating that everyone declare their organ donor status, we could through regulation require that we pose the question to every Albertan. After all, Mr. Chairman, asking the question is often enough to encourage people to choose to be an organ donor.

In closing, I would again like to thank all the members who have participated in this debate so far. I believe that the current wording of this bill accurately reflects my intention and the intention debated in second reading. This is a good bill, and I believe that it has the potential to save the lives of many people.

With that, I will conclude my comments and urge all members to support this bill as amended. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011?

[The clauses of Bill 201 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 201.

The Acting Speaker: All those members of the Assembly who concur in the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 203 Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act

Mr. Rodney: It is a beautiful day outside, and it seems spring has finally sprung. It's finally here. That's perfect timing to begin second reading debate on Bill 203, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act.

This legislation proposes that the second weekend of April, which has just passed, in every calendar year from this point forward would be known as Alberta get outdoors, or GO, weekend. The intent of the bill is to encourage Albertans to get outside to participate in their favourite outdoor activity or perhaps a new one that would become a favourite outdoor activity while they are developing healthier lifestyles.

How do Albertans feel about this, Mr. Speaker? I'm very proud to tell you that I've received extremely positive feedback from Albertans all over the province who have given their full support to Bill 203. As a matter of fact, I've received over 100 letters of endorsement from across our fine province and across diverse demographics, including municipalities, recreation and sports clubs, seniors' councils, health organizations, and many other important groups. Obviously, they join me in the appreciation that this is a bill that would have a very positive impact on Albertans.

As we're all aware, Albertan winters can be brutally cold, and hibernating in our warm homes may seem more attractive than going outside a lot of the time. As a result of this, it can be very easy to slip into a routine of unhealthy lifestyle habits. Every day we hear about how things are getting worse and not better when it comes to excessive time on TVs, computers, video games, and the like, addictions, including workaholism, obesity, chronic disease, and all sorts of other health maladies at all ages. Of course, this results in unhealthy, unhappy Albertans as well as skyrocketing health care costs. We just can't ignore that.

We have a myriad of reasons to be very concerned about the level of inactivity of our friends and neighbours across the province, and that's why Bill 203 would be an effective instrument in getting Albertans outside to be active, especially after being cooped up for far too long over the winter months.

Mr. Speaker, living a balanced lifestyle, which includes being physically active, is in the best interest of all Albertans no matter what age they are. It's also in the best interest of every single one of us to continue to promote the value of increased outdoor and recreational activity. There is no doubt that active living leads to a longer life, reduced stress, and increased overall quality of life. Additionally, there is a direct link between active living and the reduction of a long list of preventable diseases such as type 2 diabetes and heart disease. The list goes on, and it's a long one.

GO weekend would be a great educational tool in providing Albertans with another occasion to enhance their development in many different ways. According to research done at the University of Michigan, interacting with nature can help improve memory and attention by up to 20 per cent, and that's just one of the reasons that I like to walk to work whenever I can. Additionally, innumerable studies have proven that spending time outdoors can increase self-esteem and co-operation and leadership and conflict resolution as well as relationship-building skills. I'm sure we can all easily share personal stories along these lines. These benefits are critical for the physical, emotional, and mental fitness of children and adults.

For the record, Mr. Speaker – and I want to be clear on this to all my hon. colleagues – I know Bill 203 is not the final answer. It's not the only answer to the question as to how we ensure Albertans become more active, but that's not the intention of this bill. It's just one piece of the solution, and it complements other government initiatives that increase active living.

Mr. Speaker, when I was in the process of creating this bill years ago, I didn't see it simply as an opportunity for individuals to go outside and become active but, rather, as an opportunity for entire communities to get involved in the process and have some fun at the same time. It would encourage families and groups to work together to promote the value of increased outdoor and recreational activity, and this can be done easily through organizing neighbourhood events and activities.

These types of initiatives, which bring communities together, are not completely new to Alberta. For instance, Family Day in February and arts weekend in September have achieved great success in reaching their specific objectives. These dates have become an important part of creating community spirit throughout the province, and Bill 203 will do the same thing but in completely different ways.

Bill 203 has an additional advantage. It promotes our internal tourism sector while encouraging Albertans to go out and explore their pristine natural environment. With this weekend designated in April, it's the perfect start to acknowledging the kickoff of spring. It's the perfect time for Albertans to get outside and explore their beautiful province, including farms and forests and waterways, parklands, mountains, and so much more.

In the month of April people can be engaged in innumerable outdoor activities in Alberta. That's part of the reason it's this specific weekend. You can ski or snowboard. You can golf or hike and everything in between. Since Alberta offers these and countless other amazing outdoor opportunities, many who might have been thinking about leaving Alberta for the weekend or longer might just have the incentive to stay a little closer to home.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 fully supports government policies and programs already in place, including those currently promoting active living, balanced lifestyles, and our great outdoors. For example, the plan for parks and active Alberta policy frameworks contain elements that are complementary to Bill 203. The plan for parks introduces short- and long-term objectives that are structured to provide Albertans with healthy, sustainable, people-friendly recreational opportunities. Active Alberta, meanwhile, promotes a healthier standard of life for Albertans through recreation, active living, and sport.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 provides an invaluable opportunity for Albertans while positively impacting their lives and the lives of all their friends and neighbours on so many different levels. It's essential that we all continue to address the value that can be gained from living an outdoor and active lifestyle, spending time outside. Thankfully, we live in a province with a vast, beautiful backyard in which we can do exactly that.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that everyone here and everyone across the province must continue to inspire others to discover and value and enjoy our natural heritage as well as seek out the benefits that they provide for all generations. GO weekend is in the best interest of Albertans, and I strongly encourage all members, no matter where they sit in the House, to support Bill 203.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I realize time is limited, but I'll get started on the record and look forward to continuing at the next opportunity. Bill 203, Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act, resonates with me to the same extent that the mushroom motion, that was passed years ago, had in terms of its relevance and importance. I do appreciate the hon. member emphasizing the importance for physical activity and getting out and going, but this piece of legislation also reminds me of the government mandating daily phys ed without supplying the equipment or the space for this daily phys ed to take place.

As a teacher of 34 years who coached a variety of sports – 25 years I spent coaching wrestling and numerous years coaching gymnastics, soccer, and a wide variety of other sports – I appreciate the getting-out-and-going circumstance. While I was an elementary teacher at Jerry Potts, one of my students' favourite get-out-and-go activities was running. Basically, as soon as the weather got above the zero mark, I had the good fortune of easy-going Friday afternoons, when I could take any students who wished to run with me, primarily in grades 4, 5, and 6, on significantly long runs. One time we ran from Varsity to the zoo. Another time we ran from Varsity across Nose Hill to where I was living in Huntington Hills. We actually got out, as the bill is suggesting, for a particular weekend and enjoyed the outdoors.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also aware of the limitations of the time period that's being suggested for getting out and enjoying. The majority of Alberta's parks at this time of year are closed, so the getting-out-and-going opportunities are fairly limited. Yes, there is the potential, given this province's geography and climate, that some people may be out golfing. They may be using fluorescent orange balls on a frozen lake, or they could actually be out on a golf course if they're down in Medicine Hat and the floodwaters haven't risen to the point that you can no longer see the greens. These are concerns that I have, that simply saying so does not make it so.

Mr. Speaker, even the timing, in April, when the few parks are open: what I'm seeing is that Alberta's pristine wilderness is being gobbled up to a large extent. One of the parks that I thoroughly enjoyed camping at was Beaver Mines in the Castle-Crown, very close to Pincher Creek. I'm not looking forward to camping in a clear-cut. This lack of protection of our parks and protected areas: the erosion of the opportunity for individuals to get out and enjoy, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed suggested, very much limits it. I've made the comment about not being able to roller skate in a buffalo herd. Well, you can't hike where there are quads. It's pretty hard to hike and enjoy the wilderness when it's being clear-cut logged or you've got noisy logging trucks at the same time as you've got camper trailers trying to use the same road to access the same wilderness. We can have the best laid plans in terms of getting out and going, but if your places are . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

Motions Other than Government Motions

Child Exploitation Task Force

503. Mr. VanderBurg moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider establishing a task force to review legislation and programs related to child exploitation.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and open the debate on Motion 503. I am proposing this motion because I believe that the safety of our children and communities is of the utmost importance.

Motion 503 simply urges the government to consider establishing a task force to review legislation and programs related to child exploitation. I believe that by doing this, the task force could identify areas in the legislation that could be strengthened and/or updated to ensure that all programs are as effective as possible. Not only could this task force increase the identification and apprehension of perpetrators, but it could also raise awareness about child exploitation and be educational for both parents and children. In this way this task force would help to ensure that children are protected from sexual exploitation, thereby helping to ensure safe communities.

Mr. Speaker, I know that this government has implemented many initiatives, legislation, and programs necessary to protect Alberta's children from exploitation. For instance, this government has created the Alberta integrated child exploitation units, or ICE, as some refer to it, that investigate child luring on the Internet, child pornography, child voyeurism, and child sex tourism.

In addition, Alberta has the Amber Alert program and the Alberta child and youth initiative. The Alberta child and youth initiative involves various ministries such as Children and Youth Services, Education, Health and Wellness, Justice and Attorney General, and the Solicitor General and Public Security. Together these ministries work to address the prevention of child and youth sexual exploitation, not to mention the Alberta Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which is the legal authority for providing child intervention services in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, as the list goes on, it's evident that Alberta is a leader when it comes to protecting our children. I would like to commend and thank this government for its continued efforts in ensuring that our children and communities are safe. That being said, Motion 503 would only enhance and build upon the initiatives that this government has already brought forward.

Child exploitation is an ongoing issue that's increasingly becoming of more concern. Sharing child pornography and engaging in child luring and trafficking are social issues that have grown with access to the Internet. For example, a report from the Canadian Centre for Child Protection released in November of 2009 indicates that Canada is amongst the top five countries hosting websites depicting or selling materials involving child sexual abuse, ranking third behind the United States and Russia. This organization received 7,846 reports in 2008, 89.6 per cent of which were child pornography. Statistics Canada reports that in 2008 there were 1,408 child pornography violations under the Criminal Code across Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a parent, and as well I'm a grandparent, and these statistics are both alarming and frightening and sometimes sickening. This task force would continue to consult with stakeholders, families, and community groups in order to do everything possible to protect the innocent. This task force could help bring together new and innovative ideas for tackling this growing problem.

As a new grandparent of two little girls I realize now more than ever the potential risks that are out there, especially when it comes to the Internet. As we all know, our lives have become heavily reliant on Internet use. The Internet is a medium in which we can all view information from anywhere in the world, and this is where the problem lies. Internet usage becomes a way of life and so does the potential risk for child exploitation. Children increasingly have access to the Internet, and the fact is that parents cannot be with their children 24/7 to ensure that they are using the Internet in a safe manner.

Mr. Speaker, this task force could provide an informative perspective for ensuring that government programs and legislation are effectively working the way they were intended. Further, it could help educate parents, children, and communities by providing invaluable information. The task force could also indirectly inform families and children of the programs and initiatives that are currently available to them and for them.

It's been difficult to obtain a complete picture of child abuse in Canada because it often remains hidden. I believe that this proposed task force could help identify the true magnitude of the problem as well as come up with additional solutions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to other comments on this motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Obviously – well, I would hope it's obvious – I support any legislation designed to protect children and prevent them from exploitation.

I'd like to just go over a little bit of history and give credit where credit is due. In 2007 the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek sponsored an amendment act that changed the title and scope of an existing act to become the Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act. The act was previously the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. The stated purposes of the amendment act were to recognize that children involved in prostitution are victims of sexual abuse and to allow police and caseworkers to remove sexually exploited children from dangerous situations to ensure their safety and well-being.

Children and Youth Services, which administers the act, explains the provision as follows.

Under the legislation, sexually exploited children and youth involved in prostitution can access a variety of voluntary community services including medical assistance, drug and alcohol counseling, psychological services, educational programming, placement resources and life skills support.

A child who does not want to end his or her involvement in prostitution can be apprehended by police or a child protection worker. The police or child protection worker would then take the child to a safe, secured facility, where the child can be confined for up to five days.

It's PCHAD that allows that to happen.

At this safe, secured facility, the child receives emergency care, treatment and an assessment. The development of a long-term plan to assist the child to exit prostitution [occurs.]

Under the act, those who exploit children can be charged with child sexual abuse and fined up to $25,000, jailed for up to two years, or both.

During the debate on the amendments all parties supported the legislation, and I raised concerns about the need to expand legislation to other forms of sexual exploitation in addition to prostitution.

Mr. Speaker, in my questions today I had spoken not only to a father of a 15-year-old girl this morning face to face, but I had spent quite a bit of time on Thursday and Friday dealing with the fact that this young lady, this young 15-year-old, was being exploited. My concerns were that although the police had seen this young lady in certain drug houses, they had no ability to pick her up and detain her. Even though she previously had PCHAD orders, this young lady was not in a secure facility long enough for any assessment to take place or any supportive programs to occur.

In this particular case there was sexual abuse in her birth family that went back three generations. The mother was addicted; she suffered from bipolar. The young lady's brother ended up in a mental institution in Britain. This young lady, who, as I say, went through a very difficult family circumstance, was taken into custody when she was just two years old, into the care of a foster family, and there was concern about the nature of the foster care. She was adopted by a loving family that moved from England to the Edmonton region. When she hit age 14, which is the age at which 40 per cent of mental illness shows up for those who succumb to degrees of mental illness, she had a series of problems. Her parents reached out to the Ministry of Children and Youth Services, to the ministry of health, and to the Ministry of Justice, but despite the intentions of previous bills and to the extent that I see in this bill, there was no ability to apprehend this young lady and, once apprehended, keep her in a secured facility long enough for an assessment to take place.

In talking with a member of Alberta Health Services, who was very informative – and I thanked the woman in my responses to the questions to the minister of health – she indicated that probably the best shot a person had at getting a child apprehended who has been exploited or who basically is out there potentially doing drugs, potentially doing tricks is called a form 1. If a psychiatrist has sufficient time to do an assessment, they can create a form 1, which will then allow Children and Youth Services or the police services to apprehend the child.

But there's a catch, Mr. Speaker. Within the 24-hour period that that person is apprehended, another psychiatrist has to do a follow-up assessment to confirm that this individual is suffering from the mental illness or the exploitation that Motion 503 is talking about. If that is the case, then there can be a 30-day treatment period – assessment, treatment, support for families – in a lock-up, in a secured circumstance.

My concern, Mr. Speaker, is that whether it's sexual exploitation, whether it's drugs, regardless of the type of exploitation, our children are extremely vulnerable. I thank the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for putting this forward, but we have not exercised the degree of the law allowed to us in the previous legislation, and I am not convinced, despite all of the good intentions being put forward in this motion, that this is going to accomplish what we're trying to achieve.

There are far too many youth, Mr. Speaker, who are out there vulnerable. The idea that a justice can basically sentence a child to the street – that was the case with this 15-year old, where he didn't feel that it was necessary for her to receive secured treatment. In the case of a Canmore judge because there were no treatment facilities available, he had to let a young man in a similar circumstance go free.

Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid the sexual exploitation in a proactive way, I believe this motion will assist, but we have to deal with the fact that there are a number of homeless children wandering our streets, some who have pushed the limits to such an extent that they've exited from their homes, some based on abuse, others on an overwhelming number of circumstances. Addictions, hereditary circumstances such as the bipolar that I mentioned, prevent these young individuals from getting the help they need. Ideally, through education, through protection we would not find these children subject to the rules of the street.

Mr. Speaker, as I say, Children and Youth Services, Alberta Health, and Justice have all been involved in trying to prevent further exploitation of the young 15-year-old girl that I talked about before, and I do not see specific teeth in this motion that are going to change the current situation. While I support it and while I realize that a motion is just a suggestion, an intent, a direction that is being recommended to government, I believe that government legislation has to change.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to join debate on Motion 503, which urges the government to establish a task force to review all legislation and programs related to child exploitation. This is a forward-thinking idea. It's what Legislatures should be doing, and I'm very pleased to support it today.

We know that child abuse and exploitation are serious problems in our society, problems which have only gotten worse with the advent of the Internet. Mr. Speaker, this government continues to do everything it possibly can to protect Alberta children from these heinous crimes. Over the years we've passed legislation like the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which helps us to fight child exploitation. Essentially, this act requires any person who has reasonable and probable grounds to suspect that a child is in need of protection to report the matter to the appropriate authorities. What's more, the act lays out a clear definition of what it considers to be child sexual abuse or exploitation, which is consistent with the Canadian Department of Justice. Therefore, it is indirectly mandated through that act that child pornography or any other form of exploitation be reported at once.

In addition, Alberta has several initiatives, all of which work together with existing legislation to help put an end to these crimes. One example is the Alberta integrated child exploitation unit, or ICE, which is a joint effort by the Alberta RCMP and the police services of Calgary, Edmonton, Lethbridge, and Medicine Hat. The unit consists of a north team and a south team which address concerns with Crown prosecutors that are directly related to child exploitation. The ICE unit has been in place since 2006, and it works regularly with law enforcement agencies from across Canada. What's disappointing is that between January 2007 and December 2009 ICE investigated 917 files and, more importantly, laid 466 charges as a result.

Mr. Speaker, while the government is doing good work to address child exploitation and abuse in our province, this motion will take us further. This motion will help us to establish a task force that will conduct a comprehensive assessment of these initiatives in order to look for ways to further enhance and strengthen the measures that we have already put in place. It will seek to avoid duplication. It will be able to review how we currently are spending money with respect to programming. It will help us as Albertans to decide whether or not we are doing everything as effectively as we should to protect children in this province.

Albertans can rest assured that we have effective and efficient mechanisms in place, but the protection of children and youth here in Alberta is of highest priority to everyone. We can do more, and as Albertans we are asking our Legislature to explore how we can not only do more but how we can do it better. We can strive to do more because the fact remains that despite our best efforts to date children continue to be victimized. I know that each and every one of my hon. colleagues finds this unacceptable.

Establishing a task force to review current legislation and initiatives aimed at preventing child exploitation and bringing perpetrators to justice will ensure that government is doing everything it can to put an end to such terrible crimes. If nothing else, Mr. Speaker, this task force's findings could reaffirm that we are doing everything we can to protect children, but my expectation is that we will continue to find new ideas. We have to look to other jurisdictions. We have to look to other people that are stakeholders in this process. We have to continue to deal with the sorts of technology that are being used to exploit children today. We always need to be seeking new ideas. It is an ongoing and evolving issue. The task force that is proposed by Motion 503 is yet another tool that will better protect our children and our communities from harm.

I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for bringing forward this important motion, and I'd ask everyone in the House to support it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I rise to give my support to Motion 503, put forward by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne. The motion calls for government to consider establishing a task force to review legislation and programs related to child exploitation. I certainly appreciate the member's concerns for the welfare of children because I probably spent my entire working life working with children and the vulnerable, from being a drug and alcohol counsellor to the private member's bill I brought forward on the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, which was a first in North America and passed in this Legislature after the former Premier, from Calgary-Elbow, called me one day and told me that he was bringing it from a private member's bill to Bill 1 in this Legislature, which is probably one of the proudest moments I have had as a sitting MLA.

As it was indicated earlier, PCHIP, as it got to be known, recognizes that children in the sex trade are actually victims of sexual abuse and gives them the support that they need, establishing safe houses so that they can receive emergency care, treatment, and assessment for long-term changes in their lives. It's a bill that aggressively pursued the predators. Penalties for pimps and johns included fines up to $25,000 and jail time.

In my time as the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker, I was proud to guide two very important initiatives through the Legislature: the high-risk offender website and brought the Amber Alert to Canada, first to Alberta and then worked very diligently to bring it forward to the rest of the provinces in Canada. Now it's Canada-wide. The goal behind that is that knowledge is power to ensure community safety. When you have a high-risk offender leaving a correctional facility for the community, local residents can and will be notified. If a child is abducted, it doesn't necessarily have to be a high-risk offender. It could be a parent. Very, very strict criteria when we issue an Amber Alert – Alberta was proud to be the first province in Canada – when a child goes missing.

From there we went to Children's Services and brought forward another piece of legislation that was a first in the country, the Drug-endangered Children Act. This act made it clear that children exposed to serious drug activities are victims of child abuse and need to be taken out of houses where there are toxic chemicals that are endangering their health.

In 2009, Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to have tabled and guided amendments to the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act. These amendments were extending the time that a child could stay in treatment. I was very proud at that particular time as a Progressive Conservative to be able to bring these amendments forward.

What I can't understand, Mr. Speaker, is the lack of progress on child exploitation in the last few years. The former Justice minister, the Member for Calgary-Elbow, stood up and gave a very, very passionate speech about what she believes needs to be done in this province and how she envisions things. What I find ironic, to be very honest with you, is that it's the same minister that when we passed the mandatory reporting of child pornography in this Legislature – and it did pass in this Legislature under her guidance and leadership – did not proclaim the bill. The same minister was aware of the PCHIP legislation and the amendments that were passed in this Legislature. The same Minister of Justice has not guided that amendment or that piece of legislation through.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I find it quite unacceptable, some of the legislation that has been put in this House that hasn't been passed in recent times. I alluded to the PCHIP legislation. We all know that children who are abusing drugs are probably at highest risk and most vulnerable in regard to sexual exploitation. They need to be clean and they need to be sober so that they can get their life on track. To this day, two years later, it still hasn't been proclaimed. These are laws that are going to help our children who are very, very vulnerable. They need to get the help that we've promised.

I am very proud to be able to stand up and support the motion from the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne because, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I know that his heart is in the right place. I know that of anybody in this particular Legislature he is one that will push to get the job done. I'm extremely proud to be able to say that because I've gotten to know him over the last several years, and I know that when he puts his mind to something, he gets it done.

It's important that this motion pass. As he alluded to, he's a dad; he's a granddad to two young girls. I think he realizes how quickly the world is changing and how quickly sexual exploitation is changing. We've got cellphone sex; we've got truck-stop sex. I have trouble even trying to keep up with some of the stuff that is currently going on in this world.

Like the Member for Calgary-Varsity, I can tell you that I get the calls. The police refer people to me; parents call. We're in a similar situation where we're dealing with a young lady that's 15, and we're dealing with a young man that's 12. Finding them is one thing. Getting them help is another, and trying to get them into a secure treatment facility – the wonderful, wonderful, wonderful people within the department of children and family services have tried all they can to get these children help. While they're able to get them some sort of help, like the hon. member mentioned, it's a form 1 in regard to dealing with some of their mental illness, whether it's from a psychiatrist or a psychologist. All of these things can be done to protect our children.

I hope that this motion passes. Quite frankly, I hope the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne is given the task of chairing this particular task force. I know that he's one member in this Legislature that will research what's going on not only in this country but what's new, what's innovative, what the children need to do, what needs to be done to help the children. When I was working the streets – and I always hate to use this terminology because everybody all of a sudden thinks that, you know, you were involved in prostitution – I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I spent thousands of hours on the street meeting with kids, establishing relationships with the kids, being able to sit down and have coffee with them, share a smoke, have a pizza with them, and find out exactly what their thoughts were.

A compelling story for me is a young lady that we picked up under PCHIP for the 13th time. She was shooting coke between her toes. I thought that this was one that we were probably going to have to write off. Well, whatever clicked, the 13th time it worked. They tell you not to get involved in these particular situations because your heart gets torn away by these kids so often. Anyhow, I decided to follow this young lady, had her join children's services, because she was doing so well, so that she could bring her stories to other children that were dealing with the same situation.

Finally, we brought together a task force when we were reviewing the PCHIP legislation – what was right, what was wrong – and invited her to come. Then she asked me if she could speak. We'd never put any of the kids front and centre because our role was not to use them. I said: if that's what you want, you're more than welcome to be able to do that. With 350 people at this conference – and we're talking hard-core cops that have been around forever, people within Justice – she told her stories about how she got involved . . . [Mrs. Forsyth's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and make a few remarks on Motion 503. I would like to thank my colleague the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne for bringing the idea forward. The motion calls upon the House to urge the government to review legislation and programs relating to child exploitation. I would suggest that if such a review were carried out, it might help to identify areas in the legislation that should be strengthened or updated in order to ensure that all of our programs are as effective as they possibly can be. The review might be conducted through a specific task force or a committee.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to addressing issues such as child exploitation, it behooves us as legislators to remain vigilant at all times about making sure that we're doing everything in our power to keep children safe and that they are protected from those who would exploit them and from sexual predators.

Mr. Speaker, one special area of growing concern, which has been the subject of a lot of attention in recent years, is the exploitation of children through the use of the Internet. We have learned a lot about how that exploitation is being carried out, things like sharing child pornography, luring children into abusive relationships and abuse, and child trafficking. All of these things are problems which may arise on the Internet, and they all are abhorrent, of course, to our society. We must fight them with increased vigilance and using increasingly sophisticated means of detecting them and increasing sophistication on the part of the law enforcement agencies in how they apprehend and pursue people that are doing this exploitation.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the public also has a huge role in stopping Internet-related child exploitation. According to cybertip.ca, which is a national tip line for reporting sexual predators or suspicious online communications, they receive somewhere over 600 reports per month relating to possible sexual exploitation of children on the Internet. According to one source 21 per cent of children report having met someone in person whom they first encountered online. Those are surprising and disturbing figures, and they demand our full attention and that of all Alberta parents and the public at large.

Mr. Speaker, there is widespread public concern over exploitation of children. One survey reported that over 92 per cent of Canadians are concerned about child pornography being distributed on the Internet and that 72 per cent of Canadians believe that if someone wanted to access child pornography online, it would be very easy to do so.

Child exploitation and abduction also ranks second in the top three concerns facing Canadian children as assessed by Canadian parents. Mr. Speaker, because of the difficulty in monitoring the Internet due to the very nature of the communications, it's difficult if not impossible to catch all of the graphic content that is out there on the web and all of the sites and communications which are attempting to lure children into abusive relationships and so on. That's why it's so important to raise awareness and to educate people and to seek the vigilance of the online community, all of us, so that we can track down the miscreants who are perpetrating these acts and get to them before the criminal acts occur.

Currently most Canadian parents are using outdated, ineffective information to teach their children about personal safety when they're on the Internet. Mr. Speaker, 74 per cent of children have reported that an adult is never present when they go online. In homes without rules about Internet use, it is so important to talk about these issues with children. I would suggest that if Motion 503 is passed, it would encourage us to have a very thorough discussion of what measures might be taken to reduce child exploitation, to look at the various measures that we might take that maybe aren't being pursued today.

For all of those reasons I would urge all of the members in the Assembly to support Motion 503.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, do you wish to speak?

Mr. Hehr: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to speak to this Motion 503, a motion that urges this Assembly to put together a task force to explore ways to reduce child exploitation in this province. How can anyone really disagree with the intent of that motion? We've heard from many people, you know, on the abhorrent nature of the act and, of course, how we want to protect our youth and children from this type of exploitation. We've also heard how the Internet and modern technology make it, in my view, easier than ever for people to exploit children. This is a very difficult thing to stand for, so I again applaud him for bringing this motion forward.

I would hope, you know, whether it's a task force or whether we maybe could put to use our all-party committee on, I believe, crime and safety, this would be one of those things to get that committee to work to review legislation and see some best practices. I believe that that would be probably the place to send it instead of creating a new specific task force to actually do that work. I think that would be a great place to start.

You know, we have a Solicitor General and a Minister of Justice, who are deeply in tune with the police and the experts out there who bring this information to them on a regular basis. One would assume that they're getting a good briefing from the people who are out on the streets as to what's needed, so one might ask whether this is, for all intents and purposes, needed. Nevertheless, I do understand erring on the side of caution, and if this committee or a task force could bring in one good law or one good assessment that saved a child from exploitation, well, why not?

Again, just for the sake of cost savings, I would urge that this work be done by an existing all-party committee, not necessarily by a new task force set up. I believe they are already established, already being paid for their work, and ready and able and willing to do that work. It would be nice to see this motion maybe sent over in their direction.

Those are my comments. May we as a province remain vigilant against child exploitation, and this is a motion that goes to show that we remain on guard against that vile happening within this province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to speak to Motion 503, the motion that is being proposed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne. It's also an honour to stand up and speak with the same voice as those of other passionate advocates in this Assembly like the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow or the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. My neighbour to the left here – and I mean that literally, not figuratively – is also very passionate about that. The intent behind this motion is to ensure that our legislation is up to date and that it is an effective tool in preventing the crime of child exploitation.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to go off on a little bit of a side note here as to why I think this motion is so important and something that we probably don't do enough of as a Legislature and as a government, and that is constantly reviewing some of the laws and some of the programs that we have put in place to deal with some of the challenges that we face. We've heard a number of speakers today already very eloquently articulate the fact that technology in this area has particularly made us much more aware of the challenges facing the area of child exploitation, and that technology is always advancing and always moving forward. We need to make sure that our legislation and our programs as a government are keeping up with those changes. So that's something that I think is a very, very important aspect of the motion brought forward by the hon. member.

The motion does not propose to alter or create any legislation, rather to ensure that the legislation that we have currently in place is working the way that it was intended. Again, Mr. Speaker, it goes back to some old work that I used to do, and that's sort of program evaluation type work. Quite often we as a government bring in legislation and bring in programs that were intended to deal with a particular issue. In this case, the hon. member's motion focuses on legislation and programs related to child exploitation. It's very, very important in anything that you do in government to periodically go back and review those to make sure that they're actually doing the job that you had intended them to do. If not, then make the requisite changes. If so, celebrate some of the successes that you've had and maybe look to improve upon those or see if there are any gaps that are missing. Again, this is something that I believe this motion does intend to do and is something that I think is very worthy of supporting.

In my mind, a key to understanding this motion is first to understand the programs and the legislation that we currently have in place. After all, without this information in hand, it would be difficult to determine the need or effectiveness of the task force proposed in Motion 503. Mr. Speaker, upon quick review it's obvious that Alberta is a leader in this particular area when it comes to protecting our children.

We have several acts designed to both find and target child crime, most notable of which is the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. The fundamental idea behind this particular act, Mr. Speaker, is that if a person has reasonable or probable grounds to suspect that a child is in need of protection, they are mandated and must report that to the appropriate authorities. In essence, if you see a child in need, you are required by law to tell somebody.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to this legislation we also have several programs in Alberta designed to address child exploitation. One such example are the Alberta ICE teams, or the Alberta integrated child exploitation teams. These teams are made up of police services from all around the province as well as members of the RCMP. They are broken up into two groups, one covering the north and one covering the south part of this province. These teams' role is to focus on and specifically target the crime of child exploitation. This includes the manufacturing and distribution of child pornography, child luring, and the child sex trade.

In addition to the ICE teams we also have the Prevention of Child and Youth Sexual Exploitation Committee. The committee is designed to co-ordinate the protection of children across ministries. They help ensure that programs and policies designed to prevent child exploitation are integrated and effective. Again I would assume that the task force that the hon. member is proposing will probably work very closely with this particular committee and review some of the work that it has done. To this end, that committee does pay close attention to four basic principles – education, prevention, enforcement, and training – again, stuff that needs to be integrated into the work of this particular task force that the hon. member is proposing.

Mr. Speaker, the final program I'd like to touch on today is the Alberta Amber Alert program. Obviously, members of this House are familiar with that as well. This program is used in cases of child abduction or suspected child abduction. Under the Amber Alert program law enforcement, the media, and voluntary broadcasters are linked together to enact an emergency public warning system. This is basically a call to all Albertans to look for and report if they have witnessed the missing child in question. While this program is designed to help in all cases of child abduction, not just those related to exploitation, it has been effectively used to stop the particular crime that the hon. member is addressing through his motion.

Mr. Speaker, I've only touched briefly on some of the programs offered by this government to address these horrible crimes that are thrust onto our children, and that's just a sad, sad reality that we as legislators have to deal with. Much more could be done and spent investigating the work of these important groups and likely should for the reasons that I stated in the beginning. We must never rest on our laurels. We must always make sure that the legislation and programs that we deliver on behalf of our citizens, on behalf of our children are reaching the objectives that they were intended to do and that there are no loopholes or cracks for anybody to fall through. We must be diligent in that particular quest.

In my mind, Motion 503 is a continuation of that dedication towards helping our children, those most in need and those likely to be exploited by those with unsavory desires or ambitions when it comes to our children. Again I applaud the hon. member for his dedication to protecting the children of our province.

With that, I'll conclude my remarks and look forward to the remainder of the debate from other members. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

Seeing none, I'd invite the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne to close debate.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you all. The goal of the motion is to ensure that our children and communities are as safe as possible. I believe this motion could increase the identification and apprehension of perpetrators as well as raise the awareness about child exploitation. A child's innocence is a great virtue to have, and I want to do everything possible to make sure no one steals it away from them.

Mr. Speaker, this government has taken and continues to take a leadership role in ensuring that our communities are safe, which is one of the reasons why Alberta is an excellent place to live and raise a family. I value and respect my colleagues' comments regarding Motion 503, and I thank them all for it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that that concludes the business for this afternoon, I would like to move that the House now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker: The policy field committee will reconvene tonight at 6:30 for consideration of the main estimates of the Solicitor General and Public Safety. The meeting will be video streamed.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:50 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 12, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and of our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I'm privileged to have two introductions. First, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you on your behalf to the Assembly the participants in the 2011 Forum for Young Albertans, who are here today. This is a program for high school students that introduces them to the dynamics of government, and it includes representation from the major political parties and all three levels of government as well as the judiciary, civil service, the media, labour, and business. The group is participating in a week of sessions mostly in and around the Legislature. They are here to watch question period. They're seated in both the members' gallery and the public gallery. I'm sure I speak for all members when I say how wonderful it is to see young people take such an active interest in democracy and public service. There are nearly 30 members in the group, too many for me to name individually. They are led by the Forum for Young Albertans' executive director, Jason Stoltz. They are accompanied by Ms Tanya Hrehirchuk, Mr. Arthur Lee, and Miss Caitlyn Pettifor. I would ask all of them to rise in both galleries and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have another introduction. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an outstanding Alberta doctor who has returned to his home province. Dr. Jayan Nagendran is a top heart surgeon who trained at the University of Alberta and ranked number one in Canada on his Royal College of Surgeons exam. He received a prestigious offer to join the heart transplant team at well-renowned Stanford University and spent several years there as a key member of their medical team. I'm delighted to say that Dr. Nagendran has recently returned to Edmonton, where he is a key member of the heart and lung transplant team at the Mazankowski Heart Institute. In addition, he is director of research for the cardiac surgery team and assistant professor in the faculty of medicine. We are proud to have him saving lives here in the best publicly funded health care system in Canada. He's joined in the gallery by his wife, Jessica, and his parents, Jay and Shyamala. I would ask Dr. Nagendran and his family to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, thank you. To you and through you I'd like to introduce a group of enthusiastic students from St. Lucy Catholic school in Edmonton-Castle Downs. They had a tour of the building, and they were just a lot of pleasure to meet with this morning. They are accompanied by Mr. Eugene Hirniak, Miss Dawn Miskew, Miss Cassie Galley, and Miss Farah Rizwan. I would like them all to rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today on behalf of the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 12 grade 6 students from Radway school. These students are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Sandra Moschansky, and parent helpers Mrs. Lillian Cherkawski, Mr. Gerald Yurkiw, Mrs. Tammy Kuefler, Mrs. April Chykerda, and Ms Gerri-Lyn Goodhope. I know their MLA, Jeff Johnson, and I thank them for making a trip down to the Legislature. I would like them all to rise and receive a traditional warm welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a significant privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House this afternoon a very significant group of junior high school students from Rosemary school, accompanied by a good group of parents. They are also my friends and neighbours in the closest sense of the word in that we share the same communities. I also have some family in this group, so I'm going to begin by introducing my sister-in-law, Yvonne Doerksen, who is a parent helper with the group, and her daughter Monica. The rest of the group are the principal, Mr. David Blumell, teacher Mrs. Marian Wilson, and the other parents accompanying the group: Mrs. Lorna Retzlaff, Mrs. Angela Morasch, Mrs. Jody McCreadie, Mrs. Brenda Stimson, Mrs. Cindy Engel, Mrs. Cretia Morishita, Mrs. Willie Paetkau, and Mrs. Jennie Johnston. Their group is accompanied by about 20 junior high school students. I'm going to ask you all to rise and enjoy the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce my friend and partner in life, my wife, Wanda, who has come to visit with a few of our neighbours who accompanied this group today as well. Wanda, stand up and enjoy the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce three very special guests who are here today to participate in a special ceremony that'll occur shortly here concerning another special guest. In the meantime I'd like to introduce to you Dennis and Halyna Elkow, who are lifelong friends of mine, former Shumka dancers years ago, and they are here with their son Toma Elkow, who among other things is my godchild. I'm really proud that he's here today. He's a PDD recipient, and it's just a delight that he's here celebrating his 30th birthday with us. Welcome, and please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups of grade 6 students to introduce to you and through you today to the members of this Assembly. The first group will be showing up at around 2 o'clock. They are from the Abbott elementary school. There are 28 visitors altogether. They are accompanied by Mrs. Nicole Christian, Mrs. Adele Olson, and Ms Audrey Nederlanden. Like I said, they'll be showing up at around 2 o'clock.

We also have with us in both galleries 34 visitors from the Overlanders elementary school. They are accompanied by Ms Cindy MacLeod and Mrs. Jennifer Mulcahy. I'd like to give a special mention to one of the classmates, Avery, who plays hockey with my son Samuel. I'd them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly five friends of mine who span four generations. Here today seated in the members' gallery are my administrative assistant, Shannon Clarke; her husband, Bud; and their new son, Maverick; along with Maverick's grandmother, Bonnie-Lea Clarke-Olive, and great-grandfather James McLean. Shannon just returned from maternity leave, and I'm very pleased to have her back in my office. She worked in the building for nearly four years for Housing and Urban Affairs and has been with my office since the ministerial shift last year. Shannon and Bud have been married for almost six years. Bud earned his business marketing diploma from NAIT and is now currently starting a career with Evolve Surface Strategies as a land agent. Most importantly, little Maverick is eight months old and was born on August 13. Perhaps it's wishful thinking on my part that he'd grow up to be a fan of the Calgary Flames. I would ask all members to join with me in welcoming Shannon, Bud, Maverick, Bonnie-Lea, and James to our Legislature.

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour to introduce to you and through you two amazing Albertans. On December 5, 2010, Stars of Alberta volunteer awards were presented to six extraordinary people, and two of those are with us today. Today as we celebrate National Volunteer Week, we're fortunate to have them. It is our privilege to introduce to you two amazing citizens, Danny Guo and Olivia Butti. Danny Guo works for the Centre for Family Literacy and is founder of CHARIOT, a group aimed at improving access to healthier food choices for University of Alberta students. Former Edmonton alderwoman Olivia Butti serves on numerous boards and committees. As a volunteer she has worked tirelessly for the Canadian Breast Cancer Foundation and has helped to raise more than $20 million for the Lois Hole hospital for women. Danny and Olivia are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them now to rise to receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a pleasure today to be able to stand up and introduce guests from Lethbridge. It doesn't happen very often. I'd like to introduce Donna Karl, who is president of the Galt School of Nursing Alumnae Society of Alberta; Ian Zadeiks, who is the lawyer; and Kathy MacFarlane, who represents the University of Lethbridge. They have come up here today to make comments on Pr. 2, and they're here to have dollars transferred from what was a scholarship fund that was endowed by the Galt family in 1907. These nurses have nursed these dollars all of these years, and they now have $147,000 that they are going to transfer to the University of Lethbridge for scholarships in the nursing faculty. I would like to ask all three of them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Valour Place Military Family Support House

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since my election in 2008 I have had the opportunity to make 32 members' statements on topics ranging from autism to the Victoria Cross. Today is especially meaningful for me as I express my support for a group of people whose hearts and minds are truly in the right spot. Valour Place will be the first facility of its kind in Canada, providing hope away from home for injured soldiers, veterans, and their families who are in Edmonton for rehabilitation and medical treatment. The Glenrose and Royal Alexandra hospitals have long provided excellent rehabilitation care for soldiers returning from conflict abroad. On Tuesday, April 19, shovels break ground on the new Valour Place site.

Now, of course, Mr. Speaker, we all know that it's all in Calder, but I must share this one with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre as the facility is located on the south side of 111th Avenue in that fabulous constituency. It's a squeaker, really.

Mr. Speaker, in January 2010 Honorary Colonel Dennis Erker of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment brought together a group of dedicated individuals to put this plan into motion. Now, just a year later, they are well under way. The Valour Place Society has been created to raise some $10 million to build, furnish, and operate the facility, a facility with 12 suites set to accommodate both soldier and family.

It is very important that this facility happens here, Mr. Speaker. I believe that one would be hard-pressed to find a community that holds their military families in higher regard than we do in our province or in our city. Freedom is not free, and those who protect us do so at the ultimate cost. We are blessed with many who willfully put themselves in harm's way to protect our freedoms, our liberties, and our way of life, and it goes without saying that supporting this project is the least we can do. I would urge every one of you here today to show your support and learn more about this facility by visiting www.valourplace.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Support for Education

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The past two and a half years have seen the worst global economic slowdown since the Great Depression. Many parts of the world are still in bad shape and many Albertans are still un- or underemployed, yet by and large what was a major upset to most of the world has been comparatively a hiccup here in Alberta. Indeed, our jobless rate is two points below the national average, and there's serious talk about another labour shortage brewing here. That's mostly because oil is $106 a barrel, and we've got more proven reserves than just about anybody.

It is good to be king. Well, Mr. Speaker, the thing about being king is that if you take more than a minute or two to sit back and gloat, somebody is going to come along, capture all your possessions, and leave you there in the dust. It's only good to be king as long as you can stay ahead of the conquering hordes.

Since our fossil fuels or the demand for them will not last forever, and since oil continues to keep us living a lifestyle that would take 10 planet Earths to support if everybody on this planet lived the way we do, and since there seems to be broad consensus that to sustain ourselves, we need to transition from a resource economy to a knowledge economy, and since this government makes much of its five-year commitment to sustainable health funding, my constituents are wondering: why is there no talk of a similar five-year commitment to education, both K to 12 and postsecondary, including a much sharper focus on trades training, and while we're at it, early childhood as well?

Over time, but not over that long a horizon, nothing will reduce the strain on health budgets like a better educated population.

Over time nothing will produce innovation and breakthroughs in science and technology, energy development, and environmental protection and nothing will produce more art and culture, stronger communities, a more diversified and more resilient economy, and a broader tax base like a better educated population. Then, Mr. Speaker, we wouldn't have to rely on the roller coaster of resource revenues, and we could stop balancing our books on the backs of Alberta's children.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak about our province's excellence in teaching awards. This province is truly blessed with many exceptional teachers and principals. Heartfelt thanks to all of them for the tremendous work that they're doing at the local level to place children first. The excellence in teaching awards program celebrates its 23 years in existence, and it provides the opportunity to recognize some of the very outstanding educators that we have.

This week 135 awards program semifinalists will be recognized at events in Edmonton and Calgary. Overall 326 teachers and principals, Mr. Speaker, were nominated from across our great province. Nominees must show tremendous leadership, demonstrate creativity and innovation, work collaboratively with colleagues, and create positive learning environments that motivate students to have learning successes.

Semifinalists can also access up to $1,500 for professional development. The 23 award recipients, to be honoured in Edmonton this year on May 28, will be able to access up to $4,000 for professional development. Three recipients who receive the Smart Technologies' innovative use of technology awards will receive a comprehensive technology package, which includes a Smart board.

Mr. Speaker, the nominees for the excellence in teaching awards program are to be congratulated for making a positive difference at the local level for all the children for whom they contribute to their learning success as well as to their learning communities, the students that they inspire, as well as their families. The awards program serves to acknowledge some of the best and brightest teachers and principals as well in our system who, through their passion for teaching and leading, create the true joy of learning in all students.

Our sincere congratulations to these teachers and principals. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo

Keystone XL Pipeline Approval

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to rise to speak about the oil sands capital of the world, my home for 35 years. Fort McMurray has become a symbol of Alberta's robust resource economy, and we're very proud of what our community contributes not only to this province but to our entire country.

Imagine our dismay when we heard the Energy minister. In his typical way he told the U.S. President to, quote, sign the bloody order for the Keystone pipeline. Why would you, anyone, ever say that to your best customer? The minister does a lot of travelling around the world to promote the oil sands. We applaud that. But if he spews these types of things in public, can you imagine what he might be saying in private? He should be reminded that he speaks not only for Alberta, but he also speaks for my backyard. His remarks are an embarrassment to Albertans who don't share his tendency to throw a tantrum when it looks like things aren't going his way. But we shouldn't be surprised. This is just the latest in a string of embarrassments for Alberta's once proud and stable energy sector.

Last week with the Energy minister's enthusiastic support the government indicated plans to tear up contracts entered into in the lower Athabasca region, striking another blow to investor confidence and creating more instability. So we've got a government that can't keep its nose out of the energy sector and an Energy minister who gets his kicks from lipping off to other countries and attempting to bully the world into getting his way. It gives new meaning to the word "diplomacy."

Mr. Speaker, this government is turning my hometown and, indeed, all of Alberta into a laughing stock. You don't know what you're talking about. To put it in the terms of the Energy minister so that he can understand it, he owes it to Albertans to stand up and, in his words, make a bloody apology.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Physicians

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I recently asked this Premier to provide details on the dismissal of Dr. Tim Winton. Instead of answering the question honestly, the Premier deliberately misled Albertans by stating that if Dr. Winton was bullied, he should bring the evidence before the Health Quality Council. This Premier is not telling the truth. Both the Alberta Medical Association and independent lawyers have publicly stated that doctors who sign nondisclosure agreements are at legal risk if they appear before the Health Quality Council. Why is the Premier deliberately misleading Albertans by misrepresenting the legal problems . . .

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Okay. That's enough of that. [interjection] That's enough. [interjection] That's enough of that. [interjection] Would you sit down, please? [interjection] Would you sit down, please? Twice in that series of questions phrases and words that are inappropriate for use in this Assembly were used: "deliberately misleading" is a statement that is not part of the tradition of the nomenclature in this Legislative Assembly. Now, the Government House Leader rose on a point of order. I'm prepared to deal with that point of order at the end, but we're now going on to the second question.

Dr. Swann: Will the Premier answer this question truthfully? Did Dr. Tim Winton receive a financial settlement from Capital Health or Alberta Health Services when he was pushed out of chief of thoracic surgery, and was he forced to sign a nondisclosure agreement promising to keep the terms quiet?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the disclosure agreement, if it was signed, was between his employer at that time, Alberta Health Services, and the doctor. That disclosure agreement was entered into by those two parties.

The Speaker: This is now the second supplementary on the first question. Proceed.

Dr. Swann: How will we Albertans ever know what happened to Dr. Winton with this government's culture of secrecy and intimidation and cover-ups? How many other government critics were silenced with nondisclosure agreements, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: I thought, Mr. Speaker, that the member was talking about doctors and not government critics. That's quite different from a medical doctor and referring to government critics. As I said before, the Health Quality Council will listen to any physician, any health care worker that wants to come forward with any kind of evidence. If there is any evidence there with respect to misappropriation of funds, that should be taken directly to the police or to the Auditor General.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Dr. McNamee, the lung surgeon who was victimized by this government's culture of fear and intimidation, said that he and other physicians would likely testify but only with sufficient legal protection such as that provided in a public inquiry. While the health minister claimed yesterday that Dr. McNamee was the only doctor who was calling for a public inquiry, in fact six sections of the AMA are calling for a public inquiry, over 2,000 doctors. Why should Albertans trust a Premier who can't even get his facts straight? Not one, not 200, but over 2,000 support a public inquiry, sir.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, you've heard the opposition talk about a public inquiry. A public inquiry is that. It puts these doctors in front of a camera, in front of reporters, not behind a screen but in front of reporters, an inquiry that will have the doctor himself making the evidence, and they're calling for some sort of protection. How can there be some protection if it's done in a public inquiry in front of reporters that may go on for months? I don't see where the protection is there.

Dr. Swann: What are you hiding, Mr. Premier? You might have to appear also. How many more doctors need to speak out before the Premier stops deceiving Albertans by insisting no one wants a public inquiry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'd be glad – glad – to go if asked by the Health Quality Council because it's a very rare opportunity when a member of this government can talk about the good things that are happening in Alberta Health Services in a province that's delivering some of the best health services in the world.

Dr. Swann: When will this Premier finally do the right thing and admit the truth? We need a public inquiry. Do you want public confidence?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, no. We do not need a public inquiry. The Alberta Health Quality Council has very robust, rigorous terms of reference. They're proceeding. They'll have three reports coming to the Legislature: one in three months, the next one in about six months, and the final report in about nine months.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Settlement Agreements with Physicians

Mr. MacDonald: An employee who believes they have been wrongfully dismissed has the right to sue the employer, and the parties have the right to reach a financial settlement to avoid a case in court. My first question is to the Premier. How many claims of wrongful dismissal by Alberta's health authorities have been filed in the courts in the last decade? You should know.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's Alberta Health Services. I'm sure if he inquired with Alberta Health Services, then he'd be able to get the information.

Mr. MacDonald: That's not true. The Premier is dodging it, and he knows it.

The Speaker: Okay. Okay. There's no preamble. Get on to your question.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry?

The Speaker: Get on to your question. There's no preambles.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. How much have our health authorities paid out in financial settlements over the last decade to avoid having grievances aired publicly in the courts?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that'll only be between those that have been dismissed for whatever reason that in some cases there are disclosure agreements that were entered into, and I'm sure there were two parties to that agreement, the individual that was dismissed and the employer.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, silence is appropriate in libraries but not in politics.

Again to the Premier: can the Premier please explain why these settlements require such nondisclosure agreements?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, it's between the employer and whoever filed the grievance or, in some cases, who was let go by the employer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Health Quality Council Review

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Doctors have indicated that short of a public judicial inquiry the Health Quality Council review may have limited impact in fixing our health care system. Yesterday the health minister indicated he was only aware of one doctor who wanted to see a public inquiry. Currently six sections of the AMA, which comprises over 2,500 doctors, have indicated that they support a public inquiry. My questions are to the Premier. How are you going to protect the physicians who have currently signed nondisclosure agreements?

Mr. Stelmach: I don't need to protect them because they have a disclosure agreement with their employer.

Mrs. Forsyth: It's not right.

What guarantee can you give physicians that if they testify, they will not be terminated or demoted and can continue to speak out without fear of repercussions from Alberta Health Services or, for that fact, the government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the AMA, the college, and Alberta Health Services have entered into an agreement. They have put out a document that I think is very fair to all three parties with respect to allowing and asking physicians and other health care providers to bring evidence forward if there is intimidation. Perhaps there are different ways of delivering services that may improve the services, the quality of services, reduce some of the costs. All of those areas: the Health Quality Council will be ready to hear their evidence.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Premier, you should be embarrassed.

Can the Premier confirm that the Health Quality Council has been so overwhelmed with complaints that they now have established two committees, one dealing with the clinical side and the second dealing with how the procurements of contracts have been handled?

Mr. Stelmach: Again, the Health Quality Council is going to do a good job. They've set very rigorous terms of reference, and they're going to conduct the business as they see fit.

2:00 Storage of Nuclear Waste

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. On March 30 the municipal district of Big Lakes voted to consider hosting a nuclear waste storage facility in their area. In addition to storing hazardous nuclear waste in our province, this would also require that dangerous radioactive materials be transported through dozens of Alberta communities from other parts of the country. I want to ask whether the Premier will commit today to protecting the health and safety of Albertans by introducing legislation to categorically prohibit the transportation and storage of nuclear waste in Alberta.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the question is purely speculative. There is an authority that deals with this. It's a federal authority. What the authority has said is that they're looking at those provinces that presently have nuclear energy in their province. Alberta doesn't have any, and there's no reason for that to come to the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the recent crisis in Japan shows that even well-managed nuclear materials can become extremely dangerous, will the Premier commit to protecting the health and environment of Albertans by passing legislation similar to that in the province of Manitoba which would prevent Alberta from becoming a nuclear waste dumping ground for the rest of the country? And don't say it's speculative, Mr. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, it is speculative. You read something in a paper, and then all of a sudden it's going to happen. It is speculative.

We'll watch the situation very carefully. As I said, the national authority will only look at those provinces that have nuclear energy in their province today. We don't have any.

Mr. Mason: Once a project like this gets approved, Mr. Speaker, it's too late, and that's the lack of foresight of this government that just comes through over and over and over again. Given the action of the . . .

The Speaker: Well, hold on, hon. member. We have no preambles on the third question.

Mr. Mason: Sorry, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, I'm not sorry. I'm just enforcing the rules.

Mr. Stelmach: Once again, Mr. Speaker, purely speculative, something just to get attention. If he read all of the article and saw all of what was in the print, he would know that there's no need to come to any province that does not have any nuclear energy. We don't have any, so nobody will be coming here to do any investigation of any storage of nuclear waste.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Abandoned Wells

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So far the town of Calmar has found 26 abandoned wells, three of which are leaking. That's 26 wells under or beside homes, schools, and businesses. But in Alberta, that's okay. Abandoned wells are allowed to be removed from land titles, so no one could know about the danger or even the existence until something goes wrong. To the government: who is responsible for this situation? Is it the Department of Energy, which has the ERCB regulation, or Environment, which signs off on abandoned wells, or Municipal Affairs?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, let's start off with the Minister of Energy, since the member sort of threw it out. First of all, the ERCB does have responsibility for this. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would have liked to have heard the rest of the answer from the minister. But my question again to the government: if the point is to protect Albertans and make it possible for them to make informed choices, in this case purchasing a home, why do the legislation and the regulations continue to permit the opposite?

Mr. Liepert: I'll finish the answer, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to clarify the preamble of the member. Clearly, through the ERCB that information is available. But what is important is that if a municipality decides that it wants to subdivide and develop a parcel of land, it's up to the municipality to check with the ERCB relative to abandoned oil wells on the property. The ERCB has no knowledge of whether or not a municipality is subdividing. So that information actually is there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to members of the government: stop doing this. There are three different ministries involved here, and the result is — people are buying homes. Now, which one of you is responsible?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member says, "Stop doing this." What does the member want us to stop doing?

We actually have the information. The Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Department of Energy are working on an amendment whereby we may make it a requirement for the municipality to check. We're working with the Minister of Municipal Affairs on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Economic Recovery

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In many parts of the world the global economic recession is beginning to end. In fact, several nations have already returned to economic growth. According to the IMF the overall world output is expected to increase by 4 and a half per cent in 2011. My questions are to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. What is the estimated yearly growth for Alberta, and how does that compare with the rest of the world?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is hard to compare Alberta with the rest of the world. But it's very clear in IMF discussions that the parts of the world that are developing are coming out of the recession very strongly, and Alberta is, too. While they're talking about 4.5 per cent, we're looking at about 3.3 per cent, which is considered a very steady growth. To compare us to Brazil or China is difficult, but compared to the rest of the developed nations, Canada and Alberta are leading the pack.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. If average world growth is at 4 and a half per cent and Alberta is only growing at roughly 3 per cent, does this mean that we are losing pace with the rest of the world?

Mr. Snelgrove: No. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, we're not losing pace with the rest of the world; we're leading most of the developed world. What it really shows is the fact that we had a plan to take Alberta through the recession. It was to manage our spending. It was to continue to invest in infrastructure so that we can sell goods to the rest of the world which is leading us out of the recession. We stuck to our plan. It's working very well, and Albertans see that.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again my last question is to the same minister. What steps is your ministry taking to ensure that the Alberta economy has access to these dramatically growing economies around the world?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's not our department; it's our government. It started with this Premier's initiative in the Asia advisory council. We have markets there of 4 billion people. We all know how important the pipeline is to the west coast, but it's not just oil. We have ag products that are wanted all over the world. We have to work with all of our transportation providers to sell them food. They want forestry products and a multitude of things that Albertans are very good at. So while the Asia advisory council is a very good step, everyone in Alberta I think would agree that we're positioned very well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Transfer of Tax Recovery Land

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tax recovery land has been handed to municipalities without any environmental assessment, without any public input, and without any requirements on the future use of this land; for instance, the importance of protecting agricultural land in this province. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why was this most recent transfer of 84,000 acres, which is 130 square miles of land, transferred now?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's an ongoing requirement for us as a government to take a look at the land base that we manage on behalf of Albertans. From the point of view of moving public land into areas of either production or perhaps conservation, it goes on continually. I think that we're doing quite a good job of it.

Ms Pastoor: I'm referring to some of the land around Taber, which he's very aware of. Why was this transfer made before the land-use framework regional plan was completed? Wouldn't it have made more sense to wait until the regional priorities were set?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, of course, the member opposite is referring to a situation where the province of Alberta has been managing land that was initially in the hands of municipalities. We transferred the land back where it rightly belongs, in the control of municipalities. Any of that real estate that has an environmental or ecological value for Alberta's future is maintained as public land by the province. The rest of it is going back to the management of municipal entities, where it rightly belongs.

Ms Pastoor: I guess the question was: why now and why before the land-use framework has been put into place?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, why now? This thing has been going on since 1960. I'm not exactly sure where the member has been in all that period of time; nevertheless, living quite close to a lot of the area where this real estate exists and has been transferred for the better part of 35 years. Why now? We're just completing a piece of business that we started with municipalities, by the way with their co-operation, many years ago, and I think that they are all going to be quite satisfied when it's concluded.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Lower Athabasca Regional Plan

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is also to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Following the release of the draft lower Athabasca regional plan last week, some opposition members said that the plan came out of the blue and caught many in the oil industry entirely off guard. That version of events doesn't seem to quite match my recollection of events. Could the minister set the record straight as to exactly when the regional advisory committee's report was released? How many months have been spent on consultation between the release of the RAC report and the release of the draft regional plan?

Mr. Knight: Well, one thing I will say, Mr. Speaker, to the member opposite is that the plan, the whole plan, the land-use framework and the rest of it, did come out of the blue, Tory blue. And it's a very, very good plan. In fact, we have had consultation on this plan with more than 10,000 Albertans up to this point in time, and there is now one draft plan available for consultation, again a 60-day consultation period with Albertans. Nobody was caught by surprise with respect to the plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. With respect to the lower Athabasca regional plan, is there a risk that if we do not strike the right balance with respect to conservation of boreal forests and wetlands and cumulative effects on air, water, water quality, and endangered species, we risk losing jurisdiction to the federal government? If so, could the minister identify the specific pieces of federal legislation that could be used by Ottawa to take away jurisdiction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, there is an issue here, and there are a number of areas, of course, where the federal government has jurisdiction. Air would be one of them; water quality is another one. But two important things have happened to Albertans recently. The Species at Risk Act, that is federal legislation, has been brought into the province of Alberta in certain circumstances where the feds believe we are not doing enough to maintain proper protection of habitat or species at risk. Another one would be the Migratory Bird Act, which does a very similar thing, where they look at situations where migratory birds, in the federal opinion, are not being properly managed.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Energy. Last week, yesterday, and even again today there was a lot of hysterical fearmongering by certain opposition members about Alberta being a banana republic and that only absolute morons would invest in Alberta, but I haven't heard any of the industry players or financial analysts saying that. Could the minister possibly set the record straight?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely correct because the plan had barely been released, and I know there was one political party that put out a news release that was, frankly, outrageous and over the top, totally ridiculous assertions. It took about five seconds for all of those assertions to be dispelled by reputable organizations like the Canadian petroleum association, like FirstEnergy, like Barclays Capital. As the member says, that draft plan is now out for consultation. I think it's achieved a great balance.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Look, the chair should only have to intervene once with respect to this question of the preamble, and then all members should be able to catch on to that intervention at the beginning and not have to go every time. I'd have had to intervene, I think, probably on all nine so far, which would not be anything more than intervention period instead of question period. Let's deal with the preambles, okay? Eliminate them on the second and third question. Let's move forward.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, again I rise to ask the Education minister about cuts to our education system. Willow Creek composite high school, Pembina Hills school division continue on the list of organizations cutting because of the minister's budget. The minister knows that the change in per-pupil funding barely covers the salary deal the minister signed with the teachers. Will the minister acknowledge that school is more than just teachers and students and includes aides, support staff, and others who help support learning and who are being cut right now because of his budget?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, unquestionably a school, an education system, involves more than just teachers and administrators. Particularly when you include all students in the school, you have to ensure that you have the appropriate wraparound services, the appropriate supports to ensure that every child can come ready to learn and be supported in a safe, caring, and respectful place. No question about that.

Mr. Hehr: I thank the minister for that honest answer. I'm surprised, then, that he hasn't rectified the cuts to budget. Given that, will you return the funding to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, what did I just say not three minutes ago? It's not a lifetime ago. It's not a decade ago. It's not a month ago. It's not a week ago. It was like about two or three minutes ago. Okay? Get that question in really quick.

Mr. Hehr: I got so excited by the answer that I just lost track.

I'll go to my second supplemental. Given that this government is able to find money for the Premier's legacy projects and we learned yesterday that the Minister of Education has apparently asked for an increase to the Education budget, can the President of the Treasury Board explain why he refused the Minister of Education's request for funding to ensure that no student with special needs will be left to fall behind and that teacher-to-pupil ratios will not worsen because of a lack of necessary funds?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, maybe you should just give him longer preambles and no answer.

Mr. Speaker, no government commits more to education per student than us, not only K to 12 but advanced education. We are very aware of the pressures that have been put on education with the funding they got, but we understand reality. Everyone in Alberta has had to do a little bit more with a little bit less, and that's what we asked of education.

The Speaker: Hon. member, last question.

Mr. Hehr: I'm fine.

The Speaker: Thank you. That really helps because we were extending it there with the exchange back and forth.

Mr. Hehr: I know.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Municipal Franchise Fees

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year I sponsored Bill 203, the Municipal Government (Local Access and Franchise Fees) Amendment Act, 2010. While it was defeated in the Legislature as per a recommendation of the Standing Committee on Community Services, the committee made a number of recommendations to the government that acknowledged the importance of the bill's intent. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Pursuant to the committee's recommendation that you consult with the AUMA and AAMD and C to explore the development of a formula that provides for consistency and predictability, could you provide an update on this process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member has indicated, we are exploring the development of a province-wide franchise fee formula, and we're moving along very well in that area. Municipal Affairs is presently conducting consultation to look at how we can best strike that right balance, and the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties as well as the cities of Edmonton and Calgary are being involved and consulted.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's good news. My supplemental is to the same minister. Have you had any conversations with the municipalities that base their fees on the price of the commodity, a variable the committee specifically recommended not using?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, letters were sent to the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary inviting their comments and suggestions in regard to this matter, and both the AUMA and the AAMD and C have also been asked to comment. We've asked that their input be forwarded to us by as early as next Monday, April 18. The important thing in this matter is that we want to provide consistency and predictability to utility consumers across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary is to the Minister of Energy. Have you considered the necessary changes to regulation that would allow the utility companies to clearly disclose on the utility bills the name of the municipality that is the beneficiary of the revenue collected from these fees?

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to outline the fact that in Alberta we probably have the most transparent retail bill that exists in the country because it includes everything from the cost of the electricity to who the specific billing company is, the names and telephone numbers of the distribution owner and the retailer. However, there is an anomaly relative to municipally owned providers, so that's something that both the Minister of Municipal Affairs and I have been exploring, and we'll continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Support for Child Care

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Family budgets are being hard hit under this government's watch. This year the government has decided to cut funding for any new child care spaces, yet costs for spaces went up over 12 per cent on average last year. I want to ask the Minister of Children and Youth Services to reverse this cut so that more parents can find affordable care for their children.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a small correction, hon. member, but the fees that the member is discussing aren't operational; that was capital dollars for child care spaces.

Actually, we have increased subsidies for parents. We did increase those by 78 per cent since 2008, and the number of children and families that that is helping has gone from 11,000 to 20,000.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. At a time when families are struggling to afford child care, half of our child care spaces in the province are for profit, adding overhead to already inflated child care rates. Will the minister move to create more not-for-profit spaces at an affordable rate so that every parent who needs care for their kids can still afford it? Regardless of what she said, Mr. Speaker . . .

Speaker's Ruling

Preambles to Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Boy, if that wasn't the longest preamble I've ever heard in my life. Please have a seat. We'll get to the answer right away. But, you know, how many times do I have to say this? Is it every time? This is not going to be a question period; it's going to be an intervention period.

The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We don't regulate whether the daycare or day home is for profit or not for profit because parents do like to have the freedom to choose whichever daycare or day home they are going to place their child into to be safe and protected. I can tell you this: as with many businesses in the province the same is true for daycares as they hire very professional staff. The cost for staffing has increased, and that is why some of the rates have gone up. You mentioned 12 per cent. Up to 95 per cent of the cost for daycare is staff cost.

The Speaker: Thank you. Third question, member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that two-income families are a reality in our modern life and are drivers of our economic prosperity, and given that there are only enough spaces for 16 per cent of children under age 12 in Alberta – here's the question – why is the minister failing to offer more Alberta parents a shot at affordable child care so families can improve their lot?

The Speaker: I'm going to recognize the minister, but I want you to go home later today and read the text of what you just said, okay? Just read the text of what you said, and if you don't put a hand over your eyes and put your head down like this, then heaven help me.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very important to increase subsidies for parents when we know that there is a need. That's why you would have seen in the budget, hon. member, that the child care program at $229 million had an operating expense increase of $17 million for this year, and that is to assist parents overall with the cost.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mental Illness Treatment Services for Children

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday of last week a 15-year-old girl refused to get back in her temporary caseworker's car after she left her group home to go for a coffee. On Friday her father, having received tips as to the whereabouts of his daughter, contacted the child crisis unit but was told to call back after shift change. Last night I learned that the girl had been assaulted and left unconscious, so I, too, contacted the crisis unit and was told that she was in care but AWOL. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: please explain how a teenager can be considered in care and AWOL at the same time.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I met with the individual's family that this member has brought forward to the Assembly today, and I can tell you that I had very experienced staff at that meeting, that there's experienced staff from Health and Wellness there as well, and that our staff continue to work very, very closely with this family on a daily basis. But what I am concerned about is that you could pick up the phone and have private information given to you regarding this individual and their whereabouts, so I will look into that.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. How is it in this or any other teenager's "best interests" to be abandoned by Children and Youth Services to the streets?

Mrs. Fritz: As I indicated to you, Mr. Speaker, our staff are working very, very closely with the individual that this member has brought forward today. They're paying very close attention. A lot of resources have gone into the situation, and we have very experienced staff, not just at the caseworker level but at a very high level, working with this individual, and it will continue as that family does need our assistance.

Mr. Chase: Simple question, Mr. Speaker. Where is she now? Is she protected?

Mrs. Fritz: That really is none of this member's business at all, Mr. Speaker. Enough said. We are on top of this, and it's none of your business.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Adult Literacy

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In every community there are those who face barriers in good times or bad due to their lack of literacy skills. Adult education is vital to building successful futures, raising healthy families, creating happy and productive lives. My questions today are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What is this government doing to address adult literacy levels in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that question. Literacy is extremely important to this government, and in working in partnership with Alberta Education and Employment and Immigration, we've created a literacy framework that will help increase literacy opportunities in this province. Right now we fund over 200 community adult learning programs across this province to help with literacy and other adult learning needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: given that there are quite a number of Albertans having difficulty attending postsecondary education institutions, what is your ministry doing to make it easier for them to enter and be successful?

The Speaker: I think if we came back this evening, we'd probably get those answers as part of the questions for the estimates of the Department of Advanced Education and Technology.

Third question, please.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Final question: what concrete policy do you have in place to promote adult literacy programs in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. We continue to implement programs in partnership with the other departments of this government. It's not just literacy, Mr. Speaker, but it's financial literacy that's extremely important and also workplace and technical literacy so that our workers can be safe in the work environment. So we continue to create opportunities for our workers to increase literacy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 this government made the grand economic boondoggle of breaking mineral leases' contracts by jacking up royalties. Investment was driven out of the province. With the regional plan released last week, the current government plans to turn a portion of our oil sands region into a protected park. It sounds nice, except that to do it, they are extinguishing leases from companies who have invested millions. To the Minister of Energy: can you please share with this House what additional debt will be added to our current cash deficit of $6.6 billion, or was compensation something they never thought of?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier in the much better-framed question from the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, these particular charges that have been made in that party's release are – I know we can't use certain terms in this Assembly, but I'll try and stick within what is permitted. I would say that they are so far from the truth they are almost . . . I'll leave it at that.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: What a joke. You don't even know what compensation is.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Okay. Now listen. Please sit down. This is not a debate. This is not a debate; this is name calling. I asked the man to sit down, and I asked you to sit down. If you cannot find civility, either one, I'm going to just forget about recognizing either one of you. Now, have you got a question? No preamble. No preamble. A question.

Mr. Hinman: Given that the Supreme Court ruled in 1985 that governments must compensate not only for all developmental costs but for the full value of the resources when these leases are expropriated, does the government plan to challenge the Supreme Court ruling, or are they relying on the clause in Bill 36 so that taxpayers aren't on the hook for billions of dollars?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development has made it very clear that what is out today is a draft plan. It's out for consultation. There is no suggestion that anything is being confiscated by anybody other than by a few fearmongers on the other side of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Well, that's not helpful either.
Short question, to the point.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, that question was: how much is compensation going to cost? He didn't even do it.

Does the minister realize how totally incompetent it is for our government to be paying companies not to develop and extract our resources? You have no idea how much compensation this is going to cost the taxpayers, do you? No idea.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, unlike the member who asked the question, I've had a number of discussions with industry over the last week or so, and I believe the overwhelming view by industry is that what the government has come up with . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: I don't know how many light bulbs are up there. I keep looking up and keep looking. I know where a few of them are burned out.

2:30 Noise Attenuation on Stoney Trail

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've constantly advocated for my constituents in Abbeydale, Applewood, and Monterey Park and raised their concerns about noise from Stoney Trail. We have been awaiting the results of sound testing for many months now. To the Minister of Transportation: Minister, the sound testing is complete; where is the report?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the report is in. We're currently reviewing that report. When it's completed, the report will be posted on our web page. If we need to take any action, it'll be taken at that time.

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, I sure hope that – actually, I shouldn't get into preambles.

Mr. Speaker, my next question to the minister is: will there be a sound barrier put up between Stoney Trail and the communities of Abbeydale and Applewood and Monterey Park to mitigate the noise?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, noise mitigation is considered if the noise levels adjacent to those communities happen to be over 65 decibels. That means that the province would consider sound attenuation after it reaches 65 decibels over a 24-hour period. Any decision on this would be done once the noise monitoring and the modelling studies are finalized later this month. I want Albertans to know that measuring noise levels is something that we actually do regularly on our ring roads.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: Minister, should the noise level not reach 65 decibels, what other measures can you take to ensure noise reduction within that area?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the bylaw is that if it reaches 65 decibels, then we would try to do something, whether we do it in partnership with the communities or with the municipality. If it does reach 65 decibels, then it meets the requirements.

Daycare Accreditation

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the Minister of Children and Youth Services. Last summer after an unaccredited daycare in Stony Plain was ordered closed because of concerns with force-feeding and mistreating toddlers, the minister said, and I quote: we should have accreditation at 100 per cent. End quote. Now the minister has backtracked on mandatory accreditation, leaving it on a voluntary basis. To the minister: Why? Why did she abandon her commitment to 100 per cent accreditation for Alberta's daycares?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, to be clear, I haven't abandoned my commitment to 100 per cent accreditation, and neither has the community. In fact, the community has responded to accreditation where it's already 85 per cent fully accredited for daycares and day homes, 10 per cent are participating in accreditation, and 5 per cent are in transition, including newly opened facilities. I can tell you that with that voluntary commitment by the community this has become a very successful program and has been embraced by the daycare and day home operators.

Dr. Taft: Again to the same minister. She's talking about a voluntary program. I'd like her to give us an answer here. What is the firm deadline for 100 per cent accreditation for Alberta's daycares? Give us a deadline.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, it might be helpful to this member if I explained about a daycare and day home and how they're licensed and they're approved. When a day home or daycare is licensed or approved, their safety is regulated – we have very high provincial standards – and they're also inspected and monitored on a regular basis.

Now, accreditation is completely different. Accreditation is about enhancing the child care program, creating better learning opportunities for children, Mr. Speaker, and that's why we established the accreditation program. That's why the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that we probably all agree that accreditation is a valuable thing, why is this minister allowing some children in this province, little children, to go to daycares that are not accredited?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I explained in my earlier answer that the community has embraced this program. Eighty-five per cent are accredited – no, don't shake your head; they are – 10 per cent are in the process of being accredited, and 5 per cent, the new facilities, are becoming accredited. That is mostly a hundred per cent compliance.

Mr. Speaker, we did increase the accreditation funding. We increased it by 12 per cent, from $74 million to $83 million, the only program of its kind in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Pigeon Lake Waste-water Management Project

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The proposed Pigeon Lake waste-water project is very important to the residents of the summer villages of Sundance Beach, Ma-Me-O Beach, Noris Beach, Crystal Springs, Grandview, Poplar Bay, Wetaskiwin county, Pigeon Lake provincial park and, certainly, to myself as MLA. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. What is the status of the Pigeon Lake waste-water project?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to start this one off with: Drayton Valley-Calmar are awfully lucky to have such an MLA. She's continually trying to speed up things for her constituents.

Mr. Speaker, this proposed $26.7 million waste-water project involves piping waste water to the existing northeast Pigeon Lake regional waste-water commission. Through the provincial water for life program this project could be eligible to receive a grant of up to 90 per cent of the waste-water system. The first stage of the project . . .

The Speaker: I thank the hon. minister. Thank you.
Now we'll hear from that hon. member again.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. minister.

My constituents are understandably very interested in seeing progress made on this project. When will funding for the first stage be approved, the line from Ma-Me-O Beach to the existing Mulhurst lagoon? When, Minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, my officials have informed me that a review has nearly been completed of the proposed line from Ma-Me-O to the Mulhurst lagoon. We know this is an important project. My officials are working with the Pigeon Lake regional waste-water steering committee, and I expect to have a report in the coming weeks. I will certainly review it thoroughly, and that's when we can provide more information and when the funding would be available.

Mrs. McQueen: My final question is to the same minister. Considering what I heard, that stage 1 of the Pigeon Lake waste-water project will be approved, when would construction begin?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before, the project could be eligible for a grant of up to 90 per cent. As for when the construction would begin, it would be up to the proponents of the project, the Pigeon Lake regional waste-water steering committee. Alberta Transportation would provide the funding, and the construction process would then be managed by the proponents.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Flood Hazard Mitigation

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Disaster recovery by its very definition is reactionary and implies intervention after a natural disaster has occurred. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: besides flood hazard mapping and occasional one-time grants aimed at supporting emergency preparedness, is the minister satisfied that the government does absolutely everything it can to prevent or mitigate flooding before it occurs?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the provincial government is doing a lot of work in terms of mitigation and helping municipalities prepare for potential disasters and emergencies that might come their way. On a yearly basis we continue to work with municipalities that are subject to flooding, for instance, to make sure that they are aware of flood plains and how high water levels may rise. So we continue to do that type of work with individual municipalities right across the province.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: what role does the Alberta Emergency Management Agency play in instructing regions on proper placement of sandbags since recent media reports have suggested that this is often being done improperly and may actually make flood damage worse?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware that the AEMA, or the Alberta Emergency Management Agency, is actually training people on how to place sandbags. If that's a broader issue that we see happening right across the province, then we could certainly look at that particular aspect. But, generally, we are providing sandbags and are making sure that equipment and facilities are available for municipalities to use. If there's a need to use sandbags to protect property, those are available to them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: are there any permanent, enduring solutions that could be employed to prevent or mitigate flooding in high-risk areas and reduce the impact on taxpayers? I'm thinking of last year's whopping $191 million supplementary appropriation for disaster recovery.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we keep on working with our individual municipalities, and municipalities are encouraged to purchase mitigation equipment. Through the municipal sustainability initiative funding they can choose to protect their individual communities. As well, we continue to do a lot of training with individual municipalities. If those municipalities actually buy equipment or have access to equipment, we encourage them to share it with their neighbours if there's a need to have that happen. We also make sure that that equipment is well known and documented so that there is the possibility of using it elsewhere across the province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes Oral Question Period for today. Nineteen members were recognized. There were 111 questions and responses, and it's only Tuesday.

We'll come back in a few seconds from now to continue with Members' Statements.

Bethany Care Society Brenda Strafford Centre on Aging

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak about some exciting achievements by two outstanding organizations aimed at improving the lives of seniors in Alberta. First, I want to recognize the Bethany Care Society, one of my constituents and a long-established provider of seniors' care in Alberta. Bethany was named one of Alberta's top 50 employers, one of only three nonprofit organizations among many major corporate entities. Nationally, the Workplace Institute named Bethany as one of three companies named as Canada's top employers for 50-plus employees.

Almost 40 per cent of Bethany's workforce is age 50 or older, with 36 employees over the age of 65 and the oldest being over 80. Bethany Care Society has an impressive record of receiving 10 national or provincial employers of choice awards over the past 11 years. This speaks volumes to the focus of Bethany on attracting and retaining qualified staff and providing safe environments that foster positive relationships among staff, residents, and their families.

Mr. Speaker, on April 4 the Brenda Strafford Centre on Aging at the University of Calgary was launched, thanks to a $5 million gift from the Brenda Strafford Foundation. The centre on aging will promote the quality of life for seniors through developing programs in support of age-related applied research and public policy, interdisciplinary education in geriatrics and gerontology, community outreach, and public awareness.

The new centre was announced at a special event to celebrate Dr. Barrie Strafford's contributions to the university. To date he has contributed more than $8 million to the U of C through his foundation and personal philanthropy. These gifts have supported research in the faculties of kinesiology, medicine, nursing, and social work.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is blessed by the contributions of these individuals and organizations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Volunteer Week

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week, April 10 to 16, we are recognizing Volunteer Week in Alberta. I would hope, given the enormous workload carried by volunteer-driven agencies in Alberta, that there would be the sound of knees hitting the floor as their owners engage in fervent prayers of thanks to volunteers, particularly government knees, as this sector provides so many of the services that government used to provide and makes our cities and towns livable, creative, helping, and caring.

Volunteering has changed so much in the last several decades. More families volunteer together. Seniors put in an enormous amount of volunteer hours. In some cases, students volunteer for class credit. One thing is for sure. People have less time and want their volunteer experience to be both meaningful and also beneficial to the recipient and to themselves.

I remember a well-known businessman who reflected on his volunteer experience. He wanted to do something different, different from what he did every day. He wanted to get his hands dirty, to paint sets or pound nails, but he was immediately put on the board. He duly gave his well-informed input but left the board after only a year because he was never given the opportunity to do what he wanted to do. Recruiting, orienting, training, and retaining today's volunteers is complex and challenging. What the volunteer gets out of the experience is just as important as what they give. So, government, pay attention.

The volunteer centre of Camrose is closing on June 30 of this year. Sector colleagues say that this is a well-run and valued organization. So what's wrong? Well, a couple of things. One is the loss of funding pools. Prior to 2009 volunteer agencies could access several different grant programs to fund different aspects. Now there's only one CIP, and there's a competition for dollars. Two is the emphasis on quantity not quality, and that has a particular impact on rural centres. Organizations are judged by outputs rather than outcomes. Third is the insistence that organizations' eligibility is based on how much money they raise.

So this week and all weeks a shout-out to volunteers and volunteer centres: for all the benefit we receive as Albertans, my profound thanks.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present two petitions. The first petition, from approximately 250 residents in the Strathcona area, reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to: Firstly, ensure that the underground option and not the overhead line option for the proposed 500Kv transmission line for the East Transmission Utility Corridor between the Ellerslie Road corner and Baseline Road, an area which is densely populated and with nearby schools in Strathcona County, be implemented. Secondly, as this is a regional line, to ensure that the cost of this underground line is borne by the entire province of Alberta.

And thirdly, to ensure that all future 500Kv transmission lines which may be built near any other densely populated area in the Province of Alberta, be built according to this same or a similar underground option.

The second petition, from approximately 5,000 residents in the Strathcona area, reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to ensure that: (1) the underground, not overhead, line option is used for the proposed 500 kV transmission line for the East Transmission Utility Corridor between the Ellerslie substation and Baseline Road; (2) the cost of the underground line is borne by the entire province of Alberta; and (3) all future 500 kV transmission lines located in densely populated areas be built using the underground line option.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the appropriate number of copies of the following two annual reports. First is the 2009-2010 annual report from the College of Hearing Aid Practitioners of Alberta, and the second is the 2010 annual report from the Public Health Appeal Board.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of documents referenced in Culture and Community Spirit's main estimates on March 23, 2011. Included are two reports. The first is entitled A Dialogue with Alberta's Arts Sector. The second is entitled A Dialogue with Alberta's Nonprofit/Voluntary Sector. Both are available online.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling Castle-Crown clear-cutting concerns from the following individuals: Marianne Dufour, Mandy Rowe, David Manning, Greg Michaux, Catherine Talbot, Disa Hovatta, Donna Jabillo, Chris Jones, Jonagh Fairbrother, Ruby Rowat, Karel Sanders, Jennifer Smith, Marilyn Hurrell, Margaret Yorke, Chris Dunn, Jeffrey Phillips, Tonya Bourque, Rachel Christensen, Ron Williamson, Cathy Wolfe, Fiona Mansfield, Jenny May, Rebecca McEvoy, John Gaul, and Evelyn Abell.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition documents in which are the quotes that he spoke about today from lawyers that the Alberta Health Quality Council doesn't have adequate protection for doctors who sign nondisclosure agreements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first is tablings from constituents who've written with their concerns about the future of the physician and family support program, a program which they feel is focused on keeping current physicians in the best possible mental health. These constituents are Dr. Lisa Burback, Dr. Thea Chibuk, Dr. Nick Etches, Dr. Warren Ma, Dr. Daniel Miller, and Dr. Edwin Zhang.

A further tabling on behalf of my colleague for Calgary-Buffalo is a petition signed by a number of parents and teachers at Silver Springs school in Calgary voicing their opposition to the recently announced budget cuts that will severely impact the Calgary board of education. They underline that their children's education needs to be a priority for the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I've also had notice that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar wanted to table something. Is anybody doing it on his behalf? Okay.

Hon. members, we do have a point of order to deal with. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take your advice on this, but I thought you did more or less deal with the point of order at that point in time in an appropriate way. The point of order was, as you indicated, with respect to parliamentary language. I would refer to the Speaker's memo of February 18, 2011, and specifically to attachment 1 of that memo, page 6, with respect to the use of the term "deliberately misleading" and to pages 14 and 15 with respect to the term "misleading." Of much lesser stature I'd refer to the authorities of our own Standing Order 23(h) and (j) – making allegations against a member, using abusive or insulting language – and 23(i), introducing a matter in debate that "offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly."

Beauchesne also supports the point of order that I am making with respect to its sixth edition, 489, pages 145 and 146, where it refers to terms which are unparliamentary, "deliberately misleading" and lying being included in those. At 491 Beauchesne indicates that the Speaker "ruled that language used in the House should be temperate and worthy of the place in which it is spoken." That's why I raised a point of order.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am very reluctant to raise points of order on this because we could be doing it incessantly, and what it normally does then is just afford another opportunity for people to make speeches on the same topic and refer to the reasons why they were using intemperate language. But there does come a point at which we have to intercede, in my view, and say: "This is a House which is supposed to be the highest form of debate of public policy in our province. It is a forum which should bring respect to the discussion of public policy and to the political affairs of our province and to the leadership in our province." It is for that reason, in my view, that language has been termed unparliamentary, that we do have rules in place which suggest that if a member makes a statement, we are to presume it to be true.

If we are going to attack the veracity of a member's statement, that is a very severe intervention, and we do have processes for that. There are times when you can go to the Ethics Commissioner or to the privileges committee when someone is engaging in inappropriate conduct, but in the normal give-and-take in the House it is not that difficult for us to formally lay our questions to make our purpose and make our point without being disreputable, without being disrespectful of each other. We can hold our opinions in this House very strongly. We can disagree, as is often said, without being disagreeable. In this case the language that was used by the Leader of the Official Opposition was unparliamentary and inappropriate. Now, you addressed that, but I would ask that you do rule it out of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Official Opposition has asked me to respond to the point of order on his behalf. I know the citations that the Government House Leader has brought up, and I agree with him when he says that our discourse here should be of the highest form and should bring respect.

I note that in House of Commons Procedure and Practice at 427 it talks about: questions should not create disorder. Interestingly, there is also an answer to that because on 431 it talks about: replies to oral questions should be "phrased in language that does not provoke disorder." So there are two sides of the same coin there.

I also find that reflected when I look in Beauchesne. If I look at Beauchesne 410(5), it's talking about "the seeking of information and calling the Government to account," which, I would argue, the Leader of the Official Opposition was trying to do. At Beauchesne 417 it talks about: "Answers to questions should be as brief as possible, deal with the matter raised and should not provoke debate."

We have both of those things happening over a long period of exchanges here, Mr. Speaker. I don't have access to the question as written by the Leader of the Official Opposition. I would believe, sitting next to him, that the language that was used was that which came from extreme frustration with the answers and the repeated information that the Premier has brought forward.

Mr. Speaker, we all have access to the same information here. The Premier keeps saying that physicians are protected by the Evidence Act, which is what he said yesterday. Today he said that they're protected by robust . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. One of the rules is that we're not continuing debate in a point of order. Let's deal with the point of order.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much for that guidance, Mr. Speaker. That is what I'm trying to do, deal with the point of order.

We have an accusation from the Government House Leader that the leader used language that he shouldn't have used, and 23(h), (i), and (j) were quoted, which is sort of a catch-all. But what we have here is the Premier insisting on putting information before the House that is not matching the publicly available information, and from that has arisen the leader's insistence on trying to get to the bottom of the question, to literally hold the government to account, as they are urged to do in both Beauchesne and the House of Commons book. We have information that is publicly available from the AMA, which is on their website, which talks about physicians not being able to do this.

The Speaker: Let's deal with point of order, please.

Ms Blakeman: It is to the point of order.

The Speaker: No, it isn't. I've interjected twice now. I'll have you sit down if you don't deal with the point of order.

Ms Blakeman: Well, yes, indeed the Speaker has the power to do that, and I acknowledge that. But what we are having repeatedly happen in this House is that the Leader of the Official Opposition asks the Premier to deal with something, and the Premier answers with a completely different set of information. Now, there is no requirement that the answer is . . .

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you very much.

This was the first question today. This was on the first question. There was no previous background today to anything. These are the words that were used, and these are the words that the point of order is about. These are the words that would be intervened on by the chair regardless of who they were used against in this House. This is the Leader of the Official Opposition in the first question, in only the third line of today's question period. "Instead of answering the question honestly, the Premier deliberately misled." That's a direct accusation against a member of this House. If it was said against any member of this House, there would be intervention.

Then in the next line: "This Premier is not telling the truth." This is not oblique. This is not indirect. It's not: the government is not telling the truth. It's an accusation against one member. "The Premier is not telling the truth."

Then in the next line: "Why is the Premier deliberately misleading?"

Those are three direct attacks on a member in a couple of lines on the first question in the question period. As I hear the argument, that was okay because, after all, the guy got pushed, anxious. That's ridiculous. These are direct violations of the rules of this Assembly. They are absolutely directly put against another member of this Assembly. They violate the rules of House of Commons Procedure and Practice in all the pages I can give – pages 614, 618, 619 – and Beauchesne paragraphs 485 to 492. Then throw in our Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j), which by the way are the most important of the orders.

The Leader of the Official Opposition knows full well. He stood up in this Assembly not too many years ago and, basically, gave a great big speech about ethics and all the rest of the stuff, civility and everything else. The language used in crafting these questions for this Assembly violates our rules. They should be tempered. They should be worthy of the place they're spoken in. These comments I suppose were withdrawn because I did intervene. I did interject. I ruled, basically, the question to be out of order. This is inappropriate language, absolutely inappropriate.

It's only Tuesday. It's only April 12. I will intervene repeatedly in this Assembly, and I will call recess of question period unless the decorum improves. I have called recess before the question period in the past, and it had to do with decorum in this House. That means that the question period ends, to return later.

If men and women here cannot have civility, that is really, truly unfortunate. These are three deliberate attacks and should not have been used.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2011-12

Executive Council

The Chair: Before I call on our hon. Premier, I would like to talk about the process here. The first hour would be reserved for the Official Opposition. The next 20 minutes would go to the third party, which is the Wildrose Party. Then the next 20 minutes would be for the fourth party, the ND. The 20 minutes after that would be for independent members, and thereafter any other members.

Now I would like to call on the hon. Premier to begin the estimates under consideration. Hon. Premier, please.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Hon. members, I'm pleased to appear before this committee to discuss the 2011-2012 Executive Council budget estimates and 2011-2014 business plan.

I'd like to begin by introducing the staff who are with me today. On the floor we have my chief of staff, Ron Glen; Brian Manning, deputy minister of Executive Council; Dwight Dibben, deputy secretary to cabinet; Roxanna Benoit, deputy chief of policy co-ordination; Lee Funke, managing director of the Public Affairs Bureau; and Elaine Dougan, executive director of corporate services. Some of my staff are also up in the gallery, including George Samoil, deputy chief of staff for operations and legislative affairs; Jason Ennis, my executive assistant; Bob Fessenden, deputy minister to the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy; Cam Hantiuk, director of communications; Ken Faulkner, director of the McDougall Centre, the southern Premier's office; and Karen Lindgren, who's our senior financial officer. I think I've got everybody there.

First of all, since this is my last time here in Committee of Supply, I'd like to take a moment to say what a pleasure it has been to work with such a committed group of people from both sides of the House. It has certainly been a roller-coaster ride going from the boom to the recession. But during that period we've learnt a lot, and I know our government has accomplished a lot as well.

We're investing in infrastructure now to ensure that Albertans have the schools, hospitals, and roads that they need today and as the province continues to grow. We have plans to manage that growth. We were the first province in Canada to develop a 10-year plan to end homelessness. And we have done it all with responsible budgeting that meets Albertans' needs. This is why in this year's budget we took a balanced approach, to enable government to focus efforts on areas that are most important to Albertans: education, health care, and infrastructure.

Executive Council is one of the nine ministries that has a decrease in its 2011-12 operating budget. The budget for Executive Council is $28.6 million this year, down $2.3 million from last year. This reduction was mainly achieved by reducing spending for our promoting Alberta program, formerly the branding initiative, by $1.8 million and by reducing the budget for the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy by $500,000.

The business plan. Executive Council's program areas and priorities are as outlined. Executive Council includes my offices in the Legislature and in McDougall Centre in Calgary, the deputy minister's office, the cabinet co-ordination office, the policy co-ordination office, the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, the protocol office, administrative support for the office of the Lieutenant Governor and the Order of Excellence Council, and the Public Affairs Bureau.

The 2011-14 business plan lays out the following priority initiatives for Executive Council: supporting policy development, co-ordinating government strategic planning, supporting the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, continuing to implement a strategic communications plan, supporting ministries in the effective use of social media and continuing to implement a government-wide social media policy, and co-ordinating with ministries and organizations to promote Alberta's energy, immigration, employment, investment, and tourism potential to the world.

I'm going to cover a few of these initiatives in detail to put them into context, starting with the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy. I established the council to provide advice on strategic decisions and initiatives to put Alberta in the best position possible for the long-term future. The council has consulted with Albertans all over the province, including students, businesses, and community leaders. They looked at what the expected growth in China and other emerging markets means for Alberta, what policies will best foster sustainable development, how we can create and sustain future wealth, and how we can ensure that Alberta continues to be an innovative and prosperous province where Albertans continue to enjoy a high quality of life built on vibrant communities and a healthy environment.

Their final report, which is expected in the next month or so, will offer us a road map on how to boost the position of our province for a bright, sustainable future. A key part to securing our future is keeping Alberta top of mind for people around the world, and that is for trade, for tourism, and for immigration. We have now seen how much decisions made in other jurisdictions can affect our livelihood. That is why we must ensure that the legislators and opinion leaders in influential markets have all the facts before they take actions in sectors like energy.

I believe we are getting our story out, and we are seeing some positive results, though we still have more work to do. That's why we made growing our economic presence in Asia the top of our priority list with Bill 1, and that is why we are continuing to focus on promoting Alberta's potential to the world through investment and the promoting Alberta program. Promoting Alberta is the extension of the Alberta brand. The program engages other ministries, Alberta organizations, businesses, and all Albertans to help tell our story.

In 2010-11 we were building off of our success from the Winter Olympics in Vancouver. We supported trade shows, conferences, collected and shared the stories of Albertans and what they can accomplish here, connected with brand ambassadors, and created cultural experiences for visitors in the province through involvement in events like Alberta Arts Days. We are seeing a positive impact for our efforts nationally and internationally, but we still have a further way to go as people and organizations continue their efforts to tarnish the reputation of Alberta and its industries.

We see this program as a long-term effort to protect and promote our province. Next year we will focus on telling Albertans the story about the best place to work and invest, recognizing the burgeoning economic climate in our province. We will also continue to engage Albertans around the world through the use of social media and strategic communications. We are proud of our people and our industries, and we are committed to ensuring that the world knows it.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to stop here and now prepare to take questions from committee members. Thank you.

The Chair: Each member's speaking time is 10 minutes, but you can combine it for 20 minutes. Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, would you like to combine it for 20 minutes with the Premier?

Dr. Swann: I would.

The Chair: Okay. Go ahead. Twenty minutes.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the Premier and his staff for joining me today for discussions around the estimates for Executive Council. The Executive Council's business plan states that a priority initiative is to co-ordinate the government's strategic planning process and support the development of the government of Alberta strategic plan.

This year government ministries, including Executive Council, have reduced the amount of information in their ministry business plans. In September we saw a comparable reduction in the scope of reporting in many ministry annual reports. This coincides with the usual regular changes in government organization and the scope of programs, but some of the changes require reconciliation between fiscal plans and estimates from last year to this year. In some cases there appears little correlation between the goals and the budget lines.

We find significant differences between the way ministries are reporting on spending for the same functions, such as the ministry support services in some cases covered under just two or three lines and in others there are seven or eight lines with no apparent relation to the amounts involved. In the case of Executive Council core businesses and goals have been reduced from three to two, and some performance measures have been dropped. For example, the branding initiative has become the promoting Alberta program, and the performance measures have disappeared even though $5 million has been allocated to the program for this coming year.

Can the Premier explain why all of these changes in reporting and budgeting have taken place and the differences in the manner of reporting between last year and this? More importantly, can the Premier explain how this promotes transparency and accountability and in particular the stated goals of performance measures such as understandability and comparability and completeness?

At a time when the government has been grappling with a record deficit and there is intense public interest in the government's actions to reduce the deficit without compromising programs valued by Albertans, why are we seeing less opportunity for public scrutiny rather than more? Why has it become necessary for the Official Opposition to request information about spending through written questions rather than clear, consistent, comprehensive reporting in the first place? Can the Premier explain why now, so late in his mandate, we're seeing changes that make it so much more challenging for Albertans to hold the government accountable on its spending?

Last year in this forum the Premier stated that the government would be "back in the black in three years." That was Hansard, March 9, 2010, page 368. How do the changes in the presentation of estimates affect the bottom line; that is, the current deficit and the timeline to be back in the black?

Last year in the government's business plan there was a section entitled The Premier's Vision for the Future, with shared values in support of the vision. That section has been dropped in the 2011-2014 government business plan. Can you explain that? Given that the current Premier has announced that he will step down, to what extent can Albertans assume that the government's priorities for the 2011-12 fiscal year will continue through 2011-12, after he steps down?

One of the better initiatives of the Executive Council in recent years was the development of the public agencies governance framework, one that we applauded, and the passing of the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act for 2009. I quote the framework documents:

An Agency Governance Secretariat has been established to support ministries and agencies in implementing the Framework by providing further advice, assistance and implementation tools. The Secretariat will be located in Executive Council and led in a way that promotes coordination, fosters a wide range of perspectives, and respects the role of the responsible minister.

The work of the secretariat was reported in the most recent annual report of Executive Council, page 12. Responsibility for the act was subsequently transferred to the Treasury Board together with the secretariat. Given that the public agencies governance framework, almost two years old, was an initiative of Executive Council, which has the role of providing policy support to the government and policy co-ordination, can the Premier explain why the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act has not yet been proclaimed? Has the initiative been sent to die in Treasury?

Under the policy goal that government policy and planning are co-ordinated and effective: "Decision-makers need comprehensive and coordinated policy and planning . . . Ministries need analytical and coordination support to ensure that initiatives align with government priorities."

With respect to policy development that aligns with government priorities, I want to raise health care. One of Executive Council's priority initiatives is to provide advice and analysis to support policy development that aligns with government priorities. Goal 2 in the government's 2011-14 business plan is to "increase access to quality health care and improve the efficiency and effectiveness of health care service delivery." In 2010-11 the Premier's vision for the future of Alberta included the goal of having "the best performing public health care system in Canada."

In 2010-11 Albertans saw a profound mismatch between this priority and the actual achievements. We've talked about many of those issues here in the House. Can the Premier explain what advice and analysis Executive Council plans to provide in 2011-12 to ensure that "policy development . . . aligns with government priorities." We saw in this House documentation, clearly reviewed by the cabinet, that indicated a phase 2 in development of our health care system that includes private options, insurance companies, user fees, these kinds of issues. That only came out through a secret document.

It raises questions about: just what is the plan for health care given the wait times, the concerns about quality of care, the lack of long-term care in the province, and cuts to prevention programs? I think Albertans have a reasonable question that we are trying to reflect here with respect to leadership on health care policy and how Executive Council is or is not involved in establishing where we're going in the health care system and how we can expect to see some better, clearer planning for the future that would ensure that Albertans, whether professionals or patients, have a sense of whether we're moving towards a more sustainable, quality, accessible system or if, in fact, we're going in another direction.

Can the Premier, then, tell us the purpose of this policy co-ordination role specifically in relation to our health care system? It's obvious to most Albertans that the buck stops here. We have to assume that the health decisions that have been made, the health impacts that we've experienced, the demoralization of the health workforce, and the frustration of patients have to be addressed. There's a mismatch between what the Alberta Health Services Board is saying, what Alberta Health and Wellness is saying, and what I hear the Premier saying on a number of occasions.

Another area has to do with home ownership and safe communities. Goal 1 of Executive Council is that government policy and planning will be co-ordinated and effective. The government makes efforts to communicate strategy, to stress that it is one government, yet we constantly see that when it comes to matters that affect Albertans, the approach is simply not working. Policy and planning appear to be not co-ordinated or effective.

For example, the evacuation of residents from condominiums in Fort McMurray raised the anxieties of homeowners, as it has over the last 10 years, with the dream of home ownership. We found that Alberta Municipal Affairs is responsible for building codes, but municipalities are responsible for inspections. Albertans making the biggest purchase of their lives have to rely on home inspectors who fall under the doubtful purview of Service Alberta.

The Condominium Property Act is also the responsibility of Service Alberta, but the promised review of that act has been ongoing for years. A committee was struck to review residential construction issues three years ago, in 2008. Where is the policy co-ordination on standards, inspection, and outcomes? Where are the results?

We've also seen a proliferation of cross-ministry committees and the creation of more advisory bodies as well as an extensive array of grant programs in support of cross-ministry initiatives. The safe communities initiative is just one example. At a time when many areas of government are reducing spending on core programs, we see funding going to things such as community crime reduction projects instead of policing, where Alberta ranks 12 out of 13 among provinces and territories for police per population.

My questions. Given the role of Executive Council in policy co-ordination can the Premier tell us what is being done to evaluate the value for money coming out of these cross-ministry programs? What is being done to evaluate the value for money in these cross-ministry programs? What kind of cost-benefit analysis is being done to ensure that funding is not being taken away from programs that provide greater benefits to Albertans? How are these decisions being made? What are the criteria?

With respect to the public affairs program goal 2 relates to government communications being co-ordinated and effective. Albertans need comprehensive, two-way communication about government programs and services that matter most to them.

The Chair: Hon. member, the 10 minutes have been used up, so it's time for our Premier to reply. Then you can continue on the next 10 minutes.

Dr. Swann: Very good. Thank you.

Mr. Stelmach: I'll try to cover all of the questions. In terms of priorities the budget responds to the priorities of government. If the budget is passed, then the priorities of this government will be met.

We presently have oil estimated at $89.40. It did go up to as high as $116, $117, and today it's down to $106 and may continue to drop. I believe a very conservative estimate of $89.40 is reasonable. If there is a considerable amount of hoarding that may happen at higher prices, I'm sure we're going to see a drop in oil prices before we end the fiscal year. It reminds me of when we were at $147 a barrel and all the opposition was calling for more spending. By the end of that year we were down to $35. We have a good budget in place. We also have a good way of tracking. It's the best in Canada in terms of quarterly reports.

With respect to where government money is going, I don't know of anyplace else in Canada where you can go on the web and pull up where and to whom government cheques were issued, you know, even government aircraft manifests. You want to know where the ministers are flying? Go on the web. You can find out exactly that same day. They don't have to ask for information; that information is available immediately. All of the changes that were made have been very positive, so Albertans do know where their money is being spent.

With respect to the documents, you know, for planning they're much more concise. They're readable. People can get more information from those documents, and the estimates are tied to the priorities of government. I know that the changes made will allow more Albertans to actually read the document because it is much more concise, and a person can read it in a much shorter period of time and get more information.

There were a number of questions in terms of policy co-ordination and outcomes. We have, for instance, the policy coordination office, the performance measures for 2010. The results will appear in the 2010-11 annual report. The last actual figures that we have currently available go to 2009-10.

Satisfaction of policy co-ordination office clients with products and services. This measure rates the satisfaction of government clients with the products and services they received from the policy co-ordination office. From March 22 to April 12 a survey was conducted of government clients of the PCO. A total of 857 clients were invited to participate in a web-based survey. Two hundred and nine responded. Eighty-one per cent of those who responded were very or somewhat satisfied.

The second goal, that government communications are co-ordinated and effective. The Public Affairs Bureau is in the process of completing its performance measures for '10-11. Again, they will appear in the 2010-11 annual report. For actual figures we've got to go back, again, to '09-10. The bureau has not reached the targets set in its performance measures, but those targets are very aggressive compared to other jurisdictions. We have come very close to achieving them. We look at the feedback received and work hard to make improvements, strive to achieve the targets, and continue to look for ways to increase ratings; for example, by using emerging web technologies and improving two-way communications with Albertans.

Public satisfaction with government communications. This measure rates Albertans' satisfaction with information they receive directly from the government about Alberta government programs and services. For the '09-10 results 1,008 adult Albertans were interviewed from April 22 to May 10. Figures show the average results of a series of questions. The average satisfaction rate was 64 per cent. The target of 71 may seem low, but it is fairly high for public satisfaction with government. Once again, it's measuring how that information is presented, and in this particular case it's difficult to measure because it may be issues with political ideology and not necessarily in terms of the communications.

Public satisfaction with the government of Alberta home page. Of respondents, again, 84 per cent found the home page to be useful, just below the target of 90 per cent.

Government client satisfaction with the communications support and services received. Again, 1,193 clients were contacted via e-mail. Responses were received from 772. The figures reflect the average results of a series of questions on the various services provided by the Public Affairs Bureau. Ninety-four per cent of those responding were satisfied with the services and support they received, and the target we set was 95, which is quite extensive.

There was, I believe, also the role of policy co-ordination in health. Executive Council assisted Health and Wellness to develop the Alberta Health Act, passed in the Legislature just last fall. We provided the co-ordination through the very thorough process of decision-making through cabinet, caucus, and the legislative drafting. It's an act that was passed.

With respect to the secretariat transfer, it was transferred to the Treasury Board April 1, 2010. It fits very well with the central agency role of the Treasury Board. It aligns with the ministry mission to promote effective and efficient government and the office of the Controller's role of communicating on financial issues with agencies. We transferred 622,004 FTEs. What is currently in progress is the development of the regulations supporting the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. More time is needed. There are about 190 public agencies in Alberta. Alberta public agencies administer about 50 per cent of the government of Alberta's annual operating budget. The act builds on the public agency's governance framework, which was released by the government in 2008. It received royal assent on June 4, 2009. It has not been proclaimed. About 80 per cent of public agencies have made their mandate documents and codes of conduct publicly available. We're working to complete that part.

3:30

With respect to Alberta Health Services, I mean, a lot has been talked about with respect to Alberta health. We have 102 acute-care hospitals in the province. There are 6,800 acute-care hospital beds, 18,000 long-term care and supportive-living beds and spaces, and seven urgent-care centres. These are '08-09 figures because those are the last figures available: 1.9 million emergency visits, 163,000 urgent-care visits, 354,000 hospital discharges, 247,000 surgeries, over 50,000 births, 60 million laboratory procedures – 60 million – 147,000 MRI exams, 419,000 CT exams, approximately 10 million home-care hours, and 900,000 Health Link calls.

More than 500,000 Albertans saw a physician for mental health concerns. Of those who were surveyed about their satisfaction with mental health services, approximately 90 per cent indicated they were satisfied with the treatment received.

Annually more than 45,000 cancer patients received treatment, care, and support. In total there were 495,000 cancer patient visits. Approximately 16,000 Albertans are newly diagnosed with cancer each year.

There was a question with respect to promoting Alberta and branding. With respect to recognizing the brand, 57 per cent of Albertans recognize the brand, and 78 per cent agreed with the approach being taken. We're looking at a separate performance measure meant for the promoting Alberta program. It's now going to be a key part of our public communications efforts and will be measured as a part of that.

There was a comment made with respect to cross-ministry initiatives. I'm surprised that safe communities was mentioned because this is one of the most successful programs in the country of Canada. We have heard that from people who have tremendous experience in crime prevention dealing with addictions, dealing with those issues that drive people to either homelessness or to crime. We have put 300 more police officers on the street. [A timer sounded] I shall continue after because it's a good-news story.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for those comments, Mr. Premier. I didn't hear a clear answer to why we're delaying proclamation of the act. I wonder if you could comment on that. If you're serious about an act duly passed by the Legislature, I'm not sure why we wouldn't move it forward.

I also didn't hear much of an explanation for why this government is sharing less detail about its spending compared to last year, a government that says it wants to be open and accountable to Albertans.

With respect to the Public Affairs Bureau I recognize that about half of the budget of the office of the Premier is going to activities with the Public Affairs Bureau when the office of the Premier is actually responsible for all of the activities relating to policy development in this government. If we add the promoting Alberta budget, the new term for the rebranding – this is also a communications function – spending is double the spending on policy development and policy co-ordination. This suggests that again style prevails over substance by this government.

When we think of the role of executive management in successful enterprises, we tend to think of strategic planning, financial management, and human resources management. Can the Premier explain, then, why of all the roles of the Executive Council in leading government in Alberta it has chosen to make communications the most significant role?

We see on the Public Affairs Bureau website that its mission is to help government communicate effectively by providing quality, co-ordinated, cost-effective communication services. Now, we know the Public Affairs Bureau has a performance measure on public satisfaction. It's aiming to increase from 64 to a modest 71 per cent. Can the Premier explain what the Public Affairs Bureau is doing to measure how well it's achieving its mission of providing cost-effective services?

The government has embraced centralization in a big way in information technology, human resources, procurement, and communications. We constantly hear about economies of scale. Often these costs rise dramatically. At a time when all ministries are looking to protect their core programs, they're often required to contract for services provided centrally or to comply with standards imposed centrally at costs that are higher than necessary in their particular circumstances. We see this clearly in the public face of government, the ever more standard government of Alberta websites.

The current version of Website Standards May 2010 on the PAB website consists of 70 pages of instructions, and that's on top of a corporate identity manual. Can the Premier explain what cost controls are placed on Public Affairs Bureau standards setting? What cost-benefit analysis for Albertans is done to ensure that there is a reasonable return on investment from standardizing?

With respect to the old branding initiative, now called promoting Alberta – it's taken over the title – previous spending for the branding initiative is given in that line, so we can assume this is a continuation. Spending on the project was $5 million in 2008-09, $3.7 million in 2009-10, and $6.8 million in 2010-11. The current total, including $5 million for 2011-12, is $20.5 million. The original three-year estimate for the project was $25 million. In the estimates debate in 2010 the Premier referred to 2010-11 as the final year for the project. The 2011-14 business plan still projects $5 million in each of the years 2012-13 and 2013-14.

The promoting Alberta program aligns with priority 2.4: "Co-ordinate with ministries and organizations to promote Alberta's energy, immigration, employment, investment and tourism potential." I guess from our perspective, Mr. Chairman, if we had better environmental and energy policies, we would not have to spend $25 million in greenwashing to counter bad news and a reputation that has been tarnished internationally. Last year in this forum the Premier said that, again, 2010-11 was the final year of this brand project, so can the Premier explain the significance of this change? Does the change recognize that Albertans don't relate to the idea of their home province as a brand? Does it reflect a change in scope from advertising to something more like damage control? Does it indicate that we can expect to see not just an extension of the original project but a long-term program with continual, annual funding?

The priority initiative relating to this budget line refers to promoting those industries. What has been the approximate spending in promoting each of these areas in 2010-11, and what do we expect in 2011-12?

Given the experience in the past year with international criticism wouldn't it be better to address the issues in policy? Since the ministry business plan indicates continuation of the program into '13-14, what is the long-term plan?

Will the Premier give some examples of how the performance of this program will be measured? Will it be provincial GDP? Will it be oil and gas revenues? Will it be the total amount of investment? Will it be increases in tourism? How will Albertans know they're getting value from this program and that it's not just a gift to advertisers? Isn't this conversion from a project to develop a new slogan to a permanent program an example of a government problem of function creep or scope creep? We begin with a finite project with a fixed price tag, and it mutates into a small empire and an ongoing liability to taxpayers.

Isn't the purpose of communications to handle public relations? If promoting Alberta is a priority, why can't communications take on the program and manage its other priorities within its budget? Can the Premier tell us whether any aspect of this program will be funded out of the budget for public affairs or any other budget? Is the $5 million in the budget the full cost going forward? How much of the $5 million budgeted for this program will go to consultants? Given that this project is to continue through 2013-14, will funding to consultants continue under the existing contact?

With respect to social media can the Premier explain the main risks to government of using third-party social media sites, the risk avoidance or risk mitigation strategies used in the social media program, the methods used to ensure compliance with a social media policy, and the policy he envisions to address noncompliance? What plans are there to deal with the consequences of changes in policy by the third-party site, such as sale of data, which is a concern to all Albertans?

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat and listen to the responses.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. I'll try and continue from where I left off in terms of the previous questions that were raised. When we're talking about some of the cross-ministry initiatives, part of that was safe communities. Of course, there were not only more police officers but more probation officers, more Crown prosecutors, and more addiction counsellors that were added so that we could reduce crime.

Just putting more police on the street is not going to reduce crime. You have to get at the root of the problem and ensure that we build on the very successful Alberta mentorship program that we have in our schools, finding the students in our schools that may feel like they're left out or not part of the team and are easy pickings for, certainly, the gang elements to recruit them into various gangs. It is very successful.

Another cross-ministry initiative that took a number of ministries to work together on is homelessness. It's a 10-year plan to end homelessness. I know that there was a lot of, you know, criticism when the program was first announced saying that it wouldn't work, but we have exceeded our established goals of improving the homelessness statistics. In fact, this past winter was very cold, and we had a number of beds that were empty in our shelters. We have now more than 900 of the 3,000 that were homeless actually contributing positively to society because we've broken that chain. We've given them safe housing and allowed just that break to allow counsellors to work with the individuals, whether it was an addiction issue or, perhaps, something with respect to mental illness. That to me is very successful, and we know that there are speakers that are using Alberta data and sharing it with others around Canada.

With respect to the branding initiative and getting the message out, it was quite heartwarming to see the latest statistics from a poll that was done in the United States. If I remember the statistics, about 80 per cent of Americans feel that Alberta is the best place to get their energy because it's a safe, secure supply, and we have good working policies in place, good environmental policies, and our companies treat our workers fairly. That to me tells us that we've done a good job in promoting this province. Are we ever going to stop some of the criticism that's levelled at this province? No. We do have one of the world's largest proven supplies of oil, and we will continue to attract that attention because anything that can be done to stop the flow of oil to the United States will immediately raise the price dramatically, not to say that other countries wouldn't be interested in seeing the world price of oil rise dramatically.

It's promoting the province not only for energy but also for agriculture and for tourism. We've seen an increase in those areas. Something that we did that, again, hadn't been done in Alberta was introduce a ministry of culture. That in itself has attracted so many people to the province. People, yes, want to come to work here, but they also look at the dimension of whether we have a culture policy. Do we have libraries in place? What is there in Alberta other than a high-paying job? The introduction of the culture policy has definitely positioned us very well on the world stage, and it is a good story.

With respect to the original estimate for branding it was $25 million over three years: $5 million in '08-09, $10 million in each of the two years. In 2010-11 we reduced it to $7 million. We've only spent about $14 million for all the three years. All we said: we will spend what is necessary. We supported trade shows. We supported conferences. We collected and promoted the stories of Albertans, what they can accomplish here with our brand and ambassadors. We created cultural experiences for visitors to this province during involvement in events like the Alberta Arts Days. These are all very important things that we have done. The estimates include $5 million for each of the next three years. We're going to promote the province, and we have to keep reminding ourselves that this isn't a sprint; it is a marathon. It requires a very aggressive and sustained long-term approach, but we have seen positive results.

We were able to reduce funding from $7 million to $5 million because core communication materials have been developed, so now it is a matter of execution. Our efforts are being supported and enhanced by communication programs for individual oil sands companies and associations like CAPP and the Oil Sands Developers Group.

In terms of what value we've got for our money, the promoting Alberta program is a continuation of a branding initiative. It's telling Alberta's story. We built a strong suite of communication materials to tell the story. A good example is the Tell It Like It Is campaign, which was developed in response to billboards suggesting American tourists should stay away from Alberta because of our oil sands activities. Of course, those working in tourism were deeply offended. All Albertans were deeply offended and expressed a desire to tell the world what the province is all about. We designed advertisements for use in print and on radio with major online presence.

In international markets we purchased electronic billboard space in the world's media centre, Times Square. Our spots ran a total of 2,450 times over a six-week period with an opportunity for our message to be seen 1.5 million times. That is extraordinary. The original cost of the billboard was $70,000 U.S., but it was reduced to $17,000 U.S. We had a similar billboard in Piccadilly Circus in London, England, at a cost of $30,000. It's a major traffic intersection well known as a busy meeting place and tourist attraction. We also revamped our oil sands website with new online videos and still shots from Fort McMurray and Cold Lake. We compiled folders of information, including DVDs, for distribution when we travel and when others travel here as well as a new Z-card. This is a foldable business card sized fact sheet for easy distribution.

There was a question with respect to the proclamation of bills, a common practice in all Legislatures, where widespread education is required with stakeholders to make sure that they are aware of the new law and how to comply. I can use the example just recently passed, distracted driving. It will not come into force until an education and awareness program has occurred in the province.

With respect to social media it was established by Service Alberta and the Public Affairs Bureau. The policy has been presented to all deputies and will be monitored by Service Alberta and Public Affairs. Some statistics: on an annual basis the government of Alberta home page has had more than five million views. Now, this includes Albertans, Canadians, and international audiences. We always look for more ways to make information easy to find and accessible. We are increasingly using social media to have a two-way, engaging dialogue with Albertans, and again we continue to look for more ways to do so.

I personally use videos, photos, blogs, and status updates on Twitter to communicate major announcements to Albertans. We've now got 20 government-related Facebook pages from our main Your Alberta page to a page on employment supports and others on museums and historic sites.

We have seen a very positive response to government engagement on Facebook. We've been using YouTube to share information with Albertans in the form of videos. In November we started using YouTube to provide regular video updates on government news. The short webcast Your Alberta Online allows us to communicate directly with Albertans. We also use YouTube to share educational information with Albertans. Two of our most-watched educational videos are on how to use bear spray properly and another one highlighting motorcycle safety. Interesting.

Across government we also use more than 40 Twitter accounts, eight Flickr photo-sharing accounts, and a blog. Twitter is a great way to provide information quickly.

We also use social media to engage with Albertans on a policy direction with Alberta Education's inspiring education campaign. Education used Twitter, YouTube, and blogs to connect with stakeholders, including teachers and students. It was a very successful two-way discussion on the future direction of education in Alberta. That particular area is a very, very good example of how social media tools can be used. I'm out of time.

The Chair: We are getting to the last 20 minutes.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The Premier's Council for Economic Strategy was announced with great fanfare in 2009. The most recent information on the Executive Council website about the council's activity is over a year ago, March of 2010. Priority initiative 1.4 in the ministry's business plan is to receive and release the report from the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy providing advice on strategic direction and initiatives to put Alberta in the best position for the long-term future.

Can the Premier tell us what progress has been made since the last update to the website in March 2010? What is expected in the coming year for the $4.3 million investment to the end of the 2010-11 fiscal year? What amount will be spent on the council in 2011-12, and what is the estimated total cost of this council? What is the Premier hearing from the council, and when can Albertans expect to see their $5 million report? Looking back, how would the Premier evaluate this investment?

Again, Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to repeat, but it's hard to get answers to questions in this Legislature, and again I would ask: what's the delay in proclaiming the act? Secondly, why are we showing less detail in our financial line items this year compared to other years?

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Stelmach: We'll continue with the questions from the first 10 minutes. There were questions raised about the communications budgets across government; $14.3 million was budgeted for the Public Affairs Bureau. That represents less than .04 per cent of the 2011-12 program spending estimates for government. As a comparison the B.C. government's Public Affairs Bureau is about $26 million. We do need very strong, clear communications to and from Albertans by the provincial government. We make sure that they receive the information they need when they need it in the best way possible.

Advertising generally. We have a duty to tell citizens about the initiatives, decisions, and priorities that will affect them. The province advertises to inform Albertans about their rights, responsibilities, government policies, programs, services, and initiatives and about dangers and risks to public health, safety, or the environment. The final numbers aren't in, but we are estimating that in 2010-11 the government will spend around $8 million through the agencies of record on advertising campaigns for issues such as traffic safety, farm safety, bullying, family violence prevention, victims of crime, and wildfire prevention. This includes notices of legal tender and recruitment advertising. There are measures in place to ensure that advertising across the government is well coordinated, effectively managed, and responsive to the diverse information needs of the public and that it provides good value for money.

Where we can be more efficient and save money on resources, we contract one agency to provide specific services for the entire government over a period of time. There are four agencies in place with three-year contracts: an agency that buys advertising space, an agency that produces recruitment ads, an agency that produces legal and tendering ads, and an agency that produces basic public information ads. All agencies, Mr. Chairman, are selected through an open, fair, and transparent competition process that complies with the government's established purchasing procedures.

With respect to the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy they will be reporting in May with their final report. It will have some controversial recommendations, I'm sure, but it's going to stimulate good debate among Albertans. The council will be wound down this year.

We have had the distinct pleasure, really, and the honour of having some of the world's most forward-thinking, well-established individuals not only in business but in academia. From the United Kingdom Professor Sir John Bell, professor of medicine at the University of Oxford; Professor Jennifer Welsh, professor in international relations, University of Oxford; Clive Mather, who is the former president and CEO of Shell Canada and now chairman of Iogen Corporation; from the United States Juan Enriquez, who is the managing director of Excel Venture Management in Boston, Massachusetts, a very interesting gentleman; from across Canada Elyse Allan, president and CEO of GE Canada; David Dodge, senior adviser for Bennett Jones in Ottawa and former governor of the Bank of Canada; Courtney Pratt, former president and CEO of Stelco, now chairman of Toronto Region Research Alliance; and from our own Alberta we have Bob Brawn, chair of Alberta Economic Development Authority; Jim Gray, director of Brookfield Asset Management; Anne McLellan, who was a federal cabinet minister, now with Bennett Jones; and Lorne Taylor, who is the chair of the Alberta Water Research Institute and a former minister in this Legislature.

Now, there was a comment made that communications programs are designed to support – well, I guess it's called greenwash or some such comment was made. The communications programs are designed to support government policies. We are focusing on continuing improvement of performance in the oil sands. We are working towards a world-class monitoring system, which I believe will be the best in the world. We, of course, have our land-use plan in place, which is important, improving tailings pond management, reducing water usage, and reducing greenhouse gas emissions per barrel of oil produced. We continue to communicate that to not only Canadians, you know, especially other provinces; we also communicate it to Americans and many of the investors in Europe. It's something that we're going to continue to do because it is very important.

I believe there was something with respect to consultants. We have had consultants in Washington. Those contracts have now expired. We have one individual that is in waiting, so to speak, if necessary to help us lobby in Washington.

This is quite a task. We know that presently, before the pipelines to the coast are built, the United States is our biggest and most important customer. So we do need very accurate, timely information on U.S. policy initiatives that impact our province. It's a lot of work because there are approximately 8,000 to 10,000 bills introduced every year in Washington compared to the 40 or so here in the Alberta Legislature. In addition to monitoring Capitol Hill, we are also through our DC office responsible for monitoring 50 state Legislatures, each of which has hundreds of bills introduced every year as well.

So we have no contracts with any firms presently, but we'll continue to monitor the U.S. public policy climate and engage firms as required on the very complex policy issues. We'll continue to be a partner with the western governors. We have a very good working relationship through PNWER. We also have a very good working relationship with the state departments of agriculture, especially in northwest United States, and will continue to build that relationship deep down into the country of Mexico.

That has worked for us extremely well. But, as I said, you can't slow down in this area. I firmly believe that we're getting good value for the dollars that we've invested in promoting our province.

I think there was a question on proclamation. I'm going to answer it again. The regulations are being worked on. Once the regulations are completed, in consultation with all of the agencies and boards and commissions that answer to the government, then the act will be proclaimed and will be proceeded with.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you to the Premier. I'm pleased to hear that he's confident in the Premier's council on economic development and that he has retained significant, very reputable experts in the area of economic development. I guess I'm puzzled about his decision some time ago to create a Health Services Board that didn't have health experts on it. I'm wondering if he might explain how he's very committed to putting financial experts on the economic development council but he was not so interested in getting health experts on the Health Services Board when it was first formed back in '08. There's a real contradiction there.

I'd appreciate also some comment with respect to health again, the question that I think many professionals are raising in the province. We now have a single health employer in the province. That health employer has to be maintained in good relationships with staff, or they have to leave the province. There is no other employer for health professionals, these 90,000 or so people that are employed in Alberta Health Services.

Not only that, but the contracts with the Alberta Health Services Board have a clause indicating that there could be readily termination of employment within 90 days without cause. I'm wondering if the Premier has any comments about how that builds a sense of confidence and trust and, I guess, a healthy atmosphere for health professionals to work in the Health Services Board when they could be terminated within 90 days without cause as part of their contract. For a Premier that says he wants to build confidence in the system, confidence in the professionals, be open and transparent, there seems to be a contradiction there. I'd appreciate it if he could make some comments about that.

My final question, Mr. Chair, relates to the fact that we've pointed out specific examples of lack of indicators, lack of evaluation standards for the way Executive Council is spending money, particularly on communications, how we evaluate as well the governance council and the lack of co-ordination and evidence of value for money. Why is the Premier not addressing these very concerning questions on value for money for Albertans?

I've put forward three questions. I'd appreciate some responses, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Stelmach: With respect to the comments made about only one employer, well, we only have one system in Alberta. It is a publicly funded, publicly administered system, and we're committed to that. So I'm not quite sure what the question is all about. There is one board.

With respect to the members of that board, the comment made earlier I believe is inaccurate in terms of the people on that board lacking in some experience. We needed a mix of health and management. We also needed a mix of accounting expertise and legal expertise. We continue to have a good mix of all, some with nursing backgrounds, some with medical backgrounds. Obviously, there is, I believe, at least one chartered accountant, if not two. Many come with a business background as well. So it does have a good representation of people on the board that are prepared to manage the affairs of delivering health services in the province for Albertans.

Now we start the 20 minutes for the third party, the Wildrose Party. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. If we could go back and forth.

The Chair: You have 10 minutes to speak, and the Premier has 10 minutes to reply. You can combine it for 20.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. If that's okay, we'll just combine it, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Sure.

Mr. Anderson: Today I'd just like to look over your ministry's goals, Mr. Premier, specifically initiative 1.2. It talks about co-ordinating the government's strategic planning process, supporting the development of the government of Alberta strategic plan, and reporting progress of government priorities. I'd like to focus on the government of Alberta strategic plan that your ministry oversees. In particular, I'm looking at your government's five goals. Some of the goals that you mention are: resourceful, responsible, ensure that Alberta's energy resources are developed in an environmentally sustainable way. You talk about health care and strong communities and so forth.

One of the things that, obviously, is on everybody's mind right now is health care, and that goes to the second goal of your strategic plan. I wanted to first maybe pick up a little bit on what was being said before. You talk a lot about – you're committed obviously, as we are, to a publicly funded system, and you say publicly administered as well. I want to understand a little bit more what you mean by publicly administered.

What I mean by that is that we just had, of course, the head of the CMA come to town and say that we needed to start looking at some alternative ways of delivering health care. He referred in his remarks very much to looking more at private delivery options and other delivery options within a publicly funded system. I saw some of your comments after, and I wasn't quite clear on where you were going with it. Could you please clarify for the House what you meant by that? Are you in favour of looking at private delivery options of publicly funded health care services?

Mr. Stelmach: I guess we had some comment with respect to the goals. I don't think I have to read all of the performance measures that were given in the goals that are in the document. The first one is responsible, resourceful. That's ensuring that Alberta's energy resources are developed in an environmentally sustainable way. There are a number of measurements.

Something that we're doing in this province that none are doing, that I know of, in Canada is a cumulative airshed emissions study to make sure that as more industry is added in one particular area, we don't overload the airshed. The same with water management. It's very important because we are building towards 5 million people, and we have to make sure that we protect our environment. To me that is extremely important. It's something that we want to leave in good shape for the next generation.

Now, the next goal, I think, was about increased access to quality health care. We've established goals. Obviously, here the performance measures are aggressive. They complement, go tandem with the five-year funding agreement, which once again is something that is unique in Canada, to make a commitment to the Alberta Health Services Board so that they know how much money they'll be receiving over the next five years. So it will help them to plan. I know that they'll be dealing with an ever-aging population, more people moving to the province. I'm sure there will be new drugs that will be insured during that period of time, new technologies supplied to health care delivery.

The last question. My comments simply were that the physicians – you know, the CMA represents physicians right across the country – stand shoulder to shoulder with governments in this country and work together to deal with the many challenges that we're being faced with in the delivery of health care.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. So if the CMA president and the CMA in general will stand shoulder to shoulder with the Alberta government in support of private delivery of publicly funded services and allow for that type of competitive delivery model, is that something that you would stand shoulder to shoulder with the CMA on if, in fact, they extend that offer, to stand shoulder to shoulder with you and your government?

Mr. Stelmach: Here again, we just passed the Health Act. The Health Act was very explicit that any government that wants to bring forward any changes to the delivery of health care must consult the public and make sure that the principles of the Canada Health Act are adhered to. I have not heard of any ideas coming from the CMA. Part of my comment is that if you're talking about introducing new ideas, be very explicit and direct so that we all know what the CMA is considering. There was no evidence of that at all in any of the discussions that they had in Alberta.

The Chair: Hon. member, I wish to draw your attention. We're talking about the estimates of the Executive Council department.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Absolutely, Mr. Chair. They spend a great deal of money on the planning and co-ordination of policy of the Alberta government plan, and the Alberta government plan specifically mentions health care as one of their priorities. It's imperative for the public to know that they're getting value for their dollar on that planning and co-ordination of those ministry goals.

I'd like to move on to this issue of – well, one of the ministry goals is a skilled and educated workforce. It's part of your fourth goal there, creating opportunity. I think we can all agree that we need a skilled and educated workforce. We have in this province right now in several communities, as you know, Mr. Premier – you've talked with the mayors and so forth in those communities – a very severe school shortage in places like Beaumont, Airdrie-Chestermere, Fort McMurray, and others. I was disappointed that the schools that were announced before the last election, 2008, promised among other things seven new schools for Edmonton public, when it decreased in population by roughly a thousand students, while in Airdrie we received zero schools, when we had increased by a thousand students in the years between 2004 and 2008. This is concerning. There's no doubt that every place needs schools.

For a government that says one of its goals is to have a skilled and educated workforce, I think it's important that decisions that are made with regard to schools and where we put them are done in a completely objective way, and I think that should be part of the planning and co-ordinating that you pay for under your ministry. I was in your government at the time when I approached a senior official, not the Education minister but in his department, to explain why Airdrie had been overlooked. He simply rolled his eyes up and said: politics.

I know that the people of Airdrie and the people of Chestermere and Beaumont and others would like to know that in the future when school announcements are made, schools will be allocated according to need rather than politics. I know that right now in the constituency of Airdrie it's so desperate. I mean, we have kindergarten classes over 40 students large. My own little guy's kindergarten has taken their library, shut it down, and partitioned it into two classrooms, so you can't really go and use the library. You can go get the books, but then you have to leave. You can't read there or anything like that. In fact, the municipality is actually talking openly about putting together a municipal charter school because we're that desperate, especially now that we're approaching 42,000, 43,000 people.

I'm not asking you to justify those decisions that were made previously, but I would like a commitment from your government that moving forward, you will be making sure that schools are apportioned based on need and not on politics. I would like to ask you if there are any impending announcements to help out these communities that are right now very, very under the gun.

Mr. Stelmach: First of all, there is $704 million committed to capital in schools in this province. Schools are built in many communities, but there definitely is an even greater need for schools in a number of communities across the province. It reflects the optimism of people moving to the province, and it reflects the optimism of our youth in Alberta, because we do have one of the highest birth rates in the country of Canada. We know that given the birth rate today and if that continues, we're going to have 100,000 extra students from original projections. That's 100,000 more young people to educate in this province.

So there'll be continued investment in the schools. We're going to continue to build that infrastructure today even though there are some that are saying that we should stop building the infrastructure, not build anything and wait for a few years. Costs will go up, labour will be scarce, and we'll just pay more. I'm one that's not going to listen to that kind of advice, and we're going to continue to build the schools. I've made the commitments, and I live up to my commitments. We're going to look after those communities in the province that need new schools to be built in their communities.

You know, there has been a lot of discussion over this budget. There were discussions by the party across that we should cut $1.33 billion out of this budget. You can't cut that out without severely reducing the construction of infrastructure. We need schools, yet those cuts were to Health and Education, so I suppose we would have built a new school, but we wouldn't be able to hire any teachers. But I'll just leave that for another day because we can argue over the point. All I know is that we're going to look after those students that do need schools in this province. I made that commitment earlier.

The capital plan is very clear. We are the only jurisdiction that I know that has a 20-year strategic plan. It's a capital plan that rolls out the capital investment. We're continuing to invest at least 50 per cent more than any jurisdiction close to us in spending, but now is the time to build. We have labour available, building materials.

We've just heard the investments that will be necessary to rebuild the country of Japan, which is, I believe, about $390 billion from some of the estimates that were given the other day. That's not to say that Australia will be sitting idle. They have a huge rebuild after the unbelievable floods, and then, of course, they had a cyclone pass through.

The other issue that we're going to be facing is that we're going to see an inflated price on building materials. The oil industry is moving very quickly. They're prebuying. They're preparing for a huge investment in building in this province not only in the oil sands but also in conventional oil as well.

That is driven by our investment in carbon capture and storage: $70 million this year will ramp up to the $2 billion over a period of time, but that $2 billion for us, Mr. Chairman, is going to deliver about $25 billion in new royalty revenue because we're going to go back to the old fields and extract something like 60 per cent of the remaining resource in the old, established oil wells in this province. It is a policy now that has been followed and looked at by so many jurisdictions around the world: a $1 billion investment now by the United States and, of course, significant investment by the Netherlands. They want to reduce the amount of greenhouse gas emissions in their port operations, and they're looking at capturing CO<sub>2</sub> and sending it, actually, all the way to the United Arab Emirates.

It just shows the progress that we've made. I know it's a decision that was made in the best interests of Albertans because this will position this province and deal with many of the issues that have been raised with respect to the environment and how we continue to green our barrel of oil produced in this province.

So the schools will be built, and we will continue to build the infrastructure in this province because we probably only have this year and maybe part of next year before we see a huge escalation in prices.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. It is important to build the schools. I just find that it's very ironic to me that – well, it's difficult for me to understand why this Premier can then justify spending $250 million on MLA offices, $300 million on new museums, $2 billion on carbon capture and storage, boondoggle after boondoggle after boondoggle. He says: oh, we've got to build everything right now.

Well, yeah. We should build what we need right now, our priorities: schools, long-term care facilities. We're building hundreds of millions of dollars, billions of dollars in new hospital infrastructure, and we don't have anybody to staff them. Why don't we start focusing on long-term care, getting people out of hospital acute-care beds that are already staffed instead of building buildings we can't afford to staff? I don't understand this government's prioritization, but that's, I guess, a story for another day.

Because we only have a couple more minutes, I have one more question, regarding the lower Athabasca regional plan. This goes to your ministry goals under competitiveness, creating opportunity, the fourth point in your strategic plan. That was your flagship bill last go-around, last spring session. Since then, ironically, this year your government has decided to increase by over a hundred per cent, over double, the cost of registering a new business. It's not a very good indicator of your commitment to competitiveness.

What has just blown me away has been the absolute incoherence with regard to the way that you treat our most important and lucrative industry from a dollars-and-cents perspective, the oil and gas industry. You know very well, Premier, that at the caucus table and other places we had disagreements when I was in your government about your new royalty framework, one of the major reasons why I left. You have slowly over about six or seven steps essentially undone all the harm that you did there. It will take time for the harm to be economically undone, but you've essentially reversed your entire position. You've never apologized for it, but you've reversed that, and jobs are slowly starting to come back.

What you've done here in this province with this newest initiative here with the LARP is, that, yeah – you know what? – it is only about 24 mineral lease companies that are affected by this out of, whatever, 2,000 oil and gas energy companies that are out there, but to those 24 you're talking about essentially extinguishing their rights to billions and billions of dollars worth of oil underneath Alberta ground if you go through with the draft plan. I'm trying to figure out how you plan to compensate these folks. Are you going to give them the full value for that oil? If you are, you're going to bankrupt our province even further than you already have. Or are you going to give them what they paid originally? In that case that's kind of like taking someone's house and saying: oh, we're going to give you the price that you paid for it in 1980 but not what it's worth today.

I'm not sure how that fits into your overall plan of creating an investment climate that will attract business investment here because every time we turn around, you're either raising taxes on the energy industry or, alternatively now, you're unilaterally taking land and not making it clear what kind of compensation you're going to give. I just find, Mr. Premier, that I do not understand where you see the congruency between – you're saying you're being competitive, but you're doing nothing to become competitive. I don't understand that.

The Chair: Hon. member, the 20 minutes for the third party has terminated.

Now I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have some questions for the Premier regarding the budget 2011-12. Mr. Premier, I would like to ask some questions regarding the level of budgeting for the present year compared to the budgets of 2010 and 2009. I've noted that there is quite a substantial decrease in the budget for Executive Council, about $2.3 million I believe it is. I wonder if the Premier could tell us where those savings are coming from and elaborate a little bit on what impacts those savings might have on the way that the programs are run and the efficiency of the department.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. We are reducing spending in Executive Council. It is one of the nine departments that we had to look to reducing. It's $2.3 million, or 7.5 per cent, from the 2010-11 budget. It's an overall reduction composed of $1.8 million for the program promoting Alberta and also a $500,000 reduction to the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy.

We are going to continue to promote the province of Alberta. A lot of the work has been done in terms of building the communication tools. That has worked out very well. I know just given the recent poll that was done in the United States that it is very positive for Alberta, and we are getting ahead, except you can never give up because there are some NGOs that will continue to work against Alberta. I've always been of the opinion that there are some that want to raise the price of oil as high as they can because higher priced oil, of course, will allow some of the other green energy sources to be more competitive. That, I believe, is some of the goal.

If we can produce oil responsibly in the province, show that to the world, we will build a very strong economy. We do have the strongest economy in Canada notwithstanding what some people that don't understand economics very well will say. This is a place where we are attracting investment, and that investment will continue to come. It's not only our flat rate personal income tax, but we do have the lowest tax advantage overall, and that will stay.

As we look around the world, the recent increase in oil prices came as a result of a number of issues that have surfaced, especially in north Africa and in the Middle East. We don't know how long it'll continue or when it'll come to an end, but I suspect that we'll see oil prices in that range of $100 million or more over the next year unless – unless – speculators purchase so much that we'll maybe see a rapid drop in oil, which again will prove devastating for us in terms of our revenue estimates.

With respect to the actual spending with Executive Council the 2009-10 budget was set at $35 million. We spent closer to $27 million, which gave savings of about $7 million. The '10-11 budget was set at $31 million. We only spent $27 million. Of course, the budget decrease in '10-11 was supposed to be $31 million, and we came in, I believe, with a decrease of $4.1 million. We'll continue to find as many savings as we can here and put them towards priority programs.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, Premier, for your response. Another thing I would like to follow up on is – I asked a similar question last year, Mr. Premier – relating to your priority initiative 2.1, which is to ensure co-ordinated and effective two-way communication with Albertans by continuing to implement a strategic communications plan.

Last year, you may recall, I asked you a little bit about how the implementation of new media and whatnot was progressing. I'm wondering if you could inform us a little bit about the way that we are continuing to develop the strategic use of new media, the various social media, the various ways of getting the government's message out to Albertans and, conversely, making that a two-way communication and getting information back from Albertans regarding the operation of the programs and how they perceive government operations.

Mr. Stelmach: We are increasingly using social media. It provides an excellent opportunity for a two-way dialogue with Albertans and a very quick response, sometimes quicker than we want in some areas because people, when they hear of a government announcement or government news, can very quickly respond. Sometimes they may not have all the facts and may put a comment in that we could actually reply to in a hurry.

The other is that the blogs and the tweets have been productive. We're getting a lot of youth involved, and what I heard very positively is that we've attracted a lot of youth to government in terms of interest and support only because we're communicating with them on a one-to-one basis, and they feel honoured by the fact that we are conversing with them. That, to us, is important, and we'll continue to do that.

Thank you.

The Chair: No other hon. members wishing to speak?

Then the chair shall call for the committee to rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration resolutions for the Department of Executive Council relating to the 2011-12 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2012, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wish to speak on the bill? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, you wish to speak on the bill?

Dr. Taft: I do, yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must begin by registering my concern as a parliamentarian about what is clearly an abuse of power.

Some Hon. Members: Shame. Shame.

Dr. Taft: The shame is on your side because there was an understanding among House leaders, Mr. Speaker, and your Government House Leader knows this.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: There is a point of order.

Point of Order

Scheduling Government Business

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 23, I believe, it is making allegations against another member, a specific allegation against the House leader that something is being done that abrogates an agreement. The understanding of the House was that Committee of Supply would sit in the afternoons, and the Committee of Supply for Executive Council was scheduled for this afternoon, and it could go all afternoon. The Order Paper very clearly indicates that if any business is concluded that's scheduled, it's then as per the Order Paper.

There is absolutely no good reason why this House should adjourn at 4:30 in the afternoon simply because no member of the opposition is available to ask questions and the questions on the government side have been dealt with. It is then prudent and, in fact, in the public interest that the committee rise and report, as it did. In fact, the rules require that the committee rise and report.

The next question is: does the House go home, or does it do business? As House leader I think it's my obligation to ensure that business is done and that it's done in accordance with the Order Paper. As we always say, there's scheduled business, and then it's as per the Order Paper in case business goes quicker than scheduled. It's not my job to make sure that members of the opposition or other members even on the government side are in their places to speak at any particular given time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member on the point of order.

Dr. Taft: Yes, on the point of order. I would make it clear to the Assembly and to the Speaker that the smooth operation of this Legislature depends upon constant, honest, and open verbal communication and unwritten understandings among all parties. There was an unwritten understanding, which was clear to us, that these afternoons were set aside strictly for budget debates. Now, that was the understanding communicated to us, Mr. Speaker. Clearly – clearly – if that had not been our understanding, we would not have allowed the current situation to develop. So that would be the position I take. That's why I don't believe there is any point of order to be argued here. I think what's happened here is pretty clear. A government majority with a huge hammer to bring down on the parliamentary process saw an opportunity to take full advantage and take advantage of a situation in which there simply was an unfair opportunity. So I don't think there is any point of order whatsoever.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of respect, I need to join our Government House Leader and argue against the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I believe there was, in fact, a point of order although all it requires is that he retract the comments. He clearly indicated that the Government House Leader had broken an agreement, which he doesn't have; there is no such agreement. Now, in his rebuttal he says the business of this House depends upon honest communication, alleging thereby that the minister has broken an honest communication or provided dishonest communication. I'd just ask that the member retract his remarks.

I might point out that the business of this House first and foremost depends upon attendance in the House. We're here to do the business of Albertans, and that's what we're doing this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs on the point of order.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Solicitor General has made several points which I wanted to make, so I will just be very brief here. It is not up to the opposition to do the government's job, and it is not up to the government to do the opposition's job. Absent any agreement that we have seen here, the allegations made clearly fall under 23(h), (i), and (j). The member talks about being an honourable parliamentarian. I think he should take his own advice and withdraw these comments.

Thank you.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly there's no point of order on a point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, I have listened. I've been here since 3 o'clock, and I must say that there was no violation of democracy. We proceed on the parliamentary business here. I asked if members wanted to speak on those bills, and nobody rose, so I had to call the question. So the process is very, very clear.

With that stated, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I sense that you have sat pointing to our House leader and said something to that effect, which I think needs some sort of clarification or retraction. It's not his business to run the Assembly; it's the chairman's. We have the process to go on. So just make a statement to the effect that it's not the Government House Leader that ran the session today. It's the business that we have, and I guided that through the process. So please make a clarification that it's not the House leader that runs the business in the House.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will affirm what you said, which is to make it clear that it's the Speaker's job to run the business of the House. Is that what I understood you to ask me to do?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Dr. Taft: Okay. That seems to have made the Government House Leader happy.

The Deputy Speaker: So now go on to Bill 11.

Debate Continued

Dr. Taft: Bill 11, Mr. Speaker, is the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, and I think we need to consider, first of all, the basics of this legislation, which is the livestock industry itself. We all know that historically the livestock industry, if we want to go back to the beginning, is probably the second industry developed in Alberta after European contact, following the fur trade, and that it's played a crucial role in the development and settlement of Alberta from just post-Confederation right up to the formation of Alberta as a province and throughout the 20th century. But we also all know that this is an industry that has struggled mightily in the last decade, most dramatically a result of the BSE crisis.

We had arguably by historic standards overdeveloped the cattle herd in this province. It was an industry that had become geared very, very heavily to export. When those export markets dried up, we ended up with an industry that was in instant crisis and an industry that needed to go through a very painful and expensive correction, particularly on the beef side.

We are now having to reconsider the nature of the livestock industry in Alberta. How do we diversify that? How do we manage that? How do we move into the future in a way that learns lessons from the past? The lessons from the past have been difficult and expensive, and if we are to proceed on a more stable, more prosperous basis, then we need to take some action, Mr. Speaker.

The livestock diversification act may – may – help us to improve the functioning of the livestock industry in Alberta. I think, though, that we have been caught by many surprises. Related to the BSE crisis were growing concerns over chronic wasting disease, which is more or less the cousin, the related disease, the equivalent of BSE among deer and elk and related animals. There are concerns and there have been concerns from the beginning of the domestication of those animals in Alberta that chronic wasting disease was going to be incorporated into the domestic herds and then perhaps spread to the wildlife, to the wild animals, or vice versa, and there were real concerns with the contamination of the land where we were having domestic herds of elk and related animals. So this has been a controversial move to diversify livestock development in Alberta.

There's been somewhat more success and particularly promising in the last couple of years with diversifying into the bison industry. It's been a very long, slow process, Mr. Speaker, but when we talk about diversifying livestock, I think there's probably more hope for success in that when it comes to bison than with elk or other creatures.

I mean, I remember experiments in diversifying livestock where we were encouraging people to get into the raising of ostriches. In fact, one of the remarkable moments when driving around Alberta for me was maybe eight years ago. I might have been actually driving on the highway through the constituency – maybe not Stettler; it might have been east of Stettler. I was driving down the highway in Alberta, looking out the window, and there was a herd of ostriches. I thought for a moment: "What the heck. What's going on? Am I in Africa or what?" But I wasn't. I was here in Alberta, and somebody was experimenting with an ostrich farm. I don't think that's gone very well.

But I do think that there are possibilities for the future of bison farming. I think if we're to encourage diversification of Alberta's livestock industry, that's one of the more promising directions, but it's a direction that, frankly, is going to take decades to fully realize. The markets are slow to develop for bison meat despite its benefits in terms of health and, frankly, the natural advantages that bison have on the Canadian prairie compared even to domestic cattle.

I think that there are a lot of issues that we need to address when we're looking at diversifying the livestock industry and considering the effects of Bill 11. I'm also aware that Bill 11 has been the subject of some significant controversy around the province because of concerns over its effect on designating different kinds of animals as livestock.

Mr. Speaker, I think that with those kinds of concerns being on the record, I look forward to other comments, other debate such as there may be on Bill 1. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, now on the bill, the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe we have a wonderful piece of legislation here, and I think that it's really important that we as a government make sure that the correct and factual information is out there for people to consider. First of all, when hon. members from the other side make reference to BSE and elk, it's impossible for that to happen because they are different types of species. Cervids are not affected by BSE. It's important that people know that so that they're not frightened.

Further to that, when we talk about disease with respect to domestic livestock, which is what Bill 11 proposes to do, make cervids domestic livestock, nothing can be backed up with respect to a disease concern. I use as example the fact that we have tested 5,000 domestic cervids a year for the last eight years without one occurrence of disease that can be spread from other areas such as chronic wasting disease. In fact, we have a very healthy, very clean herd in the province.

With respect to the development of markets, Mr. Speaker, the industry and the government have worked hard for that. We have already developed markets. We have European markets, and we have a very strong domestic market. We have a good, strong processing industry that's operating in our province right now, and we have some very enthusiastic producers.

Mr. Speaker, this is legislation that Alberta agricultural producers in the cervid industry have been asking the government to move forward with for many, many years. It's long overdue. These are hard-working Albertans. This is a safe industry. This is a product that we produce that the world wants and that our domestic market wants. It's a healthy food source. There is nothing but positive for this.

With that, I'll conclude my remarks and be happy to take questions.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. minister. You mentioned chronic wasting disease. If I heard you right, do we have a clean herd inside Alberta in the game industry? Is it just in the wild? I understand it's got pockets and problems. At the prion disease research centre it's a major concern. Could you expand a little bit on where we actually are on that and clarify? Your words were a little confusing to my understanding of the problem with chronic wasting disease.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, I'm pleased to respond to that because there is a great deal of confusion out there. We as a province through our provincial veterinarian services have required testing on domestic cervids for the last eight years. We have tested up to 5,000 head of cervids a year. All cervids that have been processed within the province and any cervids that have gone down according to natural causes have been tested within the province. As I say, that number is up to 5,000 a year.

In the past eight years not one case of chronic wasting disease has been found in our domestic herd. We have a clean herd. I believe that we've turned a corner in developing an amazing industry here. We absolutely do have, as the member opposite mentioned, cases of chronic wasting disease in the wild herd, but we do not have any in our domestic herd.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, a comment or question?

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. Just to follow up on that, it's such a devastating disease. If it was to cross over and get in there, what programs do we have in place, and what are the incidents? I realize that you're not the Sustainable Resource Development minister, but how many cases have we had in the wild? My understanding is that hunters send in their kill for testing. How many wild cases do we have, and how many pockets are known in the province in the wild for chronic wasting disease?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member mentioned, that is not the area of my ministry. The legislation that we're dealing with, of course, is dealing with the domestic cervid industry in the province. I can assure the member that we have not had one case of chronic wasting disease in our domestic herd in testing up to 5,000 per year over the last eight years.

As a hunter myself I know that there is a problem in the wild that at one time was strictly on our eastern border and is now in different pockets of the province. I know it's something that we really need to take care of, but I think that our domestic herd being free and clean and healthy is a real positive thing for us to have in the case of difficulties in our wild herd.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. Perhaps the minister could also expound on, from page 8 under permits, section 10.1(1). It says that the minister "may issue a permit authorizing a prescribed activity that would or could otherwise constitute a contravention of this Act." That's a pretty broad, scary statement. Could you please explain why you feel you need to have this in here? What's the purpose of that?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, and I thank the hon. member for the question. It's possible that we may need to do some clarification as we move forward with this bill just to make sure that it's very apparent what we're referring to.

What the reference is referring to is predators. We will need to allow predator control within the confines of domestic cervid operations. When I talk about predators, I'm talking about cougars, that are throughout the province. I'm talking about wolves. I'm talking about coyotes. I'm talking about those things that would love to make a meal of a domestic cervid. You are allowed to discharge a firearm in the control of predators within a domestic cervid operation, but you are not allowed to use that firearm for the purpose of game hunting or anything like that. That is absolutely forbidden under section 18.

Mr. Hinman: To follow up on that a little bit more, my understanding is – and the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill will probably correct me on this as he is astute in law – that whenever we pass legislation, what happens when we don't start to actually name predators or other things is that we leave it wide open. When we start to list actual areas or something else, all of a sudden it becomes inclusive or with only those things being included. But right now this is all exclusive and has total jurisdiction for the minister to go outside of just the guns and discharging of guns. I do hope, as he seems to be indicating, there are going to be some amendments to that and that it would actually list in that amendment . . . [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I'd like to follow up on what the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore had to say on that. Certainly, I've been receiving a great deal of correspondence and telephone calls from people who are very concerned about this. However, my understanding is that there is an amendment coming forward – and I think it will probably come forward in committee – that may address what my hon. colleague's concern was. The concern certainly is that there is no game farm hunting allowed in this province. That's one of the main things.

However, I would ask the minister if he could clarify. When I've seen elk farms, the fences are very, very high. I'm not sure that wolves can jump over fences that high. Now, cougars I'm not sure of. Then my other question would be: are cougars an endangered species? What else may be able to get in there that would be an endangered species?

An Hon. Member: Gophers.

Ms Pastoor: Gophers, yeah. I don't think that bears would be able to go through. I also have a concern that animals can be killed inside that compound, for lack of a better word. Certainly, I would hate to see that anyone would be able to actually pay for the privilege of killing predators on a farm.

I'm not really that familiar with this, but one of the things that they're talking about is elk velvet. Evidently, it used to be a really highly valued commodity in Asian communities, who felt that they were using it as an aphrodisiac. However, I do believe that probably Viagra has been a little more successful, a little easier to use, and a little easier to buy. So I'm not sure that elk velvet really is going to be a legitimate commodity that would help the elk industry.

I'm going to save some of the things that I'm going to talk about because these conversations will come up under the budget in Agriculture, so I'll leave that for the moment. If the minister would like to perhaps comment on some of my comments.

All right. I'll talk about farm hunting, which I am absolutely appalled at. I think that if you're a hunter, you're a hunter, but to know that your game is entrapped takes away, in my mind, the object of being what you could consider a really good hunter and having to actually stay out overnight to stalk your prey, to live in those little huts that they have so that they don't see you, to figure out whether you're downwind or upwind. There are a number of skills that good hunters have, and I don't think you have to have any if you're hunting on a game farm, where you know the animals are trapped.

One of the things that I have heard – and I haven't had a chance to absolutely authenticate it; however, I've had a number of people that probably know tell me that, yes, it is true – is that in Texas they have game farms, and they actually hunt cloned zebras. That was more than I could handle at that point in time. I mean, I just think that's beyond disgusting.

Dr. Brown: On page 12 it's prohibited.

Ms Pastoor: What's prohibited?

Dr. Brown: Hunting a big-game or controlled animal.

Ms Pastoor: No. There's another part in that bill that will be amended – that is my understanding – so that we for sure will not have game hunting on farms.

One of the reports that I've received that I haven't had a chance to go through because of its thickness really is quite concerned about the CWD actually getting into the herds because what happens is that they don't know until after the animals are dead. At that point in time there are herds that probably would have to be destroyed. But there still is a concern that it can be transferred to people. I think that's part of what this report that I'm working my way through is, that it can be transferred to people.

I guess another concern of mine would be: just exactly how much is this government subsidizing the elk industry? I know that there were fairly hefty subsidies when it first got started, and then it sort of went flat because there really wasn't a market for it. According to the advertising out there it is picking up. However, I guess I would be very concerned that if this is supposed to be a free-market industry, the government is actually subsidizing it. I don't think anything that's subsidized could possibly be considered free market, at least from my understanding of free market. There is a level playing field created for an industry, and how people work on that level playing field is actually whether they make money or not, and that's not my concern. My concern is that there's a level playing field with standards that people should meet.

I think that for the moment, Mr. Speaker, I will cede to other commentaries. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for comments or questions. The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you. I'm going to try to be careful with this because it has to be a question, of course. I wanted to know if the member was aware that, in fact, with the testing on chronic wasting that is done on the domestic herds, it gives us an extra area of safeguards. If something was discovered, exactly what the member suggests could happen. It is a control on those animals, which is something, of course, that we don't have the ability to do in the wild herd. From that point of view, it is good.

I wonder if the member was also aware that, no, there weren't any subsidies or subsidization to the industry. In fact, it is now very healthy and has an excellent market in Europe and also a domestic market and a lot of followers because of the lean nature of the product and the health benefits that are seen by it.

I wonder if the member was also aware that a number of things have been attributed to velvet, far more than what the member referenced. We're talking about enhanced immune systems and the ability to fight colds and things like I have in my sinus right now, and I should probably consider that. I wondered if the member was aware of that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, I was aware of most of the things that he said, but I wasn't aware of the subsidies.

I guess that one of my concerns would be with the testing. Because our labs are backed up, how long does it actually take for something to be identified and then get back to that farm? That would be one of my concerns for that process.

The other concern. If the elk is being slaughtered at the same place that beef is being slaughtered, those tests should be almost immediate with the results. Once you start putting it in, it could well end up in the beef line, going into the food chain.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also wonder if the hon. member was aware that the processing of these animals would take place at a place like the processing facility in Lacombe, as an example, where bison are processed and beef are also processed. There is a rotational system, where multiple species are not done in one day. They're all done on an individual basis, and an entire cleanup is done. Was the member aware that the turnaround time on testing for something like chronic wasting disease would be in the neighbourhood of 24 hours? I wondered if the member was aware of that.

Ms Pastoor: No, and I thank you for that information.

I guess I would question the minister again on the 24 hours. We can't even get blood tests back for humans in 24 hours, so if that actually is a fact, then I guess I'm impressed.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other comments or questions?

Any other hon. members wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: On the bill. You bet. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Campbell: We're talking elk, Hugh, not jackrabbits.

Mr. MacDonald: You're talking elk, not jackrabbits. Well, I'm pleased to hear that. Certainly, I was in your constituency, hon. member, three weeks ago, and actually we had a discussion not only on the photo op for the hospital in Edson but also, incredibly, about elk and about this piece of legislation. Nothing to do with jackrabbits. I know the Conservatives are hopping around for obvious reasons these days. [interjection] Well, they're concerned about wild roses. Yes, they certainly are, and they're afraid to pick on them because the thorns may pierce their skin. When they bleed, they're like us. It's red, Mr. Speaker.

However, Bill 11, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act: in Edson there was quite a discussion about this. Whenever you're driving back, of course, from Edson to the city, you will see where there was an attempt some time ago, with considerable government support or subsidy, to develop this industry. I'm pleased to hear, if I heard correctly from the hon. minister of agriculture, that government support or subsidy is no longer necessary.

This bill will move responsibility for farmed elk and deer from Sustainable Resource Development to the ministry of agriculture. It's quite a comprehensive bill. We're looking at amending the Wildlife Act, the wildlife regulation, the Livestock Industry Diversification Act as well as consequential amendments to eight other pieces of legislation.

Now, there are some concerns about this proposed bill, certainly section 12 and also, I think, Mr. Speaker, section 21. Maybe it could be amended; it's hard to say. But as I understand it, the proposed amendments in this legislation are designed to transfer legislative responsibility for elk and deer farming as identified in the Wildlife Act, the wildlife regulation, as I said earlier, to the Livestock Industry Diversification Act. Basically, what we're doing is moving the responsibility for the farming of elk and deer from Sustainable Resource Development to the department of agriculture.

The sponsor suggested in second reading in a statement in this House that this bill will streamline the regulatory process for elk and deer farmers, that it will create a one-window approach and reduce the regulatory burden on both industry and government. He also stated that the intent of this bill is not to allow for hunt ranches in Alberta.

I'm going to stop there, Mr. Speaker, and share an experience I had in Lethbridge. I always enjoy going to Lethbridge. I had an opportunity to visit a facility there. The organization of this visit was ably done by the staff of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. This facility was involved in the practice of cloning animals. I was surprised to learn that in parts of the lower 48 states, where they have these hunt farms, the hunters are unaware that the animals that they are pursuing are cloned. The characteristic where one has five or seven points on their antlers is a characteristic that's transferred, as I understood it, through the cloning process.

There are many people in this province who have expressed concern about these practices of having these sorts of guest ranches where one can go and pursue an animal in a large tract of privately held land and hunt it down. If that's what hunters want to do and they've got the money and they're willing to spend their money in that way, well, I guess, who am I to stop them? But it's certainly not something that . . .

Mr. MacDonald: It's unethical, the hon. member is suggesting, and perhaps he's right. We'll hear his comments on this, I'm sure, in debate as this bill progresses through the Assembly.

Certainly, those activities that are a current practice in America are not, to my knowledge, going on here, and I certainly hope that this bill will not at some point facilitate that. I'm hearing from member's across the way that that will not happen, and I'm pleased to hear that. The sponsor of this bill, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, also stated that the intent of this bill – and as I understand it, he was quite plain – is not to allow for hunt ranches in Alberta. Again, I am pleased to hear that.

However, there are two potentially conflicting sections in this act which are the cause of some concern regarding this matter, Mr. Speaker. Section 12, which I spoke of earlier, amends section 10 of the Livestock Industry Diversification Act, and this gives broad powers to the minister that the minister may issue a permit authorizing a prescribed activity that would or could otherwise constitute a contravention of this act. If I could get an explanation of why section 12 is necessary and if there are any examples of what the minister may want to do with that power authorizing a prescribed activity and an example of a prescribed activity, I would be very grateful.

Now, section 21, we spoke about earlier. Section 21 specifically states that:

- A person shall not hunt nor permit a person to hunt
  - (a) a big game or controlled animal within the assigned meanings in the Wildlife Act on any diversified livestock farm, or
  - (b) a diversified livestock animal.

The issue is whether section 12 provides a loophole in the act which would allow the minister to allow hunt farms through special authorization.

We talked earlier about consequential amendments, Mr. Speaker. This bill includes the consequential amendments of changing "domestic cervids" to "diversified livestock animals" in the following acts: the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, the Agriculture Financial Services Act, the Employment Standards Code, the Labour Relations Code, and the Law of Property Act. Minor changes are made to the following: the Agricultural Pests Act, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2002, and the Line Fence Act.

Now, the intent behind this bill, again according to the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, is to give the elk and deer farming industry in Alberta an opportunity to grow. There was talk earlier in debate about chronic wasting disease and what happened to the markets as a result of that, and it is quite unfortunate. This was quite a profitable industry. There's a demand for elk, and there's a demand for deer.

You can go to, of all places – and maybe the minister of agriculture would be interested in this – Deer Lodge at Lake Louise, and one of the best things they have to offer in their restaurant is elk. After a day of skiing, it's quite nice. Now, I don't know if it's wild or whether it's domesticated. I asked the waiter, and I could tell right away that he had no idea. But Deer Lodge, hon. members. If you're at Lake Louise and you're doing some spring skiing, check that out. It's a nice Alberta restaurant. In fact, it's on the guide of places they suggest you should eat. So perhaps the minister of agriculture – and I know he's not going to take the expense account and go there. He's going to take his wife, and he's going to go and have a nice dinner and look out the window, and I appreciate that.

Now, the Canadian Food Inspection Agency requirements for testing prior to human consumption will be unchanged as a result of this bill. All elk and deer slaughtered for human consumption must be tested prior to processing.

So if we could get the issues in section 12 and section 21 addressed, I think it would be interesting to hear why the government feels we need to go in the direction of section 12 and section 21. I would agree with the hon. member here that we do not support nor do we need hunt farms in this province.

Now, it is not new for this government to tell us that we need a more streamlined approach and that they're simply trying to improve the process surrounding the farming of elk and deer in this province. The risk, however, hon. members, with this streamlining – and with it I would expect an increase in elk and deer farming – is the spread of disease, chronic wasting disease being of primary concern. I know we have put a lot of effort – and I think it is working – to improve or restore consumer confidence. I wish the minister all the best in opening up other markets to our agricultural products.

In this session in previous discussions and debates I have suggested that before we allow the contracting out of a lot of our steel fabrication to the Far Eastern markets by oil sands developers, those markets should be open fairly to our agricultural commodities. They are not. Some of the largest trade barriers or the highest trade barriers, I should say, Mr. Speaker, in the world are in some of those Far East markets, where our farmers, in my view, do not have fair access to those markets for their products. That has to change. I know the minister will work at that, but we need to keep this in mind whenever we talk about any diseases that these herds may get or may have been reported to have had. That's important, too. That would be an excuse for people to deny us access to their markets for our agricultural products.

Now, our research indicates to date that there has only been one reported case of chronic wasting disease in a farmed elk, and as long as mandatory testing by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency is maintained, I don't believe this should be a concern to members of this House or to consumers or to any agencies abroad that may be considering increasing the market accessibility of our products. If the regulatory streamlining and potential future growth of the industry is partnered with increased capacity and continued diligence in testing for diseases such as chronic wasting disease and if the confusion over the above-listed sections in the ability to open ranch farms is clarified – and that is, let's be clear here, Mr. Speaker, not allowing hunt farms – then this is a direction I think this House would be comfortable going in.

I think Albertans, whether they're living in urban areas and like to eat elk or those who are contemplating further developing it as a business in rural areas where they have land and they have access to feed and whatnot to see their herd grow – so if the conditions in sections 12 and 21 can be explained, certainly, I would consider supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comment or questions. The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering if the hon. member opposite knew that it was against the law to sell wild game in restaurants in this province, that they have to be domestic.

I also wondered if the hon. member was aware that there is no cloning of cervids in North America and that, in fact, what some people refer to is selective breeding programs to bring out the proper traits. So one can say that it's genetic modification through a breeding program, which is something that, of course, is what we've done with domestic animals all the way through history. This is why we have the characteristics we do now in our dairy herds and in our beef cattle, where we have a better producing, more tender animal, the same as with chickens or ducks or turkeys or anything else. Through selective breeding we get the best traits out of animals, and of course that's available for domestic animals in all areas.

I wondered if the member was aware of that and also if the member was aware that we have to go through CFIA-approved federal inspection plants in order to export any of our meats overseas to other markets and that they, in fact, have expanded amazingly and, further, if the hon. member and his colleagues were aware that, no, these predators weren't jumping over the tops of the fences. In fact, they were going through the bottom with an empty stomach and leaving through the bottom with a full stomach, which is what's trying to be controlled. That's in reference to section 12, that could be corrected and I expect will be as we all go forward with a clarification that section 12 does not in any way, shape, or form allow for the hunting of these domestic animals but only for the control of predators.

I think those are the questions that I have for the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: There are lots of questions there. After that display, Mr. Speaker, I can only suggest to the minister of agriculture that he'd make an excellent member of the opposition.

Now, certainly, I was aware that not only with game but with fish as well that there are requirements necessary before that fish or that game is placed on a restaurant menu. I'm sure the minister is aware of the inspections that the government conducts to make sure that fish and game that is in restaurants comes from the appropriate places, but it's surprising how often one reads in the newspapers where this individual or that individual has been unlawfully providing various provisions to some restaurants. That's why I asked that question.

Now, I am unaware that the cloning of cervids in America doesn't happen. The information that I have been provided – and the minister can have his staff check this out. Certainly, in Minnesota and Wisconsin there are game farms, and I have been told that the game farms are stocked with cloned animals. One of the advertising techniques that's used to gather the interests of hunters so they'll lay down their thousands of dollars is that these animals have so many points on their antlers, and that can be a guaranteed thing, so people are anxious to visit these sites and hunt down these animals. That's what I'm told.

If the minister knows for sure that there's no cloning, I'm surprised and pleased to learn that, but certainly from what I can gather from visiting the facility in Lethbridge, this is a common, standard practice in certain parts of America.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have 25 seconds. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I'm sorry to hear that. I always appreciate the comments and the thoughts of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I was hoping he could expand a little bit more on hunt farms because he started to bring up some interesting discussions that I think certainly could and should be held here in the House on whether they're ethical.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and take part in the debate on Bill 11, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011. The primary purpose of this amendment is to enable Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development to exercise full legislative authority for domestic cervids, which will help to reduce the regulatory burden for government and the industry.

Under the current system when an animal escapes, SRD issues a collection licence to allow the owner to collect his animal and, if necessary, to destroy it. Under the new LIDA amendment an escaped animal would be treated as a stray. Due to this change, Mr. Speaker, regulations will be made that are tailored to adapt to the uniqueness of the situations faced by owners of diversified livestock. These include provisions regarding the recapture, the trespass, and the liability issues.

Mr. Speaker, if I can just use an example, an escaped farm cervid will remain the property of the producer so long as they are visually identifiable as a diversified livestock animal. One way in which identification could quickly be made is if strays are wearing ear tags. This is done in the livestock industry. Additional details specific to ownership will be addressed in full in the regulations associated with this act.

In conclusion, this amendment is a very important step forward for both industry and government and speaks to the cultural shift in the way diversified livestock are thought of and treated. I look forward to the debate and to receiving the support of members for proceeding with this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity, and I will be glad to answer any questions.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the hon. member might be able to let us know about some of his constituents' feelings in his area. I know that in his area there are a number of cervid ranches and farms, and you may want to let us know what sort of consultation you've done in your riding.

Mr. Danyluk: If I can answer the question, as many people know, there is a wide array of feelings about the bill. I do understand that there has been consultation with people and different groups on what could and should take place in the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. member that they are embracing the opportunity for this particular legislation to come forward, moving it from SRD to Agriculture.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I was wondering if the hon. minister could perhaps answer another question. There's no question in the number of e-mails and letters and phone calls that I've received that Albertans are against hunting on these cervid farms. The hon.

Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar brought up a very interesting aspect of that, you know, the debate on whether or not this is ethical. I guess I find it somewhat challenging, when you look at different people and the way they want to live and make a living, what the government's role is. I think the government has spoken out on this, but I'd love to hear the minister's view on it.

If you were to ask vegetarians whether or not we should be allowed to raise animals and consume them, they would want to say that, no, that shouldn't be allowed, and there would be a huge outcry about it. The hunters have spoken out quite loudly, saying that, you know, it's just unethical and wrong to shoot a caged animal or a fenced-in animal that has no ability to escape or run away.

I guess I look at these businesspeople and the fact that we have hunt farms in other jurisdictions. It's interesting. My understanding – and perhaps someone over there has already got the answer to this – is that we used to actually export some of these trophy animals over to Saskatchewan so they could be hunted there. I believe that they still hunt in Saskatchewan, but there's a ban, and those who raise trophy elk and deer are not allowed to export into Saskatchewan. Is this an area that we as legislators should be looking at and saying, you know: why do we allow one form of hunting where, again, there's too high a result of animals that are wounded and not properly looked after and that die three days or five days later?

I've had a few phone calls from cervid ranchers that would love to be able to hunt on whether they're going to because of section 10.1 possibly allowing hunting in a larger area, perhaps 640 acres of wooded area. Could you expand on any of those and what your thoughts or, perhaps, discussion in cabinet have been on those areas?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, if you will.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very apt to make some comments on some of the questions that you have asked. I'm not going to make comments on the questions that you've diverted through another member. I will say to you that when we look at the keeping, if I can call it that, of a domestic animal, in actuality this is what's taking place. I do have some sympathy for the fact that if you are hunting an animal in the wild and that animal is wounded, you might not be able to find it.

This legislation does not address or condone hunt farms. But I would say to you that there is that view that if an animal was shot or wounded and not able to be claimed right away, in a confined area that animal is to be found. In that aspect I would say there is some . . . [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to stand up and talk to Bill 11, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011. It's interesting, the bill number here. It's often a mark of bad luck on the part of the government to have a bill with the number 11. It goes back over a number of sessions of this Legislature.

Back to Bill 11, which is a lucky one for me, Mr. Speaker, because it was the bill that helped me get elected in the by-election in 2000, following the passage of that bill to deal with private hospitals, just one of many subsequent attempts on the part of the government to bring that type of health care to our fair province. This one I think may be a more lucky number now that it's been amended or will be amended to eliminate any prospect of the minister approving hunt farms.

I don't intend to go into the issue of hunt farms as extensively as some others have done. I accept the intention on the part of the government to make sure that hunt farms do not take place in this province. I think that's only right and proper. Having dealt with this in previous years and raised the issue when, in fact, the government was contemplating that very prospect, the public reaction at that time I think impressed the government so that they're not going to consider that further.

The purpose of the bill is to amend the Livestock Industry Diversification Act to enable Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development to exercise full legislative authority for domestic cervids, which creates a single-window approach in order to reduce legislative burden and help improve economic diversity by stimulating the farm raising of diversified livestock animals.

The bill makes a number of amendments that are reordering words and definitions, keeping up with minor changes for clarity, as well as a few substantial changes to the structure of the act. One section sets out new powers of the minister. That's section 10.1.

The term "domestic cervid" is replaced with "authorized diversified livestock animal" to broaden the prospective livestock animal to potentially more than just cervids.

The bill sets out the power of the minister to issue a permit for authorizing a prescribed activity that would or could otherwise constitute a contravention of the act. This is the piece I think that the government is proposing to amend to preclude hunt farms. The bill adds that the minister may also by regulation provide for permit, licence, or other kind of permission under other legislation of Alberta or other jurisdiction.

The bill would repeal provisions regarding farms, slaughtering, transportation, and importation of animals and replace those provisions with the following proposed sections: hunting regulations forbidding the hunting of controlled animals or big game, with the exception of the hunting of predatory animals for the purpose of prevention or control of depredation authorized by the Wildlife Act.

Permits would be required to possess, transport, import, or export diversified livestock.

The bill would set out clear limitations on prosecution by indicating that a prosecution in respect of an offence against the statute may not be commenced later than two years after the act was committed or when evidence first arose.

The bill would add several additional powers of the minister to create regulations, including regulations regarding the application and provisions in the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act, the Stray Animals Act, or the Wildlife Act.

The Livestock Industry Diversification Act gives authority to farm deer, elk, and moose in Alberta and is administered by Alberta agriculture and food regulatory services division. The Wildlife Act and regulations also apply in some circumstances. They are administered by Alberta Sustainable Resource Development, fish and wildlife division, enforcement field services branch and the wildlife management branch.

Currently legislative responsibility for the regulation of farm cervids is shared by Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development. This change would see the transfer of that legislative responsibility for farm cervids as identified in the Wildlife Act and wildlife regulation in the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act. Once the transfer is complete, ARD will have full administrative authority to administer and enforce all programs related to farm cervids. By doing this, the government claims it will create a one-window approach to dealing with cervids to streamline processes and reduce unnecessary administrative duplication.

The government also has announced that this act would improve the economic diversification of rural Alberta by broadening rural agriculture and livestock-raising alternatives. The cervid livestock industry is often cited as a dying one, but we are led to believe today by the minister of agriculture – and I have no reason to dispute him – that, in fact, the industry is doing very well.

But there is an article I want to bring to members' attention. The Alberta Wilderness Association claims that the game farming industry is both environmentally and economically unsustainable. It has played a role in infecting North American deer and elk with chronic wasting disease, and that has animated the Alberta Wilderness Association's consistent opposition to the licensing and support of the industry. Alberta Wilderness Association claims that chronic wasting disease management has already resulted in substantial economic losses to both ranchers and the provincial government, who are forced to eradicate the cervids and compensate the owners. The chronic wasting disease hunters' surveillance program alone cost half a million dollars in 2009-10.

Chronic wasting disease was first found in Alberta back in 2002 on a northern elk farm in Federal. Chronic wasting disease eradication measures were introduced immediately. It became a larger problem when it surfaced again in wild deer populations in Alberta in 2005 and has caused concern that this finding would create significant costs related to the farmed elk and deer industry. These potential costs can be used to assess the economic returns from chronic wasting disease containment and eradication programs. Cost estimates of chronic wasting disease to cervid farms range between $12 million for additional farm fencing and, potentially, up to hundreds of millions of dollars in payments by governments to discontinued cervid farming.

Hunt farms were thankfully banned in Alberta back in 2002. The Alberta Elk Commission has expressed strong support for the bill for several reasons related to elk farming. This includes concerns over ownership of elk: whether or not the elk leaves the property of a ranch, it becomes a possession under the Crown. This is going to be fixed in the act, apparently.

Classifying elk as diversified livestock should also help with the labelling of product meat and encourage performance in the marketplace. Simplifying and streamlining the process in obtaining permits and registration would also be of benefit to elk ranchers.

The concerns raised by the Alberta Wilderness Association are several. First of all, they have said that no consultations with the public have taken place about the contents and amendments to the bill, and they are concerned that the act will reclassify wild game as livestock. Because cattle and other classic livestock have been studied and domesticated for decades, or centuries in many cases, the knowledge base and safety concerns, diseases, and population density are much better understood. However, the knowledge base around population density and the carrying capacities of the close-quarter living of elk and deer species is quite limited. For example, chronic wasting disease has been found in wild deer populations in the province, causing extermination programs to be set in place. The disease could be potentially devastating if there was an outbreak in a localized farming operation.

Finally, the concern that's been expressed to us is that the amendments place all the power in the hands of cabinet by granting the minister, in section 10.1, the power to remove any legal barriers outlined in this act. The Alberta Wilderness Association believes this amendment is to bypass – well, I think that part has been dealt with.

In a letter to the editor March 14, Mr. Randy Collins, past president of the Alberta Fish and Game Association, also expressed concerns about the legalization of hunt farms. I think that's a concern that the government has dealt with. The minister of agriculture on March 21 indicated that the province will amend Bill 11 to make certain Alberta does not unwittingly sanction controversial hunt farms and has made a strong commitment, which I appreciate.

I think that, Mr. Speaker, the primary concern with respect to this act has been the question mark around hunt farms, which, as I've just indicated and the minister has indicated, is going to be amended. I think that takes away the greatest degree of concern.

I do want to express, though, the importance I see of taking a piece of legislation like this and consulting more broadly than just with the industry. There are others, Mr. Speaker, in this province who have interests that are affected by this industry and by this legislation, including hunters, environmental organizations, and other people involved in agriculture, in regular farming activities. They also ought to be consulted when the government brings forward a piece of legislation like this.

Simply consulting only with the industry and only attempting to reflect the industry's interests is not good enough. You have to balance these things in government – that's my view, at least – and make sure that the impacts of a particular industry do not unduly hurt the interests of others or that, at the very least, they know what's coming and have been given a full chance to consult. I think that it's regretful that that wasn't done in this case, Mr. Speaker.

Regardless, I think that the legislation could be supported with the amendments that the minister has proposed, and I will await the passing of those amendments. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the very good comments the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has made. You made reference to, of course, an amendment on this bill that you're anticipating to come forward. With that, I guess my question to the member would be that if that amendment was not forthcoming, I'd be very interested, with the bill as it presently exists in this House, in the position that he would take relative to it as it stands right now.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, going back a number of years, our position has been very strongly against hunt farms. There was a time when, I think because of mismanagement by the government of this particular sector, people were left with large populations of elk that they couldn't sell, and that was because chronic wasting disease made the markets disappear. The ranchers were desperate for some way to try and realize some return on their investment there, and that's where the hunt farm idea came from.

The NDP led the charge at that time against hunt farms, and the government backed off that position, which was something they were actively considering at the time. It's now become a mainstream position, I think, that's shared on all sides of the House, and I think that that's indeed progress. If, in fact, the door was left open for that kind of activity by this legislation because the amendments were inadequate or didn't come forward as promised, then we would certainly take a very different view of support for this act.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I always appreciate, again, the research from the NDP caucus and the extra funding that they have, so perhaps they have some of these answers. There are hunt farms in the North American jurisdiction. Could you expand on or do you have knowledge of those areas that are currently there and that have access? One of the provisions or comments that we see in here is that they can export Alberta elk and deer and moose to other jurisdictions that have a hunt farm. Do you know where any of those hunt farms currently exist and if there is any export going on with Alberta cervids?

Mr. Mason: I'm not familiar with the answers to some of those questions, which really speaks to the need for additional research funding for the caucus. I know that there are hunt farms, for example, in Saskatchewan, I think, and in the United States. I'm not familiar with the situation right across the country. You know, we have been able to over the years learn how to squeeze out every dime that we get, and perhaps we can share some of that with you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. The ingenuity of business to jump through loopholes always amazes me. I'm just wondering. Again to the hon. member: from their research what happens if a domesticated deer or elk escapes or breaks through the fence? Is that something that happens? Is it legal then to hunt those animals and to shoot them down? Do you have any knowledge on that direction and on whether we have the possibility of gates being left open and whatnot in order to enhance one's income by then having to hunt down these escaped animals?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm not quite sure about what exactly the member was getting at, but I can tell him that, in fact, the escape of these animals into the wild is quite common. That's how, for example, chronic wasting disease got out into the native deer population in this province, creating that problem. It came from animals that escaped from farms, and then it began to spread into the general population, which caused a great deal of problems. Again, it goes back to some serious mismanagement of this industry by this provincial government in the early days.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but it's 6 o'clock. The Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

The policy field committee will reconvene tonight in this Chamber for consideration of the main estimates of Advanced Education and Technology. Tonight's meeting will be video streamed. Have a great evening meeting.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, April 13, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Happy, happy Vaisakhi to all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my constituent the mayor of Strathcona county, Linda Osinchuk. Accompanying Mayor Osinchuk is Marion Guillot, a Rotary exchange student from Bordeaux, France, who is currently staying in Mayor Osinchuk's home. Marion's parents, Pascal and Adeline, and siblings Emilien and Perinne, also from Bordeaux, France, are also visiting Alberta, some for the first time. These visitors are seated in your gallery, and I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a wonderful group of 31 grade 6 students from the brand new school of Monsignor Fee Otterson elementary-junior high located in the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. I had the honour of attending the opening of this great school last fall. It's one of our P3 schools. I have to say that it's truly a wonderful and caring school. It's already full, and it needs more portables. It's a great place for the students that are attending there. Accompanying the students is their teacher, Mr. Jesse Diachuk, along with student teacher Janine England and teacher assistant Chandrika Maraweera along with parent helper Jin Mi Kim and grandparent Joyce Bell. I'd ask all of them to rise in the gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great day in the Legislature today when I have 72 guests from St. Joe's school in Whitecourt. They're here with their teachers, Melissa Uttley, Gail Prince, and Amanda Brown. They're young energetic teachers that are able to tackle this energetic group as well. I had an opportunity to take them down to my office and have a good tour of the Legislature today. I'd ask them now to stand up and be recognized by the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got a series of introductions today, the first of which is my father, Baljinder Bhullar. I'd asked him to rise. My father is accompanied by many individuals here from Calgary to attend Vaisakhi celebrations for the second time in this proud Assembly. Accompanying my father is Rajinder Bhullar, my uncle, Minder Singh, Nirpal Klair, Surkhdev Khara, in addition Harpreet Dhaliwal, Ramanjit Gill, Mr. Felix Clarin, Joel Veluya, Coralyn Gatchalian, Ranjit Sidhu, Jagpreet Shergill, Suvinder Gill, Kuljeet Dhillow, Gagandeep Sahota, Surat Buttar, Ravinderpal Singh, Jaskaran Klair, Harbans Buttar, Virinderjit Bhatti, Sarup Kalkat, Harbans Sidhu, Mohinder Dhillon, Charan Singh, Prem Singh, Jagtar Kharey, Gordeep Kharey, and Mr. Jagdeep Bachher and his family. At this point I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Please bear with me. I've got a lot of guests, but I'll only introduce the presidents for the four Sikh gurdwaras. I'll mention their names, and they've got other members with them. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly four gurdwaras from Edmonton: Gurdwara Millwoods, Gurdwara Siri Guru Singh Sabha, Gurdwara Nanaksar, and Gurdwara Siri Guru Nanak Sikh. I will ask all the members to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I've got a second introduction: Detective Robinder Gill and his father, Nirmal Gill. He did a wonderful job downstairs explaining the Sikh religion and culture, and I'd ask all the Assembly members to please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure and an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of staff from my department in the Advanced Education and Technology client services branch. They're visiting us today on a public service orientation tour. These are the hard-working men and women that help our apprentices each and every day to go through apprenticeship to finish their red seal exams and to get out into the workforce and help build a greater Alberta. I'd like to introduce them and have them stand as I announce them: Chris Gordey, Agnes St. Jean, Elsie Gray, Ken Lodwig, Larry Schmidt, Jones Mitchell, Dale Keyes, Ed Giffen, Patricia Guzman, Rebecca Kragnes, Allan O'Brien, Connie Oskoboiny, and Mike Kaziechko.

Dr. Taft: I'm not sure if my guests are here, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps I'll take the chance that they are. It's a class from the School for the Deaf, which is not just a special organization in my constituency but for all of Alberta. They do a wonderful job of working with students there. They are on a tour today, but I'm not sure that they're here. If they are, I would urge them to rise, and let's give them a warm welcome on principle.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Vaisakhi Day

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to make a statement on Vaisakhi Day and mark 543 years of Sikh history. Today is a special day for Sikhs throughout the world, as most of the Sikh population lives outside of India.

I'm honoured to rise today to recognize April 13, 1699, Khalsa day, when the 10th Sikh Guru Gobind Singh Ji formalized Sikh identity and protected the principles of humanity, equality, and justice.

Vaisakhi is widely celebrated as a traditional harvest festival in northern Punjab, India. Today we celebrate both the religious and, most importantly, the cultural side of Sikhism. Sikhs have lived in Canada since the early 1900s. I know they are all proud to be Canadian. The Sikh community is an important contributor to the economy, and many have served in uniform.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for hosting a wonderful Vaisakhi celebration this afternoon for the Sikh community and the Legislative Assembly. I would also like to thank the Premier for his support during this afternoon's celebration and for his warm wishes. Thank you to all the MLAs who attended the ceremony.

I hope that everyone has a very happy Vaisakhi this year. I know that all of the Sikh gurdwaras will be busy celebrating.

Our Sikh gurus' teaching supports saving humanity, and I urge all Sikh Canadians to commit to making a decision about body organ donation.

God bless. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

1:40 Legal Protection for Physicians

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Doctors in this province perform a very noble and very difficult job. There's a reason just about every little boy or girl at some time tells their parents that they want to grow up to be a doctor. Doctors help people. They make you feel safe, and they fix you when you're sick. Unfortunately, the intimidation tactics of the government and its continued refusal to call a public inquiry to get to the bottom of our health care crisis are making it more difficult than ever for doctors to do their job.

As the Wildrose health critic not a day goes by now when I don't get a call or an e-mail from a doctor about what has become a very toxic work environment. Writes one doctor: we've seen unprecedented events occurring in health care, leading to the erosion of trust and confidence in decision-makers and those governing our system. The worst part of this, Mr. Speaker, is that these doctors have to remain anonymous. Under this government no doctor will dare attach their name to a criticism of how health care is delivered in Alberta. Dr. McNamee and others can attest to why this is happening. That's why Albertans need this judicial inquiry. The Health Quality Council investigation simply does not offer the level of legal protection doctors need to shed light on what's really going on in our health care system.

Mr. Speaker, the veil of silence must be lifted. Our doctors want to speak out. They want to tell Alberta what is wrong and what needs to be done to get it right. Up until now the government has been far more interested in saving its own political skin than truly improving the health care system. It begins with the truth, and it's about time this government allows the truth to be heard.

If I can quote Einstein: learn from yesterday, live for today, hope for tomorrow; the most important thing is to never stop questioning.

Decorum in the Legislative Assembly

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition heatedly and forcefully alleged that a distinguished senior member of this Assembly was not telling the truth and was deliberately misleading Albertans. The remarks are clearly against the rules of this House, as the hon. Speaker has stated. But, even more, those statements are blatantly untrue and are a malicious attack on the character and integrity of that respected member of this House. Anyone who knows the distinguished gentleman knows that he is a person with the highest standards of ethics and integrity.

In January of 2009 the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition agreed that the decorum of the House needed to be improved and that the behaviour of MLAs needed to change. He promised to tone down the rhetoric in the House. He referred to a cynicism about politicians and how that has to change. He espoused respectful relations. He said that he would stand up for ethics and civility in this Assembly. He said that we should rise above partisan differences and seek the public good. Where have all those high and laudable ideals gone?

As politicians we all expect to be criticized and criticized forcefully as regards our ideas, our opinions, and our policies. It comes with the territory. But what we should not expect, especially from the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition and especially not in this Chamber in which we have the honour to serve, are personal attacks on our character, our honesty, and our integrity.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition should demonstrate that he is in fact a person of integrity and honour by retracting those malicious statements made in the House yesterday and should apologize unreservedly to the Premier and to all members of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Vaisakhi Day

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Remarks in Punjabi] Today members of the Indo-Canadian Sikh community recognize a very important day. Today all across the country and around the world we celebrate Vaisakhi. Vaisakhi is the annual recognition of the anniversary of the birth of the Khalsa, the pure.

Guru Gobind Singh established the Khalsa over 300 years ago, and the faith has grown in strength and purity throughout the years. When Guru Gobind Singh created the Khalsa, he met with resistance from the established order, for Guru Gobind Singh in his wisdom noted that the caste system was unjust and that the lowest, in his words, should stand alongside the highest. But the guru's wisdom prevailed, and today virtually all people recognize the truth and the value of equality.

The guru's commitment to social equality and the inherent worth of all human beings is emulated in all Sikhs today, as are the other ideals and values of the faith: respect and dignity for all people, protection of human rights, the duty to carry out good deeds, the importance of a positive attitude, veneration of the family, and devotion to logic, charity, kindness, justice, humility, and hard work. These are the fundamental values of the Sikh faith, and I believe they are the universal human values shared by all Albertans and Canadians.

Today let us share in celebrating those values as one people bound together by our common desire for a better world and our respect and love for our fellow human beings. God bless Canada. God bless Alberta. God bless us all.

Happy Vaisakhi. [Remarks in Punjabi]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Primary Care Net Networks

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all depend on primary health care services like when you go to a doctor or another health care professional to receive a basic health service like an annual checkup or help to manage a chronic disease or minor illness. Our five-year health action plan identifies primary health care as a priority area in our health system. The plan sets out a number of actions to strengthen primary care services and build better connections between Albertans, family doctors, and other members of the health care team.

Alberta is a national leader in developing new and innovative ways of delivering primary health care. Currently there are 40 PCN networks across the province serving more than 2.5 million Albertans. A PCN is a formal arrangement between groups of family physicians and Alberta Health Services to provide primary care services to patients in a specific geographic area. Under the five-year health action plan the short-term goal is to expand primary health care access to another 100,000 Albertans by next year. This plan also calls for a provincial primary health care plan to prevent and manage chronic diseases to be developed and implemented by 2015.

In my local area the Sherwood Park-Strathcona primary health care network serves the primary care needs of approximately 72,000 residents in Strathcona county. By tracking Albertans with chronic conditions and working to help them develop personalized treatment plans, more can avoid trips to emergency or being admitted to hospital.

Mr. Speaker, our primary care network is showing great success in providing Albertans with the care they need, and the five-year action plan will help us build on this solid foundation by improving primary care access for more Albertans and help us build the best public health care system in Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Lomond Stars Female Hockey Team Lance Dealy

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to recognize the Lomond Stars female hockey team as the Alberta champions for 2011 in the peewee B category. The Stars' first step in their fabulous season was to win the zone 5 championship banner over Lethbridge. They next won the Central Alberta Hockey League championship with a win over the Elk Valley, B.C., team. Finally, the Stars won an exciting provincial playoff with a 3 to 2 win over Olds in Red Deer on March 20 following a gruelling five games in three days.

Enjoying a tremendous season of 35 wins, three losses, and two ties are players McKenzie Koch, Christie Bach, Larissa Booth, Riley Paskowski, Cameron Sande, Ashley Stoperski, Kierra Dietrich, Nadine Bertschy, Ryann Liebrich, Karmen Mix, Chelsea James, Gail Birch, and Sydney Mix along with coaches Brad Koch, Rick Dietrich, and Karson Mix.

I congratulate all the players, the coaches, and the parents who supported the Lomond Stars, the Alberta 2011 peewee girls champion hockey team this year, Mr. Speaker.

At the same time I know that you'll join me in recognizing one of your security officers, Lance Dealy, who is the lead of the Alberta senior men's champion curling team. Mr. Dealy along with second Don McKenzie, third Gary Greening, and skip Brad Hannah won silver in the World Financial Group Canadian seniors' playdowns in Digby, Nova Scotia, the week of March 19 to 26.

Congratulations, Team Alberta.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give oral notice of a motion.

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1), commencing on Wednesday, April 20, following the vote on main estimates and the report from the Committee of Supply, the Assembly shall meet for consideration of government business and thereafter shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for the remainder of the 2011 spring sitting unless, on motion by the Government House Leader made before 6 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the following sitting day.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed, join me in extending a happy, happy birthday anniversary to a young lady in the Assembly, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. [applause]

First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Don't start the clock yet.

The Speaker: The clock will start now, hon. leader.

Patient Advocacy by Physicians

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for not cutting into our time.

Yet another doctor has come forward to expose this government's culture of fear and intimidation. Dr. Allan Garbutt from Crownsnest Pass was threatened with a lawsuit for statements he made in a local paper and faced direct threats from a board member when he advocated for his patients. Dr. Garbutt says: "I had to contact the Canadian Medical Protective Association for legal assistance. Without their deep pockets behind me I have no doubt that I would have been forced to retract my statements, for fear of financial devastation." To the minister: surely the minister can see the pattern of abuse for doctors like Dr. Garbutt who are being intimidated and threatened with lawsuits while they have a duty to come forward and act on behalf of their patients.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think it's very good that doctors are heeding the advice and encouragement that we've all provided, and that is for them to speak out and speak up if they have an issue they want to bring forward and direct it to the appropriate authority, which in this case is not me; it's the Health Quality Council of Alberta.

Dr. Swann: Duck and deny, Mr. Speaker. How can doctors like Dr. Garbutt trust the government's statements when those who do come forward on behalf of their patients are labelled mentally unstable, threatened with lawsuits, bullied, and sometimes dismissed?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure which article the hon. member's referring to, but I can recall being in the Crownsnest Pass on a few occasions, and I can recall an article back in September when Dr. Garbutt was quoted as saying: they liked my idea, and they are going to be expanding surgical facilities in the south zone; we're one of them, and I floated out of Edmonton after the announcement. Perhaps that should be noted as well, that there are some improvements that were made and that that particular doctor was quite pleased with them.

Dr. Swann: So as long as he says something positive, he's rewarded. Is that what you're saying, Mr. Minister?

How many more health professionals . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, these were comments he made after he learned about it, not before.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Legal Protection for Physicians

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Garbutt was only able to fight back against the threat of a government lawsuit because he had legal assistance from the Canadian Medical Protective Association. While this health minister claims to protect doctors under the Health Quality Council, the AMA, the Medical Association, and the Canadian Medical Protective Association in their bulletin of March advised doctors who are requested to appear before the Health Quality Council to contact them for advice first. If doctors are adequately protected, why are they being encouraged to contact their legal aid and assistance, who are dedicated to protecting them?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, most doctors in the province are privately held corporations, and they'll seek whatever advice they want, I'm sure. I think what they might want to do is also read section 9(5), I believe it is, of the Alberta Evidence Act. The Alberta Evidence Act makes it very clear that there will not be "any liability on the part of the person making the disclosure or submission." So there is protection provided there. In addition to that, the Health Quality Council is looking at additional steps, I hope, to protect them even further. Anonymity and privacy are critical items.

Dr. Swann: Of course, the Health Quality Council can't subpoena people or financial records.

Given it's clear that there's insufficient protection under the Health Quality Council, will you finally do the right thing and call a public inquiry and truly improve confidence in this system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think a lot of confidence is being improved in the system with our five-year health action plan, the first-ever commitment to a five-year funding plan in Canada; the additional number of beds we've opened in hospitals, about 360; the additional community care facilities and beds, which is about 1,300 more beds; now the additional surgeries, additional cataract operations, additional MRIs, additional CAT scans, additional physicians that are being added. I could keep going if time allowed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Abandoned Wells

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. This government has been careless in its tracking of wells. Companies have disappeared and along with them any record of wells, the ownership, or the responsibility to clean them up. This situation has left the responsibility to pick up the pieces to the extremely underfunded Orphan Well Association and, ultimately, the Alberta taxpayer. To the Minister of Energy: seeing as this is industry defaulting, why isn't more expected from industry as a whole to minimize the liability for Alberta taxpayers?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, since the orphan well fund was established, there has been tremendous progress made on reclamation. One of the issues that has to be addressed is that we have a number of wells from many decades ago where in many cases the company that was responsible for that well is no longer around. There is an attempt to catch up. We recognize that there's a lot of work to be done there, and we're attempting to address that in several ways, which I'd be happy to explain in subsequent answers.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the same minister: given that the Orphan Well Association is forced to defer, postpone, or spread environmental cleanup because of their lack of resources, is the minister planning another injection of cash to help them manage the demand?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to recognize that I think it was about two years ago when the government injected about $30 million into the orphan well fund. That went a significant way toward attempting to catch up on many of these situations. I mean, one of the challenges we have is that, certainly, there's an argument to be made. Whose responsibility is it to pay for wells that have not been reclaimed from decades ago? I'm not so sure that industry today is necessarily responsible for that.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister. Well, given that that injection of cash allowed the Orphan Well Association to deal with some of that backlog, but the money was gone in less than half a year – that's how desperate they were – and the government requires a level of security that doesn't even come close to the cost of reclamation, how can it argue it has the best interests of Alberta taxpayers at heart? The risk is on the taxpayer.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member is not totally correct there. I think that our issue is not around the current situation and whether or not there are adequate resources around reclamation. Our issue is that many of these wells have been around for decades and decades and it's a matter of catching up. We want to make sure that it's done in an appropriate manner, and we'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Lower Athabasca Regional Plan

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the Premier engaged in a little bit of political theatrics with an open letter to Albertans warning federal party leaders to stay out of the oil sands, my backyard. But there's a whopping dose of hypocrisy embedded in its words given the proposals in the draft lower Athabasca region. My question is to the minister of finance. With the hypocrisy that is there, the interference that is there, I have to ask the minister of finance: does he support breaking Alberta contracts?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I think there may be an obligation on a member asking a question to actually put it in a format that makes sense of some kind so we can try and answer his questions. The simple fact: we respect contracts and we respect the law. Probably more, we respect Albertans, and they deserve better

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, certainly better than the minister of finance.

To the Minister of Energy: given the fact that he broke contracts that were signed with a cowboy shake, an Albertan way of life, I have to ask him. This is destroying and attacking our economy. Why does he also agree with breaking contracts? Why does he agree?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's incumbent upon this member, if he's going to ask that type of question, to actually stipulate what contracts have been broken. I'm not exactly sure what he's talking about because I don't know about any contract that anyone has broken.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I was in touch with Calgary oil business workers yesterday. Given that, he's very aware they don't agree. Consequently, why does the Minister of Energy support breaking contracts that ultimately are helping boost the $4 billion to $7 billion of royalties that come into this province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, my guess is that I've probably talked to more industry than this particular member has. I can tell you that what industry is telling me is that they believe we've found a very good balance. Industry recognizes that if we don't do something about ensuring that there are conservation areas in that region, the federal government will start stepping in and ensuring that that happens, and I think it's better if we control our destiny than having the federal government do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Power rates for consumers are expected to rise by 66 per cent next month, a direct result of the sudden, permanent shutdown of TransAlta's Sundance 1 and 2 generating units, with no replacement generation in place. Will the Minister of Energy admit that this Tory government's deregulation of electricity generation has allowed the creation of an artificial shortage which is directly responsible for this massive price hike to consumers, and will he tell Albertans what he's going to do about it?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will be very interested to see next month whether the media, which the member is referring to because he didn't do the research – he's reading out of the newspaper that the power rates are projected to go up by 62 per cent next month. I'll be very interested to see whether that same question comes a month later, when power rates go down by 62 per cent when new electrical generation comes on stream.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the average electricity bill for Alberta families is expected to jump from $43 this March to $71 in April and given that experts – and this is from the power industry, Mr. Minister – say that these bills will remain at least this high for the foreseeable future, will the Minister of Energy take responsibility for his government's misguided deregulation scheme and tell Albertans what he's going to do to control their power prices?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we could do one of two things. We could have in place the system we've got, which has delivered us the lowest power rates in the country since 2003, or we could do what that member would like us to do and inject ourselves into the market, mess with the market, and create the mess that they've got in socialist Ontario right now.

Mr. Mason: Socialist Ontario.

Well, given the flights of fantasies of this minister when he's faced with questions about the power rates, the skyrocketing power rates that ordinary families in this province are going to have to pay, and that he has no answers, will the minister come clean with Albertans and say that they're just going to have to keep paying through the nose because he won't do anything about it?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, to use his terminology, I think I came clean in the first answer. The first answer was that there is generation coming on stream. It's going to be in the next month or two. It will absolutely replace what has gone off the grid. The expectation by the independent operator is that power prices will probably find a level that's very consistent with what it's been.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Minimum Wage Rate

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 10, 150 days to the day, the Minister of Employment and Immigration sent the chair of the Standing Committee on the Economy his response to the committee's report on Alberta's minimum wage policy, just as the standing orders require him to do. In essence, the minister's response said: thanks for conducting the review I requested; I'll get back to you soon. Is the minister prepared to announce a new Alberta minimum wage today, and if not, why not?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in a letter to the chair of the all-party committee I thanked him for the work that he has done with numerous Alberta stakeholders. They have provided me with sound advice, which I am poring through right now. I'm looking at other provinces as a few other provinces right now are announcing changes to their minimum wage. The member will have to be a little bit more patient. I will be announcing new revisions to the minimum wage shortly.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, how much longer should Albertans living in poverty have to wait for the minister to read and digest seven recommendations? I mean, really.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, Albertans living in poverty are well aware of the fact that this ministry happens to also have many programs that help Albertans out of poverty. He will be interested probably in finding out, which is not contained in the report, that the provinces who actually have the highest minimum wage tend to have more individuals reliant on government programs. I will strike a balance. I'm looking at what works and what doesn't work not only in Canada but throughout the world, and you will get a very comprehensive answer soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: is the minister willing to agree today, since wages are – and he pretty much just confirmed that – only one of the issues confounding the poor, to undertake a broad-based consultation that includes the poor with the goal of creating a poverty reduction strategy in this province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to report to you that we have a very comprehensive package for recovery from poverty, and that's called jobs. This ministry trains individuals towards employment, encourages individuals towards employment, provides assistance for individuals towards employment, and we will continue to maintain that jobs are the best way out of poverty.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Supply of Skilled Tradespeople

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent report from the Petroleum Human Resources Council is painting a rather desperate picture of the future in terms of the available labour pool in Alberta's energy industry. The report suggests that in the next 10 years employers in this sector will have to hire between 33,000 and 102,000 workers. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Can our province realistically meet this demand for so many tradespeople?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, this is a challenge. In fact, only today I heard from industry reps saying exactly the same thing, that what stood in the way of drilling more wells last year was the unavailability of trained crews that could do that work. So we do desperately need them.

Mr. Speaker, training workers is a three-pronged stool. We first need to attract people interested in the trades. Secondly, we need to attract employers that can hire those people in the trades and journeymen to help provide on-work training; and thirdly, we need to have those spaces in our postsecondaries to train those young workers.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will this need for workers translate into more technical training seats becoming available in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. The short answer is that last year we did see a downturn in apprenticeship applications, but what we did is that we maintained the funding at last year's level to bridge over and keep all of our positions, to keep our chairs in place, to keep our instructors in place so that as the economy ramps back up, they will be in place. We will meet the needs of apprentices, and in fact already this year we have 500 more applications for apprentices than last year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the Minister of Employment and Immigration: with so many tradespeople needed and the unlikelihood that all these positions can be filled by Albertans, what is your ministry doing to make it easier for tradespeople from outside Alberta to work here?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That ties in very well with the previous question from Calgary-Currie. Not only are we focusing on Albertans first and not only are we providing them with the skill sets that they will require to be fully employed in our economy, but we are also focusing now on other Canadians. Through initiatives like TILMA we're actually attracting Canadians from coast to coast to coast, and they're finding jobs right here in the province of Alberta.

Electricity Prices (continued)

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have seen electricity prices spike once again. So-called regulated rates, meant to even out the peaks and valleys of electricity prices, are not working. Albertans are paying more than ever for electricity. What this province needs is a regulated rate that works, where prices are set over a longer term to ensure families aren't facing sticker shock when they receive their electricity bill. Accordingly will the minister follow other jurisdictions on these pricing concerns by making this the default option?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, if the member would care to do his research, we absolutely have in place the ability that any consumer can sign a contract for a guaranteed price for electricity, so I'm not sure what he's asking for.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that this government let generation facilities degrade to the point where 560 megawatts of power at Sundance sites needed to be shut down in the middle of winter, when electricity prices are subject to being at their peak, with no replacement ready to take over, why should any Albertan trust this government to get electricity prices back under control?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, to be clear, the government of Alberta has nothing to do with the maintenance of generation facilities as alleged by the hon. member. Secondly, I'd point out to the hon. member that I don't know which part of the country he lives in, but on the 13th of April I don't consider that the middle of winter. Thirdly, as I said in my first point, any consumer at any time can sign a long-term, guaranteed contract for electricity retail prices.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that there have been considerable delays in bringing on new generation, including an Enmax plant which sat in pieces in the field for more than a year waiting for approval, what assurances can the minister give that the record prices won't shoot even higher because we do not have any adequate production of electricity in this province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, let me again correct the preamble. The government had nothing to do with the Enmax facility sitting in the middle of the field as alleged by that particular member. As per legislation there was a review done. This minister signed off on that review several months ago. It's up to Enmax when they want to construct a power plant or any generator. As I said earlier to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, there will be new generation coming on within the next month or so, and I'm sure that that will bring power prices back to the average.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Métis History and Culture in Education Curriculum

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has been the first and only province to recognize Métis people with a governance structure and land base. However, it is also important that education curriculum in our province recognizes the accomplishments of the Métis people. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Are the contributions and history of the Métis people covered in Alberta's curriculum?

Mr. Hancock: Well, the short answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes. The contributions and history of Métis people in Alberta are covered extensively throughout the curriculum, particularly in the social studies program and in aboriginal studies 10, 20, 30. At every grade level there are opportunities to incorporate classroom learning experiences that enrich students' understanding of Métis culture. In senior-level courses students can learn how First Nations and Métis land rights are based on differing premises and how the Métis settlements differ from First Nations.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is to the same minister. What is the minister doing to ensure that nonaboriginal students also learn about the history and culture of the Métis people in a comprehensive manner?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, it is an essential part of the social studies program. Alberta students at all grades develop an understanding and appreciation of aboriginal peoples in Alberta, including Métis history and culture. For example, in grade 4 all Alberta students are asked to explore how Métis people contribute to Alberta's identity, from the earliest days of the fur trade to media, politics, commerce, and to the modern Métis. In grade 11 Alberta students are asked to explore how Métis people contribute to Alberta's identity, Métis nationalism, an example of how . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. Perhaps we'll get it in in the third question.

The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. While I support aboriginal studies 10, 20, and 30, does the minister have any plans to review the program to include a Métis history component and resources into the curriculum?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, curriculum is constantly under review to ensure that it's responsive and relevant to students and consistent with the Inspiring Education process. We are beginning an action on curriculum process, which will again look at curriculum in all elements. As we do that, we ensure that the fundamental elements of Alberta society are included in that curriculum, and Métis history and the Métis contribution are part of that fundamental history of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Residential Building Inspections

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's handling of the residential construction file has been less than co-ordinated and effective. On closer analysis it reveals a deeply fragmented system where responsibilities are scattered among Service Alberta, Municipal Affairs, and individual municipalities. To the Minister of Service Alberta: will she admit that bringing the various elements of the residential construction file under the purview of one ministry would result in a better co-ordinated and more effective system for homeowners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the responsibilities Service Alberta has, we are responsible for the home inspections for resale properties, and that's something that is under the Fair Trading Act. With respect to the other issue it is indeed under the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. At the same time we're doing excellent work. We have great consultation with respect to regulating the home inspection industry. Things are moving in the right direction.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Further to that, are building inspection reports for residential properties available to homeowners, and if so, are they required to use FOIP to obtain that information?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Mr. Speaker, with respect to home inspections that are done by home inspectors across Alberta currently, it is between the vendor and the individual who is asking for the home inspection. They have access to that report, and that would be the private information between the home inspector and the purchaser.

Ms Pastoor: What action has the minister taken to protect frustrated homeowners faced with this bureaucratic triangle between the ministries? They don't know where to go. Three different ministries.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, with respect to home inspections on resale properties that's the difference with Service Alberta. New homes are with respect to Municipal Affairs. At the end of the day, under the Fair Trading Act there is protection for consumers for this, but we are looking at regulating that industry, and we are working very closely with all the stakeholders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Legislature Reflecting Pool

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Legislature reflecting pool is a great asset treasured by many visitors to the Legislature Grounds, particularly young families during the summer months, which, hopefully, will soon be here. I understand that the reflecting pool is scheduled for removal from the Legislature Grounds. To the Minister of Infrastructure: is this indeed correct?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, in fact, I just need to inform the hon. member that there are many changes and improvements for the Legislature Grounds. The reflective pool of which he spoke is loved and used by many people. There are challenges with the maintenance of the pool, but it will remain open. The reflective pool is not going to be changed at all this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. That answers my question, and I'm very pleased with the answer. That's not what I'd understood.

The Speaker: That's it?

Mr. Allred: That's it.

The Speaker: But he only said for one year. He didn't say beyond one year. I thought that was your question.

Mr. Allred: In that case, may I continue? Sorry. I didn't hear that one year part.

Am I understanding, then, that after one year it may be closed permanently? Is that the case? How can we justify that?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I do want to inform you that there are going to be four additional small pools at the north end of the area that will have an interactive water feature. This is very much a recreation facility that is appreciated by many people. We do have to look at the maintenance of the reflecting pool, so I don't want to say that this is going to be open forever because we need to upgrade what this pool is.

Mr. Allred: Then just for clarification, Mr. Speaker. I understand that there is no intention to permanently close the reflecting and wading pool at this particular point in time.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, very correct. We have no intentions of closing the pool. I do need to expand a little bit. When the pool started to be used as a wading pool, what happened is that we had to add chlorine. The chlorine is not very conducive to the infrastructure, so we do have to look at upgrading it or maintaining it. But this year it will be in full operation.

The Speaker: I need to apologize very humbly and profusely to the Assembly. That's the first time in 14 years that I've actually interjected myself in a question, which is not very good.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Lower Athabasca Regional Plan (continued)

Mr. Hinman: Apology accepted.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Energy department has been selling leases in northern Alberta without consulting the Environment and SRD ministries or listening to industry or the cumulative effects management agency. Now that they've revealed their lower Athabasca plan, all that incompetence is coming home to roost, and it's Alberta's companies and taxpayers that are going to suffer. To the Minister of Energy. Surely, before this plan came out, you made estimates about how much compensation Albertans would be on the hook for given the development that has occurred on these leases. How much? Or have you simply not looked at this?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that it needs to be pointed out – I think it has been made fairly clear in this House on several occasions, but let me make it clear again. The draft plan that my colleague released last week is in a consultation period for the next 60 days. At that point that information that is gathered will come back to government, and a final decision will be made. At that time we will know whether there is any impact on existing leases.

Mr. Hinman: So you've had no impact study. Unbelievable.

Given that section 19 of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act states that there is no legal recourse or even compensation necessary for government policy decisions, are you hoping to dodge proper compensation to these companies by using this clause?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you look at the Land Stewardship Act, it'll typically refer to other pieces of legislation, and in this particular case the legislation that needs to be raised is the Mines and Minerals Act. There's a clear definition within the Mines and Minerals Act of what happens in the event of, and we will follow the letter of the law.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe a simple yes or no, but I doubt it.

Has the minister come up with his own overall estimated number for what he thinks is full compensation for the rescinded leases in this proposed plan? Yes or no? Have you come up with a number?

Mr. Liepert: Well, again, I have to remind this member, who can't seem to figure it out, that this is not a final plan. How can you possibly . . . [interjection] Okay. Mr. Speaker, I don't think the member wants to hear an answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Capital Infrastructure Funding

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the budget presented to the House at the start of session we saw a three-year capital plan. In the past week we have seen two capital initiatives approved that outstrip the budget set aside in the capital plan. Can the minister of finance please guarantee this House and taxpayers that these $807 million worth of promises made to the city of Edmonton are worth more than the press release that they are written on?

Mr. Snelgrove: If the hon. member is talking about the relocation of the museum from its present site in Glenora to downtown, that was budgeted and passed through this House several years ago. It has been maintained in a fund until, I think, the appropriate decision was made to move it to a more appropriate site. It was in the budget. The Green TRIP, if he's referring to that, has gone through the total budgeting process. We make commitments to municipalities; we live up to them. I have no idea where he's coming from.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: given that in the past spending has been announced and then delayed, pushed back, or cancelled altogether, can the minister guarantee that the Royal Alberta Museum – you guarantee this, please – will be funded and completed by 2015, 10 years after it was initially announced?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I can't guarantee that in 2015 it will be all done. I can tell you that all of the people that are involved in bringing this project forward – in the design, in the construction, in the tendering, in the building – will do their very best to maintain that construction schedule. The money is there, the intent is there, the commitment to the city and the city support are there. The people of Alberta look forward to the opening of the museum in 2015, and I'll give every assurance possible that that will happen.

Now, again to the same minister: what guarantees can the minister give this House and taxpayers in this province that it won't be the case of the departing Premier giving and the new Premier in the middle of October taking it away?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the issue around the museum is an issue that has been with the people of Alberta and this government for several years. The Premier very rightfully suggested that we needed to look for a more appropriate site. There was not room on the current site. This government is committed to the museum. We have the full support of the city of Edmonton. This is not a Premier's commitment. This is a government commitment to the people of Alberta, and we will keep that commitment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Education Program Unit Funding

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions this afternoon are for the Minister of Children and Youth Services and the Minister of Education. As I have talked about previously in this House, I have a number of constituents who have children with severe disabilities who need a great deal of support to help their children stay at home, at school, and in the community. Parents find it extremely frustrating when they have to deal with a lot of red tape to negotiate funding and services from several government agencies and community support groups. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: what is your ministry doing to improve how services are co-ordinated to meet the needs of children with severe disabilities and their families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very serious issue. I understand that. I know as well as the member that in discussions with our families, we've learned that our family support for children with disabilities program as well as the Ministry of Education's program unit funding, known as PUF, need to be aligned in a way that's more helpful to our families with preschool children that have severe disabilities like autism. We started a pilot project with the Ministry of Education in September, where our caseworkers, our educators are working together to identify the unique needs of the child and then to offer the service that will do the most good.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education: given that some Albertans are not familiar with program unit funding, what's it about, and how does it work?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, PUF is provided to school authorities and approved private early childhood services operators. It's in place to support children with severe disabilities or delays who require support beyond that offered in the regular early childhood services programs. It supports individualized programming for children aged two and a half to six. It is available for a maximum of three years. Certificated teachers are involved in the program.

A key part of the pilot with Children and Youth Services is working with families to identify their priorities for assisting their child in the home and in an early childhood setting and to develop one service and program plan for jointly supporting these priorities.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the Minister of Education. When will the results of the pilot project be available province-wide?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the pilot project is working in a number of areas, particularly in Fort McMurray, for example, where there's a pilot operating. We're learning from that. There will be a learning event held on May 10, which will bring together a wide range of families that are involved, ministry staff, and others involved in the pilot. We'll have an opportunity to discuss their successes as well as their challenges. If we're seeing better outcomes, and we expect we will, for children and families – they'll tell us their experiences – we'll have a program which we can broaden across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Children at Risk

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. PCHAD, PCHIP, forms 1 through 8 all have in common the shortcoming that they are of a limited legislated duration, faring from 24 hours to a maximum of five days to begin to resolve problems, which, first, require assessment followed by appropriate treatment and sustained support. No matter how caring and qualified ministerial representatives are, unless a youth is in secure custodial care, neither assessment nor treatment can occur. To the Minister of Justice: what roles does your ministry play in providing protection for vulnerable street youth?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for raising this issue. I know he's concerned about at-risk youth, as I am. My ministry is not the lead ministry on issues such as this, but I am proud to say that the safe communities initiative, for which my ministry is the lead ministry, plays a very active role, particularly in prevention. Nine different government ministries work together. The hon. member may wish to speak to some of my other colleagues on this who are more directly involved. For example, in the last two years . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister, but we have to move on now.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Solicitor General: under what circumstances are law enforcement officers permitted to apprehend a youth between the ages of 12 and 18, who, through documented actions, are a threat to either themselves or others with whom they come into contact?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, law enforcement agencies in the apprehension of a youth or anyone else must act under some legislative authority. There are a few acts that provide that authority, including the Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act, the Mental Health Act, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act. If the case involves a youth 12 to 17 years old who has committed a crime, even the Youth Justice Act can be used. Even that act requires a police officer to first seek some program or community agency to deal with before proceeding with judicial actions against that child.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the Solicitor General: to what extent are front-line officers not only permitted but encouraged to use their professional discretion in dispensing justice that is, quote, in the best interests of street children and youth?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what the member is after here. If he wants me to assure him that police exercise discretion, they do. They are community police. That's their job. They do it every day. If he wants me to assure him that police can help, they do, not only children but their families or guardians. They can work with families affected by instances. But if he's seeking the resolution of a particular case – and I sort of feel he is here – I can't help him with that. We can't discuss that case on the floor of the House. I can only advise him to have the guardians or the parents deal directly with authorities in my department or children's services. There are a lot of people who can help and who are eager to.

Public Transit

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having a well-connected transportation system is important to support economic opportunities and improve quality of life in Alberta communities. An effective transportation system has many components and should include innovative transit transportation. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. I'd like to know what he has been doing to improve the quality and accessibility of bus and transit transportation in our province.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that the Alberta government is in the transportation business, but we're not in the transit business. With that said, a little earlier the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar brought up our Green TRIP fund. I want to be able to say that just last week the very first announcement out of our $2 billion Green TRIP fund was $497 million for Edmonton's NAIT line. Green TRIP is all about supporting municipalities, and it's about providing Albertans . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: do smaller municipalities that are interested in developing public bus transportation have access to funding through Green TRIP or any other provincial grant programs?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is yes. Out of the $2 billion Green TRIP, $400 million has been set aside for communities outside of Edmonton and Calgary, and I would further point out that both municipal and private-sector operators can apply for Green TRIP funding. Municipalities can also fund capital transit purchases through the province's basic municipal transportation grant, the federal . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Woo-Paw: Okay. My last question is to the same minister. Given the importance of high-quality public transportation to many temporary foreign workers and other newcomers, does the minister feel that current initiatives in transportation are sufficient to attract and retain newcomers?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member brings up an excellent point about the importance of safe and effective transportation systems. I'd like to say that transportation is the backbone of our economy and that many components are needed to support and grow our economy and improve Albertans' quality of life. No doubt having an effective transportation network is an incentive for both businesses and individuals to come to Alberta, and that's why we have made such great investments in our transportation system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Southwest Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we had a chance to sit down with the members of groups and associations dedicated to sustainable, efficient roadway expansion that doesn't destroy existing communities or environmentally sensitive parks in southwest Calgary. To the Minister of Transportation: will the government listen to the message from both the mayor of Calgary and local citizens and agree right here and now to take bulldozing communities and paving over environmentally sensitive park areas off the list of options for developing new roadways in southwest Calgary?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we absolutely have a process that's going on in exactly what he's talking about. We have a memorandum of understanding with the city of Calgary. We have workers from both sides – we have engineers; we have biologists – everyone working together to say what is going to be the best route to try to connect the ring road in southwest Calgary. Let's let that process happen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: given that many believe that the simplest solution to this problem is to have the southwest ring road go through the Tsuu T'ina Nation reserve, will the minister do the right thing and ask his department to reopen talks with the nation?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we honoured an agreement, as they say. We had an agreement with the Tsuu T'ina Nation that was voted on. They voted against the agreement, and we're honouring that. I'm not saying that our door isn't open for them to come and talk to us, but we're honouring their feelings.

Mr. Kang: Mr. Speaker, they are willing to come back to the table again.

To the minister again: has the minister explored whether another solution may be available to improve traffic in southwest Calgary such as redirecting funds that would have gone to support the ring road to transit or LRT?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we're exploring all options. That's what I'm saying. Let the process work out. We have experts looking at all options.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

CCSVI Clinical Trials

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the minister of health. On April 5, a little more than a week ago, the government of Manitoba made $5 million available to fund clinical trials for treating chronic cerebrospinal venous insufficiency in patients with multiple sclerosis. This funding will complement and build upon the $5 million that Saskatchewan committed in 2010. As financial commitment is step 1, will Alberta please consider joining Saskatchewan and Manitoba in a jointly funded, co-ordinated approach to support these multisite trials?

The Speaker: How about if we wait a few minutes from now? At 3 o'clock this afternoon the estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness will be here. Our tradition is that we don't ask financial questions on a minister's budget on the day that the minister has got three hours allocated for it.

Is your second supplemental still related to dollars for the Department of Health and Wellness?

Mr. Prins: Okay. I'll try that one. Thank you.

Has the minister talked to his appropriate counterparts in Saskatchewan or Manitoba about their co-ordinated plan about MS clinical trials?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as ministers we all met and spoke about a variety of matters back in September. MS is certainly top of my mind at the moment because, of course, we have about 11,000 sufferers of this disease here. However, before proceeding with clinical trials, a lot more information would be needed, and we're in the process of gathering that information right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Manitoba's goals are to have processes in place to proceed with clinical trials in late 2011, will Albertans with MS still have to go out of province to receive this treatment?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is yes because, to my knowledge, no province in Canada has yet given unconditional approval of any kind to proceed with the Zamboni treatment here. It's important to note that if people go outside the country to get this particular procedure and they come back to Alberta – they are Albertans to begin with – and they develop a complication, the medical system will be there to help them with any complications that might arise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Arts Funding

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2010-11 arts groups throughout the province faced a reduction in their grant funding from the government of Alberta and the Foundation for the Arts in the range of 16 per cent. This cut has severely impaired the ability of arts organizations to meet their basic needs while continuing to provide artistic programming. This year it appears that their funding hasn't been cut any more, but it hasn't risen either. My question to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: given the economic realities of the cuts, now rising gas prices, et cetera, what are the minister and the Alberta Foundation for the Arts doing to help ease the burden on individual artists and on arts organizations?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, during estimates for the 2010-11 budget we had expressed in our ministry that we had to pass along cuts of 16 per cent across the board, but I had promised that if we had efficiencies in our operations, we would return some of that money. I'm proud to say today that we're able to return an amount equivalent to about 5 per cent back to those arts organizations, about $741,000. Our Alberta Foundation for the Arts board has worked very hard through program efficiencies to be able to realize some savings and has asked that we put that back to those worthwhile organizations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, that sounds like good news.

To the same minister: tell us about the types of groups that did receive this money.

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, there were over 345 different organizations, anywhere from Theatre Calgary to the Edmonton symphony to the Citadel Theatre and Alberta Ballet. There are also hundreds of small organizations like the Cardston Community Theatre, the Innisfail town hall, and the Alberta book society. Our culture and community spirit is not found only in Calgary and Edmonton; it's found in many communities right across the province.

2:40

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: I'm sure those arts groups will probably welcome this money, but when would they expect to receive it?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that letters went out to many of those arts groups last week. I know that I had the pleasure of being in attendance at the Mayor's Celebration of the Arts on Monday night. I met many different representatives of the arts community, and some of them had received their letters such as PACE, the Alberta arts council, the Citadel Theatre, many different other groups. They expressed their gratitude for listening to them, for realizing that there are concerns. We try to do the best job that we can in this province in supporting arts and culture. I think we do a great job. We support them as the third-largest per capita funding government in the country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, that ends the question period for today. Nineteen members were identified for 112 questions and responses.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over a thousand Albertans and many Canadians have contacted my office urging this government not to begin the first stage this June of clear-cutting one-third of the Castle-Crown. Today's tabling concerns were received from Ward Stannard, Lisa Cockburn, Bryan Wyatt, Robert Park, Aija Auzina, Arlene Hamilton, Nick Church, Sean Dineen, Katherine Webster, Susann Easson, Ken Smith, Anne Dmytrishyn, Ted Baird, Marie Janisse, Marie McLean, Lynn OShaughnessy, Kellie Scholz, William Boddy, Garry Revesz, Lynne FitzGerald, Georges Brun, Peter Young, Richard Carrière, Jinny Lee, and Penelope Ryan.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, do you have a tabling on behalf of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition?

Ms Blakeman: No, sir, I don't.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2011-12

Health and Wellness

The Chair: Before I call on the minister, I just want to repeat the procedure here. The minister has 10 minutes to speak, maximum, and then an hour following that would be a member of the Official Opposition, and the 20 minutes after that would be for the third party. Then the next 20 minutes would be for the fourth party, and the next 20 minutes would be to an independent and any other members after that. The minister and the speaker can join in for the 20 minutes.

The chair shall wait for a few moments for the staff to settle in.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and good afternoon, everyone. I want to just quickly introduce some of my staff who are here: my deputy minister, Jay Ramotar; Assistant Deputy Minister David Breakwell; Assistant Deputy Minister Susan Williams; Assistant Deputy Minister Martin Chamberlain; Assistant Deputy Minister Margaret King; and the executive director of financial planning, Charlene Wong.

Mr. Chair, time is limited. I'll cut straight to the chase by starting off with our Ministry of Health and Wellness business plan goals. There are four goals, as people probably know, in this particular order: effective health system accountability, strengthened public health and healthy living, appropriate health workforce utilization, and excellence in health care.

There are several priority initiatives under each of these four goals, and I will highlight only nine of them at this time as follows: to lead the health capital planning process; to implement service delivery enhancements and activities in Alberta's five-year health action plan; to implement the next steps of the Putting People First report, including the advancement of the Alberta Health Act, a public engagement framework, a health charter for Alberta, and a health advocate; to implement a wellness framework for Albertans; to strengthen the primary health care system; to improve access to clinical care and treatment through strategies such as managing wait times, achieved through efficient and effective use of an available workforce, clinical facilities, and new and existing technologies; to provide appropriate access to services across the continuum of care by increasing the co-ordination of health and social support systems; to reduce continuing care wait times by implementing the continuing care strategy and expanding home-care options and community capacity for supportive living; and to develop and implement Alberta's provincial plan for cancer care.

There are, of course, numerous other initiatives and strategies that round out our plan. Nonetheless, each goal is also accompanied by associated performance measures. In total we have 50 of those performance measures that were released last year.

Moving on to Budget 2011, clearly, Mr. Chairman, stability is probably one of the most important messages delivered by Alberta Health and Wellness through our new budget. There are no cuts to programs in this budget. In fact, it's a budget that reaffirms our commitment to predictable, long-term funding for Alberta Health Services. Budget 2011 also marks the second year of a five-year funding commitment that provides Alberta Health Services with 6 per cent base operating increases in each of the first three years and 4.5 per cent increases in each of years 4 and 5, an unprecedented commitment by any provincial government in Canada to date. It's the first of its kind, and we're very proud of it.

The stable 6 per cent funding increase, which amounts to $545 million for Alberta Health Services, provides necessary monies to continue implementing our five-year health action plan to improve Albertans' access to the health system and to provide shorter wait times and safe quality care.

In terms of operating expenses for Alberta Health Services it's important to note that the 2011-12 Health and Wellness budget is $14.9 billion, an increase of $646 million to our overall operating budget. That Health and Wellness budget, as you know, is split amongst the department and, of course, Alberta Health Services. Alberta Health Services itself is getting a 6 per cent increase, but when you combine the two with the department, the net increase for the two combined is 4.6 per cent to our overall operating budget.

It's important to note, Mr. Chairman, that that does not include funding that was provided on a one-time basis in 2010-11 for Alberta Health Services' deficit elimination plan.

Our budget is made up of $14.8 billion in operating expenses and $134 million for vaccine utilization, amortization, and capital grants such as equipment. These capital grants are primarily for diagnostic and related medical equipment that's necessary as well as health information systems.

Operating expenses are made up of four major components: $9.6 billion for Alberta Health Services for base operating costs, $3.3 billion for physician compensation and development costs, $1 billion for drugs and other health benefits for Albertans, and $800 million for other health services.

So let's take a quick look at Alberta Health Services' budget. As I mentioned, this budget reflects a 6 per cent increase in the second year of the five-year health action plan. AHS will be receiving an additional $545 million as promised, for a total of $9.6 billion in their base operating funding. While Alberta Health Services is responsible for allocating funding to specific areas, I would like to give you a sense of how that funding is anticipated to be used.

For example, $3.7 billion of the base operating grant is expected to be spent by Alberta Health Services on acute-care services in hospitals across the province; $2.3 billion is expected to be spent by Alberta Health Services on support services for things like building operations, maintenance, administration, security, communications, housekeeping, food services, and information technology; $1.7 billion is expected to be spent by Alberta Health Services on diagnostic and therapeutic services; and $1.1 billion is expected to be spent by Alberta Health Services on facility-based and home-based continuing care services. Finally, $912 million is expected to be spent by Alberta Health Services on community and population health services for programs to improve and maintain Albertans' health and for disease and injury prevention.

The funding for Alberta Health Services this year does not include a provision for accumulated deficit elimination as it did last year, and I must stress that yet again. In fact, Mr. Chair, Alberta Health Services will be announcing its detailed budget in the coming weeks, presumably after we've hopefully endorsed the budget here today and then the global Alberta government budget in a few weeks.

A couple of comments about operating expenses related to physicians. The second-largest part of our expenses is $3.3 billion. In fact, that is allocated toward physician compensation and development. That represents about 22.4 per cent of our department budget, not Alberta Health Services but our department, which is where this compensation comes from. It's 22.4 per cent. No funding increase for physician compensation was allocated in this year's budget because of ongoing negotiations with physicians. I'm pleased that the agreement in principle reflects the reality of that circumstance and of our financial situation at the moment. I know that the agreement in principle is in place now, Mr. Chair, and that Alberta Health and Wellness along with Alberta Health Services and, of course, the Alberta Medical Association are working very diligently towards finalizing the agreement in principle and having that all tidied away by June 30 if not sooner. We will review funding needs when a final agreement is reached because there are a number of related issues there that pertain to programs and benefits.

Within the $3.3 billion for physician compensation and development are several increases that are outside of the trilateral master agreement between government, Alberta Health Services, and the AMA. For example, there are increases of about $5 million for the academic alternate relationship plans that provide compensation for physicians who are in a teaching role. There is also an increase of $11 million for medical resident allowances to provide compensation for medical students who are doing their residencies, and a $4 million increase for clinical training and assessment support specifically for postgraduate medical education offices. Those offices co-ordinate over 20 departments of medicine, Mr. Chair, over 50 residency programs at the U of A and at the U of C, and a total of about 1,620 medical residents in Alberta. The increase will go toward the expansion needs of residency programs to accommodate an increasing number of Alberta medical graduates.

The third-largest area of our expense is $1 billion allocated toward drugs and supplemental health benefits for Albertans. There is an increase here of about $84 million, or 8.8 per cent, for drugs and supplemental health benefits for Albertans this year alone. The increase is primarily due to volume growth in prescription drugs for seniors. That's about $46 million. Higher prices and patient utilization of nongroup drug benefits is about $16 million for Albertans who are not part of a group drug plan. Volume growth and price for outpatient cancer therapy drugs administered on an outpatient basis is about $9 million. Volume growth and price for outpatient specialized high-cost drugs is an increase of about $7 million.

With respect to other health services there is about $800 million allocated for other health services. I'll just break down some of that in the couple of minutes I have left. Fifty-eight million dollars is budgeted for my ministry support services. This goes toward the operations of my office.

The Chair: Hon. minister, I hesitate to interrupt. Your 10 minutes are up.

Now we have an hour for the Official Opposition and the minister, so do you want to combine for 20 minutes in conversation back and forth?

Dr. Swann: That would be good. Thank you, Chair.

The Chair: All right. Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, 20 minutes.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. A pleasure and a privilege to rise and speak with the minister on issues related to budget estimates for Health, and welcome to his staff. I look forward to further interactions today.

The financials are as stated by the minister, and I don't think anybody would question the fact that the government is able to spend money on health care. The question, I guess, that all Albertans are asking is: what are we getting for the spending on health care? What are we getting in terms of a healthier population? What are we getting in terms of improved access? What are we getting in terms of quality of care? These are the fundamental evaluation tools for health care, and I think that both the public and the professionals are legitimately asking what has happened to their cherished health care system. The goals of health care surely are to keep people healthy as long as possible, to ensure their access to the right professional for the right testing if they need it and for correct treatment that gets them back into fully healthy mental, physical, and social functioning.

There's been a serious loss of confidence in the government's management of the system in these past few years and in their ability to deliver on what they have promised to Albertans, which is to establish the best health care system in the country. There's no question that health care has enough dollars. The question is: how is it being spent? What kind of leadership, management of both money and people, what kind of measurements are we getting to ensure that we're getting value for money? How are we listening to those who actually work in the system, who know how the system could and should work and have been trying to make suggestions for many years on how to improve the system's efficiency, efficacy, and long-term sustainability?

The lack of respect for professionals in our health care system today has seriously eroded the ability of the health care system to function. I think that's become patent in the last year particularly, but I certainly was one who felt the wrath of a board that decided I was speaking out of turn in 2002. Other physicians have also felt the wrath. Nurses are contacting our offices about how difficult it is to make a contribution to health care today because of their fear of recrimination, their fear of intimidation, their experiences personally, or the failure of management to actually address concerns about patient care, about patient safety, about staff well-being, about simply a respectful climate for work.

This has to be a most costly failure in our system today, which is very difficult to measure in terms of lost time, lost productivity, and certainly lost satisfaction. I would argue that if we don't get back to a sense of what it means to be healthy – healthy in the workplace, healthy as individual citizens, healthy in our professional relations, healthy in terms of a healthy community where people care and communicate about the issues that affect their lives, whether it be the environment or the social climate or the ability to have a job and earn a respectable wage. These discussions have been lost in the system because of the culture that has divided and in many ways intimidated the very people that can make a difference and improve our health care system.

Health has to be the starting point. What is our investment, Mr. Minister, in prevention, in health promotion? You yourself were the minister back when the wellness side of Health and Wellness was first created. Many good ideas were expressed, many good planning documents released, not least the Rainbow Report, that moved us towards a regional system. Then due to incompetence and lack of understanding and lack of evidence, the most recent minister blew up the system without a plan. We're left with chaos, without any plan going forward, and people reeling under the confusion, the conflicting mandates, the lack of clarity in the organizational structure, the huge complexity that needed years of planning and had none.

That's part of what we're dealing with, and we have to address some of the background if we're going to move forward and spend money effectively and efficiently: thoughtful planning based on demographics, understanding of our human systems, and the interconnections to the community.

This government has spent money, and it has managed real problems. I'll acknowledge that. Cancer care is being addressed; addictions, new mental health projects, and cataract waiting lists have been addressed in the short term. But what about primary health care, where 750,000 Albertans wait to find continuity of care in a family physician's office? How does the minister account for the release of four medical officers from the department just months prior to the H1N1 pandemic and at a time when syphilis rates were over the top in this country and remain the highest in the country? It's a shame for our system that we're dealing with such preventable long-term issues that have gone on for far too many years in the province.

The most fundamental question: why was the minister allowed to blow up the system, the regional system, that was carefully crafted and developed over a number of years and was starting to deliver good-quality care, that had the confidence of professionals, the participation of professionals, throwing the systems, the programs, the teams, and the decision-making all into chaos which we're still reeling from? Why are we in Calgary forcing nurses to take part-time roles to save money in the short term instead of encouraging nurses to be full-time, have full benefits, have a commitment to the system, have some consistency and respect in the system as under the previous McCaig leadership?

Those are the kinds of decisions that are, again, penny wise and pound foolish. This government knows how to spend. They don't know how to spend wisely because they've had such change, such inexperience, and such lack of planning and use of evidence to make the decisions that we need to make for long-term sustainability. This Tory government has demonstrated again and again that it lacks the competence in a complex system, and it has never, contrary to the Premier's and the minister's assertion, given up on the desire to privatize more and more of the services.

Unfortunately, their desire has outstripped their knowledge and their management ability, as evidenced by the Health Resource Centre's fiasco at the old Grace hospital. Eliminating hospitals, demoralizing professionals, and changing the organization three times in 15 years all have contributed to a frustration, a fatigue, and a burnout, leading to early retirement, dismissals, increased sick leave, and transfers to other provinces and countries. This profound lack of insight and leadership has most damaged our primary care sector, where we need to reinvest in family doctors, home-care services, long-term care, and prevention programs in favour of the high-tech medicine that has so dominated our system in the last decade.

As Dr. Duckett well expressed, this government has an edifice complex: buildings over basic services, buildings over people and responsible relationships, respectful relationships with the very people who know how to and can make very useful changes to the system.

We have made very constructive suggestions over the past six months, Mr. Chairman, first in the Pulling Through document to relieve the ER crisis, a crisis, incidentally, that was identified 10 years ago and this government simply ignored and simply continued on its merry way to reorganize structure instead of looking at the root cause of ER wait times, ER problems. In that document we recommended bringing in all available professionals to reduce the backlog in the emergency departments, in their family practice offices, in their home-care services, mobilizing professionals to get us back on track with the kind of testing that is needed and to deal with the backlog in long-term care, which is fundamental to reducing that problem.

We'll also be rolling out more details of our recommendations for improving the health care system through returning more decision-making to the local regions. Without more autonomy, without more responsiveness we will continue to frustrate health professionals, we will continue to confuse them, and they will simply increase their withdrawal from any active engagement in the system. The words from those professionals who come out to our forums, who call our 1-800 line, who write to me personally are: we don't know where this health care system is going, we do not feel safe in making challenges to the system, and we are giving up hope that this province will get a health care system that we can be proud of again.

3:10

To go specifically to questions for the minister, Mr. Speaker, of Alberta Health and Wellness's total budget of almost $15 billion, Alberta Health Services controls almost $10 billion of the dollars in operational spending. One has to ask the question. With the creation of Alberta Health Services the government has in effect created a separate ministry, one of the largest ministries of all ministries in the government. With the total government expenses projected at roughly $34 billion for 2011-12, according to page 18 of the fiscal plan, Alberta Health Services controls 28 per cent of all government expenses. That's more spending through a separate, arm's-length organization than throughout any other government ministry. This is an organization larger than any other government ministry, with no direct accountability to Albertans. How does that work? How does that show a respect for Albertans, for the democratic process, for openness and accountability when we see such a lack of accountability?

Alberta Health Services employs more Albertans than any other government organization and has the ability to affect the life of every single Albertan. It accounts for and controls 25 per cent of all government expenses, yet Albertans have no way to hold it accountable. We need more discussion around this.

I've highlighted some of the organizational disarray that Alberta Health Services is currently in. This is because of three years of centralizing without a plan and confusion about who's making decisions about what. Even at the grassroots level people are still struggling with whom to contact. They're wasting inordinate amounts of time communicating with the wrong people, getting the wrong decisions, and having to go back up the chain. This has to stop.

There's clearly a need for an overview that recognizes the importance of regional delivery of our health care system. This cannot go on with such dominant central bottlenecks in decision-making and in many cases inappropriate decisions that may fit in some parts of the system, like an institutional system in the city, but may not fit at all in some parts of the system in other parts of the province.

This is an aspect that has been missing under Alberta Health Services. Delivery on a provincial level cannot be accountable to the cities and communities that use the system; therefore, it has become disengaged with the real meaningful issues that patients and professionals bring to their daily work. It is a constant source of frustration, and it needs to be addressed.

Again, with the CEO of Alberta Health Services having so much power and influence on provincial delivery policies, there is a huge democratic deficit and a trust issue fundamental to that. How can the public hold these people accountable on decisions that are affecting their work life and the quality of care they're able to provide?

Of Alberta Health and Wellness's budget, Alberta Health and Wellness controls $5.3 billion in spending. Where is the direction and where is the clarity in roles and responsibilities between Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health and Wellness? We believe that this is causing an impossible relationship that cannot be resolved without more deferral and deployment of decision-making back to the local level with a return of health policies and financial management to Alberta Health and Wellness. It is simply untenable to have these two major bodies continue to rival each other over specific decisions, especially politically sensitive decisions, and create the kind of confusion and uncertainty and loss of confidence that pervades the system today.

I'm waiting for Alberta Health and Wellness to do another survey of employees to find out what the morale level is, the confidence in the system. It was at an all-time low when it was done under Dr. Duckett: some 25 per cent of physicians confident in the system, some 30 per cent of nurses confident in the management of the system. I'm afraid, Mr. Chairman, that the level of confidence has actually gone down since that survey. I don't doubt that the minister is reluctant to do another survey and follow up on those specific questions again. I challenge the minister to do that because I think it would be very helpful to see what the changes have meant for front-line staff: to their morale, to their ability to function, to their sense of satisfaction, to their sense also of moral conflict, which has been increasingly talked about when professionals are caught between advocating for their patients and being silent or being compliant with policies. They are stuck in this moral dilemma. I think it would be very important for us to get a handle on how much moral dilemma the front-line health workers are experiencing.

With the health delivery areas relegated to strictly delivering health care, creating province-wide policy would then be left to the ministry, where it's appropriate. But more of the delivery decisions must be made in the zones of this province. Province-wide policies would ensure that there would be a lack of disparity between those areas in the province.

Central buying power and procurement: eminently sensible. Financial management: eminently sensible at the central area. Standard setting, enforcement, monitoring: sensible to manage from the centre. But not delivery: I think we've seen that in spades. There is too far a distance between those who deliver and those who decide how to deliver. There needs to be accountability at the local level. We've not seen accountability anywhere in the system, as the buck is passed between Alberta Health Services and the ministry. Nobody actually steps up and becomes accountable for decisions that in some cases are compromising further the access, the quality, and the cost-efficient management of the system.

There is still no indication of what areas of the province and why funding decisions are made. It's far too sensitive to political influence, lobbying, specific specialties. It's very clear that some specialties dominate the decisions around where money goes and where the priorities are. This government must take the leadership and recognize that primary health care has to be observed. Primary health care has to be the priority. If people can't see a family doctor, if they can't get a home-care nurse, if they can't get appropriate testing, we are going to continue to plug emergency departments. We are going to continue to have long-term care people stuck in hospitals, where they are dying, languishing in depression, and at increased risk of other conditions. Let's get on the stick and spend the money wisely.

The superboard itself is an organization that appears to be out of control, provides no answers, and it's questionable as to whether there's even the capability of reining in Alberta Health Services. They are a power unto themselves, and it seems unclear how to bring that into a sensible balance.

Can the minister confirm whether he agrees that the lines of accountability, roles, and responsibility are clear and that there was any consideration of the impacts of the centralization before this was implemented? Three years into the government's experiment with our health care system there is a huge problem. When does the minister expect to actually have these basics of management, accountabilities, relationships, measurement, indicators, both within the human resources relationships and in the health outcomes, in place?

Can the minister tell the committee how many of the 795 full-time equivalent employees with Health and Wellness are responsible for the health capital planning process? Can the minister also tell the committee how many employees within Alberta Health Services are responsible for other aspects, including the prevention programs, which we see cut year after year after year? What is the rationale behind reducing prevention when we have a growing population of overweight, mentally at-risk people, many children in poverty, that are increasingly demanding services from the system, that are eminently preventable?

The Alberta Health Services '09-10 annual report states that they provided Health and Wellness with their capital submissions by June 30 while they didn't receive final plans until December 10. Which organization has the final say on capital projects, Mr. Minister? Is it Alberta Health and Wellness, or is it the superboard? How do we decide in Alberta who is influencing these decisions and why? What are the criteria? How about making those public? If this government is truly interested in transparency and accountability for the public dollars that are spent, why not make public the criteria under which these decisions are made?

The Chair: Hon. member, I understand that the first 20 minutes are for combined question and answer, but you have used up the 20 minutes for questions. So the next 20 minutes are for the hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, it's going to take me 20 minutes or more to answer the questions. How would you like us to proceed? I thought we were sharing that last 20 minutes.

The Chair: Right. That's my understanding.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, you'll just let me know when the bell rings. Okay? Thank you.

I want to begin, Mr. Chairman, by also thanking my parliamentary assistant, who is the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford, who is here. Thank you very much for the valuable input that he has provided not only since being appointed but even earlier.

Mr. Chairman, the first question that the hon. Leader of the Opposition asked was something to the effect of: what are Albertans getting for the monies that are being spent and, in this particular case, contemplated to be spent as part of the budget under debate? I want to say in a general sense that what Albertans will be getting is a very aggressive, a very robust five-year health action plan with specific performance measures, specific targets that we're all aspiring to achieve. No one is working harder to achieve those than the people involved in Alberta Health Services. There are 90,000 people working in Alberta Health Services, doing an outstanding job and dealing with some difficult circumstances to improve health outcomes for Albertans.

Some of the specifics in relation to the hon. member's question about what people will be getting for the monies that we are hopefully going to get approval for today would include within the health action plan the following: the addition of 360 new in-hospital beds this outgoing year alone. We're almost at that target already. That's the largest increase in the last five years, Mr. Chair. Also, we'll be adding at least 5,300 more net new continuing care spaces. That's about a thousand more each year over the next few years. In fact, we're almost at 1,300 already for the outgoing year. We'll be adding two new radiation therapy centres, in Red Deer and in Grande Prairie, and that's in addition to the new centre that's already opened in Lethbridge.

We'll be reducing wait times for hip surgery by 60 per cent, coming down to 14 weeks. We will also be reducing wait times for knee replacement surgery by 71 per cent, bringing that down to 14 weeks. We will be reducing wait times for coronary artery bypass graft surgery, based on urgency of course, by between 50 per cent to 81 per cent. That'll come down to anywhere from one to about six weeks.

We are also reducing wait times for cataract surgery. In fact, we'll be reducing that area by 66 per cent. The wait times are going to come down sharply, down to 14 weeks. We'll be reducing wait times for cancer patients to see an oncologist by 70 per cent; down to two weeks, in other words. That's phenomenal. We'll also be reducing wait times for cancer patients to begin radiation therapy by 29 per cent, bringing it down to four weeks. We're very close to that right now, Mr. Chairman, but more work has to be done.

We'll also be providing faster treatment at emergency departments. Ninety per cent of patients who need admission – in other words, an overnight bed for one or more nights – will be in and out of emergency departments within a total of eight hours to get the treatment they need upstairs or elsewhere in that hospital, and 90 per cent of less serious patients, those that they refer to as discharged patients, will be able to go home within the four-hour benchmark.

We're also freeing up more hospital beds by reducing the number of people in hospitals that are waiting for continuing care placement. We'll be reducing that number by 68 per cent. In fact, from September until just a few weeks ago the number of people in hospitals that are waiting for a continuing care space in the community has come down from roughly about 760 people to roughly about 550 people. So it's a tremendous improvement.

Finally, we're going to be increasing rates of immunization of children by about 32 per cent.

Those are just some of the highlights, Mr. Chair. There are a number of other things that we are doing to improve access and to reduce wait times.

Let me move on to another area here. He talked about and questioned us about having a healthier population. Mr. Chair, a healthier population involves many things, and that's one reason why I hosted the first-ever Alberta wellness forum just last December. For three days we brought together people from across the province with expertise in health care, in education, in food manufacturing, in food processing, in counselling, and so on, all focused around improving people's habits and in other cases stopping bad habits and in general helping them toward a healthier lifestyle.

In the budget that's before us today, let me just draw your attention to one specific area called community programs and healthy living. Here, if you look at this budget, it will be about $178 million. One hundred and seventy-eight million dollars. That's an increase of about 29 per cent from the past year. That will help provide more immunization support, community agency grants, and it will help further our commitment to the SafeCom initiative, which, among many other things, deals with mental health and addictions problems, helping people, such as the $19 million we pledged over three years to help put more counsellors into our schools, to help put more individuals into active roles to help advise young people in particular.

There are a number of other issues pertaining to a healthier community. That would include our commitment to community-based services that are in relation to things like children's health, diabetes, identification of chemical toxins in blood, and chemical analysis of air and water. Funding, I should point out, is being provided as well for sexually transmitted infections, STI, and for blood-borne pathogen strategies and injury control strategy implementations. In fact, for that area of community-based health service the $15 million represents a $37.8 million increase. With reference to the safe communities that I mentioned, that's a $13 million commitment, or a 43 per cent increase.

I'd point out to the hon. Leader of the Opposition that there are a number of things happening on the wellness front. I don't have time to go through the entire list, but that gives him a snapshot, I hope, to give him some idea.

Now, that translates into people living longer in our province. We know that there are some interesting statistics in that respect. Let me give you a couple just so that people will get some facts behind all of this without any of the rhetoric that the opposition frequently spews.

In 2007, Mr. Chair, the average life expectancy for a male in Alberta was 78.2 years. As of last year, that's gone up by over one full year. It may not sound like a lot, but to that person who is able to live one more full year, it means a lot. It means that the average male as of 2010 in our province is living to 79.3 years. A similar statistic is applicable for females. The average lifespan for a female in Alberta in 2007 was 82.9 years, and today it's almost 84 years. So tremendous improvement. When you combine those figures, you'll see that Albertans are living happier, they're living healthier, and they're living longer.

I'd like to say that a large part of that, of course, is their own habits and lifestyles, but a large part of that is also what we're doing in the health system to promote more on the wellness agenda. I want to thank him for recognizing the fact that I was involved in 2000-2001 in that respect. There's also a lot happening with electronic health records and so on, hon. member, which I was also championing at the time, but let me move on.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition was asking: what kind of leadership are we providing? I can tell you, Mr. Chair, as the Department of Health and Wellness, as the strategic arm of the government, if you will, we're responsible for policy, for strategic direction, for global budgets, for the physicians' compensation, and a number of other things. Integral to that is the leadership that we provide for the entire government with respect to health and wellness, and that trickles down to our delivery arm, which is Alberta Health Services. They are the delivery arm. So we have a strategic arm, a policy arm – that looks after legislation, regulation, and so on – and we have a delivery arm, that then puts it all into effect.

The key thing here with respect to leadership is that we do this together. None of us operates in isolation, so when I talk about the Department of Health and Wellness, when I talk about Alberta Health Services, I'm also talking about relationships that we have with nurses and doctors and numerous other health care providers. We work in that circle of collegiality to move forward. That's, in fact, how we developed the five-year health action plan, working together with the community and with the health care providers to ensure that we got it as right as it could be made.

The next question he asked was: what kind of measurement are you doing? Well, Mr. Chair, as part of our five-year health action plan we also have this suite, which I've held up before, and I'm going to hold it up again, this suite of 50 performance measures. These 50 performance measures will show you on a year-by-year basis what we're doing with respect to issues like wait times for cardiac surgery, wait times for hip replacements, wait times for knee replacements, wait times for cataract surgeries, and a host of other things. That measurement is right there in print. Equally important, it will be reported on very publicly every quarter by Alberta Health Services.

That will also address some of the accountability questions, I hope, that the hon. member was driving at.

The Leader of the Opposition also asked a question about: how are you listening? Well, Mr. Chair, we're listening very carefully because we do a lot of consultation, a huge amount. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, for example, was part of the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health. About two years ago I think it started. The MACH report came out a year ago. That was a huge consultation process. There will be another one of a similar nature as we go forward with the health advocate office and some of the other exciting things planned and put into legislation through the Alberta Health Act. So we are listening a lot.

We also receive a lot of feedback through the meetings that we go to. We also receive a lot of help from the listening that 12 advisory councils, that are under the umbrella of Alberta Health Services, do on a regular basis in their communities. In fact, today and tomorrow, I believe, the Health Services Board is meeting in Grande Prairie, and they'll be doing a lot of listening there because they have a public part of their meetings as well, where the public is invited to come and listen and participate however is appropriate.

I think, hon. member, there are a lot of things that we're doing to show and prove that we're listening. I'll just end by saying that I myself have had well over a thousand and some meetings where I listened, mostly listened. When I was asked to comment, obviously, I also commented. The majority of those meetings were involving doctors, nurses, graduating nurses, graduating doctors, and a number of other people who are providing health services. But we're also listening to the community because we're doing all of this for, with, and by the community. That's an important part of our listening.

The member also mentioned something about relationships, and I believe he used the word "corroded." I don't think the relationships are corroded. Do they need some strengthening? Yes. In fact, that was the strong subject of the issues raised on Friday of last week by the president of the Alberta Medical Association, who came in for a meeting with the Premier and myself. We talked a lot about relationship building. In fact, we've committed to regular meetings now between myself as minister and the president of the AMA to help strengthen that relationship. If there were some rocky moments over the past several years, I'd like to think that they are being improved upon. The central part of that will be evidenced as we work together on this task force concept that is part of the agreement in principle.

I think the agreement in principle is a good one, and I sincerely hope that the doctors who are members of the Alberta Medical Association will look at it through that spirit of an opportunity to forge a new relationship going forward, an opportunity to protect the programs that are so valuable to them, an opportunity to protect the benefits but in the end to come out with a deal that recognizes the financial climate that we've been in. The financial climate we've been in, Mr. Chair, has been very difficult, obviously, and a lot of careful compromises had to be made by a lot of ministries.

The hon. member mentioned something about patient care and safety and having a respectful climate that must be cultivated. I think this speaks to the issue of the AMA discussion that we had last Friday. What I can tell you, hon. member, is that that meeting, that went for about two and a half hours, did result in some very positive outcomes. There will be more news on that very shortly. In fact, they'll be reporting on it tomorrow when the AMA meets. I think they're meeting here in Edmonton, but I'm not sure. So you'll see some action in that regard.

He asked: what is our investment in wellness? I've already alluded to the forum, and I think I covered a lot of those points earlier, so I won't repeat them. I do want to thank the hon. Leader of the Opposition for having cited some good improvements that have been made with respect to cancer care, addictions, mental health, and cataract wait lists. I thank him for that because I know as a doctor he understands and he gets it. He knows how hard we've worked in this area of cancer care.

Let me start there. I think everybody would know that we're also now putting some additional touches, before it's released, to the provincial cancer strategy. This is a very important aspect for us. We've added in our capital plan a commitment to two more vaults in Calgary, a new bone marrow transplant unit, and an additional radiation vault here in Edmonton as well. I think I've already covered the one coming in Grande Prairie as part of the new hospital and the one coming in Red Deer and the one that has already been opened in Lethbridge, so there's a lot going on there.

I think one of the challenges, hon. member, is still with respect to recruitment of oncologists. I think I've said this before. Across Canada in terms of gastrointestinal cancer doctors, the oncologists in that area, there are only 15 who graduate in Canada in a given year, and they are competed for not only by provinces in Canada but internationally because of their expertise. So it's very difficult to recruit some of these areas in cancer care, but I think we've done quite well. We recruited one or two last fall, and we're on the recruitment trail for more.

Similarly with addictions and mental health issues. Mr. Chair, I think the committee here would know that we spend between $500 million and $600 million per year in this very vital and important area, and we're going to continue as aggressively as we can to ensure that those dollars are spent in the most effective way because we recognize that this revolving door of mental health has to come to a better conclusion. We can't have people coming home from a treatment, going back on the street, hurting themselves or someone else or not knowing what they're doing, going into the police system, going into the correctional system, possibly going into the hospital, getting some treatment, going back home, and then going back through that whole revolving-door syndrome again. That has to stop, and we're very committed to doing something about that; hence, the additional monies that I talked about in that area.

The hon. member asked: what about primary health care? I agree with him that primary health care is absolutely critically important. I agree with it so much that we've put an increased emphasis on increasing primary care initiatives in this province, and that is one of the central planks of the new relationship building that is going on between my ministry and the Alberta Medical Association.

In fact, Mr. Chair, I'll reiterate that having a primary care task force is an integral component of the agreement in principle between Alberta Health Services, Alberta Health and Wellness, and the AMA. So there will be a lot more coming in this respect very, very soon. That task force, in fact, is already starting to be created as we speak. That will help enormously with respect to primary health care.

I can also tell you that the primary care networks have been quite a large success for us provincially. This is a new concept, just a few years old, but we've got about 38 or 39 of these PCNs already. Just for the benefit of some people who may not yet be familiar with them, PCNs are really team-based units within the delivery of health care where people come in initially as patients, they see a doctor, and then that doctor gives them a treatment or a diagnosis or a referral to another specialist-type person – that doesn't necessarily mean a specialist doctor; what it means is somebody who is a dietitian or a nutritionist or an occupational therapist or a mental health counsellor or someone who can help them on a weekly or monthly basis with whatever their problem is – and then come back to the doctor later on. It takes a lot of pressure off the doctor and puts some very skilled people to work to help that patient with that particular problem.

The hon. member mentioned something to do with H1N1. I think, hon. member, I'll follow that one up in writing, if you don't mind, because there's quite a bit to it, and I wasn't central to it at the time; it was before my appointment.

I will comment on the second part he mentioned, and that was with respect to syphilis rates. Syphilis rates in this province, Mr. Chairman, are at a very abysmal rate today. Now, I say that because we're going to be launching a campaign of even stronger targeting very, very soon to make sure people are more aware of the dangers of sexually transmitted infections and/or blood-borne pathogens, which I talked about a little bit earlier in my opening comments. Why? Because we do a lot here to track it, to report it, and so on. But if we don't get it fixed and attended to early enough, then it leads to things like congenital syphilis.

I'm not proud of the fact that we have a problem in that area, and I've had several meetings with our chief medical officer of health. I'll comment more later.

The Chair: Now we are on the last 20 minutes. Hon. Leader of the Opposition, you can have a dialogue, give the minister some answer time.

Dr. Swann: A little more back and forth, sure. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

One of the contentious issues in the way decisions are made in this province is really developing new institutions, new space, new beds, and not having the staff to accommodate them; for example, the Peter Lougheed opening 40 new beds and closing another 40 beds. There's a strong sense of cynicism across the health professional community where they see announcements being made and trumpeted and new things opening up and new staff going in and then others being closed with no net change in the amount of service they're able to provide. So there's a strong sense that it's a shell game, that there is kind of a crisis mentality to the way we're managing the system.

Again, the urgent always trumps the long-term important prevention and primary care side. The cancer surgery, the major orthopedic surgery, the major interventions, transplants, and cardiovascular work continue apace, and we have seen a progressive erosion of primary care and the commitment there.

How do you address the question of the shell game of opening beds without staff? Maybe focus specifically on the issues of the South Calgary campus and the Edmonton clinic and how you have in some way developed these centres with no apparent budget and, certainly, with a very great challenge in terms of getting the staff in place.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll get the information on the south Calgary health campus to the hon. member in just a few moments. I've got it in my notes here. I just can't spot it.

In the meantime let me go on to the first few questions that he asked. It's not a question of opening facilities without staff; it's a question of not budgeting those dollars until the year in which the dollars are actually needed. For example, I'll just refer to one part of the south Calgary health campus here. In the budget we're talking about today, there is $50 million or thereabouts budgeted for virtual off-site training of staff that will eventually come into the south Calgary health campus when we start to phase it in for opening next year. We will in fact have as part of that the ability to do annual budgeting thereafter once the people move in. But within the Health Services budget of $545 million that we're talking about today, there is approximately $50 million for this virtual off-site training that will be utilized by the folks at Alberta Health Services.

When we open new facilities, we clearly already know approximately how much will be needed for the staffing, but the actual year that it opens is when the real rubber hits the real road in terms of the actual dollars. In round numbers you could use a rule of thumb. About a third of whatever it cost to build a facility will be required for ongoing annual operating costs.

Now, with regard to the Peter Lougheed Centre. I was there, and I actually asked a similar question to what the hon. member asked here just now. I asked that question about a year ago because there was one wing that they were opening on the east side, as I recall, of the Peter Lougheed Centre. It was going to be 140 brand new beds, and I got very excited by that. In fact, so did the local MLAs, and you might have been there yourself, Mr. Chair. I know the Member for Calgary-East was certainly helping to promote that cause, and he was there. I got very excited by that until I learned that they were closing 140 beds in the existing wing. So I said, "Well, at least can you keep the ones that you're closing warm in case we need them?" So they have done that. They've kept an eye on those. I don't know what the current status is, but maybe we can provide a more recent update for you.

The point you mentioned about cancer and major ortho procedures trumping – I think he used that word – other procedures. I know that sometimes it looks like that's what's happening because those issues get reported on more frequently. They're really uppermost and foremost, first of mind, in people's thoughts, I think. Major ortho and cancer services are just so critical for us, but that doesn't mean that the other less serious services, if I could put it that way – in some cases, at least, less serious – are being neglected, because they certainly aren't.

There's a litany of increases in our pie charts that would tell you, in fact, what we're doing to help improve our services in areas of – well, I talked about specialized drug costs and so on, but there are a number of other areas in acute care and in long-term care and in continuing care and mental health care, transplant surgery, cardiac surgery, renal dialysis, and so on that are getting increases as needed, Mr. Chair. They're very difficult to predict, however. It's very difficult to predict exactly how much you're going to need in one area versus another because, of course, we're dealing with human beings here.

I think I'll probably stop there and allow for more questions to come unless there was something I missed that I can come back to later, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you to the minister. Further to the question, if there are funds allocated in the 2011-12 budget for the east Edmonton health centre, will it be fully opened and fully operational in the coming year? If not, why are we continuing to see it partially functioning?

Can the minister also comment on the Sheldon Chumir centre, whether it will be fully opened this year and, most importantly, providing the primary care services that are so needed in the area?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much. With respect to the east Edmonton health centre, Mr. Chairman, we've allocated through Alberta Health Services about $2.6 million for operating costs as of last December to establish this family medicine clinic. I don't know if the hon. member has had a chance to visit it or not. I can tell you that the capital budget for that clinic was about $44 million in terms of construction upgrades, and when it's fully operational, that clinic will see about 7,500 new patients and about 30,000 scheduled annual visits. Last December, when I was last there, I think there were about 17 physicians practising out of there, catching a population of about 60,000 people. There's a new clinic there for five physicians to work out of in their interdisciplinary, integrated fashion. There will be a number of other improvements coming, hon. member.

What's still planned for at this site is urgent care, which is one strategy to ease pressures on the health system in the emergency department. The exact opening date for it is sometime later in 2011. Hopefully, we'll have a more exact date for you very soon. The Health Services folks, when I last talked to them about this, which was I think in December or January, did not yet have a specific date in mind, and I don't know if we have one today. If we have a specific date today for the opening of the east Edmonton health centre, we'll give it to you before the day is out, and if not, we'll respond more fully in writing.

Regarding Sheldon Chumir that information I do not have with me, hon. member, but I will undertake to provide you an answer in written form.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Ministry of Health and Wellness has a continuing care strategy, which was released by the government in 2008. In the document the government stated that they were capping the number of long-term care beds and going to encourage other levels of care. Now that the full extent of the ER crisis has been made public, a large part of the cause for the crisis stemming from a shortage of long-term care beds, I'm wondering if the minister has had a change in position. Does the minister now support more long-term care beds, staffed beds, that are actually needed for most of the patients that are in hospital and cannot be appropriately managed in an assisted living context?

3:50

It's our understanding that there are about 1,900 waiting for this level of care in the province, and it's simply not going to be adequate to continue building assisted living and depend on the very limited home-care services that are still available in this province. I would say that the frustration has reached a very high level among the home-care workers themselves, who find that their staff loads per person have doubled in the last five years, and they're not getting the supports or the opportunities they need to maintain the quality of care and the level of comfort with their relationships with patients that they once had.

I'll allow you to respond to that if you wish.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much. You know, hon. member, with respect to the general discussion about long-term care beds, I don't recall there ever being a cap, which I think is the term you used. What I do recall is there being a commitment to never having fewer than 14,000 and something. I think that would be a more accurate way of portraying it. However, the issue with respect to numbers of long-term care beds is that we have over 14,600 as of the end of last year. I believe that number went up by approximately 100 by the end of this year that is just outgoing and will stay right around that neighbourhood. It just depends on how many people require the service.

It's really important, Mr. Chair, to understand that as these new continuing care spaces are being built in the community – and by that I mean primarily designated assisted living facilities, or supported living facilities in other words – they have the capability, going forward, to be converted to an upgraded level of care. This is part of what we've tried to explain on several occasions with respect to aging in place. Aging in place would mean that you don't have to necessarily move from your space to receive an upgraded level of service. Typically we refer to level 4 and level 5, especially level 5, as a long-term care type of residence. In the DALs, the SL living units, levels 1 and 2 require very little care, if any, and then periodic care, perhaps, at the 3 level. Then as you get up toward 4 and 5, they need more and more.

In the old system, Mr. Chair, each time your level of care changed, you had to be relocated to a different institution or a different facility or a different care lodge or nursing home or whatever. What we're saying is what Albertans have been telling us, and that is: "Why move families? Why separate couples from their loved ones, their families, their communities by forcing them to move all the time? Can't we have these new facilities, going forward, being more easily adaptable to increasing the level of service so that people can stay comfortably in their settings?" That's what we're trying more to do. That I can summarize by saying that a lot of the DAL and SL facilities may have some of these long-term care beds already provided for, but all of them are looking at strategies similar to what I've just enunciated.

The last comment here is on home care. You know, I'm really proud of the fact that we're able to provide services in the out-going budget for about 107,000 to 110,000 home-care recipients, and the fact that we are also going to be increasing it gives me increased pride because in the '11-12 budget that's before us, we'll be increasing the number of home-care services to be able to accommodate about 113,000-plus – 113,000-plus – home-care recipients. All of them would be receiving this in their home, but a lot of them are in apartments, in condos, some in government-owned facilities, and so on. So there's an increase there, and in the last budget this was the single largest line item increase for us. It was about 7 per cent. We're providing several millions of dollars in that area, and we'll continue to try the best we can to keep up with the increasing demands.

I'll end by just saying that the majority of the people in Alberta today require some form of supportive living, not necessarily long-term care. Yes, they'll need that as well, but the majority by far are asking for the SL and DAL type of facilities. I don't want to downplay the importance of long-term care, Mr. Chair, but I just wanted to get a few of those facts out.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you for that, Mr. Chair. Well, I've heard from home-care services that they're dealing with people up to the level of intensive care in their own homes at the present time, some people on respirators in their own homes. Because they have a wonderful, supportive family, they're willing to spend their own money on private services.

We have a pretty desperate situation out there for many individuals who in ordinary circumstances would be in long-term care, but because there is no space and they would not want their loved one in hospital, they are managing by the skin of their teeth in their homes under great duress, with great suffering in the family, more breakdowns in the family members. We're ending up, again, not spending where we could see long-term savings, which is in home care, but ending up it costing us in the long term.

Will the minister tell the committee how many of the thousand continuing care spaces, which was the goal for the 2011 fiscal plan, will be long-term care beds and publicly delivered? Will the minister release a full list showing the level of care of these beds and how they're being delivered and where they're located in the province? Can we know the total number of staff that will be hired under the current budgetary plan?

The other big concern I've heard increasingly is that many of these privately contracted care aides are poorly qualified and do not give the level of care that most people need and expect, that they have been in some cases brought in off the street and given a six-week training program and really don't meet standards and don't therefore provide the level of care that seniors need in this very critical time of their lives. We are substituting increasingly in the private services the cheapest labour, not the most appropriate labour, to take care of those who created this province and deserve better care and dignity.

Before going on to another section, I'll ask the minister to respond to those concerns.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I don't have that level of detail just at my fingertips in terms of the total number of staff and the locations province-wide. I'll undertake to find out some information about that. But if there are people that you know or people who are listening who are in these dire circumstances, they certainly should come forward with them. At the end of the day, of course, it is their choice, but what I'm hearing the hon. member saying is that perhaps some people feel they have no choice. If that's the case, they should get in touch with the Health Services folks and ensure that they're being addressed or that they're on an appropriate wait-list if that's what the case might be, and we'll see what we can do from our end as well.

With respect to privately contracted caregivers I've visited a number of these facilities myself, Mr. Chair. In fact, I've been at a number of the openings. St. Albert, Edmonton, Red Deer, and a few other locations just recently are a few that come to mind. I would suggest that the care I see being provided in these locations has been very good, if not excellent. That doesn't mean that there might not be some problems on occasion that arise, but I don't think it would be fair to characterize all of these facilities as giving inadequate services all of the time. Yes, there might be some pressures, and at times it may not be at peak output in terms of outstanding performance, perhaps, but for the majority of the time I'm sure that by far the services provided are adequate and even better.

I don't know what some of them are paying their employees because they might be privately held facilities. Some of them might be not-for-profits – the Good Sams, the Bethany Cares, and so on – so there's quite a mixture of different alternatives out there. But I can assure you that whether they're privately owned or not-for-profit organizations own them, they all have to adhere to a certain level of standards. If they don't have those standards, if they don't have a capable operator, a capable partner, perhaps, then they don't get the contract. It's as simple as that. So our standards are very high. The Health Services folks ensure that the credentials that these people present with are verified and that there's competency amongst the staff, amongst the administrators and that there's an appropriate number of staff in place to help out.

The Chair: The first hour for the Official Opposition has terminated. The next 20 minutes will be reserved for the Wildrose, the third party.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you have 20 minutes back and forth or 10 minutes.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate your giving us the opportunity to debate the budget. I'd like to actually, if I can, take the first 10 minutes to ask questions, and then the minister can answer some of the questions and possibly provide us with written answers if he can.

I want to start where the hon. opposition member left off in regard to long-term care. One of the jobs that I have as a member of the opposition is to be the health critic and, actually, the seniors critic. So I've spent a lot of my time travelling this wonderful province and talking to hundreds and hundreds of people in regard to what's happening to our seniors in, as the minister refers to, the designated assisted living or the continuing care model. Last reported by Alberta Health Services there were about 1,109 people waiting at home for continuing care and about 800 or so in the hospitals. I noticed the minister mentioned that there are only 550 now, the figure that he gave to the opposition, and that Alberta Health Services has promised opening 5,300 new continuing care beds by 2015 and 13 of them, as the minister indicated, by March 31, 2011.

Again, you know, I have to ask the government why it stopped replacing and funding new long-term care beds. Now, the minister has indicated that in 2011 they opened approximately 100 long-term care beds. I go to their report that was brought out on December 15, 2008, on the new continuing care strategy, and I go back to the background of the press release, and they talk about building infrastructure that meets the aging in the right place vision and replacing 7,000 long-term care beds by 2015. I'd like to know where they are on that.

I'd also like to ask him about, under that same press release, improving the investment model for the operation and development of new long-term care facilities. I'd like to ask him about that. I'd like to ask him about that as someone who has a mother that's gone from an independent living situation to an assisted living facility and is watching what's happening in the assisted living facilities with many of the patients as they carry on getting dementia and Alzheimer's, and there's nowhere for them to go, absolutely nowhere to go. So you've got a facility that, as the minister alluded to, is this continuing care model, where he's got the assisted living facilities that will be able to move these people from point A to point B. Minister, it's just not happening.

I'm sorry, but I've talked to hundreds of families. You know, the member from the loyal opposition talked about the calls he's receiving – I'm receiving the same calls – that if we knew of these cases, to certainly have those families call you. It's a vicious circle, Minister. By the end of their time they're at their wit's end. Yes, we get some action when we start talking to Alberta Health Services. Still, you look at our aging population, and your numbers just don't jibe with the huge aging population. You certainly bragged about the fact that we've got women living to 84 and men living to 79. With that comes health problems. It's just a terrible, terrible situation.

I'd like to talk to you about the Alberta Health Act, that you touted was the government's next big step in health care. I'd like to ask you, first of all: why has this legislation not been proclaimed? When can Albertans expect a health charter and a patient advocate? You go to your budget, and you've got $700,000 that's allocated for the health advocate's office budget this year. I'd like to ask you where we are on that. If you've got it budgeted for your year, what is the status of the office, the applicants that you're receiving for the advocate's office, and what is that money going to be spent on?

I'd like to talk to you for a minute about your activity-based funding. Is it a successful way of making sure funding follows patients so that they can get the timely care that they need? I know that you've had this activity-based funding that's been tried in nursing homes in Alberta. This is April 1, 2010. Maybe you can tell us, just about a year later, what progress has been made on the activity-based funding.

I want to talk to you for a minute in regard to what's happening on facilities. I'm just going to use one as an example, and that's the McCaig Tower. When you were talking to the member of the loyal opposition, he had questioned you, actually, in regard to the budgeting. He talked to you about the south Calgary facility, and you alluded in your answers that the budgeting dollars are there once it's opened. So I would like to ask you about the McCaig

Tower now that it's opened, even though I think you've only got 2 of 23 operating rooms staffed. What is the actual budget now that you've got the McCaig Tower open? How many operating rooms do you have going? The last time we asked you that, you said two. You also said that it will take two years to fully open the McCaig Tower. I'd like to get the status of that, and I'd like to find out exactly where you are on that staffing, if I may, please.

On February 17, 2010, you had promised a cost-benefit analysis of hip and knee surgeries in this province. I'd like to ask you about the status of that analysis. It's a year and a couple of months later. When will you table that in the Legislature and make sure that it has become public?

The Premier had promised a review of the health bonuses on July 23 of last year. He said at that time that it's a time when we have to look at a different model to reimburse CEOs, especially those of public authorities, and he also said that a different model is necessary. I'd like to ask you what the status of that review is and what changes you have made in that particular structure.

I'd like to talk to you for a moment in regard to family doctors. Currently we have over a million Albertans that don't have a family doctor. I certainly appreciate the clinics that we have open and how they're starting to move people through the system with the primary care networks, but where are you on the status of bringing more family doctors into this province?

There was a huge threat a couple of months ago in your negotiations in regard to the primary care networks and the $35,000 that you were going to take away from doctors that are within the system. I know there's been some finalization on that. When you're trying to establish – and I think you've got probably 42 primary care networks at this time – what your goal is for that, how you're going to develop the primary care networks, obviously, you have to provide more family physicians. They have to enter into the system and have more primary care networks available.

You've also in this House on many occasions talked about your five-year funding plan and that it's the first of its kind in this country. The first three years of the five-year funding plan is a 6 per cent increase, and the last two years are 4.5. While I applaud what you're trying to do, I guess my concern is that from 2007 to 2010 in your budgets the health budget went up 7.5 as an average increase. Now you're talking about your first three years at 6 per cent, which is actually a 1 and a half per cent decrease. In 2009-2010 you had a 16 per cent increase. I'd like to ask you why you think that is important.

I'm going to start talking to you just for a minute on your priorities, if I can. On 1.1 your number one priority is to ensure the effective governance and accountability of the health system by clarifying the roles, the relationship, and the responsibilities of the ministry and Alberta Health Services. You talked for a minute about: this arm does policy, and this arm does something else. I'd like to ask you: what exactly have you done to achieve your number one goal?

The Chair: Hon. member, your 10 minutes is up.

Hon. minister, you have 10 minutes.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you, hon. member, for the questions. With respect to the first issue, which was to do with long-term care, kind of picking up from where the previous questioner had left off, I can tell you that our commitment is certainly there. The numbers that I gave out are the most recently available numbers. I think you cited something going back to December, so we might have an adjustment in the numbers that have been given out since then. Nonetheless, the numbers that I have show that we have as of right now over 14,500 and some beds. In fact, it's more like 14,600. But there's an ebb and a flow there, obviously, so those numbers can fluctuate by a couple hundred in any given year.

Nonetheless, we are helping to fund all of those spaces. It's not that we stopped funding. I think you asked the question, "Why did the government of Alberta stop funding these spaces?" or something to that effect. Well, we've never stopped funding them, hon. member. Perhaps there was a little different question that you might have had in mind there, but that's what I think I heard you say.

The reference that you made to your mother's particular case. I've dealt with several of these types of cases. I wish your mother well, by the way. Dealing with dementia is not an easy thing. We've read a lot about the current difficulties of our former Premier, in fact, in that regard, with whom I spoke before Christmas, and I'm sure you did as well, or I hope you did.

Nonetheless, when it comes to the spaces that we talked about, what has to be remembered here is that the new-construction folks that are building these places and the people funding them are trying their best to ensure that when the time comes, there is some flexibility in the design that would allow for them to be converted to the next level. That doesn't necessarily mean that they would go from a level 2 facility to a level 5 facility, for example, overnight. Nor does it mean that the entire facility would change that way.

What it does mean is that they're trying to design some spaces within those units – some – and it'll be different from facility to facility. Some may not have any, and some may have a certain per cent set aside so that the increased level of care can be provided right there without them having to move. That's what we're trying to do, and that's how we're encouraging builders to build their facilities. But at the end of the day, of course, it's up to the private facility, if it's privately owned, to determine their own destiny that way. If we're working with a not-for-profit society, they, too, have a lot of leeway, but we're encouraging them to do what I've tried to explain.

You mentioned something about looking at an aging population. I can assure you, hon. member, that we look at that factor every day. That's why within the 6 per cent annual increase that we talk about, I often explain to individuals that the 6 per cent increase applies only to the Health Services portion of the budget. A 6 per cent increase for Health Services, Alberta Health Services specifically. When we're looking at the aging population, within that 6 per cent we provide a 2.5 per cent increase for an aging population factor and for a growing population, both of which are good. We provide 2 per cent in that 6 per cent for inflation, and we provide 1.5 per cent of an increase for innovation: new procedures, new techniques, new drugs, new equipment, and so on. So that's 2 and a half, 2, and 1.5 per cent.

The reason we're doing more and more in the area of addressing aging population concerns is because we have something in the order of 3,000 or so Albertans that will be turning 65 every month now that the first baby boomer generation is about to hit that threshold. I believe it's about 3,000 per month. In any case, what that means, of course, is that in years to come more and more of the baby boomers and others who will follow will need new and expanded facilities. That's one reason why we've committed to adding 1,000 more continuing care spaces per year, at least 1,000 more per year.

So you can do the math going forward. You have about 3,000 more being added to the rolls. That's about 36,000 per year. They're not going to all be looking for long-term care or supportive living care or designated assisted living care. That's not the point. The point is to plan now to address some of the backlog but at the same time try and get ahead of the large number of people that will require this type of housing in the future.

Your comments about the Alberta Health Act. We have not yet proclaimed this, but we will be. What's important to note though in that regard is that in this budget there is approximately $700,000 budgeted for the health advocate's office, and that will come to fruition sometime during this year. There will be some additional work done in that respect. In fact, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford will be helping in that regard, taking the lead on it, as it were, to ensure that it is done fastidiously. He did an enormous amount of work in 2009 and early 2010 in this respect, and he has a very good handle on it.

Your comment about the McCaig Tower. I'll have to read, hon. member, just to make sure that I understood most of it there. I couldn't write fast enough. But for the purposes of today this is about a $550 million state-of-the-art facility, which I think most people in Calgary would know. It was decided even from the get-go that it would be built in phases, and that's beginning with a new 31-bed orthopaedic surgical unit, two new operating rooms that are equipped with absolutely state-of-the-art technology – I was there, and I've seen it – four new day surgery beds, four new postanaesthesia recovery beds, one new x-ray room, and a new expanded central sterile reprocessing unit for surgical equipment.

In its first year the facility will create about a 10 per cent increase in total surgical capacity at that bigger Foothills medical centre site, which will add to the already 17,000 surgeries being performed at the Foothills medical centre itself. When it's fully operational, the eight-storey McCaig Tower will be home to about 23 operating rooms, 93 acute-care beds, and a 36-bed intensive care unit, a new lab and diagnostic imaging area – in fact, there could be a couple of areas there – as well as a musculoskeletal clinic, and other outpatient services. It will also be equipped with the latest medical technology and specialized infection prevention and control features.

There's a considerable amount of good news in that respect, and I was so pleased to be there with Ann McCaig and numerous other family members for that opening and ribbon cutting not long ago.

The issue of the cost-benefit analysis. I will find out the status of that. I asked for it, as you know. I haven't seen it yet, but I'm sure someone is working on it.

4:20

You made a point about Albertans needing more access to doctors. On an encouraging note, hon. member, I would tell you that we have more doctors coming to our province quite regularly now. Our physician recruitment is up. I believe it went up by about 559 doctors between 2007 and 2009, to well over 7,000. Similar stats are reported, obviously, with respect to registered nurses. We had about 1,944 more registered nurses added into the system between '07-09, and we're just calculating the 2010 numbers now. The same thing with regard to LPNs and so on.

The bottom line with respect to physicians themselves is that we have a very active recruitment process that is going on. We have a number of programs, such as our rural remote program, that encourage more doctors to settle in some of the areas of the province that may not be quite as accessible as we would like them to be or they're perhaps in remote areas. We have a number of programs like the physician on-call program that are helping doctors as well as locum programs and business programs to help them with their offices, to help them with upgrading of their equipment. There's just a lot that's going on there.

We compare very favourably to the rest of the country. In fact, our physician workforce has grown faster than any other province.

It's the youngest group, and it's the most highly paid in the country as well.

The Chair: Thank you, Minister. The 20 minutes for the third party, Wildrose, has terminated.

Now I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for the next 20 minutes. Do you want to combine or 10 and 10?

Mr. Mason: I think we can go back and forth, give the minister a chance to show he can give me a short answer. We can go back and forth.

The Chair: Okay. Twenty minutes, then.

Mr. Mason: I want to just address the structure of the budget for Health, first of all, Mr. Chairman and to the minister. The $9.6 billion budget for Alberta Health Services makes up 24 per cent of the total government expenses in the entire budget, yet there are only six lines dealing with AHS in the budget. That's better than last year when there were just two. I don't think that we're anywhere near sufficient in terms of, you know, the legislative function of oversight on government spending. I don't think we're anywhere near getting the level of detail that we need for a massive budget item under our legislative oversight responsibilities when Alberta Health Services is essentially not anything more than a couple of lines in the budget.

I know that the minister is committed to maintaining the two-bureaucracy solution to health care that seems to exist now between the department and AHS, but is there not some way that we could structure the budget so that there would be detailed oversight of the budget of Alberta Health Services as opposed to the present circumstances? I'll start with that.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. It's a good question. I don't know, hon. member, if you heard my opening comments, but I did mention in there that the Alberta Health Services' budget in great detail will be provided a few weeks after we've passed our budget here today, I hope, and the global government budget has been passed in a few weeks. That having been said, you're quite right that there are only a few lines there. That's because we allow Alberta Health Services to develop their own detailed budget right after we give them approval to go ahead and do that, and they have been doing that, hon. member. In fact, it's probably ready now, and they'll be releasing it as soon as we get this budget passed.

Their budget will specifically show the 6 per cent increase that I alluded to. They are the delivery arm, which I mentioned, and they'll be accountable for $9.6 billion. They will spend it on acute care, long-term care, continuing care, on public and community health, on providing mental health services, cancer treatment, home care, transplants, cardiac surgery, and renal dialysis just to mention a few specific areas. So that's a good thing.

I think you talked about restructuring their budget going forward. You're right. We did make one improvement. Last year it was a single line, and this year we're up to six, and maybe next year it'll be more than that. The point is that they're dealing with a whole new scenario with the five-year funding commitment, which was just given to them a year ago, and they're dealing with a huge number of issues, as you know. So we can look for greater accountability, greater transparency, greater reporting, and more of it being done in a very public way, such as reporting on the performance measures, for example – that's one important area – such as what's already going on in respect to emergency department wait times, which is being reported on. The information is available in aggregate, and it's also available on a per hospital basis in our major centres for sure because I saw that last night when I met with some of those doctors here at the Legislature.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that answer, Mr. Minister. I don't propose to get into a debate here. I know that this is the way it is for this budget. You know, we're basically in a situation where $9.6 billion divided among six lines is $1.6 billion a line, and the fact that it's coming forward after the budget is approved is not satisfactory. It should be part of this discussion. I think that the minister should find a way to structure the budgeting process of Alberta Health Services so that their budget is open to scrutiny by this Legislative Assembly. Ten billion dollars is just way too much to leave to a board in my view, and I think that the process fundamentally thwarts the role of the Legislature in overseeing government expenditures.

I want to move on to the continuing care strategy. The minister addressed some of these questions. He talked about aging in place. He talked about designated assisted living beds potentially being converted in the future to long-term care beds. But there is still a tremendous lack of any sort of clarity or certainty about what the government is actually doing with respect to long-term care. That was reinforced for me this morning when some of the officials from Seniors and Community Supports essentially refused to answer a question that I posed relative to the strategy regarding the proportion of long-term care beds to other forms of continuing care beds. But I don't think the committee is finished with that nor is the Auditor General, I hope.

The question really is: where is the evidence that, in fact, these beds will be converted to long-term care? I want to make this point very clearly. I've tried to do it in question period. Long-term care patients are medically assessed as requiring ongoing care, including nursing care. They have their drugs paid for. Aside from the basic housing and food charges their medical care is provided to them because a nursing home or an auxiliary hospital is technically part of the health system, so those costs are covered by medicare. If the minister is saying that they're going to convert these in the future, the question is: how many beds does the government plan to have that are long-term care beds versus other forms of continuing care beds?

I would like the minister to bring forward very specific proposals in terms of the number of long-term care beds and the demand for those beds. The indication that we have – and this is again from government documentation – is that right now there are 777 people who are in acute-care beds waiting for some sort of continuing care beds. Instead of building more acute-care beds, which are very expensive, it would make more sense to build more long-term care beds, which are less expensive, and free up the acute-care beds we now have. This has been something I've been trying to get through to the government for a long time.

The approach the government is taking in the new five-year plan is probably more expensive than it needs to be. If they would just back off this mysterious strategy where they lump everything into continuing care and they don't distinguish between individual types and the needs of specific seniors, we actually could, I think, improve the functioning of the health care system considerably.

Health and Wellness used to include a performance measure for the waiting lists for long-term care. It was discontinued after the 2007-08 annual report showed that 566 were waiting in acute care, which is almost double the target of that year. Now we have a broader measure of continuing care wait-lists, but the problem remains. There will continue to be a large number of people requiring long-term care in this province, a growing number, and the government's plans do not apparently take that into account.

The biggest problem, Mr. Minister, is that the government has, obviously, some sort of strategy relative to the proportion of long-term care beds and other continuing care beds, which it is refusing to disclose. It is refusing to make it public. Not all of the question periods or Public Accounts Committee meetings that I have been to over the last couple of years have convinced them yet to be crystal clear about what their intentions are. We're forced to depend on documents that come to us in brown-paper wrappers to get some sort of glimmer of what the government is really doing.

This morning I tabled in Public Accounts Committee a document from May of 2009 showing an interdepartmental task force that was working on a strategy that explicitly said that they would reduce the proportion of long-term care beds to other continuing care beds by 50 per cent. The government has refused to this point to acknowledge that document or to tell the public what they're actually doing with respect to that. I would give the minister just one more appeal to actually be very specific about what the government's plans are.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you, hon. member, for the questions. You started by just commenting on the AHS budget, and time didn't permit me to complete my answer. I just want to augment the answer I gave you by telling you that in the budget that you see there for Alberta Health Services, let's just take a look at page 195, element 8.1, which shows an estimate for 2011-12 of $3.6 billion, almost $3.7 billion for acute care, for acute-care services.

Now, acute-care services, as we would know, are primarily those that are provided in acute-care facilities, in the hospitals themselves. You can appreciate that with several of these facilities, a few dozen of them, we couldn't provide you with every level of detail for every hospital, similarly as you move down the list to other places where services are delivered. We have 400 facilities across the province. We'll get to a better balance – I agree with you there – but it would be a budget of hundreds if not thousands of pages if we got to too much of a level of detail. We'll try better again next year to get more information out sooner.

Really, please remember that it's Alberta Health Services who does this, and they are going to come out with their comprehensive budget in a few weeks. That will show you exactly how $1 billion in our budget is being transferred to them for facility and home-based continuing care services and what they're spending it on. It would also show you how $912 million is being spent by Alberta Health Services on community and population health services and how $1.6 billion is being spent on diagnostic and therapeutic services and how $2.29 billion is being spent on support services, for a total of $9.6 billion. That will all be there in due course.

The other part about the continuing care discussion: please know that we are working on the continuing care strategy. In fact, we'll have that out by, I hope, the fall. It will provide some additional insights for you and perhaps even some of the clarity that you seek.

You asked in particular: where is the evidence that designated assisted living beds or supportive living beds or whatever will be converted to long-term care? I don't want anybody to misunderstand what I'm trying to say here. It's important to note that what we're doing is encouraging these builders to build facilities that will be easily adaptable to a higher or a different level of service, but it doesn't just happen overnight. That's why there is this long-term plan.

You asked about what our commitment is in that regard, or words to that effect. It's to ensure that we have not less than about 14,500 going forward – I believe that is the number that comes to mind – and that number will increase in some years. It won't go lower than that, but I'm saying that it will increase maybe by a hundred, and it might come down by 50, but it should never go below the 14,500 threshold as these new beds come on stream in particular.

As these new beds come on stream, please remember that what you're doing is that you're then able to move more residents out of acute-care facilities into continuing care, and that frees up some space for more long-term care in those hospitals themselves. We have probably as many as 70 per cent – I'd have to verify that number, but I think it's approximately 70 per cent – of the people in hospitals today that could be in some care setting other than an acute-care hospital, and that's one reason why we're so aggressive about adding more of these other spaces straightaway.

If you wanted to track us a little bit further on that, hon. member, I would refer you to page 6 of 20 pages in the key performance measures, Alberta's health system performance measures, where we talk about priorities for action on that page. Specifically, we talk about continuing care being one of our priorities for action and providing Albertans with options to age in the right place, and it goes on. I won't read it all for you, but I would tell you that here there are some very good targets that we're striving to achieve over the next year and in years 2, 3, 4, 5, including access to continuing care under 1.12, where it states: "Number of people waiting in an acute care/subacute hospital bed for continuing care." As of March 31, 2010, about a year ago, there were 777 people in that category, and by the end of this year we're hoping to have that down to 400 people and then diminishing further to about 250 people only on that wait-list.

Similarly, for the number of people waiting in the community for continuing care, I have indicated what those numbers are. That will be coming down sharply as well. It talks about average length of stay and a few other things. I'd encourage people to have a look at that.

My final comment is that we talked about people going into long-term care. What's important to note here is that people who are going into long-term care are assessed by specialists, and they're assessed on the basis of their need, obviously, not on some arbitrary formula. Some of your question is a little bit difficult to answer, but I'll give it a more careful read when Hansard comes out, and I'll respond accordingly.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have left?

The Chair: You have three minutes.

Mr. Mason: Three minutes. Well, then, I'm going to take the three minutes, and if the minister can respond, otherwise in writing, I'd appreciate it very much.

I want to talk about drug costs for seniors in particular. Now, the government has had a couple of swings at coming up with a new seniors' drug plan, and it's missed both times. I'm curious to know from the minister what the plans are for a third swing at a seniors' drug plan.

I want to ask about generic drugs. I know that the government has stepped in and reduced the amount for generic drugs but not nearly as much as other jurisdictions. Ontario reduced, for example, generic drug prices to 25 per cent of the brand price, and I think there are similar reductions in Quebec, B.C., and expected in Nova Scotia. I'd like to know if the ministry is going to be considering matching the reduction to 25 per cent, that's considered or done in other provinces.

I was very concerned to learn of negotiations going on federally for a European equivalent of the free trade agreement, the Canada-Europe free trade agreement, and further demands by the Europeans that we extend patent protection for brand name drugs, which would certainly drive up costs. I would really like the health department to have some input into the government of Alberta's position relative to the federal government's negotiations.

It's been some time since we were able to show that by bulk buying drugs for the health system, we could save over $100 million and put that into a seniors' drug program that would cap the drug costs for seniors at $25 a month regardless of the number of prescriptions they have. We've provided that to your predecessor. It didn't get very far, but I think it would be a way to provide far better coverage to seniors for drugs without costing the taxpayers a nickel. I think there are savings to be found in the health system. I think you have to be able to tackle the big drug companies if you want to be able to realize those savings.

I'm very curious about emergency medical services and how that's going and why we've seen such dramatic increases in wait times for ambulances since the AHS took over some of those. I don't know if the government has a comprehensive review of the impact so far community by community, but I would be very interested in knowing something about that.

I am also very concerned about the health facilities without staff and whether or not all of the costs are taken into account.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Now we have the next 20 minutes for the Alberta Party. Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, do you want an exchange for 20 minutes?

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Back and forth for 20 minutes if that's okay with the minister, and we'll try and keep the questions short and the answers shorter but full of content.

The Chair: All right. Twenty minutes.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you.

As a starting point, we spend well more per capita than the national average on health care in the province of Alberta, and our results do not yet reflect that. So with that as a sort of overarching theme here, I'd like to start out and talk about cancer care if we could. Goal 4.2 is to develop and implement Alberta's provincial plan for cancer care. Is this a new plan? Is it an improvement on the old plan? What areas does this province excel in when providing cancer care? In what areas do we lag behind the national average?

I know, for instance, that there was a report out in late 2010 which certainly highlighted that Canada does very well relative to the rest of the world in terms of cancer care in a few key cancer survival rates: lung, colorectal, breast, and ovarian, I believe. Our numbers are not bad, but the problem is that of the four jurisdictions in Canada compared, our numbers tended to be the lowest in those four very serious, sometimes very deadly cancers. What is the government doing to ensure that those areas in which Alberta is achieving success in cancer treatment are being translated and applied to areas which need improvement?

One very specific number in regard to this is on page 195 of the budget estimates, line 11.2. In 2010-2011 the ministry budgeted

$10 million for cancer corridor projects. None of that money was spent in 2010-2011. This money has been budgeted again, $10 million for 2011-2012. Do you actually intend to spend the money this year, and why didn't you spend it last year?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's true that we spend the most per capita on health care. I think the Canadian average is something like $3,600 per capita, and Alberta is at $4,712 per capita, and that's adjusted for all of the variable factors. I share some of the frustration that was eloquently put by the member. I don't know, and I've asked that question myself. How is it that we spend the most per capita, but we're not getting the best results in all the areas? I would expect us to have not necessarily the best by a long shot but something that is better than what we're seeing right now. That's why it's so important every now and then to challenge the system and to put out performance measures that are a bit higher than your fingernails can reach, so that we would have some good statistics, some good results coming that better reflect the size of investment. We're working on that very aggressively, and that's why the public reporting is so critical.

With respect to the cancer care plan, yes, there is a very new element to this. It's called the provincial cancer care strategy, which I talked about in my opening comments. We are working very, very fastidiously on that. We've had a number of meetings with cancer doctors, our oncologists, as it were, and we know that we're making some good headway. For example, when I announced the $208 million funding project for the Tom Baker cancer centre in Calgary, that was great news. That will give them a new bone marrow transplant unit, as I recall, two new radiation vaults, and number of other expanded services there.

Similarly, we're adding $67 million in Edmonton for the Cross Cancer Institute. I think, actually, it's $208 million for the two cities combined – sorry – and it's something like $119 million or thereabouts for Calgary and $67 million for Edmonton. Sorry; I've just got the math mixed up a little bit. I think it's $208 million total, just to correct myself.

In Calgary what that will mean, hon. member, is 64 additional in-patient beds for cancer care and much more space for cancer services in general. In Edmonton, in addition to what I've said, it will mean an additional PET/CT scanner, the positron, and the new vault I mentioned plus a lot of additional space. Let's not lose sight of the cancer services that are being expanded in Grande Prairie, with the addition of a radiation therapy corridor there and in Red Deer. So there's quite a bit that's going on in that respect.

I'm sorry; I missed your last question. Just refresh my memory.

Mr. Taylor: Yeah. It was actually a budget estimate question, expenses by program, page 195, line 11.2, the $10 million for cancer corridor projects. You budgeted that in fiscal '10-11. You didn't spend it. You budgeted it again. I want to know why you didn't spend it last year and whether you're actually going to spend it this year. Go into a bit of detail if you could, please.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, hon. member. I was searching for other information, so I missed that question the first time around. The building, basically, wasn't ready just yet for that to be spent. The decrease that you see there is due to moving the cancer corridor equipment funding for the Red Deer site from 2010-11 to 2011-12 to reflect the change in the progress of the project.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much for that.

You mentioned a while ago that you have a suite of something in the neighbourhood of 50 performance measures that you're going to use over the course of the next five years to grade the system on how it's going. I'm going to congratulate you on that because, obviously, you're dealing with the biggest ministry by expense in the entire provincial budget by a long shot. You're dealing with a very complex suite of issues and services under the health care budget, and there's an awful lot to keep track of and an awful lot of places in which to keep track of it. So it's good that you have that.

But I want to do Health Care for Dummies here for a second if I can. We both know that you can get into a situation where you have so many things to do on your to-do list that you look at the list and you're kind of overwhelmed by it, and you can't tell what the priorities are anymore. I'm not criticizing you or suggesting that you can't tell what the priorities are right now, but what I'm trying to get at in this sort of Health Care for Dummies approach is that of that suite of 50 performance measures, one year out, three years out, five years out, as the plan progresses, what are the top three performance measures? What are the top three things you and your staff at Alberta Health and Wellness are going to look at to be able to say, "We're on the right track" or "The five-year plan needs modest, serious adjustment"?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'll come to the top-three question in just a moment. On the suite of 50 performance measures – and I want to thank you for your kind words – I'll tell you that they are aggressive. I've never been a person who strives for, you know, 50 per cent plus one. I shoot for much higher than that. So when these performance measures were being designed, they were input into by, obviously, doctors, by the Alberta Medical Association folks, by the College of Physicians & Surgeons, by the Health Quality Council of Alberta, by nurses and others in the field to make sure that we were not only setting realistic performance measures and targets but also challenging ones, not unachievable but challenging, to push the system, to drive it. So thank you for your words. There is a lot to keep track of just in these performance measures alone.

I'm quite optimistic with the stable funding that's been provided. I'm quite optimistic with the new CEO and president who is there now, Dr. Chris Eagle, and the leadership he's shown in this respect. There were commitments by others previously, obviously, but I think we're working even more aggressively now than ever before toward meeting these targets. When you look at them, as you said, one year, two years, three years, four years out, there are a number of opportunities there for improving our performance but also for re-evaluating. Are these the right performance measures? We've never had this kind of a comprehensive listing before. It is unique, but the fact that we have a five-year commitment means they are very deliverable, and we're not going to be ashamed if we miss a target or we didn't make it by a certain specified date, which is the case in a couple of cases that I'm sure you've read about. We're showing improvements, and we're going in the right direction.

Your point about the top three. Hon. member, that's a very, very difficult question to try and answer, but I would say that among the top many would certainly be cancer care. That is an extremely important area.

I'd say emergency room wait times in the eight-hour category, which is the admitted patients. I should tell you, hon. member, that we're making incredible progress there with respect to EIPs. These are emergency in-patients. That means people who have come into emergency with a very serious difficulty caused by who knows what. Nonetheless, they're there. They're in emergency, and they have to be hospitalized or kept in the emergency area for at least one night, maybe more. They're called admitted patients at that point, but they might still be in emergency. One of the things that the doctors mentioned to me last October and again last night when I met with them is to put more emphasis even than we are already. We've seen reductions of about 50 to 60 per cent in the number of EIPs that are being reduced. In other words, we're moving people out of the emergency department to elsewhere in the hospital, and that frees up more space here. That would be a second area that I'd say is very, very important.

Of course, cardiac surgery is another one, and anything to do with major ortho procedures would be a fourth one. I'm not giving these necessarily in any particular order. Just off the top of my head, based on the discussions I've had and what people are telling me on the street, those would be probably four of the top areas. Ambulance is another one. The list just doesn't end, and it's hard to prioritize them, but they all have our attention pretty much on an equal basis right now.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Then just quickly, kind of as a supplemental for that, when you said "cancer care," how are you measuring that? Are you measuring that in terms of survivability rates or what?

Mr. Zwozdesky: There are a number of things. Officially, in the Alberta health system performance measures we talk about access to cancer care. For example, on page 3 of 20, priority for action titled Cancer Services, the overall objective is obviously to reduce the wait time for cancer treatment. Let me just give you one as an example. Element 1.6 would tell you "the maximum time that 9 out of 10 people will wait . . . from referral to the time of their first appointment with a radiation oncologist, by facility." At the Cross Cancer last year we were at 7.7 weeks of wait time, today we're around four weeks of wait time, and by the end of our five-year thing we'll be at two weeks or better. That's just one example, hon. member, of how we're measuring that. We're measuring survival rates, too.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Thank you.

I'm going to try this out. It's highly speculative, and if it's too speculative for you to answer, it's my fault. It would be your problem, but it's my fault. You talk about sustainable funding, predictable funding over the next five years, and that's good. It's far better than the alternative. But, of course, we keep looking at a budget that goes up substantially every year. I wonder if we ever get to the point or whether there's an effort being made over the course of this five-year plan where we can say: we've actually been able to reduce the health care budget or hold the line on the health care budget while our performance measures continue to improve because we've now taken enough of a proactive approach. Obviously, we haven't yet, but we get to that point some years down the road where we've taken enough of a proactive approach that we now no longer have to spend as much per capita on health. Want to take a stab at that?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yeah. It's not quite as wild a question as you might think because I think a little bit along the same lines there, hon. member. I have to tell you that there's no single silver bullet to this question, but if there was one that impacts the area more than perhaps some others, it's on the wellness side. I haven't found the right way to explain this, but if we can keep people out of the system because they are healthier, if we can keep people from needing emergency room services, if we can keep people from needing everything from obesity clinics to addictions treatment and so on and so on – prevention is the key. That's why, to come back to the point about cancer services, early detection is the key. If we can detect it earlier, clearly the oncologists have a chance to deal with it either surgically or through radiation or through chemo or whatever the case might be.

In fact, this was a very major point that was addressed yesterday, when we had the blue-tie breakfast for prostate cancer down at the Macdonald Hotel. As you probably know, we've made a significant commitment to a northern Alberta urology centre, which will also have a prostate cancer clinic here in Edmonton. The doctors that were there supporting this and others as well as some of the people offering testimonials as survivors would tell you that the earlier you can detect these problems, not only the happier you're going to be, but think of all the costs and headaches you're going to save yourself and the system and others because of earlier detection.

The wellness thing is comprised of all the usual common-sense things that we know about. You can't control everything – some of it's hereditary – but you can sure do a lot to enhance your position with better eating habits, more physical activity, proper rest, abstinence from certain bad things, or cessation of bad habits if you have those. Hon. member, if I were to try and give you one snapshot answer, it would be summed up with wellness.

I mean, we're expecting fully that the cost increases will at some point start to trend downward if we get that part of it right. That's why the last two years of the five-year funding plan, for example, are showing a decrease down to 4.5 per cent. You've got three years of 6 per cent, which should build the system and put it on a pretty good keel, and then years 4 and 5 come down to 4.5 per cent, so the trend is in the right direction.

Mr. Taylor: I must be getting close to time.

The Chair: Three minutes.

Mr. Taylor: Three minutes.

I'll try this out on you very quickly because I think you're missing a couple of important aspects on the wellness and health promotion and disease prevention side of the thing. The first major aspect of public health and healthy living has to be found in education. Would you be willing to commit to working with the Ministry of Education on a comprehensive school health strategy? Can I go even further? Would you be willing to work with the Minister of Education and perhaps the Minister of Advanced Education as well on extending the five-year rolling budget and the five-year commitment that you have in your department to the departments of Education and Advanced Education, perhaps some others as well? If you can work at cross-ministerial purposes here, you know, you may accomplish more in a shorter time. That would seem to be the logic.

In order to pursue healthy living, there needs to be easily accessible information for children and adults alike focusing on social aspects as an important feature of health care. I'm not sure that I see that in your priority initiatives.

Another important preventative measure is workplace safety. Again, due to the nature of health care this ministry has to work with other government departments, Employment and Immigration and probably others, to achieve a holistic approach to healthy living.

Other ministries mention in their priority initiatives the need to work with other departments. Why is this strategy not included in the Health and Wellness business plan, and what are you doing or planning to do to address this requirement this year or in the future?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I won't get to all of it probably in a minute and a half, but let me just say this with respect to the wellness: point taken and point acted on. We are co-operating a great deal. For example, with the Ministry of Education we have a program that we're working on together called Healthy U. The Alberta healthy school community wellness fund is another program. We have Ever Active Schools; we're a part of that. There are health promotion co-ordinators for healthy weights and Communities Choose-Well and other programs. We also have the mental health strategy, that I talked about earlier, where we've committed $19 million. There are a lot more counsellors going into schools compliments of our budget. We have a syphilis strategy that will be announced here very shortly. There's one already, but this is an updated version. That would involve probably 10 different ministries. I can't get into all of the cross-ministry stuff.

It's important to note that we are doing everything we can to provide additional access and additional opportunities for people who need this kind of help. We're increasing our co-ordination of health and social support systems. That, hon. member, is on the second page under goal 3 of our Health and Wellness business plan. My signature is on the first page, and if you flip the page, at the very bottom under element 3.4 you will see that that is one of our focuses. I thank you for bringing it to our attention. The quote is, "by increasing coordination of health and social support systems."

The Chair: The next 20 minutes is for the independent.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, you have 20 minutes. How do you want to . . .

Dr. Sherman: We'll go 10, 10.

The Chair: All right; 10, 10. Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour for me to be here, and I'd like to thank the minister and all the ministry staff for joining us today. It's probably the most important budget in the government.

As you know, we recently had a crisis in health care, according to Dr. Paul Parks a near potential catastrophic crisis, from which we've just come back from the edge, to a financial crisis that led to the finance minister of the province refusing to sign the budget. Now we have a leadership race and a crisis in leadership.

Now, I'd like to talk about effective system accountability. When we all ran for government, the goals were access, quality, and sustainability. The questions I'm going to raise produce evidence and fact and questions of: have we actually achieved the goals of access, quality, and sustainability since we took government? I'd like to start off by reading a letter by Dr. Stephen Duckett, a most recent CEO, from the Alberta Doctors' Digest, March 2011. Excerpts from this go as follows:

Alberta spends more per capita . . . than other Canadian provinces, and gets less. Male and female Albertans have a shorter health-adjusted life expectancy than the Canadian average. Albertans who get cancer don't live as long as people from Ontario. All this using data from before AHS was formed.

Investment decisions have over-emphasized acute provision [for acute care] at the expense of seniors' care. In contrast to other provinces, Alberta reduced per-capita spending on non-acute [care] facilities over the last decade.

Is it any wonder that our acute facilities had to become de facto seniors housing, contributing to the systemic problems that have created the problems in emergency care?

And emergency department performance in both Edmonton and Calgary has been getting steadily worse over the last decade, achieving the eight-hour standard for admitted patients about 60% of the time in the first few years of the decade to around 25% now. Neither level acceptable, of course.

And there was significant variation in practice between different parts of the province. . . .

The effects are still with us: it takes a day longer to treat a person with a stroke in Edmonton than it does in Calgary, same for hip replacements. This consumes excess bed days and effectively reduces access in Edmonton.

You know only too well what it was like when I started. No functioning formal structure. No financial reporting system. No strategic direction.

Here's an example on cervical cancer.

Capital Health didn't put the same value on this as the Calgary Health Region, with the result that screening rates are appreciably lower in Edmonton (69.6%) compared to Calgary (74.3%) [on the prevention side] . . .

There are currently huge variations in what we pay for care . . . and the incentive on facilities until now has been to take the least-dependent rather than the most-dependent resident, contributing in part, I think, to our problem of long-stay Alternative Level of Care patients in our acute [care] hospitals.

Tighter and better contracting for services is yet another example. At least having contracts is a start, in contrast to the Villa Caritas contractual mess we inherited from Capital Health or the handshake deals of another region . . .

If I have to weigh up the interests of a handful of business people who misjudged the tender process against the interests of hundreds of patients who would now get treated quicker, I know what side I'd always come down on.

He did say very good things about the five-year funding agreement, and I agree with having stable, sustainable funding to have programs. I think that was a very good decision made by the minister.

He goes on to say:

The government has committed to funding universities and colleges to graduate 2,000 RNs per annum, a commitment not kept incidentally.

What we need is an additional commitment to train 1,000 health care aides annually. Then we'd see some workplace transformation.

Mr. Chair, these are the words of the CEO that was hired and fired by our government.

I would like to hold up graphs. There is evidence of health care spending going logarithmically through the roof while there are cutbacks in basic education. They've gone up like no tomorrow.

Here's a performance measure of the health system.

The Chair: Hon. member, may I interrupt you? The document you quoted from, please table it tomorrow.

Dr. Sherman: Absolutely.

The Chair: Okay.

Dr. Sherman: This is a graph from Alberta Health Services, the number of alternate level of care days spent in acute care by seniors in the Calgary health region. It's gone up at about 55 per cent, a straight line up. This is the reason I've said that we have failed the seniors.

The Chair: Hon. member, also, when you quote from a document, don't use it as an exhibit and so on.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chair, I was just doing what the minister usually does if that's okay.

The Chair: Well, other hon. members can't see what it is, so table it. Okay?

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chair, we'll move on.

The Chair: Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: So these are the issues in health care that Dr. Duckett raised.

Secondly, I'd like to talk about fiscal management or, shall I say, maybe at times fiscal mismanagement. The Auditor General Fred Dunn said that Capital health was playing cat and mouse with the Auditor General's office and did not take its recommendations seriously, from the Chuck Rusnell article.

For the year ended March 31, 2009, each authority continued to exist and produce its own financial statements.

There were severances that were paid: $23 million in severance costs incurred for the AHS transition. AHS used external legal counsel to assist with the negotiation and determination of severance amounts for the terminated CEOs and executives. There was a lack of oversight by AHS management and its board in the entire severance process. AHS did not have a clearly defined process, including roles and responsibilities for negotiating, reviewing, approving, and paying the severances.

We only found documentation evidencing approval from AHS for four of the 19 severance payments we examined. The AHS Board was provided information on the CEO severance payments . . . but they did not approve the payments [we examined].

On the budget and the deficits the Auditor General goes on to say that combined, the AHS board was responsible for the oversight of $9.9 billion in health care expenditures for fiscal 2008 and 2009. The authority's budgeted operating deficit was $392 million.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chair, I'm just wondering if we can focus on the 2011-12 budget for a change?

The Chair: Hon. member, keep the attention on the budget and the business plan. Thank you.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you.

Basically, Mr. Chair, it goes on to say that the fiscal management was not complete. The majority of the work that's under way will be completed by 2013. These are recommendations accepted by the ministry; 2013 on a $14 billion, $15 billion budget that has brought the leadership of the government down. This is unacceptable.

The Auditor General has repeatedly warned AHS about their unacceptable financial practices. There was a lack of oversight and approval, and the books were in the red. There is no commitment to investigate the financial management or reporting. When I was in government, I asked for a forensic audit. The timeline for the majority of the work is 2013. There's no explanation for the capital project deficits, a reduction of budget commitments and deficits by one year, by $213.5 million. There has been no satisfactory explanation of the $1.3 billion transition allowance.

Now, in running the health system, the primary care networks – I was in charge of the primary care network review task force – $149 million a year is spent, I'm told. We only had 425 FTE front-line staff. That works out to $350,000 plus or minus a few thousand dollars per allied health staff or GP. The problem is that there are no performance and accountability measures for rostering the people that need to be rostered in the PCNs. They've rostered all the young healthy people. The accountability measures are 50 bucks a pop to roster someone. When you spend a dollar in prevention, you should save 5 bucks in acute care. The primary care health networks are screaming for more resources and funding when AHS got all the funding in acute care. That's exactly what Dr. Duckett says. We are spending so much in acute care when we actually should be spending it in prevention and primary care.

Let's move on to prevention. We are spending minuscule sums on prevention. If you want to prevent people from spending time in acute care, let's spend on home care, quality home care. Home care was given 7.3 per cent; 7.3 per cent of a little is a little. We need a massive investment in home care, not in acute care.

The Chair: Hon. member, your 10 minutes has terminated.

Hon. minister, your 10 minutes.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Thank you, hon. member, for your comments and insights, some of which I could agree with and many of which, perhaps, I couldn't. Nonetheless, you started out by asking about access, quality, and sustainability. I just want to say that that's in fact — well, you would know this — what this five-year health action plan is all about, and it's been tabled, so we don't have to worry about that.

I just wanted to comment here with respect to your question in that regard that talked about: how do we hope to achieve these three goals? If you were to take a look at Becoming the Best: Alberta's 5-Year Health Action Plan, this actually shows you, Mr. Chair, how our budget would be spent. It doesn't have specific dollars attached to it, but if you look at this and you look at goal 1, for example, it talks about: "Improved quality, safety and access for patients to acute care services will be demonstrated by lower wait times across the province." And then it talks about how we're going to do that.

We're establishing province-wide targets for wait times. That's been done. We're redesigning protocols for care and treatment, called clinical pathways, to help patients move towards better possible outcomes. That's well under way. We're increasing access to cancer treatment across Alberta. That, too, is well under way. We are optimizing and expanding the scope of practice of key health professionals so they can make full use of their education and skills, and we're making changes to care processes to increase efficiency and ensure more integrated transitions between health care teams.

Now, I don't want to go on and read the whole document for you although I'm sure some people would be interested, but as you go through these strategies and then you look at the different goals that talk about the improvements that the hon. member asked about, that would be the first part of the answer on how we're going to achieve this.

We can talk about the benefits to Albertans in that respect. We can talk about attention to Alberta's children in that respect. We can talk about all of the reductions in wait times, and we can talk about goal 2, which is that all Albertans requiring continuing care will have access to an appropriate option for care within one month, within 30 days. That's part of the primary care initiative that we're working on as well. In fact, that's part of the agreement in principle that we have with the Alberta Medical Association, so that's an important thing to sort of keep in mind as you're looking at some of these strategies.

Let me move on to goal 3 because it addresses how we're answering the hon. member's questions. Under goal 3 Albertans will have access to primary health care when they need it, where they need it, from the appropriate provider. Then we talk about who the individuals are that are playing a role in that respect. We can talk about how we're increasing the numbers. We're increasing nurses. We're increasing doctors. We're increasing nurse practitioners.

In the case of RNs in particular, we know that the number that are graduating now will allow us to hire 70 per cent of them right here in Alberta to augment the front lines. We know that we're seeing increases of about 33 per cent from the number who graduated a few years ago in that respect and, similarly, an 11 per cent increase in LPNs, who are rounding out our numbers, and I could go on. The point is that we're strengthening primary care as a result of these and other initiatives.

Just a couple of other quick goals here. Goal 4, which talks about this, is one of the outcomes, that Albertans will live longer and enjoy a high quality of life. Earlier I cited some recent statistics, and I know the hon. member cited some as well. I'm not sure what period of time they covered. If he mentioned them, I didn't catch the year. But I can tell you that today men in this province are living longer than a few years back, and so are women. The trend is in the right direction. We're getting some of it very, very right.

Perhaps more importantly, Albertans are getting more and more of it right. They're realizing the value of cessation programs, for example. Our Alberta tobacco reduction strategy is showing tremendous gains in certain age groups more than others, and it's one very important area that will help people live a lot longer.

The fifth and final goal here, Mr. Chair, is this one, that Alberta will have a patient-focused system, one in which Albertans are satisfied with the quality of the health care services that they receive. That's a good launching pad for this document, that has also been tabled, and that is the 50 performance measures. Toward the end is where we're measuring patient satisfaction, staff satisfaction, physician engagement, percentage of favourable comments, and so on.

That all ties together very nicely in terms of how we're helping to build one health system that is fully engaged, that is functioning to the maximum degree possible, where research and evidence-based decision-making is all part of the formula, where improvements to care and new technologies are playing a leading role, and legislation and policy and strategic direction and budgets support that. That's why we're here today, to debate the budget going forward.

I'm sorry, hon. member, that I can't comment on some of the issues you raised from 2005-06, 2008-09 because we're here debating our budget going forward. I would tell you, though, that one comment that you made, with respect to the Auditor General, I need to just comment on. The one piece that I brought in with me the other day to the House does go back to the Auditor General's report of 2005-2006, in which he commented on annual financial statements, which I believe was one of your questions. While I don't want to dwell in the past, I do want to say that the Auditor General on page 127 had this to say. He said:

As a result of the corrections, the 2006 annual surplus increased from $24 million to $46 million. The Authority . . .

In this case one of the health authorities.

. . . had budgeted for a $17 million deficit.

Had the financial statements not been corrected, they would have been presented to the Audit and Finance Committee with a material misstatement.

The fact is, Mr. Chair, that once the Auditor General had flagged this and had the discussion and so on with the health authority, they made immediate amends, and as a result of that, the Auditor General was able to sign off on that particular document.

So there is a lot of accountability that way. I'm sure that there's some of that going on even as we speak with respect to the year that's just going out because we're in a new era now.

I don't know about any cat-and-mouse games, that the hon. member referred to, back in 2008-09. All I can tell you is that today, going forward, we have every confidence in the management of the system and every confidence that the accountability is being improved as well.

Some of the comments that were made about severance amounts: I wasn't privy to any of those. I haven't seen any of them, but I know that when two doctors disagree, which is not an infrequent occasion in any part of the world – there are second opinions; there are different ways of doing things – when those folks disagree, it's quite common for them to sit down and find some method of severing the relationship, perhaps severing a contract, and moving on to other locations. That's perhaps what the hon. member was referring to. I know that the Auditor General does a very, very thorough job reviewing those financial statements and will continue to do that, as do we. We're very concerned about these kinds of items.

A couple of final points. I know that he mentioned something about insufficient staff. I just forgot the exact gist of it, but I think it was something to do with: a ratio of $1 spent on wellness perhaps should save you $5 in acute care. That may be true. I don't know if there's a formula like that. What I do know that is definitely true is that we have ramped up our overall spending and our attention, our action, our strategies on the wellness side of the equation. As I mentioned in answer to Calgary-Currie's question, looking at the health system is not a single, linear-type exercise in one direction. You have to look at it as a continuum, as a circular-type thing.

Let me give it to you this way, Mr. Chair. In Canada we see and we have and we experience an outstanding health system for the most part, but it has grown up much more as a reactionary-type system. In other words, you have a problem, a complication, a hurt, a bump, a bruise, an owie, a disease, an accident, whatever it is, and you do the same thing that I do. You go to the system to react to your condition. I've talked with and I've had discussions with the member who has asked these questions, and he knows very well where I'm coming from, but let me say it. We have to work a lot more on the proactionary side of the equation, I should say, to coin a phrase. That will help us in the long run.

The Chair: We've just completed the amount of time allocated for the opposition.

Now we start with the other members who wish to speak on the budget. I shall now recognize the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. You have 20 minutes, sir. Back and forth?

Mr. Campbell: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I don't know if I'll take the full 20 minutes, but I have a number of questions that I'd like the minister to answer and get some on the record.

I'd like to talk about reduced waiting times. Mr. Chair, when people come to emergency rooms, they expect to be seen on a timely basis. I'd like to know from the minister if we are meeting our performance targets. Two months after introducing measures to shorten emergency room overcrowding, are these measures working?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Chairman, I'm happy to tell you that they are, but that doesn't mean they don't need more attention and more improvement. We have provided very clear directions – I've alluded to them a lot this afternoon – with respect to things that Alberta Health Services is doing to improve, for example, emergency room performance, as alluded to and specified, in fact, in the Alberta five-year health action plan: looking at new discharge protocols, protocols that would, say, have a discharge plan in mind when the patient arrives and try and discharge them at 11 in the morning on whatever day of the discharge plan to free up the bed for the rest of the day; having more patient navigators in the emergency departments or equivalents thereto; having home-care attendants in the emergency rooms so that there's a home-care plan in place so that the doctors feel more comfortable discharging that person to their home location because they know that a home-care plan is already in place.

We talked about overcapacity protocols and what a dramatic difference they are making. We've talked about adding more in-hospital beds, the 360 brand new, net new beds in Edmonton and Calgary for example, which are almost all completed now for opening, and the impact that they are having. We talked about adding more continuing care spaces in the community, as it were. We talked about a lot of these things that are helping to address the member's question with respect to how we're meeting our performance measures.

Are there results, hon. member? Absolutely. I could tell you that the average length of stay for persons in our emergency departments has come down very dramatically. For example, the daily average number of emergency patients, what we call EIPs, in Calgary was 25.7, which is a reduction from 67.8 over the last several months. In Edmonton it was reduced from 80.3 EIPs down to 41.9 and in Red Deer from 9.9 down to 6.1. That tells you that we're moving in the right direction in terms of emergency in-patients being moved out of the emergency department to somewhere else in the hospital.

I could tell you the percentage of discharged emergency department patients within target for 2010-11. Calgary is at 61 per cent; Edmonton is at 54 per cent. I can tell you the percentage of admitted ED patients within target 2010-11. Calgary was 41 per cent; Edmonton was 31 per cent. These aren't huge gains, hon. member, but they are trending in very much the right direction.

When you look at average length of stay coming down by as much as 60 per cent in some cases, 50 per cent on average, when you look at EIPs coming down by anywhere from 50 to 60 per cent on average, and when you look at improvements, that are moving ahead a little slower than I'd like – nonetheless, they are moving ahead and trending in the right direction – for the four-hour protocol and the eight-hour protocol, I can tell you that improvements are being made, and the system is beginning to show that.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Minister, for those comments.

I'd like to talk a little bit about primary care networks right now. While primary care networks, or PCNs, are an innovative, made-in-Alberta approach to improve the delivery of primary care, I'd like to know how many PCNs are currently in Alberta, how much funding has been allocated this year for PCNs, and what line item this would fall under. Then maybe the minister could go on to talk about how PCNs are working to improve health care delivery in rural communities.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Hon. member, you've hit the topic du jour, of the day, because anything connected to primary care is really central to all of the chats that we've been having lately with the Alberta Medical Association. In fact, I'll just repeat that as part of the agreement in principle with the Alberta Medical Association there is a section there dedicated to primary care, and it deals with the creation of a primary care task force.

To answer your first question, there are 39 PCNs. I thought it was 38, but it's actually 39, and very soon we'll be opening the 40th PCN. I should say that I'll be visiting it fairly soon, I hope, because it just opened here a day or two back. That would take us up to about 40. The reason that we're aggressively opening more of these is because we recognize how effective they have been and how effective they will be going forward.

In 2010-11 $149 million was allocated for PCNs, and in 2011-12 it will be a similar amount, but it'll depend on how the physician negotiations conclude and how the task force's work unfolds. Nonetheless, PCN funding, as you can see, is allocated from element 2.2 under physician compensation and support. There's a lot that we're doing there already, hon. member, there's more to be done, but team-based health care is definitely an outstanding way to approach delivering more health care and providing quicker access for Albertans.

5:30

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair. If you would, Minister, I'd like to talk about Alberta Health Services' accountability. This is the second year of the five-year funding agreement that will see Alberta Health Services receive 6 per cent base operating increases in each of the first three years and 4.5 per cent increases in each of the remaining two years.

This year the Health and Wellness budget includes $9.6 billion in base operating funding for Alberta Health Services. To me, anyway, it's a lot of money. Could you please explain to us how Alberta Health Services will save taxpayers money in the long term? Then, Minister, if you could talk about what measures are in place to ensure accountability in the health care system, specifically to ensure Alberta Health Services is being held accountable, and what measures are in place to ensure Alberta Health Services is spending taxpayers' dollars efficiently.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Very good questions, hon. member. Thank you, Chair. I'll try and be brief here. The short answer to the first question is that there are a number of streamlined processes that are now in place as a result of the amalgamation of nine health authorities down to one. For example, instead of having nine CEOs and presidents out there, today we have one. Instead of having over 160, or whatever the number was, senior executive vice-president types, today we're probably down to 40, which combines the seven major ones and several that are in important positions but not at the same level.

We can talk about economies of scale that happen from that, economies of scale particularly with respect to, for example, what I like to call bulk buying. When each authority in the old regime was ordering its own drugs or its own bandages or its own needles or vaccines or whatever it was, they were basically a one-person type show. But when you're now able to order in bulk for the entire province, you can cut a better deal, and that's an extremely important efficiency for us.

Coming back to administration, I can tell you that instead of having nine, or if you want to say 12 and include the Cancer Board and the AADAC board and the Mental Health Board, 12 payroll systems, today we have one. I could go on. The point is that there are a number of these targeted efficiencies that are saving taxpayer dollars. In fact, the last estimate I had, hon. member, which came from Alberta Health Services, was that in this year going forward, they were anticipating a saving of about $500 million to $600 million, which they are using back into health care to provide more services, faster access, and reduced wait times for Albertans. So there are some very good things.

Your last point, I think, was about what measures are in place to ensure that accountability. I can tell you that the health action plan has a not all that well publicized set of performance measures that go with it, and the accountability is there because this suite of 50 performance measures will be reported on quarterly by Alberta Health Services. In the meantime they're already putting a lot of their information online with respect to emergency rooms and so on. We know that we have some very clearly defined targets, and those targets are being met or will be met to the best ability of the people providing them.

The measures and the targets, by the way, if someone is interested, are available on the government website at health.alberta.ca, and then just follow the links. Hon. member, there's a lot more information in that respect that can be found there.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Chair, I was just wondering: how much time do I have?

The Chair: You have nine minutes.

Mr. Campbell: Nine minutes. Okay. We're good.

I'd like to talk about budget cuts and increases, Mr. Minister, if I can. In this budget the immunization support allocation has been reduced by $5 million, from $11 million to $6 million. Why is this, and how will Albertans be affected by this?

After looking over your department's main estimates, it's clear that spending has increased for most programs. How can your ministry achieve its goal of ensuring a sustainable health system if you continue to increase spending during these recessionary times?

Looking at line 7.2, which is on page 195 of your main estimates, it indicates that funding for out-of-province health care services has substantially increased since last year's budget. I'm just wondering why this is the case. Are more people having or choosing to receive health care services outside of Alberta?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. What looks like a reduction in immunization support allocation is actually an efficiency in that particular line item. The efficiency is actually a savings in the system of about $5 million because there are supporting pharmacists who are now able to provide influenza vaccination. As a result of that, they will help us reduce overall costs. So that change from $11 million to $6 million is actually a saving of $5 million, which is going back into other parts of the budget. Albertans won't see any changes or be adversely affected by that funding change whatsoever. In fact, they'll see some improvements in other areas because the funding is going over there.

Regarding the issue of our increases for most of the programs I think I've covered a lot of that in some of my earlier comments. But just to risk repeating myself, I would say that our spending increases reflect a continued if not a renewed commitment in several areas that Albertans have told us are their priorities. That includes health facilities, health equipment, redeveloping old facilities or developing new facilities, and creating more continuing care spaces, which we've talked about quite a lot.

I recognize that $14.9 billion is a significant amount of money because it comprises approximately 40 per cent of our budget. It's about $41 million a day that we provide to Albertans by way of services. That's something we're not bragging about or complaining about. It's just a fact if we're going to deliver on the Premier's vision for having the best performing publicly funded health system in Canada. I'm grateful that the Premier and our caucus are solidly behind that plan. The funds that you see there are allocated for demand-driven programs and for high-priority areas. They've been carefully arrived at, and I think I mentioned earlier, Mr.

Chair, that Alberta Health Services will soon roll out their detailed budget. We have to get through our budget first so that they know they've actually got that amount to work with.

The last point was with respect to out-of-province health care services. You know, Mr. Chairman, we spend quite a bit of money and time in this area. Alberta Health and Wellness specifically provides funding for insured out-of-province and out-of-country hospital and medical services to Albertans who are insured under the Alberta health care insurance plan. As program claims are activity based, there is a tendency for expenditures to vary somewhat from year to year. Suffice it to say that the volume of residents obtaining services provided in other locations, other provinces and territories specifically, has remained relatively consistent, but there are inflationary cost factors that do impact that area, so we're quite vigilant about that.

Finally, we do have interprovincial agreements that allow for cost recoveries, not necessarily 100 per cent per se because you can't build in there things like infrastructure costs and amortization costs and so on, but the point is that we do have those agreements, and the rates are reached on a consensus basis in discussion with other provinces.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Minister, for those comments.

I'd like to talk about workforce strategy. Goal 3 of the Ministry of Health and Wellness business plan, page 70, aims to ensure appropriate health workforce utilization. First of all, how do you plan to achieve this? Secondly, what percentage of the ministry's budget goes towards health care workers' salaries, including all nurses and physicians? How does physician compensation and nurses' salaries in Alberta compare with the rest of Canada? Finally, in your opinion, what's the biggest challenge and risk that your ministry is facing, and how do we plan on addressing it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: It's difficult to narrow down what the most challenging part of the health budget or the health strategy is, but I think that among the top challenges, as the member has indicated, would certainly be the supply of health care providers, the supply of home care aides. That would be one of the larger challenges.

The larger picture there probably would be also impacted by the retention of doctors, particularly in some rural settings. It's very difficult to recruit to some areas, even more difficult to retain doctors in those areas once recruited. I'll put in a plug, as I like to do, for nurse practitioners because I think nurse practitioners are one of the most valuable keys, going forward, as we start implementing our health action plan. There are some good statistics coming out in that respect, where we're constantly seeing more and more of them hired.

Regarding your first point, about appropriate health workforce utilization, we work in great partnership with Alberta Health Services with respect to a number of workforce strategies. For example, I had the privilege of hearing a lot about a recruitment and retention workforce-related strategy in southern Alberta just a short while ago. They're spending about $250,000 as we speak to advertise, promote, and recruit health care providers to that area. They provide a certain amount of dollars for them to fly in, to visit, to stay, and to get a taste of the community. That's just one example. There are several of those kinds of partnerships that are under way right now to try and recruit more.

On your question about the percentage of the ministry's budget going toward health care workers' salaries, I think you said, the short answer is that about 70 to 75 per cent of our ministry's budget goes toward health care workers' salaries. That includes staff employed by Alberta Health Services, salaries related to contracts with health providers through Alberta Health Services, and, of course, funding physicians.

Finally, regarding physician compensation and nurses' salaries I think I can safely say to you that Alberta is significantly ahead of every other province in this respect, perhaps with the exception of Prince Edward Island. I'd have to just check to be sure. Again, I'm not bragging about it, and I'm certainly not complaining, but the fact is that we pay our health care providers a handsome sum to practise their trade here in our province. I think that's going to start showing itself with improved health outcomes as well because you want a happy, comfortable workforce socially, spiritually, and economically.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Minister, I want to maybe talk a little bit about the health advocate office. New funding has been allocated for the health advocate office. I think it's line item 1.8 on page 194 of the main estimates. I'm curious as to how many staff will be working in this office, and I'd be curious about what expectations you have for this office during its first year of existence. I guess a couple of the questions I have also are: how are you going to ensure that this office doesn't just become a money pit? The supplemental is: are there performance measures in place to ensure that the health advocate office is providing value for taxpayer dollars?

The Chair: Hon. member, the 20 minutes is up.

The next hon. member that I will recognize is the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. You have about six minutes in total.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I thank the minister for being here, but I am going to take the six minutes for me.

I really just, obviously, am going to probably spend most of my time on long-term care because that's what I totally, truly understand. One of the things that you spoke about was that you actually visit these places and see that the care is good. You know what? It's always good when you're there.

I would suggest that you take me ahead of time, and I'll tell you the questions to ask. I want you to do a chart check. I want you to find out if there's an oximeter. I want you to find out if they've got an otoscope. I want you to find out if, in fact, the hearing aids are cleaned every night. I want you to find out what the staffing levels are not the day you're there but the week ahead of time. I want you to find out the number of days that they actually work short: days, evenings, or nights. Those are the kinds of questions that you can pick up off a chart check.

The other thing that you're talking about. You're setting up a lot of task forces and committees and all that kind of stuff. It's great to have people that have worked their way up and now have got all these titles after their names. But you know what? You and I both know that people forget what it was like to be on the front line after you've worked up to where you make the rules. Get a couple of guys that have actually wiped bums within the last week, and put them on a committee. They'll tell you what it looks like. It looks great on paper, but is it really going to work?

One of my complaints – and I know that I'll probably be reprimanded for this. What I'm noticing is that a lot of our long-term care facilities – and I'm using the term “long-term care” meaning long-term care – are run by LPNs. What's happening is that now that they've moved the RN program to a four-year program, the two-year program that used to be the RN program is now the LPN program. In the old days the people that would work in long-term care were more often than not RNs that had experience. What's happening now is that these LPNs are coming out of the two-year program, but they do not have any hospital experience before they go to long-term care. That's one of the things, in my opinion, that they really have to have because one of the most important things you need in long-term care is assessment skills. You have to have had some kind of hospital experience before you go in. If you've got good assessment skills, learned how to use those otoscopes and the other scopes that I mentioned, you actually can keep people out of the hospital.

You talked about long-term care being part of that continuum, where you walk in this door and you go out that one foot first. The idea is great. There is nothing really wrong with it, but what happens is – and I think you said that you wouldn't go from a level 5 to a level 1 or vice versa. Yes, of course you would. You could be walking down the hall and end up with a stroke and be hemiplegic. Yeah, you are going to go from there to there, and you're going to need good, solid RN care, not somebody that's in off the street with a six-week course.

Now, the idea is great. When you have a room in these buildings – and I think that, clearly, the money is on the housing side. I know that you're not the housing side. You are the care side, and the care side is expensive, but the money is on the housing side. If I'm going to build a building, the last thing I want in there is somebody that has heavy care without the dollars to follow them. So now you've got a room in this building, and someone becomes long-term care. The minute that room is designated long-term care, you have to put the money into it because (a) you need staff, (b) you're going to need all of the equipment. I mean, they could well be on respirators. Who knows? The staff is also going to have to have the training for palliative care. So all of a sudden this room that was just an ordinary room now becomes a long-term care room. That money had better be there on the care side because, clearly, the housing side is paid for. Most of these people are paying huge bucks to stay in these places. So the theory is good, but it isn't working out that way out there.

What else was I going to rant about? One of the other things that's happened is that I think people that make these decisions don't look at big pictures and don't look far enough ahead. We had designated assisted living, assisted living. You know the drill. But what's happened is that there is also an assessment document called the interRAI. Now, I know for sure that that interRAI is not meant to be for housing. It's a care document. What happens is that they do the assessment more often than not without families, which really annoys the families, and then they say: this is the care you need; therefore, this is where you're going to live. It was never meant as a housing . . .

The Chair: Hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Oh, I was just getting started.
Thank you.

The Chair: The three hours allocated for the Committee of Supply has terminated. Pursuant to Government Motion 5, agreed to on February 23, 2011, the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

We'll take a few minutes for the staff to leave the Chamber.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Vandermeer: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration resolutions for the Department of Health and Wellness relating to the 2011-2012 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2012, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report, those in concurrence with the report please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, please say no. The report is accepted.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 11 Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011

[Debate adjourned April 12: Mr. Mason speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the bill.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to make some brief comments with respect to the debate on Bill 11, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011. The primary purpose of this amendment, as we have discussed, is to enable Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development to exercise full legislative authority for domestic cervids. Under this amendment in section 18 the general prohibition on hunting diversified livestock, big game, and controlled animals on diversified livestock farms will continue.

Mr. Speaker, in 2002 the Alberta government decided that cervid harvest preserves, otherwise known as hunt farms, would not be allowed in Alberta. This decision was based on a cross-government review with direct input from the public and stakeholder groups and consideration of factors such as disease, economics, and public support. Domestic cervids, as we know, are no more wild than any other typical domesticated animals, and it is important to note that there are no plans to make any legislative changes to the Livestock Industry Diversification Act as it relates to hunt farms in Alberta.

There are some statutory exemptions to this ban, Mr. Speaker, including where hunting is specifically authorized by the Agricultural Pests Act or by way of a licence under the Wildlife Act such as predator control within a boundary. Any illegal activities on farms, including reports of activity contrary to the LIDA, will be investigated by the inspection and investigation branch of the regulatory services division. Sustainable Resource Development will continue to regulate and enforce all matters pertaining to wildlife, including the hunting, possession, transportation, importation, export, and sale of wildlife.

This amendment is an important step forward for both industry and government. I look forward to the remainder of the debate and to receiving the support from the members for proceeding with this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or question.

Mr. Hinman: I want to talk on the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: All right.

Then the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs in the five minutes.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was listening to the member's comments with interest, and I wonder if he just wanted to elaborate, given that this is second reading, on the fact that this bill does not in fact do anything to change the current legislation dealing with hunt farms.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, that is, in fact, hunt farms. I agree. The very well established precedent for most people is that it makes no more sense to shoot a domestic cervid in an enclosed space than it would to shoot a cow in an enclosed space. The legislation itself is very, very explicit that these are not game animals, Mr. Speaker. This is not sport. This is not recreation. This is, in fact, agriculture, and this is, in fact, an agricultural activity, a livelihood where people who are invested in this take a great deal of time and effort and attention to stay involved in it.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, for example, raises a number of domestic cervids at his place or used to, I understand. Actually, it was reflected in licence plates and a number of other things, the pride for that particular activity.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member for 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Doerksen: Is 29(2)(a) still available?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes. It's still available. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question. I know that this bill has created some uncertainty, and there's been some, maybe, misrepresentation on the intent, but I do also understand that because of what happens in some other jurisdictions, there is concern with regard to what the implications may be. I know that the Member for Edmonton-Calder has some experience in other jurisdictions with regard to some land that he may own there and what happens there with regard to hunt farms. Does he have any comment with regard to what happens in other jurisdictions in regard to the potential for reimbursement for activity on private property?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed true that our family does have a reasonably small and productive farm in southern Saskatchewan, which is in a community that I love to describe to everyone. We're in a place called – it's actually physically known as the flat. The district that we farm in is, in fact, called the flat, which will give you some idea of the topography of the place.

In the jurisdiction in Saskatchewan the rules are very, very similar to what they are here. We do not allow the harvesting for sport of any domestic cervid. In fact, it is very much like it is here although I would have to say that the Alberta regulation, particularly in terms of how we're going to deal with escaped cervids, is somewhat more robust than it is in Saskatchewan.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. The member brought up a very good question. He says that there would be no more likelihood of shooting a cervid in a pen than to shoot a bovine. I guess my question, because my understanding is that there's a fair number of people that actually will shoot a bovine in the corral and then butcher it, is that for the domestic raising of cervid animals, if someone wants to come and eat that, is this regulation going to be in place, then? How would you actually kill a cervid animal if you do not want to take it to a slaughterhouse? Currently under bovines we can do that. Could you please expand on that, someone who wants to come and buy a deer off a deer farmer and how one would process it from that point forward, then?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Hon. member, there's nothing in the legislation that would prohibit the use of that particular means of preparing an animal for slaughter. I would think that it's a fairly obvious statement. In fact, the preparation of an animal for slaughter is something typically done in a corral in close quarters. It's not something that's done on an open range. I think that it would be a tremendous stretch to think that a hunt farm or, in fact, any version of any sort of slaughter of an animal in a field or in a pasture at any range with a high-powered rifle is in any way connected to the actual harvesting of an animal in a corral. I mean, you yourself, hon. member, are very, very familiar and have undoubtedly done that many times.

Mr. Hinman: I am familiar with bovine, but I'm not sure on the legislation. Like I say, I need some clarification. If you're raising deer and someone wants to buy some venison, is it legal, then, under this legislation to run the deer into a corral and shoot them and harvest them at that point?

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) has terminated.

Any hon. member wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. We have a minute and a half.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much. I'll try and make the best use I can out of that minute and a half.

I think the issue that's just been raised is part of the confusion that we're seeing around this whole bill. I know that it was intended to do the right thing, but I think if you look back, not very far because I can remember it, we were warned not to allow that kind of game farming and not to separate them. We were warned at the time, and a lot of it had to do with the disease whose initials I can't remember . . .

Ms Pastoor: CWD.

Ms Blakeman: . . . CWD, chronic wasting disease. We were warned at the time that that would be a likely outcome of the decision to allow this.

So now we're doing the right thing and moving them into the same sort of legislative corral, if I may be allowed a small pun, as other farmed animals like cattle. But there is a great concern about penned hunting. The government has said, "No, they're not going to allow it," but when you actually go through the bill . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but it's 6 o'clock. The House stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

We have a policy field committee which will reconvene tonight at 6:30 to consider the main estimates of Sustainable Resource Development.

Have a good evening.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 14, 2011

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Premier it's a great privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some visitors today from Our Lady of the Angels school. There are 60 of them here. They are accompanied by their teachers, their group leaders: Mrs. Erin Croft, Miss Nikki Doege, and Mr. Garry Kumpf. I want to say that they're probably here today with a bus driver. As we are all aware of the conditions out on our roads and highways today, I think we also want to acknowledge the very important job these bus drivers do every day across Alberta. They haul the most important cargo that moves every day. With that, I would like the students and teachers to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to welcome a wonderful group of students from Calmar school in my constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar. These 31 bright grade 6 students along with seven parent helpers and two teachers, Mrs. Jeanette Wilson and Ms Kelsey Podgurny, are here and have toured the Legislature. I would ask them all now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour to rise today to introduce Dan Bartholomew Poyser and the Glenmore Christian Academy grade 9 band. They will be performing classical, jazz, pops, and traditional music right across Alberta and especially Edmonton in the next few days. GCA is a Christian alternative school under the Palliser regional school division and is consistently recognized by the Fraser Institute as one of the top 4 per cent of elementary schools in Alberta. Next month they'll be celebrating their 30th anniversary, and last month GCA students and staff shaved their heads to support young adult cancer survivors in their second annual Shave for the Brave event. A total of 52 shavers raised over $32,000, which was the most of any school in this country.

Mr. Speaker, our guests will be joining us in the middle of question period after their tour of the Legislature, and they will include Mrs. Brenda Rousseau and Mrs. Brenda Cameron. I ask and encourage all members of this fine Assembly to offer GCA their very warm welcome at this time.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students from Kneehill Christian school, which is just outside of the thriving village of Linden, Alberta, which many of you know is very close to where I live. Accompanying them today are Miss Terri Miller, teacher, and parents Mr. and Mrs. Dalin Reimer, Mr. and Mrs. Darren Toews, Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Barkman, and Mr. and Mrs. Galen Penner. They're here today to tour this wonderful building and to learn much about the history of the province of Alberta. I'd ask you all to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly as they stand in the members' gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two outstanding pediatricians from the medical community here in Edmonton who are leading the development of an innovative program called pediatrics for kids in care. Children and youth who are in child intervention will be quickly assessed and looked after by a team of pediatricians. We have Dr. Tami Master-son, who championed PKIC here in Edmonton and recently opened a clinic at the Grey Nuns hospital, where her patients will only be our children in care. We also have Dr. Bob Moriarty, clinical professor and director in the department of pediatrics at the University of Alberta. He is the lead pediatrician for the program. I want you both to know how much we deeply appreciate what you have done for our children in care, and I ask that all members give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly members of the Alberta Research and Innovation Authority, or ARIA. ARIA members have come to Edmonton this week from around the world to discuss where research and innovation in Alberta should go next. Yesterday morning they met with cabinet ministers to get their input and ideas on the subject, and I am pleased to introduce these qualified members of the ARIA board, leaders in their fields from around the world. I'll ask them to rise as I introduce them, and then we can give them the warm welcome of this Assembly. Seated in the members' gallery this afternoon are Mr. Marvin Fritzl, chair of ARIA from Calgary; Oryssia Lennie, vice-chair of ARIA from Edmonton; Florence Gauzy-Krieger from Bavaria; Riikka Heikinheimo from Finland; Chris Henshall from England; Laura Kilcrease from Austin, Texas; Peter Nicholson from Ottawa and Austin, Texas; Peter Riddles from Australia; and Dr. Howard Tennant, all the way from Lethbridge.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

National Volunteer Week

Ms Woo-Paw: Mr. Speaker, throughout the province in every community thousands of Albertans are volunteering their time to many worthwhile and necessary causes. The contributions of Alberta's volunteers are all around us. It's there in the rinks and the arenas and on the playing fields. It's there in the schools and in the hospitals and seniors' clubs. It's in the excited laughter of a child who has learned a new skill and the applause of the audience at the musical performance. And it's there in the selfless work of those in the nonprofit, voluntary sector as they deliver community-based programs valued at an estimated $9 billion, many to Alberta's most vulnerable citizens.

Volunteering is a wonderful opportunity that is open to all and something that almost anyone can do. Volunteers are part of a family of individuals coming from diverse backgrounds and experiences but united by a common purpose, to build better communities and a better Alberta.

I know that no one who volunteers does so for recognition or praise, but it's important that their contribution not be taken for granted. This week is National Volunteer Week, a time to recognize the innumerable contributions of volunteers and volunteering, a time to honour the men, women, and young people who make it all happen in our communities, a time to make visible the often underrecognized yet indispensable role that volunteers play day in and day out.

I would like to ask this Assembly for its unanimous support in recognizing April 10-16 as National Volunteer Week in Alberta. I encourage all Albertans to thank the people who make a difference in their communities and to use today as an opportunity to reflect on where we can make our contribution, where we can be the ones to make a difference and build a better Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Sikh Community Generosity

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Millions of people around the world were horrified by last month's earthquake and tsunami in Japan. We watched in horror and sympathy as nature's fury devastated entire towns, washing thousands of people out to sea and creating a nuclear crisis that continues to threaten countless lives.

As the people of Japan bravely cope with the disaster, I'm proud to say that Albertans have stepped forward to help. The Sikh community has been particularly generous. On March 27 I attended a special event organized by the Punjabi Media Club with the co-operation of the Dashmesh Culture Center committee. It was the brainchild of Raj Brar. At the temple they set up two tables with volunteers to collect funds for disaster relief in Japan. In less than five hours, Mr. Speaker, the congregation raised over $20,000 for the Red Cross.

Generosity is, of course, one of the foundations of the Sikh faith. Over the years Sikhs have given from the heart to many good causes all across Alberta, including women's shelters, food banks, Tom Campbell's park, the Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute, the Children's hospital in Calgary, and fundraising drives for people devastated by the disasters in Haiti and Kashmir.

Mr. Speaker, I offer my thanks to members of the Alberta Sikh community and, indeed, to Albertans from all communities who have donated so generously to so many worthy causes over the years. When disaster strikes, when people go hungry or lack health care, we all have an obligation to step up and do what we can to help our less-fortunate neighbours, whether they live close to home or on the other side of the world. We are all brothers and sisters, part of one big family, and I'm very proud of my fellow Albertans for opening their hearts and their wallets for the benefit of humanity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South

Inclusive Education

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The goal of an inclusive education system is to provide students with the most appropriate learning environments and opportunities for them to achieve their potential. In Alberta inclusion is about ensuring that each student belongs no matter their ability or disability, language, cultural background, gender, or age. It's about valuing all students the same way.

Part of this shift requires us to rethink how teachers plan for student success. A new digital resource, the inclusive education planning tool, focuses on helping teachers change their instructional practice to better meet the diverse learning needs of all students. The new digital tool is currently being piloted in grade 1 to 9 classrooms in 16 schools across the province, including one in my constituency, Joseph Welsh elementary school.

Joseph Welsh elementary is using this resource to support a planning process that incorporates most of the elements traditionally found in the individual program plan. Teachers and parents have been encouraged by the new tool. Individual student goals are replaced with supports and strategies that are matched to the student's individualized strengths and needs.

As implementation of action on inclusion moves forward, requirements around special education will be revised. Feedback gathered from the pilot project will provide information that Alberta Education will use to revise policies and requirements to better support an inclusive education system. In addition to broadening the current pilot to all school authorities during the 2011-12 year, there will be further development of content for the IEPT.

I look forward to hearing more and learning how the tool will further enhance the supports teachers will be able to provide, particularly in the Red Deer area.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Land Reclamation

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise today and discuss the success of various reclamation projects that are going on throughout our province. Our government has ensured that there are strict requirements in place for reclamation, and the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act states that reclamation must return the specified land to equivalent land capability. This has been the case with coal mines, where 75 per cent of land disturbed by coal mining has been reclaimed.

The examples of reclamation of our coal mines are numerous. For example, in the constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar at the Genesee mine 600 hectares of agricultural land have been developed, earning Capital Power and Sherritt Coal the 2009 Alberta Chamber of Resources major reclamation award. In my own riding of West Yellowhead at the Coal Valley mine sport-fishing lakes have been developed, making the area a valued recreational destination.

I could go on on numerous examples, Mr. Speaker, but I'd also like to discuss some of the success stories of the oil sands reclamation. At the Kearl oil sands Imperial Oil has started an extensive reclamation project which will replenish the fish stock among other things, and Syncrude has begun reclamation of pond

1, which was established in the 1960s. This pond will eventually be turned into a mixed-wood forest and wetland area.

These are just some of the many examples of reclamation projects that are under way in our province. These projects show that industry and this government are partnered and committed to ensuring that the footprint left by natural resource extraction is limited so that we are leaving sustainable landscapes for future generations of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

DNA Day

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In April 1953 James Watson and Francis Crick published what we know today as the double helix structure of DNA. This understanding of DNA resulted in further research and eventually to the human genome project in April 2003.

Being such an influential month for the field of genomics, it's only fitting that Albertans celebrate DNA Day through Genome Alberta activities on April 15. Thanks to the efforts of Genome Alberta, DNA Day will be a special day where students, teachers, and the public can join a variety of experts to learn more about genetics and genomics through an online forum hosted by Genome Alberta.

The government of Alberta is a strong supporter of genomics research. Through our investments in Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions we are exploring the applications of genomics in the agriculture, forestry, food, and health sectors. We're working with organizations like Genome Alberta and the Alberta Prion Research Institute to use genomics to develop stronger, more abundant crops such as flaxseed, to combat major issues such as BSE, and to find cures for crippling diseases like Alzheimer's and Parkinson's.

Genomics is an important platform that will play a critical role in the continued prosperity of the province in the same way that nanotechnology and information technology do today. These critical technologies set the stage for tomorrow's competitive industries and products.

As Albertans recognize DNA Day, I'd like to recognize the hard work that scientists and researchers commit to the pursuit of excellence in the field of genomics. I'd also like to congratulate Genome Alberta on bringing DNA Day to Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Education Funding

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government presented its Education budget this spring so that many people were led to believe it involved increases, but with time to look at the actual numbers, a much more troubling story is clear. The real story is about cuts, cuts that will impact the education of children in Alberta, and our children deserve better.

Teachers are a part of the school system we know well, caring professionals who often pour lots of their own time and their resources into their work above and beyond job requirements, yet we're beginning to hear the first decisions from some school districts about the number of teachers that will have to be let go at the end of this year.

We can anticipate a stream of announcements over the next weeks that cut not only teachers but many other important staff, including aides, librarians, custodians, and more. It will be more difficult for individual children to have the attention they need to learn to their full potential. With crowded schools and fewer specialized staff the gap between what children with special needs need and what they realistically will receive will grow even wider, and we will build on the record of fundamentally failing to provide for their education.

There are other consequences, too. We have heard from the Peace Wapiti school division that long hours for children on buses will increase even further, hours that affect learning success, health, and quality of life overall. We have seen schools close and programs close and the damages that this causes to whole communities. Reports of more closures are already beginning. School districts are pushed to consider troubling options such as the proposal by Edmonton public schools to rent space in schools to a large for-profit child care corporation.

We do not need to see such deterioration of our public schools. We could easily ensure that Alberta had the revenue to provide our children with the best schooling anywhere in the world. That would be a proud legacy and a legacy that would be a strong foundation for the growth and prosperity and well-being of Albertans.

The value of education is immense for individuals and societies. It is worse than careless of this government to try to create a myth of providing improved support for children and their schooling when actually shortchanging it. It is wrong. It is sacrificing smart, long-term building of a well-educated society that will make us competitive with . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Campaign for Prostate Health

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak about a generous donation given to an Edmonton group in the continuing battle against prostate cancer. Approximately half of all Albertans will develop cancer in their lifetime. For men prostate cancer is the most frequent form of cancer and the third leading cause of death from cancer. Even though prostate cancer is a large risk, awareness of it is extremely low, and it's talked about in whispers and sometimes even embarrassment.

Alberta needs a wake-up call, and at an event on Tuesday Prostate Cancer Canada gave us just that. As part of their Wake Up Call national tour Prostate Cancer Canada donated $1 million to the campaign for prostate health, monies that were actually raised in Alberta. The campaign for prostate health is made up of the University Hospital Foundation, the Royal Alexandra Hospital Foundation, and the Alberta Cancer Foundation. It's helping to develop a prostate cancer clinic here in Edmonton. Prostate Cancer Canada is a national foundation dedicated to the elimination of prostate cancer through research, education, support, and awareness.

The prostate cancer clinic being developed as part of the Edmonton clinic will improve access for patients to health professionals focused on diagnosing, managing, and treating prostate cancer. It will act as a one-stop centre offering support for patients and families to guide them through their individual treatment plans. The clinic, expected to open in 2013, will reduce wait times from diagnosis to treatment, which will increase survivability.

As someone who has experienced this cancer, I encourage all men over 50 to get a regular PSA test. Thank you to Prostate Cancer Canada for your generous donation to the campaign for prostate health in Alberta.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Physicians

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Dr. Allan Garbutt added his name to the growing list of people who have asked for a public inquiry into the culture of fear and intimidation this government perpetuates. Like others, Dr. Garbutt was told to stop advocating or he and his patients would, quote, suffer the consequences, end quote. Interestingly, Dr. Garbutt chose to go public through the Official Opposition and the media, not the Health Quality Council. To the minister: given that doctors are raising their concerns publicly about the Tories' bully tactics, will the minister admit that the Health Quality Council cannot guarantee legal protection to doctors who have been intimidated?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I've answered this question numerous times. Perhaps the hon. member did not hear the answer, so I'll give it again. The Health Quality Council has embarked on an independent review with very capable, very qualified people involved in the review plus equally capable people, well-renowned and respected people, overseeing it in an advisory capacity. As part of that, they also have assured anyone who wants to come forward the full protection as given under the Alberta Evidence Act.

Dr. Swann: Well, given that Dr. Garbutt said that only a judicial inquiry will restore his confidence and that of thousands of other professionals in the accountability of the health care system, how many more times does the minister need to hear this before he calls a public inquiry?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, everyone is entitled to their opinion, and I hope the hon. member will afford me mine. We've made it very clear here that the process that we're following is with the Health Quality Council. They're doing an assurance quality review of the very items that were asked in this House regarding the impact of wait times in emergency rooms, regarding access to cancer care, and regarding the issue of relationships with physicians. Nobody is championing that cause more than they are, but I want to add my championship to that as well because we're encouraging doctors to speak out, and I'm glad that's happening.

Dr. Swann: Well, encouraging isn't working because they know the truth, Mr. Minister.

Why is the minister more concerned about letting the scandal die than doing what is right and calling a public inquiry? What are you afraid of?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think the process is working very well, and nobody is asking for it to slow down. We're simply saying that this review is just starting up, and let's give it a chance to complete itself. There will be a report in three months, another one in six months, and in nine months we'll have a report, I'm told, and we'll have some recommendations on how to address and fix whatever problems are found.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has the world's finest front-line health care staff, yet under this government they suffer in a culture of fear and intimidation. Dr. Paul Parks again today with the AMA emergency medical section supports the Health Quality Council on ER wait times and outcomes, not on issues of threat and intimidation. The only solution, as Parks said, is for a public inquiry, quote, to ensure a similar culture of intimidation and punishment of patient advocates never occurs again. End quote. When will the minister listen to the thousands of doctors and others? Find your backbone, and call a public inquiry.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I met with Dr. Paul Parks and Dr. Sobeilman just a couple of nights ago. We had a very thorough – let's call it robust – discussion on emergency wait times, and even they acknowledged that significant improvements have been made. I'll tell you where the improvements have been made. We've reduced the overall length of stay in emergency departments by as much as 50 per cent. That's tremendously good news. We've also seen reductions of up to 60 per cent in the number of EIPs; to explain again, emergency in-patients. Those are two very significant improvements. I've acknowledged that we need to do a little bit more on the four-hour and on the eight-hour, and we're working on that as well.

Dr. Swann: Divert. Deny.

Given that it's the front-line staff who demand a public inquiry, which friends and senior officials is this minister trying to protect? Who are you protecting, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, sometimes you have to protect people in this House from accusations just like that, and I'll stand here and defend people who are after better health outcomes, which is what doctors are all pledged to do. That's why today Alberta Health Services invested an additional $190 million specifically for emergency departments, who will get $19 million of that, $15 million will go to the radiation therapy speed-ups that are needed, $46 million will go to reduce surgical wait times in areas like cardiac and cancer surgery, and $110 million will go to reduce the number of patients who are in acute-care hospitals waiting for continuing care spaces. Tremendous use.

Dr. Swann: Throwing money at the problem – I'm sorry, Mr. Minister – will not restore confidence in the system.

Given that the president of the ER docs says that the culture of intimidation has not changed in six years, when are you going to stop covering up this scandal?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, nobody is covering up anything. In fact, quite the opposite would be true. What we're saying is that if you have an issue that you want to raise, please come forward. You'll be given confidentiality protection, you'll be given immunity protection, and you'll be given full protection against any creation of any liability under the Alberta Evidence Act. In fact, we're doing exactly the opposite of what he's accusing us of doing.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Surgical Wait Times

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the Canadian Institute for Health Information released its annual province-by-province comparison of wait times for the procedures first ministers agreed on in 2004 were highest priority. In a race to the bottom Alberta failed to achieve benchmark wait times for hip replacements, knee replacements, hip fracture repairs, cataract removals, and others. To the minister: given that Health and Well-ness's most recent annual report shows wait times for knee replacement surgeries actually increased last year to nearly double the benchmark, how does the minister intend to ensure Alberta's national ranking won't be equally abysmal next year?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are areas where we're seeing the need for more attention, and that's one reason why the announcement that was just released by Alberta Health Services, the 190 million new dollars, cites $46 million more to reduce surgical wait times in key areas, including cardiac and cancer surgeries, hip and knee replacement surgeries, and cataracts. Progress is being made, more money is being put in there, more staff are being hired and recruited to help, and more spaces are being made available for those important surgeries.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, can the minister explain why we've had a 10 per cent decrease in the last two years in the proportion of Alberta patients who receive cataract surgery within the recommended time frame?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, it would be just wonderful if the hon. member would take a little bit of time to do a little bit more research because if he did look at cataract wait times in particular, for example, he would know that in addition to the over 30,000, 32,000 cataract surgeries we're doing, we've just added another capacity to do 3,200 more. That's important because I can tell you that in Edmonton as a result of these kinds of initiatives wait-list times have come down by 2,900 patients. In Calgary the wait-lists have come down by 2,200 patients. Tremendous improvement. Really good news.

Dr. Swann: Again to the minister: when will Alberta Health Services update its website and provide a current hospital-by-hospital breakdown of wait times for surgical procedures?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that information is available. I believe they were talking about it yesterday and today, and that will come out in greater detail. It's part of what we talked about with Dr. Paul Parks and Dr. Sobeilman a couple of days ago. It will be reported not only in aggregate but also by hospital, at least the major ones in Edmonton and Calgary as a start. That's already under way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the health minister said that he only knew of one doctor who wanted a public inquiry. It's disturbing that someone on Treasury Board just can't seem to count. In fact, six AMA sections, representing 2,500 doctors, have called for this inquiry, 2,499 more than the health minister's estimate. Emergency medicine, addiction, anaesthesia, internal medicine, pediatrics, and rural family medicine have all called for this inquiry. To the minister: with such a growing number of doctors asking for this inquiry, how many more will you ignore . . .

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad she asked the first part of this question because I don't recall saying that he's the only one I've heard of. I recall saying that Dr. Garbutt's letter was the first one I was familiar with in writing. Now, chances are there are others who are out there.

I think I've already answered this many times. I could repeat it again. I could risk being called to order for repetition. People are quite, quite comfortable, I'm sure, with the Health Quality Council's approach. Let's give them a chance. They have to be given an equal chance to do what they've set out to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, there are two worlds: his world and reality.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Health Quality Council simply can't provide the level of legal protection our doctors want, something that has been pointed out to this government over and over, how much longer will the minister continue to use this excuse to not call a public inquiry?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no one is using any excuses whatsoever. If you'll indulge me, I'm going to read the Alberta Evidence Act. It's about 13 pages long. I'll read the whole thing, if you'll allow me. In particular, let me just quote section 9(5):

Neither

- (a) the disclosure of any information or of any document or anything contained in a document, or the submission of any report, statement, memorandum or recommendation, to a quality assurance committee for the purpose of its quality assurance activities,

nor

- (b) the disclosure of any information, or of any document or anything contained in a document, that arises out of the quality assurance activities of a quality assurance committee, creates any liability on the part of the person . . .

The Speaker: Minister, thank you very much. [interjections]

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I hope you'll be heard.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, what's amazing to me, Mr. Speaker, is that he thinks this is funny.

Will the minister at least admit that the only reason he's not calling a public inquiry is because it will confirm what we all know, that the government has used fear and intimidation to hide the truth about our health care system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the allegations were back in '05, '06, '07, whenever that was. What I can tell you is what is going on today. Today there's a much healthier relationship. As a result of the meeting with the Premier and myself on Friday, we're going to strengthen that relationship with the AMA. That's why a news release was put out on Monday, and that's why the president of the AMA put out a letter yesterday talking about strengthening the relationship between government and the AMA and, in turn, between AHS and the doctors serving in the system, and that will happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Energy claimed that after a massive 62 per cent jump in April, power prices will go back to March's level by next month. This claim is not supported by industry experts or by common sense. Will the Minister of Energy admit that his predictions of a price decrease are based more on his fantasies than actual marketplace reality? Or does he just not understand the unstable deregulated electricity market that he and his government have created?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to put this into context. In the month of February the annual retail price in the city of Edmonton was about 9 cents a kilowatt hour. That dropped to some 7 cents a kilowatt hour in March. It's projected that it will be about 11 cents a kilowatt hour in the month of April. If you take it from the lowest number in March, yes, it may be a 60 per cent increase. The Electric System Operator is projecting that for the month of May the average price per kilowatt hour will be back to the 6 or 7 cents.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that independent analysts have forecasted a hike in the electricity rates by as much as 50 per cent over the next few years and given that this makes a joke out of this minister's claim that prices will drop by 62 per cent next month, will this minister put his cabinet job on the line if at the end of this session power prices remain as high as they are?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what the history is and what the independent operator is projecting is going to be the price in the month of May. I guess if the price in the month of May is somewhere in the range of 6 or 7 cents, I'll ask the member if he'll be prepared to put his job on the line.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, if he will put his job on the line, I will certainly put my position as critic on the line as well.

The Speaker: I take it that was the question. [interjections] I take it that was the question.

Mr. Mason: That was the . . .

The Speaker: No. There are no preambles. I don't know how you can do that.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think I heard the member say that if the price of electricity in the city of Edmonton averages 6 or 7 cents a kilowatt hour in the month of May, he'd be prepared to put his job on the line.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Protection of Personal Information

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The sensitive private information of 7,000 Edmonton public school board employees has gone missing. The data was stored with no security protection on a memory stick. The Information and Privacy Commissioner has said that the information should not even have been kept in the first place. To the Minister of Service Alberta: can the minister, who is responsible for privacy legislation in Alberta, tell us what action she has taken to actively promote the protection of personal information by school boards in the last year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It should be noted that the Edmonton public school board is following the right procedure with respect to the loss of information by notifying the Privacy

Commissioner and co-operating with the investigation. That's the first step in this. They've let the affected employees know what's missing and are providing them with other details on protecting themselves. The school board does have strong policies to protect private information, but sometimes errors do happen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It should have been done before the information went missing.

Given that the minister disbanded the government's access and privacy division, which was responsible for province-wide compliance with privacy laws, for supporting the local public sector, can the minister explain who is supposed to do this now?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Mr. Speaker, there are privacy commissioners in every government department. As well, Service Alberta offers all the school boards information on understanding their obligations with working with FOIP. Also, we have resources available online. It's incumbent upon the school boards to do the right thing, and they are doing that right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit to collecting and reporting the cost to taxpayers of privacy breaches given that the Information and Privacy Commissioner has said that the privacy breaches are a big-ticket item for public bodies and that he will ask for an accounting of the costs of dealing with the breach?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that at the end of the day all of us need to be cautious when handling Albertans' private information, especially with laptops and portable iPads and all of those things. It's just absolutely critical that Albertans protect themselves. The Edmonton public school board is checking into it, and we'll continue to support them through Service Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Disaster Recovery Program for Flood Damage

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. In my lifetime I don't recall anything like this, at least not in this way. Medicine Hat, Cypress county, and Forty Mile county are experiencing damages not only along the creeks but in all areas. They're thankful for the disaster recovery program of 2010. That really helped. Can people still get assistance under the existing disaster recovery program?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I travelled to Medicine Hat along with the Premier and the ministers of Environment and Agriculture to see the situation first-hand and assess what sort of assistance will be needed.

Earlier this month, Mr. Speaker, we authorized a $3 million disaster recovery program to help residents and small businesses who experienced uninsurable losses from flooding between March 1 and 31. Now we recognize that new flood damage is occurring, and we'll be working with the municipalities to assess that damage.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that there's new damage to residences and small businesses in the areas I mentioned and there's potential for more, Mr. Minister, will you create a disaster recovery program for them for 2011?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as this event is still under way, we're working with the municipalities on a response presently and mitigation efforts. Our efforts are focused on helping municipalities assist their residents and make sure that they're safe, but once the threat is lowered, we'll work with them again and consider any application for disaster assistance at that particular time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Given that rural flooding is causing issues and with water standing on cropland and pastureland, a lot of water, how will you be able to direct your programs to address this excess water? For sure there is going to be a lot of land that will not be planted.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we did deploy the pumps that were requested by the municipalities for the water pumping in the area. We have also deployed all extra pumps that we have now to that area with the snow conditions that we're seeing today. Fortunately, the agricultural communities in southern Alberta are very strong supporters of the insurance programs we have in Alberta; about 90 per cent of them insure. We're watching it very closely and hope to be able to help this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Abandoned Wells

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy complained yesterday that these orphaned wells are decades old. Well, given that this government is also decades old, much of this that happened was under your watch. It is the height of hypocrisy for this government to say that polluters pay when we're talking about orphan wells. Almost nothing is required from industry to ensure that these wells are cleaned up, and the government has taken no steps to protect Albertans from the cost of future orphan wells. Back to the Minister of Energy: why hasn't the government done anything to fix the backlog and stop it happening in the future?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think I answered yesterday, Mr. Speaker. The government has done a significant amount in the last few years to try and catch up on the backlog, and I did say that more needed to be done. But for this member to infer that somehow industry isn't being assessed a fee, that's incorrect. In every application there is a portion of the fee that goes towards reclamation. As I said yesterday, we will continue to try and ensure that we get caught up on these wells.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister. It's not just about getting caught up. It's also about going forward. I mean, when wells continue to be drilled at such a rapid pace across this province, why does the government continue to ignore the need for a level of financial security, cash on the barrelhead, that is in line with the cost of reclamation?

Mr. Liepert: Well, as I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I think that that's exactly where we are today. What we are faced with is attempting to ensure that a whole series of wells from decades ago that clearly fell behind in terms of reclamation – that's where the catch-up is happening. I think that the current model that's in process for those wells that are drilled today and tomorrow is under control.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Back to the same minister. Given that when this question was asked of the Minister of Environment in 2009, the minister stated that the government recognized the industry was not contributing enough to reclaim in any reasonable timeline and that the response was to inject 30 million taxpayer dollars to speed it up, just what the minister has been referencing, why has nothing been done to collect enough even today? The timelines are still years long.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I come back to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the issue is around catching up on old wells, and I believe that the model that's in place today is going to address this issue as we go forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Pediatric Services for Children and Youth in Care

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many Albertans who don't have access to a family doctor. The impact of this reality must be particularly great for children and youth coming into this government's care, many of whom have experienced the trauma of physical and emotional neglect and abuse. My questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Children and Youth Services. How does your ministry ensure that children in your care receive the health care supports that they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct. Children coming into our care do have very complex needs, and we do need to have highly qualified health professionals to look after them. As I mentioned earlier, we have a new program here in Edmonton, pediatrics for kids in care, and that's to help ensure that our vulnerable young people have a medical assessment and that they have supports, which is critical because those health supports will then assist with the care development plan for that child or youth and assist with their optimal health and well-being.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you explain how this is different from the regular health care that is provided to children and youth when they come into care?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, all children coming into care, as you know, must have a medical appointment within the first 12 days, but this is a very new program that is unique. It's unique in that it benefits from the wisdom and the experience of very highly qualified pediatricians that are led by Dr. Masterson and Dr. Moriarty, whom I introduced to you earlier. Their expertise is needed to care for our children and youth who have been abused or neglected, and I can also tell you that with that focus that they will have with that service, health issues are going to be diagnosed earlier, and treatment can begin much sooner.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that there is collaboration, when can we anticipate this kind of collaboration being available province-wide?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, this initiative is delivered in partnership with Alberta Health Services and with community pediatrics. It does continue to gain momentum. I mentioned earlier Dr. Masterson's clinic, that opened in April, and that is dedicated solely to the children in our care. There are plans to have a pediatrician available at the Edmonton Youth Emergency Shelter as well as new partnerships that are also in the works with dentists and pharmacists to help ensure that our children and youth in care have a full range of health services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Residential Building Inspections

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to try this again today. The residential construction file shows a fragmented system scattered among Municipal Affairs, Service Alberta, and individual municipalities. There are mandatory inspections that take place at each critical stage of construction and, in addition, an independent home inspection that buyers can have done. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will you admit that bringing the various elements of the residential construction file under the purview of one minister would result in a better co-ordinated and more effective system for homeowners?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think the system is reasonably clear. For those who are purchasing an existing home or an older home, they depend on the home inspectors, and that falls under the Ministry of Service Alberta. For those who are looking at building new homes and need the services of building inspectors, or what we call our safety codes officers, then those individuals are under our responsibility. So on the new home side for the inspections that's our responsibility.

Ms Pastoor: Why are municipal building inspection reports for residential properties not available to the homebuyers, or are they required to use FOIP to get that information?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the safety codes officers are usually mandated and operate through accredited municipalities, and those particular reports are there. They're certainly subject to FOIP legislation to make sure that personal information is protected, but you could certainly make those requests to the municipalities. For those municipalities that are not accredited, then those reports are available through our ministry, through Municipal Affairs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Given the failure of municipal building inspectors to identify structural problems in the Penhorwood condominium complex in Fort McMurray, how does this affect the accreditation of that department? Will it be necessary to check other projects built by that company or the same inspectors?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, it's very difficult for me to speculate on what actually happened in Fort McMurray. Those buildings are being assessed by professional engineers, as is appropriate, and because it's subject to ongoing civil litigation, it's difficult for me to provide further comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Alberta Research and Innovation Authority

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Innovates is often touted as being a streamlined system, neatly divided into four focused but co-operative corporations, each with its own board, its own expertise, and its own plan for the future. It sounds very efficient. But then there is another layer: Alberta Research and Innovation Authority, ARIA, a group of international experts that advise government on research and innovation. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. With four corporations and the ministry already at the job, why do we need advice from ARIA?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you're aware, the government of Alberta is committed to making Alberta a leader in research and innovation, and to do that, we need to know what the world needs and what opportunities are out there. ARIA provides a very needed service in that experts from around the world come and provide opportunity to give feedback on where the next areas of importance are and how we may connect into the important research and innovation areas around the world so that we can continue to enhance and develop our research capacity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: how are the members of ARIA selected given that there's all kinds of talent out there?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through a rigorous process the members were selected as experts and leaders from around the world in their various fields. We have people like Laura Kilcrease here from Austin, Texas, who is well known as a venture capitalist, has worked in that area for many, many years, and is the managing director of Triton Ventures. Dr. Peter Riddles has made broad contributions in life sciences in Australia, and Dr. Chris Henshall has worked at the University of York in England for many, many years and brings a wealth of experience.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much, Minister, for that answer. What has ARIA contributed to Alberta Innovates so far?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The areas where they've brought significant assistance are in areas of advice around how we can continue to connect into the research and innovation portfolios around the world. Bringing technology to market is also going to be a critical piece if we are going to grow our knowledge economy, and members of this board have experience at bringing technology to market and are going to help us in that very needed and important part of growing Alberta's future economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Land-use Framework

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago this government committed to “greening our growth” by addressing competing land-use demands through a land-use framework by 2011. Instead, the deadline is here, the budget has been cut in half, and the minister is saying that the framework won’t be done until at least 2017. Will the minister admit that this delay is a failure to prepare Alberta for healthy economic growth?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that these things will fit together extremely well. In fact, the original concept of the land-use framework in the first place was not to stop development but to develop responsibly in the province of Alberta. That’ll be the focus of the land-use frameworks as we move them forward. What we have in place now is one draft plan that’s on the ground. We have the advice of another regional advisory council that we’re dealing with and, actually, very positive results from Albertans. This is about balancing the economy, the environment, and the social aspect . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. Hon. member, you’ve been called.

Ms Notley: Given that completion of the framework by 2017 would require the government to double the pace of its current progress with half the resources and that, therefore, it’s very unlikely, will the minister admit that the delay has nothing to do with more consultation and everything to do with the political decision to put land-use planning and environmental protection onto the back burner once again?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much. My stove only has a front burner, Mr. Speaker. I have no back burner. So what I’m doing is exactly – exactly – what the people of Alberta would expect me to do, and we’re doing this in a very responsible manner. At the moment Albertans understand that governments as well as people and industry in the province have a bit of a constrained budget. We’re operating inside of that budget and will deliver these programs and plans, that are going to be very constructive for Albertans in the long run.

Ms Notley: Given that they’re going to be delivered at least five years late, probably much more so, and given that the Tories lost control of an overheated economy before the last recession and given that this hurt Albertans in their communities last time, why is this government resorting to the same Wild West gold rush approach to development that everyone knows doesn’t work?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, one more time about this thing. What we’re dealing with right now is a situation where we have under the land-use framework seven regional plans in the province of Alberta based on watersheds. With the resources that we have prudently applied to this program, we have in front of us now a draft of the lower Athabasca regional plan, we have the advice from the South Saskatchewan Regional Advisory Council, and we’re working towards the North Saskatchewan terms of reference. They’ll all fall into place as we move through the program, and they will be in place by 2017.

Workers’ Compensation

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, Alberta’s prosperity depends on its workforce, and Alberta workers depend on their government to ensure workplace safety and, in the case of injury, fair compensation. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Workers’ Compensation Act is clear on providing benefits when the injury involves a total loss of sight, complete paralysis, and other similar kinds of disability. Can the minister explain the policy on compensation for a disability that is less clear cut such as a work-related lung condition?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Most definitely, Mr. Speaker. If a worker is diagnosed with a lung condition and it is determined that this condition is a result of employment activity, long-term impact of asbestosis, or another medical condition, the worker’s lung capacity is assessed, and using bell tables or Alberta Medical Association guides, the percentage of disability is assessed, and the worker is paid out accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Can the minister explain the policy on compensation for a disability that does not result from an immediate injury but emerges over time; for example, through long-term exposure to radiation or chemicals?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. A worker who presents herself in front of the WCB usually presents herself as a result of a report being filed by a medical doctor. If there is consensus in the medical community that the medical condition that the worker exhibits is as a result of any type of employment-related activity, a claim is accepted, and the worker is compensated accordingly for the loss or percentage of loss of health.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Given that a comprehensive workers’ compensation program is fundamental to a strong workforce and a competitive economy, will the minister commit to reviewing the Workers’ Compensation Act and the WCB’s policies on adjudication of claims so as to ensure fairness in compensating workers for work-related permanent disability?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the member asked me two questions on how claims are adjudicated. I told him so. He hasn’t identified an area where the unfairness may exist. If he finds an area within the act, policies, and/or regulations where there is unfairness, please bring it forward to me, and I’ll gladly take a look at it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Compensation for Mineral Rights in Parks

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Supreme Court of Canada back in 1985 decided that when the B.C. government cancelled mineral rights in Wells Gray provincial park, the holders of those rights were entitled to compensation but not for loss of opportunity or loss of profits. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What does the Supreme Court of Canada’s decision in B.C. versus Tener mean for the creation of conservation areas in the lower Athabasca region?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, this information, of course, was kind of originally brought to us by the opposition. They weren’t quite sure what this was all about, so I thought I should perhaps inform the House. The information that we have is that in the B.C. versus Tener case, from 1985, the Supreme Court found that mineral interests had been expropriated in the course of the creation of a new provincial park. The case involved freehold mineral rights, and it is not completely clear how it would apply to other types of interests. We only have a draft regional plan at this point. There will be discussion around what tenure, if any, might be repatriated.

The Speaker: Let's be careful about legal interpretation. This is about the fourth question today that wanted legal interpretation.

The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: what kind of consents will be affected by the conservation areas?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, we usually kind of think of the situation in the oil sands as the energy region and the oil sands only in Athabasca, but in fact the region has a very diverse economy, and the proposed conservation areas could potentially affect leases for forestry and metallic and industrial minerals. Compensation provisions laid out in the relative legislation – for example, the Mines and Minerals Act or the Forests Act – support that the regional planning being done will make sure that there is clear and concise compensation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Lower Athabasca Regional Plan

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night the Minister of SRD stated that $1.9 million was spent on the lower Athabasca regional plan, but whenever we've asked, the government refuses to say what the economic costs to the government or the leaseholders will be if the government rescinds the leases of these companies affected by the draft plan. To the minister of finance. So that Albertans can give informed feedback, what is the actual land-sales revenue that the province received from the sale of these leases that are now proposed to be rescinded?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, there is a document in front of the Alberta public right now that is a proposed land-use framework for the area, and no decisions have been made as to the exact location or size or substance of the conservation areas. We are working very closely with all the parties, be it lumber, be it oil, be it municipality, to work together to collectively develop the right balance.

Mr. Hinman: Nice dodge.

To the Energy minister: given that you've expressed faith that technological advances in reclamation efforts will enable oil sands extraction in the future with a minimal footprint, do you really support breaking contracts and declaring billions of barrels of Alberta oil off limits forever?

Mr. Liepert: Well, the facts are that we have some 170 billion barrels of proven reserves in northeastern Alberta. The draft plan, that lays out conservation areas, allows us to develop 170 billion barrels of proven reserves, Mr. Speaker, so I'm not sure what the member is referring to relative to contracts.

Mr. Hinman: Given that the Energy minister claims that this is an inconsequential government draft, that is ridiculous when the fact is that in a short time this will be the government plan. It's clear that the only draft is between this . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy to answer the question. As has been pointed out many times in this House, we have a draft plan, that's out for consultation. In discussions with industry that I've had since the draft plan was released, it has been very well received. There's a recognition that we have to have a balance between conservation and industrial development, and I think we've achieved that balance, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Forest Grove Care Centre Roof Collapse

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday just before 1 p.m., while residents of the Forest Grove nursing home gathered to have lunch, the facility's roof caved in on dozens of them. Luckily no one was hurt thanks to the heroic, fast-thinking, well-trained staff, who were able to evacuate the dining area and get the residents back safely to their rooms. Could the Minister of Health and Wellness update the House, the residents, and their loved ones on the situation at the Forest Grove nursing home?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much. I want to thank this member for immediately bringing this to my attention yesterday so that immediate action could be taken. As he has said, the important thing right now is that no one was injured. There are 245 residents there, a number of staff. Immediate action was taken. The building is not ours, Mr. Speaker. Nonetheless, an inspection has been done, and it is deemed safe to occupy again. Only one area was affected, fortunately. That was the dining room area, where some repairs were occurring. But everybody is okay.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: are there any contingency plans in place in the event that residents find themselves in a similar situation and are required to be evacuated?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is yes. There are contingency plans of all sorts, including plans for emergency preparedness, including plans for emergency evacuation should that become necessary. Those plans are there. They are in place because safety is a number one concern. Should the action have to be taken, I can assure the hon. member and the residents there that it will be.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. Since many of these seniors' homes are aging and in need of repair and ongoing maintenance, does your department have any monitoring mechanism in place to make sure that these places are safe for residents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am very grateful that nobody was seriously injured in yesterday's incident. I need to remind all members that Alberta has strong building and safety codes in place to protect all Albertans. In this particular case the city of Calgary is an accredited municipality, and they will do a follow-up on the actual event. Our building codes apply to new buildings, and our codes are still very, very strong and very applicable and okay in this particular situation.

Compensation for Soft-tissue Injuries

Mr. MacDonald: The government has quietly extended the insurance regulations setting the soft-tissue injury cap until 2016, with little consultation or evaluation on the outcomes for victims of traffic accidents. The cap now sits at over $4,500 and is a blunt instrument that doesn't take into account, unfortunately, individual circumstances. To the minister of finance: will the government conduct a true review in public of the soft-tissue injury cap to ensure justice for victims is occurring?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, that statement is not only not true; it doesn't represent what Albertans have been telling us. We have done extensive review. We have been all the way to the Supreme Court, which said that it is not only legal, but it is in the public interest. It has saved Alberta motorists $1.2 billion in premiums. It has hurried up, has actually accelerated the opportunity for people in automobile accidents to receive treatment. It is working very well for them medically, and it's working very well financially, and it has been consulted on widely across Alberta. It's not very well liked by the criminal trial defence lawyers.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, given that the citizens and the innocent victims of traffic accidents know that this government looks after the insurance industry, not their interests, will the minister now gather statistics on the adequacy of the soft-tissue injury cap in allowing victims, innocent victims of traffic accidents, full and complete recovery from their injuries? When he gathers these statistics, will he present them to the public through the House?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the insurance industry is governed by the insurance board and the insurance superintendent. I had the privilege of meeting with him a few weeks ago. The data that surrounds the entire issue regarding soft-tissue injury – the recovery times, the back-to-work times – have very, very definitely supported the policy that the government made around the legislation. That information will be made available if the hon. member even wanted to go into the report, and certainly he could ask our office for it.

Mr. MacDonald: I will certainly ask your office for it, and I appreciate that, hon. minister.

Now, given that the injuries from soft-tissue damage can be life altering, does the minister guarantee that the insurance cap as it exists today ensures justice for traffic accident victims?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, there has always been a difficult balance between paying for pain and suffering and soft-tissue injury and injuries that may stay with people for a lifetime. I'm not suggesting for a minute that there aren't whiplash and others that can, but on balance we have to take medical advice overtop of legal fees. The medical advice is that people who receive timely treatment get better faster, and that's what we're trying to achieve with this regulation, and it has done that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Highway 529

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency office has received literally hundreds of concerns over a number of years about highway 529, a highway that services Little Bow provincial park, the Southern Alberta Bible Camp, and the Little Bow Resort. The west half is paved, and the east half is still gravel. To the Minister of Transportation: what improvements are being planned for secondary highway 529?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm very aware of this member's concerns with this highway. The oil industry is very busy in that area and has heavy use of that highway. But I have some great news for the hon. member and his constituents for all of the hard work he's been doing for his constituents. We are doing an overlay this year on the paved portion of this highway from Champion to Little Bow provincial park access.

Mr. McFarland: Well, thanks for the good news, Mr. Speaker.

While the east half is still under gravel, are there any plans to do anything other than put down a little bit of dust control?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I've got more great news for this hon. member. We're going to convert that gravel part that he's talked about to pavement this year. That means that by this fall you'll be able to drive on a fully paved highway on 529 from Champion junction to highway 845. That's 20 kilometres worth of brand new pavement. I would say that that's far beyond dust control. That's going to be a great highway.

Mr. McFarland: I know you're jealous, Mr. Speaker, but what will happen to the department's priorities if this continued adverse weather goes on throughout the summer?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, every year my department sets a construction schedule, partly based on what we actually can get done in a year. Our contracts are structured to accommodate a certain amount of bad weather days, and very few projects fail to get done due to weather. I know things look pretty bleak out there today, but I'm very confident that things will turn nice and that we will get a construction season.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

High-speed Rail Station

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. To that same minister. The government's announcement of a new location for a high-speed rail terminal in Edmonton caught just about everybody by surprise. Given that the government had already bought and paid for a different downtown site for the station, has the government done any technical or financial or engineering studies on the suitability of the new site?

Mr. Ouellette: Not at this time, Mr. Speaker, although on that new site we're on a right-of-way that is owned by rail today. CP rail or CN, one of the two, goes into that site. I believe that having two options within the city is great for all Albertans, and I do think that as soon as time permits, we will be doing some work on the viability, as he says.

Dr. Taft: Given that it's better to study first and buy second, I would have thought you'd have done it differently.

Given that the new site announced last week requires a 20-kilometre detour to the east before trains can turn south to Calgary and given that high-speed rail can cost tens of millions of dollars per kilometre, how much more will the line cost to this station compared to the line that would have come over the High Level Bridge?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member seems to always have a little trouble deciphering things, I find, in this House. I do believe that that site is already there for something else, and it's great that we have the opportunity to possibly put high-speed rail into it when we feel the time is right to move ahead with that.

Dr. Taft: Well, then, perhaps the minister can help me decipher. Is it actually the case, Mr. Minister, that you don't have a clue whether this new location is going to cost tens of millions of dollars more in high-speed rail construction than the site you already own?

Mr. Ouellette: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. He's absolutely wrong. I'm today not at the point to know the exact price of one or the other. I just know that it's a great option for Albertans that we will be able to move there at some point in time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the Oral Question Period for today and this week. Nineteen members were recognized today. There were 112 questions and responses.

We'll continue the Routine in 15 seconds from now.

Notices of Motions

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) to advise the House that on Monday, April 18, 2011, Motion for a Return 11 will be dealt with.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to provide and table the requisite number of copies of the 2010 annual report from the Alberta College of Medical Diagnostic and Therapeutic Technologists. It's all about being committed to improving patient care, according to its title.

Secondly, I'd also like to table copies of the Crowsnest Pass Herald from which I quoted yesterday, where Dr. Garbutt had said how pleased he was with some of the actions being taken recently, last fall by Alberta Health Services. That's October 5, 2010.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to table the requisite number of copies of a report of the International Labour Conference in Geneva, Switzerland, to which now Alberta and Canada are signatories, dealing with occupational health and safety.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and present the appropriate number of copies of a petition with 95 names. It urges the government of Alberta to "conduct a full feasibility study of the Meridian Dam."

Mr. Speaker, my second tabling is as chair of the Standing Committee of Leg. Offices and in accordance with section 19(5) of the Auditor General Act. I would like to table five copies of a report by the Auditor General entitled Report of the Auditor General of Alberta, April 2011.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition documents which quote Dr. Paul Parks calling for a public judicial inquiry in order to protect doctors who have the backbone to speak out.

My second tabling is the requisite five copies of letters from citizens in Lethbridge who are concerned for youth who may not receive the help they need to turn their lives around because of the devastating 40 per cent funding cut to 5th on 5th Youth Services programs. They are Geoff Doeve, Robin Ray, Brenda Bryant, Theresa Lowe, Alix Kampen, Jeff Meadows, Jennifer Rogan, Bruce McKillop, Brittany Sumbalisky, Jeffrey Coffman, Margaret McKillop, A. Oishi, and Laura Nugent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling is an e-mail from Deborah Clarke to the Minister of Employment and Immigration in which she adamantly affirms the Alberta Liberal position that before importing temporary American workers, this government should make every effort to employ, first, qualified Albertans and, secondly, qualified Canadians.

My second set of tablings, Mr. Speaker, concerning the clear-cutting that is about to soon begin in the Castle-Crown, comes from Juell DeSpain, Terri Miller, Rose Ogorzaly, Russell Blalack, Rosemary Cyr, Marjorie Olsen, Ed Baxter, Krista Murphy, Graham Smith, Ian McGrath, Allan Stein, Patti Kemp, Gail Jordan, Marleen Paulus, Anne Streeter, Jason Uttley, Pamela Wilkey, Bob Hearn, Tony Little, Linda French, Cathi Basler, Mary Alice Madden, Lynette Dumont, Matthew Herman, and Robert Cerello.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a program from a very special event held in Edmonton last evening. Last night the Rotary clubs of the capital region hosted the 14th annual integrity awards. Twelve non-Rotarians were recognized for their commitment and contributions to their communities in our province. There are some recipients of particular note to this Assembly, including Muriel Abdurahman, a former member of this Assembly, who was recognized by the Sherwood Park Centennial club, and Jason Stoltz, recognized by the Rotary Club of Edmonton Gateway. We probably all know Mr. Stoltz in our role as MLAs because he's the executive director of the Forum for Young Albertans, which is under way here at the Legislature this week.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail I received from Paul Gibson, who says he has been diagnosed with severe chronic depression, severe chronic panic disorder, and posttraumatic stress disorder. Mr. Gibson writes to express significant concerns about the treatment that he received recently in an emergency department. He went there for help and was unable to find support or treatment for his particular illnesses.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo council expressing their concern with the almost half a million dollars that are going to be lost to the extra $15 that Service Alberta is intending to charge municipalities without any notice.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of Dr. Sherman, hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, an Alberta Doctors' Digest article dated March-April 2011 entitled Stephen Duckett, Reflections on 20 or So Eventful Months; a Calgary Herald article reprint dated October 22, 2010, entitled MDs Warn of ER Failure, Clear Out Beds or Emergency Will "Collapse," Province Told; an Edmonton Journal article reprint dated January 8, 2007, entitled Capital Health Vows to Clean up Accounting, Auditor General's Tongue-lashing over Padded Costs Sparks Change.

2:50 Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. At this point I would ask, given our Standing Order 7(6), if the Government House Leader would share with the Assembly the projected government business for the week commencing the 18th of April.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, on Monday the 18th it's private members' business.

On Tuesday the 19th in the afternoon in Committee of Supply all members will want to be present for the estimates of the Department of Education, I'm sure, and then as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday the 20th in the afternoon in Committee of Supply the estimates of the Department of Infrastructure and as per the Order Paper. In the evening, as was filed with the estimates schedule, the Committee of Supply will meet to vote the main estimates. That meeting, for the reference of members, is at 7:30 rather than the start time of the policy field committees that members have been used to. Presuming the passage of Government Motion 13 this afternoon and for clarification for members, once the Committee of Supply rises and reports, we would anticipate debate of Government Motion 12 and Bill 11, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011, for second reading.

On Thursday the 21st for second reading in the afternoon Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011; in Committee of the Whole Bill 5, Notice to the Attorney General Act; Bill 6, Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011; Bill 12, Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011; Bill 14, Wills and Succession Amendment Act, 2011; and as per the Order Paper.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

Evening Sitzings

13. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) commencing Wednesday April 20, 2011, following the vote on main estimates and the report from Committee of Supply, the Assembly shall meet for consideration of government business and thereafter shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for the remainder of the 2011 spring sitting unless on motion by the Government House Leader made before 6 p.m., which may be made orally and without notice, the Assembly is adjourned to the following sitting day.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first purpose of the motion is to clarify so that there's no misunderstanding that on Wednesday the 20th, once the Committee of Supply rises, it is in the House, and the House would be available to sit that evening. I just wanted to ensure that there was no misunderstanding about that. Then, of course, it's to deal with government business in the following weeks now that we approach the end of the estimates process.

[Government Motion 13 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 12

Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011

[Adjourned debate March 15: Mr. Dallas]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege once again to rise to debate Bill 12, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011. I think it's worth putting this piece of legislation in some context. I assume all members of this Assembly are aware of the role of AIMCo, but I'm not sure that all people listening to this debate from homes and offices and so on will be familiar with it. AIMCo was established under legislation to manage a vast amount of public money on behalf of the various stakeholders, actually, some of it being managed on behalf of the government of Alberta and the citizens of Alberta and some of it being managed on behalf of various pension funds and others.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

That organization, AIMCo, has been in place now for perhaps three years, two years maybe, and I think is still in some ways becoming entrenched or established in their role and still working on how to best manage funds in relation, for example, to pension groups and others. It's still a bit of a growing process. Part of that growing process is the need to tune up the founding legislation. I think that's what this amounts to, Mr. Speaker.

My understanding of the bill is that it basically clarifies some of the structure of the corporation. It's an attempt to remove a little bit of ambiguity that might have been in the original legislation. When I look at the bill, which, I might note, is really quite brief, it seems to particularly focus on the roles and responsibilities of the directors and officers of AIMCo.

I won't stretch this out at great length because I know the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has comments he wants to bring forward on this piece of legislation, so there's no need to overdo the repetition on this.

I do think that it's vitally important in this day and age, particularly with developments in the financial sector since AIMCo was established, that we ensure that the legislation guiding and controlling AIMCo is to the highest standards. We have witnessed enormous scandal in the financial sector around the world in the last two or three years, and we need to make sure that the legislation of this House is at or very near the leading edge of legislation anywhere. If there's one anything that we've learned in Canada from the financial meltdown in the last two or three years, it is the importance of good regulation and the value of good government.

Now, we have some members of this Assembly and one of the opposition parties in particular that often take a role or view that, basically, government is a last resort. In fact, that's a phrase I've read written by a member of the Wildrose Alliance. Government should be a last resort. Well, our view in the Alberta Liberal caucus, Mr. Speaker, is that governments should be the first resort in some situations. Those situations might range from building roads or schools or hospitals. They also include managing the financial sector.

It may be that the biggest reason Canada didn't fall deeply into financial crisis and into problems of mass unemployment and bankruptcy and all kinds of issues in the last three years is that we have had a relatively well-regulated financial sector. If you compare the performance of the financial sector in Canada with that in the United States or that in Britain or much of Europe or much of the rest of the world, we can see how important it is for us to be vigilant and to be good regulators and to be arm's length and to avoid things like conflicts of interest and to ensure appropriate disclosure.

That brings me directly back to Bill 12, Mr. Speaker, which takes some brief but, I hope, important steps in that direction. It increases or clarifies the responsibility of the directors and officers of AIMCo. I think that's crucial because, frankly, it seems to me that within the first year or less of AIMCo being founded, there was some controversy in the financial and energy sectors over an investment that AIMCo made in a very prominent drilling company. I don't need to name the company here in the Assembly, but there was a lot of controversy around that.

Now, the debate at the time was over the fairness of the investment and whether or not the investment was made properly and following due process. The point that I think we need to dwell on is that it may very well have been made following due process, but what we have to make sure is that it is not only made following due process but that it is seen to be made following due process. That's the kind of difference that makes sure that the public can have real confidence in an organization like AIMCo, and I think Bill 12 might help clarify some of the confusion that led to controversies such as the one I just referred to.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments I will take my seat and listen with rapt interest to the comments of any of my colleagues in this Assembly. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, if you don't mind, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, Bill 12, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011, warrants a lot of interest and scrutiny by members of this Assembly. Hopefully, it will have the scrutiny and the interest of members. Bill 12, as we have been told and our research indicates, adds the requirement that the directors and officers act honestly and in good faith. One can only hope that that's being done now.

When you look at AIMCo, the fact is that we have over $71 billion worth of assets in one investment pool, everything from pensions to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund through to other funds that the government holds, including one or two endowment funds. You look at the board of directors – I have the annual report here, Mr. Speaker – and we have the former chief executive officer and chairman of the board of the Toronto-Dominion Bank; we have the president and CEO of G. Capital Inc., Mr. George Gosbee; we have some fine corporate leaders from across this country; we have Daryl Katz from Edmonton here. We have 10 members on the board.

I was surprised when I asked in the House here earlier in the session, Mr. Speaker, if perhaps we should have as a representative, or maybe more than one, on the board of directors of AIMCo some individuals who at some point in time, if not already, are drawing pensions from the pools that are being collectively invested by this board. [interjection] That's true, but I think to have them directly on the board would be prudent.

For some reason whenever this board was set up, individuals such as those that may be or are collecting a LAPP pension, the local authorities pension plan, are not on there. I think, certainly, they should be, but they're not. I got sort of a brusque or a brazen answer from the minister of finance, and life went on. But when you look at AIMCo – and I would encourage all members to look at the 2009-10 annual report and see for themselves – I can't understand why we would be reluctant to put representatives from the pensions that are invested in this pool on the board.

Now, we're talking about the directors and officers acting in good faith, and we're hoping that this bill will clarify the government's ownership structure of the corporation to remove any ambiguous language around directors' conflicts of interest. We're also looking at other amendments to make sure that AIMCo must act in the best interests of its clients when delivering their investment management services.

Speaking of investment management services, this is an issue that the government goes to all the time whenever we compare internal and external costs for assets under management. It's quite interesting to compare those costs. We had a discussion on this at the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee quarterly meeting the other day. I asked questions on this matter in the fall session, and I came to the conclusion that the minister of finance at the time wasn't up to speed on the file because it was the most confusing of answers.

Whenever we look at the costs externally for assets under management, they're totally out of control. Totally out of control. The assets that were managed externally, Mr. Speaker, lost $542 million in value, but of course we see performance fees for these losses of $25 million, other investment costs for this pool of cash, which was in value over $12 billion, that were $126 million. It was interesting to hear that: oh, well, we're going to get these costs under control, and isn't this wonderful? My question, which went unanswered, was: who was responsible for this? Who was responsible for setting up these deals where, regardless of whether any value was created, these costs were incurred? That's why Bill 12 as we know it would be an excellent bill if we will be able to get to the bottom of this.

Now, a constituent came into the office last Friday, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, and talked about AIMCo. This gentleman was an accountant by profession but retired. He asked me if AIMCo, of all organizations, was going to be investing in the new arena in Edmonton. I was quite taken aback by that question from the constituent. He's got every right to direct that question my way, as far as I can see. He had read in our householder that I had sat on the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee, and it was a valid question. I said: no, I don't think so, but Mr. Katz, of course, is on the board, and I don't think that is anything that's been discussed. Certainly, it hasn't been discussed, to my knowledge, in this House, Mr. Speaker. So that would be an example of an investment that AIMCo possibly, potentially could make.

They invested recently in a 3P freeway – I believe you could describe it as that – in Chile. Chile is a rapidly developing country with a lot of resources that the rest of the world wants and is willing to pay a good price for, so maybe that road is a good investment. We will see through the course of time.

The governance of AIMCo is very, very important, and that's why we need to have a close look at what is going on with this bill. The motivation behind turning AIMCo into a Crown corporation was supposedly to remove the politics from investment decisions. If investing in an oil company, for example, makes sense from an investment management perspective, it should not be impacted by politics. AIMCo's mandate is to maximize returns for pension plans and endowment funds and not to worry about the political leanings of the day.

Now, there should be some caution in fully supporting this bill. I haven't had a chance to go through the Auditor General's report, that was tabled here this afternoon, for April 2011, but certainly the office of the Auditor General has highlighted several concerns with AIMCo in the past. While it is desirable to have AIMCo as an arm's-length organization, again I would urge this House to consider putting some individuals that have an interest through their future pension income on the board. I see absolutely nothing the matter with that. It's not unusual. It's not an unreasonable request. But until the concerns raised by the office of the Auditor General have been sufficiently addressed, the government should not entirely set AIMCo free, so to speak. The minister of finance is ultimately responsible for the pension and endowment funds under management; thus, the minister of finance should ensure that AIMCo is functioning properly. AIMCo now has, certainly, a number of issues. We all know that we don't have effective whistle-blower legislation in this province, Mr. Speaker.

Now, if members want to refer to the annual report for 2009-10 of the AIMCo board, or the AIMCo corporation, whatever you want to call it, whatever you're familiar with, you can easily see or follow what I am saying here. When AIMCo was set up, of course, we had a lot of trouble in the world financial market. In fact, there was a meltdown of historic proportions, or of historic record, in the fall of 2008. At that time there were significant writedowns of $2 billion to $3 billion in paper losses in public and private investments within AIMCo. AIMCo has always operated at arm's length from the government following the creation of it by a former minister. I believe I can name him because he's no longer a member: Dr. Oberg. I think he was responsible for bringing this forward. We heard the arguments of what was going on in British Columbia and that it would certainly work as well in Alberta.

Since its creation, AIMCo has delivered minimum value-added to the investment pool. While this is going on, AIMCo has introduced what some people would call a Wall Street style investments compensation structure. This structure rewards underperformance with multimillion-dollar bonuses presided over huge budget increases at the expense of taxpayers and pension members in this province. I don't have the confidence. Perhaps I will over time. I realize that the corporation was set up at a very difficult time in our international financial history, but we have to be careful here.

Now, AIMCo introduced this Wall Street style, as they call it, compensation structure at the same time that such compensations were coming under intense worldwide scrutiny by everyone, from the governments that bailed out some of these enterprises to the taxpayers that were footing the bill and, in some cases, homeowners and pensioners. While it is true, in my view, that compensation levels are comparable to those of the largest Canadian pension plans, AIMCo's incentive structure differs in that it is set up so as to grant these million-dollar payments even in the absence of real value-added, Mr. Speaker. Specifically, whenever we look at the 2008 writedowns with the $2 billion to $3 billion in mark-to-market paper losses incurred in the calendar year 2008, it's important that we remember that it's calendar years, not fiscal years here.

Now, in 2008 it was implied that there would be $2 billion to $3 billion of mark-to-market paper gains in subsequent years irrespective of any value-added activity by management. Indeed, over $1 billion in gains were recognized in calendar year 2009 and, my research indicates, over $500 million in calendar year 2010.

Now, there was a stretched value-added target of $500 million given for calendar year 2009 and for calendar year 2010 in full expectation of exceeding the target due to the forthcoming mark-to-market recoveries on the legacy assets.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A couple of reference points in the discussion this afternoon, which I have followed with considerable interest. I hope that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview hasn't been too disappointed by some of the observations of his colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar relative to this bill. Quite frankly, the content in Bill 12, that we're examining today, and the improvements really do not in any way impinge upon some future amendments that could be contemplated. But the Minister of Finance and Enterprise, now the minister of Treasury and Finance and Enterprise, has been quite right not to add an additional opportunity, if you will, for people who are members of the public service, both serving on AIMCo as well as our government appointing those members to pension boards. I think that the duality of that role might be wrong.

Let's not lose sight of what AIMCo was constructed for. It was a construct made to be at arm's length from government to earn as much revenue as possible in the best interests of the taxpayers of Alberta. The shareholders of Alberta want more money out of it. There are other avenues for people who are recipients of pension funds to be a part of that, but the primary purpose for AIMCo is to divest it of some of the bureaucratic impositions that might have been in place in the past to manage the funds, with the hope that we could gain even more. By the member's own acknowledgment there has been a stellar performance of AIMCo in 2010, and I want to just make that point.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview made the point that the directors not only have to do what's right and prudent but appear to do so. I remember clearly the investment in the company that was contemplated and was done, in fact, without consultation with the political process, and by the acknowledgment of Edmonton-Gold Bar that's exactly what should be done.

The uniqueness of that investment in that particular company was that it was done at a time when AIMCo in the past had not been investing many of its dollars in Alberta-based companies. But this particular investment, which has proven to be extremely satisfactory and extremely wise because it has benefited the people of Alberta – it's gained very strong financial returns – was an opportunity not only to invest in the very best province and in a company in the very best province but to in fact illustrate where this could be something that could be contemplated.

We've gone all the way from a situation where Norwegian funds, the sovereign wealth fund, has chosen not to invest within its country, but in Alberta the delineation of AIMCo gave an opportunity to look at that through the eyes of the directors. What is our responsibility here for the directors? To appoint the very best and to make sure that they act in a prudent fashion. The wording in this assures that and talks about the responsibility of the individual and the compliance of that individual in the conduct that they're imported to have and follows through with that.

One small, additional comment I should make is that I, too, have not had a long and extensive review of the newly tabled Auditor General's report. Much to my belief, from page 101 in the April 2011 report of the Auditor General, tabled today, the outstanding things that have been contemplated are primarily centred in AIMCo around the technology and the importance of getting that technology right. That has been worked on not only by AIMCo but by Finance and Enterprise so that the management controls are in place.

It was always understood that that would take a period of time because there are many shared swap agreements. Managing those and managing the financial reporting requirements are, I think, being prudently done. The quote in the report is, "The following [management] recommendations are outstanding and are not yet ready for follow-up audits." So the AG has mentioned that.

If I might just say, I think we've heard a lot on this bill, but I'm assured, at least, that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview states that he would support it. I would hope that the rest of the Assembly would similarly support this bill and get on with it.

The Deputy Speaker: We have 27 seconds for Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. MacDonald: For a question, please.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question, and certainly I have more than 27 seconds. Correct?

The Deputy Speaker: Sixteen seconds now.

Mr. MacDonald: Was that a speech or a question?

Ms Blakeman: That was a question to you.

Mr. MacDonald: That was a question to me? How would I know that, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: Now we get back to the bill. Any hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It is also a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 12, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011. My comments will be quite brief. I've just been scanning the piece of legislation right now, attempting to get a sense of the purpose of this legislation. I think, just as sort of an overarching statement, my understanding is that when AIMCo was first established, in 2007, it was the position of the NDP caucus at that time that we were not necessarily in support of imposing this governance model upon the management function of these important public dollars. We were concerned at the time that there were certain key elements of the work of AIMCo over which the government must have continued accountability.

One of the areas, for example, was the issue of executive compensation. For instance, in 2008-09 I believe the five top executive positions received a total of $5.3 million in compensation. I believe that was at a time when AIMCo had actually suffered some very significant losses, but I stand to be corrected on the timing of that. Again, in 2010 we see that these positions received $2.7 million in compensation.

The concern at the time was that in certain areas around accountability we were losing control. Certainly, that was one area, and we see that this bill does not address that area in any way. I remain concerned about the application of different sets of rules to these staff at AIMCo. Having said that, this particular bill seems most focused on redefining a little bit the goals and the purpose of AIMCo, in particular focusing on the objectives of the board to act in the best interests of the designated entities.

Of course, there is sound reason for establishing that objective. Absolutely. These are important funds, and we want to ensure that these funds grow in the way that is best for Albertans, so I'm not unaware of the arguments around establishing that particular priority. However, in doing that, we also see the deletion of the current section which requires the board to consider whether in the exercise of a power in the best interests of the corporation the Crown or the director or an agent of the corporation has to have due regard to the interests of the Crown in doing that. It seems to me what we're doing is that we are making it very clear or we are limiting the degree to which AIMCo has to have due regard to the interests of the Crown. Again, I'm just flipping through this bill right now trying to get a sense of this, and if I'm wrong, I look forward to being corrected in subsequent bill debate on this.

I'm concerned, then, for those obvious cases where you can see the interests of the designated entities coming into conflict with the interests of the Crown and how that might be resolved. Of course, the quintessential example of that, which I think there has been discussion on with respect to AIMCo in the past, is the practice of investing in the tobacco industry. It's very clear that it's not in the interests of the Crown to promote the tobacco industry because, of course, of the cost to the public purse in health care costs that have been clearly associated with the tobacco industry. That actually has a negative impact on the interests of the Crown as it relates to expenditure on health care costs, et cetera.

[The Speaker in the chair]

On the flip side it may well be something that is in the best interests of an investor because we know that tobacco companies are awfully good at making money. That's kind of an example of the conflict. I'm curious about the impact of these changes in terms of redefining the primary objectives of the AIMCo board and the corporation. What is the outcome of those changes on that kind of scenario? I think that we need to ensure that there is some political responsibility. These are public funds, and I think the public wants to know that we're not going to be investing in, you know, companies that, say, engage in activities in developing countries which would be subject to international criminal investigation, for instance. I mean, there's a whole long list of activities that one would be concerned about. Essentially, we're talking about different levels of ethical investment.

I suppose that at the end of the day, when you look even specifically at the interests of the Crown, you have to consider how these things impact back on the government as a whole. I would be looking to see what kind of explanation would come from the sponsor of this bill with respect to what the implications are for this change on these kinds of concerns and discussions, which have taken place in this House in the past.

With those brief comments I will take my seat, and I look forward to receiving more information as the bill debate progresses. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Are there additional speakers? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to just follow up. The hon. member made reference to executive compensation relative to the amendment on Bill 12. She did reference the fact that, I believe, there were five executives on the AIMCo board that, I think, received executive compensation of something like $5 million. I just wanted to clarify if, in fact, that was the case based on what she understood.

The Speaker: The hon. member if you wish.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Again, I certainly stand to be corrected, but my understanding is that in '08-09 the senior executives of AIMCo did receive bonuses in the amount of roughly $5 million. That's the kind of thing where, as you decrease government accountability, as you revise the structure to ensure greater independence, you're more likely to get those kinds of compensation packages coming into play. I would suggest that that is not necessarily something that taxpayers as a whole would be in support of, that we need to keep these kinds of things in line with reasonable expectations, and that in that particular case those did not fit that description.

3:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a follow-up, of course, in terms of what was taking place both on Bay Street and on Wall Street with these executive bonuses, I'd be very interested to see if the member believes that, you know, the executive bonuses – I understood that in terms of this Legislature there are no bonuses, and I'm proud to say that as we're members of the House. The fact is that AIMCo is an extension of the government, so I guess I would be wondering on the amendment if the member supports these executive bonuses at a time when the economy is literally going into the sewer.

Ms Notley: Well, in general, of course, we don't, and I think most Albertans don't. I think that's why executive bonuses have been limited in the public service overall. That, of course, is why when AIMCo first came into play, we were concerned about the structure, that didn't give the government accountability over that.

Now, the reason I raised this concern was simply that here we are amending the act, and it would have struck me as an opportunity to address this issue. It's not addressed in this particular piece of legislation, and it's a disappointment that we're not in fact focusing on creating more accountability rather than ignoring what seems to be a fairly major lapse in accountability.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, are you on the Q and A?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, I am.

The Speaker: Through the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, certainly, and I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona indicated that in 2009 there were long-term incentive plan bonuses, whatever you want to call them, paid of $4.4 million. I'm looking at page 47 of the annual report of AIMCo.

It also indicates that there was an annual incentive plan – I'm referring to page 41 – in 2009 that paid out or set aside $2.3 million, and in 2010 it set aside $9.8 million. That's a significant increase of well over $7 million from 2009 to 2010. How does the hon. member feel about that? In particular, it wasn't sort of an exceptional year for the investments.

Ms Notley: Well, I must say that I really appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar pointing that out because my information just talked about this $2.7 million, and I had missed the $9 million figure. I must be one year behind in that. Certainly an increase to $9 million suggests that, indeed, the concerns of our caucus, at least initially, about this train sort of going off the tracks as you continue to distance this organization from any form or mechanism of true government accountability seems to be coming to fruition.

Certainly, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is correct that those kinds of bonuses and compensation packages are not the kind of thing that most Albertans would ever believe are reasonable. Indeed, in the face of the economic performance of the province at the time that those types of wage packages were developed, it seems that we have two different sets of rules.

The Speaker: The time for the question-and-answer section has now left us.

Additional speakers on this bill?

Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

Bill 14

Wills and Succession Amendment Act, 2011

[Adjourned debate March 15: Mr. Drysdale]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We had a look at Bill 14, the Wills and Succession Amendment Act. It is a legislative initiative that will clarify the power of the courts under the recently passed Wills and Succession Act, and it applies only to a will of a person who dies after the act comes into force. I understand this act is expected to come into force in January of next year.

This is an example of drafting legislation quite quickly. I can appreciate the discussions that have gone on between the House leaders regarding this matter. This is a technical amendment, we could say, but this amendment affects legal rights, and I'm not surprised, Mr. Speaker, because there have been many exceptions in the last couple of years of legislation or statutes that quickly need to be amended. Well, what's the best way to quickly get something amended? Miscellaneous statutes.

Ms Blakeman: No, it isn't.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre that, no, it isn't.

The Speaker: It would really be helpful if you spoke through the chair, who listens very attentively.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. And I appreciate that. I really do, Mr. Speaker.

Now, Mr. Speaker, miscellaneous statutes, as you know from your long and storied career as a parliamentarian in this Assembly, are just used on occasion for housekeeping matters and making sure that i's are dotted and t's are crossed, so to speak, from a legislative drafting perspective.

Alberta Justice requested this amendment in miscellaneous statutes. The amendment, as I pointed out before, is to correct the transitional provision in the Wills and Succession Act. The analysis provided by the Justice ministry indicates that while the amendment may be a small fix, it is also very important since parties have taken legal steps on the basis of the existing wording.

Any amendment to the act which affects significant rights should be brought back to the Legislative Assembly, where the bill sponsor has an opportunity to explain the intent of the amendment and the Assembly has the opportunity to debate the bill without limits placed on the consideration of a miscellaneous statutes amendment act.

Now, I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has very strong and passionate feelings about miscellaneous statutes amendment acts, how they should be used and what they should be used for, and I agree with the hon. member. But this amendment from our perspective is surely not housekeeping. It is important to persons whose rights have been affected.

Certainly, some of the key changes, quickly, as I understand them in Bill 14, Mr. Speaker, that relate to the wills in the Wills and Succession Act focus on meeting the testamentary intent of the deceased. Some of these changes, I think there are more than five where the courts will be able to validate a will where the intentions can be ascertained even if the will does not perfectly meet legal formalities. When interpreting wills, the courts will now be able to rely on outside evidence for any intentions that may have been given by written direction. Rules on the interpretation of commonly used words and phrases are updated; for example, the definition of "child" now includes all the children of a testator regardless of parentage. Where a marriage or partnership ends, Mr. Speaker, a gift in the will to the spouse or the partner is deemed to have been revoked. The previous interpretation that a will is immediately revoked upon marriage or the establishment of an adult interdependent partnership is repealed, and rules addressing situations that affect a will but are unlikely to be covered by the will are modernized.

Certainly, there are different sections that we will have an opportunity to go through in committee, but that, I think, sums up this legislative initiative. The amendments may be a small fix, but they are very important, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, since parties may have taken legal steps on the basis of the existing wording.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor on Bill 14 to another hon. member of this Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that this act was brought forward. I think that for any of us that are of an age where our parents are in that sort of red zone, where they're closer to the end of their life than the beginning, we want as much clarity as possible around wills and estates. I've been doing a lot of work on my mother's estate recently, just trying to make sure that everything is lined up as well as it could be. Man, what a tough thing to get through, especially when you're upset or emotional about things. There is all kinds of stuff to be filed and done, and everybody wants you to do it yesterday, and then they want you to wait for it. Egads.

I can see, looking at this act, what the problem was. The way the current text is under section 8(1), it says:

Unless otherwise expressly provided in this Part or another . . .

(a) this Part applies to wills made on or after the day this section comes into force,

(b) the former Act continues in force, as if unrepealed, in respect of wills made under that Act; in other words, before this comes in.

(c) The Wills Act, RSA 1955 c369, continues in force, as if unrepealed, in respect of wills made before July 1, 1960.

Basically, the act applies to when the will was actually made. I think that's sort of what it's saying.

Then section 2, which is the section that's being repealed here, is:

Despite subsection (1),

which I just read, sections 26 and 37 to 40 apply to wills or alterations of wills regardless of when the will or alteration was made.

I think that's what caused the problem. Now it's a bit clearer.

Despite subsection (1),

which I already read through, these sections apply to a will or other writing, a marking or an obliteration regardless of when the will, writing, marking or obliteration was made, if the testator died after the coming into force of this section.

That's the clarification that we needed.

I appreciate the minister carrying through and bringing this before the House. It was not appropriate to do through miscellaneous statutes. I'm very happy to have it come through the House so we get a chance to review it more fully and see it in context and ask questions and have them answered. Having had an opportunity to go through this now and to look at all of those things, I have no problem with what's being proposed here. I think it's going to clarify things, for which, as I said, I'm grateful. Anything that can make this process easier and less stressful, given that it's already a stressful time, is much appreciated.

So thank you to the minister for carrying through. I'm more than happy to support this in second reading.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) begins to apply on the third and subsequent speakers, so it is available now.

Are there additional speakers?

Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a second time]

Bill 15

Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011

[Adjourned debate March 15: Mr. Oberle]

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We had quite a discussion on the victims of crime fund and the governance around that here the other evening. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to say a few words about Bill 15, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011. This clarifies the processes for applying for financial benefits for injury and for death benefits. It sets out detailed procedures for reviews of decisions on applications. These are consistent with procedures in other administrative tribunals. It removes some existing powers of review boards; for example, to call expert witnesses and to require a medical examination by an approved physician.

Certainly, I think we can support this bill. The amendments, as I see them, in Bill 15 are mostly proposals that provide helpful clarifications as well as establish procedures for reviewing decisions on applications for financial benefits and death benefits that are consistent with the procedures of other administrative tribunals.

The amendments with respect to benefits for injury or a death as a result of a crime add clarity for users of the act. The procedural changes not only promote clarity and fairness for applicants; they are likely to promote good practices in the review process that result in fewer requests for judicial review. There have been seven cases of judicial review since 2005, a relatively high number for a rather new program.

It is particularly welcome that the act's current provision empowering the Criminal Injuries Review Board to require a medical examination by a physician of its choosing is being removed.

We have concerns about the fact that the amendment act provides provisions as to who may apply for benefits, and these concerns, again, are about the regulations. These provisions affect rights under the act, and they should be in the act rather than in regulation, which should be for procedural matters and details. We've had over the years many, many discussions and presentations on how this government loves to rule by regulation, and we're not going to get into that in the discussion of Bill 15 this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

Certainly, we also continue to have concerns about a previous amendment empowering the director of the act to collect health information from health service providers without notice or consent by the individual. That's in section 13. The fact that health information can be collected without an individual's knowledge or consent and that this sensitive information can go into government files with the possibility of secondary disclosure, as is permitted under the FOIP Act, for some unrelated purpose in the future could be a major disincentive to a legitimate claim.

Finally, I note on behalf of the Official Opposition caucus that the net assets of the victims of crime fund amount to over $48 million while victims received just under $14 million last year. While we applaud the fine work of the many nonprofit organizations that receive grants to support victims' services, we do not wish to see the fund created for the benefit of victims being hoarded or diverted into government programs that do not directly benefit victims.

Now, I heard the other night from the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security about the consultation on the Victims of Crime Act from December of 2010 through to the end of January of this year. This was an online consultation. The amendment act was introduced in the Legislative Assembly on March 14. One may well ask, Mr. Speaker, how there was time to consider the responses to the consultation, develop recommendations and have them approved, and go through the legislative drafting process in just seven weeks. No report that I'm aware of on the consultation or review process was published. That's a record. The last bill we discussed here in the last half an hour was a bill to correct some of the deficiencies that occurred during the drafting of it. Hopefully, we won't be back in the near future with this bill.

Certainly, I would hope that other hon. members will talk about the history of the Victims of Crime Act, the victims of crime fund, and put some more details regarding this fund on the record. With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for giving me the time to speak on Bill 15, and I look forward to the comments of others on this very important piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've always kept an eye on the victims of crime acts and the fund in particular. It was a very exciting day for me, when I was working for the Advisory Council on Women's Issues. We all came over – the chairwoman of the council, a number of the appointed council members, and myself as executive director – to listen to I'm pretty sure it was the hon. Elaine McCoy, now a senator, who was then the Minister of Justice, perhaps, announce this victims' fund. At that time it would have been the victims' programs assistance fund. We were very excited because it was going to allow that women who were victims of what we now call family violence – it was called domestic abuse then, I think – would be able to access some of the funds in here.

Actually, since then this fund has paid for various programs that were offered by sexual assault centres, a court assistance program, and some counselling services. It's done some good work. I have been critical of it because the program stockpiled an enormous amount of money, in my belief. It had quite a surplus. It may still have quite a surplus – I haven't recently checked, actually – but I felt that that money should not be sitting there.

I think the first time I looked at it was when I was the Solicitor General and Justice critic somewhere between '01 and '04, I think, and it had – I don't know – $3 million or $4 million in it. At that time that was still a chunk of change that could have been going out to victims of violence. I think the last time I looked, it was in the $35 million or $40 million range, so a significant amount of money that was not going out to victims of crime or victims of violence.

The excuse was always: well, you know, the money for this fund comes from the levy on provincial and federal fines, and it gets collected and gets sent off, and then it finally comes back to the province. The reasoning always given to me was: well, we don't want to spend the money because we don't know how much is actually going to come back to us once everybody takes their cut. I felt that they really did have an ongoing surplus that should have been addressed.

To see this come up again, this Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011, of course, piqued my interest. This is no longer the fund that I sat in the audience with such excitement awaiting the launching of. It was replaced by the Victims of Crime Act in November of 1997. I was actually elected by the time that came into being.

It has always been administered by the Solicitor General. What this amendment is looking to do, we're told, is to clarify processes for applying for financial benefits, set out the details of the reviews of decisions or applications, so a sort of appeal process there, make sure that they're consistent with the procedures that are used in other administrative tribunals, and remove some of the powers of the review boards, particularly calling witnesses. Now, my colleague has already talked about that, so I'm not going to go over it again.

What I am concerned about here. God bless them. They have finally done what I have complained about for years. Section 2 of the act is repealing section 1(b) in the original act, in which child includes an illegitimate child, which I was always really offended by. I don't see how any child could be illegitimate. I know there was a legal definition that was very commonly in use. I'm just offended by it. I think every child is legitimate. How could you possibly put a stamp on some kid's forehead? [interjection] Thank you. My colleague is trying to keep me from getting on a rant here.

Times have changed, and we no longer separate and categorize children based on the marital status of their parents. That to me is very appropriate, but I do note that that is now being changed in April of 2011. It took us a while to get there. I'm shocked sometimes by how long it takes us to get to doing some things that seem pretty self-evident, so a pat on the back to the Solicitor General for finally removing that. Thank you very much. It has been duly administered on my behalf by the minister for seniors. Thanks for getting to that. I just wish it hadn't taken us until 2011 to do it, but a pat on the back for taking that out so we no longer distinguish between children and illegitimate children. Thank you for that.

Now, the second piece that's in here that is causing me, as always, some frustration is a section that my colleague also talked about, which was to share some information. Again, boy, I think we've got to be careful about that. I know that we're trying to track people in the system for reasonable reporting. Fine. We want to make sure people don't rip off the system. But you know what? Every time they do a scientific study on people ripping off government benefits, it comes back with the same numbers. There is 3 per cent of the population which is incorrigible. They are going to try and rip off whatever system they are involved with, and they will probably . . .

Dr. Taft: Like Mr. Carson in Ottawa.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Actually, that's not a bad example, Mr. Carson.

But they are going to do it in whatever system that they're involved with, and they are usually successful because they're pretty persistent in trying to do it. All of these other imagined rip-offs of government benefit programs just aren't there. I can't believe the number of people that buy into this. It's like an urban myth. The people that phone my office and say: well, I know that person was ripping off welfare because I saw them smoking a cigarette. Well, smoking is still legal if you're over 18, and nothing says that when you get a welfare benefit, you can't go out and buy cigarettes with it, but: oh, it's ripping off welfare.

Anyway, collecting information, trying to track the reporting of it is fine, but I think when we get into Committee of the Whole, I'm going to make more of a point of coming back about potential challenges or what I would think could be breaches of individual privacy around what's contemplated in this act. I can sense that the patience of the Assembly to follow me through this convoluted story today is not quite there, so I will return to it when we're in Committee of the Whole because I think this is important, and I have no wish to see people victimized twice, which is what happens.

I cannot begin to describe to you guys how important privacy of personal information is but also how easy it is to breach that, whether it's just one little child's finger on a send button or an enter button and your information or someone's information has gone across the world forever. You cannot get it back. You can't stop it once it's gone into cyberspace.

Government is the last bastion of protection of people's personal information, and, yes, we are the people that are responsible. We as government are also responsible for collecting information and making sure that we're tabulating and keeping statistics. But you don't need to use people's defining information to do that.

You need enough information, but – you know what? – sometimes we keep all this information that we don't need to.

We have an example of that that was before us in the news today. Information was to be used when people were applying for a job and starting a job with the school board in Edmonton. It wasn't to be kept in a file forever, but indeed it was. Then it was on somebody's electronic thingamajig.

Dr. Taft: Memory stick.

Ms Blakeman: Memory stick. Thank you for the technical term, but everybody knew what I meant.

It was on the memory stick, and somehow it's gone missing. Therefore, we now have for 7,000 people that were involved in some way with the Edmonton public school board: their personal information, including banking information, and, you know, their resumé details, so that's going to include a home address, a phone number, a date of birth, a social insurance number – whoosh. This is what makes my hair catch on fire. Why do we keep repeating the same mistake over and over and over? And we do.

I'll be honest with you. The Minister of Service Alberta has not helped by disbanding the group that was in her department that actually gave advice because, Mr. Speaker, when I took this seriously and went out and tried to encrypt my laptop so that I couldn't be accused if I left it somewhere of letting information out, it was not easy.

Frankly, the Information and Privacy Commissioner could not help me with how I was supposed to do this. They said: well, just do it. I said: "But how? Do I buy a program? Is there a thingummy that I plug into it? What do I do?" And they said: just do it. Great. Thanks.

IT couldn't help me. I ended having to phone around to a bunch of other people to get information on how the heck I was to encrypt this computer. I ended up buying a computer program for 150 and some-odd dollars and loading it onto my computer. So now it encrypts everything I do, and if it got lost or walked away or whatever, what they would get out of it would be gobbledygook. Without the encryption password they can't get anything from it.

I had to do the same for the thingamajig that I back up everything with every Friday. That was another 100 and some-odd dollars. [interjection] Well, you know exactly what I mean as long as I've described it well.

So it's not easy, but, boy, you've got to do this stuff. I'll just put the fire in my hair out and sit down now that I've given everyone a lecture on that. Sorry. I do get carried away, don't I?

Generally I'm in agreement with the principle and the direction of where this is going in second reading. I just have some very particular problems with certain sections of it. I will come back and address those in Committee of the Whole, which is the appropriate place to go word by word, sentence by sentence, clause by clause.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak to the principle of the bill in second reading, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Then I will recognize the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to participate in the debate.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wish to stand and compliment the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security on Bill 15, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011. I do believe that this is a noble bill, and it's intended to help the victims of crime. I think this is positive. We'll have more comments to add when it arrives at committee, but I stand to compliment the Solicitor General on what I believe is to be in spirit potentially a good bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Additional speakers? The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a privilege to be able to rise and speak to this bill in second reading. There's a lot of stuff going on in this bill, and I have information that both supports the bill but also raises some concerns about what's going on in the bill. I'm going to just flag some of those concerns in the hope that, again, as debate goes forward, perhaps we can hear some answers to the concerns that are raised.

My understanding is that the bill appears to do, essentially, two things. One, it talks about making some changes to the processes around the Criminal Injuries Review Board, and then the second part deals with the issue of benefits and to whom those benefits would be payable.

Also, it talks about targeting grant funding for programs and organizations.

I guess the area about which I actually have some concern initially is the changes that are being proposed with respect to the processes that would be relied upon under the Criminal Injuries Review Board. Although they are characterized in the briefing notes that we've received from government as adding flexibility and speeding up the process, I have to say that as I review them – and I reach to my own experience of acting as an advocate on behalf of people within administrative tribunal processes – in fact, what we may well be doing is setting up a process of extreme frustration for the appellant, who in most cases is the victim of crime.

In short, the first thing we're doing is saying that when the person goes to have a review or a hearing, should they be allowed to have one – they go to the hearing and prepare their submissions, prepare their argument, prepare what they're going to say in order to convince the person that's reviewing their decision to change the decision, you know, and they'll put together all the information they can find – the minute they bring in information that's new information, that wasn't before the director or a delegate of the director in the initial decision, the hearing stops, and all that information has to go back to a delegate of the director to make another decision.

So here you finally got sort of your day in court. You've had your chance to have your hearing, and you're hoping that you will get it all out at once and deal with it, and hopefully the decision will go your way and you're done. No. Instead, you have to stop the whole process, shift the evidence back to the director, and then the director or their delegate will re-adjudicate the issue. Then if you don't like it, well, you can try going back to the review board again. Well, in the review board's mind I suspect that makes things easier for them, but I'm not convinced that it actually makes things easier for the victim. I'm really not.

The other thing I see and hear is that the ability of the review board to actually change the decision is also limited. Instead, if they review everything and decide that the initial decision they're reviewing was not made appropriately, they send it back to the director to re-adjudicate. I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in my previous job I had the really unfortunate experience of being in a situation where I would have the person I was representing caught in this no-man's-land between an appeal board that would say: "You know what? This was a really poorly rendered decision." They would then send the decision back to the decision-making body, who would then make the same decision again.

Then it would go back to the appeal board, and the appeal board would go: "Yeah. No, we still think this is a really bad decision. You should change it." And it would just go around and around and around.

I remember that right before I got elected, I had one particular decision that had done that two or three times, and the poor person in question had been subjected to this idiocy for about a year and a half. It was finally resolved about a couple of months after I was elected.

The last thing you want to do in administrative law is hamstringing a review body from being able to get to the heart of the matter and fix the problem and instead force them to create these bureaucratic turnstiles. So I'm a little concerned when I see in this bill that that appears to be the system that we're setting up. As I say, while it may make things easier for the Criminal Injuries Review Board, it is not going to make things easier for the victims that come before them. Now, if I've misinterpreted that, I look forward to having somebody lay that out very clearly in bill debate going forward, but that's certainly what I see in what I've read thus far. I'm quite concerned about that.

The other thing that I am also a little bit concerned about is the introduction of a 10-year limit on applications. I understand certainly that you would have a two-year limit applied after the time you became aware of the injury or became aware of the criminal act. That there would be a two-year limitation makes some sense. But I am concerned about the piece that says that in any event nothing will be done after 10 years.

As we know, there's a fair amount of literature out there that would suggest that particularly where people are victims of crime in their youth, it may take a very long time for them to come to terms with that fact and to develop the capacity to respond to or address the fact that they were victims. Indeed, the very damage that the victim compensation review board is designed to address may well interfere with that person's ability to pursue their rights under the Criminal Injuries Review Board. By putting a blanket 10-year limitation in place, I'm worried that what we actually are standing to do is exclude and disqualify people from gaining access to this fund, and I'm a little concerned that the profile of the group that we would be most likely to disqualify are, in fact, children who suffered criminal abuse and injury, perhaps at the hands of their caretakers. That's a concern that I see potentially becoming a problem as a result of this bill.

The third piece of it, I understand, is that what we are looking to do is expand the scope of the organizations that would be eligible for funding through that part of the fund that works with groups that assist victims, and I do think that that piece of the legislation is a good development. I think it allows groups that are not necessarily working directly within the court system but are in fact working within the community with populations who are primarily victims of crime – with this, of course, I'm thinking often about women's shelters – the opportunity to gain access to these funds. I think that from that perspective that is an improvement. If I'm interpreting the implications of this amendment correctly, I do see that that is a definite improvement with the bill.

I remain concerned about the first two pieces that I've just mentioned, so I do genuinely hope that I'll receive some advice on those issues from the sponsor of the bill as we move forward with further debate and further progress of the bill in the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Taft: Under 29(2)(a), yes.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I was interested in the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I really appreciated her brief account of a client she had who got caught in this sort of a catch-22, I guess.

I've noticed that the victims of crime fund now is expected to have net assets of $47 million, and I am wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has seen anything in Bill 15 that might enable more of these assets to be distributed to victims of crime. They do hand out several million dollars a year, but this fund has grown and grown and grown. I'm wondering if the member has any sense of victims of crime who may have legitimate concerns or claims that are not being met or if there's anything in this legislation that does expand the scope of the fund or if the member believes that if it's not in here, it should be here to make sure that this fund just doesn't keep growing immensely when we have victims of crime who are perhaps not getting adequately compensated. If she has thoughts on that, I'd be interested to hear them, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member if you wish.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'm just sort of doing a provisional review of the bill as it's going forward, but, you know, I think that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview raises two very good points. I think that from the perspective of the direct awards of payments to victims I'm concerned that what this may well result in doing is actually limiting the amount that is paid out through that particular mechanism, as I said, through what I was describing before, by imposing this limitation period and also potentially creating a bureaucratic pathway that will just leave people with so much frustration, they just walk away from it.

My understanding – again, I certainly do stand to be corrected – is that this in theory opens the door for more organizations to become eligible to receive funding out of this growing fund, and in that sense I think that would be a good thing. Obviously, it makes no sense to have this fund simply accrue value and not be paid out to those very important organizations throughout our community, all of which are struggling horrendously to provide the services that are so important to Albertans.

I'm not sure what the current statistics are, but I certainly know that within the last five years we've been at one point or another identified as having the highest rate of domestic violence in the country. I know that we also, at times anyway, have been identified as having the lowest per capita funding for support to victims of domestic violence, and we know that that is a primary area that remains unaddressed. As a result, it would certainly be much appreciated, I think, by all Albertans if we can find a mechanism to improve distribution of these kinds of funds, particularly to those areas and to those service providers who work so hard.

Then, of course, as I said before, we had I think the Member for Calgary-Varsity talking about a young child in care. I can't remember the particulars of it, so actually I probably shouldn't refer to that because that's probably not the indications of what happened to that child.

I do know that we have a lot of kids in care who are themselves victims of crime. That's why they're in care. The services that we are able to provide to those victims, particularly when they are in the range of 12 to 18, are sorely, sorely lacking in this province. We have way too many kids who are not able to find any kind of secure home or any sort of consistent level of support. They're on the street, and they're bouncing from place to place to place. What we need is more support for services that provide the kind of assistance to those kids because so often they are themselves the victims of crime.

The Speaker: Alas, hon. member, the time has elapsed.

Additional speakers?

Shall I call on the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security to close the debate?

Mr. Oberle: I'll call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour and the weather I would move that we call it 4:30 and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday the 18th.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:20 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, April 18, 2011

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. As we all gather to begin a new week in our Assembly, we are reminded of the blessings which have been bestowed upon Alberta, and we give thanks for this bounty. May we conduct ourselves in our deliberations in ways that honour our province and all of its people. Amen.

Hon. members, I would now like to invite Ms Colleen Vogel, who is in the Speaker's gallery, to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. I would invite all to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, Ms Vogel.
Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the former governor of South Carolina, David Beasley, and the director of Stewardship Foundation, Wes Anderson. Governor Beasley and Wes were involved with co-ordinating the national prayer breakfast for over 4,000 people.

We also have the former MP for Peace River here with us today, Albert Cooper. Albert served his constituents for three Parliaments and leads the organizing committee for the Alberta Premier's prayer breakfast. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Bill Purdy, a friend and former member of this Assembly who served the constituency of Stony Plain from 1971 to 1986. Mr. Purdy has served his community for many years in various capacities. He is a charter member of the Wabamun Fire Department and a former chief. He is the current mayor of the village of Wabamun and the current executive director of the Alberta Fire Chiefs Association. As well, Mr. Purdy is the president of the former MLA alumni association. Bill is seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask that he stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Royal Canadian Geographical Society, or RCGS, recently celebrated its 80th anniversary. Its founder, Dr. Charles Camsell, and its first honorary vice-president, J.B. Tyrrell, of dinosaur bone fame, are very familiar to Albertans. The society's worthy objective is: making Canada better known to Canadians and to the world.

Mr. Speaker, seated in your gallery today is a man who has done exactly that. Mr. John Dunn is a noted arctic explorer. Financed in part by the RCGS, he completed a very notable feat last year, traversing Ellesmere Island in the High Arctic on a 55-day unsupported expedition on foot. Pulling a sled over 250 kilometres of ice, Dunn's small but intrepid group then put wheels on the sled for a further 250 kilometres, and if that wasn't enough, there was a final trek of an additional 250 kilometres on top of all that. Now, the Canadian Geographic Magazine, published by the RCGS, has featured five of his arctic adventures.

Mr. Speaker, my current private member's bill, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act, will be debated in second reading this afternoon, and I dare say that John is a staunch supporter of it. I was honoured to share adventures with Mr. Dunn and our illustrious Sergeant-at-Arms over lunch today, and they both have incredible stories to tell. John has spoken to many school groups about Canada's uninhabited, largely unexplored far northern reaches and his explorations there. Fortunately, he'll do so again at our very own School at the Legislature class. Mr. John Dunn is in your gallery today. I'd ask everyone to give him a warm applause.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you some bright young students from the School of Hope in Vermilion. The School of Hope is an online school that has very quickly developed as a centre of very good instruction and delivers very good students all over Alberta. They are here today with their parents – Mrs. Amanda Ulan, Mrs. Beverly Lunghamer, Mrs. Kelley Thompson, Mrs. Maria Sinding, Mr. and Mrs. Oudshoorn, and Mrs. Mary Jane Heck – and their teacher, Mrs. Elaine Johnston MacMillan. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you a group of very bright and special young students and their parents and helpers from Boyle, Alberta, within my constituency. We've got 31 students accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Jahala Chrnyk, and parent helpers Karen Mandel, Sheldon Weatherby, Candy Nikipelo, Mel Brewer, Sheri Bencharsky, Susan Murphy, Margaret Gallinger, and Gleason Gallinger. They're going to be here all week for the School at the Leg., and I am very pleased to say that I'm going to be able to spend some time with them. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Merci, M. le Président. Je voudrais présenter à vous et, avec votre autorité, à tous les membres de l'Assemblée un groupe d'étudiants du neuvième niveau de l'école Branton qui nous visitent de Calgary-Varsity avec leurs professeurs, M. Boulanger, Mlle Laura Crosby, Mme Adriana Bobbitt, et Mme Shanna Corning. If these students and their teachers could please stand so the members of the Assembly could please welcome them in our traditional fashion.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions. If you'd allow me to proceed with the first, it's an honour and a privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature four very special guests. Mr. Jack Clements, a long-time constituent of mine and a good friend, is a member of the Edmonton downtown Rotary Club and serves on the student exchange services committee. You may also recognize that he has served on the board with the School at the Legislature.

Accompanying Mr. Clements today are three exceptional international Rotary exchange students. Carlos Antonio Roman lives in Portoviejo, Ecuador. He's 17 years of age and currently attends Ross Sheppard high school. It's been his desire to participate in the exchange program as a result of the wonderful experience that his brother received when he was in the program, and he tells me that he has, perhaps, a future in architecture.

Arthur Meert, from Liège, Belgium, is 18 years of age, currently attends Ross Sheppard high school, and has one brother 16 years of age and two sisters, 14 years and 10 years. Canada was his first choice in the program. We're very fortunate to have him come to Alberta to learn and experience what Alberta has to offer, including the cold weather and snow. He loves sports, particularly soccer, and he intends to go to university next year and take political science although he informs me that his life is not that of a politician but, rather, of a journalist because he thinks it might be less in the public eye. I think he's right on that.

Tobias Brander Hejslesen lives in a small town named Birkelse in Denmark. He's 17 years of age, living in Leduc, and he attends Leduc composite high school. He's hosted by the Nisku-Leduc Rotary Club. Tobias also loves sports. In Denmark he always played soccer; while here he's learned to play football. He played on the high school team in the fall and is now playing community football for the Leduc Cats as a starting receiver and kicker. We expect that he will be back with us shortly to play for the Edmonton Eskimos. He's looking forward to a career in mechanical engineering.

Mr. Speaker, these are truly amazing students with many special talents. They arrived in Edmonton and Leduc last August, sponsored by the Rotary clubs of Edmonton and area, and will be here until the end of the school year and into July. We hope that they continue to have a rich and rewarding experience in Canada and will take many great memories home with them. I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly on behalf of the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology a group of seven interns who are currently learning on the job within that ministry. These interns come to us with diverse educational and professional experience, so they are well equipped with the knowledge and skills to succeed. In fact, they've already made many important contributions to the division where they work. With us today are Stephanie Ridge, Ben Hartt, Rahul Deol, Susana Giron, and Matt Buffet, and they're accompanied by their department colleagues, Barry Tonge, Theresa Vladicka, Brent Wellsch, Janelle Derko, Jill Westergard, and Colleen Grawbarger. They're seated in both the public gallery and the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the 2011 provincial winners of the Caring for Our Watersheds contest. I had the pleasure of meeting with these outstanding young people earlier today, and in describing their projects that brought them the honour of winners, I can assure you that these young people are more than deserving of the honour that they have received.

The winners have come from Milk River, Calgary, Whitefish Lake, and Ponoka, and I'm very pleased to introduce them to you. The students are Cam Reed, Sierra Harty, Luke Hemingson, Austyn Nagribianko, Jenna Brake, Breanne Emes, and Rachel Selke. They are accompanied by proud parents Ms. Reed, Mrs. Harty, and Russell Hemingson along with their teacher, Daniella Perillat; also, Lindsey Metheral, the global Caring for our Watersheds project co-ordinator from program sponsor Agrium; and Nathalie Stanley, central Alberta Caring for our Watersheds program co-ordinator from the Battle River Watershed Alliance. I believe they're in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of all members.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five guests representing the Alberta Rehabilitation Integration and Care Services and Sabrang Radio: Mr. Pierre Hournou, Mr. Rajesh Angral, Miss Ellen Adahnom, Jean-Claude Jassak, and Dr. Félicien Mufuta. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you a group joining us from the Academy of Learning and Digital School in Edmonton, all seated in the members' gallery today. Elmer and Audrey Brattberg are the owners of the two schools. With them today are Coryne Yacocha, administrative co-ordinator; Michelle Chez, the west Edmonton Academy of Learning valedictorian; Colin Spallin, the Digital School valedictorian; and Dagmar Sánchez, a student at the Academy of Learning, legal administrative assistant diploma program. At this time I ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests that are seated in the members' gallery from the constituency of Edmonton-Decore. Levent and Mine Cetin are two very hard-working individuals, wonderful people who immigrated to Canada from the country of Turkey to make a better life for themselves and their two-year-old daughter, Mavi. Levent is a chemical engineer by profession working on the APEGGA certification while working with the company WorleyParsons. Mine, a true-spirited individual, a new Canadian citizen this year, is currently attending the international nursing program at NorQuest College. It is truly an honour and a privilege, and I am proud to receive them today at the Alberta Legislature, their very first visit here. I bid them all the best and success in their chosen professions, and I would like to ask them to please rise now and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you a number of constituents seated front and centre in the members' gallery today. We have Jeff Suderman and his wife, Kasie, and with them are their sons, Justus and Kaden, as well as their daughter, Zoë. The purpose of their trip today is an educational one as they home-school their children. They're here to witness question period, and I trust that it will be a positive experience for them; I can only hope. I would ask them to now rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Alberta Academic Health Sciences Network

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is known internationally for its leadership and success in the field of academic medicine. What many Albertans may not realize is that the key to this success is not only the result of this province's record of funding medical research; it is due largely to our commitment over many years to a fully integrated academic health sciences model that incorporates research, clinical care, and education of health professionals in one organizational structure.

Here in Edmonton a unique partnership between the former Capital health region and the University of Alberta positioned this city as one of the top academic health sciences centres in North America. This model was the driving force for projects such as the Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute, the Alberta Diabetes Institute, and many other Alberta success stories.

Until recently, Mr. Speaker, the creation of a single provincial health services authority raised some serious concerns about our ability to maintain Alberta's proud record of success. That is why I was pleased to learn of the creation of the Alberta academic health sciences network, a partnership between Alberta Health Services, the University of Alberta, and the University of Calgary. This provincial approach to ensuring excellence in academic health sciences is not limited but, in fact, made possible by the creation of Alberta Health Services and its partnership with not one but two universities of international distinction.

It will improve care, increase the translation of research into action, and enhance Alberta's competitive advantage nationally and internationally. It will help us deliver on Alberta's health research and innovation strategy and Campus Alberta initiatives, and it will ensure that we are positioned to recruit, train, and maintain the very best clinicians, researchers, and educators the world has to offer.

Mr. Speaker, for those sincerely interested in improving health and health care for future generations, growing and diversifying our economic base, and positioning this province as the global leader we know it to be, I encourage all members to actively support and promote the work of the Alberta academic health sciences network.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Physicians

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Medical Association, representing over 6,500 physicians, has joined the now deafening chorus calling for an independent judicial inquiry. What did the Premier do? He immediately dismissed the AMA's call. The AMA president is quoted as saying: "A public inquiry should be held 'into issues of physician intimidation in Alberta's health care system' . . . it is time to clear the air, and a public inquiry . . . is the best forum in which to accomplish this." Mr. Premier, will you finally listen to the AMA and the 6,500 doctors it represents, do the right thing, and call a public inquiry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the AMA president also said that if the government will go ahead with the Health Quality Council, they will participate, they will co-operate, and they will do whatever they can to get all the information to the Health Quality Council.

Dr. Swann: Duck and dive, Mr. Speaker.

Given that we don't know how many millions of dollars this government has paid to silence doctors it pushed out of the province, how can the Premier honestly say that a public inquiry would cost too much? What's the truth worth, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again – and the health minister can add to the answer – just because there's a public inquiry does not mean that the disclosure documents will be opened. Those disclosure documents can only be opened by the co-operation between the two parties that entered into the disclosure document, which would be the employer and the employee.

Dr. Swann: Well, given that the AMA members believe that "a public inquiry offers the best opportunity to change the culture within Alberta's health care system," when will the Premier admit that the experts are right and that your attempts to hide the problems are fatally flawed?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I need to jump in here because there are a number of things that the AMA has also said that are important. They've talked about the AIP, which puts in process a very good vehicle by which they can address issues that are on the minds of physicians. They talked about creating opportunities to innovate. They talked about creating opportunities to develop more clinical networks that would enhance the delivery of care and the involvement of specialists. That's exactly what we're doing. The process that is there allows them to come forward with yet more suggestions for advocacy or, if they wish, to air some differences from the past.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Those who forget history are destined to repeat it. This government was warned by internal and external sources about the crisis in our health care system over the past decade and then some and chose not to fix the problem but, instead, to intimidate and silence those who spoke up, the health care workers, using well-rewarded, loyal lapdogs to do it. To the Premier: given that this affidavit of records right here and on your desk and the e-mails I've tabled and will continue to table are proof that you, your caucus, your health CEOs and the college were aware of these concerns, why did you not act and still refuse to act?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there's nothing stopping any doctor who has a nondisclosure agreement from speaking with the Health Quality Council. In fact, that hon. member has one himself, and I see he's advocating for physicians right in the most public assembly in the province of Alberta, right here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how can any health care worker in Alberta have any confidence in this sham review that you spoke so highly of, the Health Quality Council's terms of reference, which turned out to be wrong initially and then had to be changed after I talked to Dr. John Cowell, given that Dr. Cowell's cheque is paid by the minister?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, I don't know what discussion the hon. member had with one of the members of the Health Quality Council, but the Health Quality Council has an excellent record. They did their own terms of reference. They have some of the best legal advisers in the province of Alberta to make sure that the process is fair, is transparent. They're going to give us an initial report in three months. They're going to follow up with an interim report in six and the complete report in nine months.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how can you say that there is any independence given that the new president of the College of Physicians and Surgeons is a paid AHS senior executive employee? A classmate of the chief of staff was brought in by the former Minister of Health and Wellness and his EA, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. How can you say that there's any independence given that she's an employee of AHS?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, just a few seconds ago – in fact, it must be hot off the press because it's pretty warm from going through the copier. I have some documents here that were entered in the Court of Queen's Bench some time ago. Again, a statement of claim is not a statement of fact. That is the big, big difference. A statement of claim is a claim that some individual is making towards the employer. What happened in terms of the statement of fact is a lot different.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Ciaran McNamee's list of records outlines potentially relevant correspondence between him and several individuals over a 10-year period, that he could produce if a public inquiry were to be held. Within this list are government officials and doctors such as Sheila Weatherill, Dr. Ken Gardener, Dr. Trevor Theman, and Dr. Tim Winton. Because the Premier refuses to call a public inquiry, we might never know what's inside these documents. Wouldn't the Premier agree that accessing these documents would help get to the bottom of the issue of physician intimidation?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's a very simple matter. The doctor can approach the Health Quality Council and say: look; I'm willing to open up the disclosure document if my former employer agrees. Why doesn't he ask Alberta Health Services? What if Alberta Health Services says, "Yeah, let's open up the document and then have all Albertans see what's inside"?

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, given that the Health Quality Council has neither the power to subpoena nor the ability to compel testimony of persons subject to nondisclosure agreements, like Dr. McNamee, how does the Premier plan on finding out what's inside these documents? No legal protection.

Mr. Stelmach: It's very simple. The doctor can approach the Health Quality Council and make a statement. "I am willing to open up the disclosure document." Then he can call Alberta Health Services. "Are you willing to open up the document and bring the whole document over to the Health Quality Council and get this over with once and for all?" There is no guarantee that going to a public health inquiry, the disclosure document will be opened. It can't. It's legally not possible.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Premier, will you guarantee that Alberta Health Services will participate in such an inquiry?

Mr. Stelmach: Alberta Health Services are the employer. They are the employer. They have to reach an agreement with the doctor. They are the ones that signed the disclosure document, not the government of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the health minister is actually quite the dancer, but last week he tried his luck at being a stand-up comedian. In explaining why the government continues to refuse a public inquiry, he recited the Alberta Evidence Act word for word. Apparently, this was very funny as all his colleagues behind him were hooting and hollering with laughter. To the Premier: do you still think that ignoring the need for this public inquiry into physicians' intimidation is funny now that the Alberta Medical Association has called for it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the Health Quality Council is in the process of opening up the review. This review will be very intense. Following their own terms of reference, they will bring people forward that they feel should be making and delivering evidence before the Health Quality Council. They are going to do a good job. They have good legal advice. According to what I've heard from physicians, they just want to get this on so that this matter can be settled once and for all.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that Friday's letter from the AMA was an unprecedented show of courage from Alberta doctors, whose only concern is the well-being of their patients, does he not realize that by refusing this public inquiry, he is trivializing the concerns of Alberta doctors and their patients?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, in fact what the letter of last Friday also indicated was that the AMA is willing to participate and willing to co-operate in part B, which deals with physician advocacy and allegations of intimidation. They also stated in that letter that they have already submitted very good suggestions on how to improve the review process. Clearly, the AMA understands both sides of this coin, and I think they're working hard to show that with good faith and good leadership in that regard.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Minister, they want both. They want the Health Quality Council, and they want a public inquiry.

Given that under this Premier's watch public confidence in the health care system has eroded, will he finally call this public inquiry so we can start to reduce so much of the damage that his government is responsible for in this current health care system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let me just read you the clip here because, clearly, they're not getting it over there. It's dated April 15, 2011. It's The President's Letter from the AMA, which I will table shortly. Here's what they say on page 2:

If, however, the HQCA review remains the only formal venue where physician intimidation is examined then the AMA will cooperate. We have offered suggestions to improve the effectiveness of the review, e.g., remove barriers posed by non-disclosure clauses; release physicians from any contractual obligations or provisions under agreements that could silence or deter them . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. When Alberta's doctors say that it's time to clear the air with a full public inquiry into doctor intimidation, the Tories accuse them of playing politics. Mr. Speaker, it's more intimidation. This government is more interested in covering its posterior than improving our health care system. Why won't the Premier recognize that there is a serious lack of confidence by health professionals in the health system today that can only be corrected by a full public inquiry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. You know, Mr. Speaker, let me make this very clear. If there are some doctors out there – five, 10, 20 years ago – who felt angry, who felt some anxieties, who may have even felt alienated, I'm truly sorry about that. But I can assure you that under the current policy no such allegations are being made at the moment that I'm aware of because there's a new spirit of co-operation. There's a new agreement. We issued a joint news release with the Alberta Medical Association just a few days ago. And, yes, I have heard a few grumblings, but I have yet to see any formal complaints in that regard.

Mr. Mason: Given that this minister's assurances are worth almost nothing, Mr. Speaker, and given that doctors are saying that a full public inquiry is the only way to change the culture of intimidation within Alberta Health Services and given that the accusations of intimidation continue to pile up, will the Premier finally take these charges seriously, call a judicial inquiry, and restore doctors' confidence in the system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would wager to say that the vast, vast majority of doctors have great confidence in this system. I would venture to say that the doctors appreciate that we are the first government in all of Canada to give them a five-year guaranteed funding plan, a five-year health action plan, and the performance measures to back it up. I would wager to say, however, there may have been a few, years ago, that had some trouble, perhaps, going from a clinical role to a management role, and that is an area for discussion.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that this minister can just say black is white and expect people to believe it and given that the AMA has said, as we've told this government for months, that the Health Quality Council does not have the proper powers to look into this, why won't the Premier admit that he's misleading Albertans by pretending the council's investigation will actually get to the bottom of anything?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council membership is one that has an excellent record, tremendous integrity. These are physicians that have not only worked in the system, but they have years and years of experience. Again, coupled with the fact that they have two of the best legal minds that'll be supporting them in an advisory fashion, this is the way to go. They're starting the process. The first report will be, like I said, in three months, the second one in six months, and they want to bring closure to this in nine months.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would like to provide just a little caution with the last comment, something along the lines of: why won't he admit that he is misleading? That is really on the edge, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Public Confidence in the Health Care System

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Auditor General released what the Calgary Herald has called "the latest scary snapshot of Alberta's health-care system." In his report the Auditor General said that in 280 past recommendations the government has ignored, 53 were directed to Alberta Health and Wellness. To the minister: when does the minister intend to implement recommendations first made seven years ago to improve accountability of Alberta Health Services to the minister by ensuring performance expectations are set, reviewed, and followed up?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm grateful for this question because it'll allow me to set the record straight. There were about 27 or 28 recommendations for Alberta Health and Wellness, almost an equal number or thereabouts for Alberta Health Services. In fact, the vast majority of those recommendations have been implemented. We're just waiting for the Auditor General now to review the implementations. So they were acted on, they were accepted, and they are in place today. Now we just need that final audit by the Auditor General himself.

Dr. Swann: Fifty-three recommendations, Mr. Speaker, ignored for seven years, and he's hoping we'll buy that.

When will the minister implement the recommendation made five years ago and start explaining and quantifying key factors affecting health care costs in the ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the other part of this is that a lot of the recommendations simply cannot be implemented in a day or a week or a month. They take some time. When you're looking at recommendations to compare health costs with health outputs, for example, that is an enormous task. It takes a few years to see if there is a difference being made. I can assure this member, based on what I've heard and seen and read so far, it is improving, and it's working well.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, I was having difficulty hearing the response given just a minute ago. I'd ask you to please be attentive.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given such blatant and long-standing disregard for the recommendations of the Auditor General, how does the minister intend to restore confidence in the public health system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things that we're doing, and I want to clarify that I have the highest of regard and respect for the Auditor General. As I've said, to my knowledge the recommendations were accepted. Many have already been implemented. There are a few that are taking longer to implement, but the confidence question is all about the five-year health action plan. It's all about the new agreement in principle we have with the Alberta Medical Association. It's about involving them and us in a review of primary care. It's about reaching out to Albertans for issues that are important to them such as improving cancer care access, such as reducing wait times for emergency rooms. I could go on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend I had the pleasure of attending an open exchange with the education stakeholders at the School Councils Connection 2011. Actually, the Minister of Education did as well. At this event we both heard concerns about teachers and essential sports staff being laid off because of this year's Education budget. I've also heard from the minister himself at recent public events that this may be a time we should actually be hiring teachers and not laying them off given that we will be having . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was a wonderful weekend for education. We had approximately 120 students from around the province of Alberta at a Speak Out Alberta conference with a hundred chaperones, which were teachers and parents and others. Student engagement: students talking about what kind of learning creates the environment which makes them want to get up and go to school. On the other side of the city we had parents from parent councils across the province at the association of parents' councils annual general meeting, talking about what makes good engagement for parents and how parents can be involved in the education system. It was a wonderful weekend for education, talking about how we go forward, how we look at the future with a positive manner.

The Speaker: Well, I'm very happy that everybody is happy, but let's deal with questions on policy, not how we feel.

The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the current Education budget appears to be the definition of penny-wise and pound-foolish because school boards will have to lay off teachers at a time they should be hiring them, can the minister rectify this current shortfall?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, school boards have to deal with the budgets, obviously, and it is in a time of fiscal restraint, so what they should be doing, in my view, is looking at everything they do to determine what they're doing that adds value, what things could be cut out. It will be very difficult, and in fact there will be some difficulty. If the number of retirements is not as high as otherwise predicted, indeed there may be a tough time in terms of new teachers. Over the longer period of time we will need more teachers. Over the next 10 years we expect a hundred thousand more students in the education system.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Hehr: Given that admission don't you think that it's just unwise for us to be creating a budget that forces school boards to be letting teachers go when you have essentially said that we're going to need them next year and the year after that?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'd be delighted to get into the details with respect to that in the estimates tomorrow in Committee of Supply. Let me just say this. Creating budgets and the allocation of scarce resources is always the most difficult job in government. Whether you're in a school board or whether you're at the provincial level, there are always choices to be made. Would I prefer to have more resources in education? Always. There's always something more that you can do. There's always something better that can be done. There are always more projects that can be engaged in. The fact of the matter is that governments have to be fiscally responsible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:10 Response to Auditor General's Report

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the Auditor General released his April 2011 report. While this is a smaller report than the October report, it still contains important recommendations and items that need to be addressed. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this recent report added 11 new recommendations to a growing list of recommendations for government to respond to. To the hon. President of the Treasury Board: how and when is the government responding to the Auditor General's office report released last week?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member: we respond to the Auditor General's report on an annual basis. More importantly, though, we work with his recommendations on an ongoing basis. We take all of the recommendations of the Auditor General very seriously as presented in his report. He also has ways to categorize some that are more important as key recommendations, key numbered recommendations, and also recommendations that are of importance but certainly won't have the consequences if they're not implemented as soon.

Mr. Vandermeer: In that regard, how does the government ensure that the recommendations are taken seriously and that efforts are made to act on these recommendations sooner rather than later?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, because the actions of our government prove it. We have very, very consistently responded to critical, or numbered, recommendations from the Auditor General. If we have been slack, it's in going back into many of the unnumbered recommendations and actually having the time or the resources to audit to show that they have been completed and need to be moved off the books. Quite honestly, we're more interested in continuing to go forward rather than just clearing the shelves of old recommendations.

Mr. Vandermeer: Again to the President of the Treasury Board: why are there 280 outstanding recommendations from previous years' reports?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the recommendations from previous years cover a very broad spectrum. They include the universities and the colleges, and they include Crown corporations that are at arm's length, and it is sometimes difficult to encourage them to work as hard as they can. We're all facing a limited number of resources. We have agreed at the Audit Committee with the Auditor General that we would collectively work – with him, the government, and the other agencies – to try and remove the backlog of old recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Royal Alberta Museum Construction

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In reporting its fourth-quarter finances to shareholders, Bird Construction of Toronto announced on Friday that the Alberta government has terminated its contract to build the earlier version of the Royal Alberta Museum. As usual, the contract is not public nor readily available through freedom of information as it involves a third party, so taxpayers have no idea what the deal was. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: will the government have to pay out any kind of penalty for terminating this contract?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, that contract was handled by the Minister of Infrastructure under his department. I'm not at this particular time aware of any penalties or any dollars that have to be paid out as a result of that decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Then back to the same minister: is the government going to guarantee preferential treatment in the bidding process as compensation to Bird Construction for cancelling the earlier contract?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can categorically say no. There won't be any preferential treatment. As the minister indicated before, we're going to open up this contract to those Alberta companies and those companies world-wide because we want the very best possible new museum at its new location, and we're not going to tie our hands otherwise.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. Could I get clarification as to whether the government is cancelling this previous contract with Bird Construction or not? I don't know what a verbal termination is. Can the minister or perhaps the Treasury Board clarify that for me?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, virtually all the contracts, when you're dealing with items as specific as the museum or things that may be out of the ordinary, have clauses in them that are specific to that. We did anticipate that we may move the museum, so we did have in the contract opportunities to stop. There will be some costs for design work that was done and some progress that was made on the museum. There's no question that that will be paid out. It has not been a total loss as some of it has resulted in improvements to the building of the current museum.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many years we've been battling the pine beetle, with great success, I might add. We've known for a long time that the primary host species of pine was the lodgepole pine, but now through good research done by the University of Alberta, we've learned that, in fact, when push comes to shove, the beetle will move into Jack pine, another major species of pine in the province. My question is to the Sustainable Resource Development minister. What impact will this have on the health of the forest industry?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we know now, something that we had suspected, actually, for quite some time, is that the mountain pine beetle can actually find a very good host in Jack pine trees, and as we go forward, there could be others as well. What this does is that it opens up a whole new set of host trees for mountain pine beetles and most certainly in the province of Alberta. But more seriously than that, I think that this opportunity now has to be looked at by some of our partners in other provinces – Saskatchewan, Manitoba – and perhaps the federal government because this is the last . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was interested in knowing what, if any, changes will be made in our attack on the beetle.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that what we've done right now has been quite successful, and I believe that we'll continue the program that we have, with some single and small-stand tree removal and burning and then harvest management to get rid of infected trees and looking at harvest management in the next host trees as we move forward. We've moved our plan into effect in the central-northern part of the province, where the last wave of beetles moved in. We'll continue to work on . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Lund: Thank you. My final supplementary to the same minister: has there been any discussion with the other provinces – Saskatchewan, Manitoba – and, in fact, east of that and with the federal government as to what the plan might be?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been ongoing discussions, and in fact as some of the folks in the House would know, the federal government actually came in and partnered with us for a couple of years on some of the programs that we did. Considering the seriousness of the situation that we have now, where the Jack pine forests across northern Canada could very well be in peril, we believe that the federal government will come forward and assist.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Nondisclosure Agreements with Physicians

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister follow the path cleared just a few minutes ago today in question period by the Premier and allow Alberta Health Services to open its nondisclosure agreements with doctors McNamee, Fanning, Winton, and others?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that any non-disclosure agreement that's signed is between two parties, and if they both agree, then so be it. I can't comment on exactly what they may or may not want to do. The Premier made a clear statement as to what they might want to do, and that'll be up to them to decide.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this particular Minister of Health and Wellness constantly intervenes in the detailed operations of Alberta Health Services and given that he actually boasts about being able to pick up his cellphone and talk to anybody in the whole organization there, why won't he intervene to enact the Premier's invitation?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the allegations that I'm aware of, that were tabled in this House, pertain to a former health authority or authorities. I don't recall exactly what. If those people wish to come forward – we're dealing with individuals against individuals, potentially. It could be individuals against an employer. I'm not sure exactly what they are because no evidence has yet been provided.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that we're dealing with individuals against this government, is the minister of health confirming, then, that he does not support the Premier's invitation that Alberta Health Services open up its nondisclosure agreement with doctors who feel shut up and kicked out by AHS and its predecessors? Is he actually disagreeing with his own Premier?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. What I'm trying to do is provide clarity for this member, who appears to be off on some wild goose chase again. For those people who wish to come forward or if they don't, it's up to them to come forward, but it's not up to us to direct them because we weren't the employer. The previous health authorities were, or the current Alberta Health Services might have been. If they want to come forward, then they should come forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Abandoned Wells

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issues surrounding an abandoned well in the town of Calmar have highlighted the need for changes to regulations to ensure the development accommodates abandoned wells, and there seems to be some confusion on the timelines of this. Can the Minister of Municipal Affairs indicate when government will formally require through regulation municipalities to check for these wells before issuing development permits?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I want to stress to the member that the province is acting to ensure that similar situations do not happen again. We intend to amend the subdivision and development regulation, and we will require developers and municipalities to identify abandoned wells before a subdivision is approved to ensure that any new developments near such wells occur outside the setbacks that are to be established by the ERCB.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I ask the minister about the timeline. When will this timeline happen, and will it be different than the setback timeline?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, cabinet will be considering the proposed regulatory amendments later on this spring. I want this House to know that my department issued advisories to municipalities as far back as 1996 to do their due diligence in these situations. Municipalities presently don't need to wait until the proposed changes are formally in place to require developers to check for abandoned wells.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister. Thank you for clarifying that that will happen this spring. Can the minister commit also to sending out a reminder to all municipalities to check with the ERCB before this development happens so that we don't have the same issues happening until your regulations are in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've already noted, the guidelines were provided to all municipalities in '96 and then again in 2001 and again just recently, in 2010, for identifying and incorporating abandoned wells into developments. That information on abandoned wells is currently available through the ERCB, and at the same time Municipal Affairs, Energy, and the ERCB are working to ensure that that information on abandoned wells is more easily accessible to municipalities, to developers, and to the public through the website.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Lower Athabasca Regional Plan

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of weeks ago this government released its draft lower Athabasca regional plan for stakeholder feedback. This plan included the proposed extinguishment of roughly two dozen oil and gas leases, which represent a great deal of value to the companies involved as well as lost economic value to the region and royalties to the province, yet I did not see in this report any estimates from the government regarding these costs. To the SRD minister: has his ministry done an analysis of what it will cost Alberta taxpayers to compensate these leaseholders for the extinguishment of their leases?

Mr. Knight: You know, Mr. Speaker, again, I've answered this question, I think, three times now, and I'll do it again, as many times, I suppose, as is necessary so that the individual opposite could understand. What we have here is a situation where we've had a tremendous amount of consultation with the energy industry, by the way, with all of the companies that are involved that these folks speak about, and in fact what we have now is a draft plan for consultation. There is no way that anybody on God's green Earth could tell you what that might cost at the end of the day, when the plan is finalized.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Minister, given that you have put out a regional planning document for feedback that may cost stakeholder companies millions or even billions, may cost taxpayers millions or even billions, and you haven't provided any estimate of what the costs are to these businesses or to the taxpayer, not even an estimate, how can you expect relevant feedback without these cost estimates? Or is it that you already know that it's bad news for taxpayers and the affected businesses and you just don't want to let them know about it?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the situation here gets really, really simple. Does the member opposite have any idea what it might cost Alberta taxpayers if one – one – of the petitions now in the federal courts was successful and stopped all of the development in northern Alberta until we have a caribou recovery plan? Does he understand what that might cost?

Mr. Anderson: That's a stellar, stellar argument.

A final question to the same minister: will you undertake to make these estimates available to all Albertans so that we can all understand how much the taxpayer is going to pay industry for not developing these particular oil sands properties and also so that these companies' investors have an idea, just an idea, of how this plan will affect their investment decisions moving forward?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you this, clear to all Albertans. This would not be the first time that there's been repatriation of subsurface disposition in the province of Alberta. Some of the very same companies that are involved in conversations with us today around the lower Athabasca plan have in fact negotiated – negotiated – repatriation of subsurface disposition previously. I think that we will be able to get through this in a way that all Albertans understand, well, except for a few folks. Most certainly, the industry understands.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Medical Association has joined the call for an independent public inquiry into the issue of doctor intimidation in Alberta's health care system. The minister's response as reported by the CBC was to suggest that this is a self-interested ploy to advance its current contract negotiations with the province. To the minister: was the minister suggesting that the Alberta Medical Association, which represents virtually all of Alberta's physicians and medical students, is not genuinely interested in the issues that have prompted the call for a public inquiry?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what an absurd question. Of course they're genuinely interested. Why do you think we had the meeting and have had several meetings prior and are committed to doing even more meetings going forward? To improve the relationship. If there were some strains there, let's fix that and work together for better health outcomes for Albertans. That's what they've said verbally, and that's what they've said in their letters and in the joint news release that we put out not long ago.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that only a public inquiry will restore trust and given that one of the issues for the inquiry is the harm done to the reputation of individuals who dared to raise concerns about the health system, isn't this latest slur on the profession just more of the same?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that there were any slurs or other misappropriations, frankly, on either side. People have opinions. Some of those are medical opinions. Sometimes you have to get two medical opinions. You know what? There are occasions when those two medical opinions may not coincide. There may be occasions when medical administrators may not agree. There are occasions when we disagree amongst ourselves. That's what open processes are all about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister is also quoted by the CBC as saying that a public inquiry would be too expensive, can the minister explain why it's okay to spend on secret settlements but not on getting the truth out in the open?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I said no such thing. He should perhaps check his sources. What I did say was that I don't see how I could possibly advocate spending $20 million or $30 million or $40 million to wait two to four years for a review and for answers when for a million dollars we're going to have some action right now. We're going to have reports after three months, six months, and a final report with recommendations and actions that we'll actually be able to implement because the people leading the review are credible, knowledgeable medical individuals combined with others.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Canada-European Union Trade Negotiations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada and the European Union are currently negotiating a comprehensive economic trade agreement. Therefore, my questions are to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. How is Alberta ensuring that its interests are represented, and how do we know that we won't be stuck with an Ottawa-European first place free trade deal, with Alberta taking second place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the first time in one of these types of negotiations that Alberta has been involved. It has very much been a leader in the process of gaining that seat at the table and working with other provinces so that we can carve out and focus on special areas where we are more competent than others. There have been seven rounds of negotiations thus far, and we hope to have these Canada-EU negotiations concluded by the end of the year.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. It appears that the EU wants greater access to Alberta government procurement opportunities. On first glance it might look like good news, but on second glance won't this take jobs away from Albertans?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, our negotiators have the commitment and will abide by the commitment not to see any jobs or sovereignty lost through this process. Our attempt is to assist in growing the pie, making markets more accessible, making it opportune for more agricultural markets, and so on. So it would grow the pie of more jobs rather than control or limit the existing jobs that Albertans would have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. Could she please elaborate on the EU's fuel quality directive, whether or not it's part of CETA and whether or not this actually negatively affects Albertans?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. The fuel quality directive in its initial form was to carve out the opportunity for any oil from oil sands development to be a part of fuels that would be used in transportation by the EU. We believe it is a carbon fuel policy, a tax on carbon fuels, the FQD, which we believe could mitigate if we weren't careful, so we have been providing strong opposition to any such FQD to be in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Effectiveness of Seniors' Lodge Program

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Released last week, the Auditor General's report lists four past recommendations long ignored by the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Two of these relate to a program intended to preserve what Alberta seniors value most, their independence. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: when does the minister intend to implement the recommendation made six years ago and improve the measures that Seniors and Community Supports uses to access the effectiveness of the seniors' lodge program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to note that we were in front of Public Accounts last week, and this question was raised. I'd like to let the House know that we have been acting on the recommendations of the Auditor General and that in 2005-2006 we conducted the annual surveys. For five years in a row we had an 89 per cent satisfaction rate. At this time we are consulting with stakeholders so that we're able to find the measures that we need to implement to ensure that we can measure the satisfaction at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister: when will the minister implement another recommendation, again made six years ago, and improve the processes for identifying the increasing care needs of the seniors in lodges?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we are implementing those recommendations right now. The Auditor General hasn't had time to catch up with us.

Ms Pastoor: Has your ministry ever used the Alberta Health Quality Council to check on the standards in housing, and are all the reports public; in other words, the information and the deliberations and how they actually came to why these recommendations would be made?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, in 2010 we implemented new legislation called the Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act, and since that time our supportive living facilities have been complying with those standards. I think that the hon. member will find that the Auditor General will recognize that we have implemented his recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Unpaid Wages for Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the summer of 2007 an employment standards investigation concluded that 132 Chinese workers who worked at the CNRL Horizon's oil sands project had not been paid. My question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Now that three and a half years have passed, have these workers been compensated for their work in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been determined that CNRL has indeed paid the contractor; however, it hasn't been determined that the subcontractors have paid the workers. We have been assured by Chinese authorities that the workers have been paid upon their arrival in China. I have paid a personal visit, a protocol visit, to the Chinese consulate to discuss this matter. I requested that the payments to the workers be documented. To date I have not received any such documents substantiating the payment to the workers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just wondering how long this government intends on waiting for this documentation to prove that these Chinese workers were actually paid?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, that's a good question, Mr. Speaker. I have to tell you that I'm personally frustrated with this matter, and I have to be frank in saying that I don't anticipate that these documents will be arriving. However, I'm hoping to be proven wrong. CNRL has made available $3.17 million, held in trust by this government. We have now returned the dollars. However, we will have access to those dollars until the year 2017. Once we receive documentation that either the workers have or haven't been paid, we will do what we can within our limited jurisdiction to make sure that these monies are delivered.

Mr. Quest: Again to the Minister of Employment and Immigration: what mechanisms do you have in place now that were not in place when this happened in 2007?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, it was a learning experience, to say the least. Since then we have opened up temporary foreign worker offices in Edmonton and in Calgary. We're now publishing information relevant to workers' rights in a number of languages, including Cantonese and Mandarin. We have put in place processes through which we now control, in a sense audit, employers who hire temporary foreign workers. This was an isolated incident where a large number of workers came in at once and left at once. That has not happened since. But we are paying closer attention to employers who hire TFWs in large numbers.

Nondisclosure Agreements with Physicians

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, my questions again are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that Alberta Health Services operates under the same act that its predecessors, the regional health authorities, operated under and given that this act names the Minister of Health and Wellness as its responsible minister, will this minister quit dodging responsibility and have AHS open all the nondisclosure agreements, as his own Premier suggested?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, once again, nondisclosure agreements are legally binding agreements made between two parties. If those two parties agree to open up and disclose what is otherwise sealed forever, then they're certainly most welcome to do that. I would hope that if they're asked to, they would do exactly as the Premier suggested.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, section 8 of the act that this minister is responsible for says that the minister may give directions to a health authority for the purpose of providing priorities and guidelines for it to follow in the exercise of its powers and coordinating the work of the health authority with the programs, policies, and work of the government. Will the minister use his legislative authority to have AHS open its nondisclosure agreements with intimidated doctors?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of things that I can do, direct, and ask to be done. But something that I cannot do and direct to be done is something that is a contractual, legal undertaking between two parties. That is between those two parties; they have to agree. I'm not going to step in and tell people how to interpret the law or to break the law. Heaven forbid.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this minister is the minister responsible, supposedly, for one of the parties involved in this, why is this minister breaking rank with his own Premier and continuing and reinforcing this shameful cover-up?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there is no such cover-up going on whatsoever. There is a full, independent process going on. Let's just be reminded of who's leading that review. The chair of the Health Quality Council, Dr. Lorne Tyrrell. Now, here is a credible individual. He's a former dean of medicine at the University of Alberta, a world-respected leader who discovered an oral therapy for hepatitis B, a highly revered medical man. Dr. John Cowell is an equally highly respected man, a former physician in emergency rooms, and a former family practitioner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

XL Foods Meat Processing Plant Closure

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of Canada's largest beef processors, Alberta-based XL Foods, is ceasing its production in a Calgary plant. This closure will leave hundreds of Albertans without work, and many of them are my constituents. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: what can the government do for the hundreds of workers and their families that are now left in a vulnerable, worrisome position?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, it's a devastating situation for some 500 families where individuals have lost employment. I have to tell you that my department has been in contact with both the employer and the union in this regard. We have held three what we call workplace adjustment sessions with the workers. Six more are scheduled. We will be working with all the affected workers in assisting them with employment search skills and with contacting potential employers through our offices throughout the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister. Some of the employees at the closing plant came from the temporary foreign workers program. What do you have in place to help these guest workers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct. Some 94, I believe, of the 500 workers affected were temporary foreign workers. They are now being put in contact with our temporary foreign worker advisory offices, primarily in Calgary. Those offices will be providing them with similar assistance as we would to other workers relative to potentially working further with other employers in Alberta. I have to highlight that now our offices are able to provide services to temporary foreign workers in more than 170 languages, so we have the competency to work with those workers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. XL Foods explained that the closure is due to an insufficient number of mature cattle in Alberta. My question is: why is this number so low? Is our beef industry in danger?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, a number of factors came together to cause problems, BSE being the most obvious of them, which caused us to have reduced access to a number of markets. These factors, of course, resulted in the western Canadian beef herd shrinking. There is good news, though. Prices have rebounded dramatically, and the industry is strengthening. It takes a number of years for it to recover, unfortunately. It's a business decision. We have the capacity in the province to manage the number of head that we have right now, and until such time as there are more animals, there won't be a necessity for that extra processing.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes Oral Question Period for today. Nineteen members were recognized, 114 questions and responses.

In a few seconds from now we will continue with Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Patient Advocacy by Physicians

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Last Friday the Alberta Medical Association joined the Official Opposition's call for a full independent judicial public inquiry into allegations of bullying and intimidation of health care professionals by this government. The health minister's pathetic response was to suggest that the sincere concerns of doctors are merely a negotiation ploy for the next master agreement. This minister who is supposed to defend public health care has instead insulted the integrity of our front-line health care professionals. On top of that, the minister had the gall to suggest that we can't afford a public inquiry.

From what hat did the minister pull his estimates? Why is the minister complaining about the cost when the government was only too happy to spend over $22 million on extra pensions for top health officials, including a lifetime pension of over $22,000 a month for the former head of the Calgary region? Another $22 million in severance cheques was cut to other officials without any public discussion. But there's not enough money for a public inquiry for truth and justice. Maybe we could reduce Alberta Health Services' $66 million annual travel budget and use the savings to fund a public inquiry for truth and justice.

Since this Premier took power, our health budget has climbed from over $9 billion to $15 billion. Where has the money gone? It certainly hasn't gone to improve service.

We have extra millions for private consultants, increased IT, and legal fees, but there is no public money to fund a public inquiry for truth and justice. Shame. Taxpayers and health care professionals deserve to know the truth about allegations of physician intimidation. Lives are at stake. If the health minister wants to balk at the cost, perhaps he should stop spending millions of dollars on hand-picked elites and invest in a public inquiry for truth and justice.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Scotiabank Pro-Am Hockey Tournament

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand here today to congratulate the hockey players who helped raise $1.2 million this year for the fight against Alzheimer's during the Scotiabank Pro-Am hockey tournament that took place on April 8, 9, and 10, 2011, in Leduc, Alberta. This second annual event provided needed funding for caretaking and research in the battle against Alzheimer's. Specifically, proceeds from the event go towards Help Stick It to Alzheimer's in support of the Gordie and Colleen Howe fund.

Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton tournament included 25 teams, which is up from last year's 18. The hockey teams included NHL alumni, allowing hockey fans of all skill levels to team up with their heroes such as Paul Coffey, Marty McSorley, Dave Lumley, and Bryan Trottier, just to name a few.

It's important to mention that our own health minister was a referee at the all-star event. We also had an MLA all-star team sponsored by Greg Christenson, chair of the Alberta committee to end Alzheimer's. Our coach was Nick Lees from the Edmonton Journal, and MLA players were the Minister of Aboriginal Relations, the Member for Calgary-Hays, and myself. Mark Napier was our team draft pick.

I would like to thank Scotiabank for being the title sponsor of Canada's largest annual fundraiser for Alzheimer's, and many thanks to the volunteers and the players who helped raise money and donated their time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Speak Out Student Conference

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand before you today and recognize a collaboration of government and Alberta students to enhance our province's education system through Speak Out, Alberta's student engagement initiative. The inspiration for the Speak Out initiative came from the February 2008 throne speech, when the government announced it would engage Alberta students to provide a fresh and youthful perspective on learning.

Asking for students' input and taking action on their ideas is moving us toward creating more actively engaged citizens and a stronger education system in our province, Mr. Speaker. As testament to that, this past weekend 200 students and 100 parents and chaperones from across Alberta participated in Speak Out's annual student conference here in Edmonton. For the first time ever students and Alberta Education experts worked together in a series of workshops covering a variety of topics such as teaching quality, healthy schools, and designing school facilities for the future. At the same time parents and chaperones benefited from a series of information sessions about current education initiatives.

I'd like to thank the Minister of Education for his public engagement and all of his special work in involving Albertans. Setting the Direction, Inspiring Education, and Speak Out are tremendous engagement initiatives that he should be proud of.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's youth have a keen understanding of what's important in their learning, and they have a desire to be involved in the improvement of their education experience. They're telling us how education programs can be offered in a way that is supportive, flexible, and consistent with their needs, and as a result Alberta is leading the nation in best practices of student engagement.

I commend Alberta students, ministry staff, parents, chaperones, our minister, and the Speak Out team for their commitment to the collaboration to strengthen the delivery of education in our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Land Stewardship Legislation

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise today and speak about some of the positive support for Bill 10 that I have heard from a number of Albertans. Many Albertans recognize the need for long-term planning, and Bill 10 will ensure that the process for regional planning is transparent. Albertans understand that we need to carefully manage our natural resources in order to provide for future generations and in order to enhance our reputation as an environmentally responsible jurisdiction.

Importantly, legal experts at both the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary have stated that Bill 10 is generous when it comes to protecting property rights. Indeed, some of these experts have said that the legislation goes further than Canadian common law does in protecting and compensating landowners and that Alberta needs this kind of legislation. Ranchers and lawyers in southern Alberta have also emphasized the fact that the intent of Bill 10 is clear and that it protects property rights.

Mr. Speaker, it's good to know that renowned, nonpartisan legal experts support Bill 10. I look forward to more support for it from those who know the issues best.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Lower Athabasca Regional Plan

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise today and speak about some of the reaction to the lower Athabasca regional plan from the experts at investment firms and equity research departments. Of course, investment firms and banks have large holdings in many oil companies with a significant presence in our province, so they closely monitor regulatory developments and the impact of such developments on stock prices.

Some individuals have expressed concern about the effect that the lower Athabasca regional plan will have on companies with a presence in the oil sands. However, firms such as Edward Jones, Canaccord Genuity, and the Royal Bank of Canada have said that the impact on oil sands companies will be very modest. Stock prices of many companies that operate in northern Alberta increased after investors had a chance to react to the impact LARP will have on the oil sands leases. Additionally, Mr. Speaker, the LARP, that was released earlier this month, was only a draft plan. Our government will consider changes that are suggested by stakeholders in the affected region.

The lower Athabasca regional plan is important to balance conservation and economic development goals, and it is good to see that the unbiased experts at prestigious investment houses agree on the merits of our plan.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Use of Handguns on the Trapline

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am a trapper's daughter and proud of it. When my father went on his trapping trips, every now and then I was allowed to go and learn about that lifestyle. It was glorious, and, yes, I was even able to trap a few animals, learn to skin, scrape, and hang the furs for eventual sale. My father carried his gun as life can get scary on that old trapline and sometimes we needed it to accomplish the final deed on the animal.

In those long ago years no one cared when and where you took your rifle or your .22 with you. However, the use of handguns or pistols involved in trapping has always been illegal. A co-constituent of mine and of the Minister of Municipal Affairs, Mr. Gene Walters, was an individual who was incessant in his lobby efforts to be able to use handguns while trapping. Gene Walters was a trapper for more than 70 years of his life and in those times wished and worked with me and the minister and whoever would listen for the ability for trappers to use handguns or pistols. He made impassioned pleas to every minister responsible for trapping and never quit.

To the Minister of SRD: thank you for your vision. To Mr. Walters and all my trappers: your work and your wishes have finally been realized because there has been a recent change to the schedule of the Alberta Wildlife Act, allowing the use of handguns or pistols involved in trapping. With this change in the Alberta Wildlife Act, professional trappers can now utilize legally-owned handguns to dispatch wildlife caught on traplines. Of course, Mr. Speaker, any trapper wishing to carry handguns must meet federal government requirements applicable to handguns.

The benefits of this change, however, extend to both the trapper and the animal because now trappers can dispatch their catch in a more efficient and humane manner while increasing the safety and productivity of trappers. This is the argument my trappers, especially Mr. Walters, have always made. It is indeed unfortunate that such a change in the act did not come into fruition during Mr. Walters' trapping career.

Gene, thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At the appropriate time I will move that pursuant to Standing Order 30 the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, that the Alberta Medical Association on April 15, 2011, added its voice to the demands for a public inquiry into the health care system, making an inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act necessary to maintain public confidence.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling a response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a question raised in Committee of Supply with regard to Treasury Board.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a report by the United Way of Calgary entitled Towards Resiliency for Vulnerable Youth. This report documents research into the experiences of vulnerable youth in the transition into adulthood, including the challenges and opportunities they face. Here are the number of copies of the report required by the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition I have three tablings. The first is a copy of the letter from the president of the AMA to its members, that has been referred to a number of times already today.

The second is a copy of a letter from the Rocky Mountain Civil Liberties Association, which supports a public inquiry.

The third, again on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition, is the CIHI, the Canadian Institute for Health Information, document from March 2011, entitled Wait Times in Canada: A Comparison by Province, 2011. Again, that has been referenced a number of times in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite five copies of letters from citizens in Lethbridge. They are concerned for the youth who may not receive the help that they need to be able to turn their lives around because of the devastating 40 per cent funding cut to 5th on 5th youth programs. They are Jodie Black, Bryce Nugent, Terry Hanna, Keira Irwin, Elisabeth Fujima, Wayne Brown, Paddy Cashen, S. Cashen, Brenda Ikuta, M. Nakashima, A. Bjarnason, Dave Lillemo, B. Brunsdon, and Daryl Herbers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Within the next month and a half Sustainable Resource Development has given permission to Spray Lake logging to begin the clear-cutting of one-third, cumulatively, of the Castle-Crown, and the following individuals are very concerned: Isobel Mailloux, Maja Nuyt, Terry Rauscher, Peter Dettling, Linda Barbeau, Mark Barker, Andrew Stiles, Jared McAdam, Randy Tomiuk, Joseph Vipond, Laura Peters, Joy Halvorson, Mike Taylor, Monica and Karoly Ban Matei, Ken and Joan Newman, Gabriel McCay, Nancy Issenman, Joanna Barnes, Tiffany Moore, Connie Smith, Lorraine Campbell, Dave Smith, Bronwyn Elko, Chandra Kraus, and Judy Goodman.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the affidavit of records for Dr. Ciaran McNamee. It's a 50-page document with about 500 and some-odd meetings and letters with many who understood about the cancer issue that I raised.

The second is a series of e-mails between 2007 and 2008, just prior to the election, some of these e-mails to Capital health authority leaders and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, warning of the impending poor patient outcomes in the emergency departments prior to the 322 cases that were collected during the election.

Then I have another tabling from Network Health, Inc., listing the key executives in this private surgical facility, one of which is the CEO of the Health Quality Council of Alberta.

I have a tabling from the Edmonton Journal, November 14, 1997, an article by Rick Pedersen, saying: WCB letting injured workers opt to be treated in private facilities in the HRC group.

I have a tabling of an Edmonton Journal article dated May 8, 1998: Barrett wants cooling off period for public health officials.

I have another tabling from the Edmonton Journal, July 22, 1998. "Retirement deal for ex-WCB chief criticized; An 'obscene' package, critics say: but Cowell also praised for improving WCB finances, performance."

I have another article from the Edmonton Journal, dated July 23, 1998, by Charles Rusnell: "Minister defends retirement deal for ex-WCB boss."

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, I must advise that under Daily Routine, Standing Order 7(7): "At 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly." So, Clerk, I guess we'll have to deal with you tomorrow.

3:00 Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you have an application under Standing Order 30. Proceed, please, briefly.

Patient Advocacy by Physicians

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 I move:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, that the Alberta Medical Association on April 15, 2011, added its voice to demands for a public inquiry into the health care system making an inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act necessary to maintain public confidence.

Mr. Speaker, late on Friday afternoon Albertans were surprised, I think, in some cases to hear that the Alberta Medical Association, representing 10,000 doctors, took the position that the only way to recover confidence in the health care system in Alberta would be a public inquiry. The AMA has changed its position from its previous stand, where an inquiry by the Health Quality Council would be adequate, and that is the position this government has used to shore up its efforts to avoid a proper public inquiry.

It is a concern that the first response of the health minister to this news was to suggest that it was nothing more than a labour union negotiating tactic, a comment, I think, that clearly shows that the continuing agenda of intimidation is alive and is more reason to get on urgently with a public inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, each time another story of problems with the health care system emerges, the government has claimed it is not representative and that there is not an emergency. But the urgency is created by the volume of concern as much as by any particular incident, a volume that is overwhelming now given the Alberta Medical Association position.

The AMA call on Friday now represents the body speaking on behalf of the province's doctors telling the rest of us that, in their view, this is the only satisfactory way to address these concerns. Mr. Speaker, what can be more urgent than the organization which represents physicians and surgeons who provide health care to all of us speaking out and saying that this is needed in order to restore confidence in our health care system? If those with reason to know can only trust such an action, then it is urgent to deal with this issue immediately.

The AMA letter is a very dramatic action by a normally very cautious body, and it should be of deep concern to all Albertans. It creates an entirely new context for the issues many of us have been raising for some time, and it is a call for this House to stop its ordinary business and have proper debate on this issue immediately.

Mr. Speaker, the health minister's comments that a public inquiry takes too long or costs too much money are absurd. The only way to get the correct answer is to do things the correct way, and everyone except this government that doesn't want its dirty laundry hung out for all to see believes a public inquiry is needed. There is an urgent need for us to set aside our normal day's work to debate this today.

Beauchesne's 390 states that "urgency" does not apply to the matter itself, but means 'urgency of debate', when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough.

Hence, given that there is no other opportunity to debate the need for a public inquiry resulting from the current crisis in health care, it is important that we address it today.

In House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 695 it says that an emergency debate was approved on the sudden and unexpected revelation of events which [had] taken place in the past, in that they might precipitate a course of conduct which, if allowed to continue unchecked, would certainly classify itself as an emergency and a matter of urgent consideration.

Mr. Speaker, for decades the government has been interfering in the health system politically and has created chaos in the health care system, and now health care professionals feel that it needs to be investigated. For example, Calgary health board region member Mairi Matheson has said that an inquiry would reveal, quote, some shocking numbers. There have been untimely deaths in large numbers, end quote, as an outcome of the closure of acute-care hospital beds. This is very serious.

The Health Quality Council review is insufficient. It reports to the minister of health. Given the potential for further cover-up and the appearance of systematic interference the Health Quality Council is clearly an inappropriate forum for investigating these potential cover-ups and intimidation. That's why we need an independent judicial and public inquiry as authorized by the Public Inquiries Act with the power to issue subpoenas. The government and its delegates should not be given the power to investigate themselves.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that sufficient proof does exist. For example, Dr. McNamee's court case: in the wake of his lawsuit additional doctors are coming forward to say that they, too, were intimidated. Not only does proof exist that the government did silence its critics, but there's now sufficient evidence to indicate that this is not an isolated incident but part of a broader pattern of intimidation.

Mr. Speaker, it's important that we clear the air. Dr. Paul Parks, head of the emergency section of the AMA, has said that the health care system is becoming, quote, toxic and that a public inquiry may be the only way to allay public fears. An inquiry held under the Public Inquiries Act is the only way to restore public faith in the health system. Clearly, this legislation exists for this reason. Albertans deserve to know the truth. They deserve clarity, and this debate will create the opportunity for such to occur.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the rules of the House indicate that the Speaker may invite the member to briefly state his argument, and they also allow such debate as he considers relevant to the question of urgency. As this is private members' day today and the importance of private members is paramount, in my view, I will recognize two additional speakers briefly. You must speak to the urgency of the matter, the urgency of the question.

The hon. Government House Leader or the hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to speak to the urgency, but I also want to speak to whether, in fact, the motion is in order. On March 14, I believe, this House did adjourn to debate a standing order, and the root of it was that the government silenced critics of the health care system, thereby undermining confidence in the public health and contributing to the crisis in Alberta's health care system.

If we look at Standing Order 30(7), a motion under this Standing Order is subject to the following conditions:

- (d) the motion must not revive discussion on a matter that has been discussed in the same session pursuant to this Standing Order.

Clearly, the root of what the hon. member is bringing forward today is exactly the same as what was discussed in the standing order on March 14 and that this House adjourned to discuss. I mean, the fact that the Medical Association or any other union comes forward with a letter supporting a particular position that somebody has been taking does not detract from the fact that what they're talking about is, in essence, public confidence in the health care system as a result of purported issues that have been raised by various people in the medical profession. The root of this is exactly the same as what we debated on March 14. Nothing has changed with respect to that particular matter.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that, in fact, on March 22 you recognized that particular fact when the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere brought forward a Standing Order 30 which, although it was in different words, was a motion which dealt with exactly the same subject. This motion is not in order. It's ultra vires of the standing orders under Standing Order 30(7)(d).

Also, Mr. Speaker, it is not a genuine emergency. If you followed the discussion in the House, as I know you have, through question period over a number of days and even the tablings from Edmonton-Meadowlark today, you're talking about things that were purported to happen back in a previous decade and in some cases over two decades ago. Nothing that has been raised talks about a crisis in health care today. This is not a flu epidemic, and "Are we ready for the flu epidemic?" or "Are the ambulances running around the city with no place to stop?" Those were previous emergency debates in the House. Those were genuine emergencies that Albertans wanted to know their leaders were taking the time to talk about.

The subject matter that is important to Albertans has been referred to the Health Quality Council. The issues that they're talking about that supposedly need a public inquiry are matters that relate to purported historical situations in the health system and the historical impugning of the integrity or the bullying of doctors. It has nothing to do with what's urgent today for Albertans, nothing to do with the actions which we care about in this government in terms of health care for Albertans: how Albertans can access their health care system with confidence, which we have moved very strongly with to have the Health Quality Council, with an independent board of directors, being able to set its own terms of reference and who have gone out to support their position with two pre-eminent solicitors in this province to support them, handling exactly what Albertans are concerned about, which is their access to health care today.

Mr. Speaker, the motion is ultra vires of standing orders. It's not in order. Secondly, if it was in order, it's not urgent. No urgency has been demonstrated.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you very much. Under that brief definition, that was approximately three minutes.

The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would argue that there has been an escalation of this situation in such that it... [interjection] The Minister of Energy may petition the Speaker to speak if he so wishes.

In my three minutes what I wish to say to the Speaker is that there has been an escalation in the issue around the need for a public inquiry around what this government has done to a series of health care professionals. They, in turn, have claimed that they have been silenced. The government maintains they did not silence them. That's what the issue has been here. It has escalated in that the government has changed its position.

What makes this urgent, Mr. Speaker? What makes it urgent is that we now have seven days, and we're in the seventh day before we take a constituency break, or if I'm to believe the rumours, which, of course, I never do, that might be the end of the spring session completely, and that would be the end of our opportunity to get to the bottom of this issue. That puts a great deal of urgency on this issue. I'm not in charge of that; government is. But they can put an end to this whenever they choose.

We have had the Premier talk about the Evidence Act protecting members, but if you talk to labour lawyers, they are very clear that the Evidence Act does not protect anyone that tries to come forward with information, particularly from nondisclosure agreements. The AMA itself published a series of documents that indicate that physicians subject to nondisclosure agreements will be at risk unless restrictions are lifted. Therefore we have a situation increasingly where health care professionals, specifically doctors, specifically doctors working out of the AMA, have made it very clear that they are increasingly uncomfortable with the position that this government puts them in.

What do we face from that? I don't have the resources to do the business risk analysis, but I would say that the chances of doctors withdrawing services increase by the day, particularly when you have the AMA itself – which, by the way, is not a union, and the Government House Leader is being deliberately mischievous when he says it is. I think we reach the point where the AMA, in fact, could be withdrawing services because their members are so unhappy with the lack of movement and clarity that they are able to get.

How does this affect the public? How is this urgent for the public? Well, if you don't have a doctor, Mr. Speaker, you're not going to be able to get much health care out of it. People are increasingly questioning this government's veracity around the provision of health care, whether they have in fact muzzled doctors. We've seen a number of examples that are not subject to nondisclosure agreements which have come before the House with documented material that indicates that it is actually a pattern of this government that they first question the individual's mental health, then they circulate that to their family, friends, and co-workers, and they go on from there to challenge their licence with the AMA.

It is urgent to the public in Alberta and to our health care professionals in Alberta. That is why we bring it forward, especially when we look at this being private members' day. There's no other opportunity for that, so I don't do this lightly, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak.

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you very much. I have been looking at this matter since I received this notification from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood this morning in my office at 11:20. The requirement for providing the two hours' notice has certainly been met. I am prepared to deal with this matter, having heard the three submissions we've had in here and consulting the authorities with respect to this as well.

As all members are aware, the relevant parliamentary authorities on this subject are pages 689 to 696 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice and second edition of Beauchesne's, paragraphs 387 to 390. The motion reads as follows:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, that the Alberta Medical Association on April 15, 2011, added its voice to demands for a public inquiry into the health care system, making an inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act necessary to maintain public confidence.

Hon. members, this is not the first time we've had a Standing Order 30 application on this subject. In fact, this is the third time the Assembly has considered a motion of this nature. A debate went ahead on Monday, March 14, 2011, based on the motion moved by the Member for Edmonton-Centre. On Tuesday, March 22, 2011, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere also made the Standing Order 30 application, and the subject did not proceed on the basis that the matter had already been discussed. Standing Order 30(7)(d) is clear. "The motion must not revive discussion on a matter that has been discussed in the same session" under Standing Order 30.

Simply because a different member or a new party has provided input into a matter that has already been debated does not make the matter new, nor does it make it urgent. Accordingly, the chair does not find the request for leave in order under the Assembly's rules, and the question will not be put.

Orders of the Day

Motions for Returns

Patients Awaiting Thoracic Surgery

M11. Mr. Mason moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, including but not limited to communications, reports, briefings, and memos, related to thoracic surgery wait lists and the number of patients who died while awaiting surgery for the fiscal years 2000-01 through 2009-10.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, for bringing this motion for a return forward. Of course, it's no longer necessary, so I will be rejecting it on behalf of the government of Alberta.

I just want to briefly explain why. I think the member already knows and all members here would know that this motion was put on the Order Paper or submitted or whatever on day 9, which would have made it March 8 of 2011, which is actually before the Health Quality Council of Alberta review, the independent review, was announced, which, by the way, was on March 12. These topics, Mr. Speaker, will be covered by that thorough review, so I'm not going to stand here and advocate for duplicating the effort. In fact, I think members would be reminded that the Health Quality Council of Alberta's review into the quality of care and safety of patients requiring access to emergency department care and cancer surgery and the role and process of physician advocacy is already well on the record.

There are several parts to that review that they're undertaking, Mr. Speaker, and it will cover exactly this. For example, under the first part the Health Quality Council of Alberta's independent review will determine whether the quality of care provided to and the safety of a group of 321 patients that accessed emergency department services at the University of Alberta hospital during 2008 and a group of nine patients that accessed emergency department services at the University of Alberta hospital in 2010 were significantly compromised due to extended lengths of stays, awaiting diagnosis and treatment in the emergency department. These cases were identified publicly on October 22, 2010. The cases had been collected by the emergency department physicians serving in the role of triage physicians at the UAH.

Secondly, the review will also determine whether the quality of care and the safety of a group of 250 cancer patients who were on a surgical wait-list of 1,200 were seriously compromised due to delayed access to surgery as alleged in the question raised in the Alberta Legislature on February 28, 2011.

Finally, item 3, Mr. Speaker. Based on the findings and analysis of the investigation and the analysis of current practices, the review will make recommendations for system level improvements in access and wait times for emergency department care and cancer treatments, which is, I suspect, what the member is driving at, and I thank him for that.

I'll just wrap up quickly, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I'm quite sure that the thoracic surgery issue, everything from, basically, the throat down to the abdomen, involves something that would come under that review. Let's await that review and see if, in fact, there is some additional information there that needs to come forward. I'm quite sure there will be. The review is under way. It's going to be very thorough. It will involve, I'm sure, numerous people. Anyone can participate that can come forward. We'll ensure that they get a copy of this motion, hon. member, just so that they can perhaps look at it as well.

Finally, once that final report comes out, Mr. Speaker, it will be made public, so everyone will see it. The public actually will see it first, and then it will come to me, and it will come into this Assembly for tabling for the official records of the House. I know that the member is on record supporting at least parts of the Health Quality Council of Alberta review, and I would hope that we would understand the parallels between the motion as put forward by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood today and the commensurate process, the independent health quality review, which covers exactly the same subjects as I've just outlined.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, that precludes any other member from participating. Are there additional speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to participate in the debate over Motion for a Return 11. The hon. minister of health has asked us to place a tremendous amount of faith in the Health Quality Council, and I actually have quite a bit of faith in the limited evidence that the Health Quality Council can look at. Where I don't have faith is the fact that the Health Quality Council will not report directly to the Assembly but will report directly to the health minister, and the distance between that report being tabled in this Assembly, the time factor, and the filtration factor is of great concern to me.

Very similar is the government's proposed idea under Bill 10 of a patient ombudsman. Again, that individual reports to the minister and not to the Assembly. So what was requested in Motion for a Return 11 was the direct presentation of the information to the Assembly.

The minister has suggested that it is going to take between six and nine months for the Health Quality Council to meet on a very limited agenda dealing with the case of the 322 individuals who were seen over a period of one month in one hospital, so this is a very small sampling of a larger case. Without that information coming to this Assembly in a reasonable time frame as requested in Motion for a Return 11, we have no guarantee that we're ever going to see that information because of the potential interference by the minister of health in the presentation of the information he receives from the Health Quality Council, which has a very limited mandate and a fairly lengthy period in terms of investigating that mandate.

Mr. Speaker, by that time I'm sure we'll have had an election. We'll probably have a new health minister. The situation right now demands that this information be provided in a timely manner. Albertans are counting on it. It's not just history; it's happening every single day in our emergency departments, in our long-term care facilities, and people looking for thoracic surgery are wondering what type of service they're going to be receiving based on what has happened in previous times.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to agree completely with my fellow colleagues in the opposition that this is a very reasonable request. You're dealing with people's lives here, and obviously we haven't had the opportunity to – well, the emergency debate was held out of order today, which is unfortunate, so we can't discuss it there.

I have a real, personal problem with this health minister refusing this information to the Assembly. I think that it's irresponsible. I think that if he had nothing to hide, or if his government had nothing to hide, more appropriately, they would have no problem whatsoever giving this information out and disclosing it to the people of Alberta through this Legislative Assembly. I feel that it is impossible right now for the public to have confidence in this system or in this government because of the secretive nature within which they work.

You know, we have a situation there with Dr. McNamee. Yeah, those are very serious allegations in the statement of claim. A statement of claim is, indeed, not in itself a statement of fact, as the Premier said today, but those are definitely some very serious allegations. Unless we can see all the documents, particularly the ones that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark brought forward today, all those documents that were included in that – that's just one example – if we can't see those things, if the people of Alberta can't see those documents, how can we make a judgment as to whether there was, in fact, something relevant and something true that was being alleged by Dr. McNamee and others?

There is no doubt that having the Health Quality Council look into the patient care issues regarding people waiting on the wait-list, et cetera, is a good thing. It's a good start. It's something that with regard to the quality of care issue should be looked at. But that does not mean that just because they are looking at it, we should not as members of this Assembly have access to those documents that they may be looking at as well. Frankly, it just defies logic that we would, you know, as members of this Assembly be denied access to those very important documents so that we can undertake to do our own analysis of whether, in fact, there are problems in the system and whether, in fact, there are things that need to be looked at.

I don't understand the need for secrecy. What on earth could be the reason for that? If there's nothing this government has to hide, then put the documents on the table. Let us see them. Let's see these documents related to thoracic surgery wait-lists and so forth. If there's nothing there to worry about, then by all means we can all move on with things, but if there is something, it is our duty as opposition members to point those things out and let the public decide, after hearing the government's arguments and our arguments and the Liberals' arguments and the ND's arguments, whether or not there's something wrong that needs to be fixed. That's the whole essence of democracy.

Yet we sit in here, and we ask very clearly – it's so reasonable – for copies of all documents, including but not limited to communications, reports, briefings, and memos related to thoracic surgery wait times and the number of patients who died while awaiting surgery for the fiscal years '01 through '09-10. How is it justified in your eyes, Minister, to deny us that information? You might deny our conclusions that we derive from that information, and that's your right. It's the government's job to justify their actions and so forth. But as opposition members we need access to this information. This is just the latest in a long line of examples where you think that if you just deny the information continually, it won't come out, and you'll never have to be accountable for it.

You know, this Premier, Mr. Speaker, has clearly said over and over again that one of the things that he wants to be known for is accountability and transparency. Well, how is this accountable and transparent when we're being refused documents, very reasonable documents, so that we as opposition can do our job and find out for ourselves whether or not there's something that we need to bring up as opposition members in this House?

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll say that I completely agree with the member's motion. I hope that the government will see it in themselves to do the right thing here and produce these documents because they are needed for the opposition to be able to do its job on what has become a very, very serious public health issue. Just simply sweeping them under the rug and not providing them because they don't feel like it, because it could make them feel uncomfortable, or whatever the reason is is just not appropriate and should be beneath every member of the government.

Thank you.

3:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on this point.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to stand and speak in favour of this motion also. I think that any Albertan that is listening and listening to the minister say that this isn't necessary would be offended. This is the House. This is critical information. There's no better place for a question like this or a more appropriate place for this type of question. I'm astounded that the government would say: well, we'll wait for the Health Quality Council to do this. The government is accountable to the people. The opposition's job is to ask these questions. This is very pertinent and important information.

Once again, I cannot believe the stonewalling that goes on. I was at a function this weekend, and one of the comments was that this is the most secretive government in all of Canada. This is exactly the type of reason that they're talking about, when the minister gets up and says: "Well, we're not even going to answer and reply to this motion. It's out of order, not necessary. We've got a Health Quality Council, that's going to look into these things."

Nobody debates the Health Quality Council's important role in looking at these things, but there's still an accountability factor. These numbers, the reports, the e-mails that have gone back and forth should be made public. It's just the right thing to do. This is the right place to do it. Very disappointed if this motion doesn't pass.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there additional speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak for the motion that the hon. member has brought forward in regard to copies of all documents, including but not limited to communications, reports, briefings, and memos, related to thoracic surgery wait-lists and the number of patients who died while awaiting surgery for the fiscal years 2000-01 through 2009-10.

What I find quite amazing is the fact that the government talks about – and they're mocking – that we want to get stats from some time ago and that they thought it, in my mind, quite funny. It's been interesting to me that they've stood in front of this Legislature and talked in this question period for weeks on end about all of the good things that the Health Quality Council is going to do and what they're going to look at. Thus, the motion is on some of the things that the Health Quality Council is going to look into.

They've stood up and talked about all of the wonderful people on the Health Quality Council, and I don't think anybody can take that away from them. The people that will be on the Health Quality Council will be the same people that will probably want to look at this same documentation. It's hard for me to understand why the minister would not be prepared to table all of the documentation in the Legislature when he will be providing the same documentation, I would expect or I would hope or I would think, that the Health Quality Council will have brought before them.

You know, you sometimes wonder when we see what transpired on Friday, with the AMA doing what I consider, as long as I can remember, since I've been in this Legislature – and that's been since 1993 – an unprecedented move by coming forward in support of a public inquiry. For these particular individuals – and I've had the opportunity to meet on several occasions with the AMA over my time in this Legislature – their number one concern has always been representing the doctors and their concerns. For them to come out on Friday, late on a Friday afternoon, after meeting with the minister the previous Thursday to discuss all of the goodwill and all the good things that they're doing, is to me something that has to shake this province to its roots, quite frankly.

The 6,500 doctors that they represent obviously want to make sure that their concerns are represented. The member has brought forward a motion, quite frankly, that I think is very simple: provide the documentation that is pertinent to get to the root and get to the bottom of the matter. The government should nowhere at any time hesitate about providing this particular information because, as my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere has said, the Premier has talked about how he is open, accountable, transparent. Well, if you are open and if you are accountable and if you are transparent, it would seem to me it would be in the best interests for him to table this documentation, have this discussion that has been in the Legislature for months, with two emergency debates that I believe we've already had. A third one was brought forward, again by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, to see this information that the member has asked for. We want it on the record that as the health critic for the Wildrose I and my caucus all support the motion that he's bringing forward.

The Speaker: Additional speakers, or shall I call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to close the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, if there was one action of this Legislature, one action of this government that would sum up exactly what we're dealing with on this whole question of doctor intimidation and problems with the health care system, including what happened with patients who were on waiting lists for lung cancer surgery, that was dealt with in this request, it would be this. This is exactly what it is that is at stake that the public is talking about. A simple request – a simple request – has been brought forward that the government provide us with information relating to some serious allegations that have been out there percolating for nearly six weeks now. That is to say that there was a serious problem with waiting lists for thoracic surgery that caused the unnecessary deaths of a number of patients.

The government has in its possession the documents that would bring this matter to light, and the government brazenly is refusing to turn those over to the members of this Assembly. That's all that's being asked for; that is to say, documents in the government's possession that would shed light on whether or not there was a very serious problem with waiting times that caused unnecessary deaths. The government is refusing to share it with the public or even with members of this Assembly.

Now, the minister has said that that is because the Health Quality Council is doing a review of this matter. Well, that much is true. The minister is implying that all of this information will be given to the Health Quality Council, but he hasn't said so. I don't believe that this information necessarily will be turned over because I don't trust the minister. I don't trust the government. I don't think that they want this information to become public, and that's why they're denying it to us today.

Not only that, but the Health Quality Council doesn't have the authority to require the government to provide it with this information. If the government chooses not to, the Health Quality Council is powerless to get its hands on this information, which highlights the other problem with the Health Quality Council and its role in this, that it can't get the information from the government. I don't think the government wants to give it to them, I don't think they will give it to them, and the Health Quality Council, if it asks for it, doesn't have the power to guarantee it.

Now, the minister has said that the Health Quality Council will get the information, and if they're going to give it to the Health Quality Council, then there's no reason they can't give it to us, but they're refusing to give it to members of the Assembly. This is critical information that would back up the claims that were made originally by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. The refusal of the government to provide this information to the Assembly and to the public is exactly the problem. They cry: "Well, where's the proof? Prove it." Well, the fact is that they have the proof, and they won't let the proof out. They won't let us have a look at what actually happened, and I think that that's because there are some things there that they really, really don't want the public to know.

Mr. Speaker, in an Edmonton Journal article published March 16, Dr. Tony Fields, Alberta Health Services' vice-president for cancer care, stated that there are about 170 patients in Edmonton who are waiting for thoracic surgeries for lung cancer, transplants, or other conditions. Moreover, Calgary has 24 patients waiting but offers fewer types of thoracic surgery. Those who had their operations in February waited an average of 27 days from the time their surgeon decided surgery was needed to the actual operation. That does not include the wait for a referral to the specialist or the scheduling of X-rays, CT scans, or other tests.

Alberta Health Services wants the entire wait-list to be four weeks for 90 per cent of patients. In Edmonton 30 to 40 per cent of surgical lung cases are done after regular working hours or on weekends because there is not enough operating-room time for surgeons. According to a study published in the January 2011 edition of the British medical journal The Lancet, Albertans with lung cancer have a five-year survival rate of 15 per cent after diagnosis, the lowest of all provinces in the country and well under the Canadian average of 18.4 per cent. Those are estimates based on patients who were diagnosed from 2005 through 2007. In response to the study a prominent thoracic surgeon from Harvard said that this is irrefutable evidence by an impartial third party that Albertans suffer with cancer care.

Over the last years, culminating last month, Albertans have grown tired of this government's mismanagement of the health care system. After the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark claimed 250 people died, many from lung cancer, while on a 1,200-person waiting list for thoracic surgery between 2003 and 2006, the opposition united in calling for a full public inquiry into allegations of physician intimidation and other interference in the delivery of excellent health care.

The government has consistently failed to disclose this basic health information, even regarding basic wait-lists and times. Every year our caucus staff must file expensive freedom of information requests in order to obtain the wait-list registry, which indicates the status of wait-lists and our health care backlog. The government should be publishing this information regularly in the first place.

As recently as 2009 Conservative cuts to health care forced surgeons at the Royal Alexandra hospital to postpone cancer surgeries and endanger the health of cancer patients. Even in the face of doctors publicly condemning the cuts as stressful and dangerous, the minister of health flatly denied that patient care would be impacted. Currently at the Royal Alexandra hospital there are 16 designated in-patient beds for thoracic surgery and eight observation beds for patients who are more seriously ill and require more intensive monitoring.

Dr. Ciaran McNamee, a leading Edmonton thoracic surgeon, claims he was forced out of a position in 2000 after talking to the government about wait times. The surgeon said that he also had to counteract allegations that he needed psychiatric care. He sued the health region and two managers for $450,000, settled out of court, and now teaches at Harvard University. In 2000 the Capital health region recruited top thoracic surgeon Dr. Tim Winton from the University of Toronto. Dr. Winton took over as director of thoracic surgery after Dr. McNamee was pushed out of his job for speaking out for more patient resources. In turn, Dr. Winton is no longer the director of thoracic surgery and is now listed as a university course co-ordinator.

As of April 11, 2011, Dr. McNamee promised that he and other doctors would speak out if their testimony were legally protected by a formal inquiry. In a letter he said that the ongoing Health Quality Council review is flawed because it cannot shield witnesses who breach the terms of their severance agreement. Mr. Speaker, that sentiment was backed up just this last Friday by the Alberta Medical Association.

Let me be clear. The government's intention to vote against this motion is part of a cover-up. They are hiding the facts from Albertans about deaths in cancer surgery wait times. It is blatant, and it is absolutely unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. When this government votes down this motion, as they surely will, it is the final evidence, if any were needed, of this government's intention to cover up what has actually happened in our health care system and to prevent the truth from coming out.

The Health Quality Council is just another way to make sure the truth doesn't come out, but by voting down this motion, they're absolutely and clearly committing themselves to a course of secrecy and cover-up of something that is of the highest public interest and the highest public importance; that is to say, whether or not people are safe in our health care system, something this government has not been able to show is actually the case and, in fact, is working overtime to prevent a real discussion based on the facts of this question.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all hon. members to vote for the motion so that we can have the documents – the communications, reports, briefings, and memos – relating to thoracic surgery wait-lists and the number of patients who died while awaiting surgery for the fiscal years 2000-2001 and 2009-10. That's what the motion asks for. This is not information that the government should be withholding from this Assembly or from the public, not even for a second.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 11 lost]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 201
Health Insurance Premiums
(Health Card Donor Declaration)
Amendment Act, 2011

The Speaker: Hon. members, we now have 60 minutes available for third reading, so that will take us right through to approximately 5 o'clock.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and open third reading debate on Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011.

Mr. Speaker, before I begin my comments today, I would like to first of all on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning thank all members from both sides of the House who have supported this bill in second reading and in Committee of the Whole debate. It is encouraging to hear such broad support. I believe that organ donation can transcend political debate and remind us all of what we work for as MLAs on a daily basis; that is, the improvement of our constituents' lives.

Implementation of Bill 201 has the potential to save the lives of numerous Albertans and improve the lives of many more. In second reading debate it was stressed that one donor can save the lives of eight people and that tissue from that donor can be used to improve the lives of 80 more.

Mr. Speaker, the problem we have is not that we don't know how to use the organs but that we simply don't have enough of them. In fact, Alberta and, for that matter, Canada as a whole have one of the lowest organ donor rates in the world. It is estimated that each year there are only 13 donors per million people. This number is simply too low. I believe that the cause of this low figure comes from how easy it is to avoid what is often considered an uncomfortable question of becoming an organ donor.

We currently have an opt-in system where someone must go out of their way to become an organ donor. If they do nothing, their organs will not likely be donated. To be clear, this bill is not proposing that we make all Albertans organ donors. This would be wrong because it would dramatically infringe on personal choice. It is also not proposing that individuals must choose yes or no. They still have an opportunity to remain undecided. Moreover, individuals have the option also of not explicitly making a decision at all should they feel uncomfortable declaring intentions of any kind. After all, organ donation is a very personal decision. Rather, what Bill 201 aims to do is encourage people to have that discussion with their family and to make their wishes known.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 201 will increase organ donation rates not by forcing people to become donors but by prompting a discussion regarding the matter. Now, to be fair, this is an uncomfortable discussion, but while this conversation may not be easy, the results can be remarkably beneficial. I would say that many members here know at least one person who has been given a new lease on life after receiving an organ or a tissue transplant. These are our friends and neighbors and our family members, people dear to us, people who, because of a donated organ, can continue to lead healthy lives.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 also makes sense from an economic viewpoint. After all, it is much more affordable to transplant an organ than it is to provide lengthy conventional treatment. For example, a kidney transplant over a five-year span can save our health care system over $250,000 in conventional treatment costs. And this is just for one patient. Currently in Alberta we have anywhere from 400 to 600 people waiting to receive organs. It stands to reason that if we could provide them with organs rather than conventional treatment, we could save our health system millions of dollars. We would also be dramatically improving the quality of life for many Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the final point I would like to touch on deals with the amendment supported by this House in Committee of the Whole. I believe that the amendment provided the change needed to truly reflect the intent of this bill. The member's intent was never to deny people health care treatment or Alberta health care cards, and my intent is not to put an unworkable burden on our health care system. Rather, Bill 201 is all about awareness. It is about raising the issue of organ donation and letting people know that we can improve our donor rates, and it is about getting people to take the time to look at the back of their Alberta health cards.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne for demonstrating this during second reading. In fact, I would encourage all members in this House and all of our guests in the galleries to take a look in their wallets right now, pull out their health cards, and look at the back. Checking a box is all that this bill asks you to do. Now, I'm not asking you to become a donor, but I am asking you to think about what your wishes are.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the amended bill we have before us is a good bill. I believe that it has the ability to save lives, the lives of many people. Most importantly, I believe that passing this bill will promote the discussion we need to truly increase organ donation rates. I would again like to thank all those who have participated in this debate so far and look forward to comments from my colleagues during third reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up in third reading in support of Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011. I don't think I have to say what a huge supporter I am of organ donation. I've spoken in second reading, I've spoken in committee, and I'm speaking in third reading about this bill.

What I have been critical about is the fact that I believe this is the third private member's bill that has been brought before this Legislature in regard to organ donation. I know that I brought forward a bill a decade ago. I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-West brought a private member's bill forward. Again, we're now on our third private member's bill. I guess what bothers me more than anything is that the government talks about how important it is and how much they support organ donation, yet we've seen three private members on three different occasions bring a private member's bill forward without any government support or government help. It's going around and around and around.

It's very sad when you consider, since I brought my private member's bill forward approximately 10 years ago, how many organ donations have been lost, how many people could have probably been saved if we'd had some government legislation and had been able to educate the public. I know that my bill and I know that the Member for Calgary-West both believe that education is vital in making people aware of the situation to the point of getting them to consider signing their health card. As the member indicated previously, they should be talking to their family about the importance of them abiding by their wishes should something tragic happen to them along the line so that the family is well aware of how that particular individual feels and will proceed with the wishes of the person that had determined that they wanted to be an organ donor.

I'm not going to take a lot of time here, Mr. Speaker. We're very close to the end, I would expect, and getting this bill passed. I am going to also encourage all members to support Bill 201. As I indicated, when I spoke on my first private member's bill on organ donation – and I know I've brought this up before – one of the things I continually said when we were debating my own private member's bill was: don't take your organs to heaven; heaven knows we need them down here.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members to support Bill 201.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?
Does the hon. member wish to close?

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and close third reading debate on Bill 201 on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Manning. I would first like to begin by thanking all members from both sides of this House for participating in today's debate. I would also like to thank all those who participated in second reading and Committee of the Whole discussions.

The Member for Edmonton-Manning introduced this bill because he wanted to raise the issue of organ donation. Ultimately, he believes that this bill can help increase organ donor rates. First of all, it was introduced, I believe, because it can save people's lives. We have already discussed the low donation rates in Canada as well as how many lives and how much money can be saved by one donor, so I'll not go into that again. What I will say is that I believe that this bill is already a success. I'm confident that our debate over the last few weeks has raised this issue amongst Albertans and that it has already encouraged someone to sign the back of their card. In fact, it might have already saved a life. Mr. Speaker, passing Bill 201 would continue this discussion, and ultimately I believe that it would save several lives.

In closing, I would again like to thank all the members who participated in the debate throughout the course of the discussion on this bill, and I would like to thank all those Albertans who choose to donate organs. Further, I would like to acknowledge the effort of the Member for Edmonton-Manning in bringing this forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a third time]

4:10      Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 203
Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act

[Debate adjourned April 11: Mr. Chase speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We just had a very brief opportunity to have the bill introduced and for me to share some comments. One of the concerns I have is that just simply putting out ideas without providing support for them either financially or in recognition does very little. This government is famous for mandating. A very good example was the mandating of daily phys ed in the public schools, but the government neglected to provide training for individuals to carry out the daily exercise regime. There certainly was not gym space for the daily exercise to be carried out. There was no funding for the equipment to be carried out, no recognition of weather conditions. So teachers, being creative individuals, tried their best to ensure that the children somehow managed to get 20 minutes of daily phys ed, but it was hardly a situation that was given the support it needed.

Simply saying on a day in April, "Let's get out and get healthy," as if that's going to motivate large groups of people to say, "Oh, yes, it's April whatever; let's get out and get healthy," is rather ludicrous, to say the least. What this government needs to be doing is providing opportunities. The government to its credit has provided opportunities for elite athletes. I give the government tremendous credit for helping with the Olympic centre at the University of Calgary, the rink, and for providing funding for ski jumping and the luge, et cetera, at Canada Olympic Park. But in terms of the government providing much in the way of funding to support local soccer, for example, in Calgary when the dome collapsed at the soccer centre, I don't recall the government through either Tourism, Parks and Recreation or through the ministry of the hon. Member for Calgary-North West providing funding from lottery grants to immediately pay for that roof.

So while the government is suggesting through the hon. member, who is a good example of following a physical regimen in his own personal life and encouraging his students to do so, without the actual practical means of supporting facilities such as amateur sport facilities – I mentioned the soccer dome's roof collapse. It took an awful lot of arm-twisting and begging for the government to have assisted with creating more hockey rinks. For example, I think Calgary even with the new rinks at the Olympic centre is judged to be about eight rinks short of the necessary situation.

Mr. Speaker, you're looking like you're having trouble seeing the relevance. The relevance is getting-out-and-going and being active. The relevance that I'm putting forward is that if you want people to be active, just simply setting aside a particular weekend and saying, "Go out and get active" is not going to be effective.

What would be more effective would be the government saying that sports and recreation are a priority. We realize that instead of spending millions and millions of dollars on juvenile diabetes and dealing with overweight individuals subject to heart and stroke, sort of a Participation action would be much more appropriate than just saying that at some point in April let's go out and frolic, whether it's snowing or whether it's raining or we've got dry golf courses or not.

If we're going to make an impact on the lives of Albertans, whether they're young or old, then let's do something practical. Let's make sports and recreation a pursuit that the government believes is important and then finance them through the school system. Let's support the community centres in terms of making sure that they have the appropriate rinks and fields. Let's support the minor sports associations in making sure that the coaches receive the training. In other words, Mr. Speaker, let's provide practical opportunities for individuals to be able to get out and enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, something that I've brought up on numerous occasions is the need to protect our wilderness, to set aside and protect parks areas and make sure that we have management plans. We have over 450 bits and pieces of protected areas, ecological reserves and parks, but of those 450-plus areas taking up almost 4 per cent of Alberta's land mass, no plan.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and speak in support of Bill 203, as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who has provided it for our opportunity for discussion and debate in this House. I think there's perhaps nobody that I've ever met in the Legislature that was more of a valid sponsor of this particular type of bill than the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who himself has exemplified the importance of healthy living and has challenged himself to do things that some only dream about.

The reason I'm particularly pleased to support this is that for many years now I have contemplated the lack of enthusiasm that many people seem to have for taking the advantage that we have for a weekend or a day to go outdoors and celebrate the opportunities we're provided. Contrary to the previous speaker from Calgary-Varsity, I would observe that there's probably no place else on the planet that is better equipped to deal with schools, school facilities, recreation facilities, sports facilities, community participation than our Alberta. We have provided many facilities, have exemplary standards in our facilities, have built facilities and, in fact, an infrastructure here that is virtually second to none.

Why would we support a bill like this? It's very simple. To improve the health and welfare and well-being of Albertans. Structurally Albertans, when provided with this opportunity or reminded of our government's belief and importance of this type of activity, may well be prompted to go out and to take advantage of the great outdoors. Communities themselves can say that these are some of the things you might want to do, this is a facility or an activity that we're providing outdoors, and co-ordinate the sponsorship of such facilities to act, in fact, as a catalyst for the health of the local communities.

We have a beautiful province, Alberta has. Yes, we have a Family Day weekend, which has been a very successful type of co-ordinating effort to get people to think about family types of activities. You can see families themselves looking at making time for the parents, the extended family, and the children to get out and make good choices for family-styled activities. Years ago, as an example of that, even churches recognized the benefit of families that pray together, stay together. So there are examples of things that people have chosen in society to dedicate themselves to to foster an activity.

The get outdoors weekend concept would enable people celebrating our Rocky Mountains to the many diverse landscapes that we have in Alberta to really take a look at how these can be implemented or used for suitable outdoor types of weekends. The Birkebeiner in our own municipality in Strathcona county has become just a tremendous weekend of celebrating the great outdoors with cross-country skiing. Weekends dedicated to exploring the beauty and excitement would give people an opportunity to celebrate their healthy lifestyles together.

Several other jurisdictions have actually enacted similar legislation, Mr. Speaker. The public participation, for example, in British Columbia on the BC Rivers Day in 1980 gave the public there an opportunity to celebrate river heritage and raise awareness of many benefits of their waterways. BC Rivers Day also provides opportunities to profile threats to rivers and offers ways in which the public can get involved in creating solutions. Each year more than 75,000 people participate in over a hundred BC Rivers Day events and activities across the province, making it annually a very successful venture.

Our federal government has enacted similar legislation creating Canada's Parks Day in 1990 and as a national event showcases Canada's many parks and historic sites from coast to coast, encouraging Canadians to get out every third Saturday in July and enjoy all the fun and excitement of our natural landscapes. This event draws more than 50,000 people to more than 300 events, with numbers growing every year, Canadians discovering something new about our country and its heritage. It has the potential to introduce Canadians of all ages to activities which have become lifelong passions, and this excitement for life in the great outdoors is something that Albertans have also valued.

The United States of America has embarked on a similar initiative called National Get Outdoors Day, or GO Day. This annual event, which began in 2008, takes place in June and encourages all Americans to take part in healthy outdoor fun. Teams of federal agencies often team up with nonprofit organizations to inspire people to enjoy time outdoors, to embrace the parks and forests and other public lands available in the United States. Last year GO Day focused on fighting the obesity epidemic, particularly in children, and on helping American families make healthy lifestyle choices. GO Day activities took place in 91 official sites across the country.

Similar initiatives in other places have been very successful in helping people get off the couch and go out for fresh air. We believe that although these individual choices are important things for individuals to make, government can play a role promoting enjoyment in activity. Marketed correctly, our hope is that Alberta families and individuals here would celebrate the opportunity to get outdoors, and it would help people who have struggled to get outdoors to have that option.

Mr. Speaker, the beauty of this bill is that it wouldn't acknowledge or institute any extra expense to government. Costs associated with Bill 203 lie in marketing and promotion, which could come from existing budgets of relevant ministries or agencies.

Active living can lead to longer lives, reduced stress, and improved health and, as such, Mr. Speaker, may in fact lead to decreased risk of obesity and other associated diseases such as those that have been referenced by other speakers. We believe that this can have a positive impact on the sustainability of our health system, as it stands to reason that the healthier our population becomes, the less they will need to access health services. Increased physical activity and associated health benefits will serve to improve quality of life for all who participate. By making ours a province that actively promotes outdoor physical activity, we create yet another reason for Alberta to remain the best place in Canada to live, work, and raise a family.

We believe that the benefits of this proposed legislation are far reaching, impacting us physically and economically as well as emotionally. It will encourage Albertans to lead healthier, more active lifestyles. Health improvements could ease the burden that other diseases and obesity place on our system, and we'll teach our children by example how making healthier choices now will lead to a better lifestyle for the future.

Mr. Speaker, we are blessed with one of the most beautiful backyards in the world. It's a shame that Albertans don't always take the time to get out and enjoy it. In this last six or seven months while so many people have been concerned about their well-being in a climate that offers many challenges because of the cold weather, celebrating an outdoors weekend with taking advantage of the fact that we're in a free and democratic society enables us to reflect that there are many things we can celebrate, even our capacity to deal with adversity. It would be my hope that people do support this bill. It has many benefits for Albertans, both now and in the future.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 203, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act. I have to say that at this point in the debate in second reading I'm not sure exactly how I feel about this particular bill, so I'm going to be listening to the government and to what they have to say about this bill.

I want to get on the record that I like what the member has explained in his preamble about the significant health and lifestyle benefits associated with active living and outdoor activity. I don't know how anyone can possibly argue about that. He talks about the recognition of the importance of outdoor recreation, that it will have a lasting effect on the health and well-being of the people of Alberta. Well, that's another statement that no one can argue with and I'm sure everyone can agree with. He goes on to the government's commitment to the mental – I have a bit of a problem with that as I think the government has not done a very good job when we talk about individuals dealing with mental health, so that's a little questionable – physical, and environmental benefits of outdoor recreation and would like to encourage Albertans to get outdoors through the designation of a special weekend each year.

You know, I've gotten to know the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed over the years, and no one can question his enthusiasm, if I can use that word, to make sure that everybody is healthy. We've had many discussions in the past in regard to exercise and the many hours that we commit to this job. I even find at times, as someone who I think is pretty physically fit, that exercise to me sometimes doesn't come very easy, especially when you're sitting in the Legislature for hours on end.

The last thing I want to do when I get home is to start lifting weights because, you know, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I'm too tired to even think about lifting the weights let alone putting them into action. We have a gym in the Legislature, and I honestly, honestly can't remember the last time I was in the gym. But I do walk to work every day because that is physical exercise, and it's about the only exercise that I've managed to squeeze in in a very busy day other than walking from the Annex to the Legislature, back and forth on several occasions.

I am going to listen intently, and I'm sure I'll have some more discussions with the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, but I guess the problem that I have with this is putting this into legislation and then passing it into law. I have checked recently the number of bills that have passed through this Assembly, where either it's a government bill or for that matter a private member's bill that has been passed, but they haven't been proclaimed. I know the member had a bill in the session last year on tax credits, if I remember, and the last I checked, that bill had not been proclaimed, along with numerous bills in regard to many, many issues. Personally, my own, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, is one of them.

Now we have a piece of legislation that wants to proclaim a weekend, the second weekend in April, which has just passed, each year, and it's going to be known as the Alberta get outdoors weekend. Admirable, obviously. What is the cost going to be? I know the member has said that there'll be no cost. Well, I know that in the past when we've proclaimed a certain day in the Legislature or we've proclaimed a certain weekend, there's always a cost benefit because the government feels that they have to spend some time promoting that and getting people active.

I'm struggling, and I must say that. I think it's incumbent upon Albertans to take exercise upon themselves, without government having to proclaim that on the second weekend in April we're all going to go out and do jumping jacks or walk miles on end. The member for Calgary-Acadia is doing jumping jacks in his seat. I'm sure he feels that that's about as much exercise as he can get because of the hours that he puts in, obviously, as well as you do, Mr. Speaker, sitting in your chair. I'm struggling with whether we need a weekend for this.

How do we encourage Albertans to become more healthy? The Health budget is huge. They talk about one of their priorities – unfortunately, I don't have my budget in front of me – of making Albertans more physically fit, more mentally fit, getting them more active and more responsible for their own health.

I'm just struggling that we need to have a piece of legislation, and I'm struggling even more with the costs that will be affiliated with having the second weekend in April become law. I have this visualization that all of a sudden we're spending millions of dollars and we're going to have all sorts of things happening across the province, where we're all going to be starting to maybe do jumping jacks all at the same time, doing all sorts of different things.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be brief. I'm going to listen to debate. I think private members' bills, quite frankly, are a wonderful resource for private members in this Assembly to be able to bring forward what they think is important. I can tell you that from the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek I haven't had one call, e-mail, or letter on this. Now, I'm sure I will after stating that. I know the Member for Calgary-Lougheed has come out and said that he has support.

My role is to represent the people that have elected me, and I will continue to do that. It has served me well, as they have served me in providing me with the information and the priorities that they think are important to them. I can tell you that over the last several months their priorities have been health and education. Number 3 bounces around a bit. Can I encompass this under health? I'm not so sure.

But I will listen, and I'm pleased to be able to speak on this particular piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It also gives me great pleasure to rise today and continue the debate on Bill 203, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. Before I begin, I would just like to say that I was impressed to see over a hundred endorsement letters from Albertans of all different demographics who support Bill 203. This tells me that the objectives of Bill 203 are important to Albertans.

The purpose of this bill is about the promotion of the great outdoors. It's also about greater participation in leisure activities, specifically those that require physical exercise. But mostly, Mr. Speaker, the overarching goal of this bill is the encouragement of a healthier lifestyle for Albertans.

Our lifestyles are evolving over history. These changes have brought us many great benefits like increasing our capacity to produce the food that we need or by facilitating the creation of all kinds of technologies that ease the necessity to do physical work for a living. Due to this long economic and technological progress we now live in a world where material wealth abounds, and that is certainly true here in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, we produce and consume more food than ever before. We now have access to a wide range of sophisticated services catering to virtually all our needs, and many of those services are available from the comfort of our homes.

Technology has also been a driving force for change, bringing us closer together in ways unthinkable even a generation ago. Nowadays we chat with people who live halfway around the world with little more than having to lift a few fingers. Even the workplace has gone through rapid transformations over the years. For a growing number of workers labour is synonymous with office, computer, or chair and increasingly less with physical work. For some workers even continuing to work is becoming obsolete as many tasks now can be accomplished online.

When we do leave our homes, getting from A to B usually involves a car or public transit. We walk very little, even to cover short distances. Mr. Speaker, we don't even let our kids walk to school anymore. For a rising number of families gone are the days when playing with the kids involved more than looking at a computer or TV screen. In other words, if our sedentary lifestyle has long been a force for good, it is now becoming a problem. The issue is that our sedentary way of life increasingly leads to an unhealthy lifestyle. After all, why walk to work when we can drive? Why practise a sport when it can be played on a computer? Why spend time outside when so much can be accomplished without having to leave our homes?

Mr. Speaker, this is the logic that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed intends to overturn with this bill. It is a step in the right direction. It is a step we need to take because the current situation regarding certain things – chronic diseases like type 2 diabetes, heart disease, various types of cancer, osteoporosis, and stroke – is worsening in Alberta as well as in the rest of Canada. These chronic diseases and injuries, often associated with unhealthy lifestyles, are the leading causes of death, illness, and disability in Alberta, not to mention the problems that stem from rising obesity rates in all age groups.

Mr. Speaker, the current picture in Alberta and Canada regarding unhealthy lifestyles is, I'm sorry to say, not very pretty. Canada now ranks third highest globally for obesity and third lowest in walking, bicycling, or public transit use. Sport participation among Canadian teenagers aged 15 to 18 declined from 77 per cent to 59 per cent between 1992 and 2005. The number of Canadians who are overweight or obese has steadily increased over the last 25 years. In fact, today nearly 25 per cent of adult Canadians, a total of 5.5 million people aged 18 or older, are obese. In addition, 36.1 per cent, or 8.6 million, are overweight, bringing the total number of adult Canadians who are overweight or obese to over 59 per cent. Of even greater concern, 18 per cent of Canadian children and adolescents aged two to 17 are overweight, and 8 per cent are obese.

These diseases and conditions are responsible for a large cost burden that is placed on our health care system. The estimated total cost in Canada of illness, disability, and death attributable to chronic diseases amounts to over $80 billion annually. Physical inactivity alone costs the Canadian health care system at least $2.1 billion annually in direct health care costs and an estimated annual economic burden of $5.3 billion. Mr. Speaker, despite having some of the best parks and recreational facilities in the country, Alberta does not fare better than any other province or Canada as a whole. The 2009 Alberta survey on physical activity shows that only 58.5 per cent of adult Albertans are physically active enough to experience health benefits. In other words, fewer than 6 in 10 Albertans are physically active enough to sustain a healthy lifestyle. This is clearly insufficient. Not surprisingly, these statistics vary considerably between age, education, and income groups.

According to the same survey the lower the education and income levels are, the lower the intention to take part in regular physical activity. Yet, interestingly, Mr. Speaker, Albertans who have heard of health campaigns and resources like Participaction were more likely to be sufficiently physically active as compared to Albertans who had not heard of them. There is reason to believe that a concerted effort in promoting physical activity, perhaps one sponsored by the Alberta government, may reverse the situation.

Mr. Speaker, after a hard day's work one can be tempted to lie back and relax. These bad habits over time will likely have unwanted repercussions. Something should change, and maybe change will occur upon the implementation of a catalyst like the hon. member's Bill 203. Now, there are those who will argue that choosing a healthy lifestyle is a private matter and nothing else. There is definitely some truth to this, but that's not enough. As government we are responsible for the whole of society, and we must always look at the big picture. Therefore, we must find ways to encourage people to be physically active, perhaps by experiencing the great outdoors, as proposed in this bill.

This is nothing new. Our forebears did so on a regular basis. However, this time around Albertans will not be doing it in search of prosperity. They would do it to rediscover the joys and benefits of a healthy lifestyle, and that, Mr. Speaker, is the whole purpose behind the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act. This is why I am in full support of this bill, and I encourage all my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a brief bill, but it deserves proper debate. I'm sure the sponsoring member, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, would agree.

I kind of find this an interesting bill. I'm intrigued. I certainly like the spirit behind it. I had a question, which maybe the member can answer, and it may have come up in earlier debate, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure. The question concerns clause 1 of the bill, which proposes that the second weekend in April each year be known as Alberta get outdoors weekend. This may have come up, as I say, in earlier debate, but I'm wondering why the member chose the second weekend in April. I'm sure there was a good reason for it.

I'm not sure I'd have chosen that weekend because, well, this last weekend in April wasn't such a great weekend to be outdoors. It seems to me it's a little bit of a roll of the dice. In fact, I'd have to say that as virtually a lifelong Albertan and a lifelong Canadian April is one of my least favourite months of the year to be outside because it's kind of in between.

I like the winter. I ski, and I skate and, you know, do that kind of thing. I like the summer. I even like the later spring, brief as it usually is in Alberta. But in those transition periods – March, April, November – you can't really do summer activities or winter activities. That's my personal view, but I'm wondering why the bill proposes that the second weekend of April be known as Alberta get outdoors weekend. You know, I can imagine taking my kids out camping on the second weekend of April and having not a very nice time as the snow piles up on the tent and the car gets stuck and all that. Maybe I'm just being a wuss there; I don't know.

I like the preamble, and I don't see how very many people could take issue with it. I suppose that with the third paragraph of the preamble some people might want to question the government of Alberta's commitment to the things that are claimed in there, but, you know, in the spirit of this piece of legislation I think we should give the government the benefit of the doubt.

I did listen to some of the other comments in debate from this side of the House, and the bill does lack any real meat to it. There's no way of implementing it. There's no money although, I guess, private members' bills aren't supposed to have money attached to them. But there's no organization connected to it. It feels like it's missing any way to get implemented, Mr. Speaker.

It has nice intentions, but it doesn't go any farther than that. As I've heard some people say, we all have nice intentions when it comes to getting fit and getting a little more exercise and watching our diet and all of that kind of thing, but nice intentions haven't gotten us very far on that account. I would be interested to hear the member's comments on how he imagines or foresees this Alberta get outdoors weekend being implemented. Does he imagine an Alberta get outdoors weekend organization or something like that that would stir the pot? Maybe sponsorships could come in or I don't know what.

I guess my comments boil down to a handful, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't disagree with the intentions of this bill at all. In fact, I like the intentions wholeheartedly. I had, you know, the question about: why the second weekend of April? I wish the bill had more substance to it, more of the mechanics required to actually implement the bill. I could go on at length and talk about my personal experience in the great outdoors, some happy ones and some less than happy ones, but I will spare the members that punishment.

I look forward to other debate. Thanks very much.

The Acting Speaker: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I was just reading over this bill over the weekend, and I thought it was interesting. I really do enjoy hearing about some of the physical exploits of the Member for Calgary-Lougheed in a former life, when he was climbing Mount Everest. Twice. At the same time. No, I'm just joking. [interjection] To the bill. That's right. Obviously, it is an extremely impressive accomplishment that he was able to do that once let alone twice.

Mrs. Forsyth: With the Sherpas.

Mr. Anderson: With the Sherpas. That's right.

I actually saw a video on that new Netflix thing. It was a documentary on Everest. It was just wild. I mean, they went and followed this team up, and some people lost their life. Some people were losing hands and feet. It was one heck of a dangerous thing to do. So I do respect this member for what he's done in that regard. He's represented our province very well in that regard. He's always been very committed to physical activity and to making sure that our kids and all of us are very aware of the need for physical exercise and so forth.

I think Albertans, frankly, are known for that and are known for getting out into the outdoors. I saw a stat that I think the minister of tourism was sharing a little while ago, during the Olympics, when she mentioned that Alberta athletes accounted for a huge percentage of the amount of athletes in Vancouver. I think it was close to half if I remember right.

An Hon. Member: Over half.

Mr. Anderson: Over half. That's right. I mean, that's really quite something. If you think that we only have about 10 per cent of the population or thereabouts, to have 50 per cent of the athletes is remarkable.

Also, we have a great facility going up by Canada Olympic Park. That's only going to strengthen those numbers. So we have a lot to be proud of in Alberta. We have some fantastic facilities. We have the most beautiful mountain parks, frankly, in the world, certainly the most accessible of beautiful national parks in the world. People come from all over the world, and it's right in our backyard. Just to think that we can go out our door, and in 15, 20 minutes – well, with the new ring road half an hour and you're from Airdrie into the Kananaskis. It's a good deal. We sometimes forget how lucky we are.

I really do like the intent of this bill. I do have to say that I question somewhat the reason we would want to enshrine something like this in a piece of legislation. I don't quite see the need for that. I think that there are other ways to do that. I've got to say that I guess I'm slightly ambivalent with regard to this. I don't mind it because I like the idea, but at the same time we have so many – I think we're just making the Speaker's life far more complicated because he has to get up and recite all of those: every week, every month, all of those different days that we have to recognize. To add one more to that every April . . .

An Hon. Member: Naked gardening day.

Mr. Anderson: Exactly. Who knows?

I just think there are so many of them now that it's getting lost in the shuffle. Really, it's almost inherently meaningless because we have so many of these days that we recognize stuff. It almost becomes meaningless, which is unfortunate because it is important to get outdoors, and we don't want to undercut that.

Again, I think I'm kind of ambivalent to it. I would say, though, that I would like to on behalf of the constituency of Airdrie-Chestermere urge my constituents, I guess you could say, to certainly get outdoors and enjoy these incredible landscapes and viewpoints and recreational facilities that we have in our backyard. I know that Anita and myself and the boys got an RV the year before last. We get to the mountains six or seven times a year now. It's just kind of a thing we do almost every weekend during July and August. We'll even just sneak out there for a day on a Wednesday or a Thursday if we have an open evening sometime, just go have a campfire. It's just an amazing place to grow up and to live and to raise kids because it teaches them.

People have this conception of Albertans as not being good environmental stewards or, you know, not interested in their environment. Nothing could be further from the truth. We are very much people that respect the outdoors. We have more national parks and provincial parks together than any province or place in the country, and we really do value our environment and the great outdoors that we have.

I know I only have about another minute, I believe, before the hon. member can wrap up, so I'll sit down in about 30 seconds, once that comes, and give the floor to him. I just wanted to say that I think that although the idea behind the bill is good and it's good to even have this discussion, maybe this bill, if anything, just gives us an opportunity to explain and to speak to the thousands and thousands of people watching this Assembly right now, riveted by this discussion.

Mr. Mason: Absolutely.

Mr. Anderson: People like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and people like myself and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek are completely committed to getting outdoors and making sure that Albertans know that.

With that, there's about five minutes to go. That's it, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

If none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close debate.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to sincerely thank every single member from every corner of the House who has joined in the debate today.

To answer directly, to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek: I appreciate your efforts in the past, present, and future on this and other lines. Rest assured that this is proclaimed upon Royal Assent. It wouldn't wait for a minister's signature. So that should answer that question. The cost of promotion. I would hope it would be as close to free as possible, that we would promote it once, and then it would be in the hands of, as the good minister suggested, the municipalities, recreation and sports clubs, seniors' councils, health organizations, and other important groups who wrote in to me already and said: we're going to promote it in this way. Honestly, this is just a kick-start.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview asked: why the second weekend of April? It's a very specific answer to that. It's kind of like the Banff people. They said: "What are we going to do? It's not summer. It's not winter. It's not high season. It's not ski season. What could we possibly do in the first weekend of November?" Now they have the finest film and book festival in the world, and that place is just flowing. It's one of those shoulder seasons. Sir, it is indeed a weekend, not a weekday, because as you know in this province a Friday night, a Saturday, a Saturday night, and a Sunday can have very different weather. I noticed a couple of weekends ago, when this was proposed for, that we had snow on Friday and that it was glorious and 13 on Sunday. A person could choose: am I going to do winter events because ski resorts are open, or is the golf course open? By the way, normal highs for this time of year are actually in the teens. Hopefully, that answers that question as well.

We know this is about improving the lives of Albertans and spending time outside. It doesn't necessarily have to be exercising; it can just be appreciating the beauty of our environment.

You know, I've got a big long speech, but I just want to address the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. You were asking about the legislation. This is not the final answer – I know that – in terms of helping people to be more active. It's a part of the solution; it's not the end answer. Hopefully, this is just the beginning, and family groups and communities take it from here, and we enjoy our pristine natural environment with internal tourism.

Additionally to that, we'll be at the front in Canada. We'll be at the front of the pack with this. We have Arts Days weekend. We have Family Day. They're very successful. But we don't have anything like this and, certainly, not at this time of the year.

With the time remaining, sir, I trust that we might be able to move this into Committee of the Whole if we call the question. I move to end debate until next time, so I'll just call for the question on second reading of 203 at this point in time, please.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a second time]

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, given the hour I would like to seek unanimous consent for the Assembly to call it 5 o'clock and allow us to move into consideration of private members' motions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

504. Mr. Anderson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation to repeal the amendments made to legislation by the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, to ensure that proposed transmission line projects are subject to an objective needs assessment hearing by the Alberta Utilities Commission, are openly and transparently tendered, and that affected landowners are compensated fairly, with recourse to the courts.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak to Motion 504, which urges the government to repeal the amendments made to legislation by the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, commonly known as Bill 50.

Mr. Speaker, the reliable generation and transmission of electricity across our province is obviously critical to our future growth and prosperity. However, supporting growth does not necessitate trampling on the property rights of landowners, gouging ratepayers on their electricity bills, and building unnecessary, ugly skyscraper-sized power lines across our pristine Alberta landscape when there are much better and less intrusive alternatives.

Let us be very clear about what Bill 50 did in 2009. Bill 50 authorized the building of roughly $16 billion of new transmission line projects across our province. It deemed these projects critical transmission infrastructure, thereby removing the need for an objective, open, and transparent needs assessment hearing before the Alberta Utilities Commission. Why is this relevant? Simply put, in virtually every industrialized nation where ratepayers are required to pay directly for transmission on their electricity bills, there is, first, the requirement of an objective arm's-length needs assessment review to determine if the new transmission is needed, and if so, how much? This is or, more appropriately, was the case in Alberta up until the passage of Bill 50.

I have heard the current and former Energy ministers as well as the Premier repeatedly justify this bypassing of an independent needs assessment process by saying that the needs assessment process had already taken place and was therefore no longer needed. Mr. Speaker, this is not true. Why on earth would you pass a bill to avoid having to go through the needs assessment process if you had already legitimately gone through the needs assessment process? This argument insults the intelligence of Albertans. It is a falsehood, plain and simple.

I've also heard the current Energy minister and the Premier talk about the need for this new transmission so that the lights can be kept on in Calgary. Again, this is utter nonsense. Here's the math. Peak power usage for the city of Calgary is 1,600 megawatts. Obviously, Calgary needs to access more than 1,600 megawatts in order to safely keep the lights on at all times. So how much power does Calgary have access to? Well, current transmission capacity between coal-fired plants in central Alberta and Calgary is roughly 2,000 megawatts. That in itself is enough to power Calgary, with room for growth, but that's not all the power Calgary has access to.

Enmax has already built the Calgary Energy Centre by Balzac as well as the newly built plant in Crossfield. They will also be bringing an additional 1,000 megawatts of natural gas fired electricity online, onto the grid by, at the very latest, 2015, including a new 800-megawatt generator in my constituency by Shepard.

Added up, Calgary, with a peak demand of 1,600 megawatts, has access to over 2,400 megawatts of power today and will have access to roughly 3,400 megawatts by 2015, more than double what is currently required to keep the lights on. I'm sure Calgary intends to grow a lot by 2015, but does it intend to double in size by then? Obviously not.

Now, the Energy minister during the budget debate claimed that the Shepard project was on hold, as far as he knew. He said that he didn't know if it had the go-ahead or the necessary approvals. Well, that's interesting. I have in my hand right here the approval for the go-ahead on this project by the AUC and this one from the government. Guess whose signature is on it? Oh, my; it's the current Energy minister's signature. Perhaps he should have known about this given the import to this entire Bill 50 debate. The fact is that the equipment and materials for the project have been brought in next door to the site, awaiting only some final paperwork from the city of Calgary to go ahead; again, 800 additional megawatts of electricity being built right now.

The lights will stay on in Calgary without the new megasize transmission lines, period. The arguments put forward by the Energy minister and the Premier are false and are meant to generate fear amongst the public that these new, expensive megalines are needed or else. It's a shameful display by this minister to continue this line of spin on Calgarians, including those of his very own constituents in Calgary-West.

This is where things get really murky. After the passage of Bill 50 these multibillion-dollar transmission contracts were handed to AltaLink and ATCO, two consistently large donors and sponsors of the PC Party as per the Elections Alberta website, without any kind of open bidding process and a guaranteed 9 per cent rate of return on lines that we the ratepayers of Alberta will be paying for on our bills. What a sweetheart deal for AltaLink and ATCO.

It gets worse. In fact, one of AltaLink's senior VPs, literally within weeks of Bill 50 passing, was appointed to be VP of the PC Party. Now, to be clear, I'm not alleging any wrongdoing on the part of either AltaLink or ATCO or the VP I just referred to. I simply don't know. This government's secrecy, as we've seen today, is legendary. However, given these indisputable relationships I think my questions and concerns in this regard are legitimate ones. If this government was concerned about the well-being of Alberta ratepayers, why would they simply hand these massive contracts to these companies without competitive bidding? How can we all be sure we aren't getting gouged as ratepayers?

This brings me to another major problem with this bill. As is now general knowledge, the price of natural gas electricity generation plants has dropped dramatically over the past several years due to new technologies and natural gas plays that will almost certainly result in low natural gas prices for the foreseeable future. As has been pointed out by several electricity producers, it is now entirely possible that locally generated electricity from natural gas power plants could reduce or eliminate the need for a large amount of these new and grossly expensive transmission lines carrying coal-generated electricity from central Alberta.

Now, I'm not an expert on whether the need for redundancy and other factors still make the proposed transmission lines necessary. However, neither is the brain trust around the former and current cabinet table. This is precisely why provincial politicians shouldn't be making such decisions and why an impartial needs assessment hearing should be completed before potentially spending billions of dollars on needless transmission lines that Albertans are going to pay for as ratepayers.

Furthermore, it begs the question: could it be that the needs assessment process was intentionally skipped precisely because this government knew that the new transmission lines might not pass muster under current market conditions? Were they worried that there would be no juicy transmission contracts to pass out at the end of the day? You really have to wonder. If not, why not allow the independent process to take its course?

That leads to yet another uncomfortable question. Why would a government that is willing to burn $2 billion on the altar of carbon capture and storage for the purpose of decreasing Alberta's emissions of CO<sub>2</sub> so willingly forge ahead with a transmission line built between Edmonton and Calgary that will essentially enshrine CO<sub>2</sub> intensive coal-generated electricity producers for a generation instead of promoting the local generation of electricity from natural gas, which is significantly less CO<sub>2</sub> intensive than coal? Is the government favouring coal-generated electricity producers over others? If so, why? It doesn't make sense. If the stated goal of this government is to decrease its so-called carbon footprint, what are, then, the motives of this government, and who is lobbying them? Who is sponsoring their events? Who is donating to their campaigns? I would ask our enterprising media to take a deeper look, especially at the Alberta elections donor page. It just doesn't otherwise add up.

Before Bill 50 was passed, several experts and stakeholders came out with reports and letters pleading with the government to not pass Bill 50. One of these was from IPCCAA, which represents industrial users consuming roughly 35 per cent of electricity in the province. They have by far the most to lose if the lights, in fact, do go out. What did they say? They said that Bill 50 will triple their energy costs and force many of their businesses to move.

The University of Calgary School of Public Policy also came out with a report, as did the government's very own Utilities Consumer Advocate. Each of these reports and many others clearly identified the many problems with Bill 50. They said that the size of the bill was overly excessive. They pointed out the lack of transparency and the lack of competitive bidding. They decried the government's unprecedented decision to skip the needs assessment process. Yet the government ignored it all. It was simply too inconvenient a truth. Too many promises had been made to those with deep political connections.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 50 is a reckless, job-killing piece of legislation with the odour of corruption that Albertans do not deserve. I implore every free-thinking member of this House, particularly those MLAs in the government, to take off the partisan blinders they are now wearing, re-examine this bill, do your research, and find the courage to stand up and help pass this motion to repeal Bill 50. Albertans across this province are demanding that we as their representatives do this. It is time to repeal this bill, to do the right thing, to represent those who voted for us at that ballot box and not some corporate or special interests or friends of PC Party.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll get up and make a few comments today. I won't try to even come close to rebutting all of the falsehoods that are commonplace in this particular member's constant criticism of Bill 50. What I will do is try to set the record straight on Bill 50 and strongly encourage this House to defeat this ill-thought-out motion.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 50 is really quite simple. It ensures the timely approval of critical transmission projects that we need to support our economy and keep the lights on. We said that we needed to get going and start the process to build four projects, subject to extensive consultation and full public hearings, to determine the siting of the lines, cost allocations, and other issues that may come before the Alberta Utilities Commission.

5:10

The Alberta Utilities Commission, or the AUC, is an independent, quasi-judicial body that will have the final say after a fair, open, and transparent process to consider transmission routes. In fact, a public hearing on the application for the heartland project is currently under way, and applications to the commission have been made for the two north-south lines.

Nothing about this process has changed or circumvents Albertans' property rights. Bill 50 also in no way changed access to compensation for landowners that will have this infrastructure located on their land. In fact, it has significantly improved the landowner compensation rights, and I was surprised to hear that the member didn't recognize that in his opening remarks. Compensation in this province is very fair and typically includes easement acquisition, payments for the transmission line right-of-way, annual structure payments, and supplementary compensation.

Protection of landowner rights and fair compensation are not the only issues that have been misinterpreted in the debate on Bill 50. The suggestion that the four projects covered by Bill 50 will cost $16 billion is incorrect and, frankly, just part of the fearmongering that has gone on. The total cost of the four projects covered by Bill 50 is in the range of $5 billion. The $16 billion is the total long-term projection of what the system needs in upgrades over the next 20 years, Mr. Speaker. No one's bill is going to double or triple as a result of the transmission build.

It's also false that private companies are proposing new transmission lines. They don't and by law cannot. As a fully regulated service transmission companies are directed to build lines by the Independent System Operator, based on their geographic service area. All costs are subject to scrutiny and approval by the Utilities Commission.

Mr. Speaker, smearing corporate and personal reputations for personal gain is wrong. I would say that smearing reputations of corporations that are also contributors to this member's party is also wrong. But that's what's happening here.

I also want to clarify this idea that the need for these four projects has not been assessed objectively. All of the planning to identify the need for these four projects was completed by the Alberta Electric System Operator, or AESO. AESO is an independent agency with the mandate, resources, technical expertise, and the skills to identify projects that are required, none of which, I believe, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere can claim. AESO is required to operate in the public interest and in accordance with international reliability criteria. Aging transmission infrastructure is a challenge across North America, leading to a declining system reliability. Alberta has been one of the fastest-growing jurisdictions in North America, and our transmission system has been working at or near its limits for extended periods of time, increasing the risk of widespread power outages and unreliable service. The level of congestion on Alberta's electric grid is expected to increase until additional transmission is built.

Looking ahead, we're going to need to connect 11,500 megawatts of new generation to the grid over the next 20 years because of our growing economy. These forecasts are done by AESO, drawing on the expertise of the Energy Resources Conservation Board, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, the Conference Board of Canada, and the National Energy Board. In planning for the four Bill 50 projects, AESO carried out hundreds of consultations and meetings to obtain input from Albertans. We heard from organizations such as the Alberta Chamber of Commerce, representing some 22,000 businesses, recommending action to ensure timely regulatory approvals and reinforcement of the power grid. We heard from companies that want to develop wind resources in southern Alberta and have investment plans stalled as a result of a lack of transmission infrastructure. Companies with projects throughout rural southern Alberta are ready to invest.

Power generation from all sources across the province – gas, coal, wind, biomass, and cogeneration – require the support of a robust transmission system. Ultimately, the decision to invest in any type of generation lies in the hands of independent investors. They need to be confident that sufficient transmission is in place to deliver their product before investing the billions of dollars that are required. Generation sources will not be developed without a robust, efficient, and uncongested transmission system. Transmission, critical to encouraging new generation, must be able to move the most competitively priced electricity to market. Just last week we were reminded of this by an analyst with FirstEnergy, who said that market participants and regulators must get new generation and transmission capacity added to the grid sooner than later to avoid future shortages and price spikes. That's exactly what we're doing with Bill 50.

Bill 50 was brought before this House and underwent the debate process just like every other piece of legislation that's introduced. It's interesting to note that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is proposing this motion now to reverse Bill 50. All members of the House had the opportunity to express their opinions during debate on Bill 50, but this member didn't speak on the bill, the amendments, or register a position during any of the four votes.

Today, when we have projects before the Alberta Utilities Commission, he wants to go back to the drawing board. So let's be clear what this means. This member wants to rip up contracts, Mr. Speaker, with companies that have spent tens of millions of dollars on these projects. Ironical that it's coming from this member, ripping up contracts. He wants to create uncertainty for the hundreds of companies involved and the approximately $5 billion of annual transactions in the electricity business. This would be bad news for an Alberta economy that is just emerging from a long economic winter caused by a global recession.

The good news in Alberta today, Mr. Speaker, is that our economy is growing again, and it would be incredibly short sighted to delay the most urgently needed transmission projects in this province, dismissing the need for transmission. Passing this motion would be irresponsible. It would have negative consequences for Alberta. Strengthening the power grid is necessary to prepare Alberta for sustained growth in all sectors of our economy. The government of Alberta has the responsibility to ensure that Alberta has a safe, reliable, and efficient electricity system.

In summary, I want to emphasize that Bill 50 is a responsible piece of legislation that will help provide a reliable supply of electricity for Albertans for decades. Investment in transmission today will have long-term benefits for all Albertans. Now is not the time to turn our back on economic growth. As a result, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all members to defeat this short-sighted motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Unlike the accusations tossed across at my hon. colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere, the Liberal position has been clear from the very beginning, that this piece of legislation is a major giveaway to power companies. We've made that point, but I'll re-emphasize that point.

Historically it goes back to Murray Smith. He's the one who first suggested that Alberta taxpayers alone, as opposed to the 50-50 split between transmission owners and the public, through the deregulation of electricity should be unilaterally on the hook for billions of dollars. Thanks to Mr. Put On a Sweater, Murray Smith, Albertans lost approximately $8 billion worth of utilities that, up until Mr. Smith went down to Washington, we owned.

Mr. Smith's vision caused a number of utility companies to not participate in the bid because for years preceding deregulation they had no sense of what type of profit they could expect from the transmission lines. We had two bids, and nobody was particularly interested until the prices were so ridiculously low that groups like AltaLink and ATCO, to their stockholders' wellbeing, saw an opportunity to get into the game in a much larger case.

Whether the hon. Energy minister is talking about the $5 billion that will be forced to be spent by taxpayers for a questionable project at this time or whether he's talking about the $16 billion that cumulatively will be spent again by taxpayers while industry and shareholders of industry record the profits remains to be seen.

Since Bill 50 was first brought forward in 2009, our reality in terms of our mineral resources has changed tremendously. Prior to 2009 we were concerned about the possibility of natural gas being depleted, and we weren't aware of all the shale gas that has been discovered since. What has happened, basically, going back in history, is that coal-fired generators and the companies owning those coal-fired generators have been holding Alberta hostage, and the government has been part of that hostage-taking.

The idea that when natural gas is a cleaner fuel, provides a more consistent energy, we should go up north and have lines all the way down south to Calgary to carry the most atmospheric problem causing, CO<sub>2</sub> emission producing type of electricity brought down and energy lost along the way makes no sense economically. The government has failed to effectively argue the case that these transmission lines to transmit polluting energy from the north are actually necessary.

[The Speaker in the chair]

At the first set of hearings they had, they enlisted spies to interrupt the process. Now instead of spies they have intimidation tactics in terms of a whole series of briefcase-carrying lawyers with billable hours charging rather large fees to both the government and industry, backed by armed sheriffs. If you're not intimidated by the suits, you're certainly potentially intimidated by the sheriffs. Why are the sheriffs there? Because an 80-year-old grandmother started poking her finger into the chest of one of the individuals who was involved in the spy circumstance and the hiding of the information.

Now we have our sheriffs, who we need to be patrolling the highways or serving in the court system, where their protection is required, babysitting government officials. What's interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that in this babysitting process people have either given up because they don't believe the government is going to listen to what they have to say, or they're intimidated. All kinds of chairs have been set up at these hearings, and very few people have been attending. They know it's a waste of time. They don't believe that their voices will be heard.

Now, the government has changed the names of the various organizations providing the approvals. We had the Energy and Utilities Board, and now we have the Alberta Utilities Commission. We have the AESO, which the Minister of Energy is suggesting is a totally independent body operating strictly in terms of the public interest. Well, how it's in the public interest to initially have lost the $8 billion that deregulation caused or the $5 billion that the government is gifting to transmission companies – it's not the transmission companies that are at fault for seeing a business opportunity; it's the government's fault for subsidizing these organizations on the backs of the taxpayers.

The Energy minister talked about the need to get wind power online. Well, for 10 years this government put caps on wind power and basically killed investment in wind power or alternative sources of energy for a lengthy time period. You don't need to have transmission lines running from Wabamun to bring energy from southern Alberta online. If you're talking about effective transmission lines, get it right. Bring the wind power from the south to provide extra energy when at some coal-fired generator's whim they decide to up the price of electricity by pulling one of their power units off. In the case recently they pulled two coal-fired generators off, and now we're taking expensive energy from B.C.

The answer is simple. Given the low price and the large availability of natural gas and shale gas, when those two commodities start to dwindle, the ability to gasify coal as opposed to pumping it up the chimney would make tremendous sense both from an environmental standpoint and an economic standpoint. There is absolutely no sense in terms of bringing coal-fired, emission-spouting electricity from up north all the way down south. It does not make sense.

Mr. Speaker, I am not necessarily in favour of taking Bill 50 and just tearing it up completely. There is the possibility that had the government allowed a number of amendments that were put forward at the time to be considered, then we could work with it.

Another problem, Mr. Speaker, is the historic problem. We have an individual here who I give tremendous credit to, the MLA for Foothills-Rocky View, who came up with the importance of the land-use framework. My sincere wish is that the individual had the opportunity to be the sustainable resources minister long enough to actually have the land-use framework come into effect. If the land-use framework had set the rules for where transmission lines would be placed in line with all the other considerations of the land-use framework instead of shoving Bill 50 through and eventually getting to the land-use framework, a lot of this argument would not be occurring as it is today.

I thank the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for trying to erase some earlier mistakes. Whether that member saw the light now . . . [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We have a list of six speakers in this order: the hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, then the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and join debate on Motion 504, which urges the government to repeal the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009. I would like to begin by thanking the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for giving us this opportunity to set the record straight about Bill 50 and what it means for Alberta property owners.

The truth is that this legislation reflects the long-term vision of our hon. Premier by ensuring that future generations of Albertans have access to reliable electricity transmission infrastructure. The Alberta Electric System Operator, or AESO, has determined through extensive study and planning that if we do not upgrade our existing transmission infrastructure, we will not be able to meet our province's electricity demands in the future.

Just a comment about AESO, Mr. Speaker. AESO is composed of a battery of world-class experts in the field of electricity transmission. They have the expertise to evaluate our present capacity and to project the needs of Albertans into the future based on sound economic data.

To be clear, this is not an issue of generation but, rather, our ability to ensure that the power that is generated is delivered to Albertans' homes and businesses when it is needed. In fact, due to inefficiencies in our aging transmission system $220 million worth of electricity was lost in the form of heat from transmission lines in 2008 alone. This is enough electricity to power more than 350,000 homes for a year. As a result of these inefficiencies, more electricity must be generated, resulting in additional cost to consumers and an additional environmental impact.

In order to mitigate line losses and ensure reliable access to power in the future, the Alberta Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, was passed to allow the government of Alberta to authorize the transmission system upgrades that have been identified as critical by AESO.

As the government we are responsible for keeping the lights on in Alberta, just as we are responsible for making sure that other critical public infrastructure is put in place such as roads, hospitals, and schools. This responsibility does not nor has it ever given government the ability to violate the property rights of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 50 does not change this province's commitment to fair and open public hearings when it comes to determining the location of transmission infrastructure and does not circumvent Alberta property owners' rights to fair compensation for having this infrastructure located on their land. In fact, the Alberta Utilities Commission, an independent and impartial agency, will continue to determine where transmission infrastructure is located and will continue to listen to landowners' concerns.

In terms of compensation the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, made no changes to the ways in which landowners are compensated for the use of their properties. Should landowners not be able to come to mutually agreeable terms with the utility company, the Surface Rights Board will set the price as has always been the case. Compensation typically includes the acquisition of an easement, payments for the transmission line right-of-way, annual structure payments, and supplementary compensation. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, all of the protection mechanisms that were in place before this legislation was passed remain in place today.

The purpose of the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, is simply to ensure that critical electricity transmission infrastructure, that is necessary to keep the lights on in Alberta, is built in a timely manner. It provides for an addition in our transmission capacity that will accommodate long-term growth in our province while minimizing the land-use impacts.

I've heard many on the other side of this House argue that lower capacity transmission lines would be a better option as they also may have the ability to accommodate forecasted electricity demands. However, Mr. Speaker, should the forecasts change over time, this would force us into a situation where we have to continually build additional transmission infrastructure in order to meet the demand. This would result in even greater land impacts than the high-capacity 500-kV lines proposed now and potentially greater costs as well. The Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, ensures that we will only need to build these new transmission lines once and that they will accommodate growth in Alberta for the next 40 years. In other words, while we don't need the majority of this new transmission capacity right now, we will certainly grow into it in the near future.

Some critics would have us believe that Bill 50 is nothing more than a way for government to circumvent landowner rights in Alberta in order to hand out large contracts to friends and supporters. A closer look at the legislation reveals that this couldn't be further from the truth. After all, Bill 50 does not impact property rights; it simply speeds up the process for building critical transmission infrastructure. Alberta landowners retain the rights they have always had.

Mr. Speaker, this government has shown remarkable vision in its long-term electricity transmission plan and, as a result, will ensure that our children and grandchildren are well prepared to handle future growth in Alberta. Therefore, I do not believe that a repeal of the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, is in the best interests of Albertans. As such, I cannot support this motion, and I urge all of my hon. colleagues to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs and the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm going to rise to support Motion 504. When I heard the hon. Minister of Energy speak, I didn't hear him addressing the key points in the motion, and I want to do that for a moment. The first change that this motion anticipates or suggests is to ensure that the transmission line projects are subject to an objective needs assessment hearing by the Alberta Utilities Commission.

Now, this is one of the things that Bill 50 removed. It removed some important aspects that existed relative to the approval of new power projects, including transmission infrastructure. First of all, it removed the requirement that these projects be in the public interest. That's very important.

Secondly, it removed the requirement that there be a public hearing for this designated infrastructure, which allows other people – it might be a competing company; it might be a consumers group or a ratepayers association or just an interested citizen – to intervene and challenge the need for the project and challenge the cost estimates that are being used in order to justify it.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the way the infrastructure is built is that the money is borrowed, and then the repayment of that borrowed money is added to all of our power bills. So we have a direct interest in these projects. All citizens do. Whether it's large industry or just a homeowner, whether it's a municipality or a private-sector company, all of us will have to pay for this infrastructure, so we have an interest in ensuring that it's, first of all, necessary, in the public interest, and that it is built in the most cost-effective way possible.

Bill 50 removed all of those checks and balances and said that the cabinet itself, the government itself, could designate projects, which were exempt from this regulatory process altogether. It begs the question, Mr. Speaker: why did they feel that it was necessary to do that? If, as the minister is trying to tell the Assembly, these projects are in the public interest and they're absolutely necessary for growth, to get our economy back on track and so on, then why have they exempted the project from scrutiny? I would submit to you that it is because these projects are not in the public interest; they're not being built at the lowest necessary cost. I believe that these projects are designed to allow private power companies to build large-scale generating projects almost anywhere in the province, whether it be coal-fired or nuclear-powered generation, in order to sell their electricity for a profit, whether in the province or outside the province.

Now, the government is taking great pains to deny that these lines are designed for the export of power on a profit basis outside the province and, particularly, denied that American markets are involved. I don't believe them, and I don't think most Albertans believe them.

I used to get a charge out of former – and that's not intended as a pun. Sorry. But I used to sometimes enjoy former Premier Ralph Klein because, you know, at the oddest moments he would just blurt out the truth. One day we were in the House debating a billion-dollar power line to the United States that was proposed at that time, and he talked about how we could build lots of coal-fired plants and sell the power to the United States, that the United States needed the electricity, there was a big market for it, and that's what they were going to do. Well, the reaction, I think, surprised him because people didn't want to have a bunch of coal-fired power plants feeding the American market.

But here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. This entire infrastructure that's proposed is not just to simply upgrade existing capacity and to ensure that we have reliable electricity transmission; it is designed so that the electrical power industry can build surplus generation and sell it for a profit. Nothing wrong with that except that they should be paying for the lines. If they are using these transmission lines to get their power to some other market so that they can make money, then it is not in the interests of the consumers of Alberta, and if that's the case, then we shouldn't have to pay for it.

Now, the minister has said: well, it's not really $16 billion; it's really $5 billion. When I met with AESO, they said that the total package that's now being proposed is $8 billion and another $8 billion to come down the line. Even using $5 billion, the total value of all of the transmission infrastructure in this province today is only $2 billion. So if the minister says that we're going to add another $5 billion, then that has a very large impact on the electricity bills of Albertans. That's why industrial associations, that are very sensitive about electricity prices, have expressed so much concern.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is rooted in the whole misguided electricity deregulation direction of this province. They have deregulated transmission. That means that you don't have to justify the transmission as being required for the public good. If you think you can make money by building a big generating system, you can, but then the transmission is not deregulated, and it's paid for by electricity consumers because of a policy change brought in originally by Murray Smith when he was the Energy minister.

This is what's fundamentally wrong with this entire approach. They are going to spend billions of dollars – and we can quibble about how many – to massively overbuild a transmission system in this province so that it can serve the interests of power companies who want to build generation to sell the power for a profit, yet we are being asked to pay for it. That's wrong, Mr. Speaker.

It's fine if you want to build these transmission towers and all of that and if you can justify that to the people who live near them and justify the environmental concerns. That's fine. Let the power companies pay for them. But don't ask us to pay for this and to have significant increases in our power bills in order to do so. That's just wrong. That's not a government that is acting in the interests of the citizens of the province. That is a government that is complicit with the power industry in gouging the people of this province to pay for for-profit transmission lines. That's the logic, in my view, of electricity deregulation.

We are the only party in this Legislature that has consistently opposed deregulation as a misguided attempt. I'm getting a look, I know, from the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. But when we were in Vegreville for the big meeting, that the Premier didn't come to, we had Danielle Smith, the leader of Wildrose Alliance, and we had the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, from Calgary-Mountain View, and myself on the stage, and we had a little discussion about power deregulation. The other two leaders supported deregulation publicly – and that's on the public record – and we were consistent that deregulation is the source of the problem and is a serious error on the part of government, that has already cost Albertans billions and billions of dollars.

You just have to go back to the old balancing pool and the selling off of the different generating assets that took place in the beginning and the spikes in power rates that we all saw. It's a disastrous experiment, and it is now being compounded by a government that is willing to force us ratepayers to fund their friends in private industry. That is what's unacceptable about it.

I think that this motion is very, very appropriate because it would ensure, if the government followed the direction, that the transmission lines are subject to an objective . . . [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Unfortunately, I can advise that we're now going to be moving on to the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been a rather civil debate this afternoon, and I appreciate that while some of the members opposite may passionately speak in favour of this motion, obviously, many of us are opposed to this motion, and I ask that we continue this civility.

While I want to thank the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for putting forth this motion, I have to disagree with a lot of things that he has to say. I likely will not use my full time here, but I just want to address a few points. His claim that the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, otherwise known as Bill 50 from a couple of years ago, needs to be repealed: I would have to disagree with that. I actually think that the construction of critical transmission infrastructure, or CTI, is important for a province's economic growth. When I was a parliamentary assistant for Energy, I learned very quickly that it isn't good enough that we have an electric system that is only up 99 per cent of the time. It has to be very, very razor close to 100 per cent of the time. I hear stories from people in developing countries of when the power actually goes off and the deleterious effects that that has on the particular economy.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, there's been a lot of misinformation about Bill 50. I want to take this time to just speak about two topics here. I want to clarify the scope of Bill 50, and secondly, I want to explain why the construction of lines is important for our province's economic future.

With respect to the scope of Bill 50 it's important to note that Bill 50 applies to only a limited number of projects, four in particular. The total cost of these projects is estimated to be $3.3 billion. While there are other power line projects that are going to have to be completed in the near future, these projects are not designated as CTIs and, therefore, are not affected in any way or means whatsoever by the scope of Bill 50.

Furthermore, it is important to understand why large-scale construction of transmission infrastructure is necessary. Now, of course, transmission lines are often located on private property, so the creation of large-scale transmission infrastructure at one point in time is important to ensure that a patchwork of infrastructure is not being created.

Of course, a patchwork of transmission lines has a couple of disadvantages over a well-planned large-scale project. From an efficiency standpoint large projects cost less because of the economies of scale, meaning that large projects are more efficient than small ones due to the high fixed costs associated with the construction of electrical transmission infrastructure. From a property rights perspective, Mr. Speaker, a patchwork of transmission infrastructure projects means that a haphazard collection would make up our electrical transmission system, hardly something that we look to as ideal. Ultimately, this would take up more property space than a small number of large-scale projects.

Mr. Speaker, I think that these considerations are important ones to consider before we dismiss Bill 50 simply because of the cost associated with it or because of ideological or political lines.

In addition to discussing the scope of Bill 50, I also want to briefly explain the importance of ensuring that the critical transmission infrastructure is, in fact, built. Of course, AESO, the independent body that determines transmission need, makes careful projections about future demand for electricity in Alberta, also known as load forecasting. I also want to mention that we're not just planning for the electricity needs of today. We're also not necessarily planning for the population needs of tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, because, as we know, electricity use can increase beyond population growth over time.

Before Bill 50 was passed, this body completed an extensive report which included without limitation a detailed and robust load forecast for this province. The projected increase in demand for power in Alberta as determined by the experts at AESO in their report is close to 3.1 per cent over the next two decades, which requires a rather staggering 11,500 megawatts of additional generation. Of course, a modern transmission system is needed to get power from the generating stations to homes, to businesses, to industry across this province without extensive line loss. Although some opponents of Bill 50 have argued that transmission lines are not needed because the demand for electricity can be satisfied with natural gas power plants, with respect I find this view rather short sighted, and I'll address this briefly as well.

One, although the price of natural gas is low now – and the last time I checked, it was just a little below $4 – there's no guarantee that natural gas prices will continue to be low in the future. In fact, any first-year statistics class will tell you that the further you go into the future, the higher your margin of error. I imagine that if you go back to five, 10 years ago, when you had much higher natural gas prices, if you had told them that the shale gas plays would have such an impact and you'd be below four bucks today, they may have laughed at you. Well, we may laugh at projections today five, 10 years in the future, so we need to make that appropriate preparation. While local natural gas generation plants are popular now due to low prices, we have to be cognizant of the fact that increases in natural gas prices would significantly alter the feasibility of natural gas generation, especially since some natural gas plants are only used during times of high demand.

I also want to address that the feasibility of local natural gas plants, to me, is put in doubt. Who's one of their biggest proponents? Mr. Speaker, it's Enmax. Who would benefit most from them? The Crown-operated utility owned by the city of Calgary, that has the highest local access fees in the province. Of course, now, that's another debate, that the Member for Calgary-North Hill has been involved with.

Another reason we must be concerned about our transmission infrastructure now is because it takes longer to build transmission infrastructure than it does to improve the generating stations. This is because of the fact that power lines are located, again, on private property, and it takes time to ensure that landowners are properly compensated for any impact that power lines have on their property.

Now, of course, Bill 50 still ensures that the Alberta Utilities Commission has the final say with respect to where transmission lines are located. Indeed, starting in the future, the Alberta Utilities Commission will visit municipalities such as Spruce Grove, Morinville, Fort Saskatchewan, and other places to meet with landowners who have expressed concern about heartland transmission facility applications. These meetings emphasize the AUC's commitment to ensuring that landowners have an opportunity to bring forward any and all concerns that they may have about the project.

Mr. Speaker, in summary, I want to emphasize that Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, is indeed a necessary piece of legislation that will help provide a reliable supply of electricity for Albertans over the next several decades. While debates about policies are often focused on the short term, the debate about Bill 50 should not be focused on the next two to five or even 10 years. Rather, the debate about this bill should be on the long-term importance of transmission infrastructure, which is necessary for the well-being of future generations of Albertans.

I do want to address two final issues. The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has brought up the issue that AltaLink donated to the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta. Well, anybody who goes to elections.ab.ca can also find that AltaLink also donated to the Wildrose Alliance Party.

Secondly, the Member for Calgary-Varsity has made some rather maligning statements about the legal profession. I will not take those to heart, but at the same time I will restrain myself from making comments about his profession like he has about mine.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

I must advise all members that at 5:54 I shall rise and call on the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to conclude the debate.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see that my time is going to be very short, so I'll try and jump over the highlights. I guess I'd like to start off by saying how disappointing it is that the debate isn't about the motion, which talks about an objective needs assessment hearing, which is critical. It's about open and transparently tendered power lines and whether there's going to really be true and fair compensation for the landowners.

I guess I'll have to summarize at this point. The department of economics at the University of Calgary, the department of electrical engineers, put out a very interesting paper back in October 2009. At the end of it it says that they question the urgency after being brought forth so long ago. Now it's two years later, and still the Minister of Energy says that this is urgent. I'd like to know the government's definition of urgent, whether that's two months, three months or three years or five years. Urgency has long passed on this.

The school of economics just says, you know, that we need to have a regulatory hearing that has a greater ability to draw on expertise. The process also requires a regulator through written decision – this is through a written decision – to provide and document the rationale for each decision. There is no rationale for this decision. It raises doubts. It says that if we need to improve our regulatory reform, do that, but don't abandon the regulatory process.

We have to ask – and it was brought into question again in the report – about the DC lines. It's not economically viable to be putting in DC lines for a short, 300-kilometre run. It should be 600 kilometres minimum in order to kick in and truly be effective in that area.

The real question, Mr. Speaker, and the real problem of all this is the parameters which the government has put around this to say: "This is why we need it. These are the parameters that justify this." Those parameters are wrong. They don't take into account the competitiveness of where generation is put in, and they've taken on the parameter of zero congestion. They continue to bring up this line loss, which everybody knows and understands, but you need to look at it in that the percentage of actual electricity transmitted and paid for is nowhere near the numbers that they are perpetuating and saying, that we're losing, you know, millions and millions of dollars through line loss. It just isn't so.

Again, the member mentioned that, you know, it's this government's responsibility to keep the lights on.

The Speaker: I hate to interrupt the hon. member, but standing orders suggest that we should now call on the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to conclude the debate.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's not a lot of time here in the last five minutes, but I would just like to clarify a few things. I don't think anyone in this House – I don't know; I'm just going to speak for the Wildrose. We're certainly not opposed to building new transmission in Alberta that's needed to keep the lights on. We're not opposed to that. What we're opposed to is the overbuild of unnecessary transmission and then having ratepayers in Alberta have to foot the bill for unnecessary lines and expenses. That's what we're against.

We had a process in place. We had the Alberta Utilities Commission, an independent arbiter, hear all sides and all stakeholders in the situation, and they put out a needs assessment finding of whether the new transmission proposals are needed. That is so critical. When you take out that independent needs assessment process, you make this a political issue, and it is a political issue that will absolutely lose dozens of PC Party MLAs their seats, especially in rural Alberta, in the next election just on this issue. It will happen. You can take it to the bank if you do not repeal this bill. It's a bad bill. It's a bill that allows you to spend billions of dollars on the backs of Alberta ratepayers without going through the objective needs assessment process.

There's no need for it. If you're so sure that it's needed and of all the facts that were being thrown around on all sides today, fine. Okay. Even if you believe that, should you not, then, be very comfortable or confident that if there's an independent needs assessment process before the AUC, they will find that what you are saying is true or that they would find that a certain amount of it's true, that we need a certain amount built, et cetera? Then we build the lines. Absolutely. Albertans will get behind that. We all want electricity. We need electricity. But when you take the AUC, the independent, objective arbiter, out of the equation here, you make it a completely political decision – completely political – and people see it.

There's no reason why we should be sitting here. I mean, aside from the tender – yes, they should have been tendered openly, and there are a whole bunch of things wrong with Bill 50 – just take home one thing, that if you're so confident in what you feel is needed for our electrical grid here, then let's go before the experts. Let's have people from industry and landowners and all stakeholders – government officials, the AESO, everybody – come before the AUC and make their case. If it so happens that we do need more electricity, let's build it. Then it'll be on people's power bills, and that's okay because it's needed. But right now how can we honestly in this House say that we need the degree of electricity build that is being proposed in Bill 50? It's just nonsensical. If it isn't nonsensical, if I'm totally wrong, great. Let's go to the AUC. Let's have a needs assessment process that's open and accountable.

I'll end quickly with one thing that was said here by IPCCAA, which represents industrial, 35 per cent of the power users in Alberta. They say that this plan will make Alberta less competitive. It will push companies to leave. These lines will cost billions. We're going to spend billions of dollars, and there's no return on this investment. We're going to be pushing jobs out of this province. I know you think this is going to help promote growth. It won't. It will drive up power prices unnecessarily. We'll be un-competitive. Jobs will leave, companies will leave, and all because we didn't allow an independent needs assessment process to take place, as was clearly called for by the U of C School of Public Policy and IPCCAA and the consumers for competitive transmission – and there are literally dozens more – all calling for an independent needs assessment process.

Mr. Speaker, I just hope that people in this Assembly will do the right thing, that they'll repeal this bill. Let's go back to the drawing board. Let's put it before the AUC and, on behalf of the people we represent, make sure that we're giving our consumers, our voters the best possible electricity rates that we possibly can, and the only way to do that, in my view, is to bring it before the AUC.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have before the Assembly a vote with respect to the support or lack of support for . . .

Dr. Taft: A procedural point for just a second, Mr. Speaker. My hunch is there might be a standing vote.

The Speaker: We don't know that.

Dr. Taft: I don't know that, but in case there is, would it be possible to get unanimous consent to shorten the bells? I'd just put that to you, Mr. Speaker.

6:00

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think that would be a very dangerous request. There are many, many members that are located in buildings other than this one. One minute would not give them time to come here, and they would have had no notice of that whatsoever. That would make this group the one who would make decisions on behalf of other members who aren't here. It would seem to me that – no, I don't want to bring that question to the attention of the Assembly simply because of the democratic principle.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 504 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 6:01 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 19, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. We give thanks for Your abundant blessings to our province and to ourselves. We ask for Your guidance in our deliberations and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure and an honour for me to stand this afternoon and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a couple of gentlemen that are in your gallery. You would very certainly recall Mr. David Wilkins. Mr. Wilkins served as the United States' ambassador to Canada under the previous administration. Tom Sullivan is a colleague of Ambassador Wilkins, and they're here visiting Alberta. They've been, you know, very familiarized with the province of Alberta over the years. Ambassador Wilkins has been a great, great supporter and advocate of Alberta across Canada and most certainly in his native United States. I would ask them to please rise, and I would ask all of our members to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Mr. Minister, I hope you don't mind if I supplement your introduction of Ambassador Wilkins. He has been a friend of mine for a long period of time. All hon. members should know that Ambassador Wilkins was an elected representative in the state Legislature of South Carolina for 25 years, he served as Speaker in the House in South Carolina for 11 years, and in fact he was the first Republican elected to Speaker in what is known as the American south since the 1880s. So, Ambassador and Speaker, welcome again.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to stand today to introduce through you to members of the Assembly a group of elementary students from Trinity Christian school. They've come every year. They're the only school that comes out of Calgary-Shaw to visit us in the Legislature. They have with them today their teacher, Mrs. Cheryl Barnard. They have 20 parents with them and 27 students. After they leave the Assembly today, they're going to be going to West Edmonton Mall to the water park and spending the night in Edmonton. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of 19 grade 6 students from Rochester school, a small community within my constituency about an hour and a half north of here. They travelled in to Edmonton to visit the museum and the Legislature today. I'm very happy that they've come in to visit us. They're led by their teacher, Mr. Howard Ruttan, and teacher assistants Beryl Cumbleton and Val Breitreutz. Unfortunately, they're not in the House until 2 o'clock, but just the same I'd ask the Assembly to offer its traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members two groups of students with us today. The first group I'll introduce is from the Rimbey Christian school. There are 28 students and eight adults, and the adults with us today are Mrs. Kathy Nieuwenhuis and Mr. Paul Payson – he is a teacher in the school as well as a town councillor in the town of Rimbey – and Mrs. Tonya Dempsey. The other adult helpers are Mrs. Diane Weening; Mrs. Melodie Schwieger; Mrs. Jill Murphy; Mr. John Holtkamp, the bus driver and a good friend of mine; and Mr. Jeremy Maser. They're seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, the second one is 19 students and three adults from Father Lacombe Catholic school. The adults here include Mrs. Stephanie Dallas, teacher. She is also the daughter-in-law of the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. Mr. Curt Baron and Mrs. Colette Lunn are accompanying these 19 students. Also, one of the students, I would like to add, is Miss Kasandra Calkins. She is the daughter of the federal candidate, Mr. Blaine Calkins, who is our Member of Parliament. She is with them as well. I don't know if they're here now or if they're coming at 2 o'clock, but I would ask all members to give them the warm welcome as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton-Riverview has many wonderful schools in it, and one of the most wonderful of all is Lansdowne elementary school. For those of us who know Edmonton, Lansdowne not only serves a small community, but it also serves one of the big international residences for the University of Alberta, Michener Park. There are 29 members of the grade 6 class of that school visiting us today, and they're accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Woolley. I believe they're in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome from all of us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Starting April 30, the top junior A hockey teams in Canada will commence the Royal Bank Cup in Camrose, and it'll be hosted by the Camrose Kodiaks. There may be another Alberta team in the tournament, depending upon the outcome of the Doyle Cup. This represents years of hard work by a lot of community volunteers.

I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of the members of the organizing committee, who have made this event possible. They are Barry Fossen, president of the Camrose Sport Development Society; Kevin Gurr, chair of the 2011 RBC Cup committee and secretary of the Camrose Sport Development Society; Kevin Pratt, treasurer of the Camrose Sport Development Society; and Gary Gibeault, business operations director for the 2011 RBC Cup committee. I'd like to thank this committee for their very hard work, and I'd also like to encourage all members to make a trip out to Camrose and check out some great junior hockey. They're behind me in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. In my introduction to you and through you today I'm going to be introducing a number of individuals from the Alberta Golf Association who share my father's passion for the sport. Mr. Speaker, you or members of this Assembly may not be aware that three years ago my father represented this province in the Canada Senior Games in golf. Three months after triple-bypass surgery he was in Dieppe, New Brunswick, and he brought back the gold medal in golf for over 85.

Mr. Speaker, while you'll find me frequently in the rough both in the Legislature and outside, my father is always on the fairway, and so are these gentlemen and ladies. I have Brent Ellenton, Jim Hope, Dean Ingalls, Brent Hutcheon, Duane Sharpe, Craig Rusnak, Slade King, Karen Rackel, Wayne Ganshirt, Gary Ward, Steven Young, Jim Ross, Glenn Genereux, Al Scoffield, Debbie Amirault, and Duncan Mills. These individuals met with the representatives from Calgary-Buffalo and Lethbridge-East and talked about all that golf does for this province and would like to have a greater say, shall we say, in the determination of the golf process.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.
1:40

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's my pleasure to introduce an Edmontonian who's a very good friend of my leg. assistant. They both met at MacEwan University, where Rose Marie Matwie – she actually is an Edmontonian who has never been in the Legislature – received the outstanding service award for her work with new Canadians in teaching English as a second language. This is her first visit. I'd like to ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Air Spray Ltd.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm particularly pleased today to talk about people among us who are consciously putting themselves in harm's way to protect us. While there's no doubt that protecting citizens in urban areas is indeed a challenge, imagine for a moment the challenge of being the first responder at a fire engulfing an area the size of a thousand football fields.

I am proud to report that when an event of this magnitude occurs, my constituents respond. The three key agencies that coordinate, plan, and fight wildfire are all located in Edmonton-Calder because, of course, Mr. Speaker, it's all in Calder. They are Sustainable Resource Development's fire ops, Emergency Management Alberta, and the organization I want to talk about today, Air Spray Ltd.

The company chair, Don Hamilton, got his pilot's licence in 1943. Starting with an 80-horsepower Cessna 120, Don proceeded to build a state-of-the-art fire suppression and control business using the most modern and robust fleet of aircraft of their kind in Canada. Under Don's leadership staff at Air Spray Ltd. go wherever they are needed and have saved the forest industry in Canada and the United States literally billions of dollars in lost revenue by supporting ground firefighters and playing an integral role in saving lives and saving property. Don has enjoyed an exemplary career, and his achievements have changed aviation and forest landscape management in North America.

Mr. Speaker, there are many outstanding aviators and entrepreneurs from Edmonton, but only one, our friend Don Hamilton, will take his place in the Canadian Aviation Hall of Fame on May 26 of this year. Don is being inducted into this prestigious hall for being a pioneer and an innovator, but to those whose livelihoods depend upon the wilderness, he is so much more. Don Hamilton is one of those who protects us and who protects what we love.

You should never curse a farmer while you're having dinner, Mr. Speaker, just as you should never complain about someone doing their best to help you because you might need it the most.

Thank you.

Patient Advocacy by Physicians

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, our doctors, nurses, and other health professionals have devoted their lives to caring for the sick and afflicted. Because they care so much, these great Albertans feel duty bound to treat and protect their patients as best they can. It is this very relationship of trust that our doctors and nurses uphold that makes this PC government's treatment of them absolutely reprehensible. The past six months have seen a continuous string of evidence showing physician intimidation and punishment undertaken by this PC government.

What were these doctors' crimes? They voiced dissent against government decisions they felt would hurt the care of their patients. Despite all the evidence of wrongdoing the PC government continues to refuse opposition calls for a full judicial public inquiry to get to the bottom of these allegations and ensure the wrongdoers are dealt with appropriately.

They have continuously stated that there will be an internal review done by the Health Quality Council, which reports directly to the minister of health, and the PCs argue that this should suffice. This is, of course, nonsense. The Health Quality Council is comprised of doctors specializing in issues of patient care. They are not equipped with the subpoena powers or legal training necessary to undertake an investigation into potential ethical or criminal wrongdoing.

Last week Alberta doctors did something unprecedented. Through the AMA they called for an independent public inquiry into the issue of physician intimidation. Doctors are simply fed up with what's been happening, and they want to get to the bottom of it so they can advocate freely for their patients' health.

If elected, a Wildrose government will immediately call for a full public inquiry into the issue of physician intimidation, paid AHS confidentiality agreements, and other questionable practices of this PC government as it pertains to the relationship with Alberta's health professionals. Our health care system is the most important social service we have as a province. We can no longer trust it to a PC government that is clearly far more focused on controlling political damage than it is on repairing the damage they've done to our public health care system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta School Councils' Association

Ms Woo-Paw: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta School Councils' Association's annual conference took place last weekend. This is an opportunity for delegates from school councils across the province to come together to share their experiences from the past year and to prepare for the next one. School councils are made up of a diverse group of parents, teachers, principals, students, staff, and community representatives who work together in support of student success in their communities.

The ASCA is a wonderful example of the positive impact that volunteers can play in our school system. By bringing together various stakeholders, school councils can offer multiple perspectives, unique skills, and fresh ideas to support our students and schools. School councils play an important role in promoting positive relationships between the school and the community and are a valuable resource in helping schools and students deal with the challenges of today. By providing valuable insight on issues like bullying in and outside of the school, members of school councils can have a direct impact in helping every student in the community to succeed. The parental perspective is invaluable in helping educators understand the unique pressures and challenges that our students are facing today. Students councils provide a forum for discussion and collaboration between all those who have a stake in student success.

As we have been saying for years, transforming education in Alberta requires more than just the involvement of teachers, principals, superintendents, and trustees. One of the key components in our vision for the future of education in Alberta is an increased engagement of the community in their schools. School councils are the embodiment of this engagement.

On behalf of the Legislative Assembly I want to take this opportunity to thank everyone who took the time to participate in a school council this year. Your contributions provide an important voice in the education community, and we value your commitment to our schools, our children, and our communities. I wish all of you the best in the coming year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Energy Efficiency Rebate Program

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Improving energy efficiency and increasing conservation are key components of Alberta's climate change strategy. As part of our approach, two years ago this government announced a $36 million investment in energy efficiency rebates for consumers. The program is on track to reduce emissions by 1 million tonnes, which is the equivalent of taking 200,000 cars off the road for a year.

We are very pleased with the positive decisions Albertans are making to improve energy efficiency in their homes. Since the program's inception in April 2009 Albertans have responded with phenomenal enthusiasm, receiving more than 110,000 rebates worth more than $26 million. While some of the rebates available to Albertans have changed over time, the overall goal has not: to help people be better environmental stewards and create a culture of conservation in the province. Albertans still have about one year left to participate in this program, with rebates continuing to be available on items such as high-efficiency heating systems, insulation, hot water heaters, and new homes.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Climate Change Central, our partners in this successful program. It has helped Albertans become more energy efficient, save money, and reduce greenhouse gas emissions. I am pleased that Albertans are sharing environmental leadership and doing their part to create a more sustainable future.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Physicians

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Michel Sauvé from Fort McMurray is the latest victim of this government's culture of fear and intimidation. Dr. Sauvé was forced to take legal action against the former health region and Alberta Health Services. He stated that, quote, his work environment is intolerably stressful and, as a consequence, he's suffering emotionally. Dr. Sauvé has reason to believe that the health region and others, quote, have undertaken to drive him out of the community. End quote. To the Premier. Dr. Sauvé's lawsuit was filed in 2010. How can the Premier continue to deny that a culture of fear and intimidation continues under this government's leadership?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the fact that he's filed a lawsuit: obviously, there's a process to deal with his complaints with his employer.

Dr. Swann: Well, given that a judicial inquiry is the only way to get to the bottom of this government's culture of fear and intimidation, will the Premier finally find his backbone and recognize that the Health Quality Council review will not help doctors like Dr. Sauvé?

Mr. Stelmach: In fact, the Health Quality Council is the best way of reviewing all of these allegations that are made by some doctors, some dating back as many as 10 to 15 years ago. The process is under way. If this physician wants to come forward with his allegations, he's free to phone the Health Quality Council immediately and come forward with the evidence, if he has any.

Dr. Swann: Disingenuous, Mr. Speaker. He knows that the Health Quality Council cannot relieve people of their nondisclosure agreements.

How many more hundreds or thousands of health professionals like Dr. Sauvé does the Premier have to hear from before he concedes that a judicial inquiry is the only way to address a culture of fear and intimidation?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if this matter is currently before the court, how can there be a nondisclosure agreement? It just doesn't make any sense.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier said that doctors subject to nondisclosure agreements could go to Alberta Health Services, request that the terms of the nondisclosure agreements be changed and, if Alberta Health Services agreed, discuss the details within. Moments later the health minister contradicted the Premier and said that Alberta Health Services would not change the terms nor would he direct them to do so. They can't both be right.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Swann: To the Premier: will the Premier set the record straight? Is Alberta Health Services in a position to change the terms of these nondisclosure agreements to permit doctors to disclose without fear of retribution and, if it is, will the Premier direct it to do so?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the government does not have the power to open up nondisclosure agreements because we're not a party to the original agreement. Can you imagine if the government had the power to open all kinds of agreements that were entered into by two parties and tear up contracts and say, "Well, this is the way we want it"? There would be tremendous howls from the opposition if we ever did that as the government of Alberta. Pure nonsense.

Dr. Swann: Why does the Premier ignore the Alberta Medical Association and the over 6,500 doctors it represents when they say that a public inquiry is the only course or option to address the issue of physician intimidation? Why do you ignore them, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if you read further down in the letter, the AMA said that if the government does proceed with the Health Quality Council and endorses the Health Quality Council – and the Health Quality Council wrote their own very robust terms of reference to conduct this review. The AMA said: we will co-operate.

Dr. Swann: Well, given that the Premier will neither allow a public inquiry nor the opening up of these nondisclosure agreements, is he tacitly admitting that a public inquiry would find more smoking guns than this government has shovels to bury them?

Mr. Stelmach: Talk about – well, no, I'll stay away from that. I'll just focus on the Health Quality Council. Mr. Speaker, this is the best way to proceed. In fact, the process has begun. The terms of reference have been agreed on by the Health Quality Council. They have some excellent legal advice to advise them as they proceed, and any physician, any nurse, any health care provider can come forward under the protection of the Alberta Evidence Act and deliver their evidence.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mental Health Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Canadian Mental Health Association 1 in 5 Albertans will suffer from a mental disorder in his or her lifetime, yet for three years this government has ignored recommendations by the Auditor General that would advance implementation of an integrated provincial mental health plan. To the minister of health: how much longer are Albertans to suffer without the standards, targets, and initiatives of a provincial plan for addiction and mental illness?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated on previous occasions – and I'm happy to reiterate it – we spend between $500 million and $600 million on such initiatives. We've just committed another $19 million for a school initiative to hire more counsellors and provide more assistance. Finally, we do have a mental health provincial strategy that is being worked on. It will be available very soon, and it will result in vast improvements to mental health delivery in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the same minister: given that Alberta's suicide rate is the second highest in Canada, why hasn't the minister acted on another 2008 recommendation from the Auditor General and increased the priority of suicide in the provincial mental health plan?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I believe we have. I should also comment that of the 53 recommendations that were made by the office of the Auditor General, the vast majority of those recommendations were acted on. They've already been implemented. Again, we are waiting for the office of the Auditor General to complete their audit of what we did in response to the audit he did earlier. So it's a two-way street here. It's being worked on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Back to the same minister. Well, there's been no improvement on monitoring or reporting, so what is the reason that this government has made it so difficult to track their process on implementing the provincial mental health plan? Why?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there is a delay. I think there is very robust and very aggressive action being taken, partly because of the five-year health action plan, mostly because of the five-year commitment to funding, unprecedented anywhere in Canada. I've indicated it before and I'll indicate it again: as far as I'm concerned, mental health is one of those top priority issues, and that's why we've put so much more emphasis on it. More resources, more people. We've just opened more residential treatment beds in Medicine Hat and in Fort McMurray, and there's more good news coming.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been often said that where there's smoke, there's fire. This Premier and the minister of health continue to say that they just want the issue to die. One by one they have told doctors and Albertans no to a public inquiry. Now he has just lined up 6,500 Alberta doctors and told them no to a public inquiry. To the health minister: what are you so afraid of, considering you were the junior minister during the time in question?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we're not afraid of anything over here. If there is evidence, if there is proof, there's a process by which they can bring that forward. If they feel they have some real smoking guns, they have the police they can go to, they have the office of the Auditor General they can go to. If it's a malpractice issue, they can go to the College of Physicians & Surgeons.

Let's keep this in perspective, Mr. Speaker. Over the last five years the College of Physicians & Surgeons found it necessary to suspend an average of maybe two or three per year. That's it. It's not a very large number. I don't take away from the gravity of it. I'm just saying: let's keep this in perspective.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister is clearly afraid of something, based on that answer, and given that he was the junior minister and is potentially in a conflict of interest, will you, sir, call for a public inquiry or step down as the minister responsible for Alberta Health and Wellness because of the cloud that is over your head?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of what I did as the associate minister for health in 1999, 2000, and 2001. That's where we started the programs more aggressively to do with electronic health records. That's where we talked about multicultural health brokers in the hospitals so that people could have . . . [interjections] Did you want to recognize the yappers, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: I've recognized the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Okay. Thanks. I'm sorry. It's just that they're chattering so much, you can't hear very well. At least I couldn't.

I was just saying that I was very proud of what I did in that respect, and I'm even more proud of the fact that I'm able to continue it with the first-ever Alberta wellness forum last December and an international symposium that we're planning for October of this year. Wellness is very important, and I stand by my record of helping to advocate for it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that some of the new superboard appointees were in senior positions at the time in question and were made by this minister when he was the junior minister, will this minister rescind those appointments to the superboard because of the potential conflict of interest until a public inquiry is called?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can remember being in cabinet with that member when he was supporting these people. These are very credible, very knowledgeable people: Orders of Canada, people who ran the most successful health system in Canada for three, four, or five years, people who are doctors. Why are you attacking these innocent people? It's just no sense.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Cancer Surgery Wait Times

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Documents released yesterday show that the PC caucus was told as early as 1999 by Dr. McNamee and others that they were not putting enough resources into lung cancer surgery. They did nothing. Yesterday the whole Tory caucus shamefully voted to keep information about the impact of their negligence secret. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier explain why his government refuses to release information about cancer surgery wait times between 2000 and 2007?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's what is going before the Health Quality Council. They'll review all of the documents. In fact, they're open to looking at all of the unsubstantiated allegations that have been made in this House for the last six months. You know, in this House of immunity, right here, the best immunity in the province of Alberta, not one single fact came forward, only allegations.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that it is the government that has the facts and is withholding them and given that it is increasingly clear that the Health Quality Council review is actually just the rug which the government is using to sweep its dirt under, will the Premier finally admit that he has no intention of letting the public learn the truth about cancer wait times and patient deaths because he and his entire caucus are implicated?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, not only did this coalition over here a few months ago – and this word “coalition” is gaining more prominence across the country of Canada. Not only did they stand up together and blame the University of Alberta, blame the University of Calgary, blame the Alberta Medical Association, blame the College of Physicians & Surgeons, but now today they are including even other health care professionals in this alleged cover-up. When will this ever stop?

Mr. Mason: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the only people that we are blaming are this Premier and his Tory caucus and given that the Tory caucus was told that there was a problem with wait times for cancer surgery years ago and given that the same caucus refuses to release information that could convict them of political negligence, why won't the Premier just put the interests of Albertans ahead of saving the skins of his Tory caucus and do the right thing?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are putting the needs of Albertans first and foremost. That's why we're proceeding with the Health Quality Council review. Most importantly, we are the only jurisdiction in Canada that has come forward with a five-year commitment for funding and very, very aggressive performance measures, much more aggressive than most other jurisdictions in Canada. We also are looking at how to grow the economy so that we can afford good-quality health care well into the future so that our children and grandchildren will enjoy a very good publicly funded system.

Oil Sands Royalties

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's Auditor General has said that this government has failed to develop performance targets and measures for the oil sands royalty regime. My question is for the Minister of Energy. When will the government set measurable performance targets for oil sands royalties so we know where we are going?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, it should be put in context because my guess is that this member did his research again in the local newspapers. What the Auditor General actually said is that of all the recommendations that were made, the Department of Energy has fully implemented those recommendations, and in the one relative to oil sands, he says there is satisfactory progress. Now, I would suggest that if that were a high school report card, it would be passing with flying grades.

Mr. Hehr: Given that I didn't read it in the paper but read it in the Auditor General's report, there's something amiss in the minister's answer. Nevertheless, can you explain why the royalty percentage received by this government for oil sands is capped when oil prices reach above $120 a barrel?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons why this particular recommendation hasn't yet been implemented – I can tell you it will be; the performance measures will be part of the 2012-2013 business plan – is that we have to recognize that when it comes to the oil sands, there is no other comparative, so we're trying to devise a mechanism whereby we have a performance measure that is actually meaningful. We want to make sure that it's meaningful and not done quickly and has little or no meaning.

Mr. Hehr: Given that the minister just tried to answer question 1 instead of question 2, I'll try question 2 again. Can the minister explain why the royalty percentage received by this government for oil sands is capped when oil prices reach above $120?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, there are parties in this House – and I'm not sure if that member sits in one of those parties – that believe that we should be getting more royalties to the extent that we make ourselves uncompetitive. One of the things we want to ensure is that our royalty structure is competitive. We now know it's competitive on the conventional side of the system, and we need to devise a performance measure around the oil sands.

Community Spirit Program

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our non-profits and charitable organizations are struggling with the lingering effects of the economic downturn and with ever-rising costs to deliver programs and services. The Minister of Culture and Community Spirit announced the recipients of the 2010 community spirit program donation grants last week. Eighteen hundred organizations received funding compared to 20,000 non-profits in the province, a relative drop in the bucket. My questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Is the community spirit program having any impact, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, it definitely is having an impact. Hearing from the recipients themselves, they tell us that it is. These dollars help for additional programming operations.

We have given as a Progressive Conservative government $52.9 million over the last three years. Those are new dollars. Those are dollars they didn't have before. It's part of the commitment we have made in addition to the enhanced tax credit. It's something this government believes in. Unlike the far right Alliance over there, we will continue to fund the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: who got to pick and choose which applicants would receive the funding?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's as it should be. Albertans got to decide. Albertans decided to donate to those individual organizations. We matched proportionately up to $25,000 per organization, and we're glad to say that 1,792 organizations were able to be recipients of that funding.

The Speaker: The hon. member

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: does the community spirit program replace the support that was available to voluntary organizations, the former Wild Rose Foundation?

Mr. Blackett: No, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't. This is new money, as I said, that was announced by the Premier back in 2008, and we continue our commitment through this particular year. The Wild Rose Foundation money was rolled into the community initiatives program. We still continue to fund the level of programming that we do on an unmatched basis. We still continue international development. We still continue to support Vitalize. We still continue the support for development. This is new money. [interjections]

The Speaker: It's okay. You can go and have a coffee if you wish. You don't have to stay.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge East, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Abandoned Wells

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Municipal Affairs has failed to introduce promised legislation this spring session. First, it was the legislation to protect homeowners from shoddy construction practices that never materialized, and now it's abandoned wells legislation. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The minister has suggested that regulatory amendments, usually made behind closed doors, may now be forthcoming instead of legislation. Why is that, when legislation was promised?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm not really sure which piece she's talking about, whether it's the Calmar one or the building one. On both, nonetheless, we do work with stakeholders. We work with our counterparts. If it's concerning buildings, we'll work with the building industry, we'll work with our inspectors, and we'll bring the necessary changes forward. The same thing when working with our various municipalities when it comes to dealing with abandoned wells.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Given that the minister's response to questioning is that he's working closely with municipalities, why is it that his message to check for abandoned wells before issuing development permits has sometimes fallen on deaf ears?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think that over the last number of years we've issued three different directives to municipalities to make sure that they work with their developers to assure themselves that development is not occurring on or close to abandoned wells. Those directives are already in place. We certainly encourage municipalities to follow that to be able to minimize the effects or the results that happened in another municipality here in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I think that's a partial answer to my third question.

Can the minister tell the House if a survey of municipalities has been done to determine how many currently have the real, proper information that they need to check for those orphan wells?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the municipalities have fairly easy access to those particular records. They know who to get in touch with. When it comes to development permits, we're involved with that, but the ERCB is the one that has the locations. Those locations are all identified. They're all there. It's a matter of the municipalities contacting the proper agencies to make sure that they know if there are wells there.

Postsecondary Enrolments

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, over the past year postsecondary institutions in Alberta have seen significant increases in applications. At the same time, Alberta's postsecondary institutions have been told not to expect any increases in their base operating this year or next. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Can the minister tell us how postsecondary institutions are supposed to balance the increase in students with less funding?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it is true that we have had an increase in the number of Albertans wanting to attend postsecondaries in the province, and that's the good news. However, the challenges are that last year we had a zero budget increase. This year we have a zero-based budget increase again. In travelling and talking to our institutions – yesterday I travelled to Red Deer and Medicine Hat and met with the college boards – it is a challenge. They are struggling to meet the requirements of increasing enrolments, the requirements for programming, and frozen budgets.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: can the minister explain why so many students were turned away from postsecondary studies this past fall?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that we had over 3,500 more applications this year than last, so there is demand for our postsecondaries. The good news is that over 90 per cent of those that applied did receive letters of support for their positions, so we are meeting many of the needs.

There are some challenges around trying to make sure that we can create the spaces and make sure that they're available when we need them in the locations that we need them. What we found last year was that 70 per cent of the turnaways were people that applied in one location or for one program. It shows me that those are fairly specific turnaways.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question to the same minister: does the increase in student applications mean that the government of Alberta will commit even more funding to capital infrastructure spending for postsecondary institutions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. As we travel, we do see that there is some need for capital, but we have invested $3 billion over the last 10 years in capital. Over the last few years we've created 14,000 new spaces.

Mr. Speaker, capital isn't the only answer. With online access through eCampus Alberta 20,000 people were able to register for programs. So we're looking at all sorts of alternatives to ensure that Albertans can access the training and skills that they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Financial Security for Land Disturbances

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1999 the Auditor General found the Ministry of Environment's approach to obtaining financial security for land disturbances was both inconsistent and inadequate. In 2001, '05, '09, and 2011 it was again recommended by the AG that the department deal with the risk of inadequate security being collected to cover the cost of reclamation. To the Minister of Environment: what justification does the minister have for ignoring the Auditor General's recommendation since 1999, especially since the risk is passed on to the taxpayer?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, far be it for me to question the observation skills of this hon. member, but it seems to me that we just had a discussion about a month ago about the new mine security program that the government has announced and implemented, that does exactly what this member refers to: address the issues raised by the Auditor General.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister: how can the minister suggest that this government is doing everything possible to protect Albertans from a massive liability as a result of development when the Auditor General has said the opposite for 12 years?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the mine financial security program, that we announced some time ago, was discussed in conjunction with the Auditor General. It was discussed in conjunction with industry. Frankly, I think that it does address the issue of protection for taxpayers. That's what it's all about.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister. Given that two things are important here, that reclamation takes place and that the taxpayers don't have to foot the bill, when will this recommendation be fulfilled by the ministry in order to make those two things a reality: protect the environment and Albertans from lengthy and expensive reclamation costs?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that my response to the first two questions very clearly indicates what my response is to the third question. We have addressed the issue, and I look forward to next year's Auditor General's report, where I anticipate that he will recognize it as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Provincial Labour Supply

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've been hearing about labour shortages and calls from employers asking for help. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: do you have a plan to address this expected shortage?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've had our eye on the ball for a few years already. Not only are we adopting our provincial strategies, but we're actually sounding alarm bells on a national scale. Indeed, we will be facing severe labour shortages in this country and this province. We're obviously focusing on Albertans and Canadians first, making sure that they have first dibs on jobs available, but at the end of the day we are also encouraging immigration policies that are conducive to this problem. I'm glad to report that last year we attracted 32,000 newcomers to this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister please explain how new immigrants coming here have the skills that we need? Are they trained and ready to work?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, it is imperative that our immigration policies reflect the needs of our country and of our province and that the streams open up for immigrants who do have the skills, but we're also working very hard on a provincial level with foreign credential recognition. We have allocated budgets to it. We're working with self-governing colleges and employers to make sure that credentials from foreign countries are recognized and with our minister of advanced education to make sure that programs are available for immigrants to upgrade their skills to our Canadian and provincial standards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With the United States suffering from high unemployment, can our labour shortages provide opportunities for our southern neighbors?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, often when we think about foreign workers, we tend to drift away across oceans. I strongly suggest to Alberta employers to give our neighbors to the south first opportunity at any jobs in Alberta. These workers from the United States are not only our partners, our friends, and our allies, but they also have similar occupational health and safety employment standards. There are no language barriers. At the end of the day that's what neighbours do for neighbours. If we have a surplus of jobs – and they obviously have an economy that will take a long time to recover – we should welcome them with open arms.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are currently 100,000 inactive wells in Alberta, and Environment certifies a mere 1,400 a year as reclaimed. Worse yet, though, 85 per cent of those certificates are issued by data entry clerks, who merely rubber-stamp a one-page form filled out by industry. Will the Minister of Environment admit that at this rate even this pathetic rubber stamp process will take a hundred years and that he is completely failing to protect Albertans by simply taking industry's word that their wells pose no public health and safety risk?

Mr. Renner: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the rate at which wells are reclaimed is directly associated with the productivity of those wells. I should point out to this member that with the advent of new technologies such as enhanced oil recovery and the abundance of CO<sub>2</sub> through carbon capture and storage it would be ill advised to abandon many of these wells because we fully anticipate that they will be re-energized one more time.

Ms Notley: Well, given that Environment audits only 5 per cent of the rubber-stamped reclamation certificates for actual contamination and given that of the sites that were audited, only 74 per cent of those certificates are being upheld, meaning that 26 per cent are inconclusive at best and, at worst, failing, why won't the minister admit that his rubber-stamp reclamation process is a sham intended to protect interests of industry rather than the health and land rights of Albertans?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the process for dealing with the appropriate abandonment of a well relies upon the expertise of recognized professionals in the field. It's very similar to tax auditors recognizing that financial statements filed on behalf of a client by a chartered accountant are done so by an appropriate professional. We then conduct audits at various times, and we hold those professionals accountable for the work that they present to us.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister doesn't quite seem to understand what I'm talking about but, moreover, given that the results of even these measly audits conducted between 2003 and 2009 sat on a desk unexamined for over six years, why won't the minister admit that this inconclusive, unfinished, and eight-years-late process is further evidence that his government simply doesn't care about the health, environment, and land rights of Albertans?

Mr. Renner: Because it's not true, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

2:20 Natural Gas Vehicles for the Government Fleet

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1989 the Alberta government partnered with the federal government to encourage the use of natural gas cars, trucks, and buses in Alberta. By 2005 only .2 per cent of vehicles in Alberta were powered by natural gas. To the Minister of Service Alberta: with numerous environmental benefits does the minister agree that it is time for the government of Alberta to show leadership and commit to converting half of the government fleet to run on natural gas within five years?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that in Alberta some individuals choose to power their vehicles by natural gas, and that's certainly up to each individual. There are also many other choices out there, whether it's the hybrid vehicle or whether it's the fuel-efficient vehicles. I think it's up to Albertans to choose those vehicles, make the best choice for their circumstances.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are talking about the government fleet.

Given that the government documents say that utilizing natural gas as a vehicle fuel can generate significant operating cost savings on a per-vehicle basis and at an aggregate level, can the minister tell us why in times of fiscal restraint the government is not exploring this money-saving option?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again with respect to the price of natural gas, we know the price of natural gas is at an all-time low right now. We know that in the future it's probably going to start to go up again. At the same time, with the other options that are available in the fleet with respect to the hybrids and the fuel-efficient vehicles, that's a direction the government is moving into as well as no longer having leased vehicles but all purchased vehicles.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the leadership in adopting natural gas vehicles in the state of Utah and by corporate leaders such as EnCana, will the minister commit to lowering the province's impact on the environment and our deficit by implementing a natural gas vehicle fleet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, with respect to the natural gas we know that there's quite a cost with respect to converting the vehicles to natural gas. That's something we'd have to take into account if we ever go in that direction. At the end of the day I think the hybrid vehicles, the fuel-efficient vehicles, and all those areas that we have are the best direction at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Highway 21 Noise Levels

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 21 has recently been twinned, and my constituents are very pleased with this newly completed project. But noise coming from vehicles on the stretch from Wye Road to highway 16 is a concern to many Strathcona constituents. My first question to the Minister of Transportation: are noise measurements currently being taken to ensure that the level of noise from highway 21 is satisfactory for those living nearby?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to start out by saying to this hon. member that we invested $115 million to twin this highway, and it's of great benefit to all motorists, including those in this hon. member's riding. We regularly do sound testing on urban highways, on our ring roads, and we're going to be doing it on that section. We did it once when it was opened. My department will undertake a noise monitoring study later this summer. If the noise levels are above the provincial guidelines of an average of 65 decibels over a 24-hour . . .

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. member will be recognized.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that there is also a concern that the speed limit on highway 21 from highway 628 to Wye Road, the south stretch, is too low, does the minister feel that the speed limit for this busy stretch of highway is appropriate?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the speed limit on this highway is set at 80 kilometres per hour right now. That is for safety reasons. It's a very appropriate speed given the number of signals along this highway. Traffic needs to be able to stop safely at these lights, and we know that high speeds and lights don't mix.

Mr. Quest: My second supplemental is to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. You can hear the Harleys taking off from the lights there all summer. What measures are in place to limit the use of aftermarket pipes that are common on motorcycles, which cause plenty of noise along this stretch of highway?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will know either through municipal bylaw or in large part through the Traffic Safety Act that infractions on our highways are defined, and it's up to my department, through police or peace officers, to enforce those infractions. We do that whether it's speeding or improper use of seat belts or loud mufflers or whatever the offence may be. We do that with respect to safety first. But we're always open to consultations with concerned citizens or municipalities to set priorities.

Lower Athabasca Regional Plan

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the minister of sustainable resources is an expert on unintended consequences. This is the man who oversaw the original new royalty framework, which cost Albertans thousands of jobs and shattered investor confidence. Yesterday this same minister, when asked how much his proposed lower Athabasca regional plan will cost taxpayers and industry, said, "There is no way that anybody on God's green Earth could tell you what [the plan] might cost." To the minister: do you really not have any clue what your proposed plan will cost taxpayers or industry?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, yes, I do. But I can tell you that there are some members in this House that don't have any clue. Nevertheless, with respect to what we're doing with land-use planning, I will inform the member opposite that there are probably somewhere around 2,000 companies that operate in the energy industry, just the energy industry, in Alberta. We've had conversations with about 20 of them relative to this particular issue. As a matter of fact, yesterday stakeholders, I think 24 of them, came to talk about it. We're doing a pretty good job of that.

Mr. Anderson: Minister, given that your proposed plan extinguishes a portion of leases belonging to Sunshine Oilsands equating to conservatively 76 billion dollars' worth of recoverable bitumen and given that would equate conservatively to roughly $7.6 billion in lost profits for this company, who is going to pay for these broken leases, the taxpayer or the company? Or, if both, how will it be split up? Any idea at all? Just a ballpark.

Mr. Knight: What we have here, Mr. Speaker, is an individual who absolutely does not understand what the heck he is talking about. What we've got here are seven wells – you can count them anyway you like – that somebody has gone and drilled in the ground in a piece of real estate about five times the size of the city of Calgary and extrapolated some numbers about what might be under the ground. There is no way that you're going to tell how much bitumen could or not be in that area without a lot more work being done.

Mr. Anderson: I thought he was the guy who said that he had no clue.

Given that in 1985 the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that the B.C. government had to compensate mineral leaseholders for the full value of their resources when it expropriated their land to create a provincial park, is the minister planning to respect the court's decision on this matter that's burdening taxpayers for billions, or will it override that decision, simply steal these companies' licences, pay them a fraction of their worth, and hang a big fat banana republic of Alberta sign out in front of the international investment community?

Mr. Liepert: I would like to put some perspective around these kinds of questions, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to table a document. It's actually a document that was issued by the Wildrose Party right after the draft plan was released. They did some calculations, and they came up with something that said that 3.4 trillion dollars' worth of recoverable oil resources are locked in the ground. Now, we haven't heard about those numbers since that very first release, so I'm going to make sure we table this to show you how absurd these guys are in their calculations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Relief for Emergency Wait Times

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Grey Nuns community hospital is a wonderful health facility in my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods. It provides a full range of services, including a 24-hour emergency department. It is world renowned for its delivery of care and teaching practices and is home base for a regional palliative program. My questions are for the Minister of Health and Wellness. What does your ministry have in place to ensure that wait times for those seeking emergency room care improves?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things that are happening specific to the Grey Nuns. I can tell you that whereas last October people waiting for discharge might have been waiting up to 20 hours, that number was reduced down to about six or seven hours. That's a huge improvement there. Similarly, with respect to the admitted patients, those people who were waiting for an overnight bed, that number was also cut in half.

They went from about 15 hours of wait time down to about seven. So there are some immediate good news issues there for Grey Nuns. Thank you for raising a real health care question.

Mr. Benito: To the same minister. Mr. Speaker, I want the minister to answer this coming from his heart. Are these emergency department improvements just a quick fix, or are they real and sustainable moving forward?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, they are definitely real, and they are very sustainable because we've taken great effort to put in place the proper physical infrastructure, the proper human and staff infrastructure as well as the equipment and all other kinds of other things to help improve the emergency room flow through: patient navigators, home-care co-ordinators. We've added more money for continuing care beds. In fact, we've opened well over 1,200 beds now, and several of them are impacting the residents and patients that the hon. member is asking about.

Mr. Benito: To the same minister: are all these new continuing care beds really having a positive impact, or are they just statistics?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, they're a lot more than statistics because I can tell you that the improvements are significant. As soon as you take people out of acute-care beds and have them live in continuing care beds in the community, you are freeing up valuable hospital beds for those people who truly need acute-care services. In fact, for the people in that category the numbers were reduced from about 760 down to about 560 in the last six months alone. Tremendous improvements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

High School Completion

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The high school completion rate for youth in Alberta is 72 per cent, among the worst in the country. About 9,000 students drop out of high school in Alberta each year. To the Minister of Education. Calgary United Way's new study on vulnerable youth recommends raising the age cap for publicly funded high school from 19 to 24. Can the minister explain why the opportunity for a high school education has been cut off at 19?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's one of the topics that's been under discussion as we go through the Inspiring Education process. There's been a considerable amount of discussion about what the appropriate age would be. As we bring forward a new education act, I think people will see – and we'll bring it forward for discussion – that we're talking about moving the age limit up because we do want to give young Albertans every opportunity and every inspiration to finish their high school education.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By the time that act is enacted, we'll have had about 18,000 more dropouts.

The Speaker: Just get to the question, please.

Mr. Chase: The study recommends raising the minimum age for dropping out of school from 16 to 17. Can the minister tell us what employment opportunities there are for 16- or 17-year-old dropouts?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, no, I can't tell the hon. member what employment opportunities there are for high school dropouts. What I can tell you is that I got into a bit of trouble in the media a year or two ago when I was in Calgary speaking to the Chamber of Commerce and I suggested that employers probably shouldn't hire high school dropouts. Now, what I really was saying to them is that we need to work co-operatively to find ways to encourage our high school students to complete high school and to move on to postsecondary of some form. That's a role that everybody in society has an interest in, including our employers. In our high school system and our education system we need to have a system which encourages every child to complete school.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Increasing class sizes surely isn't the way to go.

The Speaker: Let's get to the question.

Mr. Chase: Given that many of our dropouts will move into a cycle of poverty and that the situation of these disadvantaged youth in our big cities is particularly troubling, will the minister review the United Way report and respond publicly to its recommendations?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we take input from all sorts of places. I've been very happy to receive the United Way report and to look at the things that they've been talking about. This is exactly the type of thing we need to have: community organizations, people in the community, business, everybody working together to understand that education is foundational to the future of this province. All of us have a stake in ensuring that each and every one of our children has the opportunity to maximize their potential, to be the best that they can be so that they can participate in the economy and they can contribute as full citizens to our community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Financial Literacy

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few months ago the national Task Force on Financial Literacy released its final report. While our provincial financial situation is in good shape as a result of sound financial planning, household debt in Alberta is a growing concern. Does the minister of finance have any plans on how his department might assist in stemming this growing crisis of household debt?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting because it's not simply a black-and-white answer. Household debt is probably best handled if you have a job, and Alberta has done a very good job of having jobs for people. We have to talk about whether it's planned or unplanned debt. We also have to know: are people using equity in their homes to start up a small business, or are they buying a vehicle they need for work? If it's a credit card debt and others like that, then we need to have people actually learn the financial literacy that we've talked about. We are working with the federal government on some of the programs. There's no question that people need to be aware of the cost to them of debt.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you. My second question is to the Minister of Education. Given that the learning of financial literacy must begin at a very young age, what is the minister doing to make the teaching of financial education a priority in the elementary school system?

Mr. Hancock: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is one of the few jurisdictions where we actually do address financial outcomes within our programs of study. Financial outcomes and financial management are part of the social studies curriculum, they're part of the math curriculum, they're part of the CTS courses, and, of course, they're a major portion of career and life management studies, which is precisely a course that every student needs to have to graduate from high school. It's about career and life management, which includes financial literacy issues.

Now, is there more that can be done? Absolutely. As we review our curriculums, as we do more work in that area, financial literacy will be one of the areas that we want to address.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. Is there any way your department can limit the alluring marketing of credit cards and other debt instruments to young people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's so important for young people to understand the costs of borrowing money and how to manage their finances. To this end Service Alberta provides tips to young people through social media and on our website. As well, the not-for-profit group Money Mentors also teaches Albertans how to make smart financial decisions. Recently they had an excellent session at NorQuest College just on this topic.

High-speed Rail Station

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, ad hoc spending, secret lists of projects, buying two different sites for the same purpose, not doing financial or engineering or technical studies before announcing projects: sadly, that's what we've come to expect from this government. To the President of the Treasury Board. Last Thursday the Minister of Transportation informed this House that having now bought a second downtown site for a high-speed rail station in Edmonton, they would study whether or not it is viable. Is it standard procedure for this government to buy things first and then see if they're viable after the fact?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, I guess that maybe growing up in business, you take for granted sometimes that common sense would work. You've got to have choices, and you need options. We are working with all the stakeholders for the cities, with people who may be interested in high-speed rail: how it can connect to a vibrant new downtown development, how it can get through the city, in and out of the city. It's about putting options on the table, Mr. Speaker, so that you can make good choices.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that common sense would say that a capital plan can only reasonably be called a capital plan if one is to follow it, let me ask: was Treasury Board advised of the project and the required amendments to the capital plan to relocate and secure land for the Edmonton high-speed rail terminal before it was announced?

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes.

Dr. Taft: Then the President of the Treasury Board should be able to answer this question. How much money has Treasury Board approved to acquire land for high-speed rail in Edmonton and throughout other parts of Alberta?

Mr. Snelgrove: He would want to direct that to the Minister of Transportation. He asked if we were apprised of the intent to join the high-speed rail with the museum downtown, and the answer was yes.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the Oral Question Period for today. Nineteen members were recognized. There were 114 questions and responses.

In two seconds from now we will continue with the Routine. In the interim might we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to recognize that we've been joined in the gallery by some constituents from Peace River. Charlie Bouchard, his wife, Andrea, son Joel, and daughter Jillian have joined us to I suspect come and see the estimates of the Department of Education. Charlie is an educator. In fact, he was involved with my own children in Peace River. I welcome them. I hope they had safe travels and enjoy their visit to the Legislature. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Alberta Land Stewardship Legislation

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, includes changes to respond to concerns Albertans have raised with us to ensure that landowner rights are protected. First, the definition of a statutory consent specifically excludes land titles or freehold mineral rights. New provisions in Bill 10 strengthen respect for the rights of a statutory consent holder. If a consent is amended as the result of a regional plan, we must notify and advise of any rights to compensation and how compensation is determined.

Bill 10 also specifically states that nothing in the act should be interpreted as limiting existing rights to compensation under any other Alberta law, and that also applies to landowners. Landowners would of course still have the right to access the Land Compensation Board or bring their case to court if the amount of compensation was in dispute.

Here's what two prominent southern Alberta lawyers, Mr. Stan Church and Mr. Dan Smith, had to say, and I quote: the Alberta Land Stewardship Act plus the Bill 10 amendments put Alberta ahead of any other province or U.S. state when it comes to protecting landowners' property rights. Unquote.

The amended act makes public consultation a requirement in drafting a regional plan. A draft regional plan must be laid before the Legislative Assembly before going to cabinet for approval. Also, any title holder who feels unduly affected by a regional plan may apply to the minister for a variance. A regional plan cannot amend or rescind municipal development permits and approvals if work is finished or under way, and we will give municipalities ample time to align their development plans with a regional plan.

Regional planning is about balancing economic growth with environmental sustainability and responsibility. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the amendments in Bill 10 will protect landowners and will enable our province to continue to plan in a responsible and co-ordinated way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, back in the 1990s this government panicked when it was faced with an economic downturn. Instead of investing in the future, they slashed the public service, eliminated thousands of jobs, took away opportunities for postsecondary learning, and drove nurses and teachers out of the province, many of whom have never returned. Alberta is still suffering from this Tory short-sightedness, particularly in our hospitals and clinics, where health professionals remain in short supply. But why learn from the mistakes of the past when you can repeat them?

Funding shortfalls in education have left Alberta school boards scrambling to make ends meet. The Calgary board of education alone may be forced to cut 500 teachers and support staff, leaving our kids in the lurch. To make matters worse, it looks like there might be another oil and gas boom right around the corner, meaning that government is going to have to hire teachers back at a premium, just like they're trying to do now with the nurses. Meanwhile, Alberta students will pay the price, particularly those with special needs, possibly for years to come as school boards struggle to work around the chaos created by a provincial government. But, then, most Tories have never been keen on helping the most vulnerable Albertans, have they?

Mr. Speaker, had this government followed the advice of the Official Opposition – we'd cut wasteful spending in order to support core people programs – this whole fiasco could have been avoided. Once again this government has proven that it values slick ad campaigns, horse racing, private golf courses, and generous handouts to Tory elites more than the vital job of making sure that our kids get a good education. It's sad, it's wrong, and it just doesn't make any sense at all.

To that end, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Education to sit down with the minister of Treasury, end this insanity, and properly fund our education system. It's the right decision for today. It's the right decision for tomorrow. Let's invest in our greatest resource, our children.

The Speaker: Okay?

Mr. Hehr: That's it.

The Speaker: Okay.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of my responses to questions raised by the Member for Edmonton-Centre during Culture and Community Spirit's main estimates on March 23, 2011.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition and a letter received in my office regarding multiple sclerosis. The petition states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to expedite the approval of the Liberation Treatment (angioplasty) developed by Dr. Paolo Zamboni so that all patients including those with MS, suffering from chronic cerebro-spinal venous insufficiency (CCSVI) can receive the treatment.

The letter also reflects this opinion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I pointed out, I have four tablings today. The first comes from the following individuals who are concerned about the clear-cutting of the Castle-Crown: Johannes Klein, Adrienne Hodges, Monica Jackson, Suann Hosie, Paul Davis, Jordan Lewans, Bill Sorochan, Cathleen Hjalmarsen, Morna Halparin, Kendall White, Ellen Glover, Colin Bray, Ian Bellinger, Avalon Crossby, Lois Banks, Karen King, Peter Barker, Cara Reeve-Newson, John Gibson, Antonia Chianis, Michael Varichak, Christine Pylypowycz, Melodie Paulsen, Carl Veaux, and Gloria Morotti.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition I'm also tabling legal action documents from Dr. Michel Sauvé and the Northern Lights health region due to intimidation.

Mr. Speaker, my second tabling on behalf of the hon. Leader of the Opposition is correspondence received from Dr. I. Chohan with Capital health region regarding intimidation.

My next set of information comes from an article written this past Friday by Don Braid in the Calgary Herald entitled Alberta Health Has Growing Track Record of Ignoring Auditor General.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the Wildrose news release which stated that the lower Athabasca regional plan would cost upwards of 3 and a half trillion dollars.

I'd also like to table a copy of a blog by a Calgary Herald business columnist, Dan Healing, which calculated how they came up with the $3.4 trillion. It's by taking 170 billion barrels of oil, dividing it by 20 per cent, and multiplying it by a hundred dollars a barrel. That's how they got $3.4 trillion. I think it should be put on the record.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair is tabling five copies of a March 24, 2011, letter from Mr. Ken Hughes, chair of the Alberta Health Services Board, to the Speaker expressing concern about comments made by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition in the Assembly about Alberta Health Services' staff members. Mr. Hughes subsequently asked that his letter be tabled.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the Clerk. On behalf of Dr. Sherman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, an Association of American Physicians and Surgeons website article dated March 24, 2011, entitled Sham Peer Review: A National Epidemic.

On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Klimchuk, Minister of Service Alberta, a letter dated March 30, 2011, from the hon. Mrs. Klimchuk, Minister of Service Alberta, to Mr. McFarland, chair, Standing Committee on Health, replying to the review of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, dated November 2010.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Knight, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, response to Written Question 11, requested by Ms Blakeman on March 21, 2011.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness on a point of order application.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. I rise under 23(h) and (i). I believe the Leader of the Opposition during a question earlier this afternoon imputed some false motives. Some false allegations were uttered by him as well. The substance of it was that I believe he said – and, I'm sorry, I don't have the Blues in front of me – that I as minister of health had contradicted the Premier yesterday. That, in fact, is not the case. I would hope you would find a point of order in that respect. I'll leave that up to your judgment.

However, what I would like to do is comment on some of the exchanges that did occur yesterday wherein the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, in particular, tried to make it sound as if I was somehow disagreeing with the Premier, which I was not. For example, in one of his questions the Member for Edmonton-Riverview asked me, "Is the minister of health confirming, then, that he does not support the Premier's invitation," and it goes on. Of course, I never indicated anything to that effect at all. What I did say in response to his final question in that series – "Is he actually disagreeing with his own Premier?" – was, "Not at all, Mr. Speaker." Then I explained what it was that I was trying to do to clear up some of his own misunderstandings.

Earlier in question period with respect to a question from the Leader of the Opposition about disclosure agreements here's what the Premier said:

Those disclosure documents can only be opened by the co-operation between the two parties that entered into the disclosure document, which would be the employer and the employee.

In fact, later in the same question period I said:

Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that any nondisclosure agreement that's signed is between two parties, and if they both agree, then so be it. I can't comment on exactly what they may or may not want to do. The Premier made a clear statement as to what they might want to do, and that'll be up to them to decide.

Then the Premier went on to answer another question, and he answered it with some questions, in fact. If you read Hansard carefully, you'll probably see that. This was in response to a question from the Leader of the Opposition, in which case the Premier stated:

Mr. Speaker, it's a very simple matter. The doctor can approach the Health Quality Council and say: look; I'm willing to open up the disclosure document if my former employer agrees. Why doesn't he ask Alberta Health Services? What if . . .

And the key words here are "what if."

. . . Alberta Health Services says, "Yeah, let's open up the document and then have all Albertans see what's inside?"

The key thing there is "what if."

Now, there are other issues here where I was perfectly aligned with the Premier, so I would hope that the Speaker would please ask the hon. Leader of the Opposition to note that I did not disagree with the Premier in spite of the allegations in the questions posed by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, which the Leader of the Opposition was quick to try and pick up on today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, just a second. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness rose on a point of order. I've read the text. I've seen enough to already suggest that this is not a point of order. If you want to argue that, you go ahead and argue it, but that's the conclusion I will reach.

Ms Blakeman: No. Thank you. I will take your wise decision on this one. It's getting near the end. We're almost at a constituency break, and, boy, can you tell. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I've read the text in here. The Leader of the Official Opposition did begin a question with, "Yesterday the Premier said," and then he went on to basically say that moments later the health minister contradicted the Premier. We've heard the health minister provide clarification with respect to this. I view this not as a point of order; it's a point of clarification. We also have Beauchesne's 494. The House will have to sometimes accept two versions as the same thing.

We've now dealt with this matter.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2011-12

Education

The Chair: Before I recognize the hon. Minister of Education, I would like to run through the process here. The minister will have 10 minutes maximum, and then an hour following that would be for the Official Opposition and the minister. Then the next 20 minutes is for the third party, the next 20 minutes after that is for the fourth party, and then we have 20 minutes after that for members of other parties or independent members. From there on it will be for any other member. The speaking time is 10 minutes for each, for a total of 20 minutes. You can combine it with the minister as you like.

Hon. minister, you have the floor for 10 minutes.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a privilege to be in front of the Committee of Supply to defend the estimates for the Department of Education for the 2011-12 year. I'd like to start by introducing and acknowledging the staff that are with me: first of all, Deputy Minister Keray Henke; our assistant deputy minister of strategic services, Michael Walter; director of finance, Gene Williams; and director of budget and fiscal analysis, George Lee. I want to start by saying thank you to these staff members and, through them, to all of the people who work in the Department of Education.

Over the course of the three years now that I've had the opportunity and privilege to work, I can tell you that we have dedicated professionals who are committed to the children of this province and who are committed to making sure, particularly with respect to the people who are with me today, that the financial resources that are allocated to the Department of Education are used efficiently, effectively, and in the interests of ensuring that each and every child in this province has the opportunity to get the best education possible to maximize their personal potential and to be able to grow up to be good citizens and to contribute back to their community. These people are very definitely contributing back to their community in a most substantial way, so I wanted to start by saying thank you.

The financial side is never easy. It wasn't easy this year. It's not been an easy time, and I have with me people who have worked very, very long and hard to put together this budget but also to work with our stakeholders and people in the system, right throughout the system, to make sure that with the resources we have, we can make the most effective use so that every child can get a good education.

Mr. Chairman, our business is driven by our three-year business plan, focused on the goals, priority initiatives, and measures of the ministry. Goal 1 is success for every student, goal 2 is transformed education through collaboration, and goal 3 is success for First Nation, Métis, and Inuit students. Anyone interested in more information on the business plan I would encourage to go to the department's website, where you can see the business plan, which is very streamlined this year in accordance with the process that has been used across government, but also our Action On agenda, which is a companion action document that works with the business plan to show where we're going as a department and where we see the system going as part of our Inspiring Education process and as part of the results that we've achieved in terms of the consultations and the direction that we're setting.

We're here today to debate the estimates for Education and the commitments made to sustainable funding for education programs and services that our children and students need and which we need to maintain our quality of life. Our decisions were all made within the context of addressing fiscal challenges and responsible decisions for the future that in the long term contribute to the rich quality of life that we enjoy in Alberta. We've never shied away from the fact that this budget does pose challenges for education. Our number one priority is to remain focused on our efforts at ensuring that we're truly enhancing student success through supports in the classroom, curriculum development, special programs, and capital planning. We will continue to rely on local school board leadership to make the best decisions for students and communities.

Decisions need to be based not on our old ways, not on continuing what we've always done but on what our research tells us is best for our children. Education is an investment, but like with all investments we only have finite dollars. I'm determined to put those dollars where research says it will have the greatest return for our students.

For the fiscal year 2011-12 Education's total support for the ECS to 12 education system reaches nearly $6.4 billion under Budget 2011, an increase of $258 million in operational support to boards, or 4.4 per cent. The $258 million increase will fulfill the government's commitment by funding teachers' salary increases and associated pension increases, finish off the commitments made in the 2010-11 school year, and address expected student enrolment increases and other changes to student demographics.

There are six programs that will be referenced in this year's budget. Our voted estimates begin on page 102 of the estimates book. We had two primary funding streams that are important to note: the voted government and lottery fund estimates, totalling about $4.2 billion, or about 68 per cent of the ministry budget, which we'll be voting on later in the session, and education property taxes, which total about $1.8 billion. About $1.6 billion of this amount resides in the Alberta school foundation fund, which is governed by statute, and the remaining $202 million goes to local separate school boards that choose to collect their education property taxes directly from their municipalities. In addition, $44.6 million is allocated to statutory expense for the work in progress with the Alberta schools alternative procurement, or ASAP schools, and $299 million is the statutory expense for government contributions made to the teachers' pension plan.

The breakdown of the ministry's six programs begins on page 102. The first program in our budget, ministry support services, represents the corporate functions of the department.

The second program is the operating support for public and separate schools. The voted portion of this program increases to $3.59 billion. When the nonvoted amount from education property tax and the statutory obligation for teachers' pensions are included, operating support to public and separate schools increases by $258 million to $5.7 billion. This increase will provide support to school boards to complete the 2010-11 school year, provide the necessary supports for the '11-12 school year to address expected student enrolment increases and other changes to student demographics and programming.

On budget day we announced that the student-based instruction grant will increase by 4.4 per cent, as would the rate for a revised class size grant for the 2011-12 year. This increase reflected the preliminary average weekly earnings index, as it was known at that time, and the index's basis for teachers' salary increases to be effective September 1, 2011. Since then, Statistics Canada has confirmed that the official Alberta average weekly earnings index is 4.54 per cent.

In the process of making that confirmation, they've actually again changed the way they calculate the numbers slightly. In any event, I believe that the 4.54 per cent is the agreed-upon number. We have informed school boards that the rate on these two grants will be adjusted accordingly. This government is honouring its commitment to the teachers as per the five-year agreement between the government of Alberta and the Alberta Teachers' Association.

The government has not only sustained but grown its investment on the class size initiative over the past three years. To date the government has invested nearly $1.4 billion since this initiative began in 2004. In Budget 2011 funding for the class size initiative continues with an investment of $228 million. While funding for the class size initiative continues to grow in this budget, effective September 1, 2011, class size funding for grades 4 to 6 will be eliminated. We are addressing student needs by adjusting the class size initiative funding to a per-pupil grant for kindergarten to grade 3, recognizing that small class sizes are most beneficial to students in their early years.

Mr. Chairman, we're not reducing the class size initiative funding at all. In fact, it's increasing slightly, but we are reprofiling it because the research would show that class size, while it's important in many areas, does not affect student outcome in the higher grades, but it could have an impact on K to 3, and that's the area where we're not meeting the class size guidelines yet in the province. We've reprofiled the class size initiative funding albeit school boards can still use their funding however they want when they get it. We've profiled it to fund class size and class size growth at the K to 3 level as well as tiering the grants as we did last year to CTS funding in high schools, where smaller class sizes are necessary, particularly if there's a safety issue. This was particularly important as we expect the number of kindergarten to grade 3 students to increase significantly over the next five years.

While considering class size average guidelines, we need to recognize that there is no one-size-fits-all solution. Class composition, grade level, and teacher experience should be considered by school administrators in setting class size. The revised class size formula continues to allocate enhanced funding levels for specific career and technology studies, as I mentioned.

The budget also provides funding to school boards for the first seven months of the 2011-12 year, a projected provincial student enrolment growth of approximately 6,100 students, or 1.1 per cent, and supports any changes to student demographics in areas such as English as a second language, FNMI, and mild and moderate student populations.

Transportation funding increases by $1 million, totalling $260 million for the 2011-12 year, which will be targeted to address the challenges of transporting students in sparsely populated rural areas.

We're increasing funding to support students with severe disabilities by $12 million, or 4.4 per cent, in this fiscal year. School jurisdictions will receive the same level of funding to support the severe disability profiles this year as they did last. The additional allocation will be used to build an inclusive education system to help ensure success for all students. At a later date we will provide additional detail about the leadership and guidance that will be available to support school authorities in their work on building an inclusive education system and an allocation of the $12 million.

I stated earlier that this is not an easy budget and that hard decisions had to be made. Two grants, the relative cost of purchasing goods and services adjustment and the stabilization grant, are being phased out. Both grants will be reduced by 50 per cent starting September 1 and then eliminated beginning September 1, 2012.

For our CPA . . . [A timer sounded] Is that . . .

The Chair: Yes, that's the beep for 10 minutes, hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: I was just getting into the bad news part.

The Chair: Okay. For the next hour, three 20-minute chunks, I would like to ask if the hon. member wants to combine the 20 minutes.

Mr. Hehr: I think it'd be best, if it's okay with the hon. minister, if we combine our time and try to answer my questions sort of as they come up and help me with my understanding of the Education budget. I think that would be best. Does that sound reasonable?

The Chair: All right. I see agreement on the 20-minute combination of questions and answers.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for the Official Opposition, please.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you very much, hon. minister and your staff, for coming here to present the budget. In my brief time on the job as Education critic, I can see that you guys are very busy and very active, and I've been extremely impressed with the operations of the minister as he goes out and faces the public with some bad news. It's nice to see that the minister goes and actually takes the questions from the public, doesn't run from it. It is somewhat refreshing to see that happening.

I will also say that I had the pleasure of being at a workshop this weekend where the minister's staff, Mr. Williams, presented in an open and transparent fashion as to what is happening in the Education budget this year. Again I can say that I was nothing but impressed with the way the information was presented and the way that it was not sugar-coated. It was in plain English, and people were given the good, the bad, and the ugly of this year's budget.

With that being the case, we can now get into some of the merits of what is happening. As the minister said, this is a difficult budget. I think he has admitted as much. We see today in the paper that the Calgary school board could be laying off approximately 500 teachers and staff. I don't know what the ratio is. Needless to say, there are reports in other communities that other cuts and layoffs will happen, no doubt because of what looks like a bit of a budget shortfall.

If I look at the numbers, there is a top line increase of, I think you said, 4.7 per cent to the overall operating budget but decreased funding to various grant programs. You're covering, obviously, the teachers' salary increases, but in order to do that, in order to keep the system whole, which I think is the term that Mr. Williams used on the weekend, I guess my question is: how much more money would it have been to this budget to keep the system whole? I believe that was the term that we used on the weekend.

Mr. Hancock: The number, Mr. Chairman, is approximately $107 million. With respect to the grants that were sacrificed in terms of stabilization, the relative cost of purchasing the extra growth or decline, the enhanced ESL, and then 50 per cent of AISI, that adds up to approximately $107 million.

Mr. Hehr: So $107 million. If this $107 million had been provided, do you think you would have seen the wailing and the gnashing of the teeth you see out there? Would the CBE still be running a deficit, in your view? Would other jurisdictions be cutting? Or is it because of this $107 million shortfall, ceiling, to use a term, that we're seeing some of this out there, in your view, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Hancock: Well, to put it into context, seeing as the hon. member has raised the Calgary board of education, in rough numbers or earlier numbers in the Calgary board of education's budget last year operational funding was in the tune of $882 million. They would receive a base instructional increase of about $26.3 million, based on 4.4 per cent. Now that it's up to 4.54 per cent, it will be slightly higher than that. The 4.4 per cent increase on class size would be $1.6 million, so they'd get a total grant increase under that of $27.9 million. So if you rounded it up a little bit, what it would be, now, is about $28 million, $29 million. That's what they would have achieved without any of the other reductions.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. So it would have been an extra . . .

Mr. Hancock: Twenty-eight million.

Mr. Hehr: Okay.

Mr. Hancock: They're saying that their deficit is $61.7 million, so you can do the math as to how much more they would have needed even if none of those budget reductions had happened.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah, it had to be if it was as best we could, as planned, as it looked like from their perspective what things were going to be. Okay. That's fair enough. That's fine.

You know, we look sort of at the way budgets have been presented. When I first saw the budget, I saw the increase of 4.7 per cent. It's just a matter of perspective, I guess, on how you present these budgets. When you guys announce the budget, why can't the minister's department provide financial information of the budget document that represents the impact of the provincial funding decision on actual school boards and school districts? Do you know what I'm saying? When it came out that first day, it appeared to me that it was just a 4.7 increase. Then you had to sort of go through it more and ferret through. Is there an easier or better way of reporting that information right on day 1 of the budget? Or was I just not looking in the correct places?

Mr. Hancock: No. It's actually quite difficult because we budget on an April 1 to March 31 year, and the school boards budget on a September 1 to August 31 year. So in the budget there are always a number of explanations which deal with how much of the budget was needed to complete last year; in other words, to sustain the grants at the level that they were raised to last year for the first seven months and then how much we need to budget for the increase to next year's funding in order to fund the five months of next year. So that's one piece of it.

The next piece of it is: how much money do we need to put into the budget to sustain the commitment to teachers' pensions? I'm not talking about the pre-1992 pension – that's taken care of in the Finance budget – but in terms of our commitment to paying the pension liability going forward. Then you have to look at the increase in teachers' salaries for this year. We've done a global. In the budget it was 4.4 per cent. We've moved it to 4.54 per cent. We do that on the operating grants. If 70 per cent of the budget goes to teachers' salaries, that's a little bit more than you'd need. All of that goes into the funding profile.

What we do on budget day – and I was very clear on budget day, when asked, that this was a difficult budget. That 4.7 per cent increase is great, and it looks wonderful, but it's a difficult budget. We briefed all the boards on budget day with respect to what was happening, what was going in and what was coming out, and then, that afternoon, provided each board individually with our projection of their numbers.

While I have a roll-up of all the board's numbers, we don't share each board's numbers with the other boards, but we do share with each board what their numbers are. Those numbers: subject to their doing some analysis and a little bit of juggling, they have an idea of the impact on their budget on day 1.

Mr. Hehr: Maybe I could come to that briefing next year before the budget. That would help me out. Anyway, I leave it at that.

If we could just talk about the Auditor General's 2006 report, it contained a recommendation that Alberta Education improve its budgeting process by providing school boards with critical information such as operating grants, increases in grant funding in a more timely fashion. In your view, have you guys been following this sensible recommendation to us? It doesn't look like it has been followed in the five years after it was issued.

Mr. Hancock: That's a difficult one in terms of being able to know exactly where you're at until the final numbers are done in the overall government budgeting process. It's no secret that this was a difficult budget to put together. There was a lot of advocacy that happened right up to the last minute because, you know, there are different priorities across government, and there's a balance to be achieved. We wouldn't have had the numbers until the final decisions were made in late January because even in January we were working on a tripartite process which could have had a considerable shift in how we used the numbers.

Last year and again this year we provided an opportunity for school boards to take a little bit more time with their budgets. Their budgets are normally due May 30. We've extended that time to June 30. There's no question that if we could find an appropriate process to peg a number earlier, it would be useful to school boards to be able to budget on that basis.

Even in the call for long-term, predictable, stable funding one of the downside risks there is that you peg yourself at a number that's too low. Over the last 10 years the Education budget has increased 63 per cent. The number of students has increased 3 per cent. I don't think anybody would suggest that if you pegged long-term, predictable, stable funding, it would be pegged at 6.3 per cent per year. It would likely be less than that.

There's balance on both sides, and there's certainly a value to having the early numbers so you can do planning. There's also a value to being able to advocate long and strong so you get the numbers that you need.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. I think that's fair enough. You know, I applaud, actually, the way we're going through a lot of issues here in health care, and that's fair enough. This government has done a wise thing, I think, in funding a five-year cycle on the health care front. Do you find that you'll be able to do that in Education? Are you moving towards that direction? Are you guys looking at that as a department, or can we do that in a system set up like we have in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: I'm certainly not adverse to looking at it, but it's a different situation. With health you have one board. I don't think anybody would advocate that we go to one board in Education because the local involvement and the local connection are so important.

The other piece, I think, is that in health you can take a demographic analysis of your population. The five-year funding agreement with health can take a clear look at growth, at inflation, the projected numbers for both, so it could be off, and then a small amount for system improvement and that sort of thing. You can actually pile that number, and that's where they got to the 6 per cent number for the first three years of that agreement and then, with the efficiencies that they expected to get from the single health authority, were able to project that you could ramp that back to 4 per cent in the last two years.

In Education we're dealing with 63 public boards, 13 charter boards, a number of separate school boards, and a different variety of input pieces, so it's a little bit more difficult to come to that stable funding formula. You could do it arbitrarily, but you'd likely miss the mark.

3:20

Mr. Hehr: There are two sources generally for Education revenue. One is obviously from the general revenue stream you guys bring into the coffers from income tax and the like, and the other is the property education portion of the property tax, correct? Those two sources. Now, if you looked at the Calgary situation, the $42 million that was collected from the property tax portion of the budget essentially went back to the cities this year.

Mr. Hancock: Not totally accurate.

Mr. Hehr: No? Okay. Well, then, if I can finish, whether it went back to the cities or whatever, it looked to me like it came from that education portion of the property tax, or some of it did, whereas that could have gone to funding of education. Essentially, for better or for worse, the CBE would be in a much better position if that had gone back. If you would explain to me how that decision was made and where I'm missing the mark and how I'm confusing things because I've had that question asked to me from time to time in Calgary.

Mr. Hancock: Property tax at a provincial level is a funny-looking beast, but what essentially we do on a provincial level is look to capture the real growth in assessment. In other words, there are more houses being built, there are more businesses being opened, and that expands the assessment roll. When we figure out the number and apply it to that assessment roll to drive out a mill rate on a provincial basis, that is where we get to that number.

We try not to increase the education property tax to catch inflation. The value that your property went up is not something we want to add additional education property tax to, but the fact that somebody built a house on your neighbouring property and added to the assessment roll: we do want to capture the tax on that. So we do that on a provincial level, apply a number on the provincial level, and then apply that to last year's assessment value for each municipality. That drives out a number that we send to the municipality, saying: this is how much you need to collect.

We've set a mill rate, and we've actually reduced our mill rate each year over the last 10 years at a provincial level because there has been inflationary growth in the property values, generally speaking, over that period of time, and we haven't wanted to capture that whole inflationary growth; we've just wanted to capture the real growth. We've reduced the mill rate to a number which captures the real growth. So there's an increase in the education property assessment, the amount we collect across the province, but a lowering of the nominal mill rate at the provincial level.

When it gets to the municipality, they take our number. They apply our number, which was derived from last year's assessment roll, to this year's assessment roll, and that drives out a different mill rate that's applied to your property tax level.

Now, in doing that over the years, in some years people in Calgary have complained that they're paying more tax, and they're paying more than their share because the real growth has derived that. This year they ended up with a $42 million, I think it was, reduction from the amount that we told them we needed to collect over last year. That's simply because growth has happened in different parts of the province. The assessment has changed. But that's not giving them $42 million back. We didn't collect $42 million more, or we didn't assess based on the inflationary growth of the process. So the city of Calgary has turned around and said, "Oh, gee, you're collecting that much less. There's room for us to move into." That's been one of the things that's happened.

Over the years there's been the suggestion that we should get out of the education property tax business. For constitutional reasons we can't. But you may recall that a number of years ago we moved into a municipal sustainability initiative provincially, and the number, I think, was pegged at $1.4 billion, which was the amount of the education property assessment in that year. So we're actually returning virtually all of the education property assessment to municipalities through the MSI fund.

It's a complex area, but it's not fair to say that we didn't collect $42 million that we should have and gave that to the city of Calgary.

Mr. Hehr: Thanks for that explanation. I'm going to have to go through that again and clarify for myself, but thanks for working with me on that.

If you looked in here – let's look – in 1993, I believe, it was switched from local municipalities having the ability to tax for new school initiatives. Okay? That effectively had gone to the province, rightly or wrongly.

Everyone knows, whether your government or any government around that it's difficult to raise revenue at the best of times. It just is difficult. However, the local schools or local communities may in fact have an easier time to do it. Your electorate, your voter, your taxpayer can actually see: "Jeepers, we need a neighbourhood school. Yes, you can see it. It's being built in our backyard. Yes, I don't mind paying for that." Has that rationale ever crossed this ministry's mind? Would it be easier for them to return the taxation power to them to possibly do some of this stuff to make it easier for citizens to actually see they're getting money for what they spend it on?

Mr. Hancock: A number of years ago in the early '90s there was a move from local-based taxation to provincial pooling. The rationale for that was that industry, which pays a good chunk of this, is not evenly distributed across the province, so there were some school boards that were excessively well-to-do without a huge residential property tax base and others that didn't have much of an industrial base, so the residential property tax base had to bear it. In some cases school boards had a lot more money to do things with, so there wasn't equity across the province. So the idea originally started as corporate pooling and moved into a total pooling of the residential property assessment but for the opted-out boards, which are essentially the separate school boards, which maintained that they had a constitutional right to taxing authority and moved that into a corporate pooling basis.

Now, there's all sorts of discussion that happens on an ongoing basis in the education system as to whether or not it could have been just limited to corporate pooling and left the residential property tax base with the school boards. There's also a question as to whether property tax is an anachronism, and there should be some other form of funding. One thing that is left with the school boards is the ability to raise up to 3 per cent of their operating budget by a local assessment, but they have to go to a referendum first.

Those are all things that will be carried forward in the new education act, and as we go through the discussion, I think we could welcome a discussion about what level of connection to the community could be recreated. But I can assure you that the AUMA and the AAMD and C on behalf of municipalities across the province are very adamant in their perspective that we should be getting out of the education property tax basis because that's the only base form of taxation that they have to operate the municipalities.

So it's not an easy issue. Yes, there could be a connection, but it's a broader discussion.

Mr. Hehr: I hear you.

The Chair: It's the second 20 minutes now. Continue on.

Mr. Hehr: I thank the minister for that answer. You probably agree, and I think I've heard you state publicly that this may be one of those times when it's penny-wise and pound-foolish for us to be making these cuts right now to some of the teaching positions that are out there.

In my view, it looks like we're headed for another round of a boom or just more robust economic activity coming here. Predictions are that the population will continue to grow as we have 25 per cent of the world's petroleum resources here. Here's where the jobs are, here's where the people with kids are, and all that sort of stuff. At this point in time, given that we're going to cut not your ministry in particular but as a result of, say, this $107 million shortfall – let's just call it that. School boards are going to have to drastically reduce the teaching staff and programs when, just essentially, in a year and a half, two years from now we're going to be caught in that cycle of catching up.

Mr. Hancock: I would certainly agree that our workforce planning process suggests that we will need more teachers over the course of the next 10 years. The school-age population is predicted to grow by 100,000 students over that period of time. Unless we can deal with issues like retirement age and bringing more people in through the system, we will end up with a shortage. The question, I suppose, that comes up is: should you actually retain the people you have now into that process and just over a period of time grow into it, if you will? That's a fair question. Left to my own devices with no shortage of resources, would I lay off staff? Well, no, I wouldn't.

However, in a tight fiscal period you sometimes have to readjust your bases. I think it's always appropriate to go back to school boards and say: "Analyze your spending. Work with us on this." You know, we did this at a departmental level. We cut I think it was $17 million out of an $80 million budget, something like that, over the last year. We have to look at what we're doing and say: you know, we can't sustain it at this level. The reality is that we're using a lot of our nonrenewable resource revenue to fund operating programs. Over the course of the next few years we can't just continue to grow that spending. We have to look at resetting the base or increasing the taxes or both.

Given that piece, today we look at the budget and say: do we just pour money into what we're doing now, or is this the time when we ask the school boards to take a look at readjusting their base? Does that mean that we have to lose some staff? Well, 70 per cent of the money goes to paying for staff at some level. You can't say that we should be fiscally prudent on our spending side and not recognize that that means jobs.

Mr. Hehr: I'm perfectly hearing you, Minister, and I'm glad that we actually have the recognition of this. If the last 40 years have proved nothing, we can spend all of our fossil fuel resources and lower taxes to their minimum. It's just in times when we have shortages here, where the oil wells don't pump in, when we're caught in a shortfall. I think that's where we find ourselves.

Nevertheless, I would leave you with a suggestion. You've got – what? – $6 billion or $7 billion left in your sustainability fund. It would be wise for you to dig into the coffers and fund this at this time. Heaven forbid that you pass that booze tax that you were going to put through a couple of years ago. That's $180 million. If we're really being honest here, we've got to look at other revenue streams or whether we're going to do this. In my view, I just think that there are other options to this than letting teachers go at this time. Even our capital. Let's switch gears a little bit. What do you think about that idea? Why wouldn't now be the time to go to the sustainability fund to find $170 million to not let teachers go at this time?

Mr. Hancock: Well, overall on our budget I think the number is $4.7 billion that's going to be tapped into the sustainability fund. What we tried to do on an overall government basis is to keep the increase in spending to an amount that is just slightly less than 2 per cent. You know, you sort of look at prudent budget planning and say that growth plus inflation is sort of a guideline. If you're going to limit your spending and grow your economy past your spending to get yourself out of a deficit piece, you have to look at every budget on a prudent basis. You can't just say: let's do it in your budget, but don't do it in mine.

We strongly advocated for the resources we needed in Education, but on an overall basis the Premier has said – and I certainly support him on this – that you don't tax your way out of a recession. It's not the time to go back to the public and ask for more money. There's a certain line that you have to work with.

At the same time you can see over the course of the last number of years that the annual operating surpluses of our school boards have actually been fairly substantial. We have accumulated about $330 million, I think it is, across the province in annual operating surpluses. I appreciate that school boards have been saving for a purpose. That's just the operating surplus; that's not the capital reserves. I think it gets up to about $577 million if we include the capital reserves. So this is a well-financed system. If we're in a fiscal period of time when we need to dip into our sustainability fund, I don't think it's inappropriate to ask school boards to dip into their sustainability funds.

Mr. Hehr: I'm not suggesting that you're wrong to make them do that if those reserves and resources are there. But, you know, there are other things. There are depreciating assets. There's a backlog on deferred maintenance, all this sort of stuff that is coming home to roost in the system as well on some of that stuff that these reserves were meant to pay for. It's a little bit of both ways.

I'm going to come back to some of these more detailed questions, but we're in sort of a general discussion on where we're going, and essentially I'd like to sort of keep going on it. Is there a discussion happening right now in your government? Obviously, we're coming out of a recession. The Premier says that you don't tax your way out of a recession. Given what we've gone through in the last 40 years, is your government looking at, I guess, more sustainable ways of running a province in the long run?

Mr. Hancock: Well, that's a broader budget consideration than the Education budget.

Mr. Hehr: I know.

Mr. Hancock: I can say quite candidly that I'm not running for the leadership, so it wouldn't be appropriate for me to talk in broad, general terms. That's a perfect question to ask the President of the Treasury Board.

I can say that we have very clearly focused on how we can improve our savings, to take the nonrenewable resource revenue and build that into a long-term either savings account or a building of capital assets. When we talk about the deficit that we have this year and had last year, if you look at the resources that are going in to build the infrastructure, including school infrastructure, you can actually say that we're using the nonrenewable resources to build that capital infrastructure, which is multigenerational, and we are paying the operating costs out of current dollars. We still have to understand that at some point in time the sustainability fund will be depleted, and then the question is: do we continue to use our capital dollars in that way?

So, yes, we need to be saving but not saving just for saving purposes but saving and investing capital dollars coming from nonrenewable resource revenue into sustainable, long-term investments, whether that's in human capital or in the infrastructure that we need for roads, schools, and hospitals.

Mr. Hehr: Or a savings fund or a long-term heritage savings fund, whatever you might want to call it.

If we can talk about: there's no money in this year's budget, at least from what I've seen, for additional school building. Is that correct?

Mr. Hancock: That's right because if we announced a new school building project, you wouldn't spend the money this year anyway. What we have in this year's capital budget is the amount that we're committed to spending with respect to the ASAP projects and the continuation of the completion of the projects that are already under way. We are working on a 10-year capital plan. I'm working with Treasury Board and Infrastructure on how we might announce and finance the capital that we need over the longer term, but that wouldn't impact this year's spending unless we needed to ask for a million or two in dollars for the department or for Infrastructure to manage the projects.

Mr. Hehr: In your department's view, how many new schools are needed in this province for the numbers of kids that are coming and with the communities that are growing?

Mr. Hancock: You'd have to give me a time frame.

Mr. Hehr: How about the next five years? An example is that I go to Airdrie. They tell me they could use three or four more schools there. There are new communities in Calgary that need schools. In the old days, hon. minister, a new community would go up, and a school would go up. Okay?

Mr. Hancock: That must be in the old, old days. It hasn't happened in my 40 years.

Mr. Hehr: It would happen. When I went to school, you know, it seemed to be more like that than it is today. Maybe it's because of growth pressures, the zeitgeist of what it is, that different contributions by levels of government and the taxpayer in general are not quite the same as they were 40 years ago, but that's sort of how it was. It seems to me that it isn't happening. Maybe I'm remembering the good old days, and maybe the good old days weren't that good after all, but I don't know.

I'm suffering from that, that we have many new communities that deserve and need a school. In my view, it's the neighbourhood hub and how an egalitarian society should be run and directed. It should have a public school. Okay?

Mr. Hancock: We do agree on that. The ASAP 1 and ASAP 2 projects that were brought forward were to try and get schools where kids are. I think that was the phrase that the previous Education minister used when he announced that first ASAP 1 project. So we built 18 schools in Edmonton and Calgary, nine in each, and then with ASAP 2 another 14 schools, most of which were in Edmonton and Calgary. That was intended to deal with some of that urban growth. Now we're working on dealing with the growth in other communities like Airdrie and Medicine Hat and Grande Prairie that deal with those growth pieces.

Your initial question was: how many schools do we need? Probably over the 10 years it wouldn't be untoward to say that we'd need 160 schools, most of them new, in order to deal with growth. Probably a third of them would be replacements for schools. Fifty per cent of our current schools are over 40 years of age, so there's a renewal that's definitely needed and definitely under way. We've done an awful lot of work both in the demographic modelling and the financial planning to see how that could be accomplished over that 10-year time frame.

Mr. Hehr: Okay.

Can I ask about transportation budgets for this year that you were sending out? Were they frozen for various school jurisdictions?

Mr. Hancock: Sorry?

Mr. Hehr: Do you supply transportation funding for a line item to different boards?

Mr. Hancock: Yes.

Mr. Hehr: Was that frozen this year?

Mr. Hancock: There's a $1 million increase to the transportation budget this year. To be fair, last year or the year before we eliminated a transportation grant, which was a top-up of diesel fuel over 60 cents a litre. It did go down if you added that supplemental grant in, but this year over last year it's a $1 million increase.

Mr. Hehr: Okay.

Mr. Hancock: I should say that there's also – and, Gene, you can correct me if I'm wrong – a reprofiling because when we open 18 new schools in urban areas, there's a certain amount of transportation funding that can then be shifted to other areas.

Mr. Hehr: My understanding is that 98 per cent of the funding you give to local school boards can be spent in any way and fashion they would like. Despite whether you call it an operating, an AISI grant, or an ESL grant, they just get money for whatever they qualify for.

Mr. Hancock: If you leave the capital funding out and you leave the AISI funding out, essentially the rest is a formula in which we pile up the dollars in one way or another to a school board. And, yes, we don't audit, for example, to see if, say, you used your $1,155 ESL grant per ESL student, and it all went to ESL students, or that all of the money you were funded for severe special-needs students went into that. It's basically a formula to get resources to school boards, and the school boards allocate those resources the way they need to.

AISI is slightly different in that they have to justify what they do with their AISI funding, and for the class size initiative funding they have to show that they actually put that towards hiring more teachers. There's another area, the student health initiative, which is a particular area. But for the most part you're right. The student grants and all the other grants are sort of funded out into a pot, and then the school board takes the bottom line and allocates it.

Mr. Hehr: Obviously – and maybe this is just a redundant question – you're doing those line items like ESL students, special-needs students to sort of recognize there are differences in the way school boards operate and differences primarily in city jurisdictions and probably more rural jurisdictions. The city jurisdictions attract more students – tell me if I'm wrong here – with disabilities and ESL troubles. They're going to cities. They're tending to look for jobs and opportunities in cities. As well, the services are there. Has funding from your department kept track, going to city boards in that type of fashion that recognizes what, in my view, I would say would be the heightened costs of doing business in the city, or am I wrong?

Mr. Hancock: Well, you're right from the perspective that piling the grants together recognizes the demographic differences between boards. So you have your base per-student grant, you have the class size initiative grant, which is separate and apart from that, but then you have a self-identified First Nations or Métis student aboriginal grant, you have an ESL grant, and you have severe special needs. You take all of those together, and by piling those together, you're recognizing the complexity difference in the makeup of the student population for a board.

For example, the Calgary board of education has – what is it? – approximately 25 per cent of the ESL students. That would be 63 boards, and one board has a significant population of ESL students. That ESL grant, the $1,155 that they get per student, is actually increasing by about 15 per cent this year to recognize the growth in the number of those students. So the amount, the $1,155, stays the same, but we're funding the increased number of those students, and that is recognizing the fact that Calgary has that type of a population. Most of that ESL population would be captured in Edmonton and Calgary, but there are some rural boards that have those populations as well. Yes, that differential funding is to recognize the different complexity of the student demographic.

Mr. Hehr: You were just getting to it at the start of the introduction of your speech when you indicated that the class size initiative is going to be sacrificed in grades 4 through 6 this year, but you're keeping that funding in K through 3 because research indicates that's where it does the most good. I agree with that research. I think, you know, that in a perfect world we'd keep that grades 4 to 6 class size initiative going. When the economic picture gets better, are you planning at this time on restoring the class size initiative in grades 4 through 6?

Mr. Hancock: Well, let's be really clear on the class size initiative. We haven't actually reduced the class size initiative funding. In fact, I think it's fair to say that we're about a million dollars up. What we've done is reprofiled it. Okay? In the past the class size initiative grants were, essentially, one-time grants. There was a class size grant put in place. It originally was set up based on the differential between where school boards were compared to the class size guidelines. Essentially, you were funding the school boards that hadn't made a good initiative to put the resources into the class.

That happened also the second time that there was a tranche put in to increase class size funding. There was no long-term, sustainable piece to that. You know, one lump was put in one year, and then a couple of years later another lump was put in. It was targeted to those school boards that hadn't met the guidelines, in essence targeting those school boards that had put less of a priority on their other resources to the classroom.

We changed that last year and said, "We want to understand that the data says that student outcomes are not really affected by class size," which is not to say that class size isn't important for other reasons, but if you're talking about student outcomes, where it makes a difference is in the K to 3. So let's reprofile the grants. Even though school boards can decide what they do with the money, we're saying that we want to reprofile the grants. It's the same amount of money, but now it's putting more money based not on how far away you were from the class size guidelines but based on how many K to 3 students you actually have and need to service.

The method in the madness is that if that's on a per capita grant basis for K to 3 students, it should grow as the student population grows. We know there's been a baby boom in the province, and we're going to have a growing student population in that area. Instead of it being withered down over the years because it was just a one-time tranche and then a second-time tranche, it's actually now pegged to the class size at the K to 3 level and will grow with the K to 3 growth.

We haven't reduced it at all. We've reprofiled it. We've sent a message to school boards that we think they ought to be trying to do a better job of meeting the class size initiative where it matters, in K to 3. We did the same thing at the high school level with respect to CTS courses, where class size made a difference for safety reasons like with welding, for example, or those areas or where there were higher costs.

That's what we did with it. We haven't decreased the amount that went into it. In fact, the way it's positioned now, it should grow with the student population.

The Chair: Hon. member, I'd just inform you that we've started the third 20 minutes.

Mr. Hehr: Perfect. Thank you.

Just on that note, it's clear. I agree with the minister 100 per cent. The more help you can give a kid at the beginning of life the better. The money is better spent at the front end than at the back end.

On that note, where are we going in junior kindergarten for three-year-olds? Are we moving into that? If we're really looking at using scarce resources, why aren't we getting rid of grade 12 and putting in junior kindergarten? I realize that that's a simple solution.

Mr. Hancock: I guess the short answer to that is that we are doing a lot of focus work on early childhood. We're working with Children's Services and with Health on how we can work more on early childhood initiatives, catch issues earlier, support children who need it earlier. Not every child is built the same and needs the same kinds of support. Junior kindergarten is a very good program for some children. It's not necessary for all children.

The question that it really comes down to is that school boards have the ability to use their resources in the way that they think is best for their children. There's no reason why they cannot – and some, in fact, do – fund, for example, full-day kindergarten because they think that that will get the children a better start and will improve their utilization of resources later on. So that is there.

Now, the short answer to your question is that we don't have additional resources to start a new program this year, so even if I wanted to fund junior kindergarten, I couldn't do it in light of the fact that we're asking school boards to meet the fiscal challenges we're asking them to meet. That's not to say that we don't put a priority on early childhood and the work that we're doing on mapping, on wraparound services, on working with communities and with other players in this area to actually focus on it.

One of the things that's valuable is that it gives us some time to look beyond the easy answer, and quite frankly kindergarten and junior kindergarten are easy answers. They're what people come out for. There's lots to suggest that if you have resources to apply, parenting programs would be perhaps a better investment to assist parents to understand that what they do between zero and 18 months is going to have a much bigger impact on their children learning over time.

Mr. Hehr: Let's talk about that. You indicate that school boards make the decision themselves whether they're going to have a kindergarten program or not. Are there school boards right now in Alberta who are not running a kindergarten program?

Mr. Hancock: Yes. There are some school boards that are running full-day kindergarten, there are some school boards that are running junior kindergarten, and we actually fund some of those students. If they're ECS students who are at risk, some of them are funded. For example, if you go into my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud, at St. Monica School there's a junior kindergarten, and some of the students are funded. For other students their parents want them to take junior kindergarten, so they're prepared to pay the cost of their children going to that junior kindergarten. By piling the two together, they get a robust program.

Mr. Hehr: Who are the kids that are funded? At-risk children?

Mr. Hancock: Yes.

Mr. Hehr: See, this is where it breaks down for me. In my view, we should be doing some more of that, and you're the boss. I would almost mandate school boards that they are going to be running junior kindergartens. Can you do it? Would it be wise to do it? Would this government look at ways to fund that if we believe that that's where the initiative is? If what I've heard is correct, that Education's current thinking is that that's where the money is best spent, why aren't you as the minister saying: "Thou shalt have junior kindergarten in your programs. That's where you're going to spend your money, and we're going to prioritize that"?"

Mr. Hancock: Because one size doesn't fit all. When you hire school boards, as we do as locally elected boards, to determine what's in the best interest of their community relative to the educational programming, one of the things that they get to do is decide what's in the best interests of their students with respect to the local programming. We could encourage them to do it by funding it, but what we do fund is students with severe special needs from age two and a half, mild and moderate special needs from three and a half, and regular students from four and a half. We provide resources for those students that we can absolutely be certain are going to benefit strongly if they have that early intervention.

Again, if we had another few million dollars and weren't dealing with the stresses we have right now, I still would want to take a look to say: what's the best investment you can make at the provincial level? What's the best investment we can make? Quite frankly, we're working very closely with Children's Services and Health on that issue relative to the early development mapping program to find out what resources are available in the community because there is good research to suggest that.

If you read a book – and this isn't the research – called Disrupting Class, there's a chapter in there that's really quite interesting. It talks about the fact that perhaps we're wasting money investing in kindergarten and junior kindergarten, that we would have more bang for the buck if we invested it in early childhood. A child who's talked to not in gibberish but just regular talking between age zero and 18 months develops synapses which improve their communication ability. There's research to show that there are a lot of things you could do in the early childhood area with students, so we need to do more work on how we assist parents to understand that they make a huge difference. You know, fetal alcohol spectrum disorder is another area. If we're talking about how we make sure that every child can get a good start, it might be too late to wait for junior kindergarten.

Mr. Hehr: Too late. I hear you.

If we're looking at, specifically, the cuts to AISI grants – we're just talking here – how was the 50 per cent figure arrived at? Why was that number chosen? Did you guys need a certain amount of money to balance the books, and that was just the easiest place to take it from?

Mr. Hancock: With your indulgence, I would like to take a moment before I answer that to just indicate that we've been joined in the gallery by Kathy Telfer, who's the head of our communications department in Education, by Monica Futerski, who's with budget and fiscal analysis, and by Leona Badke with strategic services. I don't think they were here when I made the comments about the great work that is done by the staff in Education, how professional they are. I just wanted to say that while they could hear it and acknowledge their presence. I thank them for the work that they do and that the staff that work with them do.

On your question – I'm sorry – would you just remind me? It was about AISI.

Mr. Hehr: On AISI funding, is that going to be returned? Is that program going to be eliminated eventually?

Mr. Hancock: Not if I can help it. That is a very good program, and we've just had it reviewed internationally. We know that other jurisdictions are looking at Alberta. Alberta is unique. In fact, a school principal was just telling me about a conference they were at in New Orleans, and the speakers there were talking not about Finland but about Alberta and specifically about the AISI program we have here. As applied research on an overall basis it's an excellent program, and it does fantastic work. It was very, very painful to have to deal with cutting that budget.

That being said, what we did was we kept it whole until September 1 and cut it by 50 per cent after that, and yes, that's a balancing number. We also can use this as an opportunity to look at AISI to say: where are we doing it most effectively, what goes into that, and where is it not being so effective? I can tell you that I had people call me – teachers and other people, colleagues – and say: if you need to save money in the Education budget, why don't you cut AISI? The reason they're saying that, obviously, is because in their particular part of the world they're not being included in the planning process. They don't see the value of the project.

Now, across the province I think you'd find that virtually every school board and teachers are saying that this is a very valuable project and that it's one of the best things that we've done. We can take a look at it, figure out where the corners are that aren't working so well, make sure we're using the resources as well as we can, but we've got to certainly invest even more in research and applied research in this province to know that we're leading edge for our students.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Chair, can I ask how much time is left?

The Chair: You have about nine minutes.

Before you continue, it's my mistake that I didn't ask the minister to stand up to speak to his Committee of Supply estimates. The camera cannot see you well.

Hon. member, continue.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Well, thank you very much.

I'll try and tie this into the budget here. Where are we going on charter schools? You know, when they were originally brought in, they were brought in for a mandate of five years, and some charters now have been going for 12 years. Some people are reasonably happy with their work. Some other people are suggesting that they may be redundant and that this stuff can be done in the public school system, all those things. I was of the understanding that this was going to be dealt with in the new education act. Does your new education act deal with it? Are there any things like that that you can touch on from this budget that I can tie into a discussion on charter schools?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, thank you for letting me know that I don't look as good sitting down as I do standing up, so I will stand up for everyone to have that presence.

Charter schools have been in the province now for – what? – about 12 years, 15 years. In any event, they came in originally so that there could be both choice and innovation in the education system, innovation, obviously, in the perspective of the innovator. Some people said, "Well, that's not innovation; that's regression," whatever. It doesn't matter. Parents and educators said, "We believe in this methodology of education or this style of education or that having all girls together will improve education," and the province said: "Yes. We want to give them an opportunity to try that.” They first have to go to the school board, and if the school board won’t do that kind of a program, then they can apply to be a charter school.

That has been successful. We have 13, I think, charter schools across the province. Most of them have had some degree of success from the perspective that the parents and the children that are going seem to like them and seem to think that they’re doing a good job. The results would suggest that they’re fine.

Some have said: well, now that the public school boards have embraced those programs, the charter schools should be closed. Well, no. We’re not going to do that. We’re going to continue those charter schools because they will continue to ensure that there’s choice in education. When we bring the new education act forward, perhaps even before that, we will work on how we can move from a five-year renewable charter to a permanent charter, but based on a way that we can ensure that they continue to fulfill their mandate. A charter school by definition is something different than the local public school, so that difference has to be maintained or else they shouldn’t maintain their charter. Subject to that, permanence is in order. That helps them plan longer term, helps them look at their facilities, and those sorts of things.

We’re moving in that direction. We’re facilitating that piece. As part of that discussion we will have to then talk about the caps, you know, what size of enrolment? Do you allow a charter school to grow to an unlimited level? There are some challenges with that. Some charter schools are getting to be just as large as some school boards. Then what’s the governance structure that makes sure that there’s public accountability given that they’re not elected boards?

How do we make sure that they fulfill – one of the mandates that was always there for charter schools but that has never really been followed up on, and not at the fault of the charter schools but at the fault of the system, is to say that if you’re doing a particular style of pedagogy or you’re operating in a particular way because you believe that that works well for a certain type of student, we want to learn from that. How do we do the innovation piece? How do we do the applied research piece around that? How do we test it to say: can we learn something for the broader education system? That, after all, is what charter schools are supposed to do, to challenge the system to be better.

Mr. Hehr: Given that these charter schools are drawing students from all over the city, are there differences in transportation budgets allotted to those institutions or anything of that nature?

Mr. Hancock: We set up a per-student rate for them to fund their transportation. I will look, and I’ll get back to you in terms of how that’s calculated.

Normally in the public system for schools we fund transportation to your neighbourhood school. If you go past your neighbourhood school to a school of choice, that’s not funded. With respect to how the transportation funding for charter schools is, I’ll get back to you.

Mr. Hehr: It’s probably similar to that, but if you find it, that would be great, too.

I’m going to get back on the list so that I can ask you some questions after my colleagues here, but I’d like to thank the minister of the department for a fairly candid discussion. In my view if there’s an opportunity, if money comes into the Treasury Board, if Alberta’s prospects for the future look a little bit better, if we find $107 million on a $45 billion budget to go into education to fund some of these initiatives, I would say that that would be money well spent. I think that given the economic times we’re about to head into, the growth in our student base and the needs of our system would suggest that I’m right on that.

I’ll leave it there. I’ll get back on the list, and I’ll listen intently to some of my colleagues asking questions. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

The next 20 minutes is for the third party. Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, you have 20 minutes, 10 minutes and 10 minutes which you can combine with the minister.

Mr. Anderson: Back and forth.

The Chair: Back-and-forth dialogue with the minister.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the Minister of Education for being here today. I really enjoy our discussions in these types of forums. I don’t want to be guilty of heaping too much praise, of course, but he really is doing a very good job in education. There are several things that I think need to be fixed or changed or adapted and so forth, but I do believe that this minister is moving in the right direction on several different fronts. I do appreciate his efforts in this regard.

One of the first things – and you’ll never guess what the first thing is that I’m going to talk about – is schools for high-growth areas, and of course one of those high-growth areas is my home constituency of Airdrie-Chestermere. There are also, I know, several other high-growth areas. I know Beaumont is having an issue as well with a lack of schools for their growing community. I just want to kind of get an update, frankly, from the minister on where we’re at with that process. It really is starting to get quite serious for the communities involved, specifically in Airdrie. I know that you’re well aware of the situation, Minister, but if you could give me an update on where we’re at with schools in those areas, that would be very appreciated.

Mr. Hancock: Sure. Mr. Chairman, I think the Premier has made it very clear that we understand the need in the Airdrie area. There are other parts of the province that also have need. As I indicated earlier on today, I think perhaps in my opening remarks, we’re working on a 10-year capital plan, but we also know that there’s an urgency to get started on that and that we need to do something within the next couple of months.

Once we get through budget, I’ll be talking with the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Infrastructure. In fact, we have been talking about how we might finance the necessary capital build to satisfy not only the dire need in Airdrie – I mean, we’ve got a francophone school in Airdrie that’s a starter school, and it’s got growth issues. Rocky View, of course, has some significant pressures. The recently opened Catholic school, I think, has dealt with some of the pressures for the separate school board in that area. In Airdrie and Chestermere there’s certainly high growth, also in Beaumont, also in Grande Prairie, also in Medicine Hat, and to no one’s surprise, in Fort McMurray. It’s not as simple as saying that, you know, we need to build three or four schools in Airdrie right now; it’s a question of how we can do this in those growth areas in the province where there aren’t places for students to sit.

Having said that, I think that we should also challenge ourselves to say: are we using our infrastructure to its capacity? We should be looking at areas where we can actually change our school days to a longer day, not that every child should go for a longer day. When a school essentially shuts down at 3 o’clock in the afternoon and you’ve got two hours till 5 o’clock that you could actually use – it’s fairly expensive capital – we should be looking at that. We should be looking at year-round schooling because our kids are already voting with their feet and signing up for summer school. The old idea that kids needed a summer break because they were needed on the farm doesn't really fit in most of our growth areas. There are other things that we should look at.

The short answer is that good news will be coming soon, I think, to parents in Airdrie and other growth areas across the province.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister, for that.

Now, obviously, we've grown very quickly in these high-growth areas and across the province, and schools are obviously desperately needed when we have high-growth areas. I think one of the things that has caused the problem we currently have is that I do not feel that there is yet in place an objective capital formula with regard to schools. I understand that, you know, each individual school board sets its priorities, says that these are our number one through 10 priorities, or whatever it is. I understand that they're the ones that set the priorities within their school board. Then the provincial government says that you will get funding for your top three priorities and then this school board's top four or this school board's top one, et cetera.

It seems to me that in the past, if you just look at some of the numbers with how the last tranche of schools was handed out, particularly in Edmonton and Calgary, not that they didn't need schools, it just seemed to me that it was very arbitrary. It was 10 for Edmonton. It was 10 for Calgary. It was seven for Edmonton public, seven for Calgary public, three or four for Calgary Catholic, three or four for Edmonton Catholic. That seems arbitrary to me. If you look at the numbers, you know, the Edmonton public system was going down, Edmonton Catholic was going up, Calgary public was going up, Calgary Catholic was going down. There are all these different factors involved, and it just didn't make sense that it would just be so equal. It seemed brazenly political.

Is there a formula in place that is being used by you at the Department of Education now going forward here so that when we put money aside for five schools or 10 schools, we're making sure that those are the absolute priority 10 schools for the whole province for the coming period of time?

Mr. Hancock: I guess my first answer is that formulas are fraught with danger. You can't actually replace good judgment with a formula. What we do is we have a very strong, good capacity in our capital side. They're going into areas, for example Medicine Hat or Red Deer, doing value review discussions so that the question is: what capital do we have on the ground in that area? How is it best used? What are the needs? How do we do the sector utilization, if you will? They do an analysis of it. We do get the capital plans from school boards, but you don't just take that capital plan and say: "Okay. Well, everybody gets their top choice." You have to actually look at where the growth pieces are.

We have a very dynamic and much-improved forecasting tool that forecasts where the population growth is, not quite as specific as to get down into the quadrants of a city. But in terms of growth, as I've said, we've had the regional discussions, and we build that plan. In the traditional capital process in government we take our plan, decide what the top priorities are having done that analysis, and then send that off to a deputy minister's capital committee, which looks at them in the context of all the other capital and does a points analysis based on health and safety, available space, condition of facilities, those sorts of things, assigns a points system and comes up with what's the highest priority capital need in the province. Then you start allocating the money to it. So it's not a political process at all.

Now, overlaid on that was the recognition that we were behind in school capital funding, and we needed to do a big tranche. A previous minister was able to go ahead with the Alberta schools alternative process with ASAP 1, which was nine schools in Calgary and nine schools in Edmonton. That skewed the formula a little bit because in designing that – it hadn't been done before – the thinking of the time was that there needed to be relative proximity of the buildings in order to build and test the case.

All of those schools were needed. All of those schools were high on the capital list. In fact, I can tell you that in my constituency because I have the highest growth area in Edmonton we've opened two Catholic and two public schools in that ASAP 1 program, and all of them are crying for modulars now. So it's not that any of those schools were not needed, but it did take them out of the overall formula because they were all in Edmonton and Calgary in ASAP 1. It was top priority, it was urban growth areas, it was need, but it was skewed because of the desire to design an ASAP program to see if that would work to give us better value for the build.

Having done that, the second ASAP project for 14 schools – 10 under grade 9 and four high schools – went beyond those urban boundaries into the other areas. In fact, in your area I think there was one school in Langdon, and that was their top priority. The determination was that you could get out of that circle and do some of that. We took the high schools out of the ASAP bundle and did a design build on them because they were more complex builds.

So we were learning through those processes. I think as we go forward, if we were able to, say, put together a package of 25 or 30 or 35 schools and say: "Can you do that with one build? Can you do that with four or five builds?" That's what we're exploring now. What's the optimum way of doing that, recognizing that it can't be just an Edmonton and Calgary thing, that it's got to be right across the province? And it can't be just a new build. There are also major modernizations that are needed on some of our existing capital that has a need and a long-term life and needs to be refurbished. We're working very hard on that, our 10-year plan. We've put a lot of time and effort into it, but there's no political choice in it at all.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I'm glad to hear that's your view, and I'll take it at face value with regard to yourself and as you've been Education minister that you're not being political about it. I haven't seen anything to suggest the contrary, frankly, but I do still think that previously there were some decisions made that seemed pretty highly political, you know.

I'm glad to hear, too, that there is some sort of points analysis there, that you have some sort of formula base, because judgment is important, but if you don't have those kind of cold, hard facts, those cold, hard statistics, I don't know how you could possibly come up with the best decisions with regard to where the schools are most needed. I obviously encourage your ministry to continue to keep the politics out of it in that regard.

Mr. Chair, how much time do I have left?

The Chair: You have nine minutes.

Mr. Anderson: Nine minutes. I want to move on quickly to assessing students. We talked a little bit about that, but specifically regarding parental achievement testing. Sorry. Provincial, not parental. I'm pretty sure we could maybe use some parental achievement testing as well, for sure in my case. I might have to go back for some more schooling.

The provincial achievement testing that we do in grades 3, 6, and 9 as well as the diploma exams. I've always felt that I'm not in favour of the provincial achievement tests, and I'll tell you why. It's not because I don't like objective criteria. It's not because I don't like parents to have some ability to see how their schools are doing. The reason I have a problem with it is just because it really does not, in my view, evaluate whether a child is really learning the material. I just know that point of fact from my own experience, that some of us are very good at regurgitating information really quickly on a multiple-choice test, and others, who know the material better than, say – I was quite good at the multiple-choice tests. I was very good at them, but I had friends that, frankly, understood some of the material far better than I did, and they did a lot poorer than me on their testing because they didn't do that type of testing very well. They just didn't respond to that type of pressure and so forth. So I don't see how it really helps evaluate our kids.

You talked about Disrupting Class earlier, a great book. One of the things that it talks about is competency-based learning. I really think that I would like to see some pilot projects, and the Wildrose would like to see some pilot projects, and I know parents would definitely like to see that, where we switch to more of a modular or a competency-based learning process, where children, rather than being, you know, in the same exact grade level with regard to their age, are essentially put into a grade with, say, three or four different levels in it. Then within that level they work competency by competency. So they work through their addition up to a hundred or something like that, and then once they've mastered that, they move on to the next core competency in math and the next. Then students who are really excelling in certain areas are going to be given the ability to do that and excel and maybe even get college credit eventually down the road. Then those that need extra help: we can identify them immediately and give them that extra support that they need to get them back to where they should be for their age.

Is there anything in your department? Are you looking at any of that, a potential pilot project? I know that as I talk with teachers, they are very interested in the idea, too, but it obviously would be quite an undertaking. Is your department looking at that at all?

Mr. Hancock: Well, the whole area of assessment is very interesting, and there are, really, a number of different levels we have to look at. One of the levels that you're looking at, of course, is assessment for learning. How do we use assessment as a tool to help students understand where they are and where they can be and all those sort of pieces? That should be happening on a daily basis in our classrooms across the province, our schools across the province. That is the purview of the teacher by and large.

The assessment as learning, where students learn how to assess themselves and learn from that, is perhaps a newer concept but is something that good teachers have done as well over time so that you constantly are able to evaluate your own learning potential.

There also needs to be assessment of learning. We need to know whether the system as a whole is working and whether our boards as a whole are meeting certain standards. That's where the provincial achievement tests come in. They're not really about the individual achievement of the student although they can be used in that way. They're not, certainly, about testing the efficacy of a teacher or of a school. The Fraser Institute's report is actually a bastardized use of those results. But if you take the longitudinal analysis of provincial achievement tests for a school, for example, there's a lot of learning that can be done. If you look at one school, as I have, and it shows that consistently year over year on a particular portion of the provincial achievement test there's a low result, well, that says something about what's not being done or is being done. So a school and teachers can learn from that in terms of their teaching methodology and what they do with their particular students.

We also know that the grade 3 PATs are entirely predictive. They're valid, reliable exams. They're not just a regurgitation of memorization. They're well-designed, well-crafted exams which test at a multitude of levels, and we know that they're valid and reliable. If you take a look at the analysis, students who do poorly on the grade 3 PATs are the students who drop out of high school. It tells us two things: one, that they're reliable tests; and two, that we're not making as good a use of the information as we could because we should be intervening and making a change to that particular portion.

Yes, we should be encouraging better assessment practices. If you go to the diploma exam, for example, which is essentially an exit test – it's a standards test, and it is, again, valid and reliable – you could replace it with standards of assessment equitably applied across the province if you were comfortable that you had that kind of capacity in the system. But, again, the data show that we don't. The data show that there's a wide variety of assessment practices across the system. So there's a lot of work to be done.

To be frank, we should not be engaged heavily in that work right now – what we've got is actually pretty good in terms of the information and data it gives us – until we've redesigned our curriculum through our Action on Curriculum program because we're looking at 21st century skills, and that's a whole new question of how you assess efficacy in 21st century skills. Numeracy and literacy will always be important, and we should always be looking to say: are we achieving both as a system and for the individual student in numeracy and literacy skills? But as we move forward with new curriculum, we're going to have to look at how you test 21st century skills. That will be a whole new discussion on assessment, and that's when we really should invest the time and effort in doing it.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Well, I guess I would argue, though – and I'll use the grade 3 example – that it's a good predictor. I don't know. You know, correlation is not causation, right? It seems to me that we're not measuring the improvement of the students; we're measuring where they are at one point in time. What we should be doing – and if you had competency-based unit-by-unit learning, you'd be able to assess where the student is at the start of the year and where they ended up, and that is far better.

I mean, if you have some heroic teacher that starts with a kid who's just, you know, a grade level, essentially, behind, and he gets him caught up or almost caught up, that's the teacher we should be celebrating as opposed to some teacher that gets somebody who is way ahead, and they start way ahead, and they end ahead by the same amount, or maybe they even slow down a little bit. It just seems to me that if we're going to adequately assess both where a child is and, of course, how effective their teachers or the learning environment is – it's not always the teachers; it's often the learning environment – it should be done in a way that measures where they are at the beginning and where they are at the end.

I don't think that just because a grade 3 student – if a specific school is always performing well on these PATs in grade 3, that could be for many reasons. It could be the education of the parents. It could be where they live. Do they all have full stomachs when they're learning? I mean, there are all these different factors, and I just don't think there's a proper evaluation process because you're not evaluating where people start and then where people end. You're not evaluating whether they really, really comprehend the material fully, especially when you get outside of things like math. Math is one of those things that's easy to do on a multiple-choice exam. You know, there are four answers, and they're all right or wrong whereas things like English, science, et cetera, are things where sometimes multiple-choice exams are not very effective in addressing or seeing whether a student understands the material or not.

Again, is there any way you could look at a pilot project as you're going forward with the curriculum changes? I know they do this at several schools in Calgary. I know Eastside academy does this, where they have this modular learning. I know they have the Rocketship schools in the States. There are several in Texas that do it. Anyway, some ideas to think about.

The Chair: Hon. member, sorry. I have to interrupt you because your time, 20 minutes, with the hon. minister is completed.

The next 20 minutes will be for the fourth party. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to participate.

The Chair: So it's 20 minutes, a dialogue?

Ms Notley: We'll go back and forth, I think, assuming that we're able to do that with some brevity as we go back and forth.

There has been a lot of good conversation already, and there are a lot of issues to discuss. I'm going to perhaps start by focusing on something that I haven't heard a lot of discussion about yet and then maybe broaden the conversation a bit if I get the opportunity.

I wanted to ask a couple of questions just as a beginning about the performance measures the minister mentioned at the very beginning. You know, you referred us to the business plan and the performance measures that are in there, so I took a quick look at it. I think they were described as having been streamlined, but I suppose my more immediate sense of those performance measures was that they were remarkably ineffective and not terribly well connected to the priorities that were identified in the actual priorities of the ministry.

We have the priorities themselves referring to things like implementing, you know, some fairly weighty initiatives that the minister and the ministry have embarked upon in terms of developing the education act and implementing setting the direction and enriching teacher competency and implementing the school leadership framework and, I guess, more improving the educational infrastructure, a number of fairly significant goals. But then after that what we're looking at are these very vague performance measures about, well, that parents feel listened to and students, parents, and teachers think that their input is valued and they think that their education leadership effectively supports learning. I think you know where I'm going with this.

I did actually look at the document that the minister referenced when he talked about the business plan, the action something or other that you mentioned. I can't remember the name, but I did look it up on the web. Although that provided more information, it certainly didn't include any sort of detailed performance measures. So I'm wondering if the minister is a little concerned, perhaps, about this issue of maybe trying to find a better way to measure the actual success of his ministry in relation to the these specific priorities that you're asking us to approve a budget for in order for you to implement. So I'd like you maybe to talk about that generally.

Then because I'm going to focus in really quickly on special needs, I note that one of your identified priorities was implementing setting the direction, but there was just nothing in the performance measures that connected to that particular priority at all. I'm wondering if maybe you could provide a bit of a comment on that as well.

Mr. Hancock: Performance measures are always problematic, Mr. Chairman. What we need to be clear on is that what we want to have in our performance measures are measures of outcome, whether we've succeeded, whereas the strategies that are outlined are how we're going to get there or what we're going to do. I for one don't want to have performance measures which just count activity. I want performance measures which measure a result. Sometimes that's difficult to get to, and I've been a champion of trying to find ways of doing performance measures that do both quantitative as well as qualitative analysis, which is also a difficult thing to get to. I think it's very important that we do that.

Now, in doing that, we always have to of course be consistent with past practice because the Auditor General and others want to see a longitudinal analysis process, so that sometimes results in counting what we've always counted instead of looking at what's important.

I'm always open to ideas and suggestions about how we can better measure performance. I think that's something that we need to do, but I don't want to fall into the trap of counting the things that are easy to count. What we're looking at in goal 2, which are the ones that you were referencing: those are really satisfaction measures. Yes, that's a soft measure. You're basically saying: how well have we achieved our goal of including parents and students in the education process and making them feel valued? That's important because one of the outcomes of success pieces, which I borrowed from Finland, is that I would be happy as a measure of success if students said: I'm doing well in school, and I'm very happy to be there. Those are the two important measures because we know that a student will be more successful if they are engaged when they go, and they're going to be engaged if they're happy, if they're in a safe, caring, and respectful environment, those sorts of pieces.

I'm always interested in looking at better ways to measure, so any suggestions you might have in that area I'd be happy to engage in a discussion on. I would say that while the business plan has slimmed down, the broader selection of performance measures is still available, I believe, on our website. We're always interested in putting out that information and being tested against it ourselves. There's no shortage of information, I don't think, but if there are other things that people want reports on, we're happy to look at that as long as it is a value-add, as long as the cost of getting the information is outweighed by the value of the information. I think that in the general sense I would stop there on that.

What I want to say in answer to the previous question, because it's part and parcel of what you're talking about to a certain extent, is that there are different methods of assessment in the school. While we use in our performance measures the PAT results, that's because PATs are really intended more to measure the system than the individual student. That progress of student learning, which the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere was asking about, is really a classroom assessment, a very important piece but a classroom assessment piece. It's very difficult to do a system-wide assessment that measures a student's progress from where they are to where they can be or where they can get to. That is very important, and it's necessary for the classroom, but I would jump from that to say that that's why you cannot use the PAT results to measure a school or rank schools or measure the effectiveness of a teacher because it doesn't measure that.

Ms Notley: No. I definitely agree. I think we've had conversations in the past that the PAT is not terribly helpful. Of course, we have an outstanding motion, I believe, in this House where the majority of this House recommended that the grade 3 PAT be eliminated. We haven't gotten there yet. Notwithstanding the so-called predictive value of it with respect to the individual child, since we've just talked about how it's not really about the individual child, it seems to be a little bit conflicting.

I wanted to ask in terms of performance measures and, in particular, about setting the direction. I did flip through your annual report and through some of the stuff on the website, and I do understand that you have other ways of measuring performance, but one of the things I was quite concerned about – we've talked in the past about dropout rates, high school completion rates. We know that, generally speaking, that's an issue and that the ministry has dedicated some resources to try and bring up those numbers. That's great, but I was quite concerned to see, of course, that those numbers exclude students who are coded with severe disabilities. They're not part of those numbers.

Then I flipped through to see: well, what are we doing? What is your annual report saying about children with severe disabilities? I see that there's been a recent introduction of some form of completion certificate that has been given to a few students, but I have to tell you that I don't see that as a performance measure. I see that as something that you may be able to give to a few students, but quite frankly I think the expectation should be that many children with severe disabilities should still be graduating from the typical program.

The issue around accommodating special needs is to get them to the same outcomes that everyone else is getting to and to do that successfully. It's not about coming up, moving the goalposts for them, or, you know, taking them out of the game altogether and not including their stats when we look at how the game and the teams are doing. I am concerned, then, that you don't have completion rates for children with severe disabilities or moderate to mild disabilities in there as a performance measure, and I wonder if you can speak to that.

The other thing that I will just get to, then, is that you mentioned the reprofiling for moderately and mildly disabled children, but of course with the severely disabled children, while we're waiting around for setting the directions, where we don't really have any clear performance measures for getting anywhere with that, we do not have their increased numbers recognized, nor do we have the amount of money per child having changed since 2008 for those kids with severe disabilities.

So we have the scenario, say, for instance, where in Edmonton we've had the number of children with severe disabilities increase roughly 10 per cent, but there's been no funding provided to accommodate that, and at the same time the amount per child has not gone up either to keep up with inflation. So in a place like Edmonton we're looking at a real cut to children with severe disabilities over the last three years of roughly 20 per cent. That's just going to grow every year that we have everything on hold while we're waiting for this amorphous setting the direction process to work its way through. I'll get into my concerns about setting the direction, generally, in the future.

I'm wondering if you could talk about the performance measures for successfully assisting children with severe disabilities effectively through the system, where they graduate with the same kind of capacity as typical kids, and then also whether you can talk about how much longer we can expect to see this freeze in place for these kids while we're dealing with this amorphous and moving deadline around setting the direction.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you. Mr. Chairman, some very important discussion points in all of that. There are a lot of things to be responded to. First of all, we have increased our budget in that area by $12 million, and the working group will work on how we allocate that to both implement the process but also to recognize those areas where there's a special need. We've always said to school boards that if they have a growth in their severely disabled student population, they can apply for an adjustment in their grants. We had one last year that applied for that adjustment. Now, of course, the problem with that is that they would have to show that this is an increase over what they were appropriately funded for. That was what got the whole process started. The audit that was done showed that we were funding more students than actually fit the policy profile, which obviously didn't work. That's not to say that there aren't students with special needs. That's why we got into this whole redesign process.

Setting the direction. One of the outstanding issues that they're working on is exactly the accountability framework. How do you do an appropriate assessment and performance measure relative to that? Of course, by the very definition of severe special needs, if it's a physical disability, you can expect that a child might be able to complete a normal program and graduate normally, at normal standards. If it's some other capacity issue, you're not going to achieve that in some circumstances. All students are included in the statistics. We just don't do a subset to pull out and specifically identify special needs because how would you categorize them? Would you categorize them just as severe special needs, or do you start making differences for varieties of special needs? That's one of the realities.

We need to personalize the education program to each child to make sure that every child can maximize their potential. Absolutely. But what we should recognize is that not every child is going to jump over the same bar. It doesn't matter where they are, whether they have special needs or not. It's moving from where they are to where they can be.

There's no question that we need to have some way of having performance measures which suggest what success rates we're having, how we're performing, and what we're doing. That is part of the work in progress.

Ms Notley: Do you see that coming this year?

Mr. Hancock: I see the new funding formula coming this year. I see our wraparound services piece. How do we equitably make sure that there's access to the support resources that are needed? Coming this year we have programs being developed now and some being piloted with respect to learning coaches to build capacity in the systems. We've built some support resources. A lot of this is coming together. I see this year as the year where we actually hit the ground in a more comprehensive way. Whether we'll have the performance measure this year? That one might be another year or so in the making.

Ms Notley: Well, now, those are interesting comments. I mean, I understand, of course, the perspective of the ministry that there were severe special-needs kids who were receiving funding who weren't entitled. But as we discussed way back when that happened, my view is that it wasn't that those kids weren't entitled; it was that the resources that were required in order for the staff in your school system to do the paperwork weren't being adequately provided.

You weren't not seeing kids; you just weren't seeing enough resources to have those forms filled out. The fact of the matter is that those kids are there – they were there; they still are there – but the resources in the system are simply not adequate to ensure adequate levels if IPPs and all the various forms that have to be on the file in order to meet your standards to say that that child is special needs. I'm all fine with those standards. That's great. That actually results in perhaps more professionalism, more accountability, more research-based mechanisms for supporting those kids with special needs, but the fact of the matter is that we came up with these grand ideas of what we wanted the school system to provide to the ministry to justify the funding, but we never gave them enough training or support to do it.

I can tell you that I have personally observed as an MLA and through various relationships enough scenarios where it's just not possible for that stuff to be done in the classroom by the people that you were expecting to do it. That's why that problem arose, not because those kids weren't there. Just to be very clear, those kids are there, and most of them are not getting the support they need right now. It's just that you never had the resources for that information to be provided.

The other thing that I'm saying – you're talking about including them in this test, but the problem is whether you need to change the bar, as you say, for some kids with special needs or not. Right now what's happening is that severe kids are not part of your stats. They're not part of your stats in terms of your dropout rate. They're not part of your stats in terms of your completion rate. The fact of the matter is that whether a child with, say, not a physical disability but a mental or emotional disability may well need 14 years and extra support, it doesn't mean that that child will not necessarily graduate with, you know, an 85 per cent and a complete ability to transition to university. It just means that they need to do it in a different way. But you're never going to get at that if you don't start measuring it. I suggest that you can't go any further until you start doing that.

You talked about the $12 million. My understanding is that the $12 million is not designed to go to any of the actual front-line provision of supports to special-needs kids but that, rather, it's the beginning money to try and transition the setting the directions process. You mentioned in your opening comments that the sort of particulars around how that $12 million would be spent are just still being rolled out, that we don't have the details around that. So I'm thinking, obviously, because here we are talking about the budget, that we need to have more information about exactly what you think your plans will be with respect to how that $12 million would be spent.

You talked about capacity building, for example. Now, I think that's a fundamental feature of setting the direction. I think that's where the program is probably going to fail again. I looked at what you're talking about thus far for capacity building. I read the stuff about the learning coaches and the new learning tools and stuff. All that stuff gets you about 20 per cent of the way, and it still leaves you with this big vacuum in terms of the inability of most professionals within the system right now to bring the level of expertise required in order to provide the support that is needed. The minister is shaking his head. You just haven't been in the classrooms that I've been in. Trust me. I have seen it, and I have seen the inability, the genuine attempts but the professional lack of knowledge to address these issues.

So my concern is: how is that $12 million going to be spent? How are you going to deal with the fact that most teachers right now get about one class on special needs. They don't get any classes on how to differentiate and how to structure a different learning curriculum or lesson plan or regime for particular special needs at this point, and you don't have that capacity in there right now. I'm wondering if you can answer that.

I can tell that I'm going to run out of time, so I'll ask one more question. A constituent of mine brought me a document that had been prepared by the regional psychologist and a speech path, I think, about the learning plan for their child, and they'd made a number of recommendations. They said that it was quite amusing because it was not possible to actually meet many of those recommendations because the resources weren't available. But I found it very interesting because – and she showed it to me – one of them said that for this child to succeed in inclusion, which they could, the class size needed to be smaller, and that child is going into grade 7.

I want to know what you think is the systemic outcome of your deciding that there's no difference in learning outcomes for kids older than grade 3 based on class size when, in fact, there clearly is a difference in learning outcome for special-needs kids who are included. Class size does matter to them. Are you not on the verge of making sort of a systemically inadvertent, adversely impacting discriminatory statement there by saying that there is no impact? Did you test what the impact was on special-needs kids who were being included? The professionals in the system say that it does matter.

The Chair: That 20 minutes has terminated.

The next 20 minutes is for the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Do you want to combine the 20 minutes?

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. We'll combine the 20 minutes, and I'm actually going to give the minister an opportunity to get a word in edgewise.

The Chair: Okay. Let's combine the 20 minutes, then.

Mr. Taylor: Do you prefer to do the 10 and 10?

Mr. Hancock: That's fine. Back and forth is great, just as long as you stop every now and then.

Mr. Taylor: Yeah. I will.

I'm going to pick up with goal 1, success for every student, and I'm going to look at goal 2, transformed education through collaboration. Goal 2.1 is to develop the education act, regulations and policies. I'm going to start out by asking the minister: is there a timeline for the release of the education act? Are we going to see it this session? Does this budget reflect the priorities of the education act? Will the education act shift any budget priorities? I'll start there. Brief answers, please, because I'd like to cover a lot of ground with you if we could.

Mr. Hancock: I'm anticipating that the education act will be introduced in the House before the end of April, that it will be introduced as a continuing part of our generative dialogue – in other words, introduced for discussion – and that we won't be passing it this session. The budget reflects the collaborative approach that we've engaged in with school boards and the approach that we've had with Inspiring Education, so the budget reflects, in my view, the approaches that we're taking in the education act.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much for that.

Action on Inclusion. Now, I'm trying to get a handle on how much of a reality that is. We've been told that, you know, the first changes will begin to be put in place this September in a limited number of school communities and will focus on helping people and particularly educators understand what they can do to support student success in inclusive environments. This is often referred to as building capacity. We're told that these changes will be well communicated and will ensure that we have time to learn from these first communities before we move to a province-wide implementation.

I've also been told by others, by constituents, by other sources, that some school boards are implementing this this September on a system-wide basis. I'm given to understand that whether this is part of the new design with Action on Inclusion or whether it's a result of the tight budget this year, it's going to result in a number of cases where three or four different educational specialists may be rolled into one, and the end result will be fewer of those specialists in each school. I'd like the minister's comments on that, please.

Mr. Hancock: Well, first of all, Action on Inclusion is not a one-size-fits-all piece. It's an approach to life. Every child is valued. Every child should be included. Every child should have the opportunity to maximize their potential. When you start with that, some school boards and some schools have been doing an excellent job already on inclusion; others not so much.

Then you build some realities around that. There has to be capacity. We have an agreement with the deans of education, for example, with respect to working on what skills every teacher needs to have when they graduate from university. One of the areas that we need to do more work on is not making every teacher an expert on every aspect of every disability, but every teacher needs to have a fundamental understanding of inclusive education and how to recognize what they need with respect to a particular student. So there's work to happen there.

We need, then, the backup resources in terms of how you assist a teacher who's faced with a student with a particular ability or disability and how you provide support so that they have a professional community, a professional network that they can share with, that they have resources that they can draw upon. Some of that is also being piloted on the ground with respect to how you work in a school with respect to a learning coach perhaps or a professional who's focused on how a particular group of students can be included in various classrooms in various ways. So there's a lot of work that's done in terms of support. There's no magic button where you just flip a switch, and now we're moving to Action on Inclusion. Action on Inclusion is a philosophy, a direction that values every student, and then you have to support it with the appropriate resources.

When you talk about trying to roll resources together, we do not have enough speech pathologists and psychologists and other people to assist, so it's not about eliminating some of them or combining some of them. What it's really about is taking the fact that we have various pots of money or sources of money, whether it's ESHIP or some other place, and saying that we really need to focus all of this on a regional level to be able to maximize the availability and the utilization of the resources we have and then increase those resources, try and get more of the types of people that we need to have to support students and their teachers in their learning environments. So we're building a longer term approach.

Now, you say that some school boards have moved to inclusion. I hope that all school boards have engaged in an inclusive education process which says that every student that's entrusted to their care is treated fairly and reasonably in a reasonable learning environment. It's not about placement because you need the teachers and the schools and the learning professionals and the health professionals working with the parents to determine what kind of programming is appropriate for a particular student. The fact that they all need to be included and need to have an opportunity to maximize their potential is the overarching piece to it.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. So, you know, if I'm the parent of a learning challenged, disabled kid, whatever the level or scope or type of disability is – put that in plain English for me – what does this mean to my kid? What does this mean to my kid starting this September?

Mr. Hancock: Well, you should show up at the school that you want your child to go to. You should be looking at the various options in terms of your understanding of your child's needs. Speak with the principal and the administration and the teachers at the school and say: how do my child's needs fit into what you're doing, and how are you going to be able to adapt what you're doing to support my child's needs? You need to be talking to them about what the educational programming for your child is and what supports they need to have and how we can amass those supports.

I can take you into schools – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was just depressing me something fierce; you live in a very depressing world. I've been in some really great schools with really great leadership and really great teachers who are actually doing this on a day-to-day basis, and they're doing it with exactly the same resources that every other school gets, so it can be done. It can be done well if you have the right approach and attitude to it.

If I was a parent of a special-needs student, I'd be looking to say: where is my child going to do their best? And if I want my child to go to my local school, depending on what their ability is and what their needs are, I'm going to be looking to say: how are you going to make sure that my child can be included in this school environment and make it possible for them to participate in physical education or in French or in social studies or in those programs? How are we going to do it together?

Mr. Taylor: Okay. You just said that there are some phenomenal schools in this province in terms of getting it around Action on Inclusion and implementing it and putting it into practice on the ground, and then you've told me as the hypothetical parent of a disabled kid that I need to go talk to my local school, my neighbourhood school, my community school and ask the principal, ask the teachers: how are you going to accommodate my kid starting this September? I think that it's a fair assumption, based on what the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said, that while there may be some very excellent schools in the system – and I don't argue that for a moment – there are going to be some schools, perhaps the majority of schools, where the answer to my questions as the hypothetical parent are: we don't know yet.

So then what am I supposed to do? Am I supposed to schlep all around the region trying to find a school that does? And then I'm supposed to figure out how to get my kid from home to that school on the other side of town because that's the one that best meets his or her needs? I mean, to my way of thinking, that's a pretty big stretch in terms of meeting the principles and the intentions of Action on Inclusion where every student is successful and every student is included. So I'd like you to comment on that, please.

I'd also like you to comment on whether this notion that we have one inclusive education system where each student is successful, where each student is included, whether that also extends to the 25 students out of the 33 in the classroom who are just ordinary, just average, nothing special, quote, unquote – and don't try and riff off my use of the word special – about them. They're neither gifted nor learning challenged nor physically or developmentally disabled. They're the type of student whose brain is precisely wired for a traditional academic education, so it really wouldn't matter what you did to them in school or did for them in school, they'd be jazzed by it.

That describes my daughter. She loved everything about public education from the moment she hit kindergarten until the moment she graduated grade 12. My son, on the other hand, didn't like a thing about education until he got out of the system and went to university. I mean, every kid is different, and you're trying to meet the needs of every child. Are the so-called ordinary, unexceptional, if I can use that word, children included in that mandate, and how are you going to meet that?

Mr. Hancock: Well, of course, if every child is included, those children are included. One of the things we can expect from teachers as professionals is that they will be able to differentiate their instruction based on the students that come to their classroom. In order to do that successfully, first of all, they have to be passionate about what they're doing. Secondly, they have to have a good preservice education program which equips them with the skills to be able to do that. Thirdly, they have to be inducted into the teaching process appropriately, and we don't always do that well. Fourthly, they have to have access to ongoing professional development, the support of fellow professionals, the support of the system to be able to enable them to continue to remain current, passionate, and capable of dealing with whatever children come before them. But we can expect them to differentiate their instruction because they are entrusted with a number of children, and that will be more or less difficult depending on where they are and what the makeup of their class is.

My son got started teaching in a small community in northern Alberta, which happens to be the one that I graduated from, and he had, I suppose, the good fortune to have what I would call a homogeneous classroom. All of the children in that classroom came from the same background and the same community, you know, had the same sort of cultural basis. However, they didn't all have the same abilities, and you still had to be able to adjust your curriculum and adjust your teaching based on the individual needs of the child.

That's what a professional teacher can be expected to do. What we have to try and do is create a climate where they can do that and be successful in doing that and are supported in doing that with time, with resources, and with supports for those exceptional children, whether they are exceptionally bright or whether they have an exceptional problem or whether we have difficulty finding what it is that gets them excited about coming to school every day. That's the trick, and that's the process that we need to go through. All of that has to be done in an atmosphere where you have to allocate scarce resources.

Mr. Taylor: So how far along towards the ultimate goal in Action on Inclusion would you say we are system-wide today? Not in the great schools that already get it and are already doing it, not in the schools that have been tasked with piloting it, but system-wide are we 10 per cent, 20 per cent, 30 per cent along the road to the goal of Action on Inclusion? Give me some sense of that, and give me some sense, please, of how long, how many years you see it taking until Action on Inclusion is real and practical and on the ground for every student in every school, public and Catholic, charter, private, francophone, designated special education private school, home education program in the province. How many years?

Mr. Hancock: That would be almost impossible to even speculate on, but I can say this: we are a long way from perfect. I know from my own experience in terms of being an MLA advocating for parents that you can walk into a school and have a discussion, and you can define schools where they're doing an excellent job. You can find other schools where you basically say that if you were that parent that you were talking about before, you know, you probably should drive a few more blocks.

What we need to try and do as a system is create both the philosophy and the atmosphere that value every student and say that it's our job as a system to make sure that every student has a place where they can be included and where they can move from where they are to where they can be and then support that with learning resources, with health resources, with family resources to be able to make that happen, whether it's wraparound services, whether it's mental health capacity building, whether it's support for addictions and mental health, whether it's, you know, instructional equipment. There are a number of different ways to do it. How far are we along on that continuum? I would suggest we've got a long way to go, but I would hesitate to hazard a guess at the level.

Now, having said that, I think I would say that every public school board across the province has engaged, has embraced the concept. We have a great commitment within government between departments, we've spent a lot of time aligning departments to make sure that we're all working to the same direction, we have a great alignment with the professionals across the system, and we're working on models that can be adapted to local situations to provide support resources. There's a lot of really good work, there's a lot of capacity in there, but we're a long way from perfect.

Mr. Taylor: In the meantime you've already said that we're short of speech pathologists, that we're short of psychologists, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. We're in tight budget times, and depending on the school district, they may be able to more or less hold the line on where they're at with those specialists, or they may be laying some off. I'd like you to comment if you could, please, on this notion.

No matter how many or how few of these specialists we have, unless we have enough that we can designate them to every school in every system – and we're a long, long way from that – you're going to have a system where, if you have to share a psychologist or any kind of educational specialist like that among a number of schools within the region, some schools by virtue of their demographic makeup, by virtue of their socioeconomic makeup, by virtue of just the way the dice fell are going to consume more of that specialist's time than others.

If spread around a dozen schools, let's say, specialists are going to spend the bulk of their time in three or four of those schools and hardly ever darken the door of the schools with the least demand for their services. It's a given, I think, that there's going to be some need for their services in every school in the region, every school in the system.

With scarce resources how are we going to make sure that in a school in an upper-middle-class neighbourhood in Calgary or Edmonton, where the school council is active and the PTA is massively successful at fundraising and there are a lot of extras, financially at least, and where most of the kids are doing at least fair to middling if not very well, the few kids in those schools who have needs of whatever sort aren't falling through the cracks because the resource officers, the specialists, the professionals that they need are tied up on the other side of town in another school, where socioeconomic conditions are not nearly as good and where there's a higher school population of students with obvious needs? How are the ones with the less obvious needs going to be captured by the system and properly served?

Mr. Hancock: Very difficult concepts, obviously. First of all, these specialists are not normally school based. They're normally region or district based. The key is how you do an appropriate allocation of resources. The critical piece, from my perspective, from a layperson's perspective – and I've seen it in action – is where you get the right special-needs co-ordinator, teacher, whatever you want to call them, in a school. I've seen some exceptional ones, who do a great job of understanding their students, of understanding and working with parents – and sometimes parents can be quite difficult because they've had to advocate so strongly over a period of time – in terms of what the child needs and then being able to work within the district resources in terms of how to access the resources that are necessary.

That's always problematic – there's no question about that – and we need to be able to build a stronger capacity to provide those support resources. But the critical piece is at the core of the learning team at a school with the principal, the special-needs co-ordinator, whoever is designated to that post, and the teachers involved in terms of how they're going to provide appropriate programming, bring in the support resources, whether it's a need for a particular type of computer or a piece of equipment or whether it's a speech pathologist or whether it's some other professional supports. Quite frankly, that is a comprehensive thing, and in the places that I've seen it most effectively used, it revolves around the teacher and the administration and the school being open and willing to work with parents and being willing to put that together and make that work.

What do we need to do? We need to make sure that there are more teachers equipped to do that. One of the teachers that won an Edwin Parr award last year from the Alberta School Boards Association taught in Calgary 26 students with IPP, and she did a phenomenal job. Why? Because she was equipped with her training, with her passion, and with her direction to be there and do that. If we can do that across the province, we will serve those students extremely well.

The Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, you have 20 minutes with the minister. Do you want to combine or have 10 minutes each?

Mr. Bhullar: I think we can combine. I trust the minister will be factual with his responses but understand that I need to be generous with my time.

The Chair: All right, so the combined 20 minutes back and forth. Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Minister, thank you very much. Thank you for everything you do in this province for education. Although we at the present time may face challenges with respect to budgets, let us not forget that we are still a province that, quite frankly, leads the world in public education. Alberta ranks amongst the best in the world in public education, and I think, quite frankly, not enough Albertans know this point.

Minister, I'm going to ask a couple of questions just relating to budgetary issues, specifically around Calgary. From there I would like to diverge into some bigger-picture items around education as a whole.

The first question I have. I believe that there is a nearly 50 per cent decline in funding in something that is, I guess, a cost of purchasing adjustment. I believe that that funding was at some point or another provided to deal with inflationary problems in some school jurisdictions. Nearly $6 million is reduced in this area. My question is: being that we don't currently live in those inflationary times, what's the need for a cost purchasing adjustment anyway?

Mr. Hancock: That's a good question. When we looked at the fact that we needed to find some ways to be more fiscally prudent with respect to our budget, we looked at the various grants and said: "Are the targeted grants performing? Are they doing what they were intended to do?" Relative cost of purchasing was brought in a number of years ago in an attempt to recognize that there were differential costs around the province. Some places were higher cost places to operate than others.

When we looked at this, it became apparent to me that our relative cost of purchase analysis was focusing on what might be called market-basket measures with respect to living. Most school boards spend most of their money on salaries. If there's a differential cost between school boards, most of that is in their salary grid. It's not what's measured by the relative cost of purchasing. So to adjust the budgets based on the relative cost of purchasing adjustment, which measures a market-basket measure of, you know, the price of coffee and other things like that, the price of housing, isn't really an accurate reflection of the differential costs, if there are any, among the school districts.

Now, having said that, there's a northern allowance, which reflects that northern constituencies above I forget which parallel have some extra costs due to their distance, and there's a Fort McMurray living allowance adjustment. With the relative cost of purchase, which actually for Calgary was a $6 million adjustment, you have to say: well, why would the Calgary board of education get an extra $6 million on that when the bulk of their costs are really grid related?

5:10

In fact, one of their other cost pressures is the $10 million in grid movement this year, which means that their cost of teachers has actually gone down because their older teachers have retired, and they've got a lot of new teachers on the front end of the grid. In that theory, their cost of professionals, one might argue – and I don't know the facts on this – that they actually have a lower cost because one of the cost pressures they have is grid movement. If they had higher end teachers, older teachers, they wouldn't have a grid movement cost, but they'd have the higher cost teachers.

So the relative cost of purchasing, to my mind, didn't accomplish what was intended, set out, and actually did differential funding for school boards on an unfair basis.

Mr. Bhullar: Well, in that case, Minister, you reduced it by 50 per cent. Why not eliminate that completely and reinstate the class size initiative for grades 4 to 6? I think the class size initiative is something that we as Albertans shall be very proud of. It's something that shows our commitment to public education and excellence in public education, not just satisfactory public education but absolute excellence in public education. So instead of a cost-purchasing adjustment, put that money into the class size. Let's bump that up.

Mr. Hancock: Well, yes, we're taking that, but because it's such a significant adjustment, we didn't want to get rid of it all in one year, so we're taking it out in two years. That money will disappear next year unless some change happens. My anticipation is that that money will disappear next year.

What we've done on class sizes is maintained the amount of money, just changed the way we distribute the money. Actually, the overall class size initiative budget has gone up because we've put an increased amount in for growth. Then we just realigned the funds to deal with the areas where we anticipate there'll be year-over-year growth pressures at the K to 3 levels for now and where the data shows it does the most good.

One could argue: well, put more money into the class size initiative. One could argue: put more money into the per-student per capita grant. The relative cost of purchasing grant: when we looked at the targeted grants, the six that we dealt with, other than AISI there's a strong rationale for saying that they're not accomplishing what they were set out to do.

If we're saying to school boards, "As you analyze your budget, look for value gains; are you doing something that makes sense?" in each of those cases I can say that those grants aren't accomplishing what they were set out to do. It doesn't mean that we might not have to look at some other way of doing that, and on that I would look at the enhanced ESL, for example, to say that we still have some issues relative to certain sectors of immigrant populations coming into the system. But what we know is that the enhanced ESL grant wasn't really attacking that problem, which is what it was set up to do.

Mr. Bhullar: Minister, what levers do you have as minister to minimize the effects of Budget 2011 on students in the classroom? What levers do you have to target reductions in specific areas that do not affect students in the classroom?

Mr. Hancock: Virtually none. There's no magic wand. Most of our budget goes out to school boards; most of their budget goes to salaries. If there's a net reduction or a small increase in their budget and it's not sufficient to meet the increase that's required under the contract, it will impact in certain ways. We have to prevail upon school boards to be open and accountable to their publics and then be able to justify every area of their spending and ask them to focus on making sure that the highest priority is supporting student learning.

Now, you can justify supporting student learning in a number of different ways, and I think that it should be open to a school board to say: we need to have this particular group of consultants, for example, to do this because that's going to enhance student learning. That's the contract between them and the parents in their area and their community. Once we provide them with the money, it's inappropriate for me to tell them how to allocate those dollars.

There's very little funding in the budget that goes to a school board which they have to use precisely for the reason for which it was given. Whether it's an ESL grant or an aboriginal student grant or any other grant, it's a way of allocating resources to recognize the demographics, but they get to make the judgment call in terms of how to allocate those budgets in the best interests of their students.

Mr. Bhullar: I get from that that we provide funding to school boards in defined categories; however, the way they spend those dollars is completely up to them. The categories that we allocate money in are not necessarily the way that those dollars are spent at a local level. I see a nod.

Mr. Hancock: That's correct, other than the class size initiative, which they have to demonstrate is going to class size, and the AISI funding, which they have to justify in terms of what they're doing in AISI. But even in that, there is a lot of capacity to do various things. We don't tell them what to do, but they have to show how it's going to their applied research, their AISI programming. Other than that and capital dollars, IMR dollars and those sorts of things, it's a funding model which tries to recognize the complexities of the demographics, not one which we audit against to say: are you using all the dollars in any specific area?

Mr. Bhullar: Do we in fact have an administration cap or a head-quarters spending cap? Do we have a limit on what any particular school jurisdiction is allowed to spend on administration costs or headquarter costs?

Mr. Hancock: Not specifically headquarter costs, but the guidelines for urban boards is 4 per cent on administration and for rural boards up to 6 per cent on administration, recognizing that there may be exceptional costs that they incur due to distance or travel or those sorts of pieces.

There are two essential areas within that. One is administrative building purposes and those sorts of things. Another is the types of support resources that can be charged to administration.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Minister.

I've met with many, many constituents and, quite frankly, just folks all over Calgary on this issue, and I just hope that the Calgary board of education is able to find ways to deal with their budget issues without affecting the classrooms. I sincerely hope that they're able to make the case for any specific actions that are taken that affect the classroom. I hope they're able to make the case to the public that all other avenues were pursued and exhausted before any action that affects the classroom has to be taken.

I'm going to shift gears here quite a bit. Sir, I think our students use textbooks from a very early age. When can our students, every student in Alberta, do away with physical textbooks and, instead of having a physical textbook, have an iPad, with all of that material on that electronic device?

Mr. Hancock: Just to finish off the last one, the two categories that I was thinking of were system administration and board governance. Those are the two areas that fit into that 4 per cent cap.

Interesting question. We had sort of nominally, I think, in the department been aiming at a 2015 time frame to say that we could have our resources on an electronic basis. That wasn't necessarily to equip every student with an iPad but that textbooks would become digital, essentially, as an option if not as a reality for students by 2015. We're probably going to be a little bit behind that kind of a curve because that takes resources, and we've had to cut back our budget to play a leadership role in the process.

The other thing that's important on that, though, is that we just finished what was called the eMerge one-to-one project, where 26 schools across the province had one or more classes with a one-to-one laptop program. The results, particularly in the elementary-junior high area, were phenomenal. Actually, at one point in time we were talking about how we could ramp that program up consistent with what you're talking about. Again, that requires resources, so the time frames will probably be extended a little bit.

One of the other things we need to look at is: how, then, do we enable people to bring their own digital devices into the learning process and use them that way, and then how do you compensate or create some equity for those people who perhaps don't have or don't have access to and that sort of thing? I think schools are doing, actually, a pretty favourable job of making sure that there are laptops available and that there are digital devices available. Many schools are very progressive about finding ways to fund laptops, and most schools are finding ways to have a learning contract with students to allow them to bring their own digital devices if they use them responsibly.

Mr. Bhullar: I think, Minister, the issue of resources is an issue we'll always face. I think it's quite conclusive that sustained budget increases are not sustainable. Year-after-year budget increases are not sustainable, and quite frankly I think we need to have a very serious conversation with the textbook lobby to say: "We're going to pull away from this. Give us the digital licences for this material so that we can start using electronic devices as opposed to, you know, physical textbooks." I think the money is within the system to move forth on this much sooner.

I don't think every single initiative we want to pursue is reliant on new money. Quite frankly, I'm sure you probably don't have the answers to this today, but I would ask: how much does the school board spend on textbooks per student from, let's say, K to 6 or from 7 to 9 and 10 to 12? I think that we can find some innovative ways to move forth on these projects much, much sooner without burdening the public purse. I think it just requires innovation, creativity, and being a little firm with the textbook lobby, Minister. I think we can most definitely pursue this if we have the ability to be firm with that textbook lobby. That's one piece.

The next piece, Minister, is: are provincial tests a productive instrument for the system overall? Our provincial tests must become a productive instrument for the individual student's learning. If we're going to have provincial testing in grade 3, when are we going to have a student-by-student analysis of that testing and then a student-by-student process to increase student outcomes based on that testing? I mean, it's wonderful that we identify a whole bunch of students that are likely to drop out in grade 12, but what are we going to do with that information? Every single child that drops out of grade 12 in Alberta is not just letting themselves and their families down. Quite frankly, it affects all of us as a society. Minister, that's the second piece.

I know we're running short on time, so I'd like to just get some of these questions out there.

Provincial testing and the link to competency. As you know, Minister, I passed Motion 508 in this House last year, actually, and that talked about innovative and competency-based learning, learning that has connections to the real world. That means a high school student having the capacity to take postsecondary courses while in high school. That means high school students having the capacity to connect with the real world and real-world learning opportunities while in high school.

We have to get education – that's K to 12 education and postsecondary education as well as all this trades training and the skills training areas – to stop working in silos. They must look at themselves as a continuum. If we are to achieve greater rates of postsecondary participation, then they must see kindergarten to postsecondary as a continuum. The strength of our province and our nation, quite frankly, relies on that, so I'd like to get your thoughts on that, Minister.

Then one more piece I'll throw out before I turn the floor over to you: teacher incentive. I know there are a lot out there that don't want to hear about teacher incentive, but, Minister, there are some teachers like somebody I know very well, who's working with a group of children that have a whole series of difficulties. She's able to bring them up sometimes two grade levels. These are the sorts of teachers that need to be rewarded, Minister, and I think our system needs to better reward teachers that produce results.

With that, I'll turn it over to you.

The Chair: Hon. minister, you have one minute and a half.

Mr. Hancock: One minute and a half.

Well, the learning resources centre: we buy down the price of the books by 25 per cent, so we fund about $5.5 million a year. That means school boards spend about $30 million a year, so $35 million a year on texts and resources. Now, the problem with that is, of course, that you can't just say: stop doing these ones; start doing these ones. There's a phase-in period that you have to work on. But I think that the point that you're making is a good one. We need to start doing a very comprehensive and intentional approach towards digital resources, and we could utilize some of the resources that are in the system to do that.

With respect to the connection between high school and community I think there's some very good work being done, at least in some schools, in some jurisdictions, in doing that, not just work experience programs but wraparound programs and connections. One of the things we've been encouraging is bringing the community in and bringing business in. Junior achievement, for example, does a wonderful job across the province in schools where they're encouraged to come in, and those are the types of connections and partnerships we need to create even more of. The idea that students are engaged is foundational to the learning profile.

With respect to teacher incentives that's always a difficult issue. The reality is that teachers, like every other professional, get most of their reward intrinsically because of what they do. They're not looking, necessarily, for extra pay, and they don't want to be singled out, but they do want to have the opportunity to do their best job and to have the time to do their best job. That's the way that in a normal system you can actually recognize some of that work more comprehensively, if we build the structure that allows that to happen.

The Chair: Thank you, Minister.

I have three hon. members on the list here: the hon. members for Calgary-Varsity, St. Albert, and Edmonton-Strathcona.

Hon. member, you have 20 minutes with the minister.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. A slightly different approach, Mr. Chair. I do want to have my 10 minutes, but I would prefer to get a number of statements on the record, and then the minister can refute or reply.

The Chair: You have your 10 minutes. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The premise that I'm operating under is that budgets are not bubbles. They're not just something that's created in a single year, that has no relationship to what happened prior or to what will happen as a result going forward. My concern with this year is the fact that we have seen AISI cut in half. Special programs, special initiatives, different types of innovative teaching have been severely handicapped by only half of the former funding going forward.

Likewise, I am very concerned that the extra funding for ESL has been cut, and I am very concerned – and this is an historical situation that the government can't seem to get beyond – with the ongoing freezing of funding to special education, which has been brought up by previous individuals. What is happening this year reminds me very much of what happened back in 1993, where teachers' jobs were very much on the line because the school boards were not receiving the funding. In fact, in 1993, Mr. Chair, that was the beginning of the 5 per cent cutbacks, and we haven't recovered as a system since those cutbacks were initiated.

I have a particularly interesting perspective in that I began teaching in the same year that Peter Lougheed formed the government that is now in its 40th year of operation, and over that time I have seen a number of changes in terms of local autonomy given to school boards and the decision-making process being diminished. This year in particular a number of school boards have been told that they are to use up, basically, what remains of their surpluses in order to protect the class size initiative, that began with the Learning Commission in 2003 but has never actually been realized in primary grades 1 to 3. Now because of a lack of funding – and I would question the legitimacy of the lack of funding with at least $7 billion still remaining in the stability fund or sustainability fund – I am suggesting, Mr. Chair, that these cuts are unnecessary and, as such, deliberate.

When we go back to the year before, which affects the budget we're looking at today, a decision was made to eventually uphold the weekly average earnings index but, in so doing, part of the five-year contractual obligations, the government has provided barely enough funding to cover the wage agreement. What has happened is that school boards are being faced with very tough choices in terms of allocating their funds. School boards because of the close proximity tend to try and protect the most vulnerable, and that's to their credit. When special education funding isn't provided to the extent that is required, they try and protect those students. They try and protect the ESL students. They try and protect, as I say, the most vulnerable students.

Now, last year because the Minister of Education at first refused to implement the new weekly index increase, he caused a tremendous amount of confusion for school boards. Eventually in July the money that had previously been promised came through, but having been a teacher for 34 years I know what happens in June. I have seen repeatedly the young, first-year, temporary contract teachers being let go. Mr. Chair, that's going to happen again this year. The first ones out the door are going to be the young, the new blood.

They're going to be going out the door and also the experienced teachers, who have said: "You know, I've got my 85 formula. I cannot take this any longer. Education is not valued to the extent that it should be, so I'm going, too." So you're losing the youth and the vitality, and you're also losing the age and experience. The two go together: the mentorship of the older teachers with the young teachers. It happens year after year after year that the temporary contract teachers, that should be moving on to first year or to second year and receiving tenure, are lost. A number of young people don't even make it past five years in teaching, so all the effort of the investment in their master's of teaching program is lost.

Now, we go back previously in terms of various agreements, and we get back to the Learning Commission. The Learning Commission, Mr. Chair, came as a result of a very bitter dispute between the Alberta Teachers' Association and the government of Alberta. It was a province-wide strike, but what happened with the Learning Commission provided some promise, the idea that there would be class sizes considered. Again, go back to 2003, and we still haven't hit those class size targets. This year they're in greater danger than they were prior to the Learning Commission.

The Learning Commission suggested that we have half-day junior kindergarten and that the government would fund full-day kindergarten. We know that all the research shows that the earlier we intervene in children's lives to provide them with educational supports, the sooner they develop literacy and numeracy skills, and the more likely they are to graduate. As I have mentioned as recently as today's question period, we continue to face a significant dropout rate in this province, or a failure to complete. In terms of that situation First Nations children are the largest group that's affected by the dropping out from school. Their dropout rate is very similar to English as a second language students who fail to realize the opportunities that an extended ESL and support program would provide.

Mr. Chair, go back to the considerations of the Learning Commission. During a period of strike when teachers were ordered back and an arbitrator was selected, part of the bullying techniques that we've talked so much about with regard to health care and the intimidation of doctors was applied to teachers. Teachers were prevented from, even in assembling, using the word "strike." They were not allowed to use the word "strike." This is the type of intimidation that teachers experienced.

When you intimidate teachers, that intimidation, that lack of support for education goes all the way down to the classroom. Teachers try and shield children from the experiences they've received, but the result is that if you don't have teachers who are feeling valued, then their ability to teach, no matter how well they can compartmentalize, is lost. So teachers are feeling a tremendous amount of strain.

Now, with regard to the Learning Commission and in terms of absolute intimidation and a change of attitude towards teaching, there was a dramatic shift in terms of intimidation in 1999. The minister of the time was Gary Mar.

The Chair: Hon. minister, you have 10 minutes to respond.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to start on that end point about intimidation. What absurdity. What world are you living in? Have you been in a school lately? Teachers are at the happiest point that teachers have been in a long time because they've been included in talking about what the future of education looks like, they've been included in discussions about how we support teachers in terms of induction, and they've been included in processes talking about how we do professional development better. We've never had a better relationship with either the ATA or the Alberta School Boards Association. I don't know what you're talking about in terms of intimidation. That's about the most absurd thing I've heard in a long, long, long, long time.

In fact, I've been out talking to people and talking with teachers. I was at a parent council meeting last night, Mr. Chairman, and half of the people there were teachers from that school. We were talking about the future of education. Nobody was raising issues about intimidation or issues about a lack of funding. We were talking excitedly about the future of education in the province.

This is the most absurd piece I've ever heard. I think the Liberals have done a good service to Albertans by changing critics, quite frankly. I mean, that's absurd.

You know, in terms of teacher value we've been working on and doing a lot on the question of teacher value. The hon. member raised the question of class sizes. He went back to the Learning Commission and said that we're not dealing with class sizes. Well, the facts would say otherwise. If you take a look across the board, the class size initiative has been met across the province in grades 4 to 6, grades 7 to 9, and grades 10 to 12. The one place that it hasn't been met is the place where it matters the most: K to 3. So we reprofiled the funding. We didn't take any money away; we added money to it. We reprofiled the funding to emphasize the fact that K to 3 is where it's most important.

Now, are there going to be challenges in class size this year? Absolutely there are, Mr. Chairman. As school boards deal with the fiscal realities that we're in and the funding that we've given them, which nets out some of the grants which, as I said, were targeted to achieve specific purposes – and from my perspective other than AISI we're not achieving those purposes – the bottom line is that it's all bottom line to a school board, so it's going to affect them. In my viewpoint, if they look at the resources judiciously, they should be able to still maintain the class size guidelines because there's room in those class size guidelines. Some of the classes are going to go up in size, no question about that. But they should be able to maintain the guidelines.

The class size initiative has not gone away. The class size guidelines have not gone away. The focus of making sure that we allocate resources to the right area to make sure we get the best value is what we've done. I would stand by that, and I would do it again. I think it's very, very important. Getting a good early start is most fundamental.

Still money in the sustainability fund. Well, yes, there's still money in the sustainability fund. If you look at the three-year plan, though, I mean, we're working our way out of the deficit over a time frame. The time frame was originally 2012. Now it might be 2013. Depending on what's happening these days, it can move back and forth. The point of it is that you can't just say: well, there's still money in the bank today; let's spend it all today. We have to look at this as a sustainable process, so you do have to look. As much as I don't particularly like it, it has to be part of a broad government agenda that balances the budget over time and makes sure that we've got the budget balanced by the time we run out of sustainability funds. That means we all have to be prudent, and we all have to be part of it.

Would I like to have an extra hundred million dollars in the budget so we didn't have to cut some of those other grants or so we could cut those grants but backstop them in other ways? Absolutely. But that's not the reality we live in today. That's not the reality. When the Wildrose came forward and said, "Well, we would have limited the Education budget to a 2.2 per cent increase," that's not the reality. I mean, can you imagine what you'd be hearing on the streets of Calgary today with that kind of a budget?

Mr. Anderson: You shouldn't have signed the contract.

Mr. Hancock: The hon. member says that we shouldn't have signed the contract. We signed a contract with teachers, and that has been a very good contract. It's allowed the opportunity to really look at the future of education and to move forward very aggressively with what kind of an education system we need in the future.

Yes, it was impacted by the change in the economy. Yes, we tried to work with teachers, and they were at the table working with us with respect to that last year of the contract. We could have achieved a very good result there and moved it out a couple of years, but that didn't result, so we'll live up to the contract. Over the next few years that will all work itself out. In the meantime we've got a situation where we've got some tough but not unmanageable fiscal realities. So for the hon. member to say that we should just dip into the sustainability fund for an extra, you know, hundred million dollars or $200 million belies the fact that this is a sustainable long-term plan, not jerking from day to day.

The hon. member indicated that last year I caused a whole bunch of problems for school boards because we didn't budget for the increase. It was very clear last year what was happening. In January of last year we were in arbitration because Statistics Canada changed the way that they were calculating average weekly earnings. We said: that change changes the contract. The arbitrator didn't agree with us because there was enough language in the contract for them to say: no, you specifically meant this table. Fine. We got that result, and we lived with that result.

In the meantime we brought a budget down, and we didn't budget for the increase because we were very much of the viewpoint that the contract had been frustrated by the change in calculation. However, the commitment we made to school boards was that they should budget on the 2.92 basis. I couldn't have been clearer in communicating that to school boards. The fact that they chose not to do that and then acted surprised when the 2.92 per cent came through in July really is not my fault, to be honest. I was very, very clear with them: "Budget on the basis that you will get the 2.92 per cent. I don't know whether you'll get it this year or next year, but you'll get it. That's our commitment." We made that commitment, and we'll live up to the commitment. And we did it. We did it faster than they thought.

Then there was all this shock and surprise and that we caused all sorts of discombobulation in the system. Well, your own Calgary Herald, which I don't necessarily always agree with, had an editorial that said exactly that. In about May or June of last year it said: the Minister of Education could not be clearer in what he's saying. So to suggest that we caused all sorts of problems last year is just living in a whole different world.

Haven't recovered from the cuts of the '90s. Mr. Chairman, from 2002-2003 to 2011-2012 there's been a 59 per cent increase in operating funding, a 63 per cent increase in overall funding. At the same time there's been a 3 per cent increase in the student population. I don't know what the cut was in '93-94. It might have been 10 per cent. It might have been 15 per cent. At the same time there was a salary rollback, that everybody agreed to, of 5 per cent. This has more than made up for the cuts that happened back then. In fact, don't take my word for it. The Learning Commission looked into it. They hired a former Deputy Provincial Treasurer, Al O'Brien, to do the analysis, and he came back with an analysis which said that the funding has more than been restored. So go back and do the research. I mean, I love a debate about education where we're going forward, but frankly you're better than that. In the past we've had a very good working relationship, and you've been able to raise issues of real import. This is not.

Now, in terms of your comments with respect to AISI I couldn't agree with you more. There's nothing that hurt me more than having to take 50 per cent out of the AISI fund. That AISI project is a world-leading project. We've had an analysis done of it. People from around the world are looking at it. It's the best targeted – in fact, it's the only target funding which really focuses on continuous improvement, so to cut back on it was a very, very difficult thing to do. If I could find any other way to do it, I would have found the other way to do it because I really value that program. Quite frankly, most teachers and most school boards value that project and use it well. In some parts of the province a number of schools boards have come together to use that very well. That is an excellent project.

However, the fiscal realities are fiscal realities. We were able to save the project, which is wonderful. We were able to say that this continues to have value, and we were able to look at the opportunity side of it. With every program there's a time when you should take a look and say that while the overall thing is great, while the overall analysis is great, let's look at the specifics and say: why is it that in some parts of our province it's not valued as much as others? Why is it that I've had teachers and colleagues and others in the community call and say that if you need to save money in Education, cut the AISI project? That means, to me, that it's not universally valued, and that means there's not universal engagement. So there is an opportunity to look at that and see how we can do it better. Sometimes tight fiscal times are when ingenuity comes in, and you really have to look at things.

Enhanced ESL. Every student, including ESL students, is funded with the basic per capita grant, and then ESL students are funded with an additional $1,155 grant. Every ESL student. A number of years ago there was an additional $405 put in as an enhanced ESL, and it was put in for a specific purpose, which I'd love to get into a little bit later.

The Chair: The next hon. member is the hon. Member for St. Albert. You have about eight minutes with the minister.

Mr. Allred: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to go back and forth with the minister if I could.

Mr. Minister, an earlier question asked by my colleague from Calgary-Montrose was with regard to innovation and the fact that education is unsustainable. I think that was the comment he made. I would certainly repeat that concern. Health care and education are taking up a larger and larger part of our budget year after year after year, and it's unsustainable. I guess my question with regard to that is that with all of the new technology that's coming into place, what kind of innovations are being made in education to reduce the cost?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, I guess I'd start out by saying that I don't think we should be apologizing too much for the fact that health and education use up the largest portion of the budget. There are no two more important things that a government can do for a society than engage in ensuring that people have an opportunity to be healthy, and more important than that, although I admit I am biased, is education. The trend line shows that health tracks with education and that education helps us build our economy. Education helps in so many ways to ensure that our children and our grandchildren can live and work in Alberta and trade out into the world. I don't apologize at all for the vast majority of public resources going into health and education.

Now, it does have to be sustainable, and we do have to make sure that we're tracking that and that we're not looking for unsustainable increases year over year over year. That means, quite frankly, that in a system where most of the money goes to people, increases in salaries for people have to track with inflation and not be leading. We now have our teaching professionals, I think, at a place where we can say that they're well paid and appropriately so, but now we have to take a look over the longer term at how we develop a process that makes sure that we track on that.

Ingenuity, innovation, doing things a new way are obviously important, but let's face it. Technology comes at a cost, and it's not an insignificant cost. You know that technology has to be evergreened faster and faster. There are always new ways of doing things. There's always more than can be done.

We have to be very cognizant that we're planning appropriately, that we're implementing appropriately, and we're very conscious of doing it on a value-driven basis. That means doing research, learning from the research, and understanding what has effect and what doesn't have effect. That's why if we get into, for example, a class size initiative discussion, we really have to look closely at that and say: we understand the overall impact of class size and how it's important because engagement with students is one of the most important things that can happen, and that can't happen if you've got a hundred students in front of you. It might not be able to happen if you've got 50 students in front of you. You've got a better chance at it if there are 40 or 30 and so on. But you also have to recognize that there's a value equation in there someplace. If we have to look at how we're employing our resources, we ought to look at the data and employ our resources in ways that we know will give us value.

Mr. Allred: I guess this isn't the place to get into a debate with you, but I must say that I disagree with a lot that you said. Surely, in every profession other than health care and education, technology is a way to reduce costs. Surely, there's some way with all of the innovation in new technology to reduce the class size ratio or reduce the cost somewhere in the system. I recognize that something like 80 per cent of your budget is taken up by salaries. No question about that.

I wish I had my notes from the meeting I had when the gentleman from Finland was here. They have certainly shown that a lot of our traditional principles are not applicable. They get more value for, I believe, shorter class times and things of that nature. I know that you have adopted and that you recognize a lot of the Finnish principles, but there's got to be a way to reduce the costs of education. As important as it is – and I don't disagree with you on that point – it cannot continue to take up more and more of our budget, or we won't have any money for anything else. We'll be the healthiest, best-educated people, and we'll have to stay home with nothing.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, if you're the healthiest, best-educated people, you can probably entertain yourself and build a good quality of life. But the reality is that you're right. I mean, we can't have unsustainable increases in costs in any department, whether it's health or education or anyplace else. We've got to look on a long-term basis at how we deal with the increasing pressures of complexity, the increasing pressures in terms of what people need to know, the increasing pressures of sparsity and distance, and how we provide technology to provide an equitable access to rural students, for example, all of those challenges, how we do that and still maintain a budget line that is sustainable, no more than increased in inflation and growth. That's a challenge. No question about that. But it's something that we have to aspire to.

As a government that is recognized as the most fiscally prudent government in the country if not in North America, you know, that's the goal that we have to maintain. Obviously, I would agree with you that technology has a value. Technology will help us in terms of improving both capacity and ability. It changes the pedagogy, and in some ways it will help us to save costs. For example, we can invest in Microsoft licensing or other types of licensing, cloud computing, that sort of thing, so that individual schools don't have to buy. We can license, as was talked about earlier, textbooks so individual schools don't have to buy. We can do some things using technology to really help us save on costs. We're investing in a provincial information system, which costs money to get up and running, but once we've got it up and running, it should save some costs longer term in terms of the amount of time and effort that goes into information sharing.

I agree with your premise that technology will help us, but technology is not going to replace our teachers. Technology will help our teachers do a broader, better job of touching each student, of expanding the learning opportunity for each and every student, and for moving from group think to individual learning processes.

The Chair: You have about one minute, hon. member.

Mr. Allred: One minute. Oh. A quick question. Maybe I should continue with this, but I won't. I'll leave it alone.

As you're aware, Mr. Minister, one of my pet peeves is financial literacy, or perhaps the lack of financial literacy, in the education system. I heard you today say that it was being taught in several different subjects: mathematics, social studies, and also the careers program in high school. I think that's different than your previous answers, where you've only concentrated on the careers course in high school, which I would say in a lot of schools is totally inadequate. It depends so much on the teacher. If the teacher doesn't know much about financial planning, et cetera, they just don't teach it. It gets a very little bit. I guess I would like to ask you: how much of your resources are concentrated on financial literacy? As you know, I feel that is very, very important to the development of every child, particularly at the very elementary levels and all the way through.

Mr. Hancock: We can't really identify for you a specific amount that's focused on it, but I can say that it's become an issue that's of importance to people, and we have focused on it more . . .

The Chair: Hon. minister, I hesitate to interrupt. The three hours for this business has been concluded. The Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress. We'll leave some minutes for the staff to leave the Chamber.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has under consideration resolutions for the Department of Education relating to the 2011-12 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2012, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Those in concurrence with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, please say no. The report is concurred with.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would seek unanimous consent of the House to continue with the estimates of Education for another three hours because we're having so much fun.

Failing that, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

The Deputy Speaker: Tonight we have the field policy committee on Agriculture and Rural Development, and that committee will be video streamed.

[Motion carried, the Assembly adjourned at 5:58 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 66 energetic young students from the Delwood elementary school. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mme Dorota Maslowski, Mme Andrea Sloat, and Mr. Don Henderson. Their parent helpers are Mrs. Katrina Huhtala, Mr. Jeff Melnyk, and Mrs. Cheryl Teo. I'd ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 58 bright and energetic students from Muir Lake school, which is situated in my constituency of Stony Plain. These students today are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Dodi McCann and Ms Debra Wayken and parent helpers Ms Joan Park, Ms Tammy Repchuk, Ms Tina Kostuik, Ms Edwina Baker, and Ms Pat Harrish. I would like to ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and welcome four outstanding students from Evergreen school in Drayton Valley. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Shelly Cloke, Mr. Jeff Crawford, and Mrs. Karen Haskell and parent helpers Mr. Pat English, Mrs. Chrystal Strocher, Mrs. Heather Nickle, and Mr. Steve Goodman. I would also like to congratulate Mrs. Cloke, their teacher, on having been recently recognized as a semifinalist for the excellence in teaching awards, a very deserving recognition for such an outstanding teacher. They'll be arriving at 2 p.m. I'll ask us to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to make this afternoon. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House three highly capable, fabulous people. They are the reason that I can focus on my work, whether I'm away from my constituency or when I'm not in the capital. First, Mr. Matt Pechey. He joined my office in Calgary last year. His past work experience includes working for the federal government and Mount Royal University. His experience and skill sets have greatly benefited my constituents, myself, and my office.

Then I have Mr. Ben Li, who has provided just excellent communications and research support to my office since 2008. He's about to embark on a new journey to Finland next week, where he will start his PhD in informatics. I'm also very pleased to have my legislative assistant here, Ms Shannon Greenfield-Emms, whom I share with my colleague here from Edmonton-Ellerslie. Shannon has been with the government of Alberta for almost 28 years, and she brings with her tremendous experience and support to our offices. I really, really appreciate the support I receive from these three individuals. I would like to ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House some of the postsecondary student leaders that I had the privilege to meet with this morning to discuss my private member's motion on postsecondary student funding. I have Mr. Chris Skappak, MD, PhD student from the University of Alberta; Ms Carol Neuman, executive director of Alberta Students' Executive Council; Steven Kwasny, president, Students' Association of Red Deer College and chair of Alberta Students' Executive Council; and Mrs. Tamara Korassa, VP labour, Graduate Students' Association of Alberta. They have already risen. Please give them the traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature my legislative assistant, Renee Reitsma, and a special guest visiting her this week, her mother, Teresa Reitsma. Mrs. Reitsma joins us today from Smithers, B.C. She is visiting our beautiful city with the Bulkley Valley Christian high school band and choir tour. The students attended the Edmonton Cantando Festival at the Winspear Centre and were privileged to participate in outstanding performances alongside professional musicians. Mrs. Reitsma has a keen interest in politics and is delighted to join us at the Legislature to learn more about the daily routine of the House and to visit our magnificent building. Renee and Teresa are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly officers and the board of directors of the Asian Christian Cultural Association of Alberta, or ACCAA centre: Reverend Dr. V. Singh; Mr. Sanjeev Singh, president; Mrs. Grace Burke, past president; Ms Roseline Richardson, treasurer; Mrs. Dorcas Singh, director. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly three people from Prairie Land school division that were here for meetings today. These dedicated individuals work on behalf of our wonderful children out there day in and day out. Today we have with us Duane Roy, the chair of the board; Wes Neumeier, the superintendent of schools; and Sharon Orum. I wish that they would rise, please, and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two special guests who join us in the public gallery. Wendy Proch and her nine-year-old daughter Ashton are here today to lend their support for the mandatory use of helmets when riding ATVs. Ashton was seriously injured in September of last year, when the ATV she was riding on flipped and pinned her and her older sister beneath it. Ashton suffered serious head injuries and spent eight days in PICU at the Stollery after being airlifted by STARS. Ashton's injuries could have been prevented had she been wearing a helmet. Ashton and her family are here today to watch this government legislate mandatory helmet laws to prevent injuries and save lives. Now I'll ask Wendy and Ashton to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour for me to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a class from yet another remarkable school in Edmonton-Riverview, which is blessed with many of them. This school is Meadowlark, and there are 25 students here. They finished a tour this morning. They spent the morning over at McKay Avenue school, the original, one of the early places of this Legislature. They're joined by five adults: two parents, Tanya Jiang and Heather-Jane Au; two student teachers, Kayla Oslanski and Tobi Ma; and their teacher, Armelle Mayert. I believe they're in the members' gallery. I would ask them, please, to rise and receive the warm welcome.

Thank you.

Organ Donor Week

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to recognize Organ Donor Week, which is April 17 to 24 this year.

Organ donation has always been an important issue for me. That's why I brought forward Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011. This legislation, which I'm happy to say passed in the House two days ago, is now awaiting royal assent. It gives Albertans the opportunity and encourages them to select yes, no, or undecided when obtaining their health care card. I'm proud to say that this Assembly is one of the first to support legislation on organ donation. I would like to thank all of you for your support on Bill 201.

Last night I was on Radio Punjab, 101.7 FM, speaking with host Jarnail Singh Basota about organ donation. Within minutes, Mr. Speaker, we had 10 callers wanting to donate and many more on hold. They were all excited about Bill 201. Albertans truly care about saving lives.

There was an article in the Calgary Herald today about organ and tissue donation. The article noted that there are approximately 440 people in Alberta waiting for transplants while there were only 34 eligible donors from Alberta last year. Such numbers highlight the need for and importance of organ donation. Too many Albertans, both young and old, have passed away because of too few donations.

Once we are no longer living, organ donation is the one last chance to help people. You can give continued life to someone in need. That's a very special gift.

I hope all members of the Assembly and all Albertans continue thinking and talking about organ donation all year long.

Mental Health Treatment Services for Children

Mr. Chase: Losing children. Last night at the invitation of the father of a 15-year-old girl who escaped the custody of her Children and Youth Services caseworker over two weeks ago and has yet to be apprehended, I attended a parent support group which meets in different locations throughout the region each Tuesday night. The PEP group, Parents Empowering Parents, facilitated by a probation officer, included an RCMP officer, who is also volunteering his time and expertise, as well as a diverse group of over 40 individuals consisting of parents, grandparents, recovering youth addicts, some attending by choice, others by court order, and their supporters.

For some it was their first meeting. Others were regular attendees. During the break I was approached by a number of parents anxious to share their children's tragic stories. Common themes of concern emerged such as the inability to report their child as a missing person because they were over 12; the revolving-door effect of short-term PCHADs, which frequently didn't result in secure apprehension, never mind assessment or necessary treatment; the long waiting list for a secure treatment facility; the failure to include or pass along previous family history, psychological assessments, and court intervention orders not only across ministries but internally within a ministry; and the overriding of parental rights by a child regardless of mental illness or addiction, which led one parent to worry that his young daughter was being abandoned to pedophiles, pimps, and pushers.

Another parent stated: "Our system does not work. I know because we started looking for help when our daughter was 12. She is now 18 and has finally agreed to go for treatment." With regard to PCHADs a third parent noted: "The legislation has been changed to provide 10 days from the former five days rehab. However, the powers that be are not providing 10 days of support." A fourth parent recounted the downward spiral of his painkiller-addicted son following a car accident. Numerous uncoordinated health interventions failed to prevent his suicide.

Alberta's most vulnerable children and their parents are far too frequently losing the battle.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Services for Chinese-Canadian Children

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The improving connections between the Chinese community and the Calgary and area child and family services authority steering committee was established by the Minister of Children and Youth Services to help address concerns raised by our Chinese parents whose children have disabilities.

The steering committee works hard to build relationships with the Chinese community and increase their capacity to work with family support for children with disabilities; to develop recommendations on policy, programs, and practices to improve service outcomes; and to remove barriers that limit the best possible support for children and their families. The overall outcome is increased cultural competency for staff and the Calgary child and family service authority. These successful approaches will be used in partnership with other cultural communities in the future.

The good news is that after months of foundational work a pilot project has begun with the hiring of a liaison worker from the Chinese community to work closely with FSCD staff and families in the community. Caseworkers are finding the community liaison worker helpful in helping them to increase their understanding of Chinese families and in assisting families with limited English as they now have a clearer understanding of the services and resources that they would need to meet the needs of the children with disabilities. Outreach efforts resulted in recruiting volunteer interpreters and aides for families. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the necessary forms can be difficult, and that process has now been made much easier.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a privilege for me to be a member of this important committee. On behalf of the community I thank the Minister of Children and Youth Services, area management and staff, the support and dedication of the Chinese parents, the Chinese Christian Mission of Canada, the Calgary Chinese Community Services Association, the Calgary Chinese Elderly Citizens' Association, and the staff from the Ministry of Culture and Community Spirit.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Climb and Run for Wilderness

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over 1,500 participants participated in the 20th annual AWA Climb and Run for Wilderness, which was held this past Saturday at the Calgary Tower. I was honoured to award the participants with the most climbs. Jane Ebbert recorded an impressive 23 ascents while Jonathan Heinz turned in a whopping 31 trips to the top.

The most experienced climbers were Nessie Hollicky, who will be a youthful 80 years of age on her next birthday, and Richard Guy, who is an energetic 94 years young, who won the Ward Neale memorial prize for the top fundraiser and has an award named after him. The prize for the most climbs by a senior 75 and over went to Bob McPherson, who's 81 years old and had three climbs, while the Phyllis Hart prize for a senior 75 and over, female, went to Val Scholefield, who celebrated seven summits.

Nuno Fragoso received the outstanding volunteer award, the best Wild Alberta Expo display went to the Ranchlands elementary school, and there were many winners in the mural painting competition. The Overends were named the top fundraising family. Sophia L'Heureux was the youngest climber, and Abigail Hadden was the Babe in a Backpack who raised the most funds.

Mr. Speaker, my wife, Jen, made the climb look easy, and our first-born son, Dawson, who just turned three, took every step of the 802 stairs by himself, and at the top he exclaimed: let's do it again, dad. Our youngest son, Evan, who's just 11 months old, hitched a ride with me this year, but I expect next year he'll be wanting to do the climb all by himself.

Mr. Speaker, I trust all members of the Assembly will join me in applauding all of the participants and organizers of the event.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Alberta Land Stewardship Legislation

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past decade our province has experienced extraordinary growth and prosperity. Between 2001 and 2006 we welcomed more than 315,000 new Albertans, and our population continues to increase by 60,000 each year. At this rate it is expected that within the next 15 to 20 years Alberta's population will reach 5 million. That is why it is important to establish a responsible plan to manage the future growth of our province.

Mr. Speaker, through regional plans we will be able to ensure that a balance is struck between economic growth, environmental responsibility, and community objectives. In drafting these plans, government representatives will continue to conduct extensive consultations with both stakeholders and the public, giving Albertans an opportunity to provide valuable input throughout the process.

Over the course of these consultations we heard concerns regarding the legislation and how it affects private property rights. We also heard a number of requests for clarification, and in response a review of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act was conducted. Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, is the result of this review and aims to clarify the original intent of the legislation, which is to plan for the future needs of Albertans while managing growth, protecting the environment, and respecting property rights.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have told us that they want to see us provide leadership in land-use planning, and the Alberta Land Stewardship Act achieves this goal. The proposed amendments take this legislation further by reaffirming this government's commitment to property rights, fair compensation, and public consultation. I am proud to see the government of Alberta taking these necessary steps to ensure that responsible land-use planning is done in a fair and transparent way.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Mohammed Al-Ghamdi, an orthopaedic surgeon from Grande Prairie, is unfortunately the latest victim of this government's culture of fear and intimidation. Dr. Al-Ghamdi had his privileges limited, which put his patients at risk. In his legal statement against the former health region and Alberta Health Services he states, quote: the health authorities' failure to provide operating time was accompanied by harassment, intimidation, and discrimination. End quote. To the minister. Dr. Al-Ghamdi's lawsuit was filed February 2010. How can the minister deny a culture of fear and intimidation continues to exist under this government?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, a statement of claim to state the obvious is not a statement of fact. The hon. member should know that. However, I don't find it unusual that disagreements occur in the medical profession, just like they do in other professions. I don't find it somewhat surprising at all that occasionally there would be claims one way or the other, but I can assure the House that when someone has his or her privileges limited, there must be another side to that story.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, does this minister see any connection between the thousands of physicians and other health professionals now calling for a public inquiry and speaking out against the government's culture of fear and intimidation? Any connection?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let's keep this under some sort of a perspective balance here. There are approximately 1.9 million visits to emergency departments per year. There are approximately 37.3 million medical services provided by outstanding doctors in this province every year. Three million Albertans access those services. Of course there will be times when there are misunderstandings. There will be times when people get upset and it even leads to a statement of claim being filed, and that's what's being talked about. That's not surprising at all. It's unfortunate, but it's not surprising given the volume.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, given that a public inquiry is the only way to demand accountability and open up the questions of a culture of fear and intimidation, how many health professionals is it going to take, Mr. Minister, to move you to a public inquiry? How many?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's not the only way, as the member is alleging. We have a very good and thorough way here with the Health Quality Council. In fact, the Alberta Medical Association fully agreed with the Health Quality Council review of emergency department wait times and of cancer services. They said that they will fully co-operate if this is the only venue available, and it is the only venue available, so let's let this venue complete itself. It will be good, it will be thorough, and it will be made fully public.

Nondisclosure Agreements with Physicians

Dr. Swann: Dr. Tim Winton, the former head of thoracic surgery and a key piece in the puzzle to finding out why Albertans suffer from the lowest survival rates of lung cancer in the country, has quietly come forward to say that legal protections offered by the Health Quality Council are inadequate. I quote: despite assurances advanced by the Health Quality Council, the Premier, and the health minister, I remain constrained. To the minister: why is the government intent on ignoring Dr. Winton, Dr. McNamee, the AMA, and now the Health Sciences Association, who have all said that they're bound by nondisclosure agreements? They cannot speak to the Health Quality Council.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should be reminded that piercing or opening up a nondisclosure agreement is not something that a court or a judge can order either unless, if I understand it correctly, both parties who are subjects of that nondisclosure agreement agree. So it doesn't matter which process you might have in place. I would welcome the Minister of Justice to augment if he wishes.

Dr. Swann: It's very true, Mr. Speaker, and you represent one of the parties that can give permission for that.

Dr. Winton said that he cannot discuss his unexpected departure from clinical practice due to confidentiality obligations. End quote. When will the government stop hiding and admit that a public inquiry is the only way for people like Dr. Winton to give their story?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, quite the opposite. We're encouraging people to come forward with their stories. We're encouraging them to go to the Health Quality Council, where they will be quizzed and interviewed by people who actually know and understand the medical system extremely well and have credibility and reputations, world-renowned reputations. These are the people that are running the Health Quality Council review. Let's give them a chance to do that and to open it up at the end with their public report.

Dr. Swann: Well, this is a world-renowned surgeon we're talking about.

I quote: he would welcome the opportunity to provide evidence in an appropriate forum where the root causes of issues can be evaluated. End quote. Will the government finally concede that a public inquiry is the only way to get at the truth?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, they have protection of the Alberta Evidence Act, and if they wish further confidentiality, if they want further nondisclosure, they can certainly request that through the process that's there. That's my understanding. The Health Quality Council is there to get to the bottom of some answers and at the same time put forward some recommendations, which we can work on, to improve health outcomes for Albertans today.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I opened the Calgary Herald today, and I nearly fell out of my wheelchair as I read that – get this – the Premier is urging the Calgary board of education trustees not to lay off people despite the fact that their budgets have been significantly cut. Really, if this isn't the height of hypocrisy, I don't know what is. To the Minister of Education: given that the CBE is facing a $61.7 million shortfall because of this government's cuts to grants, where does the minister suggest the CBE find the additional money to fund the staff and teachers?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not a given that they're facing a $61.7 million deficit because of this government's budget. In fact, if we had provided simply a 4.54 per cent increase to operating grants to meet the increase in salary, if that's all we had done and not had to actually go and deal with some of the other grant reductions, the targeted grant reductions – I have explained to the House before that when we looked at those, we looked to see whether they were actually doing the job for which they were intended – the Calgary board of education would have been expected to receive about $28 million. The rest is part of their operation, and they need to look in their operation to see where efficiencies can be made.

Mr. Hehr: Oh, efficiencies.

Given that the CBE stated that it will use its reserves and they will still have to lay off hundreds of teachers and support staff, will the minister commit to restoring funding to appropriate levels?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, "appropriate" is a word that begs a lot of interpretation. What we see, though – and I don't want to get into the budgeting of any particular board – is that on an overarching basis we actually fund the education system in this province quite well. Could we use more resources? Always. But we do very well in Alberta in terms of funding education. What you find if you take a look historically at the Calgary board of education's budget is that each year they have projected that they were going to have a deficit, and each year their operating surplus has grown. This year they're projecting a deficit . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that yesterday in estimates the minister admitted that we have a $107 million shortfall in funding in this year's budget, money that we could essentially find in the hon. President of the Treasury Board's couch in his office, can we find that money and restore it to the board so that future generations of students will not be affected?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would be the first to suggest that this is a very difficult fiscal exercise for school boards to go through, but what they're going through is a process of, first of all, receiving the grant increases that they got for per-student operating grants and for class size initiative but then looking at some areas where, quite frankly, some of those targeted grants provided inequities across the system. There is no good reason, for example, that Calgary should get a $6 million increase on a relative cost of purchasing grant on a basis that doesn't actually measure the relative costs that each board has. So there has been inequity in the process, and we could use this opportunity to try and fix that inequity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Physician Services in Fort McMurray

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Michel Sauvé is a true champion for Fort McMurray. He's driven by one thing and one thing only, the well-being of patients. He is one of many Alberta doctors bullied by this government's intimidation. He showed great courage by standing up for me when the Premier Boutiliered me for fighting for seniors, and he does the same for his patients every day. How is his work rewarded? With threats and intimidation and obstruction. To the minister of health: will you apologize to my constituents, who depend on Dr. Sauvé's work, for your government's deliberate attempts to silence him?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any deliberate attempts. What I am aware of is that according to the last patient satisfaction survey that we have, from December, 83 per cent – 83 per cent – of the people who have been in our hospitals reported excellent service by excellent doctors. I will defend them to the best of my ability.

Mr. Boutilier: Given, Mr. Speaker, the health minister's refusal to apologize to my constituents for attempting to deprive them of Dr. Sauvé's exemplary care and given that Fort McMurray is still waiting for a long-term care facility, what does the health minister have to say for his government's continued failure to act to improve the community I represent?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what I have to say is that we have a very aggressive five-year health action plan that is going to look after issues such as he's talking about regarding continuing care facilities. That's why we've accelerated our plan in that regard. We've built over 1,200 of those spaces in the last year, and we'll be building another 1,000, including some right there in Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given Dr. Sauvé's disturbing but typical experience with this government and given that 6,500 Alberta doctors have prescribed a public inquiry to get to the bottom of this government's intimidation, why does the health minister keep refusing to fill their prescription?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we fill a lot of prescriptions in this province, to the tune of $1.2 billion every year, so don't talk to me about filling prescriptions. We have very capable people who do that, and they will continue doing that.

What we should be talking about here is public confidence and teamwork and primary care networking and collaborative decision-making to help build this system into the greatest, best performing health system in Canada. They may not be prepared to do that with those allegations, but we are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Cancer Surgery Wait Times

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This PC government is leading a cover-up. They're withholding important evidence of their failure to listen to health professionals about dangerous wait times for lung cancer surgery. They may also be withholding evidence that patients died unnecessarily as a result. Will the health minister tell Albertans why he and his PC caucus are suppressing key evidence relating to cancer deaths in this province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no one is suppressing any evidence whatsoever. The member who brought this question forward under Motions for Returns did so on or about March 8. Guess what? Four days later we announced that there would be a Health Quality Council review, and it covers exactly what the member is talking about. However, what's not clear yet because no evidence has been provided is if such a list even exists, as is being referred to here, about people dying. We don't see any evidence of that yet. I'm still waiting for that member or some other colleague to provide it if, in fact, it exists at all.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that that's breathtaking, that he's got the evidence and won't release it, and given that the PC caucus has voted to deny Albertans access to key evidence and given that the Health Quality Council has no authority to require the government to release it, will the minister admit that the reason he has rejected a full public inquiry is to make sure this evidence never sees the light of day?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe there is such evidence, but I'll leave the benefit of the doubt in the hon. member's hands to produce or to have the people who alleged that it could be produced to produce it.

What I can tell you is that with respect to thoracic surgery, a lot of which, obviously, is related to cancer, I suspect, we've just added three additional dedicated days of thoracic surgery per month in Calgary, and in Edmonton we've just started doing one extra day. That will result in over 1,000 additional thoracic surgeries. That's great news. Let's talk about that.

Mr. Mason: Well, given that the minister would love to change the subject and given that this government is suppressing key evidence relating to cancer surgery wait times and deaths of cancer patients and given that the entire Tory caucus was briefed about the situation as early as 1999, will the minister admit that he is covering up evidence to protect his own job and those of the Premier and the entire PC caucus?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's no attempt to cover up anything whatsoever. In fact, the opposite is true. We're trying to ensure that there's a process in place, which there is through the Health Quality Council, to uncover some additional information and to provide even this member with some of it. For example, he may not know that a brand new operating room was just opened in Calgary at Foothills solely for cancer surgery. It will do an extra 500 cancer procedures. Should I repeat that? Five hundred more cancer surgeries at that hospital alone. Fantastic news. Fantastic.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Health Quality Council Review

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of health's claims that the Health Quality Council can even pretend to properly investigate allegations that health care professionals have been threatened and intimidated into not advocating for their patients over the last 10-plus years no longer hold water. Everyone from Dr. McNamee to Dr. Winton to the AMA to the Civil Liberties Association to the government's own refusal to release information on thoracic surgery wait-lists and deaths has made it clear that only a public inquiry will get to the bottom of this mess. Does the minister of health actually think that refusal is going to make this thing go away?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we have a very thorough, a very independent review, self-designed by the Health Quality Council, under way right now. We don't know where that's going to lead. It may lead into all kinds of nooks and crannies. What we do know is that it deserves a chance to see its way through because it is led by some of the most credible people this province has to offer, including some from outside who are internationally respected for their skills and their abilities. Let's give them a chance to respond.

Mr. Taylor: Well, to the same minister: if we can even assume for a moment that his government already looks real bad in the eyes of the public even though none of these allegations are substantiated, why wouldn't he want the opportunity that only a public inquiry will now give for his government to clear its own name?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this isn't about clearing anyone's name. This is about getting to the bottom of some allegations that were made in this very House, which the Health Quality Council will explore to the fullest. They're going to get to the bottom, I'm sure, of issues pertaining to cancer wait-lists and if there was an impact of any negative nature on people's health. They're going to get to the bottom of emergency room wait-lists, if any led to unfortunate consequences. Even the AMA has supported both of those. Let's give that a chance to conclude.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, given this mounting body of circumstantial evidence how bad – how bad – does this have to smell before the minister admits it's fishy enough to call a public inquiry?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that there's no odour over here. What I can assure you, however, is that excellent care is being given, excellent outcomes are being received.

In response to the issue about lung cancer can I just remind people that Albertans today have the lowest risk of dying from lung cancer anywhere in Canada? Why? Because of outstanding care here, and more of it is on the way. More oncologists are coming, over 800 new doctors in the last three years alone. Fantastic.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Registry Service Fees for Municipalities

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are all for the Minister of Service Alberta. Minister, I know that there have been some concerns from police chiefs across the province regarding the new search fee that will have to be paid by municipalities effective the 1st of April for parking tickets, photoradar, and red-light camera data. You met with the Calgary police chief today. Can you tell us the outcome of that meeting?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We had a very productive meeting today with Chief Hanson and members of the RCMP, as well, from across Alberta. We talked about some of the challenges that they are facing as police working with the municipalities and also the challenges that we're facing in government and explained the reasons for the fee.

Mr. Johnston: To the same minister. There seems to be some misconception about this fee to municipalities. Can you explain how this fee will work and why municipalities now have to pay $15 for these searches?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really important to note that this is a municipal fee search, not a police fee search. It applies to parking, photoradar, and red-light tickets. At the end of the day we have a system that operates 24 hours a day, seven days a week, called the MOVES system. Police have access to that 24 hours a day. It's very important for us to keep that alive.

Mr. Johnston: My final question once again to the minister. You met with Calgary's police chief this morning and commented that it was a productive meeting. What do you see are the next steps for municipalities regarding this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We talked about some of the ways that other municipalities are looking at absorbing some of the costs related to this search fee for the parking and photoradar and red-light cameras. As well, we're working with the Minister of Transportation and looking at ways that we can look at the other fees that are charged for the speeding tickets.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

All-terrain Vehicle Safety

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As spring approaches, many Albertans head out to the foothills and other wilderness playgrounds to indulge in their passion, riding all-terrain vehicles. Every year too many Albertans are injured and face lifelong consequences of not wearing a helmet while driving their ATV. To the Minister of Transportation: when will this government do the right thing and require operators and passengers riding all-terrain vehicles to wear protective headgear?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that this hon. member is on the right track. He's worried about the protection of everyone that rides ATVs, and of course this ministry is the same. But I've got to tell you that before you pass provincial legislation, you have to make sure of all the unintended consequences that could come from the legislation, and that's what we're doing. Good legislation must be effective and enforceable, and we have to make sure we're there before we pass legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I have been on the right track for the last three years, and I've been trying to bring the Minister of Transportation onto the right track.

Given that the Minister of Transportation promised in July 2008 to introduce legislation on this subject by the fall of that year or in spring of 2009, how much longer do Albertans have to wait to see the legislation, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that we have no plans to introduce legislation this spring, but as I said before, we're working very hard on being able to get everything done.

I want to also say that all of the different groups, the clubs that belong to off-highway vehicles and stuff, are all working very hard on the education factor, on educating people. Helmets are only one part of safety. There's a full gamut of safety clothing that people can wear.

Let me say one more thing. You must be 14 years of age to ride one of these vehicles by yourself. You need adult supervision, and adults should know . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think that education is doing much to save lives and injuries. Given that of Albertans who died while riding ATVs, 68 per cent were not wearing helmets according to the statistics from the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research, why won't the minister do the right thing and introduce his much-promised legislation?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, when the time is right, when we have all of the proper stuff in place to be able to enforce it and be effective with it – remember, we can only enforce on public lands, so we also have to look at how we protect people on private lands. I think he's absolutely wrong when he says education doesn't work. Education works very well, and we're going to keep working at that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Highway 22

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Within Whitecourt-St. Anne is highway 22, located south of Mayerthorpe. It's a narrow stretch of highway. There has been lots of pavement damage over the years, and there have been a lot of accidents. My questions today are to the Minister of Transportation. When are you going to do something about this stretch? We've waited too long in our constituency for repairs and maintenance on that highway.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member is going to be very, very happy to hear that my department plans to widen 9.5 kilometres of highway 22 just south of Mayerthorpe, from north of township road 563A to highway 43. In addition to this widening work, we're also going to repave the section of the roadway north of highway 43. We're going to add some illumination at the junction of highway 43 and complete intersection improvements at highway 647. The highway 22 widening and related upgrades . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. I know that I'm excited, too.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I had known that answer, I would have asked the question much earlier. Would the minister please tell me some more details? When can we expect all of this to happen?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to tell the hon. member that I'm pleased to say that work on highway 22 will begin this year. In fact, this project was advertised to construction contractors earlier this month. That means that we'll know the exact start and completion dates as well as construction costs as soon as the contact is finalized.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I think with that answer I'm going to leave my question and let the minister catch his breath.

Municipal Zoning Exemption for Universities

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, my questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. In recent years there's been a boom of construction on the University of Alberta's south campus for non-university facilities, and some of these facilities, built with public funds on public lands, will become home venues for professional basketball and already are home venues for professional curling and professional soccer. None of these facilities were covered by municipal zoning. Will the minister agree that legislation should be amended to require facilities built on university campuses that house professional sports franchises to be covered by municipal zoning?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The facility that the member is speaking of is a community facility. It'll be used to house a number of activities for the community and for the postsecondary institution, and ancillary to that, there may be some other agencies that will use that facility as part of what they do. The primary use, from my understanding, is for public uses.

Dr. Taft: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will this minister do the right thing and bring the universities of Alberta, Calgary, and Lethbridge into line with every other postsecondary institution in Alberta and into the 21st century by requiring them to meet municipal zoning standards?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the privilege this week of meeting with the University of Alberta and their planning people, and they work very, very closely with the municipalities and, in fact, are working through their planning documents as we speak, working with the municipality to try to make sure that what they do meets with the needs of the municipality and the neighbourhoods. We're very confident that under the legislation they have, they're allowed the flexibility to do all of the things that they need to do to provide a good education and as well have the limitations, when doing commercial-type projects, to have to work with the municipality.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that there's a double standard here, a real double standard – and I've asked this to the minister repeatedly – will this minister justify why three universities in Alberta are exempt from municipal zoning when every other postsecondary institution, every business, and every citizen in the province are not exempt? Why the double standard?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They are not exempt from all planning documents. They are exempt from a number of municipal requirements, but where they have commercial activities or commercial operations as part of their campuses, those fall under municipal planning. As I said, those schools do work very closely with their municipalities. They're a great benefit, but it also allows the maintenance of academic freedoms on their campuses.

Renewable Diesel Fuel

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, on March 28 Alberta announced the implementation of a renewable fuel standard that requires an annual average of 2 per cent renewable diesel in diesel fuel and 5 per cent renewable alcohol in all gasoline sold in Alberta. The new standard has caused some concern with many constituents who are farmers and truckers about the impact on vehicles and engines. To the Minister of Energy: has your department done any research into the potential impact of the use of these renewable fuels in the engines and equipment of our farm vehicles and trucks?

Mr. Liepert: Well, the use of biodiesel in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, is not new. As the member mentioned, our new standard requires an annual average of 2 per cent renewable diesel. The city of Calgary has been using in its fleet since about 2003 a 20 per cent biodiesel blend, and that includes operations in the winter. To my knowledge they haven't caused any issues. Other jurisdictions like Saskatchewan and Manitoba have required renewable fuels for a number of years, so I think that as long as the proper blending and storage practices are followed, there should be no damage to equipment.

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the same minister: what other studies, if any, have been undertaken relative to the consumers that'll be impacted here?

Mr. Liepert: Well, we have some research from the federal government, Mr. Speaker, that indicates the average consumer price will be about an additional $30 to $35 per year for gasoline for smaller vehicles. We know from the experience in our neighbouring jurisdictions, in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, that the increased costs have been rather negligible. I think that that has to be balanced off with the fact that a successful bioenergy industry can lead to rural development, economic development opportunities, and provide opportunities in the forestry and the agricultural sectors in the province.

Mr. McFarland: The final supplemental. Many of these same farmers, truckers, forestry people have large bulk storage, and they're wanting to know what the long-term effect is of having this bulk storage held for a relatively long period of time.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm told that the long-term storage of any fuel creates the potential for deterioration. Other jurisdictions have experienced that as long as, as I mentioned earlier, the proper storage and blending practices are followed, very few problems seem to be encountered. Those include, as an example, minimizing water contamination and keeping storage tanks clean. Overall, I think implementation of the renewable fuel standard will proceed smoothly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Seniors' Pharmaceutical Plan

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last year the government proposed a seniors' drug plan that would have increased premiums for tens of thousands of Alberta seniors. Like a lot of this government's policy it wasn't thought through beforehand, and it was quickly pulled. While the Minister of Health and Wellness postponed the program indefinitely, seniors want to know if changes are coming soon. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what is the current status of the seniors' drug plan?

Mr. Zwozdesky: It is under review, Mr. Speaker, as promised. It's pending the outcome of some additional work with the ministry of seniors and other ministries that are involved in providing care for seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that seniors are on fixed incomes and are extremely vulnerable to changes in their expenses, does the minister understand the hardship that increased premiums will have on seniors if he moves forward on his proposed new seniors' drug plan?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I understand quite well. I've been briefed by the seniors themselves on a few occasions, and I meet with a lot of them in my own constituency, so I understand the sensitivity to this point. That's why it's so important to take a very comprehensive and thorough look at it, and that's what we're doing.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, given that the minister has met with seniors and given that the minister has talked to seniors in his riding, I'm sure as an MLA he'll listen to what they have said.

Given that Alberta seniors are dependent on the prescription drug plan and they need to plan years in advance for their retirement, will the minister end their limbo and maintain the current plan, where seniors pay 30 per cent of each prescription up to a maximum of $25?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we've actually reduced the costs of many drugs – some of the new generic drugs, some of the existing generic drugs – and that has reperculated very well in the community. I think the community has responded very well to that. There may be other things that we could still do to take a look at some of the burdens that seniors and elders might face. That's why we're doing the comprehensive study and review I indicated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Artists and Education Program

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The well-received, greatly valued artists and education program is once again or maybe still being reviewed. In this department the word has come to mean the same thing as being fitted for concrete shoes, not absolutely the end but looking pretty dire. To the minister of culture. First it was said that the program would be cut this April. Then it was April 2012. What exactly is the minister looking for when reviewing this program?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, we look for the same thing we look for in any program within our department. Is it efficient? Is it meeting the needs of Albertans? Is it fulfilling the four key points of our cultural policy: creating access, building capacity, fostering excellence, or preserving our cultural industries?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister: well, given that the minister said that he intended other ministers to fund initiatives of this kind out of their own budgets, can the minister tell us what evidence he has that in this case Alberta Education or perhaps school boards will fund any of the artists and education program?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I haven't made a decision. We haven't announced any decision to cut this program last year or this year. The hon. member is making that assumption and creating confusion where there need not be because no decision has been made. None has been proposed by me before, now, or in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks. Actually, the department is creating the confusion. Let me give you an example. Given that inclusion on the artist roster seems to be a necessary part of the eligibility for this program, why has the roster completely disappeared from the website, and why have all references to it in the programming documents been deleted?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I can't answer that technical question. I'd have to ask somebody in my department. But what I can tell you is that just last week cheques went out to all the operating arts groups across this province with a 5 per cent increase over what they were expecting to get last year because we made a commitment. Even though there is a reduction of 16 per cent, we said that if we had money at the end of the year, we would rebate it back to them. So the effect is that, actually, cuts were only 11 per cent instead of 16 per cent. I think that's good news.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

L'École Parkside

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently met with the parent advisory council for l'école Parkside school in Grande Prairie. This excellent school is attracting large numbers of students to their high-quality education. At this time the school is already overcrowded, and there are concerns as new enrolment for next fall is significantly higher. To the Minister of Education: what is the plan to provide necessary classroom space for l'école Parkside school?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have appreciated the advocacy of this member with respect to the schools in Grande Prairie and this particular school, and I see he's continuing that. I can tell him that there was a value review process done in Grande Prairie in December. That's a process that we engage in in our department: going into an area, looking at all of the assets in the region, working with the school boards in the community to get a comprehensive view of what is needed in that community now and over the 10-year future horizon. That value review has been done, and we have a good understanding of not only the needs of that school but . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is the plan for the short-term overcrowding of this school facility?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Infrastructure constantly reminds me, we have relocatable modular classrooms, high-performance classrooms, that we have contracted for. We try to ensure that as there are high-pressure areas, we acquire these relocatable, high-performance modular classrooms. We don't have a specific budget for them this year, but we are working with jurisdictions that have space issues. We didn't have a request from Grande Prairie last year for classrooms. We anticipate that we will for this particular school receive that very shortly from them in this year's submission.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, what is the minister doing in the long term to address the needs of communities like Grande Prairie and others that are facing space crunches in schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An important question. We recognize that across the province 50 per cent of our schools are over 40 years of age. We expect a hundred thousand new students coming into the system over the next 10 years. Clearly, there has to be a logical, straightforward process both for new schools as well as modernizations of those schools that we're going to need into the future and an ongoing process to maintain the school buildings that we have. That's part of our 10-year plan, and we're working now with the Treasury Board and Infrastructure with respect to alternate financing processes, direct financing processes, and other methodologies to put that plan into effect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Residential Building Inspection Reports

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The biggest single problem for Albertan homeowners is finding their way through the bureaucratic maze to get reliable information about the home that will be the biggest purchase that they will make in their lives. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why has this government made it so convoluted?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think it's fairly straightforward. There are a series of inspectors that go about to make sure that new homes are constructed according to Alberta safety codes, so if you're buying a new home, it should have received all of the inspection certificates that went along with that. When it comes to buying a used home, then the inspection process falls under Service Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Why can't the homeowner get access to records created at taxpayers' expense by safety codes and building codes inspectors? Wouldn't this give the buyer concrete information on which to base their decision?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, local municipalities, for the most part, across Alberta are the ones that are accredited to hire inspectors to go about making sure that new properties, new homes are built according to codes. Those reports are available through the municipalities, so individual homebuyers can access those particular reports through their local institutions.

Ms Pastoor: The other thing that happens is that homeowners have to pay for their own inspection reports from businesses that may be licensed but don't even have to be accredited and don't have access to the safety and building code inspection reports either. Buyer beware is really not a fair answer to this problem.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the businesses themselves might not be accredited or the municipalities might not be, but the inspectors have to be accredited. We do give permission to individual municipalities to hire individual accredited inspectors, and they follow the rules accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Education Relative Cost of Purchasing Adjustment

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the areas facing a reduction in funding to the Calgary board of education is the relative cost of purchasing adjustment, which is being reduced by almost $6 million. This funding appears to be meant for the purchasing of goods and services in inflationary times. That $6 million reduction should not have any impact on the classroom. What can the minister do to ensure that this reduction is limited to purchasing goods and services and not to the classroom?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, in actual fact most of our funding to school boards is an allocation formula. We don't audit against that allocation formula. So once it gets into the school board's hands, what they do with it is entirely in their purview, and that's as it should be. They should have the flexibility to utilize the funds that they get in the way that is most effective for their schools.

But the hon. member is right. The relative cost of purchasing is an adjustment based on the cost of goods and services and market-basket measures across the province, differentiating from one community to the other based on I think last year it was Red Deer as one. In theory that $6 million ought to have been given to the board so that they could pay for . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the ministry does provide caps or guidelines on how much money can be spent on administration or headquarter costs, would the minister consider moving forward and reducing that from 4 per cent to 3 per cent so that more money can be spent on the classroom?

Mr. Hancock: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, we can put guidelines in place. We do have a guideline of between 4 to 6 per cent, the 4 per cent for urban boards and up to 6 per cent for rural boards in the event there are higher costs involved. Those are guidelines. We try to work with school boards to ensure that they are within the guidelines. I can tell the House that all school boards complied with that guideline last year. Again, to the greatest extent possible we want to leave in the hands of school boards the decisions about the appropriate allocation of resources and the accountability and transparency to their publics with respect to how . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: Minister, why is it possible for some school jurisdictions like Red Deer to meet the province's class size ratios while others such as Calgary have not?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. It has to do with the differences between the boards in terms of the complexities of the student populations. In some cases it has to do with the configurations of the schools, in some cases it's a matter of how you design a school program within the school, and in some cases it's a question of how many support staff you have, how many people you employ to support teachers in the classrooms as opposed to being directly in the classrooms.

Again, programming decisions have to be made at the local level by the local board. They all get equivalent resources, particularly now that we are doing away with the relative cost of purchasing adjustment, so they should be able to achieve similar guidelines.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Provincial Budget Projections

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the provincial budget for this year was finalized, we've seen increases in the price of oil, we've seen a dramatic change in the value of the Canadian dollar in relation to the American dollar, and we also are now experiencing the threat of inflation. I would like to ask the minister in charge, the President of the Treasury Board, for an update on how the provincial budget would be changed if the $18 increase in the price of oil that we are now experiencing remains for the entire year. How will that change the provincial budget?

Mr. Snelgrove: It's a good question, Mr. Speaker, but it's a little too early to start to project what might be if the price of oil stays on a year-long basis. You know, in July of 2008 oil was at $147 a barrel, by December that had dropped to $34, and now it's back up to $110. So it's a constantly moving price. Based on a year, a dollar a barrel would be $141 million, so if it were up $10 a barrel for the whole year, it would be $1.4 billion with regard to the oil.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how will the change in the value of the Canadian dollar – if we are to remain at 6 cents over what the government had estimated, what will the financial implications for the budget be for the entire year?

Mr. Snelgrove: Once again, that's one of the risks we have when our currency fluctuates. In March of 2009, Mr. Speaker, the dollar was at about 78 cents. It has climbed steadily now. I think today it is around $1.05. For every 1 cent it's $154 million, so if that were to continue through the entire year at 6 cents, it would be very close to a billion-dollar effect on our budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that the fiscal plan for the budget indicates that the government anticipates consumer inflation to remain subdued, is the government taking any efforts now? That prediction, I think, is obviously not accurate. What steps is the government taking to protect against the rise in inflation?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we're a part of the economy; we're certainly not the whole economy. We do see areas in North America and Canada that are showing signs of increased activity. Unfortunately, it will be difficult for the federal government to monitor inflation when we have areas in central Canada lagging and Alberta's very heated economy. You know, we work with our federal ministers to try and make sure that we can handle it. One of the tools they have used is interest rate increases, and I think that would be very dangerous for our economy, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Homelessness Initiative

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the Salvation Army in Calgary announced that the Booth Centre shelter will be closing permanently. My questions are for the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. How could the minister allow the closure of a shelter in Calgary when Calgary still struggles with a large homeless population?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy actually to get this question today because this is a very good news story, not just for homeless Albertans but for all Albertans. Over the last two years the homeless population in Calgary has gone down by about 16 per cent, and as demand goes down, we will look at closing these facilities in favour of more Housing First or permanent housing operations, which is the difference between managing the problem and ending it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: with a large homeless population and hundreds of vulnerable Albertans needing a home, how does this minister rationalize the reduction of shelter beds as a good deal for the homeless and homeless providers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, the reduction in shelter spaces simply reflects a reduced need for them. The funding can be redirected to what we refer to as outreach supports. Outreach supports don't go to a bureaucrat or a paper pusher; they go to an actual local facility who helps an individual homeless person with the issues that he or she may be encountering. These issues are as diverse as the people themselves.

Our ultimate goal is for emergency shelters to be used just for short-term assistance only. In fact, our goal is that within 21 days of someone presenting themselves to a shelter, we can transition them into permanent housing. This is part of the 10-year plan to end homelessness, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With fewer shelter beds what plans are in place should the homeless numbers spike, as they did a few years ago?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my belief – and it's the belief of the entire department – that there should always be a place for someone in need of shelter. I've actually met with some people who have been through Alberta who have experienced homeless programs, the pluses and minuses. The best simply is the Housing First approach, providing permanent housing for those who are in need as opposed to Band-Aid solutions and constructing more shelters.

I remember that years ago the city of Calgary, very well intentioned, constructed a temporary homeless shelter on 16th and Centre Street. That was temporary, Mr. Speaker. This is a permanent solution.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

2:40 Online Access to Historical Resources

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. School children need to learn the lessons of our past, of our history. Unfortunately, not all of them live in a big city where there are museums for them to go to. Can the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit please tell us how school children across the province can access information on our history and the world's history even when they are in small communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thankfully, because Alberta has the SuperNet with 20 gigabit connectivity, our museums and historic sites can provide online learning resources for children of all ages all across the province. For example, the Royal Alberta Museum, Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, Royal Tyrrell Museum, and Frank Slide Interpretive Centre use that technology to make themselves available.

Since 2006 the Royal Tyrrell Museum has provided more than 24,000 students that participate in over 850 programs. This is not only for students in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, but for Canada and across the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: how does your ministry support the use of technology to reach Albertans?

Mr. Blackett: Well, other than using the SuperNet, that I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, we also use social media such as Facebook and Twitter. We use that in our museums and historic sites to reach out to Albertans and provide educational and informational resources. We also have designated a co-ordinator with the priority of expanding content on historic sites and museum websites, working to enhance our presence and our content. We have Culture in High Gear, which is at www.culture.alberta.ca/highgear.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 19 members were recognized today. There were 111 questions and responses.

In two seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

Members' Statements

Integrity in Government

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Throughout this health care crisis and the government's continued refusal to call a public inquiry, it has become clear that after 40 years this PC Party has developed a sense of entitlement, an attitude that permeates almost every aspect of public life in Alberta. Whether you're in business, the nonprofit sector, health care, or municipal government, you know that this government demands support or uses intimidation if necessary. Small businesses hope that there's not another royalty review, regulatory barrier, fee increase, or land-use framework around the corner that may threaten everything they have worked for. When these things do happen, businesses and people who were not affected fail to speak up partly because they know that this government is vindictive.

Health care professionals have been facing the same culture of intimidation. Our party and others have been bringing forward shocking evidence of intimidation in our health care system. The government continues to discount stories of world-class practitioners being silenced or run out of the province and refuses to allow a public inquiry despite everyone else, including the AMA, demanding it. When a minister of this government says, "There is no proof,” they sound like gangsters, confident that they’ll get off because no one is willing to testify.

If you’re a municipal politician or a nonprofit association, you know that this government does not give out grants solely on the basis of merit but that you need to honour the PC monarchs with gifts and praise in order to be in their good graces. So when a minister’s tour comes to visit your council, bow and smile, and don’t tell them what you really think. When the Premier or local MLA invites you to a fundraiser, it’s really more of a summons than an invitation.

Well, Albertans are realizing that this is out of control. Fortunately, unlike monarchies and dictatorships, Albertans will have their chance soon to vote for a party that respects them and truly understands that people aren’t supposed to honour the government but that the government must honour and respect the people and the law.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, it’s now April 20, and we’ve arrived at the last department estimate to be reviewed, the department you’ve all waited for, Infrastructure. You should be out of here by 10 to 6 this afternoon. You’ll reconvene at 7:30, not 6:30.

2:50

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2011-12

Infrastructure

The Chair: Before I call on the hon. minister, I would like just to remind us about the procedure here. The minister will have 10 minutes for introductions and statements, and then one hour for the Official Opposition with the minister. The next 20 minutes would be for the third party and the minister, and the next 20 minutes would be for the fourth party and the minister. Then the following 20 minutes would be for any other party in the Assembly, including independent members. From there, we have 20 minutes each for any other member with the minister.

Now I would like to call on the minister for 10 minutes. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm indeed pleased to be here this afternoon to discuss the 2011-2012 estimates for the Ministry of Infrastructure. With me here today are my deputy minister, Barry Day, who is seated on my left, and Diane Dalgleish, the assistant deputy minister of capital programs. I also have John Enns, the assistant deputy minister of properties. I have Alan Humphries, who is the assistant deputy minister of policy and corporate support, as well as Rod Skura, the executive director of the finance branch, and also Ethan Bayne, my executive assistant.

Mr. Chairman, I'd also like to acknowledge members that we have in the gallery: first of all, Christine Henry, who is the deputy minister's job shadower today – and what a perfect opportunity to see the ministry at work – and also Arthur Arruda, Nicole Larner, Irene Lui, Cheryl Mackenzie, Donan Carrier, and Mary-Anne Young. I'd just like to acknowledge all of you in the gallery.

Mr. Chairman, our government will invest $17.6 billion in capital projects across Alberta over the next three years, including $6.6 billion this year. This investment is vital to address Alberta's needs today and to prepare our province for continuing growth and prosperity in the future. This is the right time to invest in infrastructure. It is not the time to delay or defer. It enables us to keep our skilled workforce employed here in Alberta. It enables us to take advantage of lower costs and avoid competing with the private sector for scarce resources. Most importantly, it ensures that we have facilities in place to provide services for our growing population. We have a responsibility to Albertans to have the necessary public infrastructure in place and to be prepared for the next economic boom.

We also have an opportunity, Mr. Chairman. We all know that infrastructure is an economic enabler. It promotes investment and attracts skilled labour to our province. It is also an enabler for innovation and research, the foundation of our future prosperity. Infrastructure is crucial for our quality of life and for the sustainability of our communities. Can I say that again? Infrastructure is crucial for our quality of life and for the sustainability of our communities. That is why our Premier's vision for Alberta to have the most advanced infrastructure in North America. Having the most advanced infrastructure means infrastructure that is innovative and cost-effective, designs that are adaptable and flexible to incorporate changing technology and changing needs, buildings that are sustainable because they are well maintained and energy efficient, facilities that are multipurpose and designed to meet the needs of the whole community.

Mr. Chairman, advanced infrastructure is all about designing, constructing, and maintaining buildings that work for health professionals, for teachers, for students, for those who work in them and the Albertans who depend on them every day. In support of this vision Budget 2011 allocates $1.4 billion to the Ministry of Infrastructure for program expense and over $390 million for capital investment. The ministry is responsible for managing, operating, and maintaining the inventory of government facilities across the province. This includes over 1,500 owned buildings and more than 6 million square feet of leased space. The ministry also manages land acquisition for major projects and the Calgary-Edmonton transportation utility corridor. Infrastructure is responsible for delivering major health capital projects as well as government-owned facilities such as courthouses, remand centres, and museums. We also work closely with our partners to help build schools, post-secondary facilities, and seniors' accommodations.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to highlight some of the major capital projects currently under way in the ministry. The total budget for health facilities infrastructure and maintenance is over $870 million. This includes major facilities currently under construction such as the south Calgary health centre and the Edmonton clinic. It also includes new and expanded facilities under way across the province such as the Red Deer cancer centre and the Strathcona community hospital. We are moving forward with design and site preparation for recently announced new hospitals in Grande Prairie, High Prairie, and Edson as well as major redevelopments and expansions in Medicine Hat and Lethbridge. We have also begun planning and design work for major expansions to the cancer treatment facilities in Calgary and Edmonton. I want to emphasize that all of these health projects are on track and moving forward.

We also have major projects under way to help promote safe communities in Alberta. The new Edmonton Remand Centre will be the largest correctional facility in Canada. It has state-of-the-art safety and security features as well as environmentally friendly design. The Solicitor General's staff will begin training at a facility late this year, and it will be fully operational by 2012. We are moving ahead with construction of the public safety and law enforcement training centre in Fort Macleod. It will include a driving track, indoor and outdoor shooting ranges, scenario training rooms as well as classroom and residential space. The facility will provide training to law enforcement, corrections, and public security personnel from across the province and beyond. An important part of building strong communities in Alberta is having public facilities and public spaces that all Albertans can be proud of.

September 3, 2012, will mark the 100th anniversary of the Alberta Legislature Building. Over the next 18 months many enhancements will be made to the interior and exterior of the Legislature Building and grounds in preparation for the centennial.

The redevelopment of the historic federal building will be completed, including a new public plaza with fountains, green space, a skating rink, and a public art area. The public parkade and plaza will be completed by the fall of 2012.

Recently Premier Stelmach announced that a new comprehensive Royal Alberta Museum will be constructed in downtown Edmonton. By taking advantage of this opportunity, we will be able to deliver a larger, more accessible museum on a single site. This resolves the challenges of building on an existing constrained site or constructing two separate and costly museums. The new Royal Alberta Museum will feature expanded art gallery space to house both the natural and human history collections. [A timer sounded]

The Chair: Hon. minister . . .

Mr. Danyluk: Would you like me to finish? Okay. I can finish? Okay.

The Chair: Hon. minister, you have 10 minutes according to the rules, and then you can have 20 minutes with the hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: The hon. member said that I could continue.

The Chair: Hon. member, now we have the opposition.

Mr. Kang: Well, not to continue for the next two hours. I know you like to talk.

The Chair: Hon. member, there's a process here.

Mr. Kang: Okay. Sure. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The next hour is for the Official Opposition, and it's in chunks of 20 minutes each. My question to you is: do you wish to combine the 20 minutes back and forth with the minister or have 10 minutes?

Mr. Kang: We will go back and forth.

The Chair: Back and forth?

Mr. Kang: Yeah.

The Chair: All right. Then go ahead. The first 20 minutes.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to thank the minister. As always, he tries to be very informative, trying to paint rosy pictures about all of those things. As we know, we are going through a recession. The Canadian economy is supposed to grow by about 2.9 per cent, and our economy this year probably will grow by 3.6 per cent, I think. Let's pray to God that, you know, the next boom is on the horizon and we are going to see population growth. Today a gentleman said that, you know, we will be growing by 60,000 a year. That's going to be big growth for the coming years.

The 1993 cutbacks: we keep going back to those because we haven't recovered from them yet. We are already way, way behind, and we have lots of catching up to do. The next boom with the population growth is going to put lots of strain on our infrastructure. We're going to need more bridges, we're going to need more roads, and we're going to need more schools and more hospitals as our population ages. You know, the question we should be asking ourselves is: how are we going to keep up? With all the money we are putting into infrastructure, I think we are just staying flat here. When I look at the detailed capital plan, sure, expense and equipment is up 80 per cent, $630 million higher than last year's forecast. It shows an increase in health facilities support and capital expenses of 5 per cent, or $18 million, higher than last year's forecast amount.

When I look at the capital plan detail by category, it is not bad for municipal infrastructure support. It's pretty level, you know, going up a little bit in the provincial highways network. It's going down and going up. Health facilities and equipment funding is going down. Schools: going down. When I look at all the details about postsecondary facilities, community facilities, it's pretty level. Waste-water management: the funding is going down. Housing is going down, and government facilities and other capital is going down.

When we look at that – and the minister was talking about, you know, having the best infrastructure in the province – when the funding is going down, I don't know how we're going to keep up with the demand, with the population growth and all that. The issue here is that it doesn't look like we will be able to catch up, you know, before the next time we have another downturn. You were saying, sir, that the contracts are coming in 40 per cent cheaper. This is the time that we should have everything in place. We shouldn't have this funding on a sliding scale; we should have the funding on a rising scale so that we could catch up.

3:10

I will start with the significant challenges: economic climate, aging infrastructure, demographic shifts. That's in the business plan, pages 173, 174. Those are last year's challenges, sir. My question is: why were the significant challenges not listed in this year's budget? Is aging infrastructure still considered a significant challenge? What would this year's significant challenges be? These are last year's challenges.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm just going to try to answer the questions or the comments as presented. I very much acknowledge the hon. member's comments that I paint a rosy picture of things. I want to say to you that we are very fortunate to be Albertans. We are very fortunate to live in Alberta. Living in Alberta, you know, being part of this government and being part of this House I would say to you, has afforded Albertans many opportunities.

You talk about this province growing by 3.6 per cent, of course, the population growth. The comments made were "catch up" and "build now" and "we are building". Well, Mr. Chairman, that's exactly what's happening. That's why we have the sustainability fund, so that we can take out some of the valleys and cut off some of the hills so that we have some sustainability over an extended period of time. We are building for the future. We are investing $17.6 billion over three years. The time to build is now because the costs are less and we need to ensure that the people that are here are employed.

In fact, when we talk about building today, we are building to be prepared for the future, if we go to the discussion of the Edmonton clinic, so that we have some shelf space. That shelf space is not just building a space with nothing to be put in it. It is about space that will be necessary in the future. It's all about planning, hon. member. That's important because we need to plan not only for today; we need to plan for the future.

Mr. Chairman, there were comments also about the economic climate and the aging infrastructure. That's why we are building today. That's why we are investing. These are buildings that Albertans use every day. They represent an investment of Albertans' tax dollars. They need to be maintained to protect our investment. Deferred maintenance for '10-11 was $340 million, and we will continue to increase that with current funding levels.

Mr. Chairman, we have already put additional maintenance into schools, into health care facilities, and into colleges. The current funding levels, the comment about them not being enough. Well, this is the time to increase some of the funding to maintain buildings and our investment into the future. You talked about and I think the question very much pertained to the aging facilities that we have, that it is not enough funding and is a significant challenge. Well, you know, I want to say to you, hon. member, that it is a challenge. As you heard me say earlier, we have over 1,500 buildings in this province, and this government has been very responsible for future needs. In building today and investing in infrastructure today, the construction costs are less, the skilled labour is still available, and it keeps Albertans working.

Mr. Chairman, it is very imperative that we're building for tomorrow with buildings that adapt to community needs and spaces that can adapt easily to changing technology. Let me give you a little bit of an example. In Grande Prairie we are building a hospital. That hospital has 200 acute-care beds, but we also have a cancer institute that is placed in that hospital to serve all of the northern Alberta region. This is critical to addressing the needs of that community.

Also, it is very important that we have a postsecondary institution attached to that hospital so that not only do we have an opportunity for youth to be able to go to the college, which is just across the road, and take advantage of being able to get an education in a medical field; across the road is the practicum side. That is about planning. That is about opportunity for that area, and it is a building, a facility, that is not for today but is for today and into the future. We don't build a hospital in rural Alberta every second year. This facility needs to meet the needs of the future.

Mr. Chairman, I can also say to you that for the buildings we are building, the cancer institute in Calgary, we need to look at meeting today's needs, but when we had discussions with the oncologists, it was critical to meet today's needs but to look into the future and try to adapt to the changing technology and be able to be flexible into the future. That is critical as well. That is using some of the facilities that need to be, if I can call it, upgraded or modernized. That's exactly what's taking place at the Foothills and the Tom Baker facilities.

Also, it is about building new facilities. The south Calgary campus is a facility that is going to address the needs of a very strong, growing population. Sometimes when you talk about maintenance, the maintenance of older buildings is one thing, but sometimes building new very much addresses some of the needs that we have in the old.

My ministry is very cognizant of the needs, the demands of the increasing population that we have in this province and is trying to address the growth that you're experiencing in your area, in your city as well as some of the increasingly populated areas like Airdrie, Chestermere, Fort McMurray, Beaumont. Mr. Chairman, we need to provide the services that are necessary for communities, and that's what we're trying to do.

I think I sort of answered the questions that you had, but if you wanted me to go on, I could. Or maybe you have another question that you would like to ask.

3:20

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. How did you know that I live in Chestermere? That was just a good guess on your part.

You talked about the south Calgary hospital. You know, if we hadn't waited that long, when we imploded the General, we could have built another brand new hospital there for $118 million at that time, but we waited that long, and that's why it's costing us $1.4 billion. I don't call that very good planning, sir.

Okay. Coming back to the 2009-12 business plan, page 182, to increase capacity for evaluation and analysis of public-private partnership opportunities. It goes on to say:

Albertans look to government for direction and innovative ways to provide the best possible and most cost effective public infrastructure. The government has a high level of interest in developing infrastructure through partnerships to provide Albertans with much needed facilities. Where feasible and cost effective, the Ministry will continue to pursue alternative procurement options for new facilities in partnership with Treasury Board and other ministries.

My question. There is still no action on strategic priority 2 regarding P3s and action to increase capacity for evaluation and analysis of public-private partnerships. How are we to know that they are saving money?

Mr. Danyluk: First of all, if I can, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has suggested that we have waited too long, that we have not done things in a hurry or in a method that would be conducive to getting things done right away for the populations that we have. Well, I want to say to you that this province spends more money per capita on investment in infrastructure than any other province.

Also, what happens is that there's criticism coming from individuals that sit very close to you that would suggest we're spending too much money, that would suggest we should lengthen things out, that we should hold back a substantive amount of money.

I want to say to you that we have to look at things in Infrastructure and as government so that we are prepared not only for the immediate future but for projects in the distant future. I also want to say that, I mean, sometimes to take a global ball or a futuristic approach is much easier from your side of the House because you know what happens? The same substantiation doesn't have to happen.

We have to look at what's taking place in Fort McMurray, the growth that's happening in Fort McMurray, the growth that's happening in subdivisions, and we have to be ready, and we have to try to do the best that we can. But I will also tell you that we cannot have buildings built all over without the support for operation. I don't think it would be prudent as government and opposition to support an increase in taxation. This government does not believe in that. This government is a representation of the people, and we build infrastructure for the people.

The other question came about P3s and innovative ways to build infrastructure. Well, first of all, Mr. Chairman, I think it's very important to bring to the member's attention that we just don't wake up in the morning and say: "You know what? I think what we should do is build a P3." It doesn't work that way. Every project that we have we analyze, and we analyze it to the degree that we look at: what is the best way to build a project? What is the most cost-efficient way to build that project? Would it fit into a P3 program? Would it fit into a design-build? Would it fit into a traditional form of building? We need to provide schools, hospitals in the best deliverable that we possibly can. That is why we very much take an intricate look at what we need to do.

Mr. Chairman, when we look at P3s, as was mentioned, it's very important that we also look at, if we have decided to go into a partnership program, what it will offer to the people of Alberta or the people of the area.

The Chair: The first 20 minutes have been checked. You can continue in the second 20 minutes, please.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The question was asked: why would you consider a partnership? Well, we'd consider a partnership for a number of reasons, but one of the reasons is, of course, that there is a fixed cost. There's a schedule. We have a 30-year warranty on the facility itself. It is a value for money that was confirmed, in fact, by the Auditor General. It was clearly stated that a P3, whether it be in Transportation – and the Minister of Transportation is here today. When we look at partnerships and transportation, there is value for money. That's exactly how we look at it for buildings.

I want to say also, if I can, Mr. Chairman, that this province has received awards for the way we deliver partnership programs. In fact, we received the gold award for procurement in 2010 from the Canadian Council for Public-Private Partnerships for successful implementation of a project, and that is: ahead of time and on budget. The Institute of Public Administration of Canada: innovation management. I could go on and on because as I look down, we've received many awards for our accomplishments.

I will let you continue.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Okay. I'm coming back to the same question again. Increase capacity for evaluation and analysis of public-private partnership, P3, opportunities is no longer one of the minister's priorities. Why not? I'm coming back to that strategic priority 2, business plan 2009-12, page 182. This year's strategic plan, page 78, says:

Integrate design excellence principles, including value management, standard facility designs, procurement best practices, such as public-private partnerships where appropriate, to ensure that Albertans receive cost effective, innovative, sustainable and well designed infrastructure.

Are any of those projects planned for this year? What exactly makes a P3 appropriate? You talk about P3s quite a lot, you know.

I've got more questions on P3s.

Mr. Danyluk: Could you just repeat the last one, please?

Mr. Kang: What exactly makes P3s appropriate? You know, if you've got a P3 project, what makes it so favourable instead of doing it outright by the government?

3:30

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to answer the question again for the hon. member. I want to say to you – and I think it has to be extremely clear – as I said before, that we just don't come to work one day and say: "You know what? We don't have a P3 project. We don't have any." We analyze them on a regular basis. Okay? Any time that we're doing a project, we'll analyze them.

I'm going to say to you again that when we look at projects, we choose the method that makes the most sense for each project. Partnerships are well suited for certain types of large capital projects. I want to say to you that we have individuals and companies that come to us and say: you know, I just wanted you to know that if you did this just a little bit different, I think we can make P3s better. You know what? We listen to people because we work very closely with industry. Presently, if I can tell you, hon. member, we are exploring ways of using them on smaller projects.

How can we implement a partnership on a smaller project? One of the points that was brought forward to us on winning the last gold award was that we were so innovative and flexible in order to have the delivery that accommodates not only the people or the individuals that use the facility at the end but makes sure that we, again, have the economics of scale. So we're doing that. The benefits are being on time – that's your question – on budget, and the private sector carries the financial risk. There's also, as I said to you before, the 30-year warranty, the private-sector guarantees that are put in place for maintenance and capital renewal for 30 years.

Mr. Chairman, the private partners are rigorously evaluated to ensure value for money. I need to stress at the end that partnerships are still a priority in our business plan, and our goal is to use them when necessary or when it's favourable. But at the end of the day, hon. member, we need to build buildings that work. We need to build buildings that work for the clients, whether they be the students or whether they be the patients or whether they be the doctors and the nurses or whether they be the teachers and, most importantly, for the communities. We need to build buildings that work, that are able to adapt to the community's needs.

With that, if I can, hon. member, that is why we have to look at different ways of building them as well.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, sir. You talked a bit about the criteria, but you didn't really say much about what criteria you used to evaluate these projects. You know, is one of the criteria just to save money? A 30-year grant: what kinds of protections do we have if the company was to walk away from the project? Can we expect to see P3 debt for schools, hospitals? What is the minister anticipating that P3 debt to be? You keep on talking about it. What ongoing measures are used to evaluate the cost-effectiveness and feasibility of P3 financing compared with public financing?

I think I'll stop there.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I can say to the hon. member that the value-for-money reports are available online on the Education website. That demonstrates the value for money in, let's say, the ASAP 1 and 2 projects. You can look those up and do the comparisons.

Your question about ensuring that they don't walk away from the project, I think, is one of them. You have to remember that they have paid for the project. They have built the project. They have invested in the project. They have signed the criteria for the project. We pay them back on a yearly basis. So we sort of have the upper hand because if those conditions aren't met, we don't pay.

The last question, if I can bother you again? Sorry.

Mr. Kang: What ongoing measures are used to evaluate cost-effectiveness and feasibility of P3 financing compared with public financing?

Mr. Danyluk: The ongoing measures are the value-for-money reports, that are available online. That's the project. What do we do on an ongoing basis? We have the criteria in place. We have the contract in place. We have all of the specifications in place that are necessary. Is there some flexibility? We had a little bit of a challenge in interpretation, and the groups got together and said: you know, I think we need to have more flexibility in this particular area. There was no problem with that. We did it. We assigned it. The question, of course, was: is this going to cost more money for the person who built it? Is it going to be economically of need? Really, it wasn't, and we just needed to get that formulated. We do that consultation on a regular basis.

I want to say that the office of the Attorney General has examined all the agreements of the partnerships. We've also done a value-for-money. That not only gives you an indication for the immediate, but it also gives you an indication into the future that we are getting the best value for Albertans for the money.

Mr. Kang: What proposals, if any, have been submitted by Transportation for this method of financing for the future? That was one question.

As the recession has effectively lowered construction costs – you brag about that, too, that we are building now 40 per cent cheaper – and labour demand has relatively subsided, what implications do these changes have on current P3 contracts that have been signed or contracts that are still being negotiated?

One more?

Mr. Danyluk: Sure.

Mr. Kang: Will the ministry still pursue P3 contracts in this low-interest environment? What is the interest rate you are currently paying for the P3 projects? Can you give a few examples, please?

Mr. Danyluk: First of all, Mr. Chairman, we choose the method that makes the most sense. I want to also tell you that that is one of the criteria. That is one of the marks, if I can say that, in regard to making the right choice. But I also want to say to you that we do a comparison, a legitimate comparison that is held with Justice. We do a comparison, a conventional build that is held in Justice, to make sure that what we're doing does make sense and has value. Do you understand what I'm saying?

You just don't say: "Okay. You know what? A partnership is the way we're going to go. We're saying that it's the best way to build it, and we're saying that it has value for money." Well, you know, we can say it, and it really doesn't mean anything. This is the partnership over here, and on this side we have the conventional build. In a conventional build we have to work alongside the partnership. It's given to Justice. It's opened up at the same time so that there's a comparison to make sure that there is value.

That's how we arrived at the value, if I can say, when we looked at ASAP 2, where we had over $90 million in savings because we looked at one aspect and then looked at the other aspect, which we turned in. Justice opened up the conventional build, and we basically said: "You know what? We've saved $90 million on this."

The Chair: Hon. minister, continue.

Mr. Danyluk: Sorry. I didn't answer when you asked about the interest rate. I need to say to you that the partnership proponent carries, really, its own interest rate because what it is is the value of the project. It is the cost of the project. It is the value of the project to the end of its life, and we do the same thing as well for the conventional build. Right? So it's the cost. You know, whoever the investor is says: "Well, you know what? I need so much percentage or so many dollars in investment." That could be one. That could be two. That could be three. But at the same time what does take place is that at the end of the day it works out to: who's got the best bid? So whatever their calculations are inside, it's really their business. It's to deliver.

I need to say as well that partnerships are also reviewed by an independent committee outside of government, and that's the advisory committee on alternate financing, that reviews and advises. I guess the best way to describe it is that if you go to a store to buy a product and if you buy a grapefruit, for instance, does it matter what the cost of the interest is for building that store? What you want to make sure is that you're getting the most value from the cost of that grapefruit and what it's going to give you. No differently than if you go and compare it to different stores, it's the value of the product.

Mr. Kang: I'm just asking you to give me some examples of what interest rate we are paying on any P3 projects, but you're not coming clear on that. You know, you can say: "Okay. On Stoney Trail this is what it is, and we are paying 3 or 4 per cent interest over 30 years or 40 years or 50 years." That's what I was getting at. I was not looking at the end product.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I'm sure the hon. Minister of Transportation had his estimates a little while ago. I'm not sure exactly how to message it, and you're saying: come clean. I tried to come clean with the grapefruit. It didn't work, right? So let me try to come clean with a service that might be provided for you. I'm going a different way. It's a service to provide your children with an education. Just take that as a kind of a global comment.

Really, what you want to make sure is that your child is provided education, provided the best possible education that you can have. There are all kinds of details in all of the contracts that take place, whether it's the teachers' contracts, whether it's the interest on the building, on what it cost, whether it's the pavement coming up, whether it's the books. At the end of the day you care about the education of your child. Well, we want to make sure that we have value for the money for the project, whether it be a building or whether it be a school.

I want to say that partners submit bids that have a life expectancy or a lifespan or a life of 30 years. That includes interest. What happens is that they may go to the bank of Hong Kong, or they may go to the Toronto-Dominion Bank, or wherever they get the money. At the end of the day interest is only one component. We know that the Auditor General agrees that we get value for money, and that's what it's all about. It's making sure that you get the product.

Mr. Kang: Sure, we need value for the money, but I'm saying: how much is it going to cost us? We are passing this debt on to future generations.

There are always costs. You know, if I send my kid for education, there's a cost involved, and I know how much it's going to cost me. Here we are not knowing the cost, you know, what interest we are paying on those P3 projects, and how much the bill will be at the end of the day. That's where I'm coming from. So far we haven't heard anywhere and we haven't read what interest we are paying and how much the end cost will be.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, hon. member, but I will say to you that we know exactly what it's going to cost. We know exactly. That's one of the beauties of the partnership. We know what the cost is going to be. In fact, the 30-year warranty of the building gives us a more secure cost than if we had an independent build, if I can call it that, because we build, and we can estimate. We know we have a guarantee.

I don't want to say it in this way, but when we build a building, it sort of comes without a guarantee. Building a building in a partnership comes with a guarantee that they'll maintain it for 30 years. So you know the cost. You know what the warranty is going to be. You know what that building is going to cost you for 30 years. You know the shape that that building is going to be in in 30 years.

Mr. Kang: You haven't said how much that costs. You are saying: "We know the cost. We know the cost." I want to know the cost, okay?

Anyway, I'll move on.

Mr. Danyluk: Which building? I can tell you the cost.

Mr. Kang: Give me the cost on Stoney Trail.

Mr. Danyluk: We don't do highways. Which building? ASAP 1 with 18 schools . . .

Mr. Kang: Okay. We will get back to that. What interest are we paying?

Mr. Danyluk: ASAP 1 with 18 schools: I can tell you exactly what that costs, what it costs per year and what it costs to build.

The Chair: Hon. member, we are on the last 20 minutes now.

Mr. Kang: Okay. We want to have fun.

You touched on the Auditor General's April 2010 recommendation on page 24, recommendation 2, that the Department of Infrastructure follow their own guidance to publish a value-for-money report upon entering into public-private partnership agreements. Will this ministry make public the value-for-money reports for the previous P3s that this government has committed to, and if not, why not? Will this minister commit to conducting value-for-money reports for all future P3s and publicly disclose the reports, increasing transparency? You touched on that a little bit.

Mr. Danyluk: I just want to say to you that we have. In fact, it is on the Education website. It is online. We have shown what that is. If I can, hon. member, I want to say to you that we saved between $90 million and $100 million. I want to stress to you that when we did the comparison that we had to hand in, it showed that we saved $100 million on ASAP 1, which was 18 schools.

I'm just trying to find the exact number of what we saved on ASAP 2. Forty million dollars in savings on ASAP 2, which really was four high schools and 10 regular schools.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you. Infrastructure quality: when we are comparing the performance measures here . . .

Mr. Sandhu: This is the right guy to ask for a tunnel.

Mr. Kang: I'll get to that. By the end of the day he will be having the cheque for the airport tunnel.

Okay. So here, performance measures, when we compare them, the performance measure for goal 1 of the business plan, page 78, related to the quality of public infrastructure in Alberta hospitals, schools, and postsecondary institutions, there has only been a small improvement in the number of hospitals and schools that are in poor condition. The definitions of good, fair, and poor haven't been included in the 2010-13 business plan. In previous years that information has been included, and taken from the last year's business plan is the following definition of poor condition infrastructure: poor condition "means upgrading is required to comply with minimum codes or standards and deterioration has reached the point where major repairs or replacement are necessary." That was a footnote on page 184 of the 2009-12 business plan. And . . .

Mr. Danyluk: While you're looking, I can just tell you that the health facilities' physical condition, yes, we have included them. The ministry is targeting an increase in the health facilities in good condition as many new health projects are nearing completion and the investments in maintenance will have an impact. Also, in school facilities the percentage of school facilities in good condition is targeted to increase with the completion of the 32 ASAP 1 and ASAP 2 schools and other school projects. Lastly, Mr. Chairman, the percentage of facilities space in poor condition is targeted to continue to decrease due to the government's continued investment in maintenance in postsecondary education.

Mr. Kang: Okay. So getting back to that, infrastructure that doesn't meet minimum codes poses potential risks to people's health and safety. What specific risks has the minister identified for infrastructure that is in poor condition? By letting infrastructure deteriorate to a poor condition, how much more money does it cost to bring the buildings up to good condition?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Chairman, I'm not exactly sure of the question: how much more it costs to bring them into condition? I guess I can say that when we talk about the overall averages, there are less in poor condition and more in the higher end condition because we've built new schools. I think I said that at the beginning, you know, that when we look at buildings, when we have an increase of new buildings, that changes some of the values. But buildings needing maintenance aren't necessarily unsafe. It basically is a discussion – the lower rating could simply mean a boiler or a roof that is due for replacement.

We have a maintenance schedule. If the life expectancy of a roof is 25 years and we haven't had to change that roof and it's not leaking and maybe we don't change it because it looks in good shape, it does bring it into a different category because that roof has been there a longer time. It doesn't necessarily mean it's leaking. It doesn't necessarily mean it's unsafe. It means that the average life expectancy is probably now shorter because it's had a longer period.

I want to stress to you also, hon. member, that we haven't changed anything in regard to how we assess the buildings themselves. I can tell you that what we have done, if I can call it a change in the process, is we are now on a more regulated schedule, you know, as to when we're looking. So that might be part of what you're asking.

Mr. Kang: So when we are not maintaining buildings and, you know, they become in poor condition in the first place – right? – it would be more cost-effective to keep them maintained properly so that they don't become poor. Health care facilities in poor condition: that is expected to go from 6 to 5 per cent. It's going to go down 1 per cent, health facilities, from 6 to 5, in poor condition. How much would it cost to replace this 1 per cent loss? The target reflects the anticipated condition of facilities assuming current funding levels. How much more would it cost to start improving facilities? What would it take in terms of time and money to get to only 4 per cent of poor quality infrastructure across the board?

Mr. Danyluk: Let me just maybe answer in this way. I believe that we should spend approximately 1 per cent of our inventory on maintenance. Just a hypothetical figure. That's how we think we should do it. The challenge is that we can't necessarily do that every year. I'm going to say two things to you as well. Sometimes we have buildings that are in good condition, but they may not have the value.

Let me use this building as an example – okay? – if I can. I think this building is in good condition.

An Hon. Member: Minus the two light bulbs.

Mr. Danyluk: Minus the two light bulbs.

But I want to say to you that the roof, the terracotta, is ending its lifespan, so we're going to have to change that terracotta. All of a sudden when we do an analysis, what happens is that the roof on this facility can make this building be in a less advantaged position. It still is very functional. I think the maintenance staff do a terrific job. We're sitting here. It's a good building – two light bulbs burnt, but we did replace them – but the roof may bring that down, right?

At the same time what happens is that we do have buildings that have exceeded their lifespans, buildings that when we look at them and we look at the condition of the buildings, even though they're safe, they do not enter into the criteria of spending money to ensure that they stay on our inventory. That happens, and it should happen because if we have a building that's going to cost more than 75 per cent, if I can use the general rule of thumb, to fix it, then sometimes it might be more beneficial to build a new building because we can address some of the LEED issues. We can do the efficiencies of the power and the efficiencies of the heating system and the air exchange and what it provides.

So at the end of the day we don't have buildings that I would consider unsafe. We have buildings that may need a scheduled – and let me repeat that – a scheduled maintenance.

Mr. Kang: So in your opinion there are no more leaky roofs in schools and other buildings. That's what you're getting at?

Okay. My second question – we have those leaky roofs – given the extraordinary amount of money we've spent on capital in recent years, isn't it concerning that we are only just staying flat on these measures? Shouldn't there be dramatic improvements on these measures? Why hasn't it happened? Why isn't the ministry being more ambitious on this?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I would suggest to you that if you look at the number of buildings that the province owns – and I earlier stated that we own over 1,500 buildings, and we try to continue to maintain them on what I would consider a needs basis. When you do that, yes, in the particular situation of schools, when you have new schools coming into play, coming into the inventory, if you have 18 schools or 34 schools that come into that spectrum, you know, it does make a difference. But it's not going to make a dramatic difference.

We don't replace 10 buildings in our inventory in one year. We're doing work on the federal building, which is, basically, one major building in our inventory of buildings. I mean, it doesn't have a dramatic effect. It does have a dramatic effect when you're comparing building number one, which is the federal building, against a building where the staff may be. That is a major impact. But if you look at all of the buildings we have, it's not so many.

I hope I've made myself clear. I think that the more buildings that we do have, if you do replace and modernize and fix up those individual buildings, it doesn't dramatically increase the numbers, but it does increase them.

Mr. Kang: I think you answered the question somewhat.

Seeing as it isn't projected to happen over the next three years, when can Albertans expect to see these dollars paying off in a shrinking proportion of poor infrastructure?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, when we do a projection into the coming future, if I can call it that, there is the condition – and let me use roofs because we've been using roofs – that if we have a number of roofs that have gone from the 24- to the 25- and the 26-year state, then what ends up happening is that we know that's going to be an increase. We also know some of the buildings that we're replacing or we're modernizing will lift that percentage up. At the end of the day where we are is: that's how our projections are made, and that's how we also look at budgets for the future.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The $1.56 billion budgeted for health facilities, schools, and postsecondary education for 2011-12, capital plan 2011 to '14, page 91. In last year's business plan, strategy line 1.10, page 176, there would be a new delivery model for major health facilities. What exactly was the change in the delivery model? What led to the change? What benefits will there be with this change in how these facilities are designed, procured, constructed, and commissioned? Will this new delivery model be expanded to include other types of facilities such as schools, post-secondary education?

Is that too many? Should I stop?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, no. It's not that it's too many. I think the question is a good question because exactly what did happen is that Alberta Health Services maintained the responsibility of the infrastructure part of health delivery. What did take place is that we in Infrastructure got the major health facilities. That's what is expressed as a different delivery model. Infrastructure is now delivering those projects.

What is the delivery model difference? I can go on with that if you want. I would just lightly say that previously when the government gave money for new hospitals, hospitals were delivered using a construction management approach, and the contractor and the designer were hired at the same time. When they figured out what that cost was going to be, that's really what the government delivered. Now under Infrastructure we basically look at the design, and because it's within our own department, not in Alberta Health Services, which is arm's length away, we kind of pay as we build, to the contractors.

In simplistic terms previously we used to pay for the project. They managed it. They built it. They took care of it. Now we build it, and we allocate so much funding every year for the building of that building, and we pay according to how it's built.

The Chair: Hon. member, you have two minutes.

Mr. Kang: Oh, okay.

Will this new delivery model be expanded to include everything?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I mean, it's not my decision whether I will take over the responsibility of schools and postsecondary education, but it will be by cabinet and caucus and Treasury Board. That decision will be made, and that decision will be made in the future. I can't comment on what's going to happen. I can just tell you right now that we are in charge of the major facility builds in health care.

I'm very disappointed that you only have a couple minutes left because I sure wanted to address that tunnel.

Mr. Kang: Thank you. Okay. Well, I'll come back. Thank you.

The Chair: You still have a minute.

Mr. Kang: Okay. What new facilities will this health facilities support provide?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I think I mentioned some of the new facilities that are being built and are going to be built. There's, of course, the $520 million facility in Grande Prairie, the $108 million facility in Edson, the some $90 million facility in High Prairie. We also have the upgrades to facilities. We're spending, I think, some $300 million on the south Calgary campus. We're also doing the cancer treatment at the Foothills and the Tom Baker. We're building the cancer treatment in Lethbridge, the cancer treatment in Red Deer, and adding cancer treatment in Grande Prairie.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister. The first hour has been completed.

Now we are going to the third-party opposition, with 20 minutes. Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, do you wish to combine or have 10 minutes?

Mr. Hinman: Yes. We'll go back and forth.

The Chair: Back and forth.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Yeah, this is a fast three-hour marathon, and it goes by like that, but we need a triathlon that goes all day.

Mr. Danyluk: I'm ready.

Mr. Hinman: Anyway, it's disappointing that the government gets so much time and the opposition so little. That's my big complaint. I appreciate the time here. [interjections] Yes, it's so critical that you need it.

I listened to the minister speak so eloquently at the start, talking about the importance of infrastructure buildings. I totally agree with him. What has made this province so great is the infrastructure that we have: buildings, transportation, pipelines. We all know and understand that it's critical, but I have to take exception when the minister goes on to say that someone sitting close to this colleague says that we need to slow it down. I want to talk a little bit about that and get the minister's reaction. Seventeen point six billion dollars in three years is more than anywhere else in the country, which the minister stated. We need infrastructure.

There are lots of arguments on what our infrastructure deficit is, but the question is: how are we going to go forward to do this? To just look at three years and spend all of our sustainability savings, spend everything, and then all of a sudden hit the wall again is a real problem for us in the Wildrose. We think that it needs to be measured. We need to realize that we've got 10 years and 20 years down the road, not just three. Then where are we going to get the funding to carry on?

There's no question that this is like the tortoise and the hare. This government has been behaving like the hare, and the tortoise is going to win, or might I say that the taxpayers are going to lose because of the incredible amount of money that is being spent and not being spent wisely. We can look at some of the situations in the south Calgary hospital and those areas. Billions-plus are being spent, and again there's no plan or capability to manage or staff those hospitals to come on stream.

An Hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Hinman: I've asked them, and they said that. I've met with them. [interjection] Well, that's the problem with this government. They deny, duck, dodge, but the truth is still out there. I kind of get a kick out of the comments that they make, that there's no proof. There's no proof when there's lots. There's the truth. It isn't necessary if you can prove it or not. It can take great minds like Einstein years and years to have proof to demonstrate the truth. This government is running into a brick wall. The definition of insanity is to do the same things over and over again and expect a different outcome, and this is what they're guilty of, Mr. Chair.

4:10

To sum up, the problem that's going on with the bidding is that this government continues – and I'd like to ask the question: how many construction management fees are in place for all of the billions that you're spending versus lump-sum bids or full bids? You put the bids out, but they're always management fee bids, and we don't know what the costs are. The south Calgary hospital is a classic example, where we've gone from $700 million to, I've been told, $1.3 billion.

P3s. You talk about those, and you say how much you save, and that's great, but I want to point out to the minister that you were actually told by the Auditor General that you misstated and overstated the amount being saved by $20 million on some schools, and he said that you needed to correct that. I could pull the article because you look a little bit dazed about that one.

I want to go back to the analogy and your answer. Most people I know that lease a car, whether it's three years or five years, lease it with the intent of turning it back and walking away from it and entering a new lease. The only people I know who end up buying those leases out buy them because they broke the contract and there's going to be a high penalty. I appreciate what you're doing with those P3s, but the parameters that you put out in the bids are looking for a 30-year. It's ours after we've leased it, but we take it back. It's in our ownership, is my understanding, after 30 years. Then what's the cost? We want 50- or 60- or 100-year buildings, not 30 years, and then it's gone. It's much like a vehicle, in my mind, that after three years isn't worthless. We're paying a premium price when you look at it over the full life cycle, which perhaps is 60 years on these buildings.

A few other questions that you can look up as you go. Major concerns on the amount of announcements on what goes forward. You've reannounced the Fort Macleod police college. We're very concerned on whether or not you're really going to go ahead and whether you have the money. And a specific question, because you've referred to these, on the number of schools that you're building, again, where the Auditor General has said that you've overstated the savings. Could you please explain how areas like Airdrie, Fort McMurray, and Beaumont got bumped out of the priority infrastructure list? They're at the top now, but you've built over 20 schools in areas when, by all estimates that we look at, they were far more necessary in those areas, and they weren't built. Again, the south Calgary hospital is a classic example of delay, delay, delay coming in there.

I also have a question on the Fort McMurray truck stop. I mean, in the oil and gas industry they put requests for proposals to the government on where they want to buy leases and whatnot. That request went in. Why was the land 10 miles away put up for bid when the developer, again looking at where it's most economically based, was picked? Maybe this is under Transportation, but I thought it might be Infrastructure. Why was that land not released for that truck stop that was needed up there and asked for?

Again, I have to comment, you know, on the Grande Prairie hospital. That was announced so many times. I mean, it's like the boy who cries wolf, but finally it's coming to fruition. Why do you make so many announcements and not follow through and then break these promises?

I'm just going to ask about the spending sprees. Why do you really think that spending this huge amount of money – in three years from now we're going to be out of money. Are we going to stop building infrastructure because we have it all done? It's not even comprehensible to think that this $18 billion over three years is going to build our infrastructure. What's the plan then?

In 2003 when Infrastructure and Transportation were cut back, it was devastating to the industry. You cut the spending in half, we built up the capacity, it was reduced, and then when you started spending a lot again, all of a sudden the bids came in at an exorbitant amount because there wasn't the capacity in the industry to match the bids that were going out. I would like to see a 10-year projection that states which ones are first, prioritized, and if there's more money each year because the bids are good, this just slides in and the bids go on.

Why do you not have a public list of the infrastructure, whether it's schools, hospitals, courthouses, remand centres? Why aren't they prioritized for Albertans to see and say, "Yeah, that is a good point"? When there's no list, we kind of forget. When it's in front of us, we're focused and say: "Oh, oh. We've got to do this. We've got to do that." But when the list is there to say: "Well, no. Airdrie school, we need to do it. The remand centre in Edmonton, we need to do it" – why do you continue to refuse to put out that prioritized list and show industry that we're going to have this sustainable funding of $4 billion or $5 billion for 10 years that they can count on?

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Prior to 2003 industry people looked at it, and they had a life cycle of five years for lots of their equipment. After 2006 a lot of the industry people I talked to put the life cycle of one year into the bids because they don't know whether this government is going to continue on next year. If they're going to buy equipment, they've got to pay for it this year. That hasn't been in taxpayers' best interests.

I'll let you answer a few of those, and then we'll go on.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much. Let me just say to you that I truly cannot even believe what I'm hearing. You know, I've got to work backwards on you a little bit. I'm not sure what developers or contractors or construction companies you're talking to that said that they don't have security. Well, let me say to you, hon. member, that they do have security. That's what the sustainability fund is used for, and that's what adds stability to the projects that we have.

You just talked about one year, and now you're talking about three years. Hon. member, let's just be realistic about this. What happens is that we have committed to put $17.6 billion into infrastructure over three years. What happened last year? Did we just about have the same amount of money that was put into the three years upcoming? Yes, we did. That is stability.

You say that there's no plan. There's a 20-year plan. There's a 20-year plan that looks into the future at what's necessary. Also, I need to say to you that I'm going to ask you just to – you know, you have an assistant with you. Get her to look under Education. She'll see the projects that have been approved. Also, go onto the medical side. She'll also find the projects that have been approved.

Mr. Chairman, at the beginning there was discussion about so much time for us and so little time for them. [interjections] Well, I think that the questions that were asked I'm trying to answer as quickly as I can if they don't interject.

Seventeen point six billion dollars committed to infrastructure over the next 10 years: I have to ask the hon. member again where he wants me to cut. I mean, you know where the projects are. You have said in question period – I'm not sure if it was you, but your party has said very clearly that they want to cut $2.4 billion.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Danyluk: Two point four billion dollars. Is that adding to stability of construction? I would suggest to you: no, it isn't.

You talked about deny and dodge, and I don't know what the hell that is. Also, when you talk about proof and looking at projects that we have – and the projects, of course, are the partnership projects – for every project we do a comparison to a conventional build. We look at that comparison to see if that funding is there.

I don't think we want a different outcome. I'm not sure where this comes through as far as the different outcome, but I'm going to go to the management fee cost that you talked about. Management fees: you know, these projects are publicly tendered to get the best value, and we choose the best delivery method based on value. That money is out there.

You know what? I will acknowledge what you had stated about the Auditor General saying that we overstated $20 million as he looked. We looked through the books, our comparison and how it was done, and we agree. But he also said that at the end of the day it still had excellent value. It was just the way that we had done things. So that's true.

One point. We don't own them. The private sector does not own the schools; they're owned by the school boards. They will be turned over to the school boards. If I can say it, they're owned by the boards. The method of building is for the boards. They are not leases. The partnerships are not leases. Write that down in bold letters. After 30 years the facility is returned in good condition.

You made mention of announcing a project and not doing a project. Well, we announced Grande Prairie. Grande Prairie is being built. The testing has been done. We have the design. They are looking at building the facility. They're already having consultations with the physicians, with the town, and also the college. That consultation is already happening. Edson: same thing. We own the land in Grande Prairie and Edson. High Prairie is signed.

The other day, not yesterday but the day before, I was at Fort Macleod having discussions about the water line and where the water line was going to come onto the property. We're building that project.

The cancer institute in Lethbridge: being built. Red Deer: being built. Grande Prairie: adding on to the Grande Prairie hospital.

The education facilities to accommodate education in Grande Prairie: being built.

I know that you said a project that was announced and not built. I sort of recall you having a question about the federal building and stopping its building. Is that security for contractors and construction? No. You were going to stop the federal building halfway through its delivery. That's not planning. That's just reaction, immediate reaction.

Tell me about a project that was announced and is not being built. I'm sorry; I don't know of any. Was there a change in focus and direction with the Royal Alberta Museum? Yes, there was because we needed a facility that was going to accommodate all the needs that were necessary, and that gave us opportunity.

Schools that we have said we're going to build. Guess what? We're building them. Now, you also say: well, Airdrie isn't getting this, and Airdrie didn't get that. You know, I want to say to you: Beaumont. There are needs for those communities: Fort McMurray, Beaumont, Airdrie, Chestermere, Red Deer, Calgary, Edmonton. Yes, there are. Are we looking at it, and are we going to build those schools? Yes, we will. I don't know how you can stand up one day and say that we're going to cut and we're going to take away and then: yes, we've got to build schools. You have to have a philosophical direction that has some commonality. You cannot go in opposite directions.

What else do I have here? Fort McMurray, the land that you talked about in Fort McMurray: 980 acres in the south land that have been released. The municipality and the business community are very pleased. Also, it's an open and competitive process, not based on one proposal. It was a bid system. What was one of the criteria? To get it done as quickly as possible. It's there, trying to accommodate the commercial needs.

Okay. I still don't know about the hospital delays. I'm not sure where they are, and I don't know where you mean, right? But I know that what we are building, of course, are continuing builds. Right before Christmas we met with the oncologists. That process maybe took a little longer. We met with the oncologists from Edmonton, and we met with the oncologists from Calgary. The discussion around the table was that we deal not only with the issues of the day but look to the future of what's necessary, how we accommodate the technology that may be coming into the future to try to address the needs of individuals. That's exactly what the . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, Standing Order 59.02(1) states that 10 minutes are allowed. I'll give the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore an opportunity now.

Mr. Hinman: Thanks, Mr. Chair. Always entertaining to watch the minister go on like that, but it's quite obvious that the point that this government fails to understand – and I don't see it; I don't think they ever will, but they will get replaced if they don't – is the priority list. Even such things as the federal building we wouldn't have started because we had other things that were more important. A 20-year plan is only a wish unless it's written down. This is a wish of this government to go forward.

What we want is a prioritized list. What are the top five priorities for schools? What are the top priorities for a hospital? They don't understand. How many ministers – and this is why I think they rotate through them, so they can reannounce. Whether it's the Fort Macleod police station, the Grande Prairie hospital, Mr. Chair, these have been announced, like, three different times. They go back and make a big announcement that it's coming forward. It's a joke.

The management fee. They're putting the bid out. There's a management fee for building these buildings when what they need is a lump-sum bid. All of the subcontractors, Mr. Chair, have to give solid bids on what they're going to do, whether it's for the steel, the concrete, the windows. They're all locked in. But we have a management fee that balloons and is out of control and isn't in the taxpayers' best interests. Yes, three firms put in a management fee bid. But how about a lump-sum, solid bid just like the subcontractors, where they're forced to actually answer that they're going to put $5,000 worth of steel in and $5,000 worth of windows and $5,000 of electrical. All of the subcontractors are forced to do that, yet this government continually goes – and he didn't answer. How many of them are management fee versus the full fee?

The Deputy Chair: We're now into the next set of 20 minutes, and I'd like to call the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Danyluk: Can I answer his?

The Deputy Chair: The 20 minutes is up between you two.

Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you will be sharing the 20 minutes between you and the minister?

Mr. Mason: We'll see.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. All right.

Mr. Mason: This guy could talk the leg off a chair, Mr. Chairman. Wow, was that ever productive, the last 20 minutes.

I want to just ask basically the same question, and that is: why is there not a priority list for capital projects? When I was with the city of Edmonton, we considered a capital plan. It was a three-year plan. We considered it on an annual basis, and it had a list of projects ranked by priority. Those projects were available for everyone to see, so I know it's possible to do this and actually have the individual projects ranked.

It was then possible for us on council to say: you know, in our opinion this hockey arena is more important than this expansion to the water treatment plant. We could move, by motion, to move one project above the line, and then another one would drop below the line, or we could of course find more money. So I'd really ask the minister why we can't do that here in this province. I know it's very possible.

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. You know, I'm not exactly sure where to start, but let me just start that the government has a 20-year plan – okay? – and the purpose of the 20-year plan is to be able to try to predict some of the development, what is going to happen, some of the revenues, some of the expenses that are going to be necessary to accommodate a population that may be growing and may not.

We're very much a commodity-based province. Whether it be agriculture or oil and gas, it's commodity-based, right? Let us talk about your theory for just a second, okay? Your theory is a priority list. So we have a priority list that says: "You know what? Edmonton should get this many schools, and Calgary should get this many schools." That's traditionally what has happened. We've had traditionally an agriculture, manufacture base with a little bit of oil and gas.

Oh. All of a sudden Calgary increases to the point of 35,000 people a year. Airdrie has increased in population over five years to the tune of, I think, 80 per cent. Chestermere has increased 50 per cent. Beaumont. So what happens? We say that we had a priority list, and we've got to change it because right now we can't use that because we have areas that we have to accommodate. Grande Prairie has grown exponentially, if I can say the word, and that is why we needed the health facility that's there, and that's why we're building it.

Why are we building the cancer institutes in Lethbridge and in Red Deer and in Grande Prairie? Because the populations have grown there, and it gives a service to the people that are there. To say to you that there is a plan, well, we can't exactly predict where people are going to live. Did you know that Airdrie was going to grow to the extent that it did?

Mr. Mason: I did, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Danyluk: You did know that?

Mr. Mason: Yes. I had a pretty good idea that it was.

The point the minister is completely missing in his rather unnecessarily lengthy response is the fact that priority plans change on a regular basis. There are always changes made to priority plans on an annual basis. It's part of the budgeting process. The question still remains: why is this Legislature not dealing with the 20-year plan that the minister is talking about? [Mr. Danyluk rose] I'm not done. I'm not letting you back up again.

You know, it is a legitimate question. Why does this Legislature not deal with the 20-year plan that this minister keeps referring to?

Now, I want to express a concern here, and it has to do with the willingness of your office to provide our staff with background information. When it comes to other ministers' offices, we're able to get background information so that we don't have to waste time in this Assembly asking just for basic background information. We've been unable to get the co-operation from your office, and I think it's unfortunate, Mr. Minister. It's clear from the answers that this isn't about having a back and forth about actual information that's relevant to the budget. It's about the minister standing up and making bombastic speeches about whatever he wants to talk about and wasting our time, frankly.

I want to talk a little bit about P3 schools. The Auditor General said that there was room to improve transparency to the public by publishing a value-for-money report. He raised concern about the process by which the ministry estimated maintenance costs, which was clear and not made available. He found that estimates for risk evaluations were not validated against actual experience from other school projects. Risk evaluations were based on opinions of staff and anecdotal evidence. I'd like to ask about that.

The question is that the ministry has created its own guideline, saying that they must publish a value-for-money report upon signing a P3 agreement. I'd like to know why that's not done. The AG report found that no report was published with respect to this, and the department did not demonstrate in a transparent manner how value for money was obtained. Finally, it was published in June 2010. The question is: why, really, did it take so long?

Another 10 schools have been scheduled to open in 2012 using the P3 model. In April 2010 the government signed an agreement with the B2L partnership to design, build, finance, and maintain 10 new schools for a 30-year term in Edmonton and the Calgary region as B2L partnership had the lowest bid price. The government claims the costs of doing the same work through traditional delivery methods would be $358 million, so they're claiming a savings of $105 million. Yet, again, no value-for-money report has been published despite the contract already being signed.

With an agreement in place the minister is required to release the reasoning and justification for using a P3 model, but the minister hasn't released it. Why not? I'd like to know whether the public cost comparators have been released for the ASAP 2 school projects, and I'd like to know about key information about P3 contracts having been withheld from the public for proprietary reasons. The government claims that it is saving money by pursuing P3 projects, but when the public is not allowed to see the information, it backs it up. So there's a lack of transparency. I'd like to know if there are any steps that you're prepared to take to improve the transparency of P3 costs so that we can see that they're actually cheaper than building it through traditional public finance.

The other thing about schools is that they've been built in order to find economies that don't rise out of the P3 model but rise out of economies of scale, so they've designed a single, one-size-fits-all approach. These schools do not match with the government's promises or do not take provincial standards into consideration. Nine new schools planned for Calgary are being designed with classrooms larger than necessary for the recommended class sizes, and the head of a parents' group fears the schools will subsequently become jam-packed.

Each new school built under a P3 has a permanent core facility surrounded by modular classrooms. According to the plans schools expected to hold 400 students will now have 16 classrooms, and the schools holding 450 students will have 18 classrooms. That works out to 25 children per room even though the province recommends class sizes of 17 for kindergarten to grade 3 schools.

Why won't the minister acknowledge that this cost-saving technique and the P3 model are not adequate for meeting the needs and demands of each of the schools individually?

The question of P3s shows that the public sector enjoys two fundamental advantages over the private sector in financing public infrastructure. The public sector can borrow at a substantially more favourable rate than a private-sector operator of a stand-alone project. It is because of being able to pool risk over a larger number of projects. The public sector can manage risks associated with project costs more cost-effectively than a private operator of a stand-alone project. In other words, the very factors that are touted as P3 advantages are in reality the core factors that lead inevitably to the conclusion that, if properly compared, P3s cannot compete with direct public-sector provision.

A decision to bear the higher costs and proceed with P3 financing will inevitably result in one or both of the higher costs for taxpayers. Mr. Chairman, I'd like the minister to respond if he can to precisely and specifically why P3 projects are more cost-effective in the government's opinion. I'd really like it if he could provide some very concrete evidence that they are.

I want to ask about the Lieutenant Governor's mansion. Now, that is a real boondoggle. The temporary home that the Lieutenant Governor currently stays in is a $2.1 million home near the old residence. They're now proposing to build a new Lieutenant Governor's. This was just kind of slipped into the announcement of the new museum. Two years before the government spent $380,000 in design and consultants and then cancellation fees. The cost to taxpayers will be around $550,000, but it could be over $600,000.

The cost of renovating the old residence was estimated at around $400,000. The government described the old building as a money pit, so the building was demolished.

We have more homeless people on the streets now than we've had for a long time.

4:40

Some Hon. Members: Not true. Not true.

Mr. Mason: Well, we still have a considerable number, hon. members. We still have a considerable number, not to trivialize it, please, and I know that that minister won't, but that minister will. I want to know how we can justify spending $10 million on a mansion for a Lieutenant Governor and call that a good use of taxpayers' money given the fact that we have serious housing needs remaining in our province. I think that's something that's really important to me.

I want to ask how it is that we make decisions between building new facilities and being able to staff and operate them? What does the government do to make sure that when we build a hospital, for example, we are also planning so that the budget is available and the staffing is available to operate that facility as soon as it's open?

There are many examples in this provincial government of expensive capital facilities being constructed and remaining partly or completely vacant. I have one in my own constituency, which is the east Edmonton health centre, that was supposed to include a number of services for people in the northeast part of the city, which is significantly underserved by medical professionals. When it was opened, they simply moved in the old public health clinic and starting operating that. They've added a couple more things, but major improvements to the health of the community that were planned there and particularly the capacity to take a load off of the emergency rooms at the Royal Alexandra hospital have not been opened. We see this in the Mazankowski Heart Institute and in the Calgary hospital. Throughout the province we see the government building expensive capital facilities and then not staffing them and not opening them fully.

This is a serious problem. It really indicates that there's a lack of co-ordination on the part of the government. I'd like to know about that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to make sure that this is very clear for the hon. member. The shelled-in space that was discussed by him right at the end is shelled-in space for future growth and expansion. When we talk about the Don Mazankowski centre, I just want to say that that's done very deliberately. The cost that it would take to expand – and we know that the hospital is going to expand. We know that the facility is going to expand. I would suggest to you that that is very good planning to be able to have space when it's needed, to be able to accommodate the needs of the community. I have no apologies at all for planning. You made mention of other facilities, and I would say that that holds true for them as well.

The other point that was discussed was a $10 million Lieutenant Governor's residence. Mr. Chairman, let me make it clear to you that, yes, that was the anticipated cost a number of years ago, and that is why we didn't build it. It wasn't the right time to build. There is not going to be a cost to the taxpayers of Alberta because the residence that is there right now and the land that is there will pay for the residence. You say: "Well, why? It was just kind of conveniently slipped in." It wasn't conveniently slipped in. What happens is that there's Government House that's right there on that facility. That facility is not going to accommodate condos or anything else, and it is the perfect site for a Lieutenant Governor's residence, a Lieutenant Governor's residence that's able to be viewed, especially on the outside, by people when they go to the site.

Mr. Chairman, I very much want to talk about the 20-year plan. I guess I have a little bit of trouble because, you know, some want less, and some want more. I think, being right in the middle with a 20-year plan and having a focus and a direction, I'm kind of feeling right now that we're in the right place.

You also made a comment about getting information. This is the purpose of these estimates. It's to get information from ministries. Now, that was done days before. My feeling on this is: "Hey. You're here. Great. If you have any questions, I will answer them."

I also want to talk about the transparency. You know, the transparency is there. It's posted on the website. The transparency on the value of money – it's very clear. When we talk about the value for money, the value for money takes what the cost is, the cost of a partnership as opposed to a conventional build, which, by the way, goes through the system of comparisons. ASAP 1 was somewhere between $90 million and $100 million in savings. That is posted, the value. ASAP 2 has a savings of $40 million. That is posted. That is there. So I say to you: just check out the websites, and you will find your information. The numbers are posted.

You talked about releasing information. We release all information except the proprietary information of contractors. There's information there that should not be released and is not released because it's information confidential from the public.

As far as looking at partnerships, I want to say to you that when a project comes forward, we do that comparison. We look at the aspects, and we look at the benefits. We do a cost benefit, making sure that we're looking at it from the budget side, also ensuring that the timing of the project is there, ensuring the 30-year warranty, and also, when we talk about the 30-year warranty, making sure that those buildings come back to us in a very positive state. [A timer sounded] There's your buzzer. I know the hon. member from the fourth party . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. The fourth party has been recognized.

Now I'll recognize the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to attend today and have an opportunity to interact with the minister and have a discussion in a number of areas. I want to start out, first of all, with an observation. Over $428 million of the minister's budget is devoted to operating and maintaining existing government buildings.

I've got some specific questions, but I think that before we get to that, I want to ask the minister to spend a little bit of time talking about what the ministry is doing to ensure that we're making effective use of existing space – I know that from time to time I have constituents and others making observations about facilities that we have that are either in transition, renovation, or that might be vacant for a period of time – and how we optimize the use of the facilities that we have, making sure that we don't have more capacity than we require at any given time and, certainly, the effectiveness strategies that we employ in terms of how efficiently those facilities operate. It's more than just utilization. It is around the costs of operating those facilities once they are fully utilized.

To the minister, then, a quick discussion about that, and then I can drill down to some questions that I have.

4:50

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that last year we completed an accommodation review. The accommodation review was basically a review that looked at the spaces that we have, looked at the leases that we have, looked at how we can re-engineer some of the spaces that are necessary. Technology has changed tremendously in the last 10 years. The way that we provide services has changed. So looking at how we provide space for staff has also changed.

I'm just going to give you just a couple of comments. I want to say that the implementation process is now under way. Also, just as an example, you know, to answer your question a little bit, we changed the process of furniture delivery to different ministries. Previously different ministries had their own budgets. As far as furniture delivery we now have a co-ordinated management of government furniture. We also have a co-ordinated management of IT. That has led to efficiency. Over time this will lead to more efficiency of space. It will provide more flexibility when change is necessary. For some of the areas that we're looking at, it's going to reduce lease space and going to be more flexible in a lease space. We've gone to a different system where staff, if I can say, have maybe smaller spaces but spaces that they seem to be very much more comfortable with.

The new federal building, in fact, will have that accommodated space in it. I did mention before the more appropriate workspace for the modern realities of what we're doing, areas for greater collaboration, flex space, accommodating telecommunications, more natural light, and better noise control. Really, more space that's accommodating as well. Of course, one of the major examples – and I would sure encourage anybody to go and take a look at it – is the Access Building that we have on the south side. We're also continually reviewing inventory to ensure that the space is used efficiently and effectively.

The surplus properties will be offered first to municipalities for community use, but we're always looking for the best way for infrastructure to retrofit and adapt and looking at new ways of building.

Mr. Dallas: Okay. Well, that's helpful.

I think, you know, I want to explore a little bit some of this funding, what it's used for. There are some changes in these estimates over prior years. If you'd just take a moment and have a look at page 216 of the '11-12 estimates, specifically down to line 2.1, the first thing I'm looking at there is that property operations are expected to cost $24 million more than last year. Obviously, we're talking about how we're going to use space more efficiently, how perhaps we can contract the total amount of space per employee, that type of thing, but we're proposing to spend $24 million more. I want you to comment on that.

Likewise, not very far away there, the next line item, 2.2, accounts for a $29 million increase in estimated expenses on leases. So some rationale as to why we need to spend $29 million more there.

Conversely, I guess, you mentioned the accommodation program review. You're proposing to spend $1.5 million; less there. Are we not going to do the same work as we have been? Work is done once, good for three years. I'm not sure there.

So I wonder if you could comment on those items.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, you know, that is a great question. What happens is that we look at the lease space that we do have and the cost of lease space – and we have lease space that comes up for renewal. Some of this lease space has been in place for maybe for 10 years – right? – some of it a little longer. When it comes up for renewal, the costs definitely are higher. That is why it is so important to have the re-engineering. That's why it's so important to be able to fix up spaces that we're going to be able to use. At the end of the day it is going to cost a lot more money. There is no significant expansion at all for lease space.

I mean, there are times that we need leased space. The previous Justice minister just walked in, and I'm just going to acknowledge, you know, that when we talk about southern Alberta, they needed some courtroom space. I mean, we have to accommodate those. We have to try to do the best that we can, and we are going to. That is what I would consider new lease space, but we don't do much of that. The costs are usually in the space that we have already. Also, the contractual costs have gone up, and that is the utilities.

When we talk about property operations, it's necessary to maintain facilities and prevent them from deteriorating. That's critical. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall I believe went extensively into those questions. He's right. I mean, we have over 1,500 buildings, and we need to maintain them, and we need to make sure that those buildings don't deteriorate because if we let them deteriorate, they get to a point where they'll cost us a lot more money. Our rule of thumb is: if it costs 75 per cent or more to renovate a building, maybe we should look at building a new building or looking at different space.

I also want to say, if it is a last comment, that the priority is for safety and accessibility for the public. You know, that has also been a cost that we're trying to accommodate to ensure that the accessibility is always there.

I hope that I answered most of your questions. Really, the accommodation program is to support property operations.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Yeah. Thanks for that, and thanks for those comments on safety and accessibility because those are certainly issues that are brought to me on a regular basis.

Just to switch gears for a moment and talk about something that's a little bit closer to home for me, that's the Red Deer cancer centre project that's being proposed. There are some small beginnings happening around the Red Deer regional hospital. I'm wondering if you can talk about the investment, the construction schedule, and perhaps even some of the features of that particular project.

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. I'm not exactly sure how much time I have, but I definitely want to say that the budget for that project is $46 million, the construction complete in 2012, and the move in should be right at the beginning of 2013. The excavation work is already completed. The bid package has been approved, and we included four subtrades, over $100,000. The bid package 3 includes the building envelope and the mechanical and electrical and interior finishes, and that's 95 per cent complete. The concrete placing and finishing is being retendered to allow other contractors to bid on the package.

I am very excited about the cancer institute focus that this government has for Alberta. You know, I'll use the example of Lethbridge. Over 600 people are going to not have to travel because of the cancer institute in Lethbridge. This is about accessibility. This is about opportunity for people that are sick and if we can make anything a little bit easier and take the pressure off the major centres. You have a cancer institute that is going to be built in Grande Prairie, so people don't have to travel eight hours, and you have a cancer institute in Red Deer, that allows those people from central Alberta to use that facility, and one in Lethbridge.

Then you look at how much pressure that's going to take off the two major institutions in Edmonton and in Calgary, yet you bring those up to date with the technology that we have today. When I met with oncologists in Calgary and in Edmonton to discuss those future opportunities, they very much talked about making sure that whatever we build allows the opportunity for the change of technology into the future because that change in technology is so rapid. That's what you're getting in your community. You're not only getting a facility that is going to address the needs of today, but you're getting a facility that is going to address the needs of the future. More important than anything else, it is going to address the opportunity for technology changes.

You know, the same thing happens at the colleges. I was very fortunate in that I got an opportunity to tour the college in Red Deer. What a building. One of the things that just resonated with me was the discussion about the ability to be able to change the focus of a room or an opportunity for a class. They said, "Today this could be a mechanical shop, and in three days we can make it into a life-values room." I'm going, "What are you talking about?" They said: "We are building buildings today that have accommodation. We are building buildings today that are adaptable."

So when I look at my staff, I think about what they are doing, the ingenious work that they're doing to look not only 50 years into the future but to look at how we can build buildings that work not only for today, not only for 50 years, but for maybe a hundred years into the future. That is necessary. You know, maybe we will get to a situation in the future where, as the hon. members of the fourth party talk about, we need the reduction of support for infrastructure. We need to look at buildings that provide fresh air, that provide the opportunity for students to learn, for patients in hospitals, for people that we have working. This is what it's about. It's about communities. It's about building for the future for communities, that they have that opportunity.

You know, I went with the hon. Solicitor General to Fort Macleod and had the discussions about the police college and how they saw the future, not the future of today, not the future of only tomorrow, but what this college could provide into the future for their community and how this would be beneficial. So when we look at building a building, don't build the building for the needs of today; build the building for the needs into the future, for what could happen, because we really don't know what services we will provide.

I think it's so, so necessary and so good when we go into a community like Grande Prairie, where we have the hospital that has 200 acute-care beds and, as I said, the cancer treatment, and then we just add on and say: "You know what? It's important to have an education component. It's important that we look into the future to ensure that we're educating or helping to educate people that have the opportunity to stay in their community."

This is looking, this is planning, and this is what is so important with this ministry. This ministry and the people that work in it don't look and don't watch television in the same way that maybe I do because they're futurists, because we pound and we pound every day on how they can look into the future to make sure the buildings that we're building accommodate the needs of people.

It's no different than when we talk about a BlackBerry and somebody 20 years ago said: well, I just want you to design the case for a BlackBerry. And they said: well, what is a BlackBerry? Well, we don't know. That's no different than infrastructure when we talk about trying to design for the future. We have to design for building today, and we have to design for the future.

You know, I can go on and talk about the services that are provided in education, that are provided in our schools, that we have the best education system in the world. And what does that mean? That means that we have the best teachers. That means that we have the best technology. That means that we have the best infrastructure. That means that we have opportunity for our children to learn.

I know that we look around and we see people coming and companies coming to Alberta to have a job fair. Why are they coming to this province? Why are they coming to Edmonton and Calgary? Because they know that the children we have are educated so well that they want to have them in their businesses and they want to have them in their companies and they want to have them to help support.

We are very fortunate. Look at our universities. Look at the opportunities at the colleges that we have. You know, we look at the college in my area, which is Lac La Biche-St. Paul. What is the most important thing about that college? Accessibility for people to not have to leave the community because if they had to leave the community, if we didn't have that infrastructure, they would not be able to go to college or to university. That is what's important for that delivery. So we look at the universities, look at what the universities have to offer: the range, the flexibility, the opportunity. Hon. member from Calgary, look at the chance that your children have to be able to be leaders because of the opportunity for education. That is important as well.

Now we can go to seniors' housing for a few minutes. That's one of the major challenges that we have. As you know, you can look around and see that there is more maturity in the ranks, and we need to have those facilities that accommodate the needs of the people of Alberta, have the right seniors' care, have the right opportunity so that when you have – one of the hardest things for seniors is to have to move from one location to another location. You know, what this government is trying to do is to have the individual stay in a space and have the movement of the services, and that is very beneficial. We don't want to separate the husband and the wife, or spouse. It's important that they have the opportunity to live together. It's very easy . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, are you going to be sharing the 20 minutes?

Mr. Hinman: Back and forth. Back and forth.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you Mr. Chair. Well, no one can accuse this minister of not being passionate. But it's a good thing the bell finally went off; he was being pummeled.

Anyway, what is it all about? He was eloquent and going on, but what is it all about? What it really is all about is sustainability, and it's about balancing the budget. You know, there's another individual who's very passionate. I would almost say he's world famous, from Calgary, a chocolate connoisseur. He overbuilt. He openly admits: "I overbuilt. I got caught up in 2008, built beautiful infrastructure. I thought now was the time to build." He overbuilt. That's what we're trying to explain, Mr. Chair, to this minister. Are we at the right pace? Is it sustainable? Have we balanced our budget? The question is obvious. The answer is no, if we take the two steps back and look at it.

The minister is failing to answer the questions, and I will attempt again. What we need is not a 20-year plan that sits up there in the clouds somewhere but a 20-year plan that is actually written down and made public and that we know. What we have been asking for, and what I have been asking for since 2004, is a prioritized list. When I'm in business, I know what the infrastructure is, what we need to buy, what equipment is wearing out. We have a list, and we say: "You know, this is going to be needed. It's a $250,000 expenditure." It's all prioritized.

Sometimes things do shift. Demographics can change, economics can change, and all of a sudden the pressure is released. Then you can shift and say: "Well, no. We're going to prioritize this school now in Chestermere because this kept growing; these other areas haven't." Like I say, if you don't have the list, it's very difficult to prioritize when it's just waiting or it seems like it's a political list.

What we're asking for – will you do it? – is that you don't give a 20-year plan without a prioritized list for all Albertans to see. This hospital is ahead of these five schools; these five schools are ahead of this remand centre: put out the list so that we can see it. That will make good sense.

The sustainability, you know. He talks that, yes, we're going to spend $17.6 billion, but he doesn't seem to understand, Mr. Chair, what our question is. After that $17.6 billion has been spent and we have no sustainability fund and we're still running a deficit, what are we going to do? At some point are we going to hit the wall and stop building, like we did in 2003, and then traitor an industry? We want a sustainable one that the industry knows. That's what we're talking about. Is the minister going to stand up and say, "Yes, we have another $18.6 billion that's going to be added"?

I mean, this government, Mr. Chair, just lauds its five-year sustainability plan for health care and acts like that solves it: we've solved it; it's five years. They know the money is coming in, but if you go back the previous five years, they've actually spent more money than ever. If that plan is so wonderful, which, again, having five years sustainable funding is, why don't we have it in Education? Why don't we have it in Infrastructure? We've only got it for two or three years more, and industry is asking the question, whether the minister is listening or not: then what happens? They see the writing on the wall: that we've run out of money, that it can't be continued. That's the question we're asking the minister. Is he committing another $17.6 billion for the next three years? That is not sustainable. We need to do it.

Predictability. They got up and said: well, what aren't we building? How many times and how many ministers announced the Grande Prairie hospital? You know, the promises prior to 2008 for seniors' facilities in Strathmore, up in Fort McMurray. Yes, they're finally doing them now because they're spending so much, but those have been rehashed and given out many times and need to be looked at.

I want to refer to for a minute and ask questions about the Auditor General. I don't think he ever used the word "excellent" whereas the minister does seem to use it: oh, this is an excellent process. What the Auditor General has actually asked for several times is that he wants a value-for-money report and not just any value-for-money report. What he says for these P3s is that we need to improve the processes, including sensitivity analysis, to challenge and support maintenance costs and risk valuations. Yes, if you look at the actual box of oranges that they're doing with their P3s, the Auditor General is saying, "Well, they're getting fairly good value." But the question is: "Are oranges expensive right now? Should we be getting them from, instead of California, maybe Florida or somewhere else?" They're not really comparing all of the options out there. With what we've got, yes, it is. But if we were to actually look at full cost, full bid prices that are locked in for these schools, I question whether we're doing it.

That's the most important question I have. In all of the projects that you are building, Mr. Minister, how many of them have been put out there in lump-sum contracts versus – what's the wording? – the management fee contracts that, you know, you could just add the management fee, and it's not locked down? What I'm trying to say is that all of the subcontractors actually give a solid bid to the management fee contractors, and these management fee contractors can bring in a lot of extra costs to projects because they're not locked in. You want to lock in everything in these projects, lump-sum contracts, not management fee contracts, because that leaves the taxpayers wide open on what's coming through. So have there been any lump-sum contracts? Here are the blueprints. Here is what we want. Let's do it.

I'll ask another question for the taxpayers. When you see some of the superstructures going up in Calgary, they're made of steel. There's no question that steel is usually more cost-effective than concrete. Now, there are always some special conditions; for example, with the courthouse. You might want it to be antiblast. Again, it's interesting that even with the steel structures, they're built such that if they blow out one-half of the building, it will still stand. I mean, that's just the new technology. Don't ask me how they do it, but they do.

Are we opening up the bids and not necessarily saying: "You know what? We just want concrete"? I don't know if that's the best thing. Are we getting the best value for our taxpayers' money? I question it. I want you to do more homework on that and check and see what we're getting for that. [interjection There's lots of debate. I had to get some water, there, you know. I'm as bad as you, just going on and on. We'll go back and forth. I want you to write it up so you can be efficient with your time, Mr. Minister.

When we look at some of the P3s, again, we're not looking at the full scope. The parameters, we feel, that you're putting out there are questionable. Having a wide-open, competitive field is, like I say, questionable.

It's also interesting that the luck of the draw – and I'm specifically going to talk about Notre Dame high school in Calgary. It was built. You just talked about BlackBerrys and new technologies and all of the future in our schools, you know, what opportunity we have, yet the last school that you built before you went to the P3s does not compare to the quality that you are building with the P3s now. It seemed like Notre Dame was put in there for cost-effectiveness and not necessarily effective educating. Like I say, with the Smart boards a lot of the new technology was left out, yet it was a new one. Are you going to go buy an old Apple computer or a new MacBook Air? Where are you going to go? What kind of battery life?

A year ago a report came out saying that hospital repairs were going to triple in money. Could you tell us: is there a problem with the hospital repairs, that we have a lot of hospitals in poor or bad condition? I remember Beaverlodge, but I think you've worked on that. Are there some unseen or unaccounted-for repair bills and maintenance bills coming up in our hospitals that are kind of hidden or kept off the balance sheet because they're not really there? Are you aware as the Infrastructure minister of a balloon that's coming down that is going to hit us again next year or two years from now because you know that the maintenance isn't there? There have been some reports out on that, so it's very concerning in that area on whether you're going to do it.

I guess the biggest question is that when you talked about predictability, you talked about going into the future. Will you put out a prioritized list of infrastructure? Will you commit today to five-year solid funding at $6 billion or whatever the transportation/infrastructure spending is? Are you going to be so bold as to say that you got your five-year funding guaranteed, like you do in health care? I don't think so. Are you going to do a better process analysis of these P3s so that we really do know that Albertans are getting full advantage from the tax dollars and not just saying: well, in the little parameters that we've got, we're not too sure, you know, about the risk analysis, the maintenance cost, but we've been told this. The Auditor General says that your process for assessing P3s is not as good as it should be. Are you doing anything about that? That is definitely a question that we need to answer.

I guess that to sum up, you know, the Fort Macleod . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the 10 minutes have elapsed. I'd ask the hon. minister to respond.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to try to answer some of the questions that were brought forward. I need to express to you that the Calgary Courts Centre was a fixed price. I'm going to start maybe with some of the comments that you had made, so I can answer them in order if you want the answers. Okay?

Mr. Hinman: I want them.

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. Good. I want to say to you that you had made some accusations or, at least, comments on overbuilds as far as schools are concerned.

Mr. Hinman: I ran out of time.

Mr. Danyluk: I understand. I understand the question because you talk about the overbuilds in schools. I need to tell you that what has happened is that the schools that we have built right now are usually full when the students go into them, but we have built schools differently now than we used to before. We build schools that have a very core area. They have the gymnasium and the offices and some of the work areas, some of the basics that are needed in schools.

We are able to use flex spaces that are high-performance classrooms, and that really gives the opportunity for schools to expand or become smaller, depending on the needs of the students that are there. These high-performance classrooms, I want to say to you, are not portables. You know, they're not modules. They are high-performance classrooms. In fact, we went to a school in Grande Prairie that had the high-performance classrooms, and the teachers would rather be in the high-performance classrooms because of their adaptability, if I can say, into technology, and that's so important.

You asked a question about a priority list, and I'm going to read you some of the comments, but I'll do that in a little bit. You talked about predictability. You say: "I want a list, and then the list changes." Well, you know what? You come from a smaller community. You come from a community that's stable. I'm not saying your representation in Calgary. I'm saying where you come from.

Mr. Hinman: I grew up in Calgary.

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. Well, where you served before.

I want to say to you that there may be a school that's necessary in that area. When you have that school in that area and if you were representing that area and you put that school on a priority list, they say: "You know what? I just want to tell you that you are now on the priority list. Oh, sorry. We've got a little bit of a growth spurt in Fort McMurray. You're now not on the priority list. You're off."

Mr. Hinman: They would understand.

Mr. Danyluk: Yes. They would understand the first year. Then next year it's Airdrie that may need three schools or Chestermere that may need two and then Beaumont that may need two. What ends up happening is that the community that is expecting a school and trying to accommodate that direction maybe doesn't hit the priority list.

We have a 20-year plan where we talk about education and talk about the needs of education, but we know that in this province we are commodity based, that the fluctuation of people is so dramatic that we have to be able to accommodate, number one, safety, number two, of course, capacity. You know, if your school in that area is safe, it's going to get built, and it's going to get built right away. Also, if you have the capacity, you know you're going to get schools in that area. I don't see the priority list, but I'm going to give you a priority list, a little bit, right away.

The other question was: how do we build? Well, you know, with every project that we do, we look at what the best way to deliver that project would be. Should it be a conventional build? Should it be a design build? Should it be a construction management build?

Mr. Hinman: That's the one.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, you know, construction management builds fit in places.

Should it be what I would consider a partnership build? We assess what's best for the community, what's best for the people that are going to use it. We also assess what the most economic way to do it is, and then we post the value for money, so it's there.

You know, even when we use construction management, we use this to fast-track design, and sometimes that's necessary. I also need to say to you about all subcontracts are always open.

Mr. Hinman: The subcontracts are. I'm talking about the management build contracts.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, you know that the management build contracts still have the openness of what the building costs.

I want to go on. There was a comment made about Notre Dame having poor technology, and it was built before the P3 schools were built. They don't have Smart boards, and they didn't pay for Smart boards. You know, we don't pay for Smart boards. We don't pay for a Smart board in a new school. That is the responsibility of the school board. That's who pays for Smart boards. I just wanted to be clear.

On the other point that you made, that there was about a balloon that was floating and that it was going to hit us and that we won't spend the money, I'm not expecting this from your party, right? There are other parties that one day spend and the next day cut. Your party has been traditionally: cut. Now it's going to be a balloon that's going to hit us because we're not spending more money. I'm not quite understanding where you're coming from, but I want to say to you that there is a balance, and that balance is important. I see the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has something wrong with his hand or something, where he's waving on a continual basis. I just need to say to you that if you were listening to the discussion we had on the necessity to have maintenance and the necessity to have new builds, you would have understood or had that question answered ahead of time.

The other part that I want to say to you is that you talked about the process for partnerships, if I can use the word. Well, I've got to go back and answer that question for you again. It doesn't make a difference what project we have. We look at the ability to deliver and the best way to deliver.

Now, I want to say, just to answer it again, that we have completed value-for-money reports for both the partnerships, the P3 project, ASAP schools, ASAP 1 and ASAP 2, and they are posted on the website, all of the Auditor's recommendations, and they're accepted. Also, I talked to you a little bit about the construction management and the fixed fee for management, and it's all open. It's all open.

You have been asking for, numerous times, a list, so I will tell you about a list. This is our capital list: IMP maintenance and renewal; south Calgary health campus, new facility; Grande Prairie; the Queen E II hospital redevelopment; the capital transition innovative phase 1; the capital clinic south, new facility; the Calgary and Edmonton cancer strategy, phase 1; Medicine Hat regional hospital upgrade and expansion; the Foothills medical centre; the care centre renovation.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the time has elapsed, and I will now recognize the hon. Member . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

Point of Order

Tabling Cited Documents

The Deputy Chair: What is your point of order?

Mr. Mason: My point of order is that under the rules of the Assembly, since the minister has referred to a document, he must table it.

Mr. Danyluk: If I can, it's the capital plan. You just have to open up the book, and what I was reading from is in the capital plan, pages 106 and 107 in the capital plan.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Okay. We've cleared that up.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Chair: I now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

5:30

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will be very brief. I know there are some members of the opposition who wish to ask further questions. I have two basic points that I would like the minister to address, and I would thank him for his introductory remarks and outlining some of the projects.

In particular, he mentioned the Royal Alberta Museum, which is planned to be a some $340 million project, as I understand it. It certainly must be one of the biggest arts and culture projects in the history of the province if not the biggest, and I certainly applaud that project. I was present when the minister spoke most eloquently at the announcement about the scope of the project and the importance to the cultural history of the province. I certainly applaud the project. I think it's going to be a fine opportunity not only to redevelop the downtown of Edmonton, but it'll be a real cornerstone and an exciting point of education and enjoyment for all Albertans and a tourist attraction as well.

I would like to make a couple of comments as a member representing the city of Calgary, and I hope the minister will appreciate that my comments are not meant as a slam against our sister city of Edmonton in any regard. Of course, we have the Glenbow Museum in Calgary, which has been around for a long time, and we also had the Provincial Museum here in Edmonton, of course, for a long time.

I would also like to make the remark, Mr. Minister, that I think there was great wisdom in the actions of the government in the past in spreading some of these cultural institutions around the province in various parts, things like the Royal Tyrrell Museum in Drumheller, the Reynolds-Alberta Museum in Wetaskiwin, the Remington Carriage Museum in Cardston, the Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump Interpretive Centre, west of Fort Macleod. Dinosaur provincial park and Writing-on-Stone provincial park both have very interesting interpretive centres.

By spreading these things out, I think that some things are accomplished. First of all, by putting these institutions around the province, we give the opportunities to enjoy those cultural institutions to a larger audience. I know that almost every day here in the Legislature we have visiting classrooms from Edmonton and environs, and sometimes we have them from further afield in the province of Alberta. But I can say that in six and a half years we have never, to my knowledge, had anybody, other than a private school, attend from the city of Calgary from the public school board, which is one of the two largest school boards in North America, or the Catholic school board. I think it illustrates the fact that proximity is a very important thing in terms of accessing the cultural institutions in the province.

I want to continue in that vein by talking a little bit about the Glenbow Museum, which has a large collection of very important objects. Over a million objects are present in the Glenbow Museum. It has a cultural history collection of over a hundred thousand objects. It has an ethnology collection of 48,000 items of North American indigenous peoples and, particularly, probably one of the finest collections of the North American Plains Indians in the entire world. It has an art collection of 28,000 works. Just for comparison, Mr. Minister, those 28,000 works compare to a collection of 6,000 in the Art Gallery of Alberta, which has a dedicated space of 85,000 square feet. The artworks at the Glenbow Museum are crammed onto one floor of the Glenbow Museum, and it is far, far too small to adequately display even a small percentage of the collection that they have. They also have a military collection of some 26,000 items, a very significant collection of military history from not only Europe but from Asia and around the world.

All of these collections that I've mentioned, Mr. Minister, are certainly worthy of a museum in their own right. We have great need in the city of Calgary for an expansion, and I would ask you to respond to that need by doing something similar to what you've done for the Royal Alberta Museum, looking into the future and expanding those cultural facilities and giving us an opportunity to enjoy some of those collections that I have mentioned but which right now we don't have any space at all to display.

The second point I want to make – and then I'll sit down – is with respect to what I understand are some contingent plans to redevelop the Royal Alberta Museum site and perhaps to put a residence for the Lieutenant Governor there. I think that would be a fine project to be undertaken. It would not just be a residence for the Lieutenant Governor; it would be something to be appreciated and enjoyed by all Albertans. It should be a location that Albertans can go to on special occasions. It should be a place that they can visit, that they can feel pride of ownership in.

I would go even beyond that, Mr. Minister. I think that this province is long overdue to have an official residence for the Premier of the province of Alberta. I've looked on the websites of many of the governors of the United States of America, and I can tell you that every state in the union of the United States of America takes great pride in the governor's mansion. I think, similarly, that this province should have an official residence. I know that the Premier of our province has a very nice apartment in the city of Edmonton. It's not a public place, however. It's not capable of having any formal entertaining facilities, and it's not something that the people of Alberta have particular pride in.

With those comments, Mr. Minister and Mr. Chairman, I will sit down.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, hon. member. It indeed gives me a lot of pleasure to address some of your comments. I do want to make a comment about the Glenbow Museum. It is a fabulous facility. It is a fabulous facility that probably has more artifacts and art in a small area than one could possibly imagine. I'd say to you that I believe that at times you could go to the Glenbow Museum, come back the next day, and you would have the opportunity to see a completely different tour of all of the things that you missed the first time.

I want to say to you that I very much agree. I think it is important to look at the exhibits, look at our history, to give an opportunity for our history. It is an opportunity because it is history in motion. Our history in Alberta is so, so short. I will tell you that when we look at, if I can say, the opportunity for youth, they can come to look at a museum as children, and a small decade later they are now seeing the history of our passing time. Our history moves so quickly even now as compared to, you know, 50 or 100 years ago.

I took note of, you know, what you had written down – the hundred thousand objects and the finest collections and the 28,000 works – and I say to you that we're always striving to try to accomplish what we can as far as getting some placement.

5:40

The Royal Alberta Museum, of course, came forward. It's been a work that has taken, I want to say, at least 10 years to get to the position that we're at. I need to take a little bit of opportunity to talk about, as you mentioned, the Royal Alberta Museum. It is a museum that we are very excited about. It is a museum that has more interactive and flexible displays, and the kids that came to look at what was going to happen were so excited by the opportunity for the future and that opportunity to interact.

It also has the ability to host many international exhibits. It provides an opportunity for expansion. It also has improved access through the LRT and, potentially, the high-speed rail into the future and the connection that it does have with the local cultural facility and arts district.

I understand your question very clearly. Your question, I believe, says that we have a museum in Calgary that needs acknowledgement as well because we are running out of space. I think that with the minister of culture we need to look, you know, at that possibility into the future.

I need to also say that when you made comment about all of the opportunities throughout this province, I think that the children of this province very much – very much – have such an opportunity. When we talk about Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump in Fort Macleod, the Frank Slide Interpretive Centre, Dinosaur provincial park, which has some of the highest participation in this province, the Slave Lake interpretive centre, Milk River, Fish Creek, the Reynolds collection in Wetaskiwin – you know, I mean, we have interpretive centres. We have an interpretive centre in Fort McMurray that talks about the oil development. I want to say that when we talk about opportunity, this is a province of opportunity.

I will take those notes about the Glenbow, and I definitely will bring them forward.

I also want to acknowledge your comments in regard to the residence for the Lieutenant Governor on the present site in Glenora. I need to say to you that it's probably going to take four years to build the new museum. We are so fortunate to be able to use, instead of having to shut down, the museum that we have in place right now and to keep that land for the public. What an opportunity to keep it for the public and to have Government House and to have a Lieutenant Governor's residence to be part of this province.

We have so much as Albertans to be proud of. We have so much opportunity for our children to have an education. I think that to have the Lieutenant Governor's house, residence, on that site is the right choice.

The residence of the Premier in this province: I'm just going to say to you that we as residents, we as people need to take more pride in who we are. I really believe that we need to be more patriotic because if we had other places that had half as much as we have in this great province, they would be incredibly enthusiastic and optimistic about who they are, about how they can express themselves.

Mr. Chairman, if I can ask, just for a moment, because it was asked before: did you know that next year, 2012, is going to be the hundredth anniversary of this building? The hundredth anniversary. Ladies and gentlemen, we need to be proud of that. We need to be proud of the building. We need to be proud of who we are. We need to be proud of who we represent.

I will say that it started off, the send-off if I can call it that, with acquiring a new carillon, giving a new experience. I always make a point. In fact, it wasn't very long ago that I had the opportunity to have a conversation, as they were in a hall, with individuals that came from Airdrie-Chestermere. They were so excited about the music from the carillon. I didn't bring anything forward, but music came on. It just happened to be at noon time. It was a group of individuals that home-schooled, and they just felt that this was such an opportunity to see this building.

So I say to you, you know, some of the things that we're doing – it was made very clear by individuals that we need to respect this building and the people that use it. We're having some upgrades. We have the reflection pool. The other day it was very clear what was necessary to make sure that that continues to be part of the accessibility for children. We have the area that's going to be just to the west of the federal building that's also going to provide accessibility for children and adults and is going to be part of showing what Alberta's history is.

We were looking at the opportunity to . . . [a timer sounded]

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, do you have any more questions?

Okay. I will now recognize the next speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. My questions are coming back to infrastructure deficit, Mr. Minister. Infrastructure deficit refers to the exchange that we need to update buildings which have a limited lifespan. Infrastructure deficit. Since most of the buildings are 30-plus years old, replacing them will cost a considerable amount of money.

In the 2009 estimates debate the minister said that Alberta is spending as much funding on infrastructure as anywhere else. The funding for the government-owned facilities preservation fund and capital projects is zero, down from $12 million last year, estimates page 217. What is the current provincial infrastructure deficit, that is, the total infrastructure deficit? What will the future liability be of not repairing this infrastructure deficit? Is this government just offloading these costs onto future generations? The third one is: when will this total infrastructure deficit be paid off given the current funding levels?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I'm not exactly sure. Let me just go backwards a little bit in the comments about the infrastructure deficit and when it will be paid off. Is that what you're saying? Well, I want to say to you that this province, you know, has an average, probably, of a hundred thousand people moving into it. This province is a very active province in the way of needing infrastructure, whether it be roads, whether it be schools, or whether it be hospitals. We continue to try to address those services and those needs. When we look at roads and hospitals and schools and those services, I don't know if we will ever get to the point where there will be no infrastructure deficit. The only way that that may happen is if everybody moves out of Alberta. That question, I would say, is not going to happen.

We do recognize, of course, that we do need to catch up. We need to be able to maintain our buildings. Our buildings were built 25, 30 years ago, as was a lot of Alberta when it was building, and we got into the heavy activity of what I would consider development. There were a lot of buildings built. There were a lot of hospitals built, and there were a lot of schools built. We need to ensure that we maintain those. We're doing that through modernization of education facilities, and of course we do have increased spending on schools and health and postsecondary.

I would also like to make the comment that the maintenance funding has increased, you know, for the schools and postsecondary and roads and health. Minor maintenance funding has increased by $24 million, and priority maintenance is addressed first. Hon. member, I would suggest to you that it's not what I would consider an easy task, to try to address the priorities, but at the same time we very much look at the needs and what is used and what has high address areas.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Okay. Now I'm coming to deferred maintenance, business plan page 78. Percentage in good condition in 2009-10 was actually 62 per cent; then in 2011-12, 59 per cent; in 2012-13, 57 per cent; and then it's down to 55 per cent. You know, is there any figure? How much is the deferred maintenance for government-owned buildings this year? The percentage of buildings in good condition is significantly dropping each year. What would the cost be to reverse this trend? What is the definition of fair condition and poor condition with regard to government buildings? I think I've got a couple more here. What would be the cost to move the 3 per cent in poor condition into the fair category? I think that should do it.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, what I can say to you, as I said at the beginning, is that our deferred maintenance is about $340 million. All of the measures in goal 1 are calculated using the facility condition index to report the physical conditions of the facilities. The ratio of the cost is correct: current and future five-year physical condition deficits relative to current facility replacement value.

I need to say to you that the percentages are calculated by taking the square metres of facilities in good and in fair and in poor condition, but I also had a discussion about, when we look at facilities – a lot of this is calculated into age. I can tell you that the $340 million would put us in a great situation, but at the same time, you know, we have to have our priorities. We move those priorities around because it's not always that, you know, we do the maintenance until it is needed, if I can say. I mean, it's a situation that sometimes, you know, the facilities we have last longer. The new facilities that rate good are facilities that have been constructed or completely refurbished within the last 10 years and have not been audited or rated as being in good condition. You know, what happens is that we can say that a facility in the ranking is good because it's been done in the last 10 years, right? This measure does not include unsupported facilities such as outreach centres or residences or parkades.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but pursuant to Government Motion 5, agreed to on February 23, 2011, consideration for the main estimates for Infrastructure have concluded, and the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration resolutions for the Department of Infrastructure relating to the 2011-12 government estimates for the general revenue fund and the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2012, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: All those members of the Assembly that concur with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? Please say no. So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the House stand adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:57 p.m.]

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd now like to call the committee to order. Prior to beginning, the chair will outline the process for this evening. The Committee of Supply will first call on the chairs of the policy field committees to report on their meetings with the various departments under their mandate, Government Motion 5, agreed to on February 23, 2011. Members are reminded that no vote is required when these reports are presented. The chair also notes that no amendments were introduced during the policy field committee meetings; therefore, no votes are required.

The estimates of three departments will then be voted on separately pursuant to Government Motion 5, agreed to on February 23, 2011, and in accordance with the notice provided by the Official Opposition House Leader to the Clerk on April 19, 2011.

The final vote on the main estimates will consist of the estimates of any departments not yet voted upon.

Finally, the chair would like to remind all hon. members of Standing Order 32(3.1), which provides that after the first division is called in Committee of Supply during the vote on the main estimates, the interval between the division bell shall be reduced to one minute for any subsequent division.

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour to introduce to you and through you two women who are very important in my life. One is Ms Judy Hehr. She's been a long-time educator in Calgary and, in fact, has been principal at many schools in Calgary. She was born and raised in Nobleford, Alberta, being a farm girl who helped on the farms not only with the pigs, the chickens, everything but drove the tractor and all that stuff. She also has two children, who she drove around all over the place from hockey to swimming to baseball to figure skating, and as a sideline she completed a master's degree and doctoral degree from Brigham Young University. She's also, coincidentally, my mother, Ms Judy Hehr.

The young lady with her is Ms Floriane Gayacao. Floriane was born and raised in Manila in the Philippines. She has been in our country for roughly four or five years. She came over on our temporary foreign worker program and has actually tolerated me for the last three years, putting humpty dumpty together again in the morning and the evening and most days tolerates my behaviour. If we could welcome Floriane.

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

  - (3) No additional remuneration shall be provided to the members of the committee for the purpose of conducting this review.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Lobbyists Act was proclaimed in force on September 28, 2009, and there's a statutory requirement that a special committee of the Legislative Assembly begin a comprehensive review of the act within two years of the act coming into force and that the committee report its findings, including recommended amendments, within one year of beginning the review. Generally the Assembly does not sit in September, so compliance with the statute would require that a special committee of the Legislative Assembly be established during the 2011 spring session, and the special committee of the Legislative Assembly would be an all-party MLA committee.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, this motion is debatable. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am willing to support Government Motion 14, which refers the Lobbyists Act Review to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices.

Having experienced legislative reviews being done both in the standing policy committee format and also in a select special committee format, which I believe would be the same process through the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, I think it's important that the bills are reviewed through the process where we can call upon the experts in the department. It's incredibly detailed work, and we can really use and appreciate the support and the detailed analysis that's available by working with department staff. We have good people that work in the government departments, and I have found in my experience that they have given unbiased information and analysis. I've been very appreciative of it, and I am therefore supportive of Government Motion 14 and happy to support it.

Thank you very much to the Justice minister for reconsidering and bringing forward Motion 14. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I, too, am looking forward to the review through Motion 14 of the lobbyists' registry. I have great faith, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, in the individuals involved in the committee.

I do have concerns, Mr. Speaker, about the nature of the lobbyists' registry in that it deals with only half of the concerns. When members approach an organization in sort of a reverse lobbying format, the expression I've used is: when the government comes courting, there's no reporting. Therefore, the details of the individuals involved in the lobby are not forthcoming. I'm also concerned with the lobbyists' registry that very little detail is provided other than the individual or the company who is doing the lobbying. The details of what it is they're lobbying for are not provided in a sufficient situation to be able to make those judgments.

I look forward to the review, and I hope it is done in a very thorough manner as opposed to simply a rubber-stamping process. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?
I'll call the question.

[Government Motion 14 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 11 Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011

[Debate adjourned April 13: Ms Blakeman speaking]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, do you wish to speak?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I was happy to conclude my remarks before we adjourned this particular bill the last time, but I know the Leader of the Official Opposition did want to make some remarks.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking in second reading on Bill 11, I wanted to highlight a few reasons why we will be opposing this bill. Let me go back a bit to some of the information that's come out in the last couple of years around game ranching and the problems associated with the commercialization of wildlife, the domestication of wildlife, the privatization of wildlife, and some of the problems that have occurred around that, not only economic problems, including devastation for some game ranchers who got into it after the heavy promotion of this government in the early days without adequate analysis, but also the propagation of severe new diseases.

Having said that, there is the tuberculosis problem that game ranching propagated in Alberta and undermined our international reputation for being a tuberculosis-free country after many, many years of being TB-free. Game ranching also has propagated chronic wasting disease, which, as many will know, is a fatal disease for the animals. Similar to bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle it holds the potential for jumping species, indeed jumping to human infectious disease. Some of the leading experts on chronic wasting disease in the country have warned federal and provincial governments to urgently address the questions around these two issues, both the flawed policy in promoting game ranching and the serious implications of this prion disease, for which we have no treatment. Only lately have we been able to diagnose it. It has now spread into all manner of cervids in our population and resulted in extensions of bad policy that has meant devastation of herds by culling and destruction because there has been no comprehensive view and no comprehensive approach to game ranching and its impacts on, as I say, the environment, the economy, and potentially on human health.

The basic principles I'm raising with this transfer of authority from Sustainable Resource Development to Agriculture is the recognition that for over a hundred years animal conservation has been based on a recognition that wild animals in general are healthiest in the wild. They do not propagate infectious disease. They do not incubate new disease and cause the mutations of some of the diseases that now potentially can threaten the health and well-being not only of all cervids, wild and penned, but human health as well.

Indeed, as predicted by leading scientists, who admonished this government back in the '80s to not implement this very aggressive game-ranching initiative, the government went ahead and promoted it. We now have game ranchers who are bankrupt or close to bankrupt managing huge herds that they can barely feed and are now causing tremendous problems and conflicts within their own environment and within their own families, and they have meat that they cannot necessarily sell. They have unfortunately contradicted the science of the day and continue to sell elk velvet, which contains the elements that could be propagating infectious disease. Before we were able to do the appropriate diagnostic testing, tons of meat from infected elk, deer, and now moose have been eaten either by pets or by humans.

I guess the question for us in dealing with this transfer of authority from SRD to Agriculture is: to what extent can we expect better monitoring, better testing, better control of disease by transferring the responsibility for this activity from a branch that is dedicated to preserving wildlife, conserving wildlife, and maintaining it in the wild to a department that's dedicated to commercializing and privatizing and profiting from this new idea of commercializing and penning cervids? It's clear to us on this side that SRD had inspectors; they had monitoring of some of this disease. They have policy in place that would at least help us keep a handle on what's happening with this disease, what's happening in terms of sales and transfers and testing.

We will have none of that under Alberta Agriculture. When Alberta Agriculture assumes responsibility for these, the focus will be commercialization and so-called diversification in agriculture. There's never been an economic case made, and now there are serious environmental and health implications with it.

The very idea of transferring this huge liability, that has had some experience at least in its management in SRD, to a body that is primarily focused on income, sales, and commercialization flies in the face of basic science, basic principles of management, and basic principles of public health and raises serious questions about why this government continues to show such disdain for science, such unwillingness to accept the facts that game ranching brought CWD into this country.

We have not had a systematic review of it, and we haven't had a serious commitment to its prevention and control, and we now have illegal activity where some animals surreptitiously somehow are lost from a herd, somehow escape into the wild and are continuing to contribute to an ongoing, endemic, and increasing rate of CWD in our environment that, again, presents threats. It's a highly infectious disease, unlike bovine spongiform encephalopathy, highly infectious, is in the environment for years, cannot be sterilized, cannot be destroyed. We're playing with a serious, serious issue here that many of the experts in the country are saying is simply irresponsible and needs immediate, urgent attention.

The continued fatal flaws and gaps that allow avenues for the potential movement of CWD call into question the legitimacy of the cull programs currently destroying entire herds of mostly healthy animals. It reflects the fact that transfer is the greatest threat, especially those allowing transfer of carcasses. Even dead carcasses are contaminating environments and potentially spreading this disease. The national CWD containment and eradication strategy has suggested suspending such activities pending a complete, comprehensive review in the country and development of a fully funded new strategy for containment as soon as possible.

We have to deal with realities, and the present issues are deeply concerning. It begs the question in a bill like this whether this government is at all willing to look at the facts. They obviously ignored the facts back in the '80s when they held very selective consultations, ignored evidence from the Northwest Territories and Yukon, ignored evidence from south of the border on commercializing wildlife, and now they're ignoring the further buildup of evidence that this is extremely dangerous. Transferring authority to the agriculture department is only going to add more confusion, less focused attention, and no commitments to a long-term strategy that will actually address this serious environmental and health concern.

Just today the Fish and Game Association announced that they would be putting out a specific call to their members and to all hunters and concerned citizens in the country, including conscientious agriculture people, to demand on an urgent basis a federal-provincial task force to comprehensively review how we're approaching game ranching in this country and to stop the progressive spread and loss of wildlife and the potential for new infectious diseases to emerge within these populations and the serious threat to all cervids. It's now been found in moose and has been shown to pass the species barrier into lower animals.

The threat is real, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's incumbent upon this government to stop playing around with fire and retain game ranching under SRD, where there at least is the potential for good science, a comprehensive review of what we've been doing, why it's not working, and why the wasting disease continues to spread. Alberta and Saskatchewan are the main incubators of chronic wasting disease and need to very much be part of the solution in consultation with scientists, with farmers, and with the federal government's zoological branches and animal health division.

8:30

Mr. Speaker, it is a very important issue that can easily slip by the radar unless we consider the notion that science has to be much more central in our planning. We have to be willing to take a look at what's happened over the past two decades, recognize the tremendous negative impact on many farmers, the tremendous negative impact on the environment, the potential for human health consequences, and think again about the initial animal conservation initiatives of a hundred years ago, that preserved animals into the future, that have provided a sustained and a sustainable healthy population of wild animals in our jurisdictions. That is now seriously threatened by the mismanagement of our cervids and this inappropriate move to game ranching and even consideration of penned shoots, which has been raised repeatedly in the House with respect to this transfer to Agriculture.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat, and I can assure you that we'll be voting against this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Anyone wish to comment or question? The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought I heard the hon. member make a comment that disease would be much contained if they were left under SRD as opposed to under Agriculture. I would ask the hon. member: how many veterinarians does SRD have on staff?

Dr. Swann: I don't know the answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, but I do know that in terms of field agents, monitors, and enforcement capacity SRD is far superior to Agriculture.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is zero. If, in fact, SRD and the wildlife people under the federal jurisdiction do such a great job, I would be very interested to know why it is that the buffalo up north are a real threat to agriculture with tuberculosis and other transferable diseases. How come they aren't able to control them, yet we don't have that problem with all the control under Agriculture?

Dr. Swann: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I didn't catch any question there.

The Acting Speaker: Any other questions?

Mr. Lund: Well, if necessary, I can sure repeat it. Of course, he doesn't want to admit the answer.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to rise under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on the bill.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on Bill 11, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011. You know, this is second reading, and I just want to get some clarification if I may. We've had the agriculture minister talk about the fact that he's going to amend Bill 11 to make certain Albertans clearer in regard to the game hunts. I want to make it very clear, if I can, as I rise to debate this.

I was raised with hunting and fishing, had my first gun when I was six. I came from a family where we literally lived off the land. I don't even remember getting my first store-bought meat till I was 18. My dad, when he was alive, taught me how to hunt. He taught me how to fish. I still have my first gun.

Ms Calahasen: I bet you don't know how to skin a rat.

Mrs. Forsyth: I've got my wonderful friend from Lesser Slave Lake speaking to me from across the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I guess one of the things that I think is important is that from a constituency point of view I'm hearing from my constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek that they have one concern about the bill, and that's the broad ministerial power to permit anything that's not permitted in this act and the fact that this totally undermines the prohibition of the hunt farms in section 18.

Now, the agriculture minister spoke on the 21st of March in regard to making an amendment in Committee of the Whole in regard to clarifying what can and cannot be done in regard to hunt farms, and I want to put it on the record that I as the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek look forward to seeing this amendment in committee. In bringing forward this amendment, I think his clarification in regard to what they're trying to achieve in this act will probably appease some of the Albertans who have been calling us. I just wanted that on the record.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I didn't have quite the frontier experience growing up as the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, but my father is an avid hunter, and I accompanied him on several hunting occasions. He taught me to shoot and handle firearms responsibly before I actually entered school. For those of you who thought I didn't enter school till 12, it was actually when I was five and a half in case you were wondering.

My father has been the president of Sarcee Fish and Game over a number of years. He's received numerous awards from the government, including the Order of the Bighorn, for his conservation activities, and he continues to be very concerned about the possibility of the penned hunts. As the hon. Leader of the Opposition pointed out, there is a concern that taking it out of SRD and putting it into Agriculture increases that possibility although an amendment is coming forward, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek mentioned, to clarify that at least at this time – it doesn't state how far into the future – the notion of penned hunts will not take place.

Mr. Speaker, part of my background as a teacher included teaching grade 9 literature, and in that exercise I frequently used the novel study by Glendon Swarthout called Bless the Beasts & Children. It was about a group of adolescent misfits who happen to turn down the wrong way on a road near Flagstaff and found themselves witnessing the penned hunt of buffalo that were considered extra. It went into graphic details as to how the beasts suffered when they were shot in the leg and in the lungs, et cetera, and how excruciating the circumstance was.

Now, being the son of a hunting father, I am very aware of the type of load, the type of gun, the appropriateness of the ammunition for big-game hunting. Mr. Speaker, I can say that I never had the desire to hunt big game, but I did accompany my father on numerous occasions. Unfortunately, because I accompanied him, we didn't bring any game home because I was the noisiest creature in the forest, and whether it was the elk or deer or mountain sheep or mountain goats, they were alerted.

Mr. Speaker, approximately three years ago the hon. Leader of the Opposition and myself coauthored an article in Sportsman magazine with regard to CWD and its concerns. [interjections] I guess various individuals aren't aware that . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you have the floor.

Mr. Chase: I appreciate that. Thanks. Maybe we should bring penned hunts or accusations into this House.

With regard to CWD, that the hon. Leader of the Opposition mentioned, and the lack of scientific research to the same extent with CWD as the Prion research that's been done on BSE, the two are tied together. It's important to note that when a former Premier, Ralph Klein, was talking about shoot, shovel, and shut up, the reason the BSE cases weren't diagnosed in a timely fashion was because there was a single individual doing the studies. He was so far behind because of chronic wasting disease cases that he did not have the opportunity to detect the BSE, and we all know what followed. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the Leader of the Opposition, pointed out, farmers were very much sold a bill of goods by this government, and many government MLAs and current MLAs basically got caught up with the idea.

Now, the first CWD came up from Wyoming in a domestic herd bought from the Americans, and this government, in terms of dealing with CWD instead of dealing with the domesticated elk and deer, has gone to great extents to cull deer along the Saskatchewan border and examine the heads, but there is not a whole lot of examination of the heads of the domesticated deer and elk when they're slaughtered.

I hope that this move from SRD to Agriculture isn't part of the slippery slope of extending the types of practices that have no place in a domestic circumstance. We don't have farmers deciding to bring in American or international hunters to shoot their old dairy cows, and in the same sense I hope that we won't be seeing American hunters leaning their guns or any other nation's hunters leaning their guns over the barbed-wire fence at the domestic elk that are approximately two feet away grazing. There's no glory in that, Mr. Speaker.

As the hon. Leader of the Opposition pointed out, members of Alberta Fish and Game have spoken out very strenuously about the possibility of domesticated hunts or penned shoots, and hopefully this government has got that message. For the most part Alberta Fish and Game has been very supportive of the Conservative government, but when it comes to encroaching on the sports aspect and allowing the potential of CWD to be transferred from domestic animals into the wild, there are large and legitimate concerns.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to debating the amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, five minutes for Standing Order 29(2)(a) are available. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If I could, the hon. member opposite talked about one individual who was doing testing who was busy doing work with chronic wasting for the whole time that BSE was allegedly on. I have a question. If you have that expertise, can you please tell me: in May of 2003 and onward into the summer how many cases of chronic wasting were there? My second question is: how many cases of chronic wasting have there been in the last five years?

Thirdly, a comment in regard to hunting. I am presuming you're saying: hunting on an alleged hunt farm. That must be in Saskatchewan because there are no hunt farms here right now, and there are not going to be. Your discussion was on the suffering that took place when there was hunting on a hunt farm. Are you suggesting to me that there would be less suffering in the wild than there would be in a situation in Saskatchewan on a hunt farm?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm pleased to clarify, and I'll be very specific. The BSE testing: when the first BSE animal was discovered in Alberta, it was discovered three months later because the carcass was not available for testing because CWD cases were being tested at that time. As for how many CWD cases . . .

Mr. Danyluk: You said that there were a lot of cases, so I just need to know how many.

Mr. Chase: I did not say that there were a lot of cases. I said that there were cases. We can check Hansard tomorrow and so on.

In terms of the game farm what I was referring to was a novel entitled Bless the Beasts & Children and the graphic details of a penned shoot in this novel, which was the basis of the conflict in the story. I didn't refer to a specific shoot in Alberta, but in referencing that literary example, I pointed out the concerns.

With regard to hunting in the wild, if you have a person that has sufficient training and knowledge, they stalk the animal. They get close enough to make sure that they have a killing shot. Now, I suppose you could suggest that in a penned hunt, when you put the gun up to the forehead and pull the trigger and call that sportsman-like, the chances of dispatching the animal are potentially that much easier. But I am suggesting that if hunting is done appropriately in the wilderness by individuals who have received the training and have a sense of the sport, and they value of the animal much in the way the First Nations, you know, value the spirit of the animal, then this is not a concern.

I'll turn the question around. I hope you are not suggesting that a penned hunt is a better way of dispatching an animal than hunting in the wilderness circumstance.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill on 29(2)(a).

Dr. Brown: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, for the life of me I don't know why we're talking about penned hunts and shooting domesticated cervids. The act clearly says that it is precluded. It's an offence. In fact, under this act . . . [interjections] It's a comment, and I'm allowed to make comments as well as ask a question.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, through the chair. You're allowed to comment or question.

Dr. Brown: Yes. This is a comment, and the comment is: why are we talking about shooting domestic cervids and penned hunts? It is specifically precluded. In fact, the verbiage in this legislation is stronger than it was under the Wildlife Act. Take a look at it. It says clearly:

A person shall not hunt nor permit a person to hunt

Or permit a person to hunt.

- (a) a big game or controlled animal within the . . . meanings in the Wildlife Act on any diversified livestock farm, or
- (b) a diversified livestock animal.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the time has elapsed for 29(2)(a).

Any other members wish to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 11. I'll start by responding to the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. When he says that there is nothing in here, I've got more letters on Bill 11 on penned hunting and the concern about it. The reason they're bringing that up, hon. member, is because of section 10(1), Permits, that says: "The Minister may issue a permit authorizing a prescribed activity that would or could otherwise constitute a contravention of this Act."

8:50

That, hon. member, is the problem and what stirred up all the controversy over this. We have e-mails, letters, phone calls coming in from Albertans concerned about that. I think it's a fair thing and that the right thing for us to do here on the second reading of Bill 11 is to bring these things forward and discuss them. I think it's our job to do it.

Mr. Speaker, it's interesting, you know. As legislators what is our job? Do we just get up and speak on what we feel as independent people, or do we represent a group of people? If you're a critic, do you represent all those people that have phoned in with concerns, whether it be the people that raise cervid animals or those that are opposed? I have people that call in and send letters that are opposed to even having them confined. Like I say, the number one letters and e-mails that I've been receiving are from people that are concerned about penned hunting.

I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has brought up some important issues, and I think we should have them on the record and discuss them a little bit more. I find it quite interesting that if you are to go out and talk to many people in society, they're against the raising of meat. They're against that. PETA is one. We often fight more on the fur side, but they're against that. I would hate to ask them or have them making laws for the ag industry and say: "Well, no. We shouldn't be allowing raising of domestic raising bovine animals let alone hogs or perhaps chickens."

It's interesting that the government – again, it would be nice if they brought forward the amendments and made them public, saying, "This is what we're bringing," but they're not, so it's hypothetical as to whether or not section 10(1) is going to be amended. We need to speak to it now, and perhaps the government will listen and have those amendments so the concerns of those people who want to speak out know what it is. [interjections]

Well, it's everything in secrecy. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, it's like the Infrastructure minister's secret list. They'll talk about what's already been made public, but they'll never make public what they're going to do next, which is kind of an interesting dilemma for opposition and Albertans.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has the floor.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question that I've had many people ask to go through the thought process and to actually address is whether there should be penned hunting. There are many, many Albertans that are opposed to hunting. I've hunted a lot of years, but it has been a lot of years since I did any hunting. It's shameful when you're out there in the wilderness hunting, and you see a wounded animal go by. In the short few years that I went hunting, I remember three specific times when I actually shot and took an animal that was wounded because I didn't want to see it go off and suffer and die though it wasn't one that I would have shot myself. Because I could see it was wounded, I said: well, this is the one I need to take down. It's a problem.

So when people want to stand up, those who hunt, and condemn those who may want to shoot an animal in a penned area, I don't know that they have a lot of ground to stand on any more than those who are opposed to hunting in the first place and say that this isn't a proper activity that we should be participating in here in the province.

I think that it's important, Mr. Speaker, that we look at the whole purpose of these legislations and what we're trying to accomplish. The dilemma is interesting. If you're a cervid rancher, you are pretty much limited on where you can sell your venison and where it's going to be processed unless someone actually comes in and wants to buy an animal.

In previous businesses that I've been involved in, I've raised beef, and I've had people that have come to buy beef. They want to buy it right off the farm. What you would do is actually bring it into the pen. You would shoot it there with a rifle, bring it down, and then they could harvest that animal. I think that there's a lot to be asked about in the cervid industry. To be able to shoot an animal in the pen so it doesn't get all worked up and have an adrenaline rush by trying to ship it or move it anywhere else: it's a good way to harvest. So I have to question if we as legislators should be limiting the cervid industry by saying how they can or cannot harvest their animals and how they can sell them.

It's going to be interesting, Mr. Speaker, as the legislation goes forward and we see amendments in the Committee of the Whole on what comes forward and whether we discuss it more. I think we always need to go back and look at bills and ask the questions: what is the purpose of government, what's the role of the Legislature, what laws do we want to pass, and is that limiting the freedom and the opportunity of different industries?

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I think it'll be interesting to see what amendments the government brings forward. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill seems adamant that we shouldn't be speaking on these things, that it's not relevant to the bill. I would say that there's nothing that I received more letters, phone calls, and e-mails on than penned hunting . . .

Mrs. Forsyth: Except for the Parks Act.

Mr. Hinman: Well, no. On this bill.

. . . although it's not described inside the bill.

With that, I'll see if I have some questions because I get a feeling there are few people that want to ask some questions, so I'll be happy to sit down and see if there are any questions.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the questions that were raised by the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill – and my question to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore is quite simply this. Bill 11: the original intent of the bill, in my understanding, was to transfer jurisdiction of diversified livestock farms, formerly cervid farms, from Sustainable Resource Development to Agriculture. That was the original intent. What happened was that the bill became very contentious because there was a provision that was put in by this minister and this government that basically said that depending upon how the minister feels, he could circumvent and contravene the act. So that really answers the question and the comment that was made by the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. And to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, depending how the minister felt, he could go ahead and quite simply circumvent the act. That is not acceptable to the people of Alberta or to the opposition, nor should it be acceptable to the government. You will be waving bye-bye in about a year from now.

In the meantime let me just simply say this. It is clear to me that what the intent of Bill 11 was and what the government allowed to get through in allowing a minister to circumvent an act was clearly not acceptable. In fairness to the minister of agriculture, we understand that he intends to table and make the legislation more clear. Basically, the opposition caught the government on what they were intending to do. That's why they now have to go forward, potentially, in Committee of the Whole with amendments.

So that's good, and I'm glad to see that they're paying attention to the opposition because that, clearly, is what is happening. Despite what the government member may say, it's obvious to me that the government got caught. Therefore, we will look for that.

I am asking the question to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. I'd like to ask you: isn't it good that the opposition caught this government, in fact, because of what they were intending, based on what the power would have been to contravene the act?

Mr. Hinman: Yes. The hon. Minister of Education thinks that this is fiction, and we should be writing a book. I think that he can do that whether he gets to the judges' table or not.

Mr. Speaker, it is critical that the opposition go through these and look at them from a different point of view. Often the government seems to be blinded. They're so: this is the intent of a bill. Then they don't ever see any loopholes or any possibilities where things could be skewed or looked at in a different way. It's always interesting, when you have five sets of eyes look at something and describe it, how the description always varies a little bit.

I would say to the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo that, yes, it's the opposition's job to go through, scrutinize these things, and look and see where the possible loopholes are that may or may not be intentionally in there. I get the feeling that they think this is not, but this is very much the behaviour of this government. When you look at bills 19, 36, 24, and 50 from previous years, the minister has great power and authority to decide arbitrarily on what they may or may not want to do.

This is a general catch-all clause for a centralized government that wants to be able to intervene or allow different activities, different leases, to go ahead or to put freezes on. Definitely, we need clarity on this bill. I look forward to the amendments that the government as well as the opposition members bring forward on this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Safety.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to sincerely thank the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for clarifying what the Member for Calgary-Glenmore was talking about because I sure didn't get it. He started out talking about how awful hunt farming is. Then he was talking about how many, many, perhaps most Albertans don't like the raising of meat of any kind, including bovine, he even said. I guess he hasn't been in a grocery store for a while.

Mr. Hinman: You should read Hansard and get it straight. Putting out words like that: it's pure gibberish. It's embarrassing.

Mr. Oberle: I think I have the floor.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, the Solicitor General has the floor.

Mr. Hinman: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: What is your point of order?

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hinman: Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j). He's obviously saying slanderous words. I said that people have sent letters to me, pointing out this way, and he's saying that they're my words. If he'd pay attention to the conversation – you know, he's personally being slanderous, saying that I said things that I didn't and putting it in that frame. It's ridiculous: his behaviour and the comments he's making.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I listened very carefully to what you said and to what the minister said. It was not slanderous. Carry on.

Debate Continued

Mr. Oberle: Thank you. Then he ends his argument by saying, Mr. Speaker, that we don't actually have a right as a Legislature to infringe upon the lawful and free practice of business, which one would have to assume would include game farming. It made no sense whatsoever.

I have a question for the member. How does he feel about the practice of hunt farming when clones are used? Both the Member for Lethbridge-East and the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood talked about cloning. I've no idea what they're talking about, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the bill.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to join this exceptionally animated debate. I'm probably going to bring it down a little bit, though. I just have a couple of quick comments to make on this.

Mr. Boutilier: Rise up. Rise up.

Ms Notley: That would be the wrong person saying that.

I understand that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has already identified the primary concern, that other members here have also spoken about, with respect to the degree to which the proposed section 10, I believe it is, in the bill might open the door for the government down the road to remove current impediments to penned hunting. My understanding is that the minister of agriculture has indicated that he will be coming forward with an amendment to the bill to make it very clear that that's not a likely outcome. Assuming that that happens, then that particular concern will be addressed. We'll look to the language when that amendment comes to see if, in fact, it is as clear as the minister of agriculture suggested that it would be.

Sort of flowing, to some extent, from the point made by the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, we have also received some concerns that were sent to us by members of the Alberta Wilderness Association about the environmental integrity of the consequences of this change and the implications for wildlife of the continued farming of diversified livestock and, in particular, the concern they raise with respect to the spread of chronic wasting disease. They make the point, which I'm sure members of the government are fully aware of because I believe they advocated to everybody, that they don't believe there was adequate consultation with respect to this bill. Also, they are concerned that there is an inadequate amount of scientific information out there to assure people that we have an adequate level of understanding about sort of the population density and carrying capacities in close quarters of elk and deer species when it comes to disease.

In the manner in which the minister responded to the first concern that was raised, or intends to respond, I understand, about the potential for penned hunting, I would certainly be very open to hearing the minister or somebody else from the government respond to these concerns that were identified by the Alberta Wilderness Association because I think they are legitimate concerns. I don't profess to be an expert in this area, but certainly I have not yet heard what efforts will be put in place to ensure that the lack of clear understanding around the spread of chronic wasting disease will be addressed comprehensively to ensure that we don't result in spreading a disease that, obviously, is bad economically for a number of different sectors.

Those are my two points. I look forward to seeing the draft in committee, and I also look forward to hearing anybody from the other side address the concerns that have been raised by the Alberta Wilderness Association.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 29(2)(a) I just want to thank my Edmonton representative, the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona, for bringing forward a concern and echoing the concerns raised by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and the Member for Calgary-Glenmore about a growing trend, which is a shortcoming, a concern in a series of bills that have been brought forward. That is the idea of moving from legislation to regulation, where what you see is not what you get. What you get comes from behind a closed cabinet door in the form of regulation as opposed to debatable legislation.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore referenced a number of land bills and the land-use framework. There is a concern about the erosion of democracy, and I thank all three members for pointing out that erosion. It applies to Bill 11, as it does to Bill 50, Bill 36, et cetera.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available for anyone else.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer on the bill.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour and a privilege to speak to this bill and echo some of the comments that have already been given in this Chamber but to also, then, come to the defence of my hon. friend from Calgary-Nose Hill, who I understand is in charge of the legislative bills committee from his caucus. No? But he has some role in that. He works many hours on studying those bills. He's a lawyer. He gets caught up. He studies every line of those bills, like I'm sure he did this one. It's where it said in the definitions that we'll have no hunt farms, and we'll not do this and not do that. I know how it is when you can get caught up in, you know, reading through these night after night, studying them line by line. He couldn't possibly miss the loophole that was in Bill 12 that may have one of those things that possibly – I know, however, that it seems unlikely – would allow a minister to, if it was in his purview, bring in a hunt farm. That can often happen. It's happened to me before when I've been up studying legislation, possibly missing one of those loopholes.

That's our job as the opposition, to try and find ways to help the government, to find ways to better bills, to possibly look for things that may have inadvertently fallen through the cracks. I understand that that's what we're here for, and I'm glad the members here have pointed out that possibility. The research indicates that hunt farms, if they are around, can lead to problems, serious problems, for wildlife in terms of CWD and other bovine-related diseases. That is the last thing we'd want here in Alberta as research indicates that we shouldn't be doing these things. I'm sure it was just an oversight, and that's what I'm hoping. We caught it, and I'm hoping that amendment will be coming forward in the next round, where we can have that closed. I'm sure that amendment will be coming though.

But if I look at this, I have more of the concerns as the hon. members have. I'm concerned about cervid farming in Alberta and perhaps the spread of CWD through this method. I think it's something we as a province need to keep a handle on and make sure that we're doing our due diligence to ensure that it's not being spread.

I realize that we are doing that. We are looking like we are going to be doing significant testing and the like. I hope we continue to do that and to protect Albertans and our wildlife wherever we can. I do appreciate that things often get contentious in here, but we are doing the best we can on the opposition side to bring out all possibilities of things, not probabilities but possibilities. I think working together in that fashion sometimes helps.

I'm relieved to hear that an amendment will be coming. It's not the intent of this bill to spread game farms, but at the same time it would have been irresponsible of us not to have brought that up if we saw a possibility for that amendment to come up.

I thank the hon. Speaker for allowing me time to speak to this bill and to echo my concerns.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer: it always kind of amazes me that government or those people that are signing a contract will read the clause that says, "See, this says here that it's prohibited" or "You can't do it," but how often in a contract is it critical to read the whole contract because there are clauses later on that take away from those that have been given earlier, that circumvent it?

This government seems to act like: "Oh, it's in this clause. It's in this bill. It's stated here that this isn't going to happen." Yet, like I say, in this one you read five or six sections later, and here is this clause that says that, well, the minister could circumvent, otherwise, any contravention of this act and move it forward. Is this not a common thing in contracts? I always hear the saying that the large letter giveth and the small print taketh away on the back of a contract. Do you have any comment on that?

Mr. Hehr: Well, I appreciate that. I'm glad he's also been paying attention to question period. It's nice to hear that he's picked up some of the language. I've used that, for instance, where the large print giveth in the Education budget what on the top line looks like a 4.7 per cent increase to the budget. Actually, when you factor in everything on the grants and the take-aways, it really doesn't amount to that much at all. In fact, it has left us with many of our school boards and other areas that are struggling.

Relating that to this bill and this question on how it is that we're going to go forward, I think it just behooves us as parliamentarians, who aren't privy to a lot of the background discussion on bills and the hours of time that the minister and, actually, many government members get to spend with people – one of the neat things about being in government is the fact that you can bring in a lot of people to explain things and do some of the legislative assistance and all that sort of stuff. So there is a possibility that there may be a deeper understanding of some lines and things that come up from time to time in the legislation.

Nevertheless, it would be very unwise of us as opposition members not to take every opportunity we have to ask the government questions. We do that the only way we can, through honourable debate in this House, where we can go forward, we can bring forward ideas, we can share and discuss ideas about what is in a bill, what is not in a bill, and get that clarity that we so need. I think that we see some of that here in the large print that was contained in this bill that said, "Here's what we're going to do" in the definition section and in the interpretation section and other sections of the bill that outlined things in the preamble, where it said: this is what the bill is about. It's about our cervid animals and how we're going to go forward and how we're going to do things in Alberta related to that activity.

You go further on in the bill, you know, and it says some more things. You get to section 12, where again we saw where it allowed for ministerial discretion on how things were going to go forward on this bill that we're talking about.

When we see things, I think that is the small print that the hon. member for Calgary-Glenmore was bringing up, the small print that was contained in section 12. We see a continued pattern of this emerging, where this ministerial discretion pops up more and more. There's much of this occurring right now. I see it, actually, on billboards around town here – and the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill may have seen some of those billboards – suggesting that there's a lot of power going on in backrooms, where decisions are being made on bills like the one we have before us.

We have in section 12 what looks like it could be an opening for back channels or decisions to be made there that ought to be made in public view. By "in public view" I mean happening in this Legislature, where we can honestly have exposure to what's in a bill, to what is right and wrong, what the people of Alberta want, what is in the best interest of science and the best interest of our wildlife and meat industry. [Mr. Hehr's speaking time expired] I was just getting started.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak on the bill?

Does the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka wish to close debate?

Mr. Prins: Yes, I would. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak for a few minutes on Bill 11 as well. I've actually been quite interested in the discussion that's been going on because a lot of the discussion is about hunting, and this bill is not about hunting at all. That actually is gratifying to me, that a lot of the concern is not about the bill at all. It's kind of a vacuous discussion among people that are not really understanding what the issues are.

The bill is really to move cervid farming from SRD to ARD. This will enable farmers with elk and deer, or ungulates and cervids, to actually prosper as farmers. These are good farmers that are producing a good product with many end uses. They're providing meat for a market. They're providing antler for a market, breeding stock for a market, and even hunt bulls for markets in other jurisdictions. I think we have markets for these hunt bulls in Saskatchewan or in the States, and that's actually working quite well, so we don't need those hunt farms here. That's not what this is about at all, and that's what we'll make very clear in the amendments. We just want to make it possible for these farmers to prosper in Alberta, where they are proud farmers that produce a good product.

There's a great deal of misunderstanding about CWD in these game ranches, a lot of talk about CWD moving into the wild. In fact, there's more danger of wild animals spreading CWD into game farms. There was only one elk ever found in Alberta with CWD. That was about 2002, about nine years ago, and it was north of Edmonton, quite a ways north of Edmonton. There were two deer on a farm north of Edmonton as well in the early 2000s, I think maybe 2004-05, and they were also north of Edmonton. Since then every single head of every animal slaughtered or that has died on a farm has been tested for CWD, and there have been none.

All this talk about CWD being spread off farms is absolute nonsense because it hasn't happened. Any CWD that was found in the wild in Alberta has been found in southeast Alberta, nowhere near where these other animals are. Animals don't move very far in a year, so I think that any of the animals that have CWD in the southeastern part of Alberta are mostly in the Red Deer River valley, moving up the valley from Saskatchewan or some other place, in another jurisdiction where they might not have as good disease control as we do.

SRD does not test for any diseases, no diseases; Agriculture does. Any CWD that's caught in cervids or any BSE in cattle is found by Agriculture, not SRD. SRD does no testing of any animals ever. SRD has not been able to control the brucellosis and TB in the northern parks in buffalo. This is a huge problem, and they're just being allowed to run around up there. They actually present a danger to our livestock industry, cattle industry, and domestic bison industry in the north of Alberta. This should be managed by SRD in the federal or the national wildlife organizations. This should be managed, and it's not being managed. People from the northern parts of Alberta are asking us to manage this. They're asking the feds to manage it. I've spoken with the Premier of the Northwest Territories, and he says: "Why don't you guys look after this? This is a huge problem." SRD is not doing it, the feds are not doing it, and I think we should be doing it. This is a separate discussion from Bill 11, but – you know what? – it needs to be dealt with someday.

Bill 11 is actually a good bill that'll move cervid farming from SRD into ARD, where it belongs. Cervid farmers have been around for about 40 years. The first 20 years or so they worked under a permit from the Wildlife Act. In the early 1990s we had LIDA, the Livestock Industry Diversification Act. The cervid farmers then worked under both Wildlife and LIDA, so it has been around for about 20 years as an act. We are not now just moving wildlife onto farms. This has been going on for 40 years under two acts: 40 years under the first act, about 20 years under the two acts. Now it's time to move it into one act, where it belongs. This is nothing new. This is just a maturing industry doing a great job of providing products and services to Albertans. The people want this stuff, and this is just moving it ahead to where it belongs.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, there's a great deal more that I could talk about. I've actually raised these animals for many years. I know what I'm talking about. I've been around these farmers. I've seen the farms. I've built the farms and worked with the animals. I look forward to the amendments coming in committee, and I would like to be able to answer any questions that people have at that point in time.

At this point I would just call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 5 Notice to the Attorney General Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. With regard to the bill, the Auditor General's review, which I am looking at, Notice to the Attorney General Act, I have not a tremendous number of concerns. The act will establish a clear duty to provide notice to the Attorney General if an issue arises about consultation with aboriginal peoples. The regulation-making power allows cabinet to add to the circumstances in which notice is required by regulation.

In general, we are supportive as a Liberal caucus of Bill 5, the Notice to the Attorney General Act. We have a little bit of concern, and that's that the process of consultation is a very complex matter. It's reasonable that the government of Alberta through a single representative, the Alberta Attorney General, should be able to explain what it has done to consult. However unsatisfactory the process may be, it is in the public interest that the government have an opportunity to be heard.

One concern would be whether disparities in the legal resources of the parties may negatively affect the rights of aboriginal peoples. Caucus has generally objected to the inclusion of broad-ranging regulation-making powers and should do so in this case. We will, I'm assuming, be potentially proposing amendments.

Without spending an awful lot of time, First Nations with Treaty 7 and Treaty 8 historically have not been served well. There are a number of First Nations groups such as the Lubicon who were not a party to Treaty 8, and therefore taking into account the considerations of First Nations and making sure that they have a voice in a number of areas in terms of their education, for example, in terms of economic opportunities, in terms of, very specifically, land rights and access onto First Nation territory is extremely important. It's hoped that Bill 5, the Notice to the Attorney General Act, will improve that communication between First Nations and the government via the Attorney General.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It is indeed a privilege, as it always is, to speak to a bill, Bill 5, Notice to the Attorney General. I'd echo some of the statements of my colleague from Calgary-Varsity. Generally, we're in favour of this bill as it adds to the process and the ability of our courts to do the work they need to do. What we are concerned about is the ongoing consultative process with our First Nations people. Obviously, that has been a bone of contention not only for this government but for many governments, and it continues to rear its ugly head from time to time. We must continue to always work towards getting a handle on what the duty to consult is, ensure that we're fulfilling that duty, and continue to strive to incorporate First Nations into our daily practices here at a government level.

I realize that, you know, just a short time ago the Supreme Court of Canada did outline what the duty to consult entailed. Although this is a new-found responsibility for government, I believe that if we start the hard work of doing that now, getting a handle on extending that discussion power with the governments, with our First Nation people, I think it will go a long way to giving that community a hand up and for our Legislature to get a better understanding of what they're looking for in responsible government.

As always, another concern of this bill is the fact that the regulation-making powers, future amendments to this bill, are often not going to come to this Assembly and that the decisions in regard to this bill can be made now in cabinet. That will no longer necessitate the need for us to come to this honourable Legislature and discuss what, in fact, the changes will be. That has always been a concern to us. It has been a theme of this government since I arrived here three years ago. Needless to say, it lessens the openness and transparency that governments are supposed to be moving towards, not moving away from.

I would like to thank the hon. chair for allowing me to speak on this. I'd like to hear what other people have to say on this. We'll go forward.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to join this debate. I rise, I guess, primarily to make three points and raise three concerns about this bill as it exists. Let me start by saying, of course, that it's responsible for government to ensure that as important legal issues progress through the courts, the government has full notice of it and can be there to represent the interests of the population in the best way possible. From that point of view, it makes some sense.

My understanding of the bill is that there needs to be notice given to the Attorney General not only when you raise that issue in the courts but also when you raise issues of a constitutional nature in any other forum like so many sort of quasi-judicial administrative tribunal forums. My concern is that in a lot of those forums you have lay people that are functioning as representatives. If they're not aware that they need to give notice, what does that do to the efficiency and the effectiveness of that administrative tribunal process? The background for having administrative tribunals deal with specific issues is that they, you know, (a) are supposed to have a certain expertise in that issue, and (b) are typically in that role to be able to make that issue more accessible to adjudication, to make it faster and more efficient and to ensure that people can have their issues addressed in a more meaningful way more quickly.

If what has to happen now in every arbitration is that one of the many lay people that practise arbitration has to give notice to the Attorney General before they raise, say, a Charter issue, which I believe would happen likely with any, for instance, arbitrations relating to government employees, then what we're going to do is bung up the system in quite a serious way. I assume what would happen is that the hearing, for which typically someone will have waited months and months and years and years to even get, will then have to be delayed if the lay person that's acting as counsel is unaware of the obligation to give notice to the Attorney General.

I'm just wondering if there's been any concern about the implications. Perhaps I'm misinterpreting what will happen in practice, but what I see here is that that will be what happens. There are so many contexts in which it would be appropriate for an advocate to raise issues of a constitutional nature. In particular, I refer to the Charter. That comes up in many, many different adjudicative forums. My concern is whether there has been any consideration given to the implications of this requirement to the efficient and effective operations of the multitude of administrative tribunals that currently exist in the province.

The second concern that I have, of course, is one that was raised by the previous speaker in terms of the now common practice of this government to bring in legislation that gives to cabinet the ability to essentially write more legislation. For all intents and purposes the regulatory-making authority that this bill gives to cabinet under section 10 is far more wide-ranging than simply sort of administrative regulatory provisions for the implementation of this act. No. It actually expands the scope of the act quite significantly through section 10, so it continues this really horrific practice of this government of giving the cabinet all authority.

Of course, here we are in a situation where, you know, this House started sitting at the end of February, a month and a half after the House of Commons started sitting. We're likely on the verge of rising within a very short time period, and we will once again, I'm sure, win a national award for having the fewest number of days of debate. That's because every time this government passes a piece of legislation, they give themselves regulatory-making authority that ensures that they never have to bring that bloody piece of legislation back before the Legislature again. That's another reason why I have significant concerns about this bill.

The third concern that I have relates in particular to the aboriginal groups this bill will impact in terms of their obligation to have their representatives give notice to the Attorney General should they raise concerns around whether or not they've been appropriately consulted. I appreciate that, again, government needs to have that notice, but I'm also worried about what the implications will be for the processes that currently exist for aboriginal communities and advocates to assert their rights. My briefing notes here take note that the government has asserted: oh, well, we're in the process of revising and amending and upgrading our aboriginal consultation policy. Well, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, the government has been in the process of revising and amending and updating the aboriginal consultation policy since I got elected in 2008, and they actually haven't moved anywhere on it.

The most significant failing of the government's support and oversight for systems for consulting with aboriginal Albertans is their failure to give adequate resources to those communities so that they can engage sufficiently qualified resources to be consulted in a meaningful way.

So here we are three years later. We haven't updated the aboriginal consultation policy effectively. We haven't funded the aboriginal communities or the ministry in order to ensure that there can be meaningful participation by the numerous aboriginal groups across the province, but we have managed to find time to impose greater obligations and legal obligations for those very same groups to whom we are not providing a policy or adequate resources for them to participate. It just, you know, strikes me as a continuation of the misplaced priorities of this government and the failure to understand that if you're really going to be genuine in your desire to bring about successful consultation as required under the constitution with aboriginal groups, you can't just pass laws. You've got to provide some resources and substantive support. That hasn't been done, yet the law is coming. It's a bit like putting the cart before the horse, to the unfortunate result of the aboriginal communities that the act is intended to apply to.

For that reason, I have some significant concerns, and I look forward to hearing from the Attorney General. I'm not sure if he'll be able to respond, but I certainly look forward to having him respond to the concerns that I've raised about this because I think that there are some inherent mistakes in this bill that have not been fully thought out or fully discussed with members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before we continue, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, it's a pleasure to introduce to you the three people that are in the members' gallery: Milvia

Bauman, who is the president of the Medicine Hat chamber of commerce, and Lisa Kowalchuk, who is the executive director. I'm sorry; I've forgotten the other person's name, but they are all part of the Medicine Hat chamber of commerce. Please rise and receive the greetings of the House.

Bill 5 Notice to the Attorney General Act (continued)

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Any other members wish to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona triggered a concern of mine with regard to fair dealings with First Nations. You don't have to go back in history as far as the treaties and broken agreements. You don't have to go as far back as residential schools. You only have to go back two years to what this government arbitrarily did without consultation in terms of the firing of the Northlands school division. All of the trustees were either First Nation or Métis individuals. Without consultation this government fired the entire board, blamed the First Nations individuals for their lack of governance and the low attendance at the schools.

This morning in Public Accounts we had a chance to talk with individuals from the Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs and raised a number of concerns about the accountability and transparency with which this government not only consulted but collaborated with First Nations groups. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out, what we see in this particular bill in terms of the opportunity to improve communication puts a tremendous amount of power into cabinet, which is not known for its consultative processes, never mind collaborative. So a concern that I wish to raise.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 5 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Should the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: That is carried.

Bill 6 Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise today to move Committee of the Whole debate for Bill 6, Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011. The Rules of Court govern our practice and procedure in the Court of Queen's Bench and keep the court running smoothly and efficiently, and with the co-operation of the Alberta Law Reform Institute, the judiciary representatives from the legal profession, other stakeholders, and Alberta Justice, these rules underwent a substantial change after a multiyear review.

The goal of the review was to simplify rules and procedures and update many of the procedures. The updated rules came into effect November 1, 2010. Now that the rules have been put into practice, Bill 6 will ensure that the relevant legislation is updated. Bill 6 amends language and procedures relating to court proceedings and a number of acts and makes them consistent with the new Rules of Court. Outdated terms like “guardian ad litem” and “next friend” will be replaced by the single modern term “litigation representative” under Bill 6.

Bill 6 will also facilitate and streamline processes in the new Rules of Court, including, for example, simplifying the procedure for the recovery of possession of land or premises. Mr. Chairman, Bill 6 will help Albertans better understand and navigate the court system, allowing them greater access to the justice system.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Before we continue, hon. members, may we revert once more to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I notice that there are three ladies up there, and you only introduced two. One of them is a constituent of mine from Penhold, Alberta. She's also the manager of policy development with the chamber in Red Deer, absolutely not having any problems, and very involved in politics. She is a councillor in the town of Penhold and does a very good job there. I'd like to introduce Danielle Klooster if she'd stand.

Bill 6

Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: To the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is indeed, as it always is, a privilege to rise and discuss Bill 6, the Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011. This is the latest in a series of bills brought forward by this government that has been attempting to change some of the language that has been in our Rules of Court. I will note for the record that our Rules of Court had existed for quite some time before this recent slew of new bills and amendments, I think for approximately 40 years, so it's due for some changes.

I know that all these changes have been recommended by the Alberta Law Reform Institute, a great group of people who do excellent work on behalf of the legal community.

An Hon. Member: Five years.

Mr. Hehr: For five years they've been hard at work on this, and they do good stuff. I think these changes are going to do not only the person not only practising law but the average person trying to manage the court system a world of good. Getting rid of archaic language is one of those things that we should always strive to do, bring it up to date, to modern standards.

I'd like to commend the minister on this bill. It, again, keeps bringing our legal system up to the highest standards around the world. Let's keep on moving through this stuff to make it easier for both legal professionals and laypeople to utilize our system.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. As the father-in-law of a partner with Bennett Jones and as the brother of a partner with Miles Davison, I just want to thank the hon. Minister of Justice for bringing forward Bill 6, which is basically, as the minister so eloquently stated, about clarification and modernization. As such, the Liberal caucus supports it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Yes. I just rise to mostly make a couple of points about this bill. Of course, it's a good thing that the Rules of Court have been amended as they were when the first piece of legislation came through. It's also a good thing that it does appear to update the language ever so slightly and also to provide ever so slightly some additional protection to tenants when it comes to being advised of whether a stay on an order of possession has been lifted. That's all good.

The one point that I just simply did want to make, though, is that I am still somewhat disappointed by observations previously made by the Attorney General that these new Rules of Court somehow serve to improve access or to in any way ameliorate the crisis that exists in our legal system from the profound lack of access to legal representation by the majority of Albertans. While this is a nice update – and for those people who regularly practice within the courts, it will certainly make for greater clarity and greater understanding and for some efficiencies of process – in no way, shape, or form does it have any impact on the ability of the average citizen to walk into a court and represent themselves in a way that comes anywhere close to providing for equal justice.

I just really felt the need to reinforce that fact, and the minister is aware of my strong feelings on this issue. Nonetheless, I do believe that it was widely consulted on before the first set of changes was made and, probably, I suspect, also when this set of changes was made. For those people within the legal community who are still practising and representing a portion of Albertans, I think it will be a positive improvement.

Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: I think I would be remiss if I didn't follow up with some comments very similar to those given by the hon. member just now. I would agree with her very strongly that these are superficial changes. While there are changes I agree with, there is a lot of need right now to sort of look at our whole legal system in general and look if it's serving the average person or if it's still doing those things we always thought a legal system would.

While all of these changes may add to some of the day-to-day ease of lawyers generally practising the law, it's not going to make it any easier for people to obtain justice in our courts, to be able to find themselves justice in our court system, as that is becoming increasingly a place where only people of great wealth or corporations can get a day in our courts, simply because – it's not the way it's structured – it's the way it is priced. It has priced itself out of reach for, dare I say, even the average Albertan. It's very difficult to find an ability to get to court. Not only our jurisdiction but other jurisdictions are having that difficulty as well. Hopefully, we can get to finding ways to better support Legal Aid and some other organizations like that in this province as well as continue to do some of the sideline stuff that keeps our courts moving, like this bill will no doubt do.

I thank you, and I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for reminding me of that very important issue. Thank you very much.

Bill 7 Corrections Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd just like to very quickly recap that this bill, Bill 7, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2011, comes about as a result of a few things that have happened here. First and foremost, there was a transfer of health employees from my department of correctional services to Alberta Health and Wellness. We did that because we believe that will provide better health care for prisoners. Clearly, Alberta Health Services has the wherewithal, the capacity, to do that. Because of the transfer, those new employees are subject to the Health Information Act, which is fine, but they have to disclose certain information about the health or the treatment of inmates in order for us to provide for the protection and safety of the inmate or of the staff or of the facility itself. For example, there are prescription drugs that can cause false positives on drug tests. Clearly, the manager of the facility would need to know that in order to treat that prisoner appropriately from that point onward.

Secondly, Mr. Chair, some time ago there was a decision by Justice Marceau relating to a test case in the Edmonton remand facility. There are a number of recommendations that came out of that, many of which we're working on or have implemented already, but there are a couple embedded in this bill that actually require legislative change. The act currently refers to a classification process for prisoners. The reality of that practice is that every facility is slightly different in how many classifications it can accommodate and how classifications are done. So we're changing that, really, to make it consistent with current practice.

There are also a couple of housekeeping issues in the bill. For example, the transfer of inmates: the somewhat convoluted process identified in the current bill is not actually how it is done. Only one order is issued, for example, and the one order also defines how the prisoners are going to come back to the facility. So we're just catching up to describe what current practice is there. Also, section 32 describes a board versus a committee simply because we're going to do investigations, and a board is what does investigations, not a committee. So a couple of housekeeping items.

I'll leave it there, Mr. Chair. I look forward to the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, as always, it's a privilege to rise and discuss this matter in the House. I appreciate the Solicitor General adding some more clarification to the bill. I know that when the Health Information Act was originally brought into this House, we on this side of the House had some concerns with that bill. Some of these have now been dealt with in that we've found some exclusions, some other things that are making it a more workable piece of legislation. Nevertheless, with the explanations that we've received and now confirmed by the Solicitor General, this looks like it is generally a reasonable bill for having health information provided to health workers working in a correctional institution.

You know, there are some comments to be made, I guess, when it comes to our jails in Alberta and the fact that they appear to be full to the rafters. Many actual legal cases have commented on that, that here in Alberta we may actually be doing things that aren't in best practices for those inmates or their future direction or even toward basic, decent provisions of those facilities.

That being said, returning to this act specifically, it appears that some of this stuff is necessary. We always want our prisoners to have decent and adequate medical care. At the end of the day they are citizens. They are people who have been in violation of the law but are still entitled to some of the basics and necessities. We as a basically caring and understanding society realize that human beings are flawed and that while sometimes they're separated from society, they should not be denied the basic essentials. I think that sets Canada apart from other jurisdictions around the world who do not believe in that principle. I think that this goes towards that principle, and hopefully our people who are temporarily removed from society continue to get the health care, continue to get the rehabilitation they need so that eventually they can come out and be contributing citizens to our society.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Very quickly. I'm supportive of Bill 7. Both the inmates and their custodians need to have information with regard to the potential of communicable diseases. We know that despite the best efforts of the Solicitor General there are various types of drug use, needle sharing, et cetera, and this can cause considerable concern both for the health of the inmate population – and, you know, the business of the homemade tattooing, again, with rather blunt instruments and the potential for hepatitis C from blood poisoning.

One thing I would like to bring up, Mr. Chair, and I'll bring it up very shortly, is the fact that correctional officers have more information than a parent has when their child reaches 16. When a child reaches 16, their medical circumstances, the potential medications they're on, the potential drugs that they have consumed are not privy to the parents. This is a concern as the Liberal critic for Children and Youth Services, that correctional institutions have more rights than parents do with regard to the safeguarding of their children.

Bill 7 has our support. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the Solicitor General to close debate.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll rise to briefly close and call the question. I would just like to point out to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who said that our jails are full to the rafters, that I think you need to draw a distinction between jails and remand centres. Our jails actually have capacity; our remand centres are full. We're opening up the Edmonton Remand Centre, start training staff this year, which will more than double our capacity in Edmonton.

10:00

Anyway, I wanted to add one additional thing on the issue of the disclosure of health information. A draft of this bill was actually run by the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and we believe that we're doing what's right there. I recognize the Member for Calgary-Varsity's issue with health information about youth and drugs. Surely, he would know that a doctor wouldn't disclose personal health information to a parent without the patient authorizing it, and certainly we can't do that either. We use that only for the safety of the inmate himself, the corrections staff, and the facility. Our hands are tied beyond that by what I think is some pretty good legislation.

I'm going to leave it there, and I'll call the question. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Bill 12 Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was pleased to see the support that Bill 12 received at second reading. It's a solid bill and one that will help make sure Alberta's investments are being managed as effectively as they can be. This is especially important in the face of the roller-coaster ride that the markets have been enduring over the past few years.

For the benefit of all I'd like to go over the specifics of the changes we're dealing with in the act. There are a couple of changes within section 2, the first dealing with the corporate structure of our investment manager, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation, or AIMCo. The current act states that AIMCo exists as a corporation with a board of directors, but it also reads that it exists as a corporation made up of shares. This may seem confusing. To clarify, even though AIMCo operates at arm's length from the government, it is still considered a Crown corporation. The change to this section will see AIMCo defined as a corporation consisting of one share, with that share owned by the Crown. This will clear up any confusion around AIMCo's corporate structure.

The second change in this section deals with the mandate of AIMCo. The act already contains a requirement for directors and officers to act in the best interests of the corporation. This change will see a subsection added that makes it clear that what is in the best interests of the corporation is to act in the best interests of its clients. Adding the subsection means that we can take some language out of the current act that is less specific than the new subsection. What this change means, Mr. Chairman, is that the legislation confirms that AIMCo must act in the best interests of their clients while providing investment management services. Seeing as how AIMCo manages nearly $70 billion in investments for their clients, including the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, the sustainability fund, and public-sector pension funds, this is a reasonable amendment to the act.

Moving on, there are a couple of changes to section 11, dealing with director responsibility and conflicts of interest. When it comes to director responsibility, the way the act reads now, it could be interpreted that directors of AIMCo owe their legal duties to three distinct parties: the Crown, the corporation, and their clients. This could give rise to a situation in which directors face a decision where the interests of one of the three parties may conflict with another. In that case, regardless of the decision made, they could then be viewed as breaching their duty to one of the parties. The change involves removing the language that could lead to this ambiguity. I should add that AIMCo is and will continue to be an agent of the Crown under the act.

Changes in section 11 also deal with conflicts of interest. In this case it's simply adding a subsection that incorporates the same conflict-of-interest provisions that apply to corporations and their directors under the Business Corporations Act. This will further protect AIMCo and its directors as they carry out the business of managing our investments.

With section 12 there's only one change, and it deals with indemnification. Currently AIMCo is able to provide indemnity or legal protection to a person who acts or acted as a director or officer of a directly owned corporation. This protection is needed because with some investments that AIMCo makes, they appoint individuals to act as directors to these corporations. The change to section 12 gives a broader scope to the legal protection AIMCo can provide. In this case, it would mean that they could extend this protection to those people they appoint to act as directors in companies in which they made an indirect investment. Mr. Chairman, this change will strengthen AIMCo's investment operations as they broaden the ways they invest to seek the greatest return for Albertans' money.

The final change within the bill falls under section 19. This change will see language added to explicitly clarify that compliance with any directive issued by the government is deemed to be in the best interests of the corporation. This all may seem fairly obvious, but it ensures that the directors and officers of AIMCo would not be in breach of their duty to the corporation if government were ever to issue a directive. It would also explicitly state that the board and AIMCo must execute directives promptly and efficiently.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I've covered off the changes contained within Bill 12. They may not be major, but they are needed to make sure that AIMCo is able to manage our investments efficiently and effectively. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. In general we're supportive and understand the motivation behind turning AIMCo into a Crown corporation. It was to remove the politics from investment decisions and make it a more accurate arm's-length circumstance.

A concern I have is that I would hope that AIMCo's investments are of the ethical nature. It concerns me, for example, that the Alberta government is considering going after tobacco companies, yet we still hold AIMCo investment shares in tobacco companies. So I would encourage the government to dispense of those shares so that they are not being accused of attempting to profit off of individuals' misfortunes.

There should, however, be some caution in supporting this bill as the Auditor General has highlighted several concerns with AIMCo. While it is desirable to have AIMCo at arm's length, until the concerns raised by the Auditor General have been sufficiently addressed, the government should not entirely set AIMCo free, so to speak. The minister of finance is ultimately responsible for the pension and endowment funds under management and, thus, should ensure that AIMCo is functioning properly.

Now, I have questions for the hon. mover, the representative from Red Deer. What I'll do, if you like, is that I can read a series of questions or if you would like to respond to them one at a time. They're fairly brief, and I believe you can deal with them. Let me try one, for example. Why has it taken so long to include these amendments? What instigated this amendment? If you could just give a very brief summary, if that suits you.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, it was considerable work with AIMCo as it evolved into the organization it is now and their internal legal counsel in conjunction with the Department of Justice to develop these guidelines.

Mr. Chase: Thank you for that answer.

The second question . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, go through them all if you have something.

Mr. Chase: Oh, okay. By all means. I just wasn't sure who was going to be responding, and I didn't want to pile up the questions and not give them a chance to respond. Here are all of the questions. If any get missed accidentally, I'll reissue them.

The remaining questions I have on the motivation for the amendment are: have there been any conflict-of-interest issues by directors previously that have motivated this change? Why was this section omitted from the act in the first place? Why would AIMCo not have been working in the interests of clients already? You can see where I'm coming from. It's a justification of the amendment.

Given that the Auditor General has raised concerns with AIMCo's lack of an internal audit group and the need to improve financial recording, how will this bill impact the ability of the finance department to ensure that the problems raised by the Auditor General are addressed? Obviously, as a member of Public Accounts along with the chair of Public Accounts, from Edmonton-Gold Bar, and my colleague from Calgary-McCall this accountability is extremely important. I look forward to hearing the minister of finance explain the answers to the concerns that I've raised with regard to fulfilling the Auditor General's requirements.

Mr. Dallas: Thanks, hon. member. I'll take a stab at your queries. Your first question with regard to conflict of interest. To my knowledge, no, there hasn't been an issue that's been identified by the board with respect to that, but the board has clearly had some discussion around their fiduciary responsibility. In the discussion about where that responsibility is aligned, there was a request to bring some clarity in this bill, and it was determined that the board would be best served to serve the interests of the clients, thereby reducing any potential for conflict.

Of course, there is a clause in the bill that in the event a directive is issued by government, the liability with respect to the directors would be absolved in the sense that the directors would then be deemed to be acting in the best interests of the corporation if they followed a government directive. To my knowledge, absolutely, there has been no instance of a directive ever being issued to the corporation. Again these are, in some cases, theoretical developments, I guess, to anticipate the possibility that such an event could occur.

Why was that omitted? I think that goes in the first answer. Why are they not working for the clients? They always have been working for the clients, but there's always been a sense of trying to define who the primary responsibility is to. In this act we're defining that that is to the client.

Secondly, with respect to any observations that the Auditor General would bring forward, obviously, as with any ministry, finance takes those recommendations very seriously and I have no doubt is working as we speak on implementation of the Auditor's recommendations.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, just to supplement the Member for Red Deer-South. One of the issues was the fact that when you are investing on behalf of other pension groups, they may have other interests specific to them, whether it be ethical funds or focus. So it's important to clear up for the directors that when they're acting on their behalf, that would become the primary interest of that investment, not necessarily AIMCo overall but that particular pension fund.

He talked about the ethical investments. We are very soon to be publishing on the Internet the guidelines around the investment things for both the heritage savings trust fund and AIMCo, and I think that you will see what the Auditor has reflected very seriously: AIMCo, ATB, and Ag Financial Services following up his guidelines with regard to the accounting.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before we go on, just to remind everybody that we're not in Committee of Supply anymore, where there is a 20-minute back-and-forth Q and A or anything like that. We're in Committee of the Whole.

Therefore, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is the next speaker.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It is a privilege to rise and discuss Bill 12, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011. As indicated earlier, you can see the real motivation behind turning AIMCo into a Crown corporation, which is to try and remove the politics of the day from investment decisions. For instance, if investing in oil makes sense, why wouldn't we as a province do so? I agree that AIMCo's goal is to maximize returns for pension plans and endowment funds and not to worry about politics or the leanings of the day.

I appreciated the hon. President of the Treasury Board indicating that there may be some rules and guidelines around investments that this government is in control of, the heritage trust fund, et cetera, that I'm looking forward to seeing. As he is well aware, we've had concerns on this side of the House on some of those investments, tobacco companies in particular, that have from time to time come up in our questioning. Nevertheless, if we have a distinct policy on that, then it'll clear up those conflicts or, where those conflicts are there, just enforce the rules as to what we're going to do going forward. So I'm looking forward to those amendments.

At the same time, as AIMCo is in charge of our heritage trust fund and investing it for our future, I would take the opportunity to say that, clearly, we have to do a better job of giving that fund some money to operate. If we look at the last 40 years, what it has told us is that we can bring in approximately $180 billion in royalty revenue and snow through it pretty quickly. There are decisions made for reasons of politics, why that has been done. Nevertheless, the intergenerational transfer of wealth: we've gone in this generation from one that I see as having one of those lasting legacies that should be built on for not only use today but for tomorrow, jurisdictions like Alaska and Norway. I know and appreciate there are differences somewhat in tax structures and the like, but I think we would be well served for the long run if this House took more seriously the role of us saving sometime for the long-term future of this province.

Other than that, I really appreciate that this bill has made this a Crown corporation. We can go forward on that, and hopefully AIMCo can go make us some money.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Very quickly, I appreciated the answers from the President of the Treasury Board. I appreciated the answers from the representative from Red Deer. One last question that I would appreciate clarified. The Auditor General pointed out a need to improve financial reporting. Part of that could be answered with an internal audit group. We understand that the Auditor General does things externally. Could you please comment as to whether this bill will create that internal auditing and an improved accounting?

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? Are you ready for the question on Bill 12, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011?

Bill 14 Wills and Succession Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you. It's my pleasure to rise today and move Committee of the Whole debate for Bill 14, the Wills and Succession Amendment Act, 2011. I thank my hon. colleagues for their support of this legislation. I'll just briefly touch on the highlights of this bill before we resume debate. The Wills and Succession Act governs how and to whom property is transferred when a person dies. Bill 14 contains a small but important amendment to the Wills and Succession Act, which was passed last fall, 2010, and will likely come into force January 2012.

This amendment will allow courts to correct certain deficiencies in invalid wills to make them valid. This correction power applies to wills or, more accurately, invalid wills made before or after the act comes into force. The current Wills and Succession Act allows correction powers to be used to re-evaluate wills of persons who are already dead. This creates an immediate potential for disputes, delay, and expense. The intent of the Wills and Succession Act was that the new act operate on a go-forward basis. The amendment in Bill 14 will make it clear that the new wills' correction powers will not apply to the estates of people who are already deceased.

As this is already affecting the administration of a few estates, it is important that we act quickly to correct this error. I urge all hon. members to support this important change.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 14, the Wills and Succession Amendment Act, 2011. I appreciate the hon. member bringing forward at this time this bill, that will keep on clearing up some of those misunderstandings which have led parties to hold up the legal process relating to wills of persons already deceased in order to take advantage of the new powers of the court to interpret wills.

Of course, any time there has been a death is not a fun time for families. When faced with additional litigation and additional trickery, chicanery, hijinks, or even a simple misreading of a clause in a bill like we had earlier with section 12 on the hunt farming, that has no relation to that bill – we can see how this has gone a way to clear that up. I appreciate that being brought forward. We've always got to continue to strive and make the court process better. The ability for people to make it through their daily lives in a more tangible and practical way should be one of the goals of government, making people's lives easier and often better if they can. Clarifying rules and regulations is one of those things that will be able to help.

I'm supportive of this bill. I'm glad we brought in this amendment, and I'm glad to see we're keeping our work going on this front. For instance, with wills the courts will now be able to rely on outside evidence for the intentions of the testator. That's some decent stuff. I applaud the member again for this bill. I learned a great deal about it in a very short period of time here this evening, so I thank him for bringing that forward. I'm looking forward to hearing other members' comments on it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? Are you ready for the question?

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 21, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. This weekend people from all walks of life and cultures will gather to celebrate Easter. My hope for all this Easter is that you enjoy time with your friends, family, and loved ones, focus on renewal, and look forward to new beginnings. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise with great enthusiasm, pleasure, and honour today to introduce the gentleman from Heilongjiang province who provided me with this beautiful silk scarf today and who, along with his delegation, is in your gallery. Mr. Du Jiahao is the executive vice-governor for Heilongjiang province in China, and he is here celebrating 30 years of our relationship with China, 25 years, incidentally, for this capital city. He's joined by Mme Liu from China, who serves as consul general and is seated in Calgary. She is with the delegation today along with the most senior officials from Harbin, Heilongjiang. We had a wonderful opportunity at lunch to exchange information.

One of the wonderful things that this Assembly would be interested in is that thanks to the instruction in curling the Chinese curlers have done very well, and this summer as part of our 30th anniversary celebration we're sending hockey coaches to Harbin, Heilongjiang province, so that they can also learn to play hockey in fine Canadian tradition.

We are honoured to have them here in celebration of the many business, economic, agricultural, and cultural pursuits that we have shared together. Celebrating 30 years, Vice-governor Du is rising, as is Mme Liu and all of the members of the delegation.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students from East elementary school, which is located in the city of Leduc in my constituency. They are seated in the members' gallery, and they are accompanied by teacher Mrs. Sonja Hansen and parent helper Ms Juanita Oulton. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my honour on behalf of the Premier to introduce 35 guests from the Fort Saskatchewan Christian school. Their teachers are Josh Gutknecht and Elaine Baillie. Their parent helpers are Kerri Wiens, Tanner Maschmeyer, René Goodbrand, Wendy Hagstrum, Darren MacLennan, Kelly Fermaniuk, and Niki Blanchard. I would ask them to all rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce a group of 28 visitors from Madonna Catholic school. Along with teacher Ray Rudanec we have parent helpers Tracy Szymanski, Shannon Rudanec, Amanda Rudanec, Lorraine Lydom – I'm hoping that I haven't mispronounced those too badly – and the brightest kids you can imagine from Madonna Catholic school. Would they please rise, and could we salute their attendance here today?

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a great Albertan. After working in the private sector and 23 years of exceptional service with the government of Alberta, most recently as my assistant deputy minister, Robin Wigston is retiring effective this July 31. In his work with colleagues across government departments and with his calm demeanour and his we-can attitude Robin has done what we all strive to do, make a difference. I can tell you that he has not just made a difference in the housing department; he has also made a difference, I understand, on the rodeo circuit in his past. A great deal of his dedicated service with the government of Alberta focused on housing and assisting the most vulnerable Albertans as well as giving the best value for the taxpayer. Mr. Speaker, these sentiments have been echoed to me by the Minister of Infrastructure and the minister of children's services, who I've spoken with over the last little while. Robin, I've learned a lot from you, and I'm going to miss you. Please join me, all members, in congratulating Robin for his 23 years of exemplary service to this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's always a special day when one has constituents come for a visit. I'm wanting to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today four of my constituents who live in Wetaskiwin. They are Marcia Schultz and her children: Lois, age 10; Eric, age 12; and Wilson, age 14. Marcia home-schools her children, and obviously she's doing a good job today. They're on a field trip here to see how the Legislature works. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and that my colleagues here give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine who's visiting the Legislature today. We have with us Danielle Klooster, who is seated in the visitors' gallery. Danielle's experience in community development, board governance, and business drew her to a position with the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce as manager of policy, advocacy, and communication. She also serves as a councillor in the town of Penhold in my riding, sits on the board of the Central Alberta Women's Outreach Society, and is an organizer in the women in politics initiative. Danielle is very passionate about everything she does, and I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four individuals up in the members' gallery. One of them is my staff member, Mrs. Camille Hauck. Please stand, Camille. She is an assistant in my office, a wonderful lady who does some very good work for me, and I thank her every day for the work that she does do. She's here today with her son, actually, Curtis Hauck and two of his grade 7 classmates from the Madonna Catholic school, Mr. Ben Schmidt and David Hollik, if they could rise, too. These three young men missed out on the trip last year as a grade 6 class, so they're in grade 7, and they're here today. I would just ask that they stand—they are—and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two separate introductions. First of all, the Minister of Justice had the opportunity to introduce the Schultzes. I have the introduction of their grandparents here, Cliff and Shirley Breikreuz, who are no strangers to you. Cliff and Shirley are great community members in the Onoway area. Shirley is a very active member of the Onoway public library system. Cliff, as you know, is my previous MP, and he's one of the two Senators-in-waiting here in Alberta. I'd ask them both to stand and be recognized by this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce you to a young lady that I've known for over 50 years. She brings a smile to my face every day and she has for 50 years. It's my little baby sister Pat, and she's also here with the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. She's a chamber manager in Whitecourt. I'd ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly six trustees from the Sturgeon school division who are here today. It's been a pleasure to work with these folks over the last three years and even the decade before that as their Xerox sales rep for many years. I know they work very hard to do an excellent job for the students in our area in making sure they have one of the best educations in the world. I'd ask them to please rise one-by-one as I call their names. They are trustees Liz Kohle, Shelley Porter, Brent Gray, Daryl Krieger, Wendy Miller, and Vice-chair Tracy Nowak. I would invite the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Project Adult Literacy Society

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today our world thinks big. We live in an age when every bit of information is valuable and is a basis for the decisions that we make. We do all this because we can read. Imagine how you would feel if this information, literacy or numeracy, was foreign to you or if you didn't know how many nickels were in a dollar or what a law was.

Mr. Speaker, I attended the graduation of Project Adult Literacy Society of Edmonton on Tuesday. These brave people are not concerned with deficits or infrastructure or some obscure ideological argument. They are doing something much more important. They are learning to read. Marty Chan, writer-in-residence of the Edmonton public library, summed it up best by saying: learning to read opened the doors to the things that were a lot more interesting than my own life. It opened the door to knowledge, and knowledge is power.

PALS gets some public support, and I would guess that they turn every dollar into value 10-fold. Mr. Speaker, PALS has 76 tutors and 36 volunteers who logged 8,876 hours last year helping adults learn to read, write, and count.

Consider the proclamation of Tom Joad in John Ford's movie, The Grapes of Wrath: there was a time when a man didn't need book learnin'; all he needed was some cipherin' to get a fair deal in the market, but I guess those times, like a lot of other things, is gone.

Mr. Speaker, PAL students are typically between the age of 35 and 55. These people should be in the peak earning years of their lives, but for most of them these years equate to menial jobs and minimum wages if they work at all. It's a wonderful thing to listen to someone give a speech they've written by themselves for the very first time. I had this chance the other night, Mr. Speaker, and it might have been the most beautiful oratory I have ever heard.

At PALS progress means being a little smarter tomorrow than you were today. We know that there are 20 nickels in a dollar, 26 letters in the alphabet, and 13 doughnuts in a baker's dozen, and thanks to everyone at PALS the students will all know the same.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Quality, Affordable Child Care

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More than half a million Albertans are children who are 12 and under. Approximately 60 per cent of our children in Alberta have a mother in the paid labour force, and more than 10 per cent come from lone-parent families. Affordable, accessible, quality daycare can really pull a community together and offer great supports for children and their families. Parents make connections, staff support early childhood education opportunities, and children develop interpersonal skills.

These opportunities have a special value for new immigrants when children develop language and literacy skills, making the transition to school easier. We've seen study after study that show that quality child care has high economic and social returns to society and to taxpayers. These studies demonstrate how a $1 investment in universal child care offers returns of $2 to $17 in the long term.

Eleven per cent of our children are living below the low-income cutoff. We know that quality, affordable child care can result in greater health and educational outcomes, and it can help break the cycle of child poverty. But even with subsidies many low-income families can't afford child care. There are also families where both parents want to work, but the high fees for two or more children make it economically impossible for both parents to work outside the home.

Alberta, our richest province, only funds child care at one-third the national average. This low level of funding drives costs up for parents. Even if we aren't willing to fund child care at the gold star level of Quebec, where daycare is only $6 per day, by spending to the national average Manitoba is able to cap their fees at $26 per day.

Approximately half of the child care spaces we have in this province are profit driven. It's very difficult for nonprofit societies to open child care centres. We need to find ways to provide stable funding for community-centred, nonprofit providers.

People who work with our children are doing important, life-changing work; however, they are often paid low wages, resulting in high staff turnover. It is time for our province to step up and put the public good first. We need to invest in a quality child care system instead of placing the burden on families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Earth Day

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today in recognition of Earth Day, which is celebrated each year on April 22. The first Earth Day was a modest teaching forum held in the United States in 1970. A year later Alberta created the first provincial Environment ministry in Canada. In fact, Alberta Environment celebrates its 40th anniversary this month. A great deal has changed over those four decades. When the first Earth Day was held, most people had never considered recycling paper, glass, or metal. Cars still used leaded gas, and the idea of measuring an individual's carbon footprint would have sounded like something from a science fiction story.

Just as Earth Day has grown into an international event, this government has expanded its scope to protect our air, water, land, and biodiversity in ways we couldn't have imagined in 1971. Over the past four decades Alberta has developed comprehensive strategies to reduce its environmental footprint and energy consumption, implemented innovative waste management strategies, worked with industry to reduce greenhouse gases, and invested in clean energy technology. These are just a few examples of what our government is doing to maintain a healthy balance between the environment, the economy, and responsible resource development.

Just as importantly, individuals are recycling, composting, making their homes more energy efficient, and making greener choices in their daily lives. All Albertans can take pride in what we have achieved together. Earth Day is a time to reaffirm our commitment to doing the right thing for our environment.

I ask each member of this House to join me in recognizing April 22 as Earth Day and to keep working to protect our air, water, and land for this and future generations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Land Stewardship Legislation

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In spite of what critics may claim, this is an exciting and good time for landowners in Alberta as the main guiding principle of the land-use framework is and always will be respect for private property. This is important because I am a landowner just like my children, friends, neighbours, and colleagues.

Bill 10 continues to protect landowners' existing rights to compensation. If the landowner and the government cannot agree on a compensation amount, either side can appeal the matter to either the compensation board or the courts. In other words, if a landowner is not happy about the proposed compensation, he or she can appeal it.

The amendments in Bill 10 do not create new compensations. This needs to be clear. However, they do create a new process to apply for compensation if after the planning process a landowner believes they are entitled to compensation as a result of a regional plan. The new process would follow existing law regarding whether compensation should be awarded and how much.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, I want to protect the land rights that belong to my family, friends, and all Albertans. This is why I support Bill 10 as it ensures that landowners' existing rights to compensation remain in place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Armenian Genocide

Mrs. Leskiw: Mr. Speaker, each of us in this room has a story told by our families and by our histories. These histories shape who we are, and that is why we remember. Each year on the last Saturday of November I along with my family and many Albertans of Ukrainian heritage remember the millions of victims of Ukrainian famine on Holodomor Memorial Day.

Mr. Speaker, every year on April 24 Armenians around the world pause to remember another cruel massacre, the Armenian genocide, on a day known as Armenian martyrs' day. They pause to remember their families, their histories. Many Armenians live in Alberta today, some of them children or grandchildren of survivors of this genocide, including our friend the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

On this day people remember 1 and a half million Armenians who marched to their deaths in the final days of the Ottoman Empire 96 years ago. It is a day on which to pause, to remember, and to learn from the atrocities of the past, just as we do with Holodomor, to ensure that the memories of those departed remind us to never again repeat the grave mistakes of the past. We are inspired by the spirit, the strength, and the determination of the Armenian people, who have risen up to help build the world we live in today, showing courage that is an everlasting triumph over those who sought to destroy them.

On Sunday as we celebrate Easter with our families, I urge all of us to remember the tragedy of 1915 and in each day forward to promote the acceptance of all peoples and all cultures, opposing crimes against humanity regardless of where they occur and against whom they are carried out. With our thoughts and with our actions we show that we will remember.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Dr. David Candler, a family doctor from Edmonton, is the latest victim of this government's culture of fear and intimidation. Although Dr. Candler was commended by many patients as the best doctor they ever had, he was summarily fired by Capital health region after reporting a disability and illness to the health region. Dr. Candler says that he was, quote, terminated by Capital health without just cause, end quote. His case is also set to be heard by the Alberta Human Rights Commission April 26. To the minister: how can the minister say with any credibility that doctors are free to come forward to tell their stories? As Dr. Candler has said, he came forward to advise . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister, please.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, all doctors are welcome to approach the Health Quality Council, where other doctors, colleagues of theirs, will hear their concerns. They'll be able to talk in their own language.

My understanding of the situation that has just been raised is that this goes back to 2005 and that that particular doctor did raise something with the Human Rights Commission and probably would like it to be heard in that venue. It's one of many different vehicles available to people, including . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, given that a public inquiry is the only way to get to the bottom of this government's culture of fear and intimidation, will this government finally concede that the Health Quality Council review will not help doctors such as Dr. Candler?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would contend that the Health Quality Council review will help doctors, and it will help others who wish to come forward. I think it might even help this hon. member because there is a misunderstanding here of the depths to which the Health Quality Council may wish to probe.

Finally, I just wonder if this hon. member has the permission of Dr. Candler to be raising these issues. I'd like him to tell me that.

Dr. Swann: How many more hundreds or thousands of health professionals like Dr. Candler does the minister have to hear from before he concedes that a public inquiry is the only way to address this government's culture of fear and intimidation among health professionals and patients?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's not the government who is creating any fear among the population. It's not the government who is intimidating anyone. What it is is false allegations that are being raised. It's accusations against innocent people who can't defend themselves. That's what is attacking the public confidence in the system. Why don't we just allow the Health Quality Council to proceed with its review? We'll see where it's going in three months' time, in six months, and a final report will be made public in nine months.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a patient ignores the advice of their doctor, the condition often goes from bad to worse. Since this government is ignoring 6,500 doctors who are calling for a full public inquiry, the government's position has now deteriorated as 21,000 health services professionals with the Health Sciences Association of Alberta have joined the call for a public inquiry. To the minister. The HSAA has said, "Heavy-handed tactics continue to put a chill on patient advocacy." When will the minister do the right thing for patients and call for a public inquiry?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with where the hon. member is coming from, but I do understand that the Health Sciences Association contract just expired at the end of March. I think they're stepping into the next phase to renew that contract, and I wish them well with that. I can't comment.

What I can tell you is that people who are members of health sciences are increasing in our province, so clearly there must be a lot of good things happening here to keep attracting more members into that group.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the minister isn't listening to the 27,000 health care workers who want to see a public inquiry, who is he listening to?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm trying to listen to everyone, actually. It's part of my job to listen. It's also part of my job to take action, and that action has resulted in some very good things. We have more international medical graduates, in fact, 400 more today than we had three years ago. We have – I think I mentioned this yesterday – 14 more oncologists than a few years ago. We have 23 more cardiologists than a few years ago, and we have over 3,000 more registered nurses. We have over 100 more nurse practitioners. Fabulous news for the health system in this province, and that's the kind of news Albertans also want to hear.

Dr. Swann: Given that technicians, occupational therapists, pharmacists, psychologists, and social workers, the backbone of our health care system, are calling for a public inquiry, when is this minister going to find his and call a public inquiry?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times this member has to hear it to understand that we have a full, independent review going on in this province, led by the most credible people available under the circumstances. They are going to get to the bottom of a lot of these kinds of accusations, these kinds of allegations, and they will get the truth out, never mind false allegations without any evidence or any proof. Let them come forward. They're talking doctor to doctor where necessary and lawyer to lawyer where also necessary.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Standards for Underage Workers

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. New research offers some startling figures. Nineteen per cent of 12- to 14-year-olds are employed, 21 per cent of whom are in prohibited occupations. Six per cent of nine- to 11-year-olds are employed, 78 per cent of them in prohibited occupations. No, this is not Dickensian England but Alberta today. To the minister of employment. I would like to ask on behalf of the Albertans who will be shocked by this report. Does the minister believe that Alberta's Employment Standards Code has kept pace with community values?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Albertans will be shocked because what this report, that has been commissioned by the AFL, is suggesting is that there are 126,000 parents who allow their kids to be exploited, that there are 126,000 businesses in Alberta that exploit children, and that all of us, including you, Mr. Speaker, purchase products from businesses that exploit little children in Alberta. Humbug. They should be ashamed of themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. minister should not bring the chair into the debate. The chair would never ever do what the minister said he would do.

The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A sad case of transference.

Enforcement of Alberta's Employment Standards Code is complaint driven: no complaint, no problem. Isn't it time for the minister to commit to proactive inspections of premises where children are employed in prohibited occupations?

The Speaker: With care, Minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, let's not skirt the issue. What the report is suggesting and what AFL has publicized on their website is that they're telling us that there are 126,000 children in this province working illegally, being exploited as labourers. Alberta has just cosigned an international agreement from Geneva, where we are eradicating forced child labour throughout the world. To suggest that we're doing that in Alberta is reprehensible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister has sat for over seven months on Alberta's two-bit minimum wage increase, when can we expect the minister of child labour to act on this Alberta child exploitation information?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this question doesn't warrant a response. This member should stand up and apologize to all parents in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Before we go on, the minister will stand up and withdraw his accusation made at the chair.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I withdraw.

The Speaker: With conviction, I hope.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals (continued)

Mr. Anderson: All right. Mr. Speaker, the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, representing 21,000 health care support workers, has now joined the AMA and virtually every Albertan in what is now a deafening call for a public inquiry into the intimidation and punishment of front-line health care workers by this government. All are demanding the inquiry have the power to subpoena witnesses and compel evidence in order to determine who was involved, who has been victimized, and how we stop it. To the health minister: why won't he agree to call a public inquiry on what may be the biggest ethical scandal in our province's history? What are you hiding from?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's any scandal whatsoever. I think what there is is some great stability in the system now, with the best potential for future predictability that we've seen in the history of this province and anywhere else in Canada. We've made a firm commitment to our five-year health action plan. That's the contemporary position. If there were issues of the past, there are mechanisms for those to be dealt with, and my understanding is that they are.

Mr. Anderson: Given that that answer is completely separate and apart from reality, why do you continue to ignore and dismiss Alberta's doctors, nurses, and other health professionals who want a full public inquiry by belittling doctors who do speak out as liars and while hiding behind a Health Quality Council that reports to you, is paid by your ministry, and that, clearly, does not have the power or capability to subpoena witnesses or compel evidence? What are you hiding from, sir? Why won't you just call the inquiry?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Clearly, the fact that more doctors are coming forward and airing their concerns that go back five, 10, 15, maybe even 20 years ago, is evidence that the process that's been put in place is working. I'll tell you that if the hon. members of the opposition would just allow that process to conclude, at least to get more firmly started, which it has already, they might be surprised by what the findings are. Who knows where it will go?

Mr. Anderson: Well, to the health minister, then. Given the fact that you were during this time, during this scandal, the junior health minister in question and given that this constitutes an obvious conflict of interest as you may well have been involved in or had knowledge of this scandal and given that the Health Quality Council reports to you and given that your ministry pays the salaries of that Health Quality Council, which is another conflict of interest, will you please, Minister, step down until the air can be cleared around this matter? Right now the people of Alberta don't have . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, given that this member doesn't know what he's talking about and given that this member is wrong on all counts and given that he is proceeding on some wrong and false information, I would ask him to probably withdraw that question because it does not dignify an answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Critical Electricity Transmission Infrastructure

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans face a massive hike in electricity rates according to research done by the Alberta Direct Connect Consumer Association, representing a majority of industrial users of power in this province. These large increases are caused by this PC government's insistence on building billions of dollars of unnecessary transmission infrastructure. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is this minister working so diligently to make Alberta business uncompetitive?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I'd like to start out by saying that this is just another example of this member's attempts to put fear and intimidation into Albertans. I happened to see his news release, and if there was ever a news release that was issued with so many inaccuracies in it, I have never seen it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the Alberta competitiveness impact from transmission costs contained in this report by some of the biggest users of electricity in this province, that spend billions of dollars on power, how can this minister stand there and say that it's inaccurate or incomplete when he himself will never answer a question straight in the first place?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, just to be clear, if this member would look at Hansard, I didn't say that what was in that particular presentation was inaccurate because, in fact, I have sat down with the same group. This is nothing new, what the member is allegedly releasing today. I've had those meetings on several occasions. I don't happen to agree with the numbers that are in that presentation. What I did say was inaccurate were the member's accusations in his news release.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the minister should actually be responding to the question, which was about competitiveness impact that was given to the Whitecourt & District Chamber of Commerce by the Alberta Direct Connect Consumer Association, and they say that they are going to be made uncompetitive by this government's misguided attempts to build massive infrastructure that is not needed, why won't the minister come clean with Albertans and admit that he's just going to drive Alberta business into the ground?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I can guarantee you one way to make Alberta business uncompetitive, and that's to have those guys try to run a government in this province.

What we are doing is ensuring that we have the transmission in place that will guarantee that Alberta business will be competitive in the long term.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A budget nightmare, said one Calgary paper. Layoffs in Lethbridge. Tough times ahead, says the Vauxhall Advance. It's déjà vu all over again, and what advice does the minister give boards in response to his grand cutting? He says: use reserves to pay teachers and support staff. Then next year when the reserve funds are depleted across the province, what does the minister expect school boards to do to make up for their long-term shortfalls?

The Speaker: Well, that's quite speculative, but go forward.

Mr. Hancock: It is, indeed, Mr. Speaker, quite speculative.

In fact, because of the impact of the fiscal strategies and the planning of this government this province is going to be leading this North American continent out of the recession. The prospects are already good. We're hearing about shortages of workers already. So next year is going to be a much better year. But it's always prudent for school boards and anyone else who is managing public money to be looking at what they're doing to determine whether we're getting value for it, and there's no better time to do it than when fiscal times are tight.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that the minister just basically admitted that we're heading into better economic times and our population will continue to grow, why are you cutting school boards' budgets and letting teachers go when we should actually be hiring them in this time?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, apart from one or two, well, maybe 10 boards in the province most school boards' budgets actually didn't get cut. They went up. As the hon. member will know because he was here to vote on it yesterday and to speak on it in Committee of Supply on Tuesday, the budget for Education actually went up 4.7 per cent. Now, costs have also gone up. Times are tight. Fiscal restraint is necessary, and tough decisions are there. That's why we get elected. It's not to make the easy choices. It's to be there with intelligence, making prudent decisions over the long term when times are tough.

Mr. Hehr: Given that the minister is playing with numbers and he knows full well he's shortchanging school boards, will the minister do the right thing, restore his cuts, so that teachers can be hired, staff can be hired, and kids can get educated properly in this province?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, one thing I know is that the children of this province get one of the best opportunities in the world to get a good education. Is it perfect? No. Are there things we need to do to make sure that we can continue to say that five years, 10 years, and 15 years from now? Absolutely. We have excellent teachers, we have an excellent system, and most children most of the time get a very good opportunity. We're working on the rest to make sure that everybody has a good opportunity all the time.

The fact that we're in a tough fiscal period and some tough choices have to be made and people have to look at what they're spending money on to make sure that we're getting value for money is not a bad thing, Mr. Speaker. It's what governments need to do all the time if they want to be fiscally prudent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

GreenTRIP Incentives Program

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. GreenTRIP is a $2 billion commitment to improve and expand local, regional, and intermunicipal public transit in our province. My question to the Minister of Transportation: what projects have been announced under GreenTRIP so far?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it's good to have a good positive question and a good positive answer for a good MLA for a change. I want to say that the first two GreenTRIP projects were announced this month. One is the Edmonton LRT NAIT extension, and it will receive nearly half a billion dollars. This will allow the city to extend the existing LRT line from downtown to MacEwan University and then on to the NAIT campus. Yesterday we had a $13.6 million announcement for the new Strathcona park-and-ride terminal to be built in Sherwood Park.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. The Strathcona park-and-ride terminal will be in my colleague's constituency of Sherwood Park, but I know that many of my constituents will also use this new facility. What can the minister tell us about the project? Why does he think this is a good investment of GreenTRIP dollars?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the project is being done by the county of Strathcona. The project involves a new integrated bus terminal and a park-and-ride lot. It will have a large passenger waiting area, more than 1,200 parking stalls, and a passenger pick-up and drop-off. This project will benefit the county and all the surrounding communities. It'll be easier for many more residents to use public transit, get their cars off the road, and it will help promote these communities as a vibrant place to live. That's exactly what GreenTRIP is all about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to hear about these projects, but it does seem like we've been waiting a long time for this funding to actually get out the door. So my question to the Minister of Transportation: when are we going to start seeing more applications being approved?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, GreenTRIP is a significant investment in public transit and a key part of building a world-class transportation system in Alberta. My officials are currently reviewing the applications that have been submitted by various municipalities. They set local priorities and make the decisions on how they want to apply for GreenTRIP funding. These can be very complex, and we must exercise due diligence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Water Research

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government has now given power over water research to the energy sector, ever-increasing the politicization of research. Alberta will now have water monitoring and water research funneled through the lens of the energy industry. Now, we don't allow Olympic athletes to control their own drug-testing process to protect them and the process. The same due diligence and protection should function here. To the Minister of Environment: how is it not a conflict of interest to have a significant consumer of water be given control over what research and how the research is done?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, were it to be true, it would be problematic, but it is not true. What we're doing throughout government is co-ordinating various and sundry research that was occurring in numerous departments, be they environment or agriculture or any of the other research facilities throughout the province, and co-ordinating them all under one ministry, Advanced Education and Technology. It is Advanced Education and Technology, not industry, that will be responsible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the same minister: can the minister explain how the decision was reached to move water research, the most urgent environmental issue in Alberta, to a board with some of the biggest names in the energy industry? Former Syncrude and Nexen CEOs; former senior VP for PetroCan; senior director for Agrium; senior VP, Capital Power: the list goes on and on and on.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be happy to respond to this. Water research is critically important in the province of Alberta, and it is not being handled by the energy industry. That board of directors is truly a remarkable group of people. It is responsible for research in energy and the environment, but water for life and water is through all of our ministry, through all of Alberta Innovates. In fact, the University of Alberta has up to 200 people involved in water research. The University of Lethbridge has a whole water research and environmental centre that works on water research. We cover water research throughout the ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you again. Back to the Minister of Energy: when having the energy industry monitoring the environment in Alberta was such a colossal failure, what makes the minister think that having the energy industry controlling environmental research will be such a success?

Mr. Liepert: I have no idea what the member is alluding to because I think what the Minister of Environment just finished telling her is that her facts are all incorrect, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Workers' Compensation

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are incredibly concerned about the culture of the WCB. They feel that WCB workers approach injured workers with a preconceived notion of mistrust. My questions are for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Minister, what are you doing to change this culture of the front-line workers in WCB?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we have to give credit where credit is due. WCB actually does a fine job with the majority of claims that are processed through the Workers' Compensation Board, not to say that there isn't a percentage of claims that leave workers dissatisfied, whether legitimately or not. I can tell you that there is a process for appeal, on which I'm working right now to make sure that it's shortened and more accessible to workers, and that will assist them in resolving some of those problems.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is it true that injured workers are told that if they use WCB doctors, they're able to get scans, MRIs, or other tests done sooner than if using one's own family doctor? Why are people encouraged not to use their own family doctors?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that is simply not the case. There are no such things as WCB or non-WCB doctors. Injured workers utilize regular Alberta doctors. However, when a claim is approved and it's a work-related accident, these doctors bill WCB for their services as opposed to our public health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: are doctors or other health care professionals compensated by WCB for working on WCB files beyond the usual compensation that health care professionals receive under the fee-for-service payment model?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, WCB has payment arrangements with doctors. Let's face it. All doctors in Alberta are private corporations, and they bill either Alberta Health Services or WCB. They have an agreed schedule of payments with WCB. I'm not sure whether it exceeds Alberta Health Services' on some procedures or not, but it's a payment schedule that's agreed to between the doctors and WCB.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Land Stewardship Legislation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Many people, including those who believe strongly in vigorous environmental protection, are concerned that proposals in Bill 10 are modelled after the American-style property rights legislation, and they've asked me to put questions to the Minister of SRD. To the minister: will the Land Stewardship Act combined with the proposals in Bill 10 have the effect of freezing planning for environmental protection?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the regional plans that will be spawned from that legislation and supported by that legislation will do anything but. What will happen is that there will be a very solid and robust opportunity for conservation and environmental protection in that legislation and through the plans that it supports.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: what actions has the government taken to ensure that land-use planners can do their work without fear of lawsuits?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the business about land-use planning is a municipal issue. In the legislation and, most importantly I think, in some of the subsequent amendments that may come forward with respect to that legislation, we've made it very clear that municipal governments have that authority and will continue to exercise that authority for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My final question to the same minister: what reassurance can the minister offer those who fear that these changes will elevate property rights over environmental protection?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the situation that we have here I think is a very good balance. In fact, the entrenchment of property rights in the province of Alberta has been here since Alberta was a province, and this continues, I think, that very good, solid tradition. However, there are opportunities here where we can work with individual private property owners and, of course, people that lease public land from the province of Alberta for better environmental stewardship and better outcomes from the point of view of our ecological heritage in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Continuing Care Strategy

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This year the first wave of baby boomers are becoming seniors, and our seniors' population is expected to grow significantly over the decade. The aging of our population is providing a new set of opportunities and challenges for all stakeholders specific to affordable accommodations. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. What is the government doing to meet the need for more affordable supportive living accommodations?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we're working very closely with our partners to significantly increase the supply of affordable supportive living accommodations in the province. The continuing care strategy, aging in the right place, is one way we are assisting in the development of projects as a community of care concept. That involves independent living, supportive living, and long-term care spaces. Ninety per cent of all seniors stay in their own homes, so one of the parts of the continuing care strategy that is very important is home care, which is delivered by Alberta Health Services.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: given that the seniors' population is expected to exceed 500,000 by 2016, what is the government doing to meet that increased need for affordable supportive living accommodations?

Mrs. Jablonski: Well, Mr. Speaker, this year alone we're spending $75 million to help build new affordable supportive living spaces. The request for proposals for that $75 million for ASLI spaces will come out in the next few months. This government has a long-term commitment to our seniors. We've spent over half a billion dollars to provide 10,000 spaces. We've built 6,000 of those, and 4,000 are on the way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: what impact is the continuing care strategy having on seniors and persons with disabilities?

2:20

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the continuing care strategy is about increasing the quality of life for seniors today and tomorrow. It's about providing options for our seniors to keep couples together, to keep them close to family and friends in the communities that they helped to build. A key component of the strategy assists developers in providing affordable supportive living spaces for persons with disabilities like the innovative Balwin Villa project in Edmonton. Balwin Villa provides quality accommodations for over 100 brain-injured and dementia clients.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Standards for Underage Workers (continued)

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recently released study shows that 8,200 Alberta children ages 9 to 11 are working in our province and that an unacceptable 78 per cent of them are working illegally in fields such as janitorial services. Meanwhile prosecution of this practice is virtually nonexistent. Based on previous exchanges, it appears as though the minister is content to blame parents. Will the Minister of Employment and Immigration acknowledge that it is his government's neglect and disinterest in regulating child employment that has facilitated this practice of child labour and admit that the Tory government is simply not interested in protecting Alberta's children from exploitation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, what the member is telling us and what the report says is that in Alberta right now there are 126,000 children exploited, working in our businesses. Their parents obviously consent to it, this government obviously consents to it – not you, Mr. Speaker – and all of us are somehow patronizing these businesses. How can that be possible? What I would like to know is that if they have any examples of child labour exploitation, give us the examples.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the study shows that half the children working in restaurants interviewed in the study reported multiple violations of their rights and given that the NDP warned this government that this would happen when the government decided to allow 12-year-olds to work in restaurants, will the minister admit that these numbers show that the Tories were wrong, that we were right, and that this government's lax laws have exposed school-age children to exploitation and unsafe work environments?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if this particular member is aware of any instance where in this province a child is being exploited, it is not only her legal duty but her moral duty to report it to this minister. Every single complaint is investigated. Somehow I don't hear complaints from parents, from Albertans, or from children that there is exploitation of children.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this minister appears interested in having me do his job for him, will he do the following? If this minister finds that this report is approved by peer review, will he agree to resign given this kind of exploitation on his watch?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I suspect they're going to call for a public inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, this minister is committed to making sure that employment standards are being adhered to. As a matter of fact, we have an educational program right now known as Tell Your Boss Where To Go for employment standards information. Every single complaint is investigated. If this member has a complaint, please let me know because I will be the first one to make sure that no child is exploited in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Residential Building Inspections

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been reported that the province's chief building inspection administrator has undertaken a review of all the engineering reports about the Penhorwood condominium catastrophe in Fort McMurray. The minister has indicated that the results of the review will not be made public. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: if he is confident that Alberta's building inspection system is working properly, why won't he publicly release the findings of the review or at least to the people who were directly affected by this catastrophic incident?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Member for Lethbridge-East for asking the question. There's no doubt that we do this to make sure that the safety codes are still working, that our buildings are built according to standards. There's no doubt that he's accumulating all of those particular reports and will do an analysis and then report to me to see if there are necessary changes to the codes that are required. If he does identify changes that are required, then we will deal with the broader public on the basis of those recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Given that the condominium development appears to have passed inspections under the Alberta building code and all other applicable laws and turns out to have major structural problems, as in Fort McMurray, doesn't this suggest that Alberta's minimum building and safety codes may be inadequate?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I won't speculate in terms of what reasons, why we're having problems with the apartments in Fort McMurray, and there's no doubt there are quite a number of individuals that have been named in a lawsuit. A lot of that information will follow. I'm not in a position to decide who may be responsible for this or not responsible.

Ms Pastoor: As you've mentioned, given that the Penhorwood condominium board has launched a class-action lawsuit, how quickly could the minister act on any recommendations issued by the judge if problems are identified within Alberta's building development system?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I want to start off by indicating that Alberta has one of the strongest safety codes in all of Canada, and we're very, very proud of our safety codes and the inspection process. But if there are recommendations that come out of the inquiry, then we'll certainly look at them very, very quickly. We constantly review the codes, or the act, to make sure that they respond to the needs of Albertans. If there's a need to change them, we will.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

ILO Agreement on Forced Labour

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most nations have ratified the International Labour Organization's convention 29, regarding forced labour. Canada, however, is one of the few that has not. My question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What is Alberta doing to support the movement to eliminate forced labour?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, in Canada in our federal system in order for a federal government to enter into an international convention: all provinces must first endorse the convention. Alberta has proudly endorsed the convention, and I imagine that very shortly, before the end of this year, our federal government will be signing off ratifying convention 29 on forced labour.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question, again to the same minister: given that the ILO convention 29 deals with compulsory labour, does Alberta's prisoner worker program or our emergency measures legislation contravene this international agreement?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, no, it will not. That was a matter that was looked into very carefully. Prisoners in Canada and Alberta are not being outsourced for the benefit of private businesses. As such, their employment within the capacity of programs or within the facility is not in any violation of this ILO convention.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, again to the same minister: are there any long-term implications or benefits of Alberta's endorsement of this ILO convention?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, a couple of things, Mr. Speaker. Number one, it shows that we are proud to showcase our employment standards and that they live up to international standards. What we will have to do as a result of this is file amendments to our employment standards with this international body just to maintain our commitment to maintain and exceed international standards and employment standards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last weekend I was in a coffee shop talking with citizens, and they asked me to ask a question to the Minister of Health and Wellness. The question was simply this. Why does the Minister of Health and Wellness refuse to answer questions in a straightforward way? In fact, they said that he can simply talk the leg off a chair without answering a question. Will he please agree to answer the question that I'm going to ask him in my second question this afternoon?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, one thing I've always appreciated about this member is his sense of humour, so bring it on.

Mr. Boutilier: Given that he, I think, said yes to the question, my question. The folks in my coffee shop have said that he was the junior minister. He was potentially in a conflict of interest. Why is he refusing or why doesn't he have the guts to do the right thing and call a public inquiry? The question is: why?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I've already indicated on numerous occasions why, and I won't take up the House repeating all of that unless you give me unanimous consent to speak all afternoon, in which case I'd be happy to read out all the reasons why.

However, what I'd like to clarify is that while I was the associate minister of health, I was responsible for the wellness side. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I dedicated most of my effort to persons with developmental disabilities, and that crystallized in the form of a report called Building Better Bridges. I can tell you that during my time and for the time after the lives of those individuals improved quite enormously, and I have a letter to prove it.

Mr. Boutilier: Given that non-answer, Mr. Speaker, will the hon. minister do the right thing and have the guts to step down and allow someone else with the guts to call a public inquiry to get to the bottom of this cloud, lost confidence in this minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's any confidence lost whatsoever. I think that what you see is a lot of new approaches being taken as a result of the five-year health action plan. I think you see a lot of co-operation. We have more meetings going on now with all the health professionals, and we're about to embark on a very, very important primary care initiative, as set out in the agreement in principle with the Alberta Medical Association and their doctors, to ensure that the services continue to improve for those seeking them in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Curbside Recycling

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many government policies and programs are aimed at addressing important societal issues. However, there are some unintended consequences arising from these well-intentioned programs. Calgary's curbside recycling program is one of these well-intentioned programs that has had some unintended consequences. My questions are to the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. Considering the minister's commitment last fall to crack down on panhandling, typically concentrated in the downtown core, is the minister committed to doing the same for bottle-pickers who have migrated into inner-city residential communities as a result of the curbside recycling program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member asks an important question. I do agree with him that panhandling can be an issue throughout urban Alberta. In fact, I don't recommend that people give money to panhandlers. I ask that they support their local service organizations such as the Mustard Seed or the Calgary drop-in centre because you know where your money is going.

To his specific question dealing with bottle-picking, what that does have in common with panhandling is that it is a local issue, and what works in one area of the province may not work in another area. I would suggest that this member may want to talk to his local alderman or to the mayor, as I have in the past.

Mr. Fawcett: Sure. Well, I'll take another approach and ask my first supplemental to the Attorney General and Minister of Justice. While bottle-pickers may not pose a direct threat to public safety, their presence in a neighbourhood does invite unsavoury activity.

As the minister responsible for safe communities is there anything that can be done to address this issue?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the safe communities initiative is a holistic approach to crime reduction, and it's intended to look at the root causes of crime. I'm not sure about the specific circumstances that the hon. member mentions, but I would think that we're not talking about recycling as a root cause. We're talking about homelessness, probably, as a root cause. Certainly, this initiative looks at those types of things. It's a multidepartment approach, and the department of housing works on providing help for people who are homeless such as the Pathways to Housing program in Calgary.

The Speaker: Thank you. We'll go on, please.

The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Does the collection and sale of recyclable material by municipalities as part of the curbside recycling programs generate any net revenue to municipalities, and have municipalities indicated any loss of such revenues as a result of bottle-pickers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In most municipalities recycling is not – and I repeat: it's not – a full-cost recovery program, but it has tended to be recognized as a green municipal service that some municipalities provide which may be partly offset by some deposit returns. I expect that the refund revenue is small as many people still use bottle depots or donate their bottles to fundraising organizations. Each municipality has their own policy on recycling, and it really varies from one community to the other.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Residential Building Inspections (continued)

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the minister in charge of the safety codes system. How can the minister state earlier in question period that the safety codes system works and that he's proud of it when a condominium built in Fort McMurray recently under this government's administration of the safety codes system is uninhabitable?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the latter part of his question. I want to reiterate to Albertans that I really believe that for the most part our inspection process is doing well. As a result, the Safety Codes Council has competent people working for them across the province, and municipalities, that are accredited, have been hiring excellent people. For the most part, with the majority of our buildings we're doing well.

Mr. MacDonald: Tell that to the condominium owners in Fort McMurray.

To the Minister of Municipal Affairs, please: why is there no authority under the Safety Codes Act for safety codes officers to issue orders to assign fault and liability as a result of the breach of the act?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, that would become part of the review of the Safety Codes Council. There's no doubt, as we're looking at that, that those are some of the things we are looking at. The inspectors have a right to actually put a sticker on the building itself as they're moving through the process, thereby stopping a particular building project until issues are rectified and corrected.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: speaking of inspectors' rights, does the Safety Codes Act give authority to a safety codes officer to ask workers employed on a site under inspection for their trade certification? Yes or no?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the municipalities are the ones that are accredited, and they in turn hire their individual inspectors. The inspectors are there to do a job, and that's to inspect under the Safety Codes Act. Their responsibility is to make sure of and authorize the continuation of a particular project. They have that authority to start or stop projects accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Vitalize Volunteer-sector Conference

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm hearing from some of the voluntary groups in Calgary that there have been some changes to their annual Vitalize conference, put on by Alberta Culture and Community Spirit. My question is to the minister of that ministry. Could you please explain and inform this House what some of these changes are to this very important conference for the voluntary sector?

Mr. Blackett: The Vitalize voluntary-sector conference takes place in Edmonton on June 14 and 15 at the Shaw Conference Centre with the theme Shifting Gears and Changing Lanes. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have condensed the conference from three days into two days while we continue to provide support for the not-for-profit and voluntary sectors, an opportunity to hear top-quality keynote speakers, to participate in diverse information sessions such as conflict resolution, fraud prevention, and building your volunteer base, and excellent networking opportunities.

We also added this year, Mr. Speaker, the youth mentor program through a partnership with Alberta's YouthVOLUNTEER! Society. Through this we provide complimentary registrations to one adult mentor and an eligible youth volunteer. It's a great way to recognize youth volunteers and introduce them to potential careers in the voluntary sector.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. My first supplemental is to the same minister. As this is one of those very few opportunities for the sector to come together, can the minister explain why these changes were made?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of reasons we made the changes. One is economic. We want to make sure it's still financially feasible for people to be able to attend the conference. We want to reduce our cost. Our goal is, like I said, cost-effectiveness, a more focused learning environment for the participants as the government of Alberta continues to cover most of the conference costs. All the information on the conference is available on the Culture and Community Spirit web page by clicking on the voluntary sectors tab. We will be seeking feedback from the conference participants and attendees to help . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. member, please.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Alberta is a big province, and we have nonprofits from all over the province, so why is the Vitalize conference being held in Edmonton for two years in a row?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, we used to alternate, as was mentioned, and it was a significant amount of savings to have the venue in Edmonton versus Calgary, as last year. We're looking at available dates and costs of various venues outside of both Edmonton and Calgary. Like all Albertans we are continually evaluating our budgets and opportunities to deliver quality programming to the sector while being fiscally responsible as well.

I've heard from the sector through our dialogue sessions that they would like us to look at being able to take those dialogue sessions to the different regions of the province and make them available online so that we can get more participation from all the people around the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Fort Chipewyan Health Study

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almost a decade ago Dr. John O'Connor was forced out of the province for raising alarm about health concerns with cancer rates in Fort Chipewyan. Since then Fort Chip has not received the community health study that was promised to them by this government, a baseline study that should have started decades ago, before development began in the region. My question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. Why does this minister continue to fail the people he's responsible for by refusing to press ahead and complete this health study?

Mr. Webber: Well, hallelujah, Mr. Speaker. Hallelujah. This is my first question this session, and I thank you, hon. member, for asking it. I do encourage more opposition members to become more engaged in the aboriginal issues.

Mr. Speaker, regarding the situation up in Fort Chip we do acknowledge the concerns of the people with regard to the health issues up there, and we continue to work with the community. As a matter of fact, myself and the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness will be going up to Fort Chip very soon.

Dr. Taft: Well, we need better answers than that, Mr. Speaker.

Given that when I asked this question last fall in this Assembly to this minister, the minister said, "It takes time for us to develop some type of a baseline study," how much longer do the people of Fort Chip have to wait?

Mr. Webber: Well, Mr. Speaker, these are complex issues. Of course, we have a letter of intent that we have tried to put together with the three leaders in the aboriginal community up there. We're meeting with Chief Allan Adam, as a matter of fact, to talk to him about what we want to do up in Fort Chip with regard to the health study, and we are hoping that we can gain some progress there in this coming meeting.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I hope this has a good outcome.

Given this government's track record of silencing dissent and covering up the truth, why in the world does this minister expect the people of Fort Chip to sign a letter of intent for a study into their own health when those same people haven't seen either the study's terms of reference or its funding plan?

Mr. Webber: Well, Mr. Speaker, just to let the hon. member know, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has the lead file on this particular issue. Along with the hon. minister I will be going up, as I said, and we hope to get some good progress. I know that there are other health studies that may be required up in that particular area as well that we are working forward on. Again, hon. member, I'm encouraged about the meeting that we are going to have coming up in a couple of weeks, and I would say: stay tuned.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the Oral Question Period for today. Nineteen members were recognized for 114 questions and responses.

In a very few short seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine, and that is Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Chronic Wasting Disease in Cervids

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's wild deer, elk, and other cervids are at increased risk of chronic wasting disease, which is currently spreading west across the province. The threat of the disease is significant enough that the Canadian Food Inspection Agency requires mandatory testing of cervid meat in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Yukon whereas such testing is voluntary in all other provinces and territories.

This should tell this government that chronic wasting disease is a serious matter, yet this government has signalled its desire to support game farming, where CWD took hold in the first place. If the government is bound and determined to support an industry that the market hasn't embraced much beyond the breeding herds, then at the very least we must insist that you provide sufficient resources for the testing of all animals on game farms that may reach human or animal food chains, including the velvet, that this government has suggested could be used in pharmaceutical products.

The world was caught completely off guard when another prion disease, BSE, jumped from cattle to humans with tragic consequences for human health and, certainly, the economy. As of yet we know of no cases of chronic wasting disease mutating and jumping to humans, but we have a duty to take every reasonable precaution to ensure that outcome never comes to pass. The consequences are far too grave to even contemplate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Clifton Manor Nursing Home

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize an outstanding facility and its dedicated staff. Located in the Forest Lawn area within my constituency of Calgary-East, the Clifton Manor nursing home has served the community for almost 50 years.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, last week the roof of Clifton Manor, which was under repair, collapsed into the lunchroom. Quick action was taken by the staff, who heard the roof creaking, and all residents were escorted out of the room just prior to the collapse. Most importantly, no one was injured, and no residents were displaced from their home. I would like to praise all members of the Clifton Manor staff for their quick thinking and the prompt action taken to ensure that no one was injured.

Mr. Speaker, I was able to meet with the CEO, Mario Siciliano, and the administrator, Brenda Hannah, and many of the staff and members as well as residents on Friday morning when I visited Clifton Manor. They really are a wonderful group of people.

While the lunchroom is no longer open due to this unfortunate mishap, all residents are able to have their meals in an alternate location. I'm confident, Mr. Speaker, that the roof will be fixed, and all residents of this 254-bed facility will have a new lunchroom soon.

I would again like to commend the staff and the management of the Clifton Manor for their response during this unfortunate event.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly today five copies of the Capital Region Board's 2010 annual report. I'd like to commend the board for its continued dedication to the development of the growth plan for the capital region.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table five copies of the Alberta Association of Architects' 2010 annual report; also, five copies of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta's, APEGGA as we know them, annual report for 2010.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition I have two tablings today. The first tabling is documents related to the legal action of Dr. David Candler regarding his dismissal. That was mentioned during one of the leader's questions.

The second set of tablings, with the appropriate number of copies, is related to the Health Sciences Association's support for a public inquiry.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today.

The first is the appropriate number of copies of a study published in the Canadian Journal of Work and Society, titled Effectiveness of Complaint-Driven Regulation of Child Labour in Alberta. I cited this study in my questions earlier today.

My second tabling, on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, is the appropriate number of copies of a document from the Alberta Direct Connect Consumer Association, titled Alberta Competitiveness: Impact from Transmission Costs. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood referred to information from this document in his questions earlier today.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling may not be necessary if it's the same study on underage workers in Alberta, but I'll pass it along in case it's a different document.

My second tabling is the business plan for the Alberta Off-Highway Vehicle Association, which represents 2,100 motorized recreational trail users in Alberta.

My third tabling is a newspaper article which highlights the concerns Crowsnest residents have over the logging of the Castle management area. That's from Kelly Cryderman of the Herald.

I'm tabling the Forest Reserves Act, which states as its purpose: "All forest reserves are set aside and constituted for the conservation of forests and other vegetation."

I'm tabling a report which evaluated the threat to southeastern slopes, Crown lands, from inappropriate and unmanaged public use.

I'm tabling a Lethbridge public opinion study which showed that a very substantial majority of Lethbridge and Coaldale residents are opposed to the logging project in the Castle special management area.

I'm tabling a public opinion survey which shows the overwhelming concern that citizens from the municipal district of Pincher Creek, the village of Cowley, and other municipalities have for the Castle special management area.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling two reports from Global Forest Watch Canada, which found that the Castle area forest land-use zone is not being managed according to its mandate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of seven different tablings. One is a newspaper article by Frank Landry from the Leg. bureau. It's about the Premier saying: nothing moves on closure . . .

The Speaker: Hold on. Just table the document. Newspaper articles we don't need to read in the House.

Dr. Sherman: Okay.

The second is from September 7, a CBC newspaper article pertaining to the airport debate.

The third is a government of Alberta Health and Wellness document pertaining to the City Centre Airport, that shows that the key points are the number of patients being transferred that are critically ill.

The fourth tabling is another Health and Wellness document pertaining to the City Centre Airport, where the department recognizes that the city underestimated the number of patients that are flown in, from 8 per cent down to 3 per cent, on flights into the City Centre Airport.

I have five copies of a tabling of a consultant's report from Fitch & Associates titled Alberta Health and Wellness Emergency Health Service Branch Edmonton, Alberta: Edmonton City Centre Airport Closure Impact Study, dated March 25, 2009.

I also have a tabling from Donna L. Towers Consulting Inc., a report to the city of Edmonton regarding medevac transport.

My final tabling is a very important report pertaining to the emergency medical services of this province. After numerous bad outcomes the Calgary health region commissioned a report from the Health Quality Council in September 2007. This report has all the recommendations made to fix the emergency departments across the province in the health system that weren't followed up on.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair received two letters referencing a document tabled by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark on Monday, April 19, 2011. The chair has been requested to table the letters, dated April 20, 2011, from Bernie Simpson of Network Health Inc., and Dr. John Cowell of the Health Quality Council of Alberta, both outlining concerns with the document that is Sessional Paper 261/2011.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 16

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

[Adjourned debate March 24: Mrs. McQueen]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011. This bill proposes amendments to legislation such as the Electric Utilities Act, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, the Coal Conservation Act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, and others to ensure that both government and industry continue to operate efficiently and effectively. This governance bill is needed to support the mandates of the Alberta Utilities Commission, the AUC; and the Energy Resources Conservation Board, the ERCB.

We all know how important energy is to our economy and communities throughout our province. The AUC regulates the utilities sector, natural gas, and electricity markets to protect social, economic, and environmental interests of Alberta. The ERCB is an independent agency that regulates the safe, responsible, and efficient development of Alberta's energy resources.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

3:00

It is very important that the energy regulator is equipped to maintain Alberta's high standards and strong commitment to environmental stewardship. A large number of amendments are required to authorize the ERCB to regulate in situ coal gasification and liquefaction technologies. Currently legislation only refers to mining as a means to extract coal from the ground. The development of coal through in situ gasification has been used elsewhere, and there is significant interest in Alberta as a location for this type of technology.

The technology has a potential to develop otherwise unminable coal and can produce a synthetic fuel that burns with even fewer greenhouse gas emissions than natural gas. Instead of removing the coal from the ground and transporting it to a power plant to be combusted or turned into electricity, the gas is collected and typically used at the source for power generation or modified by further processing to make it equal to pipeline-quality natural gas.

Two experimental projects have been approved in Alberta under existing legislation, but the rules need to be updated so that they can support the promising commercial development of coal using this method. More applications for approval of in situ coal gasification projects are expected, so it is important that we pass this bill and update the rules.

Provisions in the bill deal with issues such as approvals, inspections, and consequential changes to ensure a complete regulatory framework for extraction and development of coal through in situ gasification or liquefaction. Without amendments interest in this type of energy development may be taken elsewhere. Also, under the ERCB amendments in the bill will repeal an outdated requirement for industrial development permits. Currently the ERCB approves but does not regulate the use of large amounts of energy for industrial and manufacturing operations. This ERCB approval process takes up time for an activity that Alberta Environment already approves and regulates. Given that the ERCB approvals do not require follow-up in any way, these issues are best regulated by Alberta Environment.

Finally, amendments related to the ERCB will enable the regulator to make regulations and to approve amendments to coal permits directly rather than the Lieutenant Governor in Council. The current process requiring an order in council is lengthier and less efficient than it needs to be. This change will bring the process for amending coal regulations and coal permits in line with other industries that the ERCB regulates.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned at the beginning, this bill also amends legislation administered by the AUC to do with the utilities markets. One of the changes will be to strengthen an existing role of the Market Surveillance Administrator, or MSA, to monitor the functioning of the electricity market. In cases where the MSA is aware of a negative impact on market competition from a rule of the independent system operator in Alberta – this is AESO – they should have the clear authority to challenge the rule. Clarifying the point will better equip the MSA to carry out its mandate of a market watchdog.

The second amendment related to the AUC is to allow the commission to harmonize quality-of-service standards and terms of service between electric utilities and gas utilities. This will ensure that customers benefit from quality service across utilities. An example of where we have differences today is with a rate application from electricity and gas utilities. At present the AUC has a different set of topics they consider for electricity and gas when reviewing the terms and conditions of service submitted as part of that application. For electricity utilities the Electric Utilities Act lists numerous topics on which the commission can make rules. The Gas Utilities Act only lists two topics, limiting the commission in the quality-of-service standards they can issue, to the detriment of gas customers. Due to the differences in the rule-making powers, the commission has issued different standards for owners of electric utilities and for gas utilities. Standardization of these terms and conditions will benefit both consumers and utilities.

In closing, Bill 16 is a responsible bill that updates a broad range of rules related to energy development and the operation of our utilities sectors. I look forward to members' comments and encourage all members to support Bill 16.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, on second reading of the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I must say that I listened with interest to the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar in her introduction of Bill 16. It certainly covers a regulatory framework that is very broad. I'm surprised I didn't see this whenever I first had a look at this. The hon. member is quite correct. This is a significant change if one looks at this quite closely. I was thinking of in situ coal gasification developments, but certainly it is with interest that we see these amendments being made to the Alberta Utilities Commission and also the rules around, as I understand it, the abandonment of some coal operations. I'm pleased to hear this, but I'm not convinced that this bill will do it.

I'm pleased to hear that the government is now looking at strengthening the office of the Market Surveillance Administrator for electricity. That's something that needs to be done in the interests of consumers. For a number of years we on this side of the House have come up with some suggestions or solutions as to how that office could work more efficiently and, in our view, diligently on behalf of consumers.

I'm tired of the office just being sort of a promoter or a cheerleader or a defender of electricity deregulation. In fact, three years ago I was reading one of the reports from the Market Surveillance Administrator. Certainly, I took exception to some of the things that were said there, Mr. Speaker, and I specifically took exception to a public presentation that was made by the Market Surveillance Administrator – and I believe it was in Toronto – on how electricity deregulation is working in Alberta and how wonderful it is. I thought that the Market Surveillance Administrator was to be an independent and impartial observer of the supposed market, what the market was or was not doing. But that didn't appear to be the case, and I'm going to have to watch this legislation as it proceeds because I'm not convinced that we're doing enough here.

I understand that we're talking about increasing the oversight provided to the MSA, or the Market Surveillance Administrator, under the Electric Utilities Act and the Alberta Utilities Commission under the Gas Utilities Act. I can understand why we need to do that, but I'm not so certain that this is all we need to do, Mr. Speaker. Now, if you look at your own power bill and you talk to your neighbours, no one shares the enthusiasm for electricity deregulation that the current Minister of Energy has whenever they go to the bank or to the credit union to pay their monthly bill. They see this for what it is, a system that has unfortunately changed our electricity prices from some of the lowest in North America to some of the highest with a very unstable market. Now, will Bill 16 and the changes that are proposed help that market? I'm not convinced yet, but maybe through the course of debate here this afternoon and next week I will be.

As I said, the act touches many different areas in the energy statutes, and for that reason I would say that it has several objectives, Mr. Speaker. We are creating a framework for the Energy Resources Conservation Board to regulate in situ coal seams in a fashion similar to conventional petroleum deposits. That's a good idea. I see that at a point in the future – and it will probably be occurring in the hon. member's own constituency – we will be producing gas from our coal seams to generate electricity. Whether or not it will happen in the next five years, that's the question, and only the Minister of Energy could answer that. He has all the secrets of this government.

I'm confident to say that in the next generation or so we will see electricity generated in this province from a fuel source that's generated in place in the coal-bed seam. We all know of the vast resources of coal we have in this province, some of it at deeper locations than others, and that will have, I think, an influence on what is developed, but I'm told that there's research happening all the time. The Minister of Energy would perhaps share that research with this House and through this House to the taxpayers because, certainly, some of that research I believe is going on at the old Alberta Research Council.

For that reason and that reason alone I would like to express gratitude to the hon. member for bringing this forward because I think that part of the bright future for Alberta's electricity generation is through the gas off the coal. We may be on to something with this part of the bill.

We are also looking here at streamlining the regulatory process for conventional coal deposit development. There was a suggestion that we're going to eliminate duplication in the regulatory process for industrial development, which consumes large quantities of energy resources. Those sort of industrial developments, I believe – and I'm looking for examples here – would be Syncrude, Suncor. Am I correct? Pipelines would be another example, where the fuel gas is used to compress the entire system. Would that be another example of what we're doing here?

There's a lot of energy consumed in this industrial development category, and certainly the old regulatory body in its annual report used to note how much, particularly natural gas, was consumed in the industrial process. As we see bitumen production increase in Fort McMurray, we also see the corresponding increase in the use of natural gas to fuel those industrial processes.

If I could through the course of debate get an answer and some more details on that, I would appreciate it. We may not notice it now, when the price of natural gas is low, but that's one of the benefits and one of the drivers of the competitiveness right now with the Fort McMurray region. Of course, it's not that natural gas is inexpensive, but when you compare it to what it was before, it's a bargain. Natural gas is one of the cost drivers in the production of bitumen and synthetic crude oil, and as we produce more, we're burning more gas.

In fact, places like the Syncrude joint venture are trying to secure future supplies of natural gas in the Mackenzie delta. The minister knows this. They got at a fire-sale price a really good gas field up there. There's only one problem. There's not a pipeline built yet. Eventually there will be, and that gas will be used for domestic, commercial, and industrial purposes, I suppose.

Also, with this bill, Mr. Speaker, Bill 16, we are expanding oversight of gas distributors and default gas providers to ensure both system safety and additional consumer protection. Now, we're going to harmonize regulations. "Standardize", I believe, is the word the hon. member used in describing this attempt to work between gas and electricity services to improve things for consumers. I certainly have this question now, and perhaps in committee we can get it answered. How will consumers benefit from this legislative attempt? I would be very curious to receive information on that.

We talked earlier, Mr. Speaker, about expanding oversight of the independent Alberta Electric System Operator by the MSA to ensure efficient operation of the Alberta electricity market. Speaking of the market surveillance administrator, perhaps the hon. Minister of Energy has tabled that annual report and I haven't caught up to him. I'm anxious to see the latest market surveillance administrator's annual report before I vote on this bill. For some reason I haven't been able to track it down. [interjection] Okay. I appreciate that.

Now, with this bill we're also going to reclassify downstream facilities that process oil sands products as oil sands facilities to encourage investment in downstream activities beyond upgrading. I would like some more details on this if that is possible, Mr. Speaker. How many downstream facilities are we talking about reclassifying here? Where are they? Who owns them? What value do they have?

We talked about the in situ coal schemes and the amendments to the Coal Conservation Act under Bill 16 and this regulatory framework that is proposed. As I understand it, it will close a loophole that currently allows the operation of these in situ coal schemes outside of the majority of conventional petroleum regulatory frameworks. Am I correct in assuming that this is not anything to do whatsoever with coal-bed methane development? If I could get some clarification on that, I would really appreciate it. I would like to know how this is different, if it is, from coal-bed methane development.

The creation of the regulatory framework for in situ coal schemes may encourage research, experimentation, and development that may evolve into a more environmentally friendly alternative to conventional coal use over time and, as I said earlier in my remarks, for the generation of electricity. I, hopefully, will see this happen. I'm very encouraged, and I'm confident that the Minister of Energy is working on this right now to ensure that we can take gas off deep coal seams and use it to generate unlimited amounts of electricity at affordable prices. I'm confident that this is what the honourable gentleman, Mr. Speaker, has in mind.

Now, when we change the definition of coal in defining coal seams, this may turn some marginal coal deposits, Mr. Speaker, from mineral resources to pore spaces, potentially changing the ownership of mineral rights that are owned by a private interest and allowing use of very low-quality coal formations as carbon capture and storage reservoirs. I would, again, like clarification on this. Am I right or am I wrong with that assumption regarding the use of low-quality coal formations? There is lots of high-grade coal in Alberta. There are also many formations that for one reason or another are considered low quality.

Now, in this bill we're also suggesting there be an elimination of industrial development permits. This elimination would allow for – I don't know whether you can call it rational self-interest. I don't whether you can say that it's rational self-interest that will override collective interest. I don't know. For example, preventing the burning of ethane as a fuel versus reserving it for use as a petrochemical feedstock may be more difficult under environmental regulations.

One of the things that occurred under this Minister of Energy's watch recently – I was surprised at how little public interest there was – is that the minister made some changes to the ethane policy in this province. It certainly benefits some outfits more than others or one outfit in particular, the one that operates in Redwater, in the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater's constituency. I think this is a good step. I heard from some individuals yesterday; they also were encouraged by this.

But it went one step beyond the North West Upgrading and BRIK announcement. This was sort of the other announcement, that did not get as much attention, and perhaps it should have because the ethane industry developed in this province because of direct intervention from previous generations of Progressive Conservatives, direct intervention in the market, of all things, to ensure that if people invested in the petrochemical industry in this province, there would be a feedstock that was available and economical for a generation or two. They could recoup their investment and make a few dollars for themselves and employ a lot of Albertans, which happened. It was a good deal.

But lately for whatever reason this government seems to have lost focus. It has come back a little bit with the North West Upgrader announcement and the minister's announcement on this. Now, I haven't looked at the fine print in the details of the minister's ethane policy, but I've been told it was the right step. I think we'll see how this works out. Certainly, people in that industry appreciate the support they are getting at this time.

I was at a function yesterday where there was a real estate agent and an engineer sitting beside me, and we were talking about this specific policy. I said to the real estate agent: "You won't be able to sell a house to this engineer unless this man and his company have work. The more work he has, the more disposable income he has, the bigger and more expensive a house you're going to be able to sell him." He goes: "Absolutely right. Absolutely." This is an example of creating wealth within our own province. [interjection] Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister of Energy over there is trying to distract me, but I'm going to be determined not to get caught up in it.

This act, as I read it, is a mixed measure, as one would expect any amendment package to be. I think it's very wide in scope. Some of the things that the hon. member is attempting to do certainly I would support, and I would encourage her. Some of the other amendments I'm not so sure of at this time, and I have put some questions on the record. Hopefully, we can address those, and I can get an opportunity to read the hon. member's answers or her response in Hansard. But the question remains at this point in the discussion at second reading: does the good outweigh the bad in this bill? Does this bill go far enough to protect consumers or benefit consumers of electricity and natural gas?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I've appreciated the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, as I always do. While I was listening to him, I was also looking through this legislation. I guess the first question I have for the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, if she can bring it back to us next week, is: is this a bill that's going to be held over the summer? The more I look at this bill, the bigger I understand its implications to be.

Ms Blakeman: It's dense.

Dr. Taft: I thought the Member for Edmonton-Centre was saying that I was dense, but she was actually saying that the legislation is dense, meaning that it's packed – it's packed – with meaning. [interjections] I'm getting distracted, Mr. Speaker, by my own caucus members even.

In all seriousness, this looks like a bill that has massive implications, probably huge financial implications for corporations and for the government. There is a lot in here – coal, electricity, oil sands, a lot of technical implications – and I would really urge the government to allow this to sit over the summer in second reading so that it can get a wholesome and fulsome review by all kinds of people so that we can come back in the fall and make sure we have the best possible legislation and that some of the implications of this on royalties, on electricity management, on consumer protection, on the environment, on the long-term prosperity of Alberta are all assessed fully. That would be, right off the bat, what I would hope the member or the minister will bring back to us next week.

Now, in second reading I'm always looking to discuss: what is the intent of this piece of legislation? In this case it is a bit complicated to answer that question. I'm not quite sure what the full intent is here because it's a bit of an omnibus, a bit of a piecemeal bill that addresses a lot of different issues. I would expect that part of the intent here is to streamline process, to maybe clarify responsibility or to shift responsibility, at least in some cases, from Lieutenant Governor in Council, the cabinet, to arm's-length organizations or at least quasi arm's-length organizations.

I'm concerned that there are other issues here. Alberta is a province that embraces business, which is fine. I want to be very clear that profits are a good thing, that we want our businesses in this province to flourish, to make money so that they can reinvest, so that they can hire, so that they can pay their taxes and support public services and so on.

I am, however, alert to the fact that profit rates in Alberta are exceptionally high when compared to other jurisdictions. For years and years now – and this has been pointed out by banks and by others, and I can certainly provide the member with information along these lines – profits in Alberta have been running at well over 20 per cent of GDP. That's not corporate investment or payroll or anything. That's actually corporate profit. In comparison, in the United States in a good year corporate profits run at about 10 per cent of GDP, as they do in other provinces.

I put that out there as part of the context here. Is this bill about increasing further corporate profits, or is it about some other priorities such as protecting the environment? In particular, I think we need to consider the intent of this bill and its impact on taxes in light of some growing information that's available that the lower our taxes are here in Alberta, the more we simply transfer our wealth to the United States.

3:30

It's a fact that the United States government will tax the foreign earnings of any United States based corporation or citizen at the full American rate. Right now in Alberta our corporate tax rates are running at half or less of the rates in the U.S. If we don't collect that money as citizens of Alberta, it just gets collected by the White House or by the Congress in the States if it happens to be an American-owned corporation. So we're transferring significant wealth from here to fund what they're doing in the States, and as a citizen of Alberta and a citizen of Canada I'm not comfortable with that.

I am concerned that some aspects of this bill such as those redefining oil sands implications are going to have a tax impact here. What will that tax impact be? Are we further increasing profits when they're already at record levels and when those are just going to get creamed off by the Americans? It's a complicated issue. I'm not claiming any position on it right now, but these are the kinds of things that we need to consider when we look at Bill 16.

I'm also interested in what the impact of this legislation will be on the boom-bust cycle. There are lots of early indicators that Alberta is maybe about to enter another boom. Lots of people are forecasting labour shortages. Certainly, when we make our inquiries of our various contacts in the economy, whether it be builders or oil sands operators or people in the energy industry or labour unions, they're all saying: "Yup. This is starting to heat up." Just today or this week, certainly, Mr. Speaker, there has been growing evidence of inflation. So we're in a boom-bust cycle.

Now, we're used to that in Alberta, but it doesn't mean that we can't manage it better. The reason I raise this, that I'd like the member to think about in her comments, is: is this going to further fuel the booms and, therefore, further fuel the busts by reducing regulation or speeding approvals or simplifying approvals? All of those in principle are good things, but let me rephrase this in a positive way. How is this piece of legislation going to help us as a province manage our booms and busts and smooth them out rather than fuel them? How is this piece of legislation, through addressing the fundamentals like our electricity system like oil sands – you know, I don't want anybody in here to miss this. This bill changes the definition of what an oil sands product is. Is that something that's going to contribute to the long-term stable sustainability of Alberta's economy, or is it something that's going to open the floodgates of investment into the oil sands even further, exacerbating a boom, which will then inevitably lead to a bigger bust?

I don't know the answer to these questions. I've only started looking at the bill today, but this has to be debated. Along those lines, in this same process, are there environmental implications to the considerations in this bill? Will we be further burdening our water and our land and our air by some of the actions in this bill? These are some questions. I don't want people to think that I'm opposing this bill; I just want to be informed when I vote on it.

I don't think the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had time to get to some of the later sections of this piece of legislation, which, I think is worth pointing out, is quite hefty, actually. I think it's important that we seriously debate in this Legislature the amendments considered for the oil sands industry and our oil sands resource. For example, I'm looking at amendments to the Oil Sands Conservation Act. It seems to me on first reading that we are substantially increasing the definition of oil sands products. I'm going to quote here from the legislation. I'm on page 28 of the bill. What it proposes to do is repeal clause (m) and substitute the following: "oil sands products" means any products obtained by processing oil sands, crude bitumen or derivatives of crude bitumen."

Now, I want to understand the implications of this. You know, the kinds of questions I have in mind are: will this affect what counts as royalties? Will this accelerate or slow the payment of royalties? Does this have any impact on where the ring fences are or whether upgraders or subsequent refining is all captured under the same legislation and on regulations that oil sands mines or extraction processes are captured under? What are the implications of that if it does shift that? Does this, for example, mean that an oil sands company investing in a large refining process or refining facility can count that as capital investment under accelerated capital schemes under the Income Tax Act or under the royalty scheme?

I don't know these. I'm not an expert on the issue, but I hope that the minister or the member will help me with this. I'm asking for your help here. Maybe the industry, who will undoubtedly read these comments, will help us understand that. A briefing would be terrific.

So those are the kinds of issues that I think we should expect and debate when it comes down to Committee of the Whole. It also looks to me like this piece of legislation will change and perhaps streamline the approval process for oil sands plants. Hey, I don't like red tape. If it's good process, let's do it quickly, but let's make sure it's good process.

This bill looks at repealing the entire section of one of the current acts. I think it's the Oil Sands Conservation Act. It looks like it repeals the entire section on approvals and permits. Again, if this is just unnecessary red tape, that's okay. But my concern is that we might be losing some value in this. My concern, also, is that I may be misreading this bill because we haven't had, to my knowledge, much of a briefing on it. Again, this goes back to my very first point, that this legislation ought to sit over the summer so that it can be given full consideration.

You know, I've made a handful of remarks on a quick scan of this legislation on the oil sands, but I want to also address the issue of electricity. I'm very concerned, and I have been since deregulation was brought in, that consumer protection for electricity consumers in Alberta is weak. We all know that there was a lot of gaming of the electrical system in the United States when deregulation was brought in. We strongly suspect – and there was significant evidence brought to the courts in the U.S. – that the same gaming occurred in Alberta under an infamous project called Project Stanley, which was named for the Stanley Cup, which is appropriate given that we're back in Stanley Cup season. It was given that name by the Americans, who couldn't think of anything to associate with Alberta except the Stanley Cup, so they called it Project Stanley. It was run, I believe, under – oh, what was the Houston-based company?

Mr. MacDonald: Enron.

Dr. Taft: Enron, yes. Thank you. I wanted to make sure I got the right company.

Well, we all know what happened to Enron. A bunch of them went to jail. The company went bankrupt. Their pension schemes failed. It is worth noting that Enron did have the ear of this government during the deregulation process. Ever since then I have been deeply concerned that our protection for consumers on electricity in Alberta has been woefully inadequate.

So those are some of my comments. My time is up, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: There is Standing Order 29(2)(a), which allows for five minutes of questions or comments. Any hon. member? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I was actually here when part of that electrical deregulation went on, and I'm interested in hearing any additional points that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview might have to illuminate the rest of us in the Assembly.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you so much to the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Well, now that she asks, I want to drive home the point that protection for consumers when it comes to electricity is woefully inadequate in Alberta. We're told over and over by a select group of people in the industry that it's all working terrifically well, but an awful lot of us are very skeptical of that. I think the skepticism is going to rise in ensuing months and years as the price of electricity begins to climb dramatically.

When it comes to this piece of legislation, which addresses some issues concerning the Market Surveillance Administrator, where is the protection in here for the ordinary consumer? The people in my constituency who get bombarded with marketing from Direct Energy, who are confused by the various appeals, who don't know who to trust: is there any safeguard in this bill, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011, for them? Are we looking after the little guy?

I want to remind members of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, that at one time there was a whole department and a minister of consumer affairs.

Mr. MacDonald: There was a minister of utilities, too.

Dr. Taft: And there was a minister of utilities, and between those two departments Alberta had a terrific electrical system. People had confidence in it. Our prices were low, and our reliability was high. We've not only lost the minister of utilities; we've also lost the position of minister of consumer affairs and protection.

I'd love it if there was in this bill some genuine protection for the small residential consumer who doesn't have the time or the expertise or the capacity to do things like track the hourly price of power and doesn't know how to sort out the Direct Energy marketing campaign from the Enmax marketing campaign from the regulated rate option from anybody else. It's just not fair. So I hope this piece of legislation brings some fairness back to the market from the perspective of the consumer.

Now, the Member for Edmonton-Centre asked for some other comments as well on coal, and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raised some issues about coal. Alberta is blessed with a staggering amount of coal. There are times when the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and I have wondered if the people of Alberta are actually getting full value for that coal. In a world where coal may be in a decade or two – well, in fact, even as we speak, coal is increasingly getting portrayed as a dirty fuel. What, if any, implications does this bill have on the development and production of coal, on issues around greenhouse gas emissions, and so on?

There is lots and lots and lots in this piece of legislation. I hope the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar or the Minister of Energy will take the time over the next days and months and maybe even longer to address those.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hinman: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: You have 48 seconds.

Mr. Hinman: Oh, my goodness. The consumer market – what is that guy called?

Dr. Taft: The Market Surveillance Administrator.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Could you talk about that? That was something that was new to me, that I haven't come across. You have a lot of knowledge and experience from over the years. I've never heard of anything like that before, and I made a few phone calls today. The market surveillance administrator: who does he report to, and what's the role? Is that a whole new area that we've got to be aware of?

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are only going to have a few seconds here. I mean, the market surveillance administrator was brought in years ago along with deregulation to try to make sure that the market is functioning and to watch for schemes for gaming the market.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize another member, may I have unanimous consent to revert briefly to introductions?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with a great deal of pleasure that I rise this afternoon to introduce three people from Rocky Mountain House. We have with us this afternoon Anthony Cerkowniak; his dad, Mark Cerkowniak; and Mark's dad, Mike Cerkowniak. I've got to tell you that Mike was the staff sergeant with the RCMP in charge of the Rocky detachment at the time when he retired. He told me today, as we were coming in here, that he spent a lot of time in this building as a security officer when he was with the police force. I'd ask them to rise and the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

Bill 16 Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011 (continued)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the bill.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and join in the debate on Bill 16, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011. This is, as I think has already been described or stated, a dense piece of legislation. It is that way because, of course, it's in fact amending, I believe, seven different acts, each of which have, you know, very, very significant implications for both the economic and environmental and community interests of Albertans. It's not exactly a small piece of legislation. While I'll grant you that it was certainly introduced I believe a couple of weeks ago, maybe three weeks ago now – I'm not sure exactly how long ago – what with our scrambling to keep up with budget estimates, with two sets of those per day, we haven't really had a chance to give it as much review as we would have liked.

I will start by echoing the statements of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. This actually strikes me as the kind of piece of legislation that ought to be either tabled or referred to a committee so that there can be greater levels of consultation in front of the doors that were previously closed, behind which, I'm sure, there was some conversation with certain players, so that we can have a full evaluation of what the consequences are of these changes to all Albertans by a varied group of experts.

Now, it does appear to me, according to the briefing, certainly, that we've received from the government, that this act appears to be focused on achieving roughly four outcomes: first of all, to make some relatively minor amendments to the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, to add new definitions of coal, the in situ coal scheme, and, in essence, to facilitate the growing development of in situ coal gasification processes. So that's that.

I find it interesting that we are moving forward on that so quickly and so efficiently, in contrast to so many of the other things that this government does or doesn't do, as the case may be. Given that my understanding is that we have roughly two pilot projects, I believe, for this process in the province and that the results of those pilot projects, where we've got ISCG going on, have not yet been disclosed, it's interesting that we are moving forward to establish a regulatory and a legislative regime to enable this type of development while we've got two uncompleted pilot projects. Of course, the purpose of a pilot project is to assess the success of the project which is being piloted, yet the outcomes and the success of that certainly haven't been made publicly available, so one wonders why it is we're going full steam ahead on this particular initiative.

Of course, although it holds out great potential to reduce the greenhouse gas emissions associated with coal burning – for that reason it's something that we should definitely pursue – at the same time it does seem that there are also some fairly significant concerns around the migration of the contaminants underground as well as what would happen to the adjacent land following a coalgasification process. These are issues that do need to be addressed, I think, before we go moving ahead. The results of those pilot projects are not yet public, but apparently the government sees fit to move forward with the changes to the legislative regime.

The second thing that I believe that this act is geared towards achieving is moving forward on one or two of the proposals or the recommendations that came from the government's regulatory enhancement task force, the report having been produced in December 2010. Of course, a number of those recommendations were focused on the notion that industry in Alberta is apparently grinding to a halt – I would have sworn that that wasn't really the case – as a result of the onerous regulatory and environmental obligations imposed upon it. I do find that somewhat amusing given what we've seen come out from sort of more objective third-party sources over the course of the last six to 12 months in terms of how little regulatory oversight we actually engage in with respect to many industrial players in this province.

Nonetheless, we appear to believe we need to actually enhance our failure to keep track of what we're doing in the province and streamline the process. Although I believe there are a plethora of recommendations that are coming forward to achieve this objective, it seems that at least one of them is reflected in this piece of legislation, and that is where this legislation would repeal the requirements for IDPs, or industrial development permits, and also cancel existing permits upon the coming into force of the act. I guess the idea here is to move that permitting process away from the oversight of the ERCB and away from the criteria that are set out in the ERCB's directive 025 around the permitting process and, instead, just move all that over to the Ministry of Environment.

Now, this is why I say that this is quite a complex and dense piece of legislation. In order to assess the consequences and implications of such a change, we need to be able to look at: what is exactly the process that's followed by the Ministry of Environment right now, and what is exactly the process that's followed by the ERCB? How does that compare in terms of a whole number of different measures, both in terms of the objectives and the mandate of each body but also in terms of the opportunities for transparency, the opportunities for accountability, the opportunities for support for the parties who are engaging in the permit process? What opportunities are there for members of the public to engage? What opportunities are there for communities to engage? What sort of notice is there in terms of each of the processes?

To really understand the implications of this change, we need to have a very comprehensive evaluation of the two competing processes, the one that exists now and the one that is going to apparently replace that process because apparently one duplicates the other. But I am quite sure that it isn't a complete and entirely identical duplication, that in fact there are significant and substantial differences between the two. Of course, with those differences, you know, the devil is always in the details. That's invariably where we find out things like, oh, that apparently members of the public don't get to have a role in talking about whether a $14 billion investment that will end up on their power bills is in the public interest or not in the public interest. That's just one of those little devils that is in the details. Of course, with this kind of change, where we're moving from an ERCB process to an Alberta Environment process, I suspect there are copious little devils in those details that we've not yet had an opportunity to evaluate.

As I was saying recently to the Minister of Environment, I also have additional concerns because, in my view, the record of the Ministry of Environment in terms of general oversight is not stellar. The resources at the disposal of the Ministry of Environment are certainly not stellar. Since the current Premier was elected, in 2008, we have seen the budget of the Ministry of Environment reduced by 30 per cent. Just yesterday members of the opposition made a point of pulling out the budget estimates of the Ministry of Environment so that we could specifically have a recorded vote about how we do not support that budget because, of course, we have so fundamentally and profoundly compromised the ability of that ministry and the dedicated staff within that ministry to their job.

I mean, this is a ministry, for instance, with just basic processes that anybody using common sense would expect would be in place, where we have 400,000 wells drilled across our land, and we have about a hundred thousand of those wells currently abandoned. We can debate that, well, they're not really abandoned because some day, if unicorns fly, it's possible that long after the current operators have gone out of business, 25 years from now, they might someday decide to use that well. As long as they can come up with their unicorn scenario, we're not going to compel them to clean up any one of those or very few of those hundred thousand wells. In any event, common sense would dictate that where we are, every now and then ever so rarely cleaning up wells, we'd actually have somebody with the public interest in mind double-checking to make sure that those wells are cleaned up before the operator is let off the hook in terms of paying their fees to the landowner and that kind of thing.

But, no, we don't. We don't. We just simply ask the operator to fill out a form and then fill out another form and then fill out another form. Then we have one form, and we have an administrative support person check whether the four forms have been filled out and have been attached to the fifth form. If they have, then a great big rubber stamp goes on it, and we're done. That's how we determine whether or not operators with abandoned oil and gas wells in this province have actually remediated the site, whether, in fact, they've actually ensured – oh, it's true. I am very confident in my sources – very confident in my sources – so I know that that's how it works. We end up in this situation where we are relying on a fundamentally flawed process to determine what levels of contamination may or may not still exist. That's something that is such basic assurance. That is basic, basic environmental assurance, and we're not doing it, and we're not doing it well.

We're cutting the ministry. We're cutting the budget of this ministry so that not only do they not do it well; they do it not well even more – or less. I'm not quite sure. Then we do it at the same time that we anticipate the level of oil and gas development to increase dramatically, so it's completely counterintuitive. In the midst of all that, we're actually going to take a responsibility under this bill and pile that on to the Ministry of Environment and take it away from the ERCB, that somehow manages to have secured to itself a certain amount of resources. We're going to take it away from the ERCB, and we're going to give it to Environment, and we have no idea what that process is going to look like. Why it's better, how it's better, if it's better we don't know because this information hasn't been provided.

In the interests of protecting the long-term best interests of all Albertans, it's really important that we have that information at our disposal, but we don't right now, and I've received none of that from the sponsor of the bill, so I certainly look forward to hearing from the sponsor of the bill on, in particular, what the rights are of people to participate in that industrial permitting process under the ERCB and how that will change when it's moved over to the Ministry of Environment, what the resources are that will be dedicated to that process through the ERCB and how that will be dealt with under the Ministry of Environment, what the criteria are under the ERCB and what the criteria are now that it's under the Ministry of Environment, and what the mandate is with one and how that will be reflected under the Ministry of Environment. These are all important questions, and until such time as we get answers, we can't even begin to suggest that this is an appropriate piece of legislation.

The next thing that this piece of legislation purports to achieve is to enable the ERCB to make its own regulations and improve amendments to coal permits directly rather than having to bother the Lieutenant Governor/cabinet with these changes. That is the kind of process that is also worrisome to us because, of course, it removes accountability from government for these kinds of decisions. If one of those decisions is made and the permit is amended in a way that . . . [Ms Notley's speaking time expired] Sorry. I guess I'll have to wait for another time to talk about it more.

Instead, I would move to adjourn debate.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 11 Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to request leave to introduce amendments to Bill 11, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011. I believe that the pages have copies of the amendment, and I will allow them to pass them out before I begin talking.

The Chair: We shall pause a moment for the amendment to be distributed.

Mr. Prins: While the amendment is being passed out, I would like to introduce to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to all members my beautiful wife, Pauline, who is sitting in the members' gallery. She's been watching us and learning how we did this very interesting legislative stuff here this afternoon.

I believe most members have the amendments. Do you want me to go ahead, please?

The Chair: Hon. member, please proceed on the amendment.

Mr. Prins: Okay. The amendment will read as follows. This is the amendment to Bill 11. In part A section 12 is amended in the proposed section 10.1 by adding the following after subsection (1): "(1.1) For the avoidance of any doubt, the Minister may not prescribe for the purposes of subsection (1) any activity to which section 18.01 relates." Then in part B section 30(b) is amended in the proposed section 34(1)(a.3) by adding "by or on behalf of the operators on condition that no consideration is receivable in respect of that activity by an operator or by any person associated with an operator" after "of strays."

Mr. Chairman, the primary purpose of these amendments is to provide clarification around the definition of hunting as it relates to strays and concerns over hunt farms, which are not allowed in Alberta. Changes to section 10.1(1) clearly outline that the regulatory power to issue ministerial permits cannot be used to authorize hunting, which is banned in section 18.01. Permits referred to in this section would relate to transport permits from CFIA, which will be recognized by Alberta Agriculture.

This amendment is being made in order to avoid any doubt about whether or not the minister can prescribe any activity which would override the hunting ban. Activities referred to under section 10 may be statutory exceptions that are authorized under the Agricultural Pests Act or by way of licence under the Wildlife Act. Those are the only activities permitted under section 10.

In addition, the changes under section 30(b) make it clear that the regulatory powers to define the terms “hunting” and “capturing” and “killing” cannot be used so that an operator of a domestic livestock farm can receive money if someone shoots their strays. In some cases it is an industry practice to destroy an animal that has strayed rather than to reintroduce it back into the herd. This is done for several reasons, including preventing the possibility of any spread of disease and protecting the operator’s herd health status. As a result there may be a need for the operator to contract out the destruction of an animal, and in order to be consistent with the hunting ban, neither the operator nor someone associated with an operator can receive money or any other forms of consideration from a person who destroys an animal for an operator.

These two amendments to the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act address a number of concerns brought forward by the industry and help to clarify misconceptions that are circulating. Hunt farms will not be allowed in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, as these amendments have just now been introduced and to allow all members to study these amendments, I would move to now adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 15 Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments on this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It’s a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 15, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011. When I spoke to this bill in second reading, as much as sort of on my preliminary review it appeared to have some good pieces to it, I have to say that I’ve now had an opportunity to look at it in a little bit more detail and to determine that there are, in fact, some concerns around the changes that are being proposed through this bill.

4:10

First of all, as I said before, I remain very concerned that the changes that are being proposed as far as the Criminal Injuries Review Board and the process attached to the Criminal Injuries Review Board are in fact not going to result in ensuring that applicants receive fair reviews but, rather, are going to be focused solely on increasing the efficiency of the Criminal Injuries Review Board, particularly as it applies to members of the Criminal Injuries Review Board. I’m a little concerned that, in effect, we’re setting up a process that is going to trap applicants and appellants in a bureaucratic circle from which they will be unable to exit and through which they will be unable to get any actual resolution.

By limiting the authority of the review board to actually make a decision and by suggesting that all they can do is refer the matter back to the original decision-maker, I know from personal experience with administrative tribunals that what will happen is that in many cases that person will be caught between a recalcitrant initial decision-maker and a review board, which will try with increasing sensitivity to articulate what needs to be done to fix the original decision. But since they don’t actually have decision-making authority, it won’t be done by the original decision-maker, and that person will go back and forth and back and forth and back and forth.

Sort of the foundations of administrative law and one of the key principles behind the establishment of administrative tribunals is, in fact, to increase efficiency and to give tribunals the opportunity to apply their expertise to evaluate an issue and to ensure relatively quick resolution. By injecting this bureaucratic obligation to send the matter back to the original decision-maker, what we are in fact going to do is simply extend the process and in many cases revictimize, I think, the victims who appear before the Criminal Injuries Review Board as applicants. I simply don’t support the amendments to the process that are being put forward through this bill.

The second area that the bill will deal with targets grant funding for programs and organizations. The idea is, theoretically, to ensure that money collected through the youth criminal justice act can be maximized to fund what is characterized by government briefing notes as innovative and new programs. While that’s a good thing – that’s absolutely a good thing – and we need to expand the scope of programs which would be eligible for this funding in some cases, my reading of the amendments here is that simply what it does is it takes this grant funding process away from a victims of crime committee and gives the discretion entirely to the minister as to where that money will go. It increases the opportunity for flexibility, absolutely, but it certainly doesn’t in my view increase the opportunity for an efficacious connection with the stakeholders within the community, so I’m not sure that that’s necessarily a positive outcome.

The area within the act, though, that I am most concerned about relates to the amendments that have been made with respect to the financial benefit program under this act. What, in essence, is happening here is that the minister is changing the rules in some respects about who can apply for benefits through this program. My concern is that, in essence, in contrast to the recommendations that the minister received from a number of groups, including the Alberta Council of Women’s Shelters, what they are actually doing is limiting, very much limiting, the people who can apply for benefits through the Criminal Injuries Review Board, I believe it is, by changing the limitations and changing the definitions within the limitation period.

Effectively, what this new act will do is that it will say that a person can claim for benefits for up to two years after they become aware of the offence, as opposed to the injury, and that, in any event, they cannot claim any more than 10 years after the offence occurred. In my view, the 10-year absolute cap is an arbitrary limitation, and I think it denies the nature of many of these incidents. In the other respect, what the language used to say was: where they became aware of the injury.

In so many cases what we’re actually dealing with here are victims of domestic violence and domestic abuse. Quite honestly, it’s the case that it takes people much longer than you might expect to become aware of the implications of those injuries. It’s not like getting hit by a car and concluding that you may have whiplash, which, you know, usually shows itself within a week or so of the accident. The types of injuries suffered by victims of crime, particularly where the crime is a form of domestic abuse, are much more subtle and much more difficult to identify. Often they don’t appear right away.

The difficulty with having these kinds of limitations in place, then, is that there’s a particular profile of a victim that we are going to be very clear to exclude. For instance, when someone is a victim of abuse, whether it's sexual abuse and/or violent abuse or psychological abuse in their childhood, it's not uncommon for those people, for instance, to seek comfort, shall we say, in the wrong place. You know, alcoholism can become, for instance, just as an example, one of the outcomes of being a victim. When someone is suffering from the illness of alcoholism, one is not necessarily in the best place to identify that an offence has occurred and that they are eligible and that this thing is somehow related to that offence and that they are therefore eligible for funding through the Victims of Crime Act. They just aren't.

So the imposition of this language, this change, goes in direct contradiction to what was asked for by the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters. It is directly geared to limiting the number of people who can access this funding, and it has a disproportionate effect on women and children, who are the most likely victims of domestic violence. That is why it is bad. Based on that, I am going to propose an amendment to this piece of legislation. I'll just take a break while the amendment is distributed.

The Chair: We have an amendment to be distributed by our pages.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, please continue now.

4:20

Ms Notley: Thank you. The amendment that I'm proposing is that Bill 15, Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011, be amended in section 12 as follows: in the proposed section 12.2(2) by striking out everything after "made" and substituting the following:

within 2 years from the date of the injury or within 2 years from the date when the victim becomes aware of or knows or ought to know the nature of the injuries and recognizes the effects of the injuries and by striking out the proposed section 12.3.

The amendment would accomplish three things. It would keep the language currently in the act around the two-year time limit within which victims are eligible to apply for financial support. It would strike out the bill's proposed 10-year limit from the date of the offence within which victims are eligible to apply for financial support. And the third thing is that where the victim was a minor, this amendment would strike out the 10-year time limit from the date the victim reaches the age of majority regarding eligibility for applying for financial support.

In the current act the two-year time limit applies from the date of the injury or the date of the victim's realization of the nature and effects of the injury. Bill 15 would apply a two-year time limit from the date of the victim's realization of the offence. Now, this amendment would maintain the language currently in the act about the victim's realization of the injury in the place of the bill's proposed language concerning the realization of the offence.

It's important that the act maintain its current language on this issue because women who are victims of domestic violence do not often recognize that they are victims of a criminal offence. The Alberta Council of Women's Shelters position paper, published in February of this year following the Solicitor General's consultation on this bill, states:

Women in situations of domestic violence commonly do not identify themselves as victims of crime. Even in situations where repeated and extreme abuse and injury occurs, women often do not perceive their experience this way.

It is, therefore, extremely important that the act maintain its current language stating that individuals become eligible for financial support upon realizing the effect of the injury rather than realizing that they are victims of a criminal offence. This amendment is needed for women who are victims of violent crime to have equal access to the victim of crimes fund and not be disadvantaged by the effects of patterns of abuse by intimate partners.

This amendment would also strike out the bill's 10-year limit from the date of the offence for eligibility to apply for financial support. The minister has said that the limit is needed to reduce the number of applications being made to the fund, but it is an arbitrary and unfair limit which will prevent some victims from receiving the help and support that the fund was set up to provide.

Similarly, for victims that are minors, the bill imposes a 10-year limit from the date the individual reaches the age of majority. Again, the limit is arbitrary and unfair and will prevent some victims from receiving the help that they need. There is no reason, that I can see, to pick the age of 28 out of a hat and assume that every person who is a victim of sexual or violent or psychological abuse as a child will be aware of the results and the outcomes of that crime at the magical age of 28. There's no reason. It's completely arbitrary, and it's simply focused on limiting benefits for a specific group, a specific population. In that way it is really quite offensive, I think, to people who are concerned about actually enhancing the rights and opportunities of that group.

In the same way, the notion that the 10-year limitation would apply from the time that we're looking at just simply the offence again fails to address the needs and the concerns of people who don't identify the injuries that they have as having arisen from an offence. That goes in direct contradiction to the recommendations and the requests made to this government by the Alberta council on the status of women.

I'm really very, very concerned that this government has taken a position clearly designed to limit access to this fund by a particular group of people, given our record otherwise with respect to our success in eliminating or reducing domestic violence in this province. I can't imagine that people actually intended to do that, and I hope that you will vote in support of this amendment to show to the rest of Albertans that this government truly did not intend to specifically exclude from compensation the children and women who are victims of domestic violence.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, it's 4:25. Pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee shall now rise and report progress.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 26, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome back. Good afternoon.

Let us pray. From our forests and parkland to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

Hon. members, this being Tuesday, the first day of this week, it's my pleasure to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem, and I would invite all to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister for Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some students from the Rosedale Christian school, 18 visitors. We have a teacher, Mr. Ross Wiebe, with them and parent helpers Mrs. Pam Wiebe, Mr. Luke Friesen, Mrs. André Friesen, Mr. Trevor Penner, Mrs. Katherine Penner, Mrs. Lola Reimer, and Mr. Marvin Reimer. I would ask them all, please, to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, between 1975 and 1989 Dr. Neil Webber was a member of this House. I remember a discussion I had with him when he left office. I asked him what he was going to do, and he said that it was his dream to establish a university prep school. My immediate thoughts were: well, it's nice to have big dreams. I also thought that a little while later, a couple of years later, when I visited his small school in northeast Calgary that had about 50 students. Well, about 10 years passed and in 2001 Dr. Webber opened the Webber Academy in the Calgary-West constituency. It was expanded to full K to 12 students in 2005 with the first graduating class, and today there are some 870 students who attend Webber Academy. Every year the grade 5 class makes the trip to Edmonton, and the grade 6 class actually gets to travel to Ottawa. Today the Member for Calgary-Foothills and I had the pleasure of having our pictures taken with some 60 bright students from Webber Academy in Calgary. They are accompanied by teachers Jason Ash, Daniel Mondaca, and Heather Gallagher. I would ask them all to stand and be recognized by this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a visiting group from one of the finest elementary schools in the Edmonton public school system. This school is, of course, in Forest Heights. The group that is visiting today is actually here for the week. They are led by Frau Fritz. This is a German bilingual program. I would now ask them to please rise – I believe they're in the public gallery – and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly. We all wish you the very best as you visit us for the next three days.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 35 very bright students from St. Alphonsus elementary and junior high school. They are accompanied by their teachers: Kirsten Kimak, Natalie Altimas, Laura Croome, Melanie Greshuk, and Lori McDonough. I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm traditional greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Jon and Doug Tupper, here with us today. Jon is an active and dedicated member of the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo community. He's the president of the Fort McMurray Chamber of Commerce, he's also the board chair for the library board up there, and in January he received from the municipality the volunteer achievement award. He's also very involved in the local PC association. Jon is here today with his dad, Doug. Doug Tupper served nine years on the Edmonton public school board, two years as chair, and he's also former executive director of the Edmonton Police Commission and a former ADM for Alberta Environment. I ask them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you Dr. Walter P. Maksymowych, seated in the members' gallery. Dr. Maksymowych is a professor in the department of medicine, division of rheumatology, at the University of Alberta. He is also a scientist for the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, a member of the Canadian Arthritis Network centre of excellence, executive member of the Assessment of spondyloarthritis International Society, scientific chair of the Alberta Rheumatoid Arthritis and Pharmacovigilance Program and Outcomes Research in Therapeutics Committee, and a principal investigator and executive board member of the Spondyloarthritis Research Consortium of Canada. His primary research interests are the genetics of arthritis and advanced therapeutics. He's a leader in medical research. I'll be talking more about his research in my member's statement. At this time I ask my guest to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the management team and staff from Southgate centre. Southgate centre consists of 165 stores and services visited by 11 million people each year and has been a shopping centre for Edmontonians, including this Edmontonian, for over 40 years. The management team every couple of months takes on a team-building activity, including volleyball or bowling, but this time they've decided to observe a different sport, and we're fortunate to have them with us here today. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to stand as I say their names. Paul Fairbridge is the general manager, and he's accompanied by Paul Gaudet, Sean Kirk, Brett Baker, Jenny Adams, Dalia Nasr, Roxanne Reich, Jillian Creech, Barb Fortier, Margot Lange, Emmy Diamond, Gary Bovencamp, Floyd Maschke, Ismet Korcaj, Jay Heard, Milena Malinovic. I think that's most of them. If there's anyone else, the rest of the staff, please rise. Thank you very much. Please join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three very important women in my life. One gave me life, one helped raise me, and one shares my life: my mother, Santosh Sherman; my aunt, Krishna Sharma; and my partner, Sharon MacLean. All are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Jonnee Cenaiko, who is seated in the public gallery. She is the Edmonton-Mill Woods summer temporary employment program student. She likes writing very much, and she plans to write a book. She is highly computer literate. Jonnee just completed her bachelor of philosophy at Grant MacEwan University and will be studying for her master's in Ontario this September. I would ask that she rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege for me today to introduce through you and to you some members in the gallery. They say that pool is like life, that it's not what you take; it's what you leave behind. While this Premier will certainly be leaving behind a wonderful province, he's also been raising a wonderful family. In the gallery today we have his son, Les, and his wife, Dr. Liza Stelmach; and Liza's mother, Audrey Dalzell. I would ask them to rise and please accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

I forgot to say that it's his birthday tomorrow, too. I'm so embarrassed.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Dr. Walter P. Maksymowych

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and recognize an outstanding individual sitting in the members' gallery. Dr. Walter P. Maksymowych is a rheumatologist and professor of medicine at the University of Alberta. Dr. Maksymowych is also a senior scholar of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research and a principal investigator of the Spondyloarthritis Research Consortium of Canada.

Through his primary research interest in spondyloarthritis, rheumatoid arthritis, and the genetics of arthritis Dr. Maksymowych has spearheaded great advances in genetic research. Further accomplishments of Dr. Maksymowych have had him at the international forefront of the development of a standardized methodology for the interpretation of imaging data. This is a crucial requirement for studies in the medical research field.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Maksymowych is also a product of our advanced education system, having completed postgraduate training at the University of Alberta and receiving an AHFMR fellowship in 1991. He is now one of the leading professors at the U of A faculty of medicine. I was able to meet Dr. Maksymowych recently, and I can tell you that he is really passionate about his work and the field of medicine.

I once again wish to recognize the outstanding efforts of Dr. Maksymowych, and of course the University of Alberta is honoured to have him there.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Long-term Care for Seniors

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This Monday in an acute-care bed at the Fort McMurray hospital, on election day, Mrs. Charlotte Mitchell will turn 103 years old. She has spent at least the last three years of her life in this bed, waiting for the government to finally make good on its promise to build a long-term care facility.

Mr. Speaker, despite the bullying and intimidation of this government, I stood up for Mrs. Mitchell and all Alberta seniors who have built this great province, which it is, but our seniors expect more than a government that bullies and intimidates doctors and health care professionals. I'm pleased by the doctors, 6,500 from the Alberta Medical Association, who said: call a public inquiry.

I have a sacred trust with my constituents, a trust they placed in me to represent their voice in the Legislature and not to simply have MLAs carry their voices back to the constituency. I want to say that I've done my job as their MLA to fight for them.

We are beginning to see 40 years of government bullying and intimidation unravel in front of our eyes. They may try to silence MLAs such as myself. They may try to silence doctors such as the MLA from Edmonton-Meadowlark, but they will fail because I believe that Albertans have a higher value, a value that should be applauded, the very value that seniors have fought for to make this province a great province.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud all those who keep to that value. I know that many on the other side of the House, in fact, agree with that value, but they fear that intimidation and bullying. I say that the ultimate test of a person is not during times of comfort and convenience but during times of challenge and controversy. I will continue to fight for my constituents because that is my job as an MLA.

The Speaker: As I call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, will you all join with me in wishing her a happy, happy birthday anniversary.

Education Week

Mrs. Sarich: Well, thank you especially, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and privilege to rise today to give recognition to Education Week, which will be from May 2 to May 6 in this great province of Alberta. Education Week gives us the opportunity to thank teachers, support staff, school councils, volunteers, parents, students, administrators, and school boards for their contributions to Alberta's world-class learning system.

This year's theme, Education: The Heart of our Communities, expresses the important role that education has in all the lives of children and youth, and it reminds us that education is, indeed, a collaborative process involving strong partnerships at the community level. Strengthening our education system is a shared responsibility of us all here in this Legislative Assembly and amongst all Albertans.

Education, Mr. Speaker, goes beyond the traditional classroom. It is part of our communities, and it is only fitting that we take the time to celebrate the wonders of learning with an integral focus on community. Through our engagement initiatives – Inspiring Education, Setting the Direction, and Speak Out – we have had meaningful conversations with thousands of Albertans in their communities about the importance and value of education today and in the future.

Education Week is also celebrating three subthemes this year: Engaged, Ethical, and Entrepreneurial. These characteristics make for a successful student graduate and, especially, a valuable member of the community.

On behalf of the Minister of Education and all Members of the Legislative Assembly a special thank you to the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association for their hard work to make this year's Education Week a tremendous success.

I encourage all Albertans to take part in events in their communities and to celebrate the teachers and all of the community stakeholders who every day are making a difference for children.

Thank you.

University of Alberta Campus Development

Dr. Taft: In October 2009 this government in conjunction with the University of Alberta and the Urban Land Institute invited a panel of North America's top experts to review the university's south campus plans. Last week that panel posted its final report, and the opportunities are tremendously exciting. They also pose a huge challenge to the university and to this government to take new approaches.

The south campus includes over 600 acres of mostly undeveloped lands near central Edmonton served by the LRT and surrounded by mature communities. The ULI panel described the south campus as a remarkable chance for the U of A and for Alberta as a province to show global leadership. The panel believes that with the south campus Alberta can establish an international reputation for sustainability, but it makes it clear that bold measures will be needed. The ULI panelists, mostly from the private sector, urged the university to embrace a long-range mission of deep green sustainability based on this inspired principle: "If everyone on Earth lived like the community at the University of Alberta's South Campus, we'd arrest climate change and live [sustainably] within the limited resources of our one planet."

The ULI report is filled with ideas that could help the university on its quest to be among the best 20 public universities in the world, but the university cannot do this alone. The provincial government needs to be a full partner in developing and following a plan that is visionary and detailed in ensuring that implementation is done with discipline and that every step of the way the people who live near the university must be given full voice.

The ULI report is well worth a read for anyone interested in the University of Alberta's future and the betterment of this province.

There's a green and golden opportunity here, Mr. Speaker, one that we should seize with both hands. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's culture of fear and intimidation knows no bounds and has now taken root in the Faculty of Medicine & Dentistry at the University of Alberta. Over the past six months the Canadian Association of University Teachers has become aware of concerns of intimidation and threats and is now investigating allegations at the U of A that include, quote, creating a climate of uncertainty, mistrust, and fear. To the Premier. Sixty-five hundred doctors, 21,000 health professionals calling for a public inquiry, now intimidation at the University of Alberta. What excuse does the Premier have today not to call a public inquiry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I haven't had time to fully review the document that the Liberals put out a news release on, but there is nowhere in this document that the government of Alberta is mentioned. This is simply a grievance matter between the university and some professors. It has nothing to do with the government of Alberta.

Dr. Swann: Well, to the contrary, Mr. Speaker. Given that the senior vice-president of the U of A has, quote, instructed the university staff not to co-operate with the investigation, end quote, how can this Premier continue to ignore that a culture of fear and intimidation exists? It starts at the top. Do you really think that by ignoring the problem, it's going to disappear?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, this is a grievance matter, and there are processes in place at the university to deal with it. There's a list of grievances that a few professors have put forward, but the provost has replied. The Canadian Association of University Teachers has replied. Nowhere in this document has the government of Alberta been mentioned, nor is there any request for any kind of a public inquiry.

Dr. Swann: Of course, most of these are joint appointments with Alberta Health Services Board, which the Premier knows. Given that over 30,000 doctors and health professionals have said that a Health Quality Council review is not good enough and given that the government's culture of fear and intimidation has now spread to the University of Alberta, what else does the government need in order to call a public inquiry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I do believe in academia independence. That is for the University of Alberta to resolve. They have their own body that serves as the mediation body between the university and its professors. It's best left to the processes that are in place, and those processes have been in place for many, many years.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, evidence of the culture of fear and intimidation that this Tory government perpetuates continues to grow daily. Just this weekend former cabinet minister Ernie Isley said that the Tories have used intimidation tactics to keep people, lobby groups, and community agencies in line. It's no wonder that the Alberta Medical Association, the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, and many other Albertans have endorsed a public inquiry. Why does the Premier continue to insist that there's nothing wrong when even former Tories are saying that your government uses intimidation?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly it. The member is talking about a former Tory, someone that has decided to join a party to the far right. He is free to make any kind of comments in the province of Alberta without intimidation.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, if the Premier has nothing to hide and is so sure things have changed, why won't he commit to a public inquiry, where senior bureaucrats and ministers can be subpoenaed to give evidence under oath? What are you afraid of, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, the Health Quality Council has begun its review. They're proceeding very quickly, and all those physicians that may want to bring forward any issues or maybe talk about improvements to the system that may improve patient care or access to emergency cancer treatment – the council is now opening its hearings and is willing to listen to all of the evidence.

Dr. Swann: How can the Premier ignore the basic fact that the Health Quality Council review is in a conflict of interest when its members are appointed by the very minister ultimately responsible for the alleged acts of intimidation? There's a disconnect here, Mr. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: I guess the hon. member doesn't understand the two different authorities. If we were to do the same with the public inquiry, the minister would be setting the terms of reference and also appointing the members to the public inquiry. This is a separate authority. The membership is well known, plus it has some of the best legal minds giving them advice.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Health Services Decision-making

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here in Alberta a person's word counts for something. When you make a promise, you keep it. The Premier promised on this PC letterhead during the election to build 800 long-term care beds for our seniors. He promised that nothing moves at the City Centre Airport until the Health Quality Council does a review of medevac services, and he promised that the third way in privatization of health care was DOA. To the Premier: which one of these promises have you kept?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, all of them. In fact, I thought we would have built about 800 continuing care beds. We're now past 1,100, and we probably will be at about 1,300 when this first phase of construction is finished.

With respect to the airport I said that the medevac services will not cease until such time as we hear from the Health Quality Council. That report is imminent; that's coming forward.

Of course, the third. We've met all that was said in that letter, and that hon. member knows that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given that your successors are circling the province and your ministers refuse to keep the promises you made while you were in office, how can Albertans be sure that any of your promises will be kept, including the minister's five-year action plan, now that your term as leader is up?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, at least he's showing confidence that under my watch it will be delivered, I suppose.

In all honesty the member brings forward important issues with respect to health. That's why I'd like to see the first report from the Health Quality Council made public. It'll be made public within three months and then the second report in six months and the concluding report in nine months. We fast-forwarded the report to be delivered, and we'll be able to carry on once all the evidence comes in.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that as an MLA you had input into the Mazankowski report, Bill 11, and phase 1 and phase 2 of the Alberta Health Act, but you denied authoring it, who is directing the government's plan to Americanize our cherished public health system? Is it the members for Calgary-West, Edmonton-Whitemud, Edmonton-Rutherford, Sherwood Park?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know anything about Americanizing the health system. He was there. Perhaps he could elucidate others on that.

What I can tell you is that we have the first-ever Canadian commitment by a province to five years of stable funding, unprecedented anywhere, and we have a Premier with the courage to have delivered it, and we have the courage to make sure it happens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that I am safe to say that all hon. members of this House desire to do the right thing and that the Premier is at the top of the list. The right thing is to be open and accountable. It is only a matter of time until the Premier does the right thing and calls a public inquiry. We know that the top advisers to the Premier are telling him that the Health Quality Council can do the job, but it is his legacy and not theirs that is at stake. So does the Premier want to be remembered as the king of cover-up or as the Premier who cleaned up with a full public inquiry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the Health Quality Council has begun its hearings. They'll ask for input. Once again, the Health Quality Council has put together, I believe, a legal advisory committee with some of the best legal minds and a tremendous reputation that will give the Health Quality Council advice during this period, and that is, of course, former Chief Justice Al Wachowich and former Deputy Prime Minister of Canada Anne McLellan.

Mr. Hinman: Don't let them pin you as the king of cover-up. Given that both parties must agree to waive a nondisclosure agreement, will the Premier do the right thing and direct Health Services to take the first step and declare that they would like to have full disclosure of the controversial nondisclosure agreements? Take the first step.

2:00

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, the disclosure agreements have been entered into by the physician and the employer, and a third party cannot just tear up the agreement or direct any one of the parties to open that agreement. An agreement is an agreement, and that agreement is between those two parties.

Mr. Hinman: You're not anybody; you're the Premier. You could ask them: let's open it up.

Mr. Speaker, given that the truth can set anyone free and given that the Premier and many others of this government say, despite all the evidence, that there is no proof, will he please do the right thing? Call the public inquiry so Albertans will have the truth out in the open. Be accountable. Do the right thing.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, so far, even in this House, there have been various allegations made with the protection of immunity of the House, yet – what? – six months later there has been no evidence tabled in the House, even circumstantial evidence, I may add, as was brought forward the other day. So why would a person conduct a public inquiry? There isn't even any circumstantial evidence, just allegations and, once again, no proof at all here in this Assembly.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. members, at least on nine occasions in recent years the word "cover-up" was ruled unparliamentary. On one occasion it was allowed in the context of what it was. So one should be very careful of the context that one uses a word like "cover-up."

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Critical Electricity Transmission Infrastructure

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Representatives of Alberta industry say that this government's massively overbuilt transmission proposal will make them uncompetitive, no surprise since this PC government is ramming through $13 billion in unnecessary costs that will be added to the power bills of Alberta consumers. Given this disaster in the making, will the Premier agree to repeal Bill 50 and require all transmission projects to be subject to a full regulatory hearing to ensure that they are needed, affordable, and actually in the public interest?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there were at least 300 public hearings. Many Albertans, businesses brought forward information and evidence with regard to the need for new transmission. I just want to correct the member. He's talking about $13 billion. The CTI is around $3.3 billion. For every billion dollars of new construction it adds about a dollar to the monthly bill, so that would be about $3.30 added to the monthly bill once all of the construction is done, and that will be about five, six years from now.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this Premier can spin straw into lead.

Given that the same power consumers are warning that increased costs may trigger a death spiral, where those who can afford to build their own generation will do so, leaving fewer and fewer customers to pay the multibillion dollar costs of these unneeded lines, and given that most homeowners and small businesses would be stuck with huge power bills as a result, will the Premier direct his Energy minister to stop the death spiral of our electricity grid and require full regulatory hearings for all the transmission lines now under construction for consideration?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, power consumption increases 3 per cent annually, and even in our worst recessionary year we saw an increase in power consumption. Our population has more than doubled since the last addition to any infrastructure was added in this province. Essentially, what we're doing is that we're burning more coal and getting less energy to the consumer because we're overloading the lines, and we're losing a lot of power along the transmission lines.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this government has eliminated public regulatory examination of proposals for new transmission infrastructure and substituted closed-door cabinet meetings that rubber-stamp these proposals, why should we take your word for it that these transmission lines are actually needed?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe 2001 is when the hearings started, and they were conducted over a number of years, talking about the need for additional transmission.

I would be a little more worried about what I heard this weekend in terms of increasing our costs of energy in the province of Alberta, and that was the hon. member's cousin – I believe he was from Quebec – talking about imposing a cap and trade system and a carbon tax on energy in this province. I can tell you that will more than double our electricity in the next five years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Health Quality Council Review

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some more questions for the Premier. The Premier and the minister of health continue to say that the Health Quality Council review is fully independent from government. It's a fact that the government appointed the Health Quality Council board, funds its operations, and the board chair, Dr. Lorne Tyrrell, reports directly to the minister of health. Again to the Premier: how can the government ignore the basic fact that the Health Quality Council review is in a conflict of interest when its members are appointed by the very minister ultimately responsible for the alleged acts of intimidation being investigated?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, the Health Quality Council has a tremendous reputation, a good, solid reputation, in terms of examining a number of issues. They are independent, and they have in many cases been critical of government, telling us where we can improve the quality of health delivery in the province. I have tremendous faith in them to do the job, and they will. They'll deliver that report much sooner than any kind of a public inquiry will do.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Premier: will the Premier direct Dr. Tyrrell, dean at the time, to appear before the Health Quality Council and share relevant information relating to Dr. McNamee's dismissal?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's amazing how just a few months ago the hon. member talked about how he was praising the Health Quality Council, and that this was the best avenue to do an inquiry and hear evidence in terms of how to improve the health care system. Today they've changed their minds once again and said that the Health Quality Council cannot do the job. Well, I disagree, and our government disagrees and so do the public of Alberta. This inquiry is on its way, the review is being done, and we'll hear soon with respect to how to improve our health care system.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, how can the Premier continue to argue against the need for a public inquiry when the Health Quality Council is clearly in a conflict of interest and may hear testimony from its own board chair? How do you reconcile that?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, enough of this nonsense and false accusation because the Health Quality Council itself is . . . [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. member, the Minister of Health and Wellness has been recognized.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you so much. In fact, the Health Quality Council themselves would tell you that none of the reports that they have ever done have been altered in any way, shape, or form. Not a word has been changed. They've got very broad terms to work with. They have discretion as a council. They have a commitment to make their report fully public. I would ask this hon. member to please comply with the process and deliver on the good words he had about them before.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Education Funding

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Public and Catholic school boards across the province are all saying the same thing. Because of this provincial budget teachers and support staff will need to be let go. Furthermore, they're all saying that the minister's suggestion of dipping into reserve funds is simply, in a word, ridiculous. Accordingly, will the minister come clean and tell this House approximately how many front-line teachers and other staff Alberta school boards will be forced to lay off because of this year's upcoming budget?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, no, I can't tell this House how many teachers might be laid off or how many teachers might not be hired. It would be depending on how many retirements there might be in particular jurisdictions, how many people choose to leave for maternity leave, and various other things that go into the makeup of the teacher force every given year. Yes, it's a tight budget. Yes, school boards are having to look very closely at their expenditures, and yes, in some cases, perhaps in many cases, that might impact the number of actual certificated employees that they have next year over this.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that parents across this province don't believe the minister's pronouncement that school boards can keep teachers in the classroom by dipping into reserve funds, will this minister do the right thing and stop the last day of school for students this June from becoming the last day of teaching ever for hundreds of teachers?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hundreds of teachers who have put in their 35 and 40 years of service to this province and are looking forward to retirement should not be stopped from having that last day if that was their choice. So, no, I'm not going to say that nobody is going to have a last day this year. Of course, people are going to have last days. Some are going to choose to have it and some may not, depending on what a school board has to do.

But the hon. member should know that there's $350 million in operating reserves across the province so that any school board looking at a very tight budget is well advised to look, as we have with our sustainability fund, and say: what reserves, what other options do we have first before we affect the classroom?

Mr. Hehr: Given that this minister has admitted publicly that letting teachers go at this time is the opposite of planning for the future, will this minister commit to ending the current silliness and ask the Treasury Board not to balance this year's budget on children's and our province's future prosperity?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've just spent the last couple of months in Committee of Supply and policy field committee examining the various aspects and their various opportunities and the challenges that face a government when it tries to meet a number of value equations. How much can we put into investing in people's health? How much can we invest in people's education to ensure the future of the province? How much are people prepared to pay for in their taxes in a given year? Can you tax your way out of a recession? All of those various items go into pulling together a budget, which we've just had the privilege of spending the last two months debating and will have the privilege this week of passing in our appropriation bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Logging in the Castle Special Management Area

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Groups of individuals in southwest Alberta recently called for a boycott of timber products from the Castle area to protest timber harvesting there, potentially putting 200 people's livelihoods at the Spray Lakes mills at stake. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What impact does timber harvesting have on the landscape, and is it affecting tourism in the area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most certainly, if you look at the record over the years with respect to Castle, I think it's an exemplary record of what can be done with proper management. That area is under a forest land-use zone designation. That is a legislated designation, and it meets the goals of preservation, heritage appreciation, recreation, and tourism and economic development. I think that it has been managed very well. In fact, the opportunities for tourism still abound.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Opponents of timber harvesting in the region say that it should not take place because the Castle is a special area. If so, why has there been harvesting in this area for all these years?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the Castle area was one of about 82 areas that were looked at and proposed as special areas in a project in Alberta in 1998, '99, and 2000, I believe, but Castle was never one of the areas that was actually accepted. Local communities in the area actually told the government that they wanted to see the area managed as a multi-use zone.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. What kind of protection is in place to ensure that harvesting does not affect the important watershed that flows out of the mountains in that area?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've had a lot of work done there. As a matter of fact, the Bow Valley watershed area has been studied extensively, and it has received a good quality recommendation, which is the highest recommendation in that watershed area. Since 2007 Sustainable Resource Development has employed hydrologists to make sure that forest management planning respects that watershed and the integrity of the watershed.

Education Funding (continued)

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, in the latest in a string of announcements from across the province the Lethbridge public school board has now had to announce as well that it will lay off 60 teachers and staff because of budgetary constraints. The school board's hands are tied because of this government's short-term planning and cuts to education. To the Minister of Education: is the minister's only response to the latest announcement of teacher cuts in Lethbridge that they, too, should dip into their reserve funds as you have suggested be done in Calgary? When the boiler blows, who's going to pay for that? That's what reserve money is for.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School boards across the province have saved monies out of their operating surpluses in any given year to build operating reserves for a variety of reasons. Many of those same school boards also have capital reserves. A few school boards have taken the position that they should spend today's dollars on today's students and not build up reserves. Everybody's situation across the province is different. Across the province there is approximately $340 million in operating reserves and an additional $200 million more or less in capital reserves, so there is $500 million in the education system in reserve. Now would be a good year to look at that and say that we have challenges.

Ms Pastoor: When Lethbridge not only needs a new school, but three of its existing schools need upgrades badly, projects that are now under threat along with teaching positions, how can the minister justify cuts to this Education budget?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Education budget went up 4.7 per cent this year. It went up $258 million this year. It went up by a substantial sum of money, but it is going to be a tough budget for school boards, absolutely. We all have the same issue to address on a year-over-year basis. If we want to be fiscally prudent, if we want to live within our means, we have to look at everything we do to determine: does it have value? How do we do it better? This year school boards are having a very difficult but necessary time looking at their budgets, looking at their operating reserves, and saying . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Pastoor: Well, a prudent budget, but it certainly doesn't make our students competitive with China.

Given that very successful programs like the career transitions program, which are designed to encourage high school completion and help students in the challenging transition from high school to the workforce or secondary education, are under threat because of the cuts, how can the minister claim that this government has students' best interests at heart?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there are in any given school board programs that have great efficacy and that are very valuable for students. The AISI project right across the province, in many jurisdictions, has been very good. But we're in a tight fiscal time frame, and as a government we've determined that we need to get back into a balanced position over a period of time while there is still money in the sustainability fund. You cannot use the money in the sustainability fund over and over and over again, so we have to be prudent in budgeting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Pipeline Leak

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Friday afternoon a pipeline break within Whitecourt-Ste. Anne was reported to the government of Alberta's co-ordination and information centre. The county, local residents, and I want to ensure that all has been and will be done to ensure minimal environmental impact. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Can you please provide an update on this break and the current status?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As is standard protocol, after notification we immediately dispatched an Alberta Environment officer to the area. He found that the pipeline break was releasing an oil and water mixture. At that point there was only a slight sheen visible on vegetation at the break point and no impact on water bodies. The company immediately established an emergency operation centre; set up a hydrovac, booms in creek, and monitoring program; cleaned up anything with a sheen; and began repairs to the pipeline.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. While you talked about notification of the incident – and it was provided to provincial and federal agencies and to the county – I'm not sure it was provided to the neighbouring residents. Can you explain the notification protocol for these occurrences, please?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the standard protocol for notification is different in the case of whether or not there is a public health risk involved. In this case, as it was a very isolated situation, there was not a public health risk. The municipality would have then been contacted by the company. Had there been a public health risk involved, then Alberta Emergency Management would have been activated. The municipality would have been involved, and they would have been notified by the provincial government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that pipelines are a critical transportation method of supplying energy to our marketplaces, is there any indication that this will impact future projects?
