Legislative Assembly of Alberta

3:00 p.m.

Tuesday, February 22, 2011

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated February 22, 2011, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome to the Alberta Legislative Assembly. Would you all please join with me in the opening day prayer.

Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Your blessings on all here present. We ask Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

I would now like to invite all to join in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau, who is in the gallery in the top to my right. Would you please all join in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Well, that was very well done. Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen and hon. members, at this moment the Premier has departed for the Lieutenant Governor's suite to accompany the Lieutenant Governor back to the Assembly.

Today I'm going to introduce you to the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, which will provide us with a musical interlude, the details of which are in your program. The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and Halifax. It has seen service in both world wars and in Korea, and it has travelled extensively across Canada and beyond our borders. This band was reconstituted in Edmonton in 1997 and is today under the direction of Captain Eric Gagnon, CD, who is in the Speaker's gallery. Maestro.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, and Mrs. Ethell, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. His Honour took his place upon the throne]

Speech from the Throne

His Honour: Pray be seated.

Building a Better Alberta

His Honour: Hon. members and distinguished guests, welcome to the Fourth Session of the 27th Alberta Legislature. It is my honour to deliver the Speech from the Throne, as it is my honour to serve Albertans as Lieutenant Governor.

This position follows a career that has taken me all over the world, including Europe, the Middle East, Central America, and the Balkans, as a soldier and proud member of the Canadian armed forces. [applause] After my military career ended, I served as a volunteer with humanitarian groups helping refugees and children in need in Africa.

In all these posts I saw many tragedies, including hunger, disease, conflict, violence, and war. I also observed the triumph of the human spirit, where people of commitment and compassion worked together to make their communities and their countries stronger. These experiences filled me with gratitude to live in a country and a province so blessed as Canada and Alberta are. They reaffirmed the values of citizenship and service to others, and they underscored the absolute necessity of democracy and the rule of law.

This is the background I bring to the post of Lieutenant Governor. These are the values I will work to promote through my service. And it is here in this Legislature where those values will guide the people Albertans have entrusted with public office. It is here where the people's business is conducted. Let it be done with diligence and wisdom, with honour and respect, and with God's guidance, for surely the times in which we live demand no less of our elected leaders.

As Alberta takes its first steps from recession to recovery, fundamental changes are happening in the global economy. Our province must change, too, if it is to flourish in the new economy, just as it did in the old.

Albertans look to their government to lead the way, to survey the landscape of both the short term and the long term and plan accordingly, to build a better Alberta so that the province our children and grandchildren inherit is as full of opportunity for them as it has been for us. Ladies and gentlemen, your government is committed to investing in Alberta's future so our great province can realize its full potential.

Meeting the Challenges of a Changing Global Economy

As 2011 begins, the world is slowly emerging from the shadow of the worst recession since the Great Depression. As that event forever changed the world, so too is the recession that began in 2008 reshaping the economic landscape in which we live. Being successful in the postrecession world will mean doing things very differently from how we've done them in the past.

The sustainability fund, money saved during good times, is helping to blunt the sharpest edges of the recession, but it won't last forever. We must use this opportunity to move forward and prepare for the future.

The New Importance of Asia

Our province has relied heavily on a single customer, the United States, which buys about 85 per cent of our province's exports. If Alberta is to grow to its greatest potential, we need to diversify our product development through technology and take advantage of other markets.

A major opportunity exists to expand trade and investment with Asia. This region is home to some of the world's largest and most diverse markets. Bill 1 of this legislative session will be dedicated to enhancing Alberta's linkages with Asia, including priority markets such as India, China, Japan, and Korea. The Asia Advisory Council Act, if passed, will create a council that will make recommendations to government on ways to expand business, education, and cultural relationships between Alberta and Asia.

Western Canada has the products these markets need. The vast agricultural, mineral, forestry, and energy resources of Alberta, British Columbia, and Saskatchewan will underpin Canada's economy in the 21st century. It is in the national interest that western Canada has improved port capacity, whether by pipeline or rail, that will open the door to Asia's rapidly growing markets. Also necessary is improved direct air service to these markets so that trade and investment can flourish.

Investing in Infrastructure

Infrastructure is a critical foundation for our province's future. It is an economic enabler and a driver of competitiveness, and it helps support the quality of life Albertans enjoy. Albertans learned the false economy of delaying infrastructure investments in previous downturns. When growth returned, we were unprepared, struggling to catch up and paying inflated prices.

Now is the best time to invest in infrastructure. Thanks to the billions of dollars Alberta saved in the sustainability fund, instead of falling behind, we are catching up and planning ahead. We are keeping people working and making our dollars go further, but most importantly Alberta will have the facilities it needs now and when growth returns.

The government will continue to look to the 20-year strategic capital plan to build priority public infrastructure such as schools, hospitals, roads, and long-term care facilities, with the goal of having the most advanced infrastructure in North America. We will build new hospitals and renovate existing health facilities in communities such as Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, Red Deer, Medicine Hat, Edson, High Prairie, Sherwood Park, and others. We will also embark upon major redevelopment and expansion of cancer care services in Calgary and Edmonton.

Your government will invest in major economic corridors such as the twinning of highway 43 near Sturgeon Lake, the ongoing twinning of highway 63, and major highway investments within Fort McMurray, and we will move forward with construction of the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads.

Almost 90 per cent of the Edmonton ring road will be completed when the northwest section of Anthony Henday Drive opens this fall. Five new interchanges in the southwest will remove all the traffic lights to make the entire stretch of the freeway free flow. Your government continues to move forward on the final phase, the northeast section, with a P3 process that will begin this year. In Calgary work continues on the southeast section of Stoney Trail, which will open to traffic in the fall of 2013. Completion of the two interchanges on the northwest leg, which will make this section free flow, will be done by fall 2012.

Boosting Our Competitiveness

Our province's long-term prosperity depends on our industries being globally competitive, productive, and diverse. Alberta must make every effort to create an environment where entrepreneurship, productivity, and investment thrive.

Last year this Legislature passed the Alberta Competitiveness Act, creating a partnership between government and industry to help position Alberta as one of the most competitive economic jurisdictions in the world. The resulting government- and industry-led Competitiveness Council has analyzed our province's competitive strengths and weaknesses. It will report to government in the next few months with recommendations to enhance Alberta's ability to compete in the global marketplace. These recommendations for both government and industry will be implemented in the short term, with measurable results anticipated in the next three to five years.

Effective regulation of financial securities is essential to the expansion and smooth functioning of capital markets and the economy. Canada's passport system for securities regulation has been rated as one of the best regulatory systems in the world by objective and independent international organizations, including the World Bank. In the interest of maintaining a system that is working well, Alberta together with Quebec, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan is challenging the unprecedented attempt by the federal government to take control of this area of provincial jurisdiction. Having made our case before both the Alberta Court of Appeal and the Quebec Court of Appeal, Alberta will next take its challenge to the Supreme Court of Canada later this spring.

We will also continue to urge the federal government to abandon its present course of action in favour of supporting the existing provincially administered national system. The persistent negative public comments about the passport system are unwarranted and serve to undermine the confidence in capital markets that the federal government says it is trying to protect.

Reducing red tape is another key to improving Alberta's competitiveness. While rules and regulations are required in the interest of public health, safety, and environmental protection, it is important that they not create unnecessary and costly burdens that limit the ability of business to create jobs.

One area of particular concern has been the energy sector. With the help of stakeholders government has extensively reviewed the oil and gas regulatory system to create a more modern, flexible, and efficient system. Implementation of the changes identified will begin this year. Smart regulation achieves public objectives to protect our environment and the high standards Albertans demand. It also provides clarity and predictability so business can invest and compete with confidence.

Making the Most of Our Resources

Being competitive also means making the most of the advantages we have. These include our abundant resources: energy, wood fibre, and food products grown on our rich, productive land.

Renewed Confidence in Oil, Gas, and Oil Sands

Changes to the royalty system have led to renewed confidence in oil and gas exploration, and for the first time in this province's history land sales exceeded $2.3 billion in a calendar year. This shows that Alberta continues to be competitive in attracting new investment. It also means new jobs for Albertans and new opportunities for industry and sends a strong signal to the world that our province is a safe, effective place to do business. That this message has been heard is evidenced by renewed interest in Alberta, particularly in the oil sands, by a variety of international companies.

Your government will continue to implement Responsible Actions, Alberta's 20-year strategy for the oil sands. It will also continue to address growth pressures brought on by oil sands development and will lead the process to develop a comprehensive regional infrastructure plan for the Cold Lake oil sands area.

Adding Value to Raw Resources

Your government is also taking action to ensure that Albertans receive the most benefit possible from energy development as resource owners. The bitumen royalty in kind program, for example, will allow Alberta to seek out opportunities for adding value to bitumen here in our province. This will help diversify our economy, create jobs for Albertans, and provide spinoff opportunities for businesses along the supply chain.

Value-added upgrading also holds the potential to create more energy revenues for the province. By integrating carbon capture and storage technology, carbon dioxide from upgraders can be used to revive depleting oil reservoirs. This process is called enhanced oil recovery. It is estimated that an additional 1.4 billion barrels of oil can be produced using this technology. To put it in more familiar terms, Alberta could produce more conventional oil in the future than it has already produced in the past. This could generate up to $25 billion in additional provincial royalties and taxes.

The Future of Forestry

In recent years Alberta's forest industry has felt the impact of a devastated U.S. housing market and economy. As in other sectors, the journey back to prosperity begins with diversifying both products and markets. Government will work with the forest industry to develop a road map to do both these things, including using wood fibre in the emerging bio-economy, especially in renewable energy and fuels. This road map will help companies make efficient use of fibre and build a bridge to a more sustainable future for this renewable resource.

Government will also continue to respond aggressively to the triple forest threats of wildfire, insects, and disease. We saw some success in the war on the mountain pine beetle last year thanks to an aggressive provincial control program, with some help from Mother Nature.

Agriculture and Rural Communities

Alberta's agriculture and agrifood industries are key economic drivers of our province, especially in rural communities. Over the next two decades hundreds of millions of people in the emerging markets of China and India will rise out of poverty and demand a quality of life that comes closer to what we enjoy here in Canada. The opportunity for Alberta and its western neighbouring provinces to provide food will usher in a period of opportunity and rising prices for Alberta farms.

Access to reliable broadband Internet service is vital to maintaining Alberta's competitive advantage. Government is working to complete the final mile to bring broadband access to every Alberta home.

Educating the Workforce of Tomorrow

Of all Alberta's natural resources, none is more valuable than our people. It is our ethical citizenship, engaged thinking, and entrepreneurial spirit that have made Alberta prosperous today and which are the foundation of tomorrow's promise. These are the qualities our education system must instill in our children as they grow into young adults, enabling them and our province to reach their full potential.

Alberta's education system leads the world today, but we must not become complacent. Our system must evolve if we are to continue to be leaders tomorrow. This means continuing to build capacity for local decision-making and fostering broader community engagement.

Your government will continue to implement a vision for an inclusive education system that supports students with special needs. We will equip the education system to offer students more flexible, engaging, and personalized learning, and we will continue to build the teaching profession: recruiting, preparing, and supporting the best and the brightest in becoming and remaining teachers.

Becoming a Hub of Creative Thinking

Through Campus Alberta and Alberta Innovates we will continue to show the world how our province is becoming a hub of creative thinking, where innovation turns ideas into reality and where research moves from the lab to the marketplace. We will continue to beckon the world's best researchers, innovators, entrepreneurs, and investors to join us in areas of strength such as energy and the environment, biotechnology and bio-industries, and health research, and we will continue to foster ever-stronger global partnerships to build new markets for traditional and emerging sectors as well as innovations not yet imagined.

Investing in Our Workforce

To build a strong future, Alberta needs a skilled workforce. While unemployment remains an issue for thousands of Albertans, we know that in the future it will become increasingly difficult to find skilled people. Demographic change means that we will soon see more workers retiring than entering the workforce. Given the growing demand for workers and the limited available supply we expect that Alberta will be short 77,000 workers over the coming decade.

To help prepare for this situation, government will update the 2006 Building and Educating Tomorrow's Workforce strategy to adjust to current labour market needs. An important component of this strategy will continue to be ensuring jobs for Albertans before looking beyond our borders. Mature workers who choose to stay in the workforce must be supported, and groups that are underrepresented in the workforce such as aboriginal Albertans, people with disabilities, immigrants, and young people must be given every opportunity to contribute their skills and help our province grow.

Alberta workplaces are even more productive when they are safe. Work on government's 10-point plan on occupational health and safety will continue, with additional efforts in transparency, education, and enforcement. Alberta's workplace injury rate has been declining steadily for nearly 20 years, but there is still room to improve. We want all Albertans to come home safely from work every day.

Balancing Development and Conservation

Albertans know that economic development and environmental protection are not a trade-off. We can and must have both. And just as we plan for economic development, we must also plan for a healthy environment.

No longer can we look at single elements of the landscape in isolation. We must recognize the cumulative impact of all development within a region, and we are working to ensure these activities are being co-ordinated to have the least impact on our land, air, and water and all the species that use them.

Similarly, we recognize and value the long-standing rights of landowners, who have been forces for both economic development and ecosystem conservation in our province. Partnership with landowners is critical to our success.

Good planning will provide for responsible growth in our province, especially where there are competing interests on a finite land base. That's why your government has created the land-use framework. It is not intended to stop growth but to provide for co-ordinated planning and protect the environment.

Planning for a Healthy Environment

Alberta also continues to develop regional plans based on our province's watersheds to manage growing economic, environmental, residential, and recreational demands on our province's land base.

This year, after further consultation, we expect to complete the first regional plan for the lower Athabasca area in northeast Alberta, which includes the oil sands. Among its objectives the plan will identify conservation areas, required in part to support a new policy to manage recovery and stabilization of woodland caribou.

Government is taking steps to ensure that legislation to support the development of regional plans fully respects landowner rights.

World-class Monitoring of the Oil Sands

Alberta's oil sands continue to be a topic of global conversation. Your government is working to share information about our clean energy efforts with our neighbours across Canada and around the world. We are changing perceptions of how we are managing one of the world's largest proven oil reserves, and we remain committed to demonstrating that Alberta is a leader in responsible energy production and environmental stewardship.

Alberta has created a panel of respected experts to make recommendations for developing a world-class monitoring, evaluation, and reporting system for all environmental media, including air, land, water, and biodiversity. The panel will report back to government by June 2011 with recommendations for a system Albertans can proudly hold up to international scrutiny.

Your government has built the foundation for this system with a transition over the past several years to cumulative effects management, which moves beyond examining developments on a project-by-project basis to look at the combined impacts of both existing and planned development on an entire region.

The oil sands area will serve as a pilot for the new monitoring system. We know our monitoring efforts must be robust, transparent, and adaptable. Most of all, they must be credible. Building a reliable system for the future requires third-party review, validation, and involvement. It's what Albertans expect and what we intend to deliver.

Watching Our Water Use

Water is a precious resource that belongs to all Albertans. As our economy and population grow, Albertans will need a long-term plan to ensure wise use and conservation of water.

A groundwater mapping and inventory program is currently under way in partnership with the Alberta Geological Survey. We are also working with land-use planners, watershed councils, and stewardship groups to share knowledge, enhance resource protection, and improve groundwater management.

Climate Change and Clean Energy Technology

Alberta is seizing the opportunity to be a global leader in clean energy technology. Your government pioneered North America's first regulatory system to reduce industrial greenhouse gas emissions, and it was designed to encourage innovation in our province. The system has achieved more than 17 million tonnes of reductions from business-as-usual to date and has collected $186 million into the climate change and emissions management fund. We will continue to invest millions of dollars from this fund into unique, transformative projects to produce cleaner energy from fossil fuels, improve energy efficiency, explore renewable energy strategies, and develop advanced carbon capture and storage technology in our province.

Alberta is also working with industry to develop four commercial-scale carbon capture and storage projects. Together they will capture and store 5 million tonnes of carbon dioxide in underground formations by 2015. Alberta's geology is well suited to this purpose. We have many formations that have held hydrocarbons safely for thousands of years.

Your government's vision for a clean energy future will create entirely new business markets in which Alberta-made, climate-friendly technology solutions are marketed around the world. Alberta will continue to work diligently on reducing greenhouse gas emissions in ways that produce tangible benefits for our province and its people now and in the years ahead.

Building Canada's Best-performing Publicly Funded Health System

Your government will continue building on the Premier's vision of creating Canada's best-performing publicly funded health system right here in Alberta. That vision means Albertans will have better access, shorter wait times, and safe, quality care when they need it, and it means we will adhere to the principles of the Canada Health Act.

Becoming the Best

Moving forward with the actions in Becoming the Best: Alberta's 5-Year Health Action Plan will help us achieve that vision. The plan contains the most ambitious and comprehensive set of commitments to improve access to health care in Canada. It is supported with clear performance measures and five-year performance targets. It puts people first by addressing the health needs of patients, families, and communities.

Under the health action plan another 1,000 continuing care spaces will be added this year to provide Alberta seniors with more choice and greater independence. We will add at least 5,300 continuing care spaces by 2015. This is the largest expansion of continuing care spaces ever planned in our province, and fittingly it begins as the first of the baby boomers turn 65.

We will launch a co-ordinated provincial cancer strategy to reduce the incidence of cancer, increase access to cancer treatment across Alberta, and improve the quality of life for those living with the disease. The strategy will address immediate and future needs for prevention, detection, and treatment of cancer as well as workforce requirements.

As part of the health action plan we will also announce a comprehensive addiction and mental health strategy for the province. It will provide Albertans with timely access to addiction and mental health services and programs and better integrate mental health and addiction services into the overall health system.

The health action plan is backstopped by the first-of-its-kind five-year funding commitment for Alberta Health Services. That commitment, which includes a 6 per cent increase in health funding for 2011-12, provides stable, predictable funding to ensure the action plan's commitments become reality. We have also earmarked $2.6 billion over three years to expand, upgrade, build, and equip additional health care facilities.

Implementing the New Alberta Health Act

The new Alberta Health Act and the health charter currently being developed provide for all Albertans to have access to the services of primary care teams. As part of our commitment to strengthen primary health care, Albertans will have access to a primary care team and a basic suite of health care services on a timely basis. Over time this initiative is expected to greatly shorten wait times and improve quality throughout all levels of the health care system.

Albertans will also continue to have a say in their health system. Our government will gather input on a health charter and the regulation to establish a health advocate, with a view to proclaiming the new act and appointing a health advocate later this year.

Safe, Vibrant Communities

Even during the economic downturn Alberta has remained a place of safe, vibrant communities, where Albertans in most need are protected and cared for. Government will continue to ensure that programs and services are in place to support vulnerable and at-risk children, youth, families, and seniors.

Caring for Albertans Most in Need

This session legislation will be introduced to strengthen protection for victims of family violence and to hold accountable those who violate protection orders. These amendments will make Alberta's penalties for such violations among the strongest in Canada.

We will work with municipalities and service organizations on a co-ordinated approach to meet the needs of Alberta's growing urban aboriginal population.

While keeping costs down through a competitive tendering process, we will continue to partner with nonprofit organizations, the private sector, and municipalities to further support the development of 11,000 affordable housing units by 2012. Another 500 homeless Albertans will receive supports, services, and permanent housing to help them on the road to independence.

Although most Albertans and other Canadians are prudently saving for retirement, there is a significant minority who may not have enough savings to maintain their standard of living after retirement. The Alberta government will continue to be a leader in efforts to improve prospects for future retirees. Building on a concept first championed by our government, Alberta will work closely with federal, provincial, and territorial governments this year to develop standards and legislation to allow for new types of registered pension plans for self-employed people and other workers who do not have workplace pension plans.

Making Communities Stronger and Safer

Your government knows that sustainable and accountable municipalities, where all Albertans can enjoy a high quality of life, are important to Alberta's success. That's why Alberta is committed to building the municipalities of the 21st century.

We remain committed to our partnership with municipalities on the municipal sustainability initiative, a program that has supported more than 2,100 municipal infrastructure projects, and we remain committed to continuing the excellent work begun under the Alberta safe communities initiative. Alberta's gang reduction strategy will be implemented to address one of the leading causes of violent crime in the province.

Your government will also introduce legislation that will allow police agencies to have greater access to information when conducting missing persons investigations.

The Alberta government remains committed to building a state-of-the-art public safety and law enforcement training centre in Fort Macleod. It will support Alberta's new law enforcement framework and ensure consistent standards of training and skills among law enforcement personnel from across the province. Construction of the training centre is expected to commence by summer 2012.

Showcasing Our Province

Ours is a province with an amazing story to tell. Through Alberta Arts Days, September 30 to October 2, 2011, we will continue to showcase and celebrate the rich diversity of arts, culture, and heritage throughout our province.

Your government will continue its efforts to showcase Alberta as the place for television, motion picture, and digital media productions, offering a unique mix of talent, scenery, and the facilities to make movie magic.

Conclusion

Alberta has come through the recession better than just about anywhere else. While other jurisdictions were piling on debt, raising taxes, or cutting programs, Alberta stayed true to its plan. Our operating budget is balanced, cherished public programs and services have been not only protected but strengthened, and we are continuing to build our infrastructure to enable future growth. But Albertans are not content to simply ride out the storm. We know that past success does not guarantee future prosperity, and like those who first built our province, we must continually strive to be more effective and innovative in everything we do.

We must boost the competitiveness of our economy and work to develop new markets in Asia and elsewhere.

We must diversify our products and industries while bolstering our foundations in energy, forestry, agriculture, and tourism.

We must keep investing in infrastructure and in the education of our people to find tomorrow's innovations and foster future economic growth.

We must be a leader in responsible energy production and environmental protection.

We must build a health care system that provides the care Albertans need when and where they need it.

And we must continue to build safe, vibrant communities, where those who are most in need are supported and where all Albertans can participate in the economic, social, and cultural life of our province.

Finally, we must do these things while protecting the fiscal advantages Albertans have worked so hard to build.

This is your government's plan for the way forward out of recession and into recovery and beyond. It's a plan that fulfills all the promise of our wonderful province and recognizes the amazing potential that is yet to be realized. It's a plan to build a better Alberta for all Albertans.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, and may God bless you all.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen and hon. members, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen. Please remain standing after.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen, long live our noble Queen,

God save The Queen!

Send her victorious,

happy and glorious,

long to reign over us;

God save The Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen and hon. members, the Premier is currently escorting the Lieutenant Governor back to his suite. I'll use this opportunity just to provide you with a bit of information.

Earlier this afternoon a new carillon was inaugurated as the first step in one of the many preparations and events as we move toward September 3, 2012, and the 100th birthday of this Alberta Legislature Building. September 1, 1905, saw Alberta created as a province. Construction of the Alberta Legislature, this building, began in 1907 and was completed five years later, with an official opening date of September 3, 1912. Fifty-five years later a carillon was installed to commemorate Canada's centennial in 1967. The dedication ceremony was held on December 1, 1966, and the carillon played daily for 29 years before the original carillon went out of service.

After some 15 years of silence we today inaugurated a new carillon. Music will once again emanate from this building. The carillon will be heard daily at noon and 6 o'clock p.m., and it will strike the Westminster chime on the hour, followed by 15 minutes of musical selections. It will continue until we are inundated with numerous complaints from residents in the area about the unwarranted intrusion into the quiet of their lives. So, Mr. Mayor, should there be complaints, please direct them this way.

I'd like to publicly thank the previous minister of Alberta Infrastructure and the current minister of Alberta Infrastructure for their enthusiastic support for this project. Thank you both, gentlemen. [applause]

Celebration and commemoration of activities in our history is extremely important. For those who sit to my left – it will be more difficult for those who sit to my right – if you turn your attention to the centrepiece on that particular wall, there is a beautiful window, done and donated by the city of Edmonton to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the province of Alberta. The city council of Edmonton generously started to work with us several years ago. It depicts Princess Alberta, the history of Alberta, it depicts the North Saskatchewan River, and it's seen best in the early morning as the dawn sun arrives. It's a magnificent gift and part of the history of the province of Alberta.

Now, the Premier will return very, very shortly. Please take this opportunity to say hello to your neighbour.

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

Tablings

The Speaker: I have the honour now to table a copy of the Speech from the Throne given graciously by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: Mr. Premier.

Asia Advisory Council Act

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act.

Bill 1 really builds upon Alberta's efforts to gain better market access to markets, especially Asia. Alberta cannot sustain superior economic prosperity by relying on the fragile growth in the United States. We must diversify our markets. We must further our relations with key markets such as China, Japan, Korea, and India.

We must tap into the future potential of these markets, where hundreds of millions of people seek a better quality of life, people that want our energy, our food, our wood fibre, products to raise their standard of living. With new investment and with new export markets we will create a wealth unlimited – unlimited – in opportunities for this province.

This is at the core of Bill 1. If passed, Bill 1 will establish a council of 10 members who will represent a cross-section of organizations, cross-sections of interest as well such as business, cultural, and academic communities. The council will provide advice. It will also provide a perspective as Alberta deepens our economic ties with the region. These expanded relationships are critical to sustaining success and prosperity for Albertans now and well into the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, February 23, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. From our forests and parklands to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we begin the Routine of the day, just a few brief comments with respect to three housekeeping matters. First of all, I'd like to bring to everyone's attention a few slight modifications in the rotation of questions and members' statements. The agreement reached amongst House leaders on the rotation of questions in October of 2010 continues, with the only change being that the Official Opposition is entitled to the 19th question on day 4, which means that they have that position, should we reach it, on days 2 and 4 of our rotation.

Secondly, the Member for Calgary-Currie, who was identified as an independent last session, is now the sole member of the Alberta caucus, but his entitlement to questions and members' statements remains the same. As this is day 1 in our rotation, he will be entitled to the sixth question today.

With respect to members' statements, House leaders agreed to assign the second member's statement each day to opposition members but did not specify the rotation. Attached to the Speaker's procedural letter to members of the Fourth Session of the 27th Legislature, dated February 18, 2011, was a projected sitting days calendar, which contains in highlighted yellow the caucus that is entitled to the second member's statement each day. Anyone wishing a copy of this calendar can contact my office or the bills and Journals clerk. No one has contacted the Speaker's office to suggest an alternative rotation, so the one provided will be followed.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour and a privilege for me to introduce a number of students and parents and teachers from the Iron Ridge junior campus in Blackfalds. Today we have a total of 63 visitors: 59 students and their teachers Mrs. Ashley Kovitch, Mr. Bill Carter, Miss Sara Duncombe, who is a student teacher, and a parent helper, Mrs. Mary Dawn Eggleton. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you a group of students from my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie from Meyonohk elementary school. The students are participating here in the School at the Legislature, and I had the opportunity to meet them yesterday afternoon in the rotunda. I wish them a very informative week. At this time I would like to ask the students; their teacher, Ms Allison Sylvester; Alishia Michalenko, who is a student teacher; and all of the volunteers to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 43 of Alberta's brightest and best students from l'école J.E. Lapointe school in the beautiful community of Beaumont in my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. These 43 bright young leaders of tomorrow are accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Brigitte Marshall and Mrs. Danielle McCallion. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several special guests joining us today from the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta. They are seated in the members' gallery. With us today we have Dr. Fred Otto, P.Eng., a former dean of the Faculty of Engineering at the University of Alberta and past president of APEGGA; Dr. Gordon Williams, P.Geol., past president of APEGGA; Mr. David Rumbold, P.Eng., who served as the chair of APEGGA's Act, Regulations and By-laws Committee for a number of years; and Ms Pat Lobregt, APEGGA's manager of executive and external liaison. I would also like to introduce a senior member of the Employment and Immigration department staff, Mr. Adrian Pritchard, who is also joining our guests. He is the director of professions and occupations. I would ask that our guests, seated in the members' gallery, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature my very supportive wife, Sherry Drysdale, and a very close friend, Terri Head. It gives me great confidence in the future of our province when I see young people such as Terri showing leadership in our community. Some of her involvements are as campaign director for United Way, a board member for the Grande Prairie ski hill, involvement in the Grande Prairie Stompede Association, and she has been a member of the winning team of the ladies provincial hockey championship for the last two years in a row. I'd like to think she learned all these skills by being involved in 4-H while she grew up. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members a delegation of concerned parents from the town of Morinville. I will ask my guests to please rise as I say their names: Mrs. Donna Hunter, Mrs. Marjorie Kirsop, Mrs. Jessica Logan, and Mr. David Redman. My guests have come here today in support of a secular public education option in Morinville. Please offer them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Heritage Classic Hockey Game

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like millions of kids clear across the country I have my dad to thank for my love of hockey. When I was a toddler, he built a rink in our backyard for everyone in the neighbourhood, and through my youth he coached our teams. We went from pond hockey to international tournaments to charity events on NHL ice. My wife, Jen, and I are now proud to pass on these traditions to our beautiful boys, Dawson and Evan.

Similar stories are told across the province. I'd like to just share a few examples. Malcolm Sills, Colin Patterson, and Perry Berezan orchestrated the Flames alumni charity three-on-three event for an entire decade. Pat Grogan and his crew organized the third annual outdoor tournament last month, with proceeds going to the Millarville community school. It was 37 below on the first night, and the first time the puck hit the post, it shattered, so the pieces now have a permanent place on the trophy.

This past weekend the Calgary Flames' president, Ken King, and his entire organization hosted the extremely successful Heritage Classic. Ken appreciates that the league chose Alberta as the host of the only two outdoor NHL games ever played in Canada. He's been quick to honour Edmonton for their efforts eight years ago and is eager to thank Calgary's hockey fans and the McMahon Stadium Society as well as the Calgary Stampeders.

The game was played outdoors but telecast in 3-D TV, and the entire hockey world focused on Calgary and Alberta. The immediate economic boost was huge, and the tourism benefit will be enjoyed long into the future. Over 41,000 fans braved the cold as the Flames shut out the Canadiens 4 to nothing. Over the course of a week hockey was celebrated at all levels, from current pros to alumni to junior to the general public. Most of all, Mr. Speaker, Albertans had fun, and I thank all who continue to build invaluable community spirit through the great game of hockey.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

1:40 Workers' Compensation Exemptions

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The foundation of the modern workers' compensation system is the Meredith principle, which basically holds that all workers are entitled to compensation in the case of workplace injuries. In exchange, workers lose the right to seek redress through the courts. What many Albertans may not realize, however, is just how many workers are excluded from the protections of the workmen's compensation system in Alberta.

According to Employment and Immigration's annual report on occupational diseases and injuries the provincial Workers' Compensation Board extends coverage to 80 per cent of Alberta's workforce, a figure that is consistent going back a number of years. That means that 20 per cent, or one-fifth, of the province's workforce, approximately 40,000 Albertans, are not covered by WCB.

The workmen's compensation regulation provides a list of exemptions as schedule A. The list of exempted industries goes on for five and a half pages. Two hundred occupations and industries fall outside of our workers' compensation system. Everything from operating a golf course, running a laboratory, offering tutoring services makes the list. Insurance adjusters, optometrists, secretaries, bankers, charity employees: all and more are excluded. Of course, paid farm workers in this province continue to be excluded not only from Alberta's workmen's compensation laws but occupational health and safety laws as well. Alberta is alone in this country when it comes to excluding paid farm workers from these laws.

Mr. Speaker, while there are certainly valid reasons for exemptions for certain occupations, the principles that workmen's compensation is founded on and should be founded on are inclusiveness and comprehensiveness for as many employed Albertans as is reasonably possible. This, unfortunately, is not the case today in Alberta. Neither should the 80 per cent of employees supposedly covered assume that they will be fairly compensated in the event of an injury. Severely reduced or denied WCB claims account for a significantly large portion of constituency casework. Alberta's hard-working men, women, and their families deserve better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Roots & Connections Online Resource

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this month I had the privilege of speaking at the launch of the Roots & Connections online resource at NorQuest College in Edmonton. Roots & Connections is a new and innovative guide for teachers and volunteers teaching English in rural Alberta communities. Based on the existing English-language curriculum, this resource also includes materials to help teachers reach out to new immigrants as they try to settle into their new homes. The teacher becomes a cultural link between the learner and the new community.

The Roots & Connections resource has been piloted in four rural communities across Alberta with great success. One of the pilot community teachers said that the resource is easy to use and is a great way to introduce rural communities to new Albertans. Learners were able to ask for community services directly, talk to community members, and described gaining a sense of confidence over time.

Roots & Connections also has the potential to contribute to the development of stronger communities by increasing everyone's awareness about the cultural, social, and linguistic adjustments that newcomers need to make. Strong and diverse communities are an important part of the fabric of our province. I'm very glad to see that a resource such as this one is being built as it will strengthen our communities. The government of Alberta is a proud supporter of this innovative project to support new immigrants as they build roots in our beautiful province. Roots & Connections materials are available online at www.norquest.ca.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Inner-city Community Renewal

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to recognize the city of Edmonton for their decision to form the recently announced Community Sustainability Task Force. The task force, which includes the hon. Minister of Education, will recommend solutions pursuant to the long-term sustainability and vitality of Edmonton's mature inner-city communities.

Mr. Speaker, the unique challenges faced by older inner-city communities are not that different in Edmonton than they are in Calgary. Many of these communities are located in my constituency of Calgary-North Hill. These communities have seen significant transformations as they have matured, including changing demographics and an aging built environment. The services and supports they require are in many cases different from those of newer communities as well as those of communities in smaller cities.

Managing these pressures and, likewise, embracing the opportunity to create a sustainable future for these communities must have the support of all levels of government but, most importantly, must engage community members in the process of reinvigorating their own communities. Too often the different levels of government and their various departments operate in silos without the necessary collaboration amongst themselves and with communities. Mr. Speaker, this tends to stifle innovative ideas developed by communities and discourage engagement. In the end these communities don't care what level of government is delivering services. They just want to be supported in transforming their community into the best that it can be for them and their families.

For mature, inner-city communities within my constituency these challenges are unique, and the solutions are not always obvious. The standard policy approach does not always work. Sometimes we have to reassess current practices and think creatively. Recognizing this fact is the first step to charting a course for the future of our inner-city communities. It is my hope, and I would encourage that the city council in Calgary keep a close eye on the task force findings and perhaps consider forming a similar task force to work in conjunction with Edmonton's initiative.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

World's Longest Hockey Game

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and recognize and congratulate the participants in the world's longest hockey game, which finished on Monday. The game, organized by Dr. Brent Saik, took place continuously over a period of 10 days in Strathcona county. Dr. Saik lost both his father, Terry, and his wife, Susan, to cancer and has hosted this event in order to support the Alberta Cancer Foundation.

I'm sure many members are familiar with the game, which first took place back in 2003, and it's been held four times now. For 240 hours straight 40 players battled the elements in this outdoor game. This year, the longest game yet, the final score totalled 2,067 for Team White and 2,005 for Team Blue. The fundraising goal was set at $1 million, and the proceeds from the game are going to a new linear accelerator, which is used in radiation treatment at the Cross Cancer Institute here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the players, referees, and over 1,000 volunteers for their determination and selflessness. Many of them fought injuries, frostbite, and fatigue over the course of this game. The exemplary efforts by these individuals remind us of the outstanding citizens that reside throughout our province. Thanks again to the participants in the world's longest hockey game, and I hope it continues to be held in future years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Property Rights

Mr. Hinman: Thomas Hobbes is an early political theorist who shifted away from medieval thinking by asserting that to be legitimate, the government had to recognize individuals' rights and obtain the consent of the population. He feared disorder, though, to such a degree that he wanted the government to be all-powerful as long as they kept the people safe.

John Locke disagreed with Hobbes on one important point. He believed that we form government not only to keep us safe but to protect our property. In fact, he went so far as to say: "Government has no other end, but the preservation of property." For John Locke, then, when a government is confiscating property, citizens have a right of revolution.

Frédéric Bastiat eloquently stated: "Life, liberty, and property do not exist because men have made laws. On the contrary, it was the fact that life, liberty, and property existed beforehand that caused men to make laws in the first place."

This check on the Crown's right to confiscate land started with the Magna Carta in 1215. It was established across society in Britain's glorious revolution of 1688. John Locke's political writings established that our inalienable rights, including the right to property, are considered by many as the philosophical foundation of constitutional democracy and were very influential in the French and American revolutions. In all these cases there was a political fight against the ruling class for thinking it didn't have to respect the property rights of individuals.

The government cannot extinguish property rights for the sake of pursuing some executive notion for good order. This truth was established 800 years ago in England, but this government still hasn't learned the lesson, which it clearly demonstrated in bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. Only a simmering revolution across the prairies this winter finally caught this government's attention, but like for James II in 1688 it's too late for this tired old dynasty to keep its hold on power. Albertans need not worry, though. A government that understands and will protect their rights is ready to take over.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is clearly out of touch with the priorities of Albertans. They're concerned about health care, yet the throne speech offered only fine sentiments and yesterday's news. Health care is continuing to crumble around this government's incompetence, yet their flagship bill is to establish an advisory council to expand Asian markets. To the Premier: how can the Premier say he's representing the interests of Albertans when the legislative priorities are so far removed from what Albertans need?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to once again offer my sincerest appreciation to the hon. member as Leader of the Official Opposition. I know that he'll be stepping down at the end of this session as leader. I know that he brought a lot of passion to the Assembly on a daily basis, and I want to thank him for that.

Dr. Swann: This is question period. Let's try that again, Mr. Speaker. Let's try that again.

Can the Premier say he's representing the interests of Albertans when the legislative priorities are so far removed from the current crisis in health care that most Albertans care about?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our priorities are correct. With respect to this premise, which I definitely disagree with, that the opposition keeps talking about, that there's a crisis in health care, there isn't. Clearly, 62 per cent of Albertans are very satisfied with the health care they're receiving. This is supported both by the Environics poll and also by the Health Quality Council. On the other part, in terms of the Asia council, ladies and gentlemen, we have to find a way of paying for future expenses and social services and health care, and that's why we have to grow our economic pie.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, to the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the Environics poll did show that two-thirds of Albertans feel the health care system is in crisis, and management is the problem. We would like to see some acknowledgement of that by this government. Is the government so out of ideas that instead of fixing the crisis, the Premier is creating yet another council with plum political appointments in overseas offices?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to health, as I said again, it's not in crisis. I think 36 per cent or so of Albertans had concern about health. You know, that is a very small percentage given that constantly, every day in every doggone paper there is something negative about health care delivery in this province, yet thousands – thousands – receive health care in this province on a daily basis. At least 360 babies are born, cardiac surgery, the most recent innovative cancer treatment in the province of Alberta. You don't see one – one – of those stories in the newspaper.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Second main question.

Health Care Services Centralization

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, we have low expectations from the government for this session. While health care remains in crisis, the government has no plan to fix it, and the Premier has demonstrated his lack of understanding today. Health care is the Alberta Liberals' primary focus, and again two out of three Albertans believe the health care system is in a state of crisis. Better management is needed. Again to the Premier: how can Albertans believe that they will not have to wait 20 hours for the emergency room or fight to get a family physician when you have failed Alberta so far in the health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, you'll find that in some of the comments people are looking to the management. They are satisfied that with the five-year funding commitment that this government has made, Alberta Health Services can plan and can plan very well in terms of increasing the number of doctors, increasing the number of nurses. They already have opened up a considerable number of beds. Even our emergency docs said there is improvement in the emergency service, and it came from the original doctor, who said that we needed to improve. Now he said: there is improvement, and it's measured.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, that just shows what you can accomplish in the short term by throwing money at problems. The centralization of health delivery does not work, and it's putting patients at risk. When will the Premier return to local control of the system so that the patients can get better care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government is not going back to 200 hospital boards like we had in the past, annual conventions of 1,200 people getting together. Those were expenses that did not go to front-line services. Every dollar that was saved in terms of elimination of the health boards went to front-line services. Just go out and talk to the physicians. I visited the Maz centre. I was over at the diabetes centre. Every physician that I talked to said that there was improved health care delivery because of one health care board.

Dr. Swann: Well, I can't miss the opportunity to say, Mr. Speaker, that we overspent by over a billion dollars in the transition, Mr. Premier, and you well know that.

In addition, the government exploded the Cancer Board, the Mental Health Board, and AADAC two years ago and are only now putting forward an addictions, mental health, and cancer strategy. How can the Premier defend this mismanagement?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the $1.3 billion that the member is referring to is simply the money that was given to Alberta Health Services after sitting down with them and talking and saying: what is the amount of money that will clearly reflect the needs and the population? We did that, and then we added 6 per cent to that amount plus paid off all of the deficits. That $1.3 billion came from the operations of government reallocated to health care, which is the number one priority.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Secular Public Education in Greater St. Albert

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents in Morinville have no option but to send their children to Roman Catholic schools, where religion informs every aspect of what they learn. A group of concerned parents want a public secular education option in their town. To the Minister of Education: does the minister think it's acceptable that there is no option for secular public education for parents and students in an entire town?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that parents in Morinville filed an appeal with your office some four weeks ago, what is the status of this appeal, and will you be responding to the St. Albert school board in this regard?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we have in the Greater St. Albert Catholic public board a bit of an anomaly in the province. It's the one area of the province where the minority faith board is actually the Protestant board and the public board is stated to be a Catholic board. But there's no question that as the public board they have an obligation to provide educational opportunities in all ranges to all students in that area. So while it is stated to be a Catholic board, it is, in fact, the overarching board for that area, and it has the responsibility to deal with the issues and concerns that have been raised.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regardless of the fact that this anomaly is only happening in one jurisdiction in Alberta, will your new education act contain a solution for these residents of Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this isn't a situation for the education act. It's pretty clear in the School Act as it is now and will be clear in the education act going forward that local boards have roles and responsibilities and have to operate within and fulfill those roles and responsibilities. They have a responsibility in this area. As I understand it, they're engaged in discussion with the individuals involved. I've been apprised of those discussions. I've talked to the parties involved as well as the school board, and they will have to come to an appropriate resolution to provide the appropriate schooling opportunities for those children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Property Rights

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a long-standing debate over whether property rights exist apart from anything government might do or whether they are granted by a government that has to balance many considerations. Personally I agree with Frédéric Bastiat, who said: "Life, liberty, and property do not exist because men have made laws. On the contrary, it was the fact that life, liberty, and property existed beforehand that caused men to make laws in the first place." To the Minister of SRD: which perspective is driving the revisions that we've been promised to the existing land-use act?

Mr. Knight: No. Categorically, no. What's driving our decision to look at some change with respect to the legislation that we have in place, quite frankly, is listening to Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you. If the government agreed with Mr. Bastiat, as I do, the property rights are natural and could not be extinguished by any government act. Bills 19, 24, 36, and 50 would never have crossed their minds in the first place. To the Minister of SRD: do you and your caucus still believe, as you obviously did when you passed these laws, that property is something to be arbitrarily granted and revoked without legal recourse but at the discretion of cabinet and its political judgment?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, nothing in that dissertation has anything at all to do with the legislation that we're working with on behalf of Albertans. [interjections]

Mr. Hinman: Yeah, total disbelief in the problem.

This government is trying to have it both ways. They're trying to earn political points by fixing an unjust law without admitting that it's unjust laws. We've heard the SRD minister scold radio show callers for daring to suggest that these laws threaten property rights, but the government is now scrambling to present smoke-screen amendments. Alberta landowners deserve better than a half-hearted political fix-up. They deserve an apology. To the Minister of SRD: will he apologize on his government's behalf for forcing these iron-fisted laws on landowners and admit that the reason he is changing . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that Albertans would expect any kind of an apology from any government member or from the government itself for looking forward the next 30, 40, 50 years in order to put a proper plan in place to have a conservation effort, to have the plans that we need to build a stronger Alberta for Albertans' future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Health Care Services (continued)

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Without taking away from my question, I would like to express my appreciation to the Premier for his service. [some applause]

The Speaker: You started 35 seconds ago. You've got about five seconds.

Mr. Mason: Nice try, you guys. Okay.

A poll last week showed that almost two-thirds of Albertans feel that our health care system is in a state of crisis. Albertans know they cannot trust this Tory government with their health care system. Mr. Speaker, will the Premier admit that after nearly 40 years in power the PC Party has failed to meet the health care needs and expectations of Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the opposition leader – oh, and thank you for the kind remarks. I don't know if you mean them or not, but thank you.

With respect to health care in this province as I talked to other health ministers, talked to other Premiers, so many are looking to what we have already accomplished in the province of Alberta in terms of making a five-year commitment to health care and the dollars that we've approved.

Secondly, a five-year plan was put forward, that's already showing very positive results. The minister can explain further what's included in the five-year plan, both in cancer treatment and also in mental health.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, 60 per cent of those surveyed believed that it is mismanagement, not a lack of funding, that has created this crisis in our health care system. This government has let Albertans down. I'd like to ask the Premier if he thinks that after nearly 40 years in power starting a five-year plan four months ago is an adequate response to the crisis that Albertans are seeing in the health care system.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, we can make all kinds of jokes about health care, especially about what you've seen lately in the papers, obviously: if it doesn't bleed, it doesn't lead. But I'm very confident that we have one of the best health care systems in Canada. It'll continue to improve: new technology, new medication, more people working in the system delivering health care. The new technology that has been introduced in Alberta is simply outstanding, having world-class researchers here doing research in virology, all of those things.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, the first mechanical heart was installed here at the Maz just a couple of weeks ago.

Mr. Mason: Well, that's wonderful, Mr. Speaker, but tell that to people in emergency rooms that are waiting there for 24 hours and not getting care.

I want to ask the Premier if he thinks that it's an adequate response to start now or start, rather, a few months ago to fix health care in this province when this government has been in power for nearly 40 years?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this party has not been in power. You know, I don't know where he gets "power." We're here as the Alberta Progressive Conservative Party, that has had the trust and confidence of Albertans for it will be 40 years this year. But it's not power; it's a privilege and a responsibility that's given to us by the power of the vote of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Southwest Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a very special natural area in southwest Calgary called the Weaselhead. While it's not in my constituency, it and the adjoining Glenmore park are close by, and many of my constituents enjoy both green spaces. You know, a city of more than a million people needs to hang onto all the green space it can, yet Alberta Transportation held an open house yesterday at which it proposed as one of several options to push the southwest ring road right through that green space. To the Minister of Transportation: will the minister assure us that this very, very bad option will be taken off the table?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have got to tell you that that open house last night was great. It was great to have a lot of people there. We don't usually get that many people out at open houses.

We're doing a study right now about where would be best for our provincial highway to run through the southwest side of Calgary. Mr. Speaker, we need that consultation, and we need the input of all those people, and I thank them very much for showing up. But there are absolutely no decisions being made yet at this time. It's all in a study situation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: since my constituency is in the firing line for a lot of additional commuter traffic anticipated on that southwest ring road, that will cut through our communities to get to and from the downtown core, why does the functional planning study ignore that impact?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think we're ignoring any of the impacts. Right now we're open to all suggestions that are possible. I want to be clear. Again, there are no decisions that have been made yet on where it's going to go. It's very, very important for us to try to find a place for a provincial highway, but it's not our job to get rid of all of Calgary's congestion. That's a municipal responsibility, to plan their roads internally.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that was the sound of a buck being passed.

Here's a suggestion. Again to the minister: given the Lakeview Community Association's comment that "the sole conclusion that can be drawn from the [functional planning study] is that there are no good routes for a new eight lane expressway through south west Calgary" – I'll be glad to table that letter at the appropriate time – will the minister take all the options off the table for a thorough and proper rethink?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we haven't got through the thinking we're doing now to go do a rethink. What we want to do is get all of our open houses done. We want to get all of the public input in there, and we have professionals looking after that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Oil Tanker Transportation on the West Coast

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very concerned about Bill C-606, a private member's bill in front of the House of Commons. This bill could seriously restrict our ability to transport western Canadian crude to Asian markets. If Bill C-606 is passed, it would ban oil tanker traffic off the north coast of B.C. This could have disastrous consequences for Alberta's economy and, in fact, western Canada. My question is to the Premier. What are you and the other western Premiers doing about this issue?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I share the member's concern about this private member's bill that's before the House of Commons. It has serious implications for Alberta but also for B.C. and Saskatchewan, limiting the growth of our economy, which will limit dramatically the export of our natural resources, oil and natural gas, to Asian markets. I have with Gordon Campbell and Brad Wall, three Premiers, signed letters to our Prime Minister and also to all of the leaders of the opposition. It is under Canada's New West Partnership logo, and we're all asking the Members of Parliament to not pass this bill because, once again, it will have serious implications for us. I'll table them at the most appropriate time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental relations. This private member's bill unfairly targets western Canada. Meanwhile the eastern coast is not mentioned. What is our government doing to advance Alberta's interest to be able to export oil off the west coast of Canada and to make sure that western Canada is not unfairly treated while the eastern coast can carry on with its business as usual uninhibited and continue to receive shipments of oil from foreign countries like Venezuela?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right to be concerned about this, and our Premier has identified the first strategy that we have effected. Under the New West Partnership the three prairie provinces have 9 million people and $550 billion in collective GDP. If this Bill C-606 was effective, we would cut ourselves off from markets of more than 4 billion people and several billion dollars of capacity.

First of all, the New West Partnership . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we have to proceed.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

PDD Administrative Review Report

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The administrative review of the persons with developmental disabilities program done by KPMG was delivered to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports in September. To the minister. It's been five months of hardship and anxiety that people on PDD have been holding their breath waiting for this report to be released. Will the minister table the report in the House before this week is through?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the PDD administrative review was done by KPMG, and I have received the report. It's a very important report, but it is an administrative report. It will not affect the people who are receiving supports from PDD, but it will help to improve the system, to make it more efficient and to make it just a better system for delivering supports to our people on PDD. I do intend to release that report.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, delivery will affect PDD people.

This report cost taxpayers $185,000. What is the value to those vulnerable Albertans for those dollars if it's just going to be a paperweight on your desk? What is the progress of the review of this report within the ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've said that I will release the report. It is a very important report. It's going through the process. We're studying the recommendations. We will have responses to the recommendations, and when it has gone through the process, I will be releasing that report.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Well, I do believe that there probably should've been a time frame on when that report would be finished.

How can PDD-supported people believe that they're a priority for your ministry when this report has taken so long and they have no confidence that their budgets will not be cut?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the PDD community is a very high priority. They're a very important community. It's a very sensitive community, and if we make changes to this community in the way we administer the program, not how the programs affect our PDD clients, then we want to make sure we do it right. So I don't think we should be rushing anything as important as this. And I will be releasing that report.

Workplace Bullying and Harassment

Mr. Benito: Mr. Speaker, it would seem that we continue to hear more about workplace harassment and bullying. My question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What options are available to a worker if he is being bullied or harassed by his employer or other co-workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, bullying and/or harassment is not currently included in our employment standards and/or occupational health and safety legislation. However, that does not mean that this ministry would not get involved in a situation where such allegations occur. Any and all workers who perceive to have been harassed or bullied at the workplace are encouraged to work with their employers to resolve the issue but also are encouraged to call our employment standards office, where we can then advise the workers of the options that they may have to address that issue.

Mr. Benito: To the same minister: if the employee reports a complaint about bullying and harassment, what level of confidentiality will it have so that there will be no negative effect to the subject employee?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All reports filed to this ministry and this government relative to complaints of employment standards are treated as confidential documents and fall under the purview of legislation in Alberta that protects the privacy of individuals who deal with the government of Alberta, the same as if such a report is filed further to any law enforcement agency. That information would be collected for the purposes of investigation and treated accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: in the event workplace harassment leads to workplace violence, is that a point when occupational health and safety officials become involved?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that would be. Yes. All employers in this province are required to do a risk assessment in their places of employment. If there are actions among employees that may lead to potential violence, that risk is to be assessed and treated accordingly. Also, there are provisions under the Criminal Code of Canada that would address any threats of violence or harm to one another. Lastly, if any of this harassment or bullying happens on the basis of prohibitive grounds under Alberta legislation, the Human Rights Commission can also look into the matter and investigate it accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

TALON Database

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Through FOIP this government has already given law enforcement expansive powers to collect investigative information, but the creation of TALON exceeds anything we've seen before. TALON allows law enforcement agencies to share speculation, gossip, and opinions as well as information on any citizen who's had contact with the police, including a witness. To the Solicitor General: what possible reason could the minister have for subjecting decent, law-abiding citizens to speculation and gossip by any user of the TALON system?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I love it so much when the opposition reacts, outraged by rumours that they started in the first place. So let me get the story straight here. The collection of police information is already governed by the FOIP Act in this province and overseen by the Privacy Commissioner. This new database, which is not new, by the way, has been talked about since 2006, has been in budgets and capital plans ever since, and collects the same information we've always been collecting. The Privacy Commissioner has been involved in its development. We are now going to go through a privacy impact assessment.

The Speaker: We'll move to the hon. member now.

Ms Blakeman: An impact assessment which is not being released to the public, by the way. And these are combining a number of databases together. That is for the first time.

Back to the Solicitor General: will private security personnel have access to this TALON database?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, reacting to another rumour that they started. The privacy impact assessment will, in fact, be released to the public, and we said that to the media already.

Back to the original reason. Any review of a serious criminal case – the Bernardo review, for example, recommended first that police agencies need to share information in order to protect public safety and do better police work. That's what we are reacting to for the safety of our communities in Alberta.

Ms Blakeman: Didn't answer the private security question.

Okay. Another question. Back to the Solicitor General. In the 1990s parents were encouraged to get their children fingerprinted as a safety measure. I'd like to know from the Solicitor General if those prints will be part of the TALON system.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the depths that this member is attempting to go to to garner fear in the population out there are quite astounding. The fact of the matter is that we're collecting the same information that we've always collected, governed, as it always was, by the FOIP legislation. The privacy impact assessment, the member knows very well, will identify who can and who can't access the database. All these questions will be answered and publicly released.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Red Seal Certificates

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It has been brought to my attention by some of my constituents from Edmonton-Ellerslie that Albertans who have recently graduated to become journeypersons have not had their red seal certificate signed in spite of graduating back in December. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Have the red seal certificates fallen through the cracks because of recent changes in the department?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for asking me my first question. Truly, it is an important question, and I'd like to assure you that there has been no delay in getting out the red seal certificates. Our journeymen are extremely important to us in Alberta, and we work very, very hard – in fact, during the time between the former minister stepping down and my being sworn in, the minister for IIR signed off on over 600 of the red seal certificates.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: what are you doing to help apprentices who might lose out on job opportunities or pay because of these delays?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Good question, and thank you. This is really an important issue, and we want to ensure that nobody in Alberta misses an opportunity for employment because of the red seal certificate. What we have is a phone line that's available, and the minute that all of the paperwork is in place and they're approved, the journeyman or his employer can call and get certification and verification so that they can go forward with their work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: what is the typical timeline for approving these kinds of certificates?

Mr. Weadick: I'd like to thank the member for that question as well. We do approximately 10,000 of these red seal certificates each and every year. It takes approximately six to eight weeks to do this particular piece of work. We must verify the work records, the schooling records, and everything for each employee to ensure that they have completed all of the requirements. Occasionally there is information that comes through that's incomplete, so it takes a little longer, but typically in six to eight weeks we'll get the red seal certificates completed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Capital Infrastructure Planning

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are questioning the government's priorities, for instance on infrastructure. Old schools overflow and our new hospitals stand empty. It was interesting that on Monday on Alberta Primetime the Minister of Education made a startling admission, that they actually have a priority list. My question to the minister is simply this: will he make this secret priority list public to all Albertans?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely no secret at all what the priorities of Albertans are with respect to schools. Every single school jurisdiction across the province puts in a three-year capital plan, which shows what they need for new schools and what they need for major modernizations. We take those plans and put together bundles based on health and safety needs, based on accommodation needs, based on charter requirements and other requirements. Those are put into the capital plan in process, and a priority list is established. Now, the priorities do change from time to time, so it's not that prudent to put out a list to say, "You're the next on the list for a school," because if a health or safety issue comes up, one would expect the government would adapt.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister did not answer the question and given the fact that I don't know why it is so difficult for lawyers to say either yes or no, will you make public the list so that all Albertans can see the list? At this point it is not public. Will this government be open and transparent and make it public? Yes or no?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member was earlier in question period. There was a very appropriate and direct question asked, and there was a very appropriate and direct answer given. It was no. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo can verify it, and if he doesn't, they can certainly peruse the transcripts, the Hansard, to see that that's there. If it's an appropriate question for a yes or no answer, it gets a yes or a no from me. In this particular case it's very clear that there are a number of high priorities for schools across the province.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, Albertans just saw that answer, which is a nonanswer, so I'm going to give the minister one more time. On Alberta Primetime you said: we have a list. Will you make that list public to all Albertans: to Alberta families, to teachers, to everyone?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it serves no purpose to put out a priority list that changes from time to time, because what it does is that it accomplishes exactly what the hon. member's seatmate has been trying to do. The hon. member's seatmate argues that we should balance the budget by stretching out the capital spending over a number of years, and then in the next breath asks for four or five schools for his constituency. And what does he want to do? He wants to take them from somebody else's constituency, from somebody else's community. What he wants to do is to create a priority for his community balanced against somebody else's priority. It is much more prudent for us to plan on a comprehensive basis and be able to adapt that plan as necessary as those priorities continue to change.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One year ago this month this government abruptly froze the minimum wage for thousands of workers in this province. The Minister of Employment and Immigration said that the minimum wage formula had to be reviewed, but a parliamentary committee reported in October that the process should be left the way it is. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: how can this government claim in yesterday's Speech from the Throne that helping workers is a priority when the government has allowed another year-long minimum wage holiday at the expense of workers?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, judging by the preamble of the question, it is abundantly obvious that that particular member has never read the report because the committee, frankly, did not ask this minister to leave the minimum wage the way it is but made seven recommendations on how to change the minimum wage. I would encourage that member to read the report first before he asks the questions.

Mr. Chase: Well, having written an addendum to the report, talking about a living wage as well as a minimum wage, I think I'm more familiar with the report than you, having sat in that committee. We put forward recommendations which you have not yet acted upon. Will the minister implement the standing committee's recommendation and swiftly boost the minimum wage by a meagre 25 cents?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, not only have I received the report, but I have read the report thoroughly, and I'm reviewing it. The report is not recommending a living wage. The report is recommending an increase of the minimum wage, and it has actually quantified exactly how much. I am reviewing this right now. The report will be going through government process, and I will be responding to that report accordingly as I do realize the importance of this matter.

Mr. Chase: It's been two years since $8.80 was first established.

Will the minister commit also, as the committee recommended, to introducing legislation in this session to write the minimum wage formula into law so that it's free from his or any other minister's tinkering?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, again I'm led to conclude that the member never read the report. The report was just drafted and handed to my office some three months ago, not two years ago, so I'm not sure what this member is referring to.

Going back to my initial response, I have just received the report. I am reviewing the report, and I will be responding to this Legislature accordingly as I do realize that this is a very important and serious matter to people who actually earn a minimum wage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the province of Alberta is aiming to seek new markets for our products and to strengthen trade relations with Asia and while we are expecting to be about 77,000 workers short in the next 10 years, as clearly stated in the Speech from the Throne yesterday, the federal government is reducing the skilled worker stream by 20 per cent. What is the Minister of Employment and Immigration doing to make sure that his federal counterparts understand the negative impact on the province of Alberta?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, let me try to address this, Mr. Speaker, by highlighting the severity of this problem. This year is the first year that baby boomers will start retiring. Our national population growth in this province and in this country is slightly above zero. Our economy is showing significant signs of recovery, with oil over a hundred dollars a barrel and new upgraders being announced, and our appetite for services is insatiable. What does that mean? That means that Canada and particularly Alberta will be short on skilled workers and unskilled workers, as a matter of fact, for many years to come. It is incumbent upon us as government to address this issue with policies that are reflective of the problem.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last 10 years temporary foreign workers have done a great job for the economy of this province. As of April 1 of this year the new federal immigration regulations would require these workers, after being in Canada for four years, to leave and return to Canada after four years. What is the Minister of Employment and Immigration doing to make sure that these workers remain in their jobs now that they are trained and they can speak the language?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I've asked my parliamentary assistant, the Member for Calgary-Mackay, to look at that federal temporary foreign worker program. It's becoming abundantly obvious that what Canada needs is not temporary foreign workers who are becoming permanently temporary foreign workers, but we need a permanent workforce for many years to come. As minister of employment for this province it is my role to negotiate with Ottawa to make sure that we don't end up with permanently temporary workers but have the workforce needed to grow the economy not only in this province but in the rest of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. What is the social and economic impact on our province caused by this transient workforce?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that's a really good question. Well, transient communities would be one answer, individuals who do not purchase houses, cars, who don't invest in our economy but send remittances back home. There is a social impact on families over here, but just having come back from the Philippines, I had the opportunity to see the other, those families who are left behind by temporary foreign workers. The impact is economic and moral, and it's immense. It's our job to address it while we're addressing our priority, the Canadian economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Calgary Airport Trail Tunnel

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday this government spoke about the importance of Asian markets. The Speech from the Throne highlighted the necessity of improved direct air services to these markets. However, this government has failed to support essential infrastructure that will greatly improve access to the Calgary airport. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier agree with the Liberal policy that access to the airport is vital to improve air services?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think just a little while ago we explained that there are provincial highways, and there are municipal roads. I think the airport tunnel, if Calgary decides that that's what it should be – it's about local elected officials and local priorities. Those elected officials have got to make the decision about where their priorities are. They've received $1.5 billion from this government since 2005. I believe that if they want to move ahead with that, then we've already supplied a lot of money that they could put towards that tunnel.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's not answering my question. I'm asking for a commitment from the provincial government toward the airport trail tunnel.

To the Premier again: given that with the proposed airport expansion the maximum number of flights will increase by 40 per cent, why has the Premier failed to throw his support behind the Calgary airport tunnel?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I've heard the Premier mention that his support is behind the tunnel. We support these municipalities greatly. But I want to add one more thing. We have two international airports in Alberta, and they pay over $20 million in rent. When there's that kind of money going to our federal government, shouldn't they be looking towards the federal government to maybe help fix up an airport?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm talking about the provincial share of the cost of the airport tunnel. To the Premier again: will this Premier support the future of Alberta's economy and build this tunnel, leaving a legacy that will be remembered by Albertans forever?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I absolutely don't understand what doesn't go through this hon. member's head. Our Premier does support all the infrastructure across this province in all municipalities. Calgary alone, as I said, got $1.5 billion, $163 million this year alone. Let me tell you that we are there to support all of the infrastructure across all municipalities in Alberta, and I hope they get their project done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Affordable Housing

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. This minister has stated publicly that projects approved on his watch must consult with the local community. This minister has also said publicly that he respects the privacy of those living in the units funded by his department. So how can this minister explain this obvious contradiction, and would he admit that this confusion has fuelled the concerns Albertans have with his programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's going to be very tough to top the last answer, but I'll do my best.

It's very important to our ministry that we actually work with local management bodies. We work with municipalities, local councillors, local community groups. At the same time, it's also important that we respect the privacy of individuals who are accessing our services either through affordable housing or through our homelessness programs. It's not a crime to be homeless or to be in affordable housing, and we want to make sure it stays that way so people can transition from not being housed to being housed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This minister has also been quick to criticize homeless policies in other cities by labelling them as ghettos. Now, our city does not want to be blighted with ghettos, and our fellow Albertans who hit hard times do not want to raise their families in ghettos. I ask the minister: what alternatives is his department offering?

Mr. Denis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm actually very proud of our record the last few years. We have our affordable housing unit and homeless unit construction at under $100,000 per door. We are also talking to the city of Calgary, who wants a new policy regarding secondary suites. I believe this should be decided at the local level. We will continue to work with Mayor Nenshi on this because what works for Calgary may not also work in other areas of the province, so the local input is very important.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nonprofits serving the homeless have been squeezed in this recession as these agencies are tasked with doing more with less over a larger geographic area. How does this minister justify his policy decision for spreading the homeless population around a city as a better deal for those assisting with the most vulnerable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this member was talking about communities and about community involvement as well, and that's very important. She also mentioned ghettos. The first way you can create a ghetto is by the overconcentration of homelessness and affordable housing in a particular neighbourhood. Homelessness isn't just the responsibility of one neighbourhood; it is the responsibility of the entire province. That is the difference between managing the problem and ending the problem, like we will.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Syncrude Joint Venture Royalties

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the latest annual report from the provincial government it indicates on page 45 that "certain producers," including the Syncrude joint venture and Suncor, "have disputed the basis of royalty calculation for bitumen royalties.” My first question is to the minister of finance, and congratulations on your new appointment, sir. Could you give us an update on how those negotiations are going and if we have given any money back to Suncor and the Syncrude joint venture, please?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Maybe if I could, I would try to answer the question, although I can’t probably answer it to the extent that the member would like me to. All I can say is that negotiations are continuing with both companies, and I’m hopeful that we’re in a position, I would say, in a matter of weeks, certainly not many months, to have a resolution to that issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that. My question is again to the minister of finance. Why, then, did this provincial government, if we’re to believe this minister, rebate $104 million just before Christmas to Suncor on a royalty dispute that relates to this item on page 45 of your annual report at the same time that we have a billion-dollar budget deficit in this province?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it’s about a question of fairness. There are projections that are made. There are royalties collected. At the end of the day we want no more than our fair share, and if companies have oversubmitted, then that would be returned. It would be exactly the same as the hon. member filing his taxes. If there are changes to it, they’re fixed, and it’s exactly done in a fair and transparent way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of finance. It’s not an issue of fairness. Given that the Conservative Premier of Newfoundland, at the time when prices were similar for oil products in both Alberta and Newfoundland, negotiated a $28-a-barrel royalty, is it fair to Albertans that this government has negotiated a $7 royalty for the same crude joint venture in Fort McMurray? How is that fairness?

Mr. Snelgrove: It’s really unfair that they’ve pulled numbers out of the air to satisfy their argument. The simple fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the royalty regime in Alberta has put Albertans back to work. It has attracted investment from all over the world to come and develop responsibly one of the biggest collections of hydrocarbons in the world. I know the hon. member wants his constituents to have jobs. That’s what we want, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Wi-Fi in Schools

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some residents of my constituency have raised concerns about the safety of Wi-Fi in schools. To the Minister of Education: has your department investigated the safety of the use of Wi-Fi networks in the school environment?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it certainly has been brought to my attention that a number of citizens are concerned about Wi-Fi in schools. Even in my own constituency there’s been an issue with one of our schools. Staff in our department have liaised with the Alberta chief medical officer to make sure the most recent available information is available to school authorities. Heath Canada has indicated that the amount of radio frequency radiation from wireless Internet devices is thousands of times below the limits for public exposure, and the specified limits for public exposure apply to everyone, including children, allowing for continuous exposure. So, yes, we are continuing to monitor the recommendations made by a number of health organizations on wireless use. In addition, we’ve prepared a fact sheet for school boards relative to this particular topic.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Given that there are additional concerns with Wi-Fi in schools and the fact that young children are allegedly the most vulnerable to harm from Wi-Fi frequencies, does the minister’s research confirm an additional risk to school-aged children?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. The facts would be, as I know them, that 20 minutes on a mobile phone call is equivalent to a year in a Wi-Fi enabled classroom. Twenty minutes. Everyone is exposed to similar frequency from cellphone towers and cordless phones. Everyone is also exposed to lower frequencies from FM radio and television, and those lower frequencies, apparently, are absorbed up to five times more by the body than frequencies from Wi-Fi antennas. Signals from Wi-Fi antennas are very low power at both the computer and the access points, about a hundred milliwatts, thousands of times below international standards. The World Health Organization has concluded that there is no convincing scientific evidence that weak radio frequency signals from base stations and wireless networks cause adverse health effects.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the same minister. Do individual school authorities have the jurisdiction to allow or disallow the use of Wi-Fi in schools, or is this purely a departmental matter, which I understand you’re not prepared to take any action on?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, everything to do with what happens in schools is in the purview of the school boards and schools themselves, including whether or not they install Wi-Fi or other computer technology. Clearly, this is a matter for each school board to deal with if there’s anything to deal with at all.

I understand citizens’ concerns that have been raised. The CBC had a program on this issue, and it has a lot of parents concerned. I hear from parents all the time, and my response is always consistent. There is no credible evidence that our department has become aware of, talking with appropriate health officials, that Wi-Fi affects or is a problem for children or for anyone, for that matter. However, it is up to the school boards to deal with what happens in their schools.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. Eighteen different members were recognized for participation. There were 106 questions and responses.

The only thing noteworthy that the chair shall make comment on is bringing members’ attention once again to the document that was agreed to by House leaders and signed and sent to me on March 4, 2010, and then followed up with a statement by me in the House on Wednesday, March 10, 2010, that there are no preambles to supplementary questions. Those who signed this document should bring it to the attention of all the members of their caucuses. Today there were some very, very clear and obvious violations of that, which will not be the norm for the course. If individuals want to sign documents, their signatures must mean something.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 and having provided to your office the appropriate notice, I wish to inform you and the Assembly that upon the completion of the daily Routine, I'll move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to hold an emergency debate on a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the immediate need for legislation regarding financial reporting by individuals who are seeking the leadership of a registered political party.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Bill 2 Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2011

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move first reading of Bill 2, Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2011.

The proposed amendments to this important legislation will provide for the protection of those affected by family violence by adding offence and penalty provisions for breaching protection orders. The change will hold accountable those who violate protection orders and make Alberta's penalties for such violations among the strongest in Canada. The proposed amendments will also clarify processes and streamline administration of the act by the courts.

I urge all hon. members to support speedy passage of the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 2 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Bill 3 Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2011

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 3, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2011.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, if passed, would replace the current practice of geology and the practice of geophysics with a new consolidated practice of geoscience. Reflecting this proposed consolidation, Bill 3 would rename the act to the Engineering and Geoscience Professions Act and rename the association which administers these professions to the Association of Professional Engineers and Geoscientists of Alberta, or APEGA, with one G.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon has moved first reading of Bill 3. At this point in time, hon. member, the wording that I have for the name of this bill differs from what your wording is. You said Bill 3 would be called the Engineering and Geoscience Professions Act?

Mr. Rogers: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It would be called the Engineering and Geoscience Professions Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 3 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Bill 4 Securities Amendment Act, 2011

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I request leave to introduce Bill 4, the Securities Amendment Act, 2011.

This bill will fill regulatory gaps and further harmonize and streamline Alberta's securities laws. They will improve investor protection for Alberta investors and help maintain investor confidence in Alberta's capital markets. Bill 4 gives the Alberta Securities Commission the ability to respond more quickly to changing market conditions like financial crises and adjust things like minimum rating investment requirements.

Mr. Speaker, I move first reading of Bill 4, the Securities Amendment Act, 2011, and I urge all members to support its passage.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 4 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Bill 5 Notice to the Attorney General Act

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce first reading of Bill 5, the Notice to the Attorney General Act.

Mr. Speaker, the Notice to the Attorney General Act will consolidate and update notice requirements, which ensure parties notify the Attorney General about certain matters. This new legislation consolidates notice requirements from other pieces of legislation to ensure that the Attorney General is informed about matters brought before Alberta courts and tribunals that may require the Attorney General's involvement to protect the interests of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 5 also will clarify the requirements for adequate and timely notice to be given to the Attorney General and include regulation-making powers to ensure that this legislation stays up to date with evolving litigation trends. It will also include a new provision to ensure the Attorney General is notified about allegations of inadequate consultation with aboriginal peoples.

Mr. Speaker, I move first reading of Bill 5 and encourage all members to support its passage.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 5 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce first reading of Bill 6, the Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011.

The Alberta Rules of Court, which govern practice and procedure in the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta, went through a major revision which was completed in 2008. Those new rules came into effect November 1, 2010. The new rules are easier to understand and help Albertans involved in civil matters to better navigate the court system. Bill 6, the Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011, will amend provisions in various acts to make them consistent with the new language and updated procedures used in the new rules. These changes will help streamline court-related processes and make court proceedings clearer and easier to understand for Albertans involved in civil litigation.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

The Speaker: Before we move on, Mr. Clerk, verification that the table officers have the correct title for Bill 3 as requested by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

The Clerk: Mr. Speaker, Bill 3 is, I believe, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2011.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the bill in front of me, but I think the confusion may be that it's an amendment to the existing act, which is in the name that the Clerk has mentioned. Within the act it will change, I believe, the name of it to the other name. I think that's the explanation for it.

The Speaker: Well, we understand the intent. We understand the motive. We'll make sure that everything is appropriate.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table six copies of a letter written by an Alberta woman telling her story about her and her mother, Jane and Janet Doe, victims of an extreme domestic violence, which outlines their horrific experience with vital statistics publishing their name in the Alberta Gazette after an unpublished secure name change order was issued from the Alberta courts. Sadly, Jane and Janet Doe live every day in fear because of the mistake that the government has made, and they have done nothing to resolve it. I'd like to encourage all the hon. members in this Assembly to read this horrific case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from the Lakeview Community Association and its president, Duncan Kent, to the hon. Minister of Transportation and others, copied to all Calgary area MLAs, regarding the Calgary southwest ring road.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an Environics poll on Albertans' attitude towards health care in Alberta, which is dated February 18. The poll shows that 63 per cent of Albertans believe that health care is in crisis, and 60 per cent of them believe that it is inefficient management as opposed to funding that is the cause of this crisis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a discussion paper that I've developed in consultation with members of my community. A lot of the discussions for this discussion paper took place last spring during the Calgary cabinet tour, where the Minister of Municipal Affairs met with a number of my community leaders. As well, we hosted a round table with the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. It's a discussion paper on the topic that I mentioned earlier in my member's statement on inner-city community renewal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to a question earlier today the hon. the Premier referenced a letter that was sent by himself and the Premiers of Saskatchewan and British Columbia under the letterhead of Canada's New West Partnership to the Prime Minister, which he indicated would be circulated to others. He indicated at the time that he'd be prepared to table a copy of the letter, and on behalf of the Premier I'm now tabling a copy of that letter, which raises concerns that this government has with Bill C-606, a private member's bill in the House of Commons which seeks to ban tanker traffic on the west coast but which would have deleterious effects to Alberta's economy and the western Canadian economy and, in fact, is prejudicial in that it doesn't ban tankers from any other coasts, just the coast that most affects us.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair is pleased to provide the appropriate number of copies of a brochure entitled Page Biographies: Legislative Assembly of Alberta, 27th Legislature, Fourth Session, Spring 2011.

I'm also tabling with the House copies of four letters relating to a request by the Ombudsman, Mr. G.B. (Gord) Button, to revise his resignation date from May 31, 2011, to August 31, 2011. Hon. members will recall that the House dealt with this matter and set in process an opportunity for all citizens everywhere to participate in the selection process of a new Ombudsman. First of all, there's a letter dated December 30, 2010, from Mr. Button to the Speaker requesting a resignation extension. Second is a letter dated January 12, 2011, from the Speaker acknowledging the letter and referring the request to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices for review. Thirdly, a letter dated February 7, 2011, from the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices to the Speaker advising that the committee was recommending acceptance of the revised resignation date and that the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices accepted the revised date, and then the fourth letter, dated February 10, 2011, from the Speaker advising Mr. Button that his request had been accepted. It's totally transparent.

Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: We have one item of business, and that is a notice of motion submitted by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Standing Order 30(2) provides that "the Member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he or she considers relevant to the question of urgency," and it is the role of the chair to rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order. What is not defined, of course, in our standing orders is the word "briefly," but let's assume it should equate roughly to the length of time provided for a member's statement.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Financial Disclosure by Leadership Candidates

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that guidance, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30(2)

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent and public importance; namely, the immediate need for legislation regarding financial reporting by individuals who are seeking the leadership of a registered political party.

I'll briefly speak to the urgency and saliency of this motion. Three political parties, registered in Alberta and represented in this House, are now at the initial stages of leadership campaigns. The person selected as the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party will be, for a brief time at least, the Premier of this province, and two other leaders are also potentially future Premiers. It's a matter of very urgent public importance because the person who is successful is going to be the Premier, and one of the others may in fact become the Premier at a future date, so I believe that it's vital to the public interest that the financial supporters of the leadership campaigns be publicly reported. Millions of dollars will be spent in the coming months by people who want to become the leaders of these political parties, and potentially the Premier.

The public, in my view, has a right to know the size of donations each candidate receives and from whom. While Alberta has legislation requiring that candidates and parties participating in elections for seats in the House disclose their financial contributions, we do not have the same requirement for individuals who campaign for the leadership of a political party. Mr. Speaker, this is an enormous loophole since, as I've already mentioned, the successful candidates go on to campaign for the office of Premier of Alberta. I think that this threatens the integrity of our reporting legislation, and I believe that Alberta is behind other jurisdictions in not having the legislation to require this. I know that three provinces and the government of Canada have legislation that does require disclosure of leadership campaign donations.

I'm making this motion because I see no other opportunity for the House to address this issue. There is nothing on the Order Paper related to financial disclosure of campaign donations for leadership races, and the indications that we have had from the government, including yesterday's throne speech, gave no indication of any legislation in the area of political contributions for leadership campaigns. In fact, in a public statement the Premier has ruled out bringing this forward in terms of legislation although he said that it's his personal mission to ensure that there are some rules with respect to this for at least the Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to point out that the House unanimously passed a motion, which I sponsored in 2007, calling for legislation that would make donations to leadership campaigns subject to the same disclosure rules as any other political donation. At the time of that motion the 2006 contest for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party was very recent. The experience of that contest raised awareness among the public of the importance of having legislation which would require all leadership candidates to meet the same standard for financial disclosure. It did become an issue because millions were spent by the various leadership candidates on the various level of details which each candidate provided. For example, the Premier released information on the $967,000 he raised for his campaign, but $163,000 of that was raised . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. I don't mean to interrupt, but I think you're giving your speech. What we're doing now is talking about the reason why we should have a discussion, not your speech.

Mr. Mason: I actually had a much better speech, but I will take your point. I simply want to say that this is important because, given the lack of legislation, we have political leaders in this Assembly and, in the case of the Wildrose Alliance leader, outside of the Assembly who have won or participated in leadership races and have not fully disclosed their campaign donations, and I think that is a serious problem.

Mr. Speaker, I did want to point out that the motion that I presented in 2007 was unanimously passed by this House, yet nothing has happened. I'm hopeful that a consensus will still exist on this and that we can continue to go forward with this debate in hopes of triggering some legislation from the government that we can all agree upon in time or before the completion of these leadership races so that there is uniform disclosure and legally required rules for the disclosure of the very substantial amounts of money that are normally collected by leadership campaigns.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader, then the hon. Official Opposition House Leader, and then I think we'll put a wrap to it and make a decision.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would agree that the topic of financial disclosure for leadership contestants is certainly a topical one, an interesting one, and a current one but not one which would beg for the adjourning of the natural order of the House to discuss on an emergent basis for a number of reasons.

First of all, the question is: what is the most important business that we can do today? We had the speech from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor yesterday, and it is parliamentary protocol and tradition that we hear a response at the earliest possible date from the opposition. That opportunity is this afternoon. It would be highly inappropriate to hijack that opportunity in order to have another debate on something unless it was absolutely critical to have that emergency debate.

Secondly, the report from the Standing Committee on Public Safety and Services on the review of financial disclosure for our leadership contestants was tabled in this House, I believe, on October 7, 2010. This question in its entirety was referred to the policy field committee last year by the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, as is provided for in our standing orders. The policy field committee had a thorough discussion on it. They heard from, I believe, all of the registered political parties or at least a good number of the registered political parties, and they made some recommendations, which are in the hands of the minister now. Pursuant to the standing orders the minister will have to respond to that report within the 180-day time frame of the report having been tabled in the House. I would point out to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands that that date is coming up, so there will be an opportunity in this House to have that response and to deal with it.

So it's not urgent. It's certainly not more urgent than discussion of the agenda of this government for the coming year as outlined by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor and the opportunity for members of the opposition to respond. Not that I usually would be standing up championing that on their behalf, but it is an important part of the parliamentary tradition and process that we have a Speech from the Throne and that we have an opportunity for responses to the Speech from the Throne. That is the more important business of the day.

With respect to the ongoing leadership processes I can certainly say in this House that our Premier has made it clear and the president of our party has made it clear that the Progressive Conservative Party will have an open and transparent process relative to all aspects of the process, as is the norm, but particularly with respect to financial disclosure. The public is not going to have to worry about that from the government side of the House or from whomever the new Premier is.

I do need to respond to a misapprehension that was raised by the hon. member when he indicated that there was nondisclosure by the Premier and some other candidates in the last leadership process. That's one of the things that has bothered me ever since that came up at the time and has been mentioned time and time again in the media and now by the hon. member.

It should be very, very clear from the disclosures that were made by the Premier, by this hon. member, and by at least one other candidate that those amounts that were raised for that leadership that were not publicly disclosed were not publicly disclosed because they were funds that were raised at fundraising events with low ticket prices, which wouldn't have been covered by the disclosure requirements in any event. That's been something that has been really quite problematic every time this has been raised.

The important part, Mr. Speaker, is that parties can, if they want to impress the public with their openness and transparency, have the rules in place. The Progressive Conservative Party will have those rules in place. The House has had an opportunity to deal with this issue and will have an opportunity again to deal with this issue, and most importantly it's got important business before it in terms of the response to the Speech from the Throne, which His Honour the Lieutenant Governor eloquently delivered yesterday.

The Speaker: Okay. I'm going to encourage members once again to stick to the reason why I'm recognizing, and that is for a brief argument about urgency, not the subject. The subject could be anything.

The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to the urgency of this debate in that a number of leadership debates have already commenced, and the organizing for them has already commenced. I'm not privy to individual races, but I'm sure bank accounts have been opened and that donations may well have already been accepted without the consistency that is being sought through this discussion. So the urgency in this debate is that we are seeking consistency for all members who wish to pursue a leadership race, for whichever party that might be. Failure to provide that consistency means that we will have differing rules come into place at differing times for different groups.

The Official Opposition caucus has agreed that this particular issue and its urgency is important enough to have us agree to delay our leader's response to the throne speech. It is the opinion of this Official Opposition caucus that, in fact, this topic should be part of the government agenda and therefore should be included as part of the discussion around the throne speech, the urgency being that failure to have this discussion to urge the government to move on legislation as quickly as possible means that we will have differing rules put in place and that people will be subject to differing rules as they come into the race, and I'm sure some races have already started.

There's a public confidence issue here. There is a consistency and predictability issue for those members who wish to enter a leadership race but also for those that are considering it and for the people that support them. Based on that, I would argue there is urgency for this. It is not clear to us, based on what the Government House Leader has said, from the rules that the government caucus is putting into place, what exactly that is. Do they mean they will admit any donation over $375, which is the Elections Alberta rule, or all donations? How will they clarify the controversy around the event ticket price, that the Government House Leader has highlighted?

You begin to understand how complex and how up in the air all of these issues are. The urgency behind it is that they need to be clarified so that everyone moves forward from here with a consistent idea of what is expected of them and what the public expects of them, and that's who we really answer to, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you for listening to me.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I indicated a little earlier that under Standing Order 30(2) the member was recognized to provide brief arguments in favour of the request for leave, and the Speaker then may allow such debate as he considers relevant to the question of urgency. It is the role of the chair to rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order. The chair has listened attentively not only today but on previous occasions. On today's application and after hearing argument and postulating alternatives, the chair is prepared to rule on whether the request for leave for this motion is in order.

First, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has met the requirement of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office. Notice was received this morning at 8:19. The Speaker also had an opportunity to read a news article about it, so he got it two ways.

Secondly, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed can be put to the Assembly, the chair must rule on whether the motion meets the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that "the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." The relevant parliamentary authorities for this subject are pages 689 to 696 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, the second edition, and Beauchesne's paragraphs 387 to 390.

The motion reads as follows, and I repeat:

Be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the immediate need for legislation regarding financial reporting by individuals who are seeking the leadership of a registered political party.

In the chair's view, this matter in no way constitutes a genuine emergency. At page 694 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, the second edition, the authors note that emergency debate provisions cannot be used for items that may – underline “may” – come before the House in a regular legislative program. The subject of leadership funding disclosure was considered by a policy field committee last year, a number of months ago. Then it was referred back to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, who could presumably propose legislation. At the very least, the minister must report to the House, and that will give an opportunity for discussion and debate.

The issue of financing a party leadership contest is not a new one, not a new one at all. Party leadership contests have appeared before, and they will appear again. The chair notes that the criterion of urgency in Standing Order 30 does not mean urgency of the matter but urgency of debate. Although this issue might be considered by some to be topical, very topical, it's certainly not one requiring a debate that would postpone the business of the Assembly this afternoon.

Part of the business of the Assembly this afternoon, in fact, is discussion of the Speech from the Throne, which provides any speaker a wide range of latitude. Presumably, every speech in response to the Speech from the Throne could be: why doesn't the Speech from the Throne point out the need for legislation with respect to election financing? There could be your speech. You have an opportunity, starting very shortly.

Accordingly the chair does not find that the request for leave is in order under the Assembly's rules, and the question will not be put.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Drysdale moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour Colonel (Retired) the Honourable Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the procedure, then, for participation here of the next number of speakers will be, first of all, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, and then we'll do a rotation for participation.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm truly honoured to rise today and move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne given by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. It is an honour to do this on behalf of my constituents in Grande Prairie-Wapiti. I would like to begin by thanking the Lieutenant Governor for both his eloquent words and his commitment to this great province. I would also like to thank him for formally beginning this, the Fourth Session of the 27th Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour's career should be looked upon with utmost respect for his service to this country. I applaud his conviction as he continues to selflessly serve the people of Alberta. The Lieutenant Governor stated that his experiences in war-torn countries have reaffirmed the values that many Albertans hold true, those of citizenship, service to others, democracy, and the rule of law. It is with these values and convictions that we can create a better Alberta.

I would also like to extend thanks and gratitude to our hon. Premier. Under his leadership Alberta has emerged from the economic downturn better than any other jurisdiction in Canada and has also taken steps to be stronger than ever. It is a well-known fact that Alberta has done more than just weather the economic storm. Alberta was able to meet the challenges of the downturn without raising taxes, without making massive cutbacks to priority programs, and without leaving our children and grandchildren with massive debt.

This government recognizes that generations of Albertans have worked hard to create the many advantages we enjoy today. Mr. Speaker, making choices that will benefit the province in the long term is not easy. It requires confidence, dedication, and a strong vision for the future. Together this government will continue to make the choices that will create a better future for our province.

Mr. Speaker, I note that the Speech from the Throne highlights many key initiatives that this government will embark on this year and in the years to come. These initiatives will build upon the success that this government and previous governments have attained. I am pleased that we will focus on initiatives such as economic diversity, which will create a more prosperous province. Economic diversity is a theme that is often heard across Alberta, including my constituency.

I am encouraged to see that this government will continue to expand our economy with Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act. In particular, this act has the potential to have an immense impact on my constituency, especially with our close proximity to the expanding northern ports in British Columbia. These expanding ports offer gateways to trade and investment. They will strengthen our economy, which will mean economic prosperity for all Albertans.

The recent economic downturn highlighted that we cannot rely solely on one export country. Alberta is heavily reliant on only one market, the United States, with 85 per cent of our exports going there. Reliance on the United States has at times put us in a vulnerable position, and the message that has been taken from the recent economic downturn is that Alberta and Canada as a whole are far too dependent on the United States to sustain the kind of incomes and social programs we have come to expect. As such, this government has taken the initiative to diversify the markets in Asia. Bill 1 will ensure that a wise and thoughtful market diversification strategy is developed.

Mr. Speaker, Grande Prairie-Wapiti is rich in the energy, agriculture, and forest industries, three industries that are coveted by growing eastern markets. Grande Prairie-Wapiti is a gateway to the north and can and will serve as a major hub in the trade corridor to these new markets. These new markets will open up a whole new level of economic prosperity for northern Alberta. Albertans are known to be entrepreneurial, and our government will foster this ambition by creating economic opportunity.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, my constituency relies heavily on the energy sector, and the confidence in the energy sector has strengthened as a result of the initiative that this government has taken over the past year. This province has shown that it is competitive, and it's attracting new investment as a result. This government's work in the energy sector is enabling Albertans to prosper. Furthermore, this province is committed to a clean and ethical energy sector, which will only ensure a healthy and robust economy. This government's renewed commitment to ensuring value-added bitumen right here in Alberta will be a welcome step in my constituency.

Agriculture is an industry that also will benefit from the diversification of our markets. Mr. Speaker, agriculture is synonymous with the Grande Prairie region. With some of the best quality of wheat produced there, the access to Asian markets will allow farmers to market their product beyond Canadian borders.

Not only do wheat and other grain products populate this region, but the beef industry is thriving as well. The attention to quality by our ranchers has ensured that beef produced in the Grande Prairie region is top-notch and, therefore, will be well received overseas.

Mr. Speaker, the forestry industry has also been impacted by the economic downturn, having a significant impact on the northern regions of this province, in particular my constituency of Grande Prairie-Wapiti. The major cause for this downturn was the United States housing market. This leads back to my earlier point about diversifying our markets. There are many other countries that have a thirst for our forest products. We would be remiss if we did not explore these markets.

There is not only a need to diversify access to markets but a need to diversify products as well. Development of new technology allows for new products and new usage of forest products. We can no longer rely on the conventional forest products to keep the forest industry relevant and healthy. I am pleased to see this government work with the forest industry to ensure that forestry will remain a sector that is integral to Alberta. Furthermore, doing so will build a more sustainable future for this renewable resource that is so vital to many northern communities.

Not only has the economic downturn affected the forest industry; it has also been threatened by wildfires, insects, and disease. We must continue to work aggressively to combat these ever-present and natural threats. The mountain pine beetle is one of the most invasive and destructive pests that this province has been faced with. I applaud this government's effective monitoring and control of this pest, and I am pleased that there is a continued pledge to fight the invasion of the mountain pine beetle. Much like the Norwegian rat once devastated the agrifood industry, I would one day like to see the mountain pine beetle likened to the rat in Alberta: eradicated.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to touch on an industry that does not get much attention in Grande Prairie, that of tourism. As the Lieutenant Governor stated, one of the foundations of this province is tourism, yet Grande Prairie has not fully benefited from this industry.

Many groups, including this government, have partnered together to build a dinosaur museum, the Pipestone Creek River of Death and Discovery Dinosaur centre. For those of you who may not be aware of this area, the Pipestone Creek fossil site is an extensive bonebed of scientific significance, and it is one of the most northern discoveries of dinosaurs in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I am confident that this government will implement its plan for the upcoming year. The new investment and prosperity in my constituency will help this project come to fruition.

This government will work to ensure that the energy, agriculture, forestry, and tourism industries continue to prosper. In order to do so, we must make key investments in Alberta's infrastructure. Alberta's government has in place a 20-year capital plan, and a continued renewal of this plan will ensure that priority infrastructure such as schools, hospitals, roads, and long-term care facilities is built. This will lead to a province that has the most advanced infrastructure in North America.

Of interest is the investment in major economic corridors, including highway 63 and highway 43, which leads to Grande Prairie. These investments are ensuring that the northern and Grande Prairie areas are poised to take full advantage of a growing economy. My constituents will also be pleased with the pledge to build new hospitals and renovate other health facilities. Grande Prairie's population has exploded in the past few years, and a new hospital ensures the health of our current and future citizens.

Not only will Grande Prairie benefit from an investment in health infrastructure, but so will Beaverlodge and its surrounding communities. The Premier has committed to ensuring that this facility is rebuilt to today's standard so that it can continue to manage the approximately 28,000 visits per year.

The investment in infrastructure throughout the province is a needed improvement. As an example I note that investment is being made in southern regions of this province with the building of a state-of-the-art public safety and law enforcement training centre in Fort Macleod. Not only are we catching up, but we are being mindful of the growth ahead.

Mr. Speaker, with this investment we'll build a better Alberta. As the Lieutenant Governor so emphatically stated:

of all Alberta's natural resources, none is more valuable than our people. It is our ethical citizenship, engaged thinking, and entrepreneurial spirit that have made Alberta prosperous today, and which are the foundation of tomorrow's promise.

Mr. Speaker, I echo this sentiment. That is why I applaud this government's investment in education, health, employment, and our safety. These investments will ensure a brighter future for all Albertans as we work to build a more sustainable province. A prime example of this investment is the Grande Prairie Regional College. The GPRC is training the youth of our region, focusing on health professionals. This, in turn, will ensure that the Grande Prairie region has the skilled labour force to support a growing economic region.

In closing, I would again like to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for his inspiring words and dedicated public service and again thank our hon. Premier for his leadership and vision. I believe that under the guidance of these two men and with the dedication and spirit of the Alberta people we can make a future to truly be proud of.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, now the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour to speak and to second the Speech from the Throne. I would also like to thank the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor for his service to this country in many capacities. I think there is no greater honour and no greater testament to the love of a citizen than being willing to put one's life on the line to serve one's country. For that, I am forever thankful to our Lieutenant Governor and to all those who serve today all across the world, those willing to put themselves and their lives on the line for our great nation.

Mr. Speaker, actually, I'd like to take a moment here very quickly and just remember something I said at a eulogy for a soldier, somebody that served in the British Indian army. This was just about a month ago, and his name was Major Jawanda. This man served in the British Indian army and in the Indian Army after that, and he was engaged in, I believe, three different wars. Subsequent to his service in the army he moved to Canada, and at that time he really found this spirit of engaging in Canadian society.

I was delivering this eulogy at his service, and I must say that I was absolutely taken by the fact that at one end of the spectrum this man had the courage to pick up arms to defend his nation and that at the other end of the spectrum this man had the great gentleness to teach ESL students at the elementary level of English, how he was willing to give his life and everything he had on one end of the spectrum, in the battlefield, and how he was willing to devote time with vulnerable families, people going through very difficult moments, especially new Canadians.

I found that to be the most brilliant example of the greatest of humans, where they're willing to give of themselves in every different capacity. For that, once again, Mr. Speaker, I salute all those who serve our great nation today, who have in the past, and all those wonderful young people, I know, that are stepping up to serve in the forces in the future. I salute you.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I'd also like to take a moment to thank our great Premier for his service. Very recently I was asked the question of what I look for in a leader. The answer, I think, in its simplest form is that I wish for a leader that I can trust humanity with. When I say that, when I say a leader I can trust humanity with, what I'm referring to is the fact that a leader's responsibility is to make sure the most gifted and talented in a society are able to capitalize on their every potential, that they're able to uplift society in many different ways, to pull us forward.

A leader also has the responsibility of looking after the most vulnerable in our society, Mr. Speaker, those that may at times not have a voice, those that may not have a big and powerful champion that they can call upon in their most dire hours, those that very often have lost their own voice. I'm proud to say that our current Premier is a man that I believe we all can and have been able to trust humanity with, and in my eyes, in my humble opinion, I think that is one of the greatest compliments to a human being. So I, too, would like to thank him for his honourable service to our province.

Mr. Speaker, when I was elected in 2008, the world seemed to be a different place than it is today in many respects. We had tremendous growth, prices increasing in every different field you could look at. You had employers complaining about not being able to find employees, and you had employees dealing with issues of not being able to find housing within reasonable financial circumstances.

Shortly after we got elected, Mr. Speaker, as you know, the world was hit with this massive recession, the likes of which we have not seen or that I have not seen in my lifetime and that I think most of the world has not seen since the Great Depression. Although the needs of our province in the short term may have changed, in the long term they are still the same.

Now, with respect to the short term, Mr. Speaker, we are so fortunate to be in a province where this government over the last number of years saved approximately $25 billion. Of that, $17 billion was in the sustainability fund. The recession hits, and many jurisdictions around the globe are spending. They're increasing their debt. We in Alberta have the good fortune of having savings, cash in the bank that was put in the bank for a day like today. A recession hits. You don't need to make absolutely irrational choices overnight. We've been able to do that. We've been able to cushion the effects of the recession. We are the only jurisdiction that can still say that we're completely, on an overall picture, in the black.

Then, Mr. Speaker, one must ask: well, what about the long-term prospects of our province? It's no secret that we were attracting, essentially, a new city of Red Deer, a hundred thousand people, to our province every single year before the recession hit. We know those days will come again, and we know that we're still playing catch-up in some respect on infrastructure. When prices are lower for building and you have cash in the bank, I think the only wise thing to do is to build. I think it's absolutely prudent to ensure that the Alberta of tomorrow can be lived up to because we put the infrastructure in place today.

Mr. Speaker, I'm incredibly proud of the fact that the ring road in Calgary per se is moving forth, that we've got a new Calgary south health campus, that will have nearly 300 new beds. I'm very, very pleased that we've created 35 new schools and are looking to build 14 more by next year. We expanded the Peter Lougheed hospital in northeast Calgary. I am very, very pleased that we are preparing for what we know is coming – and that is the retirement of a great deal of our citizens – by creating more continuing care beds. Sir, I'm not referring to you retiring. I'm referring to a great deal of people. You gave me a little look, and I thought: no, sir. You have the spirit of, let's say, our youngest members, that is timeless.

Mr. Speaker, we've built 502 continuing care beds throughout Alberta since April of 2010. We're well on our way towards our target of 2,300 continuing care beds by 2012 and 5,300 by 2015. I think this is absolutely essential, and I think the time to build this is now because prices are down.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on top of that, I'll tell you that in 2008 one of the things I heard at the doors very often was the need for more police officers. At that time we committed to 300 more police officers in this province, and I'm incredibly proud of the fact that we have 300 new police officers on the streets of Alberta today as a result of our government's actions. In addition, I represent parts of the city that have a lot of young families – a lot of young families – and it's absolutely engaging and invigorating to spend time with them. Their energy and their passion and the excitement with which they raise their children is absolutely brilliant. I was very committed to championing the case for child care spaces. The government promised 14,000. Incredibly proud to say that we have over 18,000 new child care spaces. I think that is, again, showing the sort of hope that we need for the Alberta of the future.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we went into the recession knowing the sort of economic makeup of our world. We knew where the U.S. sat. I mean, they were still the big powerhouse. But I don't think we knew exactly how we would come out of the recession, what the makeup of the economic world would look like. I think today it's becoming incredibly clear that Asia cannot be ignored, that Asia must be engaged. For us to capitalize on everything we have in this province, we must engage with developing countries like India, China, Brazil, et cetera.

Mr. Speaker, there are also a multitude of ways of engaging with these nations and multiple reasons for us paying attention to what's happening in these nations. One is just the fact that we have what they need. We have resources they need, we have expertise they need, so it makes sense for us to expand our markets and to service them. It makes sense for us to find ways to get our oil and gas or our expertise in various different fields to them. They have a hunger and a desire to progress, and that brings me to my second point.

I'll start this point with a very brief story, Mr. Speaker, of a family that I met within the last year. This family has relatives in India that employ domestic staff, so housekeepers and the like, at their home. Now, a condition of the staff, something the staff wanted when they were seeking this employment, was that their children, the staff's children, would be able to attend the same school as the homeowner's children. They said: "Pay us less. Deduct it from our wage if you want, but our kids need to attend the same school your kids attend." A family of four, five, six, or seven has to suffer incredibly if they're being paid that much less to put this one child through quality education, but they do, and they do this because this is their only route into those schools, into what I'd consider world-class education. This is their only route into world-class education, so they do this. They sacrifice, and they put their children in these schools.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what's happening, what's in the pipeline today, is that you have millions and millions of people who would otherwise never have the potential to learn English or to get an education that could give them a middle-class lifestyle – okay? – that are now getting these opportunities because their parents have found unique ways to get them that quality education. This first of all shows a hunger on the part of people in developing countries, quite frankly, that I think is absent in our country sometimes. I would love to see this sort of passion and this sort of commitment to education on the part of our young people.

But what this also says, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that within a few years we will have people in these nations that have education as good as ours. My question is: what happens if India has 300 million people – 300 million people – who have an education equivalent to a North American postsecondary education? What are the effects of that on us in North America? What are the effects of that on Canada, on Alberta? I think the effect is that anything and everything that can be outsourced will be outsourced. We're seeing this today, but you're going to see this more and more and more. Engineering, accounting, law, medicine: all of that work is going to continue to move forth and be outsourced.

Legal work. I read a survey, Mr. Speaker, where many of the top New York law firms were questioned about whether or not they outsource legal work to India. The answer was overwhelmingly yes, and a few refused to answer the question. So one of the best legal markets in the world is admitting: yeah, we bill you 600 bucks an hour, and we send that work to India. That means that for the future of our province, for the future of our country and, quite frankly, the future of North America, yes, we have our natural resources – and they're absolutely important – but our natural resources are just one aspect of our future success.

What we must ensure for our future success is greater education within our nation. Quite frankly, postsecondary participation rates in this country being under 30 per cent is unacceptable. We must foster a culture of innovation in this country and in this province where every person who decides not to pursue a postsecondary education understands the impact that has on the rest of Canada's citizens. If we stall in our development and growth as individuals, we are not just affecting ourselves and our family and our immediate circle, but we are collectively having a negative effect on our province and our country as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I've spoken about this culture of innovation repeatedly, and I will continue to do so until we as a people really are committed to constant and never-ending growth. We have potential all around us that is not realized because people either don't have the ability to pursue education or because they just don't believe they can do it. I was one of those students who didn't think that I would pursue a postsecondary education, and quite frankly when I woke up to the fact that I was just as bright as anybody else, I loved it. I love education. I love learning. I love growing.

Mr. Speaker, this needs to be the rule. Never-ending learning and growth needs to be the rule and not the exception in our country. Without that, I'm incredibly, incredibly nervous of the effects these developing countries will have on our nation. Our people must rise up and understand that their abilities, their strengths, their skills are directly related to the strengths and the progress of all of us, of our society. When one of us, quite frankly, fails, we all do. We need a vibrant society where people love to learn and grow.

We also need a healthy society, Mr. Speaker, so I was incredibly proud to see that we're going to have a provincial cancer strategy. A week doesn't go by, I don't think, in anyone's life where we don't hear about someone having cancer. I visited a family on Sunday. The woman was diagnosed with cancer in December, and she passed away on Saturday night. I don't think there is a family out there that can say that they haven't been affected by cancer in some way or another.

Mr. Speaker, it's up to us to set some of these collective goals. I don't care if you're thinking that infrastructure needs to be spent in three years or five years or 10 years. You know, all of that stuff is details. When it comes to this sort of stuff, the suffering of our population, we've really got to get together.

Mr. Speaker, that's something I'm . . . [Mr. Bhullar's speaking time expired] That's 20 minutes. Wow.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We'll now proceed in the following order. The third speaker is the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition under our rules has up to 90 minutes to participate, and following his speech there is an opportunity for members to participate in a five-minute question and comment period as will be the rule now with subsequent speakers as well. I will invite the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, then the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre in that order.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As Leader of the Official Opposition it is my duty and privilege to respond to the Speech from the Throne. His Honour the Lieutenant Governor was kind enough to begin his speech by sharing some of his experience with Albertans. These were the only inspirational words in the speech. I'm grateful for their inclusion as I am of His Honour's distinguished service to this province and our nation. I'm grateful because inspiration is important. Alberta needs it, especially now, during this time of economic uncertainty and crisis in public health care.

Mr. Speaker, a house divided cannot stand, nor can it provide inspiration and direction needed to fuel our evolution as a province and a people. At this point I believe Albertans would be inspired by a government that could actually manage the province. Yes, concrete, pragmatic solutions would inspire a great deal more confidence in our leaders and in our province's future, yet here we are in the midst of a universally acknowledged crisis in health care and gross financial mismanagement with a government that is preoccupied with internal divisions. A government working to save its own skin is a government too distracted to deal with real problems. Stopgap solutions are a recurring theme for this Tory government. Albertans deserve better.

Liberals have always focused on pragmatic solutions that work for Albertans. Now and for the long term our solutions are based not on quick fixes and more spending but on thoughtful planning, scientific evidence, and expert advice. During this challenging time an Alberta Liberal government would protect people programs, including health care, education, continuing care, seniors' care, employment supports, and help for the most vulnerable, while scaling back on the extras.

There are ways to balance the budget without harming the average and the vulnerable Albertan. We'd establish an independent commission, for example, to establish MLA pay and benefits. We'd cut government communications and travel. We'd cut welfare to golf courses and horse racing. We'd reduce the size of government from 24 ministries to 17 and extend our capital plan from three years to five. We'd save a billion dollars by scaling back public investment in carbon capture and storage, a promising but unproven technology with a significant potential for public liability.

Our focus, though, isn't on cuts. It's on investing in the province and its people programs, the essential services that ensure Albertans are healthy and productive and the services that we all value most. We'd start with health care, the primary service of government to the people. It's difficult to appreciate the scale of the problems in health care unless you're a patient with experience in the system or a front-line worker who has had to deal with the organizational nightmares caused by the creation of the Alberta Health Services Board and the elimination of the regional boards. Most Albertans don't care how health care is managed. They want a system that works. Quality, accessibility, and cost-effectiveness: these are the measures of a good system and of good governance.

Centralization of delivery does not work. That's why we would transition back to regional boards and reinstate the Alberta Cancer Board and the Alberta Mental Health Board. It's shocking to me that this government is finally introducing an addictions and mental health strategy and a cancer strategy two years after disbanding these boards. Talk about taking three steps back for a step forward. Professionals, colleagues, and friends, especially during the past couple of years, have expressed to me their deep frustration with a system and a government that has disregarded their career experience and made decisions that are simply wrong in terms of patient care and efficiency. Hundreds of patients have contacted the Official Opposition, outraged by delays in treatment and preventable loss of life. These delays and deaths came despite the best efforts of our front-line professionals, who have been performing above and beyond the call of duty, fighting against the tide of incompetent government leadership. The H1N1 debacle highlighted the folly of major disorganization of the health system and inconsistent direction between Alberta Health and Wellness and the Alberta Health Services Board, resulting in preventable loss of life.

Disbanding the critically flawed model of Alberta Health Services would just be a first step. We would also return democracy to health care. Our regional health boards would be half appointed, half elected. Local control is important because local health care professionals and citizens know the needs of their community and region best. What works in Edmonton doesn't necessarily work in Lethbridge or Grande Prairie, Medicine Hat, or Picture Butte. Local control means better health outcomes for patients. The Alberta Health Services Board is a failed experiment, one that has contributed to the backlog in our emergency rooms today. Returning to more local control and delivery of health care will help clear up that backlog.

That's only the beginning, of course. The next step is to build enough home care and long-term care to provide seniors currently occupying hospital beds with more appropriate care settings. Not only would this provide elderly patients with better care; it will also get them out of our hospitals, freeing up the acute-care beds and moving people out of emergency rooms faster.

In the throne speech this government talked about creating a thousand continuing care beds. Once again, they didn't say how many of these beds would be truly long-term care beds, which is what many hospitalized seniors actually need, nor did they say how many of these beds will be private beds, which many seniors simply cannot afford. Long-term care should be publicly funded and publicly delivered. Our seniors have contributed too much to be shafted by government during what should be their golden years.

What this province needs most is basic services: more doctors, nurses, and other vital health care professionals. We're short thousands. Demand has long outstripped capacity, and in fact some 750,000 Albertans, about 20 per cent of us, don't have access to a family physician today.

Now it appears the minister of health, currently in negotiations with the Medical Association, will drop a renowned program that keeps physicians, residents, and students well if they don't sign the contract for a new agreement next month. This sends the wrong message to a valued professional group.

The shortage of health care professionals has contributed to the long wait times for emergency care and surgery. It has compromised quality, and it has caused preventable deaths. It has driven overworked professionals into retirement or away from Alberta, and it has created undue levels of stress and anxiety within the health care profession, resulting in inevitable degradation of care.

In consultation with postsecondary institutions, the Alberta Medical Association, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and the United Nurses of Alberta, an Alberta Liberal government would increase training for the next generation of health care professionals. We'd open up more spaces in our postsecondary institutions. At the same time we would need to support creative programs such as flextime, child care, and alternate payment models to retain our current professionals and encourage a new crop of doctors and nurses to stay in Alberta after graduation.

A visionary government would also seriously invest in prevention in health. Most politicians don't pay much attention to prevention because its benefits often aren't noticeable for years or even decades, long after most of us can personally benefit from a good prevention policy. If previous governments had been more visionary, we wouldn't be in the health care crisis we are today, and I admonish all members to look beyond our own short-term partisan interests and invest in prevention.

What are the strongest determinants of health? Education and income. Compromising either contributes to more sickness, more injury, and premature death. This is why people programs are so important. They contribute to our overall happiness and prosperity. They also improve the bottom line of our health care budgets. Health education and measures to reduce accidents keep people healthy, and they save millions of dollars to the system.

An Alberta Liberal administration would restore and expand the prevention programs previous governments have allowed to stagnate. We would, for example, ban trans fats in Alberta to reduce chronic health problems, including heart disease, diabetes, cancer, and liver disease. We'd outlaw smoking in vehicles carrying children, we'd pass legislation forcing all-terrain vehicle riders and cyclists of all ages to wear helmets, and we'd design education programs to reduce workplace injuries, car accidents, and domestic abuse. We would raise public awareness of the importance of these measures, including vaccination.

Take a look at our document Pulling Through, a plan for reducing demands on the emergency room. Step 1, gather top-tier professionals to identify necessary short-term actions and monitor in concert with the Alberta Health Services Board the impacts of these actions in improving emergency care; step 2, mobilize all available health care professionals, including the retired and recent graduates who haven't yet found employment; step 3, help Albertans navigate the health care system more effectively and efficiently; step 4, immediately provide alternative long-term care settings, including lodges, assisted living spaces, and extended care beds, with supportive home-care service; step 5, extend the hours for diagnostic imaging and lab testing; step 6, as staffing comes online, open the mothballed acute-care beds in Edmonton and Calgary; and step 7, plan for the future, including the phasing out of the Alberta Health Services Board and a return to more regional health delivery.

Mr. Speaker, I am a physician of 30 years and former public health official. I wrote this plan. I consulted with other emergency physicians. It will work. I'd be delighted if this government would steal the plan because doing so would help resolve some of the crisis that continues in our emergency departments today. We understand, as do two-thirds of Albertans, that health care is in crisis, and Albertans understand, as we do, that it's not a crisis of funding; it's a crisis of poor management. Yet there's barely any mention of health in this throne speech.

Bill 1, the government's flagship bill, focuses on expanding Asian markets. Well, there's nothing inherently wrong with this idea. In fact, our oil and gas policy recommends expanding to Asian markets, but this bill doesn't even go that far. It's just a call to create a commission, just like last year's Bill 1. Last year we had the competitiveness committee, and we've yet to see a more competitive Alberta. This year we'll have an Asia committee, and it's not going to get one metre of pipeline or railway built. That's the opposite of inspiration, the opposite of progress. There's no innovation, no ambition, no inspiration here. The government is still hoping against hope that oil and gas revenues will save them from their blunders.

Health is the top issue of Albertans and, clearly, our most treasured people program, but there are other people programs that also need protection, protection sorely lacking in yesterday's throne speech. For example, last year the government's throne speech included a pledge to protect vulnerable Albertans, yet PDD funding remains static, leaving people impoverished at that. This year there's no mention at all about protection of services for people with disabilities. Should Albertans with disabilities be worried by this omission? They rely heavily on PDD and AISH.

An Alberta Liberal administration would index AISH payments to the cost of living, just like MLA salaries. We'd maintain last year's increase to the family support for children with disabilities, we would reverse last year's cuts to child intervention services, and we would increase the budget of family and community support services. Prevention pays.

Environment and health are closely related. While this government continues to put all its environmental eggs in one basket called carbon capture and storage, Alberta Liberals again take a sensible, pragmatic but ambitious approach to protecting our water, air, land, and wildlife. Our environment policy requires greater efficiency of water use across the board, particularly in the industrial and agricultural sectors. We'd clean up Alberta's tailings ponds, we'd implement a no-net-loss policy to protect wetlands, we'd complete a provincial groundwater inventory and establish a credible, comprehensive water-quality monitoring program, another idea this government has belatedly accepted. Thank you for doing so. We'd eliminate the use of fresh water for deep-well flooding.

An Alberta Liberal government would also make real reductions in our greenhouse gas emissions by rejecting intensity-based targets and moving to a hard cap on carbon by 2017. We'd grow Alberta's dependence on renewable energy, including wind, solar, and geothermal, and we'd invest heavily in public transit and walking and cycling infrastructure. We'd improve Alberta's air quality monitoring system and reduce Alberta's dreadful asthma and respiratory disease rates.

We'd limit clear-cutting and increase the amount of protected park space. Unlike this government, we'd protect species like the grizzly and caribou by properly designating them as endangered. We would do all this and more. What's more inspirational to Albertans than the sight of our mountains, the sight and sound of our wildlife, the taste of our fresh water? We must preserve this. It is not ours to use and destroy. It belongs to future generations as much as it does to us.

What about education? This is an investment in our greatest resource, Albertans, and the very foundation of our prosperity, health, and social progress. The government continues to make reassuring noises about infrastructure spending, but these promises ring hollow when communities like Airdrie, Beaumont, and others, places in desperate need of new schools, have been told not to hold their breath.

Alberta continues to embarrass the nation when it comes to high school dropout rates. Too few Albertans, as was said earlier, transition from high school to universities, technical schools, or colleges. You can't build a new-technology, a clean-technology economy without a solid base of highly educated citizens. This government broke its promise to freeze tuition rates. They've slashed grants and bursaries. This government's policies are going to keep even more students from pursuing postsecondary education. The negative impact on our productivity, our economy, and our progress will be huge.

An Alberta Liberal government would provide stable funding to school boards to reduce class sizes to those recommended by the Learning Commission and eliminate the need for parental fundraising for classroom essentials. We'd fund the negotiated teacher salary increases due in September so that school boards don't have to cut staff or increase class sizes. We would end the freeze on supports for special-needs students, and we'd maintain programs that help students at risk, including children in care, to earn their high school diplomas. We'd also stop slashing the scholarships and bursaries and restore training programs to help put unemployed Albertans back to work. We would also stabilize their income supports during that time.

Compare that approach to that of the throne speech, which acknowledges Alberta's unemployed citizens but does nothing to help them. In fact, this government cut their supports and funding for retraining just last year. Even Albertans fortunate enough to have jobs have to watch their backs under this government. Workplace fatality and injury rates are still far too high. Workplace fatality and injury rates and unsafe employment are still being rewarded with WCB rebates. If you want to reduce health care costs, how about doing something about unsafe workplaces?

A responsible government would expand the Employment Standards Code to include protection for farm workers. Two brave farm workers, Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop, today continue their decade-long mission to bring equal rights, including occupational health and safety and WCB coverage, to paid farm workers. That farm workers remain unprotected in Alberta is a unique travesty of human rights.

A responsible government would also conduct a long overdue and thorough review of the Alberta labour code to ensure that our labour relations system properly protects collective bargaining rights. Our government should also be lobbying a lot harder with the feds on workers' behalf to rectify imbalances in the EI program that put out-of-work Albertans at a disadvantage compared to others in other provinces. A strong workforce means strong, healthy families, a strong economy, and a strong Alberta.

Now let's talk about savings. Alberta is one of the few jurisdictions in the world that rakes in billions of windfall dollars in petroleum revenues, yet we've blown through 90 per cent of the surplus, saving less than 10 per cent for the future. The Alberta Liberals are the only party talking about a long-term savings plan, and we've been doing it for years. A visionary and inspirational government would set aside a consistent percentage of oil and gas revenues and invest those revenues to ensure Alberta's long-term prosperity, live off the interest, not the capital, of this nonrenewable resource. Oil and gas won't be around forever, but we can build sustainable prosperity if we start saving today. Another good Liberal idea, the sustainability fund, is helping Alberta get through this recession's budget crunch. It's time to take the next step and fund for Alberta's future.

This afternoon I've talked about the government programs that Albertans value. Albertans also value certain intangibles, character traits such as honesty and integrity. The actions of this government have not inspired Albertans with confidence with regard to these traits. During the past several months Tory cronyism and their entitlement mentality have become all too evident from the government's attempt to curtail the power of the Public Accounts Committee to perennial scandals regarding expenses, salaries, and bonuses. Our current leaders have become a little too comfortable with power when they're taking Albertans' goodwill for granted.

That's why several months ago the Official Opposition released our clean government initiative, our plan to build the nation's most accountable and transparent government. It begins with a pledge, a pledge signed by all members of the Official Opposition, to safeguard the public's money, to eliminate conflicts of interest, to strengthen checks and balances, and to invite Albertans back to the political process.

Of course, a pledge doesn't mean anything unless there's action to back it up. Here are some highlights. Albertans that vote deserve a tax cut. If our plan were enacted, any eligible voter who shows up at the polls would receive a $50 tax credit for doing so. An Alberta Liberal administration would recognize citizens for exercising their democratic rights. An Alberta Liberal administration would establish an independent commission with binding powers to set MLA pay, benefits, and bonuses. Albertans were justifiably upset when the government gave themselves hefty raises. We would make that kind of situation impossible.

We would ban corporations and unions from donating to political parties. I don't believe that money should buy influence. Government should be accountable first and foremost to individual citizens, not to organizations with deep pockets.

I have a deep and abiding respect for concerned citizens who step forward at considerable personal risk to expose corporate and government wrongdoing. An Alberta Liberal administration would appoint an ombudsman with the power to certify genuine whistle-blowers, and we would protect these whistle-blowers from job loss and give them access to a legal fund to help defend them against malicious lawsuits.

A clean government initiative also includes actions to increase ministerial accountability, reform elections, and more. My greatest hope is that this plan will breathe new life into Alberta politics and restore some trust that politicians historically have squandered. Only 40 per cent of voters turned out at the last election. I hope this plan will give some segment of the remaining 60 per cent a reason to get involved in democracy again.

Mr. Speaker, not everyone comes into this world with the same opportunities. Not everyone has the support of family or the simple good luck to find a decent job or avoid hard times. The power of civilization and society is that it gives us the ability to take care of each other. That's why we support proper funding for people programs such as public health care, public education, social supports for the vulnerable, and environmental protection, all the institutions and ideas that allow a society to grow and thrive and maintain health.

Ask the average Albertan what she values, and she'll probably list what most of us have in common: decency, compassion, honesty, love, and family. Ask her what she values about government, and she'll probably list these same institutions: public health care, public education, and supports for people going through hard times. The values are universal. Deep down the vast majority of Albertans share them because by our very nature human beings are communal. We take care of each other because we learned through hard experience that we must in order for our civilization to survive and thrive.

My parents inspired me with two powerful lessons: first, tell the truth; second, take care of each other. Today I've told the truth as I see it, that we all have a duty to take care of each other and the world we inhabit. During hard times there is a terrible temptation to solve short-term problems by slashing budgets and relaxing environmental protection standards while ignoring the human cost of such decisions over the longer term. You cannot assign monetary value to human health and happiness. They're priceless. Alberta is wealthy enough, our people smart enough, our economy strong enough to support the vulnerable and to ensure that all Albertans continue to benefit from the people programs we value so much.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, this is the third and final time I'll rise to respond to the Speech from the Throne as Leader of the Official Opposition, and it's long past time to embrace a new generation of leaders, Albertans with new ideas, new drive, new passion. Alberta Liberals are unified in our desire to form a moderate, pragmatic, common-sense government that speaks to the values of most Albertans.

We want to be the ones delivering the throne speech and listening to your criticism, not because we seek power but because we genuinely believe there's a better way. Albertans have sacrificed too much, worked too hard, invested too much faith to let them down with half measures and short-sightedness any longer. To quote Henry George, "There is danger in reckless change; but greater danger in blind conservatism."

It has been an honour to speak out on behalf of Albertans who share moderate, mainstream, small "i" liberal values. My thanks to them for their remarkable support and good wishes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for this one if anyone wishes to speak. Five minutes.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for those comments by the Leader of the Official Opposition. He has served this Legislature well. He's a gentleman and someone who obviously cares very deeply about our province and its people. It has been and will still continue to be an honour to serve with him.

I also want to extend my gratitude to Premier Stelmach and his wonderful companion, Marie. They are both great people. They've raised great children. Premier Stelmach has served with all his heart.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, names.

Mr. Anderson: The Premier – sorry – has served with all of his heart. He believes in many things that, of course, I believe in and many others that I do not. But one thing is clear, that he does what he does because he thinks that what he does is the best course for Alberta. So although I will continue to point out why his and his government's policies are wrong and why I feel they will hurt our province, I will never question this Premier's integrity and his commitment to the province that we both love.

It's with a sombre heart that I address the Speech from the Throne. You know, we live in a beautiful place, forgetting for a second that it's minus 21 degrees outside. We live among great people. We live among strong families. We live in a plentiful land with an unmatched expanse of riches and resources that the world desperately needs. But, my fellow members, I think it's important, especially today and with the events of the last few weeks in mind, that we remember that there really is chaos right now all around the world. There are riots and protests and massacres and extremists that are threatening to destabilize what is already a very fragile and tenuous world economic recovery. There are multiple western European democracies teetering on the edge of financial ruin. The Middle East has reached a crossroads of monumental importance, with one road leading to stable and healthy democracy and the other to religious theocracy.

Our North American neighbours are in equally dire straits. Mexico is teetering on the edge of becoming a failed state as horrific cartel killing sprees of police and civilians continue to grow almost exponentially every day while a cash-starved nation fights back with its so limited resources. Then there are our dear friends and family in the United States, currently squarely on the path to financial collapse caused by unfathomable debt, that generations of children not even born will have to pay the price for. The future of our most important trading partner and ally has not been so uncertain since the darkest days of the Great Depression and of World War II.

My colleagues, we live on a ship that I see is sailing right now through the eye of a hurricane. How we steer ourselves from this moment on will determine the course of our future for decades and perhaps longer. We need to straighten that course and prepare for the entirely uncertain times ahead of us. We need to be better financial stewards so that we might not only have enough to survive a couple of years of world economic turmoil but so that we can survive and thrive, whatever the world throws at us. We need to be a beacon of hope and prosperity, a place of refuge from the storms ahead, where people from our nation and even from around the world can come and know that they can find work, prosperity, and opportunity. We can be that place. I'm sure of it. We must be that place.

We have to be better managers of our finances. We cannot continue to spend at the rate that we are currently spending. Our sustainability fund is due to expire by 2012-13 or thereabouts, give or take a year. Our heritage fund, when adjusted for inflation, is worth as much today as it was in 1981. Think about that. Although most institutional debt was paid off by 2005, long-term liabilities have since skyrocketed and continue to grow at an alarming clip.

My colleagues and friends in the PC Party, I hope you understand, and I think we all in this House need to understand that we right now are squandering our province's greatest income-earning years. Although oil hovers around $100 today, new technologies combined with uncertain economics make the future value of oil virtually unknowable over the long term. We're not prepared for a bad scenario. We are betting our own and our children's future prosperity on a best-case scenario. We can't do that.

I know we want more infrastructure, and that's important. We do need more infrastructure, but surely we can prioritize the most urgent of needs and stretch that budget over an extra couple of years in order to balance the books. Even the Liberal Party this last week recommended that same idea, one that we've been advocating for a long time. It is not extreme. It is not uncaring. It is absolutely reasonable and essential to do so. Can we not control our spending increases to the rate of inflation plus population growth? Is that really so difficult? Is it too much to ask? Is it too extreme?

We spend more than anyone in the country on social programs per person. Our problems in health, seniors, and community services are not due to a lack of funding. They are due to poor management and subpar planning. The health system, for example, is broken. It does not work. It is causing people to unnecessarily suffer and in many cases die. Unnecessarily. That's a fact, and there's no amount of money that is going to solve the problem. We can't afford that amount of money anyway. Let's come up with solutions for our health care system. Let's look to Europe and to the systems that do work, not the U.S. system. By all means, 99 per cent of the Albertans that I know are not interested in any kind of private insurance system where citizens are oftentimes left in financial ruin if they get sick or, even worse, they don't even get treated at all. No one wants that.

Aren't we ready to look at the models that do work around the world, to introduce competitive delivery, where an Albertan can take their public insurance card to the facility of their choosing, where private providers build infrastructure using their money rather than tax money to compete for Alberta patients with the public system facilities? Shouldn't we stop building new, expensive acute-care beds when we could free up thousands of existing acute-care beds across this province with a much less expensive investment in long-term care for seniors? Wouldn't decentralized health care without paid boards and large PR departments be more responsive to local needs? Would it not result in increased financial partnerships with municipalities and businesses to expand available health services? Would it not unleash the innovative spirit of Albertans to come up with unique health solutions to their very, very unique community needs? Wouldn't it result in a more stable and less expensive system, a more sustainable system as we see these same reforms have created in the European models?

The answer is: yes, it would. It absolutely would. It has worked repeatedly, over and over and over again in those nations such as Austria and Belgium and France and Sweden and Germany and Japan, not that that's a European model but another example. They are outperforming us in our health care at almost every single level, yet we continue to bang our head against the wall and do the exact same things that we have been doing for the last 20 years, for the last 40 years, but specifically the bad things we've been doing in the last five years.

We all have to be courageous on that point. All of us – the New Democrats, the Alberta Party, the Liberals, the PCs, the Wildrose, all independents – need to stop with the fearmongering and religious devotion to the status quo in health care, which does not work. We have to stop thinking that government will solve all of our health problems without help from the private and nonprofit sectors, who have so many of the most innovative and bright people in the province working for them.

We need to be open to new ideas while holding to cherished values, namely that no one, absolutely no one, should be denied health services because of an inability to pay. We can have a sustainable and world-class health system to bequeath to our children and to our grandchildren, but if we continue along our current path in health care, we will leave our children and ourselves suffering, waiting, and bankrupt. My friends, it has to change, and I hope that we can do so together, which brings me to my final point, democracy and free markets.

Democracy is powerful. As imperfect as it sometimes is, it is the only system on Earth that has consistently been able to protect freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of expression, the rights of women, the rights of children, the rights of all men and women to be free, to excel, to pursue success and happiness in the way that they feel is best. Democracy's companion is free markets, not unfettered markets but free markets. You cannot truly have one without the other.

In a successful democratic and free-market system government's role is to ensure a level and a just playing field. It is to enforce the rule of law and then to let businesses and individuals compete and work together to build better communities. The incentive of financial success results in competition, innovation, co-operation where it makes sense, technological advancement, and wealth generation.

Let us not be deceived by those on the extreme left, and I do not point to anyone here who fits this description. Let's not be deceived by those who would say that free markets have failed. Free markets have not failed. Over the last century they have resulted in the greatest and quickest rise in the standard of living ever witnessed in the history of mankind. We must not let political correctness or revisionist historians claim otherwise. Obviously, the rule of law must be enforced. Obviously, we do need to make sure that regulations that are needed are in place. Obviously, we cannot have fraudsters and thieves game the system to the detriment of honest and hard-working and decent people. But just as one does not throw out their vehicle because they have a flat tire, so too would we be complete ignorant imbeciles should we think to jettison our free-market system because we failed to properly regulate certain financial instruments properly or we oversaw some things that shouldn't have been done with regard to our government debts.

We need to protect our democracy and free markets. We need to ensure that the rule of law prevails thereunder. We need to make certain that each interference of government with the public is entirely necessary and justifiable. It should always be a last resort to interfere with an individual's rights, never the first resort, which, sadly, has happened too much recently in this House. We cannot allow bureaucratic fiefdom building to trample on the entrepreneurial spirit of Albertans. They're exhausted from it. They're tired of it. It's hurting families. It's too much, and we have to reduce it. We must protect the property of Albertans as carefully as we do the right to free speech or expression or freedom of religion. We must plan to carefully reduce over time the burden of government on the people through excessive taxation and wealth redistribution schemes. We must make our democracy healthy again. That means far more transparency in government, which the hon. Leader of the Opposition talked a lot about very eloquently.

Bill 50 should have never happened in a democracy such as ours: $16 billion in untendered contracts, to be paid exclusively by Alberta ratepayers, passed out without even an objective needs assessment conducted to ensure their necessity. It is scandalous, and it should be repealed.

There is one principle above all that will save and strengthen our democracy, and that is this. We must restore the proper role of an elected MLA. MLAs are accountable first and foremost to the people they represent, not to the party, not to lobbyists, not to special interests, not even to friends. MLAs are accountable to those who step into that ballot booth and with a pencil mark an X beside the name of a community member whom they are willing to trust with the interests of themselves and their families. It is this right, it is this sacred principle that thousands of our countrymen have died for and a million more have fought for, and we need to enshrine this back into our democracy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for those who wish to comment or question. The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was listening with a great deal of attention to the member deliver his comments, and quite eloquently so, I must say. I'll make a few comments by way of questions.

Often when we talk about foreign systems, we don't expect Albertans to have the time or wherewithal to analyze health care systems throughout the world. They often simply accept what they're being told. Is this member suggesting adopting a European Union model of health care, which now is harmonized virtually throughout all the members? That's something I know a little bit about, stemming from that part of the world and actually being a member of such.

You have two parallel systems in Europe right now. Yes, indeed, there is a universal health care system, that any citizen of the European Union can access, but also for an additional fee of 50 to 100 euros you can access a separate, stand-alone health care system, which I guess we would call over here a two-tier health care system. Indeed, many hospitals and clinics are being built for private-use purposes. The majority of European Union citizens are still utilizing the public system, which probably isn't anywhere comparable to that of the private system, that is being operated side by side.

Indeed, they get to access the very same doctors. If you're going through the public channel, you will see them during certain hours during the daytime for a very limited period of time, but if you pay your hundred euros, you get to see your doctor whenever you want. He'll even come and visit you at home and spend as much time as you want. Is that what you want, a two-tier health care system in Canada? That is exactly what the European Union health care model is all about.

Let's be clear about it. Yes, they have good outcomes. Why? Because citizens pay from their pocket with their Visa cards for the health care that they receive. On top of that, what Albertans also ought to know is the taxation burden on those countries. Are you suggesting that we also, then, in order to duplicate the same kind of outcomes that they have in health care systems in Europe, not only adopt a two-tier, pay-with-your-Visa-card health care system but also bring in the taxation burden that is imposed on European Union countries, which pays for some of those facilities? In Sweden somewhere around 50 per cent of the average employee's earnings are now taxed by their national government.

Let's put all the facts on the table. Highlighting certain health care systems, Mr. Speaker, and just pulling the good and not mentioning what the real cost of it is and how inequitable it is is something very important.

Relative, Mr. Speaker, to the infrastructure comments I would like to ask if the member really feels that we should be more fiscally conservative and not spend the dollars that we're spending on infrastructure. He calls it prioritizing, but what prioritizing really means is delaying projects or not building projects. Would he identify which projects he would like to see delayed? Which hospitals, which clinics, which schools, which overpasses or maybe even tunnels in Calgary would he like to see delayed or removed from the infrastructure plan? As he's saying that, he rises very often in question period and during other comments and argues that this government is ignoring his constituency and not building enough schools in Airdrie. I'm sure there is a need for those schools in Airdrie. But if we're going to prioritize, is this a code word for not building or delaying building? If it is, then how do you square that off against asking for more schools not today but yesterday in your riding?

Mr. Anderson: I have a whole minute to answer that, but I'll do my best. With regard to health care the Wildrose policy is very clear. Clearly, we want to look at what is working in other systems. We don't obviously want to adopt everything in every system, but we look to what works, and what is working, clearly, in the European models is having this competitive delivery model, where somebody will take their taxpayer-funded Alberta health insurance card to the facility of their choice, whether that be private, nonprofit, or public, and buy the services that they need using those taxpayer funds. We're not advocating for any kind of other system, as he suggests.

With regard to infrastructure all I would say is: "You know what? That's a debate that we need to have, indeed." But it would be very helpful if they would be transparent on that side of the House and release their infrastructure list, show us what their list says, how they're arriving at the priorities, and then we can have a debate. Until then they're saying: oh, you can't do both; you can't cut and build. Well, actually, we're suggesting that we spend about $4 billion this next year on infrastructure. You can build a whole heck of a lot with $4 billion. But until we know what the priority list is and what objective criteria they're using to arrive at that priority list, how can we have that debate?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to speak to the throne speech. I'd first like to also echo the comments made about the Leader of the Official Opposition and his dedication to this Legislature, to Albertans. I've known him on a personal level to be a man of honour, a man of integrity with passion for this province, and we thank him for his service.

I'd also like to extend the same congratulations and appreciation to our Premier. Being the Premier of a province is a tough job at the best of times. Going through an unparalleled economic downturn makes it even more so, but thankfully we have a Premier who had the vision to set aside money to the tune of about $25 billion in our sustainability fund. Many of those pundits and those experts and the critics said years ago that we shouldn't put more than $3 billion into that fund. Our Premier decided: no, I would put more in there. So today we're in the enviable position of anyone in North America of actually having money in the bank, having $15 billion in cash in our savings account along with $17 billion in our heritage account.

We look at the throne speech from yesterday, and it's just another extension of the vision that our Premier has. He had never been one to lead our government to being what everybody else is. Alberta for over a hundred years has been the leader in many areas in this country, and the world needs us to be leaders today.

Yesterday the Premier outlined in Bill 1 a focus on Asia, looking at new markets. I know one thing, Mr. Speaker, that if there's a country out there that has GDP growth in the neighbourhood of 6 per cent, I want to be their friend. You look at India and you look at China and you look at Korea and you look at Japan. That's where the world is going. Two countries alone: 2.2 billion people. In those two countries 400 million university educated people: that's the entire population of the United States. They are growing a tremendous amount, and they are going to need resources. They're going to need those resources that are safe and secure, that Alberta can provide, and that is what our Premier is getting at.

It's not about where we were. We have a rich history, and we have a great heritage, and it's based on hard work, with making money not being a dirty word, where your word still means something, where families created communities, where we always had the responsibility to take care of the less fortunate. We want to leave no one behind.

Going forward, we need to look at our prosperity and how we create that wealth 25, 30 years down the road. We're a very young province, not just in terms of years that we've been in existence but in the fact that our average age is about 36 years. We talk a lot about our aging population, but we are a very, very young province. But we cannot generate enough new Albertans through birth. We need to have immigration. To get immigration, we need to encourage the world to come to Alberta, and indeed it already has. I, like 48 per cent of Albertans, was not born here. I came here because I sought opportunity for my family. I thought that Alberta was the best place to raise that family and provide an opportunity for them and their children moving forward. So I think it's fantastic that we recognize reality.

When I was in Barbados, where my parents are from, a couple of years ago, I sat down with our Canadian High Commissioner, and we talked about how Barbados had changed in the world. He talked about the fact that in Canada and the United States we haven't realized what's going on in the rest of the world. We kind of stand smugly and say: "We're fantastic. We've done this for you." We rest on our laurels. In Canada we built the Deep Water Harbour there, we built the airport, and we thought, "Yeah, well, they'll remember Canadians," but it's a whole generation ago. Where we have one representative for seven islands there and the United States has one representative for seven islands, China has one person on every island. Russia has three people for the seven islands. What are they doing? They're investing in culture. They're investing in the fabric of people because they understand it's the relationships that you create that bring on the commerce, that bring on everything else that you need, and we should be no different. China will tell you: culture first, business second. We need to be bold, innovative, and aggressive in moving forward.

You look at the Olympics back a year ago, Mr. Speaker. There were many people under the opposition parties saying: we spent $14 million, $14 million out of $37 billion, and what did we get for that? We spent $6 million on arts and culture, yet the opposition says that we don't really believe in that and that we should give more. Like France and Quebec, we showed our artists to the world. The first day at the Olympics they were demonstrating. The second day they were dancing because they were dancing to our Alberta artists, and they saw Alberta through a different lens. We have to show that we have a soul.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we are all born with a left side and a right side to our brain. It's very important that we talk about our resources and that we have environmental stewardship of those resources and responsible enhancement and processing of those, but it's also equally important that we feed the soul of our community, of the people. In the throne speech I was happy to hear the Lieutenant Governor talk about arts and culture and talk about our Alberta Arts Days. Back at the Olympics, when they focused on looking at us – and Alberta was front and centre. We had that train, that the whole world saw, and spent the second Saturday on that train with the likes of representatives from BBC and CNN and Sky TV, the media from around the world. They were just blown away, and they were talking about how fantastic we were, how fantastic B.C. was, what a great partnership between those two provinces, 2 out of the 3 in the New West Partnership. They were absolutely right, but somehow we fail to recognize that.

Our Premier has told me – I remember when I first met him during the leadership, when he was running and I was supporting another candidate, that he talked about a vision for Alberta to make it a showcase. He wanted to make it a showcase for the world and encouraged me at every opportunity that we had to focus on Alberta to do so because when people see Alberta, they see something that they like. They see a place they want to live. They see a place they want to do business. They see a place they want to invest in.

We are innovative. We have a homeless strategy: 11,000 homes created for the homeless, at a hundred thousand dollars per door, 11,000 new homes for those individuals that usually cost the taxpayer about a hundred thousand dollars per year. So for a hundred thousand, or what we would spend on policing costs and health care costs, we're going to house a person so that we're able to treat them. We lead in that. We are innovators. We are leaders. We are meant to be leaders.

Alberta Arts Days is an example of how we became leaders. That was created back in September of 2008, Mr. Speaker. We started with 30 communities and a hundred different events. The next year we increased to 116 communities and 700 events, a fourfold increase in participation, and that was not just in Edmonton and Calgary. That was in rural Alberta. That was in Westlock. That was in Fort Macleod. That was in Edson. That was in Fort McMurray. That was in Grande Prairie. It was an opportunity where all Albertans came together to celebrate something in their own community but could be part of something.

Yeah. That was shocking to the rest of the country, but what is even more shocking is that we had the same amount of participation after three years that the province of Quebec took 12 years to plan to get their first one off the ground. We took three months because the people at the municipal level, the leaders in those communities, took charge. They made it happen because they had that can-do spirit.

We were asked to go and help the rest of the country come up with the idea for Canada Culture Days or to promote the idea of Canada Culture Days. I was asked to send a letter to my provincial counterparts, and I followed that up with a phone call to Quebec and Ontario, Newfoundland, all 10 provinces and three territories. This past year we had Canada Culture Days, which was a week after ours. We had nine provinces and three territories participate. So not only do we have what we had in Alberta happening; we had it right across the country, and Alberta was a leader there.

I got to spend the first day in Manitoba. Unfortunately, there was no federal representative, and the provincial minister wasn't there, but Alberta was there. The next day we went to Quebec to participate in the Journées de la culture. There was no federal minister there, but Alberta was there. You know, at the Winnipeg ballet and the Montreal theatre school 25 per cent of those donors are from Alberta. That's something we continue to support. As a government we continue to support it, and we will move forward in that direction.

The second thing that was mentioned in there was about creating movie magic. I know the opposition Member for Edmonton-Centre talked this time last year about the death of the film and television industry. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the rumours of their demise are grossly exaggerated. In fact, after coming back from Los Angeles a few weeks ago, we realized the production that we're going to have this spring. We have the fifth season of Heartland filming in southern Alberta. We have Blackstone filming right here in Edmonton for the Aboriginal Peoples Television Network. We will have a Sam Steele movie for CBC, that will start filming in May. And we're going to have an AMC U.S. television series called Hell on Wheels also film in southern Alberta.

What that means, Mr. Speaker, is that our 3,000 crew that we have in the province, about three different groups, or three crews, will be exhausted. If we get one of these productions that we know will come forward from our trip to L.A., that we're finalizing in different stages, we're going to have to repatriate people back from British Columbia. We're going to have repatriate people back from Saskatchewan. We're going to be bringing Albertans back because not only are they going to come back for a few months because there is a thriving growth in their industry; there are going to be long-term jobs for them.

Now, I say that because the world has changed. When I was in Los Angeles, we met with studio heads: Disney, Warner Bros., HBO, some smaller studios like Hollywood Center Studios and GreenHouse Studio. It was mainly the finance people. We've talked a lot back and forth about tax credits, but the question that they had wasn't about tax credits. The questions that they asked – and I was there with representatives from unions and guilds and the film commissioners – were about labour rates: you're raising your labour rates. Now, to the credit of the people that were there representing the unions and guilds, they said: "No. We'll maintain that 1 per cent because we want to be competitive." They looked at me and said: "Don't raise your incentive because if you do that, we'll get the labour rates raised, but there's no benefit to me as a studio to be able to do that. You're competitive and where you need to be in that sub $25 million market."

They were happy because Inception, an Academy Award nominee, was filmed at Fortress Mountain, and $13 million was spent in Alberta just a year ago. From that experience they raved about our crew, our locations, and in our crew not just their professionalism and their level of competence but the fact that they work hard in adverse conditions. It doesn't matter what the temperature is. They'll be there. They will show up on time, they will act professionally, and they will do it with a smile because, Mr. Speaker, they're Albertans. We need to help them move forward.

This is an area that is just part of creative industries. Creative industries, Mr. Speaker, create $4.54 billion of gross domestic product. That's 4.5 with a B. Now, we talk about diversification. There's diversification. You've got a knowledge-based business. It's green. If you look at 3-D technologies, where we think we can be the leaders in the world – again, Alberta focusing on being a leader, not a laggard, not a me-too; we want to be leaders – we are the pioneers of 3-D in the seismic industry, have been for eight or nine years, and we will continue to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any comments or questions. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. I'd be most interested if the minister would continue on about the value of the movie industry in this province. I know that it looks good on the surface, but I think that there still is a great deal of work to make sure that we can get our local actors and our actual local technicians involved in those productions. So if perhaps he'd like to address that.

Mr. Blackett: The hon. member is quite right. We have, as I said, some 3,000 people, from grips and camerapeople to set designers, all of those. When I say three crew, it's about three crew in total. I'm told by the people in the business, our film commissioners, even the union guild members, that there is going to be work for all of those. If we come back with just one production, we are going to have people working in Lethbridge. They'll be working in Edmonton. They'll be working in Longview. They'll be working in all of those different places. Right now I think it's about $200 million a year. A little over a year ago it dropped to about $150 million a year in economic activity. We expect it's going to be back up $200 million this year. That's not just for the actors and the grips and the props. It's those costume shops. It's the hotels. It's the restaurants. It's all those other ancillary benefits. It's the drivers. You know, it's all the infrastructure that helps with that. Absolutely, we need to put our people to work, and creating projects that we want can do that.

We've talked about it, and the God's honest truth is that we've invested money year after year after year, but we don't always invest in projects to get people employed. Last year, when everybody was talking about production being down, we still spent $18 million, the same as what we'll spend this year, but we're getting more value out of our dollar.

We've got to make sure that we have our indigenous producers taken care of to tell our Alberta story. We've got to also make sure our people are working. We've got to get a blend of international productions or productions from the States to employ people, but we have to still tell our story, and I think we've got a good mix right now. We're not resting on our laurels. It's every person in this sector working together to make that happen.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I think we've a couple more minutes left. I also would like to perhaps have a conversation around value-added, when a film may be filmed somewhere else, but in fact we have a sound studio or we have the mixing studios here.

The other thing that I'd like to perhaps bring up is something that I brought up, I think, three years ago, that we have our AMPA awards. No one gets to see those. Why are those movies not put into our libraries? Why don't our schools have the award-winning Alberta films? Why can they not see them? Very, very bad distribution problems.

Mr. Blackett: We've had a multitude of different challenges, but your first point is well taken, when you talked about production. One of the things that intrigued the studios down in the south was – they usually come here, they'll film a movie, and then they'll do the postproduction back in California. We can make more money on postproduction than we can on production. For $25 million spent in Alberta, it could be $50 million. With a creative hub and the fact that we have the SuperNet – and I talked about 3-D technology. One of the things that they have to be able to do in the field is upload the data to send it back to the studio to look at it to make sure it's correct. You've got to do that real-time, so you don't have to tear down your set and then go back and have to film something that you've missed.

With the SuperNet, with our network of libraries, I said to them, every library is hooked to the SuperNet. You've got all the rural communities across Alberta. You can go there. We can look at how we can provide an uplink. Unlike Vancouver we can transmit the data on that 20-gigabyte pipe to them, and we can disseminate it around the province. So you can be in Olds and set up a post-production studio there. You don't have to be where the physical location is. Because we have that SuperNet, we're able to do that.

You're absolutely right. We should be able to distribute more of our Alberta films within our school system and let people know. We're working right now with the postsecondary institutions on how we can work better together, collaboratively, to make sure the next generation of film producers and crew have what we need. But we need to tell that story so that my son who's 10 years old realizes that he has an opportunity to be in that industry as well. When you see things that are produced by talent in Alberta, that will help ensure that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Putting people first. Alberta's most important resource isn't oil or gas, forestry or fertile prairie soil, all of which provide a tremendous advantage to both our personal and provincial well-being. Alberta's most important resource is of the renewable variety. It's people. For Albertans to not only survive but to thrive, we must be viewed by our government not as a cost or a liability but as worthy of investment.

Unfortunately, while Alberta boasts itself as being the wealthiest per capita province, far too frequently the First Peoples, our aboriginal and Métis brethren, and the last peoples, those who have most recently arrived from foreign lands, find themselves falling through not simply cracks but crevasses. Evidence of Alberta's failure to involve, to include, to successfully integrate as opposed to assimilate is most strikingly pronounced in our educational system, where 50 per cent of First Nations students fail to successfully complete or graduate after three years of high school. The dropout rate or failure to complete high school for English as a second language immigrant students is even higher, at 70 per cent. This is a colossal waste of talent and potential, for which we pay a very high price both economically and in lost lives.

There's plenty of blame and shame to go around, whether it be the prolonged, three-generational effects of forced assimilation, bordering at times on cultural genocide, fostered by residential schools or the self-fulfilling prophecy of one's own misfortune being someone else's fault. To move forward, we have to get past the accusations, acknowledge what hasn't worked, and adopt best practices which foster pride and self-worth, that celebrate multiculturalism as opposed to attempting to melt it down to its lowest common denominator. Pride isn't something which can be injected; it has to be adopted and nurtured. Diversity should not be viewed as us versus them but as an opportunity to share or, at the very least, appreciate a different cultural perspective, a different language, a different religion, a different point of view.

Overaccommodation can be as destructive as forced assimilation if in the end one is left with nothing to celebrate out of a fear of offending. A practice that has too often exploited individuals without the protection of citizenship is the temporary foreign worker program, so popular with the Alberta government. In contrast, a provincial program that has been successful in fast-tracking citizenship is our provincial nominee program, which needs to be expanded.

If a society is judged by how well it treats its most vulnerable, then Alberta has tremendous room for improvement. How can we accept the Statistics Canada figure of over 78,000 Alberta children living below the poverty line, a functional illiteracy rate of 40 per cent, high rates of addictions, family violence, breakups, and suicide? Why is it that twice as many women are turned away from shelters than can be temporarily accommodated in them as they with their children flee abuse? Why is there so little recognition or support for men who are abused by their spouses?

When a person is injured on a job site, whether white or blue collar, the type of work they do should not preclude them from receiving assistance in the form of workmen's compensation or long-term disability until and if they are able to return to work. Having suffered in the first place, they shouldn't have to fight the system for the support they deserve. They shouldn't be forced prematurely back to work by the threat of having their compensation and benefits reduced or cut off. Help, whether in the form of appropriate retraining if required or long-term disability support if an individual is so broken that they can't return to work, should be there for them. They and their families should not be forced into destitution by an organization that bonuses caseworkers for arbitrarily reducing their caseloads by discarding the injured.

Seniors should not be forced to choose between paying the rent, buying nutritional food, or purchasing the medications they need. They should be encouraged and supported to stay in their own homes until such time as they, with their families, recognize the need for greater care, in a more institutionalized setting. The quality of care provided should not be based on the size of their retirement savings and should not bankrupt their sons or daughters or force families into warehousing their loved ones and nickelling, diming, and dollaring assisted living facilities when long-term care is what is required.

Alberta isn't devoid of social successes. The 10-year program to end homelessness, especially for those hard to house, should prove to government that not just from a strictly ethical point of view but from an economic standpoint it's considerably cheaper, by almost two-thirds, to do the right thing, which is not only to house individuals suffering from addictions or mental illness, which combined accounts for 60 per cent of individuals languishing on the street or in homeless shelters, but to support them so that they stay off the streets. That 24-hour guaranteed support has also proved attractive to landlords, many of whom would not otherwise have taken the rental risks.

Having made some successful inroads into providing supportive housing for the most destitute, reason would suggest that it should be easier and less expensive to give a hand up to the others, the other 30 per cent plus of individuals working each day but unable to afford a damage deposit on a habitable place of their own.

In Alberta there's no shortage of good, cost-saving ideas, but too often there's a failure to realize the value of the proposed investments. A case in point is the Alberta government's acceptance of the majority of the recommendations of the 2003 Learning Commission report. Two particular recommendations that would have had and still can have a radically beneficial effect toward improving literacy and reducing poverty are funding full-day kindergarten and half-day junior kindergarten. Unlike the forced compliance of residential schools these programs, although optional for families, would be highly subscribed regardless of economic or ethnic circumstances.

The government, to its credit, has encouraged experimental education programs. One of the programs, AISI, that saw a direct correlation between literacy and self-esteem through the reduction of class sizes for grades 1 through 3 in Edmonton's inner-city schools, was abandoned after its first year of piloting despite the tremendous achievement results recorded.

Another missed investment opportunity is the government's continued failure to support inner-city hot lunch programs although common sense, never mind compounding research supports the connection between health and achievement. Alberta currently has one of Canada's highest high school dropout rates and has the lowest postsecondary participation rate in this nation, only 14 per cent. How difficult is it to connect the dots that education equals economy? However, instead of encouraging greater postsecondary participation through bursaries and grants, the government is focused on increasing student debt through loans, raised tuition rates, and a $500 student facility fee, which has no academic connection.

What values is this government promoting and subsidizing? Clear-cutting trumps sustainable harvesting. Approving new tailings ponds projects trumps water protection and graduated development. Spending money on building more remand centres rather than on legal aid or overcoming learning disabilities. Historical first in time, first in right trumps contemporary public good. Regulation is preferable to legislation as democracy is time consuming, and the outcomes aren't predictable. A penny saved is a spending opportunity lost. Heritage refers to hockey classics, not savings trust funds. Big government is good because the ever-expanding Public Affairs Bureau tells us so.

After 40 years holding the reins of power, why experiment with citizens' assemblies, proportional representation, transparency, or accountability? Cling to power no matter what the cost. Alberta has so much to offer, both in terms of its bounty of renewable and nonrenewable resources. What's needed is a collaborative vision not based primarily on exploitation and extraction but on balance and sustainability, long-term stewardship, rights far too often taken for granted, and responsibilities frequently ignored.

Every Albertan with Canadian citizenship of at least 18 years of age has an opportunity to determine Alberta's future by registering their vote. People around the world are risking their lives daily to have their voices heard. Arise to the challenge, Albertans. Get involved. You and your province are worth the investment.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone wishing to comment or question.

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on this occasion, especially after so many good speeches on both sides of the House this afternoon.

Just before I begin with some of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say thank you to the Premier for his service to this province, not just in this House but for 25 years of public service, beginning in 1986. I first met him in 2001 at an event in Calgary-Lougheed, when the former member had invited me there, and I had a chance to speak with him there.

Secondly, I just wanted to say thank you as well to the hon. Leader of the Opposition for his service to the medical profession but also to this House as well. We may not agree on everything, but I've met him many times on flights home, and we have always had a good chat. I know that he has always been in this business for the right reasons.

There was a lot in the throne speech, Mr. Speaker, and really not anything that I can address in 20 minutes. Indeed, a person could talk for 60 minutes or more about the throne speech.

I did want to address a couple of issues as well. First off, there was a lot of comment in the throne speech, Mr. Speaker, about the importance of trade. Now, you go through Canada's history. Originally our trade was predominantly with Britain. Then later it became predominantly with the United States. Indeed, today about 85 per cent of our trade is with one trading partner, again the United States. I think that is great, that we have such a great trading partner south of us. That being said, you look at where the future is going, not so much in the rearview mirror but exactly where we're going in the future. India has 1.2 billion people. China has 1.3 billion people. In fact, those numbers have doubled or more in the last 50 years. It's very important that we look towards the future as to where we are going to go to maintain the current standard of living in Alberta or even expand it as our province continues to grow. I do believe that in the throne speech we did have the right comments, specifically about where we need to go in the future, particularly to Asia.

It is disconcerting to me that often the enemy in our prosperity can actually be at home. In fact, earlier today in question period we talked about the federal bill to stop tanker traffic west of B.C. That would have a very significant negative impact on our province, and it's really disconcerting that we see these types of bills brought up as private members' bills, I would suggest, for the short-term and fleeting political gain of someone who does not have the best interests of this province at heart.

As we keep on looking forward, Alberta does have a history of having a number of younger elected officials. I'm pleased to be one of them, at least for a few more years, and we have to look towards the next generation and what the needs of the next generation are going to be. It's often been said to me that the very city to which I moved in 2000, Calgary, in the last 10 years, in fact, has grown greater than a city the size of Regina or Saskatoon. That is only one city in this entire province. We obviously have a very good thing going here, but we always have to be mindful of what the pressures are and where we may need to go in the future. So expanding our markets to Asia, I definitely do think, is a good move.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we do have a resource-based economy. I always want to move beyond the whole notion of hewers of wood or drawers of water. We have to be competitive, and that was recognized, actually, in last year's throne speech with Bill 1, the Alberta Competitiveness Act. We can't simply depend on our resources alone. A lot of people may go and get excited at the fact that oil, as I checked the markets today, is at $98.10. Well, that's great, but that being said, we also see that the gas prices are very low, just under $4.

It's not just enough to export our natural resources; we need to be talking about upgrading our natural resources. We want to take steps to develop more bitumen at home. For example, the bitumen royalty in kind program, that was announced a couple of weeks ago, I think is a positive move towards that. It will result in having more bitumen upgraded here. Of course, you have the added benefits beyond just simply the royalties. You are going to have higher employment in these areas. This is a good-news story for today but also for future generations.

A big part of our competitiveness, though, of course, involves our low tax rate. I remember I was in university when Alberta brought in the 10 per cent flat tax rate. That has resulted in a lot of further income tax that has been collected from people and businesses that have in fact moved here to take advantage of the low tax rates that we offer here as well. I've heard a lot of speeches today regarding competitiveness, but then people also mention in this Assembly how we want to provide better services. The question I would ask is: would you increase these taxes? I think that we've struck a good balance of taxation in this province already.

The throne speech also talked about education, Mr. Speaker. My family, of course, has a long history of education, with my mother, Marguerite, being an educator. My grandfather Phil Hauk, who I just visited the other day, 93 years old, often goes back to stories in the classroom and the importance of educating people today and people in the next generation. In fact, people are great resources in this province. Many people come here, and the children that they invariably have when they come here and decide to stay do need a quality education.

The quote from the throne speech that most strikes me here is "an inclusive education system that supports [those] with special needs." That appeals to me in particular, Mr. Speaker, because no two people are alike, and you need a variety of educational options to educate the next generation of Albertans. Part of these include Catholic education, public education, and, of course, charter schools, many of which are in my constituency. Of course, I do support an expanded role for charter schools, the model being that different approaches actually work, the model of choice. Why? Because we have very, very differing needs of students throughout this entire province. I think we should move further along this model as well.

I listened with interest to the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit talk about the film industry. This came up to me when I was knocking on a door in Riverbend, a part of my constituency, in the last election, and this woman asked me not what my education is, not what my health policy is, not what my taxation policy is, but she wanted to talk about arts. I really didn't have much to answer at that point other than the fact that when she said, "Well, you must have participated in something," I said, "Well, I was a singer when I was younger, of course." She had said: "You really need . . ."

Mr. Rodney: Give us an example.

Mr. Denis: No, I'm not going to sing for you today. I'm sorry.

Having an arts policy is very important for this entire province, and it was mentioned in the throne speech as well. Recently I was contacted by a gentleman who had a film and video issue, and we talked about it. He talked about the importance of a knowledge-based economy but also that the new generation, like it or not, is on platforms like Twitter and Facebook. Now, I don't believe that you tweet your way to power. I think it was the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood who had said that first, and I would agree with him, probably on that alone. That being said, this is where the platform of the new generation is.

We need a comprehensive strategy on how we're going to support the arts here. One of the ways in which the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit has done this is by founding Arts Days. The fact that the throne speech goes and talks about that and that we plan to continue with that, I think that that also is important.

The throne speech also did talk about safe communities, Mr. Speaker. I often go back to January 1, 2009. Why is that day of importance? Well, we had two people killed in my constituency in a gang shooting. I represent a semisuburban area of Calgary. You would typically think that you might find shootings, things like that, downtown or in an industrial area. Well, no. That's not true any longer. You find it in residential areas as well. So I'm happy that the throne speech also talked about safe communities.

It talked about a gang reduction strategy as well, and I'm happy that we're going to be continuing with this. With our law enforcement framework we're going to be moving forward with the Fort MacLeod training centre. I again say that we need a two-pronged approach when it comes to tackling crime. You want to tackle both the conditions where people may likely offend, particularly the young people as well, but you also need to deal with offenders and putting the victims of their crime first.

Now, I did want to address something I'm most passionate about, and that's no surprise to anyone here. That's our housing policy. My priority as a minister here is both for the taxpayer and for the client. Some people say: how can you do both? Well, you can focus on outcomes, not so much how much money you actually spend but actually what your eventual result is.

Through competitive tendering and through a private partnership that we have, we've been able to bring our cost per unit down to about $97,500. By way of comparison, the city of Calgary had some so-called affordable housing in the Louise Station downtown at 4th Avenue. Guess what that cost? Three hundred and twenty thousand dollars. That was not affordable to the taxpayer. It has to be affordable to the taxpayer and affordable to the client. Through our request for proposal process we receive three times the amount of private sector applicants that we can actually go and fund. The fact that the throne speech actually goes and mentions this I think talks about this government's ongoing commitment to affordable housing.

Now, I do have a quote for today. "Government always finds a need for whatever money it gets." That was Ronald Reagan. Interestingly enough, in fact, when it comes to our housing policy, we're doing just the opposite. Last year we were able to find a 19 per cent savings in our budget, again through our competitive and open tendering process and through our private sector partnerships. For this year, well, I guess we'll have to stay tuned until tomorrow.

On the human side, of course, we're on track to create 11,000 affordable housing units by 2012. Most interestingly, with our homeless policies we're seeing our shelter usage come down. Shelters are important, Mr. Speaker, but they are not the solution. It's the difference between managing the problem and ending it. By focusing more on permanent housing, we've seen the shelter demand go down. For future generations, whichever government may be chosen in the next election, I really hope that we continue with this program because it's working.

The Member for Calgary-Varsity had talked about how he supports this. I want to say thank you to him in particular. It is really disconcerting to me when I receive calls, though, from other members saying that we should abolish these programs. I've never heard anything so out of touch with the average Albertan as when I hear calls for things like that.

We also need to focus on the reasons for homelessness. It's not simply when someone goes and says: get a job. I think that's a very ignorant comment. To me it's not a crime to be homeless. I've met with many of these people. I've met with many people who experience addiction issues, mental illness, domestic violence, or people who have simply fallen on hard times. The importance is that we need to treat people as individuals.

This weekend I was at a program called Project Homeless Connect in Calgary. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore was there as well. We actually had a chance to chat with some of these homeless people again, and it's important to have that ongoing dialogue as well.

I just want to conclude with a couple of thoughts as well. Every one of us is fortunate to live in Alberta. I would put to every one of the members here today that if we were in many other places in the world, in fact, the arguments that we have here might seem trivial, given the problems we see across the world, the problems that we see in the Middle East, the problems that we see in war-torn countries, the problems that we see in Third World countries. That being said, it is upon us always to never forget the people who we represent and the voters and the taxpayers, and they must always come first.

As we move forward into this session and to the next one, we must also remember the promise of this province and the fact that freedom isn't free and the fact that we have a great resource, and the resource is not so much our oil and gas but our people, the people who we represent and the people, also, who come here and who will come here. I'm confident that as we move forward, we will continue to provide good governance and good opposition for the people here because that is what is truly the promise of this province, and that is truly what the people here deserve.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anybody who wishes to comment or question.

If not, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity today to respond to the throne speech that we heard delivered yesterday by our new Lieutenant Governor in his first opportunity to do that.

I've had a lot of opportunity recently to sort of think about different versions of Alberta, and I'm really struck by how young Alberta is. Someone earlier mentioned an average age of 36 years old, I think. It's true; we do have a very young population.

We are, really, all things considered, fairly prosperous. Before anyone leaps to their feet and starts telling me about the tough times and all that kind of thing, yes, but if you travel at all, you start to get a real understanding that we may have had some challenges here but nothing like the challenges that they have faced in other places. All things considered, we really are fairly prosperous and continue to be fairly prosperous.

There's room for improvement always, but we are quite well educated. We have opportunity for good education here that lots of other places in the world and even closer to us don't enjoy. I have someone that's on my constituency association who is a teacher here and was a teacher in New York. Boy, he can tell me about the differences in the quality and availability of good education. So there are lots of things that I would like to do to improve the education system and access to it. I'm the daughter of two teachers, so it's kind of in our blood in my family. But, really, we are fairly well educated.

My brothers are in the trades – actually, most of my extended family is in the construction trades – and I'm very grateful that we have many different apprenticeship programs here in this province. In some of those cases the apprenticeship programs are run by the unions, which I am also very grateful to have in this province. I know that's not something that's shared by my colleagues opposite, but I am grateful for the unions. I think they play a very important role in our labour force. I think they work hard to give us a quality of life. I think there are a number of things that we can thank them for today that they lobbied for and advocated for and brought into being, like a set workweek of five days with weekends off and things like that. In fact, a public education system originally came out of the union labour movement.

I'm grateful for that because I think it gives us safer workplaces, and I really believe in the collective bargaining process. There are things that we could do in this province to make that better. That's a bit of a tough row for me to hoe in this province, given the current administration. I'm not going to stop trying because I do believe that there should be first contract legislation, and I think that there should be replacement worker legislation here as well. That's important to me, I think it's important to the labour movement here, and I would really like to see it in place.

Overall, I think we are hopeful and have every reason to be an optimistic province. As I said, that doesn't mean there aren't things that I wouldn't press you all very hard to change, and you know I will press you hard to change those things.

We are and can be a province of the 21st century. That, Mr. Speaker, is why I was so puzzled by the throne speech that I heard yesterday. It wasn't optimistic. It wasn't looking forward into the 21st century. The ideas that were in there weren't doing that. I was really puzzled by it. Even today in listening to the people from the government side, they've been bringing forward lots of ideas that I will probably talk about if I get enough time. But those ideas weren't in that throne speech, and I don't understand why. To me it reflects a way of thinking that is about rushing back to try and recreate the 1950s, and that's just not where we are anymore. That's just not the province that we live in.

Here's an example. We have fewer labour jobs here in Alberta. Increasingly, we've had robotics and other kinds of mechanics that have taken away the need for assembly line workers or piecemeal workers. So that kind of manual labour, where you didn't really need a great education to be able to go in and get that kind of job, is disappearing on us. Some would argue: good; they weren't great jobs to begin with. I'm not going to comment on that.

You say: all right, where are the new jobs coming from? Where are the jobs of the future? The kids that are in school now, what are they going to do? What's out there for them? We're losing those sorts of manual labour jobs that tended to sit at the bottom of our labour pool. Where are the new ones coming from? We have a traditional grouping of jobs that are changing, but I think they're going to stay there in health, in education, in the social services, even in the arts, as influenced as that is by new technology. I think those jobs are going to change, but they're mostly going to stay there.

So where are the new jobs? What we keep being told is that the new jobs are in a creative, knowledge-based, innovative sector. It's about your brain, not your physical ability to heave stuff around. It's about how you can use your brain and your imagination. You know, one of the things that we're very successful at here in Alberta is the Internet games that you play where they're all animated and they fight each other out in storylines. We're very successful at developing those games here. BioWare, that company, that's what they do. They develop these online games. That comes out of Alberta. That's a knowledge-based, creative job sector. That's where we need to move for the next grouping of jobs. There'll always be management, and there'll always be retail. Yes, of course. But where are the rest of those jobs?

I was very puzzled to not hear any of that in the throne speech. What I heard was: let's get as many of our natural resources, both sustainable and unsustainable, and sell them, just shoot them out of this province as fast as we can and sell them all over the place and develop new markets in other places for people to buy our renewable and nonrenewable natural resources. I thought: whoa. I thought we were trying to reverse that trend. I thought we were trying to diversify our economy. We should be looking at how we can keep that stuff here.

Let me give a bouquet to the government for the BRIK program. That's exactly what we're talking about. That's taking that natural resource and keeping it here so that our people get jobs, good high-tech, well-paying jobs, so that they enjoy a quality of life. That's the kind of thing we need to be talking about, not continuing to ship our natural resources away to other countries.

Often, it comes back to us in a secondary or tertiary market, and the quality isn't even as good.

I'm told that often happens with raw food product that we ship out, for example. So why, why on earth? How 1950s is it that this government is talking about their big new idea, to ship more natural resources out of the province? That just doesn't make sense to me.

They were talking about forestry. They were talking about agricultural product, wheat. They were talking about oil and gas products. We're talking about those upgraders starting to come online again and be possible in the Industrial Heartland. I'm quite excited about those upgraders, but we do need to balance that with very strong environmental protection because there's a certain saturation point of those upgraders where you start to lose your quality of life, and the balance, the scales shift.

That's the role of government. That's part of what government does, that they provide what business will not do because business doesn't make a profit doing it. So things like police forces and fire and providing municipal services and things like that: there is a role for government. I know that my colleagues opposite think there isn't, and they want smaller government, blah, blah. Okay. Fair enough. I disagree. I think there is a role for government, and one of those roles is environmental protection, consumer protection. That's what it needs to do. It needs to give a level playing field. It needs to be able to set limits on what the private sector can do.

"Profit" is not a dirty word; it's just that it's not the only word. Often I sit in here and I listen to people go: "We gotta grow. We gotta make more money. Money's the bottom line. It's all about money." No, it isn't. Most of us in this world work. That's true. We work to make money to do other things. Money is not the only thing. Profit is not the only word. There are other things that are important to Albertans, like clean air, like fresh water, like recreational opportunities, like spending time with their families. So "money" or "profit" is not a dirty word; it's just not the only word in the Alberta that I see.

As I said, I think that environmental protection is a big part of that. We need vigorous, muscular environmental protection that is action defined. This has been an ongoing quandary for the government because instead of actually taking the action, the steps that people expect to see that would result in change, we just get another PR project. We get more spin put on top of it.

For example, I was expecting to hear in the throne speech that we were going to have a new water act. There's been lots of talk about it. We know that there are serious issues about water in the southern part of our province. We know that there are serious issues about FITFIR – first in time, first in right – questions about it. We know that there are increasing concerns from one party and desire to have it from another side for water markets and selling of water licences. I expected to see something about that in this throne speech. Nothing.

All there is is that the government will continue to do groundwater mapping. Well, at the rate we're going with groundwater mapping, it's literally a decade or more down the line. One of the things that we have in our environmental policy in the Official Opposition is that we would invest enough money to speed up that groundwater mapping process so that we could at least get that information into our hands a lot faster.

The government, as always, is really fixated on money and on the stability fund. Sorry; sustainability fund. You know, I keep making that mistake. For some of the members that are fairly new to this House, that were elected after 2004, you've got to forgive me rolling my eyes at you all the time. But, honestly, I sat in this House and listened to Ken Nicol talk about the stability fund until I thought my eyeballs were going to fall out. He was the one that kept saying this is what we've got to do. While we're making new money, while we're making money from our resource base, we need to be putting that aside to level out our traditional cyclical economy. See, I can still hear that stuff; I sound like him when I'm talking. He was absolutely right.

The government took it and takes credit for it now. You know what? I don't care. I really am just interested in best practices. If that's what's actually going to move us forward and make a better Alberta for all of us, I don't care who gets the credit. I just want to see it put in place.

I notice that lots of people now from different parties are talking about indexing AISH payments to the cost of living. Great. I can't remember who in my caucus started talking about that. I really don't care now. If I can get the Wildrose onboard with that and the Conservatives onboard with it – the NDs already were – yippee. Let's do it. It should be about best practices for our constituents, not about some set ideological position that doesn't allow you to move from it.

On that, I would like to challenge the government to do a white paper on government revenue. I would like to have a white paper produced that we could discuss in all kinds of contexts, all kinds of forums, on Twitter and Facebook, about how the government raises money and what it does with it. What do our constituents really think about taking natural resource revenue and subsidizing services they are getting today with that money, right out of the ground right to paying services today, no savings involved? What do they really think about a consumption tax or about municipal funding? Let's do a white paper on that. That would be interesting. That would be new.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone to comment or question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the member would be averse to perhaps discussing more of what she would like to see in that white paper because I think that it's probably a good idea and that the white paper, of course, would then be shared with all Albertans.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, because it's one of those things that politicians are never supposed to speak about for fear that they'd get labelled as tax and spend, although I notice that one of my colleagues, Battle River-Wainwright, has talked about consumption taxes in the past. Good on him because I think it's something that should be examined. I think it is an issue that people want to weigh in on. I think we've got to get over this idea of being slammed as a politician because we're willing to talk about different sources of revenue. I mean, none of us wants to burden people so that they don't have a quality of life, but do we have the best balance right now? Is a 10 per cent flat tax on income the best way to do things?

What about municipal financing? I think the municipalities would argue. The AUMA is now trying to get a piece of provincial income tax to subsidize what they're doing in the municipalities. Anyone in a municipality, some of you in here, will tell us that property taxes are not flexible and don't deal with growth. So on every level of what we're doing here we don't know if this is the best mix of government revenue, of revenue to help us deliver the programs and services, and I think that's something we should look at.

The other thing we need to look at is investment. Investment is about having your money make money. So when you talk about investment, to me that's about investing in education because smart, well-educated people help your province make money. They become part of that knowledge-based economy.

Investing in the arts. I was very happy to hear the minister finally talking supportively of the arts. Thank you so much. Thank you for finally spending time with the people in the film area and hearing what they're saying. Thank you very much for that. I'm sure they appreciate it, and I definitely appreciate it.

Investing in the arts, depending on which figure you want to use from the minister's department, is an $8 to $12 return. That's an investment. Man, if I could put my money in a bank and get $12 back for every dollar I put in, we'd all be running to the bank. So why on earth are we not investing in the arts when we know that's the kind of return that we can get? I mean, honestly, cutting the arts? For the amount of money that that budget is right now, it's pocket fluff for you guys. You are cutting a couple of million dollars. It's pocket fluff out of a total $37 billion budget, and the effect it has on that sector is devastating because it already works on not very much money.

So when you talk investment, there are a lot of places we can invest in this province where our money would make money. Two of them are investing in education and investing in the arts.

Thank you for the opportunity to expand on that.

The Acting Speaker: There's still some time left under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate very much the opportunity to respond to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne, and I appreciate very much His Honour and the commitment that he's made to public service in our province.

I have a few comments with respect to the speech. I said yesterday after hearing the speech that I felt that this was a last will and testament of this PC government. What it represents, in my view, is a recapitulation of promises and commitments that have been made over the years but which remain unfulfilled. For example, the commitment to cancer, dealing with the cancer epidemic that's going to be expected, was something that Premier Klein raised five or six years ago, when he promised a billion dollars for cancer care. Of course, that didn't transpire.

There are many others. Another one I think that is worthy of mention is the police college in Fort Macleod, Mr. Speaker, and the promises that were made to establish that many years ago. Again, that has been recapitulated. There are promises relating to health care, of course, and to long-term care, to children in care, around community and family safety, better environmental planning and monitoring, and so on.

I think the speech really represented a dawning realization that the government has not provided the leadership in building a strong economy or creating jobs in the future. It also has to take into account the government's dependence on revenue from non-renewable energy sources – particularly the natural gas royalties are not going to be there in the future – and the reductions that the government has made in taxes for the corporate sector, where these taxes have been cut by nearly half over the last eight years, and of course the flat tax on personal income, which gives a massive gift to the very wealthiest Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, also the speech does not deal properly, in my view, with royalties, and it doesn't recognize the fact that this particular government under this Premier came into office promising a royalty reform and promising to increase royalties and the numerous steps backwards since that time, to the point where we're virtually at the same place we always were, charging some of the lowest royalties on gas and oil in the world.

Our party has a very different view of Alberta, a view that's confident and which believes that there are common-sense, effective solutions that stand up for our families. I think people, notwithstanding the various leadership races that are underway in some of the political parties, are waiting to hear what can be done to assure a strong and prosperous Alberta, and that's what I'd like to speak a little bit about today.

Mr. Speaker, education is critical. The future of our province depends on a well-educated and a well-skilled population. We believe that every child needs fair access to the best possible education, but I think that that requires strong support for local school boards to ensure that communities have the schools that meet the needs of their families. Schools in older communities are vulnerable to being closed, and in our view this is a real blow against these communities. It works against the ability of families in those communities to provide the best possible education for their children. We take seriously the threats made to local governance in education, and we think that this is something that would be very detrimental to our educational system. We need to find ways to help support local school boards and not to create anxieties for them.

Mr. Speaker, in postsecondary education we need to do more to make education choices affordable for every person. We believe that the refusal to limit increases in noninstructional fees is a significant detriment. They become a backdoor route for postsecondary institutions to make up for underfunding on the backs of students. The government requires approval for postsecondary institutions for setting tuition fees, and they should not allow this loophole to be used to get around that. The government needs to be accountable, as do the postsecondary institutions, to make sure that education is provided in a way that does not affect accessibility of students, particularly those from less affluent circumstances.

Alberta New Democrats have for years championed positive change in the health sector, and we've presented real and effective policies to do that. I want to talk a little bit about long-term care because this government has created a great deal of confusion, and in my view deliberately so, between long-term care, which is part of our health system in which people are medically assessed as requiring ongoing care, nursing care, and so on, and in which drugs and other services are provided as part of our health care system, and assisted living or designated assisted living, where people pay on a cost-plus basis for every additional service, pay for their own drugs, and generally receive lower levels of care. The government is attempting to substitute assisted living beds for a real need in long-term care beds. That need, Mr. Speaker, is about 14,000 by the year 2019, yet the government is only committing to providing a few thousand assisted living beds over the same period.

It is a crisis in the making, Mr. Speaker. It's already a crisis for many families, some of whom have to give up full-time jobs in order to provide care for elderly family members because they can't afford or can't get the care which they require. Unless the government deals with the situation, we're going to have a serious crisis not only affecting the well-being of elderly and chronically ill individuals in our province but affecting families that are trying to support those individuals. We have done our very best to bring this issue front and centre to the attention of the government, and so far they continue to ignore the fundamental difference, as they ignore their promise made in the last election for 600 additional long-term care beds.

Mr. Speaker, we also have proposed good solutions with respect to prescription drugs. The government would like to have us believe that all of the cost increases that we're facing in our health care budget in this province are due to people aging, being out of shape, or smoking, making personal choices that are affecting the costs of the health care system. But they ignore the fact that one of the major single contributors to increases in our health care budget is drug costs. They ignore the fact that large pharmaceutical corporations have patent protection for 20 years in this country, and they use that in order to provide drugs at very, very high prices because they essentially have a monopoly.

We brought to the attention of the government that current negotiations between the government of Canada and the European Economic Community for a free trade zone involve demands from the EU for extensions of patent protection since the European economy is the host to a significant number of some of the largest drug companies. That has been identified as something which in Alberta alone may lead to an increase in our health care costs of $210 million per year, yet the government has remained silent with respect to the negotiations that their cousins in Ottawa are conducting with the European negotiators.

Mr. Speaker, we've talked about ways that we could economize on drug costs, and we talked about a plan. Unlike the government, which has failed twice now to bring in a new seniors' drug plan, we were able to show how we could substantially increase coverage for drugs to seniors without increasing taxes by even $1. That is based on a New Zealand plan. By negotiating bulk-buying prices with the big drug companies for brand-name drugs, we estimate that we could save over a hundred million dollars a year. If that was put back into seniors' drug coverage, we could make sure that seniors have the drugs that they need without exceeding $25 a month regardless of the number of prescriptions. Right now in this province it's $25 per prescription. Of course, many seniors have multiple prescriptions, so the costs can be hundreds of dollars a year for seniors with multiple prescriptions.

Mr. Speaker, there's lots that can be done to improve health care. I talked about long-term care. The lack of mental health care beds in the province is another blind spot of this government. They talk about more community sports, but they don't talk about more mental health beds, and it is the lack of mental health beds and the lack of long-term care beds that lead many people to be placed in acute-care beds in our hospitals. That, of course, means that those beds are not available for emergency room patients once they've been stabilized in an emergency room. It's the fundamental reason for the crisis in our emergency rooms.

The government, instead of dealing with long-term care and mental health beds, which are much cheaper to operate than acute-care beds, is addressing the problem by adding more acute-care beds instead of freeing up the ones that we have and, at the same time, dealing with a chronic shortage of mental health and long-term care beds.

Mr. Speaker, solutions are there for the health care system. We don't necessarily think that you have to add more money, but you have to spend more wisely. This is reflected in a recent poll, which shows that 66 per cent of Albertans believe we have a health care crisis, and 60 per cent of those people believe that it is not a lack of money but mismanagement that is creating the situation. New Democrats have always been the most reliable champion of public health care. We invented it, and we will stand up for it always. I don't mean to in any way denigrate the commitment of other parties to this, but I just want to underline that it is something that is at the core of our values and our beliefs.

Mr. Speaker, I think that we have to talk a little bit about the whole question of landowner rights in this province. The government has forged ahead with three pieces of legislation – formerly Bill 19, Bill 36, and Bill 50 – all of which are designed to eliminate the traditional protections for landowners against arbitrary government actions with respect to their land. That is being driven, quite frankly, as Bill 50 showed, by a desire to forge ahead with massive new transmission infrastructure projects, which the government conservatively estimates at $8 billion, but I think a more realistic estimate is $16 billion. That is many times the total value of the entire infrastructure in our province for transmission today.

Why is that occurring? The government wants to go ahead with this. They've overridden traditional protections for landowners for their property, and they have eliminated the traditional requirements that these projects be justified before a regulatory process, with people having the right to intervene and challenge the costs and challenge the need for the projects. The cabinet will simply designate them as essential infrastructure, and all of that is short-circuited and no longer required.

Why is this happening? Well, in our view – and we, I think, take a different view than the other parties on this – this has to do, fundamentally, with the deregulation of generation in our province. We addressed this issue at the forum in Vegreville, which the Premier didn't attend, but we had Danielle Smith from the Wildrose Alliance, and we had the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, the Liberal leader, present and myself on the stage. Ours was the only party that took the position that we felt deregulation was the problem and that it had to be changed. The other two party leaders and, I know, the government all said that they favoured going ahead with deregulation.

That, to me, is a key question because deregulation of generation means that instead of approving after a regulatory process a new generation and building the new transmission that's required specifically for that generating site, whether it's a coal plant or a gas plant or whatever it is, now anyone can build a plant anywhere they want. So when we met with people from the transmission authority, with one of their chief planning engineers, after some discussion it dawned on me that the real reason was that you wouldn't really know where anybody was going to set up their plant, and if they thought they could make money, they could because it's no longer planned and no longer regulated. What that means is that you have to build a transmission infrastructure that is robust enough to handle it. [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired] If somebody wants to ask me a question, I have a few more things to say.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. That was a very interesting point that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was making about transmission lines and overfunding, so I think that I'd maybe like to hear a bit more information on that.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, hon. member. I do appreciate that.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, with respect to that is that, in fact, we are overbuilding our transmission infrastructure in order to accommodate generation deregulation. It's massively overbuilt. It's been likened to building a 32-lane highway between Edmonton and Calgary, far more than you need. I mean, it would be lovely to have, but I think that we need to recognize that all of the costs related to this are going to be paid by the electricity consumer, so we're going to see sharp increases in our power bills in order to build infrastructure that allows people to export their power to the United States on a for-profit basis. That has led this government into a real minefield in terms of where they're going, and there are more mines ahead with respect to that.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that we are committed to balanced budgets. We are committed to fair taxation but also to competitive taxation. We believe that if this government had not walked away from revenue from the wealthiest people in our province, from the oil industry and the gas industry and the most profitable of corporations, we would not be in a deficit position today. This government has created this situation. When the times were good and the money was flowing in from natural gas royalty revenues in a big way, they felt that they could give gifts to all of their friends and reduce the amount of taxes that they were paying. Now the middle-class families and the working families of this province are paying the price.

So, Mr. Speaker, I want to say very clearly that we do not think that the vision which is included in this Speech from the Throne is, frankly, much of a vision at all. It really is a reiteration of the things they wish they had done, the things that they promised to do that they might get around to sometime if they were ever elected. But I think they have exhausted the patience of the people of Alberta. They're out of ideas, and they're almost out of time. I think that this very weak speech reflects that very well.

Alberta New Democrats have a vision, a more positive vision for the people of this province, and we're going to continue to communicate that to the people of Alberta. We expect that there's going to be increasing levels of support for a more progressive, more humane, and more sensible vision for this province than that contained in this Speech from the Throne.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: There's still time available on 29(2)(a).

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that we adjourn, but I'm not sure: do we have to have a motion to adjourn debate first?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if I may, at this point in time, looking at the clock, I would like to adjourn the debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, in light of the time, I would now move that the Assembly adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, February 24, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and of our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed emotions that I stand today to introduce very special guests in your gallery. I say mixed emotions because saying farewell to two people that I have truly loved is going to be difficult. I know that when I say domo arigato, thank you for your service, and sayonara, I truly mean in my heart that we will meet again. Yasuo and Kyoko Minemura have been exemplary representatives of their country, Japan. For over three years they have served, living in Calgary, hosting many of us in this Assembly, always welcoming with their generous hearts the people of Alberta, introducing industries to people and making valuable contacts for Albertans with the people of Japan. They have illustrated by their grace, wisdom, and sensitivity the very best of Japanese exports, two wonderful people that are with us today and seated in your gallery with Tim Marriott. Ladies and gentlemen in the Assembly, please join me in thanking Yasuo Minemura and his darling wife, Kyoko, for their exemplary service. Please stand while we recognize you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two people I'd like to introduce today. One of them is my long-suffering former legislative assistant, Lindsay Cooke. I know she's in here somewhere. There she is. Stand up, Lindsay. She is a very faithful assistant, and I really appreciate everything she's done for me. She's finally rid of me, but I wanted to have her here to acknowledge the work she's done for me. Thank you, Lindsay.

Also, my good friend and mentor and a former member of this Legislature, LeRoy Johnson, is in the Speaker's gallery. He served from 1997 to March of 2008. He is also, of course, the father of the Member for Athabasca-Redwater. I'm very pleased to have him with us today.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When I came into the building today, a wonderful student from this school presented me with a gift that I haven't even had a chance to open. These visitors are from Lakeland Ridge public school, a bunch of wonderful students accompanied by Mrs. Mair, Mrs. Lundin, Ms Chase, Mr. Robertson, Mr. Ron Hauser, Mrs. Gale Fuller, Mr. Greg Fuller, Carla Petroski, Marina Troake, and Alex Tighe. Would the students and their parents and helpers from Lakeland Ridge school please stand? Welcome to all of you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 19 students, 23 guests in total, from Provost public school in the constituency of Battle River-Wainwright. When I asked them how they wanted to be described, they simply said "awesome," and after speaking with them for a bit, they are. They're accompanied by their exceptional young teacher, Miss Jamie Bishop, and parent helpers Joanne Paulgaard, Kim Higdon, and Linaya Lessmeister. They're sitting behind me in the members' gallery. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my honour and pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two wonderful people from my constituency, Wayne and Loree Nixon. For a number of generations both of their families have contributed greatly to the Drumheller-Stettler constituency, in Loree's family's case in agriculture but also in rodeo and Wayne's family in rodeo. Wayne also serves as the reeve of the county of Stettler. They've both given tirelessly to their community. Wayne's father and my mother actually attended high school together a few years ago. It's a pleasure, and I ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two very important people. I have here with us today my new constituency assistant, Rashelle Dubrule. Rashelle has had experience in a lawyer's office, and I think that will come in handy as a constituency assistant. She's shown compassion and energy, and I'm pleased to have her here.

Along with Rashelle I have my old constituency assistant, Darin Doel. Darin has been with me for 10 years, so I feel like I'm losing a part of my family, but I want to congratulate Darin because he's moving on. He should be going back to school to become a psychologist because my constituents have come to know him as Dr. Phil. Darin is moving on to be the executive assistant to the vice-president of our central Alberta Health Services, and I would like to congratulate him. He said I could tell you anything but just don't give out his cell number.

Could I have Darin and Rashelle rise and receive the traditional warm welcome from the Assembly. They're in the members' gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very talented individuals. The first one is Mr. Gordon Chan, whom I had the pleasure of getting to know over dinner last night. Gordon works for Meyers Norris Penny, and I'm impressed with his long and diverse background in the financial industry, working both overseas and in the United States. But what really impressed me with Mr. Chan is his vast and extensive training and experience in the mixed martial arts, something you don't often associate with chartered accountants. Gordon and his wife, June, and his young children, Cassidy and Dakota, now make their home in Calgary, where he spends much of his time as a hockey dad, something many of us are familiar with.

Many members may know my second guest, Mr. Lanny Westersund. For many years Lanny worked in the Legislature for a number of our MLAs here, and he is still a familiar face in the hallways and at social events. I'm sure my colleagues will agree with me when I say that Lanny is one of the most dedicated and hard-working individuals that has worked here in the Legislature. He currently works for Meyers Norris Penny, where he is active on many of the aboriginal files. One thing I would like to mention is that Lanny is perhaps the strongest supporter of the Calgary Stampede that I have ever met, to the point that he is somewhat of an unofficial ambassador.

With that, I'd like the two to please stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today three special guests and friends. The first is one of two "Cheryls" that manage my constituency office, Sharyl James-Wright. Would you stand, Sharyl? Beside her is her father, Pat James, who is a really good friend of mine as well as of the minister of agriculture and a trail riding buddy of ours. Also, we have Al Kemmere, a friend of mine and a councillor for Mountain View county. I would ask all members of the Assembly to please welcome them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to have this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to this House a good friend of mine, a good fellow Rotarian and good business leader in town and also a good community leader, the former president of the Rotary Club of Edmonton, Mr. Scott Montgomery, and his assistant, Denise Brunner. They are here for the budget. Please rise and receive the traditional welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of guests today. First of all, my constituency assistant in Red Deer-South, Brenda Johnson, and her husband, Ken. Also joining us today is Al Evaniew, a long-time personal friend who works with Brownlee Law, and two very special constituents from Red Deer-South, Marlin Styner, who serves as the chair of the Premier's council on disabilities, and the driving force in his life, his wife, Diane Gramlich. Also joining us today is Tim Crendon, who is the executive director of the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce. I'd ask my guests to rise and receive the warm reception of the members.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and, in fact, a pleasure to rise today and introduce again to this Legislature my partner, my wife, Debbie Oberle, who has joined us today to watch the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a few individuals that have been a big part of helping to make Alberta a better place. The first one is Gordon Butler, a long-time rancher, advocate for property rights, and just an awesome Albertan, who travels around promoting agriculture and what Alberta has to offer. I appreciate his dedication over the years and wish him the best.

The next two are Said Abdulbaki and his brother, Raed. They are also from Calgary and just awesome individuals that are true Albertans. They're always promoting Alberta and promoting the Wildrose Party and what it has to offer in order to make Alberta a little bit better. I'd ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour of introducing two guests, relatives I would say. As you know, in northern Alberta we're related to everybody. They have been recently elected to the Peavine Métis settlement, and they're seated in the members' gallery. Their names are Ken Noskey, who is the chair of the Peavine Métis settlement, and Sherry Cunningham, who is also a councillor of Peavine Métis settlement. I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, did I miss anyone?

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members a couple of people in the members' gallery. They are my wife, Pauline Prins, and seated with her is Mr. Paul de Jong. He is the former prairie director of the Christian Labour Association and currently the executive director of the Progressive Contractors Association of Canada, PCAC, from Calgary, visiting in Edmonton today for the budget. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce a good lifelong friend and a friend of this Assembly, Mr. Brady Whittaker. He was previously the mayor in Whitecourt and now serves and works with the Alberta Forest Products Association of Alberta. I'd ask Brady to stand and please be recognized by this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

St. Albert Sesquicentennial

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One hundred and fifty years ago last month Bishop Taché and Father Lacombe stood on a hill on the north bank of the Sturgeon River and proclaimed that the site would be the ideal setting for a Catholic church and an agrarian settlement. This was the origin of the first nonfortified settlement west of Winnipeg.

Today St. Albert is a prosperous community of 60,000 residents with a land area extending beyond the original St. Albert river lot pattern, which was the norm before the adoption of the Dominion Land Survey system.

St. Albert is renowned in Alberta for its high-quality arts and sports programs and its parks. St. Albert has recently adopted the motto Cultivate Life in recognition of its agrarian roots, its tree-lined streets, and its strong botanical presence.

St. Albert is proud of its most famous citizen, the late Lois Hole, former Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, the Queen of Hugs. Her Honour did so much to cultivate life in St. Albert, starting with the Hole family greenhouses, which have now been transformed into the Enjoy Centre, a major commercial and botanical attraction next to the Lois Hole provincial park and the new Ducks Unlimited viewing platforms adjacent to Big Lake.

On your desks this afternoon is a lapel pin bearing a reduction of a painting by Alan Nuttall, a local artist who often has prints available in the Legislature Gift Shop. The scene on this lapel pin depicts kids skating on the mighty Sturgeon River, with the historic grain elevators, the CN railway trestle, and St. Albert Place in the background. I had this pin minted in recognition of St. Albert's 150th anniversary.

St. Albert Place was designed by Alberta Métis architect Doug Cardinal, who has designed many unique buildings in Alberta, Ottawa, and even in Washington, DC. His designs are based on his philosophy that the built environment must blend in with the natural environment. As such there is not a straight line in the entire building.

St. Albert is also well known for hosting numerous provincial, national, and even international sporting events. As I speak, the 55 Plus Winter Games have just commenced with a torch relay, bringing over a thousand seniors from across the province to compete in 13 different events.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Disclosure of Leadership Campaign Donations

Mr. Mason: Albertans deserve to know where the dollars that support party leadership candidates come from. It's no secret that special interests pump tens of thousands of dollars into leadership campaigns, seeking favours. We know, thanks to electoral financing laws, that corporations, especially oil companies, donate tens of thousands of dollars to the Conservative Party, for example. We see the results: the lowest royalties in North America, lax environmental monitoring, and a permissive workplace safety regime. Yet when it comes to leadership campaign donors' donation amounts, the favours sought remain secret.

It's disappointing that the Government House Leader spoke yesterday against an urgently needed debate about leadership campaign donation disclosures. Our call for an emergency debate was for good reason. Albertans deserve clear laws on this before three leadership races come and go by the end of this year, and this government is trying to stall until it's too late.

We would not need an emergency debate if the government had acted years ago, when Alberta's NDP first raised the issue. Instead, they ignored a unanimously supported 2007 motion I made, calling for fair rules. Instead of showing leadership last year, the former Justice minister shuffled the issue off to a committee. This government broke yet another promise to Albertans. The giant loophole in Alberta's election financing laws remains. The Tories' reputation as the most secretive government in Canada is well deserved.

The consequences of this legislative void are clear. The former finance minister, a repeat PC leadership candidate, did not disclose his 2006 leadership campaign donations. Wildrose Alliance leader Danielle Smith flouted accountability by refusing to disclose her 2009 campaign contributors.

Albertans are left to wade through a hodgepodge of different rules applying to different candidates and parties. There's no guarantee of what and how fast different parties will disclose donation information.

Party promises can be broken. Election laws can be enforced. Every MLA, front-benchers to back, has to meet strict financial rules during elections. We should expect the same in leadership contests. This government needs to stop its shameful denials and introduce donation disclosure legislation now.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Access to Psychiatric Care

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has said that there is not a crisis in health care, but yesterday we were contacted by a mother who clearly knows the system is in crisis. She has a son who has severe mental illness, who has been suicidal, and she has taken him repeatedly to the Royal Alex emergency department, where he has been unable to be admitted. She's been forced to leave the province to get the treatment her son needs. To the Premier: why should a mother with a son with severe mental health issues have to leave the province to get access to appropriate treatment?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday and as I continue to say, our health system in this province is not in crisis. There is always room for improvement, especially in access, and that's why we've committed to a five-year funding agreement with Alberta Health Services and will continue to look at areas of improving access. The minister will be able in the next question to identify all of those five areas.

Dr. Swann: Well, again to the Premier. Access to residential psychiatric treatment for children with mental illness is just not there. This mother has been waiting for nine months to get her son into an appropriate treatment centre. Will the Premier commit to looking into this situation and see what can be done for this mother and family?

Mr. Stelmach: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While access to psychiatric care, especially for children, is lacking in this province, does the Premier agree that 24 psychiatric beds for children are not sufficient to serve all of northern Alberta? Twenty-four in-patient beds.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a good point. I'm not a health care professional, so I can't say whether 24 beds is adequate or not. We'll leave that to the medical profession to dictate. On the other hand, there are things that Alberta is doing that other provinces aren't doing, and that is especially in the area of autism, where we continue to attract families moving to Alberta because we do provide good services and also pay for the medication.

Operating Funds for Hospitals

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, two out of three Albertans recognize what we have been saying in the Liberal Party for some time, that there is an ongoing crisis in the health care system, and it's because of Progressive Conservative mismanagement. An Alberta Liberal government would include operating budgets when planning capital projects. To the Premier. The south Calgary health campus, to be opened next year, was built with no plans for the hundreds of millions of dollars in operating costs. How can the hospital be opened without an operating budget?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to undertake that question. I think if the hon. member stays patient for a few more hours, he will see some answers, possibly, to that question. The bottom line is that we budget in the year of the opening of a facility the costs associated with running the facility. You'll see that coming to pass as that hospital starts to open up. It's a wonderful facility, as you know, Mr. Speaker. One point three billion dollars for one million square feet in Calgary to help them out.

Dr. Swann: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker, Calgarians are very much looking forward to it fully operational. The question is when? With the Peter Lougheed expansion, the Rockyview expansion, the Sheldon Chumir centre, the east Edmonton health centre – a laundry list of Tory mismanagement and broken promises – when will you commit to ensuring that there will be enough staff and funds for these hospitals?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, right now I'll commit to that. The fact is that as these facilities open, Mr. Speaker, funds are put in place in the year that they open to help staff those facilities. In the case of the south Calgary health campus in the current budget, 2010-2011, we allocated $50 million to begin the off-site training and the recruitment process, and additional dollars will be provided as they are needed.

Will the minister tell Albertans if the Edmonton clinic, also slated for opening in 2012, is going to face the same problem of underfunded budgets and lack of staff?

Mr. Zwozdesky: No, Mr. Speaker, that's not the case at all. There will be adequate staff put in place. Recruitment processes and training processes are already occurring. The fact is that right now we're looking for the exact spots that we can fill with the monies that we have, and as we need more spots, they will be filled with more dollars to pay for them. The bottom line is that we have space that is being built, that is being shelled in now because it's cheaper to build the additional space now than it is to try and add it on two, three, four, or five years later.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Long-term and Continuing Care

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Affordable long-term care is a priority for Albertans and certainly the Alberta Liberals. There are 759 Albertans waiting in hospital for long-term care, yet a thousand continuing care beds were re-announced in the throne speech. Continuing care is not long-term care. To the Premier:

how many of the thousand continuing care beds are actually publicly delivered long-term care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, we're going to be, you know, talking about whether it's continuing care or long-term care. I can tell you that it's about time in this country and in this province that we change the description of long-term care. We don't want to put people in long-term care. We want to put people in a facility that both spouses can spend time in together for their last few years of married life so that we don't separate them because we call one area long-term care and the other one continuing care. Surely in 2011 we can keep married couples together and give them the quality of life that they deserve.

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Premier, his arguments and his . . .

The Speaker: No preamble, please. Go to the question.

Ms Pastoor: . . . speaking was actually old hat. These arguments do not stand anymore today. There are people that need long-term care.

How many of these thousand beds will be delivered by for-profit deliverers, where seniors will be nickelled and dimed and dollared just to get an extra bath when they need one?

Mr. Stelmach: Further to add to my first answer, we'll make every effort to make sure that seniors can retire in the very same community that they helped build.

Ms Pastoor: We are apparently talking about apples and oranges here. Sorry.

There are 759 seniors who are waiting in hospital, and they're there because this government has ignored their needs. When will this government increase publicly funded, publicly delivered long-term care beds?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, seniors of this province are not apples and oranges. They're people that helped build this province, gave us the quality of life that we enjoy today, and we'll continue to ensure that they have the best quality of life possible as they retire and live out their last few years in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Seniors deserve our respect, Premier.

Reporting of Child Pornography

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a new Minister of Justice, who I want to congratulate and welcome into that portfolio. Minister, a year ago this House passed Bill 202, the Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act, but it has come no closer to the law of the land. This act has been in limbo for a year, and our children continue to be degraded and abused in secrecy. To the new Minister of Justice: will you commit to having this act proclaimed immediately?

Mr. Olson: I want to thank the hon. member for the question. As she might imagine, I've been getting briefed kind of around the clock. This is one of the things I have not spoken to my staff about, but I'd be very happy to talk to them about it and be happy to share that information with you and give you my position once I have met with them.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Thank you, Minister, and I appreciate your response as someone who's been a previous minister, and it is a huge learning curve. Minister, your staff know about this bill. Your staff has misled the public in regard to – they keep telling them they're waiting for the federal government in regard to the bill they have. Please, on behalf of Albertans and the children in this province, proclaim the bill.

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, this provides me with the great opportunity to say what my observations are about my staff so far, and it's been nothing but exemplary, the treatment that I've had from them. I spent the morning with my deputy and his assistant deputy ministers, and they are true professionals. I have no doubt that they're going to give me good advice on this.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Speaker. Minister, this was no criticism of your staff. Your staff need to know the difference between what the federal government is proposing and what the provincial government is proposing as that legislation.

The previous Minister of Justice knew about this bill, knew this bill needs to be proclaimed on behalf of the children in this province. Minister, will you please proclaim this piece of legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure, but I don't think I have the power to proclaim the legislation myself. If I'm wrong on that, well, I'll find out. What I will undertake to the hon. member is that I will talk to my staff about it. I would be very happy to have her in, and we can discuss it further.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Long-term Care Beds

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are hundreds of people in Alberta who are waiting in acute-care beds because long-term care beds are not available. Each one costs taxpayers a thousand dollars a day. Over the course of a year the use of acute-care beds by people requiring long-term care costs the province millions of dollars in wasteful health care spending. In light of the serious lack of long-term care beds, why isn't the Minister of Health and Wellness taking action to address this growing crisis?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we are taking action. I'd just draw the member's attention to page 3 of the throne speech, wherein we said, "The government will continue to look to the 20-year strategic capital plan to build priority public infrastructure such as schools, hospitals, roads, and long-term care facilities." That ties in exactly with the 20-year strategic plan, which, as you know, I authored. If you look on page 43, you'll see more evidence of that.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that the minister means continuing care beds because that really is what the government is planning to build.

Given that we all know that continuing care beds does not refer to medically supervised long-term care beds but to nonmedical unsupervised assisted living beds and given that people who wait in acute beds require continuing nursing care, how can the minister suggest that a person who needs ongoing nursing care would be safely placed in a nonmedical assisted living facility?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we have 14,500 long-term care beds in this province in 176 different facilities. Now, we've given a commitment to the larger umbrella piece to say that we're going to build an additional 1,000 or more beds each year over the next five years, and some of those may well be what he's referring to as long-term care beds. The point is that we're trying to keep people together longer and keep them in their communities, where they feel they belong.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the health minister seems to share the same misunderstanding of this distinction that the Premier shows, why won't he tell us why medically assisted beds – that is, long-term care beds – where nursing care is available around the clock, are not in the government's plan? Why do they think that they can take people who need that attention, who need that medical care, and put them in assisted living beds, where they don't get the care they need?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it is exactly in our plans to provide people with the care they require. The difference in the thinking today as opposed to many years ago is that we're not asking them to move every few years when their needs change. We're trying to keep them in the facility and have that facility rise up to the level of care people need so that they don't have to keep moving. That is what has been asked for by families, by communities, by loved ones, and so on. That's what we're trying our best to deliver, the best care possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Cross-government FOIP Office

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After years of pressure from Alberta Liberals Alberta became the second-last province in Canada to introduce FOIP legislation. Alberta also has the distinction of being the first province to abolish the office responsible for the act across the public sector. To the Minister of Service Alberta: can the minister explain why her deputy minister told the Public Accounts Committee that the access and privacy office was not being dismantled after the office had already been gutted and was about to be completely gone?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to FOIP and the important work that FOIP does with all government departments, the fact is that the FOIP commissioner and the individuals in each department continue to do great work, continue to protect Albertans' information, and continue to work with government to do the right thing.

With respect to the dismantling there is no such thing going on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister is not answering my question. Either the minister is incompetent, or the minister doesn't know what's happening in her ministry, or she doesn't care.

To the minister again: why did the minister think it was no longer important to keep the FOIP Act up to date and to provide cross-government support and training and advising on cross-ministry and intergovernmental projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to FOIP training across government, on a weekly/monthly basis there's training that is provided to all FOIP appointees, all FOIP individuals in each department across government. That is ongoing, and that will continue to go on, working with the Privacy Commissioner and all the initiatives that are going on. So the employees have access to the information to ensure that Albertans' information will be protected and as well that they have access to it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: given that the minister has abdicated her responsibility for FOIP, what is the minister requiring other ministries to do to fill the leadership gap?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess that as Minister of Service Alberta FOIP and the access to information Albertans have are very important to me. The protection of information is critical as well. It's that fine balance that I and the individuals working across all of the government's departments protect every day.

With respect to FOIP and some of the information that's available to Albertans, much of that is now available on the Service Alberta website without having to do an access request.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Southwest Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday there was an exchange with reference to this week's southwest Calgary ring road open houses. Since I represent a different part of town, I'll bring forward a different perspective. I've heard from many constituents in Calgary-Lougheed over the years. They believe that after 50 years of talking, we all deserve the highway now, and they want it with the same speeds and the same number of lanes as the rest of Calgary and Edmonton. However, in another constituency some people are concerned that the road may negatively affect their neighbourhood. My first question is to the Minister of Transportation. If enough people are opposed to the plan, will he consider abandoning the study and looking for other solutions?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's a very good thing that a lot of people attended open houses last night and the night before in Calgary. I believe that it's essential that we get the public's feedback on what they expect for a southwest ring road, and I hope that the consultants and all the officials from Calgary and the province learned a bunch from the open houses.

Mr. Rodney: My first supplemental question is for the same minister. Many of the people at these open houses are very concerned with the number of homes that could be removed to make way for the road. Can the minister please clarify exactly how many homes might be impacted in order to build this section of the ring road?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said in the House yesterday to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, there is a lot of information to be gathered, and there is a lot of information being told and said at these open houses. I want to be clear that all of the things that are out there right now are just options. There are no decisions that have been made. We need to let this process happen. We need the planning study to go on so that we can make the very best decisions for all Albertans and Calgarians.

Mr. Rodney: My final question is to the same minister. Instead of continuing with the planning study, is the minister considering going back to the Tsuu T'ina Nation at some point sometime soon to renegotiate another deal for the ring road land if that indeed is the best-case scenario?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that the province is not renegotiating the offer that was presented to Tsuu T'ina in '09. We made the best possible offer we could make at that time. I believe it's a great deal for Albertans and for the Tsuu T'ina Nation. Their people decided to vote against it. Since then we've heard that the chief has come out and said that his people voted against it because of some clarifications that need to be made. We will make those clarifications.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Carbon Capture and Storage Upgrader Project

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the government announced a new upgrader and carbon capture project to be built outside of Edmonton, joining the Total upgrader announced last fall. Now, this is great news for our economy, and the Official Opposition caucus is very supportive of these additional upgraders, but at a certain saturation point the economic upside loses to the deterioration of community health and the environment. To the Minister of Environment: what specific monitoring enhancements is the government putting in place to address the cumulative effects of these projects?

Mr. Renner: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to share with the member her acknowledgement that this is great news for Alberta. This is a great opportunity for this part of the world. That being said, no one more than I recognizes that increased industrial development brings with it increased pressure on the environment. That's why we have committed to continue down the path of cumulative effects environmental management so that we can in fact predict, not react to, the outcomes that result from industrial development.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when this government intends to capture 5 million tonnes of CO<sub>2</sub> by 2015 but this carbon capture project, the only one that is beyond the letter of intent stage, will capture just one-fifth of what's needed, has the government promised more than it can deliver?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of carbon capture is really a shared responsibility. The actual program itself falls within the Ministry of Energy. But I can say to this member that we have in negotiation a number of proposals that are at various stages, and I think it's far too early for anyone to suggest that these projects will not proceed and that we will not be able to meet that anticipated target.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Surely, the government did a business case. So if the carbon capture and storage project is delayed and does not move forward in tandem with the upgrader, is there a plan B that's been worked out to deal with an increase of over 3,000 tonnes of CO<sub>2</sub> a day outside of one of Alberta's largest urban centres?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe I can try to answer that question. Unfortunately, the question started with "if." I would suggest that the hon. member cool her jets and just be a little patient because I think that by the end of this year she'll be very satisfied that what we have embarked on relative to the projects in carbon capture and storage will come to fruition, and we won't have to worry about answering the question that starts with "if."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Oil Sands Monitoring Panel

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta recently announced a panel to develop a world-class environmental monitoring system in our oil sands. Considering that the eyes of the world are directed at Alberta and how we manage the oil sands, the credibility of this process is crucial. My question is to the Minister of Environment. What can we expect from the panel and the future monitoring in the province?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think we can expect the same thing that I expect from this panel, and that is that they provide us with concrete recommendations to ensure that we have a first-rate monitoring system. The kinds of things that I'm looking for are an exceptional physical monitoring network, transparent reporting via the information portal, credible data analysis with a scientific base, and I think one of the most important is that there be appropriate governance and validation aspects that are incorporated into that monitoring.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The panel membership has come under criticism by some. Even an original member of the panel resigned, citing concerns. How can the minister assure this House that the panel has the right combination of experts and is fully independent?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it wasn't by coincidence that we named co-chairs to this panel. One of the co-chairs comes from a science background, and the other comes from an industry background. That's what this is all about. At the end of the day we need a system that is both credible and functional. I need to point out to all members of the House that the majority of the panel members are, in fact, PhD-level experts from areas of science expertise such as ecology, hydrology, and geology.

The Speaker: Sorry. We have to move on.
The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. The federal government did its own review of water monitoring in the oil sands and, after it was complete, pledged to develop a water monitoring plan in 90 days, which means that it's expected to be released at the end of March. How is the province working with Environment Canada on the development of this plan?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we actually have officials from Alberta Environment that are working in conjunction with Environment Canada to develop the system. But I have to point out that what the federal government is looking at is the technical side of the system. What we are concentrating on is that in addition to the technical side we have to have a system that has appropriate governance, has appropriate scientific validation, and, once again, has the transparency through an information portal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Public Consultation on Parks

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just a heads-up to the individual acting on behalf of the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Earlier this month the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation stated that new parks legislation would not be reintroduced this sitting so that she could listen to the views of Albertans and stakeholders. To the minister: if consultation is important to the minister, to this government, will she actually invite the public and conservation groups to town halls and open forums before bringing forward another parks bill?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take that question on behalf of the minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. You know, that minister is very clear about the importance of consultation and her commitment to that, hon. member. I will take that under advisement for the minister.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. That public forum consultation is absolutely essential. Groups such as Canadian Parks and Wilderness, the Sierra Club, and the Alberta Wilderness Association do not believe that this bill even in an amended fashion will pass.

With the Alberta parks system not keeping up with population growth and with the government failing to meet its preservation targets from 1995, will the minister commit to expanding the parks system and setting aside more land in an undisturbed state as her number one priority for this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take that question as well under advisement for the minister.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Given that parks account for almost half of Alberta's tourism activity, will the minister again permit parks funding to be cut to protect tourism programs? Kind of an oxymoron circumstance even though cutting one undermines the other.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As well, I'll take that question under advisement for the minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Inclusive Education

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All my questions are to the Minister of Education. Many of my constituents, parents of special-needs students and teachers alike, have expressed concern over the government's stated desire for inclusive education. Many of them either have failed to understand what this direction means or flatly oppose the direction because of what they think or perceive it to mean. Can the minister once and for all provide this House, my constituents, and all Albertans with a clear explanation of what he considers inclusive education and how it will look at the classroom level in our schools?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, probably not in 35 seconds. Inclusive education means that every child has value and that every child needs to be included in the education system. That does not refer to placement. It doesn't mean any child in every classroom, but it does mean that every child deserves to have learning opportunities and that those opportunities are determined by teachers and schools together with parents and together with health professionals and advisers so that that particular child's learning needs can be met in an inclusive system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the biggest challenge to special-needs education is a lack of accountability for funding and programming at the school level can the Minister of Education tell us how this concept of inclusive education can ensure accountability?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This concept of inclusive education means that you look at the learning needs of the child and fund based on that. It is more difficult than a formula-based approach, but it is more important to understand what kind of technological supports, what kind of learning supports, and what kind of health supports the individual child needs and to try and arrange the funding so that you have the resources surrounding the school and the classroom to support the child, the learning technologies around, and then, of course, appropriate teaching skill levels to deal with an individual child's needs. That's more difficult than coding and funding, but it's also more effective.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that answer.

Is there any merit to looking at a policy that sends differential funding for coded students straight to the school which the student attends so that allocation of that funding can be done by principals at the school level in consultation with parents and staff?

Mr. Hancock: Well, no, Mr. Speaker, because we do have school boards across the province and we do entrust school boards to deal with the appropriate needs of all the students that are entrusted to them in their jurisdiction. We fund the boards; they allocate the funds. But we do need to work in the context of making sure the structures are around so that the supporting health professionals, the supporting structures are there, that they can be drawn on through student health partnerships and other resources, that the technology is there, and that the teachers have the appropriate access to the learning that they need to be effective to the children that are entrusted into their classrooms.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Legal Aid

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Due to the funding crisis in legal aid judges and lawyers agree that it is failing in its mandate to ensure that low-income people are represented in the courts. Indeed, just two days ago the Law Society told ministers, and I quote, that no community is safe if it does not make justice available to all members. To the new Justice minister, whom, by the way, I congratulate: will you correct the neglect of the former Attorney General and start by admitting that the lack of financial support for legal aid in Alberta is creating an inequality in access to justice so profound that it threatens the integrity of the whole justice system?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, of course, our government supports the legal aid program, and we have been consistently supporting it. There has been no reduction of funding from us in the last three years. Other forces have caused some reductions in funding, and we are monitoring this very closely. We're working with the Legal Aid Society and the Law Society, and we expect that we will be able to talk about this further after the budget.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this problem has been going on for two years now, and monitoring is not what's needed.

Given that the current eligibility for legal aid is so tight-fisted that even people on AISH can't qualify and given that the courts observed in November that legal aid is, quote, becoming an impediment to the administration of justice, end quote, why won't the Justice minister admit that the former minister's callous neglect of the legal aid funding crisis while monitoring has put the justice system out of reach of some of the most vulnerable members of our society?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the former Justice minister did a wonderful job working with the Legal Aid Society. They have developed some very innovative programs, some of which are now being reviewed. As a result of that review, I think that there's a more nuanced and targeted approach. Not everybody needs a lawyer to do everything for them. There are lots of other opportunities to provide support information. Our safe communities initiative also provides that type of support.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister was making that same argument a year and a half ago. By the way, lawyers are telling them that safe communities is in jeopardy right now because of the failure to deal with the funding problem.

Now, given that the president of the medical staff association at Alberta Hospital has written a letter which states, and I quote, that this is creating the criminalization of the mentally ill because of their inability to get legal aid anymore, why won't the Justice minister admit that his government is failing Albertans by denying the legal aid funding that it requires?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, our government is not failing Albertans. Again, I would just say to stay tuned for the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government lacks a clear plan for Alberta's electricity system. With generating units Sundance 1 and 2 offline the cost of electricity will increase, there will be a reduction in reserve capacity by 7 per cent, and it will increase our dependence on imported power. Essential to economic development is affordable and reliable electricity. To the Minister of Energy: given that the last few months we have seen record consumption and prices, does the minister agree that without these two generators it will further escalate electricity prices?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's nothing to confirm that. I would say in answer to the member's question about a clear policy that this province does have a clear policy when it comes to energy, not like the Liberal government in Ontario. The government of Ontario has brought in a policy on energy where now they're going out and having to borrow a billion dollars to rebate consumers. That is a government that has no policy around electricity.

Mr. Hehr: Well, that's Ontario's problem. I'm trying to get to the root of Alberta's difficulties here, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the Alberta Electric System Operator predicts potential energy shortfalls – that's the Alberta Electric System Operator, not Ontario's – without these two generators, is the minister worried there will be brownouts or blackouts?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, electricity prices in this province are less than they were in 2002, not like in Ontario, where the prices have doubled because a Liberal government brings in some booga-booga policy around green energy. That's the problem we have.

Mr. Hehr: Oh, Mr. Speaker, those Ontario Liberals.

Given the record consumption and high prices I'll ask the minister to focus on Alberta here for a second. Should we not be encouraging building baseload generators near Calgary and other major centres, where it makes the most economic sense?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my last answer, electricity prices in this province are, if not less, certainly equivalent to what they were in 2002. So I'm not sure what the hon. member is asking about with the two Sundance facilities. The generation capacity of those two will be almost made up when the new Keephills plant comes on in a couple of months.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Coal Exports to Asia

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ridley Terminals at the port of Prince Rupert recently signed a deal with an American coal company that may impact Alberta coal producers. Ridley has agreed to ship 2 million tonnes of American coal this year to Asian markets and 2.5 million in each of the following four years. This will bring Ridley Terminals close to the shipping capacity of 12 million. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Did Alberta Transportation have a hand in enabling the coal-shipping arrangement between Ridley Terminals and the American coal producer Arch Coal of St. Louis, Missouri?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Transportation is aware of the agreement between Ridley Terminals and Arch Coal; however, the ministry had nothing to do with enabling the shipment of coal from the United States to Ridley Terminals. Ridley Terminals is a federal Crown corporation that has made a business deal with an American coal company.

Mr. Speaker, I will continue to advocate for our domestic markets and to make sure that we are looked after here. I'll write a letter to the federal minister to strongly encourage improved terminal capacity . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] Okay. But the hon. Member for West Yellowhead has the floor.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy that the minister has talked about domestic markets, but my concern is whether or not the Alberta government and Transportation will put pressure on the Crown corporation to make sure that Alberta coal producers have a viable export option.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, since I've been the Minister of Transportation, we have always advocated for all of our producers here to try to get our products to market. I've put lots of pressure, as much as I could, on the federal ministers. I've gone together with our counterparts from British Columbia and Saskatchewan to write letters, to make sure we could have capacity on our rails to get our products to market, and we continue to do that. I suggest that we can improve that capacity in the ports if the federal government . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. With world export markets in turmoil, especially with what's going on with the floods in Australia, what can Alberta coal producers expect in the future with respect to their ability to export coal to Asian markets through Alberta?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure this member that Alberta Transportation will continue to review the issue on behalf of Alberta's coal producers. We'll continue to work with the federal government to ensure that Alberta coal producers have viable export options. That's very important to be able to grow Alberta's coal industry. In the future the federal government should carefully review similar contracts that have the potential to limit any growth of Canada's economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Capital Infrastructure Planning

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are disappointed and are questioning the government's integrity because of its secret infrastructure list. The last few days the Minister of Education has continued to erode that trust of Albertans by implying that they're not mature enough to understand the changing priorities. The truth is that the political reasons for changing these priorities are unacceptable to Albertans. To the Minister of Infrastructure: will you table the government's secret infrastructure priority list and the criteria used to determine that list for all Albertans to see?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me make it very clear: there is no secret list of infrastructure. The first thing is that Albertans very much deserve the infrastructure and the need for infrastructure that we are presently providing. The infrastructure needs change throughout this province. As the hon. member knows, populations increase, and needs for schools, needs for hospitals and infrastructure change as times change.

Mr. Hinman: That's no answer. Given that this government purports that it is open and transparent, clearly it is not by that ridiculous response.

Yesterday the Minister of Education refused to make the secret list public. Will this minister do the right thing today here in this House and make the list public for all Albertans to see? They understand. Show the criteria. Make the list public.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, spending money on projects that are important to Albertans is what this government does. We are investing. We invested over $7 billion last year on projects. Twenty-two schools were opened last year. We're going to open schools this year. We have started on hospital projects such as the Grande Prairie hospital, such as hospitals in the northern and the southern parts of this province.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, talk about a secret list. Given that I have been asking for this secret list for years and nobody has ever seen it, this government's priorities are a farce. For five years Fort Macleod has been promised the police training centre. Fort McMurray and Strathmore are still waiting for the long-term care facilities promised by this Premier himself. For two years highway 63 has seen no paving.

The Speaker: Let's get to the question.

Mr. Hinman: Sure. Actions speak louder than words.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned before, whether it be transportation or whether it be health care or whether it be education – I'm not sure if this hon. member would expect the schools list to be in place for the time that the schools are built. Airdrie has grown 50 per cent in the last five years. Chestermere has grown 80 per cent. They need schools.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

Regional Planning

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, some Albertans have expressed concerns over the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. They say that we haven't consulted adequately over the regional plans. Some of them are saying that we are taking away landowners' rights without compensation, and some of the opposition members are even calling for us to repeal ALSA. My questions are all for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why do we need regional planning like in ALSA, Mr. Minister? Why can't we continue with what we're doing right now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The reason that we require planning, quite simply, is that there are 60,000 new Albertans that come to this province every year, either born here or who move here. For the last dozen years or so that's happened. We've got an additional million people in the province of Alberta, and by 2030 we believe that 5 million people will call Alberta home. There are multibillions of capital dollars being deployed in Alberta on an annual basis. We need to plan to go forward, and Albertans expect solid planning from this government.

Dr. Brown: To the same minister: if regional plans are about providing leadership, does that mean that the government is dictating the regional plans to the people of Alberta?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest: anything but. You know, Albertans are clear on one thing on this issue. They're very clear that they expect this government to move forward with regional plans that include a recognition of cumulative effect on air, water, and land base of all activities in Alberta. We've gone out and consulted with Albertans extensively on this issue. At the end of the day very few, if any, Albertans would argue that we need proper planning going forward.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Minister, if the Alberta Land Stewardship Act were rescinded, as some of the opposition politicians are calling for, what would the result be for planning in the province of Alberta?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that to that question there is a very solid and clear answer. You don't have to think very far back to see what happened with the lack of planning in the lower Athabasca region, when some $30 billion a year was deposited on the landscape in Alberta. We need to have solid plans going forward. At that point in time all Albertans were suggesting that we weren't planning properly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Funding Guidelines for Medical Research

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. For decades Alberta's Heritage Foundation for Medical Research was the envy of the nation and was attracting some of the brightest minds in the world right here to our province. This government replaced that foundation with a poorly defined corporation called Alberta Innovates, that two years later remains a giant question mark within the research and scientific community. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: are there rules in place that prohibit political interference in the selection of medical research projects, and if so, will you show us?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's true that the funding for AHFMR was moved into Alberta Innovates, and it's been a great move. The money is still in place. It's still funding medical projects, as it has for 30 years and continues to do so. That is operated by an arm's-length group which selects the projects that will be funded and chooses how they'll be funded.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister: when Alberta Innovates enters into partnerships with industry, what guidelines protect taxpayers' money, or is the government simply allowing that money to subsidize the R and D efforts of corporations?

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each agreement is different. Within those agreements we do not subsidize the operations of businesses, but we do support the research activities that may occur within those businesses within the partnerships.

Dr. Taft: Does the minister have any firm timelines – and I mean firm – for when the first round of research grants will be issued given that Alberta Innovates officials haven't been able to be more specific than sometime this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. There's going to be some information forthcoming shortly that may help us to talk about that a little bit more, so I'll leave that to the budget discussions, which are going to happen in a few minutes right here in this Chamber.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Catholic Education

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are all to the Minister of Education. Recently in my constituency office we're pretty well overwhelmed with cards regarding Catholic education, and in talking to my colleagues, I understand that their offices are starting to get these same cards. Minister, I've never heard the Premier, I've never heard you, I've never heard our caucus talk about removing the rights of Catholic education, but somehow this misinformation is being passed around. Can you clear this up for me, please?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I've been unequivocal when this question has come up. We have a very good education system in this province, and one of the reasons it's very good is because we have choice. Catholic education is one of those choices. Minority faith education is enshrined in the Constitution of this province. We're not going to do anything to change that. It's a fundamental part of our public education system in this province, and it will continue to be supported by this government.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you for that, Mr. Minister.

Since I made you aware of the situation some days ago, have you had an opportunity to see who is spreading this fear amongst the Catholics in our province?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the cards that the hon. member is talking about appear to come from the Catholic Women's League, and while I respect and encourage people to engage in the discussion, I think they're raising an issue over something that would remain relatively small. A former Minister of Education, David King, has started a petition to get rid of Catholic education. It doesn't seem to be getting any traction. I can tell you that it hasn't gotten any traction with this government because we believe in choice in education. We believe that choice actually makes a good education system better, and the Catholic system is doing a good job in this province.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for that, and I hope that it's going to clear up the situation.

Can you expand on what Mr. King's motive may be to get these people all riled up?

The Speaker: Well, I'm sorry, but the motive of an individual not in this Assembly has no bearing on what we're doing.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Integrated Police Information Database

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Strategic IT initiative or Alberta police integrated information initiative or API3 or common technology and standards to facilitate information integration and interoperability: this obscure jargon is what passes for this government's explanation of a combined database of police notes, which can include speculation, gossip, and opinion. Since this system has been around so long, I'm sure the Solicitor General can tell us who does have access to this unverified information. Private security personnel? Government collection agencies? Homeland Security if they ask? Who?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member spreads – well, for lack of a better term I think booga-booga works quite well. The information that police are going to collect is the same information they've always collected. It's going to be accessed by police members, the same way it always has been. It's going to be overseen by FOIP legislation and the Privacy Commissioner as it always has been. It's exactly the same. For the member to allege that security guards can access it: not true. For the member to allege that we'll be storing children's fingerprints: simply not true.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. To the Solicitor General: given that a privacy impact assessment is a risk management tool, could the minister explain why it was not done five years and $65 million ago?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the member alleges that we started this project five years ago and that we've spent $65 million on it. That's simply not true. But the bottom line is that if the member knew something about privacy impact assessments, she would understand that it's a very detailed documentation of who accesses the system, how it's monitored, who reports to whom, how supervisors oversee it, and you can't do it before you have the system. It doesn't go live till the PIA is done.

Ms Blakeman: Well, speaking of done, given that the minister is now promising that all will be revealed in the privacy impact assessment, would the minister commit to not implementing this system until the assessment has been made public?

Mr. Oberle: I thought I made pretty much exactly that commitment yesterday. Is the member now asking me not to do a privacy impact assessment? That's exactly what we're going to do, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. Well, that was 19 members today. That was 114 questions and responses.

I want all members to take a look at the clock. We will do a recess promptly at 3 o'clock. We have a fair amount of Routine work to continue, so we'll go into it right now. We're going to continue with Members' Statements, where we left off.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Raymond Comets

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to rise to recognize a group of talented young athletes from my constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner. The Raymond Comets are the 2010 Alberta athletic tier 1 football champs. They earned the title by defeating Edmonton's Harry Ainlay Titans during a hard-fought game late last year.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, this victory marks the third consecutive provincial win for the Comets and the seventh time in 14 years that the Comets have earned the championship title. This record is truly reflective of the hard work and dedication exhibited by both players and coaches.

I would like to take this time to congratulate each and every member of the Raymond Comets. Good luck, and here's hoping for another victory in 2011.

Thank you.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rural Teacher Practicum Program

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak about an innovative program that encourages Alberta's future teachers to consider teaching in rural Alberta. The rural practicum initiative is part of Alberta Education's workforce planning framework for action and is another way that government is partnering with Alberta school districts and postsecondary institutions for the ultimate benefit of Alberta students.

Rural school districts around Alberta have had some difficulty attracting and retaining new teachers. Alberta Education in partnership with the University of Alberta and several rural school jurisdictions have responded with a program designed to encourage education students to consider a rural practicum placement. This program gives the university students a unique opportunity to form connections with superintendents of the rural boards and their administration. This gives them a great advantage when it comes to finding a job after graduation.

There are, however, challenges that remain for student teachers who choose a rural practicum. Most students face the cost of travelling or maintaining two residences as their six-week practicum will take them away from their home. In order to ease the burden, Alberta Education is working with Horizon school division, Northland school division, Holy Family Catholic regional school division, and St. Thomas Aquinas Roman Catholic separate regional division, which is part of my constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar.

The government is providing help with the increased cost-of-living expenses associated with a rural practicum as well as helping student teachers find accommodations and make connections within the community.

I wish these students all the best in their practicum experience. I'm sure that these school divisions will truly benefit from the experience of hosting these student teachers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Social Enterprise in the Nonprofit Sector

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about social enterprise in the nonprofit sector, which is defined as a business operation commonly run by a charity or nonprofit organization with revenues reinvested into the programs and operations of the nonprofit. Examples of social enterprise include revenues the Girl Guides generate from selling over 4 million boxes of cookies that go towards funding their programs. Selling the cookies helps Girl Guides gain valuable skills and experience.

Goodwill thrift stores generate revenue that helps fund their operations and also provides training for people with disabilities and inexperienced individuals to gain work experience.

EthniCity Catering is a nonprofit venture that specializes in multiethnic food produced by immigrant women who lack Canadian work experience. The revenue from the catering company helps support the Centre for Newcomers' programs.

Mr. Speaker, last week our province joined a privileged rank in Canada's social entrepreneurship movement when Trico Charitable Foundation launched three exciting new programs with a financial commitment of $2 million. First, the Trico foundation will provide funding and educational opportunities through their enterprising nonprofits Alberta program for organizations to evaluate and enhance their social enterprise. ENP Alberta will empower nonprofit groups to enhance their sustainability by providing grants and technical assistance to develop and grow their profit-generating social enterprise.

Secondly, the foundation promotes and encourages social entrepreneurship through its partnership with the Canadian Youth Business Foundation and also by presenting four annual Social EnterPrizes, which recognize entrepreneurship within the nonprofit sector.

Social enterprise builds greater resiliency and independence within the nonprofit sector . . .

Calgary Airport Trail Tunnel

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this month Calgary's city council did the right thing for Alberta's largest city and ordered to build the Calgary airport tunnel. On that day Calgary's municipal leaders showed that they have a vision for more efficient, cleaner, and cost-effective transportation links. There was even some talk in the media at the time that many Tory MLAs, including the Premier himself, were finally considering the value of supporting the tunnel. Sadly, those promising talks seem to have been stamped out by this government, which has returned to the old, tired line that Calgary already has enough money, that it's their project, and they should foot the bill alone. While Calgary city council showed their vision, this government shows that they have developed a case of tunnel blindness.

Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, this is far from a Calgary-only project. The tunnel will benefit all Albertans by improving access to Alberta's busiest airport. Tourism, small businesses, and big businesses will all benefit from the presence of the tunnel. Calgarians should not have to bear the burden alone for the tunnel construction. This issue isn't just about traffic congestion. It is about growth, prosperity, and positive economic development for the province as a whole. It is about putting our money where our mouth is when it comes to livable cities and fighting climate change. It is about protecting small businesses and improving quality of life for Alberta families.

It is time for this government to dig its head out of the sand and use a shovel for a better purpose, to build the airport tunnel. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Provincial Cabinet Tour

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday, February 15, I welcomed nine ministers to the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency as part of a province-wide cabinet tour. In both Bonnyville and Cold Lake the ministers were greeted by well over a hundred people in each of the communities, who were thrilled about the chance to engage in a one-on-one dialogue with their government. The response to their visit was excellent. My constituents and our public officials were grateful for a chance to discuss first-hand the issues that matter to them and to be assured of this government's continued commitment to prosperity and progress in Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Speaker, issues of health care, education, resource development, transportation, and landowners' rights were the major topics of the day. The ministers did a phenomenal job not only of addressing questions related to each, but they succeeded in providing my constituents with insight into our commitment to them and their needs as we move forward.

I would like to thank the city of Cold Lake and both the town and MD of Bonnyville for hosting the events and helping to make them so successful. On behalf of the constituents of Bonnyville-Cold Lake I urge this government to continue to plan events just like this one and make every effort to bring our government ever-closer to the people of this province in every constituency and every community.

Thank you very much.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Bill 201 Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 201, Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011.

Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to require all Albertans to make a choice regarding their organ donor status on the back of their personal health cards. They would be compelled to choose either yes, no, or undecided. This requirement would not apply to holders of current health cards or those unable to consent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on behalf of the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Bill 202 Legislative Assembly (Transition Allowance) Amendment Act, 2011

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce on behalf of the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere Bill 202, referred to as a private member's bill, to amend the Legislative Assembly Act concerning the transition allowance.

Bill 202 instructs the Members' Services Committee, via this amendment added at the end of section 39 of the Legislative Assembly Act, to replace the transition allowance with a retirement allowance that will not exceed one month's pay for every year served to a maximum of 12 months' salary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got the appropriate number of copies of a report put forward by the Alberta Electric System Operator which clearly shows that with Sundance 1 and Sundance 2 going down, we'll be continuing to rely on power from outside the province as well as most likely experiencing price rises. I leave that to be picked up by the Clerk.

Thank you very much, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today: five copies of a letter and my cheque to the Lethbridge Food Bank for November of 2010, to which I send a cheque every month to support my mantra of the fact that AISH should be indexed, as are MLAs' salaries. It's for $146.25, which was half of the pay raise that I got in 2007. It will be the same for December 17, 2010, and the food bank that month was the Coaldale Food Bank.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, I wish to table with the Assembly today the appropriate copies of the members' allowances amendment order which was passed at the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services at its February 17, 2011, meeting. The order came into force that day.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If I could prevail upon the Government House Leader to please share with the Assembly the projected government House business for the week commencing the evening of February 28.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, February 28, of course, in the afternoon is private members' business. In the evening, subject to the passing of a government motion this afternoon, we would anticipate meeting in Committee of Supply at 7:30 for the supplementary estimates. Sorry; the motion was passed yesterday, so we will be meeting on Monday at 7:30.

On Tuesday, March 1, in the afternoon will be day 3 of consideration of His Honour's Speech from the Throne. So it will be budget replies first and then responses to the Speech from the Throne and, time permitting, introduction for second reading of Bill 1, Asia Advisory Council Act; Bill 2, Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2011; Bill 3, Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2011; Bill 4, Securities Amendment Act, 2011; Bill 5, Notice to the Attorney General Act; Bill 6, Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011; Bill 7, Corrections Amendment Act, 2011; and Bill 8, Missing Persons Act, such of those as we might be able to get to. The intention would be to introduce them for second reading so that they're on the table. And as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, March 2, in the afternoon we would anticipate meeting in Committee of Supply to consider the estimates of Finance and Enterprise and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, March 3, in the afternoon consideration of His Honour's speech, day 5 of 10 for throne speech responses and then further debate on second reading of bills 1 to 8 such as we might get to and as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure and an honour, and thank you very much for allowing me to introduce to you and through you two people that have made the trip all the way up here from Vauxhall, Alberta, on this very cold day. Dwight and Jan Tolton have come here for the very first time to take in the budget. I wanted to especially recognize them. They're typical of community people that really get involved, get things done. Jan is involved with the school. Dwight is an MD councillor with the MD of Taber. They're host parents at the Vauxhall Academy of Baseball, strong proponents of it. I really thank them for taking the time to come up. I'd like them to stand and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in order to prepare appropriately for the presentation of the provincial budget, this House will stand in recess until 3:15 sharp.

[The Assembly adjourned from 2:58 p.m. to 3:15 p.m.]

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2011, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2012, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the government for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2012, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, when a set of estimates is to be tabled, section 8 of the Government Accountability Act requires that an amended fiscal plan be tabled. Accordingly I wish to table both the 2010-11 quarterly budget report for the third quarter, which serves as the amended fiscal plan, and the 2010-11 supplementary supply estimates. This quarterly report has already been provided to all MLAs, and as I speak to you now, this report is being made public, as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act.

These supplementary estimates will provide additional spending authority to 13 departments of the government. When passed, the estimates will authorize increases of approximately $638.7 million in voted expense and equipment/inventory purchases, approximately $0.4 million in capital investment, and approximately $124.3 million in nonbudgetary disbursements. These estimates will also authorize transfers of approximately $25.1 million of the previously approved spending authority between departments.

Government Motions

6. Mr. Snelgrove moved:

Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2010-11 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion, but seeing no members rise, should I just call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 6 carried]

7. Mr. Snelgrove moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2010-11 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund shall be one day.

The Speaker: This motion, hon. members, is not debatable, so I'll call the question.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Government Motion 5, agreed to by the Assembly on February 23, 2011, I wish to table the 2011-12 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2011-12 government estimates.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, the Government Accountability Act requires that the government table the government's business plans and consolidated fiscal and capital plans. The hon. Premier will table the government's strategic plans and ministerial business plans.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the government strategic plan and ministry business plans as required under sections 7 and 8 of the Government Accountability Act. The strategic plan sets out the government's vision and long-term strategic plan and also includes the government's three-year business plan, which outlines the government's strategies, goals, and measures necessary to track results over the next three years.

Mr. Snelgrove: I now wish to table the government's consolidated fiscal and capital plans for Budget 2011. The consolidated fiscal plan is required under section 4 of the Government Accountability Act, and the consolidated capital plan is required under section 7.1 of the same act.

Budget Address

8. Mr. Snelgrove moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today as the MLA for Vermilion-Lloydminster to present the government of Alberta's budget for 2011-12, a practical, responsible budget that respects the economic lessons of the past while continuing to build for the future, a budget that combines restraint with the traditional Alberta values of community and compassion.

Like so many Albertans I learned those values from my parents, Bob and Margaret Snelgrove, who are in the Speaker's gallery today. They grew up during the Great Depression. They learned the value of a dollar. As so many Alberta families have done throughout the history of our province, they figured out what it takes to prosper through difficult times: live within your means, save something for emergencies, and plan for better days. I'm proud to say that this budget reflects those values.

Over the last 16 years Alberta paid down $23 billion in debt. In the good years we saved nearly $25 billion, with $17 billion of that going into Alberta's emergency savings account, the sustainability fund. Through the recession that solid foundation allowed the government to plan for better days, to continue our investment in the future of our province. That's the Alberta way, Mr. Speaker: learn from the past; look to the future. Thanks to a combination of prudent management and foresight, Alberta has weathered the downturn and emerged from it in a stronger fiscal position than any other province.

At the beginning of the recession our Premier announced a plan to see Alberta through the difficult times, a straightforward plan built on four simple principles. We would manage our spending carefully, cutting back where it made sense; we would protect and enhance funding for priority public services like health care, education, and supports for Albertans in need; we would continue investing in roads, hospitals, schools, and other public infrastructure, supporting tens of thousands of jobs, and preparing for a return to economic growth; and we would continue to compete for investment and skilled workers with the lowest taxes in the country.

We were able to carry out this plan because we had savings in the bank to pay for it, savings that would get us through the recession with our fiscal strength intact, our core public services preserved, and our province positioned for growth. Mr. Speaker, growth has returned to Alberta. Led by a strong oil sector, our economy has recovered from a deeper recession than expected and is expanding again, with a forecast growth in the coming year of 3.3 per cent. Investment has rebounded in both oil sands and conventional oil, and increasing oil exports are expected to drive Alberta's economic growth over the next three years. That growth is forecast to average 3.2 per cent between 2012 and 2014, a strong but sustainable pace that should keep inflation in check and employment growth manageable.

Business investment outside the oil sector, following a weak 2010, is expected to pick up this year as other sectors of our economy strengthen. Alberta's manufacturing shipments were strong in 2010 and are expected to continue to gain strength as the global economy moves firmly into expansion mode.

The employment picture is also forecast to continue to improve in 2011 with the addition of over 40,000 jobs. Employment growth is expected to continue in the years ahead, averaging just under 2 per cent per year through 2014, driving the unemployment rate down to 4.5 per cent. This strong labour market coupled with solid growth in personal income is expected to boost consumer spending. In short, the overall outlook for our economy is positive, with most indicators looking up.

But there are reasons to be cautious. Natural gas prices are expected to remain weak for the foreseeable future, with natural gas storage levels close to record highs as supply outstrips demand.

As an exporting province Alberta's economic health is closely tied to that of the U.S., and while economic recovery has taken hold south of the border, it remains fragile. These are not reasons to expect the worst, but they remind us of the need for ongoing vigilance in how we spend taxpayers' money. Mr. Speaker, Budget 2011 reflects that need for vigilance.

Both operating expense and total program expense are forecast to increase at a rate lower than population growth plus inflation. Because the recession hit Alberta harder than first thought, revenues are not projected to be as high this year and next as forecast a year ago. However, we expect to be back in the black by 2013-14, and we will continue to use our savings account to cover our deficits as we get back to a balanced budget.

With improved overall global economic and energy price prospects the outlook for Alberta revenue is positive. Total revenue is forecast to increase $1.6 billion in 2011-12 to almost $35.6 billion, then grow by an average of $3.2 billion over the next two years, reaching $42 billion in 2013-14. Leading the recovery in revenue this year is a 13 per cent increase in revenue collected from personal and corporate income tax, but to be clear, this is not because tax rates are being increased.

As our Premier has often said, you cannot tax your way out of a recession. This government remains firmly committed to maintaining the lowest provincial tax regime in Canada, with low personal tax, with low corporate tax, the lowest fuel tax, the highest personal and spousal tax exemptions, no capital tax, no payroll tax, and no sales tax.

Mr. Speaker, with any other provincial tax system Albertans and Alberta businesses would pay at least $11 billion more in taxes each year. This is not a burden we are prepared to place on our province. Our approach, as always, is to keep taxes low and grow the economic pie. So the factors driving the forecast increase in tax revenue – more jobs, higher wages, and stronger corporate profits – are all signs of a growing economy.

Growth in the resource sector, particularly in the oil sands, is also expected to drive revenues. Resource revenue is forecast to increase by $300 million to $8.3 billion in 2011-12, rising to nearly $12 billion in 2013-14. This is due mainly to increasing revenue from bitumen royalties, which are forecast to climb to $4.1 billion this year, more than the combined totals of royalties from natural gas and conventional oil. By 2013-14 bitumen royalties will grow to over $7 billion due to increased production. Revenue from conventional oil royalties is forecast to be relatively flat while revenue from natural gas is expected to drop 38 per cent compared to last year and remain low for the next two years.

Most other government revenue is forecast to continue to recover and grow over the next three years. One notable exception is federal transfers, which are forecast to fall by nearly $500 million, or nearly 10 per cent. This is mainly the result of the winding down of federal stimulus programs introduced during the recession. So it's not a surprise, but it is a reminder of our grievance with the federal government over the unfairness of the Canada health transfer to Alberta.

All other provinces will receive at least $805 per person in Canada health transfer cash this year while Alberta will receive $558. Even as Albertans contribute far more per person to Ottawa than the citizens of any other province, they are still being shortchanged by over $900 million this year alone. Mr. Speaker, it creates two-tier federal support for public health care. This is clearly unfair, and your government will continue to insist, in the strongest terms, that Albertans be treated equally.

As our revenue picture brightens, we must continue to be prudent managers of Albertans' dollars. Our emergency savings are shrinking, and we must begin to rebuild them. That means keeping our spending in check, Mr. Speaker, and this budget does that. Total operating expense is forecast to be $33.9 billion, an increase of $720 million, targeted at priority areas. At 2.2 per cent that increase is less than population growth plus inflation of 3.5 per cent, a trend forecast for the following two years as well. Total expense, including capital grants and other expense, is forecast to be $39 billion, an increase of just one-half of 1 per cent.

However, this is far from being a status quo budget. It continues a strong investment in Alberta's future. Our spending plan for the upcoming year continues to focus on five priorities: increase access to quality health care and improve the efficiencies and effectiveness of health care service delivery; enhance value-added activity, increase innovation, and build a skilled workforce to improve the long-run sustainability of Alberta's economy; promote strong and vibrant communities and reduce crime so that Albertans are safe in their homes; provide the roads, schools, hospitals, and other public infrastructure to meet the needs of a growing economy and population; and ensure Alberta's energy resources are developed in an environmentally sustainable way.

Funding for health care is forecast at $14.9 billion. This includes a 6 per cent increase in the base operating grant to Alberta Health Services, in line with the five-year funding commitment made last year that will see a further increase of 6 per cent next year and 4.5 per cent in each of the two years after that. This will increase the base grant to Alberta Health Services this year by $545 million, to $9.6 billion. Short-term results from this substantial investment in health care, expected to be achieved by March 2012, include 360 new hospital beds, 3,000 more surgeries, 2,300 more continuing care spaces, and 3,000 more Albertans receiving home-care service. We are putting new dollars into front-line actions. Albertans told us to put people first, and we are.

Funding for K to 12 education is also again being increased, and significant support to the postsecondary education system will be provided. Initiatives to build a skilled workforce for the future will continue. School boards will receive $5.7 billion in operating grants and property tax support this year, an increase of over $250 million, or 4.7 per cent. The funding will cover the salary and associated pension costs of a forecast 4.4 per cent increase in teachers' wages effective September 1. It also provides for general enrolment growth and increases in supports for students with severe disabilities, English as a second language, and student transportation services.

Advanced Education and Technology program expense is budgeted at $3 billion, which includes $2.8 billion in operating support. This includes a $62 million increase in operating grants to universities, colleges, and technical institutes. More than $250 million is budgeted for research, innovation, and technology commercialization initiatives, including $202 million in operating support for the four agencies under Alberta Innovates. The Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research and the Alberta heritage science and engineering research endowment fund will continue to support increased grants to maintain health research at Alberta universities and to support long-range initiatives such as nanotechnology research.

Almost $170 million in disaster support was provided to the agriculture industry in the past year as poor early-season weather and other conditions impacted that sector. Although commodity prices for wheat, canola, and beef are encouraging, ongoing agriculture support programs are being maintained, with nearly $1 billion budgeted in Agriculture and Rural Development. With over $41 million budgeted this year, the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency will continue to implement programs to help build an internationally respected, competitive, and profitable livestock and meat industry.

The safe communities innovation fund in the Ministry of Justice will continue to support crime prevention pilot projects and the development of municipal, regional, or aboriginal community crime reduction and prevention plans. Since 2008 300 new front-line police officers have been added, just exactly what this Premier said, and in the coming year 30 new probation officers are being added to target repeat or high-risk offenders.

Our commitment to Albertans most in need will continue. Nearly $783 million is budgeted for income and health benefits and other supports to more than 42,000 disabled adults, an increase of 3.5 per cent. This funding provides for caseload growth and maintains the maximum monthly income benefit for AISH recipients of $1,188 and the average monthly health benefit of about $370. Since 2005, Mr. Speaker, funding to the AISH program has increased by over $290 million, or 60 per cent.

The Premier's 10-year plan to end homelessness in Alberta will continue. Nearly $93 million in operating support is budgeted, an increase of $7 million. This will provide about 3,500 spaces in emergency shelters as well as outreach support services to assist homeless Albertans. Since 2009 about 3,000 Albertans who were homeless have been placed in permanent housing.

Budget 2011 also provides a $16 million increase to seniors' programs, including the Alberta seniors' benefit, dental assistance, and special needs, and a $39 million operating increase to children's services programs, including intervention services, foster care support, child care, and family support for children with disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, if you believe in the future, you build for the future, and this budget continues to do that. Nearly $2.6 billion is budgeted over the next three years for expansion, renewal, and maintenance of health facilities and equipment, including the redevelopment and expansion of the Tom Baker cancer centre and the completion of the south Calgary health campus; construction of the northern Alberta urology centre, including a men's prostate clinic, as part of the new Edmonton clinic south; significant progress towards a new regional hospital in Grande Prairie, including a cancer centre, and redevelopment of the Medicine Hat regional hospital; new health centres in Fort McMurray, High Prairie, and Edson, and a new central Alberta cancer centre in Red Deer.

More than $700 million in capital support is being provided for Alberta schools over the next three years to create more than 15,000 new student spaces, including the construction of 14 new schools in Calgary, Edmonton, Okotoks, Sherwood Park, Spruce Grove, and Langdon under the second phase of the Alberta schools alternative procurement plan and the replacement of three other schools in Sexsmith, Drumheller, and Millet. Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Education is working together with school boards on innovative ways to accelerate the school capital plan to meet the needs of our ever-growing student population.

Alberta's postsecondary universities and colleges will see continued investment as well, including the completion of the SAIT trades and technology complex, the agricultural research facilities at Kinsella and St. Albert, the University of Alberta's Edmonton clinic north, and the Bow Valley College expansion project.

The capital plan also includes more than $5 billion over three years in municipal infrastructure support for our growing communities through the municipal sustainability initiative and other programs. It also includes $4.6 billion over three years for the provincial highway network, nearly $1.7 billion this year alone, one of the largest investments in our transportation infrastructure in the province's history. This investment will fund construction and rehabilitation work on highways throughout the province, with continued construction of the ring roads in Calgary and Edmonton and continued work on highway 63.

The capital plan also includes necessary investment in water and waste-water management. Over $750 million will be provided over three years for monitoring and other regional projects supporting the water for life strategy, for municipal water and waste-water partnership grants, for irrigation rehabilitation grants, and for other projects.

Mr. Speaker, as a globally important energy producer Alberta must continue to focus on being a national and international leader in greening its energy production. This budget continues to support the groundbreaking climate change and emissions management fund. To date the fund has announced commitments to support 16 clean technology projects, with more support expected shortly for energy efficiency and renewable energy projects.

This budget also provides $70 million in 2011-12 for carbon capture and storage projects, part of the government's $2 billion commitment to use this technology to help address climate change. In addition, nearly $17 million will be provided in 2011-12 for enhanced environmental monitoring, science, and reporting, an increase of 21 per cent. The recently appointed environmental monitoring panel will provide recommendations to government by June 2011 on the development of a world-class monitoring, evaluation, and reporting system for Alberta's oil sands.

Mr. Speaker, this is a budget that positions our province for continued growth and prosperity. It enhances Alberta's competitiveness in the global marketplace. It continues to support jobs and create opportunity. It enhances the public services and programs that Albertans value most, like health care, education, and supports for those in need.

Yes, this budget projects a deficit this year and a smaller one next year, but let's be very clear. These deficits are the result of our commitment to build the hospitals, schools, highways, and other public infrastructure we need as our province continues to grow. We have money set aside to pay for that continuing investment in the future. At the same time we will continue to pursue savings within government, building on our proven record of finding in-year savings in our program expense.

Mr. Speaker, at the heart of this budget is a rock-solid belief in Alberta's future as an economic leader, in the potential of our province and the potential of its people. When the recession hit, we were faced with a stark choice. Do we stop investing in the future, do we abandon our priorities, or do we manage through difficult times and make sure we position our province for economic leadership? As a government with this Premier's leadership we made the right decision to keep building Alberta.

Through the worst economic downturn in 80 years we chose to continue investing in Alberta's future, to stay true to the values this province was built on. Why? Because sound fiscal management has given us the resources to do it and because it's our responsibility to ensure this province emerges from this recession in great shape and prepared for the future.

Mr. Speaker, as I look at my parents today, I can't help but recognize that we Albertans have been given an opportunity and a quality of life available to very few in this world. It didn't happen by accident. It was the hard work of generations of Albertans that has made this province what it is today and the foresight of successive governments in creating the framework of fiscal strength and flexibility that allows us to continue building for tomorrow even during difficult times.

Mr. Speaker, this budget remains true to the pioneering spirit and values that made this province what it is today. It shows confidence in our people and in our future. It sets us on a path to join together with all Albertans to build a better Alberta.

I want to thank you, ladies and gentlemen. I want to thank you, members of the Assembly. I want to thank you, Mr. Premier.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Boulton and Miss Nicole Dober. I would like to ask them to rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a particularly special day for me today as I introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a group of people who have come to mean more to me than any other group aside from my family. I'll tell you of their remarkable achievements shortly, but for the moment I want to introduce the Archbishop O'Leary alumni class of 1978 Al Holmes MS liberation fundraising organizing committee. I'm going to introduce them, and then I'm going to ask them to all stand up. First of all, Mr. Al Holmes, the reason that we're here; Mr. Gary Ruta; Ms Carol McDonald; Mrs. Linda Weatherbee; and Mrs. Pat Van Meer. I'd ask this group to now rise or otherwise indicate and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly. Wonderful. Thank you.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, along the same vein, is the person who reminds me every day of just how important friends and family really are: Dominic and Orion's grandma, my wife, Barb Grodaes. Please stand and get the respect.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure to introduce two students from the University of Alberta. As many of you may know, I do lecture at the University of Alberta. They're visiting today. In the public gallery we have Jeff Simmons and Jean-Michel Auger. This is their first visit to the Legislative Assembly to view the proceedings and, of course, wondering about the future. I would ask them both to rise today and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Among the visitors today should also be 50 young people, grade 6 students, from the Academy at King Edward elementary school. I'd ask them to rise, please, and be recognized by all hon. members of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

Black History Month

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour to speak in front of this House today. February is Black History Month. The Canadian Parliament officially recognized Black History Month in 1995 following a motion by the Hon. Jean Augustine, the first black Canadian woman to be elected to parliament. Here in Alberta a number of events are taking place over the month to celebrate Black History Month, including workshops, presentations, and other celebratory events.

Black History Month provides an opportunity for all Canadians and all Albertans to share and learn about the experiences, contributions, and achievements of people of African and Caribbean ancestry. It is also a time to celebrate black heritage and culture in our province. These contributions are even more significant if we consider the past prejudices and discrimination experienced by some black Canadians.

While many of the early black immigrants to Alberta were escaping discrimination and prejudice, they also came to Alberta looking to make a better life for themselves and their families, and today that still holds true. People of all races from all parts of the world come to Alberta for the opportunity that our province presents.

I remember as a young person of 18 years of age, Mr. Speaker, when the Joe Clark government appointed Lincoln Alexander to be the first black member of the Canadian Parliament back in 1979. I remember the thought process going through my head was that it truly can happen for any of us. Today we are living proof of that.

Alberta has a rich black history. From the black Americans who established farming communities like Amber Valley and Keystone, later named Breton, who helped grow our province, to more recent years, black Albertans continue to contribute and make great achievements in the arts, science, sports, politics, and more.

I'm delighted that this year's campaign titled Proud of Our History features prominent Albertans past and present, including southern Alberta rancher John Ware, my son's favourite, and Calgary Flames' Jarome Iginla, the first black player in NHL history to be named team captain. Other notables include Edmonton Oilers goaltender Grant Fuhr; Clarence "Big" Miller, born in Sioux City, Iowa, who made his home in Edmonton in 1970 and became a fixture in our city's and provincial music scenes; Edmonton's poet laureate, Roland Pemberton, a.k.a. Cadence Weapon, one of the performers at the Alberta at the Olympics event in Vancouver last February; and Dr. Tony Fields, vice-president of cancer care for Alberta Health Services and one of the most outstanding and accomplished leaders in the cancer field today. He is a distinguished oncologist and cancer agency administrator who has made a significant impact on the fight against cancer in Canada.

I'm proud to stand here in the Legislature as the first black cabinet minister in Alberta and to acknowledge my colleague the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, who not only was the first black MLA in our province in 2004 but a former mayor of Leduc and a successful businessman.

The diversity of our province and each and every one's history and sense of opportunity is part of what makes Alberta Alberta. Black Albertans from the Caribbean, Africa, America, or other places help create the wonderful mosaic of our province and help to lift up our spirits.

Each summer the colourful carnival costumes, the reggae, calypso, gospel music, and dancing come alive in Calgary with Carifest and with Cariwest in Edmonton as Albertans of Caribbean descent and many other origins get in the spirit of the islands even for just a few days.

I encourage all Albertans to participate in events taking place in the province to mark Black History Month. It's an opportunity for Albertans to gain insight into the experience of black Canadians and Albertans and the vital role that this community has played throughout our shared history.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre will respond on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to join the hon. minister in celebrating the end of Black History Month. Alberta's greatest strength has always been its people. Thank you to the minister for mentioning a number of distinguished individuals and some of the events that surround them. As the minister has noted, black Albertans helped establish this province's agricultural heritage, and black Albertans have always distinguished themselves in many fields: medicine, sports, service, literature, music.

But while most black Albertans enjoy successful careers, taking full advantage of Alberta's freedoms and prosperity, we mustn't ignore the less fortunate members of our black communities. The MLAs of the Official Opposition have met many times with members of the Sudanese community, who are suffering rates of violent crime far out of proportion to their numbers. We've raised the issue in question period and hope that the government and police can work with the Sudanese community proactively to stem the tide of violence and bring some measure of peace to this vibrant community, a community with the potential to make terrific contributions to our province.

We also note that even now in the second decade of the 21st century, Canadian-born visible minorities earn less than their white counterparts even when doing the same job and despite the fact that these minorities attend postsecondary institutions at rates much higher than the rest of the population. This, too, is part of black history, part of Alberta history, and history we should be trying harder to reshape into a better form.

I do want to mention that this weekend I was at the Africa Centre in Edmonton-Calder, where, as the member says, it's all in Calder, to celebrate the conclusion of Black History Month. Mr. Speaker, so many people attended that there was no parking anywhere to be had. The lots were full. The street parking was packed for blocks around. It really was phenomenal. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Calder for his remarks at that event.

I also want to take the time to recognize and thank Pearl Bennett and the Caribbean Women Network, which is a great group in Edmonton that does wonderful work year-round.

Black History Month deserves to be celebrated, and I encourage all Albertans to keep taking part in the events that the minister has mentioned. It is an opportunity for all of us to learn from history so that we may build a better future for us all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has risen, and I will assume that it is to seek unanimous consent to allow additional speakers to participate. I take it there will be an individual from the caucus represented by the hon. member who would like to participate. Anyone else who would like to participate? Okay. An additional caucus member would like to participate.

Hon. members, you need to provide unanimous consent. If you are opposed to allowing further speakers to participate, please say no.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to be here today to share our thoughts on Black History Month. We take time to reflect on the contributions of black Canadians and Albertans to the society we live in today. We recognize someone like John Ware, who has a junior high school named after him in Calgary. There are so many people we could recognize and the huge impact that they've had on people's lives.

Black History Month actually started as only one week nearly one hundred years ago. February was selected because of the birthdays of two great leaders, Frederick Douglass and Abraham Lincoln. We owe Black History Month to one man, Dr. Carter Woodson. As a child he worked in coal mines, not starting high school until he was 20. He seized the opportunity and finished high school in only two years. He continued his education and earned a PhD from Harvard. Dr. Woodson was disturbed by the absence of black Americans and their contribution to society in American history. Not only did he start a week for black history; he started a scholarly journal as well.

Canada has a proud place in black history. Canada was instrumental in helping black Americans escape the terror of slavery through the Underground Railroad.

While we must be aware of the past, we must firmly look to the future. The most inspiring words, from Martin Luther King, are familiar to all of us. "I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to members of the Assembly for this opportunity.

Albertans of African origin have good reason to be proud of their history and culture and their significant contribution to life in Alberta in a wide range of ways. I appreciate the efforts made to provide the rest of us with a rich menu of opportunities to celebrate and learn with them over the month of February. It's great to officially recognize how important people of African origin are to our community, province, and country.

There is a long history of black immigrants in Alberta and Canada, as the minister has noted, and many more Albertans need to know about this. Canada was the end of the Underground Railway, providing a welcoming place of refuge for people fleeing the horrors of slavery. Even earlier, Americans of African origin came to Canada as part of the Empire Loyalists, settling mostly in Nova Scotia. Here in Alberta we have communities like Amber Valley that were founded by people of African origin and have been vital in the development of rural Alberta and its tradition of community and co-operation.

I've been pleased to meet a number of outstanding and prominent African-Canadians such as "Big" Miller, who chose to make a home in Alberta in more recent years.

We have largely ignored the substantial history of the whole continent of Africa in schooling in Canada and missed out on a great body of knowledge as a result. Today we are seeing history being made across Africa in dramatic ways, and there are many things to learn from this as well. The past few years have seen a significant increase in Alberta of people of African origin and of the places of origin. It is good to honour and remember outstanding individuals for their achievements and to celebrate with them during times like Black History Month, Carifest and Carifest, and other events.

Mr. Speaker, we need also to remember during this month that there are very difficult practical realities facing Albertans of African origin. We have just seen changes which reduce services to immigrants, and this directly affects their opportunities to achieve labour market and economic success. Many of our newest neighbours of African origin are coming from refugee backgrounds and require specialized health services that are not readily available. We know that many people of African origin are still experiencing racism in a range of ways in their everyday lives, so we must be energetic in looking for more effective ways to counter this attitude, which diminishes us all.

I join with the minister and all Albertans in saying how good it is to have public awareness of the history and the vital role of people of African origin here in Alberta. I also encourage this government to be vigilant to have the necessary programs and services in place to ensure newcomers of African origin can find Alberta to be a great place to make a home.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Size of Alberta Cabinet

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta needs a common-sense approach to budgeting. The shrinking sustainability fund cannot prop up this government's mismanagement much longer. To the Premier: will the government follow another piece of Alberta Liberal advice and reduce this bloated cabinet from 24 ministries to 17, saving millions of dollars for Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the budget that was presented by the minister was balanced in terms of serving the needs of vulnerable Albertans, tapping into the savings that we set aside during the good years, the lean years. We do have the most volatile revenue stream in all of North America, and that is why we have to set savings aside when resource revenues are very high, to cover up those areas where they are pretty low.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess the Premier didn't hear me. Will you cut the cabinet from 24 to 17 ministries and save the Alberta taxpayer millions of dollars? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, just to go back in history, I think my first cabinet was 18 members, and I was criticized right across Alberta for it, but set that aside.

Not really something to be proud of, but in finding almost $2 billion of in-year savings in the budgets over the last couple of years, we saw the ratio of the public-sector service in this province back to about the mid-1990 levels even though we've seen this huge population increase. So we have downsized government considerably during that period of time.

Dr. Swann: Now, that's doublespeak if I've ever heard it, Mr. Speaker, expanding to 24 ministries and calling that a downsizing. Very interesting.

Mr. Premier, why do you continue to spend millions on the failed greenwashing branding initiative while the programming budget for Housing and Urban Affairs has been cut by $200 million over the past two years? Do you really think Albertans value public relations over housing?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are more than meeting our goals in affordable housing, and the minister can give further details on that. But I can tell you that the budget that we set aside for branding was used to ensure that we get Alberta's message out both in the United States and in markets around the world, and we're going to continue to do that. All the eyes of the world are on this province because we have about a third of the world's oil supply.

Emergency Room Wait Times

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Emergency wait times have been pushed out of the headlines by the current disarray in this government, but a glance at the latest Alberta Health Services charts indicates the targets are not being met. Only 1 of 5 hospitals in Edmonton and 1 of 4 hospitals in Calgary have met the target. To the Premier: can the Premier explain what he is going to do now? Lower the targets?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can only say this anecdotally, but in talking to Albertans and, of course, having watched some of the Twitter and the blogs of two of the Leg. media that had to use emergency services prior to the Christmas break, they tweeted that emergency waiting times were very reasonable. They were down. We'll continue to see those numbers improve, and further evidence on the progress will be of course given by our minister of health.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Health Services has set a target that 45 per cent of patients needing hospital stay should be admitted within eight hours. In this case, too, only one Calgary hospital and no Edmonton hospital met the target. What confidence can Alberta health workers and Albertans have that these targets will be met anytime soon?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me respond to that because, in fact, I have visited some of these emergency rooms just in the last little while, and I can tell you that the issue that propelled the head of emergency docs in the province to contact me on the Thanksgiving weekend was about EIPs, emergency in-patients. These are people who need to be admitted into hospital, into acute-care beds, but they're occupying emergency room beds. Those numbers have dropped very significantly, and within a couple of weeks we'll be putting out the exact numbers so that even this member will know them.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, the deadline was March, when the minister promised to have changes. That's tomorrow. Are these targets any more than wishful thinking?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's no deadline of March. What there is is a target for the end of March with respect to the number of people in EIPs, which I've just commented on, and also with respect to the number of people who are in for minor issues and who should be in/out in four hours or less. There's another target for those who need to be admitted, and they'll be admitted within eight hours. While those improvements are not as much as we had hoped for, nonetheless they are improving. I'm very confident that now that we have the promised 6 per cent increase, you'll see even more improvements being made as we go forward, and the wait times will be reduced.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Provincial Fees

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week's budget fees for vehicle registration and vehicle plates went up by 23 per cent. Land titles fees for mortgages are up 133 per cent. Fees for registering a business or a nonprofit are up 150 per cent or more. This is really a $157 million tax increase. My first question is to the minister of finance. Why increase these taxes by $157 million, yet you cut a cheque before Christmas for $140 million to Suncor in a royalty rebate at a time when they have record profits and the price of oil is close to $90 a barrel?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have an obligation as a government to try and have even cost recovery when we deliver services. We have not increased these fees since 2002, and everyone with any kind of a business mind would understand how much it has cost to deliver these services and that coming back to cost recovery is just a prudent financial measure.

Mr. MacDonald: It's not cost recovery, Mr. Speaker.

Again to the minister: given that this minister claims that this is merely cost recovery, will the minister table the analysis that backs up his statement just now?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we'd be happy to have the Minister of Service Alberta provide to the opposition and all hon. members in Alberta how we arrived at the breakdown of the costs.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why did the minister think increasing fees for businesses by 150 per cent and creating all these other new fees, which really are taxes, was necessary? Why force these costs onto businesses when other businesses, like Suncor before Christmas, get a $140 million royalty rebate cheque from your government at a time you have a megadollar deficit?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about apples and oranges and grapefruits and some lemons. There is a responsibility, when we deliver services to Albertans, to run it on a cost-recovery basis. Should we have reviewed these possibly four or five years ago? Yeah, we probably should have, but we have now, and we've moved back to cost recovery, which is the prudent thing to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, whose birthday it is today.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Friday the finance minister broke with a long tradition by calling a news conference to respond to the Wildrose balanced budget alternative. Usually it's the opposition who responds to the government's budget, but it's nice to know that we've got the minister's attention. Now that we've got it, I have a question for him. Given that this year's deficit of $3.4 billion was projected only to be $1.1 billion a year ago, why should anyone in Alberta, including those in his own caucus, believe this minister, and do you actually think Albertans will believe this minister?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, when we are asked by the media to comment on an item, whether it is newsworthy or not, we make an attempt to do just that. Our budget deals with real people, with real issues, and with real numbers.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that non answer of apples, oranges, and turnips, let me ask you this. The minister made the comment: back in the black by 2012. How quickly one forgets. You know what? That actual comment would actually be right next to the horoscope.

The Speaker: Hon. member, with due respect, remember a document that said "no preambles," signed?

Mr. Boutilier: Right. Yes

The Speaker: Let's get to the question.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you. Given that, Mr. Speaker – and it's right next to the horoscope – will the minister please tell me and tell Albertans: what is he basing his projections on? It is clearly not new math.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I would presume that someone with a number of years' experience in this House would have the ability to read the budget and to understand what the different lines in the budget mean. Our budget is based on industry projections for the revenue sources that we get. It's based on a compilation of figures from Stats Canada, has to do with the growth in population, tax revenues, and such. All of that information is included in the budget documents.

Mr. Boutilier: Given the comment, Mr. Speaker, last week in this House I had posed to the Minister of Education about his secret list as well as to the Minister of Infrastructure. To the Minister of Infrastructure. His secret list: will he make it a priority to table it in this House today so all Albertans can understand the difference between a want and a need and a priority and a nonpriority for our communities across Alberta?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the only secret list is the Wildrose secret list of capital projects that they would cancel, $2.4 billion, so I need to ask the hon. member: is it the Grande Prairie hospital, is it one of the 22 new schools currently being built, is it the south Calgary hospital, or is it a continuing care in Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Oil Sands Reclamation

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For more than a decade the Tories have dragged their feet on implementing a plan for industry financing of oil sands reclamation, exposing Alberta taxpayers to an immense burden of unfunded liability. Independent estimates show that the taxpayer liability for reclaiming currently disturbed land is up to $15 billion. My question is to the Premier. In light of this massive and unjust downloading of risk to Alberta taxpayers, how can the Premier possibly consider a plan that will reduce industry's financial security obligations by half a billion dollars over the next nine years to be anything other than a complete betrayal of our trust?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the question, but the premise is completely wrong. This will actually give more safety to Albertans as owners of the resource. The Minister of Environment very clearly articulated the new policy, and I'll ask him to do that with the next question.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that documents released today by the NDP show that the government's too-little-too-late plan for financing oil sands land reclamation was drafted in secret, behind closed doors, with industry and given that this plan has severe long-term consequences that place Alberta's environmental legacy at risk, will the Premier stop this practice of pandering to their big oil friends, spike the current plan, and commit to starting fresh in consultation with the public and environmental scientists and community members?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, if only everything was so black and white as this member would like the world to be. The fact of the matter is that this is a very complex issue. Albertans, quite rightly, care and are concerned and should be concerned that we protect the public purse and that we do not have the taxpayer on the hook for mine liability. That's what this program is all about. As for consultation the member knows perfectly well that she wouldn't be in possession of the document that she has if we hadn't been doing consultation. That's where she got it from, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it really offensive that the minister would suggest some issues are just too complex for the public.

Now, given that the Royal Society's report in December completely discredited this government's model of allowing industry to monitor itself and given that this plan does not appear to include protection against groundwater and airshed contamination, will the minister admit not only that is he overseeing a failing Tory monitoring strategy but that his government has sold out on a plan for securing the sustainability of Alberta's environmental future?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, if this member would wait until the announcement is made on this plan and those kinds of questions can be answered for her, I think she'll find that this plan will bring additional security from a financial perspective. It will bring predictability. It will bring transparency. Above all, it will bring about progressive reclamation so that no longer will members like this be able to claim that this government is not looking after reclamation in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Wait Times for Cancer Treatment

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been brought to my attention that due to fierce competition for finite operating time between surgeons about 1,200 Albertans are on a wait list for lung surgery, and 250 died waiting on that list, many with lung cancer. I've also been told by others that this happened under Minister Mar and the hon. Member for Sherwood Park and that Dr. Trevor Theman of the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Capital health and Sheila Weatherill knew about this. Is the Minister of Health and Wellness aware of this, and will he call the Health Quality Council of Alberta and carry out a fatality review?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of that, but I'll certainly have a look into it and see what information I can find.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that it has also come to my attention that physicians who raised these issues were either punished or driven out of the province or paid out in millions to buy their silence and the costs buried in the books under the former Capital health region, I'm not surprised that this was never made public. Will the hon. minister commit to investigating and auditing these payouts in addition to the deaths and delays in cancer care?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if those allegations are correct. They're certainly sounding inappropriate to me, but I won't challenge them at this time. I said I will have a look into this issue, and I will do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that people dying on cancer wait lists is absolutely inappropriate – and I agree with the minister; he is an honourable, caring, and honest man – will the minister conduct an independent forensic audit of AHS and Capital health records as it has also come to my attention that there were two sets of books while I was in the ministry, one balanced and the other with the details mentioned that may have contributed to the $1.3 billion deficit inherited by Dr. Duckett when he took over?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, I said that I'll have a look into this matter, but what I'd like to know is where this hon. member is getting this information and if he is prepared to share that or table it or somehow live up to the allegations that he's making. I'm not aware of them whatsoever.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there always is an onus of responsibility on all of us to bring forth proof, which would be helpful.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Drilling Stimulus Program

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government plans on throwing additional money away, unnecessarily subsidizing the oil and gas drilling industry at a time of record prices and record profits. Permanently including the drilling stimulus initiative in times of high-priced oil in the royalty framework not only robs government coffers but is an uneconomic subsidy. My first question is to the minister of finance. With the government predicting $90 per barrel oil, why do oil companies need a subsidy like this at this time of high prices and record profits?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we set out to make sure that we could get Alberta workers back to work. We set out to set a framework that would attract foreign investment to Alberta so that the jobs that were there would be back. We haven't projected $90; we're projecting $88.95. We're projecting what's given to us. The fact is that as world oil prices rise, we get more royalties.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, he's getting less royalties, and the hon. minister knows that.

Why would this government permanently incorporate a program intended to temporarily support the industry during a time of low prices and world-wide recession?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it was put in place to make us competitive with the rest of the world. We need to be on an equal basis to attract long-term, solid investment to that industry, and that's exactly what we're doing.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this doesn't make us competitive. This government sold us out, and the minister knows this.

Now, with this program reducing government revenue last year by $1.7 billion, where will taxpayers or resource owners find in the fiscal plan this year the amount that has been used to subsidize these drilling programs when they're no longer necessarily?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the drilling stimulus program is incorporated into our revenue totals. If he doesn't think the stimulus worked, look at land sales: record high land sales last year. That didn't come as an accident. That came about because the stimulus program was put in place, attracted more people here looking for more areas to drill to provide more jobs for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Fusion Energy

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that an alliance of Alberta's industry, government, and postsecondary institutions has developed a multistage proposal for an Canada-Alberta fusion energy program. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: what is the current status of this program?

Mr. Weadick: Mr. Speaker, fusion energy could provide an opportunity in the future for incredible energy, but at this point in time we're not quite there. However, my department did provide some seed funding to the University of Alberta to help create the Canada-Alberta fusion energy program. At this time that program has not received increased funding. However, many of those scientists continue to work in the area of fusion within the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: what is the potential for adopting fusion energy as an alternative to coal-fired power plants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although fusion is a potential for the future, we continue to look at shorter term options such as clean coal, such as carbon sequestration as the shorter term potential ways of reducing our carbon footprint, but fusion could play an increasing role as we go down the road.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the same minister. What is the timeline for the commercialization of this new technology?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that although work goes on around the world in many places, including scientists here, we're still a ways away from any commercialization of fusion energy. We'll continue to monitor that, see what research is being done, and as researchers in Alberta can provide support, we'll continue to do that.

Charter Schools

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, earlier this year Alberta Education quietly posted a survey on the idea of converting charter schools to so-called innovation centres for educational researchers. Some of the questions in the survey such as allowing private corporations to operate charter schools deserve significant public debate. My questions are to the Education minister. Is the ministry using a rushed survey to claim public support for rewriting the mandate of charter schools in the new education act?

Mr. Hancock: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. What's happened is that, first of all, we have been talking about charter schools and permanence for a number of years. There was a position paper developed, I believe, in the fall of 2008. It was released in the fall of 2009 for discussion. There's been discussion around Inspiring Education for the last two years in terms of what we need in our system, and we're now at a stage where we're talking specifically about what permanence would mean for charter schools and what should be in a charter school mandate. The purpose of the survey is to gather information on that and to broaden the discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the minister for that answer. It's my understanding he met with the Association of Alberta Public Charter Schools in October of last year. What was their response to the idea of them becoming innovation centres?

Mr. Hancock: I can't respond specifically to the meeting in October at the moment, but I can tell the hon. member that, generally speaking, we've had ongoing discussions with the charter schools about permanence, about what the raison d'être would be for an ongoing permanence for a charter school. Obviously, they must be different than just the regular public school system. They provide choice. They've always been intended to provide innovation. The question is: how is that innovation shared with the broader public system? So there have been very positive discussions around that nature, and we will be continuing those discussions.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the innovation and research mandate for charter schools so that they can take over from the much-admired Alberta initiative for school improvement program, that was cut in half by your government in last week's budget?

Mr. Hancock: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. Research and innovation are at the core of the future of education. The provincial Department of Education will have a role in making sure that we have available the best research from around the world, but we will continue to expect the public school system to participate in research through the AISI program, which is a very important program. The purpose of this discussion is to say: if charter schools are there to push the envelope in education to introduce new techniques or new pedagogy or to show where existing pedagogies may make a difference, they should be research based so that we can share that information on a database and research-driven approach.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Alberta Initiative for School Improvement

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All my questions are to the Minister of Education. I recently met with some of my school boards, and they're reeling over the 50 per cent funding cut to the Alberta initiative for school improvement program. Given that this program has been recognized all over the world for its innovative approach to education research and best learning practices, Albertans are grappling with what this means to the future of this program, especially since there was such a successful conference held here in Edmonton recently. So, Mr. Minister, why of all the programs would you cut this one? Do you not support innovation in schools?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I very much support innovation in schools. Quite frankly, this is one of the most difficult decisions I've ever had to make as Minister of Education. The AISI program is a jewel in this province. Other provinces and other countries look to what we're doing. We've just had an international review, which has pointed out what a wonderful project it is. The fact of the matter is that we're in a period of restraint, and rather than cutting the direct budgets to school boards, I had to look at the various grant programs that we have, and we had to make a very difficult decision. I'm very fortunate to have been able to save 50 per cent of the AISI.

Ms Calahasen: Well, if it's such a jewel, can you explain what impacts will be felt within the education system now that this program has been cut in half?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it will be an opportunity for us to look at the program with school jurisdictions and with the AISI partnership to see how we can retool the program, how we can make sure that it's focused in the right direction. It's a very good program, but with every program you ought to look and say: are you getting value for your investment? Yes, it will be difficult in mid-cycle. School boards are going to have to relook at their programs. The important part of this is that we managed to keep it alive and keep it substantially funded at 50 per cent. Is it unfortunate that we have to cut back? Absolutely. But let's look at it as an opportunity to recreate it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, thank you. The innovation is great, and if we're really about research, is less emphasis being put on the educational research now since you've cut this by 50 per cent?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. In fact, as we go forward, we need to put more emphasis on research and more emphasis on understanding, on a research-based and data-driven decision-making process, what makes for good educational opportunities for students and how we ensure that every student has an opportunity to be successful. Research is going to be the core of that, and we will continue to focus on it and make it a priority.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Homeless Management Information System

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year more than 25 Calgary agencies that work with homeless people will start using the homeless management information system. The project is co-ordinated by the Calgary Homeless Foundation, and Calgary will be the first city in Canada to track the homeless. My questions are to the minister of housing. Since the nonprofit agencies that will be using the system are not subject to any privacy laws, how is the minister going to ensure that the tracking system protects privacy?

Mr. Denis: First off, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy that this member has moved away from some tunnel vision as in his questions in the past.

All kidding aside, we do take privacy concerns very seriously, and the Calgary Homeless Foundation's homeless management information system is something that we have talked about. The most important thing to us is that we have a province-wide system because I don't want to have seven or eight systems that don't integrate with each other. There has to be good value for the dollars. It is subject to privacy legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not give up until the tunnel is built.

To the minister again: given that many homeless people have had run-ins with the law at some point in their lives, can the minister tell us whether police will have access to this tracking system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you. Once again, Mr. Speaker, the privacy act does apply to anything collected by the Calgary Homeless Foundation, and we will respect those particular laws and concerns.

Mr. Kang: Well, to the minister again: will any of the personal information in the tracking system be included in the new TALON police database?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, we will respect existing privacy legislation. It is my understanding that it has nothing to do with that particular database. I'd be happy to meet with that member afterwards to discuss further.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

MRI Wait-list

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent announcements of an increase of 9,000 more MRIs over the next two months is certainly welcome and good news for those who have been waiting for months for this service. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Where is the money coming from to fund the extra labour and overtime and other costs associated in dealing with this extra surge in MRIs?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's true that we are adding about 9,000 more MRI exams to the schedule. The direct answer to the member's question is that we're able to do that through Alberta Health Services because they have some money in their budget right now as a result of the stable five-year health funding that we provided last year, and we're continuing with that promise this year. Secondly, there are some savings that have been attracted as a result of amalgamation, and those millions of dollars are going right back into improving health care for Albertans, including this announcement of MRIs.

Mr. Marz: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: if we can afford to do these extra MRIs to deal with waiting lists, why not just do more every month of the year so that waiting lists don't accumulate in the first place?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, increasing access to important health services is one of our main goals of the five-year health action plan, and reducing wait times is another one. In this particular case we are already performing over 165,000 MRIs province-wide. We're adding 9,000 now because Alberta Health Services has the capacity to do that. Will they be adding more in the coming year? Yes, they will until we get those waiting lists down to a more manageable level and until Albertans feel comfortable that they're accessing the services in a much more timely basis as a result of the predictability and stability of our action plan.

Mr. Marz: Can the minister tell me, then, as my last question: are the extra number of MRIs they're going to deal with in the outgoing years going to be able to deal with the waiting lists so that no more accumulate?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think they're going to be able to be handled very efficiently. I know that as added capacity comes into the system, be it the finances or be it the staff or be it the facilities or the equipment – we have now mobile MRI units, for example – they will find their proper place. I'm happy that we're able to add 9,000 more MRIs, and I'm happy we're able to add 3,200 more cataracts. I'm happy we're able to add 5,000 more surgeries in general to the 250,000 we already do. There's much more good news. Maybe I'll get another chance later to address it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

School Construction in Airdrie

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Wildrose presented an alternative, balanced budget proposal that would erase this government's $3.4 billion deficit. Our proposal includes the spending of $4.2 billion on infrastructure. That's higher than the Ontario, Quebec, and B.C. average. Airdrie-Chestermere has roughly 65,000 people in it, so our share of that $4.2 billion would be $73 million. This is more than enough for three schools. To the Treasury Board president: will you ensure that this $73 million is spent on three new schools this year for my constituents? They ask for nothing else than that.

Mr. Snelgrove: That is exactly what they asked for, Mr. Speaker. That is exactly what they asked for: their schools, their long-term care facilities, everything in their community, and the rest of Alberta can just go to hell.

Mr. Anderson: Well, Minister, people from Airdrie and Chestermere pay their taxes, too. Maybe you should review that answer. They've been greatly shortchanged these past 10 years. We ask only for fairness, Mr. Minister.

Let's try this. Given that Budget 2011 allocates $115 million for the newly renovated MLA offices in the federal building, would this minister be willing to put these new MLA offices on hold and use this $115 million instead to build urgently needed schools in Airdrie, or is that a big priority for Albertans, Minister?

Mr. Snelgrove: What we said: as long as it's being built in their community, they're happy. Mr. Speaker, we recognize – we've met with the school board in Airdrie. We've met with town council. I'll tell you: a great problem Alberta has is that we do have a growing student population, and we can solve the problem. The minister is working diligently and carefully with the school boards to see how we can accelerate the school building program.

Mr. Anderson: Well, that sure wasn't my question, but that's good that they're looking into schools for Airdrie. What did that have to do with anything I said?

You know, given that it appears this minister doesn't seem to understand what the difference between a need and a want is or what it is to make a priority and given that he asked for the Wildrose to be more specific on what it would cut and that then we tell him what we would cut, MLA offices for example, and that's clearly not good enough, I see no need for asking this big-spending minister another question.

The Speaker: Okay. Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Industrial Development in the Eastern Slopes

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The primary use for the heavy magnetic iron ore magnetite is to refine coal for use in electricity generation. Now, given that our largest source of greenhouse gas production in Alberta is coal-fired electrical generation, my question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is the government thinking when it ponders exploiting the Livingstone Range of the eastern slopes, pristine Crown land, to mine magnetite?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member opposite, I'm sure, would be very interested to know that I don't ponder on a lot of things, and that most certainly isn't one them. With respect to the fact that there are some legitimate people in the province of Alberta that have freehold mineral rights in the area, I think it behooves us to make sure that we understand exactly what it is that they intend to do.

Ms Blakeman: To the Minister of Energy: given that carbon capture and storage does not reduce greenhouse gases – it just stuffs them underground – and given that every other western country is moving away from dirty coal technology, why doesn't the government invest in alternative energy production rather than enabling and expanding development of old technology? Could you run backwards any faster?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what is happening in Alberta. I had the opportunity this morning to meet with a Spanish company, NaturEnergy, who is, in fact, in the throes of developing almost 400 megawatts of electricity through wind farms east of Medicine Hat. That's going to be, all things being equal, coming on stream in the next four or five years. Actually, wind production now makes up 8 per cent of Alberta's energy base, and that's expected to double in the next couple of years.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. If not the minister, then who is standing up for the land-use framework and protection of the land, because the former minister of finance stood up for postponing major development anywhere – and I'm thinking the Livingstone Range – until the regional plan was completed, but the current Minister of Sustainable Resource Development says that development can't be stopped.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, in fact, what I have said is that through the history of the province of Alberta we've done a lot of different planning exercises. During the current planning exercise, which is a major piece of business for all Albertans, the development of the land-use framework and the development of the seven regional plans – we cannot just turn the key off and stop the province of Alberta from doing anything or continuing to develop and progress. Both of these things can be done and will be done at the same time.

Grande Prairie Hospital Construction

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, last July the Premier announced that a new hospital would be built in Grande Prairie. Since then many people in my constituency have asked about what's happening with the project. My questions are for the Minister of Infrastructure. What progress is being made on the new hospital?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, excellent progress is being made, and the project is moving ahead. It is in our budget. We bought the land, and the soil testing has been done.

I just want to say that we're ready to announce the design teams in five major hospitals. The design teams for southern Alberta, Medicine Hat and Lethbridge, will be announced tomorrow, and the design teams for Grande Prairie and High Prairie and Edson will be announced on Thursday.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how will the design team ensure that local health professionals and the people of Grande Prairie have real input into the design of their new hospital?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the design teams will work with local professionals. They'll work with the officials at the college, with the municipalities. When they do have that design, they will take it further to the public for their input.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, with the design work set to begin, when can we expect to see actual work beginning on the site?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I just want to say that we use a progressive construction model, and that saves about a year or two in design. Construction can start before detailed plans are in place, and this allows us to do more in a shorter time. I need to say that some work will start in late summer or early fall, and we are on track for having the project completed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Alberta Health Services CEO Position

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. The Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act requires public disclosure of the knowledge and experience required of appointees before recruitment. That's the law. Can the minister of health inform Albertans when this information will be publicly available for the position of CEO of Alberta Health Services?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that I can get a very specific answer for the member. The point is that they have recruited now a firm that will undertake and perhaps already has started the recruitment process. I'm not personally involved in that at all. But I understand that there is an active recruitment process that has started or will be starting very, very soon, compliments of Alberta Health Services.

Dr. Taft: Well, I recommend the minister check the law, then, of his own government.

Can the minister provide any other information about the proposed term of the appointment and remuneration for the position of CEO of Alberta Health Services such as: what's the pay? What's this pay range?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's a recruitment process that Alberta Health Services undertakes. It has nothing directly to do with me, but I will get the information for the member. The chief executive officer of Alberta Health Services is an employee of that board. I'll get you the information, hon. member. As I say, I'm not involved in that process.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this minister has to sign off on that position, will he admit, then, that he's not doing his job if he doesn't know if recruitment has begun, if he doesn't know the job description and he doesn't know what they're going to pay? Do your job or get out of it.

Mr. Zwozdesky: You know, on the one hand they accuse us of interfering, right? On the other hand they say: get in there and interfere. Come on; let's get serious here. The point is that this is an employee of Alberta Health Services. They are doing the recruitment, not me. I will get you the information you seek. You could just as easily phone Alberta Health Services yourself, but if you want me to do it for you, I'd be happy to do your job for you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Special Education Consultation

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. From 2008 to 2009 we consulted with over 6,000 Albertans regarding their concerns with special education through the setting the direction initiative. During those consultations we heard an overwhelming majority of Albertans who wanted a different funding formula than the current system of coding and labelling. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Given that you accepted the recommendation of the setting the direction framework in June 2010, when will we have an adequate funding formula in place? What is taking so long?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can appreciate that the hon. member was the chair of the setting the direction process and is understandably concerned that implementation happen. I can assure him that while it's taking a little longer than we had hoped, we've spent a lot of time in this last year co-ordinating internally in government to make sure that every government department that's involved is part of the task force, understands the role and function, and that we use government resources most effectively. The next step is the provincial advisory committee, which is being put in place as we speak. We will be moving forward towards a new funding formula, which won't be fully in effect this fall but will be over the course of the next year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that special education funding has been frozen for two and a half years and that work is still ongoing for setting the direction, how are the school boards currently being funded in the interim, and what assurance do we have that this funding is adequate?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we still continue to fund on the basis of the model that was in place. School boards get funded on a demographic model for the percentage of students they have with severe and special needs. We have in this year's budget allocated $12 million more, which will be used as targeted funding for specific circumstances and to promote and lead the implementation of the setting the direction framework.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. Parents have also expressed concerns to me that individualized program plans, known as IPPs, are going away. Can the minister tell all parents what they will be replaced with?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a complete culture shift which is being proposed in this, and that takes some time. We're working on a pilot basis with some boards and some schools on this as we speak, but whether there's a formal IPP or whether there's just an understanding, in order to ensure the best and the most appropriate educational experience for a child with severe special needs, the teacher, the school, the parent, and any support resources from Health and other places need to come together to work for that child. There needs to be a plan for the child, whether it's a formal IPP or not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Political Contributions by Municipal Officials

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October of 2010 the Rimbey council members and administrative staff were found to have made expense claims for political contributions to the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta, and over five years the total was $9,539.60. I don't believe they're the only municipality that has this practice. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: is the minister aware if this money has been paid back to the taxpayers of Rimbey?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question as asked by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. Municipalities are required to follow the rules that are established under a number of acts, including the Municipal Government Act and the Local Authorities Election Act as well as the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. Those three acts talk about contributions that municipal leaders are responsible to deal with.

Ms Pastoor: I was looking to see if the money was paid back.

You've quoted the laws, but does the province provide municipalities with guidelines to clearly indicate the difference between the government of Alberta functions and the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta, or is it left to their interpretation of ethics?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we do a number of inspections on individual municipalities as requested by individual residents. In this case, in the Rimbey situation, it's my understanding that all of the money was repaid, and that's the same for a number of other municipalities across the province.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that, Mr. Minister.

Given that there are leadership races and a possible election in the near future, what assurances can the minister make that what happened in Rimbey will not happen in other municipalities going forward?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I can't promise or provide assurances that other municipalities won't fall into the same, you know, concerns or have the same issues with our particular ratepayers. Nonetheless, we'll continue to work with individual municipalities to make them aware of the rules and the regulations surrounding contributions towards political parties.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been hearing from constituents this past weekend, and I'm not sure, but it may have been fuelled by misguided reports that our budget deficit could have been wiped out if the province hadn't granted $3.4 billion in royalty incentives over the past year. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Sir, do you have any proof whatsoever that shows the deficit could have been eliminated by not granting these royalty programs?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important first off to say that with the highly successful drilling stimulus program the cost to the provincial treasury for the current fiscal year is about 1 and a half billion dollars, not the $3.4 billion that has been alleged, so tying it to next year's deficit is completely wrong. But I need to remind – I know the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne understands this, but I'm not so sure that all members of the House do, judging by some of the earlier questions. You know, it was partially due to the stimulus program that last year record land sales of some 2 and a half billion dollars were attained in this province, and that went a long way to ensuring that last year's budget deficit was only . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. Again to the same minister. It was obvious in Whitecourt-St. Anne that people were back to work, but around the province I'm not sure if that message got across to all Albertans. Do you have any proof or statistics on how many people actually did go back to work?

Mr. Liepert: I don't have any statistics as to how many people went back to work, Mr. Speaker, but I know that the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors recently said that the number of drilling rigs that were operational at the end of last year was twice the year previous. They're expecting that to even increase this year. In fact, the number was up some 80 per cent in the last quarter of 2010, and that doesn't just mean increased jobs on the rigs. It also applies to coffee shops, hotels, restaurants, car dealerships in all of the members' constituencies.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister: constituents, again I believe fuelled by these inaccurate reports, are wondering why we provide subsidies to big oil at all when we're running a deficit.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, you know, that big-oil thing is something that many of our opposition members have raised in this House and some of the members of the media, but, you know, it's really small and medium-sized Alberta businesses and companies that have benefited from these programs. What has happened is that if we hadn't had the stimulus program, there would be no jobs, there would be no land sales, and there would be reduced personal and corporate income tax, not more.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 19 different members were recognized today. There were 113 questions and responses.

We have seven members wanting to participate in Members' Statements. We will reconvene in 15 seconds from now.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Al Holmes

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Colleagues, as I mentioned in my introduction not so very long ago, I'm here today to talk about my friends and the support that they gave to one of their own. Al Holmes was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis in 1989. Recently he was identified as being a good candidate for the Zamboni treatment, an experimental and somewhat controversial procedure that is not offered in Canada.

To make this happen, Al's friends had a party and raised the money, proving that friendship is not only one big thing but sometimes many little things. People will tell you that the liberation procedure has many risks, and Al knows them all. He knows and we his friends fully support that Al's future with the treatment is quite likely brighter than his future without it, so the committee I introduced earlier and a couple of hundred other people got together and solved the money part of the problem. It's simply what friends do.

I invited these people here today for two reasons. One is to let them know just how proud I am to be one of them and, two, to show what can happen when a group decides to solve a problem for one of their own. The Spartan class of '78 meet on an ad hoc basis, and we've been doing so for a long time. This event and the phenomenal results it has achieved have quite likely changed us all and taught, so long after the lessons ended, that maybe Kevin Murphy was right about Proverbs 17:17 when he said: "Friends always show their love. What are brothers and sisters for if not to share troubles?"

Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, Archbishop O'Leary high school turned 50 last year, as did most members of the grad of '78.

Good luck, Al. I hope that very soon I can introduce you to this Assembly while you show us a few of your old moves. Remember that "there is no medicine like hope, no incentive so great, and no tonic so powerful as expectation of something tomorrow."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Provincial Budget

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government must aim higher to protect Alberta's economic future. Folks on the far right say that the government has a spending problem. Folks on the left say that the government has a revenue problem. The truth is that this government has a management problem. This is the third deficit budget in a row. The sustainability fund will soon run dry, and this government acts as though they're playing with an endless supply of Monopoly money, that they can just start the game over when they go bankrupt.

This is not a game. Alberta Liberals believe in stable funding for core people programs such as health, education, and social services. These are essential public institutions and services, that Albertans value tremendously. They protect public health. They enhance Alberta's prosperity. If we want to protect core people programs for the long term, this government needs to start slashing wasteful spending now. Government travel, communications, external consultant spending can and should be significantly trimmed. Trim the size of your bloated 24-member cabinet to a more efficient 17. Scale back investment in carbon capture and storage. Stop throwing subsidies at private golf courses and horse racing. Spread out the spending on capital projects. Perhaps more importantly, this government needs to build a comprehensive long-term savings strategy.

The sustainability fund was a fine Alberta Liberal idea designed to pull Alberta through short-term financial problems, but we've also advocated strongly for a long-term savings plan, with targeted investments to fund core people programs for the long term. Albertans shouldn't have to choose between the extremes on either end of the political spectrum and the incompetence of a tired Tory government. There is a better way. Alberta Liberals are committed to protecting people programs while eliminating wasteful spending. That's our common-sense solution for Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Cardston Cougars

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to share with the Assembly the outstanding accomplishments of young athletes from my constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner. Last year the Cardston Cougars won the Alberta tier 3 football championship, defeating the Peace River Pioneers by a margin of 8 to 6 in a closely fought defensive battle. The last time the Cougars won this championship was in 1993, 17 years ago.

I would like to take this time today to applaud all of the players of the 2010 Cardston Cougars for all their hard work, grit, and determination. I would also like to thank the coaching staff and volunteers who made the victory possible. Sport is an important part of our community, and I am sure that the success of the Cardston Cougars will serve as an example to our younger generation. Through hard work and dedication anything is possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Balwin Villa

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand here today to highlight a noteworthy designated assisted living facility that is located in my constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview called Balwin Villa. Balwin Villa was developed by the Excel Resource Society and opened in September 2010. This designated assisted living facility is designed to meet the needs of family members with early onset dementia or brain injury. Eighty-nine of the units accommodate individuals with dementia and 16 accommodate individuals with brain injury. Of the 105 units 80 are for clients referred by Alberta Health Services. Through the affordable supportive living initiative this government has provided $7 million towards the facility construction.

Mr. Speaker, this development is truly visionary as it provides an invaluable service through its enhanced facility design. Balwin Villa offers health care services as well as extensive support services and amenities. Residents of this facility can rest assured that there is a 24-hour nurse presence and round-the-clock security. Not only are the needs of the residents met, but also their lifestyles are maintained.

This designated assisted living facility is great news for my constituency and for the city of Edmonton and for this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Training Program for Older Workers

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the honour of attending an event in Medicine Hat on Friday, February 25, to acknowledge Alberta's first training program funded under the recently signed targeted initiative for older workers federal-provincial agreement. This cost-sharing agreement will see the province providing a maximum of $1.6 million and the federal government providing up to $8.45 million over the next two years, benefiting up to 1,600 people.

Funding for this agreement is provided through Employment and Immigration's Alberta Works program to assist unemployed older workers between the ages of 55 and 64 gain new skills, preparing them for new jobs. Eligible communities include those with a population of less than 250,000 that have experienced high unemployment and/or a high reliance on a single industry affected by downsizing.

Mr. Speaker, Medicine Hat is Alberta's first training initiative, which will see 24 older workers obtain the support and training they need to secure employment and adjust to the changing world of work. Many of these older workers may have retired from their original career or have been laid off due to the economic downturn we've experienced over the past two years.

There is no question that some older workers are having difficulty getting back into the workforce even as we continue to see steady improvements in the economy. The skill sets required are vastly different from what they previously used.

Older workers are part of Alberta's growing labour force, and we cannot afford to have them sitting on the sidelines. Alberta needs a fully utilized labour force, connected with the community and engaged in meaningful work. Every indication is that there will be labour shortages again in the near future, and these older workers bring a maturity and life experience to the labour market.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to seeing the positive impacts that this new funding will bring to unemployed older workers in the Medicine Hat community and many others across Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

2:50 Industrial Energy Efficiency Projects

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Conference Board of Canada recently estimated that $6.1 billion will be spent in Alberta on clean energy technology over the next five years. That's more than all other Canadian provinces combined.

Earlier today the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation contributed to this exciting story of leadership. More than $27 million from the climate change and emissions management fund is benefiting six new projects that promote energy efficiency right here in Alberta. This investment means we are now pioneering advancements in nanotechnology, gas capture methods, and electricity generation.

With this announcement the corporation has invested nearly $100 million dollars in clean technology projects since its creation in 2009. This money is collected from industry as part of complying with our climate change regulations and leveraged into significant emission reduction projects that demonstrate Alberta's commitment to a clean energy future. The fund is an integral part of Alberta's innovative system for regulating greenhouse gas emissions. After all, technology is the foundation of Alberta's climate change strategy and will ultimately help transition our province to a clean energy future.

Please join me in commending the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation for their important work and in congratulating NRGreen Power, ConocoPhillips Canada, Weyerhaeuser Company, Cenovus Energy, EnCana Corporation, and Quantam Technologies as recipients of this latest round of funding.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta Achievements at 2011 Canada Winter Games

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to congratulate Team Alberta on their tremendous performance at the 2011 Canada Winter Games in Halifax. Three hundred and thirty-seven athletes, coaches, mission staff, and artists from 49 communities represented our province with pride and enthusiasm at the games. They collected an impressive 75 medals, finishing fourth overall in team standings.

Team Alberta had a strong blend of talent, experience, and enthusiasm, exemplified by our success on the podium, and a strong sense of camaraderie, with team members cheering each other on at every event. Our flag-bearer, Canmore's Scott Gow, raced his way to the podium, winning four gold medals in biathlon, part of the 12 total medals collected by Alberta's biathlon team. But, Mr. Speaker, Calgary snowboarder Pierce Mimura wins a gold medal for overcoming adversity. He dislocated his jaw and shattered several teeth in a race before the games yet toughed it out without pain medication to finish sixth overall in the men's half-pipe. Jesse Cockney, also from Canmore, captured an emotional bronze and two gold in cross-country, matching his father's gold medal count from the 1975 games.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could list all of the competitors and their many achievements. Obviously, I can't in this short time, but suffice it to say that they all deserve our congratulations. They have made Albertans very proud.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and begin second reading debate on Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011.

I am proud to say that this is my first bill since being elected. Mr. Speaker, I am bringing forward this bill because I believe that it will help people all over the province and Canada. It would do this by changing the way we become organ donors. If Bill 201 is passed, all Albertans would have to declare their organ donors choice on the back of their Alberta health card. People would not be forced to become donors, but they would have to choose either yes, no, or undecided. Bill 201 would not apply to people under the age of 18 or to people otherwise unable to provide their consent, and Bill 201 would not apply to holders of current Alberta health cards unless they lose their old one and need to apply for a new card.

Changing the way we declare our organ donor status has the potential to greatly increase the amount of organ donors. As it stands right now, all of Canada is facing a serious shortage of usable organs, and the problem stems from our volunteer rates. In fact, in Canada only 13 out of every million people successfully donate an organ. This is alarming, Mr. Speaker. This is one of the lowest rates in the developed world.

The organ system that we use now lets people choose the option of doing nothing. Mr. Speaker, unless an individual chooses to become a donor and takes the steps to make it so, we assume that they did not want to donate. I believe that our failure to donate organs comes from how easy it is to simply ignore the question and avoid the topic of death. If I were to pass away, my wish would be yes to donation, hoping I could help someone, but it is not written anywhere, so my wife may not know my wish and choose differently.

No one wants to think about their own death, and no one wants to think about an organ being taken from their body. Rather than confront this difficult scenario, we ignore the choice and do nothing, and in Alberta doing nothing means that organs stay where they are. It means that people wait in pain for life-saving transplants, and it means that people die. This bill would not force people to become organ donors. That would be wrong. Instead, Bill 201 would require people to think about organ donation even if they choose to remain undecided.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a good bill. I believe this will save a great many lives and will improve the quality of life for many more. I believe that this bill could save our health care system millions of dollars and improve the quality of life for numerous individuals.

As it stands right now, treating one person for kidney disease can cost up to $60,000 per year. This means that if a person was living with kidney failure for five years, that would cost our health care system well over $250,000. However, transplanting an organ would now only cost about $20,000 plus around $6,000 per year for the cost of transplant medications. This not only represents huge savings but also greatly improves the quality of life for the patient. This is only one example of many, Mr. Speaker. This is just for one patient.

At present Canada has well over 3,000 people on waiting lists; Alberta has well over 600. If we were able to provide working organs to all of these people, the total savings could be great. This is money that could then be used in other areas of our health care system for helping and saving lives. Donating an organ is one of the most noble, selfless things that a person can do once they pass. In fact, every donor has the ability to save the lives of eight people. In addition, over 75 people can be helped with the tissues of one donor.

Second, I have heard concerns that not providing an Alberta health care card if they failed to answer the organ donation question would be heavy-handed, and I agree with this statement, Mr. Speaker. It's not my intention to deny people a health care card or health care if they choose not to declare their organ donation status. I believe that this bill could be amended to remove this misinterpretation. I believe that the idea of this bill is good and that if we move it forward to Committee of the Whole, we can make the change needed to finalize this idea.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to take some time to address some of the concerns I have heard about Bill 201. First, there is a concern that Bill 201 would force people to become organ donors. This is not the case. People would be compelled to choose either yes, no, or undecided but would not be forced to donate an organ if they do not want to. In addition, a person could choose to stop being an organ donor whenever they wanted.

Second, there is a concern that if a person did not wish to choose yes, no, or undecided, they would not receive an Alberta health care card and would not be able to get health care. Again, this is not the case. If people refuse to select either yes, no, or undecided, they would not receive an Alberta health care card, but they would still receive health care card numbers and receive health care. So in the end, the punishment for not choosing between yes, no, or undecided would be nothing more than a minor inconvenience. As well, an exemption would be in place for people's religious or moral concerns about declaring organ donor status.

Third, there is a concern that the bill may overstep personal boundaries, that organ donation would not be a personal decision made between individuals and their family. Mr. Speaker, I agree with this and would stress again that Bill 201 does not force a person to become an organ donor. Rather, I believe that Bill 201 will raise awareness and give people the push they need to talk with their family and make their wish known.

Finally, there is a concern that issuing a new Alberta health care card may be a financial burden on our health care system. While I agree that the change in Bill 201 may lead to a small increase in costs, I would argue that these costs would be easily offset by savings to our health care system that are the result of increasing organ transplants.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 is a measured approach that has the potential to increase organ donation rates in Alberta without overstepping government boundaries. I believe that this legislation is fair and in the best interests of the health care system. In addition, I believe that this change is supported by many Albertans. In fact, I've received many phone calls from people and organizations all over the province and Canada, and they all agree that this legislation has the potential to save many lives.

In closing, I would like to say that the impact of the bill could be great. It could incredibly increase the amount of organs donated by Albertans, it could save our health care system millions of dollars, and it could save the lives of hundreds and improve the lives of thousands more. I believe that this bill is in the interests of all Albertans, and I strongly urge all Members of the Legislative Assembly to support Bill 201. Everyone here today may be faced with a tough situation where a loved one or themselves need an organ donation. This bill is truly good for all. I would appreciate your support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Speaking to private member's Bill 201, I want to begin by thanking the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing this forward. There is no doubt that improving the number of organs for donation will contribute to lives and quality of life. The problem with this particular piece of legislation is the mandatory nature. I agree with the hon. member that promoting education is key, but the mandatory nature suggests that there's some sort of penalty associated with not filling out your card. Whether you say yes, no, or undecided, there is the expectation of enforcement, and with that enforcement comes a cost.

Now, when we have discussed how best to indicate your desire to donate your organs, one of the problems that occurs is the first on the scene being police and ambulance paramedics and the possibility of your intention not going along with your body or your damaged circumstance to the hospital so that the organs that you have indicated clearly that you wish to be donated can be present. I've suggested, for example, in terms of trying to improve the availability of organs for donation and the decision that a person has made to provide those organs, it would be either as a part of their driver's licence, where that is the singular piece of information that is most likely to be collected at the scene of an accident – obviously, the intention would be clearly represented – or if not on the driver's licence, I've also suggested previously on an electronic health card which a person would carry with them and would be also available for easy access to hospitals to determine their health care record so that it would be of a more permanent nature. Also, there would have to be security clearance proof so that it couldn't be accessed by anyone other than the medical system or the police forces for which it was intended, so that desire to provide that donation would be clearly indicated.

While I support the whole idea of improving the importance of the education process of Bill 201, unless individuals can come up with some type of an amendment that would get beyond the mandatory nature, which is the sticking point of this particular legislation, I'm not sure how it can be viewed successfully. There's no doubt about the value of organ donations, and there's no doubt about the need to improve the procedure by which organs can be donated. The reality is that currently – and I believe it's correct – a family member can potentially overrule an individual's donation request, so even if an individual indicated with this new process that they were willing to donate their organs, there is the possibility that in the time it takes to get the approval of the family members to the original consent, the time for harvesting would have gone by. So it's an additional complication.

I do want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for raising an extremely important issue. I'm just concerned that this may not be the most appropriate vehicle to achieve the improved education that the hon. member is trying for. I support the intent. I'm just not sure about this being the best vehicle to accomplish that intent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and join the debate on Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011, brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. Bill 201 proposes to ensure that all Albertans make an explicit choice regarding organ donation through indicating their intention on the back of their Alberta health cards. In the event that an individual is not yet ready to make such a decision or if they have made their choice but are uncomfortable making that choice publicly known, the opportunity would remain to select undecided as their official organ donor status. Children below the legal age of consent and adults who are unable to provide consent would be completely excluded from the requirements proposed in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of this bill is to increase the amount of organ donors in our province, which would save the lives of many who are waiting for transplants. I am just one of many examples of many Albertans who have needed a transplant organ. Years ago I received a cornea transplant thanks to an individual who signed their health card or made their intentions known to their family. This bill fills a very important void and deserves our consideration in this House.

There are several legislative ways in which to approach organ donation, the most common of which are the consent solution, or opt-in, and dissent solution, or opt-out. The consent solution would require individuals to explicitly state their desire to be an organ donor. Should they not make this declaration, it would be assumed that they do not want to become donors. Conversely, the dissent solution would require individuals to state that they do not want to become organ donors; otherwise, by default they would be.

In Alberta, as in the rest of Canada, we currently use the consent solution, requiring Albertans to declare their intention to become organ donors. If this declaration is not made, no organs would be donated. Mr. Speaker, this declaration is usually made on the back of the health care insurance card, but it can also be made in writing in the presence of two witnesses. Unfortunately, it seems that this approach is not always as effective as we would hope. While there are no organ donation statistics specific to Alberta, only 13 Canadians of every million actually donate their organs. This is one of the lowest organ donation rates in the western world, and this lack of organ donation means the difference between life and death for many across this country and Albertans.

For whatever reason, it seems many Albertans have not signed the back of their health cards or spoken with family members about their final wishes. Bill 201 would make the declaration of one's decision regarding organ donation via their Alberta health card, and while there is an option to remain undecided, the fact that one must indicate as such compels each and every Albertan to seriously consider the matter of organ donation.

While I believe this bill fills a very important role, there is one particular issue that causes me to hesitate in supporting it completely. According to this bill if an Albertan were not to sign their declaration, they would not be issued an Alberta health card. They would receive a health care number and would be required to be treated by law but would not receive the actual physical card. This is a great concern as I have heard first-hand accounts from constituents and Albertans who have required medical treatment but, for whatever reason, did not have their card on their person and were turned away.

We cannot deny Albertans the right to health care, and in withholding the physical document from them, this could become an obstacle to the delivery of timely medical care. So I look forward to the hon. member bringing forward amendments in committee to ensure that Albertans still receive a card, no matter what their declaration is.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that this bill will help to increase awareness in our province regarding organ donation and, hopefully, help to increase the number of donors, which would in turn save more lives. For example, in 2008 there were 4,380 Canadians nation-wide on organ transplant waiting lists. Of those individuals, 215 died waiting, including 60 Albertans. Perhaps making a clear declaration regarding one's desire to become an organ donor would have saved more of those lives.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 would absolutely not force Albertans to become organ donors; it would simply require Albertans to make a decision regarding the matter. That way, should the unthinkable happen, health care professionals would know right away if an individual was a donor, saving precious time. I would urge all Albertans to have this conversation with their families to ensure that their wishes are followed.

The choice to become an organ donor is a very personal one and requires a great deal of consideration. We recognize that there are Albertans who are not comfortable with becoming an organ donor. The intent of Bill 201 is to get Albertans thinking about organ donation and its potential to save the lives of many and greatly improve the lives of many more. For this reason I feel this debate is very important, and I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing this important issue to our attention.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up and speak to Bill 201, which amends the Alberta Health Insurance Premiums Act, called the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011. I am going to listen carefully to the debate and will put on the record that I'm a huge organ donor/transplant supporter. I brought forward a private member's bill many, many years ago, and we had this discussion. I think the Member for Calgary-West also brought forward a bill, if I recall.

I can't help but wonder – and I speak from experience because I had the honour of chairing the Advisory Committee on Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplantation probably a decade ago. I'm finding it ironic that we're debating Bill 201, on the subject of organ donation, when five years ago we were debating Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006. That act had made it mandatory for medical professions to notify the human organ procurement and exchange program when a person dies or is about to, and there is a suitable donor.

There are so many things that I like in this bill, and there are things that I like about the intent of the bill. I'm a little hesitant when we talk about mandatory and then talk about some of the things that I'm hearing from the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar when she speaks about not being able to get their health card.

I guess I'm wondering, and I'm sure the member can tell me. There was a committee that I chaired that talked about comprehensive legislation to improve organ and tissue donation in Alberta. Sadly, it seems that the progress has been somewhat slow and uneven. Again we're relying on a private member's bill and not a government bill to bring this important issue forward.

The member can maybe tell me what's come out of that committee. I know that it was a very, very comprehensive committee and had some wonderful health experts and professionals on it. It would be interesting to see what they have to say about this private member's bill and, particularly, if this has stemmed from that particular committee and this is what they're recommending to speed up the organ donation. As long as I can remember I've been a donor, since 1976 – and I hate to put that on the record because then it really does age you – and I've gone through all the tests, which I'm sure many people in Alberta haven't. I can pull out my organ donation card, that will give you exactly what my blood type is, what my tissue type is. That's what they did many, many years ago.

The experts are calling and have been calling for as long as I can remember for greater co-ordination and long-term planning for organ donation and how we need to think ahead, if a catastrophe appears. There's nothing worse in my mind, God willing, than being a parent and having to make a difficult decision when you have a child that is in intensive care. We travelled with the safe communities task force. I had a friend go through that when her son was murdered, not only having to deal with this child who looked perfectly, perfectly normal and making the decision, one, that there was no brain activity left but, two, then being approached by the same people asking if they would be willing to donate Devin's organs. I don't know how many times I've heard the mother speak. I can only tell you that every time I do hear her speak, there isn't a dry eye in the house in regard to her horrific story about her son.

Currently, from the quick numbers that we were able to grasp, there are over 400 people in Alberta waiting for organ donation. While the stats are telling us that half of them will receive the needed transplants, many unfortunately do not receive theirs in time. As I indicated, as the organs shut down, they must endure the pain along with the family watching the lives of those they love slip away.

Canada has one of the lowest donation rates in the world. One dying person can have a huge, huge impact on saving someone else's life, and I'm sure the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar can tell of the impact that she's received from her cornea transplant. It's indicated in the records that we've been able to find that one donor can help as many as 80 people. Most people don't realize just how long people wait for donations. Albertans have a shorter wait than most for kidney transplants, but the wait is still two and a half years. The financial implication with regard to being on dialysis – and the member brought that up – is about $60,000 a year.

A very simple but overlooked step to improve donation rates is education, and we've heard some discussion about that. I think Ontario and B.C. have taken a leadership role by creating donor registries. Government agencies – and I say that with all sincerity; the government, not a private member's bill – have actively promoted organ donation, and the results are worthy to look at.

The committee that I chaired called for a provincial organ and tissue donation and transplant system. You know, I keep alluding to this committee, and I'm hoping that as we go through this debate, the member will bring out the committee's findings. In my mind that has been a worthwhile procedure from the government. I haven't seen what the committee's recommendations are, and it certainly, I think, would be worth while as he proceeds through the processes of second reading and committee. There already have been some recommendations in regard to bringing some amendments forward, and I think that, rightfully, that's something that we have to do.

I think what's important to remember is that this donation system that we have currently in this province relies on the goodwill of others. A living donation is a serious decision, and I think it's another thing that needs greater support from our government. The government has taken a small step by allowing compensation to living donors for their travel expenses and income losses up to $5,000. At the federal level – and I've had the opportunity to meet with the people involved in this – caregivers are given compassionate leave.

It's interesting that this bill has also been introduced in the spring session. National organ and tissue donor awareness week is in April, and I'm sure we can count on a member's statement from the member that's bringing this private bill forward. I hope, again, that the debate of this bill – and I said that this is the third private member's bill: myself, and I'm sure it was the hon. Member for Calgary-West, and now we have the hon. member bringing forward another private member's bill.

Ms Calahasen: Are you going to vote for it?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes.

Mr. Speaker, I guess one of the things that I want to reiterate over and over again – and I was with the government when I brought that private member's bill forward, and I know that the other two members are still with the government – is that nothing will move this further and faster and get it done quicker than if it's a government bill. If the priority is for us to increase organ donation, then instead of a private member bringing this bill forward – and as I explained, we're on our third private member's bill – why is the government not bringing this bill forward? There is a huge cost savings by getting people off dialysis and all the other things that go with it. I'm going to look forward to the debate.

I'm going to end the same way as I ended probably 10 years ago when I brought my private member's bill forward: don't take your organs to heaven; heaven knows we need them here.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and speak to Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011. Unlike the previous speakers, I'm pleased to give my unqualified support to Bill 201. Bill 201 has the important objective of increasing organ and tissue donations in the province.

Specifically, the bill is proposing to create a requirement that Albertans of legal age would make an explicit expression regarding their organ donor wishes and that those wishes would be inscribed on the back of their Alberta health card. Now, Mr. Speaker, when I say wishes, I mean just that. When a person dies, they no longer have any personal capacity to direct what might become of their organs or their tissues or their body. Wishes regarding the disposal of one's remains after death are just that: wishes or desires. The final decision always rests with the next of kin or those who are the personal administrators of the estate of the deceased. No one is ever going to be forced to become an organ donor by virtue of the fact that they've chosen one way or the other on this card. They're merely expressing their wishes as either yes or no or undecided. What could be more simple?

Mr. Speaker, people are dying needlessly in our province and across Canada, people who could lead productive lives, people who will die far too young, leaving behind grieving families, children without parents, parents who've lost a child, husbands or wives who've lost their spouse. They're going to die because there's a critical shortage of organs in this country for transplantation. They will die because families or their executors have not taken the opportunity to donate their organs to an organ bank. Currently there are almost 4,000 Canadians, including more than 400 Albertans, on the waiting list for an organ transplant. This proposed legislation has the potential to decrease the waiting list and to save lives.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the issue of tissue and organ donation can sometimes be a sensitive topic. First of all, I think the reason behind that is that no one likes to contemplate dying, but die we all must at some point.

Secondly, there is a reluctance to contemplate someone somehow violating the corpus delicti, the person's body after death.

Thirdly, there may be some particular custom or ritual that we associate with one's faith or one's culture, and those must be respected, of course. But the fact of the matter is that most religious beliefs do not in any way conflict with the process of organ donation. The Bible says words to the effect that greater love hath no man than that he should lay down his life for his fellow man, and I would say that a corollary of that teaching is: what greater bequest can we as human beings leave behind when we depart this mortal coil than to give the gift of life to another person? The Bible also talks about faith, hope, and charity and that the greatest of these is charity. It also says, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." These are moral principles that transcend human philosophy.

Mr. Speaker, the process of organ and tissue donation is an amazing and innovative development of modern science. I remember on December 3, 1967, when the news came out that a South African doctor, Dr. Christiaan Barnard, performed the first heart transplant operation. The patient was a Mr. Louis Washkansky, a 54-year-old grocer who only survived 18 days after the transplant. But it was an important step. Those two people made an important step forward in medical science.

The improvement of antirejection drugs has enabled us now to have almost routine transplantation of many organs, including heart, liver, pancreas, kidneys, lungs, small intestines, and even parts of the brain, the dura mater. If organs and tissues are healthy and in good condition, nowadays there is about an 85 or 90 per cent success rate with transplantation. These organs are vital to our lives and maintaining our quality of life. Tissues that can be transplanted, as I mentioned, in addition to those organs, are things like bone marrow, cornea, sclera, the brain's dura mater, heart valves, skin, tendons, veins.

Mr. Speaker, voluntary donations from living individuals, such as where a person donates a kidney or a lobe of a liver, would not be affected by this legislation. The bill is only a means of signifying the wishes of a person who has become clinically dead, and thereby making their wishes known is assisting the next of kin in making that decision.

The organ donation process also has a time limit that is critical, and that's where this signifying of the wishes is so important. Organ donations come from traumatic accident victims sometimes such as fatal head injuries resulting from motorcycle crashes or vehicle crashes. Organs can also be donated from persons who are under active medical care in very limited circumstances. According to Alberta Health Services transplantation can be permitted with the specific consent of the next of kin in circumstances where the donor is brain-dead and where the donor is also reliant on artificial life support.

We know that organs can be preserved for a very limited time in a refrigerated state before the cells begin to die and they are no longer useful, so the bottom line is that decisions on organ donations have to be made quickly. They have to be made expeditiously, and that is why having the deceased person's wishes known to the next of kin will help the next of kin to make those decisions in an expeditious way while those organs can still be harvested and used to donate to others.

Just for information, colleagues, some of the times that these organs can be kept are very, very short. For a heart and a lung it's about four hours, for a liver somewhere in the neighbourhood of 18 to 24 hours, for a kidney 12 to 24 hours, and for a pancreas 12 to 24 hours.

As I mentioned, most of the patients who have the opportunity for organ donation have been determined brain-dead, and often they are in a hospital intensive care environment.

Some tissues, of course, can be preserved for longer periods of time, and we call those banked tissues. An example of a banked tissue could be something like skin tissue that's preserved for reconstructive surgery or skin grafts for burn victims and so on.

Mr. Speaker, the personal choice of donating organs and human tissues is the right thing to do. One person, through signifying their organ donation and through having their next of kin follow through with those wishes, can actually save the lives of up to eight other individuals.

We must never lose sight of the fact that becoming an organ and tissue donor is a personal decision. It's a personal decision not of the deceased but of the next of kin, but for the reasons mentioned, those next of kin have a decision which is much easier taken when they know what the wishes of the deceased would have been. It's a decision that is best discussed beforehand with family and friends.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would strongly support Bill 201 as an interim step towards increasing the supply of organs and tissues and saving Albertans from premature death. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing Bill 201 forward, and I urge all of my colleagues to give this bill their wholehearted support.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak very briefly to Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act.

I rise to indicate that certainly I will be giving my support to this bill, and I would like to offer my thanks to the Member for Edmonton-Manning in his decision to bring this bill forward. It strikes me that for the most part this is a bill that's designed to get at some of the administrative roadblocks that sometimes arise in terms of ensuring that the desire or the wish, as had been so clearly pointed out by the previous speaker, of a potential donor is communicated in the way necessary to ensure that that wish is acted on.

At this point we have a system that still makes it difficult sometimes to connect that desire on the part of the potential donor to the process whereby that desire is appropriately acknowledged. It appears to me that this is one strategy, not the only strategy, certainly, but one strategy, to ensure more opportunity for Albertans who likely wish to have that donor decision made and recorded in a way that will ensure that their wishes are taken into consideration when the time comes. It ensures that those folks have better opportunities, and for that reason I support the purpose of this bill.

I note that at this point there aren't a lot of other jurisdictions, as far as I can see, that have legislation like this in place, but our trusty researchers indicate that similar legislation has been put in place in New Jersey, I understand, and that that has resulted in quite a significant increase in the number of donors in the system.

I think as well that when previous speakers have raised concerns around the potential cost of enforcement around this process, it is important for us to remember to balance whatever costs might accrue through this bill being implemented against the cost of not providing the treatment to those Albertans who require organ transplants, and previous speakers have already identified that we have roughly 400 Albertans currently on our waiting lists. It has been reported that by moving those people off the waiting list through increasing access to donors, we could save up to $20 million per year.

I think that the cost savings to our health care system achieved through giving people the health care that will result in them not having to get intensive care while waiting for donors ultimately need to be taken into account. So this is not only a bill that would improve the quality of health care made available to Albertans, but it is also a bill that might and will likely result in achieving cost savings to our health care system.

I have noted the concern raised by one particular member about whether or not withholding the production of the actual card is the best mechanism to ensure that people fill out the card, and I anticipate hearing more about that issue from the sponsor of this bill as the debate unfolds. However, overall I certainly do believe that we need to find as many ways as we can to link people who wish to donate organs to the institutional mechanisms necessary to ensure that those wishes are acknowledged.

Of course, should we get to the point where this bill is not only passed but implemented, we will need to turn our minds to other issues that impact on this; for instance, the wait-lists that currently exist for many surgical procedures across the province. We would want to ensure that we have the capacity to capitalize on the benefits of additional organ donors in Alberta should this piece of legislation pass, and that is a very important issue to consider.

Previous speakers have also questioned why this is not a government bill because, of course, that would ensure its speedier passage and implementation, and that is certainly a good question to ask.

Certainly, I do want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing this bill forward, and again I will say that on behalf of the NDP caucus this bill will receive our support. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to join the debate on Bill 201. I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning for his work and dedication on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 provides the opportunity to rethink attitudes and approaches surrounding this very serious issue, organ and tissue donation. While I speak, for people that are listening, I hope that they look in their wallets or purses and pull out their Alberta personal health care card and check the universal donor declaration on the back and see if they have at least done that. If you haven't, I encourage you to make that declaration right now, while we speak.

You know, since I've been 17 years old, I've been giving blood. I was as a very young man awarded by the Red Cross Society a certificate for donating over a hundred pints of blood and very early signed onto the bone marrow transplant program as well. Again, things that we can all do in our daily lives: every 56 days just go across the river, have a cup of coffee and a cookie, and take half an hour to give blood. What an easy way to contribute to mankind.

You know, Bill 201 makes it a requirement to say, "Yes," "No," "I'm undecided" regarding their organ status on the back of their health card. I don't know if that's the right way to do it or if it's the wrong way to do it, but like earlier said, through the discussion in this House we'll find the right way. This is a right motion. It's the right thing to do. If we overlook this opportunity and we overlook the dedication that this man on this private member's bill has, I think we make a mistake. If the wording is wrong, let's correct it. We have lots of time during the debate, whether it's in Committee of the Whole or further on, to make amendments, but let's hear what everybody has to say on this. You know, there's a lengthy wait-list for those in need of organ or tissue transplants in Alberta, across Canada, throughout the world, and there are many strategies that might work or might not work, but I think what's unacceptable is to do nothing. It's unacceptable.

In Ontario, in Quebec, you know, they're rethinking this process right now. Ontario introduced some new legislation. What happened? People got talking about it. Organ donation went up 17 per cent. So one man can do something different. In the Legislature there that's what it took, one person to introduce the legislation and his colleagues to get behind him.

I don't care about the wording. I care about the motive of this individual, I care about this piece of legislation and what it says, and I care about the people that are in need of the transplants, whether they be our children or our parents or our friends or our neighbours. We have an obligation to help out, and this Legislature can fulfill that obligation very, very simply by supporting this bill, by helping this member rework the wording in this bill. Together we'll make a difference. Together we'll save lives, and there's not a better calling than that.

Mr. Speaker, I think we need to take a look at the intent of this legislation. I know in my heart and I know that in everybody's heart here we can find a way to make this thing work.

To you, Member for Edmonton-Manning, I thank you for introducing this. I thank you for getting this discussion on the floor. I hope that people here can all look upon themselves to do what I just asked. Just take a couple of minutes and look at your health care card. Sign it if you haven't. Support this legislation, and let's move on.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to speak in favour of Bill 201, brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Manning. As mentioned before, too, there are 400 Albertans that are on the waiting list. It seems like when we're talking about the waiting list, there is a bigger waiting list, but I'm shocked that only 400 people are waiting, you know, for organ donations. I think one person, by bringing this bill forward – you know, this is like giving a ray of hope to those 400 people who are on the wait-list. This bill, I believe, will go a long way, if passed, to help reduce those waiting lists.

We all have obligations to our families, and we have obligations to society as a whole as well because when we get out of our own family circle, you know, we are a big family. In Alberta we are a big family. In Canada we are a big family. There are 4,000 people on the waiting list Canada-wide. Bill 201 would make it mandatory for any Albertan over the age of 18 to fill out their organ donor card when they receive their health card ID. I think that will be a little reminder for everybody that this is a good deed we should all be doing.

My only concern is that if the member doesn't fill out their donor card, they will get the registration number, not the health care card or some kind of health care ID, and that may be prone to abuse. Maybe a person is sick, you know, he doesn't have the proper ID, and he has the registration number. He can maybe be turned away from the medical facility, saying: that's not your number. That's my only concern, and I hope that concern can be dealt with as the Member for Edmonton-Manning assured me earlier that he will be bringing an amendment that people not filling out their donor card will still be getting their registration card.

As we know, Alberta has the lowest donor rate in Canada. We have to do something, have some kind of method in place, to improve our donor rate. This will impact Albertans receiving the health card. It would be required to fill out the organ donor information by indicating yes or no or undecided.

Although it's very difficult to estimate the impact that this requirement would have on the organ donations, we have to start somewhere. The likelihood is that in the beginning it will have minimal impact as family members still would remain able to override the preference indicated on the deceased individual's donor card. I think we will have to have more education with that, too, like saving lives.

Organ transplant surgery costs significantly less than the medical support we provide to people who could otherwise be healthy and contributing to the economy. Reports estimate that the cost of kidney dialysis equipment is $60,000 per year. Remember, if somebody donated the kidney, that's a savings for everybody, and the person may contribute fully to society.

Still more needs to be done to boost Alberta's low organ donation rate relative to the size of our population. I think that with Bill 201, at least, this will roll the ball in the right direction to bring awareness amongst Albertans.

You know, every person goes. We have to rise above the emotions, rise above all the religious beliefs we have. I know this one gentleman who has donated his body. He's a Sikh. He has made a will. He has given his will to his kids, and he said: you cannot change it. He said: after I go, my body should be donated for studies to the medical school. That's with much awareness. You know, once we start educating people, start talking to people about the benefits of organ donation, I think a lot more people will come around.

At least this bill will give people a chance to make the decision as to whether or not they want to donate. This bill doesn't take away individual choice as they can indicate no or even that they have yet to make a decision. By increasing the amount of filled-out organ donor cards, Bill 201 would also provide more guidance to family members asked to decide about the wishes of the deceased. If the family knows that the deceased had indicated that he was leaning towards maybe donating, it will be easier for them to make the decision to donate the organs.

I congratulate the Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing this bill forward. I will wholeheartedly support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like also to offer my congratulations to my good friend the MLA for Edmonton-Manning for bringing forward this Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011. This particular piece of legislation reminds me that often nothing really makes you think more about what you can do than actually doing something.

It's been mentioned here this afternoon by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne that he's a long-standing and committed blood donor. I can't help but think that there is no one in this Assembly who, if they had a child or a sibling or a spouse who was in need of a kidney, for example, would not be, I think, first in line to have that particular test performed and, hopefully, be able to offer that particular bit of comfort or salvation to somebody that they love. This bill simply takes that idea and expands it, and it expands it to allow that same offer and that same contribution that you might be willing to make to your family member to virtually anyone that is in need.

Now, I don't know as a 50-year-old guy, you know, what parts you'd have that would have enough mileage left in them that you'd be able to use them to donate to somebody else.

An Hon. Member: Your legs.

Mr. Elniski: And I'm not so sure that a lot of them would fit, frankly. Thank you, hon. member, for the comment there. I suppose if there were someone out there who were five foot eight that wanted to suddenly be six foot seven, we could probably cut a deal on that one.

This, I suppose, is a very good reason why we have the boxes that are indicated yes, no, and undecided. I think that the whole concept of organ donation is one that's very personal to the individual involved. Ultimately, I think there is no prior or more personal thing than one's right to the privacy of their own being, and I would suspect that while certainly that applies while people are alive, such a similar thing should also apply after they're gone. I think that the individual does in fact absolutely have the right to decide what will or will not happen to their remains. If that means that you can use them for some means, be that a donation to an institution for research or for the assistance in helping somebody else perhaps enjoy a longer life than you did, then I think that that's a very worthwhile and noble pursuit.

With this, I have to comment here briefly on some of the policies in a number of places. There are a number of European countries that operate on the basis that if you don't decide to donate, then we are in fact going to harvest, and there are other jurisdictions where if you don't explicitly say that organs can be harvested, then in fact organs will not be harvested. I think that this particular piece of legislation, the proposal that my member friend brings forward here in Bill 201, offers us something of a compromise on that point. It allows us to say: Yes; I am fully prepared, and I'm willing to allow my body to benefit whoever may so benefit from it after I pass on. It allows me to opt out of that process entirely for whatever, you know, philosophical or religious purpose or whatever it happens to be. If you don't want to do it, you can opt right out of the thing. It gives you the flexibility to do either/or.

I think the beauty of that is, of course, that it also doesn't create in mandate and in legislation some sort of government control or government intervention over, ultimately, what happens to your remains as you pass on from your mortal coil, so to speak. I think that that in and of itself is what makes the bill appeal to me.

You know, when you have a yes or no question, you always have people that will fall into the grey area. I do think that the undecided is very much likely the place where most people would find themselves.

It's not so much the recording of the documentation or the recording of the information that's going to make the difference to us here today. What is going to make the difference to us today is the actual conversation itself, the debate that we're having in the House here today with respect to: how do you want to structure something like this? We've talked about these things many, many times. How do you structure them so that individual citizens neither feel pressured to donate their organs nor feel that there's no desire or want or need for them but that individuals are allowed to make the choice? The choice comes very, very simply from you having that option of one of those three choices: yes, I want to do this; no, I don't want to do this; or maybe I don't want to do this.

You sort of have that today; however, your family can in the current system overrule. So if your family decides that they want to preserve you in your current and consistent glory, then they can certainly do that. I don't know in this bill, hon. member, and I would certainly like to ask the question at some point in time as to: does the declaration that you make have any possibility of being overruled by anyone at any particular time, or once you've made that declaration as an indication of your final wishes, is that, in fact, then the declaration of your final wishes?

You know, I think also, member, that it makes a very difficult time for family members much easier. I think that in and of itself is certainly a worthwhile consideration. As I look through some of the other documents that I have in front of me here – and I'm going to skip towards the very end because I see I've used up a fair amount of my time – I'm going to have to say, hon. member, that I do believe the conversation is imperative on this topic.

I don't know, to be honest, if from a legal perspective this is in fact the correct wording or if we need to alter something or if there's some minor change that needs to be made. I do think, nonetheless, hon. member, that the value here is absolutely in the conversation. The value here is that everyone in this Assembly and everyone that listens to these things should take out their wallet, look at the back of their Alberta health care card, and make a decision with respect to their own personal choice for organ donation.

On that point, Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011, put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. I want to congratulate him on a very well-thought-out and a very useful bill. Because of this bill and because of the words of my esteemed colleagues there, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne as well as the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, I am taking out my card because I just realized that I don't have a checked box. So if nothing else good comes of this bill, at least I will check this out. I'm sure some of the folks over there think I'd be much more useful as an organ donor than I would as an opposition member, so I will sign up so that it is checked.

Anyway, I just wanted to say that, you know, everyone in this Assembly probably has had someone in their life – a friend, a family member, et cetera – that has benefited from an organ donor or from someone who's given blood, and my experience is no different. It seems like the least that we can do. Obviously, there are some people whose faiths might conflict with that, but I think the vast majority of people are in a position where that would not conflict. I hope that everybody in the constituency of Airdrie-Chestermere as well as in the province of Alberta will take the time to take out this donor card and check the appropriate box.

I would make one suggestion aside from this particular bill, that I think it would make a lot of sense if when we reregister our vehicles every year, we could maybe make it mandatory for people to check yes or no at that point as part of their registration form.

An Hon. Member: Saskatchewan does that.

Mr. Anderson: Does Saskatchewan do that? There you go. Saskatchewan does it. You know, it would seem like a good idea. That way we could for sure get everyone to sign either yes or no, at least know where people stand.

Unfortunately, I don't think that this will reach a ton of people, but it will definitely reach some people, hon. member, so it's definitely worth having.

I will absolutely support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, had to pull out my donor card. Fortunately, it was checked off in the right place; I had done it some years ago. You're right that it's not something that we typically give a lot of thought to.

I'm happy to speak today on Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011, brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. Thank you for bringing it forward. This bill touches upon a subject that we can all relate to.

Being in good health is perhaps one of the most precious things in life. Unfortunately, there are many individuals in this province that suffer chronic health problems which in some cases may result in tissue or organ malfunction. Indeed, every year hundreds of Albertans experience a situation which requires or, ultimately, can require a tissue or organ transplant. Mr. Speaker, as we speak, there are more Albertans who require a tissue or organ transplant than what our system can handle. Waiting lists are long, sometimes too long, and this alone is enough to prompt some debate on ways to improve the system. The Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011, as proposed by the hon. member may achieve just that.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 tends to at the very least increase awareness of organ donation. I think we all agree that that is something that needs to be done. It would also be a departure from the current opt-in system, which encourages individuals to donate their organs but does not require it. Indeed, individuals are asked to register their willingness to be a donor upon their death, but declaration is not mandatory. It's a simple process, but it's not as effective as it could be. Bill 201 would help improve that by requiring all adult Albertans to make an explicit decision regarding their organ donor status on the back of their Alberta health card, and I think that's a good place for it.

Mr. Speaker, I think it was mentioned before that a similar bill was considered in Ontario in 2006. That was the Organ and Tissue Donation Mandatory Declaration Act. That would have required that a health card or driver's licence not be renewed unless the person had completed a declaration. The declaration would have specified whether or not the person was willing to donate his or her organs or tissue upon their death.

Closer to home, in B.C., which uses an opt-in program like Alberta, the focus has been to increase exposure and availability of organ donor forms. British Columbians can now register to become organ donors online, request an organ donation brochure by mail, or download an organ donor form. Brochures are also available in a wide range of service centres like motor vehicle and driver service centres, doctors' offices, pharmacies.

Another example is our federal counterparts with an approach similar to B.C.'s, favouring the promotion of both public education and awareness. With the National Organ Donor Week Act, or Bill C-202, Ottawa ensures that every year the last full week of April is known as National Organ Donor Week.

Mr. Speaker, in the United States, where the donor rate is approximately 20 per million, compared to Canada's 13 per million, the federal government has pushed the envelope further. Although legislation regarding organ donation is under state jurisdiction, a Uniform Anatomical Gift Act was drafted by the national conference on uniform state laws in order to attempt to harmonize public policy on organ donation. This law prescribes how organ donations for transplantation and the study of medicine can be made. The act, enacted in 39 states, states that a donor can make an anatomical gift by authorizing a statement or symbol to be imprinted on the donor's driver's licence, in the donor's will, or during the donor's terminal illness or injury. It can be done orally with at least two adult witnesses, at least one of whom has disinterest. In essence, each state has an opt-in program whereby individuals are not donors unless stated otherwise.

However, many states demonstrate an individual's consent to organ donation via a symbol that appears on their driver's licence. It's believed this also promotes awareness and encourages individuals to become donors. New Jersey is one example of a jurisdiction that went beyond the opt-in program prevalent in North America. Reminiscent of Ontario's Organ and Tissue Donation Mandatory Declaration Act, the New Jersey Hero Act made New Jersey the first state to require individuals to declare their organ donor status before applying for a driver's licence. It requires that they either agree to donate their organs following their death or, if they decline, review information about the importance of organ donation. Further, the new law mandates high school education on organ donation. Finally, Mr. Speaker, as recently as last year the state of New York contemplated the idea of making everyone an organ donor unless the individual opts out.

I must remind this Assembly that in the system of opting out or presumed consent, every person living in a jurisdiction is deemed to have given their consent to organ donation unless they have specifically opted out by recording their unwillingness to give organs. This is the preferred method used in several European countries like France, Spain, and the Netherlands.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before, better methods of encouraging organ donations are needed. The question is: which path should Alberta take in order to achieve our goal of increasing organ donation and, ultimately, saving lives? We now know that Ontario has been attempting to change the legislation from an opt-in system without mandatory declaration to one with mandatory declaration. B.C. chose to more actively promote organ donation by using conventional means. Our federal government is doing much the same with the National Organ Donor Week Act. In the U.S. the government is attempting to harmonize public policy on organ donations through the states, some of which, like New Jersey, are opting for more proactive reforms. Finally, in New York an opt-out system was considered as recently as last year.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure which avenue is better for our province and our citizens, but Bill 201 may be a step in the right direction. At the very least it's providing worthwhile debate. I'd like to thank my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing this bill forward. I look forward to the remainder of the debate and potential amendments in committee.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to also congratulate the member for such an important bill. I do believe that this is something in that as I looked, similar to the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, I also had not completed that form. I think that the spirit of this bill is something that will serve Albertans well, and I want to congratulate him for the forward thinking on this particular initiative. I think it will serve all Albertans very well.

I want to say that I have a person that works in my MLA office who was the recipient of a cornea transplant, a transplant she had due to a tragic accident. She can see today because of the organ, the cornea, that was given in the first 24 hours because someone was so gracious to donate. This, again, is the same spirit of what the hon. member is attempting to do here today. As a member of the Wildrose I can probably stand here today and say that I support this very forward-thinking bill, one that will help all Albertans, and one that I believe will serve humanity in a better manner.

I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, just some friendly thoughts to this. Saskatchewan was mentioned earlier, which I think was an important note. I find that when I go to register my vehicle or to get my licence, it would be really nice – and I know there was consideration in the past where, in fact, the folks in the registry under regulation would actually be in a position to ask the question: would you be willing to donate? I think I might have sat on that side when that actual report by Service Alberta came in. It was really good. It's just really about reminding Albertans.

So when you go into a registry branch to register and to get your licence, I thought that in strengthening the spirit of what is well intended in this bill, the civil servants could ask the question: would you consider? I think, really, that if Albertans were posed that question, the majority of them would answer yes. If that was intended to help and assist and broaden and to help even more Albertans, I think that would be a consideration that perhaps the member would consider.

I know there was good work done previously in a report relative to this issue, where, actually, civil servants at the registry, be it private registries, would ask the question. And by order in council as a regulation I actually think that it would be very valuable. I know that if I were asked the question there, clearly, the answer would be, in my judgment, keeping to the spirit of this bill, the right one, saying: yes, I would be willing to help. So it's friendly advice to consider if perhaps that could be worked through. There was good work done in previous years by the government in studying this type of proposal. It really is about interacting with Albertans, yet ultimately the responsibility is with Albertans for saying either yes or no.

Having said that, I do believe that this is very positive. I congratulate the member once again, and I encourage all members of this Assembly, in keeping to the spirit of what's intended, to support this very worthwhile bill.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011, which has been proposed by my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. Organ donation has always been an important topic, with many important and diverse viewpoints and opinions that should be heard and explored.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to discuss what exactly the purpose of Bill 201 is and what it is not. It's not a way to force all Albertans into organ donation. It is not a way to force Albertans to consent to something on which they do not agree. What Bill 201 is trying to do is ensure that all Albertans are educated about their choice of whether to be an organ donor and to have them declare this choice on their Alberta health care card.

If Bill 201 were to pass, a process would be created by which Albertans would be required to indicate whether or not they wish to be an organ donor or if they still are undecided. Mr. Speaker, declaring one's organ donation status is a very important decision, and I believe that many Albertans are willing to be organ donors. I also believe that due to many different circumstances there are some who do not indicate on the back of their Alberta health care card what their organ donor status is. This can lead to confusion if one of these persons is ever in a situation where their organs could be used to help another patient. This confusion could possibly cost lives, which is why the topic of organ donation is such an important issue to be discussed. We recognize that every time someone confirms their willingness to be an organ donor, it could potentially save lives.

Mr. Speaker, there are several ways in which different jurisdictions handle the declaration of organ donor status. Some jurisdictions consider their citizens to be organ donors unless they specifically indicate on some form of documentation that they do not wish to be an organ donor. Some jurisdictions go even further and mandate that regardless of one's objections all citizens will be considered organ donors. This system may not be appropriate for all Albertans. I believe that the current way in which Albertans are asked to declare their organ donor status, by explicitly making a declaration of intent, works for our province.

That being said, changes to the way we ask Albertans to declare their status may be beneficial and deserve consideration. This bill cannot completely change the system, but it would ensure that our citizens declare their organ donor status. This would help to ensure that every available organ that could be donated would get donated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with any program in which citizens' involvement is required, there are real concerns and legitimate exemptions that must be considered. As Bill 201 was being considered and drawn up, I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning made sure that apprehensions from religious and cultural groups were addressed as well as some of the logistical worries about how this process would work in reality.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, there is a legitimate concern that the bill would make it so that Alberta Health Services would have to reissue all Alberta health care cards that are currently in circulation. Obviously, this would be a large undertaking, requiring extra staff, overtime hours to make sure that proper checks and quality control procedures were followed for the issuance of over 3 million health care cards. All this would cost Alberta Health Services and taxpayers a significant amount of money and would take the focus away from the important work that they are performing.

However, Mr. Speaker, this concern is addressed in Bill 201. This bill would ensure that mandatory declaration of one's organ donor status would be phased in. Only when a person applies for a new or a replacement health care card would they be required to declare their organ donor status. This bill would not try to disrupt or reinvent the process that is already in place for issuing Alberta health cards. It will simply use the existing method, that already works.

The bill also respects the personal choices of each individual with respect to organ donation and makes sure that a person's religious and cultural customs are respected. This is not the first time this government has paid attention to this important concern. On August 1, 2009, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act, 2006, came into force. The purpose of this act was to encourage Albertans to be organ and tissue donors. Along with this act Alberta Health Services and other groups have been actively educating Albertans with facts and choices regarding their organ donor status. These education and awareness campaigns have been successful, and I would dare to say that today more than ever our constituents are aware of the choices they have. Bill 201 ensures their choices are indicated so those life-saving organs and tissues make it to people waiting for them.

It is important to note that Bill 201 would exempt those who are not able to make that declaration for themselves. For example, Mr. Speaker, many Albertans receive their health care card before they reach the age of 18. Those who are under the age of 18 would not have to make that mandatory declaration regarding their organ donor status. This ensures that our children will not be pressured into making that declaration without their parents or guardians present. I do not think that it would be a good idea to pressure our youth into making decisions they do not quite understand or know the scope of.

We also want to ensure that those who are eligible to make this crucial and important decision can do so with input and education from those who care for them. This leads to a similar exemption, that provides for those who are not able to give legal consent for themselves. Those who would fall into this category would be the developmentally disabled, for example. Again, Mr. Speaker, these exemptions would ensure that individuals who are not able to make such an important decision are not forced to donate their organs without proper guidance and education.

In the end, this bill seeks to make sure that those who decide to be an organ donor make sure they indicate it on their Alberta health care card. Since we know that the number of people who are willing to be organ donors is higher than actual donation rates, this bill could increase the number of available tissues and organs for transplant.

Mr. Speaker, again, I am pleased that I can take part in this debate about such an important topic. Modern medicine has provided many life-saving techniques and procedures, and organ and tissue transplants are of a high importance in this regard. The decision to be an organ donor is an important one and should not be taken lightly, and the exemptions provided for in this bill are designed to make sure that those who may not be ready to make this decision do not have to.

I would like to express my gratitude to the Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing up organ donation in this House. I know that our discussion today has provided me with more of an understanding of this important issue, and I hope that the bill will encourage awareness of this subject throughout the province.

With that, I will take my seat, and I look forward to the continuing discussion about Bill 201. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011. This is an issue I've been interested in for quite a while. In fact, when I first became an MLA, I sort of looked at this and I said: "Hey, maybe that's something that I can do that would really help Albertans. Maybe there's something that can be done to actually increase the number of donors." I looked at it early on, and then, you know, with all the things that come at you as an MLA, it was one of the things which I did not move forward on.

Anyway, as some of you might know, I lost my best friend last year. I remember how very, very happy she was that even though she had been so very, very sick with cancer for so many years, she was able to donate her corneas, and when she went into the hospice, that was one of the real bright lights for her. This got me thinking that, hey, I've got to start looking at this again. First of all, I met with the Lions Club, and the Lions Club got me onto a lady by the name of Mrs. Sharon Hovey with the HOPE organization. HOPE is an organization in Canada, actually, human organ procurement and exchange, and it has been the provincial group responsible for managing the donation, recovery, and distribution of organs for transplantation within Alberta. I sat down and talked to her about, you know, what can be done. What changes can we possibly make to legislation which would end up with more donors? It's very clear to everybody that, hey, we've got a lot of really sick people out there that we can help.

The first thing that was a real surprise to me is that there's a big difference between eye donations and organ donations. Just about everyone can donate their corneas, but it turns out that there are very, very few people who can donate their organs. It turns out that, essentially, you have to have been in a traumatic accident to be able to donate your organs. You have to essentially be on life support, and that has all sorts of implications for how we handle this whole issue.

What the HOPE organization does – and I will table these documents with the Speaker – is that they approach the families of possible organ donors. They talk to them and ask them to please allow the organs to be donated. Now, from their website are a couple of very interesting pages. First of all, how many of the possible donors do they approach? Well, it turns out that in most three-month quarters they approach 100 per cent of the possible donors. They actually approach 100 per cent of those families. The times when they don't approach them: what happens? For instance, somebody was in a car accident, and they already had cancer. Okay? Even though they at first appeared to be possible donors, it turns out that they can't because they've got cancer or they have ALS or they have viral encephalitis. So even though most of the time it's at a hundred, the times when they don't approach those families are times when there are other reasons why the person couldn't have been a donor anyway.

The next page that we need to look at here is that of those families that are approached by the HOPE organization, pretty well in the last four months 100 per cent of those Albertan families have donated those organs. One hundred per cent. So I guess there are a few questions here. Now 100 per cent of the possible donors are donating, so why is there a decline in donors?

Well, it turns out that we in this Assembly have been doing the right things, what might be considered the wrong things, but I think they're the right things. We have worked to make our highways safer. We have fewer people dying in car accidents. We have come out with helmet legislation, so we have fewer people having accidents on their bicycles or on their motorcycles. There is actually a decline in the number of donors, but the reason that there is that decline is because we have been doing the right things. Our cars are safer now. There are fewer people dying in car accidents, and that's the bottom line of why we have so few donors.

So what's wrong with this legislation? What would it matter? Why not just put it through? You know, why not just put it through? Well, it comes to this whole question of yes, no, undecided. The problem is that it is government saying: you have to make a decision. When government says, "You have to make a decision," you are going to end up with some people saying: "Well, get out of my way. I'm just going to say no." So what you're actually going to end up with is some people with noes. With that no, what we're doing is we're kicking the feet out from this organization that provides all of these donors. When there's a no on there, then what that means is that HOPE can no longer approach the families and ask for that donation. So we will actually end up with fewer donors. Right now we are at 100 per cent. By doing this, we're going to be cutting out a number of possible donors for these organs.

Now, when it comes to corneas, that's a different issue altogether. Just about everyone can donate a cornea, and that's one thing that we really need to push harder, in getting the general population to donate their corneas. I'm hoping that out of this whole discussion there will be more awareness out there that you can donate your corneas and that we do need more corneas.

When it comes to the organs, we are now getting 100 per cent of those organs that we could possibly get, so I am very concerned – very concerned – that if we pass this legislation, we will actually end up with fewer donations. There will be people that HOPE can no longer approach, the families of people that HOPE can no longer approach, and we will thus end up with fewer donations.

You know, my heart goes out to this member in that he has his heart in the right place. He is working really hard here to try to get more donors, but it isn't a matter of people not stepping forward. It's not a matter of Albertans not doing the right thing. Albertans are doing the right thing. They are donating their organs, but as a result of our safer community, our safer roads, our safer vehicles, our helmets there are fewer people in Alberta dying traumatic deaths. So it's one of our losses. Everything has a pro and a con to it, unfortunately.

I do ask you all, very reluctantly, to defeat this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today as well to speak in the debate on Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011. I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning as well for his thoughtfulness in bringing this bill forward.

Organ donation is a very important topic, as we've heard, as many lives are affected by the selfless act of organ donation. Ultimately, this is a discussion that needs to occur within families. Mr. Speaker, it's estimated that well over a million people in the world have benefited from organ transplantation, yet long wait-lists for organ donations prevail.

Alberta along with the rest of Canada uses an opt-in system for organ donation. Under this system individuals are presumed to have said no to organ donation unless they have left explicit direction to do otherwise. In comparison to what's done in Canada, many European nations and several South American nations adhere to an opt-out, or presumed consent, system of organ donation. This presumed consent system allows organs to be harvested from an individual even in the absence of explicit consent of the deceased. In such a system an individual must inform the relevant authorities if they wish to opt out.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to explore the European case of presumed-consent policies and the impact that these policies have had on organ donation. In the early years of organ donation, in the 1960s and '70s, most countries used the opt-in system. However, as demand for organ donation grew, a number of countries abandoned the opt-in system in favour of the presumed-consent system.

An interesting fact is that Singapore was the first nation to enact presumed consent, with several European nations following suit. To date approximately 24 European countries have some form of presumed consent, with the most prominent systems in Austria, Belgium, and Spain.

In those countries they've shown great success with their presumed-consent policies. In fact, several before-and-after studies reported an increase in donation rates following the introduction of a presumed-consent system. For example, kidney donation rates in Austria grew from 4.6 to 27.2 donors per million people over a five-year period while rates in Belgium increased from 10.9 to 41.3 donors per million during a three-year period. Some have argued that it's not just the change in systems that has elicited this increase in donors. It's argued that a combination of legislation, availability of donors, transplantation systems organization, investment in health care as well as underlying public attitudes to and awareness of organ donation and transplantation may all play a role although the relative importance reach is not that clear.

Mr. Speaker, presumed-consent systems can be hard, as in Austria, where the views of close relatives are not taken into account, or soft, as in Spain, where relatives' views are sought. The hard systems are known as pure presumed consent, and an individual must register at a courthouse and establish that he or she does not wish to be an organ donor. Such registration is the only way individuals can prevent their organs from being removed upon death. An interesting twist in the pure presumed-consent system is that if an individual who has refused to be a donor ends up needing a transplant, then he or she would automatically be placed at the end of the list. These countries operate under the mantra that those who wish to receive an organ must be willing to give one.

In addition, Austria and Belgium practise pure presumed consent for tissues only and will confer with families regarding organ donor donations. Spain, on the other hand, has had phenomenal success with organ donation following the implementation of presumed consent, and as mentioned earlier, this soft presumed-consent system still consults with families. Spain has seen the number of donations increase by 142 per cent since 1989. Not only does Spain have the highest donation rate in Europe, with 34 donors per million people, but it also has more than two times the donors of Canada, where the rate is approximately 15 donors per million people.

Spain may attribute some of the success to another factor, active detection, which is a key aspect of the Spanish model. That means having transplant co-ordinators such as doctors visit emergency rooms and the ICU on a daily basis, checking the roster of patients and their status.

The success that Spain has achieved in increasing organ donation rates has attracted attention across the European Union. In the drive to facilitate donation, transplantation, and exchange of organs in Europe, the European Parliament voted in May 2010 to pass legislation that sets common quality and safety standards for transplants across European Union nations. The aim is not only to increase the supply of organ donors across the EU but also to enhance the efficiency and accessibility of transplant systems and ultimately to ensure the quality and safety of those procedures. The directive came into force in late 2010, and member nations will have two years to transpose this directive into national legislation.

According to the new rules, EU member states must set up a national authority responsible for maintaining quality and safety standards for organ transplantation processes. The authorities will approve procurement organizations and transplant centres, set up reporting and management systems for serious adverse reactions, collect data on the outcome of transplants, and supervise organ swaps with other member states and third countries. This legislation must include the following item, that all organ donations must be voluntary and unpaid. Living donors may receive compensation provided it is strictly limited to covering the expenses and loss of income related to the donation. Additionally, member nations are required to ban any advertising of the need for or availability of human organs where the aim is financial gain.

Furthermore, a pan-European certification system designed to provide proof that human organs and tissues have been obtained legally must be put in place. So this is a far more complex issue than what this current bill is presenting to us, Mr. Speaker.

The EU initiative to increase organ donation is also to address a dark underworld of illegal organ trafficking. Long wait-lists have created a practice which benefits organized crime and can have profoundly negative consequences, particularly for the donor.

Mr. Speaker, presumed consent is not without its criticisms. Opponents of presumed consent suggest that such a system could force someone to become a donor against their will. Furthermore, opponents also argue that it might lead patients viewed as prospective donors to worry about how hard a medical team will work to save them if there's greater benefit to harvesting the organs, and that's a real concern for many people. However, citizens of countries where presumed consent is law feel that they are given a fair chance to say no to organ donation.

Mr. Speaker, the debate on Bill 201 allows us to further understand the issues at hand. Furthermore, this debate in this House today should encourage all of us and all Albertans to sit down with their families and decide what our wishes are. I do have some concerns with parts of this bill, in particular the condition of not receiving an Alberta health card if you don't sign the back of your card. You'll receive a number instead. I'm not sure how we're going to get that number, probably on another card. Is this going to create two classes of Albertans, in which some have a health care card and some have just a registration number? I think some Albertans would be very concerned about that.

I'm going to reserve judgment on this until after I see what amendments may be coming forth in committee on this bill. I'd like to once again thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing this bill forward and this topic to the attention of the members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Stony Plain, do you wish to join the debate?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and participate in the debate on Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011. First of all, I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing this bill forward. Organ donation is a very important topic to discuss as organ transplantation can and does improve the quality of life of patients and reduce health costs in the long term. Transplants have been taking place in Canada since the 1950s. Organ transplants most often are kidney, heart, lung, pancreas, and liver.

Mr. Speaker, many people are affected by organ failure. In fact, according to a new report from the Canadian Institute for Health Information, or CIHI, the number of Canadians living with kidney failure, for example, has been steadily increasing for 20 years. CIHI's report shows that the rate of people living with kidney failure had steadily increased between 1990 and 2000 but appears to have levelled off since 2005. This may be due in part to patients seeing a specialist in the early stages of the disease, possibly contributing to a delay in the onset of kidney failure, for example.

Research, in fact, shows that many people are seeing specialists sooner, which is a very positive trend. For example, in 2009 only 31 per cent of patients were what we refer to as late referrals. This is down from 42 per cent in 2001. Late referrals means patients that need to start dialysis less than three months after first seeing their specialist.

Mr. Speaker, CIHI's report goes on to indicate that close to 38,000 Canadians were living with kidney failure in 2009. This is more than triple the number, 11,000, of those living with the disease in 1990. The largest increase occurred in older age groups, with prevalent rates escalating more than 500 per cent for those age 75 and older. Patients in this age group account for 20 per cent of all kidney failure cases.

Mr. Speaker, a person who needs a transplant usually has to go on a waiting list and wait for someone to donate that needed organ. For instance, of all Canadians living with the disease in 2009, 59 per cent, or 22,300 people, were on dialysis, and about 3,000 people were on the wait-list for a transplant. Compare this to 1990 when 53 per cent, or 5,900 people, were on dialysis and roughly 1,600 people were on the wait-list. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that it is clear that organ donation and transplantation are growing concerns as there is a critical shortage of organs available for transplantation around the world.

Mr. Speaker, an organ transplant is no minor surgery. Not only does it affect the lives of many Canadians, but there are also health care costs associated with organ failure. There needs to be a focus on educating Canadians on how to prevent the onset of diseases that add a heavy burden to our health care system. For example, research has shown that diabetes continues to be a leading cause of kidney failure. The cost of a transplant, including preliminary testing, the surgery itself, and postoperative recovery, varies. These costs start to add up even before a person's transplant.

Kidney failure, for example, results in substantial cost to the health care system. In fact, the estimated cost for hemodialysis treatment is approximately $60,000 per patient per year of treatment. Hemodialysis is a treatment for kidney failure. Comparatively, a one-time cost for a kidney transplant is approximately $23,000 plus $6,000 for the necessary annual medication to maintain that transplant. So based on these estimates, over a five-year period the cost savings of receiving a transplant rather than dialysis is approximately $250,000 per patient.

In 2009 more than 1,500 patients living with kidney transplants saved the health care system an estimated $800 million. There are currently under 3,000 Canadians on the wait-list for a kidney transplant. If they were all to receive that transplant, it would result in additional savings of $150 million annually.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important discussion. I, too, am of the opinion that it's great to have this discussion here in the Legislature. I'll look forward to others adding to this important discussion, and I'll reserve my judgment, whether or not I will approve this legislation, for a later time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to stand up and speak to Bill 201. I want to just talk about a couple of things if I can. First off, I would like to say – I thought of this yesterday, and it was something that I heard previously – that what you do for yourself dies with you; it's what you do for others that lives forever. I just want to say that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning is a member that is very committed to his constituency. He's committed to the people of Alberta and very much puts his efforts towards the good of individuals. He's very much a proponent about need.

Now, we can talk about words that need to be changed, and I do agree that there are some things in this bill that don't make me feel very comfortable, in fact, to the point that, you know, I have hesitation. Of course, the question that comes up is: what is the solution? First of all, in order to look at what the solution is, let's talk about why people have concerns. Well, it is a concern or fear of the unknown. I think that we need to have better information. We need to have better opportunity for people to understand exactly what does take place when they sign their name on the back of their health card. I feel that there isn't enough public awareness, and this particular bill does bring the awareness forward. So, in essence, this member has achieved and has won this bill because of bringing forward awareness, and I think that that is critical.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, most people are afraid to donate because I think most people don't know the parameters that are necessary or what takes place when a donation does happen. I know there is a lot of discussion, or at least some discussion, that the cost of an organ transplant is cheaper than maybe an individual staying on dialysis. But at the end of the day to me this is about education. Families need to be educated if a person wants to donate and sign his donor card.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I have signed my donor card. I signed it years ago. When I was thinking about it, as we heard individuals speaking about the importance of communication with the family, I can say to you that I don't think that we've had that discussion. My children . . .

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides up to five minutes for the mover of the bill to close debate, I invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning to close debate on Bill 201.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to thank all of the members who joined in the debate in favour and in opposition. I have listened to all of your concerns.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not lucky enough to have been born in this country. I came about 30 years ago. The first time I got elected, I was talking to my son. He just finished his BCom and is becoming a chartered accountant, and my daughter is in third-year nursing. I asked them: "What should I do? How can I save Albertans or Canadians?" The first thing they said to me was: Dad, we need to bring awareness to body organ donations. That's how I started this bill, by listening to lots of concerns. I'm not an expert on the side of how to put all the wording together, but I do understand that we can save Canadians. Like the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall said: we're all Canadians. We have to look after other family members who need body organ donations.

This is a topic of debate about awareness, education so that people can talk, to bring more people into the discussion throughout Alberta, and so we can increase the body organ donation list. Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 is all about improving. Every year thousands of Albertans and Canadians wait on donor lists, never knowing if they are going to live or die. The reality is that many wait too long; many don't make it. The problem is that we have low donor rates, and I believe that this is a result of how our system is set up.

Mr. Speaker, I was born into the Sikh religion. There's not much awareness when I go to Sikh temple on the weekend and talk about this. I try whenever I get opportunity to say something. I'd like to increase awareness in this society. Whenever I go to my constituency of Edmonton-Manning and get a chance to say the same thing to my constituents, they all like to say: you know, this is a very good bill. Before I came into the House today my leg. assistant – she's not working with me anymore, but she works with the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar – got tears in her eyes and said: "Peter, good luck to you. This is the way to go."

Mr. Speaker, it's simply too easy to ignore the question. It's too easy to do nothing. Doing nothing means that people die. However, I also understand organ donation is a very personal decision and one that should not be forced on anyone. That's why this bill does not make you choose yes or no. You can still remain undecided if you don't know, but it brings the discussion.

I also recommend that we alter this bill in the Committee of the Whole to reflect the fact that we do not want to deny people health care through this bill. Mr. Speaker, studies all over the world have indicated that people are most likely to remain with the default organ choice for all the reasons; however, if people are given the choice, the majority will choose yes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour it has been the practice of this Assembly to defer the introduction of new bills when there is such a short amount of time allowed for the presenter of the bill to do so. On that basis, I would like to seek unanimous consent to now call it 5 o'clock and move on to Motion 501.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Organ Donation Leave of Absence

501. Mr. Amery moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce amendments to the Employment Standards Code that would require all employers to provide an unpaid leave of absence of up to 13 weeks for employees who donate organs.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We had about two full hours of discussion about organ donations, and I will continue on the same theme. I am very pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 501. I am proposing this motion because I believe there is an urgent need to address the current disparity in supply and demand of organs in our province. I believe the wait-lists for people in need of organ transplants are far too long. More than 4,300 people are currently in need of an organ in Canada. As many as 6 per cent, or some 250, will die while on waiting lists.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 501 urges the government to introduce amendments to the Employment Standards Code that would require all employers to provide an unpaid leave of absence of up to 13 weeks for employees who donate organs. By providing formal job-protected leave for employees wishing to donate an organ or tissue, we can encourage those considering donating an organ to carry through with this potentially life-saving decision while providing peace of mind that their job will not be in jeopardy given their absence.

The act of donating an organ to someone in need is a very humane act. It takes a very noble and special person, and it is something to be commended. While I do not believe an employer would discourage an employee or otherwise endanger their position for taking this time off, I feel the need for actual legislation to be in place. This legislation or potential amendment to existing legislation must formally recognize the need for job-protected leave as it pertains to organ donations. Such a safety net is crucial for Albertans who are considering donating. Mr. Speaker, I believe that by providing this recognized job-protected leave, we can give assurance to those considering donating as well as an added incentive to actually follow through. After all, those who perform such an admirable act ought to be protected for their courage and selflessness.

Mr. Speaker, while I wish to raise awareness of the challenges surrounding organ and tissue donations and emphasize the need to recruit living donors, it is important to note that not everyone can actually become a living organ donor. All prospective organ donors in the country must first meet several screening criteria outlined by Health Canada, and they must also pass the donor suitability process in order to qualify. I understand this may be a disincentive, but it is necessary for the safety of those in need of the organs.

We would not be alone in providing job-protected organ donor leave should we move forward with this proposal. Two other Canadian provinces provide job-protected leave for living organ and tissue donors in their employment standards legislation. I feel that these two provinces have paved the way for providing this type of job security in other jurisdictions and can be looked upon as examples going forward.

Mr. Speaker, Ontario was first when it amended its Employment Standards Act to create a specified unpaid 13-week organ donor leave in 2009. This amendment also carries a special provision whereby the organ donor can extend their leave for an additional period of up to 13 unpaid weeks in certain cases. Manitoba formally recognized job-protected leave for organ and tissue donors. This occurred with a 2010 amendment to Manitoba's employment standards act. Just like Ontario, employees in Manitoba are entitled to a 13-week unpaid leave for the purpose of donating an organ or tissue. This leave may also be extended by an additional 13 weeks if recommended by a physician. In the case of both Ontario and Manitoba the employee must have been employed at their current job for at least 13 weeks prior to taking the organ donor leave.

A number of U.S. states, Mr. Speaker, have also enacted laws that provide unpaid or, in some cases, paid leaves of absence for the purpose of organ and tissue donations. More than 100,000 people in the United States are currently on a waiting list to receive an organ. State legislators and state-run campaigns have magnified the need for living organ donors in recent decades. This has acted as a vehicle to enact this type of job-protected legislation. I feel it's now our turn to do the same.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe that one way to significantly provide awareness of our organ transplant wait-list is to offer formal job-protected leave for living organ donors, and with recent reports suggesting that our province has the lowest proportion of living donors in the country, I feel that now is the time to amplify awareness efforts. This is why I felt compelled to introduce this motion. More must be done to recruit living organ donors. In a perfect world there would be no one on a wait-list to receive an organ, but we must acknowledge that this is not the case.

With Motion 501 we could take a positive step towards reducing the organ wait-list. This could at the very least be a step towards saving the lives of several Albertans. Mr. Speaker, formally requiring all employers to provide an unpaid leave of absence for employees who wish to donate organs would ultimately provide would-be donors the security needed in that their jobs would be legally protected during their absence. I do not wish to propose anything that's dramatic or unrealistic. I believe Motion 501 to be a very moderate and realistic step towards saving lives as it would be a sensible way of providing very necessary job security for prospective donors.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite all my colleagues to join in the discussion surrounding Motion 501. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak in favour of Motion 501. It's very appropriate, as the hon. Member for Calgary-East has pointed out, following on the heels of Bill 201, the Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011. In fact, this motion would be one of the ways of instituting what is hoped for in Bill 201.

There are a number of organizations whereby individuals who may not be of the same blood type or the same compatibility – for example, with kidney donations – are part of larger organizations where upon requirement individuals have indicated that they would be willing to donate their organ to a complete stranger with the thought that a family member closely related to them would be also a recipient of the generosity of individuals.

This unpaid leave also follows in the historical precedent established I believe it was last year of our military job-holding legislation, where it was recommended that individuals who serve in our armed forces be recognized for their personal sacrifices and that the jobs they held as militia members in civvy life they would be able to go back to. I see this along that same line. Individuals who provide donations, especially those who are living and donate one of their kidneys, are heroes. They're taking on a circumstance to ensure the well-being of another individual. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill indicated, quoting the Biblical scripture of "greater love hath no man" applies very directly to this type of situation of donation. If a person is willing to make a donation of this type, then the least we can do for them is to have their job ready for them when they are sufficiently well enough to recover and return to work.

I do realize, Mr. Speaker, that this does put a fairly significant degree of onus on the employer to be without their employee for the number of weeks involved, but I think the type of employee that would offer this kind of contribution, I would suggest sacrifice, would certainly be worthy of retention by their particular employer. I would hope that the employer would recognize the quality of their employee in offering such a donation. The reality of our human body is such that this is not the type of donation that you could make repeatedly, unlike blood for example.

Also, we've had an hon. member previously mention his involvement with bone marrow donation. He's indicated his willingness should his marrow match with a needed recipient. A bone marrow transplant is considerably more involved than a simple blood transfusion or donation and, therefore, I would think probably would be included in the same type of legislation and protection as is involved with the organ donation. I would hope that Motion 501 would include, as I say, bone marrow transplants, which, after a fashion, are a donation.

I think this is a very good piece of legislation. As I say, employers are going to be affected by the loss of their employee over that time period, and I'm not sure to what extent their contribution of holding that person's job could be recognized. That would be an interesting part of the ongoing debate with this motion. But I think the concept is worthy of support, and therefore I lend my support and my thanks to the Member for Calgary-East, who put forward Motion 501.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and join the discussion on Motion 501, which is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. The objective of Motion 501 is to encourage the government to introduce amendments to the Employment Standards Code which would require all employers to provide an unpaid leave of absence of up to 13 weeks for employees who donate organs. With this change Alberta organ donors would obtain a greater level of comfort with the donation process, knowing that their jobs are not in jeopardy should they decide to make the decision of becoming an organ or tissue donor.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, Alberta does not have any legislation that allows Albertans to take a leave of absence from their job in order to donate their organs; however, the nature of the idea is not unprecedented. In fact, other jurisdictions across Canada and the United States have enacted similar legislation to that proposed by Motion 501 in order to protect jobs of living organ donors. In order for this government to make responsible decisions on this issue, it is important that we take a close look at the legislation created by other jurisdictions and the impact that it has created. In Canada Manitoba and Ontario are two other provinces that have legislation protecting the job security of living organ donors.

In Ontario an amendment was made to the Employment Standards Act on June 5, 2009, which created job protection for living organ donors. The amendment allows job-protected leave for up to 13 weeks for the purpose of undergoing surgery to donate all or part of a certain organ. However, organ donors can be granted an additional 13 weeks based on the recommendation of a physician. The amendment to the Ontario Employment Standards Act also mandates certain criteria that have to be met in order to be granted a protected leave of absence. These criteria include that the employee must have been working for their employer for at least 13 weeks and that the employee undergoes surgery to donate all or part of one of the following organs to another person: liver, kidney, pancreas, lung, and/or small bowel.

Comparatively, the legislation in Manitoba is quite similar to that in Ontario. In June 2010 an amendment to the Employment Standards Code was created to recognize the right of Manitobans to take an unpaid leave for the purpose of organ or tissue donation. It provides organ donors with a 13-week recovery period and an additional 13 weeks if recommended by a physician.

Looking south may also help us assess the merit of this Motion 501. Mr. Speaker, in the U.S. there are 29 states that have enacted laws that provide either paid or unpaid leave for organ donors. On average, the leave of absence period is 30 business days, which in the grand scheme of things is not burdensome to business.

Mr. Speaker, both Ontario and Manitoba acknowledge the fact that the employers of organ donors need to be protected as well. After all, they are directly affected by the absence of their employee. As such, a two-week written notice from an organ donor to their employer is required in both jurisdictions before the donation process begins. This allows employers time to adjust their business accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that job protection for living organ donors is an important issue. It could provide one less thing for donors to worry about before they start the demanding process of donating an organ. However, we must take into consideration the impact that this may have on employers and try to find a happy medium to have all parties benefit.

With that, I will conclude my comments and look forward to the rest of the debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today and join debate on Motion 501, which is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. This motion urges the government to introduce amendments to the Employment Standards Code that would require all employers to provide a leave of absence for employees who donate organs. This would encourage organ donation by giving donors peace of mind, knowing that their job would not be in jeopardy should they choose to donate organs.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Institute for Health Information releases extensive data for organ transplants in each province. In 2009 there were a total of 54 live organ donor transplants performed in Alberta. Forty-five of these were kidney transplants. However, there were also nine liver transplants.

I know the concept of live donor liver transplantation may be surprising to some, but this advancement has been around for a few decades. This medical miracle works because of the extraordinary regenerative capacity of the liver. However, it is not a minor procedure, and the donor must visit a physician constantly throughout the recuperative process, which normally lasts between two and three months. Kidney transplants are also major procedures, which require several weeks of recovery time before an individual can safely return to work.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of 2009 there were a total of 472 patients awaiting a transplant in our province. However, not all of these patients can receive an organ from a live donor as some of them are waiting for organs such as the heart, that can only be donated by the recently deceased. Even though most organ donations in Alberta, about 80 per cent, are from the recently deceased, encouraging live organ donation could also contribute to reducing the waiting time for organ transplants.

Mr. Speaker, there is currently no legislation in our province that guarantees employees time off in the event that they donate an organ. However, this practice is becoming increasingly common in other jurisdictions as employment standards continue to evolve. We should commend those who choose to donate organs as it takes plenty of courage to go through the process, but we should also respect the rights of employers and employees to come to a reasonable understanding on their own in the event that the employee is donating an organ.

Contrary to popular perception, I think many employers would understand the gravity of such a decision and would give as much time as needed for the employee to recover. They might even go a step further and pay the employee's wages for part of their recovery.

Mr. Speaker, I think all members can agree that shortening the waiting lists for organ transplants would be a tremendous feat. The reality is, however, that we do not know of a silver bullet which will substantially increase the number of organ transplants performed without raising certain ethical questions. I believe that this motion could help ensure peace of mind for those who are about to donate organs.

However, I also believe that communication between employers and employees may be able to provide this peace of mind without government interference. For these reasons I think that we should consider more investigation with respect to this issue.

With that, I will conclude my comments. Thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing forward this motion, and I look forward to the remainder of the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to join the debate on Motion 501, which urges the government to introduce amendments to the Employment Standards Code that would require employers in Alberta to provide up to 13 weeks of unpaid leave for employees who donate organs.

I'd like to begin by thanking the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing our attention to this important issue. Mr. Speaker, there are well over 4,000 Canadians who are currently awaiting organ transplants, and unfortunately some will die waiting. Many of those lives can be saved with the help of a living donor. The kidney, liver, lung, pancreas, and small bowel along with some vital tissues can all be donated by living donors, making them much more readily available than organs from the deceased. Unfortunately, a barrier for many potential living donors is the amount of time that must be taken to prepare for and to recover from such surgeries.

Many fear that their jobs might not be waiting for them when they are ready to return to work. While it is commonplace for employers to grant extended leaves of absence to living organ donors, this is not always the case, and as such we should consider the possibility of enshrining this level of job protection in formal legislation. Mr. Speaker, legislated job protection may encourage individuals to become living organ donors who would not have otherwise done so for fear of unemployment. This increase in the number of living organ donors would no doubt save the lives of many who currently sit on transplant waiting lists.

There is indeed a shortage of living organ donors both here in Alberta and across the country. Organ donation is a potentially life-changing decision that is certainly not to be taken lightly, and many choose not to take the risk. In addition, Health Canada has stringent donor screening guidelines, that exclude many from becoming donors. As such, not everyone can become a living organ donor, but those who are able to should be given every opportunity to save another's life. This enhanced level of job security could help to balance the supply with an ever-increasing demand for organs.

However, while there are many potential benefits to Motion 501, an item of concern for me is the possible burden that job-protection legislation could put on Alberta businesses should a large number of employees take advantage of this leave. Here in Alberta we pride ourselves on being one of the best jurisdictions in North America to do business. Our tax regime alone has helped to ensure that the entrepreneurial spirit remains alive and well in our province. Since we are all recovering from the recent economic downturn, we certainly do not want to enact legislation that would discourage investment and economic growth.

Another potential problem with providing up to 13 weeks of unpaid absence for living organ donors is sometimes the contentious nature of organ donation itself. For religious reasons some people do not believe in organ donation, and it could become controversial if we were to compel employers who are against it to provide employees with 13 weeks of unpaid leave to donate an organ.

That being said, I believe that the intent behind this motion is to help raise awareness of the need for living organ donors to possibly save the lives of Albertans awaiting transplants. For this reason I believe that more debate is required before we can determine whether or not Motion 501 is in the best interests of all Albertans.

With that, I will conclude my comments and look forward to hearing other perspectives from my hon. colleagues. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today and join debate on Motion 501, which is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. This motion urges the government to introduce amendments to the Employment Standards Code that would require all employers to provide an unpaid leave of absence for employees who choose to donate their organs. With a large disparity in the supply of and the demand for organs across our country, new initiatives are necessary to address this growing concern. Because donating an organ is a life-changing decision and can potentially carry serious personal consequences, many people considering this undertaking simply decide that the health risks are too great. A risk to one's employment only enhances this danger, making this decision even more difficult to make.

As we know, no legislation is currently in place to formally protect those willing to take a leave of absence from their employment for the purposes of donating an organ. I firmly believe that such formal job-protection legislation is needed for the security of would-be donors as well as to address the length of wait times for those in need of an organ. Ontario and Manitoba already offer a job-protection leave for organ donors in their employment standards legislation, and a number of U.S. states do also. In the majority of these examples the donor leave is unpaid, yet a recent law passed last month in California mandates that employers are required to offer a paid leave of up to 30 days; however, this is contingent on the employer having more than 15 employees. If the employer has fewer than 15 employees, they're not legally required to offer the 30-day organ donor leave to an employee.

Mr. Speaker, we must also take into consideration how many employees realistically would take an organ donor leave at the same time. I don't believe that if we enacted the job-protection legislation proposed in this motion, many employees from the same company would simultaneously take organ donor related leaves of absence. For a small business with fewer than 10 employees having even a couple take a leave simultaneously would be difficult to overcome. However, if just one is gone at any given time, I do believe that the employer would be able to adapt, especially given the reason for the absence. This example is amplified when we look at how a single employee on organ donor leave would affect a larger business with more employees. For all intents and purposes missing one employee would not have a substantial impact on day-to-day operations, and missing an employee for 13 weeks or less is certainly worth saving a life.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 501 does not seek to cause undue harm to Alberta businesses, nor will it. It simply offers peace of mind to those already considering becoming a live organ donor. Knowing that their job is secure may be just what would-be donors need in order to commit to the procedure, in turn enhancing and potentially saving someone else's life. For this reason I am happy to vote in support of Motion 501 as I feel it is in the best interests of all Albertans.

With that, I will conclude my comments and look forward to hearing other perspectives from my hon. colleagues. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, my speaking list is exhausted. Shall I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-East to close the debate?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and offer closing remarks on Motion 501. The goal of this motion is to encourage the government to add extra incentives to prospective living organ donors through offering a formal job-protected organ donor leave by amending our Employment Standards Code. With this a would-be donor would be provided the peace of mind that their job would not be compromised in any way while on leave.

5:30

Mr. Speaker, given the length of present donor lists I believe this motion could help in reducing wait times for those in need of an organ transplant. Donating an organ to someone in need is a very, very humane act and one that is to be commended. A person who commits themselves to such a life-saving feat deserves to have their job protected. This government has and continues to take a leadership role in ensuring that people are protected. I believe that Motion 501 will only enhance our efforts to ensure that Alberta remains the best place in which to live, work, and raise a family.

Mr. Speaker, I value and respect my colleagues' comments regarding Motion 501 and urge their vote of support. I would like to thank everyone who participated in this motion debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, February 28, 2011

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2010-11 General Revenue Fund

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move the 2010-11 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund. These estimates will provide additional spending authority to 13 government departments. When passed, the estimates will authorize increases of about $638.7 million in voted expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $0.4 million in voted capital investments, and $124.3 million in voted nonbudgetary disbursements. The estimates will also authorize, when passed, the transfer of approximately $25.1 million of the previously approved spending authority between departments. These estimates are consistent with the third-quarter fiscal updates, which are included in the 2010-11 fiscal plan for all government entities.

The estimates will authorize increases for the departments of Aboriginal Relations, Advanced Education and Technology, Children and Youth Services, Culture and Community Spirit, Employment and Immigration, Environment, Infrastructure, Justice, Municipal Affairs, Seniors and Community Supports, Service Alberta, Sustainable Resource Development, and Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Finally, the estimates will also authorize a transfer from the Department of Treasury Board to the departments of the Solicitor General and Public Security. The ministers or their designates that are responsible for these departments will be happy to answer any questions from any members of the House.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Before we begin, I'd like to just mention that according to Standing Order 59.02 members may speak more than once. However, speaking time is limited to 10 minutes at a time, and the minister and a member may combine their time for a total of 20 minutes. Members are asked to advise the chair at the beginning of their speech if they plan on combining their time with the minister's time, both taking and yielding the floor over the combined period.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Aboriginal Relations

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate this opportunity to participate in the debate this evening on supplementary supply. I must say that I had, for the record, the pleasure of attending the minister of finance and President of the Treasury Board's speech earlier today.

The Deputy Chair: Will you be combining the time, hon. member?

Mr. MacDonald: We could certainly ask a question and get a reply from the hon. minister and proceed that way. I think that's worked in the past with this hon. gentleman, and I'm confident it would work tonight.

Mr. Snelgrove: Could I just ask the hon. member: would he be following the list of departments as outlined in the supply, or do you intend to start with Aboriginal Relations and work down? Is that the understanding?

The Deputy Chair: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Sure.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. We got that settled, and we got it settled quite quickly. I would just like to say to the hon. minister before I get started that that was a nice speech he gave today, but I was struck by the fact of his predecessor Steve West, a former very influential cabinet minister on the Conservative side. I was sitting there listening to your remarks, wondering how Dr. West would feel with four successive budget deficits, totalling close to $10 billion, and the fact that this year it is $3.4 billion. Last year it was anticipated that it would only be a little bit more than $1 billion. I was sitting there, I was listening to your speech, and I was wondering, "What would Steve think?" with you being from the same end of the province as he and having had the privilege and honour of representing the same constituency as he.

Now, we could perhaps get right to the point, Mr. Chairman, about Aboriginal Relations. The supplementary amount here is for over $32 million, which is net of the $8 million that was budgeted spending in the First Nations development fund and in other program areas as requested. The ministry's 2009-10 annual report, page 16, noted progress on the Bigstone treaty land entitlement claim, and it indicated ratification in 2010-11. Can the minister please explain how this settlement compares to a land entitlement claim among the 15 that are reported to have been settled, also in the annual report on page 15? Given that there are still 30 claims to be settled, can the minister explain the process that is used in Aboriginal Relations to plan for the significant sums that may be expected to be involved in the settlements that are still outstanding? If the minister could respond, I would appreciate it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, are you directing those questions to the Minister of Aboriginal Relations?

Mr. MacDonald: Sure.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Fine. Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, hon. member, for the questions. If you enjoyed the speech this morning by the hon. minister over here, you're going to really enjoy my speech here tonight.

I'll start off by saying that you may be aware that for many years Canada, Alberta, and the Bigstone Cree Nation have been negotiating Bigstone's claim to a remaining land entitlement under Treaty 8. Last year Canada, Alberta, and the Bigstone Nation, as you know, finalized the largest treaty land entitlement claim in Alberta, and it includes the communities of Peerless Lake, Trout Lake, Chipewyan Lake, and Calling Lake.

Now, the Canada-Alberta agreement for the Bigstone land claim was approved by our cabinet on July 13, 2010, and the federal minister of Indian and northern affairs signed off on the settlement agreements on December 13 of that same year. This is an historic land claim settlement but not the first one for Alberta. In fact, there have been a dozen land claims settled in Alberta since 1986.

As part of the Bigstone settlement agreement, Alberta agreed to provide 140,000 acres of provincial Crown land, including mines and minerals, and also $41 million, comprised of $29 million in monies plus $12 million to construct two new elementary schools for the Peerless and Trout Lake First Nations. With cabinet's approval $41 million was added to our budget for the 2010-2011 year, and this entire cost was reported by Aboriginal Relations although $12 million came from Alberta Infrastructure, and it was accrued for the future construction of the two new on-reserve schools. As a result we are here today requesting the supplementary funds that have been committed by cabinet.

Cabinet approved the $41 million in supplementary funds that, based on our forecasts, we needed to add to our 2010-2011 budget for the Bigstone land claim. I am pleased to say that my ministry, Aboriginal Relations, has been able to offset $8.425 million of this amount from our department budget due to the cost savings and expense reductions in 2010-2011, and as a result I'm here today requesting $32.575 million. This is the balance of the funding approved by cabinet and already disbursed as part of Alberta's land claim settlement.

Thank you. That's my speech, hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I appreciate very much that explanation.

Advanced Education and Technology

Mr. MacDonald: Now, alphabetically we are looking at a request from the Department of Advanced Education and Technology for a total that is $24 million for equipment and inventory purchases and nonbudgetary disbursements of $53 million.

Before we get to the details of this, I would like to direct a question, please, to the finance minister regarding operating expenses. If any of the money that we are discussing tonight, in excess of $630 million, is going to be transferred for operating expenses, how much of that is being transferred for operating expenses and precisely from which budgets?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. The operating expense piece of this is actually student finance, and it's related to student loans. We don't turn any students away, so when students that are able to do apply for loans to attend postsecondaries, the funding flows through to them. This year we've been extremely successful in getting young people to attend our postsecondary institutions, and $53.9 million of this will go to support those student loans for these young people. The balance of the funding is for the completion of construction on the Edmonton clinic north. This is a wonderful project at the University of Alberta. It involves both teaching and clinical facilities. This project was actually due to be funded next year, but because construction is ahead of schedule, moving this funding forward will allow us to complete the project a little bit ahead of schedule and keep everything moving. So both very positive stories.

That's what the funding out of this pot of monies will go towards: student loans on one side, which will help our young people to continue with their education, and completing the construction on the Edmonton clinic north at the U of A campus.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Alberta has only 14 per cent postsecondary student participation, yet what we see is a significant increase in loans available to students, which in turn puts them further into debt. Can you explain the rationale as to why the emphasis on loans, which lead to greater debt build-up, rather than an emphasis on bursaries and grants, which incent students to be involved in the system?

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Member. That's actually a very good question. Last year we did make the fundamental change of moving some of our bursary and grant money into our loans portfolio. This allows more students access to funding because a grant is given once and is gone – it becomes part of the investment – but a student loan is repayable, so it allows that we can expend significantly more funds in support of our students as loans rather than as bursaries or grants.

With the number of students entering the postsecondaries and needing support and the students coming to us and asking if we would increase loan limits so that they can live and make sure they can cover their costs during school, we have increased that, and that's driven up the cost of the loans that the students need. We'd all love to see our students carrying a little bit less debt. Don't forget that we do have programs in place. For students that are carrying debt that they can't carry, we have some loan remission programs available as well. Those programs will help as well.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. With regard to the percentage of increase in loans is there an equal percentage in terms of remissions or forgiveness of debt? Is there a balance there?

Mr. Weadick: Remissions are done based on need. There's a basic remission that happens. Anyone that graduates or completes their program can apply for remission of a portion of their debt.

But then there's also remission for needy cases, where people show where they're working, their cost of living, that they simply can't make their loan payments, and then we work with them for further managing of that debt so that they can survive. We have a number of different programs to provide for remission and make sure that students are not overburdened in this program.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Another concern I have is, as you mentioned, the cost-of-living effect on students. A big factor is housing. Can we expect any time soon – I didn't see it reflected in this budget – a greater emphasis on providing university on-campus housing? Eastern universities are usually in the 21 per cent. I realize that in Calgary there has been an increase in housing. I think we'll be up to 13 per cent. At U of A it's approximately 11 per cent, with some small increases, but we're nowhere near the affordable housing that we see in eastern universities.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you very much. We are seeing some increased investment in housing. In fact, through the Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs we've seen money invested through our municipalities into a number of housing projects on campuses. We're also seeing campuses investing in projects, P3s, to help develop student housing, but a lot of the communities have rallied as well. You'll see suites being made available within the cities where our colleges and universities and polytechnics are that allow students the opportunity for housing off campus as well.

Ideally, you'd like to have enough on campus for all of your first-year students so that students coming in would have that opportunity at least in their first year to have housing. That's generally why we look at that number of 20 to 25 per cent as being a really good point. Most of our schools haven't got there yet, but we continue to work with them to try to develop a program so that we can get our housing closer to that number.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I was very appreciative of your presentation at Bow Valley College. I see that both Bow Valley and SAIT on their individual campuses have had increases in student seats. The University of Calgary did not have that same increase. They did take over the 8th and 8th clinic. Again, appreciated space, but the whole idea of Campus Alberta and then the idea of an urban campus seems to have been somewhat put on hold. I don't see reflected in this supplementary budget any kind of attempt to bring more students downtown into sort of centralized locations where LRT is available. Again, it's a cost-cutting concern as well as the transferability. As you noted, courses from Lethbridge are being offered now at Bow Valley. It's a convenience thing as well.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. Excellent question. We are very cognizant of the need for housing in the urban areas, and the major project under construction right now is phase 2 of Bow Valley College, which is a $200 million construction project in the heart of downtown, where the old courthouse was in Calgary. This project will allow more students to access programming in the heart of the city in Calgary. It will also allow combined degree granting, with Athabasca, the University of Lethbridge, Olds College, and Bow Valley working together so that young people may be taking U of L courses in a Bow Valley College laboratory and those kinds of co-operative, collaborative things, which will allow students availability to the centre of the city, where LRT can get, to be able to take studies there. We believe in that as well, and that's why the redevelopment of many of your campuses in this area.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. In the original urban campus concept the idea was to bring students from the university, from SAIT. There was the potential of a shared facility, a shared cafeteria with ACAD. There was also discussion of dormitories. Is any type of student housing project part of that $200 million, or is it strictly seats without accommodations?

Mr. Weadick: That particular project is seats, classroom facilities for the college at this time.

The Deputy Chair: Any other questions for the Minister of Advanced Ed and Technology? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. I was curious when I asked my initial question regarding the in-year operating expense limits that the Fiscal Responsibility Act certainly directs that 1 per cent of total budgeted ministry operating expenses are not to be exceeded. So the student loan portion of this request or this estimate is not included in an operating expense, correct?

Mr. Weadick: It's nonbudgeted.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Now, when you have this request for – and I'm looking at the third-quarter update, where it's necessary to have a $102 million increase, including $75 million for student loans. Of course, the $27 million is to accelerate funding for the Edmonton clinic north. I thought the money originally for the Edmonton clinic north was reprofiled from somewhere else, and I should have noted this, I suppose. But when you look at the $75 million for student loans, how does that request compare with what you're planning for the 2011-12 year and for the following two years?

Mr. Weadick: I believe that item will be for debate when we talk about the overall budget. But for this year, we never turn students away that come and apply for loans, so it's very hard to budget. You try to estimate the number of students. Approximately 30 per cent of our students will get loans, so we budget initially, but if more students take access to the loans, then we come back to supplementary supply. Most years there's a supplementary supply involved in the student loan portfolio to ensure that all of the students that have applied during the year can access that funding.

Mr. Hehr: Just to follow up that question, is any student who is selected for a postsecondary opportunity at one of our institutions here in Alberta guaranteed a loan? Could you just clarify that point for me?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you very much. There is a process of application. You have to meet certain criteria, but any student that meets those criteria will get their loan. We don't turn anyone away once they've met the criteria for a student loan.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. To the same minister?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. Now, could you please tell me, hon. minister, when we top this up – and we say that with sincerity – the $75 million for student loans, what will that bring the total to for this forecast year? Will it be $260 million in total that will be accessible for those who are requesting a loan?

Mr. Weadick: The actual new number is $53.9 million in supplementary supply for student loans for this year to bring the total to that.

Mr. MacDonald: To clarify, that's for this year ending March 31?

Mr. Weadick: That's correct.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to the same minister.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. You know where I stand on loans, but there's an inequality in terms of accessing loans. Is there any plan to not take into account a university student's parents' economic well-being when determining a loan? When a student goes off to university, that's the potential start of their independent life, but tying it back to their parents is rather unfair, especially if the students are estranged or are trying to make that break. I'm just wondering if there's any plan to change that policy to be fair to all students as opposed to looking at their parents' bank accounts.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. At this point the policy stands with respect to how we gauge a student's need, and parental support is still a portion of that. I know that not all people would support that. I think we'll probably debate that more with the business plan; however, that is one of the considerations that we use when we go forward. It is part of our deciding how loans are given, and at this point we're not looking at changing that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to the same minister.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my understanding that right now in Alberta we have the fewest number of postsecondary people in the system, at 14 per cent. I'm also of the opinion that we have the fewest people applying for or then getting student loans. If that is correct, I'm just wondering: have you looked at the student loan guidelines, where there are things we could maybe do to increase the eligibility of people who receive these loans, to get more students going? Like the car requirement – anyone who has a car, I'm of the understanding, can't get a loan – the limits for part-time jobs and full-time studies: is there any way of removing those restrictions to allow for more people to get into the system, to allow for more loans so that we can have more people go to school?

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, hon. member. You know, those are all excellent suggestions. I think that together our goal is to try to get as many young people into the system as possible. You're right. One of those can be: how affordable is it? We base all of our decisions on transferability. Can a student easily move through the system from facility to facility? Is it affordable? And that's not just, "Is a loan available?" because only 30 per cent of our students take out loans, but: "Are there grants and bursaries? Are there scholarships?" What are our tuition fees and that as well across the system? Can we try to find a system that at least provides affordability to the young people that are trying to access it? Very good points that there may be things that we could look at over time in how we provide support to students that could bring more of our low-income students into the system.

Mr. Hehr: While I have you, is every university space virtually filled up here in Alberta?

Mr. Weadick: You know, we've been very fortunate that many, many of our institutions are at their capacity this year. Some institutions, in fact, took in more students than they had capacity for to try to provide as much education as possible, but still some programs remain unfilled for specific types of programming.

In some of our trades we require more people within the trades, but part of the challenge there can be having the journeymen that can provide the support, the companies that will hire those tradespeople. A recent change to allow in many fields one journeyman to mentor two apprentices may go a long way to alleviating some of that pressure. Really, there's the education portion, but there's also the other portions within the community like employment in the trades and journeymen to mentor the young apprentices that are really required as well to make the picture whole.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I understand much of this is policy decisions: if you open up greater amounts in university, fewer go to SAIT or vice versa. But it seems to me that there has to be some recognition in future budgeting, even whether any money was committed in this sup supply, to increasing overall postsecondary rates in this province. Do you have a mandate to do so, being a new minister?

Mr. Weadick: Yes. That is one of our primary goals: to increase high school completion at all levels, especially in our First Nations areas, to then allow those young people that have completed to move into postsecondary in a variety of areas. So, yes, expanding postsecondary; we've continued to increase postsecondary.

Over the past six years we increased funding by 42 per cent to all of our postsecondary institutions to create extra capacity in the province as we were growing and expanding our workforce. The last year or two of very tough budgeting has put a bit of restraint in there, which was absolutely required, but we're starting to see pressure again for workers, for workforce people to come in and start to provide employment, so we're going to have to continue to develop those spaces and train the much-needed workforce that we have.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. With regard to housing affordability for students I talked about on campus because then it cuts down on transportation and so on. With the subsidies for low-income individuals the idea is that they should not be spending more than 30 per cent of their income on a roof. Is there any such consideration for students in terms of looking at their T4 slips for the year previous and so on in terms of deciding on potential rent subsidies for students so that they can afford to go to school?

Mr. Weadick: I believe that any application for subsistence allowance would be through the Department of Employment and Immigration, and there are some subsistence allowances available. Also, through some of the housing organizations there may be housing available for subsidy to some students but not through Advanced Education.

The Deputy Chair: Any other questions for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I've been thinking about the response you have provided to us regarding the Edmonton clinic north, and I have this question, if you don't mind, please: why not integrate the payments for the Edmonton clinic north into the 2011-12 allocation for postsecondary infrastructure rather than requesting it through a supplementary amount as we are doing this evening?

Mr. Weadick: Actually, we have a small portion of the funding still available through our Advanced Education and Technology budget this year, so we've applied that to this amount and then asked for supplementary supply to complete the project.

The Deputy Chair: Any other questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

8:00

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. How much was that amount that was reprofiled?

Mr. Weadick: The requirement for next year would have been $32.5 million. We're requesting $24.4 million, and the balance has been taken out of this year's.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other questions for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology?

Children and Youth Services

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. When I first heard the budget pronounced and then I look at sup supplies, it seems to me that we're almost back to 2009 in terms of what was cut out last year. We've sort of put it back after a fashion in sup supply, but I'm very concerned. For example, this ministry cut nearly $27 million from child intervention with the original budget. Now it needs an increase of $40 million just to make it through to the end of the year. My feeling is that with overly deep cuts one year and then compensating the following year, there's a lag time of a year when children aren't getting the services they need in a sustainable fashion. I don't understand this sort of Peter-Paul approach, particularly with regard to child intervention.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chair. That's actually a very good question. I thought you'd be very pleased when you saw the estimates for child intervention. You're correct. There was a $27 million reduction in the previous budget, and then throughout the year that has been replaced and more, which is good news. It is due to caseload increase. It's due to volume. It's due to the priority that the government has put in this ministry on child intervention services. I think your question was: have we decreased services in any way throughout the year? The answer is no. In fact, we are increasing services and increasing them significantly because this is significant dollars. It's good news.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. You're not going to hear me ever criticize the ministry for increasing funding, especially for child intervention services, but the point I'm making is that we need sustainable funding, and that funding should not be subject to subtraction. It should reflect the growth. We're very aware, for example, of First Nations. We know that, unfortunately, almost 70 per cent of child intervention is going to involve First Nations. It's costly in terms of money, and it's costly in terms of emotion and the separation of moving a child from the north to the south. Can you give me a sense of how many or maybe a percentage increase in the number of caseworkers to reduce the ever-growing caseloads?

Mrs. Fritz: I can't give you an exact percentage of the number of caseworkers that have increased. I know that our front-line workers have not been – the hiring has not been stopped in any way. There's been no freeze on hiring of front-line workers, and you know that from previous questions that we've had in the Assembly in that regard. But I can tell you that this was very carefully thought out, that the increase that you see from the $27 million to the $40 million, the $13 million, was due to what we know from experience and research, what our caseload increase is and what our volume increase is overall.

We projected a significant increase in intakes, and that was by 6 per cent over the 12-month period, and we're also seeing an increase in permanency for our children, the permanency programming, which is good, and that's about 12 per cent. So the monthly average: there are about 3,200 children that receive our supports for permanency, and that's through our child and family service authorities and through our delegated First Nations agencies, which I know you have a keen interest in.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. A trend I've noticed over the last number of years is a greater amount of contracting out. Now, I understand, if we're just talking from a fiscal point of view, that the farther along the line of the contracting out of a service, the less expensive it is, but I'm wondering if that's fair to children. Is it fair, for example, that a social worker out of university, working directly under the umbrella of the government, receives $65,000 for the services that they provide whereas a person on a contracted-out basis, same education and same experience, has a $35,000 increase? In terms of fairness to the workforce and the quality of service provided to children based on caseload, is this an acceptable way to do our accounting?

Mrs. Fritz: The child and family services authority does have, as I indicated to you, front-line workers with our caseworkers and our caregivers overall, and they work closely with our agencies. Yes, there are contracts through the child and family services authorities with the agencies, but they work hand in hand. This increase overall really is about supporting as they go back to the increase in caseload and the volume increase and to create greater permanency for our children that are in care. So that means, then, that we find permanent homes for children by committing this financial support and other services to private guardians and adoptive parents after they assume guardianship. But it works hand in hand, contracting out and the permanent staff through the CFSAs.

Mr. Chase: In terms of costs has there been an analysis done in terms of preparing the supplementary budget as to how much it costs to keep a child within their home with a little extra support for the parents, possibly some food subsidies and so on, as opposed to the costs of legal intervention, of foster care provision, the whole process of taking a child out of a circumstance that with a little bit more support could possibly retain them? Have there been any studies or algorithms or looking at what it costs to keep a child in a secure home versus taking them out even on a temporary basis with the hope of returning them?

Mrs. Fritz: I can say to you, through the chair, that we have had 12,269 children and youth that were receiving our child intervention services between April to December of 2010, and 7,129 were aboriginal; 2,500 of those children and youth received family enhancement services, and 37 per cent were aboriginal.

The reason why I want you to be clear about those numbers is related to your question. Every child is unique, and every need they have – it just relates totally to that child. I can tell you that with all the different cases that I have seen, whether we provide respite care to assist the parents, whether it's training, you know, education and whatnot to assist the child, whether it's the cost of recreation, the overall cost of living: every single one is a unique cost. Do we have a defined average, that we're only going to fund to that average? The answer is no. It's based on what we know overall in the budget, what the demand is.

An area that I know you're interested in is the increase in autism, for example, family supports for the children with disabilities area as well. You saw that increase here, and that, too, is all because of the unique needs of the child.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I thoroughly understand what's in the "best interest of the child," and I realize that every child is unique, and we have to develop programs that recognize their uniqueness. Having been a teacher for 34 years, I know that the composition of your class, like the composition of a caseload, can make a great difference to the expectations. But when these children are in crisis, is there at least a potential upper limit for what is considered a manageable caseload so that a person is able to actually work towards, if at all possible, reintegrating the child with their family? Have you set maximums for caseloads?

Mrs. Fritz: Each child and family services authority in their own local regions, their jurisdictions, know the needs of the children in the area, and they also know the capacity for the worker. Depending on who that family and that child or those children within that home are with, as the worker you would look at what is needed for intense supports for various children and their critical needs. Some are very medically fragile children, and they have very, very high needs. That means that for the caseworker, too, they may be only able to handle five cases.

Other areas may be families that are siblings that are together, that are a family that are able to participate overall in the community as a whole without, you know, very many needs at all medically, for example. When I talk about medically fragile, some are very medically fragile; some may not have those needs. That caseworker may be able to handle 15 cases. Some may be able to handle 20.

It's just entirely up to what the volume is, based on, as you said, the complexities of the cases and the experience of the worker. There are many factors. It's very complex in how that is put in place. It's not based on just a formula.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I realize that formulaic approaches to human beings are not a particularly practical way of solving problems.

One of the circumstances that I've encountered is the number of court appearances that caseworkers have to undergo. Obviously, while they're in court – and court appearances can be delayed and rebooked and rescheduled and take up a tremendous amount of a caseworker's time – they're not being able to deal with the other cases. How does the system distribute that workload so that when, say, a caseworker is in court, the needs of the other children are being dealt with? Is there sort of a substitute circumstance within Children and Youth Services that avoids lengthy waits due to court procedures?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chair. In the offices that I've been to – and there have been many – the front-line workers gather in the mornings with their caseloads. They have a board, and they list on the board what that worker has for activity during the day, and they distribute that work. I would think that if court takes up a lot of time for a caseworker, if that's the case, if that's a truism, then another caseworker would assist with the handling of the calls that may come in regarding any family. But the worker does manage their own caseload, and if they need assistance, they have other people that can assist them, whether it's their supervisors or whomever, in the field along with them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Does the age of a child determine the potential reunification and speed? Like, if a mother is judged to be capable and she has left a disputing partner, or it could be a father who has left a mother where, you know, there was antagonism in the household – without going into names or anything, I've recently been involved in Calgary in a case of a two-month-old child. Part of the child's nourishment came from breastfeeding, but the child is also on formula, so it isn't an absolute necessity. When the child was taken away by Children and Youth Services, the mother was taken to the remand centre for a couple of unpaid LRT tickets. She's still working. She's in a new home, new situation, no longer with the individual that caused the ruckus.

I'm using this as an example. When there is that youth and the bonding with the mother is so crucial, is there a fast-tracking process to judge the safety of the home, the capability of the parent in order to provide the child with that bonding experience that's so important?

Mrs. Fritz: I think what's working really well – and this has been evolving over the last 24 months – is what we've talked about before for outcome-based cases. What's working well is an agency working with the worker, the child and family services authorities worker. The agency and the front-line worker for the CFSA now go together to the home. If they go to the home that you described and they have a young infant and the mother for whatever reason is going to be separated from that infant for a period of time, they work together to ensure that the infant visits with the mother and that bonding continues to occur. You know, I've heard of cases that you're describing as well. But they work together in order to do that. The real issue is to create permanency and to have that child back with the mother, the father, the family as quickly as possible with the right supports and resources in place so that they can keep them safe. That creates stability within the family.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. One of the holdups is the psychological assessment. In your opinion – and I know it's a bit of a wish list question – within the system, within Children and Youth Services, or through the contracting out of the psych assessments do you believe we have sufficient individuals conducting those assessments so they can be done early on, with a potential reunification if the assessment and other observational tools – the quality of the home, et cetera – turn out to be acceptable? I'm concerned. For example, with learning disabilities in the school system we have very few psychologists. Are you of the opinion that we're getting close to the right ratio of psychologists to families in terms of reunification?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security has asked the minister if he could also supplement the previous answer.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you. Yes.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you so much, Mr. Chair. I think I should point out in the interest of the integrity of the child welfare system in this province and the police and court system – the member in his previous question alleged an incident that he's aware of in which a breastfeeding mother of a two-month-old child was put in remand because of nonpayment of LRT tickets. I think the member should probably table some evidence of that in order that the minister or the Solicitor General can react to that. I wouldn't for a second want to leave Albertans with the impression that that was possible.

Mr. Chase: I'll be glad to supply that information to both ministries. The problem is that it did occur. As I say, I'll have to give you the details in private. I'm not making allegations; this is the reality of the case.

Mr. Oberle: Well, you made the allegation in the House; you should table the information in the House.

Mr. Chase: I'll be glad to do that. Thank you.

Back to the minister on the question with regard to psych assessments and the number of people performing them. Are we getting close to what you think is a manageable amount so that cases aren't delayed based on waiting for a psych assessment?

Mrs. Fritz: I'm just going to ask that you elaborate just a bit more on that, if you're talking about children with mental health needs or if you're talking about psych assessments. You'd like that for every child in care? If you could just elaborate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm sorry if I wasn't clear. At some point in the process of returning a child to their parent, the parent is going to undergo, at least the parents that I've dealt with, some kind of a psychological assessment as to their fitness as a parent or their potential for developing the skills necessary to provide for the needs of the child. As I mentioned, in education the number of psychologists is very limited. Therefore, for the kids who have learning disabilities the old-fashioned coding takes forever. It can take, you know, a year or longer.

Within Children and Youth Services do we have a greater number of available psychologists to do the assessments, which will then in turn provide a base of possibility for returning a child if the assessment of the parent is found to be acceptable?

Mrs. Fritz: I can say that I've not found that there's been any barrier in any way to assessments based on a lack of qualified professional psychologists.

The Deputy Chair: Any other questions for the Minister of Children and Youth Services? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: I have one, Mr. Chairman. I was looking at the budget estimates for the year 2010-11, and certainly my question would be reflected in those budget estimates. This ministry cut nearly $27 million from child intervention within the original budget. Now it needs an increase of $40 million just to make it through to the end of the year. May I ask in regard to the case files what basis was made at this time last year to remove the $27 million from that budget, that is obviously now needed and more?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you. As I indicated, the $27 million has been replaced through this $40 million, so that's, you know, back into the base. Also, the $13 million is into the base for a total of $40 million. That's due to an increase in caseload and an increase in volume and the great success that we're having for increased permanency for children. In child intervention what we work toward is creating permanent homes for children through adoption, through close, close kinship care. That's what this funding is being utilized for. The cases really are a lot more complex as well.

The Deputy Chair: Any further questions?

Culture and Community Spirit

The Deputy Chair: Any questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair, and thanks for allowing me this opportunity to ask a question in supplementary supply here. Just to give the minister a little bit of background, I'm going to ask a question on the grants process going to the Art Gallery of Alberta. I think in this budget you're requesting some 2 and a half plus million dollars for a capital grant to the Art Gallery of Alberta, which we understand to be a major item of capital expenditure presumably related to the new gallery.

This gallery opened in early 2010. According to the gallery's 2009 report the province contributed $15 million from the lottery fund and another $12 million from the major community facilities program prior to 2009, and the federal government contributed another $10 million from its building Canada fund in 2009. So we're wondering what this capital is for. Why was this expense not anticipated in the budget for the current fiscal year?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Blackett: Well, thank you. It's a very good question. The reason is that upon completion of the project the Art Gallery of Alberta realized that they had cost overruns in the amount of $3 million. The government of Alberta had put in $27 million. We didn't want to see them have to eat into their operating revenue to be able to pay off that deficit, so we asked for an increase of $2.6 million to offset that cost so that they will be able to move on and start on a solid financial footing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I was very pleased, as obviously was the Member for Edmonton-Centre, about the success of your trip down to Hollywood and some of the potential shoots. Good news. Then the bad news. It seems that the film studios, if I heard correctly, at Olympic Park are being at least temporarily put on hold. Am I wrong in that, or are the film studios going ahead?

Then maybe I can just ask about the completion date or the hoped-for completion date: all well?

Mr. Blackett: The film studio and the Alberta creative hub we have all intentions of trying to move forward. We haven't allocated money in the budget for it yet, but where we are in the process: we're looking at a facility at Canada Olympic Park, and it's going to be three levels of government plus a contribution from the private sector.

We advanced $1.2 million to Calgary Economic Development to finish their business case and hire a consortium called Lawson Projects, a combination of architects, engineering firm, and real estate expertise, to look at the feasibility of that site to make sure that the way we operate it is going to be the best possible way. We have the management team in place. Before we go and put money towards it, we want to make sure that we have everything in place and that we have indeed chosen the best site. We're at that point now where we're trying to get to the financial negotiations on the land, come up with a price that WinSport Canada has given to us that we can accept. We're in the process of negotiating it as we speak.

Mr. Chase: I guess it's asking you to do a crystal ball here. You've got a very good relationship with WinSport. We saw the three arenas coming up very quickly. A very successful project.

I'm guessing that with that established relationship it's potentially a done deal, especially if the feds come in and support your provincial efforts. Getting to the bid process, can you guess as to whether we're a year out or less in terms of knowing what cooperative circumstance you're facing?

Mr. Blackett: Well, that will be determined by Treasury Board when I go to them and apply for the monies for the provincial portion. I'm hoping to do that sooner rather than later. Once we get that confirmation, then we'll be able to tell you in a much more orderly fashion what the timeline will be. Construction of the sound stages, for instance, shouldn't take more than six months.

The Deputy Chair: Any other questions for the minister? Okay.

Employment and Immigration

Mr. Chase: One of the overall concerns I have, Mr. Minister, is with immigrants and support for immigrants, particularly the children of immigrants. I know it doesn't come up when we're dealing with temporary foreign workers. Immigrant children and immigrant workers took a double hit. Their children took a hit in Education with cutbacks to English as a second language programming. Then within the Ministry of Employment and Immigration there was a hit to language and ESL programming. Are you not concerned, with the provincial nominee program and the successes that we've had there, that if you cut funding for language programming, that's going to put unnecessary barriers in the way of full employment for immigrants in Alberta?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, I would love to answer that question, but I would first have to ask this hon. member to elaborate further on whether he's talking about the budget for this year for this ministry, that's tabled and hasn't yet been debated, or talking about the supplementary estimates that we are discussing today? I have a distinct feeling that he's trying to get me into a debate on this year's budget, and I'm not prepared to do that with him.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the contrary. We'll have that discussion in the 30 minutes provided to me during the budget.

Where I'm coming from, Mr. Minister, is that within the supplementary supply budget – $18,009,000 – I don't see anything directed towards retraining, language programs, literacy, toss in Alberta Works if you want to extend it beyond strictly the immigrant circumstance, and also the idea of upgrading. You know the joke about if you're going to get sick, the best place to be sick is in a cab. I'm concerned that language, upgrading, and retraining aspects are missing in the sup supply. Possibly you can direct me to where they are, but I don't see them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the last round of budgeting last year this ministry and this department did some very careful and responsible estimating on what will be required to provide Albertans with the services and programs that they require. We have done so in those particular categories. That's why we have not needed any supplemental funding to operate and provide the services during the fiscal year up until the budget of this year.

8:30

Supplemental estimates are only for areas where additional expenses have been incurred that were not foreseeable and could not have been predicted by this department in any way possible. So, no, we are not asking right now for additional funding for provision of integration services, English as an additional language services, because all of those programs have been adequately estimated in the initial budget and have been and will continue to be delivered.

Mr. Chairman, where this ministry is asking for additional funding is in the areas that no one, frankly, could have predicted. All of the asks that you see before you today are as a result of unanticipated caseload growth, mostly in areas of low-income assistance for our clients.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm very sincere in asking these questions. I realize that budgets aren't prepared overnight. Obviously, there was a fair amount of discussion, I think, as you've mentioned and other members have mentioned, about the preparation of the budget in general. But then three days later – and I can't imagine that the supplementary budget occurred just in a three-day process. Obviously, you mentioned caseloads have increased. Is there not a little bit of a disconnect between having had a budget just brought down and then a very short time later realizing a series of deficiencies that need increased funding in the form of a supplementary budget? I understand, for example, come the fall, you know, changes in oil prices and so on, changes in employment trends and needs, where you'd ask for a change in your supplementary budget. It's the close proximity of the two processes that I would appreciate the explanation for.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, not for a moment do I doubt this member's sincerity. I'm sure he cares about the programs we deliver and that he understands the amount of work that goes into putting a budget together. But with all due respect, what I am doubting is the member's understanding of what it is that we are actually doing today.

Mr. Chairman, the estimates, the additional funding that I'm asking this House to provide this ministry with, is in addition to last year's budget. We have reached the third quarter of last year's budget, and we had unforeseen growth in caseloads, especially in income supports caseloads, which then translates also to medical services benefit cards and provision of additional services, which basically means that this ministry has run out of money in last year's budget. In order to fulfil our obligation to our clients and provide them with benefits up until the end of this budget year, we require these additional funds to be able to do so.

The budget that our minister of finance and President of the Treasury Board just tabled three or four days ago is for next year, and we're not asking for any additional money to next year's budget. If we ever will, that will be probably around the third quarter of that budget, which is exactly a year from now. So I hope we have a clear understanding that the additional funding I'm asking for is for last year's budget, not this year's budget.

That now confirms that my initial supposition was correct, that this member is talking totally about the wrong budget. So put away your 2010-11 budget book, pull out your 2011-12, and then we can talk apples and apples.

Mr. Chase: I appreciate that explanation. You are right; I was confused about the catch-up nature of the budget. I don't know whether it's possible, however, when you're preparing a budget, to look back over the year and the needs and have a look at population, take a look at inflation, and potentially come closer in the preparation of budgets so that the requirement – I realize that $18 million is not a significant amount of sort of carry-over.

Also, a question I would ask with regard to specifically the caseloads. I asked the question of the Minister of Children and Youth Services. With workers' compensation there are going to be individuals with more difficult cases, more difficult interpretations as to their right to receive compensation, but will the supplemental budget increase that you've provided to get us through the 2010-2011 year provide for workers' needs in terms of managing the caseloads? The reason I ask this, hon. minister, is that we've seen circumstances where individuals are bonused for reducing caseloads but not always and not obviously recognizing the needs of the injured worker. So the question: is it sufficient? Is the caseload reasonable?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, this member is putting me in a very difficult position because I'm trying to be as kind and respectful as I possibly can be, but he's making it very difficult because of his questions. He might as well be asking me about the Edmonton Oilers and the trades that they did last year because his questions are as relevant to what we're doing today as the recent trades between the Oilers and whoever else they traded with.

The Workers' Compensation Board, Mr. Chairman, is not in last year's budget, it is not in this year's budget, and it will not be in next year's budget. Workers' Compensation Board is a self-financed insurance system paid for by the employers of this province. They assess premiums against employers based on their expenditures and projected risk. Taxpayers are not involved in the system at all. It doesn't come before this House. It is not the purview of our accounting.

When I'm talking, hon. member, about caseloads, I'm actually talking about caseloads that have to do with our budget that we are reviewing, last year's budget. Maybe I'll put it in a colloquial term. It's a term we don't use anymore, but maybe it'll help him to understand. Welfare is what we're talking about, where it is virtually impossible to very accurately predict what the caseload will be because under current legislation – and so it should be – any person who presents himself or herself in our office in need and who meets our eligibility criteria is entitled to receive some form of financial assistance. Because of the fact that we were still on the tail end of a recession, our caseload continued to grow. It plateaued probably about six months ago and now finally started to decrease. That is why additional funding was required to provide these families, needy families, with much-needed social assistance. That also translates, then, to a medical services card and dental work and whatever it is that they happen to be entitled to. So this is what we're talking about.

Let me get this straight, Mr. Chairman, for the benefit, perhaps, of that member. We are discussing last year's budget following the third quarter, not this year's budget, and we're discussing matters only contained in last year's budget and not anything outside of that that is not the purview of this House.

Mr. Chase: And I appreciate that. Basically, I agree with you that Alberta Works is a form of welfare. It helps individuals to retrain. It provides them with subsidies for living. It provides them with not a wage, necessarily, that they can operate on, but it does provide help. Now, my understanding – and I know you'll correct me if I'm wrong – is that the money for Alberta Works has basically either been frozen or levelled off, and I don't see it helping people out in the tail part of the last quarter that you're referencing. Are you concerned going forward or just getting through our last quarter that there is going to be sufficient funding in Alberta Works to keep people retrained, living in an affordable accommodation? Help me here if you can, please.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, that's a tall order, but I'll do my best. Again, when a minister approaches this House in the third quarter asking for additional supplemental funding for the ministry for the last quarter, it is not to say that all of a sudden in the last quarter with some additional money there will be some catch-up work done. This ministry's and this government's obligation to Albertans in need is ongoing and consistent based on eligibility criteria.

At the beginning of every budget that the minister tables for the next budgetary year based on best available information, we estimate what our caseload will be, how many thousands of Albertans will be relying on various forms of social assistance. We then quantify that into dollars, and with that number we go to the Treasury Board, and we ask them to put that number into next year's budget.

Now, if next year we find out that, for example, fewer Albertans decided to turn up in our offices and ask for additional dollars, if there are surplus dollars, they go back to the Treasury. If the opposite takes place, as happened last year – additional individuals continued to show up – we run into a third quarter basically running our account dry. So we show up today before this House, and we ask for additional dollars to basically allow us to provide ongoing, steady services to Albertans who happen to be on our caseload right now. Then as of March 31 the new budget will kick in, and we'll carry on providing the very same services.

So there is no up and down in the provision of services. There is no influx of services, because we just have received additional dollars. The eligibility is basically the same. We just need to extend the dollars to be able to cover the last three months of the year to get us to the new budget, which then will provide us with ongoing funding.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm aware that the computer program caused a large glitch in terms of getting the money to the people that needed it. I'm not talking about that part of it.

What I did ask – and possibly you didn't hear my question – was that we saw a growing trend in the fall of people needing to access Alberta Works funding. In the budget declaration there was a rather rosy picture of 40,000 new jobs for Albertans, which would suggest that people were finding work and weren't necessarily going back to school for retraining. Is this why only $18 million was asked for, because the projections that your department is making along with the Treasury suggest we're going to be out of this recession faster than we were looking at? I mean, how much is based on the reality of the increased fall caseload continuing on into the spring as opposed to everybody is going to find work faster rather than later?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I think I already answered this question. Mr. Chairman, I have to remind this member that today is February 28. The new budget kicks in April 1. This ministry has not stopped providing services because we ran into our third quarter and there was no more money, nor will this ministry start providing more lucrative services to anyone if and when this committee approves supplemental funding.

Mr. Chairman, there is a very consistent set of eligibility criteria for any and all Albertans that come to our office. If they meet that criteria, they receive the benefits irrespective of what the situation is. When there are more Albertans qualifying for benefits, that puts the minister at the end of third quarter in a position to come and ask for additional dollars so that all of those benefits are funded. You will not find any difference in provision of services. As a matter of fact, you know, there is only one month left. How and why would anybody anticipate that the levels of programs would suddenly change?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have one question for the hon. minister. I'm looking at the $53 million request for income supports due to higher caseloads in the 2010-11 budget estimates. I see where the amount that we were to budget for people on income supports, people expected to work or working, was reduced from $254 million forecast for 2009-10 down to $230 million. Now the minister is before the House tonight looking for that money to be put back into the budget, essentially. You're looking for – I've just got to find it here – yes, $30.2 million. The reference, element 2.5.2.

That indicates to me that that original budget, the cut in that budget, was inaccurate and inappropriate. I would ask the minister to explain the rationale for why this budget was initially reduced from $254 million to $230 million, and now, of course, we're essentially asking for that amount of money back. How was that decision made?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, the decision was made in a very predictable way. The member was a part of that decision-making process because last year this minister appeared before the estimates committee and I walked the opposition and all members interested in attending that committee line by line on how it is that we built last year's budget. The fact of the matter, Mr. Chairman, is that the economic recovery was somewhat delayed relative to our expectation. Our caseload did not plateau and start decreasing on our Alberta Works files as we anticipated it would but actually grew further into the year and now just started to drop. That is the change in the numbers.

The fact of the matter is that we utilize the best information available in setting our budget. We look at economic conditions, we look at employment conditions, we predict how many individuals will be requiring our assistance, and we put the best available number forward. It is natural that there would be a variance because the economy and the rate of recovery for our economy was not very predictable. However, we are living up to our obligation to Albertans, and we will continue to provide them with adequate services.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I've been following with some interest the debate that has been going on here tonight. I heard some of the explanation given by the hon. minister that work does not stop in his ministry on February 28, when he comes into this thing. If people are in need, they receive services from his department, and they receive no greater service after this date than they did before and the like. If that's his explanation, why budget for your department? Why not just say that anyone who comes in for need – if that truly is what you say happens, why even budget for it? If people have a need for it – you know, are you just saying that's how you guys did it? Is this sup supply exercise merely an exercise in futility, or do your budgets mean something there? If we're out of money, we're going to be out of money.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, that is an unusual position to take from the opposite side. Number one, obviously every ministry has to budget an estimate of what their expenditures will be so that our minister of finance can do his work for the government of Alberta. But this member right now is suggesting to me that as of the third quarter, when this ministry ran out of money, we should have put up closed signs in all of our welfare offices, as you wish to call them, and said: please don't bother showing up in our office for the next three months; there will be no cheques or services issued.

That is not the position of this government, Mr. Chairman. We have a fiduciary duty to those who are in need, and we are committed to assisting them in any way possible on their road to recovery to full independence and self-sufficiency. So I certainly hope that this member is being sarcastic and he's not asking this ministry to basically withhold provision of any and all social services to Albertans for the last three months of this quarter.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to the same minister.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I realize this isn't 2 in the morning, but I'd like to see greater respect. The hon. minister in his previous life was a teacher, and I can't imagine that he spoke to his students in the same offhand, all-knowing attitude. I would appreciate respect being shown. Respect has to be earned. I understand that. But when we ask a question, even if you don't consider it to be important, I would appreciate that you do your best to answer that question.

When I asked about caseloads, I was in fact talking about two separate items. I was talking about the Alberta Works caseload, which you rightly refer to as a type of welfare program, which it is. I have no problem with that. But you also indicated that you saw a growing trend in the fall with increased caseloads, and therefore there is a requirement to get an increase in funding to see us through, even if it's the next month. I'm aware that on April 1 we have a new budget, which will hopefully be satisfactory until more is required in the fall, as you explained.

In terms of asking for this increased $18 million, is the $18 million just to get us through the month of March, and that's why you're not concerned about the growing cases from the fall increasing even further in the spring? If you could possibly answer that specific question, I would understand better what you're trying to point out to us.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, I think I have tried to answer these questions the best that I can. This member initially stood up and was asking me questions about the wrong budget. Then he stood up and was asking me questions about WCB. To extend that to an analogy of a teacher, you know, it's very analogous to him showing up in a physics class and handing in his essay on Shakespeare, because that's exactly, really, what happened.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that we are asking for a supplemental amount of $65,244,000 together with $31,794,000, made available from lower than budgeted spending in other programs. That is the whole amount. Yes, it is to carry us over from today until the new budget kicks in on April 1. Those are the dollars required to carry on with programs based on the very same amount of service and eligibility criteria. That's what it's really all about. It's a process that this member has been involved in for a number of years already. There is nothing new about it, and the line of questioning is really quite surprising.

Mr. Chase: Well, if nothing else, I provide surprises.

My next question has to do with the relationship of the Workers' Compensation Board to Employment and Immigration. In Public Accounts when we called for Employment and Immigration, there was no representative from the Workers' Compensation Board that showed, although my understanding is that it comes under the governance of Employment and Immigration. You mentioned that it's strictly a taxable program. It's based on employers covering injuries and individuals putting away funds and so on. My concern is how you can just simply absent yourself from the governance of workers' compensation. Specifically to workers' compensation, are you saying that as the Minister of Employment and Immigration you have nothing to do with the conduct, the governance of caseloads and support for injured workers in workers' compensation? Are they completely independent? You have no governance nor a fiduciary or administrative role in workers' compensation?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I am not saying anything about workers' compensation, Mr. Chairman, nor will I be saying anything about workers' compensation because this discussion is not about workers' compensation.

Mr. Chairman, with the indulgence of this House, let me tell you what it is that I'm asking for. I'm asking for supplemental estimates for program planning and delivery, $8,423,000; career development services, $11,190,000; basic skills and academic upgrading, $487,000. Under health benefits for the Alberta adult health benefit, $7,006,000; people expected to work or working receiving assistance, $4,706,000; people not expected to work, $7,675,000. Under income supports I'm asking for supplemental dollars for people expected to work or working receiving additional top-up benefits of $30,261,000; people not expected to work, $22,967,000; labour relations policy and legislation development, $127,000; employment standards, enforcement and regional services, $553,000; foreign qualification recognition to build our labour force, $1,253,000; and for a federal community development trust an additional $2,040,000.

All together on a balance sheet, Mr. Chairman, it adds up to $65,244,000. That is what I'm asking for, and that is what will be voted on at the end of this particular session.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Coming at it from a different angle, if I heard your amount correctly, you're saying that it's going to take $65 million to get us through this next month in terms of the requirements for the various programs. Twice you mentioned in your categories millions of dollars for people not expected to return to work, if I heard you correctly. Can you give me a sense of what individuals would fall into that category of not expected to return to work and if there isn't a relationship between workers' compensation and the not expected to return to work individuals that you're talking about?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, there is no relationship between workers' compensation and those not expected to work. Those are individuals who, unfortunately, have multiple barriers to employment. There could be illness. There could be unforeseeable life circumstances that happen to people from time to time. It could be lifestyle choices. It could be addictions. There could be a number of reasons why an individual at a given period of time, upon an assessment, is not expected to work right now but will be provided assistance, counselling, whatever is required, and one day will be expected to return to work.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Thank you for that explanation. It's the: one day they will be expected to return to work. My experience is that benefits get cut off as a way of forcing a person back to work potentially before they're ready to assume those responsibilities. How do you, within the program you just described, determine a person's ability to return to work and make sure that all the medical assessments, whether it's psychological or physical, have been thoroughly examined so that we're not putting that person or the workers around that person into a dangerous situation? If they're no longer capable of returning to work, how do we determine that date of readiness?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, it's a complex decision. It varies from person to person as circumstances are as individual as we are. The fact is that our offices, our labour market information centres – there are 59 of them throughout the province – meet with these clients frequently and provide them with support services. Some require forms of counselling. Some require some vocational retraining. Some may require simply building up their capacity to work; their lifestyle needs to turn around. We have a variety of programs provided either directly or indirectly through not-for-profit agencies and others. At the end of the day every single Albertan is encouraged to work to the maximum of their capacity.

Some individuals, unfortunately, may not be fully independent of some form of assistance for a long period of time or ever, but services are extended to them to the best of our ability until we find that they are able to earn a living for themselves. We have also restructured our benefits, where a person can actually receive our benefits but supplement them with income because that allows them a possibility of entering the workforce and, hopefully, one day becoming independent of social assistance.

The focus of the entire program is return to work. Any and all effort is exerted to assist that person to get back to or enter for a first time the world of employment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Hopefully, this falls within the purview because you were talking about those who can't return to work. To what extent have you cross-ministerial discussions or connections with, for example, a person being tracked to AISH where it's determined that due to injury or due to mental capacity or some circumstance they can no longer work? I also understand the difference between long-term disability that we as teachers were able to access and workers' compensation. If you could talk about your cross-ministry initiatives and if that's reflected in the budget.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, I clearly just listed what is included, and I did not mention AISH, so it wasn't. There is an ongoing relationship between this department and that of seniors and community development. If we have clients in the not-expected-to-work category and we find that their barriers are so complex and they're medical or involve mental health illness, those clients are assisted, actually, in filling out AISH applications. If the medical community supports the client, the client often will be transferred seamlessly from the benefits under this department to that of AISH.

Mr. Chase: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other questions?

Environment

The Deputy Chair: Any questions to the Minister of Environment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. Now, as I understand it, the supplementary amount of $1.6 million is requested under expense and equipment/inventory purchases together with $7.8 million made available from lower than budget spending in other programs, and this is to provide 9 and a half million dollars as part of the Bassano dam settlement with the Siksika First Nation. This amount represents $8.4 million in discontinuances and releases and a 2010-11 access payment of $1 million, and there are nonbudgetary disbursements for $12.8 million also requested for the Bassano dam settlement agreement with the Siksika First Nation.

What specific programs provided the $7.8 million from lower than budgeted spending? That would be my first question, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. minister.

My second one – I may as well get them on the record – is: why is the ministry requesting the supplementary amount of $12.8 million for prepayments of future year expenses? Or do I have that wrong? Why not budget for that in the necessary year?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The member is absolutely correct. The entire request that we have before the House this evening is to deal with the settlement with the Siksika Nation with respect to the Bassano dam. That settlement was, in fact, $22.32 million. It consists of $9.54 million for discontinuance of all litigation and release of the claims on the first annual access payment that the member actually referred to, plus $12.78 million to prepay annual access payments for the next 14 years.

Mr. Chairman, the reason that the $12.78 million is a nonbudgetary disbursement is because it will have to be incorporated into our budget over the next 12 years. If the member would look ahead, he'll see that we have actually budgeted $1.088 million next year to cover the payments for next year, and that same allocation will be in the subsequent years. That was part of the negotiated settlement that was arrived at. It was a settlement for a long-standing dispute over land and access to the Bassano dam on Siksika First Nation land, and that was the settlement that was agreed to.

As for the offsetting amount of $7.869 million, this is deferred funding of Ecotrust funds. In 2009 we entered into a number of clean energy partnerships aimed at improving a number of initiatives. Each of those initiatives had various milestones that had to be achieved before payments would accrue, and in some cases some of those projects, for various reasons, have not met those milestones, so the dollars that would be allocated to them will float through to them in future years. That's the reason for the deferral. In addition, three projects approved in 2010 have now been cancelled, so those funds will be then reallocated and made available in future years as well.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I realize that the money, almost $13 million, is very specific to the Bassano dam project. I thoroughly understand that. I'm just wondering, in your supplementary budgets and as an indicator of where we're potentially headed in terms of funding priorities, if there was any consideration of increasing either air or water monitoring, particularly in the oil sands area. This doesn't appear to be, at least from a supplementary point of view, a priority. Am I wrong? Can you give me hope that within your regular budget that funding is there, and we're not being reliant on industry to provide us with gradations of pollution?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Chairman, we're getting into a line of questioning very similar to the line of questioning that we had with the previous ministry. This is dealing with supplementary requisition for the past fiscal year. The member is asking questions that relate to my budget in the next fiscal year, and I look forward to having a deep and intense discussion at that time, but this is not the appropriate time to enter into that discussion.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, and I'll try to possibly phrase the question differently. The only environmental concern that is necessary to be dealt with for this next month, the month of March, is the paying off, basically, of a treaty or a land claims agreement. There aren't any other environmental concerns that require tide-over funding for this next month. Is that correct?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Chair, I'm very proud to say that the administration in my department has worked very diligently to ensure that we live within the allocated budget that was approved by this Assembly last year, and the current programs that we have in place will be adequately funded through until the end of March of this fiscal year, and then we will begin to use the allocation that, hopefully, this Legislature will see fit to approve for next year. So no further requests are asked for, and I'm proud to say no further requests are required at this time.

The Deputy Chair: Any other questions?

Infrastructure

The Deputy Chair: Any questions for the Minister of Infrastructure?

Mr. Chase: A common approach for both the Liberals and the Wildrose, although we seem to be at ideological odds, is the spreading out of the infrastructure dollars over, say, a three- to five-year period. I don't see any recognition. I know we're now only talking about the month of March, but does the Ministry of Infrastructure believe that it's prudent to push through at our expense the buildings as represented by this sup supply? I realize we're just talking about the last month, but I'm trying to look at it as a harbinger of either greater or lesser things to come.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I'm not exactly sure where you were going with that, right? But let me just say that this is probably one of the most unusual circumstances for supplementary supply, and that is because the funding for capital for infrastructure was in Alberta Health Services, okay? Infrastructure this past year has taken it over, so all I'm asking for is the $57.6 million that was there to come back into infrastructure so that I can continue to fund the same projects that Alberta Health Services was going to fund anyway. So it's not really asking for any additional funds but is what I would consider bookkeeping. Thank you.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. So we could look at it, basically, as a transfer of funds because of a transfer of authority?

Mr. Danyluk: Yes, very much so.

Mr. Chase: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other questions?

Justice

The Deputy Chair: The hon. President of the Treasury Board and Finance and Enterprise minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: As you know, providing safe and secure communities is a priority of this government, and the safe communities initiative certainly does that. In the fall of 2010 Health and Wellness informed the Treasury Board that it would lapse $12.7 million in its 2010-11 safe communities initiative budget. At the same time Treasury Board agreed to reallocate the funds to the safe communities budget in Justice to fully utilize the $148.5 million allocated across all ministries to support safe communities. At the request of the former Minister of Justice SafeCom in conjunction with partnering ministries identified priority projects important to supporting safe communities at work. A wide range of projects totalling $12.7 million were identified, including projects that support gang awareness, family violence, parenting, specialized courts, mentoring, research, and knowledge transfer.

Specific projects will be announced in the near future once the grant agreements with applicants have been finalized. The supplementary supply estimates for Justice in the amount of $9.5 million will allow these priority projects to proceed. The $9.5 million is comprised of the $12.7 million of one-time additional funding for safe communities, partially offset by the $3.2 million in surplus funds declared by the ministry in the third-quarter fiscal updates.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Hehr: So, again, this is just simply a transfer of funds within the ministry that were devoted to the safe communities initiative. I think that's what the hon. member said. I'm just wondering: will all these plans be used up? Will these programs be announced in this budgetary year within the next, say, month, before April 1?

Mr. Snelgrove: As soon as we're able to have contracts in place with the different providers that we're doing it with, then they will be announced. I could give you some examples without giving you the detailed names, but in all fairness they're in the middle of negotiating with the different providers.

Mr. Hehr: Fair enough. Those projects have been selected?

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes.

Mr. Hehr: Fair enough.

Mr. Chase: Again I'm trying to limit my question to the month of March, which, basically, is what we're talking about. I do not see – possibly you can tell me if specific funding is being directed towards legal aid. To me one of the ways of establishing a safe community is making sure that people are adequately represented when they find themselves before a judge or jury circumstance. Is any of that approximately 9 and a half million dollars directed towards legal aid?

Mr. Snelgrove: Hon. member, no, it is not.

The Deputy Chair: Any further questions?

Municipal Affairs

The Deputy Chair: This takes us to the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The request is for a supplementary estimate of nearly $191 million for the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. The majority of this request is for the 10 disaster recovery and municipal wildfire assistance programs that were established in the 2010-11 fiscal year. This money is to help Albertans recover from the devastating effects of unpredictable weather conditions and wildfires. In total, we implemented one municipal wildfire assistance program and nine disaster recovery programs. The remaining amount of the supplementary estimate I'm requesting is for costs associated with the municipal government board that are recovered from municipalities. As well, we were able to identify a million dollars in savings, which is being used to offset this supplementary estimate request. This request will help my ministry continue to ensure Albertans can build on the strength of their individual communities.

Thank you.

Mr. Chase: I realize disasters aren't predictable and that, basically, you're trying to provide insurance after a fashion and assurance to the individuals who have been affected. Will the amount that has been requested in supplemental supply to see the 2010-11 year to its conclusion see the people, for example, in Irvine, many of whom are living in trailers or with relatives – will that see sufficient seed money for them to do the reconstruction that's necessary? Part of the problem has been that it's been a separate agency that's been determining it and then passing along the information to the ministry as opposed to the ministry dealing directly with it. It appears like it's a significant amount of money, but will it put people back in their homes and give them some comfort with the winter basically half over?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The dollars that were approved should be sufficient to be able to cover the costs that are remaining for the southern Alberta disaster recovery program. There was $200 million that was approved under that particular program. Subsequently, that's been readjusted to about $160 million. The intent of the program is to bring people back to a situation that is as close as possible to where they were before the disaster struck.

What we're finding is that disasters can occur very, very rapidly, Mr. Chairman, but the recovery can take a long time. I want to indicate that even though we're using a private group to assess that, there are some strong advantages to implementing the program and to managing the program. There are some strong advantages for us to go that way rather than having staff full-time, always under our payroll, to be able to deal with it. They've got a contractual obligation with us to meet certain standards. Our role is to ensure that the group providing that particular service is meeting those standards, meeting the guidelines, and meeting the timeframes that are identified by contract.

The dollars have so far covered the majority of the individuals within the individual homeowners. Those are the priorities that we had given. The second set were to the aboriginal communities and those that experienced some damages there, then to our farm communities. The third was to our small businesses that got affected and, finally, to the municipalities that incurred some losses. So a very extensive program, probably one of the largest disaster programs that we've had in the province of Alberta; thereby, the need for the great amount of dollars that we have requested.

Mr. Chase: Does this significant sum of money include any form of arbitration in the sense that a person goes through a contracted agency and is not satisfied that their claim has been sufficiently recognized? Does that allow for any type of arbitration or supports for resolving the discrepancy between what a person believes they're owed and what the private contracted agency is giving them?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Chairman, that's an excellent question. There's no doubt that what individuals feel they're owed and what the program criteria sets out sometimes differ. We find that this particular program is meant to cover those parts that insurance will not cover and areas where insurance is not readily available or not, you know, financially available to particular individuals. It will not cover issues such as an individual having cancelled his insurance policy or reneging or not renewing his insurance policy. So there might still be voids.

The program allows for a review every time there's new information that comes to us. There's no doubt that there are a number of individuals where we've had a look at their individual files a number of times as more information comes to light, as they find out about more damages that were unseen before or undetermined. As they find those, they can always come back to us for a review. The process of review goes through the agency initially, and then it goes through our ministry, the Alberta Emergency Management Agency staff, and then, finally, if there are still some concerns or issues, they come to my particular desk for review as well. Because of the initial comments from that particular program we did make some changes to the program criteria to make sure that more people are qualified and that they qualify for more funding.

Having said that, we've dealt with about 98 per cent of the applications, and the majority of the applicants are quite satisfied. We still have a few percentages out there with some very tough files and some files that are quite complicated.

Mr. Hehr: Just regarding the $400,000 being requested for costs related to the new compensation assessment review boards, what are these costs that they would be incurring?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, those are costs that are incurred by the board for hearing appeals on assessments, and they can either hear residential assessment appeals or industrial, commercial types of appeals. With the changes that we've done within the boards themselves, the mandate was that the added costs were there.

Now, I need to reemphasize – and I think it's identified there – that those costs are passed back to municipalities, so it comes through our budget. It's an extra cost, but those are charged back to the individual municipalities involved.

Mr. Hehr: The compensation assessment review boards. Maybe you could help me with what, in fact, they're reviewing, just from that simple viewpoint.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The reviews are on the actual assessments for tax purposes. So a municipality will assess a particular property at a particular level, and then if there's an appeal and they can't resolve some of the decisions at the local municipal level, it goes to a further step, and that's this step.

Mr. Hehr: So the city and the taxpayer, whoever uses the service or whoever wins the case, will then pay for that hearing or service?

Mr. Goudreau: That's right. Those costs are charged back to the individual municipality that's dealing with that particular assessment.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. If you could break that approximately $200,000 ballpark into individual compensation, business compensation, and sort of public works, you know, replacing roads in municipalities that were heavily hit, kind of thing. Are you able to give that ballpark figure?

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I might remind the individual member that it is not $200,000 but $200 million that's involved.

Most of the claims are quite small in relation to the full program. We don't anticipate having to spend the full $200 million. Initially we're probably averaging $4,000 to $5,000. I don't have those exact figures in front of me, but I could get them if you choose to have them. But typically they're smaller, and often it's to offset those extra costs that are incurred, that insurance companies will not cover.

Individual applicants are smaller. Those numbers climbed considerably, and we've had a number with small businesses and with the farming community as high as, say, $300,000 per applicant. Then they jump quite dramatically when we deal with municipalities who've had to replace 15 or 20 bridges. The one in particular in Medicine Hat we advanced about $17 million towards some of their anticipated costs. Those bills are still coming in and will take a number of months to finalize.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. My last question has to do with: does any of this money account for sort of proactive flood – I mean, I guess you'd have fire suppression programs such as the selective logging. My concern is a little bit broader in the sense of allowing people to build on flood plains, for example, and then telling them that they are not insured, but the developer had been permitted to build on a flood plain. Is any of this money of sort of the educational or of the regulatory going forward to prevent disasters in the future?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Chairman, that's an excellent question. There has been a lot of work done in terms of mitigation towards future potential disasters. Our ministry through the Alberta Emergency Management Agency provides a lot of support in training and preparedness for disasters and trying to avoid or minimize disasters.

We're working with individual municipalities. I believe there are about 60 of them that are on river plains or areas where they're subject to periodic flooding. We're working with them in terms of trying to minimize damages and minimize the development along rivers and river valleys. Eventually municipalities are the ones that make those final land-use decisions, albeit we are trying to work with them to encourage development outside those particular areas.

We're also working with our federal government. For the members present here, once we reach a certain threshold, we qualify for some assistance that comes from the federal government to offset some of these particular costs. Those are usually one, two, or three years after the fact. Part of the federal government's support to us is a percentage that's used in mitigation. Now, with what's been happening up till now, mitigation is usually allocated on a per individual basis, and it might include something that might say: "Your electrical box is in the basement and always gets damaged every time it floods. We'll help you move it to the main floor. We'll help you pay for some of those extra costs that are involved."

We're working along with our federal counterparts – and there are territorial and provincial ministers – to get the federal government to accept mitigation. As an off-the-wall example, maybe rather than building a little dike around everybody's house, we build a dike around the community rather than individually. We're trying to convince the federal government to pool mitigation dollars to be able to do a good project in the individual communities. We anticipate that decision to come down fairly soon here.

The Deputy Chair: Any further questions?

Seniors and Community Supports

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I just want to hammer home the notion that we believe that long-term care units are superior to assisted living in terms of providing the medical assistance necessary. However, how many units does the $39 million increase to the affordable supportive living initiative provide for?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the member for his question, but long-term care spaces are not within my purview. Long-term care spaces are part of what Health and Wellness does. I do the designated assisted living.

The $39 million was part of the ASLI grant program that came from the capital bonds. I was granted the $50 million in my budget for ASLI, and then I had to grab the other $39 million from the capital bonds account. That's why you see it here today. At this point in time it was part of the total. In the total I had 13 projects assigned. The total number of spaces: I'd have to check that and provide you with that information.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The reason I ask is that, as the minister mentioned, the original budget was $50 million, and this increase is a 78 per cent increase. What special circumstances transpired that required such a large immediate injection of funding? With that in mind as the backdrop, what communities are receiving more supportive living units . . . [interjection]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you have the floor.

Mr. Chase: A 78 per cent increase. The question, then: what communities are the beneficiaries of more supportive living units because of this increase?

Mrs. Jablonski: If I could have the number for you, hon. member, the total number of units that the $89 million is supporting is 912. The communities that are benefiting from the 912 spaces are Calgary, Didsbury, Edmonton, High River, Lacombe, Red Deer, Spruce Grove, Stettler, Westlock, and Grande Prairie.

Mr. Chase: Great. Thank you.

For the $26 million increase to AISH, why is the cost of the health-related benefits increased by $21 million from the budget? Then I'll give you the second part. For the difference, the $5 million that is going towards financial benefits: is that simply from an increase in caseload or are recipients' benefits changing?

Mrs. Jablonski: The $5 million that goes towards the income benefits is definitely caseload increases the we didn't project. They were higher this year than in the past. Probably the recession has a lot to do with that and the fact that there are fewer jobs. I would also say to you that the reason that there was such an increase in the health benefits is because of the pharmaceutical programs and the increased cost of the programs themselves. Benefits remain the same. The average amount of the medical benefit to an AISH client is about $370 a month, but as the pharmaceuticals increase in price, the costs increase to us as well.

Mr. Hehr: Now, I guess, then, from your year budgeted number of how many people you thought were going to be on AISH, how many does this increase the total number of people on AISH in the province to at the end of the year?

Mrs. Jablonski: Right now the number of people that we have receiving AISH is 42,000. When I first became minister, I was saying 32,000, so you can see there is a significant increase in the number of people on AISH.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate that the costs of pharmaceuticals have gone up, and we've adjusted for that. That's a very merciful thing for us as a government to be doing. You've also indicated a significant increase in the number of AISH individuals. I realize that we're restricted by this being supplemental supply, but will that increase, at least on a temporary basis, tide us over for what seems to be a growing wave of individuals headed towards AISH requirements?

Mrs. Jablonski: The $26 million that we've asked for in these supplemental estimates will be part of the base of the AISH budget going into the future.

The Deputy Chair: Any further questions for the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports?

Service Alberta

The Deputy Chair: Any questions for the minister? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. There is a terrific amount of concern over security programs, and I know there are cross-ministry initiatives. For example, the housing minister is tracking individuals across the province requiring housing. We have the TALON project with the police. Then within your department in the 2009-10 annual report the minister announced that "a Chief Information Security Office was established to develop and implement a government-wide information security program." Now, in 2011, the ministry is asking for funds to create a corporate security office. Can the minister explain why she reported the establishment of the security office as accomplished in 2010 and is now asking for funds to create – is this the same office or added to that office, or is this a different office?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Happy to provide some clarity on this. The reason for the supplementary estimate is some of the things we've been working on with respect to the role of the chief information officer, which resides in Service Alberta, then working with the corporate security officer here and all the chief information officers across all the departments. That's one of the reasons why there was an increased ask for this. Also, again, working with the Auditor General and making sure we are enhancing the security of Albertans' information. That is certainly what we are doing with this supplementary ask.

The Deputy Chair: Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, do you wish to supplement that answer?

Mr. Denis: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to endeavour to correct the Member for Calgary-Varsity. He made some sort of assertion that my ministry was tracking everyone across this province. I just want to mention to this House through the chair that that is actually not the case. We do have an identification program that we work in conjunction with the hon. Minister of Service Alberta. This is pursuant to strict privacy guidelines. In fact, before we announced this program, we actually worked with the Privacy Commissioner, and we moved on . . . [interjection] Despite the chirping from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I will continue.

The identification program is just like a driver's licence or is simply an ID card that is used, and again very strict privacy concerns are respected. In fact, I just spoke with a gentleman from Portland, Oregon, this weekend who told me that, in fact, one of the biggest reasons that they've had a big success in reducing homeless numbers was because they had a similar identification program.

Plus, on this I just want to mention to this member that this identification program is on a voluntary basis. It's designed to help people get a leg up, start things like bank accounts. Twenty-three percent of homeless people actually work, so instead of going to a cheque cashing place, they can actually go and open up a bank account. These are things that any one of us takes for granted – identification, bank accounts, basic necessities – where we can help people get a leg up to becoming independent. It's not an issue about tracking people. In fact, we don't do that. There is no Big Brother here. It's about treating people as individuals and giving them some assistance where we can actually give them a leg up.

I can tell you that this identification program also shows that you do not necessarily need to spend a lot of money to make an impact in somebody's life. The costs are very minimal, and the benefits are very substantial.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Hopefully, the minister knows that I am not talking about or suggesting a Big Brother program. I've worked, and I've seen the minister and other members of this House. For example, the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill has participated in homeless outreach activities at which time identification cards were being processed. So I'm not worried about an invasion of privacy. I realize to help people you've got to have a sense of who it is you're helping. It's how that information is kept which is important to me.

Under technology services, including SuperNet, in the 2010-11 budget Service Alberta's budget was cut by 13 per cent, and its technology services budget was cut by 21 per cent. The department laid off over 400 employees. In November Deputy Minister Paul Pellis told the Public Accounts Committee: "We're providing at least an equivalent level of service at lower cost and with less resources . . . achieving efficiencies and getting a more standardized delivery of our services across government." And again: "Service level expectations have been fully met" and "ministries . . . are receiving a very good level of service, and we're doing it at a lower cost."

It is forecast that Service Alberta will overspend its budget in technology services by more than 30 per cent this fiscal year, will overspend its budget for network services by 152 per cent. The deputy minister reports delivering efficiencies and costs savings. The minister is reporting that funds have been taken from other programs to pay for technology services and is also requesting additional funding to support what appears to be massive overspending.

Can the minister explain the inconsistencies of laying off 400 individuals, magically being able to have the same efficiencies, and now increased supplemental supply? It has this robbing-Peter-to-pay-Paul as opposed to sustainable programming. I sit to be corrected.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to make it clear, the supplementary estimate has nothing to do with the 410 FTEs that were moved out last year. What has happened with the SuperNet final mile strategy and the whole technological world is that there's been a huge effort and a lot of work going on across departments, a lot of collaboration, a lot of good work working in that whole area.

With respect to some of the information and the foundational changes we've made across government, that is, indeed, where we've seen many savings, where government departments are looking at information, tracking it better, looking for duplication and standardization of services. That's absolutely critical. That relates, too, to the chief information officers in each of the departments, making sure that Albertans' information is tracked and kept secure. Finally, it's looking at how we monitor and how we track consumption. It's always the consumption of services that Albertans want, but it's also looking at the consumption of services across government departments, making sure that we are doing the right thing so we can serve Albertans better.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To a significant extent your ministry replaced what was previously known as restructuring and government efficiency. In other words, you've attempted to consolidate those services. You're indicating through both cross-ministerial initiatives and through the potential centralization of services and your ministry that this is the primary way of achieving the approved efficiencies. Did I paraphrase that correctly?

Mrs. Klimchuk: That's correct, but again just dealing with these supplementary estimates, just focusing on the foundational information technology, the SuperNet final mile strategy, and the Auditor General's recommendations, working with their good office and making sure the information that we have is secure. Lastly – you're right – it's the opportunity to partner with ministries to manage and monitor consumption of services.

This is what we needed for last year, but going forward for next year's budget, most certainly that will be part of the budget for next year.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. We're trying to improve our information record keeping. In health, for example, we've got electronic records that can be read throughout the province to increase efficiency of health delivery. We have the program that we've questioned, the TALON. We have the tracking of individual needs, I'll call it, within the homeless program. Does your department have oversight of all the sort of security and information assembling, gathering, and delivering processes, or is it through cross-ministerial advice to these ministries that these various programs are being developed?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With respect to your question FOIP and PIPA are mandated under Service Alberta. But it's important to note each department has its own FOIP officer that works with each minister in those areas. So the overarching support – I do not have anything to do with TALON, but I do have something to do with FOIP and PIPA, and that is, indeed, the protection of Albertans' information.

The Deputy Chair: Any other questions?

Sustainable Resource Development

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. What I see here is that the supplementary amount of $156,200,000 is requested to provide – and it's broken down – expense on firefighting, emergency spending for ground survey and control operations with regard to the mountain pine beetle infestation, concern about the budworm infestation, and approximately $13 million for the disposal of tax recovery land. Could we begin by explaining to me the $13,500,000 to provide for the disposal of tax recovery land? I'm not completely understanding what tax recovery land is. If you could explain that expenditure, please.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, quite simply, tax recovery land is a situation that happened mainly in southern Alberta. It probably would have been in the area of the mid- to late '30s, when a lot of farmland, particularly in southern Alberta, was left simply because people could not make a living on those pieces of real estate. What happened was that that real estate returned to the province of Alberta because the property taxes were not paid on the land. So we've been managing that land for that period of time, probably better than 60 years, a lot of it.

The situation, really, is that most of the land in question belongs to the municipalities. It was theirs at one point in time. The government ended up with it under this scheme of recovering the land because of unpaid taxes. So what we've done is that we've repatriated most of that land. About 80 per cent of it now has been returned to the municipalities on a nominal sum disposal, which means that each of the titles on those pieces of land is returned to the municipality for a dollar, but under our accounting rules we have to account for the value of the real estate. There's about 40 some-odd million dollars estimated that's left. We'd like to repatriate that over the next three or four years, and that's what the 13 and a half million dollars is for in this year's budget.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Thirty million dollars of emergency spending for continued ground survey and control operations to fight the mountain pine beetle infestation: does your ministry believe in selective logging and burning as methods of controlling infestation? Are they important tools? Can you explain, in terms of the $30 million, how much of that would go into, say, clear-cutting versus selective logging? You know where I'm coming from. I have this selective logging prejudice, and I'm just wondering if you can divide up that $30 million for me.

Mr. Knight: The issues here, Mr. Chairman, that we're talking about: when we talk about this business of clear-cut, the only time that that's really going to be effected by the program that we have to mitigate the damage from pine beetles is when we actually go in and work with our partners in the industry and look at their normal harvest plans. They adjust harvest plans into areas where, number one, there are either already beetle-killed or -damaged trees, and then we look at the next most possible host scenario. So we would move some of the logging program into areas where you would expect the beetles to move next to kind of eliminate that new home for them.

The $30 million: most of that would be spent in two other areas that we use with this mitigation program. One of them, of course, is the idea of selective single-tree and small-stand removal, so what we would do is get people onto the ground there to cut and slash and burn the infected trees. We've got about 600 people on the ground now working in Alberta with respect to that. The balance of that money, Mr. Chairman, would be allocated to going out and doing surveys with respect to where the beetles are now, how well they're doing over the winter. That gives us a pretty good idea of where they may, you know, erupt next spring and what we should look for with respect to harvest plans.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. And I believe the carpentry adage of measure twice, cut once applies, so being proactive in terms of mapping out the potential areas of future infestation is a very sensible approach.

Could you give a sense of how much of this $30 million supplemental that's set aside is being directed towards the Castle-Crown area, the mines area that you know and I know and I'm sure every member in this House knows from the number of letters we've received about the Beaver Mines area and concerns about how the preventative measures of potential clear-cutting are taking place? Is any of that $30 million directed towards that specific Beaver Mines project?

Mr. Knight: Could you just repeat the end of that one?

Mr. Chase: Sure. I'd be glad to. Is any of that $30 million directed towards pine beetle suppression and methodology in the Beaver Mines-Castle-Crown area? Is this taking up a significant amount or not?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the area in question has been to the largest degree managed quite successfully, and I'm going to suggest that there could be some residual effect from people that are down there doing survey work. It would be difficult for me to put a number on it, but as I said, there are about 600 people working across the province now with respect to the mitigation of beetles. They could be in the area, but I wouldn't be able to answer that question directly now.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. We talked about the tax recovery land, and we brought up the Dirty Thirties, basically, where people abandoned their land for a variety of reasons: a series of depressing years, bad harvests, wind erosion, et cetera. There was a tremendous concern. In that same time period, Mr. Minister, the area of the Castle-Crown, the area that we've proposed, the Andy Russell I'tai Sah Kòp, was part of Waterton national park, and for whatever reason, the federal government gave that land back to the province. Is any of the money that's been set aside here for at least studies about the potential of achieving that Andy Russell I'tai Sah Kòp Castle-Crown protection? Even if it's just for studies, I'd be appreciative of knowing that there was a consideration of the potential of creating that parkland.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, the money that we're going to use with respect to tax recovery is all pieces of real estate that are now in municipalities and under provincial control. There would be about – again, this is a number but it's close – 3,700 or 3,800 acres of real estate that are actually part of the old tax recovery lands that will not be repatriated to municipalities. They will be kept as public land because of their environmental and ecological value to the public of Alberta. Other than that, the money that we have earmarked is a writedown of real estate that will be transferred to municipalities.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. And I'm not trying to entrap you. I was just making a connection between the 1930s. What I was asking: is any of this $30 million that is going towards pine beetle infestation controls, studies, and so on, looking at the possibility of Sustainable Resource Development turning the land in the Castle-Crown area into a potential protected area? That's what I'm asking. I referenced the recovery land just because it's the same time period, 1930. We lost that land.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, what we have here is that we've got an issue. In 2006 and again in 2009 there were major influxes of mountain pine beetles from British Columbia, something that was very unusual in the province of Alberta. We've had more or less a natural cycle of mountain pine beetles in the province, and it has been about a once in a 25- or 30- or 40-year kind of cycle. We get a few. They last normally a winter or two or three, the populations deteriorate, and that's the end of it for a while. These influxes of huge, huge numbers, probably hundreds of millions of pine beetles that came over from British Columbia, created a circumstance for us in Alberta.

What we've done with any and all of this money – and now we're probably up in the 300-plus million dollars that we've invested for Albertans into the protection of our forests in Alberta. The whole program is, quite simply, Mr. Chairman, to support an industry in Alberta that probably generates something in the neighbourhood of 8 and a half billion dollars a year for the province. The idea of this is to mitigate the damage with respect to the mountain pine beetle. The whole program is geared towards the mitigation of damage from mountain pine beetles.

You know, what may or may not happen with pieces of real estate after the fact is not really part of these estimates and is certainly not part of the mountain pine beetle mitigation strategy that we have.

Mr. Chase: I'm not trying to put words into the member's mouth. I am trying to put initiatives into your consideration, though.

One of the areas that has previously been hit in a fairly devastating way by the pine beetles was the Waterton parks area. In the '70s a fairly significant devastation went through, but the government of that time did not try to mitigate the circumstance by clear-cutting the area, a significant amount of which was protected in Waterton national park. But in that same area in close proximity we've got the Beaver Mines, and we've got a number of people who are questioning the value of the timber versus the value of ongoing tourism activities in the area. We're getting a lot of mail on that. That's why I was asking if any of that $30 million had to do with studies about how best to protect the land, not just now from pine beetles but in the future in terms of the land-use framework and designating what activities would be permitted in this Castle-Crown, which I am referring to by, hopefully, what the new name will be, the Andy Russell I'tai Sah Kòp area.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, okay. This is going to be for the third time, I think, and maybe more than that; I'm not sure. But we'll do this one more time anyway.

We're talking about my supplementary estimates here, I presume. There's $30 million in there, which the member opposite has mentioned on a number of occasions. The $30 million is required because what happens with mountain pine beetles is that nobody that I am aware of actually really knows precisely how many of those particular pests are in the province of Alberta, exactly where they are, and where they might go next year. Only they know, but we don't know. So we actually don't know what amount of money to put in our annual budget in order to continue to mitigate the damage that's caused by this particular pest.

We ask for supplemental dollars, Mr. Chair, as we see this particular circumstance unfold, which is what we're seeing now. During the winter we send out people, we find and to the best of our ability destroy single stands and small stands of infected trees. We have another group of people on the ground that are actually out doing surveys with respect to where the beetles are, what their numbers are, what their likelihood of survival is, and where they may, you know, move next. So the $30 million is spent with respect to the mitigation of the issue that we have around the infestation of mountain pine beetles in Alberta.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate, as I've said before, the process of trying to scope out and plan into the future. Much appreciated.

I've asked, I guess, possibly twice what portion of that $30 million would be invested in the Castle-Crown area of southern Alberta? Right now I would suggest that's the most controversial area in the province.

Then my next question, which may be easier to answer, is: why is this government spending $13.5 million for the disposal of land? Is this the same land that it was recently announced was sold to municipalities for a dollar? I'm not sure why it cost $13 million to give it away for a dollar.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, if I may, you know, I have to tell you that I am in a wonderful spot right now, a very good spot. I'll tell you something. I have a tremendous amount of patience, and the reason that I know that is that my wife has told me I have never used any so far. So this is actually working for me; it really is.

I believe that we had an opportunity here – I don't know how long ago it was, but probably sometime within the last 20 minutes I have indicated what tax recovery land is and why we were required to have the money available in order for us to offset in our books the value of land. We're not buying anything. We're not buying a thing.

What we're doing is repatriating land to municipalities that was in municipal control at one point in time but reverted to the government because of nonpayment of taxes. Actually, for most of that land, Mr. Chairman, this was at a time when some of these regions were not actually registered or incorporated as municipalities, so they were improvement districts. There wasn't actually an entity for this real estate to go back to, so it reverted to the provincial government because we were in fact in control of the IDs. So we ended up with this real estate. In the meantime, what's happened with it is that we've leased it out as grazing leases. Some of it has just been left and kept as conservation areas and different things like that. There's been a program since 1963 or '64 to repatriate this real estate, and it's been going on since that time.

So, Mr. Chairman, what we have here is a situation where we want to continue and tidy up the repatriation of the remaining pieces of tax recovery land. We're not buying anything; we're just returning this land. For the Auditor General and the way our bookkeeping works we're required to account for the value of that real estate.

Mr. Chase: I appreciate your patience, and I appreciate your explanation. I'll try to come at it from a different way. We talked about the repatriation of the land. Supplemental supply required this year: $13.5 million. Do you anticipate through the repatriation process that this number will go down gradually from year to year to year as the municipalities take over a significant amount of the responsibility for the usage or leasing of this land?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, no. It doesn't necessarily go down and down and down. What's going to happen or what could happen – you know, if we had the capability in government to transfer all of this land next year, then of course this particular issue, this budget item, would go up. It depends on what pieces of real estate we're able to transfer and what value is assigned to them.

As I indicated earlier, over the next period of about three years, perhaps four years, all of the remaining pieces of real estate will be transferred, and at that point this budget number down the road in three or four years will be a big, fat zero. Nothing. It's on our books because we're moving the real estate and we have to account for it. We're not buying anything, and it doesn't have any kind of ratchet where it goes down over time.

The Deputy Chair: Any further questions?

Tourism, Parks and Recreation

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Chair, $500,000 for support of the ministry's information technology infrastructure, $1,200,000 to support Edmonton's 2017 Expo bid, and $2,581,000 for parks, including the replacement and repairs of park facilities and snow grooming. My questions: what changes in the ministry's information technology systems will be supported by the $500,000 supplementary appropriation? Why was this amount not budgeted for in the 2010-11 estimates? Is the need a result of an information technology failure, or are we enhancing the system? An explanation.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. The hon. member is correct. We did request in supplementary estimates an additional $500,000 for unplanned computer and IT infrastructure costs. As you know, our department has been moving under the GOA with Service Alberta, and those were the costs that it cost us to be in that system and to continue to operate. Those were unplanned at the time that we debated the budget, and that was the additional cost for us to come under that system.

Mr. Chase: Is it a reasonably safe assumption that that was primarily a one-off cost of moving into that ministry? Okay. Thank you. I note the affirmative head shaking, so I'll move to my next question.

Why is the government requesting supplementary funds for park maintenance and repair when facility spending was reduced in last year's budget? It's the Peter-Paul scenario: we take away, and then we give back, and blessed be.

Mrs. Ady: Basically, hon. member, you're right. There was a transfer going on there. We had a few things that came up this year that we took out of operations. They were fairly small items to keep the parks repaired in the area of safety. As well, we had some equipment that groomed trails that broke down and could not be repaired, so it was decided at that time that we needed to replace that equipment. These are very small items, so that's why that transfer was done, again within the parks budget: small, not larger than $5 million, but critical to the safety and protection in parks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I realize that the summer and fall utilization of parks is considerably larger than what takes place in the winter. In fact, a number of parks are actually closed. Have I just explained why there is no supplementary supply for, say, conservation officers or park maintenance? Is it just because this is sort of viewed as off-season and, therefore, not requiring the funding? Thank you. I appreciate that. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

I'd like to also thank the ministers. The procedure tonight was not to try and trick you or try and beat you down with incessant, sometimes you might think irrelevant, questions. It was to try and have an understanding of the funding. I do appreciate the ministers' patience, and I realize that at times it was tried, but it was appreciated. Thank you, ministers, for your willingness to provide answers, and thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any further questions for the ministers? None?

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 1, 2011

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of the Rockies, the denseness of our forests, the fertility of our farmland, the splendour of our rivers, the richness of our resources, the energy of our people. Then let us rededicate ourselves as wise stewards of such bounty on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 23 grade 6 students from H.A. Kostash school in Smoky Lake. They've come all the way down here from that little town about an hour and a half away to be a part of the School at the Leg. program. They're accompanied by their teacher, Chelsea Evans, and four parents: Mrs. Chizawsky, Miss Lewchuk, Mr. Tallio, and Mrs. Charlton. I met with these students this morning. They're certainly a bright, energetic group and full of great questions. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of the Legislature a group of 62 bright visitors from St. Albert, from J.J. Nearing elementary school. They are accompanied by Mrs. Christine Sowinski, Ms Barb Schoneville, Mr. Rob Kelly, Mr. Curt McDougall, and parent helpers Mrs. Irene Buck, Mrs. Lisa Burr, Mr. Todd Laycock. I had the opportunity to talk to each of them on the stairs of the rotunda and ask them questions about what we do here in this Legislature. I can tell you that they are very knowledgeable, very bright young students, and they are the future of our province. They are in both galleries, and I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group from the Yellowhead Tribal College. I don't see them in the members' gallery, so I'm presuming they're up here in the public. There they are. Right on. I'd like to introduce instructor Linda Anderson and a group of students who are here today. As a side note, the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake and I were just downstairs with them a moment ago taking a photograph in the rotunda. We look forward to seeing you soon. Thank you for rising. Please let's give them the traditional greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of 25 participants in the oil sands internship program. The oil sands internship program is a 24-month collaboration between Alberta Energy and Environment, and it provides a unique opportunity for young professionals to help contribute to the environmentally sustainable development of Alberta's oil sands resources. The program provides interns with the opportunity to rotate for 12 months each in both the Alberta Department of Energy and the Department of Environment, working alongside seasoned professionals. These young professionals are seated in our members' gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege today to rise in this Assembly and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a long-time friend of mine, Calgarian Bill McGregor. Bill has extensive experience working with K to 12 education systems, and he's the chairman of the board of directors for the Foundations for the Future Charter Academy, several locations, of course, being in my constituency of Calgary-Egmont. Bill is a strong proponent of school choice in Alberta. I would ask that every member please join in and give him the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour to introduce three extraordinary Albertans. Chris Mahoney has been with Enviro's Wilderness School Association for eleven years and is going on her third year as CEO. Kevin Blanchette is the chairman of the Enviro's board and managing partner of Evolve Capital in Calgary. Marty Hoornaert is an Enviro's board member, the VP of policy for Calgary-Lougheed, and a fine lawyer at Hoffman Dorchik in Calgary. I will be doing a member's statement on Enviro's today. In the meantime members might enjoy reading through the pamphlets on their desks that have been provided by Enviro's along with a pen. I would ask people who work miracles every day for Albertans – Chris, Kevin, and Marty – to rise. They're in the public gallery. Please accept the warm wishes of everyone in the Alberta Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the acting leader of the Alberta Party, Sue Huff. Sue graduated from the University of Alberta with a BA in drama and has worked for the past two decades in the arts. Sue has worked as an actor, writer, researcher, and director in theatre, film, radio, and television. More recently Sue served as a trustee at the Edmonton public school board. While on the board she was a strong advocate for transparency, accountability, and protecting vulnerable populations. Sue will be the acting leader of the Alberta Party until the end of May, when the party has concluded its leadership race. I look forward to continuing to work with her closely in my new political home. I would ask Sue to rise now – she's in the visitor's gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Irrigation Projects Water Sharing Agreement

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise today to recognize an admirable initiative taken on by the Alberta Irrigation Projects Association, which represents all of Alberta's irrigation districts. This association recently passed a declaration stating that in times of water shortages due to drought the districts assure that within their right to control, they will share water for human use and livestock sustenance.

In 2001, a year of severe drought, the district shared water from their licensed allocations with surrounding communities, industry, and other agricultural operations. The districts realized that in times of such water shortages, human needs come before the need to irrigate crops. The sharing arrangements with the many water users were made possible with the help of Alberta Environment and Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development. All participating licensees shared the burden of reduced water supplies and the benefits of the sharing agreement. All could access only 60 per cent of their licensed allocation.

This spirit of community co-operation among nearly all licensees was recognized with an award from the Irrigation Association, an international organization based in the United States. It is in this spirit of community co-operation that the Alberta Irrigation Projects Association, representing all irrigation districts of Alberta, passed their declaration.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the irrigation districts for formalizing their willingness to share their water licence allocation with communities and others to make water available for human use and for livestock in times of drought.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Physician and Family Support Program Funding

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the appropriate time this afternoon I will table correspondence I have received from five doctors who live in my constituency expressing deep concern over a proposal to cut funding for the physician and family support program.

Now, I understand that this is a bargaining tool that government and Alberta Health Services are using in their negotiations with the Alberta Medical Association towards a new master agreement. I understand the AMA is not only urging its members to undertake just this kind of letter-writing campaign but is even providing a link to the government website to help its members identify their MLA, and I know that this will probably work out in the end, as collective bargaining sessions usually do, after both sides are finished marking their territory, if you will, and actually get down to the business of reaching a new deal.

What I don't understand, Mr. Speaker, is why the government would choose to threaten to cut funding to this particular program. It cost $2.6 million last year. For that it assisted over 1,000 doctors and their families who sought the program's help for their own health-related issues, including addictions and mental health. By comparison if we had, oh, just left those docs to twist in the wind and burn out and quit, $2.6 million would have replaced maybe a dozen of them. Back in 2006 the estimated cost of replacing one physician was between $150,000 and $300,000.

Mr. Speaker, this province has a doctor shortage. One in four Calgarians doesn't have a family doc. I would think we'd want to hang onto the doctors we have and not drive more of them away. Every letter I will table today speaks to the stress that comes from being a doctor if for no other reason than that you tend to lose some of your patients every year to death and to the role the PFSP has played in keeping those doctors sane and healthy.

Mr. Speaker, I think I speak for most of my constituents and most Albertans when I say that when we need a doctor, we want to know that at that moment the doctor is in better shape than we are.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Enviros Wilderness School

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to acknowledge Enviro Wilderness School Association, which has been strengthening families and their communities in Calgary and area one child at a time for 34 years. In these trying times families experience all types of pressure. Many parents struggle to make ends meet, and children are sometimes left to their own devices. All too often the results are extremely undesirable.

The programs at Enviro offer support and hope to these children and their families as they deal with issues such as neglect, fetal alcohol spectrum disorders, substance abuse, and a myriad of other problems. Through experiential learning at Enviro children and youth build resilience while learning new life skills. The result is stronger young people who make better choices from that point forward. Enviro delivers three program stream services: child and youth, health, and justice. The dedicated and highly trained counsellors support kids and their families to cope with physical and emotional concerns, which offers seamless care and support.

This award-winning, cutting-edge organization is a leader in the human services sector, but it also partners with other support organizations to further strengthen the fabric of Albertan communities by therapeutically engaging the body, mind, and soul of each participant to become fully functioning, contributing members of their family and community.

The work at Enviro enhances and improves the outcomes for the young people who are supported by Albertans through the ministries of Children's Services, Justice, and Health.

Young people form the foundation of Alberta's future, and the excellent programs offered at Enviro ensure that the future will be a bright one for all kids regardless of what challenges they may face.

Mr. Speaker, a number of years ago, when I was honoured to serve as the chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, I took the opportunity to visit this fine facility, and I can assure you it is absolutely world class. I trust that all members of this Assembly will join me now in congratulating everyone at Enviro for working miracles every day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Wildrose Alliance Alternative Budget

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In football when a wide receiver hears footsteps behind him, he usually drops the ball. The knowledge of a potential impact from the oncoming opponent causes him to flinch and mishandle the ball thrown in his direction. On Friday the finance minister dropped a ball of his own, but it wasn't the footsteps of a rushing defensive back that he heard. No. It was the confident march of the Wildrose that caused him to fumble. In a frenzied huff he scrambled together a news conference attacking the Wildrose balanced budget alternative, which is a very sensible plan. The spectacle of a finance minister criticizing and responding to an opposition budget was quite something to see. In fact, it gave us pleasure to know that we got the government's attention.

Yesterday the government, like an opposition in waiting, asked their questions about our budget, wanting to know the details of how we would stretch out our capital plan from three to four years. We'd be happy to answer their questions, but despite repeated requests from the Wildrose bench this government still refuses to release its secret list of infrastructure projects. Mr. Speaker, Albertans need to see this list so we can start prioritizing between what the government wants and what Albertans' actual needs are. Right now that is a list that is being hidden by a government that claims to be open and transparent.

I don't know what the definitions of openness and transparency are to this government, but let me remind them from the Webster dictionary. Openness: exposed to a general view or knowledge existing; carried on without concealment. Transparency: the availability of complete information required on collective decision-making. Mr. Speaker, I suspect this is why the minister heard footsteps on Friday. These are values that the Wildrose support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Northern Saw-whet Owl Monitoring Program

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Adoption of animals and birds is becoming commonplace, and I was lucky to be allowed to adopt a very special owl, the saw-whet, which flies free and proud throughout the province. Weighing in at about two to four ounces, the saw-whet owl uses Lesser Slave Lake as a nesting ground. Organizations such as the Boreal Centre for Bird Conservation have been working hard to help Albertans get to know this tiny, tiny boreal forest resident. Through the northern saw-whet owl monitoring program researchers catch and band the owls, and Albertans then have the ability to adopt them as they so wish. This allows also for the monitoring of long-term population trends. They also record the owls' vital information such as weight and height to allow for even more insight into their demographics and biometrics.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this month the Boreal Centre for Bird Conservation teamed up with Northern Lakes College to offer two free programs to bird lovers all across Alberta. Through an online web conferencing program people were able to ask questions, watch videos, and participate in activities designed to help them learn about the owls and other birds in the Lesser Slave Lake region. A similar online session on spring migration also took place recently.

I am very proud to represent an area of our great province that is rich with wildlife and nature. I'm even more proud that the Boreal Centre for Bird Conservation and Northern Lakes College have developed a program designed to bring these tiny treasures to your doors and to your living rooms all across this province. I encourage all Albertans to get out and learn as much as they can about the many unique species of wildlife found in our province, especially the northern saw-whet owl.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Melody Singers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This February the Southeast Edmonton Seniors Association Melody Singers celebrated their 30th anniversary. Since its humble beginnings this choir has shared the gift of song with the community, taking engagements at nursing homes, seniors' lodges, and auxiliary hospitals in Edmonton. It is with pleasure that I recognize the Melody Singers' 30-year commitment to choral music this afternoon.

Late in 1980 a notice asking for singers was posted on the bulletin board of the Southeast Edmonton Seniors Association. The first meeting was organized by co-ordinator Anne Zalasky and was attended by just two individuals, Fred Stebner and Muriel Miekke. At their second meeting the group had more than quadrupled in size. At their third meeting, held on February 16, 1981, the group included 14 voices. Membership increased steadily, and by September 1981 the choir had grown to include 26 voices.

With increased membership Fred Stebner found it increasingly difficult to sing and direct at the same time. He was the only bass singer at the time. In October 1981 Ms Vivian Phillips, a former piano teacher and a member of the Richard Eaton Singers, graciously agreed to take over direction of the choir.

The choir made its debut performance during K Days that year at the Parkland nursing home. Dressed in Klondike attire, I'm sure that the choir brightened the day for many of the patients. That first year the choir also participated in the Northgate Lions seniors' choir festival and provided three performances of Christmas carols at the Convention Inn.

The Melody Singers remain an active choir and now includes 38 members. The choir, which meets on Tuesday afternoons, is currently under the directorship of Ann Marshall. The choir performs three Christmas concerts, a spring concert, and they take part in Remembrance Day services annually. The choir will formally celebrate their 30th anniversary at their spring concert, being held this year on May 1.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 9, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Room Wait Times

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the House I raised the troubling issue of emergency wait times and the targets that are not being met. The Premier's response that wait times are down contradicts the acting CEO of Alberta Health Services, who publicly said, I quote: we are not close to meeting performance targets, and we are not confident in where we are today. To the Premier: who are Albertans supposed to believe on such a critical issue, a Premier who apparently relies on Twitter for his ER updates or a CEO who has all but admitted that current management may not be able to meet these targets?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, what I said yesterday is that wait times in the ER are improving. Even though all of the very aggressive targets have not been met, I'm not going to punish the health care providers that have to make those decisions on a daily basis, but there is marked improvement in working towards meeting those targets.

Dr. Swann: Far from aggressive targets, Mr. Speaker. We have compromised the national targets substantially in Alberta.

How can Albertans have any confidence whatever in this government's ability to manage health care when the CEO of Alberta Health Services is not confident in what they are doing today in the ER?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday to this House that I would bring forward some exact numbers next week, and I will do that. In the meantime let's keep in mind here some of the outstanding progress that is being made in the emergency departments. This member of all members in this House should know how complex health systems are around the world, including this province. In Calgary hospitals, for example, the average that we're looking at here for the number of people waiting for an in-patient bed going from emergency up to acute dropped from 53 to 21 over the last three, four months.

Dr. Swann: Four years, Mr. Speaker, we've been asking this government. Four years been looking for leadership on health care, and you have bungled and bungled and bungled it. The Liberals have called for measures like mobilizing health professionals, opening mothballed facilities to address this crisis. When is the Premier going to act on these recommendations?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, you know what we have in this province? We have the world's first live shoulder cartilage transplant, based at the McCaig institute. We have the most MRI exams per capita in Canada. We have a physician workforce that has grown by 50 per cent in the past decade compared to a national average of 20 per cent. Our nursing workforce has grown by 12 per cent in the past four years whereas nationally it's only 6 per cent. You know why? Because this is a darn good place to practise because we have one of the best health care systems anywhere.

Provincial Budget

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the fourth deficit budget in a row. The sustainability fund is soon to run dry. The government acts as though they're playing with an endless supply of Monopoly money, and they can just start the game over when they go bankrupt. Folks on the far right say the government has a spending problem. On the far left they say the government has a revenue problem. Alberta Liberals are not afraid to say: this is a management problem. Will the finance minister answer the following: when will the incompetent government stop playing games and throwing money at problems, start following the advice of the Alberta Liberals?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, budgeting is not a game. When we budget in this House for health care, for seniors, for children's services, every single decision we make affects people's lives, not only the jobs of the people that provide it but the people we're providing care for. So I just want to tell the hon. member very clearly: budgeting may be numbers, but it's about people, and this government cares about people.

Dr. Swann: If this government cared about people, it would cut the bloated cabinet from 24 to 17.

Yesterday the Premier outlined that we must "set savings aside," yet this government will have bankrupted the sustainability fund in just another year. Why should Albertans trust this government when you're bankrupting the province and continuing to use this rainy-day fund as a Tory re-election fund?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. member doesn't have the facts quite straight. There are two funds that the province has. One is the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, that was set aside a number of years ago. Had we taken all of the windfall that we managed to accumulate during very high oil prices and set all that money in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, we would have lost 37 per cent of that fund. We were wise. We set it aside in a separate fund, the sustainability fund, which is allowing us to work through one of the deepest recessions without making very severe cuts to Alberta's most vulnerable.

Dr. Swann: And don't forget the heritage savings trust fund, that has no more value than when Peter Lougheed left office 20-odd years ago.

Since accurate forecasting has not been this government's strong suit, how can Albertans trust the government to eventually balance the books when all we've seen is red ink and an empty cookie jar that once had $17 billion in it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons we set aside $17 billion is to work through one of the most difficult recessions. I want to remind the House and especially the hon. minister that the operations of government are balanced. The amount of deficit is really in the capital grants that go out to municipalities and to health institutions and school boards for the construction of much-needed infrastructure. And we're going to continue to build that infrastructure because now is the best time. We have labour available, costs are down, and I'm not going to delay that infrastructure anymore. Every school that we build is almost full as soon as it opens.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Canadian Strategy Group

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Health and Wellness invited the Liberal opposition to communicate directly with Alberta Health Services. Well, Mr. Minister, it's not so simple. Earlier this winter we were working with AHS to arrange a meeting when suddenly all arrangements from their end were being channelled through a company called Canadian Strategy Group, owned by one Hal Danchilla. To the minister: why is AHS arranging its meetings with the opposition through an expensive lobbyist company owned by a Tory crony?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I gather the gist of the question is something about having a meeting. You want to have a meeting? Let's go have a meeting. What's the issue?

Dr. Taft: You've got to pay more attention than that, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: There's too much yelling over there.

Dr. Taft: You weren't paying attention. [interjections] You pipe down and listen.

Given that Mr. Danchilla is a professional lobbyist who is well known to be extremely partisan for the Tory party, will this minister admit that having Mr. Danchilla's company broker meetings between AHS and the opposition is clearly intended to intimidate AHS staff and stifle open communications?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the matter that he's driving at at all. I've offered that if he wants to have a meeting, then let's go have a meeting.

What I can tell this House is that yesterday this hon. member brought up something that he called a law to do with the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. He misled the House a little bit, and I thought maybe he would take the opportunity to apologize for that. That act hasn't even been proclaimed yet, so perhaps he should start by correcting himself there, and then we'll move on to this second issue.

Dr. Taft: Given that the previous minister of health care, Gary Mar, was politically burned when he inappropriately put a partisan named Kelley Charlebois on the public payroll, will this minister of health take the responsible action and tell Alberta Health Services to terminate their relations with Mr. Danchilla?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I regret I'm not informed at all about any such relationship, but if it's one of those matters where this hon. member again wants me to help do his job, I'll be happy to undertake that as well. I did your job for you yesterday; I'll do this one for you today. [interjections]

2:00 Provincial Budget Advertisements

Mr. Anderson: It's getting hot in here, Mr. Speaker.

This government talks a lot about respect for taxpayers' money, yet their actions speak much louder than their words. On the airwaves right now there are feel-good advertisements being broadcast by this government, promoting a budget they haven't even passed yet. The ads talk about holding the line on spending while making sure that every penny is spent wisely. This is blatant partisan advertising, using taxpayer money to promote a party agenda. To the minister of finance: how much money is this government spending on these PC infomercials?

Mr. Snelgrove: We're not spending one cent on a PC infomercial. Mr. Speaker, the government is spending about $165,000 total to inform Albertans about this budget. It's being spent in the major centres and in the small local newspapers around Alberta, and it's also going through many of the ethnic newspapers in our larger cities. We feel it's important for all Albertans to have an opportunity to understand the budget.

Mr. Anderson: That is not good enough for Alberta taxpayers, sir.

Given that we have a $3.4 billion deficit and given that we have a $6.1 billion cash shortfall and given that our savings fund will be vaporized by you, sir, within the next two years, will this minister remember what it means to be fiscally responsible, show some leadership, and cancel this egregious abuse of taxpayer dollars for partisan purposes?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I think he just made my case for spending some money to show Albertans what their budget is about. This budget explains the priorities that we've got, the money that's being spent on the different departments. It also shows the fact that in good years we set aside a savings account to bridge through cash-flow shortages to better years ahead, and that's exactly what we're doing on their behalf.

Mr. Anderson: Then, Mr. Minister, tell me this: if you're giving these advertisements for the public good, why don't those advertisements say that you're running a $3.4 billion deficit, a $6.1 billion cash shortfall, with $115 million spent on new MLA offices? Why don't you be truthful with Albertans for a change and put those in your infomercial, sir?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, one thing that has been agreed upon by this Auditor General, by the previous Auditor General, and by the Canadian accounting institute is that our books from this government are the standard that all provinces try to achieve. They are complicated. A budget document this thick is complicated, and there are many parts to it. We have offered staff from Treasury to try and explain it to some members of the opposition so that they could try and understand accepted accounting principles. Apparently, we're not being too successful.

Wait Times for Cancer Treatment

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in this House allegations were raised that mismanagement of the health care system caused the unnecessary deaths of cancer patients. Albertans are owed an answer to three questions: (a) was there a significant and disproportionate increase in cancer surgery wait times at any time in the last decade, (b) did people die as a result of waiting too long for crucial cancer surgery, and (c) was there a cover-up? I would like to give the minister of health the opportunity to set the record straight. Will this minister of health provide Albertans with a clear and unequivocal answer to these vital questions?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't do it all in 30 seconds, but let me just give that hon. member and the rest of Albertans some comfort that people waiting for cancer surgeries, for example, important help with their cancer problem, have been receiving it. In fact, I can tell you right now that according to the Health Quality Council and their report last December there has been no loss of confidence in the system and that 90 per cent of patients were treated within 3.7 weeks for cancer treatment. That's a dramatic change from four or five years ago.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the minister says that it's a dramatic change from three or four years ago, but it's three or four years ago that we're talking about.

Given that everyone in this House recognizes that the minister of health is very adept at answering questions or not answering them as he sees fit, we have to conclude that he's avoiding giving Albertans a clear and honest answer to very serious allegations. I must ask: what is the minister hiding?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what I find interesting is that this member has taken up the cause of furthering even more allegations. It's very unfortunate when a member of this House stands up and uses the protection and the shield of immunity that this House provides and then casts aspersions or casts accusations or allegations against people that they know can't come in here and defend themselves. That is just absolutely wrong.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has failed twice now to answer the questions about whether there was an increase in surgery times a few years ago that caused people to die by waiting too long for surgery and whether or not there was a cover-up and given that I gave him a chance to clear the air, the fact that he's refusing to do so says to me and, I think, says to the people of Alberta that this minister is hiding something. So, Mr. Minister, what are you hiding?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken with the College of Physicians and Surgeons. They deny any of those allegations. They have not heard of anything. I spoke with the Health Quality Council. They have no idea of those accusations. I've spoken with former ministers of health of this Assembly. They have no idea of all of that. As soon as other people who are still on holidays get back here, I'll be quizzing them as well. In the meantime, let's not let these allegations get too far out of hand here, please.

Access is there. A five-year funding plan is there. Outstanding care is being delivered across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Political Contributions by Municipal Officials

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Municipal Affairs noted in this House that a number of other municipalities had to repay taxpayers after submitting personal expense claims for tickets to political events. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will he table the names of the other municipalities that had to repay taxpayers for the benefit of all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to reiterate what I said yesterday, certainly there are some rules and regulations around the contributions from municipalities to political activities, and those rules are very, very clear. That was reinforced by the Chief Electoral Officer in a letter dated October 1, 2010, to municipalities, that indicated to them that municipalities could not make political contributions nor reimburse an individual for political contributions.

Ms Pastoor: Given that the mayor of Rimbey claimed that nothing was done wrong and that if you spend money in the right place, you're going to bring it home, good Lord, and this is a prevalent perception, how is this equality for all Albertans from this PC government?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, specifically to the Rimbey issue, the councillors did make some contributions, actually claimed some of the expenses, and upon realizing that they had made a mistake, agreed to pay it back. They realized that that was there, so they paid all of their expenses back to the town of Rimbey.

Ms Pastoor: The perception is different than what the minister's answer is. This is the perception out there. Does the minister believe that he should set the record straight for all municipalities by advising them in writing that they should be aware of the sections of the Municipal Government Act that he quoted from yesterday?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, that has happened, and certainly as I was indicating in my first response, there was a letter dated October 1, 2010, from the provincial Chief Electoral Officer to all municipalities, all the CEOs of the municipalities, advising them of the rules around political contributions.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, you quoted from a document. Would you kindly table it at the appropriate time?

The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Industrial Energy Efficiency Projects

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All my questions are to the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday the government participated in the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation's announcement of $27.2 million in funding for industrial energy efficiency projects. This is great news, with six innovative projects being awarded funding. I understand that there was a total of 52 expressions of interest submitted. Can the minister assure this House and all Albertans that these projects were selected and awarded in a fair manner?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly can give that assurance to this member and to all members of the House. The RFP process is as open and transparent as is humanly possible. As the member indicated, there were 52 expressions of interest. Those were reviewed by an independent board, and a number of projects were selected for full proposal. That independent board, comprised of industry representatives, academia, municipalities as well as public at large, then made the final selection. Then on top of that there is an internal fairness audit as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I have been told that yesterday's funding announcement adds dollars that were already committed by a corporation in a previous funding announcement. Is this just a PR stunt? When will we finally start seeing real reductions in emissions and steel in the ground on these innovative projects?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely right. This emissions management corporation has had three different rounds of funding announcements, this being the most recent. My understanding is that projects are expected to begin within the next year and should see real reductions at the source as early as June of 2012.

The projects yesterday alone, Mr. Speaker, will amount to reductions in CO<sub>2</sub> emissions at an estimated 3.2 megatons over the next 10 years, so these are real reductions from a program that is working.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister. While I applaud the goals of these investments, some of my constituents are questioning why the government is subsidizing private business projects. How are Albertans going to get value for the dollars being invested in these projects?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I need to remind all members that these dollars are dollars that are contributed by business under our compliance mechanisms incorporated into our large emitters legislation, so these are not general revenue tax dollars that fund this program.

Over and above that, Mr. Speaker, I think it's interesting to note that the rate at which the leveraging occurs on these programs is about 5 to 1, so to date approximately a hundred million dollars have been expended by this board, and that has resulted in about a $500 million investment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Logging in the Castle Special Management Area

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals have long pressed for the creation of the 1,040 square kilometre Andy Russell I'tai Sah Kòp provincial park in the Castle-Crown area of southern Alberta. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation: given that a coalition of 23 tourism and recreation businesses in southern Alberta are cautioning businesses in the sector to be aware of the negative impact of clear-cutting before investing or expanding in the area, has the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development ever discussed the potential impacts of logging in the Castle area with your department?

Mrs. Ady: Well, thank you, hon. member. I'm well aware of the fact that there are those groups that have asked for this designation, but as you know, these lands currently sit under Sustainable Resources. Yes, we do have discussions, but as to your question, I would say that the minister for sustainable resources needs to answer it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. My second question is again to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Will you designate the Castle wilderness as protected within the province's network of protected areas and parks?

Mrs. Ady: Well, hon. member, you're also aware of the land-use framework that is at play and that this is one of the pieces that we're looking at. So as that is developed, we will have those opportunities, but until that comes forward and we have that discussion, I think you're a little early.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. We're all aware of the land-use framework being put on hold while business after questionable business takes place, whether it's potatoes or trees. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Given the tanking value of softwood lumber there is no business case to be made for clear-cut logging in the Castle area. Therefore, how can the minister possibly give clear-cutting a priority over sustainable, economic investment returns?

Mr. Knight: You know, Mr. Speaker, it would be interesting, of course, for the member opposite to take a little look at commodity pricing, particularly softwood lumber pricing, over, let's say, a period of the last 12, 14 months because, to start off with, his preamble, which is not supposed to be allowed, actually indicated that the price of softwood lumber is tanking. You know, I would suggest that he goes and takes a look at it. The commodity pricing, actually, for softwood lumber has increased remarkably in the last number of months.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Securities Regulation

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the proposed merger between the Toronto and London stock exchanges in the news, securities regulation continues to be a topic of interest across the country. My first question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Is Alberta still opposed to the idea of a single federal securities regulator?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you and all Albertans that we remain firmly committed to our opposition to the attempt by the federal government to push their way into provincial jurisdiction. There's no evidence to support the purported need for such a regulator. In fact, we see very tangible proof as we come out of this recession that the system that we have now works. This is clearly a case of: if it's not broken, don't fix it. The passport feature has virtually all of the features that the purported system would have without the need for the radical change they're proposing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Given that the province of British Columbia, once a supporter of the federal regulator, has recently come out in opposition to this particular issue, can the minister comment on whether this has any benefit or implication for Alberta?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, we obviously appreciate any support for it. In fact, B.C. did support originally, and the head of their securities regulator went to work on a transition team. Since then, B.C. has changed their position to where they feel it is pushing into areas of provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, I would take this opportunity to congratulate Christy Clark, the new leader of the B.C. Liberal Party and the next Premier, and to pass on our best wishes. I look forward to working with her on this issue in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental, again to the same minister: what is the level of support across the country for the federal government push to establish a single regulator?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, originally just Alberta and Quebec were out there challenging this proposal. Since then, six provinces have filed opposing briefs with the Supreme Court. Joining Alberta and Quebec are Manitoba, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and New Brunswick. It only shows that we got it right early, and we have the support of most provinces except Ontario.

ESL Program Funding

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, for the past five years Alberta Education has been providing enhanced English as a second language programs for children of refugees, many of whom do not speak a lick of English. In my view, it was a valuable program that provided refugee children with the opportunity to succeed, but this government announced last week that this program will be cut. My question today is for the Minister of Education. Does cutting this program brighten the future prospects of these refugee children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, my view would be that it should not. In fact, it's not the program that's being cut; it's the enhanced funding that's being cut. We fund extra to the per-student grant across the province for every student, $1,155 for ESL funding. The enhanced grant was put in place six years ago, when there was a larger number of refugee and immigrant children coming into the province, and it was believed that we needed to put more resources in to help enhance those programs and learn how to do it better. Over the six years I hope that we have learned how to do it better and that we're now able to provide that kind of programming . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just talked to some teachers, and they assured me that more minority and ESL students and refugee students are coming to this province than ever before, so in their view more funding, not less, is needed. Would you agree with their characterization of this funding cut?

Mr. Hancock: Well, what you just characterized is that more students are coming; therefore, they need more money. I would assure the hon. member that for every student that comes, there's that $1,155 grant for ESL funding. It's the enhanced grant that was put in place to help school boards develop better programming and better ways, techniques of dealing with the extra issues related to those particular students, and over the last six years we hope that they actually have enhanced their programming and learned how to do it better. They should be able to serve those students with the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Hehr: That enhanced funding was put in the classrooms, and it was used very nicely in the classrooms in support of these children.

I guess that if we're here to investigate what the true cost is, what is the dollar amount that your ministry actually saved by cutting this ESL program?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to answer that during estimates, but I think I can probably give him an answer in just a second or two. Approximately $12,993,347.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:20 Affordable Housing in Calgary

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. As the MLA for several vibrant inner-city communities I understand the balance between building safe communities and protecting vulnerable Albertans. How can this minister ensure that the communities in my area are not overwhelmed with shelters for the homeless?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a good question. I would put to this member that, in fact, throughout the entire province we have a province-wide responsibility for affordable housing and homelessness and not just in that particular area of the city. We do have some projects there. But every year we make an RFP, and through the RFP we go through a co-ordinated process and ensure that there is not a particular concentration in any particular community. So that is a good question, but we are on this with the scatter-based model of affordable housing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Some people believe that society's nonprofit groups cannot compete with private developers in housing grants. How can the minister ensure that the changing needs of seniors are reflected in the grant proposal and that they are not simply reflecting the wishes of the private developers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member does bring up a point again about the need for a changing housing policy. We do that every year. Private developers, nonprofits, municipalities: everybody is treated equally, and we go on a merit basis on the basis that the taxpayers' dollar is paramount. Last year we were able to get our cost per unit down to $97,500 because of using this open and competitive tendering process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what assurance can I give people looking to develop more housing for seniors in Calgary's inner city?

Mr. Denis: Again, we will be having an RFP actually this year as we move closer to the goal of 11,000 affordable housing units by 2012. But, as always, the number one priority is the taxpayer, Mr. Speaker, and we'll continue on with that process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Oil Sands Reclamation

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Environment tried to explain his failure to consult with the public before adopting a sweetheart reclamation security deal with the oil industry. The minister said that the issue was "very complex." Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not complex. Albertans stand to be on the hook for billions, and Albertans deserve to be heard on this issue. Will the minister apologize to Albertans for his condescension and admit that they have a right to be heard?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I stand by my comments yesterday. This is an issue that requires a significant amount of policy development. That has been ongoing for the past two years. At the end of the day Albertans make their wishes very well known to this minister and to every other minister, and I appreciate that comment. But this is not the kind of an issue that would entail a broad-based public consultation.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the lobbyist registry shows that, among others, Syncrude and Teck Resources were consulted on the new plan and given that the same registry shows no record of consultation with community groups, environmental groups, municipalities, taxpayers, will this minister rethink what he just said and correct this shameful consultation record and commit to scrapping the program until after he receives input from a broad range of Alberta's citizens?

Mr. Renner: Well, my understanding of the rationale and the reason that we have a lobbyist registry is so that unsolicited lobbying that is done in this place and has been done for decades is done with transparency and in the open. When we as a government request input from someone, it shouldn't matter whether or not they are listed as a lobbyist. The fact of the matter is that we have to have input from the industry that we are regulating. It's done on a daily, regular basis. It has to take place, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Notley: You need input from all Albertans, Mr. Minister.

Now, given that the Royal Society stated in December that "current practices for obtaining financial security for reclamation liability leave Albertans vulnerable to major financial risks" and given that your new plan will reduce what it's collecting over the next 10 years, why won't you admit that your government's capitulation to the oil industry once again behind closed doors is a mistake and that you've sold out Albertans one more time?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the member asks me why I won't admit that we have done something. Why won't this member admit that she is misrepresenting the facts in this case? The fact is that we are increasing the amount of security over the period and the life of the mine significantly. That member knows perfectly well that that's the case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Provincial Borrowing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the next three fiscal years the government plans to borrow directly over $3 billion for the Alberta Treasury Branches. Why is the government doing this now?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, because we have historically low interest rates, and with our triple-A credit rating we are able to borrow money for periods of time; for example, one five-year term at less than 3 per cent. This money is going to be used if we need to continue to invest in Alberta infrastructure. It's taking a cash asset and making a solid asset: a road, a school, a hospital. It's the right time to borrow. It's smart use of debt.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. I thought we were out of the business of being in business. This has to do with the $3 billion that you plan to borrow in the next three years for the Alberta Treasury Branches. It has nothing to do with infrastructure. Again, where will the government of Alberta place this $3 billion liability on its books?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the money that we have borrowed is in our books now. We have voted authority to borrow more this year. We may proceed to the market. It's not borrowed from the Treasury Branches or deposited to the Treasury Branches. It's deposited into our sustainability fund after it's borrowed, and it's shown exactly in our budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I'm disappointed the minister doesn't understand the question.

Now, why are Alberta taxpayers taking on this $3 billion liability for what is supposedly a Crown corporation that's independent and separate from this government?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the borrowing has nothing to do with the Treasury Branches. I understood the question; you didn't understand it. It has nothing to do with the Treasury Branches whatsoever.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Film and Television Tax Credit

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's film, television, and digital media industries are invaluable to our province. However, I've heard from a number of constituents in the industry over time, and they're not working right now. They say that Alberta is not as competitive as other provinces and states. Other jurisdictions utilize tax credit models that entice and attract production and investment. My questions are for the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Can he please clarify why Alberta does not have a film tax credit like everyone else?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reason that Alberta didn't have a tax credit is that when we looked at it first a couple of years ago, most jurisdictions were in a race to the bottom. You've got jurisdictions like Michigan and New Mexico right now who are reducing or looking at eliminating their tax credits because they can't afford them. However, through our film advisory group with our commissioners, our unions and guilds, and our producers we are looking at a cultural industry tax credit that will give an incentive for private individuals and companies to invest in those productions, and we're continuing to work on that model.

Mr. Rodney: My next question is to the same minister. What sort of homework has your department done to ensure that despite utilizing a different model, Alberta is still competitive in this industry? Where do we stack up?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was just down in Los Angeles about five weeks ago and asked the financial representatives for companies like both Disney and Warner Bros., and they told us that we are competitive with the tax incentive that we have, the Alberta multimedia development fund. We pay out cash, which they like, we pay it out two months after production is completed, which they like, we have the money in the bank, unlike other jurisdictions, and we can guarantee that they'll get paid. They tell us that for productions under $30 million we're competitive with every jurisdiction in North America.

Mr. Rodney: My final question is to the same minister. Can he please explain what the return on investment for this trip was? Can he share with our friends in the industry what new and specific project deals were made as a result of the trip?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, because of contract negotiations I can't release the specific details until those contracts are signed. The information will be released by either the studios or those producers. But I can tell you that we learned some valuable things. One, as a jurisdiction the Canadian dollar doesn't matter anymore. There's no discount. We all have to be competitive based on our merits, so based on our quality of productions, based on our crew, based on our locations, and based on the availability of talent we have in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Capital Budget

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fearmongering and failed leadership of this government continue. Instead of taking responsibility for their record deficits, the finance minister lashes out at anyone who proposes a credible solution. Capital spending in this province is out of control. It is 50 per cent higher than any other province, and this is unsustainable. In a few years the province's savings will be vaporized. To the minister of finance: will he explain how his capital spending program is sustainable at this high level for the next ten years?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have a capital strategy. It's a 20-year strategy that lays out for Albertans what we're going to need to enable business to grow and for the people that deliver on our behalf education and health, the schools and the hospitals. We have a three-year funded capital plan right now because we have money in the bank. Unfortunately for the opposition there, the future looks very bright in Alberta. While we are spending at a rate one and a half times other provinces, we have a very, very growing population. We have a growing economy. We have a bright future in spite of how they'd like to look at it. These projects need to be completed. The ring road, the south Calgary hospital, the south Calgary ring road: they're all important to Albertans.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, were his fingers crossed while he was trying to answer that one?

Given that this government has committed to a five-year stable funding in health care but not for capital spending, only three years, where projects take decades to develop, and given that this lack of stable planning earlier in the decade created a yoyo effect, which decimated the construction industry in 2003 and then fuelled an inflation that followed, will the minister stop fuelling the boom-and-bust cycles in construction and commit to a sustainable, transparent . . .

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, what we are committed to is a responsible capital plan that addresses the immediate and the long-term needs of the province of Alberta. We do it in all aspects of health care, of education, for seniors, the infrastructure we need for the roads. It's laid out in the plan. It is supported by our 20-year strategic plan, it's supported by cash in the bank, and it's supported by Albertans.

Mr. Hinman: It's being supported by a hundred thousand dollars plus campaign. The adage about whether you say you can or you can't applies here.

Given that the minister has now had a weekend to look at the Wildrose balanced budget alternative, which balances increases to core social programs with cuts to wasteful pet projects and slight extensions to the capital plan to erase the deficit this year, will he accept our invitation to sit down with our finance critic on ways to reduce the deficit?

Mr. Snelgrove: I'm not sure whether it's unfortunate or fortunate. I couldn't hear all of the question because of some of the noise, and that probably was fortunate.

We consulted with Albertans who have a positive outlook on Alberta on an ongoing basis. We probably consulted with over a hundred groups last year. What I would like to point out in an irrelevant way: you replaced all the bulbs in the roof, Mr. Speaker, but some are still burnt out there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Provincial Fees

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the government announced its new budget, it included an increase in motor vehicle licensing and registration as well as land titles and corporate registry fees. There seems to be some confusion in what's included and when it takes effect. To the Minister of Service Alberta: can you make it clear what this increase includes and when it will take effect?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to clear up some of the confusion on the fee increases. Effective April 1, 2011, vehicle licences and registrations as well as various land titles and corporate registry fees will increase. Even with this increase Alberta will be very competitive with other parts of Canada. For example, registering your car in Alberta is still 16 per cent below the national average.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second question to the same minister: why do these fees have to go up at all?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last time these fees were raised was in 2002, approximately nine years ago. The cost of doing business has steadily increased with salaries, systems development, and maintenance costs. Service Alberta has been covering these costs, but we need to move into a cost-recovery footing for now and for the future. We needed to increase these fees to better reflect the cost of providing these services to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Final question to the same minister: do these fee increases also affect the registration of commercial vehicles? What about nonprofit societies?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to report that commercial vehicle registrations and the not-for-profit sector in Alberta will not be impacted by the changes announced in the budget, despite what some have said. Alberta continues to have some of the most competitive fees in the country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Homelessness Initiative

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year the Calgary Homeless Foundation will lead a project to track homeless people. Yesterday the minister of housing defended the electronic tracking system, and he assured this House that the foundation will be required by law to protect the privacy of homeless people who seek help. Unfortunately, the minister was wrong. To the minister of housing: the Calgary Homeless Foundation is not subject to any privacy laws, so how can the minister claim that the homeless will have any privacy protection?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, the Member for Calgary-McCall is the one who is mistaken here. Subsequent to his question yesterday I called my deputy minister, who has confirmed that the Calgary Homeless Foundation has a contract with us, in fact, that requires them to abide by government privacy legislation. People's privacy is protected in my department.

Mr. Kang: Mr. Speaker, the Privacy Commissioner does not protect the homeless shelters. Given that none of the nonprofit homeless shelters tracking individuals are subject to any privacy laws, can the minister explain what a homeless person could do about a breach of privacy?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, once again, as I mentioned yesterday, we do not fund this particular collection of information by the Calgary Homeless Foundation. As a result of getting funded with us, they have signed a contract, and everybody whose information is collected in that has full and accurate information protection, as they would under any other registration. Period.

Mr. Kang: You're still not answering my question.

Given that the electronic surveillance will discourage homeless people from seeking services, is the government's plan to end homelessness actually a plan to drive homeless people away?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. We are being successful in our plan to end homelessness. Our shelter usage is down, and our costs are down 36 per cent. On top of that, homeless people that I've met tell me that they have the best services that they actually have had over the last couple of years because of our 10-year plan to end homelessness. I'm offended that this member goes and maligns this program in this House. Shame on him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Charter Schools

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta students have diverse needs, and charter schools provide an education which responds to the needs of about 7,500 students in our province. Some of the students reside in my constituency of Calgary-Mackay. One of the requirements for charter schools is that they must have their contracts renewed every five years. All my questions are to the Minister of Education. What importance does the minister and your ministry place on charter schools, an educational system that's unique to this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last 15 years I think charter schools have played a very important role in the province. Their original raison d'être was to provide choice and to be innovative in the delivery of educational programs, and they've done that. The charter schools have a couple of concerns that they've asked us to deal with, and we intend to deal with those concerns. One of the major concerns is that instead of having a five-year renewable charter, they get some manner of permanence. We're currently examining how we can do that and still maintain the raison d'être of choice and innovation and being leading edge in education in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education recently concluded an online survey directed at charter school parents and educators. What can the minister tell us about the information being collected from these surveys, and how will this change charter schools from their present form?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have had an ongoing consultation with Albertans in engaging Albertans in a discussion about Inspiring Education. This discussion paper around charter schools is one more step in that process of involving not just charter schools in the discussion but the broader base of education stakeholders and the community in a discussion about the importance of charter schools and what the parameters for charter schools operating in the future might be. We started that consultation based on a paper that was produced which talked about research and innovation, so the consultation was framed around that, but it's a broader consultation based on the role and function of charter schools in the broader education system.

Ms Woo-Paw: My constituents who have children enrolled in charter schools have expressed a concern that these facilities will move toward a more research-based system, thereby turning their children's classroom into an educational laboratory. What sort of research is being conducted in these classrooms, and how does it differ from that compiled in public school classrooms at present?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, research is always important, and data gathering is important. We have research that we apply to the classrooms, and we take the application from the classrooms and put it into research. It's an important function in both charter schools and public schools. We talked earlier about the AISI program and the need to do research and apply it in classroom settings to improve our education system. One of the raisons d'être of a charter school was to be innovative. It makes sense that we would follow that innovation, discover what is done to enhance the educational opportunities for those students, learn from it, and help translate that into the broader public system.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 18 members were recognized today. There were 108 questions and answers.

Statement by the Speaker

Oral Questions

The Speaker: Before we move on to the next order of business, though, this being day 5, I'm sort of thinking to myself that maybe some very bad habits are being developed in the Assembly. I would just like to refer members once again to that section of Beauchesne that deals with oral questions. I'd just like to put into the record again some of the basic guidelines that we use. These are dealing with questions in the Oral Question Period.

- (1) It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate.

There were 18 sets today. You can go through them and do your own homework a little later this afternoon and see how many would violate that one.

- (2) The question must be brief. A preamble need not exceed one carefully drawn sentence. A long preamble on a long question takes an unfair share of time and provokes the same sort of reply. A supplementary question should need no preamble.

In addition to that, I have sworn documents, signed, saying that nobody will violate the preamble principles. Signed, again. Signatures there. Words have to mean something.

(3) The question ought to seek information and, therefore, cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations.

(4) It ought to be on an important matter, and not be frivolous.

(5) The matter ought to be of some urgency. There must be some present value in seeking the information during the Question Period rather than through the Order Paper or through correspondence with the Minister or the department.

There are a whole series of others in addition to that.

Please, got some time later today, this afternoon? Just check out Beauchesne to see exactly what these guidelines are because you don't want to drive all the people away from the galleries. There are only three left today after only one hour and 12 minutes. We started off with packed galleries. Obviously, these people have other things on their agenda, or they're not impressed with what they see happening.

Let's please proceed now.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order?

Point of Order

Answers to Oral Questions

Ms Blakeman: Yes, sir, under 13(2). Thank you very much for the reminder. I'm sure that it's very valuable to everyone in this House. I'm just wondering if there's any citation that is able to be used to require an answer to the question?

The Speaker: The hon. member knows full well that there isn't. There are many citations, and they basically say: this is called Oral Question Period. I've stated time and time again that it's not called oral answer period. There are many, many citations with respect to answers, but we're talking about the Oral Question Period.

Ms Blakeman: What a shame. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, this tradition has evolved over a thousand years. So shame on all those people for 1,000 years of development of this parliamentary democratic principle.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: We're back to the Routine. I'll now recognize the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 10, Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, two years ago the government embarked on a regional planning process for the province to plan for the future needs of Albertans and manage our growth responsibly. We have worked forward with those plans. There has been some suggestion, as I've travelled Alberta and we've worked on moving forward with the planning process, that Albertans had some concern relative to the legislation that, in fact, is going to provide support for those very much needed regional plans. This bill, the amendment act for the Land Stewardship Act, is a piece of legislation that will address, I think, the majority of Albertans' concerns that I've heard over the past period of time.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, did you have a tabling as a follow-up to your question?

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Not a report, just tablings.

The Speaker: Tablings, yes.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings, with the five copies required, from persons who are very upset about the clear-cutting in the Castle special management place: Jacques Thouin from Pincher Creek, Torey McLeish from Calgary, Cliff Wallis from Calgary, and Susanne Rautio from Victoria, B.C. This is not just a southern Alberta issue. It is for all who tour and recreate in this area.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, I asked you to table a document as a result of a citation. Do you have that ready?

Ms Pastoor: No.

The Speaker: You'll have it tomorrow?

Ms Pastoor: Yes.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll make sure she has it tomorrow.

I have a document that I would like to table which references questions I asked the hon. minister of finance today. This document, Provincial Budget Briefs, is from CIBC. It was put out on February 24, and it indicates – and I'm going to quote – that “in the new fiscal year, the Government of Alberta will start borrowing on behalf of . . . Alberta Treasury Branches.”

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling e-mails from the following individuals who are seeking the preservation of the Castle wilderness, many of whom have personally visited the Castle and all of whom believe clear-cutting will damage the ecology, watershed, wildlife, and natural species and must be prohibited at all costs: Lindsey Wallis, Lisa Richards, Margaret Lewis-MacDonald, Kevin Brygidyr, Patricia Thomas, Megan McRae, Adam Beach, Nicole Chaplain-Pearman, Randy Montgomery, Jacques Thouin, Tracey Ferguson, Patrick Mahaffey, Hal Pashler, Allison Hill, Sally Roenisch, Chantal Pattenden, Ken Goble, Dan Ramunno, Sharon Neal, Zanita Lukezych, Helene Walsh, Heather Hood, Patricia Guest, Judith Blakeley, Steve McCabe, Jacquie Barnaby, Carmel Euwen, Cheryl Thomas, Claudia Rustenburg, Chris Wex, Richard Leckenby, Robert Hii, Karsten Heuer, Jeannette (Tenhaaf) Thomas, Andrew Pike, Piumi Abeynayaka, Jenn Chic, Simone Monckton, Robert and Brandi Wright, Sean Kubara, Gordon McLeod, Bill Taylor, Maureen Raymond, Marcus Peterson, H. Buckmaster, Bonnie Mullin, Jody Overduin, Dr. Pat Brennan, Monika Schaefer, and Andrew Mott.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several hundred more e-mails I will be tabling.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today five copies each of five different letters or e-mails from Dr. Alixe Howlett, Dr. Julia Carter, Dr. Catherine Heimbach, Dr. Nicola Watkins, and Dr. Brendan Vaughan, all concerning the possible ending of funding for the physician and family support program.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In my speech yesterday in private members' bills I referred to two documents from the southern Alberta organ and tissue donation program, and they show that in the last year of all the possible organ donors, the end-of-life care, all 100 per cent of their families were approached by HOPE to consent to organ donation.

The second document shows that the families of all, 100 per cent of them – 100 per cent of them – for the last year consented to the donation. Albertans are doing the right thing. One hundred per cent of possible organ donations in southern Alberta were donated.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Provincial Fiscal Policies

8. Mr. Snelgrove moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate February 24: Ms Pastoor]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. It's an honour and a pleasure to rise in the House and respond to the budget. It's easy to see a budget as nothing more than a balance sheet, a set of numbers, expenses on one side, revenues on the other. A balanced budget is good, a surplus budget even better, and a deficit budget means trouble, eventually debt.

A government's budget is in a very real sense a moral document, a public trust. It's an expression of a government's priorities. It represents moral choices: we will take more from this group, less from that, support this group but not that group; we will invest here; we won't invest there. Every decision the government makes about its budget has a tremendous impact on real Albertans, Albertans from all walks of life and all corners of the province. The essential goal of a budget is to reflect the people's values and to use their money for the long-term well-being of people, the province, and the land.

I'm glad to see that the government did attempt to follow the Official Opposition's advice to support core people programs – health care, education, social services – but this budget does nothing to support our long-term prosperity, nor does it cut wasteful spending so that core programs can be strengthened not just this year but in perpetuity.

This government has a spending problem and a revenue problem. But the larger truth: this government has a management problem. This is the fourth deficit budget in a row. The sustainability fund will soon run dry. This government acts as though they're playing with an endless supply of Monopoly money and that they can just start the game over when they go bankrupt. No, this isn't a game, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta Liberals believe in stable funding for core people programs, including health, education, and social services for our most vulnerable, essential public institutions and services that Albertans value tremendously. They protect health and enhance Alberta's productivity and long-term prosperity. We're not playing with Monopoly money here. You can't just start another game when you go bankrupt. Alberta needs a common-sense, Alberta Liberal approach to budgeting, and we have proposed common-sense alternatives that would save taxpayers 1 and a half billion dollars.

Out of 83 MLAs, 24, more than one-quarter, hold cabinet positions. We don't need a cabinet this large. Seventeen ministries could cover the most important bases, saving Albertans roughly $40 million. Not only does this save millions of dollars; it would also show leadership. It would show that the ruling party is willing to make real sacrifice for the greater good.

We'd also eliminate departmental funding for MLA policy committees, eliminate the Public Affairs Bureau, which spends time and public money promoting this Tory mismanagement and frivolous public relations nonsense such as Your Alberta Online, and the branding initiative or the blatant greenwashing that tries to fight a propaganda war when we should be fighting to protect our environment. No wonder government communications are so often mocked by the media.

Government waste like the $30,000 copying machine that arrived in my office last year or the new computer that I receive every two years whether mine is having problems or not, the waste on government travel, hospitality, spending on external consultants: all of these can be significantly trimmed. An Alberta Liberal government would do so. We would also scale back our investment in carbon capture and storage. We'd stop pouring tens of millions of taxpayer dollars into rich men's hobbies like horse racing and private golf courses. We'd spread out the spending on capital projects over a longer period of time. All told, our common-sense budget would save taxpayers a billion and a half dollars while protecting people programs that Albertans value most.

While the Official Opposition is dismayed that the government failed to cut wasteful spending, we don't object in principle to the general thrust of the budget. Before the budget was delivered, Alberta Liberals called for this government to protect people programs, and with some notable exceptions the government followed our advice, at least for the short term. But let's have a look at some specific portfolios to see where the government could have done better.

Health spending is about where it should be, and I give the government kudos for that. How it's being spent has some serious questions. About two-thirds of Albertans understand that the crisis in emergency room wait times isn't one of funding; it's a crisis of poor management. You've experimented with health delivery at a massive financial and human cost, built hospitals and clinics without operational funding or front-line health care professionals to run them. You've disbanded the Mental Health Board, AADAC, and the Alberta Cancer Board, replacing them with a centralized bureaucracy that cannot possibly manage the delivery of the vast array of services efficiently, overspending by more than a billion dollars in the transition. Wait times are not getting better, and as the emergency room and long-term care crisis continues, this government simply rolls out ad hoc solutions to put out each political fire as it springs up. That's not a recipe for long-term success, Mr. Speaker.

The Official Opposition is pleased that funding for AISH, PDD, and Alberta seniors' benefit was not cut, but still an increasing number of Albertans depend on these programs, albeit people who continue well below the poverty line. This month several organizations supporting people with disabilities challenged us as elected representatives to try to live for a month on $1,180. I know I couldn't, Mr. Speaker. It's rank hypocrisy to index our generous salaries but not our most vulnerable citizens' monthly stipend.

What will it take for this government to realize that vulnerable people living in poverty are much more likely to have mental and physical health problems – addictions, criminal activity, and encounters with violence – eventually costing our public institutions and our communities much more? That's on top of the tragic loss of human potential.

It remains to be seen whether or not the small increase in the seniors' budget will meet rising demand. It's also worth noting that the people who rely on PDD funding are still waiting – still waiting – for the administrative review of last year, which will tell them whether or not their programs will continue. Mr. Speaker, I implore this government to speed up this review so that vulnerable people are not left hanging.

The education budget remains basically static. That's better than cuts, but it doesn't really address the needs set out by this government, who deliver fine rhetoric about transforming the system for a 21st century. Let's face it. This government can barely meet its current obligations to the system, never mind transforming it. Despite reassurances from government, there's no way that this budget can fund new school infrastructure even in towns with major space crunches like Airdrie and Beaumont.

The situation is still more troubling when it comes to advanced education. This is the future of Alberta we're talking about and the key to economic diversity, social progress, and environmental stewardship for the 21st century. Postsecondary students barely rated a mention in the throne speech. Compare that to five years ago, when this same government promised students they would make Alberta's postsecondary tuition costs the most affordable in the country, that there would be enough university or technical spaces for everyone who wanted them. Those promises are long broken, and grants and bursaries have been slashed. To make matters worse, you've suspended the matching grants for the access to the future, hurting our colleges and universities and directly impacting students and alumni who want to donate to their old schools.

Unemployment is still a major concern for Albertans. The economic recovery remains fragile despite this government's wishful predictions, and unemployment was only recently at historic highs for this province. Under these circumstances we have a responsibility to help Albertans who have lost their jobs and are looking for work. But this budget actually reduces income supports for those Albertans. How are they supposed to make ends meet? The budget for retraining and employment programs has been slashed, and now it's harder than ever for young workers entering the job market to find employment thanks to the elimination of an entire program devoted to making that task easier. This indicates that the government is seriously out of touch with the concerns of working Albertans.

Environment and Sustainable Resource Development are crucial departments that need sustainable funding in order to fight climate change and protect air, land, water, and wildlife. Based on the budget for Sustainable Resource Development it seems clear that this government has given up any plans to complete the South Saskatchewan regional plan by the end of this year.

You've done little to encourage diversification in our energy production. You can't sequester all the carbon Alberta emits. We need reductions in emissions. We can't even tell if we're making progress on the environmental protection front if we don't have properly funded, independent monitoring systems in place, which we don't, as well as the resources to identify violations and impose fines on those that violate our standards.

The lack of commitment to our environment has become an international embarrassment, risking the well-being of our primary industry and every Albertan. A clean environment is crucial to human health. This government clearly doesn't understand or believe that properly protecting the environment would help us protect long-term business sustainability as well as public health. This is a vital investment.

Perhaps the most troubling cut is the one to Housing and Urban Affairs. Just when homeless numbers were starting to improve a little, you slashed program spending in this vital area by $90 million. When combined with last year's cuts, this department has seen a 36 per cent decrease in funding, or $210 million, in just two years. This government has a stated policy of ending homelessness in 10 years, and that target can't possibly be met with these kinds of cuts.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this government shows its true colours when it comes to raising revenues through user fees. I have no problem with people paying for discretionary services they receive, but massive increases in registry fees are nothing more than a $157 million tax grab, one that affects every Albertan. These increases, some of them over 150 per cent over last year, will have a serious impact on the working poor and the middle class, yet this government chooses to transform what should have been a one-time subsidy, the drilling stimulus, into a permanent feature of the royalty framework, robbing Albertans of hundreds of millions of dollars in royalties. Last year ending March 31, at a time of high oil prices and record profits, this government gave back to the industry $1.7 billion, double what the government was anticipated to pay out. This contrast in priorities surely reveals the character of this government. I have met oil executives who are embarrassed by this government's lack of responsible leadership.

There's a right and a wrong in this world, Mr. Speaker, and the distinction is not very difficult to make. Responsible leaders must not ignore the moral dimensions of the budgets they create. The moral choices of this government will create hardship for many of our most vulnerable citizens, including children, 70,000 of whom are at risk for malnutrition, poor school achievement, and other preventable problems. Failing these children and other vulnerable Albertans will have a tremendous negative impact on our province and its people if we don't start planning for the future immediately.

Albertans shouldn't have to choose between Tory incompetence and extremist positions of the parties at the fringes of the political spectrum. In fact, we don't have to choose between the Tories, who cut the wrong things; the New Democrats, who'd cut nothing; and the Wildrose Alliance, who would cut everything. There's another choice: the Alberta Liberals, the only party with common-sense solutions that work for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, are you on 29(2)(a)?

Ms Notley: Yes. Under 29(2)(a) I'm wondering if the Leader of the Official Opposition could comment on a recent report released by the parliamentary financial officer, who actually identified the fact that over the last 25 years the governments across the country that were most likely to balance their budgets were New Democrat governments as opposed to Conservative governments, that were quite close after that, and Liberal governments, that were the farthest behind in terms of balancing their budgets.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of that study, but I'd be very interested to receive it under advisement. I'm sure there are important lessons to be learned from those that have gone before us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Anderson: Yes. To the hon. leader: I don't understand why you would feel the need to say that the Wildrose would cut everything. Clearly, you've read in our budget document – I hope you have – that we're proposing $4.2 billion in infrastructure. We're proposing close to a $40 billion budget. In fact, if you look at your proposal, your prebudget submission, you talk about stretching the capital budget from three years to five years, which would mean steeper infrastructure cuts than what we're proposing, from three years to four years. So I don't understand why the brazen attack.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, if you wish.

Dr. Swann: Fair comment, Mr. Speaker. I take that under advisement.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a small point in the preliminary. If I heard the hon. member properly, I believe that there was a reference to four deficits that were budgeted for. In actual fact, I believe that that would have been two.

The Speaker: Hon. leader, if you wish. No? Okay.
Others? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since we are both MLAs for the city of Calgary, I'd be very interested to know, in that billion and a half that the member suggested in savings such as cutting back in infrastructure, which Calgary projects would you like to go on the record, sir, that we do not proceed with in construction this year?

The Speaker: Hon. leader, if you wish.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of issues relating to infrastructure that I think one needs to look at carefully. We have a responsibility to the people of Alberta to manage the public purse in the same way that we would manage our own personal finances. If we have to delay a road's completion for a year, if we have to make some tough decisions to get back into the black, I think Albertans expect us to do that, just as we would in our own family budgeting.

Quite apart from that, this bloated government continues to persist in expanding itself, now to the tune of 24 ministries, when just in the year that I entered this Legislature, we were at 17 or 16 departments. One has to ask which part of small government or efficient government this leadership doesn't get. Why are we spending 40 million extra dollars on this and now an expanded MLA representation. Where that came from, again, is another question that begs belief when Albertans want to see their wealth, their hard-earned cash, spent responsibly, frugally to address the core human service issues that protect Albertans, that protect our environment, and give us a long-term advantage for the future.

What we have seen is, unfortunately, cronyism, appointments of Tories to various boards and commissions. We've seen money going through the hands of this government at a rate unseen in the past, that retains the power and the privilege of this elite Tory . . . [interjections] Thirty-nine years is too long, Mr. Speaker, and it's time . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. leader has the floor.

Dr. Swann: It's long past due time for change, Mr. Speaker. They're past their best-before date, and I think Albertans are beginning to realize that.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very interested to see that the member talks about . . .

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I thought it was back and forth between the opposition and government.

The Speaker: There's no back and forth under 29(2)(a). He had my attention first, okay?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member has talked about a delay in capital construction. There are two major projects in Calgary that are under way in capital construction. One is the west LRT. The other is the south Calgary hospital. Tell us specifically. Don't ramble on about all of these generalities. Be specific.

The Speaker: Sorry. We've now finished our time.

Now, hon. Member for St. Albert, did you want to participate in this debate? Okay.

Then the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the motion at hand.

Mr. Anderson: On the motion. Boy, oh boy, Minister of Energy.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to respond to this government's proposed budget. When the Alberta Liberals accuse the government of treating the public purse like their own limitless supply of Monopoly money and the NDP start banging the drum for more responsible fiscal management, you know there's a really, really big problem over there.

Budget 2011 is the latest in a string of damaging fiscal decisions made by a big-spending Progressive Conservative Party, that has lost any remaining right, if it had any, to call itself fiscally conservative. The numbers are painful: a $3.4 billion deficit, three times higher than what they predicted it would be last year, an additional $2.7 billion, to be spent on provincial capital projects, that isn't even included in the government's final deficit number, bringing the total cash shortfall to an astronomical $6.1 billion, exceeded only by last year's record $7.8 billion cash shortfall.

This $6.1 billion shortfall will be paid for out of our savings fund, the sustainability fund. That savings fund was at $15 billion just last year. By the end of this year it will be a paltry $5 billion and only a year or two away from total annihilation. Our heritage fund, when adjusted for inflation, is now worth as much as it was in 1981, and the PC plan for balancing the budget is based on the hope that all-time record-high resource and income tax revenues are just around the corner. They also hiked user fees for vehicle registrations by 20 per cent and for registering a new business by 150 per cent. For a government whose flagship bill last year was designed to make Alberta more attractive for business, they just made it 150 per cent more expensive to start one. What a total embarrassment.

The bottom line is this. This government's spending addiction has squandered almost every cent saved over the last 15 years, has depleted our heritage fund to 1981 levels – 1981 levels – and the government's plan, so-called, to balance the budget consists of praying and hoping for $140-a-barrel oil prices and the magic doubling or tripling of provincial GDP growth.

The irresponsibility of this budget is absolutely stunning. Less than 24 hours after this government delivered their budget, our caucus, the Wildrose, delivered ours, the balanced budget alternative document. In it we have outlined a plan to balance the budget this year without resorting to cuts to health, education, seniors' programs, or other vulnerable Albertans.

We propose balancing the budget through three primary means. First, we will limit the increase in spending for core social programs by the rate of inflation plus population growth, 2.2 per cent last year. This means a modest increase of a few hundred million for our health, education, social supports, seniors, child services, and other key social programs while freezing or moderately lowering less critical departmental budgets. This would save us $900 million when compared to the continued unsustainable PC hikes to core program spending of 6 per cent in health care, 4.5 per cent in education. In a time of large deficits this is simply too much.

Second, we would spread the existing PC three-year capital plan over an extra year or an extra two years, like our friends the Liberals are calling for. Just an extra year. This would mean that infrastructure spending this year would total roughly $4.2 billion, which is still slightly higher than the B.C., Ontario, Quebec average. I guess the President of the Treasury Board or perhaps the Energy minister would find our friends in Quebec, Ontario, and B.C. to be extreme fiscal conservatives. It just makes no sense that they would call us that.

We would propose focusing that $4.2 billion on infrastructure to the most critical projects such as schools for Beaumont, Airdrie, Chestermere, Fort McMurray, continued work on the Calgary and Edmonton ring roads, and the doubling of highway 63 to Fort McMurray.

We would also invest millions into expanding long-term care facilities for seniors currently living in hospitals, thereby freeing up thousands of new acute-care beds in existing hospitals around the province. Doing so would allow us to postpone billions in spending on new acute-care facilities until we can actually find and pay for the health professionals needed to staff them.

Although protracting the PCs' existing capital spending plan is necessary to balance the budget this year, we would again note that the Alberta Liberal Party recommended a much more drastic approach in their 2011-12 prebudget recommendations by encouraging the government to stretch the existing three-year PC infrastructure budget over five years instead of the four we are proposing. Although such a commitment to fiscal prudence is laudable – and indeed such measures may one day be necessary should the PCs continue their reckless spending behaviour – the Wildrose feels this degree of delay in infrastructure investment to be unnecessarily drastic at this time and feels that stretching the PC's current three-year capital plan for a single additional year would deliver the savings necessary to balance the budget deficit in 2011.

I would ask the government this. If you claim our plan is extreme, do you feel the Liberals are right-wing nut jobs for proposing even steeper spending reductions? Or is it possible that you have lost all sense of what it means to be fiscally conservative? Albertans clearly agree with the latter conclusion.

Finally, we would cut tens of millions of dollars to wasteful PC pet projects and vote-buying schemes such as the infamous $2 billion carbon and capture waste boondoggle, $115 million for new MLA offices, tens of millions in direct grants to corporations, and shrink the number of cabinet ministers from 24 to 16. These Wildrose proposals would result in a balanced budget for 2011 and put our province back on the road to financial health for both current and future generations.

The PC government continues to claim that if Albertans want to balance the budget before 2012, they must choose between either tax increases or deep spending cuts to core social programs as well as shelving priority infrastructure projects like schools and long-term care facilities. This claim by the government is a blatant falsehood. It is meant to generate fear and take advantage of Albertans' commitment to taking care of the vulnerable, ensuring quality, universal health care, giving our children the best education possible, and building key infrastructure. It is fearmongering, and it is blatantly dishonest.

Balancing the provincial budget does not require cuts to front-line health services, education, or funding for the vulnerable, but it does require a government that is able to prioritize needs before wants and that refrains from elaborate and expensive vote-buying schemes that do nothing to improve the lives of Albertans, only the fortunes of the PCs at the ballot box.

This government is gambling with all of our futures. Its balanced budget strategy consists of banking on Middle East turmoil to drive up energy prices. Do members in this House realize how lucky we are as a province? Alberta's resource royalties provide a revenue stream that no other province even comes close to enjoying. To put things in perspective, the Canadian provincial all-time record for resource revenues collected in a single year by a province other than Alberta was British Columbia's $4.5 billion in 2005. Even during the low point of the 2008 recession Alberta's low end for resource revenues dropped to just under $7 billion, off a high of $14 billion – $14 billion – three times the record of the next-closest province, in 2006.

This year resource revenues are projected to be a robust and healthy $8.3 billion, not including land sales, yet despite this our province remains drowning in a sea of red ink. It is virtually unfathomable that we could have a $6 billion cash shortfall under these circumstances, but here we sit. We cannot continue to rely on the good fortunes of high energy prices compensating for reckless and out-of-control spending habits. We live in a volatile world with uncertain economic times ahead. Technological advances and a shift away from carbon-intensive fuels will eventually result in lower energy prices and therefore lower resource revenues for the people of Alberta. As a province if we do not begin planning for this reality now, we run the risk of leaving our children with a legacy of structural debt, bankrupt social programs, higher taxes, and a dearth of economic opportunities.

And what of our savings? What will we pass on to our children and our grandchildren? Will they even know what it means to have the Alberta advantage? As a father of four this eats away at me every time I walk into this Chamber. Albertans have rallied behind the initiative to put away some money to offset temporary and unexpected declines in oil and gas revenues. This rainy-day sustainability fund totalled $15 billion just last year. It is now projected to plunge to roughly $5 billion this year, during a time when oil prices have never been consistently higher. When the sustainability fund runs dry, our province will be forced into choosing between cuts to core services, increased debt, higher taxes, or perhaps a combination of all three.

Albertans also supported the establishment of the Alberta heritage fund for the purpose of saving a percentage of our nonrenewable oil and gas revenues to ensure the Alberta advantage will remain for future generations, long after oil and gas become less important and therefore less valuable in the world's economy. This government has pillaged our children's savings repeatedly, to the point where the heritage fund is worth less today when adjusted for inflation than it was in 1981, 30 years ago. No growth. We have squandered every penny. This is a deplorable legacy to leave future Albertans given the unprecedented oil and gas boom of the last decade.

Furthermore, one failure that has gone largely unnoticed is the large amount of liabilities and debt entered into by the government over the past several years. The Alberta capital bonds sold in early 2010 are just one example. Recent borrowing for capital has returned us into debt to the tune of $5.2 billion this year, and you can see this in the government's own 2011 fiscal plan document, page 79.

Even more significant are the unfunded pension liabilities, which have soared to over $10 billion. The 2010 DBRS report puts our combined total of tax-supported debt and pension liabilities at an astounding $27 billion, almost more than double what it was just a few years ago. With our sustainability fund approaching empty and the heritage fund losing value, our children and grandchildren will be left holding the bag unless we change the way we manage the finances of this province.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask: what has happened to our province? Where has the commitment to our children's future gone? Will we leave them nothing? After all the oil and gas is gone or after its value declines, what legacy do we plan to leave them with?

The President of the Treasury Board said yesterday, answering a reporter's question, that the government wouldn't consider a provincial sales tax until our oil and gas ran out. He said: that would be a conversation for our kids to have. What a thing to say. Was not the whole dream of setting aside some of our nonrenewable resource wealth in the heritage fund so that our children wouldn't have to make the decision to hike taxes or slash social programs in the future? Wasn't that the whole Lougheed legacy, that our children and grandchildren could enjoy the same or an even better Alberta advantage than we had? I do not know the exact date that this government decided to throw that dream under the bus, but it is clear they have, and our kids and our grandkids are going to pay the price for it. They may have to raise taxes. They may have to go without core social programs that we have today because we've been irresponsible in this House.

Mr. Speaker, one of the ballot questions for the 2012 election is becoming clear. Can we as Albertans really afford four more years of this government's financial management? The sea of red ink flooding the Legislature at this time would suggest not.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, you rose first.

Mr. Taylor: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to this later, after 29(2)(a).

The Speaker: Okay. Edmonton-Riverview, under 29(2)(a)? Proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I listened with care to the speech from the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, and several issues came to my mind. I won't point them all out or raise them all for discussion. I'm sure we could have a good discussion.

I noticed that the member talked about protecting spending on core programs, yet later in his speech he used the term “out-of-control spending.” When you really look at the numbers for spending on health or education or social services or housing, if you look at them from a lens that adjusts for inflation and population growth, they’re not out of control. It’s just a myth. In fact, by some measures our spending on health is really very low. As a percentage of our economy, for example, it’s running at 3 or 4 per cent in Alberta as opposed to, you know, 15 per cent or something in the States.

So I would really ask the member to choose his words carefully in the future because you can’t square that circle. If you’re not going to cut core funding, which you say you’re not, and you’re not going to raise taxes, then I don’t see how you’re going to balance the budget.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish.

Mr. Anderson: I’m glad to have the opportunity to clarify that. This is how you do it. Our budget proposes a 2.2 per cent increase in operational health spending. That’s roughly $340 million. It’s a lot of money. It’s nothing to slouch at, that’s for sure. We think we need to do that, and if we can hopefully focus that on more procedures and on getting more procedures done than we did last year, that would be, of course, the best way to spend that money. So we’re not proposing to cut the health budget. We are proposing to increase it slightly, in control, at a rate that is sustainable over the long term. However, where we do make most of the savings, actually, is by extending the capital plan from three to four years.

Now, some of that would include health capital, and I’m glad you brought that up because I’d like to touch on that. One of the problems that we have in our system right now is that we are spending literally billions of dollars on infrastructure, specifically health infrastructure under the leadership of this health minister and previous health ministers, building buildings that we have absolutely no staff to put in. If you look at, for example, the south Calgary hospital, that’s a huge amount of new acute-care capacity as well as other capacity that is being built there, that will be done in the next couple of years. When that’s done, AHS doesn’t even have in their documents the budget to staff that hospital.

What’s going to happen is the same thing that happened at the McCaig Tower when that was opened. You open up this brand new, shiny facility, and I forget the exact number of operating rooms that are in the McCaig at this time – I don’t have that number in front of me – but they opened up a whole two operating rooms in the McCaig Tower. Two. This is during a time when we have physicians coming to our caucus all the time – and I’m sure the Liberals are the same and have physicians probably coming to them all the time – saying: we can’t even get operating time right now. Yet we opened up two operating rooms in the McCaig Tower out of however much potential capacity is there.

The problem is that there’s no budget. They keep building all this acute-care infrastructure, and there’s no budget to staff it. Not only that, what they should be doing, hon. member, is focusing their resources and their capital budget on long-term care. If they focused it on long-term seniors’ care and moved some of these seniors who are living in hospitals when they should be living in assisted living or long-term care out of the hospitals and into long-term care, they would open up hundreds or even thousands of acute-care beds across the province. That would solve a lot of our budget issues without having to spend gargantuan amounts of infrastructure on new acute-care facilities that we can’t even afford to staff.

That’s one way that we can actually do more with less, and that’s what is so dumbfounding, let’s say, about the way this government has handled our health care system up until this point.

Thanks for the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise and respond to Budget 2011 today. There are so many things that could be said and so many places where one could start. I’ll just pick one and start anywhere.

We have here essentially about a $40 billion budget. Rounding it up, we’re pretty close to $40 billion. I think sometimes the sheer size of that number gets us all a little twitchy and gets us all a little overreactive, perhaps, and gets us to say either that happy days are here again and everything is wonderful or that the sky is falling, depending on which side of the House we sit on. I think the truth is neither of the above. I think that, in fact, we’re slowly coming out of this recession and steadily coming out of this recession. I think there are some pressure points and some cautions and some threat points in the world economy, no question about that. There are ways that things could go sideways on us, but the chances are pretty good that the recovery is going to continue slowly and steadily. This is a budget that the hon. minister of finance and President of Treasury Board brought down last week that pretty much stays the course of the last several budgets that we’ve seen here.

I guess that’s where I come from on this, Mr. Speaker. This budget isn’t all that bad. It’s not all that good either. It’s just kind of is more of the same. It’s pretty uninspiring. It’s a stay-the-course budget produced by a government that looks to me like it’s not very good at setting priorities or articulating which course they’re actually trying to follow. We’re spending nearly $40 billion this year, yet we have no significant vision as a province for what it is that we hope to accomplish. But we’ll keep the lights on for the next year while making some modest improvements along a couple of the margins. There’s no question about that. When you’re dealing with $40 billion – I’ll use the big number here for a second – one thinks you ought to be able to accomplish a little bit more than that with a little bit of vision and a little bit of ability to set priorities.

On the other hand, $40 billion in a budget for a province of nearly 4 million people is just a very large version of any budget, Mr. Speaker, of the budget that you would do with your family or I would do with my family. This is where, I guess, we think that this whole either/or argument – you either have to cut spending or you have to raise taxes or you have to do this or you have to do that – is a little bit off because in the real world people don’t just deal with either/or. They have to deal with both/and.

You have to meet the monthly obligations out of whatever it is your employer is paying you. You have to pay down your mortgage or whatever debt you have, and you have to do it slowly, steadily, sustainably because you probably don’t have a great schwack of cash sitting in your mattress somewhere with which to pay off the mortgage in one lump sum. You have to start setting some money aside in an emergency fund in case the furnace goes on the fritz on a day like today. You have to start setting some money aside and start investing it, modestly at first but with a progressive plan to invest more and invest it across a wider portfolio, perhaps, as you accumulate more so that you’re saving for your kids’ university or college education, you’re saving for your own retirement, that sort of thing. You have to have some goals.

Mr. Speaker, the thing is that you have to do all of those things at the same time. That's what I think is missing from this debate and, frankly, from most of the other six budget debates that I've had the honour of taking part in during my time as an elected representative in this Assembly. We don't wrestle with the both/and.

Lest I sound a little bit like I'm contradicting myself since I did say earlier that there doesn't seem to be much ability to set some priorities here, let me get back to that point. At no time is it more important to set priorities than when you've got to do a budget that requires you to do all these things simultaneously. You have to decide what the most important things are that you need to do this year with the money you have, and then you have to look at everything else that falls below that line and say: "Okay. What can we give up because, you know, we don't have enough to do it all?" It doesn't necessarily mean that your own household budget has to balance every single year, year in and year out, but you've got to know what kind of debt you're carrying, and you've got to have a plan for how you're going to get rid of that debt over time. There's no question about that.

Any financial planner will tell you that you have to start by paying yourself first. If you don't start by paying yourself first, you're never really going to get ahead of the game. That's where we are in the province of Alberta right now: at a point where we're not getting ahead of the game, at a point where, as the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere pointed out, although perhaps a little dramatically, we're gambling on turmoil in the Middle East to produce a high enough price for a barrel of oil to somehow bring us back to prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, we have a nearly $40 billion budget this year, and we have, if nothing else, $240 million in in-year savings that the minister of finance has identified. If nothing else, we should be taking that quarter of a billion dollars – let's find another $10 million somewhere and round it up – and doing something with that money to save it and invest it for the short term and the long term.

Our sustainability fund was conceived and was created and was contributed to specifically so that when the economy hit the skids, like it did a couple of years ago, we would have money to get us through these rough times. Congratulations to the government for using that money for the purpose for which it was intended. But the problem I have with the budget, Mr. Speaker, is that there is no clear plan yet to start putting money back into the sustainability fund, to say nothing of the fact that we're not investing for the long term on any kind of predictable, sustainable, regular basis by making contributions to the heritage fund.

I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that we have to start saving some money again. Long-term planning is generational and so are two of its key components: saving and investing for the future. Alberta's resource revenues are our inheritance, and it's time that we stop spending it all. We think it should work something like this, maybe not exactly but something like this: one-third into savings, one-third into long-term capital investments and long-term program investments, and only one-third of it spent on the province's day-to-day expenses. Over time the income produced by your growing savings, your growing heritage fund or any other endowment fund that you have, will begin to replace the need to spend that last third, and we'll be able to save and invest it all. That's the thing that's going to get us off this boom-and-bust roller coaster. That's the only thing that's going to get us off this boom-and-bust roller coaster.

Mr. Speaker, once we're off that coaster ride, then we get to dream really big. In fact, we can start dreaming right now if you wish. It could be the best health care system – public or private or hybrid – in the world. It could be a high-speed rail link between Calgary, Edmonton, up to Fort McMurray, down to Lethbridge. It could be anything we want to dream. But in order to make the dream a reality, we've got to develop the savings habit in this province.

We are extremely fortunate, Mr. Speaker, to have all these fossil fuels under our feet and the ability to get them out of the ground, maybe not as cleanly as we should and as we need to develop. That might be a dream in and of itself, producing clean oil, because there is no such thing as clean oil today. There's only oil that's slightly less dirty than other oil. So maybe that's the dream – I don't know – but we're very fortunate to have that natural resource. It puts us in an enviable position relative to every other province in this country, relative to most jurisdictions around the world. But we're not going to be able to take advantage of it if we don't get ourselves into the savings and investment habit.

That's job one. It's not the only job that we can do. We must do a number of others. We have to meet our monthly obligations. We have to have a plan to pay down our debt, manage our debt. We've got to do all these things. But job one, the most important priority of all and the thing that, as I look, is absolutely missing from the budget is developing a savings habit and a savings strategy and a savings plan that starts now.

You know, financial planners say that you can start with $25 a week or even $25 a month. We have the ability to do somewhat more than that, maybe not a lot relative to what we actually need to spend over the course of this year, but we should start saving some of it. We must start saving some of it. We must get into that habit, or we're just not going to get ahead of ourselves ever.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Well, hon. members, I have no additional speakers on my list. Does that mean I should call this to a vote?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Call the vote. Go ahead.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I was attempting to catch your attention for a moment there, and I got sidetracked.

The Speaker: You have my attention now. Did you want to participate?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I will participate in the debate if there are no others that wish to.

The Speaker: Proceed. I just about called the question, you know.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very motivated to speak to this whole budget debate. What motivates me, really, is the commitment in this budget to health care in particular, which happens to be my portfolio. While I fully recognize that we will be having a set-aside date and time to address specific health care issues, I am motivated to stand up right now and make a few general comments in lead-up to the estimates debate, which will occur in a few weeks.

For example, I'd like it to be made abundantly clear to all members and to Albertans listening or watching that the reason we're bringing forward this health budget, with the 6 per cent assured increase for Alberta Health Services, is so that important programs that are there, that are part of the five-year health action plan, can continue as planned last year. Mr. Speaker, this document, that I think almost everybody here now has received, is called Becoming the Best: Alberta's 5-Year Health Action Plan. This is the most significant document, with the largest amount of planning, the longest range planning ever in the history of our province and, I would tell you, in the history of all of Canada.

What happens here, though, is that some people get the wrong impression of it. They seem to think on the one hand that we're tipping the jar of money over, and on the other hand they're saying that we're keeping the lid on it too tightly. You've heard some of that in the comments made by previous speakers. I want to make it very clear that the difference between this health action plan, which is, as I say, the most ambitious and the most aggressive plan in Canada for health, and whatever previous plans might have been around is that there is predictability and stability here that has never before been experienced.

What it means to us, financially speaking, such as the budget would indicate, is that we will have about a $545 million increase in the Alberta Health Services side of the budget. That specifically means that acute care will be beefed up. We'll be hiring more staff. We're hoping to attract more doctors. In fact, we've got some good news coming forward very soon in that respect with regard to some rural settings. We know that we'll be beefing up the number of beds in hospitals, Mr. Speaker. We've already committed to 360 in-hospital beds being opened up and available before the end of March of this year. In fact, we've already got 240 or so of them opened, and the remainder will open over the next few weeks. We need to continue keeping pace with an aging population and a growing population. That population will need more of these kinds of services.

Secondly, with respect to continuing care there is a commitment in this budget to making good on our plans to ensure that at least a thousand new continuing care spaces are made available in our province over each of the next four years. The first year will come to a conclusion here in about four weeks' time, and you will see approximately 1,300 new spaces being opened up and available in the continuing care spectrum.

Mr. Speaker, those two issues alone aren't the reason why we're starting to see some good news in emergency departments, but they are absolutely critical. That represents a significant portion of our budget.

Secondly, is the whole area of public and community health. These are important programs for us with respect to the PCNs, the primary care networks. Everybody here would know that we have about 38 of them. As a result of that, we're now seeing more Albertans enfranchised with a doctor of their own choosing. We're seeing a professional, team-based approach occurring in each one of those primary care networks, and we're funding them appropriately to ensure that the services are delivered on a timely basis in the areas and communities where they are needed.

Similarly with cancer treatment, Mr. Speaker. We're seeing a tremendous influx of people to our province from elsewhere who are seeking cancer treatment. I wish I'd had time this afternoon in question period to elaborate somewhat on the answer to the question that was posed by one of the members from the opposition regarding cancer care because I can tell you that we are seeing some tremendous improvements in cancer care in our province.

Not to forget, of course, what's going forward here in the budget we're debating with respect to health care infrastructure. We just committed over $200 million more to help expand and improve and consolidate services related to the Tom Baker cancer centre in Calgary. Similarly, we're doing about $67 million of that portion here in Edmonton at the Cross Cancer Institute.

You know, Mr. Speaker, as early as this morning I had an e-mail from someone who was saying what wonderful care he had at the Cross Cancer Institute, and he had one observation he wanted to make. He said: in spite of the phenomenally good care that I received and the speed with which I received it at the Cross Cancer Institute, I couldn't help but notice in the parkade the number of licence plates that were not from Alberta.

Now, I'm not criticizing that at all because we do have the Canada Health Act. We have our own Alberta Health Act, which was just passed last fall. It commits us to the principles of the Canada Health Act, and one of the central features of that Health Act, of course, is portability. So we have people from other provinces who are coming here for our health services, and we're proud to provide them. But let's not ever lose sight of the fact that as a result there are going to be some wait times for Albertans. It's just how the Canada Health Act works in this particular case. We have reciprocal-type agreements, as you know, Mr. Speaker. So that's another important care.

I want to turn my attention briefly, if I could, to another very important aspect of continuing care, and that's home care. Mr. Speaker, we have 107,000 Albertans today who are receiving excellent home-care services right in the places they reside. That's as a result of a 7 per cent increase to that part of Alberta Health Services' budget. That means that there's about $407 million going into home care. Why is that important? Because that is one of the most important aspects of not only providing outstanding care for Albertans to help them cope with whatever chronic problem they might have, but it also has a tremendous impact on reducing the numbers in our emergency rooms, which have been the subject of much debate over many, many years and not just in Alberta; this is a debate around the world. We have to keep that in mind.

I have to tell you that as a result of outstanding services not only in the hospitals but also in the home-care area our province has the lowest readmission rates anywhere in Canada. Right here in Alberta. This is phenomenally good news for us. We're very proud of that, and this budget will allow us to continue that excellent service and even to add probably another 3,000 or 4,000 people to the list.

I know that this year is unique in that our first crop, if I can call them that, of baby boomers is turning 65. They're not all going to need home-care services tomorrow, but the numbers would tell you that many folks in the coming years will need that. So we have to be prepared, and this budget sets the way for that.

The other part of Alberta Health Services' budget which is of great significance is the huge amount of work they do with transplants, with cardiac surgery, with renal dialysis, and all the other things that unless you really needed it, you wouldn't really know about it. We have truly outstanding services being provided in our top-drawer facilities. These are facilities that are heralded around the world. This budget will allow us to continue, maintain, and even augment those outstanding services.

Let me give you a couple of examples which I wanted to mention today in question period, but 30 seconds is just not enough time to get so much of this good news out. Here is another reason why we should be supporting this budget: the Stollery children's hospital in Edmonton. We have that site named as the principal North American centre for what's called the Berlin Heart. Mr. Speaker, the Berlin Heart is the leading artificial heart technology in the world – in the whole world – and we have that right here at the Stollery children's centre. What an incredible service to provide not only for children but for the researchers, for the physicians, for the administrators, and others who are magnetized by that particular fact alone. We are attracting, we are recruiting, and we are retaining the world's best right here in Edmonton, and this budget will help us to continue in that vein.

Similarly, I mentioned the lowest readmission rates in the country, and that includes two very specific procedures that are nationally reported on a regular basis. One of them is hysterectomies and the other is prostatectomies. Having the lowest admission rates in those categories is hugely significant, but again, if you haven't experienced it or you don't know someone who has, you wouldn't know about it. So I think it's incumbent to make a few of these comments.

I want to comment very briefly also on a couple of other quick facts here and the relevance to our budget and why we should be supporting it. You know, Alberta scientists have invented a technology to improve the lives of people with stroke and spinal cord injury. In fact, what they've invented is a revolutionary new system that improves the quality of life for people paralyzed by a stroke or spinal cord injury. This was led, of course, by Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research scientist Arthur Prochazka, PhD, University of Alberta. They have a team that designed a system known as ReJoyce, and they've completed a successful clinical trial with participants from across western Canada. Now, here's the beauty of this, Mr. Speaker. The ReJoyce, which is the rehabilitation joystick for computerized exercise system, is a spring-loaded arm with special handles and attachments that the user twists, squeezes, and moves around to play custom-made computer games, if necessary, or computerized functions. It's an amazing invention from right here in Alberta.

We know that our team of neurologists have done a 10-year study, and they've found relationships between HIV and the causes of brain disease, as published in a prestigious international journal. It was published back on September 28 in the international journal of neurology. I could go on with all of these good-news things, Mr. Speaker, but suffice it to say that when we said that under this Premier we would bring in a revolutionary new approach to not only funding health care but to delivering on the specific improvements that would increase access and reduce wait times, we meant it, and now you see proof of that.

This document, that I referred to earlier, has a number of key strategies. All of them are incredibly important to be supported by this budget. In fact, one of them has to do with providing more choices for continuing care, and continuing care choices mean aging in place. A lot of people don't understand what this means. In this House I've sat and I've listened carefully to attacks against our government: "There's not enough long-term care. You guys aren't doing enough to help the frail, the elderly, the infirmed, and so on." You know, that is absolutely not true. We have said that we would keep at least 14,500 long-term care spaces as they are, and even then we're augmenting that in some cases because some of the DAL or SL facilities do have a component for long-term care built into them. The Extendicare Michener in Red Deer is one such example. We've actually increased the number of long-term care spaces there when some of the people were transferred from one area of Valley Park Manor and one area of Red Deer Lodge over there. So we have these kinds of choices now.

I'll just close with this, Mr. Speaker. What has to be understood is that what we're seeing now through the ministry of seniors and perhaps in a couple of other ministries is a synergistic approach that allows for new types of facilities to be built wherein people who require supportive living or designated assisted living, or perhaps it's long-term care type living, are going to have the level of service they need rise up to their expectations so that they don't have to move to a different facility to get it. It's very simply called aging in place, and that is a fundamental part of this whole budget as well.

I know there are probably other speakers who wish to address the budget and the throne speech and a number of other issues that are before us, but on that note, I would like to move that we adjourn debate at this time.

The Speaker: I will not call that question until we deal, first of all, with Standing Order 29(2)(a). There are five minutes available if there are questions. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, that's an interesting discussion by the minister, and I have some comments for the minister that I'd like to get further explanation for, that he didn't deal with in his topic. As you know, Mr. Minister, in rural Alberta there's been an issue with rural retention of our doctors and recruitment. I sent you a note just recently from Dr. De Jongh, the president of the primary care network in the McLeod River area out of Whitecourt. The issue of retention of our doctors and recruiting doctors in rural Alberta: you seem to have left that out of your discussion. I know it's in the five-year plan. I know we're well funded. Can you give us some comments on that?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. Hon. member, I'd be very happy to do that. This is an issue near and dear to my heart as well. As most people here would know, I grew up in rural Alberta. I'm very proud of that. I get it, as they say. I understand what some of the challenges are. I have visited numerous hospitals across the entire spectrum, including High Prairie, Slave Lake, Wabasca, Whitecourt, Mayerthorpe, and elsewhere.

Nonetheless, the fact is that we do have a number of incentive programs out there, Mr. Speaker, primarily under RPAP, which is the rural physician action plan. Now, that's just one example of a number of programs that we have to help recruit and retain doctors. There are issues in RPAP and in other parts of our incentive program wherein we actually physically pay doctors to help them set up their offices. I think it's a grant of about $10,000. It's a magnet. It's only one of many.

On the other side, we have a deal now with the University of Alberta and, I believe, if I'm not mistaken, also with the University of Calgary wherein second-year and third-year students are automatically encouraged to go to rural Alberta, spend time there as part of their training piece. You know, Mr. Speaker, we're seeing some good results from that because they are starting to get a real affinity for rural life. It's a great life, and rural communities here present it very, very well.

In total, Mr. Speaker, we have about 7,697 fully registered physicians in Alberta. That, hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, is up from 7,477 in 2009. That's a difference of about 220 more, or an increase of about 3 per cent, over where we were at. That's very good news.

With respect to other incentives we also have a number of benefits that are provided to our doctors. There are benefits for retention. There is what I'll call a bonus – you have to apply for it if you're a doctor – that is paid to doctors for keeping their practices going in Alberta. I think it's about $10,000 or $11,000 a year for those who apply for it. There are other benefits there, too.

We have an education component wherein we help doctors with education upgrading costs or training upgrading costs. We have programs that deal with parental leave or maternity leave specifically. We have programs that help support doctors with stress or bereavement issues. There are a number of these programs.

The physician office supply program is another one that we have, where we help them with upgrading their computers. As you know, we're heading faster than ever toward a paperless office situation around the world, and health care is no exception, Mr. Speaker. What it basically means is that we're trying to get electronic medical records interfacing with electronic health records so that when you or I or any Albertan shows up in a hospital with an emergency, they have information at their fingertips. That's another important program.

When you put all of that together, it is tens of millions of dollars. It probably amounts to about $200 million all in. I'm going a little bit by memory here, obviously.

Hon. member, please know that I am very committed to helping wherever I can to assist with the recruitment of more doctors and the retention of those that we have so that we can help deliver on the five-year health action plan goals and strategies that I alluded to a little bit earlier.

I understand someone else has a question, so I'll take my seat.

The Speaker: Well, there are 14 seconds left, so whoever wants to have a question, go for it.

All right. We've got an adjournment motion before us.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

Asia Advisory Council Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations on behalf of the hon. Premier.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very privileged to rise for second reading of Bill 1. I so move the Asia Advisory Council Act, 2011.

At the heart of Bill 1 is the need for Alberta to secure its prosperity and quality of life for the 21st century. For a long time we've relied heavily on the U.S. to buy our products and invest in our province, but the world is changing and so is the world economic order. By passing the Asia Advisory Council Act, you'll be supporting Alberta's efforts to change with it.

We need to pursue new and bigger markets, and that means setting our sights on Asia, a market of billions that holds enormous potential for our province. We have a need to diversify. Alberta has long been Canada's economic engine. The strength of our economy positioned us to weather the storms that came with the financial crisis in 2008 and subsequent global recession. As the world recovers, Alberta continues to be on a track to move forward, to continue to lead the nation in prosperity, and to expand our presence as a player on the global stage.

Like other places Alberta felt the impacts of the recession, but not only did we survive it; we learned from it. What we learned was this: don't put all your eggs in one basket. America has long been Canada's strongest trading partner, and as a destination for 85 per cent of Alberta's exports in many ways it's also long been our basket.

Things have changed. With a national debt last month of more than $14 trillion America is not as reliable as it once was as a destination for our exports. For Americans the road to good economic health is going to be a long and winding one. There is no doubt the U.S. will rally and come back, but it may take years. All of this sends a strong message to Alberta. Our road to success in the markets lies in diversifying our products and our exports.

Market diversity is one of the main goals of Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act. If passed, the Asia Advisory Council Act would establish a council of 10 members who represent a cross-section of organizations and interests, including the business, cultural, and academic communities. The members of the council would have the perspective and expertise to advise the government on ways to advance Alberta's business and cultural interests in Asia.

Asia is an immense market of 4 billion people. It has a growing middle class and a growing demand for Alberta's products. The region is Alberta's second-largest export market, worth over $6.5 billion in 2009. Opportunities for Albertans and Alberta are tremendous and within our reach by strengthening our ties with markets in China, India, Japan, and Korea. We've long understood the advantages of gaining better access to the region, and strengthening our ties is part of our day-to-day business.

One of Alberta's earliest connections to Asia was our twinning with Heilongjiang in China. The twinning has led to growing economic, scientific, and cultural ties. We're celebrating the 30th anniversary of this twinning this year.

As well as in China Alberta has international offices in Hong Kong, Taiwan, Japan, and South Korea. These offices play a key role in building and maintaining relations with our Asia partners.

In these past few months our Alberta-Japan office hosted a carbon capture and storage and green technology seminar. Held just last month, the seminar focused on our investment here on initiatives and climate change policy for 30 senior executives from Japan's energy sector.

With the support of the Alberta-Korea office the Calgary Airport Authority established Korean Air's direct service flight into Calgary last summer. This expanded air service is essential to increasing tourism, investment, and attracting international students from Korea to Alberta.

Last May Premier Stelmach joined the Premiers of B.C. and Saskatchewan on a mission to China.

The Speaker: Uh-uh.

Ms Evans: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. Our Premier joined the Premiers of B.C. and Saskatchewan on a mission to China and Japan. On that trip they opened up a joint trade and investment office in Shanghai.

In November the Premier led a mission to India, where he met business and government leaders to cultivate new business relationships and strengthen current ties. Thanks to the involvement of members of this House, Mr. Speaker, I'm convinced that this visit acknowledged for the Premier the very great importance of expanding our relationships with India.

Last month, when I visited Thailand on the heels of an investment by their national company in energy of over $2 billion, we noted even greater interest in Alberta as a responsible energy partner for future development by the people of Thailand. They were excited, to say the least, about the opportunities they perceive in Alberta.

Our work is continuing to pay off. Over the past two years Asian investment in Alberta has neared $20 billion. This includes PetroChina's $5.4 billion investment in EnCana natural gas ventures and $1.9 billion for a 60 per cent share in two Athabasca oil sands projects; Sinopec's $4.65 billion stake in Syncrude; China Investment Corporation's of $1.25 billion into Penn West Energy; Korea National Oil Corporation's investment of $4.1 billion to buy Harvest energy; and, as I mentioned previously, the Thailand investment purchasing 40 per cent of Statoil projects in Alberta.

We certainly welcome the interest in investment in our oil sands, but we know our economic future lies in the diversification of our economy. We're seeing a growing number of Canadian and Alberta-based companies make inroads in Asia. For example, in the legal sector Bennett Jones, a law firm with roots in Calgary and in Edmonton, and Blakes, a firm with an office in Calgary, have both established offices in Beijing. Most recently Gowlings has become the first Canadian law firm to sign a bilateral co-operative agreement with the China Council for Promotion of International Trade.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

There was more good news last month when the Bank of China announced it will open an office in Calgary, its third Canadian location. This was a very positive announcement. Financial institutions go where their customers go, and the Bank of China is seeing their customers come here. In terms of growing market opportunities this signals broader investments to come.

We're also forging important ties in academia. The universities of Alberta and Calgary, Grant MacEwan University, NAIT, SAIT: all of them have relationships with educational institutes that allow them to tap into the best and brightest of minds. For example, the Prince Takamado Japan Centre for Teaching and Research at the University of Alberta brings together universities from Japan and Canada to promote the exchange of undergrad and grad students. The Confucius Institute in Edmonton is a government of China sponsored centre that works in partnership with the Edmonton public school board. The institute promotes Mandarin and Chinese culture and provides Chinese-language services to the public schools.

Mr. Speaker, establishing the Asia advisory council would not only be our first step towards deepening our ties with the entire region; it would be a very important step. We need to shape a 21st century vision for Alberta-Asia relations. Once Bill 1 is passed, we hope to see the best and brightest minds sit on the council. The people on this council will be experts on Asia. We'll be looking for members from the business sector who have expertise in Asian markets. We'll be looking in academia and education and in arts and other sectors for similar experts. We want people with a keen understanding of the Asian market who are able and willing to provide Alberta with the knowledge, perspective, and sensitivities to expand our relationships in the region. We want the best because this council can play such an important role as we take a focused and deliberate approach to relationship building in Asia.

The deliberate approach has worked well for us in the past. Since early 2005 we have pursued a direct and active role in Canada-U.S. relations. Most notably, we established a policy-oriented office in Washington, DC. We put ourselves on the U.S. radar screen in the U.S. capital. In Canada we've been able to influence Canadian policy toward a more positive approach to the U.S. We know that as we look to new and bigger markets, the same approach will bring stronger relationships and opportunities with Asia.

With the creation of this council we'll open doors even wider for a bigger and brighter future for Alberta and Albertans. We look forward to more opportunities to expand our leading growth sectors like information and communication technology, nanotechnology, aerospace, and defence, green building products, and health and medical technology. We will continue to work towards advancing our ties with Asia in all of these industry sectors, and that means attracting not only investment from the region but the skilled and talented people who can bring their expertise to Alberta. Asian countries are Alberta's number one source for immigration. Continuing to attract people from the region to Alberta will strengthen our partnerships and benefit both Alberta and Asia.

We hope that you support this bill, that you will enable us to create a council of experts whose mandate is to identify and advise us of opportunities for co-operation with Asia, a council that will help us capitalize on the connections we've already made in business, education, research, and culture and, most importantly, will help us continue to forge new roads, new opportunities, and maintain a reputation as both an excellent destination for investment and a leading player on the global stage.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members to support this bill. With that, I would ask you to allow me to adjourn debate on Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2 Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to second reading of Bill 2, the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2011.

I want to thank the hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services and her department for their initiative in bringing forth this important piece of legislation and for allowing me the privilege of sponsoring the bill in the House.

Family violence has devastating consequences, Mr. Speaker, for many people in our province. One of our government's top priorities is to prevent and address family violence so that all Albertans feel safe in their homes and communities. This bill will enhance the safety of individuals and families affected by family violence through protection orders to protect those who have experienced family violence and to prevent further violence. Each year 1,700 applications for emergency protection orders are made in the province of Alberta, and 80 per cent of those are granted.

The proposed amendments reflect the advice received from key stakeholders on needed changes. Those stakeholders included the law enforcement communities and Crown prosecutors. The most significant changes brought about by these amendments would be to ensure that there is more consistent enforcement of protection orders and that breaches are met with sanctions which will send a strong message to perpetrators that breaches will not be tolerated.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, the act does not provide any specific provisions for prosecuting breaches of protection orders. Presently the situation is that police and prosecutors have the option of prosecuting a breach of a protection order either as ordinary civil contempt of court or as a violation of section 127 of the Criminal Code of Canada, which is a general provision that creates an offence for breaching a court order. Since both of these provisions are applicable to a whole range of breaches of court orders, some of which are minor, some of which are very serious, and everything in between, the penalties that are meted out under each of those particular avenues of prosecution varied quite considerably. So this has led to some inconsistencies in the penalties which are applied for breaches of protection orders.

The amendment which is proposed in this bill will clearly spell out in the act that breaching a protection order is an offence, and it will carry specific penalties. Mr. Speaker, I believe that these measures will help to ensure consistent enforcement across the province. The department will continue to work closely with law enforcement and the legal community in the event that these amendments are passed, and they will be asked to provide input on any required changes.

The penalties proposed in these amendments, Mr. Speaker, were determined in discussions with Justice and Attorney General and a review of other domestic violence legislation across the country. The bill proposes fines up to $5,000 or possible jail time of up to 30 days or both for a first offence, mandatory jail time ranging from a minimum of 14 days up to 18 months for a second offence, and a minimum of 30 days' incarceration and up to 24 months for third and subsequent offences. If passed, this legislation will send a very strong message that a breach of a protection order is a serious matter which will bear very significant consequences.

The remaining three amendments are housekeeping issues that will help clarify the processes and streamline administration of the act by the courts. The first will repeal a section that specifies the type of justice of the peace who has the authority to grant emergency protection orders. This will leave the assignment of a justice of the peace up to the discretion of the justice system, which will align the Protection Against Family Violence Act with changes to the Justice of the Peace Act.

Amendments to the Protection Against Family Violence Act will also clarify how evidence is presented and considered when emergency protection orders granted by the provincial court are later confirmed and possibly extended by the Court of Queen's Bench. Amendments will also clearly define the type of communication considered contact under a protection order. Protection orders may include provisions forbidding a perpetrator from contacting the abused person. The change will clarify that contact includes both direct and indirect communication. Including indirect communication will make it clear that a perpetrator cannot harass someone indirectly; for example, using a third party to contact an individual under a protection order.

Mr. Speaker, the measures in these amendments will not be a cure-all for family violence. Other measures such as women's shelters, safe visitation sites, early intervention and counselling, and addiction treatments are all being improved by the minister and her department, all with a view to breaking the cycle of family violence. However, these proposed amendments will improve our response to this issue, and they will provide some additional measure of increased protection for people affected by family violence.

I am therefore very pleased to move second reading of Bill 2, the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2011.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would move adjournment of debate on the bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 3 Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 3, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act.

Mr. Speaker, before us today we have a series of relatively straightforward proposed legislative revisions that involve a number of required wording changes to the current Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act. Essentially, in this amendment act we're looking at consolidating the existing geological and geophysical classes of licensure in Alberta into a single class to be known as geoscience. This change is in keeping with what's happening in the other jurisdictions across Canada with the exceptions of Prince Edward Island and the Yukon, which have not implemented similar legislation.

By passing this amendment act, we will be harmonizing our professional geoscience legislation with that of other jurisdictions and, in so doing, fostering labour mobility across our great country. Freedom of interprovincial movement of professionals is part of our obligation under the national agreement on internal trade and the New West Partnership trade agreement with Saskatchewan and British Columbia, Mr. Speaker.

Members of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta, or APEGGA, the association that oversees these professions, voted in favour of these changes at their 2009 annual general meeting. I'd also like to point out that this amendment act would apply to approximately 5,400 individuals practising geology or geophysics in Alberta. That is roughly 10 per cent of APEGGA's current membership.

Consultations were conducted with a total of 34 professional and industry associations, postsecondary institutes, and government departments in the development of these changes. APEGGA specifically discussed these changes with the Alberta Institute of Agrologists, the Association of the Chemical Profession of Alberta, the Alberta Society of Professional Biologists, and the Alberta colleges of professional foresters and professional forest technologists since these organizations had raised a few questions when the changes were first proposed.

Mr. Speaker, these professional regulatory organizations met and subsequently agreed that the inclusion of earth sciences and the environment fits within the new definition of the practice of geoscience. They also recognize that all their members work in the broad field of earth sciences and the environment, and any future concerns regarding the potential overlap of these professional responsibilities could be dealt with at the organizational level.

Mr. Speaker, if these proposed amendments pass, we would be repealing the existing definitions of the practice of geology and geophysics and would replace them with a single new geoscience definition of practice. The term "geosciences" more accurately reflects the type of work and activities typically carried out by our geologists and geophysicists.

As proposed in this amendment act, the definition of geoscience will now include references to earth sciences, exploration, and environmental activities, as is the case in various ways in five other provinces, Mr. Speaker. This reflects the growing importance of environmental stewardship within the professional activities and accountabilities of geoscientists. It also serves to provide Alberta with one of the most comprehensive pieces of professional geoscience legislation in the country.

Through these proposed amendments geoscientists in Alberta will have one of the most encompassing scopes of practice in all of Canada. This proposed act will continue to ensure that these practitioners provide the highest standards of professional services.

Mr. Speaker, the protected titles for professional geoscientists in Alberta would change under these proposed amendments. The existing protected titles of professional geologists, or P.Geol., and professional geophysicists, or P.Geoph., would be replaced by the new title of professional geoscientist, or P.Geo. Individuals who hold the existing professional geologist or geophysicist designations would be allowed to keep their current titles if they prefer. However, should the Legislature approve these amendments, all newly registered members in these fields will be issued the professional geoscientist title.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of the consolidation of the terms "geology" and "geophysics" into the combined term "geoscience" a number of consequential wording changes would be required throughout the existing Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act. The first of these is to rename the act itself. If passed, the act would become the engineering and geoscience professions act.

In a similar vein, Mr. Speaker, APEGGA's name would also be changed to the association of professional engineers and geoscientists of Alberta. The acronym will drop one G, but it would still be pronounced the same as before, so just APEGA with one G as opposed to the current two Gs. There are many other examples throughout the existing act that would need to change to reflect the consolidation of geology and geophysics into geoscience. I won't go through them all, Mr. Speaker, but suffice it to say that these are consequential wording changes that need to be made to ensure that the practice and definition of geoscience is consistently applied throughout the act.

One other change included in these proposed amendments is the creation of the position of chief executive officer within the APEGGA management structure. The new advocacy position is separate and distinct from the current registrar that is stated in the act. Members of APEGGA approved the new position at their 2010 annual general meeting, Mr. Speaker.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to be clear that this proposed legislation will ensure that Alberta remains a leader in the development of professional legislation that not only protects the public interest but also reflects the current scope of work done by geologists and geophysicists today.

These amendments, Mr. Speaker, have the full support of the Alberta government departments, many professional and industry organizations, the academic community, and Alberta's municipalities. They also fit squarely with the Alberta government's commitment to labour mobility in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to sponsor Bill 3, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2011, and I encourage all of my colleagues in the Legislature to support its passage.

I move to adjourn debate. Thank you.

Bill 4

Securities Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 4, the Securities Amendment Act, 2011.

Mr. Speaker, securities regulation is crucial to the smooth functioning of any capital market and especially here in Alberta, where it is extremely important to our economy. Canada's current securities regulatory system is rated as one of the best in the world by a number of independent think tanks from around the world, including the World Bank.

In the interest of maintaining a system that is working well, Alberta together with Quebec, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan is challenging the unprecedented attempt by the federal government to impose its control over this area of provincial jurisdiction. Alberta has made a strong case before the Alberta and Quebec courts of appeal, and the government will be presenting our case before the Supreme Court of Canada in April of this year.

Mr. Speaker, the government will continue to oppose this move by the federal government to create a single federal securities regulator. There is no evidence to support the purported benefits of this nonexistent single federal regulator as the current system is working very well. All one has to do is look at how well Canada fared in light of the global economic crisis. The current system is a decentralized yet national system.

While the passport system is working very well, any securities regulatory system must constantly evolve, innovate, and reform to keep pace with changing market conditions. The Securities Amendment Act which we are bringing forth furthers the work that Alberta has done in modernizing, streamlining, and harmonizing securities legislation over the past six years under the auspices of the 2004 provincial-territorial memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation.

There are several amendments in this bill that provide clarification, but the majority are needed to keep Canada's current decentralized securities regulatory system harmonized. I'd like to touch on a couple of key amendments that add flexibility to the regulatory framework for credit rating organizations such as Moody's and Standard & Poor's.

Last year we created a harmonized statutory framework for regulating credit rating organizations to better protect investors across Canada. This was part of the world-wide response by securities regulators to the global financial crisis. The Alberta Securities Commission is seeking additional ways to allow it to respond more quickly to changing market conditions. Accordingly one of the amendments in this bill proposes that credit rating organizations be officially designated by the Alberta Securities Commission in order for its ratings to be used as official ratings under Alberta's securities laws. These amendments will allow the ASC to adjust the minimum rating investment requirements in appropriate situations like a global financial crisis. In other words, before any investment can be made, the security or whatever the investment is has to be graded at or above a certain level such as B or double-A, for example.

The recent global financial crisis demonstrates the integral role played by clearing agencies in maintaining the integrity of the Canadian financial system. The clearing agencies along with stock exchanges facilitate any trading in securities such as stocks, bonds, and futures. Clearing agencies complete transactions by ensuring that the seller gets paid and that the purchaser gets what was purchased. Currently there are three clearing agencies providing settlement and clearance services across Canada: the Canada Depository Services for equity securities, the Canadian Derivatives Clearing Corporation for exchange-traded derivatives, and the Calgary-based Natural Gas Exchange for energy, including natural gas, crude oil, and electricity contracts.

This legislation will require any clearing agency operating in Alberta to be recognized by the ASC, just like a stock exchange operating in Alberta must be recognized. This will mean a clearing agency must have rules in place to ensure that it operates in a fair and orderly manner for the protection of investors. Investor protection is what securities regulation is all about. These amendments streamline and harmonize our legislation so that it is up to date and address regulatory gaps in order to better protect investors.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot afford to wait for the final outcome of the provincial and federal references before updating our securities legislation. These amendments are needed now.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 4.

Bill 5

Notice to the Attorney General Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 5, the Notice to the Attorney General Act.

Mr. Speaker, it is important for the Attorney General to receive notice about a variety of issues so that they are able to protect the interests of Albertans and are well prepared to defend the validity of Alberta's legislation. In addition, prompt and timely notice to the Attorney General will reduce delays and increase the efficiency of the court system.

For example, Bill 5 will clarify that there is a duty to provide notice of allegations of inadequate consultation with aboriginal peoples. The government has a legal duty to consult aboriginal peoples when there is a potential adverse impact on any aboriginal treaty or right. However, currently for someone alleging before a court or tribunal that the government has not met this duty to consult, there is no requirement that the person notify the Attorney General. Under Bill 5 it will be clear that this obligation to notify the Attorney General is mandatory, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 5 will also clarify and simplify another important procedure. Currently Alberta's Attorney General must be formally notified when anyone formally questions, again through the courts, the constitutional validity of the province's laws. This notification is of course designed to allow the Attorney General to be prepared to appear and be heard in any proceeding on behalf of the people of Alberta. It is vital and in the interest of all Albertans that the Attorney General be notified in this way. Doing so ensures that the Attorney General can be properly prepared to defend the validity of Alberta's legislation.

At present, Mr. Speaker, these requirements to notify the Attorney General are contained in Alberta's Judicature Act and the Administrative Procedures and Jurisdiction Act. Bill 5 will consolidate these notification requirements into the Notice to the Attorney General Act. The notification provisions in the Judicature Act and the Administrative Procedures and Jurisdiction Act would be repealed. Consolidating these notice requirements in one place will increase transparency as well as make it easier to comply with these requirements.

The Notice to the Attorney General Act will also facilitate future changes that may become necessary as trends in litigation evolve over time. Bill 5 will provide the authority for regulations adopting new notice requirements as they are needed. This will help ensure that the Attorney General receives the type of information that is needed in situations involving aboriginal consultation or other constitutional matters. This legislation ensures that the Attorney General is aware of and prepared to deal with issues important to all Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

I would encourage all hon. members to support Bill 5. At this time I would move that we adjourn debate, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

Bill 6

Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to stand before the Assembly today and move second reading of Bill 6, the Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011.

The Rules of Court, which govern practice and procedure in the Court of Queen's Bench, were substantially revised after a multi-year review. I'm very pleased to fulfill this function on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General because I know how much work went into this, and I know the passion that he has for these particular rules since he is a lawyer himself.

Mr. Speaker, the review was led by the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and it was supported by the judiciary, by Alberta Justice, by a representative from the legal profession, and also by other stakeholders. The new rules, which came into effect on November 1, 2010, simplify and update many of the procedures in the litigation process. This particular bill will amend language and procedures relating to court proceedings in a number of acts to make them consistent with the new language and updated procedures used in the Alberta Rules of Court. The changes will help Albertans better understand civil litigation.

There are some amendments that I'd like to comment on here briefly. Just let me explain to all members and to all Albertans participating in their homes or wherever how these amendments that are proposed in this bill will streamline processes and make court proceedings clearer and far easier to understand.

A number of acts, such as the old rules, use the terms "guardian ad litem" and "next friend" to describe a person who defends or brings a lawsuit on behalf of a person who cannot defend or bring the lawsuit personally, such as would be the case with a dependent adult or a child. One term applies to a person who defends a lawsuit, the other to a person who brings a lawsuit, which can be confusing, obviously. "Guardian ad litem" and "next friend" will be replaced by the single modernized term "litigation representative," which is the term used in the new rules to describe a person who defends or brings a lawsuit on behalf of people who cannot do so themselves.

Some acts, including the Residential Tenancies Act, follow the procedure in the old rules for the recovery of possession of land or premises. This is another important point. The old rules required a person who obtained a court order giving them the right to recover possession of land or premises to go back to court to obtain a document called a writ to have the court order enforced. Now procedures in the new rules allow that court order to be enforced without having to obtain a writ. The act will be amended to be consistent with procedures in the new rules, thus eliminating the requirement to obtain the writ and thus simplifying the procedure for recovering possession of land or premises. Some acts, including the Land Titles Act, have provisions rooted in the old rules, rules that required many court documents to have the court seal put on them. This is another important point because the new rules will streamline processes by providing that the court seal be used only as necessary. The acts will be amended to remove the requirement for the court seal to be put on certain documents consistent with the new rules.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see and hear from the examples I've just outlined, this legislation will ensure that the acts are consistent with the new rules. Bill 6, in fact, will help Albertans better understand and navigate the court system, allowing them greater access to justice. Therefore, I would urge all members to support this important piece of legislation, and at this time I'd like to move that we adjourn debate on this bill.

Thank you very much.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 7
Corrections Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure on behalf of the hon. minister to move second reading of the Corrections Amendment Act, 2011.

I'd just say that I will be supporting this particular legislation. I think it's an important piece of legislation for Albertans to have.

I will move that we adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 8
Missing Persons Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand before the Assembly today and move second reading of Bill 8, Missing Persons Act.

This act will allow a police agency to access the personal information they need to help find missing persons in cases where the police have no reason to suspect that a crime has been committed. In the spring of 2010 the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police passed a resolution asking the government of Alberta to develop missing persons legislation. After extensive consultation with the Calgary Police Service, the Edmonton Police Service, and the RCMP, I'm pleased to be speaking to that legislation today in the House, Mr. Speaker.

Currently when police are conducting a criminal investigation, they obtain a production order under the Criminal Code to access records and information. However, when police are conducting a missing persons investigation where no crime is suspected, a production order is not available. This inability to access information has the ability to stall or halt missing persons investigations. The Missing Persons Act was developed to allow access to information critical in missing persons investigations, thereby increasing the ability to conduct a successful investigation.

The Missing Persons Act is based on the belief that an adult who is not a represented adult has a right to disappear if they choose. For all missing persons investigations the information collected under the Missing Persons Act is confidential. Police will only be able to use or release this information for those uses that are permitted in the Missing Persons Act. Police will be able to use the information when the missing persons investigation becomes a criminal investigation. The Missing Persons Act allows police to move quickly and efficiently locate missing persons. It also ensures that the information collected is protected if the formerly missing person does not want to be contacted.

A person who contravenes the privacy and permitted use sections of the Missing Persons Act, as with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not more than $10,000.

To access information, police will obtain a court order that will set out what records are required. The court will not be able to allow access to records that are protected by the solicitor-client privilege.

In emergency situations, when police believe a missing person may be at risk of harm or death, the police can issue a demand for a specified list of records that are urgently needed to locate a missing person. Records and information collected must be kept separate from other police agency records. If a person fails to comply with a police demand, police can obtain a court order directing the person to comply.

If the missing person is a minor or a represented adult under the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act, the court can authorize the police to enter premises to look for the missing person, by force if necessary, Mr. Speaker. When there is a reason to believe that a minor or a represented adult is in the company of a third party, the court can order the release of the third party's records in order to give police the information needed to find the minor or represented adult.

Alberta is the first jurisdiction in Canada to introduce legislation dedicated to assisting police with missing persons investigations. This bill will increase the efficiency and effectiveness of missing persons investigations. Mr. Speaker, helping families locate loved ones who have been reported missing is an extremely important job done by our police services across this province. The Missing Persons Act will provide the police with another tool to bring these cases to a quick and positive outcome.

Mr. Speaker, all of us in this House have opened the newspaper and read stories about people who have seemingly vanished. In many of these cases it's extremely difficult for police to make a determination of a criminal act. These stories are usually wrought with the anguish of family members and friends left with no answers as to where they've gone or what to do next. I can think of several of these cases in Alberta just over the past couple of years.

There is a case in Edmonton right now where an elderly couple has gone missing seemingly without a trace. Co-workers, friends, and family members are at a complete loss as to what has happened to them. But the Edmonton police do not have access to the records they would need to make a possible advancement in this case, so months since the disappearance of their loved ones they continue to wait and hold out hope. There are stories like this across the province, and my heart goes out to the families. I hope this legislation will help provide some of those answers when they are needed most.

I'd like to give a special commendation to the members for Calgary-Currie and Airdrie-Chestermere for meeting with me and hearing the merits of this bill. Thank you both for taking the time to get a better understanding of what this bill can accomplish and the impact it can have for thousands of Albertans and their families.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move to adjourn debate at this time. Thank you, sir.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Drysdale moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour Colonel (Retired) the Honourable Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 23: Mr. Lukaszuk]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to be able to rise this afternoon and offer a few of my comments on the throne speech which was delivered to members of this Assembly last week. The speech at the time, when I first saw it, struck me as incredibly familiar, and I think that in many ways it was a speech that consisted of promises being reissued over and over again.

Several of the promises that were identified in that speech were, in fact, sort of recycled positions from previous occasions, and it really highlighted for me the lack of energy and the lack of focus and the lack of direction that this government is bringing into this Assembly this spring. It was a throne speech that really did not set out a particularly strong vision. It claimed to do that, but then by reaching back to promises and statements that had been made in previous throne speeches year after year, the speech ultimately rang very hollow, and I think it was very disappointing for a number of Albertans.

This was a speech that did a lot of what this government tends to do in that it really talks the talk, but year after year after year it fails to walk the walk, as it were. We hear grand statements of investing in the future, of attracting people to Alberta, investing in the education of young Albertans, yet we don't see any kind of significant action in that regard. As a result, we end up continuing a failed record of broken promises to Albertans, and it's a number of these broken promises that I'd like to talk a little bit about right now as a starting point.

I think that the throne speech itself talked about the need to care for our seniors and to cherish and invest in our health care system and improve our health care system. Unfortunately, though, the throne speech itself continued to insist upon referring to investments that are clearly shown to not be what is needed by Alberta seniors and not what is needed within our health care system in order to take the pressure off it, whether we're talking about our emergency rooms or our surgical suites or our acute-care beds. In essence, the throne speech failed to promise what Albertans were promised in the 2008 election and which the government has failed to deliver, which is a genuine investment in providing proper long-term care for our seniors and other disabled Albertans.

In failing to talk about that and, instead, using perhaps focus-tested words that they think Albertans actually interpret as being meaningful, continuing care and assisted living – you know, we can talk about all the different ways in which the government talks about their alternative to long-term care, but Albertans get it. Albertans understand, Mr. Speaker, that what's happening here is that the government is letting them down, that the government made a promise, but they are not keeping their promise, and they are trying to play a quick game of bait and switch. Frankly, Albertans are not falling for that game.

The other thing that I was disappointed to not see enough attention paid to in the throne speech is the issue of mental health. For years this province has desperately ignored the state of mental health throughout the province and throughout communities all over the province. In so doing, again, we contribute directly to increasing costs at the most expensive point within our health care system, and that is in acute-care beds and in emergency rooms and in hospitals.

Not only do we do that – and I don't like to just talk about it from a cost perspective; I also want to talk about what it means for Albertans – but by failing to provide proper mental health services within our communities, we undermine our communities, we undermine our relationships with each other, and we make a statement about the strength of our communities and the strength of our commitment to one another, which, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, is not a statement about which I am at all proud. It is a statement which, unfortunately, has led to a lot of deprivation in the lives of Albertans struggling with mental health issues and in the lives of their families. By failing to address that issue in the throne speech, this government has once again left many Albertans behind.

Another thing that the throne speech spoke about was education. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that one of the areas that is under increasing pressure within our province is our education system. At the beginning of this decade the government took the time to establish the Learning Commission. Clear recommendations were made, not all of which I agree with, but there were, nonetheless, many recommendations made, and those recommendations have been consistently ignored. Year after year the government gets further and further away from the objectives that were included in those recommendations that were geared towards improving the educational outcomes and success of Alberta's children and young adults. Well, children at that point because it was K to 12.

At the point we're at now, we see class sizes growing. Then in the midst of that, we see the infrastructure deficit coming to roost in communities across the province where inadequate schooling facilities are provided. In the meantime the government is jeopardizing and gambling with Albertans' future by choosing to do the inadequate amount of capital construction required in education through P3 models.

More importantly, though, is that there is a profound problem developing in terms of the way we are failing special-needs children within our education system. The throne speech reference to a positive future with respect to what the expectations can be for special-needs children and their families is very misleading because the government's plan with respect to setting the direction is in many ways analogous to the kind of plan that governments came up with in the early '70s, when they said they were going to, you know, deinstitutionalize people and follow them into the community and that everything would just sort of organically work for those people. Of course, what happened was that we created a homeless population that we are profoundly unable to deal with right now.

Of course, it's not that I'm equating special-needs students to people with mental illnesses one way or the other. The point is that when you make grand statements of how the community will just organically care for people that need specific, professional, best-practice, peer-researched, properly evaluated, well-trained support in our education system, and then you suggest that they will somehow organically be supported by changing the rules and removing the rules, then what you're really doing is releasing those kids into the education community with the clear understanding and expectation that they will be lost within that community and that the quality of the education they receive will deteriorate dramatically.

I say this because, you know, over the last three years I have spoken to people who work within the system – teachers, parents, kids who've graduated from the system, school trustees, speech pathologists, psychologists – and they all say that they're incredibly worried about the direction the government is taking in education as it relates to special-needs children. There is nothing that has been said or done by this government that should expect us to have any faith that we will see anything other than a significant reduction in the support provided to special-needs kids over the course of the next five or 10 years. That process is signalled within this throne speech, and it is very concerning to many Albertans.

Another area, again, when I talk about talking the talk but not walking the walk, is the environment. For years now, since I've been elected, I've heard the government plan to put into place, you know, land-use frameworks: we can't designate a park until we've got the land-use framework in place, and we can't set water-use limits here until we've got the land-use framework in place, and we can't do any of this stuff. Then, of course, meanwhile, industrial development and other types of development continue unfettered. We continue to talk about a land-use framework, but of course the money to actually fund the development of that framework has been cut over the last couple of years, and now we anticipate a number of changes to that process anyway.

In the meantime, for the last two and a half or three years, that process has been used as an excuse for inaction by this government on a whole number of different areas that ultimately impact the integrity and the sustainability of our environment across the province. So it's another example of talk, talk, talk but not actually getting anything done, not actually setting into place any new programs or policies or changes to how we do things.

When it comes to the environment, generally we have a government that anticipates a tripling of oil and gas revenues over the course of the next 10 to 15 years, yet we have not increased resources or plans to increase the quality or the quantity of our environmental protection efforts, which, of course, means that we actually plan to reduce the quality and the quantity of our environmental protection efforts given the expected increase in industrial activity. This again is another betrayal of future generations, of future Albertans. By failing to take responsibility for what we need to do to protect our environment, by failing to stand up for Albertans' public interests against specific industrial projects or in association with, even, specific industrial projects, this government betrays the future of Albertans.

Industrial development, job creation activities can go forward, should go forward, but they should and must go forward with a rigorous – rigorous – environmental regime in place, and that is not what we have right now. Over the last six months we have had repeated third-party experts, academics who were not tied to any particular financial interest, observe and assess our environmental regime, and every time it has come up failing. Every time it has come up inadequate. Over and over and over again we are told that this government has dropped the ball in terms of environmental protection.

We don't even know what we're not doing because we're so behind in checking on what we're doing, yet this government brings forward a vision in that regard that makes no provision for acting quickly to increase or improve our environmental protection regime in this province. In so doing, we once again hear lots of talk but, really, absolutely no action, and it's the kind of thing that once again will come home to roost for Albertans long into the future. That's the kind of decision-making that this government often does. It's decision-making that's easy now but not so easy to address five, 10, 15 years down the road.

Another area that, of course, we are concerned about is that once again the government continues to shortchange Albertans in our collection of resource revenue. The throne speech reaffirms the plan to move forward on continuing to give royalty breaks to nonrenewable resource producers in our province such that we have probably one of the least productive royalty regimes in the developed world, yet at the same time we have the most stable resource-producing environment. We have the ability to sit at the table and demand more on behalf of Albertans, on behalf of Albertans who will come after us, but we don't do it because it's a tough job and we tend to avoid tough jobs in this government. Instead, Albertans have a savings fund from our vast, vast nonrenewable resources which is a pittance compared to any other developed country that sees most of its economic activity coming from the nonrenewable resource sector, and that again is a betrayal to future Albertans.

I do want to talk a little bit as well about where we're going in the future . . . [Ms Notley's speaking time expired] I appear to be finished.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. I believe the hon. member had an important message in all of this, and we were all paying rapt attention. I know that she probably got cut short, so if she just wanted to complete her comments, I would allow her that privilege.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. I will ever so briefly say – there were just a couple more points – that as the government again talks about looking to the future, making Alberta a vibrant place to invest and to move forward in, we of course are looking at a plan to reduce the investment in advanced education and to also reduce the supports that we provide to new immigrants, that in theory we want to have move to our province, who will then contribute to the type of growth that the government suggests it's interested in achieving in the future. It seems to me to be yet another example of saying one thing but doing another.

Having said that, though, I would like to move adjournment of this debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In view of good progress this afternoon I'm going to move that we adjourn the Assembly until 1:30 tomorrow and just remind members that the policy field committee called Resources and Environment will be reconvening at 6:30 p.m. in this Chamber to discuss the estimates related to International and Intergovernmental Relations.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:10 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 2, 2011

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to stand and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature today a school from my constituency. We have 26 grade 6 students from Spruce View school in Spruce View, Alberta. They're accompanied by their teacher, Ms Teri Patterson, and parent helpers Mr. Kevin Newsham, Mrs. Cari Smith and Lincoln, and Mrs. Julie Roy. As I've said in this House many times before, it's great to have children here to watch the proceedings because, as you know, they will be our leaders of tomorrow. I'd like them to rise.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a very enthusiastic class from St. Vincent elementary school. The class made their way from my constituency of Edmonton-Glenora to take in a tour of the building and to witness the excitement of question period. I had a great picture with them. I would like to acknowledge the teachers, Mrs. Angela Whelan and Mrs. Kimberley Elvidge, and the parent helpers, Mrs. Christine Lucadello and Mrs. Kelly Mis. I'd like the class and the teachers and parent helpers to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to you and through you 17 grade 5/6 students from the Fort Assiniboine school. They are accompanied this afternoon by their principal, Kerry McElroy, teacher Charlene Assenheimer, program assistant Fleur Whitley, parent helpers Kim Cross and Ellen Carlson. They are seated in the members' gallery, sir, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Erin Shaw from the Athabasca-Redwater constituency. Each year one outstanding 4-H member is chosen at the provincial 4-H selection program as the recipient of the 4-H Premier's award. Recipients represent Alberta 4-H and its members at various events regionally and throughout the agricultural community throughout the year. The 4-H club is Alberta's oldest youth club and also Alberta's largest youth club, with over 400 clubs province-wide. Erin is in the House today as a recipient of the 2010 Alberta 4-H Premier's award, and Erin is seated in the Speaker's gallery with her mother, Karen, and her sister Tegan. I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two Albertans who are making a difference in the lives of those living with cancer, Dr. Brent Saik and his fiancée, Janelle Trenchuk. Last month the world's longest hockey game took place at Saiker's Acres, in my constituency, to raise money for the fight against cancer: 40 dedicated players, 241 straight hours, which became the world's longest hockey game. My wife and I stopped by a couple of times to cheer them on. I know the Premier and his wife also had a chance to stop by. The Premier tells me he recognized a familiar face on the memory wall dedicated to people who lost their battle with cancer, and it was a very moving experience.

I think it's safe to say that all members here today were moved by the dedication and commitment of everyone involved in the world's longest hockey game. Through their efforts they've raised hundreds of thousands of dollars to fight the disease that's touched the lives of many Albertans. They're outstanding Albertans. They're seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like the members to join me in welcoming them to the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, today I have the privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the members of the provincial Persons with Developmental Disabilities Advisory Committee. We're all very fortunate to have PDD program stakeholders and senior PDD program and community board staff bring their extensive knowledge and expertise to the table to discuss issues that are very important to the PDD community. I would now ask that each member rise as they are introduced. I am pleased to introduce Colin Atkinson, a family representative from Camrose; Keith Moore, a family representative from Grande Prairie; Donna Desjardins, a family representative from St. Paul; Dale Peterson, with Catholic Social Services in Edmonton; Joan Lee, with the Vecova centre for disability research in Calgary; Krista Staples, with the Taber Special Needs Society; Ann Nicol, CEO of the Alberta Council of Disability Services; Bruce Uditski, CEO of the Alberta Association for Community Living.

My board CEOs are Dale Drummond, from the northeast region; Cheryl Bjorklund, from the northwest region; Hart Chapelle, from the Edmonton region; Wayne Morrow, central region; Alex Hillyard, Calgary region; and Leigh Bremner, south region. From my department Dave Arsenaault, my assistant deputy minister, and Jim Menzies, director with the PDD program branch.

Mr. Speaker, all these provincial advisory council members are truly dedicated to the PDD community and are partners in our quest to help each person with developmental disabilities to live their best life. Please join me in giving the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly to our guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two Wildrose candidates: Mr. Bob McInnis, who is the candidate for Calgary-Fort, and Mr. Bill Jarvis, who is the candidate for Calgary-South East. I am delighted to be able to join them at our leader's dinner tonight, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. James Lockhart. This is his first time in the Legislature, and I assure you that I have assured him of the good behaviour of the people of this House. James and his family live in the beautiful town of Chestermere. He is a very successful entrepreneur, a good friend, and a strong advocate for change in Alberta. I'm glad to see him here, and I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Natural Gas Revenues

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the tabling of the budget last week a stark reality hit us. Alberta is facing a significant reduction in resource revenues from natural gas. This is largely due to the emergence of shale gas development across North America. A result is that gas prices have been deflated, and demand for natural gas has been undermined. This has put pressure on Alberta revenue, which pegs natural gas royalties at around a billion dollars for the new budget year, quite a different picture from previous years, when natural gas royalties brought anywhere from $4 billion to $5 billion into government coffers.

This fiscal challenge facing our province mirrors that of individual Albertans – constituents, friends, and family alike – who have been hit hard personally either through loss of a job or decreased business activity.

Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that we recognized certain challenges to the natural gas industry in Alberta through the competitiveness review last year, making royalty adjustments that will allow Alberta gas companies to remain competitive.

Looking forward, we must turn our attention to strategic challenges and opportunities surrounding market access. First, we must develop a strategy that will ensure continued access to eastern markets as many in the industry are concerned over the threat of losing market share to the Northeastern Marcellus shale gas play.

Secondly, we need to seriously determine the strategic needs, costs, and benefits of gaining greater access to Asian markets by exploring the development of liquefied natural gas terminals on the west coast and pipeline access to these ports. Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act, is a good start on this.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we must look strategically at our own backyard, at how we can utilize natural gas for applications besides heating our homes and businesses. For example, it may be worth promoting natural gas as an alternative fuel source for vehicles. This would also help lower greenhouse gas emissions.

Talking with many individuals involved in the industry, it's clear that there are a number of strategic challenges and opportunities for natural gas in Alberta and western Canada that we must embrace. Going forward, I hope that these become priorities for this government as well as the newly established New West Partnership.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Whistleblower Protection

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The health minister is demanding the good doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark disclose the source of his recent allegations of impropriety by top-ranking government ministers and health officials. Now, there is no doubt that such serious allegations require proof as undoubtedly, if true, such crimes and misdemeanours would almost certainly result in electoral annihilation for this government at the next election.

I do not know whether these claims are in whole or in part accurate. I do not have any such evidence. However, this is what I do know and am sure of: I watched last fall as the reputation of the doctor from Edmonton-Meadowlark was smeared in public and in the media for questioning this government's abysmal record on health. I listened to a recorded message on the doctor's cellphone stating that the parliamentary assistant for health had called the head of the AMA, who was trying to rally support for having the doctor's mental state evaluated, which, of course, could result in him losing his licence to practise medicine.

I've talked with professionals who have had their licences reviewed by their professional organizations after speaking out in opposition to this government. I know of many who have been intimidated with the prospect of losing their job because of their involvement in volunteering or assisting the Wildrose Alliance. These things often go unsaid. But make no mistake. They go unsaid not because they don't happen but because of a culture of fear and intimidation that exists in every corner of this province as it involves this 40-year-old government. Whether it be the loss of government contracts or municipal funding or professional licences, the last year in opposition has opened my eyes to the sad reality that this province has become a company town.

To the minister of health and the Premier: I challenge you both. Grant signed immunity from prosecution or loss of position for any breach of confidentiality or otherwise for any person willing to step forward and substantiate these allegations. I assure you: your refusal to not do so will speak volumes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

North West Upgrading/CNRL BRIK Project

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and acknowledge a very exciting announcement that occurred two weeks ago. That announcement was from North West Upgrading and Canadian Natural Resources, which led to an upgrader being built in Alberta's Industrial Heartland. This is not only an upgrader and refinery but also a project that will see the development of the first major carbon capture and storage project in the province. Enhance Energy will build the Alberta carbon trunk line to deliver carbon dioxide captured from the new upgrader, to be used for enhanced conventional oil recovery, all while producing some of the greenest diesel barrels on the planet, derived from Alberta's oil sands.

These projects were called a major economic development turning point in the local media. This is a landmark announcement for the value-added sector in our province and for agriculture, that depends on a reliable supply of diesel at harvest time.

Mr. Speaker, these two projects are part of our Premier's vision to advance Alberta's capacity for refining bitumen, which will provide jobs for Albertans and maximize the value of our resources for future generations. All of this couldn't be done without the bitumen royalty in kind program. BRIK is an innovative way for our government to encourage growth of the value-added sector without a large direct investment or costly tax credits, that are becoming common in other jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents and I are thrilled to see this project go ahead, and I want to thank the Premier, the Minister of Energy, and all of caucus for their hard work on this project. But a special thanks needs to go to the many Albertans, including members of the Alberta Industrial Heartland Association, who have also put in years of hard work to see this $15 billion 8,000-job dream become a reality for Albertans and for Alberta companies.

The Speaker: The next speaker on my list is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, whom I shall call forward.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

ACT High School CPR Program

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As hon. members may be aware, February was Heart Month across Canada. During that time information arrived at my constituency office highlighting a national organization working with great success to save the lives of Canadians who suffer a heart attack, thousands of Albertans among them. I am speaking of the ACT Foundation, founded in 1985 to promote citizen training and proficiency in cardiopulmonary resuscitation, or CPR.

In recent years ACT has focused its efforts on training youth through its high school CPR program. Working in partnership with the government of Alberta, ACT has established CPR training programs in 315 high schools across the province. Each year, Mr. Speaker, over 45,000 youth are trained by classroom teachers trained themselves in CPR. As a result of this initiative alone over 255,000 Albertans stand ready and willing today to help save the lives of their fellow citizens. More importantly, these same young people take this life-saving knowledge and share it with their friends, their families, and their communities, inspiring many others to make the commitment to train in CPR techniques.

In addition to achieving competency in these life-saving skills, the program also educates students about how to prevent cardiac disease, in theory through understanding the causes and risk factors and in practice through the adoption of healthy lifestyle habits.

Mr. Speaker, the high school CPR program is an excellent example of what we can achieve when we commit ourselves as schools, families, and communities to a proactive plan to reduce the impact of cardiac and other chronic diseases. It is an excellent example of what is possible through the meaningful engagement of Albertans in health and health care.

I want to commend ACT, its partner organizations, and especially students and staff in our high schools for their commitment and for their leadership.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Canadian Wheat Board

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Do we Alberta grain farmers see the light at the end of the tunnel, or once again do we have a federal freight train speeding right at us? I rise today to bring this Assembly's attention to Bill C-619, which has been introduced in Canada's House of Commons.

This bill amends the Canadian Wheat Board Act and gives western farmers the option to market their wheat and barley as they choose. Currently farmers in Alberta and other western provinces are obligated to sell their product to the Canadian Wheat Board only. The passage of this legislation would bring a major benefit to all Alberta and western grain farmers since the current system allows farmers in eastern Canada to market their grain as they choose. When the amendment is passed, western producers will be given the choice to opt out of participating in the Canadian Wheat Board for a minimum of two years. These same producers retain the right to return to the Canadian Wheat Board with notice if they so desire.

Mr. Speaker, this bill strikes a balance and offers alternative marketing outside of the Canadian Wheat Board. Alberta farmers work hard to grow their various products, and they should be able to sell their products to the purchaser of their choice, as should happen in any truly free-market system.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members of this House to work with and encourage their counterparts in the federal government to support this bill to ensure equity for all Canadian farmers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Innovation and Change in Government

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Failure can be divided into those who thought and never did and those who did and never thought. For too long we've heard the argument: do not limit government, and it will take care of you; keep quiet, and you will be rewarded; disobey, and you will be punished. I am sad to say that Alberta has become a company town, where good public policy loses out to poor decisions made in secret.

However, something is happening all across Alberta. Change is in the air. Albertans expect their government to be honest, to care for the most vulnerable, and to serve the public interest while at the same time protecting their individual rights and freedoms. Albertans refuse to accept the way that things have been done and that this is the only way they can be done. The people of this province want progress, they want to be happy, and they need their lives to get better. But change, Mr. Speaker, does not always have to be incremental. Sometimes drastic examples are required to shake people out of their complacency. With so much at stake at this present time Albertans need to be reminded of the greatness that they are truly capable of achieving and that they are entitled to receive.

The future of Alberta is a place where we innovate and educate our children with excellence; a society built on honouring and supporting our elders; government that is more accountable to the people, from whom it derives its power, and that is fiscally responsible enough to get the best deal for the taxpayer; a land where indigenous Albertans recover their dignity, shake off the shackles of poverty, and take their place amongst our best and brightest. Alberta is the best place in the world to live . . . [Dr. Sherman's speaking time expired]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care System Governance

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 the government fired Alberta's local health regions and replaced them with the health superboard. In doing so, they failed to establish appropriate accounting controls, the most basic bookkeeping necessary to keep track of the billions spent on health care. Alberta's Auditor General has condemned the government for this failure, and only recently has the government agreed to follow the Auditor General's advice. But the work won't be done until 2013, another two years away and nearly another $20 billion in inadequately recorded spending. This government continues to mismanage the public purse. To the Premier: how can you say that there is not a crisis . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, because there is . . . [interjection]

Speaker's Ruling

Timing in Question Period

The Speaker: Yesterday afternoon I said that this House was developing bad habits. I talked about the Oral Question Period. We know what the phrase was. That was 45 seconds, 10 seconds beyond what we had, and we're going to keep going because I'm going to bring in as many members into question period as I possibly can.

Premier, you have 35 seconds.

Health Care System Governance

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, very simply, yesterday the minister of finance told this House that according to many accountants, various professional organizations across Canada – he said to this House and to Albertans – we have the best books in the country of Canada.

Dr. Swann: I guess the Premier disagrees with the Auditor General, then. Is that what he's saying? How can the Premier assure Albertans that billions of dollars in vital health care funding has not been wasted as the financial controls are missing in action?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, because we have the good work of the Auditor General, that reviews the books not only of the Alberta government but also of the regional health authorities. If there are any areas that we can improve, I know that the minister has read the report very carefully and will undertake to make those improvements.

Dr. Swann: Well, in fact, they've agreed to but not until 2013. That's a problem, Mr. Speaker.

Are mismanagement, lack of financial control, and increased ER wait times what your government had in mind when you dismissed health regions and promised Albertans better health care?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. What we had in mind was to streamline the services, to reduce the costs by $500 million or $600 million annually, and to pump all of that straight back into health care so that we could meet some very important targets such as reducing wait times for hip surgery by 60 per cent, such as making more continuing care options available to seniors with a 68 per cent increase in the number of people moved out into appropriate settings, and by ensuring that 90 per cent of patients have access to important medical services in the cancer area. That's what we had in mind with the Canadian . . .

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Although this government continues to ignore the facts, Alberta Liberals know very well that quality health care remains the most important issue in the minds of Albertans, yet two-thirds of Albertans believe that the health care system is in a state of crisis. To the Premier: when you continually claim that health care is not in crisis, are you saying that the experiences of two-thirds of Albertans are wrong?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the question is the same one that was asked last week by the hon. member. Very clearly, 62 per cent of Albertans said that they get the health services when they need them, and they're very satisfied with the health services. That came in two different polls that were done in the province of Alberta, and I happen to believe what Albertans are telling us.

Dr. Swann: While conveniently ignoring the two-thirds that said that it's in crisis and that 6 out of 10 have correctly identified that bad management is the main issue impacting health care today. Why won't the Premier start listening to Albertans by giving them the health system they deserve?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in fact, that Environics poll that he's talking about, the headline on it, which I'll table if I can find it here quickly, said that 60 per cent or more of Albertans were satisfied, very satisfied, or somewhat satisfied with health services. It also said that there were some improvements that needed to be made. Of course there are. Every health system in the world can benefit from improvements. But it also indicated that there was a drop of 20 per cent in terms of the number of people surveyed who said that health care is not that seriously in jeopardy at the moment. So take a look at the whole poll if you would, please.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, when Alberta's new hospitals and clinics do open up, will there be health professionals to staff them, or will they sit empty for months, as the Mazankowski did?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as facilities open in this province, be they health facilities or others, they are fully staffed in the year that they're operating or expected to be operating, and they are funded accordingly. That's what we have built into our plan, and I would encourage the hon. member to please take a look at more evidence of that in the five-year health action plan, where it's very clearly spelled out. Even the opposition can follow it, I'm sure.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Provincial Borrowing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The finance minister was confused yesterday. It clearly reads in the fiscal plan on page 80 that over the next three years this government plans to borrow over $3 billion on behalf of the Alberta Treasury Branches. It's not a laughing matter with your performance, sir. Now, to the minister of finance. I ask again: why is this government borrowing this money now? I thought you were out of the business of being in business.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I even went out with the hon. member and showed him in the financial statement where he's misreading. We are borrowing money on behalf of Alberta Treasury Branches. It's a bank that's completely owned by the government of Alberta, and they in turn loan that money out to their clients.

Mr. MacDonald: Isn't this a bit unfair? How can an organization or an enterprise like the Canadian Western Bank, which is located here in Alberta, compete whenever you're giving your Crown-owned corporation this kind of a sweet deal?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, there are different philosophical choices we can make. If the opposition believes that the Alberta Treasury Branches should be sold or shut down, then they need to say that, to ask Albertans if, in fact, they have no interest in the bank that's provided services all over Alberta for decades. We believe it is a solid resource for the people of Alberta, and we'll continue to support it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the minister of finance, and this is quite interesting: where on the government of Alberta's books will this $3 billion liability over three years be recorded? Or is it on someone else's books and you're hiding it because you're embarrassed?

Mr. Snelgrove: It will show as an asset of the Alberta Treasury Branches, which are included in our consolidated financial statements.

Federal Public Building Renovations

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, part of being a fiscally responsible government is to maintain a balanced budget by ensuring that core programs and critical infrastructure receive needed funding while less important initiatives are shelved until they become necessary and affordable. An example of where this government has failed in this regard is the building of new MLA offices at a cost of $275 million, including $115 million in this year's budget. To the finance minister: how does he justify spending $115 million on new MLA offices during a budget crisis, an ER crisis, and a school shortage crisis?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the total cost of the federal building, which will house some MLA offices but also the departments of finance and others when it's done, is $115 million. For the hon. member to suggest that we're spending $115 million on MLA offices is simply absurd.

Mr. Anderson: It's on your own website. Look it up if that's possible for you. So new MLA offices are more important to this minister than new doctors, new schools, or balanced books. That's very interesting.

My next question. Given that we have a $6.1 billion cash shortfall this year and given that our provincial savings are being drained at an alarming rate, will this finance minister mothball these new MLA offices and instead focus on cutting the deficit or, if that's not important to him, spend it on new schools or nurses or something that benefits Albertans; you know, the people who pay the bills?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the share of the budget for the federal building is less than 5 per cent. So we could stop that. It would cost much more to restart the program down the road. But what they need to tell us is: what hospitals in what communities, what schools in what communities, which highways in which part of Alberta are they going to quit working on now? It's just that simple. What projects are you going to stop doing? Just tell us.

Mr. Anderson: Start with the $115 million. It would appear this government's focus is on upgrading opposition offices prior to the next election. Go figure.

Final question. Given that this project clearly should not have been undertaken during this period of skyrocketing deficits, will he disclose to this House a list of all planned infrastructure projects for the next three years so that we can do exactly what he's saying, so that we can go through line by line and look at the priorities and look at where we can cut? Show us the list. Come on. We'll show you where to prioritize.

Mr. Snelgrove: It's generally accepted that for every billion dollars of infrastructure spending, we employ 10,000 Albertans. If the opposition thinks that that is just insignificant, they need to talk to the people on the construction jobs. They're at 5 per cent that they said they could stop. Five per cent. They've got to find another two and a half billion to match their 'fudget'. Are they going to tell 25,000 Albertans that they're going to put them out of work? Is that what they're trying to do?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. [interjections] The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has the floor. I want all members to know that the television cameras go to him. Nobody else can see you, hear you, or anything else.

Cancer Treatment Wait Times

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dr. John Cowell, the head of the Health Quality Council of Alberta, says he's willing to independently investigate accusations that long wait times for cancer surgery resulted in the deaths of hundreds of Albertans, but the health minister has refused to let the Health Quality Council get to the bottom of these serious accusations. My question is to the minister. Why is the minister refusing to allow the Health Quality Council to investigate serious allegations of cancer patients dying while waiting for surgery in Alberta for the past decade?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not denying anyone anything of the sort. What I am asking for is that the hon. member who brought forward these allegations stand in this Assembly and then stand out there, where it really counts, and live up to those allegations or withdraw them.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister can hide behind the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, but he is accountable to this House.

Given that this minister said yesterday that cancer surgery wait times improved dramatically since 2006, it's clear that the minister knows the numbers from before 2006. Will the minister give us the numbers for wait times on cancer surgery from before 2006?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I can certainly try and get that information. I don't have it at my fingertips.

What I'd like this hon. member and other hon. members to know, and in particular the member who raised the allegations, is that Alberta Health Services, Mr. Speaker, does have a policy, and that policy has many parts to it that deal with this issue. One of them is called a duty to disclose, and here is what it says. "Any member of AHS Personnel who has a reasonable basis to believe that Improper Activity has occurred or is occurring within AHS is required to disclose the information on which the belief is based."

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I think I should get another question since he's more interested in . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you have 35 seconds with no preamble, and you're eating up your time.

Mr. Mason: Yeah. Thanks. Given that the minister won't allow an investigation, won't divulge facts at his disposal about wait times and cancer deaths, allegations of a cover-up seem valid. To the minister: will he admit that there is indeed a cover-up and that he is orchestrating it as we speak?

Mr. Zwozdesky: You know, I always appreciate a little bit of humour when he ties in some of my professional musical background. Thank you for that.

Mr. Speaker, there is also a clause in here that talks about protection from retaliation. It reads: "AHS will not take or condone any adverse action . . . against any AHS Personnel or other individual who . . . in good faith and without malice or desire for personal benefit, reports Improper Activity in accordance with this policy." That's pretty much verbatim from what's in here.

With respect to the cancer issues and any wait times and so on that he has asked about, I will look into it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. And you will table the documents from whence you quoted, correct?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Regional Planning

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good on the government for introducing Bill 10 yesterday, but this is kind of like the new royalty frameworks that they introduced after getting the original new royalty frameworks so wrong. Wouldn't it have been better to avoid all the anger, hostility, and confusion by getting it right the first time? And there was a template for this. Ontario's Places to Grow Act offered a sound basis for regional planning that kept landowner rights intact and did not give monolithic power to the Ontario cabinet. To the Premier: why did this government so grossly overstep its boundaries in implementing legislation for regional planning when other effective examples existed within Canada?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I'd argue with the member in terms of whether the land planning in Ontario that he talked about is a better policy. I vehemently disagree.

Anyway, we heard from all industry and Albertans that we have to protect a very finite land base, protect our water, our air, and also, most importantly, the quality of our land. As a result, we consulted Albertans for a number of years. We put a bill together called Bill 36, and that bill was debated here in the House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why should Albertans, who certainly don't seem to feel like they were consulted or at least listened to, trust this government to restore landowner rights in Bill 10 since it was the same government that introduced bills 19, 36, and 50 in 2009 that infringe on landowner rights?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, Bill 19, Bill 36, and Bill 50 actually supported landowner rights. I don't know where the hon. member is getting that. He should take the time and have a look at Bill 19. It actually protects landowners. For years this government sterilized land before they bought land for large transportation projects. Now we have to buy that land or remove all restrictions within two years. That definitely enhances landowner policy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, since the first regional plan under Bill 36 will involve the lower Athabasca area, which contains a great deal of land that requires conservation, and given that the failed Alberta parks act last fall was pulled because it was more about commercial development in parks than protecting them, what measures will this government take in this regional plan's conservation efforts that will restore Albertans' trust?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that is the purpose of the land-use framework, to make sure that Albertans come together and decide what they want to see in their own community. I'm not going to allow some of this opposition to allow these decisions to be made in court. If we don't get together as Albertans and decide what we're going to do with our communities – and I don't want any doggone judge that's going to listen to evidence from outside the community or outside this country to implement policy for Albertans. It's not going to happen under my watch.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Capital Infrastructure Benefits

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have travelled all over Alberta and have seen some of the incredible work being done in our province regarding the investment in infrastructure. We're building world-class institutions, opening schools and hospitals all over the province, and providing jobs to thousands of Albertans. My questions are to the Premier. With a $6.6 billion commitment to capital projects in Budget 2011 what does this investment mean to Albertans and Alberta's economy?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, not only does it mean a lot of jobs, but it also means that all of the infrastructure we're building is an economic enabler. It's going to help us move our goods and services competitively to market, it's going to build the schools that are absolutely necessary, and it's also going to provide first-class health facilities across this province. It's a good investment. The money is coming from the cash reserve in our sustainability fund. It's being paid for, and it's going to support the next generation of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the Premier again: how many electricians, boilermakers, construction workers, and other Albertans would be out of work if the decision was made to defer the infrastructure investment as is being talked about in the House?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the deficit is around $3.2 billion, and that's all in infrastructure. The operational part of government is balanced, but it's the money we're spending on infrastructure. For every billion dollars involved in infrastructure, it's about 10,000 jobs. So if we were going to balance and erase the $3.2 billion deficit, it would be on the backs of about 30,000 Albertans who would not have a job today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the Premier again: what would it cost this government to wait another year to build these critical infrastructure projects?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can't give a definite answer in terms of what the inflation may be over the next couple of years, but I do know that we've learned from the past. While we were paying off the debt, which was a good idea, we were very deficient in infrastructure. As a result, at many times we were paying as high as 25 per cent inflation on the infrastructure to catch up, whether it was roads, schools, hospitals built in this province. By investing the money that we have in cash today and building the infrastructure, we're going to save hundreds of millions of dollars, number one. Number two, if we wait another couple of years, we're going to run into the same 20 to 25 per cent inflation because the economy is picking up and we're going to be competing with the private sector again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

2:10 Electricity Generation

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With Alberta's electrical generating capacity already insufficient, two generators, Sundance 1 and 2, ceased operating. This is a time when we are already dependent on imported power. To the Minister of Energy: does the minister agree that without these two generators it will further escalate electricity prices?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's the same question that the member asked I think a week ago. I'll assure the member that the Alberta Electric System Operator is confident that as we move forward, we will be able to meet the needs of Albertans. But I think it's a good time, also, to ensure that members of the opposition, I assume, are now going to be much more supportive of our Bill 50, which is ensuring that we have the transmission that will transmit this electricity around the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Alberta Electric System Operator predicts potential energy shortfalls without these two generators, does the minister believe we have enough capacity to avoid the potential for blackouts?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the member is getting his information from, but I talk to the Electric System Operator on a regular basis. The Electric System Operator is not predicting blackouts because of these two generators coming off-line. In fact, the output from the two generators will be pretty much made up by the new Keephills plant that comes on in April. [interjections]

The Speaker: Okay, boys. You know, you can hide, but you will be found.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that the new Keephills plant is coming online, but it does not meet the generation capacity of old Sundance 1 and 2. Given that and that we need more capacity, are we looking at building more load capacity down around Calgary like many experts have suggested?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is indicating in his question that somehow it's government that builds generating capacity. It is not the government. We have a deregulated generation system in Alberta. If the private sector believes that the capacity is required, I'm sure it'll be built.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Northeast Anthony Henday Ring Road

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the Premier announced that the province is moving forward with the final northeast leg of the Anthony Henday Drive. My constituents and many others are very pleased to see this project moving ahead. My questions today are for the Minister of Transportation. While completion of the ring road is critical for economic development for the entire capital region – I'm sure we all agree – my question is: why is this project being built as a P3?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this final leg of Edmonton's ring road will be Alberta's single largest transportation or highway construction project to date. This is a very complex project, and a P3 gets it done as one project, not a whole bunch of little ones. The benefits are cost savings for taxpayers, a guaranteed price, and a guaranteed delivery date about three years quicker than conventional delivery. The contractor takes on the risks of inflation, and we get a 30-year warranty on the work. And let's not forget all the jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: does the minister have any idea what the total project cost is going to be?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, starting today, we're asking for qualified P3 groups to come forward, and then we will pick the top three out of all of those qualified groups. To ensure a fair, competitive bidding price, we will not release that cost until after we get – about a year from now we'll actually get the contract, and that's when the total price will be made available to the public. We know industry is anxiously awaiting this project because they know Alberta's . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] Okay. But I recognized the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. The minister has said that this is a very extensive project, and I understand it includes more than the last nine kilometres of the ring road. What do we need to do south to the Whitemud and on parts of the Yellowhead?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the section of Anthony Henday Drive from highways 16 and 14 must be upgraded because of the increased traffic volumes there. We are putting extra overpasses or interchanges in the Sherwood Park area to handle all of that traffic, and it makes perfect sense to include that work while we're doing a P3 project. This government is building the right things at the right time to ensure that the province's . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Caribou Conservation

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The woodland caribou is categorized as threatened under the Wildlife Act, and the number one threat to its survival is industrial development of its habitat. When a government-appointed scientific subcommittee recommends that woodland caribou be listed as endangered, the Endangered Species Conservation Committee insists on the lesser category. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: what fact-based evidence does the deciding committee have which trumps the scientific subcommittee recommendation?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, quite honestly, I don't have any of the information that the member opposite speaks about. What I can tell you about the caribou conservation measures in the province of Alberta: we're working closely with the federal government and with the committee that we put together in the province of Alberta. We realize this is an iconic species in the province of Alberta. When we move forward with regional planning such as the lower Athabasca, in those plans the member opposite will see some very positive work moving forward with respect to conservation of caribou.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister. What other information, aside from science, does the minister consider in classifying endangered species? For example, with the grizzlies it was the input of hunters. So what is it that the minister considers for the woodland caribou?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I don't set whether or not a species in the province of Alberta would be considered to be at risk, threatened, or endangered. We rely on a committee that does that kind of work, and they use the science-based work and data that they gather with respect to the issue. All I would do is agree or disagree at the end of the day with what may be presented to me. At this particular point in time I have not been presented with any information that would force me to make a decision.

Ms Blakeman: They still report to you, Mr. Minister.

Again to the same minister: can the minister explain why decisions which have a favourable outcome for the sectors of industrial and agricultural committee members like the Alberta Forest Products and CAPP and the Beef Producers seem to carry more weight in decisions made by the endangered species committee? In this case these members' activities are the number one cause of the shrinking caribou habitat.

Mr. Knight: You know, Mr. Speaker, there are two things here. Now the member has moved away from the idea of the decrease in numbers. The number one cause of decrease in numbers was originally the question that was asked. Now we've got this about the decrease in the area. There's no real decrease in area of critical habitat for caribou. We work in the areas where caribou are present and prevalent, but there is plenty of critical habitat for caribou in the province of Alberta, and we will move forward to protect it.

Air Quality Monitoring in the Three Creeks Area

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, this morning residents of the Three Creeks area northeast of Peace River were again subjected to odours emanating from the significant energy industry activity in the area to the point where some of them evacuated their homes. This is clearly an alarming situation. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Is he concerned about the level of industrial emissions in this northern airshed, and is he pursuing activities to address this?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, our department through the Energy Resources Conservation Board and the Department of Environment has been working with the residents of Three Creeks for some time now monitoring emissions and odours. The actions to date include conducting extensive air monitoring and sampling and providing residents with canisters to capture their own samples. Throughout all these initiatives the parts per million are consistently within provincial limits. Monitoring of new concerns this morning showed zero parts per million of H<sub>2</sub>S, and there were no evacuations other than those that were voluntary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is he concerned about the allegation of health impacts to the residents of the area, and is he doing anything to address this situation?

2:20

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm always concerned when the issue of health in Alberta arises. As a result of that we have health personnel under my umbrella who are working very closely with the ministry officials in Energy and in Agriculture and in Sustainable Resource Development to study the situation to come up with some suggested solutions, as the Minister of Energy just mentioned. We are always concerned with air quality and testing and surveying, and that's why we're going out into the field to meet with those individuals as we speak.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Energy. Can he assure this House that his department is working to resolve this issue with the same urgency that he would if it were occurring in a large urban environment?

Mr. Liepert: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. There is a protocol that is in place. It was developed jointly by the residents of the community along with the Department of Environment and the ERCB. It was followed this morning, and working with the Minister of Environment we'll continue to monitor and respond in a timely fashion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Confidentiality of Name Changes

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's first and most important duty is to protect our citizens. Jane and Janet Doe obtained unpublished, secure name changes five years ago, the first sign of life after living in fear for more than a decade. Imagine their horror when they found out the Alberta Gazette had published the name change and that a simple Google search would've found it. The minister has issued an apology, but it doesn't go nearly far enough. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why was no consideration given to settling this matter instead of letting it drag out into a lawsuit when you have already admitted fault?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to this situation, the moment that we were made aware of the situation, we immediately removed the name from electronic copies of the Gazette and took steps to ensure that it didn't happen again in the future. We've also been informed that the individual has obtained legal representation, and we are waiting for a response from the lawyer on this matter.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: have the changes referred to in your apology letter of March 16, 2010, been implemented, and if so, can you provide the House with written proof of this compared to the original legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, with respect to the checks and balances we have put in place, those were put in place immediately. I'm happy to provide that information to the member so that she can see what we've done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: Minister, can you assure this family that they will be fairly compensated immediately so that they can put this ugly ordeal behind them for good?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we take the privacy of Albertans' information very seriously – and I do as minister – and I would like to assure all members in this Chamber that we will continue to do that. As the matter is with the lawyers at this time, I will wait until we hear from the lawyers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Logging in the Castle Special Management Area

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In yesterday's prayer you painted a picture of the bounty of Alberta's natural and human resources, entreating us to rededicate ourselves as wise stewards, when you stated: "In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of the Rockies, the denseness of our forests." Given SRD's proposed clear-cutting in the Castle-Crown, all Albertans will be left with is a mind's eye memory. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How can you justify clear-cutting in the Castle?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, quite honestly, the area that we're talking about here is a C5 management area, and there have been industrial and commercial operations, particularly from the point of view of timber harvesting, in that area for over 50 years. If you look at a proper forest management program going forward, I think that it's very clear that the management plans that have been in place have protected the area very well. If you look at the type of forestry, the old-growth forest that's there, some management plan is required from the point of view of the infestation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm all in favour of management. It's clear-cutting that I'm opposed to.

Again to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why are you using the pine beetle infestation as justification for the corporate mowing down of every piece of vegetation in what is a diversified forest?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that in the area two-thirds – two-thirds – of the area is off limits to logging. Two-thirds. Sixty-six per cent. I don't know what kind of a mower this individual has. Two-thirds of the area is off limits. Of the one-third that remains, less than 1 per cent per year is harvestable.

Mr. Chase: One per cent per year after year after year after year of one-third has a damaging effect.

Has work on the land-use framework been deliberately stalled so that every piece of Crown land in this province can be exploited before regional plans are implemented and enforced?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, year after year after year after year we continue to plant two trees for every one we cut down.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, my prayers are prayers of hope.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Alberta Innovation Voucher Program

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nanotechnology has big potential for Alberta, and I'm concerned that we may not be fully capitalizing on these new ventures. At the recent nanotechnology conference participants told me that they were frustrated by the government's hit-and-miss support for the industry. For example, they can get innovation vouchers, but they cannot find the market research expertise they need to use these vouchers. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What are you doing to ensure that the innovation voucher program is achieving its goals and helping nanotechnology companies access the market research they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. I'd like to agree with the member that nanotechnology is indeed one of those bright spots in the future of Alberta. The innovation vouchers are an important part of connecting our entrepreneurs, our nanotechnology people with great ideas with the researchers that are doing the work. This program is extremely important. We've just finished the second round of vouchers. We are now starting to get feedback on the first round of vouchers so that we can continue to make the program work better. I would like to assure the member that market research can be done using these vouchers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the same minister. Why doesn't the government commission market research in nanotechnology that all businesses and other researchers can access?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. The National Institute for Nanotechnology does do some generalized market research, which is available to the public. However, specialty market research for particular items is a priority of the company doing it. It's very specialized. So those companies do their own market research to ensure that the product they're working on is marketable and will fit within the market.

Ms Woo-Paw: My final question is again for the same minister. What is this government's strategy for nanotechnology research and development in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you very much. Nanotechnology is one of the key areas that this government is focused on. As you know, in Alberta we've had some phenomenal breakthroughs, and we are considered global leaders in nanotechnology. Dr. Rob Burrell at the University of Alberta has done incredible work on nanosilver and its use in diabetic ulcers, in burn victims, and also in the treatment of very important types of pneumonia, where other drugs can't be used. They're also now doing research on nanoplatinum and gold to see what other things can be done in Alberta. You're going to hear shortly some exciting news about nanocrystal.

Homeless Management Information System

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I have been surprised at the minister of housing's characterization of privacy laws in the province and how they apply to the nonprofit sector. To the minister of housing. I am sure the minister knows that nonprofits like the Calgary Homeless Foundation are not subject to the FOIP Act and that no one can be made subject to the act by contract, but some privacy protection can be put into contract. Would the minister agree?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As an esteemed fellow member of the bar I'm sure he knows that not every question can be answered yes or no. He's quite correct that nonprofit organizations are not subject to the privacy legislation; however, when you have a contract between organizations like myself and the Calgary Homeless Foundation, they can be subject to the privacy act. In fact, that is exactly the case. We have that contract signed. People's privacy is in fact protected.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I thank the minister for that answer. It gives a little clarification.

Given that the minister said that the project to track the homeless will provide privacy protection by contract, can he explain what kind of measures have been placed in the contract to protect these things if the Calgary Homeless Foundation violates them?

Mr. Denis: Again, Mr. Speaker, as I answered the previous member who asked me this question, the Member for Calgary-McCall, in the last couple of days, the privacy act, in fact, does not apply to nonprofit corporations, but it does apply when you have a contract, and we do have that contract. The FOIP Act does apply in dealings between us and the Calgary Homeless Foundation. In fact, section 39 of that particular act states that there's no disclosure of personal information without consent. People in these organizations and homeless people that we provide services to are in good hands.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I look at this privacy legislation and want to know: what are the contractual stipulations that will be put into force should the Calgary Homeless Foundation violate the principles?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I've answered this question repeatedly.

Today I want to mention one more time that March is actually the second anniversary of the 10-year plan to end homelessness. Instead of dealing with answers and questions that I've already gone over, I think this member actually should join us in celebrating the fact that we have housed over 3,000 formerly homeless people in this province.

Speaker's Ruling Legal Opinions

The Speaker: I know that both the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo and the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs are distinguished members of the Law Society, and I know you're having a good time with this exchange, but you both realize – don't you? – that questions requiring and involving a legal opinion are void in the question period. Why don't you guys just go and have a coffee. Okay?

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Highway 63 Emergency Services

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 63 is busy, remote, and widely regarded as one of the most dangerous highways in Alberta. Last June the admirable group of half a dozen volunteer firefighters from Wandering River who'd responded to emergencies on this highway reached their breaking point. They were unable to continue covering this 150-kilometre stretch spanning parts of three counties. Since municipalities are responsible for emergency services, my questions are for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister tell my constituents what he's doing to ensure that Albertans travelling the Wandering River section of highway 63 still receive emergency assistance when they require it?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we're very well aware of the challenges along this stretch of highway, and we've been doing a fair amount of work on this particular issue. We're providing ongoing support to municipalities, including $500,000 annually for fire-fighting training and $50,000 for recruitment and retention tools. Specifically, we have helped Athabasca county identify new recruits and are supporting firefighters to deal with stresses and issues along that stretch.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the uniqueness of this issue and the fact that it came to a head eight months ago and that the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties passed a resolution three years ago requesting that the Alberta government set up staff for emergency response on highway 63, can the minister tell my constituents why the government has not yet stepped in with a solution to this problem?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we do need a sustainable solution – and I re-emphasize a sustainable solution – and that's why we've got a cross-ministry working group. They've provided recommendations on the highway 63 issue, and we're presently reviewing them. As we know, providing these services is a municipal responsibility throughout the province, but that said, we want to ensure that the right tools and supports are available at the municipal level.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad the minister has some strategies to deal with this important issue, but can he give my constituents a timeline? When can my constituents expect to see some solutions coming forward on this issue?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the timing will depend on the number of solutions that we're presently looking at. Those solutions are there to support these communities and others in the delivery of emergency services at the local levels. Our solutions will consider ongoing recruitment and retention, driver behaviour, and the right tools to ensure that emergency services are retained and improved. Some actions should come in the very, very short term here while others will no doubt take much longer.

Physician and Family Support Program

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, we all know there's a shortage of doctors in Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I give him that heads-up so that he'll pay attention today. There's a shortage of cancer doctors. There's a shortage of family doctors. There's a shortage in many rural areas. The Alberta Liberals want to attract and keep doctors here. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: one of the successful innovations in health care delivery in Alberta has been the physician and family support program, so why is this government threatening to cancel it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not threatening anyone. I assume he's probably referring to the AMA negotiations. They're our lead negotiators for Alberta Health Services, for Alberta Health and Wellness, and for the Alberta Medical Association. They're at the table, I think, even as we speak, possibly. I'm not sure. They are negotiating, and the process, from what I understand, is working. I met with the AMA president last Friday. They raised some concerns. Those concerns were passed onto the appropriate sources, and hopefully they'll have a resolution, hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, the minister is responsible.

Given the dramatic shift in the gender balance of our physician workforce toward a majority of women physicians, will this minister promise Alberta's women physicians that the physician parental leave program will be sustained?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of important programs that have served physicians well, and that's why they're negotiating right now. From the AMA's perspective they've brought their issues forward, I'm sure. From the Health and Wellness perspective our negotiators have brought those things forward. But there's a lot more on the table than just the programs. Those are important programs, and in a perfect world, yes, I'd like to see them all continued.

Dr. Taft: Again to the same minister. Being a doctor brings with it immense stress. Given that the physician support program helps doctors who are dealing with stress, trauma, grief, bereavement, abuse, addictions, and even suicide, will the minister promise here and now – stop dancing around it and just make the promise – that funding will continue for these programs that he's acknowledged work so well?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll state it again. I'm not on the negotiating team. I'm not at the negotiating table. We have an agreement that is going to expire prior to the end of March. I know the negotiators are there. They're dealing with the fiscal realities of our province. There are some difficult decisions that they're wrestling with. Let's give them the proper due and the credit they deserve and the time that they need to sort those things out because that's what they're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Supply of Diesel Fuel

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the weather may be very cold outside, but the crop farming season is, hopefully, right around the corner. Many of my constituents use diesel fuel to help fuel their farm equipment, and every year they seem to get caught up in a diesel fuel shortage. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. What assurances can the minister provide so that Albertans won't have to face diesel shortages in the future?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, neither I nor any member of this Assembly can stand here and guarantee that we won't have a diesel shortage. The reality is that Alberta's economy is probably the fastest growing in all of North America, and that's going to put increased strain on our capacity. I do think it's important to point out, as the Member for Athabasca-Redwater talked about in his member's statement, the North West upgrader refinery and the importance of that. By 2015, hopefully, those diesel shortages will no longer be around.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you. That's true. It's not just the farmers; it's the oil and gas, transportation, and forestry industries. They're all affected.

It's been brought to my attention that the cost of diesel fuel is also going up. Can the minister confirm the cause of this increase?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think the cause is pretty simple, Mr. Speaker. It's supply and demand. I'd maybe add one other thing. I think there's some speculation that's going on. As you are well aware, we've got the international disruptions that are happening to the marketplace in the world. The price of crude is going up, and that obviously will have an impact on consumer prices.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much. This is a critical issue. I would hope this is not true, but are there any plans to regulate this industry?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I assume that the member is referring to regulating prices, and in essence that's a very simple answer. The answer is no. I can assure this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, that if there is one way to guarantee a shortage of diesel, that would be to regulate retail prices. In all likelihood what would happen then is that less crude would be refined into diesel, and we'd have even greater shortages than what might be occurring.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Oil Sands Image in the United States

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The political and economic unrest in the Middle East has wreaked havoc on oil prices and has cast a spotlight on the need for stable oil sources. I understand that the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations has recently returned from a trip to Washington. My questions for the minister are: have American counterparts' views on Alberta oil sands changed given these present circumstances? If so, how?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question. I'm really confident as I stand here today that they have got the total picture of the fact that we provide a third of the world's oil, that it's going to mean 343,000 jobs between now and 2015, and that a great part of their GDP, both from the crude oil manufacturing opportunities and the value-added GDP – it's almost $100 billion between now and 2025 if the oil sands are developed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Can you tell us: how does a situation in the Middle East and north Africa change the way Alberta advocates to the United States?

Ms Evans: Actually, Mr. Speaker, we're trying to stick very much to our same message of a safe, secure source of supply, but frequently we're getting people making that kind of commentary about their concerns. In America, for example, they were talking about what other places we might market our oil if the Keystone pipeline weren't going ahead. They're very conscious of China. In the Middle East they're very conscious themselves of buying alternative sources, like Kuwait's petroleum group looking at Alberta as an opportunity for the future in order for them to have a secure supply.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister. I'm glad you mentioned Keystone. How does the changing view of Alberta's oil sands affect the passage of important infrastructure projects like the proposed Keystone pipeline?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, when I was meeting with the governors at my last meeting on Monday afternoon, prior to returning home, they had calculated that 250 businesses along the American side of the lineup of the routing on that pipeline would benefit from Keystone. They've looked at that. They've looked at the jobs. They've looked at the economic opportunity. Expanding the pipeline infrastructure means that they will be able to provide more for their markets. So I saw huge support, especially from all of those alignments on the routing, with the possible exception of some concerns still from Nebraska about the particular alignment.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question period for today. Nineteen members had an opportunity to participate. There were 114 questions and responses.

In a few seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine. In the interim happy birthday to the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, whose anniversary actually was yesterday. He's now one day older and wiser.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting a petition actually spearheaded by my neighbour Mr. Rick Bartlett, who is currently suffering from MS. His petition reads as follows:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to expedite the approval of the Liberation Treatment (angioplasty) developed by Dr. Paolo Zamboni so that all patients including those with MS, suffering with chronic cerebro-spinal venous insufficiency (CCSVI) can receive the treatment.

I can inform you that Mr. Bartlett has received the treatment in Poland and is claiming a significant benefit from the treatment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Bill 203

Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, that being the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act.

Mr. Speaker, this act will encourage and promote the direct and indirect benefits associated with outdoor activity. It purports that the benefits of increased outdoor activity can be far reaching and extend well beyond the areas of physical and mental well-being. The proposed legislation serves as an educational tool for all Albertans on the natural heritage and lifestyle benefits associated with Alberta's outdoors. It sets aside the second weekend of April of every year as Alberta get outdoors weekend.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As promised during question period today and in accordance with the long-standing tradition of this House, I am going to table five copies of a policy document titled Safe Disclosure. Essentially, it comes from an Alberta Health Services policy document that describes their policy called Duty to Disclose and also their policy called Protection from Retaliation for having disclosed anything.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As per your request yesterday, I'm tabling five copies of the article from which I had taken the quote during question period.

I have two other tablings. Again, these are letters and my cheques that I send monthly to a food bank in support of having AISH payments match MLAs' raises. For January it was to the Kainai Food Bank, and for February it was the Crowsnest food bank.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and table the requisite number of copies of another letter from a constituent of mine whose medical doctor is speaking out in support of the Alberta Medical Association's physician and family support program and in support of continued government funding for that program.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling e-mails from the following individuals who are seeking the preservation of the Castle wilderness: Elaine Gryba, Chris O'Brien, Helen Ilijoic, Ivan Taverner, Jacqueline Norton, Sarah Pasemko, Jason Abt, Laura Bentley, Elizabeth Atherton-Reid, Dudley Booth, Neil Jennings, Joan Jochim, Andrea Becker, Bruce Botchar, David Gloag, Susan Sinotte, Andrew Paul, Riley Swendseid, Janet Robinson, Jack Boyle, Pat Lucas, Mary Trumpener, Caroline Saucier, S. Rynard, and Bertha Ford.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several hundred more e-mails that I will be tabling.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Olson, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, a letter dated February 15, 2011, from the Minister of Justice and Attorney General to the chair of the Standing Committee on Public Safety and Services, attaching a report dated February 2011 entitled Disclosure of Information Regarding Leadership Contests: Discussion Paper and Cross-Jurisdictional Comparison, prepared by Alberta Justice.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: Hon. members, it now being 2:48, if you go into committee, will you be out of here prior to 6 o'clock? Have a happy afternoon.

2:50

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2011-12

Finance and Enterprise

The Chair: Before I go any further, I would like to speak about the speaking order and the times. The minister or any member of Executive Council acting on the minister's behalf may make opening comments not exceeding 10 minutes. For the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the minister may speak, and then for the next 20 minutes the members of the third party, Wildrose Alliance, if any, and the minister may speak. For the next 20 minutes the members of the fourth party, the NDP, if any, and the minister may speak, and for the next 20 minutes the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent members and the minister may speak. Then after that any member in the Assembly can speak.

Within this sequence members may speak more than once; however, speaking time is limited to 10 minutes. The minister and a member can combine their time for a total of 20 minutes, but the member has to indicate to the chair at the beginning of the speech that he or she wishes to combine their time with the minister's time.

The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Mr. Snelgrove: Good afternoon. I'm certainly open to whatever suggestions the opposition may have on the give-and-take. It's worked very well in the past, so if that's okay with them, then we'll do that.

I see we're starting a little early, so I'm not going to introduce my staff who were going to be here; either that, or they know something I don't. Either way we'll certainly want to acknowledge the fact that there's a great deal of work that goes into the department, the budgeting and the work they do. I would like to thank them for that.

As one of the government's largest ministries Finance and Enterprise's mission involves providing expert economic, financial, and fiscal policy advice to government. It also includes providing effective tax and regulatory administration to enhance Alberta's future prosperity.

The ministry is responsible for a number of core businesses: budget and fiscal planning; investment, treasury and risk management; tax and revenue administration; enterprise, which includes industry and regional development and economic development policy; and the financial sector regulation and policy. There are also a number of other parts of the ministry, including the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, the Alberta Pensions Services Corporation, ATB Financial, and the Alberta Securities Commission to name a few.

What all of this adds up to is a solid team working to help meet the goals contained in our business plan. You will notice that the business plans have been streamlined and shortened, which in no way means that we are any less committed to meeting our goal.

For instance, goal 1 of our 2011-14 business plan deals with providing economic, tax, and fiscal advice that supports strong, sustainable government finances. The priority initiatives here include developing a long-term plan that will ensure Alberta's prosperity. This means continuing to strengthen our fiscal framework and all of its components, including a savings strategy. Other priorities under this goal include encouraging economic diversification and strengthening Alberta's fiscal resiliency. It also includes working with the federal government to ensure that tax structures enhance the energy sector's competitiveness and its contribution to both our economy and the country's economy as a whole.

Goal 2 of the business plan deals with Alberta having a competitive and productive economy. Initiatives for this goal include implementing actions under the Alberta Competitiveness Act, implementing strategies to encourage value-added activities, and implementing regulatory reform initiatives to enhance our competitiveness and productivity.

I think we've proven our commitment to this goal through all of the work that's already been done on the competitiveness initiative. We created a Competitiveness Council to identify Alberta's competitiveness gaps and developed meaningful actions to address them. The council has already released a benchmarking analysis and will release its full report later this summer. As another example, Productivity Alberta, in place since 2008, has been working with industry and other government ministries to make sure the programs and services we deliver are optimally targeted, developed, and delivered.

Goal 3 of the business plan focuses on revenue programs that are administered fairly, efficiently, and effectively. Priorities under this goal include advancing electronic commerce for our tax and revenue programs, helping people to understand the fairness of our tax system, which will encourage compliance, and making sure we're as effective as we can be to manage collections and program compliance.

Alberta's tax system continues to be the best in the country, with Albertans and Alberta businesses paying $11 billion less than they would under any other province's system. This goal is about supporting this tax system by encouraging payment, making it easier for payments to occur, and making sure we're proactive about collections and compliance.

Goal 4 of the business plan deals with sound investment, treasury, and risk management. The priorities here involve providing effective leadership in government-wide cash and debt management as well as risk management and providing our investment manager with investment strategies for achieving optimal investment performance.

As an example of how we're meeting this goal, we provide our investment manager, AIMCo, with overall investment guidelines to follow as they manage nearly $70 billion of investments for the government of Alberta. This includes the heritage savings trust fund as well as public pension funds. Within those guidelines AIMCo returned 7.5 per cent on the heritage fund's investments over the first nine months of 2010-11, meeting the benchmark.

Goal 5 of the business plan focuses on policy and regulatory oversight for the financial, insurance, and pensions sectors that is effective, fair, and in the interests of Albertans. The priorities here are to work with other jurisdictions to improve retirement income adequacy as well as maintain a provincially-based securities regulatory system. It also includes monitoring and regulating the financial services sector to ensure affordable, efficient, and fair systems for insurance, pensions, and other financial services.

What this means for Albertans is that we will continue to fight for their interests on the pension front, working to make sure that Albertans can retire with some assurances of a reasonable retirement income. It also means we will continue to stand up for our right to regulate securities at a provincial level instead of the single federal regulator Ottawa is pushing on the provinces. We will work to make sure that Albertans can access affordable and efficient financial services, including insurance.

The final goal of our business plan deals with accessible financial services for Albertans. Our priorities here include making sure that ATB continues to operate on sound fiscal and business principles and ensuring that ATB operates with a comparable regulatory and financial framework to similar financial institutions. The priorities also include maintaining appropriate lending, funding, and risk management policies for the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, or ACFA. ATB is a valuable part of the province's network of financial institutions, and this goal is about keeping ATB strong not only for the clients but for all Albertans.

When it comes to the ACFA, it provides an opportunity for certain nonprofit groups such as municipalities to access capital at a reasonable rate, meaning they can borrow with the province's preferred credit rating backing them up. This is key to helping municipalities build and grow at a reasonable cost to their citizens as we will continue to support the ACFA in this role.

The heritage fund 2011-14 business plan is included with the Finance and Enterprise business plan. The fund's business plan is approved by the heritage fund standing committee and has two goals. The goals deal with ensuring that long-term returns are maximized at a prudent level of risk and that the heritage fund aligns with the fiscal goals of the province.

Now that we've gone over our business plan, I'd like to take a few moments to provide you with some of the highlights from Finance and Enterprise estimates. Our revenue is forecast to increase about $698 million from Budget 2010. This is due to increases in a number of areas, including $495 million in corporate income taxes due to improved corporate profits as we come out of the recession, $80 million in net income from the Alberta Treasury Branches, $45 million in personal income taxes as Albertans' income continues to grow, and $35 million in fuel tax due to increased consumption.

These increases are somewhat offset by things like a forecast decrease in investment income as market volatility continues and a decrease in some of the federal funding due to specific programs being completed.

Our expenses increased just over $106 million from Budget 2010. This increase is made up of a $39 million increase in program expense and a $68 million increase in debt servicing costs. The increase in program expenses is related to things like $14 million in the teachers' pre-1992 pension plan based on updated actual evaluations, $20 million in investment management costs, and $1 million increase in the transfer to the access to the future fund.

These increases are partially offset by reductions in the department due to general budget restrictions and reduction to the enterprise division relating to regional economic development alliances, for example. The increase in debt servicing expense relates to increased borrowing by ACFA for local authorities and direct borrowing the government is doing for capital purposes.

These increases are partially offset by reductions in debt servicing costs of $23 million as we pay off the province's debt as well as the ongoing repayment of school construction debentures.

This brings me to the end of my presentation. I believe we have demonstrated our commitment to achieving the goals in our business plan, including actions we're taking to meet those goals. I am also confident that we've explained some of the reasons behind our revenue and expense numbers, and I'll look forward to the questions that follow.

3:00

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would prefer if we could have, hon. minister, a question and an answer. This has worked out in the past; you're absolutely right. With other ministers I am not confident in the exchanges, but certainly with this hon. gentleman I would prefer that.

Before we start, I would just like to say officially on the record that I appreciate the hard work you put in on behalf of the taxpayers and citizens of this province. It's a difficult time we're going through. I have had the opportunity to visit the Assembly and the Annex at a very early hour in the morning, and I look over in the parking lot, and it's the hon. minister's truck, I believe, that I see. It's not parked there overnight. You're coming to work very early in the morning on behalf of taxpayers, and I would just like to express my gratitude to you for that.

Now, that being said, we certainly have our differences, and we have our questions with this budget, and I think the hon. minister understands that. The first question I have relates to a statement that was made in the throne speech and on the production figures or the estimates that are made in the budget and in the fiscal plan. In the throne speech it states – and I'm going to quote, Mr. Chairman. This is from page 5, and we're talking about enhanced oil recovery here.

It is estimated that an additional 1.4 billion barrels of oil can be produced using this technology. To put it in more familiar terms, Alberta could produce more conventional oil in the future than it has already produced in the past. This could generate up to $25 billion in additional provincial royalties and taxes.

Now, in the fiscal plan on page 49 there are a number of oil assumptions, and we all know the important role oil, gas, and bitumen play, the price for these products, and the effect it has on our budget. I'm going to go to conventional crude oil production. It indicates that for 2010-11 we had 471,000-barrel-a-day production, and it's going to remain relatively flat or steady across to the year 2013-14 at 459,000 barrels a day. It's interesting to note, before I get to the CAPP, Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, statistics here, that we see in the third-quarter forecast and in the second-quarter forecast for this current fiscal year, 2010-11, where there is a 47,000-barrel-a-day increase in conventional oil production. That indicates to me that for some reason this year it's going up, but the CAPP forecast for the future is much less than what you have in your assumptions.

CAPP is forecasting that for the next 10 years we will have light and medium conventional crude oil. We will have production rates in thousands of barrels a day, roughly 300,000 barrels a day, going down by the year 2025 to 200,000 barrels a day. Yet the government makes this statement in the throne speech that we're going to get these billions of dollars in extra royalties and taxes from an increase in production, from enhanced oil recovery. That's not reflected in CAPP's estimate, and CAPP's estimate, for the record, is from June 2010, so I would like an explanation of how all this fits together. How can that statement be made?

Then at the same time, if we go to page 101 of the fiscal plan, we will see where with carbon capture and storage – I was a fan of this going back many years because I think this is part of the solution – we are spending $518 million over the next three years, $2 billion in total, and three of the four projects that are mentioned on page 101 indicate that as a result of the CO<sub>2</sub> capture, we're going to have enhanced oil recovery. If we're spending this kind of money at this time on enhanced oil recovery – there's a contradiction here – why is CAPP saying that production is going to go down, yet in the throne speech this government indicates it's going to go up and that we're going to get $25 billion from that increased production?

Thank you. I hope I sort of . . .

Mr. Snelgrove: No. Exactly. I get exactly what you're saying, and I guess that absolutely enhances why we have to go to this enhanced recovery. On their own, if the drilling industry or the oil production industry was left to what we're doing now, there is no question that the conventional oil production would significantly drop off because they can't get that oil out using the conventional methods now. If we are not in the middle of this game, to use that, to gather that carbon and to work with industry to get it to those old fields, to inject it and to reinvigorate those fields and actually, you know, produce the oil, we would be absolutely where CAPP is saying. The hon. member would be absolutely right. Our conventional oil would probably drop down, you know, in this program to the 200,000 barrels a day for sure.

Now, this is not unproven technology. It works, we know it works, and I know the hon. member has talked about it. By coordinating these activities and partnering with business on the capture and the pipeline to the fields, to a certain degree we're feathering our own nest. We are going to give those companies the opportunity to produce that oil.

On both accounts you're right. If CAPP was left, if that industry was left, production would decline, yet with the significant investment we're making, we're going to be able to maintain the production levels probably around that half a billion barrels a year. On both ones you're right, but I think you helped make our argument that it's really important to continue with enhanced oil recovery. Too much of the discussion really got to be about carbon sequestration, just pumping it down with no other purpose. That's why the multiple benefit here of investing in that technology and enhancing the oil recovery actually works for the taxpayers very well.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Am I correct in assuming that the higher production value predicted by this government for the next two fiscal years than what is predicted in CAPP's 2010 report, where they indicate we would have around 300,000 barrels of conventional crude oil production a day – and you were indicating that we will have close to 484,000 or 471,000, depending on what year – that 170,000-barrel-a-day increase or amount of production, would be potentially from enhanced oil recovery?

Mr. Snelgrove: Hon. member, you did quote that that was a CAPP document from June of 2010, and I think we would both agree that the situation around oil has changed dramatically from just about a year ago, you know, in the price. We are bouncing around now at around a hundred dollars a barrel, and the solidifying of solid oil prices and the economic growth requiring the demand is quite different than it was. I absolutely am not going to question CAPP from June of 2010, and I would look forward to what their projection numbers are when their report comes out in June again this year and see what their numbers are to that.

We take the numbers from the drilling applications that come forward, so we may even have more up-to-date information than CAPP itself would have because they are reported to by the companies, yet we know before the action even happens how many applications are there for well sites.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Now, this increase or this assumption of this increase in conventional crude oil production: if that is coming from enhanced oil recovery, from CO<sub>2</sub> sequestration, what, if any, would the projections be from this government in increased production that would come from the new process of fracking, with the new technologies for fracking old, mature fields? Do you anticipate that any of the money or the increase in production that's mentioned in the throne speech is possibly coming from the new technology that allows old, mature fields to produce just as much in the future as they have in the past?

Mr. Snelgrove: That is a good point. With the horizontal fracking that they can do now and the technology they've got to chase that drill bit where they want to go and frack up into the seams, absolutely. I can tell you – and I know you know I live out in the heavy-oil capital of the country – that what they're doing in the old fields or even on old sites with the new technology is absolutely going to contribute to this production of what were previously thought depleted fields. So the hon. member is absolutely correct in his assumption that that technology is going to contribute greatly to this. Even in the heavier oils and stuff that may not be enhanced, just what you've pointed out is directly related to an increase in production and the opportunity for much less of a footprint on the land to recover significantly more oil from the fields here. You're right. You've got it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to note that this is an economic advantage because the rights-of-way are already there. The production facilities are already sited. So the costs for the companies should be significantly less, and hopefully we will see a substantial amount of money flow to your treasury or to your bank vault, wherever it is in this building. I hope you have to use a wheelbarrow to get it all in there. And he can count it. I'm sure he won't miss a penny.

I would like to ask, now that we're on that subject, about the business plan. In the business plan on page 54 you note – and I think this is quite controversial – the performance measures for the combined tax and royalty rates for Alberta's natural gas and conventional oil production in comparison to similar jurisdictions. Now, of course, we know this is a new performance measure. Last year there was hardly one, and the year before that it was a range of up to 25 per cent, which, of course, we know was seldom if ever met. The three-year target for natural gas, for a combined royalty and tax rate if I'm reading this correctly, is around 39 per cent. That's the royalty and the tax. We all know the price of natural gas, and I agree with your remarks from the other day at the Hotel Macdonald on natural gas and the immediate future for natural gas.

Conventional oil: you were indicating that there is a 43 per cent take on this whenever we're compared to some other jurisdictions, which go unnamed in this performance measure. My question. I did some math on the throne speech here, and if we are to get this $25 billion from an additional $1.5 billion increase in production at the market prices that you quote – $89 in the budget, $89.40 or whatever it is – that's a combined tax and royalty take of 22 per cent. I would like to ask the minister: if we were to produce this oil and collect this $25 billion, do you think that is within the performance measure that is mentioned on page 54?

Mr. Snelgrove: What exactly is your question? Whether 22 per cent is the right royalty rate?

Mr. MacDonald: Looking at this statement from the throne speech, 22 per cent would be $25 billion. That would be 22 per cent of the total value of that oil if it was produced now, at today's prices, and we know that the price is going to be much higher over that period of time. Hopefully, it will go up at least a little bit. My math indicates that $25 billion is a 22 per cent take, combined royalty and taxes, and that is not nearly what you were anticipating you need in your performance measure on page 54 of the strategic business plan. Right?

Mr. Snelgrove: To be clear, you're talking about the government of Alberta business plan, not the department of finance business plan, which is okay.

Mr. MacDonald: This one.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yeah. That's right.

Mr. MacDonald: That's part of your budget.

Mr. Snelgrove: That's okay. I'm just pointing out for someone that might be watching and trying to understand but looking at the finance business plan.

We have to use what the number is today for price. I think you're probably right. When the carbon capture and sequestration is in effect – and we're dealing with prices 25 years or 30 years from now – I doubt very much that it will be a hundred million dollars. But it will be relative because I doubt that our costs will stay static, too. I mean, if the oil goes up to $140, it's very likely that with inflation other things will not put us in a significantly different situation. If that's the math, if you're asking me if 22 per cent is the number, okay. But we are dealing with a little bit of hypothetical projections here. You know, we're saying that if oil is at the price it is and our royalty rates what they are now, that's what we would generate.

Mr. MacDonald: I can live with that, but this hypothetical projection is in the throne speech, which is the blueprint for the future as articulated or written by this government.

Now, I would like to go back to the fiscal plan and again talk about royalties, and this is on page 49 of the fiscal plan. I see your oil assumptions again for crude oil and bitumen. If we were to do a calculation at your projected price and your projected production levels, do the math and then look at what you're anticipating to get, or are forecasting, in royalties with conventional crude oil, the calculation that I have indicates that we're collecting on average $10.89 a barrel in royalty on conventional crude oil production. That is, again, a lot less than what would be measured by this performance measure in the business plan. So, again, at these current prices is $11.00 a barrel royalty in conventional crude oil production adequate in the minister's estimation at these current production levels and price projections?

Mr. Snelgrove: If the hon. member wants to have the discussion about the royalty rates, I guess that's okay because it's his time.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it's your document.

Mr. Snelgrove: That's right.

All of the percentages and all of the issues around – keeping in mind the difference between bitumen royalties and oil prices. Keep in mind that in the throne speech it does say that it could produce. So you have to base it on assumptions, and our assumptions are based on industry projections – I mean, I know you know that how we do it is by averaging – from a collection of about a dozen different groups that give us the projections. So we use them. Are they right or wrong? We have to do something, so we use the same methodology that we have for years, and if you extrapolate them out, those are the numbers you get. So we could have a discussion about whether we should be charging more royalty or less royalty. Especially for somebody who's got a background in labour and actually knows how to – we also have to keep in mind the people that are working, which contributes to it, too.

If we have the discussion about the royalty rate, I think we also have to ask ourselves: is it not as important to make sure that the sector that we've got has the opportunity to have a job as opposed to putting a royalty rate that may return more from oil, but if it's not produced or if the wells aren't drilled, we don't get anything?

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I can appreciate the hon. minister's point. I'm reading again from the provincial budget brief from CIBC, which had a lot to say about the potential borrowing habits of this province. The minister is absolutely right. They state in here that "rising activity in the oil and gas and other sectors are expected to contribute to an increase of 41,000 jobs in 2011." That certainly is positive. I'm sure that whenever you were doing your calculations for this budget document, oil was trading around $80 a barrel. This morning on the way to work it was over a hundred dollars a barrel, and that was west Texas intermediate. That's not Brent North Sea crude, which is . . .

An Hon. Member: It's $114.

Mr. MacDonald: Yeah. For sure, and the price of the product is creating a lot of this activity, and this is certainly, I agree with the hon. minister, good activity for the province.

Now, the royalty rates in the fiscal plan for bitumen. Your bitumen production estimates are almost bang on with CAPP's going out into the future for both mining and in situ bitumen production, so that's interesting. Their conventional crude oil rates are declining, but you're on the same page as far as bitumen production.

There are projects that are supposedly in payout. The projects up by Fort McMurray that will be in payout are going to be a factor in increasing the amount of revenue that we take in in bitumen royalty. Now, you know the laws, and I don't. When they go into payout and then decide six months later to add another stage to their facility, do they go back to the old royalty rate?

Mr. Snelgrove: For their expansion?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Snelgrove: It would fall under the royalty write-off rate, or the start-up, but once that facility has achieved payout, it stays at payout. The documents that deal with these are this thick, and they address all sorts of issues around what's allowable and what's not allowable.

You also made a point for us that we're trying to use in our budget projections, that it is easier to predict bitumen because of the fact that it is a mine that they can't move away. When these companies, regardless of what company, come into northeastern Alberta and invest billions of dollars in that mine site, they're committed to the project whereas with natural gas at the drop of a valve they can pick up their half-ton and go to Saudi Arabia and get gas. They can get it anywhere. But they can't move those mines or those big in situ projects; they're here. They know that when they make that investment, they're going to be operating them for 60 or 70 years, likely, in some areas or until it's depleted, and then they just move the well pads a little bit.

We do have, I think, more certainty when we talk about royalty from bitumen. Obviously, the price of oil can fluctuate, but we've taken one of the things out because in natural gas you have production and price uncertainty. With bitumen you will still have some price uncertainty, but your production levels will be, to your point, easier to predict with an amount of certainty just because of the nature of the production of bitumen. We do have a little more certainty in the projections of bitumen than we ever would have with natural gas.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you for that. Mr. Chairman, to continue along that line, we look at what occurred with Kearl Lake and Imperial Oil and the fact that they decided to have $250 million of steel fabrication done in South Korea – right? – at a time when many of the steel fabrication shops in Calgary and in Edmonton were idle or working a modified week just to keep their key employees around. Do you think that we should continue that practice of allowing this work to go offshore at the same time that we are giving royalty and tax breaks here and particularly – you can understand this coming from a rural constituency – when a country like South Korea, if my research is correct, has an 80 per cent duty to protect their local farmers from the products that we grow and would like to export to them?

How is it fair that they can subsidize their steel industry in that country, protect their farmers from competition from Alberta growers and producers, yet we allow Imperial Oil these tax concessions and royalty concessions to ship this work offshore? Do you think that if we really want to create a lot of jobs in this province, we should be doing that work here?

Mr. Snelgrove: I don't think it's fair to point to Imperial Oil and say that they've got something in South Korea and that's bad, when if you and I got in our cars and went to Walmart and saw all of our neighbours and friends taking out the TVs: they're made in China. If we went out and got in probably a third of the vehicles here, I'm sure they are Hyundais, that are made in South Korea. If you look at the equipment on our roads: Samsung. You know, if we start to say what we can and cannot buy from around the world, we lose.

You know, if you go back to the 1850s, China and India at that time accounted for 40 per cent of the world's trade. Then they changed their regimes and, especially China, decided that they were going to stay home, and they literally turned their economy around. A hundred years later they were less than 6 per cent of the world trade. You can tell by the standard of living in China that it did not serve their country well to close their borders. We could have a dozen days here of discussion about the merits of free trade.

Now, I wholeheartedly agree with you that we need to work with them about some of these barriers to agriculture and their protection, but we can't do it as a country when we hide behind the Wheat Board and all of the supply management areas of agriculture that we protect. In my world as, I'm sure, in yours that's called blow and suck. We can't ask other countries to do something that we're not prepared to do ourselves. But we need to work on it.

Because these are big vessels and they got world attention and the route that they've got to go to get here and the fights in Montana and Idaho, it's easier to say: well, gee, that would be simpler if that was built here. But I can assure you that Imperial Oil went around the world to get the best price and in some cases the best technology to do it. Would I like to see them here? Absolutely. But would I say to business, "You have to buy local"? Boy, that would be a tough call to make.

Mr. MacDonald: That's certainly interesting. I would hope that at some point in the future if we were to reduce those trade barriers for agricultural products that South Koreans, among others, have, then situations like what occurred with Imperial Oil and their Kearl Lake modules – and I read in the newspapers that they're now being reduced in size so they can travel on the interstates up to Montana and then on up to Fort McMurray. It's in no one's best interests to see that sort of circus, but that's what has happened.

My next question is along the same lines. It is also with some of the royalty reduction programs. It has been suggested that in order to enhance upgrading here in Alberta – we know what the Premier said when he was running for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party, and I hope it will be an issue in the leadership race this time as well. The North West upgrader was certainly a real good first step, but I think we need to do a lot more upgrading in this province. The value added is just remarkable.

There have been suggestions made. I would like to know if your department has any idea of how much less we are collecting in royalties because we allow the bitumen transportation costs to be deducted, or netted, from the royalty calculation. We allow the cost of the dilutant or diluent, or whatever you want to say. That is net of the royalties. If we were to change those royalty regulations to modify those cost reductions, what kind of money are we talking about here? Do you think that would encourage bitumen upgrading to be sited here, not in Wood River, Illinois, or Borger, Texas?

Mr. Snelgrove: That's a valid argument, discussion. The issue is that we are a part of Canada. We do have free trade agreements with our biggest trading partner to the south. So we do have some tools. As you pointed out, I don't think the North West upgrader will be the last venture that we go with. The first stage is only 37,500 barrels. I think you'll see that double shortly.

The game changes a little bit in Alberta when other countries are coming here. We've previously been pretty much attached to the U.S. But when you have countries coming here, like sovereign nations, whether it's Statoil or whether it's the South Korean or whether it's the Chinese oil company, they don't have that attachment to the American public, which is served by the big American companies. When they come, they also have probably a greater interest in establishing government-to-government relationships to understand what's in the best interests for them.

There are sensitivities that come from the other companies that come to Alberta to look at what their investment is: how secure, you know, what their opportunities are. While it may drive more upgrading here with some policy changes or some incentives, ideally we need a pipeline to the west coast so we open up the markets.

When you start to ship, then the business decision gets made about what's the most economical way to get this product to the consumer. When you already had refineries built in the States that just needed to adapt the front end, then the financial decision was probably much easier to make. But if you're India, for example, and what you need is diesel fuel, the cost to carry the bitumen there to upgrade it would be different than to already-built refineries in the States. So some of the increase in bitumen production will naturally find a home to be upgraded in Alberta because we'll have other markets to send it to.

Yes, there can be ways to drive business decisions, but they have to be kept in the context of the free trade agreement, where we can't differentiate what we charge ourselves or what we charge them. So the best solution is competition for that product.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I think we always have to look after the public interest first, the public interest of Albertans, and what may necessarily be in their interests may not be in the interests of an energy company. Energy officials, the CEOs, have a job to do, and that's to maximize profit and look after their shareholders. We all understand that. But your job, the government's job, is to look after the public interest. With all this bitumen having been shipped away, I think there has been a failure here to protect the public interest, and I would like to see in the future some changes made to those regulations. I think it's good public policy, and it's not violating anyone's trade laws. Your suggestion that we need a pipeline to Kitimat or to Prince Rupert, whatever they choose: I couldn't agree with you more.

We have to diversify our trade, our energy exports with America, because whenever you look at the differential between west Texas intermediate and the North Sea crude, we've got to make sure we've got another market for our oil and our oil products. I agree with you.

Now, we don't have much time, and there's a lot to discuss in this budget, but another important part of the revenue stream is how we are treating Suncor and Syncrude in the bitumen valuation methodology. We talked about that in question period last week, I think, Mr. Chairman, but I'm surprised to see on page 49 of the fiscal plan that you're still trying to work out the royalty-amending agreements between Suncor and Syncrude and your department, or your government. I'm surprised. I see where Suncor recently had profits triple as, you know, Fort McMurray's output hit a record, yet at the same time they squeezed another $150 million out of you in a royalty rebate. They paid some taxes on that, and they got $104 million for themselves. For the Syncrude joint venture, if you go through the financial statements, you will see similar amounts which are theirs.

I can't understand, in light of the Auditor General's report going back to 2007, that this issue is still unresolved. When are you going to finally blow the whistle on these outfits and say: "Enough is enough. If you don't agree with us, we'll see you in court"? This surely has to be settled at some point as production goes up.

Mr. Snelgrove: I think you might be taking some of the recommendations from the Auditor General where he talked about the collection of royalties in a little bit of a different frame than he made the suggestions. The simple fact is that this is a contract. This was a business contract with these two companies, and we're obligated. As much as you can say, "We'll see you in court," we already have a legal document, a legal agreement with them. So negotiating with them – I also have to tell you that you're absolutely right. It is our responsibility to balance the public interest – no question – but it's also our responsibility to balance the contractual agreements.

I don't think that the people who represent Suncor or Syncrude are any less committed to their shareholders. They have an obligation to stick up for the people that put them there. So they're doing their job. Our department is doing our job. We'll get there someday, but the simple fact is that we also do have an obligation, if we have overcollected, to refund it. It would be no different than if you had paid more taxes – and Lord knows I don't like paying taxes myself, but if I have paid too much, I am entitled to a refund. I don't think you would say that just because you're rich or wealthy, you don't deserve your refund on the same basis as anyone else who has overpaid their taxes. They deserve a refund. If that's what the agreement has stated, then we're obligated, as a matter of fact we're required to live up to that agreement.

The Chair: Hon. member, you still have 20 minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. Now, I want to see your inner Danny Williams come out here. He negotiated a significantly higher royalty rate with the same company, Petro-Canada/Suncor, for their operations offshore Newfoundland. They're getting significantly more.

As I understand it, that wasn't an overpayment on the royalties. They state in here – and this is in their third-quarter report – that they continue to negotiate final adjustments to the bitumen valuation calculation for the 2009-10 interim period and for the term of the Suncor royalty-amending agreement that expires December 31, 2015. So it's not an overpayment. It seems to be just the whole idea of how much we should pay in the first place based on quality of the bitumen and other factors. I certainly think you can get that right.

Now, your inner Danny Williams. The Conservative Premier of Newfoundland negotiated – and this is the royalty rate they pay in Newfoundland. For three months ended December 31, 2010, they were paying $29.17 a barrel. It would be a little less for the 12 months. This is a better number for the year. It would be $27.99. They were one penny less than $28 a barrel.

Now, the royalty rate that Suncor is paying is not noted in here that I could find in their quarterly report, but the Syncrude joint venture, which is under that same sort of agreement, is paying around $7 in royalty. We put a lot of money over the years into both Suncor and Syncrude, and by "we" I mean the taxpayers, so I would really like to see in the future this minister and this government show us your inner Danny Williams, please.

The nonrenewable resource revenue in the fiscal plan. You make note on page 50 that many of the royalty changes that were temporary have now become permanent. The drilling stimulus initiatives totalled, I think, over $3 billion if we add them up for the three years. For the estimates for 2011-12 I understand the drilling stimulus programs are going to be netted off the amount here, whether it's crude oil or bitumen or natural gas. It would be certainly crude oil and natural gas royalties. It would have nothing to do with bitumen. Excuse me. Now, how much do you anticipate that is going to be for this year for the drilling stimulus initiative?

Mr. Snelgrove: There are two parts to that. There's the royalty change that we made permanent, and the $200-a-metre will be expired, so that one, hon. member, I don't know. I will get the officials – I told them I wouldn't make them work too hard, but we'll try and get that number for you, okay?

Mr. MacDonald: I appreciate that because in last year's fiscal plan there was a projection, I believe, for what that would be in this year. Certainly, last year the projection was that there would be a $700 million amount, $732 million in drilling stimulus initiatives, but because of the higher number of credits for smaller companies it grew into that $1.6 billion amount. There was a similar number for the year under budget estimates that we're discussing. I would really appreciate some information on that, just exactly what. I view it as hidden now. We have no idea what's been given back, and surely someone on that side of the House would know that. I hope it's a small amount at these high prices.

Now, my next question would be around the Health and Wellness operating expenses on page 17 of the fiscal plan. In 2010-11 Health and Wellness's operating expenses included $527 million provided to Alberta Health Services related to the Alberta Health Services 2009-10 deficit. How is that money accounted for to your department? When Alberta Health Services gets that $527 million for their deficit, how do they account to you for it?

Mr. Snelgrove: The deficit in Alberta Health Services would've been a part of our consolidated financial statement, so you would see over there where they were actually run the same as with any other assets or whatever they would have. They would have been accounted for in our consolidated financial statement. The reason that we spread this over two years was just because there was that big a number. So where that number from us would show up would be in Alberta Health Services' financial statement.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. The Wildrose Alliance there had a lot to say about this on the radio. I think you were talking on the radio at the same time, and I enjoyed listening to the conversation. I did. I didn't press the button and go to Sirius. I was listening to you.

Now, the capital investments not included in the expense: they note $2.7 billion. This is on page 67. When you changed the government estimates – and I'm not trying to confuse you, but in the government estimates 2011-12 you note in the front where you have changed the voted expenses, right? You have made significant changes to the voted expenses and the definition of an expense. If you go to page 2, expense is defined.

Expense consists of program expense and debt servicing costs.

Program expense consists of salaries, supplies and services, grants and certain financial transactions. Debt servicing costs consists of interest paid on various forms of government debt.

In last year's estimates this included consumption of inventories.

On the next page, page 3, you will note that estimate amounts which do not include cash are no longer required in any supply vote. So if estimate amounts that do not require cash are no longer included in any supply vote, why did you make these changes to your accounting procedures or accounting tables this year? Why did you do that now?

Mr. Snelgrove: I would suggest it's because we're trying to maintain a set of books that is consistent with what we're asked to do by the Auditor. More importantly, we're trying to make sure that they're readable. You will probably appreciate that even our business plans have shrunk down now to four or five pages with relevant information as opposed to amounts in the budget that had no bearing on the budget. They were in many cases irrelevant. So what this is is really a modernization. I mean, you disclose all of these other amounts; they're just not part of your budget. The budget is about cash. So while they're disclosed, you don't vote on something that's not money. All the votes for our estimates are about money. All of these other ones are about identifying but don't require a vote.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. So the non cash expenses by department: we've got $895 million there, on page 15, and then we have these non cash capital investments by department, which is another amount. Am I right? I was trying to figure this out over the weekend, and if you think this is simple, it gave a guy like me a headache. I was trying to follow this and understand why you made these changes this year, this year being the fourth consecutive year when you have had a budget deficit, and the budget deficits over the last four year total $10 billion. I was listening to your conversation and the Wildrose conversation on the radio, and I was wondering if these changes added or reduced the $2.7 billion in capital investments that are not included in expenses.

Mr. Snelgrove: No. All of these are still included in the deficit numbers. This total is included in it. It just simply doesn't need to be voted on. But they are all absolutely included.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Then why this year did you decide to change how the budget estimates are presented in the estimates book, and why are there such significant differences in each and every department? If you compare government estimates this year to last year, you will see where there's a totally different accounting of some of these non cash expenses.

Mr. Snelgrove: This doesn't have any effect on the budget numbers. This is simply trying to streamline some of the accounting to make it, you know, more understandable. It doesn't have any effect, any change on the actual numbers in our budget. There's no reason to do it this year other than when. You're going to do it sometime. It has nothing to do with a deficit. It has nothing to do with trying to change numbers. It's simply saying that this is a more relevant accounting principle. There is no step being missed in the discussion. These numbers are still all included. They do not require the Assembly to vote on them. It makes no difference to the budget numbers in the total. Okay?

Mr. MacDonald: I have another question. This is on page 85 of the fiscal plan, where you have ministry expenses by object. I have no idea, and I would appreciate it if you could tell me what this is. You have a net or a reduction of $4.4 billion of the total expense, and it is an intraministry consolidation adjustment. Then over two more columns to the right you will see an interministry consolidation adjustment. What the heck is the difference between an intraministry and an interministry adjustment? Can you shed some light on that, please?

Mr. Snelgrove: This is accounting, hon. member. This is accounting. The first one, the intraministry consolidation adjustments, is for adjustments within a ministry – seniors, for example – and the second one, the interministry consolidation, is where there's a transfer from ministry to ministry. This is simply accounting for monies that would move internally, in the first column as you go across from left to right, and the column that's one over is when it goes to another department.

Mr. MacDonald: An example of going to another department would be legal costs provided by Justice to Service Alberta for something, and that would be interministry, right?

Mr. Snelgrove: That's correct.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. We're almost out of time, and this is unfortunate. I would like to ask a question from page 70 of the fiscal plan, please. This year $228 million will be debt-servicing costs for the Alberta Capital Finance Authority. There are some other debt-servicing costs here. P3 projects are not included in this that I see except that ring road, the $40 million there. Am I correct in my understanding that these debt-servicing costs are not included in the total expenses of the government?

Mr. Snelgrove: Debt-servicing cost, for example for the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, is recovered. We loan the money to the municipalities at a lower rate, but they pay us that money. The $40 million wouldn't be recovered. So some are not a drain on the government; they're simply facilitating. If you go back to page 67 on line 7 down, debt-servicing costs, they're all included there. Then you'd have to go back to the revenue lines, where you'd see the return from these different corporations. So there would be a different number, but they are accounted for on page 67, and then you have to go back to the revenue tables to see the return from the capital financing corporation.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. Now, I don't know how much time I have left, but I want to talk about page 145 of the tax plan. There's a page sort of highlighted, or it looks like it came photocopied from somewhere. Buyer Beware: Charitable Donations Schemes. Some newspaper reporters picked up on this, and I thought I would google or check out "tax planning arrangements Alberta" to see if any citizens or anyone who might be scammed on this would have an alert from the government, and I did not see anywhere on a government website a buyer beware warning other than what would pop up in this fiscal plan on the Internet.

I think more should be done to educate consumers of this potential trap because I think donors have every right to be aware that some of these generous tax refunds as promised may not be all what we think they are and more. I would really urge you to make sure that somewhere on the government's – I mean, you can spend all this money on Public Affairs Bureau advertisements to talk about how great you all are. Surely, you can alert consumers to the potential scam that exists under this legislation. I think it was the Premier's flagship legislation going back two or three years, if I remember correctly. I would really urge you to put somewhere where people can see, other than on page 145 of the tax plan, the potential scam that could occur as a result of unscrupulous people promoting this legislation in an unscrupulous fashion.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: I agree, but it really doesn't have anything to do with the community spirit program that the Premier brought in. I think this is an absolutely clear attempt to defraud the government and people, and I'm not sure what the best vehicle is to make people more aware. I'm not sure how many hundred court challenges there are. It's a huge number across Canada. So this isn't an Alberta issue; it's an all-across-Canada issue. I think the federal government is very aggressively pursuing them, but I do agree with you.

You know, sometimes you cannot save people from themselves. How many times have we heard of people that have mailed money to Uganda or somewhere to get their rich uncle's inheritance? You would think, as an average Albertan: who would fall for that nonsense? But people do all the time. You wonder: how much money can you spend to try and get them to give their heads a shake and realize that if it seems too good to be true, there's a very real chance that it is. So it's not only this scheme, but there are countless schemes out there. What did Barnum and Bailey say? There's a sucker born every minute.

There is talk about it at the federal level, certainly at the fed-prov working ministers, about financial literacy. So it's not just about this. It's about planning for their future and understanding about investments and the risks from them. So I don't disagree with you, you know, awareness around this and other ways to defraud people. We could certainly take a look at how we can do that.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Thank you. Now, in the Ministry of Finance and Enterprise's statement of operations in the estimates there is an amount of $451 million for the teacher's pre-1992 pension.

The Chair: Hon. member, the first hour has terminated, so the next 20 minutes are reserved for the third party.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for 20 minutes. You wish to have dialogue?

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Back and forth. I promise not to pontificate as long as the minister promises the same.

The first point I want to go over real quick is with regard to the deficit number versus the cash shortfall number. I want to be very clear with the minister up front that I am not accusing you or the government of not following generally accepted accounting principles. I've never said that, and I don't claim it, but what I have said is that the $3.4 billion deficit number that you're claiming doesn't tell the whole story. Your budget document does tell the whole story, and if you dig a little deeper, it's clear that the cash shortfall – in other words, the money we are taking in – is $6.1 billion less than we're spending.

Where I get those numbers from – and I just want to make sure that the minister and I are on the same page with regard to the cash shortfall. Obviously, on page 88 of the fiscal plan you have the deficit number outlined there, $3.4 billion. Then if you go to page 16 in your fiscal plan, under capital investment there's $2.737 billion worth of capital investment, and then it has a little footnote that says: "Capital investment in government-owned assets is not reported in expense. Capital Plan spending equals capital investment plus capital grants and other support." So that $2.7 billion is not included in the deficit number, and the total of that, if you add it to the $3.4 billion deficit number that you're claiming is $6.1 billion, which happens to be roughly the amount that the sustainability fund on page 88, is projected to go down this year. This year it's projected to go down from roughly $11 billion to roughly $5 billion, so roughly $6 billion.

Is what I've outlined here, Minister, the correct number? Are we taking in $6 billion less than we are expending this year and taking that $6 billion almost completely out of the sustainability fund? Is that true?

Mr. Snelgrove: Not totally. The fact is that we are amortizing projects, even ones that were built 10 years ago. We're still having to allow now in the amortization, and we're going to have to carry that amortization on a go-forward basis, just like you would do if you were depreciating or building in a business. You pay up front, and you amortize it over a longer period of time. So the $808 million of amortization also reflects a cost for projects that were completed years before.

The fact on the capital investment is that we are taking a liquid asset, or a cash asset, and turning it into a physical asset, so on a consolidated basis it's a saw-off at the end of the day because your total asset of a government, whether it is in cash or in a building, less the amortization is how you end up with that consolidated statement. So there is a twist, but the numbers as they are are all in there.

Mr. Anderson: They absolutely are all in there, and I appreciate the explanation. I guess my basis for the question was this, though. If you have $11 billion in the sustainability fund one year and you have $5 billion the next year, clearly you're taking out $6 billion to pay for things.

I understand that you consider $2.7 billion of that as a capital asset, and as you say, it saws off. But, I mean, roads, bridges, and buildings and things: the vast majority of that is stuff that you can't put up for sale and sell one day. In fact, it's going to cost money to maintain them, which is fine.

I think we're working from the same number. We had $11 billion. We're spending $6 billion more in cash, roughly. Taking into account amortization, these other things, $6 billion more is going out of our coffers this year than is coming in, and that's being sponsored out of the sustainability fund. I think we're essentially on the same page, but I think Albertans get confused because they hear "$3.4 billion deficit," and really they see the sustainability fund going down by $6 billion. It's confusing to them. Hopefully, we can be a little clearer on that moving forward.

I would note, for example, that it would confuse the heck out of people if the target surplus in 2013-14, that you have here on page 88, that you're expecting is $1.2 billion – that's the surplus you plan for in 2013-14. Yet the sustainability fund is still planned to go down about $700 million. That's why average Albertans don't quite understand when they look at this. Why is the sustainability fund going down when we're running a surplus? They wouldn't understand that. I'm not accusing anyone of not following any accounting principles or being fraudulent. I'm just saying that the spin on these things can be confusing for people.

With regard to the sustainability fund the question I have now is that last year we had roughly $15 billion in the sustainability fund, and by 2013-14, if your projections hold true, which I think, obviously, is volatile – who knows? – that sustainability fund will be down to $1.7 billion from a high of $15 billion just last year. I hope oil is at $120 a barrel. I hope the Canadian dollar is at 90 cents, 95 cents, at a good healthy rate for our export markets. I hope natural gas recovers to $5. I really do hope that. But if it doesn't occur, what happens when we reach the end of our rope in the sustainability fund? Is it going to be this government's policy to raise taxes or to go into debt or at that point cut deeply into our social spending or infrastructure spending? What's your strategy if things don't pan out?

Mr. Snelgrove: I think you would have to consider a combination of all the options that are available to you. As we talked about with Mr. MacDonald before, it's more predictable to have bitumen as your biggest source of revenue because, like we said, they just can't leave. I guess that ultimately they could if the world economy collapsed and there was no demand for oil and they closed it down and left. All of this country would have some real tough decisions to make.

I appreciate what you're saying. I don't think that will happen. If circumstances are such that we have to continue to slow down the growth in government, in fact start to make some cuts and reductions, we'll have to look at that, and Albertans ultimately will have the say in that.

I'm not sure it's even appropriate to speculate about what might happen, but I can tell you that we are keenly aware that Albertans don't want to go back into accumulated deficits to run their province. We can be back there, to where we wanted to be on our operating now, so we are making choices with cash we've got. If circumstances changed so that our revenue sources were going to be at risk and nonexistent, in all fairness, we would have to cross that bridge at that time. But I think Albertans ultimately will tell their government what direction they want to go.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: All right. Thank you for that explanation. So we would probably be looking at cuts or reductions, which makes sense. I mean, if it runs out, that's what will happen inevitably. I hope that we will look to restraining the growth of government and the size of our spending rather than looking towards raising taxes or, alternatively, going back into debt. I hope that given the wealth that we have, we don't pass that debt on to our kids.

One of the things that I have found troubling is our treatment in the province of the heritage fund. I've spoken about this a lot, both in my time with the governing party as well as in opposition. Our heritage fund now, when you adjust it for inflation, is worth roughly what it was in 1980. One of the reasons for that is because although we inflation-proof the heritage fund, which is good, we raid the fund. Anything above that inflation rate we take out of the heritage fund earnings every year and stick into general revenues.

We saw this when we had the recent stock market crash. The heritage fund went down in value about 18 per cent one year, reflecting the stock market crash. It went from roughly $17 billion to $14 billion during that time. Then when the stock market essentially recovered the next year and actually is now higher than it was previous to the crash or very close – it's essentially on par right now – the heritage fund gained a lot of its value back. But the majority of that money was taken out and put into general revenues, so now we have a heritage fund that is worth $14.4 billion, projected to be $15 billion by the end of this year in the third-quarter update.

I think there are a lot of people in the province that really do feel the heritage fund is key to making sure that if oil and gas revenues go down because we run out, which is highly unlikely anytime soon, or if the price of oil goes down because of new technologies, et cetera, we have something permanent there that our kids can use the interest off so that they won't have to make the decision to have a PST or to have higher income taxes or corporate taxes or what have you. So protecting that heritage fund is critical to a lot of folks in Alberta.

I guess I would ask the minister if there is a strategy going to be put in place. There should have been a long time ago. The first step, the kind of minimum standard that I think Albertans expect, is that we keep every cent earned in the heritage fund in the heritage fund every year rather than throwing it into general revenues.

Mr. Snelgrove: There will be a strategy coming forward, and I'll give you my personal take on it because, I mean, it's something that the government has to work on. I think that when we are back in surplus positions, the first thing we need to do is to re-establish the sustainability fund savings account. I think we need to establish what level that would be. I think 25 per cent of what our annual budget is would be the appropriate number, and that would be roughly $10 billion.

Then I think you need to have a discussion about what you're going to do with the heritage savings trust fund. You know, ultimately, it could become a massive chunk of money with the future we've got here with bitumen, but if it's not producing wealth other than just sitting there, I think we're missing out on opportunities.

I think the endowments in the heritage savings trust fund for medical research are critical. I really think they need to be targeted. They need to be put up where you can commit. If we're going to attract teams of world-class researchers here, I think you need to be able to say them: "Guess what? We've got $5 billion in the heritage savings trust fund medical research account, and that's going to guarantee you funding for your research for, you know, forever."

So, yes, it would be great to leave the wealth that's created in it, and I also think that that is certainly a goal we should work to, but I think we have to be very clear about what we intend that money to do on behalf of Albertans. I'll tell you that the one thing I've seen destroy people is not having to work. I don't want to ever have to use that heritage savings trust fund as something that would say: well, our kids don't need to work; look at the money we've got. We all know the examples of the spoiled rich kid who, you know, daddy looked after.

So I want it there. I think there's stability. The ability it has to contribute to our economy has to be really thought out. Have a good discussion with Albertans, and then lay out the medical research, the scientific research for the innovation fund. That's where we need to direct the money. It could grow to a very large number. Then you start to increase the exemption level for people. In my world the most appropriate tax reduction you can give people is to let them keep the most money they make at the start. It is troubling that the federal government has left their exemption level at $8,000. Who the heck can live on $8,000? Who can live on the $17,000 that we're at? So if they were at $17,000 or we worked to $25,000 or $30,000, that would be where I would like to see us target in the future.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I'm glad that we're thinking about these things. I would suggest, though, that although I agree that a portion of the money we earn in surpluses or – essentially, it's surpluses. I completely agree with putting a portion of that into endowment funds, scholarship funds, those types of things. I do think that we need to put a large portion of our surpluses, when we return to a surplus, into the actual heritage fund itself. It's not about having it so that our kids don't work, but it is about making sure that we have an environment for them after oil and gas revenues decline, that they don't have to make the choice of hiking up taxes, cutting programs, those sorts of things. You have to obviously envelope some of that money for ongoing use in the way you're talking about with endowments, but also some of that just has to be put aside for the time when we won't have the same oil and gas revenues. So I hope the minister will take that under consideration.

The last point – I know we have just a few minutes – is regarding the capital plan. This has been a source of consternation for me because I'm in a situation, as are all MLAs, where there are infrastructure needs in our own constituencies. For me, obviously, as everyone in this House knows, it's schools. We need about $60 million to $70 million worth of schools. We don't need any more roads for this year. We don't need bridges. We don't need anything except two to three schools. That's all we need. Don't give us a cent.

The problem is that we envelope this money. You're proposing $6.6 billion for infrastructure; we're proposing $4.2 billion, which, by the way, is more than the average of B.C., Quebec, and Ontario per capita. But when we say this, we get accused of: "Well, you know, what are you going to spend the money on? What are you going to cut? Which hospital aren't you going to build?"

The problem with being in the opposition a lot of the time – and in government; I was in Treasury Board – is that there's no list, that I've ever seen, no priority list. You give a little bit of a breakdown of the projects in the budget but only the largest ones. You don't get down into: what is this government going to be spending its money on, what projects over the next three or four years, and what criteria did you use to arrive at that? It makes it very difficult as an opposition member who's trying to propose ways to balance the budget when we don't have that list in front of us.

I understand that you don't want to pit one community against another. I get that. But in the interests of being open and transparent and being able to discuss what the priorities are and if these criteria that we're using are appropriate, et cetera, it just seems backwards. As an opposition MLA my hands are tied. I have no idea because there's just not enough information out there for me to look at that would allow me to make suggestions on what project should be delayed, what should be moved up, et cetera. That's very frustrating, especially coming from a constituency that does need some investment in it because it is such a fast-growing constituency.

Mr. Snelgrove: There are criteria in place, and the hon. member would remember. We don't pick the schools. The school boards send in their lists, and the priority is based on standard criteria across Alberta. Obviously, they take into account some of the safety issues as paramount, certainly student numbers.

Even someone as slow to learn as me was able to pick up from the hon. member that he would like some schools built in Airdrie. You know, I managed to pick that up anyhow.

The fact is that we know that in the next 10 years in Alberta there are going to be a hundred thousand more students. A hundred thousand. I can tell the hon. member and I can tell all members that we are working with school boards, with the Department of Infrastructure, and with the Department of Education to look at: how do we accelerate schools?

I would also certainly like to hear from the opposition the ideas they've got about long-term financing. It doesn't make sense to have to write off these schools this year or next year when you're going to use them for 30 or 40 years and you know you need them. So we are looking for opportunities.

The Chair: Hon. member, the time limit is reached.

Mr. Snelgrove: It was just getting good.

The Chair: Well, we still have a chance to come back. Three hours.

Now, the next 20 minutes is for a member of the fourth party. The leader of the ND opposition, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to just go back and forth in the same way.

I want to start just with a discussion of sort of the basic concept of the budget. Of course, there's been a major draw on the sustainability fund this year in order to balance the budget. I just have a basic question because, in my view, the fund is being used in the way for which it was designed; in other words, saving when you have surpluses, then drawing it down. We're not borrowing money; we're using accumulated savings that were allocated for that purpose. So maybe you can enlighten me. This may be a very naive question. Why is that considered a deficit budget?

Mr. Snelgrove: That's a good question.

Mr. Mason: Don't say I've never done anything for you.

Mr. Snelgrove: The Saskatchewan government – and gosh knows everyone has a great deal of respect for Brad Wall, but he stands up and announces their third consecutive balanced budget, and they do exactly what we do. They take their money out of their savings account and use it. Manitoba I think, too, just took $500 million out of theirs.

To the hon. member: I guess technically we are spending more money than revenue this year, except that's not counting the revenue from our savings account, which would be balanced. If this was your household account, you would consider that you've done it. You're not borrowing money. So why is it considered a deficit? I guess in accounting terms that might be the definition. In practical terms I don't know. I'd be happy to listen to a motion from whatever party they call you now to call it something else. I would support that completely.

Mr. Mason: Well, we haven't changed our name, Mr. Chairman.

It just seems to me that, you know, the government shoots itself in the foot. This is the government's own definition of a deficit. It strikes me very much that this is the way the fund was intended to be used.

The problem is that the way the sustainability fund has been drawn in the last several years is no longer sustainable. I mean, in this particular year you've drawn more out of it than is left. I know you've got some projections that it's going to last two or three more years, but in actual fact if we have the same set of circumstances in next year's budget that we have in this year's budget, it won't cover the shortfall in funding. So that's really a question that I sort of wanted to raise because I think this is a real problem. I don't believe that the government is overspending. I don't know if we can sustain the current level of annual increase in some of the big budgets, but I think that the government has taken the better course to adopt this budget rather than the one that was advocated, I guess, by the previous minister of finance.

The question, though, is how you will be able to maintain that level of funding for important social programs that the people of Alberta want without making significant cuts in the next couple of budgets. Now, that would satisfy some parties in the Legislature, it would satisfy some leadership candidates and their supporters in your own party, but I don't think it would satisfy the people of Alberta. The question comes of how that's going to be made sustainable in the long run. This is sort of where I wanted to focus a little bit tonight.

You know, in the past when Stockwell Day was the Treasurer, he brought in a flat personal income tax. I remember that debate, and I didn't like the priorities for tax savings. I'm not necessarily opposed to giving people some savings on their taxes, but I think the flat tax gives it to the people that don't need it. It also costs a government a significant amount of revenue year over year. When Steve West was the Provincial Treasurer, one of the first events I attended when I was newly elected as an MLA was a lunch at the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, where he announced changes to the corporate income tax rate, where the plan was over a period of years to bring that down from 15 to 8 per cent. Now, I think the government has leveled off around 10, but that's still a 33 per cent reduction in revenue from that source.

Then, of course, when the government brought in some higher royalties, there was an additional $2 million, minus some offsets, that was going to be captured there. When they backed away from that, that also affected our revenues. I've always been concerned that we've been too dependent on revenue from natural gas. Of course, now the situation with all the shale gas finds is that there's more gas on the market and prices are not as high as they used to be and are unlikely to go back up to those levels. We got so much of our royalty revenue from that, and a lot of the surpluses were due predominantly to natural gas royalty windfalls over a period of years. I think the government was right to accept the proposal from the opposition – I'll give the Liberals some credit; that was really sort of something they championed – and set up the sustainability fund.

Mr. Chairman, the point I want to make is that whether it's good policy or bad policy, you know, I understand that your philosophy is different from our philosophy. The fact of the matter is that there have been a number of strategic decisions made by the government that has had them walk away from very significant amounts of sustainable revenue and become more dependent on unstable revenue, being royalty revenue. So I'm wondering: if your projections for an increase in economic activity, that this budget is based on, don't come to pass – and the document does identify this as a risk – what do we do? Do we go the way of the Wildrose and start cutting all of the spending on important social programs? Do we borrow? What's going to happen if it doesn't come to pass? You're kind of gambling, I think.

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, that's the balance that we're trying to achieve, somewhere between where you are and where they are. If you just take a look at what taxes do to an economy – I mean, they're a necessary evil; there's no question about it. People talk about a sales tax. That may provide a stream of money, but it's coming from a finite amount of money. It's like the dealer in Las Vegas. They're taking a little bit out of every pot. They can't lose. But, ultimately, unless you bring more money to the table, that dealer ends up with all of it.

The whole focus of the Premier and of our government is the fact that if we need more money, we have to grow a bigger economic pie. There is no other sustainable way for us. Certainly, your two parties know how much Albertans, Canadians across the board want that public health care protected, preserved. You know how much they want their education to be world class. We know that, too. The work that's been done around developing the innovation strategy, developing the royalty strategy that gets the jobs here, the initiative to partner up with North West upgraders so that that economic pie grows here: the only way that we can maintain the standard of living, including the education, the health care, the seniors, the roads, the whole nine yards, is to grow a bigger economic pie.

Having what I would call a responsible tax structure is one thing that does attract investment, and it'll keep people here. We can agree to disagree on whether the flat tax is good or bad. Personally, you know, it's hard to suggest that it isn't very fair. I mean, a guy that makes $100,000 pays $10,000, and somebody that makes $40,000 pays $4,000, so they are paying more. Look at the U.S., where the progressive tax really only affects the people who are working on a salary. I can tell you that in business I can have an unbelievable standard where I can hide it. You shouldn't be driving people into tax havens because they won't pay the tax, so a fair tax allows people to pay in and still maintain their fair share.

Our proposal is to grow a bigger economic pie because we agree with you that we need to continue to pay for health and education and seniors, without question.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks, Mr. Chairman, and thanks for the answer. You know, I don't want to get into a big debate. I mean, we kind of have a little bit of this debate every time we deal with your estimates. This is the only chance I get to actually ask questions that aren't limited by 35 seconds and a Speaker there who's watching you like a hawk.

The Auditor General has said in the past that when you give a tax cut, you have to look at it as an expenditure. You're trying to achieve something. He's asked the government to say: what are your objectives by cutting taxes? If you want to cut taxes, that's fine. That might be a legitimate thing. But what's your goal by doing that? I mean, you're talking about greater competitiveness, yet these things are never sort of laid out. And I think it's something that the Auditor General has never really got an answer to from the government.

Here's the thing. You talk about growing an economic pie. By all means, I think that people are going to be drawn to Alberta. Our taxes are considerably lower. They could be increased in some cases at the high end, for corporate taxes or on very high incomes, for very wealthy individuals, and still remain below any other place in the country.

What happens – and this was really the gist of the question. In your own fiscal plan on page 115 it says:

- Although Alberta's economic growth is forecast at a robust 3.3% in 2011, and to average a healthy 3.2% over the medium term, there are significant risks to the outlook.
- ... This type of concentrated, commodity-based mega-project driven growth leaves the province particularly vulnerable to external turmoil in currency, credit and commodity markets.
- The US, Japan and key parts of Europe continue to struggle with structural problems in their financial sectors, high levels of public debt, and sluggish labour markets. The challenge in these countries is how to reduce government deficits and raise interest rates to more normal levels without jeopardizing their continued economic expansion.

The question is: if Alberta does not meet the revenue estimates in the budget and as a result the government has to take more money out of the sustainability fund and it's not there because it's gone, what are we going to do?

Mr. Snelgrove: It is hard to say with absolute certainty that everything is going to unfold as we've said in here. I guess I'd have to ask the hon. member. Given all the abundance of natural resources and renewable resources in Alberta and the fact that we do have this economic relationship with Saskatchewan and British Columbia and although Canada has challenges, there is no doubt it's one of the very best countries going forward because we are not dependent on anyone else in the world. The world economy and the crash that was caused by the American financial sector – I would call criminal action to people – if that happens, there's not much we can do about it. If the rest of the world crashes, there is no question that Canada and Alberta will see a lower standard of living than we have now.

You know, we're working on trade agreements with the United Arab Emirates for food. People are coming to Alberta for some of the things that we've done around agriculture because we have the most secure food sources in the world. And I've said it, that the other part of our food production that is undervalued, in my opinion, is the fact that we do not have rats. Like the Premier said, there might be some two-legged ones. The fact is that the world and much of the very wealthy part of the world looks to our food products as the best there is. We can guarantee it is because of the standards that are in place. We've had these other countries come here, go around Alberta, and be absolutely blown away by how clean. And we've seen this increase in forestry.

All of this put together says that if we don't have faith that Alberta is going to at least hold its own on the world stage, who in the heck is? We know we're going to be challenged by the Brazils and Argentinas and some of those emerging countries. They're going to run into their pressures, too. Even the Chinese economy is starting to realize that as they develop that wealth internally, they start to consume what they produce. Where they had a very cheap labour force and could shuffle off everything over to the European and North American economies, now they want to keep some of their own. They want their own TV, they want their own car, they've got to start building roads, and that starts to change the way their economy affects the rest of the world.

I mean, to a great extent you want your economy to be based on consumer spending and trade, but things around the world will change. I think everyone in this room would probably agree that the potential for Alberta to continue to be where we are is as good as – I can't think of another country or another state or province that has what we've got. In the eventuality that we're all wrong and our revenue sources dry up, then you really do have a discussion with Albertans about: what do we absolutely have to do, and what could we do without?

Mr. Mason: Well, good luck.

Now that I've got the minister kind of warmed up, I'm going to hit him with one of my favourite subjects, and that is nonrenewable resource revenue. In the fiscal plan on page 14 nonrenewable resource revenue is estimated to be $8.3 billion for 2011-12, or 23 per cent of total revenue. That's down from the 33 per cent actual for 2008-09.

The government's resource rent target for conventional oil and gas is between 50 and 75 per cent. Over the last 10 years royalties and land sales captured an average of 47.4 per cent of the resource rent generated by the sale of conventional oil and gas. If the government had managed to collect somewhere in the middle of the target range – that is, between 50 and 75 – it would have collected an additional $37 billion over the last 10 years. For the oil sands the government has only collected between 8.9 per cent and 14.6 per cent of rent since 1997. According to figures from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers oil and natural gas producers are operating in Alberta at pre-tax profits of $148 billion.

Mr. Chairman, it is my contention that Alberta continues to charge some of the lowest royalties in the world, particularly with respect to oil sands, and I don't advocate raising royalties on conventional oil and gas. But as the Premier said the other day in the House, we now have a third of the world's available oil reserves. We can just look at what is going on in other parts of the world to realize what an advantage we have with respect to security of supply and proximity to major markets.

The Chair: Hon. member, the 20 minutes allocated have been reached.

The next 20 minutes are for a member of any other party or an independent member. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: I'm in the other category now, am I, Mr. Chair? Thank you. Thank you very much.

Just because I'm interested in hearing what the finance minister's answer might be to my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood's last question – if, in fact, there was a question in there; I think there was – I'm going to cede just a little bit of my time here, if I can, to the minister just to give a brief answer on that.

Mr. Snelgrove: I don't think it's fair to take the royalties in isolation and say that that has to go up. I think you have to look at the total economic rent we cull from the activity in the oil sector and put that in context of jobs, land sales, the whole meal deal. Could they be higher? In hindsight, what's the point? But I will say: let's use the total economic rent that's derived from that oil activity, natural gas activity in Alberta, what we get from it, as opposed to just picking one.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you to the minister for that answer. I mean, frankly, I have less of a concern with where the royalties are today than I do with what we're doing with the nonrenewable resource revenues that we bring in. Finally, after a couple of years of less than spectacular results, to put it mildly, I think we've seen that with this latest new, new royalty framework we have generated economic activity and jobs and all the rest of that in the patch. The energy industry is such a key component of our economy in this province, as I'm sure the minister would agree, that I think we are on a better track now than we were a couple of years ago.

That said, though, I think that the art to this whole thing in terms of not only building the bigger economic pie but getting the full benefit from the pie has got to be in what we do with especially the nonrenewable resource revenues that we bring in because that is, I think, more like our inheritance than it is our employment income, if you will. We get the royalty from a barrel of oil once, before that barrel of oil is turned into gasoline or diesel or whatever and then consumed by somebody, so we only have one shot at doing something of value with it.

As a sort of general comment on the budget – and I'll make this comment to the finance minister because he's the guy where the budget buck stops – I'm concerned that I don't see any long-term savings plan or savings strategy here. I'm concerned that it's not obvious to me what the formula for reinvesting in the sustainability fund is going to be, other than that you're going to start putting some money back in when you're back in the black, and we've already seen a one-year delay in the prediction for when that's going to occur. I wonder if the minister can start out with my time by just addressing that whole issue of how we're going to rebuild the emergency savings and then, beyond that, how we're going to start reinvesting in the province's RRSP, if you will.

Mr. Snelgrove: We had a brief discussion, before the hon. member came back, with one of the other parties, too. Personally, I think that to start to talk about a savings strategy right now is a little early, and I think it takes away from how critical it is that we make sure we're doing things right right now with the budget. I'm not as keenly aware as maybe my predecessor was about developing that savings strategy. I know it's an issue. Personally, I think we need to rebuild the sustainability fund to 25 per cent of our yearly operating budget. I think that is the appropriate amount. Then I think we need to develop a strategy around the heritage savings trust fund and how it affects the endowments and what we are going to expect from them. My personal belief is that the endowment for medical research is as critical a thing as we do and the endowments around research, especially, as I think the minister of advanced education mentioned earlier today, the work around nanotechnology.

It's not just about putting money in the bank. It's taking the nonrenewable resources and saying: we're going to use this to develop a culture of medical research in Alberta that is world class and committed to for a generation. The strategy I see is not just about taking that money. You're absolutely correct. We get it once, so what do we want to do with it? I think the overwhelming majority of Albertans would support: replenish your sustainability fund, and then use your heritage savings trust fund, maybe even more focused on those kinds of really important advancements, whether they're economic, medical, educational, all this stuff. But let's get our endowments and focus them on what is really important for the next generation, not three, five years but 30, 50, 60, a hundred years.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I couldn't agree with the minister more except that I would say that the more money we put into whether it's the heritage fund or any other specific endowment that we're investing in, the more income it produces. The more income it produces, the more specific legacy projects and programs we can undertake with that money. So I would urge the minister to move up the date for when all this starts again. I would urge the minister to look over the course of the next 12 months, as he's preparing next year's budget, for areas that sort of fall below the line of what we absolutely have to do for the people in the province of Alberta and see where he can make some cuts in spending that he can reallocate to investing.

You have $240 million in in-year savings this year, for instance. Find another $10 million. You've got a quarter billion dollars that you could plug into one fund or another. A quarter billion dollars, as I read this budget, out of almost a total of $40 billion, is kind of like the financial planner telling the young married couple: yes, you've got an outrageous mortgage that you have to pay down, and you've got kids on the way, but can you find $25 a month to start putting away for a rainy day?

On another topic, your goal 1.2, encourage economic diversification and strengthen the province's fiscal resiliency. It seems to me we're told every year that that's our goal, yet this budget repeatedly acknowledges that Alberta is highly dependent on resource revenues, so how is the government going to encourage diversification? Does the government have specific goals for diversification of the economy, and how are your plans different from past goals of diversification?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, I thought we might go the whole afternoon not talking about the department of finance, but, darn it, he got to it. See? You got me.

You know, I think you see the action in the fact that we were able to sign the agreement on the North West upgrader. That agreement was well over a year, just about 18 months in the making, to put a deal of that size together, and there's a great deal of credit that needs to go to the department staff. You know, we're in something that is not normal for a government to do.

The other thing that we've done is the realignment of our research into Alberta Innovates and the way that they are governed and funded and accountable.

You know, I don't think there will ever be a time that a government isn't going to say: we're going to continue to do these things. It's not like you build something and then you walk away. It has to become a mindset, a culture of government, a culture of the province that you're going to continue to look for ways to do this.

4:50

The in-year savings strategy: you know, we have found nearly double our target every year that we've put it there. In the last three years well over a billion dollars was found the right way. I can tell the hon. member that I'm a firm believer that you shouldn't drive change from a budget. You should change and reflect it in a budget. The changes that we need to make need to be done for the right reasons and then go forward. So we're going to continue to work in that vein.

Mr. Taylor: A couple of questions arise from that answer. Question number one, as you go forward and you continue to develop this culture of diversification and government taking a role in partnership with business in doing that and promoting it, how do you measure your successes as you go? How do you know that this is a program worth continuing and that this is one that didn't work out and you want to get out of that one as quickly as you can? How do you know how to realign your goals and your vision as you go forward with this? That's question number one.

Question number two. The minister brought up North West Upgrading, for instance. This opens the issue of value-added activities and, I think, goal 2.2:

Support the implementation of government strategies to encourage value-added activities in areas of competitive advantage within our resource processing industries, focusing on sustainable, integrated approaches to economic diversification.

Does this government see value-added activities for resources beyond bitumen, and what are they?

Mr. Snelgrove: The wood fibre. You know, I had the chance to go to two plants down in Rocky Mountain House, where, I think, there are the only two in Canada that make that specific product.

But I want to go back to: how do we know when we're going to achieve what we set out to do? I think it's absolutely essential that you understand what your goal is before you start. This isn't something where you head off down the road and see where it takes you. I think you have got to be able to put out and say, "We're going to attract X number of dollars in private research" or "We're going to see six patents come from this thing in this time." You have to put the goal out first so that you can measure to it.

I'm a firm believer in a lady named Georgann Hancock, that used to look after the health unit in Vermilion. She said: if you can't measure it, don't do it because you really don't understand what you're doing. Let's get our goals, clearly, put them out there so everyone can see what the goal is. It really isn't about trying to establish innovation and then living up to your budget. Previously that was a success. If you spent your budget, you achieved your goal. That's not the culture anymore. It's really: what are you trying to do, and how are you going to be able to report back to us that you've achieved your goal? It really is setting the targets before you head off down the road.

Mr. Taylor: A fair comment, but there are goals, and then there are successes. I mean, the goal starts out. It's the beginning of the journey. At the end of the journey or part way along the journey you have to measure whether you are actually getting to your goal or not. Certainly, when we talk about some of the activities that Alberta Innovates will be a part of, you have to assume that some of those activities are going to produce much better results than others are, for instance. How do you measure success?

Mr. Snelgrove: The economy has a funny way of measuring it for you. You know, we are kind of bystanders in a lot of what goes on here, where we can compare year over year numbers that are relevant, whether it's GDP, whether it's disposable income. It can be as far down or as maybe disconnected to the budget as health, birth rates, age, how long you live. You've got all the spectrum of things you measure towards success. Often we don't have to be the ones out there trying to measure this. We can watch, and if our innovation and research attracts businesses, that shows up in the economy. If our personal income taxes and corporate taxes are growing, then we know something is working.

It's not that we have to really have the tape out on everything you start out on. In many ways it is really about seeing how it fits into the bigger picture of your province. Is there a way? In some circumstances, yes, there is.

It's also hard to accept that it's all a financial measurement. In many ways there are other measures that we talk about and some of the other business plans of departments that actually measure what we're doing for the people, how the people see their part being addressed, too. It might seem like a little bit of an evasive answer, and it is, but it's simply just not that clear.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, Minister, it does seem like a little bit of an evasive answer. And by the way, I would agree with a little bit of that evasion because you cannot actually always measure results in fiscal terms. I get that. I mean, when you're engaging in proactive spending, whether that's preventive spending, where you're spending today on measures that will keep people from getting sick or keep people from falling into poverty or keep people from losing their jobs on down the road, you're saving some money there. You know, it's pay me now or pay me later and pay me a whole lot more if you pay me later. If you're spending for investment purposes on postsecondary education, for instance, where we know that we're going to get back a multiplier effect of the money that we as the state put into Joe's or Jane's education.

I mean, those are good investments, some of which you can measure at least partly on a fiscal scale and some you measure in quality of life and human resources and health and environmental skills. So I've got you on that. But it doesn't take away from the fact that we're talking about 40 billion tax dollars here or tax and nonrenewable revenue resource dollars here. I would think that the minister can give me maybe a little clearer answer around the issue of wealth. Whether we're measuring it ourselves as the government of Alberta or the Alberta economy is measuring it for us, here are the markers that we're looking for, the mileposts that tell us whether we need to stop throwing money down this black hole because this is not working out or whether this is working just fine. You've got to have some measurements, some performance indicators there to tell you when to get out of a bad deal.

Mr. Snelgrove: That's true. In our business plans, in our targets we do set out goals, and I know the hon. member will have looked. We've tried to consolidate those documents down to something that's actually readable. You know, it really is a shame that in the past, I think, we covered people with so much paper that they weren't able to actually understand what the heck we were trying to accomplish. But if you get into our business plans, it does set out goals. It does set out the targets that we're going to try to achieve, and then we hold to that. We do have the business plans that we are ignoring today for the most part, but we do have them, and they do state the outcomes and do state the goals that we're going to measuring ourselves to.

Mr. Taylor: I don't think I have too much more time, so there's one thing in here that I want to zero in on. It's on page 165 of the ministry estimates. The tax and revenue management 2011-2012 estimate indicates that $1.958 million is not required to be voted on. Then on page 168 of the estimates, the reconciliation of supply vote to fiscal plan line – let me see if can you give you a reference point for that. No, I can't. That line cites the amounts not voted as $10.958 million. Am I on the right page here? I think I am. Yeah. On amounts not voted, the second column in, three items down in the expense by program category. I don't know; it kind of looks like a typo. It kind of looks like a $9 million discrepancy in there, and I need to know that it either is or it isn't. If it's not a typo, can you show me where the other $9 million exists? You've jumped from $1.958 million to $10.958 million, and when you type those numbers out on a piece of paper, it looks like somebody may have dropped a zero.

Mr. Snelgrove: Are we talking about the line where it has the interest payments and corporate tax refunds as the $9 million change?

Mr. Taylor: No.

Mr. Snelgrove: Page 165?

Mr. Taylor: Page 165.

Mr. Snelgrove: If you go back down about a third of the way down the page under department statutory amounts.

Mr. Taylor: Under department statutory amounts. And there I see now: is that the $9 million that I couldn't find before?

Mr. Snelgrove: I think so.

Mr. Taylor: You think so.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well I'm not sure if. . .

5:00

Mr. Taylor: It looks plausible, Minister, but if you could just confirm that and get back to us on it, that would be good.

Mr. Snelgrove: Okay.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chair, how much time do I have left? Two minutes?

The Chair: You have two.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. One more question, then, which is on the Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund, which is on page 175, I believe, of the estimates. In 2009-10 revenue was nearly $26 million, and expenses were about $22 million. I'm rounding the numbers off. In the 2010-11 budget the estimates were tuned back to $12 million, but the forecast actual revenue for this fiscal year that we're coming out of looks like it's going to be in the $20 million range. Revenue for the ministry's other funds in the 2010-11 budget all appear to have been overestimated except that this fund was underestimated, so I've got a couple of questions. Why was the original estimate for this year in the cancer prevention legacy fund so short of what actually turned out? You seem to have produced a much better rate of return here than you did on some of the other funds perhaps.

The other thing here that troubles me is that for 2011-12 the revenue is estimated to be $15 million and the expenses for the fund are $25 million for both last year and this year. That means that for 2010-2011 the fund was reduced by $5 million. It looks like for 2011-2012 it's going to be reduced by $10 million. Here we have a legacy fund, a cancer prevention legacy fund – you even use the word “legacy” – where the assets are being drained. Shouldn't they be maintained if not grown? What's the plan for this fund?

Mr. Snelgrove: This one isn't an endowment. It is a fund, and it's up to the discretion of the minister to identify how much can go. Quite honestly, it's just that '09-10 was a very good year for the particular fund, and we believe more consistently that the rate of return is going to be what's reflected there. But it isn't an endowment.

The Chair: Hon. members, the time has terminated for the party opposition. Now it's individual members, so the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to participate again in these budget estimates. My first question now would be around the Cabinet Policy Committee on the Economy, where we have a budget estimate of $240,000. It would be our view on this side of the House, with no disrespect, that the exact purpose and the use of those cabinet policy committees, that are internally chaired by various respected members of this Assembly, all government members, are in question. What they do, when they meet is certainly mysterious. It's not public record.

I would ask if in light of the difficult circumstances we're in, with a mega billion-dollar budget deficit this year and in past years – and the total is $10 billion in the last four years – there should be some sort of control and discipline put on this government's expenditures. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and others say: oh, all the spending you do is just fine. Well, I would disagree.

Now, if we were to, for instance, and this is only the amounts that we know about, cancel or eliminate the cabinet policy committees, the pay that's involved in them, the support staff, and transfer whatever work they're doing to the public so that the public could attend hearings – essentially, the policy field committees already exist. They are all party. The members get paid a generous amount to serve on those committees. Why can't we eliminate these cabinet policy committees, including the $240,000 amount that's included in your ministry support services? We could save ourselves at least $2,400,000.

Last year the minister of finance, who is no longer the minister of finance, had no idea what kind of money was spent on those, how often they met, what they discussed. It's in the public record. He didn't have any idea, and he didn't seem to care either. I'm asking this minister: why in this time of fiscal restraint could those committees not be eliminated? We could save $2.4 million and give more work to the policy field committees.

Mr. Snelgrove: I think we've had this discussion every year.

Mr. MacDonald: No, we haven't.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes, we have.

The one responsibility of government and the responsibility that all caucus members have is the development of policy. Quite honestly, that's our job. I'm going to introduce my staff, and their job is to implement that policy. Our job as elected officials is to develop policy. These policy committees are essential in the process of building sound policy. If you eliminated them – I'm not going to question your numbers – it would be about one-twentieth of 1 per cent of our budget. What you would be doing is removing a key part of the government, which is the responsibility of elected people in developing policy. We can agree to disagree on their importance or their membership, but I can tell you, as somebody who has seen them develop to what they are, from our point of view they are essential in what we do.

We have the people that actually do the work. If any of you don't know, this is our deputy minister, Tim Wiles. This is Darwin Bozek, who's the assistant deputy minister for strategic and business services as well as senior financial officer for our department, so we have to be nice to him. Up in the gallery, being spellbound by the discussion of the department of finance, is Ian Ayton, assistant deputy minister of tax and revenue, the person that we all like to hate, I think. He's joined by Richard Isaak and Shakeeb Siddiqui – I asked how to say it, and I hope I got that right, Shakeeb – and Craig Johnson from our financial services division. On behalf of all of government I hope you can take back to your staff that we do understand how hard you work, and we do appreciate it. This might not be the most exciting stuff we have to do, but in fact this is what governments do, the budget. The budgeting process and the budget documents are the cornerstone of any government. We do appreciate the time that they got to come and see this.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. To the minister of finance: again, you are leading by example. It is my view that the Treasury Board and the ministry of finance should be combined. Essentially, through political luck that's happened.

Mr. Snelgrove: This was lucky?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. In difficult circumstances I think you're doing the best you can. That ministry was essentially combined, I should say, through political chance.

Now, you may be reluctant to save $2.4 million by transferring the work that's done behind closed doors with the cabinet policy committees to the policy field committees, but you can live with that decision.

Horse racing, for instance, is an example of: if you look after the pennies, the dollars will look after themselves, and they will grow. While I was waiting for the budget to come out the other day, I went through the financial statements going back nine years. Essentially, the horse racing and breeding renewal program each and every year has seen an amount from $33 million up to $48 million, $56 million, now $35 million, $25 million, in that range, put into this subsidy. If it's 10 years, it's close to $400 million. That would be an example of money that I think could have been used to build seniors' lodges, for instance. You were talking about the lodge program that the Social Crediters developed and what it meant to rural Alberta. Well, $400 million would put a lot of seniors in safe, secure, accessible, affordable housing. I think it's another example of having the wrong priorities. That's an example of how we could have saved money and used it for another purpose.

Now, you're doing a great job as President of the Treasury Board and minister of finance, so if you can do it, there's no reason why others on this front bench couldn't. Like Environment: we could put Sustainable Resource Development in there. We could put Executive Council and International and Intergovernmental Relations together. Infrastructure and Transportation were together one time not too long ago; Justice and Attorney General and the programs under Solicitor General and Public Security; Municipal Affairs and Housing and Urban Affairs. Tourism, Parks and Recreation could be put together with Culture and Community Spirit. We would have a smaller cabinet. Maybe the meetings wouldn't last as long. Who knows? But you could save $40 million by combining or consolidating the size of cabinet.

In light of the budget deficit was any thought or any consideration given to reducing the size of government to save an additional $40 million?

Mr. Snelgrove: A couple of things. One, I wish Brian was still here so he could talk about this horse racing. We've talked about it every year, and you know we don't pay that money. You know that's an accounting entry that comes from the agreement where they run their slots, and that money goes back to them. If it weren't racing, we wouldn't have the money. It isn't taxpayers' money; it's their money. It's only channelled through government to be accounted for and back to them. So cancelling horse racing wouldn't change one penny. It would just simply put a bunch of people who shovel horse manure – wait a minute. Maybe that's what we do do.

Putting the ministries together. The average minister's office runs around $500,000. That's the total cost. So you're going to save, if you took out eight ministries, $4 million in costs, but the people that do the work in the departments are still going to do the work. The people that do the action requests – and Lord knows we get enough of them – are still going to be working no matter who their minister is. If there was one minister, you would still have 99.9 per cent of the people that do the work.

Really, to look at the top and say, "Let's have less decision-making at the highest level and more decision-making dumped down into the administrative level," because that's, in fact, what you do, is really not in probably the best financial interest. It's easy for you and for some of the other parties to suggest you could save $40 million, but that's only a number that I, quite honestly, don't know how you arrived at. I'd be interested for you to jot down on a piece of paper as to how you arrived at the $40 million total, and we could have a discussion about that. But a ministerial office typically runs around $500,000.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, first off, I would like to say that in the lottery fund estimates is the $26 million allocation for Horse Racing Alberta. That's in your budget. That money could be used somewhere else, and the hon. member knows it.

Now, I do have numbers. The smaller size cabinet: it worked for the Premier when he was first elected as leader. In fact, it worked so well with that smaller size cabinet, you got this big majority in 2008. So if it worked when the hon. Premier was first elected, why wouldn't it work now? You could save yourselves some money. You could save 10 and a half million dollars by combining Environment and SRD. You could save over $3 million by combining Executive Council and . . .

Mr. Snelgrove: Who are you going to send home?

Mr. MacDonald: Who are we going to send home? There would be very few people sent home, but unfortunately there would be some assistant deputy ministers that would go to retirement, hopefully. We all know the age of the civil service here. There would be no layoffs. In fact, I don't know how you could ask that question when last year in the Treasury Board you had $30 million set aside for separation payments, and that was for staff severance packages. You yourself had that money set aside, so it is not unusual or unreasonable to suggest that this can be done. Executive Council and International and Intergovernmental Relations: there's no reason in the world why they could not be consolidated, some of the duplication that takes place. It makes much more sense. The Premier's office is co-ordinating that department anyway.

You know, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere talks about who really calls the shots there in the Premier's office all the time, so that's not unreasonable. Finance and Enterprise, now the Treasury Board: from my calculations with you, maybe we should give you a pay increase because just with your work habits we're saving $2.1 million. Infrastructure and Transportation: $6.3 million. Justice and Attorney General: over $10 million. Maybe some of that money could be reprofiled for legal aid. Who knows? Municipal Affairs and Housing and Urban Affairs: you could get close to $4 million there. Tourism, Parks and Recreation and Culture and Community Spirit: you'd get at least $3 million there.

That is a lot of money, and whenever you put this into context, it could be used for education. That would almost take care of providing the AISI funding, that was reduced in Alberta Education.

Now, there are a number of ways of also dealing with this. Travel and communications: in the consolidated annual report which you talked about earlier, that budget was close to $300 million last year. The year before it was $333 million. To your credit, travel and communications, on page 53 of the consolidated financial statements, the annual report from last fall: I think there could be more work done there.

We could, for instance, if we really wanted to try to save money – I looked in public accounts. I see all these different hotels that provide an overnight stay for, I assume, a government employee or maybe some group or an individual who has for one reason or another been taken in by either the Employment and Immigration department or maybe children's services. Why could we not have a competitive market and have those hotels or those hospitality enterprises give a competitive bid on prices? Why does that not happen? That's a way we could save a few dollars, I would think. We live in a free-enterprise economy. Let's see what we can get for the best price.

In the public accounts, you know, we have rooms at the Westin. We have rooms at the Hotel Macdonald. We have rooms at Sutton Place, at the Motel 6. The Capri Centre in Red Deer would be another example. Why could we not have one-stop purchasing? That's just one example of how we could save some money.

Certainly, the travel and communication budget, the consulting budget: I'm not satisfied that I'm getting the straight answer on that. You say that you have this hiring freeze on. It certainly doesn't apply to the Liberal research staff. Every term, the closer we get to an election, the more of our staff you hire away. You know, this hiring freeze must apply to everybody but Liberal researchers because certainly we get them trained, and you take them, sign them up.

An Hon. Member: We've got to save them before it's too late.

Mr. MacDonald: You've got to save them before it's too late? I know what you're trying to save.

There are many ways, I think, that we can work to get in control of these expenses. I would just like to hear from the minister. Last year there was $300 million spent on travel and communications. The year before it was 10 per cent more. What is the amount that is to be reduced in travel and communications this year?

Mr. Snelgrove: A couple of things while we're looking at them. Let's be clear about what goes on in the government. I didn't come here with a great love for government, but what I have learned is that the people that are working for us work harder here than the people that I work with back home that were trumped up in their business. We do have some hours here as a minister, but the deputies and their staff are there a lot longer than we are. I know that when we task them – and it's not just the deputies – when we're looking for information, when we're trying to put together stuff on whatever it is, whether it's infrastructure or whatever, the amount of work that they have to get done means, quite simply, that you can't do that work with very many fewer people. Even combining the offices of Finance and Treasury means that now our staff work, instead of 12 or 13 hours, 15 or 16 hours. In all fairness to them, you can't ask that of people for very long because it simply doesn't work.

You do have to look at what the workload is, how many people are doing it. Could there be some synergies in it? Yes, there are. That's why we put that $240 million number in for in-year savings. The day we're done the budget doesn't mean that we're done budgeting and we go back to work. Every year since we started that in-year savings policy, we have exceeded it by nearly double the target by doing things like you've identified.

We do have a serious look at travel, but you can't cut your nose off to spite your face. We live in an international market world, and we need to support the trade offices that we have around the world. People can suggest what they would like about some of the things we've done in the past, 10 or 12 years ago, and partly true. But I've been to Washington. I've seen what Gary Mar is doing on our behalf. I saw what Murray Smith did. I'll tell you that most of the ministers that travel – an example would be our SRD minister. He is going to catch a plane at 7 o'clock tomorrow morning, go to Washington for two days. He'll be back in the middle of the night, and he'll be back to work here. That's not fun.

Most of us have families. To make the travel schedule that they do – I've been lucky. I don't particularly care, and I've been able to stay here. But lots of the ministers, IIR: they have to go. When they're jumping on planes at midnight to get to meetings for the next day, to get back here, that's not the glorious opportunity that I think much of the general public would like to suggest.

I take the suggestions seriously because you make them with the right intent. Should we continue to look at these things? Absolutely we will. Are there ways to do things better? Yes, there are, but it's about managing change so you don't take what I would have considered the very simplistic view and just say: we'll just cut 5 per cent. That treats things as if they're arbitrary. You have to understand what the changes you're going to make do, and the unintended consequences of not-well-thought-out reductions have come back to hurt government, and they've come back to hurt the public service.

We are hiring some people again. We do have a freeze with exceptions in. We've had to move people from Alberta Health Services to the Department of Infrastructure, who are now looking after the building of the health facilities. We've had to add some probation officers, about 40 or 50 of them, in the Solicitor General. There are some more people going in. They're opening a new park in Calgary or near Calgary. They're going to have a few more.

On a go-forward basis we are working with around 3,000 people less than we were 16 or 17 months ago. Those were in some ways where severances were required. In other ways there were people that retired that we were able to work with. We continue to move people in and out of government through human resources to where their job may not be required in that department. We take them in, we retrain them if necessary, and we'll put them over to another department because we've got an investment in them, and we want to keep them. It is an ongoing process. It is not the easiest one to do, but it is essential for us to continue to evolve government.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. Now, when you look at the expenses by object in the consolidated financial statements, you know, there is a long list of grants, services, salaries, wages for employees, materials and supplies. I don't see any information in there on IT costs. I know a portion of these funds come through Service Alberta. If we look at the full-time employment equivalents of the civil service – and there are 28,800 estimated for 2011-12 – I can only imagine how many of those have a computer system or an IT system that is supported by the government. I know I have an IT system, and I can't keep up with it all. I just can't. They're very generous and kind with their time, and it's a beautiful machine.

You were talking about freezing the hiring of civil servants. Have you ever thought about how much money we may save if we were, for instance, to increase the amount of time one was to have their computer or their laptop from, say, a two-year period to a three-year period or from a three-year period to a four-year period? Do you have any idea? I don't know where to even look to come up with a number on what exactly we're spending on computers and IT costs in the civil service and if there is a way that we could control that budget or maybe reduce it.

Mr. Snelgrove: That point was made by several members of Treasury and caucus that we should look at: can we go to a three-year turnover as opposed to two or a four as opposed to a three? There obviously would be savings.

The other part that we're working on is bringing all of the government departments into one common domain where possible. I mean, obviously there are different needs in different departments around security and privacy issues, and all that can be worked out. But it really is about getting them on the same thing so that we deal from a position of kind of one corporate entity. I know that you'll be looking forward to when Service Alberta is in here. She will be able to give you a lot more detail on that.

I think we're about $400 million a year on IT, off the top of my head. It's a big number. It's important (a) that we're current and (b) that the departments can talk. Sometimes you have to spend a little money to save a little money. You have to be able to understand what you're doing. You know, in the past we've had departments that weren't on a common IT, couldn't communicate with each other, and that does cost time because time is money.

Yes, we need to stay current. We can look at being more effective. I hope you bring up this line of questioning with Service Alberta because it's more appropriate that they deal with it, but you're not wrong in the suggestion that we can be better and more effective in delivering IT. That minister right there will be the one.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. Now, consultants and consulting fees. You can go through the blue books, and you can see every department. There doesn't seem to be a freeze on the use of these consultants. You flip through the pages, you know, and some of them get $50,000, some get $10,000, others get $2 million, $3 million in consulting fees. Again, expenses by object: nothing like that is listed. If we've had a hiring freeze for potential staff and, zap, it's frozen, does that same rule apply for consultants? Or has it been a consulting free-for-all with this government?

5:30

Mr. Snelgrove: I certainly wouldn't categorize it as a consulting free-for-all, but there are targets in departments where they have to use their money, the amount that they're assigned, departments that use consultants more. Transportation and Infrastructure, for example, you know, would need more consultants. I know that occasionally you will have projects where it is not in your best interests to hire someone, to bring them on staff to do the project, so you will hire a consulting firm or a consultant to do a specific project. So it's really about effective use of your money. I would suggest in that line of questioning, too, that you may want to talk to different departments who have larger budgets around consulting as to what their go-forward is to do it.

In Treasury we didn't use a lot of consultants. We're a little too cheap that way, maybe. I don't know.

Mr. MacDonald: It means you've got good staff.

Mr. Snelgrove: We've got great staff.

Certainly, that question could go to, obviously, the hon. Transportation minister or Infrastructure minister or wherever you see a little bigger line around consulting outside forces.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. I would like to switch directions for a second, if you don't mind, and ask you about the exchange rate that you are proposing in the budget. I mean, we're not even into the fiscal year yet, and the exchange rate I think this morning was $1.02. I know the sensitivity has changed from this current year to the year in question here, 2011-12, but if the exchange rate were to remain what it is this morning for the entire fiscal year 2011-12, we would be in need of at least $600 million if I am correct. What contingency do you have in place if, as some people suggest, the Canadian dollar is going to be worth $1.08 or $1.10 in relation to the U.S. dollar?

Mr. Snelgrove: As a bit of an aside, the biggest regret I've got is that I bought my place in Phoenix two years ago when the dollar was 86 cents. Hindsight is significant.

You know, what happens, hon. member, is that historically our dollar follows the price of oil. You're correct. If it stays there, then, yeah, there will need to be $600 million to address that, but oil is also well above where we pegged it in our budget. I mean, we have less exposure with the new royalty structure now than we did, and you pointed that out, but we do need to keep the two in context. If the dollar is strong, then more than likely it's strong because our oil is strong.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. In the time that I have left, I would like to talk about the savings plan or the fact that maybe we don't have enough of a savings plan. Now, the sustainability fund that's been used, as it was suggested, to protect priorities and Alberta's competitiveness – we all realize that we're in very difficult times. It's tough times, and we're setting the stage for building, hopefully, what we will have in the future, a better province. The sustainability fund will be replenished over time.

Your remarks about the $250 million in in-house savings: last year I think you managed to put $2.2 billion back into the sustainability fund. I suspect you're going to do that again this year, at least I hope that we'll have at least 1 and a half billion dollars to put back in there. The last three years you did, so I think this year you will have some money under the cushions there that you'll find. So that will be replenished, and hopefully it won't be spent on the election promises. Hopefully. What kind of a plan does this government have to restore the value of the heritage savings trust fund and see it grow?

There are many people of Norwegian ancestry in this House, many members. It's surprising how many of them have Norwegian ancestry. It's nice to go on the bank of Oslo's website and see just how much money they have. I know the Minister of Energy disagrees with me. He's right; there's a different tax structure. But they seem to be saving a lot more money, $500 billion more than we. I think they're currently sitting at between $530 billion and $540 billion, and they project in the next two years to add an additional $200 billion to their fund. Yet ours isn't growing.

I would like to know what efforts this government is going to make to start saving at least a portion of our nonrenewable resource revenue. I know that you've inflation-proofed a little bit. What's the long-term plan here?

The Chair: Hon. member, the 20 minutes is completed.

Does anybody else want to speak?

Seeing none, then the minister will continue the next 20 minutes.

Mr. Snelgrove: Okay. I'll start that. You know, it is really not on a level playing field that we talk about Norway. Their sales tax, their value-added tax, is 25 per cent, and their personal income taxes top out at nearly 50 per cent. They are a relatively small country that doesn't have to carry Ottawa on its back. You know, if the $21 billion, the roughly $140 billion over the last 10 years, that left Alberta had gone into our coffers – you know, these are all part of our history, and that's okay, but we have to get into the position where we have money to save.

I know what the hon. member from Calgary said about financial planners that tell young couples: well, just put $25 a month away. That's easy for them to say that. You know, I can tell you that when I was newly married, we didn't have $25 a month to put into an RRSP or a savings account. As a matter of fact, we couldn't have put in 5 cents most months. It's easy to suggest you can have a savings strategy, but if you don't have the money, it becomes a distraction to the business at hand.

I do expect that as soon as we can, we will re-establish the sustainability fund to an appropriate amount, and I think personally that 25 per cent of our operating budget is a good amount. I think you could contribute to a capital account at that point, too, where you can start to guarantee what your capital spending is going to be in times like right now. Then I think you look at your heritage fund and say: what are we going to accomplish with it? I've had that discussion with other hon. members, so I won't go further into it.

It isn't practical to suggest that we'll just take 30 per cent of renewable resources and put it in a savings account and somehow, magically, expect that money will reappear. Your option would be, then, to borrow money. Putting money into the bank to save it and borrowing money to replace it kind of defeats the purpose.

Mr. MacDonald: I would disagree with you because if we are to maintain our competitive tax regimes, whether it's for personal income tax or corporate tax, we're going to need to have a revenue stream in the future different than personal taxes or corporate taxes if we want to maintain this low tax regime. The only way to do that is to increase the revenue stream from investments.

Now, Norway, it's interesting, if you're looking at conventional crude oil production, is relatively the same as what we have here in this province and also natural gas production. They're the second-largest seller of natural gas in Europe after the Russians. Maybe we would be better served and our prices would be a little bit higher here if we had all the Europeans on the other end of the pipeline. Right? We would be better served, but we're not. Liquid natural gas didn't develop like we thought.

If we are to maintain our current competitive tax rates, we're going to have to get a revenue stream for future generations somewhere else, and I would suggest that it's by growing the size of our savings account so we have more money annually in investment income. How we do that is debatable. We're only going to get a couple more chances. One would be the royalties coming out of Fort McMurray in bitumen production, and the second one, which no one is talking about – we had a brief discussion earlier – is the second-chance oil from the existing mature fields, which, hopefully, the fracking is going to dramatically increase production from.

You know, in the last year we've had record land sales, we have high oil prices, and we still have this $3.4 billion deficit. There has been talk of stretching out the capital plan. The Wildrose Alliance is right. Last year in your fiscal plan you stated, I think, that between 10 and 20 per cent was saved in costs because the contractors had to sharpen their pencils and maybe get the eraser out and put in a new number which was lower. That worked out. I don't see any notice of that this year, or at least I cannot find it, and I'm wondering why there was no note of that in the fiscal plan, of exactly how much money was saved. We do know that the Minister of Transportation unexpended $400 million, as did the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Snelgrove: When you have the swings in-year, then you have to reflect them. The reduction in the total capital plan directly reflects the fact that we're going to get it cheaper because we didn't move the targets off.

What we thought we had in bitumen a few years ago – we talked about 184 billion barrels. We know now, I mean, quite conservatively, they're at about 500 billion barrels. Well, there's 2.2 trillion barrels there. Realistically, with technology and time we will probably get a trillion. It means that we can produce 5 million barrels a day for 200 years.

Somehow people say: well, when this oil runs out. Holy man. Then we'll go to the 800-year supply we have in coal and produce it. The technology around burning clean coal will be established. The natural gas that's stuck down in our basement isn't going bad. The world eventually will need it. We are sitting on, you know, just about the perfect part of the world, where we have enough coal to run North America for 800 years. As long as we're using our resource money now to put some towards research technology with an eye on the fact that no matter how good we get at alternative fuel sources, we're still going to need hydrocarbons in one way or another – whether we get them from oil, whether we get them from natural gas, even establish the liquid natural gas terminals that the Indian and Chinese and Philippine markets are waiting for, all of those are options that are open to us.

Remember that the natural gas and the coal is not going anywhere. It's waiting for us and for our children, our grandchildren, and their great-great-grandchildren. We'll still be producing energy in this province 200 years from now.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. I have a lot more questions. But what I want to get on the record – and I didn't see this interview. You made a comment last week on the alternate budget from the Wildrose crowd. Fiscal hawks the other night – you know, we were discussing supplementary estimates. The discussion was limited for obvious reasons. I'm restricted by parliamentary tradition from going any further on that. I read in that document that there was a $44 million allocation for bonuses in the last year for senior civil servants. Could you clarify if you paid that last year? Or was that cancelled, and I missed something?

Mr. Snelgrove: No. That would be a very typical entry from their 'fudget.'

We cancelled our bonuses. The only guess I could have would be that there are still bonuses in Alberta Health Services if I'm not mistaken. They may still pay bonuses. I don't know what they are, and I don't know how they determine who gets them, but that must be where they're coming from.

The other entity that we've got is AIMCo. AIMCo has to be competitive with other financial-sector services like them. They pay a very limited amount. I think the maximum is 5 per cent that they have as a bonus, and their salary comparable to other financial investment houses around North America is very, very low. You know, that could be the bonuses they're talking about, but quite honestly I don't know.

Mr. MacDonald: For the record neither do I.

Mr. Snelgrove: And the ATB bonuses.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. There are ATB bonuses, and certainly AIMCo has a bonus structure set up there, to say the least, that is interesting. We talked about that, I believe, here one day in question period.

Now, in 2009 the Fiscal Responsibility Act was amended to allow for these deficits, and certainly we've seen them. The limit of $5.3 billion for how much nonrenewable resource revenue can be spent before it has to be transferred to the sustainability fund was eliminated as well as the clause legislating that $2.5 billion must be retained in the sustainability fund for natural disasters and other emergencies. We saw last summer what happened. Hopefully, the good thing that's coming out of the cold snap is that all the pine beetles that are still living in the province effective Saturday night will be freeze-dried and we won't have to worry about that next year. But disaster funding, as I said, was required in 2009. In 2010 it was almost a billion dollars. I think it was about $950 million. When will this government start planning for the future in setting aside disaster recovery money in a small, wee account somewhere? Could we consider doing that? I think it would be more prudent if we were to set that money aside that way.

Mr. Snelgrove: While it may be practical, in some ways it doesn't make sense to plan for a disaster. Why would you want one? You know, we do have the resources to cover our disasters. My biggest concern would be that if you put $200 million in a fund for disasters, somebody would find a way to get that $200 million. This way we are able to look after exactly what they need. Disaster funding is all minuted by Treasury Board. If it's not exactly spent on the disaster, then it returns it. So it really does keep a tight envelope.

I guess, to go further, we don't know if the disaster is going to be in agriculture; we don't know if it's going to be a weather-related tornado like Pine Lake or other ones; we don't know whether it's going to be forest fires or what it could be. It's not that budgeting for disasters would be wrong. It's just that we know they're going to be there, and most years we can determine a certain amount. We also get a copay from the federal government, where a good chunk of it is picked up by the federal government. So, yes, that is a method we could use, but I think it's critical that we don't change how we budget just to suit our financial circumstances at any one year over another.

The Chair: The time has terminated for the business of the committee.

Mr. Snelgrove: Could I ask for unanimous consent just to keep on going?

The Chair: I'm sorry. We have a motion and have to move on. I'll give a few minutes for the department staff to depart, and then the committee will rise and report.

5:50

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill to report.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration resolutions for the Department of Finance and Enterprise relating to the 2011-2012 government estimates for the general revenue fund and the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2012, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a motion to adjourn the Assembly until tomorrow, March 3, 2011, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:52 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 3, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature 32 very special visitors from Holden school. They are seated in the public gallery. Today we have teacher Mrs. Cheryl Oslund; the principal, Mr. Clayton Roe; and parent helpers Mrs. Cyndy Heslin, Mr. Gene Hrabec, Mrs. Lyndie Nickel, and Mrs. Annette Hrabec. I'm just so glad that I got here in time from Calgary to take a picture with the class. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly today 44 students, three teachers, and two instructors that have travelled two hours from Glen Avon school in St. Paul to come to Edmonton today to the Legislature. I need to say to you that this school is a separate Protestant school. They are proud Panthers, they appreciate where they're from, and they very much are proud of the teachers at their school, of their sports program, and, really, of the education. I'd like to introduce Ms Babcock, Miss Field, Mrs. Gadowski, Mr. Boyko, Miss Kulczyk, and Mrs. O'Neill. If I could ask the class to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to stand here today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly an outstanding class of students from Drayton Valley. The grade 6 class from St. Anthony school – a school, I might add, that I attended at their age a few years ago – along with their teacher Mr. Leggo and parent helper Mrs. Fontana are in the public gallery today. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 10 of the current participants in the municipal internship program. The municipal internship program gives recent postsecondary graduates an opportunity to pursue a career in municipal government, getting insight into municipal government through hands-on experience. The interns here today have almost completed their program, and when they do, they will join the ranks of 92 interns who have completed the program since 2002. This ensures the continued strength and success of our municipalities as trained, skilled professionals steer our course in the future.

The municipal interns that are here today are Caileigh Rhind from the city of Grande Prairie, Keith Freisen from the city of Medicine Hat, Jarret Esslinger from the town of Beaumont, Stacey Mah from the town of Ponoka, Amy Rupp from the town of Raymond, Carolynn Grey from the town of Sundre, Blaine Peterson from the municipal district of Foothills, the town of High River, Clint Neufeld from Leduc county, John Vandenbeld from Strathcona county, and Iain MacLean from the county of Wetaskiwin.

Mr. Speaker, joining the administrator interns today are three program staff from Municipal Affairs: Wendy Peters, our manager of the internship program; Val Hope, internship adviser; and Melanie Wood, internship adviser. These individuals are standing now in the members' gallery, and I would ask that you please welcome them to this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this esteemed Assembly one of my cousins, a younger cousin although I guess most people here would think he's older than me. This young man's name is Sonny, and his actual legal name is Sunkalp Sidhu, but ever since childhood he's aimed to hide his full legal name, Sunkalp. So, Sonny, your full legal name is out there for all the public to know now: Sunkalp Sidhu. He's a dear friend, a great relative, and somebody I'm so proud to have in my family.

Joining him today is his friend and business partner and my friend, Dean Forbes, whom I've had the privilege of getting to know over the last few months. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really delighted today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a group of students from one of Alberta's really exceptional schools, Old Scona academic school. These students are here today to learn more about the legislative process, particularly the role of the Official Opposition in the Legislature. My colleagues in the Alberta Liberal caucus had the opportunity to meet with them earlier today. We were all encouraged by their knowledge and interest. I'm going to make the prediction that one day at least one of those students is going to end up on the floor of this Assembly as an elected member. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm and enthusiastic welcome from all of us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two special guests, one special guest and one very, very special guest. The first is my constituent Chris Raes. Chris is one of many young Albertans joining the Wildrose cause and has been assisting our caucus with our social media and websites and is doing an awesome job. He's a good friend, and it's been an honour to get to know him over these past couple of years. It's great to see young Albertans stepping up to be part of the political process no matter what party they're supporting. I'd like Chris to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

My other guest also happens to be my sweetheart and my very best friend, Mrs. Anita Anderson. Anita is the rock of our wonderful family, the mother of our four wonderful boys. I think we can all agree here that anyone who can raise such sweet and well-adjusted children must be a truly terrific person and human being. Anita is also a singer and songwriter. She just released her first CD of inspirational music, and you can find it on her Facebook. I love her very much and would ask that she now rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Statement by the Speaker

Election Anniversaries

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have some introductions today, too. Three years ago, on March 3, 2008, two members in the Assembly were re-elected for the second time, so this becomes their third anniversary: the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, on this anniversary.

Thirty-one other members were elected for the first time this day three years ago. Congratulations to the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit, the hon. Minister of Service Alberta, the hon. #### Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

University of Lethbridge International Award for Genetically Engineered Machine

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to recognize an exciting and remarkable achievement by a group of students from southern Alberta. In 2010 a team from the University of Lethbridge competed in the annual international genetically engineered machine competition, or iGEM. This competition challenges students to build biological systems that serve some useful function.

The U of L team researched and developed a biological component, or BioBrick, that could break down some of the toxic contents of tailings ponds and turn them into a useful energy source. This technology has the potential not only to reduce our tailings ponds but to actually turn tailings by-products into useful energy. For all their work on the project the U of L team was awarded a gold medal at the completion.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of the amazing work of these students and am once again reminded of the incredible innovative talents of Albertans. I would enjoin all members to join me, please, in congratulating these students.

Thank you.

International Disability Film Festival

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, last month Calgary played host to the 10th annual Picture This, the international disability film festival. The festival's films tackle the subject of human disability or are written, produced, or directed by people with disabilities. Organized by the Calgary Scope Society, the festival is an important outlet for creative expression by people with disabilities and an important venue for stories about men and women with disabilities.

This year's films included a documentary about one woman's final journey with Lou Gehrig's disease, another about the relationship between a son and his disabled mother, a film about the China disabled persons' dance troupe, and films exploring HIV/AIDS and posttraumatic stress disorder, the efforts of people with disabilities to find rewarding employment, and the joys and challenges of dating and relationships. All this year's films were heartfelt, accomplished, and important. Film submissions came from all over the world from a diverse group of visionary artists. My favourite moment was at the end of the Lou Gehrig's disease film, when the gentleman explained his love of his mother.

I want to thank the Calgary Scope Society for organizing this fantastic event as well as many corporate and charitable sponsors who helped make the festival a reality. Their vision and generosity make it possible for people with disabilities to tell their stories and, in turn, further enrich Alberta's cultural landscape.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Prevention of Bullying Youth Committee

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and speak about Alberta's Prevention of Bullying Youth Committee, a group of 18 youth from across the province between the ages of 15 and 22. They are a dynamic group of volunteers who are passionate about making a difference in their communities and their schools.

The committee has a critical role in providing government with youth perspectives and helping to identify important issues about bullying in Alberta. They provide us with valuable input and advice on the proposed strategies, research findings, and recommendations for action.

The youth committee will be gathering this weekend in Edmonton to learn about media awareness and effective communication, presentation skills, and to work upon improving the b-free.ca website, which was originally created by this committee. The committee will also be reviewing a series of new bullying prevention videos that will be available on the site. These videos reinforce the serious and potentially devastating consequences of bullying.

When these youth return home from the weekend, they will be seeking out opportunities to speak about bullying prevention and will organize events to help raise awareness of bullying in their schools and communities.

Mr. Speaker, we are very fortunate to have such a committed group of youth working with the government on this very important issue. We all need to follow the lead of the youth committee members and do our part to stand up to bullying.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Fallen Four in Memoriam

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Six years ago today four brave young RCMP officers full of promise and hope were shot and killed near Mayerthorpe in the Whitecourt-St. Anne constituency. The shooting ended the lives of constables Peter Schiemann, Leo Johnston, Anthony Gordon, and Brock Myrol. Today my thoughts go to the families, friends, and co-workers of these four officers plus the communities in the Mayerthorpe and Whitecourt RCMP detachment areas and all uniformed officers.

The Fallen Four Memorial Society in Mayerthorpe and Whitecourt determined early that these communities will neither be defined nor defeated by the killings, sir. They built a memorial park to show the strength and beauty, and they organize a yearly memorial candlelight ceremony on March 3 to remember Brock, Anthony, Leo, Peter plus all uniformed officers who have died in the line of duty across Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to invite each and every one of you and your families to join the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, me, and the people in my constituency at the candlelight service at the Fallen Four Memorial Park in Mayerthorpe tonight at 7. I congratulate the many volunteers from the Fallen Four Memorial Society and all the citizens of Mayerthorpe and Whitecourt RCMP detachment areas on their ongoing candlelight ceremony to show dignity and respect for the lives of these four young men and all police, peace officers, and soldiers who have given their lives for their uniform.

To the families of Peter, Brock, Anthony, and Leo and to all of those who have lost a loved one who wears a uniform, I assure you that the brave are never forgotten. Thank you. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Charter Schools

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Next to the rule of law I think one of the most fundamental components of a successful democratic society is quality, accessible public education. Quality, accessible public education ensures that all members of society have the ability to realize their potential and that opportunity is not just reserved for those with vast financial means. The moment public education stalls, we as a society stall. It is imperative that our education system continuously progresses to ensure that our citizens are able to realize the most of their potential. Since 1994 Alberta is the only province to offer charter schools for our citizens. Today we have 13 different charter schools serving almost 8,000 students.

I have recently met with many families, discussing the remarkable work their children's charter schools are doing. Charter schools are essential in pioneering programs that can eventually offer great opportunities for all students in Alberta, not just in charter schools but also by sharing with the greater public system the innovations that are taking place in charter schools. Mr. Speaker, these parents are concerned that the government is planning to do away with charter schools, at least in their present form. I want to make it clear to all my constituents and all the parents out there that I fully support charter schools. I recognize that charter schools have been seeking permanent mandates and better school facilities for some time now. I fully support these directions.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that our charter schools are offering opportunities and innovations that we must make mainstream. Our entire public education system must never sit idle. It must continuously move forth and offer the best potential learning opportunities for our students.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last fall in the session I asked the minister of health to investigate how in 2008 the Capital health region had 322 patients receive compromised care due to delays in access. These 322 people know the health care system is still in crisis. To the minister. Four months ago you said you would investigate these cases. What are the results of your investigations?

1:50

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I believe the more accurate portrayal of that was that I asked Alberta Health Services to look into that issue. The last I heard, they had not yet completed that, but they had assigned a senior physician to conduct that review. To my knowledge, hon. member, that's being done as we speak. It may not yet be quite complete, but I'll try and get an update for you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, since this government has no credibility in investigating itself, will the minister do the right thing, as I suggested in the fall, and ask the Health Quality Council to investigate these 322 cases of delayed, compromised care?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, quality assurance committees have a very serious responsibility to fulfill, and I'm sure if they find something that requires a full-blown investigation, should there be anything like that there, they will let me know. I can assure this House and all Albertans that if there is something there, I will be the first to take appropriate action.

Dr. Swann: Well, indeed, you will be the first, Mr. Speaker, because the two previous ministers didn't do anything about these 322 cases since 2008.

Will you forward this investigation to the Health Quality Council to give confidence to the people of Alberta that this is being looked into seriously?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Again, Mr. Speaker, if such action is warranted, I will pursue it. However, let's not underestimate the importance of a senior physician working with a number of emergency doctors on this matter. That's my understanding of the current status of it. I'll know more, and as soon as I do, I'll be the first one to let this member know.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Budget

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While future governments won't have the luxury of oil and gas windfalls to fund people programs and while Alberta's heritage fund sits at $14.5 billion, your finance minister offered this solution to future generations: impose a sales tax when the oil runs out. To the Premier: can you please explain to Albertans why their children and grandchildren should pay the price for your government's mismanagement?

Mr. Stelmach: First of all, nobody said that this government supports a sales tax. In fact, I said the other day that it's funny how this issue of a sales tax is always coming from the opposition, all opposition parties. You know, I've said that if the sales tax is the right answer to all government spending, why is it that every jurisdiction that has a sales tax is seriously in debt and continues to run a large deficit and to accumulate debt?

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, how does the Premier explain the government's mismanagement of resources when our heritage fund, our savings plan for the future, is worth less in real terms than it was in the '80s?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again this hon. member hasn't been following what has happened in this last recession, in fact one of the worst recessions in the last 80 years. The heritage savings trust fund lost twice so far, this last time over 37 per cent in their investments, just like any other senior that lost investments or any other company that has had savings set aside and investments. This year what we did is that we took money out of the sustainability fund, and we put it into the heritage savings fund to inflation-proof it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, off-budget spending has been the norm in Alberta for years, making Alberta's budgets meaningless as planning tools, helping to illustrate why this government has been so bad at planning. Will the Premier pledge to stick to this year's budget?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, this jurisdiction, the province of Alberta . . . [interjections] To the students over here: just listen to the behaviour of these members across. I don't think you do that in your classroom or when you get home. Just listen. They'll keep talking. [interjections] They'll learn a lesson.

Anyway, with respect to budget planning this government has always set aside money for the future. We put it in the heritage savings trust fund, but we also have what we call a cash reserve. During good times we set money aside to offset many of the times that we see this volatility in our revenue stream. We will continue to do that well into the future because we can never predict what the price of oil will be. It was down to $37 earlier; today it's up to $101. Nobody predicted that a few months ago.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Canadian Strategy Group

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the other day I raised the troubling issue of a high-priced Tory lobbyist, Hal Danchilla, taking over the process of arranging meetings between Alberta Health Services and opposition MLAs. AHS says the $150 an hour charged by Mr. Danchilla's firm to arrange meetings is needed because their 70 staff working in communications are just too busy. To the minister of health: does the minister believe that $150 an hour to arrange meetings is money well spent?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, immediately after this hon. member raised this question, I contacted Alberta Health Services. I spoke with them. I asked for an explanation, and the explanation I was given was that, yes, they did contract an outside firm to help them arrange some very, very important meetings with MLAs from all caucuses in this Assembly because the woman who would normally do that I believe is on maternity leave for a short period of time. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has the floor. Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you're sixth on my list, but if you keep talking, I won't see you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that Mr. Danchilla's firm is a registered lobbyist for businesses seeking contracts with AHS, can the minister explain how a Tory lobbyist can represent AHS in its dealings with MLAs while at the same time acting as a paid lobbyist for corporations wanting contracts with AHS? Is this an acceptable conflict of interest?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, again we're naming people by name here, making allegations. The fact is that based on the information I've received, Mr. Danchilla did not do this work. It is a company that he has a share in or owns with someone else, but he himself is not the person doing the work. I know that's a fine point, but I think it's important to not drag people's names in here with innuendo and allegation.

Let's just do the basics here. Given that it would be a good cost-cutting move to end this contract, what does the minister of health plan to do about this contract?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfortunate that they weren't able to find people in AHS to shore up the difference caused by the absence of the woman on maternity leave. Clearly, that would have been the ideal situation. I'll bet you a dime to a dollar that they tried to do that, but AHS is extremely busy right now implementing the five-year health action plan. They're extremely busy trying to ensure they meet the 50 performance targets, and they needed somebody on a short-term basis, for a month or two, to do this work. That's the bottom line.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Capital Infrastructure Planning

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday when the Wildrose suggested that we should delay the new MLA offices, the finance minister reacted with disgust. He declared that it was too late to stop now that we've begun the project, but that's exactly the problem. We don't know what they are planning to start next. The minister has developed a habit of asking us questions in question period. I always thought that it was the opposition's job to ask the questions. To the finance minister: will you release your secret list of infrastructure projects so that we can start answering your questions on which ones to do first?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we do have a 20-year capital strategy. We do budget on a three-year rolling basis for our capital projects. Let's go back to the federal building, where they're quoting the numbers for MLA offices. There are going to be over 500 offices that house Alberta's public service in that building. The MLA component of that would probably be less than 10 per cent. If you tried to stop the project now, you would be responsible to fund the contractor for a very fair settlement. You cannot simply change contracts in the middle of the term. They should maybe . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: It never should have been started; that's the point.

Mr. Speaker, given that the finance minister has sounded more like an infrastructure critic, demanding that we release our priority list on capital projects, does he realize how bizarre and hypocritical it is for the government of the day, with all of the information and details that they have, to demand the priority list from the Wildrose, especially when they won't release the government's secret list?

Mr. Snelgrove: If we stopped the project halfway along, we would put out of work approximately 600 tradespeople, 50 engineers and architects. You know, they now have access to a consultant who has experience – when minister Lyle Oberg announced the federal building project renovation, he said about the building that we want to make this, quite simply, the best legislature in the world. So they've got access to some expert advice now. [interjections]

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjections] The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's wonderful that they're courteous.

Yes, things have changed, Mr. Premier, since then, and they don't know it. The problem is that the finance minister won't release the list to the public. I'd be happy to sit down and review their secret list so that we could prioritize so that they could reduce the deficit. They don't understand that there's been a change. It's time to release the list and stop the politics.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, there are very many different criteria that are used to put together priorities for infrastructure that we build. We look at schools, for example, and numbers of students, safety issues, busing times. On roads we have a very comprehensive follow-up about accidents or other safety-related issues. When it comes to hospitals, we have to look at growth and what's needed in delivering them. Those things are all included in the producing of our capital plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think it's unfortunate the schoolchildren had to see the behaviour of the Premier and his crew over there just now.

Electricity Transmission Line Projects

Mr. Mason: AltaLink applied yesterday to build an unnecessary $1.4 billion line, and every Albertan ratepayer will foot the bill. It's just the first of five power line megaprojects this government rammed through without public consultation so power companies can export power and Albertans can pay. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Will he tell the House why power consumers, including homeowners and small businesses and farmers, face increases in their bills to pay for these private megaprojects?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, let's be clear that Alberta is a net importer of electricity and not an exporter of electricity. We also have the unusual situation in this province where power is generated where the majority of the population does not live. In order to get that power to the high-density areas of the province, we need transmission lines. The current transmission system is some 30 or 40 years out of date. I know that particular member doesn't live in Calgary, but I can tell you I do, and I don't want my lights going out in two years.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I think their lights are going to go out in the next election.

Given that the government is unable to justify or guarantee the costs Albertans will pay for these unnecessary lines, and given that this government ushered in deregulation to benefit their friends in the private sector instead of looking out for Albertans, why won't the minister change the policy so that the corporations who benefit from these lines, who make the profits from the operation of these lines, actually pay for them?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that the House knows that in the 10 years that we've had a deregulated generation market, there's been some, I believe, $12 billion worth of investment in this province. We have almost doubled the amount of electrical generation that we have. In fact, the amount of increase in generation capacity we have in this province exceeds Manitoba Hydro's entire production.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government's support among Albertans is suffering because of heavy-handed land grab legislation to support these lines. Given how they rammed through five power line projects without public consent even though Albertans will have to pay the consequences, will the minister admit he doesn't have what it takes to stand up for Albertans when they're forced to pay through their power bills for these private-profit lines?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, just to make sure that the member is understanding, we have a deregulated generation market, but we have a regulated transmission market. So what has occurred here today is exactly what is supposed to occur. The proponent of the transmission line has made its application with the Alberta Utilities Commission. The Alberta Utilities Commission will have a hearing where everyone, including that member, has the right to appear before the Utilities Commission, and they will make a decision. It would be improper for me to make any comment that might be seen as influencing that decision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Access to the Future Fund

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, six years ago this government's flagship bill created the access to the future fund. In this bill they promised $3 billion to fund postsecondary education. Last week this government announced that payments from this fund would be suspended. So much for this flagship bill and government promise. To the minister of advanced education: is the minister concerned that contributions to our postsecondary institutions will dry up as a result of not following through on their promise to match donations from individual donors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you very much. We're not worried that the donations are going to dry up. In fact, we've been so successful in having people donate to our colleges and universities that they have stressed that fund beyond what we could handle, so we've put it on hold for two years. It comes back in year 3, and it's going to allow us time to ensure that those people that have made commitments can be matched and that we don't abuse or overuse the fund. Right now we've been very successful in getting money in, and we believe people believe in our postsecondaries and will continue to donate to them.

Mr. Hehr: Can the minister explain why this government thought leaving the access to the future fund two-thirds unfunded would be sustainable in the long term?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, the first billion dollars was placed in the access to the future fund, and since then we have had some realities in the economy that have meant that it has been impossible to top up that fund, so we won't be putting any more money in right now. We are going to keep it on hold, but in the future we would hope to see that fund topped up again.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister explain what suspending the access to the future fund for two years after mismanaging it from the start says to young Albertans concerned about their access to the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. Access to the future was largely used to fund capital projects although it also did match some funds for scholarships. We are deeply committed to our students and would hope that scholarships continue to be available. As you know, there isn't any new money for capital projects within our three-year budget, so we don't believe that holding off on matching dollars for capital projects at this time will put any of our institutions in trouble.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

High Prairie Hospital

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people of High Prairie and region are once again optimistic that they may get their hospital built. Naming the design firm for this hospital is good news, but we've heard many announcements on this project before, only to have our hopes dashed. To the Minister of Infrastructure: please explain to my constituents what the difference is between today's announcement and other commitments we have heard before.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the project is moving ahead. It's in our budget, and Infrastructure will deliver the plan. Stantec starts work this month, and it is a delivery on the Premier's vision to build the most advanced infrastructure in North America. If we did what some members opposite are calling on us to do, and that's to cut the $2.4 billion in capital spending, this project would never happen.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I'm so thankful that we are building those hospitals in small-town rural Alberta because without that there's no hospital. We've waited a doggone long time. To the same minister: knowing that we have a one-stop hospital education facility and that the people of High Prairie have helped design this facility, when will your department and this firm begin working with my regional committee to ensure the community's wishes are adhered to?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have had a land deal with the previous Métis settlement council, and we're working with the current council, and we hope to finalize the agreement very soon. At that point, the design team works closely with the local health authorities, with the officials from Northern Lakes College, with local municipalities. Most importantly, once the initial designs are done, the team will consult with the broader community to address the hon. member's concerns.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, we don't need to be doing consultations over and over again. Given that, to the Minister of Health and Wellness: could you please tell my people how committed you are to cover funding to operate this facility once it is built?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for being a real champion for this hospital to get built. This is a $90 million project that will essentially replace the 25-bed acute-care hospital that's there now. We're going to in fact add five more acute-care beds, so the funding is already in place for the existing capacity. We're adding capacity, and when it opens in spring of 2013, so too will the purse strings open to help fund those additional positions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Private Health Care Services

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over a year ago in this House the Minister of Health and Wellness offered to the Leader of the Official Opposition a the results of a cost-benefit analysis to compare private versus public hip surgeries. I was wondering how that cost-benefit analysis was coming and why it has not been made public one year later.

Mr. Zwozdesky: The short answer is because I haven't received it yet, Mr. Speaker, but I'm glad that he reminded me. That is one of those that I do want to follow up on, and I appreciate you raising it in such a professional manner. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. It surprises me that you're spending so much money, yet you have not received it.

Now, you also promised the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview a similar cost-benefit analysis regarding cataract surgeries, specifically in Calgary, to see how they compare with surgeries done in public institutions. Where is that cost-benefit analysis, and why have you not made it public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. In fact, I'll be going to Calgary next Friday, and I'll tune you up right after that. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that in last year's annual report for the Minister of Health and Wellness contracts with private health service providers have increased from $649 million to $778 million, a 19 per cent increase, why are you allowing those increases to occur when you have no cost-benefit analysis to justify how this money is being spent?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is that we have many, many more people here who require more services, and as a result we're responding. We just added 3,200 more cataract surgeries. We just added 9,000 more MRI exams. We just added another 5,000 surgeries of various natures to the agenda. That all costs much more money. Some of those are being performed in nonhospital surgical facilities, specifically cataract surgeries. More money is needed to address more needs and shorten wait lists, which is what we're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Northland Community Engagement Team

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year an inquiry team appointed by the Minister of Education delivered its report on the governance, management, and operation of Northland school division. At that time the minister said that he would appoint a multistakeholder team to engage the communities that make up this vast school division in developing a new way forward for aboriginal education in Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of Education. You said that we can't afford to lose another generation of First Nations and Métis children and that we must act on this. Has there been progress in the appointment of this multistakeholder team?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, in fact, today we announced publicly the makeup of the team. I can tell the hon. member that we've had an initial meeting with the team, and it is engaged and working already. The team will work with staff from the ministry, staff from other Alberta ministries, and with the staff of Northland school division to maximize the level of community involvement and engagement to ensure the success of students in that area. It is comprised of community elders, members of Treaty 8 First Nations, members of the Métis communities, members representative of the communities at large, one member representing the Northern Lakes College, one member to act as a liaison for First Nation, Métis, and Inuit education . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my first supplementary is to the same minister. Can he tell us how exactly this team is different from previous inquiry teams?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not an inquiry team but an engagement team. We have the Northland inquiry report, and it's a good report. There are 48 recommendations, and in fact the last recommendation was to set up an implementation team. Rather than an implementation team what I wanted to do was to bring together communities of interest to actually engage the communities involved in their education system. We will not be successful unless we can create a value for education in those communities and involve those communities in the education process. The purpose of this team is to work with us in implementing the Northland inquiry report but to provide strategies to engage those communities.

Mrs. Leskiw: Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the same minister. If Northland is to flourish as a First Nations-Métis educational special-purpose jurisdiction, how does it align with other initiatives under way for First Nations-Métis education?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the main goals in our business plan is First Nations and Métis education and, in fact, eliminating the achievement gap between First Nations and Métis students and other students in the province of Alberta. So this engagement team will help us to work to bring the inquiry report in and to work with Northland school division to ensure that it provides leading-edge education for aboriginal students and therefore provides leading-edge education for all the students in their division, and we can learn from that to apply those learnings to other jurisdictions in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Environmental Monitoring

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government says that it's creating an environmental monitoring system for real this time. Now, Alberta wasn't at the absolute rock bottom for monitoring compared to countries with no monitoring system, but it definitely wasn't in the top 10. To the Minister of Environment: how does a government go from bad to the top with only $3 million extra added to the budget?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that I can accept the statistics that this member is quoting. Where does she come up with the number that we were number 10 or number 4 or number 5? We've said all along that we have a commitment to protect the environment. I believe that we have been doing a good job in environmental monitoring, but clearly there are opportunities for us to do better, and that's what we're committed to do.

Ms Blakeman: Not with 3 million bucks.

Back to the same minister: given that once again, this time in the Peace River area, we have air monitors that are reporting the air quality as good when the odour is so bad that people don't even want to go outside, will $3 million extra in monitoring provide trustworthy air monitoring this time?

Mr. Renner: This issue of $3 million is a bit of a red herring, as this member knows perfectly well. The majority of the costs of monitoring are currently being borne by industry and will continue to be borne by industry. Mr. Speaker, that's a principle that we believe very strongly in, so to suggest that any kind of a new system would be restricted to only $3 million is inaccurate and a false assumption.

Ms Blakeman: No, I've been pretty clear. This is adding $3 million to the budget, and you still can't hit your mark.

To the same minister: will the government take over responsibility for water monitoring in the new system given that the system of the industry self-monitoring has been proven again and again and again to be inconsistent, unco-ordinated, insufficient, and mistrusted?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's the precise question that I have asked the panel that I recently appointed to answer, so for me to presume to tell them how to do their job I think would kind of negate the reason that we have this panel in place. We have a panel of world-renowned experts that are meeting as we speak to answer that very question, and I'm looking forward to having that report come from them very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Off-road Fuel Tax

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of Budget 2011 some fuel tax rebate programs were cancelled, specifically the rebate portion of the tax-exempt fuel use program, or TEFU, and within the TEFU the prescribed rebate off-road percentages program, or PROP. My constituents are asking about these changes and the reasons for them. My questions are to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Why was this policy changed, and was there consultation? If so, with whom? If not, why not?

Mr. Snelgrove: There were some very difficult choices that had to be made in this budget, and we'll stick by them. We do consult on a regular basis with all sorts of business groups across Alberta, and they tell us on an ongoing basis: you need to review the programs you've got and make sure that they're administratively efficient, that they accomplish the policy goal you set out to do, and that they can be sustained. In this case the program, Mr. Speaker, is for licensed vehicles that may be used off our roads and to keep track of the amount of fuel they use on the road and off the road, add it all up, co-ordinate it with the government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: did he look at simplifying the administrative process for the rebate for off-road truckers, reducing those costs first instead of cutting the program itself?

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes, we did. We tried, Mr. Speaker, back in 2005, I think, with PROP, where we decided that we could prorate the amount of fuel that they used in the different industries and tried to develop an average where it could be assigned on that type of an industry basis. However, other industries or other parts of that industry looked and said: well, just a minute; how come we aren't eligible for some kind of a rebate? And the creep starts again.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister. It is my understanding that off-road equipment will be able to qualify for a rebate on marked fuel, but a TEFU number is needed. Can the minister tell us if this is correct, and if so, how do the businesses apply for this number?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the program that rebates off-road fuel is still there. It's around a $160 million program. The program that has been eliminated, to be clear, is the one where licensed vehicles are used off the road. People eligible will still be able to apply for that TEFU number and be able to purchase fuel, and in some cases, where marked fuel is not available, they will be able to use vehicular fuel and still receive the rebate. So we are going ahead with the bulk of the program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Community-based Education

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Edmonton public school board released a summary of the pressures pushing it to close inner-city schools out from under the parents and kids who rely upon them. Now, while urban sprawl is a problem, so too are a number of policies imposed by the Ministry of Education. To the minister: as a start, will this minister acknowledge that community-based education is a necessary plank in the provision of quality education to our children?

Mr. Hancock: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker, community-based education is very important, but it's not the only thing of importance. Parents do want to make choices with respect to the learning styles and opportunities of their children and what's best for their individual children. For the most part, we have engaged in a process, a system that's set up around community-based schools, and that has proved to be a very functional way to set up an educational system.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the majority of district leases are with not-for-profit organizations that provide services for children and families, the kind of wraparound services that this minister claims to support, why won't the minister change his policy so that schools attempting to lease extra space to community groups as a means of maintaining their viability are eligible for IMR and capital modernization funding?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I don't claim to support wraparound services. I support fundamentally and unequivocally the idea of providing wraparound services so that students can be ready to learn and the concerns, the issues they bring from their families and their communities can be dealt with not just by teachers in the school or by the schools themselves but by the teachers and the schools in conjunction with community-based services that are needed. So that's a very important and fundamental aspect of it. One of the things we want to do going forward is make sure that there's a place in the school for those wraparound services to coexist and partner with the schools. I'm very much interested in that type of a concept.

Ms Notley: Well, given that there's a quarter billion dollar maintenance deficit in EPSB, shouldered disproportionately by inner-city schools and caused by the government's neglect, and given that new capital project eligibility puts pressure on the boards to close these schools, will the minister admit that his past and up-to-now neglect on this issue amounts to a decision to abandon the education interests of inner-city families?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. Both her assumptions and her conclusions are invalid.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

ESL Funding

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government falsely claimed in the Speech from the Throne that they will boost the number of immigrants in the workforce. Hypocritically, only two days later the provincial budget contained cuts of almost $9 million to immigrant services and ESL programs. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: given that the minister has used his federal counterparts as a scapegoat for the nontransference of the money for these cuts, does the minister support the cutbacks, and if not, will he make up the shortfall out of his own budget?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, a number of points to be raised. One, the jurisdiction on the number of immigrants that enter this country is exclusively within the domain of our federal government, so this minister and this government haven't any input on the number of immigrants that enter our country, and that number is somewhere around 250,000 immigrants. Any policy shifts on how many enter Canada and/or this province are made exclusively by the government of Canada, and that's what our Constitution allows them to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much for that federal immigration explanation. I'm talking about provincial concerns, that when the immigrants make it here, which I'm assuming we want, they're supported.

With private forecasters warning of possible labour shortages by next year, can the minister tell us how many adult ESL spaces will be lost as a result of these short-sighted cuts?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the federal government as part of their stimulus package has provided this province, as many other provinces, with funding for integration of immigrants, and on behalf of the federal government this government has been implementing these programs. The three-year program has ended; hence the funding has ended. This province, however, out of our own budget continues to be committed to integrating immigrants into our province. As we know, we will need many of them for many years to come.

Mr. Chase: As we know, we will need them for many years to come, Mr. Speaker, but we're not willing to pay for them or support them when they do arrive.

Given that 1 in 5 Albertans and 1 in 4 Calgarians will be foreign born by 2017, as the projections go, why are we taking away ESL programs in both Education and this minister's department instead of investing in our immigrant arrivals?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, this member's presuppositions are false. Alberta continues to be the province of choice for immigrants from all over the world. As a matter of fact, we continue to be a net province, attracting secondary migration. Immigrants choose other provinces initially, and then they come to Alberta. Why? Because the jobs are here, the economy is here, and we are not following their policies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Charter Schools

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite considerable public support and third-party evidence indicating their success, the future of charter schools in this province remains by some to be in doubt. Despite a number of studies and discussions and surveys stretching back five years, no action has been taken that would help charter schools do a better job of serving more students. To the Minister of Education: when can charter schools expect to finally see this government grant them permanence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The future of charter schools in this province is not in doubt. The policy decision has been made to move to permanence of the charters. The question that remains is how to do it. We fully intend as we bring forward a new education act – and we have communicated this to the charter schools – that we will put in place in the new education act the structure to be allowed to do it. Then as we move forward, what we need to do is ensure that while they're made permanent, they don't lose their reason for being.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With one charter school having a wait-list more than 150 per cent larger than its enrolment cap because there are no facilities for more students, will the minister be doing anything to make more and bigger facilities available to charter schools?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the concerns with respect to permanence, that charter schools are not able to acquire their own property because they can't guarantee a lifespan beyond their five-year charter. We're working with them on that. We fully intend to help them resolve that issue with the permanence piece, but in the meantime we are constantly working with public school boards to determine when a facility has become available and which ones could be available for use in the broader public system, which includes the charter schools and a system to find appropriate accommodation for their operations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. In a recent interview, Minister, you indicated that charter schools haven't done a good job of spreading their innovations to the broader education system. Can you clarify this comment for all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That probably wasn't one of my better interviews. What I said was that charter schools had two reasons for existence. One was to provide choice, and the other was for innovation. They had done a good job on choice. In fact, their existence had helped us move the public school system to embrace choice, but there hadn't been a very good job done in sharing the innovations, and I left the implication that that was the fault of the charter schools. It's not the fault of the charter schools. It's the fault of the system. We're doing a lot of work with our AISI program, with other processes. The learnings that we have, whether they come from charter schools or whether they come from other public schools, we need . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Electricity Transmission Line Projects

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Evidence continues to mount that much of this government's $16 billion transmission upgrade is an unnecessary burden on Alberta ratepayers. With clean and locally generated electricity from natural gas becoming more affordable than ever and with industry increasingly going off grid with cogeneration, there is simply a new economic reality that suggests that a huge chunk of these lines is not needed. To the Energy minister: will he repeal Bill 50 and require the AUC to do an independent needs assessment using 2011 data to determine whether the impending increase on Albertans' power bills is necessary?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is only one natural gas fired generator in the planning stages that I'm aware of that as of now is prepared to go ahead. It's at Wabamun, and there aren't a lot of people that live at Wabamun, but there are a lot of people that live in Airdrie and in Calgary. In order to get the power from Wabamun, it needs a high transmission line to get it to Airdrie, Chestermere, and Calgary.

Mr. Anderson: There are two being built in my constituency right now. Get your facts straight. Good grief.

Given that the closing of two of TransAlta's Sundance coal-fired plants by Lake Wabamun has eliminated – get this – over 25 per cent, or 560 megawatts, of all available transmission between central Alberta and Calgary yet the lights remain on and given that well over twice that amount of power will soon be brought online right beside Calgary in my community, why does this minister continue to defend ATCO's and AltaLink's transmission line projects? Is your lone goal higher power bills for Albertans, sir?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the member sat in this House, might have even sat on this side if I remember, and approved Bill 50 because it is imperative that over the next 30 years we have transmission in this province to ensure that when we have power generated at centres like Wabamun – as an example, the new Keephills coal-fired plant is due to come on in April. TransAlta has announced plans to commence its Sundance 7, which will be fired by natural gas. It will need transmission. I come back to the fact that if this member wants his 50,000 residents of Airdrie to have power, then they probably will need transmission to get it there.

Mr. Anderson: This whole thing smells really bad, guys. I hope you get that.

Given that tens of thousands of Albertans are dead set against moving forward with these transmission lines without first having an independent needs assessment conducted and that many more Albertans are upset that these billion-dollar contracts were handed out to PC donors without competitive bidding, will this minister do the right thing and listen to Albertans, repeal Bill 50, and give Albertans the peace that this isn't the most irresponsible and expensive boondoggle in our province's history?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the only thing that smells here is the inaccuracy of that comment. We have something in this province called the Alberta Electric System Operator. It is not a branch of government; it is an independent operator. It has professionals that do . . . [interjection] I'm not sure if he wants the question answered or not. It doesn't sound like it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Expired Vehicle Insurance Cards

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Minister of Transportation. Section 822(4) of the Insurance Act requires that an insured motorist must destroy a pink card upon expiry of that card. Could the hon. minister please explain the rationale of making it an offence to have an expired pink card in your vehicle?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's well known that every vehicle owner in Alberta is required to make sure that they have insurance on the vehicle. Therefore, they have to carry proof that they have insurance, and that proof is a valid pink card. There are two different parts to this. He's referring to the one under the Insurance Act. We also have one under the Traffic Safety Act, and I think it's section 167 subsections (1) to (8) of the Traffic Safety Act. Our part of the act has a whole different intent than the other, but the 822 he's talking about, if I remember right, states that you can't falsify . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member. [interjection] Okay. Sit down, please. You've exhausted your time.

Hon. member, you have the floor.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. minister has just doubled my concern. Given that many law-abiding citizens of this province when receiving a new pink card or new registration merely place it in their glove compartment along with their other registration certificates, what is the justification for levying a $230 fine for such a misdemeanour?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, under our legislation, section 168 of the Traffic Safety Act, it's actually a $172 fine. The intent of the legislation, though, was to give a ticket if you had an expired pink card but couldn't produce a valid one. When you produce the valid one, it should be common sense that you have insurance. Our Solicitor General has been doing such a great job that there are so many policemen out there that are interpreting the law a little differently, but under the other act, as I said before . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe I should direct my last question to the hon. Solicitor General. Would it not seem reasonable to you as the Solicitor General that law enforcement officers should use some discretion and only issue a warning for such a minor offence rather than creating disrespect for the law by such an officious act as imposing a $230 fine?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the Minister of Transportation for throwing me under the underinsured bus.

Mr. Speaker, we all want officers to practise discretion, remarkably only when it works in our favour. I don't think that asking officers to practise discretion, which they do out there, actually – I think our officers do an excellent job on the highway – is the right way to go. I think the member feels strongly there should be some changes to the law. I encourage him to work with his colleagues to effect that change.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Southwest Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals believe in preserving green space and supporting the livability of cities. This government has held open houses at which it proposed to potentially push the Calgary southwest ring road right through the valuable green space. As this government retreated from the parks bill, they should remove any option to bring this road through the green space. To the Minister of Transportation: with the Tsuu

T'ina potentially back at the bargaining table should this not be the priority option?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, there's no more I can say on this issue. We've talked this issue to death. I've got to give all of our people involved kudos for doing such a good job on the open houses that are being held. They're gathering all the information, and let me tell you that we're moving ahead with something in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the Premier or the minister should sit down with the chief, Big Plume, and get on with the job. With the Tsuu T'ina Nation's long-term needs for increased traffic flow to support the future commercial development plans, would this not be better than kicking people of Lakeview out of their homes and destroying the Weaselhead green space?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member read the paper this morning, he's seen that the chief put out a news release yesterday, and he's going to go to his people to see if he wants to talk to us anymore. I've got to respect the process they're using.

Mr. Kang: I think, Mr. Speaker, the minister should work with the chief to get the job done.

Will this government follow the Liberal plan and preserve the Weaselhead green space?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, my door is open. I'm going to respect the process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Taber Labour Market Information Centre

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency the Taber and District Community Adult Learning Association has raised concerns about service changes. After April 1 residents need to seek services through the Taber Alberta Works office rather than the current resource centre. The association is concerned about the impact of this change on Low German Mennonites as they need one-on-one services because of limited English skills. My question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration: what is the local Alberta Works office doing to support a seamless transition and ensure that the needs of Low German Mennonites are met?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. Change is always difficult, but with this commitment of our government to have a fully balanced operating budget, some realities had to take place. Indeed, in the town of Taber this particular department had two offices. We have amalgamated the services into one office. That will not reflect on the quality and quantity of service offered. However, it'll be offered out of one of our offices, known as the labour market information centre, in the town of Taber.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what supports are in place at the Taber Alberta Works office to assist those individuals to connect to local jobs?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm actually proud to say that it's quite a wide range of services. Historically the labour market information centre would have been known as welfare offices. Well, now that is the last thing that they should be known for. They offer aptitude assessments. They offer employment counselling. They match potential candidates with employers. They actually also assist employers in finding employees. They have a variety of information on job markets in the vicinity and in other parts of the province and the country. So the spectrum of services by very dedicated and well-qualified employees of this ministry is available and will continue to be available to residents of Taber and the surrounding area.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Low German Mennonite population is a very important aspect of the labour market in Taber, my question again to the same minister: if we want to build Alberta's labour force and increase employment capacity for Low German Mennonites, why is the government reducing services for this growing population?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this member is correct. The Low German speaking population is actually growing. We're attracting more of them from Mexico, and we're happy to have them because they made fabulous agricultural employees, and now they expand into many other industries as well. We will continue to attract them. We are not changing the quality of service offered to them. We simply will be offering it differently from a different location. All we're doing is amalgamating our services under one roof, and that is part of our commitment to make sure that our operating budget is balanced in this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 18 members were recognized today. That was 108 questions and responses.

It strikes me, in attending question period the last couple of days, that a number of members still have not had a chance or an opportunity to read Beauchesne, as I requested them to do the other day. So could I just refer you once again to the sections of Beauchesne 403 to 420 and refer to both the questions and answers, and perhaps we'll all have an opportunity by Monday to have refreshed these very important rules as we come back to question period.

We'll continue the Routine in 15 seconds from now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Oil Sands Royalties

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The budget for 2011-12 puts Alberta in a precarious position. The government has managed to maintain funding for health care and other services only by draining the sustainability fund. Since 2009 the government has already spent two-thirds of this fund. This year the government expects to take more money out of the fund than will be left by the end of the year. Therefore, the fund will not be able to cover another $3 billion deficit. The government is gambling that another economic boom will arrive before the province's savings completely run out, but what happens if that boom doesn't come in time?

Alberta's economic recovery depends on highly volatile world markets. The government's own fiscal plan states that there are significant risks to the economic outlook, yet the government's plan leaves no room for error. If the budget's rosy forecast does not come to pass, the government may choose between deficit spending or cutting services like health care, education, and the environment.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another choice. Alberta's royalties are among the lowest in the world, yet we have one-third of the globe's available reserves. We have the advantage of being a stable, secure source of energy located close to the American market. Despite this, the oil sands industry continues to get a sweet deal from the government. Although the government's target for oil sands related royalties and land sales was a share of economic rent of 50 to 75 per cent, since 1997 the government has only managed to capture an average of between 8.9 and 14.6 per cent.

Alberta's NDP is committed both to balanced budgets and adequate funding for important social programs, including health care. These goals can both be met if the oil sands industry paid its fair share for Alberta's oil sands wealth.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Alberta Mentoring Partnership

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak about the Alberta mentoring partnership, which features government, community agencies, and youth working together to increase mentoring opportunities to support Alberta's children and youth.

The vision of the Alberta mentoring partnership is that every child and youth at risk who needs a mentor has access to one. Mr. Speaker, mentors are urgently needed across Alberta. There are many more children and youth waiting than mentors available to volunteer. Becoming a mentor is a great way to contribute to improving the lives of young people. Mentors are also positive role models in the lives of the young people, in turn helping them to become successful, contributing adults. You don't require special skills or a lot of time to be a mentor. As little as an hour a week can make a positive and lasting difference in the life of a child or youth.

During the month of March, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta mentoring partnership will run an awareness and recruitment campaign that will be seen and heard on radio stations and billboards throughout the province. The theme of the campaign is Mentoring Makes Sense: You Don't Have To Be Superhuman To Be A Mentor, But You Can Feel Like It.

We know from research that when young people feel supported, they are less likely to become involved with drugs or crime and more likely to complete high school and move on to postsecondary education or the workforce.

Mr. Speaker, supporting children and youth is everyone's responsibility. I encourage all Albertans to step up and consider mentoring a child or youth and to help improve the lives of our province's young people.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of postcards addressed from the future of Catholic education in Alberta. I received 40 of these postcards in my constituency office on February 9 this year. These 40 constituents of mine appeal to include in the new education act the right of Catholic schools to be governed by elected officials and request the government of Alberta to provide "adequate, predictable and sustainable funding for the education of... our children" without fundraising by parents or children.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission I'd like to make just a brief comment on the process of tabling these returns.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, just table it. Thank you.

Mr. Allred: Okay. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings relating to my questions to the minister of health on the arrangement of meetings between opposition MLAs and Alberta Health Services. The first is some electronic correspondence. It originates from Alberta Health Services, and then it's taken over by the Canadian Strategy Group, just to provide the paper trail.

The second is a printout of information on the Canadian Strategy Group featuring its principal, Mr. Hal Danchilla.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am again tabling e-mails from individuals concerned about clear-cutting in the Castle. These e-mails come from Jill Cunningham, Chris Sargent, Connie Griffiths, Lynn Bowers, Jenifer McPhee, Doug Leach, Fay Douglas, David Hulsman, Linda Leon, Stephen Ross, Julien Lafaille, Geoff Hoare, Eugene Spanier, Virginia Smith, Wendy Agate, Brian Bjarnason, Melissa Hart, Ralph Cartar, Fiona Old, Marla Allison, Martha Milne, Don Davidson, Eva Durance, Donna Wunderlich, and Sarah Aspeslet.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to table copies of e-mailed correspondence that occurred today between me and Dr. Robert Burns, who was the registrar at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta immediately prior to the current registrar, who took over somewhere in 2005. In this e-mail, which is with respect to several unfounded allegations that were raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, Dr. Burns states:

I can confirm that I was Registrar at the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta from 2001 until mid 2005; I can also tell you that the reason for my departure was the critical illness of a family member who at that time lived in Nanaimo [British Columbia]. We left to be near and supportive to him and to his wife, my sister-in-law. There was no other reason for leaving the province and the position.

He makes a couple of other statements and then adds in:

As far as the allegations are concerned, I can categorically state that I know nothing about them.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, please be brief. Thank you.

2:50 Projected Government Business

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the Government House Leader please inform us what will be on our agenda next week in terms of business? Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Monday, March 7, of course, is private members' business.

Tuesday, March 8, in the afternoon second reading of Bill 1, Asia Advisory Council Act; Bill 2, Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2011; Bill 3, Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2011, and as per the Order Paper; Committee of the Whole for Bill 9, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011, and consideration of His Honour's speech, day 7 of 10.

On Wednesday, March 9, in the afternoon in Committee of Supply the estimates of the Department of Energy and as per the Order Paper.

Thursday, March 10, in the afternoon consideration of His Honour's speech, day 9 of 10; second reading of Bill 1, Asia Advisory Council Act, and Bill 10, Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011; Committee of the Whole on bills 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8; and third reading of Bill 9, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 9

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board and minister of finance.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 9, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Certainly, we had a look at Bill 9 the other evening, and there's a lot of money at stake. We heard from various ministers why it was needed, and there were, I guess, reasonable requests. The first group of ministers was requesting upwards of $650 billion, and then, of course, we had some other requests there as well. But this request comes at a time when we learn, Mr. Speaker, that this government is for the fourth year in a row having a budget deficit, a significant budget deficit. If you total them all up, it's close to $10 billion in deficits.

Fortunately, we are in a position where we have money set aside from robust economic times, when our natural gas prices were quite high and oil, whether it was conventional oil or bitumen, was fairly high. So there was an amount set aside to deal with these issues. But when you look at the budgeting pattern of this government and you see the size of the government and you see the pattern, it is quite disturbing.

There are some ministries – two that come to mind are Children and Youth Services and Employment and Immigration – where exactly a year ago the budgets were cut by tens of millions of dollars, yet the other evening we heard passionate, articulate explanations as to why this money was now needed. I don't doubt for a minute that there are increased costs in administering children's services files. I don't doubt for a minute that there's more pressure on the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration to deliver social services in a timely fashion to those that need it and request it. But what puzzled me, Mr. Speaker, was the fact that a year ago – and I will use those two departments as examples – they were suggesting they didn't need the money. So somebody somewhere made a mistake.

Now, we had a discussion yesterday afternoon – I don't believe it was you, hon. minister – about the amounts that went unexpended in the budget of 2008-09 in various departments. Certainly, Employment and Immigration was one; children's services was the other. How easy is it for me to remember this? Because there was only one department, the one that hosted Alberta's official delegation at the Vancouver Olympics last year, slightly over a year ago, and that's Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Every other department gave money back to the minister of finance across the way, some in significant amounts, others in modest amounts. But it was $1.5 billion that was unexpended.

There was, as was pointed out correctly to me earlier in question period, a supplementary supply estimate for 2010-11. Again, this is following the pattern. Every year we've got to come back and ask the Official Opposition House Leader for more money. We know what she thinks about that, but every year we're back here. We're not listening to her. She gives articulate, reasoned arguments as to how you can budget better.

I'm disappointed that you're not listening to this hon. member either, but you did listen to this party when you created the sustainability fund, or the stabilization fund. You did do that. Albertans actually appreciate that because it is a way that we can supply adequate funding for essential public services without cutting and slashing like you did in the mid-90s, or your predecessor Dr. Steve West did.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I have to get on the record that I heard the hon. member across the way talking not about supplementary estimates but about his current budget, at the Macdonald hotel, and I was sitting there wondering what Steve would say.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. His budget for the Macdonald hotel?

Mr. MacDonald: No, no. He was presenting his budget, giving an update to the Chambers of Commerce at the Macdonald hotel.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: While we're talking about that, I believe he was in Calgary in the morning at a breakfast meeting. So he works pretty hard, and he gets around, and you've got to admire that. But if he gets a chance this year, I would encourage him to rigidly follow the budget, that we are debating now in this Assembly, and hopefully we won't need these large amounts in supplementary supply. It sends all the wrong signals. The first signal is: we can't manage with the money that we have. We can come up with lots of excuses as to why we need more, but I for one think we can handle this a little bit differently, and we can handle it in a way that is easier on the taxpayers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We had an opportunity as an Assembly to discuss this supplementary supply at length on Monday evening, and the third party never got on the record. We debated at length, and the Wildrose Alliance just are nowhere to be seen in Hansard, so I would like to invite them now, please, to get on the record and let us know what they're doing in the Legislature and to give us their views on this piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview: were you surprised that you couldn't find the comments in Hansard of the Wildrose Alliance regarding this requisition for close to three-quarters of a billion dollars extra? Were you surprised you couldn't find it?

3:00

Dr. Taft: Well, I appreciate the question from Edmonton-Gold Bar, and others may have similar questions. I have searched through Hansard for the evening of February 28. I see many comments from the Official Opposition, the Alberta Liberals, and, of course, from government members. My eyes may be failing me, but I don't see any comments whatsoever from the Wildrose Alliance. There's just nothing on the record here. So again I would urge them; perhaps next week they will take up the challenge and the invitation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Does the member have an opinion as to why?

The Speaker: Sorry. Through the chair, please.

Ms Blakeman: Does the member have an opinion as to why these comments would be completely missing from the Hansard?

Dr. Taft: Well, I think I have to leave that up to the general public or to anybody who reads Hansard to perhaps figure out why there is nothing on the record from the Wildrose Alliance on their views on this particular legislation. They do seem to make a lot of noise in other settings about government spending, yet it seems to be silent in here. So I'll leave that mystery up to others to solve.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others under 29(2)(a)?

There being no additional comments, any additional members wishing to participate in the debate?

Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Drysdale moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour Colonel (Retired) the Honourable Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned March 1]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get a chance to respond to the Speech from the Throne that was delivered here on February 22, 2011. I was reading with interest this outline of how the government plans to build a better Alberta. You can go through this at length; I know we have.

I certainly would encourage an increase in trade with the Asian markets, the Asian economies, but that being said, we have to make sure that our interests are being protected and our products in this province are being promoted. With that, I would specifically note agricultural products. We had a discussion earlier in the week in this Assembly regarding the habit of allowing steel products to be fabricated in South Korea, contracted by Imperial Oil for Fort McMurray, at a time when they get royalty and tax concessions and breaks here. That's supposedly how the new world free markets work, but if you do a little bit of research downstairs in the library, you'll find that South Korea is one of the countries with the highest agricultural trade barriers on record. In some cases it's close to 80 per cent. I would hope that if we're going to put this new emphasis on opening up Asian markets for their products to come here, we have to make sure that . . . [interjections] Yes, we are on the throne speech. You sound like you're on the other side there.

Now, when we allow countries access to our markets regardless of their trade record or their trade pattern and regardless of whether they have been charged one time or two times or three times for dumping some of their subsidized goods, in this case steel, on unsuspecting markets, what we have to do if we're going to have any sincerity toward Alberta's agricultural producers is ensure that they have access to these markets, that their goods and their products will have fair access to these developing markets. So if anything was to come out of this committee that the Premier is proposing to create through the Asia Advisory Council Act, that would be it. If I could have a short wish list of what I would like that committee to do, it's to please stand up for the public interest of this province and ensure that we are treated fairly in our trade matters.

Now we can talk about investing in infrastructure here. We can see where there are seven new hospitals, one noted in Edson. I had an opportunity to visit Edson the other week, Mr. Speaker, and there was a photograph in the leading newspaper in Edson. Hon. Member for West Yellowhead, I don't know if you were in it or not, but I did notice that the former Member for West Yellowhead was there, but he's taller than you, so maybe he just . . .

Mr. Campbell: I was in the back row.

Mr. MacDonald: You were in the backhoe?

An Hon. Member: The back row.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, okay. I thought, Mr. Speaker, that he said he was in the backhoe, and I didn't think there was any sod-turning there in that cold.

In Edson, which is mentioned in this throne speech, it was a $108 million project, and this was the unveiling of the sign to announce the project. As I understand it, that's how the newspaper article reported the entire afternoon, that it was a sign unveiling to announce that this new hospital is going to be built and that it will be $108 million. It was the first time, Mr. Speaker, that I saw such a public relations exercise to promote the unveiling of the sign to announce the construction of the hospital. I'm glad to see Edson was in there. I know the hospital that is currently there has not been fixed up lately. In fact, I believe – and I could stand corrected – it is over 40 years old. It was one of the last things the Social Crediters built. But it certainly needs an upgrade and some time and attention. While I was sitting in here listening to the throne speech, certainly I did find that interesting.

Now, this statement that is made in the throne speech where we're promoting or advocating adding value to raw resources is certainly something that's near and dear to the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater. We all welcome the North West upgrader. I was surprised to read that the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater had been promoting and, I hope, is still promoting the idea that maybe we'll change some of these royalty regulations and take the transportation costs for bitumen through the pipelines off the amount, or at least a portion of it, that's netted in the calculation of the royalty formula.

Another good idea I believe was presented – Mr. Speaker, I doubt you were there – at the PC annual convention, at the last policy convention they had. I believe this item was discussed there.

An Hon. Member: Were you there?

Mr. MacDonald: No, but I read about it. I certainly did read about it.

An Hon. Member: Do you believe everything you read?

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry?

At that convention it was also discussed that maybe the diluent or dilutant or the dilbit, whatever you want to call it, which is the petroleum light end that's mixed with the bitumen so that it flows through the pipeline rapidly and without any problems, that perhaps the cost for that product should not be allowed as a royalty reduction. What the hon. member was suggesting and what was discussed at the PC Party convention was that maybe that would be a way to incent further development of bitumen upgraders here in Alberta. I find that absent. We talk about the bitumen royalty in kind program in this document but not that.

Before we move on to talk about health care, I would also like to mention this statement – and I certainly would like more details on this – where the government is estimating that an additional 1.4 billion barrels of oil can be produced using enhanced oil recovery. Some of this would come from the carbon capture and storage technology that is being implemented. Of course, if we look at this year's budget, there's over $500 million allocated for that. The throne speech goes on to say, "To put it in more familiar terms, Alberta could produce more conventional oil in the future than it has already produced in the past." I did a rough calculation on this $1.4 billion worth of production, and the $25 billion that's stated in here could be collected in additional royalty and taxes. That's well below the take that is anticipated in the strategic business plan of the current budget year under discussion, or debate, in this House. The 22.3 per cent take for taxes and royalty on this amount I think is really low. It is really, really low considering this is a government that for the fourth year in a row is racking up a deficit.

Now, in the time that I have left, I certainly would like to express my dismay that health care was left to page 10 of this throne speech. Health care, I thought, would be the first priority that this government would try to fix because they broke it. They broke it through absolutely incompetent mismanagement. We see a budget that has ballooned. Mr. Speaker, from $4 billion in 1993 it is anticipated in two years to be close to $16 billion. We have seen population increases, that's true, but we haven't seen this aging population that this government is trying to blame these health care costs on because the population is not getting that much older than it ever was. I'm really surprised, after the mess that was created with the creation of the Alberta Health Services Board when the nine regional health authorities were fired, that there wouldn't be more direction, more discussion on what we're going to do with health care.

Now, earlier in question period we talked about this very issue. It was a year ago, Mr. Speaker, that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview both asked the current minister of health for the cost-benefit analysis to back up the statements that private is better and saves money and delivers services more effectively and more efficiently. A year later that hasn't been done, but how much money have we spent? Lots. We only have to look at contracts to compare voluntary and private health service providers. Lots and lots of money. All kinds of money.

In 2008-09 the private health service provider contracts were to the value of $649 million. A year later, before the minister tables or makes public his commitment to provide proof that all of this will work, we see a 19 per cent increase in the contracts from one year to another for private health service providers. This is information out of the Alberta Health Services annual report. So are we managing our money wisely? I would certainly say definitely not.

Now, when we look also at the creation of the Health Services Board in the first place, the deputy minister at the time candidly admitted before Public Accounts that there had been no internal or external cost-benefit analysis done. It surprises me. We know of all the consultants that are hired on that side of the House, but none were hired to do a cost-benefit analysis to determine if this would control costs and improve services for the sick people. Nothing was done. But, wow, can this crowd ever spend money. They can spend money.

That's why I'm disappointed to see that there is no mention in here of a value-for-money audit. Why are these private contracts increasing? Where are they increasing? Who are these contractors? None of this was provided to the opposition.

Now, when we look at the total budget for health care – I quoted 1993 earlier, Mr. Speaker – the total budget has increased in only nine years by over 110 per cent. Citizens, taxpayers, ask the question: where did the money go? Well, the government doesn't want to answer that. If you look carefully at the financial statements, you can see quite a pattern. Facility-based emergency and outpatient services in Alberta Health Services: we have seen a $350 million increase over five years. It's gone from roughly $870 million up to well beyond $1.2 billion in that time period. Are there fewer lineups? Are there shorter lineups at these emergency rooms across the province when you put them in a time frame? There certainly are not. There are 16 hospitals in Edmonton and Calgary, which do the majority of the ER care. Those lineups are not getting any shorter. Are people getting admitted or treated quicker? No, they certainly are not.

The Speaker: Hon. member, alas, the time has left us, but Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

There being none, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne, a speech delivered so eloquently by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. As a proud member of our armed forces and through his tenure in Europe, the Middle East, and Central America Colonel Ethell witnessed first-hand many significant events, and I would like to express my gratitude for his many years of outstanding, dedicated public service to our country and the international community.

Mr. Speaker, as we know, this will be the last session for our Premier. I would like to take this opportunity to express what a great honour and privilege it has been to work with our Premier and to wish him the very best in all of his future endeavours. With Premier Stelmach what you see is what you get: a sincere, caring, and hard-working leader.

Mr. Speaker, there are many points that I would like to comment on, but today I would like to highlight the way the throne speech frames and defines our government's commitment to industry and business. As His Honour stated, "Our province has relied heavily on a single customer, the United States, which buys about 85 per cent of our province's exports." We are indeed fortunate to have a close and stable relationship with the U.S., which has helped us to achieve tremendous growth throughout our history, but due to the globalization of our world economy over the last few decades as an international businessman I'm very happy to see that our government has recognized the need to also diversify the markets internationally.

In order to be a viable competitor in the world marketplace, it is fundamental to ensure that we have a skilled workforce, advanced infrastructure, and a competitive tax system. This is why I'm so pleased to see that our government will continue to recognize the importance of these areas.

We will continue to educate a strong workforce. Our businesses and industries require the best and the brightest to be competitive, and our children will be the planners, leaders, and entrepreneurs of the future, the people building our communities. It is in our interest to ensure that they are the best they can be. After all, Mr. Speaker, investment in education is investment in our future.

We will continue to build 21st century infrastructure. Mr. Speaker, advanced infrastructure is fundamental to our future economic growth, and I'm very pleased that we will continue to build roads, schools, hospitals, and seniors' facilities to make sure that our province is ready for the next cycle of growth.

We will continue to ensure that Alberta has one of the most attractive tax regimes in the country. Mr. Speaker, personal and corporate taxes will continue to be at 10 per cent, small business will still be at 3 per cent, and we will still have no PST and the lowest fuel tax in Canada. Our low taxes will ensure that Alberta remains the ideal place to invest and to start a business. As His Honour stated, "We will continue to show the world how our province is becoming a hub of creative thinking, where innovation turns ideas into reality."

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some brief remarks on competitiveness. As His Honour stated, "Being competitive also means making the most of the advantages we have." Our advantages are that we have rich natural resources – oil sands, natural gas, and coal reserves – a strong agricultural and agrifood industry, and a very strong forest industry, a resource of natural beauty for our tourism industry.

Mr. Speaker, I'm so very optimistic about the future of this province. We are all most fortunate to live in a province that is as rich in our people, our resources, our landscapes, and our collective desire to ensure that Alberta continues to be an exceptional place to work, to live, to raise our families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for five minutes of questions and comments.

There being none, I will call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and share my comments on the Speech from the Throne. Before I begin, I would like to thank His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for his inspiring words. I would also like to thank him for his years of dedicated service to the people of Canada and the province. His life should serve as an inspiration for all of us here today.

I would also like to thank our hon. Premier. Under his leadership we have emerged from the global economic downturn better than any other jurisdiction in Canada. In fact, because of his dedication to infrastructure spending Alberta is well positioned to return to future growth and prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, my constituency of Edmonton-Manning is unique as it contains rural, urban, and industrial areas all within the same borders. I'm pleased that the incentives laid out in the throne speech will help all three sectors.

Without a doubt, the most important idea mentioned by His Honour was the introduction of Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a reflection and a continuation of our successful trade mission to India late last year. Just as an aside I am impressed that even with all the jet lag from the long flight, our hard-working Premier was up and ready to work right away in India. In my own experience it takes 30 to 40 hours to settle down.

It immediately became clear that much work needed to be done. At the Canada High Commissioner residence reception it was identified that Canada needed to increase trade from $10 billion to $15 billion over the next three years. Much of this trade could come from Alberta. I'm pleased that our Premier has recognized this trade opportunity, and I'm pleased that he has acted so quickly to introduce Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act. As stated by His Honour, "Albertans look to their government to lead the way, to survey the landscape of both the short term and the long term and plan accordingly."

In my mind, Bill 1 is both a long-term and a short-term vision for the province. It connects us to one of the most dynamic economic regions in the entire world. This is an area that is growing now and one that is likely to keep growing in the foreseeable future. Mr. Speaker, as part of this bill I would stress the need for the creation of an Alberta trade office in India. We already have one in China. Expanding this concept into India has the potential to greatly improve both relations and trade between our provinces. After all, as His Honour stated, "Our province's long-term prosperity depends on our industries being globally competitive."

Mr. Speaker, in addition to trade, infrastructure is key to global and internal competitiveness, and I agree that now is the best time to invest in our infrastructure. Due to the global downturn our dollars go further than ever before, and we are building the schools, hospitals, and ring roads that we will need going forward. I am particularly happy to hear about the promise to renovate existing health facilities as this gives these old centres a new lease on life. In fact, my constituency is home to both Alberta Hospital and the Northeast community health centre, that could stand to benefit from this plan.

Other infrastructure projects of note include the recent announcement of the new North West upgrader. While this project is being driven by private investors, it was Alberta's sound business practices that drew them here.

I am also excited about the continuing work on the Anthony Henday Drive. The first steps have been taken to build the new segment of the Anthony Henday Drive, from Manning Drive to Whitemud Drive east. The project includes 27 kilometres of six- and eight-lane divided roadways, eight interchanges, nine flyovers, two river structures, and 47 total bridge structures. Construction is expected to start the summer of 2012 and finish by fall 2016. This will help foster growth in the area and in my constituency. This ring road will allow the hard-working people in my community to transport themselves home safely and quickly after a hard day of work and to spend more quality time with their families.

3:30

In closing, I would again like to thank His Honour for his wise and inspiring words and again thank him for his duty and devotion to the people of Alberta and the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to again thank our hon. Premier for his vision, leadership, and hard work. Under his guidance we emerged from the global recession better than anyone else in North America, positioning ourselves for future growth and prosperity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

I have no additional speakers on this matter.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

Asia Advisory Council Act

[Adjourned debate March 1: Ms Evans]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't know where my notes are. Oh, God help me. Thank you very much for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act. I'm trying to remember what I'd thought about this when I looked at it, and I'm just going to have to wing it.

The Speaker: It's only 20 minutes.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you for reminding me of that, Mr. Speaker. Appreciate your help.

There are a couple of things that you notice about this bill right off the bat. For starters it's four pages long, and that's all there is to it. As a flagship bill that's representing the major thrust and the proudest moment of a government for the spring sitting of this fourth year of this particular legislative term, it's not filled with a lot of meat.

The second thing that I noticed. When I talked to the throne speech, I talked about how we are moving away from manual-labour-based economies and toward knowledge- and creative-based economies. I'm pleased to see that in this act that's acknowledged. When it talks about what the council is supposed to be considering under its mandate, it does talk about: "expand existing economic, research, educational and cultural opportunities." It is about new market opportunities and international investment and improved communication and partnership, which is great. It also includes tourism opportunities and cultural exchanges. At this point I'll stop and remind the hon. members opposite that it costs money to do cultural exchanges.

There was an understanding there that it isn't just about taking our raw natural resources and shipping them out of the country for someone else to process, which is a real frustration for me. The government's thinking tends to be very much stuck in the 1950s, when I think we need to move forward.

This bill is going in the direction that I think we should be going into, but once again it's a council that is appointed to give advice to the government. Now, in listening to what the minister had to say as she spoke to this bill, she was very clear that in the first year all that was going to happen were the appointments to the council and some identification of issues they wanted to deal with and some prioritization.

Now, there is a sunset clause in this bill for December of 2014, so really this is a four-and-a-half year program, and there have been no other details given. We've got year 1, which is the 2011-2012 year, in which the appointments are to happen. There's some sort of list of issues it's going to deal with and some prioritization according to what the sponsoring minister had said, and then it's silent. There's nothing more on what this is supposed to do in year 2, which would be 2012-13, and year 3, 2013-14, and year 4, from April 2014 to December 2014, at which point you've hit the sunset clause and it's over unless it gets renewed. I'm quite concerned that we would launch into something with no concept of what we're going to do for three and a half out of four and a half years' worth of existence of this particular council.

The other issue is that there's no money attached to it, and when queried about it, the minister said: well, it wasn't going to take that much money because the members weren't being paid but that any money that did need to be spent they were going to take from administration. One assumes administration in the minister's ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Well, the obvious question is: what's been identified that is superfluous in that budget that it can be cut to be allocated to this?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

This is just sounding a little last minute to me. That's the problem. It's sounding like something that got whipped up. It has not been anticipated in the budget. No one is able to tell us what's going to be foregone or what's going to be given up in that administrative budget in order to pay for this. There's no idea of what might be needed to pay for it, so it does really sound to me like somebody dreamed this up a week and a half ago. [interjection] Well, I'm sorry. You've got absolutely no detail that goes with it, and that's what making me think that.

The other thing that I know, having run one of these arm's-length councils, is that there are two things that are really important. [interjection] The Minister of Infrastructure is so eager to get in on this debate. I'm looking forward to what he has to say. I always appreciate when he engages in the discussion.

There are two things that are really important about these councils, and this is how the government can control their effectiveness. One of them is the appointments to the council. If you appoint, you know, a number of people that are deeply partisan and deeply loyal, they'll tend to do exactly what is signalled to them by the government, and it may not be as efficient or as rigorous as it should be.

The second is the amount of resources and support that's given to the organization. If you give them no resources or support, make it difficult for them to meet or make it unappealing for them to meet, you're going to have a less successful council. I'm speaking from experience. I mean, when the government wasn't happy with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues, our budget got cut, and I had to lay off researchers so we could produce less research, which meant we produced fewer documents. That's how they controlled us. I'm very wary, knowing that there's not a lot of detail in this bill or in the minister's introduction of it that covers the two areas that I think can be quite problematic.

A couple of other points. I think some of the good points, the pluses on this bill, are that it does recognize an economic diversification. It's clear that a number of people are looking to that Asian market, including some of our metropolitan municipalities. I suppose there's never anything wrong with having advice sought from people in Alberta and given to the minister. Things like strengthening collaboration and global competition and an opportunity for flow of investment and things like that: all good.

I've raised a couple of points that I'm concerned about already, and here are a couple more. I honestly don't know this, so if somebody does, please tell me. I'm wondering: is there anything in place around outside investment in our province? If we end up with investment coming in that in effect takes over a business or substantially takes over a sector, does the government have any control over that? We've got some very large family farms and some farms that are essentially owned or controlled by some large U.S. or international food producing groups. Is there a limit to that? I mean, can we end up at a point where an outside-Alberta company owns 80 per cent of our food production in Alberta? Is there anything that stops that? When we talk about promoting Alberta as an attractive destination for international investment, good point, but where do we lose control of our own resources in Alberta? That may be a small problem to be solved in my concerns if you can answer that question.

I'm also interested in what's being contemplated under the idea of education. Is that to encourage international students to come and get an education in Alberta? Are we doing fellowship exchanges? What exactly was being contemplated under that?

The rest of the bill is essentially administrative. It just talks about, you know, the appointments rolling over and that there will be no remuneration paid, but there would be reasonable travel and living and other expenses. Then the minister went on to say: well, actually, those expenses aren't even going to happen either. She has an expectation that people that were going anyway would be council members, and that struck me as a little strange. Why would that be the case? I mean, I can see having some people that travel there on a regular basis because there is a level of expertise that you'd like to tap into, but wouldn't you be trying to balance that with some other appointees on that committee to whom you would be expected to pay travel expenses? Then you're going to end up with a situation where some of them are getting paid for their expenses and some of them aren't or where the government is expecting to reimburse some of them and expecting not to reimburse others, which I think sets up a real inequity that is not healthy.

A couple of last questions. You know, I can remember in budget debates when there used to be a department of economic development, and we were often saying: what's the difference between the work that is done by the then intergovernmental affairs – it's the same department; it's just had a number of different names – and what's done by economic development? I mean, they seem to have the same mandates in a lot of cases. Here I'm saying: what's the difference between the work that's being done by this council and the work that's being done by the department now anyway? Are we doubling in our allocation of resources?

Overall, I don't have any monumental complaints about what's being considered here. I'm just disappointed. I was hoping for something that was a bit more imaginative, more creative, more energetic. It really is feeling like the government is kind of ho-hum, done it all, and can't quite think up new things that they want to do. For a number 1 bill that is supposed to be getting all of this attention, it just doesn't feel very interesting.

I'm sure it will be valuable and all of those things. I'm not knocking that. I guess I'm saying: is this the best you could do for a number 1 flagship bill? I mean, considering that Peter Lougheed's very first bill in his first time as Premier was the human rights act, and I think his second bill was repealing the eugenics act. I mean, big stuff, big thinking. [interjection] Well, you know, I'm being kind of kidded by the Minister of Education, but I think he's right in that it's as though all the big-thinking ideas have been done by this government and they're finished. There aren't any more.

As I say, this isn't a bad bill. I mean, it's not a terrible thing. You know, as somebody said, there was a brass band in here for the reading of the throne speech and the introduction of Bill 1, and it just seemed a tad over the top, considering the content of Bill 1, for all the fanfare. Maybe a penny whistle would have been about the right level of hoo-ha to promote this bill. Other than that, it's just kind of nice but not spectacular, and for Bill 1 I was expecting a bit more.

You know, there are a lot of things that this government could be doing. I mean, at one point Bill 1 was the cancer foundation act of the previous Premier, his legacy about the cancer foundation and, you know, some much bigger ideas, and this just doesn't seem like a tremendous, big idea. [interjection] Well, yeah, I think it can go there. [interjection] Well, I have managed to engage members on the other side, and that, of course, is my delight and my joy, so I will take my seat and allow some of the others, now that I've engaged them, to get up and tell me what they really think.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for St. Albert, do you wish to speak?

Mr. Allred: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and speak in support of Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act, being proposed by our hon. Premier. Before I comment on this piece of legislation, I'd just like to thank the Premier not only for this bill but for his many, many years of dedicated service to this province and the people of Alberta.

The actual legislative alterations proposed by Bill 1 are comparatively small, but the intent of the legislation is simply to create an advisory council. However, the scope and the reach of this council are what truly make this legislation significant and very critical to Alberta's future. If passed, Bill 1 will form the Asia advisory council. In turn, this council will be tasked with advancing Alberta's cultural and business interests abroad, specifically in the emerging economies of Asia. These economies include the major economic powerhouses of China, Japan, and India and potentially many of the smaller but growing Asian economies, and of course, Mr. Speaker, you would be very well acquainted with some of those.

Mr. Speaker, as part of its role the council will be mandated to provide information to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations on a variety of issues. These issues cover a broad range of topics, and these could include ways to expand our markets, ways to improve tourism, and ways to improve cultural and educational relations.

The end result of Bill 1 and the Asia advisory council will hopefully be the expansion of Alberta abroad. Alberta is an exporting jurisdiction but is limited in its trading partners. In fact, 85 per cent of everything we produce and export goes to one single market, the United States, our neighbour to the south. While this relationship has helped pave the way to Alberta's economic success, it is not without potential pitfalls. Becoming so dependent on one market means that if this one market were to struggle or change course, it would take Alberta with it, and obviously there are some major concerns in that regard right at the moment.

The solution to this is to expand our reach and diversify beyond this one market and look for other markets that are interested and in need of the resources and services that we have to offer. If you were to look at the global economy, it quickly becomes obvious where the growing economies are. Mr. Speaker, Asia is without a doubt one of the fastest growing economic centres in the world. It is filled with a growing population craving a lifestyle similar to that in North America. This means that they will need three things – food, fibre, and fuel – and Alberta can provide all three.

Alberta is an agricultural centre blessed with expansive fields, world-class livestock, and a farming community dedicated to high-quality agricultural products. Alberta is a forestry leader, with expansive wood resources and a dedicated timber industry, and of course Alberta is an energy powerhouse, with the world's second-largest proven oil reserves. In short, Alberta is the ideal trading partner for these up-and-coming economies.

Mr. Speaker, beyond these three resources, Alberta is also blessed with a young, well-trained, and ambitious workforce, so in addition to possessing the resources these nations desire, we also have the people and skills these nations need. Just as an aside on this point, one product of Alberta's well-trained and ambitious workforce just happens to be my son Paul, who is a commercial pilot currently employed by a private commercial airline in Shanghai. I emphasize: private. Apparently, it's the first private, nongovernmental airline in China.

Alberta has the potential to forge one of the most successful trading partnerships in our history. However, this would be almost impossible to achieve without the direction proposed by Bill 1. I would again like to stress the importance of this piece of legislation. Bill 1 will create the direction and guidance needed to successfully break into these new and expanding markets, eliminating our overdependence on our one trading partner, which has served us very well. But the future is fraught with dangers. Expanding our markets to include Asia will dramatically strengthen our economy and will help mitigate the effects of future economic downturns.

Mr. Speaker, again, I applaud the Premier for this well-thought-out piece of legislation and thank him for his long-term vision. With that, I will conclude my comments and will be voting in support of Bill 1.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. I'm pleased to speak to the government's flagship bill of this session, Bill 1, an act to create a committee. I will certainly echo some of the sentiments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre in terms of the disappointment in terms of the scope of this bill and what it really says about the government's imagination and its energy and inventiveness and creativity because I think it really speaks to the lack of those qualities in this government.

The hon. Member for St. Albert talked about the need to engage emerging economies. Mr. Speaker, most of these economies emerged decades ago. They are not emerging economies. They are dominant economies in the world and, in the case of China and Vietnam, have been for a couple of decades. Of course, Japan was an emerging economy in the 1950s, so it's a very long time ago. India is a rising economy. I suppose you could call it an emerging economy, but it's already a very powerful economy in the world. While there's some development there, it's already a powerhouse in terms of the world economy.

For the government to finally realize what's been going on in Asia for the last 30 years or more is a little bit late. I think they slept in and missed school today, Mr. Speaker, because this particular part of the world has been emerging as a dominant part of our economy for a very long time. This is not a bad idea. It's certainly not something to set the world on fire in terms of government initiative, but it's also very, very late in the day.

We've been warning in this House for a long time about overdependence on the American market. That was very, very obvious to us during the BSE crisis, which was also a number of years ago, that even when it comes to agriculture, we have too many eggs in one basket in the United States. When the United States decides to move in the area of protectionism, then, you know, we suffer for the lack of diversification in terms of the markets that we have. I think that there are lots of good reasons to diversify, but I think that, again, the government has kind of missed the boat on this, Mr. Speaker. The opportunities to diversify were present 20 years ago in this province, and the government has been only too happy to languish in the embrace of the American economy.

I want to just indicate to members of the House that while we're supporting this particular bill, we're singularly unimpressed by it and more than a little disappointed, as the hon. member from the Official Opposition said. If we were going to do a Bill 1 as a New Democratic government in this province, we would probably do a Bill 1 about making sure that we develop the petroleum resources of this province in a way that benefits the people of this province and ensures that the value of the resources stays in this province for the benefit of the people of Alberta. That would probably be our priority. Of course, the government is very interested in being hewers of wood and drawers of water for the Americans and now the Asian economies as well, and that's not good enough.

I think that in the future people will look back on this period in the province's economic development and realize the vast lost opportunities to make this truly a prosperous province for generations to come and across all groups in society, all classes of people in our province. That opportunity is being lost although small numbers of very rich Albertans are certainly benefiting from this government's policies. In the end, we've been blowing through the financial benefits of the oil and gas industry and the oil sands industry in this province very quickly, as we have seen.

Mr. Speaker, it's not something that I think speaks very well of this government's vision or its ability to continue to move Alberta forward in the way that it has done. I will certainly say that in the past earlier Conservative governments in this province have moved this province forward, but that's very much in the past, hon. members. The government has been running out of steam for some time, and I think this is kind of the last gasp of a boiler that just can't drive the engine of this province anymore.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's interesting as well that this committee that's established by Bill 1 doesn't even account to the government as a whole or to the Premier but to the minister of intergovernmental affairs, so the question really arises in my mind: by what rationale has this been made into Bill 1 for the government? It doesn't seem to have the appropriate status that I would expect from a Bill 1.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre also referred to Bill 1 in the past, the Alberta Human Rights Act, like Peter Lougheed's first piece of legislation, a signal piece of legislation in this province that really set Alberta apart, set Alberta ahead of other provinces, and really showed that there was vision and there was principle behind that first Progressive Conservative government of this province. That is so far in the past now, Mr. Speaker, that it may as well be ancient history because there's nothing left of that vision and that energy for making our society a more just and fair society. Those kinds of concepts have evaporated in this government, and it's left for Alberta's NDP to stand up and fight for greater equality among all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, just to conclude my comments with respect to Bill 1, as I think one of the other hon. members said: "It's nice. There's nothing wrong with it. We'll vote for it." But don't get too excited over on the other side because we're really not very enthused, which you may have gathered from my comments.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows five minutes for comments or questions. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to stand and ask a couple of questions of the hon. member on the opposite. First of all, when you talk about the expertise, well, I say to you that I know that you pride yourself on being an expert of hindsight. If you are an expert of hindsight, you should also be a learner for the future.

Mr. Speaker, one comment was made, you know, that we slept in and should have been there a lot sooner. Well, let me say to you that we were there a lot sooner. Maybe the member does not realize that changes in technologies and changes in, if I can use the word, commodities and changes in opportunities have taken place. We are taking advantage of that today.

I want to also say to you that a statement was made – and I wish the hon. member would answer it – when he talked about the status of this particular bill having the expertise only in International and Intergovernmental Relations. Mr. Speaker, this is the expert, and we have to guide our direction through a minister whose responsibility and expertise is relations with other countries.

I also say to you, as I just mentioned briefly, that the world economy has changed. Visions have changed. If that hon. member has not seen that, I think it's critical that he needs to pay more attention to the world markets and to the world opportunities. Mr. Speaker, population and lifestyles have changed.

Also, if I can say to this you – you say "too late" – I remember being on a delegation more than five years ago with the Northern Alberta Development Council. The Northern Alberta Development Council's sole purpose was the discussion of opportunities through Prince Rupert for our lumber industry, for our oil industry, for our product.

Mr. Speaker, also, if you remember, not very many months ago what happened was that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning went to India with the Premier and other members to look at this possibility. For the last possible point I also remember this hon. member criticizing this government for going out and trying to look for markets while they're here.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to respond to that hon. member. Of course, he misconstrued the comments of the time. Very much of it was a political junket. Looking for markets is a good thing, and I support that. But, you know, this member says that . . . [interjections] It was a political junket, by and large. I think it's clear that this government is finally getting around to dealing with this.

This hon. member tried to indicate that this was in fact something the government has been on top of all along. But what happened when the Americans closed the border during the BSE crisis? We had our cattle industry in this province plunged into a crisis, and people were losing their shirts because the government had failed to diversify the economy and the markets of this province. What happened when the Americans imposed the changes because of the softwood lumber dispute? It badly hurt our industries here. If they ever did something, if they decided they didn't need our oil or that they wanted to punish us by not taking it, we would be totally shafted in this province because this government has absolutely failed to diversify its markets despite getting lesson after lesson after lesson from international politics and economics.

I want to say just in conclusion [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired] Too bad.

The Deputy Speaker: Now we will continue on the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in support of Bill 1, introduced by the hon. Premier, the Asia Advisory Council Act. As Alberta looks to the east for increased trade and investments, it seems only fitting that I begin my remarks by quoting an ancient Chinese proverb. Wise sages teach us to, and I quote, dig the well before you are thirsty. Well, Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what Alberta is doing with regard to Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act. The passage of this bill will ensure that Alberta's well of prosperity does not run dry by tapping into the incredible potential of the Asian market.

If passed, this act will put into place an advisory council that will provide expertise on ways to advance Alberta's cultural and business interests in Asia. The members will provide our government with expertise on up-and-coming regional and sectoral opportunities, new market opportunities for Alberta exporters, and opportunities to build on our educational and cultural relations in Asia. Their intimate knowledge of the Asian market will help Alberta maximize business opportunities and attract investments into our province, building on the solid foundation that this government has been building that many members have mentioned, building on the solid foundation that our international offices in Beijing, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Shanghai, and Seoul have established.

Mr. Speaker, it is time that Alberta engages the full potential of the Asian market. The Asian countries are outperforming many industrialized nations; the facts are simply undeniable. Let's take China, for example. China alone offers a market of 1.3 billion people. It is also one of the strongest countries coming out of the global recession. In fact, The Economist recently declared China the world's second largest economy. An International Monetary Fund report supports this finding, stating that China's economy is projected to grow by 9.6 percent in 2011, and it's no wonder when you look at the performance of China's provinces and cities. To put it in perspective, the province of Guangdong's GDP is almost as big as the entire country of Indonesia. When you look at Shanghai, its GDP per person is as high as Saudi Arabia's. The fact is that China is a rising economy, and Alberta needs a firm foothold into this market if we are going to continue to sustain our prosperity.

China is currently Alberta's second largest trading partner, but there are many more opportunities we can explore in trade and investment. China offers an emerging market for science and technology in the areas of information and communications, life sciences, environmental technologies, energy-related technologies, and agricultural technologies. Alberta can also help meet China's demand for food with exports of wheat, beef, and canola oil and products.

We can also harness the power of China's economy by attracting more investment into our province. Chinese companies have already shown great interest in our energy sector. Husky Energy, owned by Hong Kong businessman Li Ka-shing, has long been a fixture on Alberta's energy scene. Just recently PetroChina invested $5.4 billion into Encana's Cutbank Ridge natural gas asset. This new investment joins the billions of dollars already invested in Alberta's energy sector by China National Petroleum Corporation, the China Petroleum & Chemical Corporation, and China National Offshore Oil Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, in another show of faith the Bank of China opened a branch in my home city of Calgary recently, signalling the bank's confidence in Alberta's robust economic climate.

Economically there is no question that Alberta can and will benefit from increased trade and investment with China and with Asia as a whole. However, there are also many intangible reasons why now is the time to engage the Asian market. Alberta is changing. Now more than ever our population reflects the diversity found all over the world. All we need to do is to look around Alberta to see the changing face of business.

As the parliamentary assistant for Employment and Immigration I have seen the impact of globalization on our province's labour market. Not only are Asian countries driving global markets; they are also our number one source of skilled immigrants. In addition to generations of Albertans of Asian descent, year after year Alberta's labour market is strengthened through new immigrants from China, India, and the Philippines. These Albertans have intimate knowledge of their countries of origin, knowledge that will give our province the edge to help us solidify our market position in Asia. Passing the Asia Advisory Council Act will allow us to tap into the rich experience of our growing cultural communities and give voice to the thousands of Asian Albertans who help make up our rich social fabric.

Mr. Speaker, the time is now to engage China. Now is the time for us to seek the expertise and the guidance of individuals who can help us harness the power of countries like China. Now is the time for Alberta to diversify its export markets for the sustained success of our economy. I urge all members of the Legislative Assembly to give their support to Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act, because now is the time to dig our well before we become thirsty.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. member a question. She said that now is the time to engage China, and now is the time to diversify our markets. My question to her is: why is now the time to do those things? Why wasn't the time to do those things 10 or 15 years ago?

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you for the very good question. We have been building this foundation in terms of relationship, in terms of our trade development with China for the past decade. I think we started in the '70s. But this is a different phase in China's economic and cultural and educational development. There's a growing middle class, and advancement of technology is presenting different opportunities for the province of Alberta and China to explore additional opportunities. It's the new population. Their needs are different. Their interests are different. Their need for resources is different from 10 years ago. Much of the current state of development in China was developed over the last 30 years, so we're dealing with a very different country. I think that's part of the reason.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, could I just ask a question? We did hear the indication from the member from the other side that basically said that we're 10 years or 20 years too late. From that message I am gathering that he is saying, "It's too late. Let's quit. Let's bury our heads in the sand, and let's not look for new markets, especially for those in China and in India." I want to ask the hon. member: is there still opportunity in those markets?

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank for the question from the hon. member. There are still plenty of opportunities. In fact, those opportunities will be building on the tremendous strong relationship that we've built over the last 20 years. The Chinese people are a people that remember past deeds. The fact that we provided them with wheat and with assistance during times of natural disaster are things that the Chinese people and people in Asia remember well. That will lead us, actually, into a future relationship very well. A tremendous opportunity.

They recognize the high quality of education that we have established here in Canada, and they want to share and learn some of those education developments. I know that every year when we have the petroleum conferences, several delegations come here. They are interested in our agricultural products, and they are interested in our environmental stewardship initiatives. So there's lots of room for the exchange of learning, for development, for trade opportunities, and for cultural exchange and creation.

Mr. Mason: I want to congratulate the hon. member for her answer to my question. That was not a bad answer. But I want to ask her a question. Don't you think that it's really sad the way the minister has to put words in my mouth in order to attack my position?

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to use Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, before we continue, I just want to remind hon. members, when you speak, to look at the Speaker and that the microphone is on, so don't turn your back or your microphone cannot pick up.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the bill.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in support of Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act. The government has announced its commitment to market diversification and, specifically, expand its efforts to further strengthen our partnership in Asia. Diversification means accessing new markets and forging stronger relationships with new trading partners. It also means strengthening our cultural ties and sharing knowledge and ideas by tapping into the brightest minds around the world.

Broadening our scope and taking a more global approach to our future will secure Alberta's quality of life and prosperity for generations to come. This is what Bill 1 is about.

If passed, Bill 1 will establish a council of 10 members who represent a cross-section of organizations and interests, including business, cultural, and academic communities. The members of this council would have expertise in Asia and insights that would enable Alberta to strengthen global ties and be more successful on the world stage. Specifically, the council would advise government on ways to advance Alberta's business and cultural interest in Asia, and it would guide our efforts to gain better access to key Asian markets, including China, Japan, Korea, and India.

These are regions that are so important to Alberta's future, especially at a time when the world economy is changing. With the U.S. economy continuing to recover from the global economic recession, Alberta needs to look to other markets. India is one of those markets, Mr. Speaker. With a population of more than 1 billion people India is poised to surpass China as the world's most populous country by the year 2030. India also has one of the world's fastest growing economies, with a middle class of 250 million people. This constitutes a large consumer market for Alberta products. In fact, between 2005 and 2009 Alberta's exports to India averaged $98.5 million a year.

Like with other markets in Asia, Alberta has already begun making inroads in India to strengthen ties and forge new partnerships. Alberta and India share a history of resource development, and Alberta companies have over two decades of experience in the Indian oil and gas sector. A growing number of leading-edge Alberta companies like Niko Resources, Canoro Resources, GeoGlobal Resources, and Bengal Energy maintain offices in India.

There is also growing potential for Indian investment in our oil sands. As the fourth-largest oil consumer in the world India is producing less than a third of the million barrels a day it consumes. Alberta has the energy to help meet their demand, but energy development isn't all we share. In January 2009 Canada signed a first-ever memorandum of understanding with India to create a framework to increase agricultural trade between the two countries.

We also continue to grow our educational partnerships. As of 2010 the University of Alberta has agreements with the Indian Institute of Technology in Mumbai, the Indore Indira school of career studies, the Indian Institute of Management in Bangalore, the IILM Institute for Higher Education, Petrotech Society, Tata Consultancy Services, and the University of Hyderabad.

Alberta has been working to expand our relationship with India for a long time, from the twinning of Calgary with the Indian city of Jaipur in 1973 to last year's visit to India by the Premier as well. The Premier's mission included meetings with business leaders and government officials. His visit was positive in both an economic sense and in a cultural sense. While in India the Premier became the first Alberta Premier ever to visit the Golden Temple in the city of Amritsar and the Akshardham Temple in New Delhi. This mission was also particularly well timed. In November Canada and India announced the beginning of negotiations for a comprehensive economic partnership agreement.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, as you can see, Alberta has been working on establishing and strengthening the relationship with this important and growing market. Our efforts so far have laid the foundation from which we can build and flourish. Supporting Bill 1 will enable Alberta to capitalize on all of our good work. The expertise of the council will guide us in a focused and deliberate approach as we open up new opportunities with India and other Asian regions. Passing this bill means further diversification of our export markets, stronger relationships with new and important partners, and continued economic prosperity for our province.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this Assembly to give their support to Bill 1, the Asia Advisory Council Act. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: If I may, I wanted to just ask one question. It seems to me that there was never a more successful mission than what the Premier had with the members that accompanied him to India, and I'd just like to ask a question of the hon. member, one of the superb delegation that went on that occasion. Was there anything that we could have done further to advance our cause in the short period of time you had on that mission?

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much, hon. member. At the time we arrived in India, our Premier – and I think it was mentioned by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning – after travelling for 18 hours, I think, barely had a couple of hours of sleep, and then we were at the opening of Petrotech, where we had members competing on an international stage. In fact, one of the members leading the project was from Calgary, Alberta, and all three of us who were there – myself, the Member for Edmonton-Manning, and the Member for Calgary-Montrose – were there to cheer him on for the innovation side of it.

I think that if we look at the trade mission as a whole, our Premier was able to accomplish a great deal. He had a lineup of people waiting to see him. He met every single one of those. At the reception held by the High Commissioner of Canada in New Delhi, which the Premier attended, there were all kinds of people from the Indian business community, and a number of companies from Alberta who were present at Petrotech were also invited. They showed a huge interest both for the government of Alberta to be in India – very, very appreciative for the Premier to be there – as well as the willingness of the companies in India to come and visit Alberta and do business here.

So, hon. member, I think the visit of the Premier to India was just marvellous. It was very, very successful. Thank you very much for that question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for – I used to call you minister; now I have to check.

Mr. Horner: Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Yeah. Okay. Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Just a quick question to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker. I know he represents an area of our province that has a fairly significant community of Indian-Albertans who have made their home here in Alberta. I wanted to ask him: how important is a trip to that country by our Premier to Albertans of that descent who are here?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, thank you very much. Hon. member, there are over 100,000 people of Indian descent who call Alberta their home, so having the first Premier ever in the history of the province to visit the Golden Temple was huge for the Indo-Canadian community of Alberta. I think there were probably 30 to 40 media outlets which were covering the Premier's visit live while we were at the Golden Temple. Of course, as a proud member of the Indo-Canadian community of Alberta we particularly felt honoured wherever we went in India with the Premier. They were so proud that the Premier was there in New Delhi when we visited Akshardham as well, the first time ever that an Alberta Premier was there. The Premier, of course, visited with us to lay the wreath at the Gandhi memorial as well. So I think, overall, to answer your question, it was a very proud moment for all of the 100,000 Indo-Canadians living right in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I'd like to ask the hon. member if he knows whether or not the invitation to attend as part of the delegation to India was extended to members of the opposition. I know that one member of the opposition is of Indian descent. I know also that in the past when Ralph Klein went to India, an invitation to Raj Pannu, who was our leader at that time, also of Indian descent, was not extended. So I just wondered, because of the comment that was made by me about it being political, whether or not opposition members were invited to participate.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Well, I don't know whether the invitation was extended to the hon. member or not. But to comment on some of the stuff, in fact, the hon. member and myself were together at the Republic Day of India, where he had a lot of positive things to say about the Indo-Canadians of Alberta and the Indian ancestry right here in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Hon. Government House Leader, do you want to speak on the bill?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn debate. There are many other members who wish to speak to this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I had assumed when you were rising that you were going to call it 4:30. I would now ask that the House do call it 4:30 and adjourn till 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:29 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 7, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will proceed now to the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led by Mr. Paul Lorieau, and I would invite all to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a bright, enthusiastic group of 50 grade 6 students from Brander Gardens elementary school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Of the 50 students, 21 are in the French immersion program. Accompanying the students are their exceptional teachers Natalie Gago-Estevés, Matthew Thiessen, M. Luc Drapeau along with student teacher Jacqueline Winters. I'd like to extend a special welcome to M. Drapeau as this is his first visit to the Legislative Assembly. Bienvenue à l'Assemblée législative. When speaking with these students, they raised some very thought-provoking questions. They are among the best students that we've had in this Assembly this season. I would hope that all members of this House would give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing two groups. The first has travelled from Wyoming, including Rosie Berger as Wyoming state Representative; Cheryl Duvauchelle, director of finance and development and director of the annual meeting; and Carrie Hoffman, administrative and logistics associate. These members are representing the Council of State Governments – West officials, representing 13 states. They plan to hold their meeting here in 2012. I would ask if they would please rise with David Kettles, our staff member, and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. Note that they're all three wonderful women.

Mr. Speaker, my other guests are students that I had the privilege of visiting with in their school and engaging in a lot of dialogue about politics and how the Legislature works: 52 students accompanied by Kerri Blush, Chris Sudyk, Val Diakun, Mona Sawatzky, and Larissa Sulyma. The Woodbridge Farms elementary school is a proud group that has much in the way of knowledge but huge questions that I think we all would enjoy if we had the time to spend with them today. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's a real treat for me today to introduce to the Assembly and to you a school from my constituency named Belgravia elementary school. Now, Belgravia has a strong historical linkage to this Assembly. Even though it's a very small school, at least three graduates from Belgravia have served as members of this Assembly, including the former Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, Debby Carlson, the current Member for Edmonton-Centre, and myself.

An Hon. Member: It's a training academy.

Dr. Taft: Yes, it is a training academy for this Assembly. I think it speaks well to the commitment and brightness of the students here.

We have a large group of grades 5 and 6 accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Devine and Miss Gusniowsky, otherwise known as Miss G. They are accompanied by parent helpers Ms Maskell, Ms Cameron, Dr. Wong, Ms Odishaw, and Mrs. Bronson. I will be speaking with them later in the week, but for now I'd ask them all, please, to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you a great Albertan, a dear friend of mine, and a former MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, Mr. Denis Ducharme. It's a great pleasure always to see him here, and I'd like to welcome him to the Legislature. I'd like everyone to give him a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a long-time friend of mine – his name is Blake Robert – who resides in Edmonton-Glenora with his wife, Sara. Blake is a former PC Youth president and someone I've known at least 10 years. He's sitting in the public gallery. I would like to ask him to please rise and have the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my guest from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees Women's Committee. AUPE represents over 76,000 workers, who are an essential part of this economy. Today they are here to express that child care is an essential need for the working families that they represent, that the AUPE Women's Committee is devoted to bringing this concern of their members to the forefront, and to remind this government that all working Albertans and our children deserve this service. I would now like to ask my guests to rise as I call their names: Sandra Azocar, Cara Rotenburger, Ramona Price, Amanda McMurren, Margaret Gregory, Marjorie Christie, Clarke McChesney, Mary Kehoe, and Bren-Lee Thidrickson. I ask that all members of the Assembly join me in providing them with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you some special guests who are sitting in the public gallery this afternoon. Donna Hunter and Marjorie Kirsop were present last week when I asked the minister about secular education in Morinville. They have made the trip here again today and will welcome the opportunity to speak with the minister about their concerns. I'd like to ask my guests to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always an honour to rise and introduce individuals to you and through you to all of the Assembly. I'd ask that Patricia Kobewka rise. She's a new staff member with the Wildrose, and we appreciate her dedication and her excitement that she brings to the office and the work that she does.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Federal Public Building Renovations

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I come from a long line of people who wear blue collars. I am the first member in my family to hold elected office. I take this very seriously, and I take the livelihoods of my constituents seriously. I am a fiscal conservative, but first and foremost I am a tradesman. So when a member in this Assembly waxed poetic about how the citizens of the province would be better off if we stopped work on the federal building project, I have to question the motives of the hon. member. I can only assume the member has no experience with trades or employees.

Construction works like this. In tough times your first priority is to keep your people busy, but I would not expect the hon. member to know this because, to my knowledge, he has never worried about making payroll or sweated about how to keep the crew busy. You don't have to be a very big contractor to have a thousand people – employees, spouses, children, subtrades and their families – depending upon your ability to bid work and secure jobs.

No contractor can afford to lose his best people; margins get cut long before staff. It's how the business operates. We call it working to keep the lights on. For a member to want to stop a job site without the slightest understanding of what such a ridiculous statement means shows ignorance and contempt for those who wear the blue collar. There is as much dignity and honour in turning a drawing into a building as there is in preparing a legal brief.

The blue collar, my collar, work very hard to make this province the best it can be. We are the world experts at winter construction and the most productive in adverse conditions. We do good work and are proud of it. To suggest that people are not working on the federal building is a slap in the face to every man and woman on that job site and every tradesperson in this province. Your ignorance is surpassed only by your arrogance. You could apologize, hon. member, but I frankly doubt if anyone would care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Health Care System

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Ever since the Premier took over leadership of the province back in 2006, public health care has suffered a degree of mismanagement so severe that two-thirds of Albertans even now believe the system is in crisis. Like Alberta Liberals, Albertans recognize that it is indeed Tory mismanagement, not lack of funding, that has brought us to this point.

It all began with the failed experiment of disbanding the health regions, an announcement made suddenly after the 2008 election, a huge fundamental change to health care delivery that should have been raised during the campaign. This government had no mandate to make such massive changes, changes that went over budget by $1.2 billion, money that could have been and should have been used for improvements on the front lines of health care. Instead, it was wasted on an administrative catastrophe completely contrary to the government's goals of improving efficiency.

Since the creation of Alberta Health Services to the end of fiscal 2011-12 $36 billion will have flowed into health care without proper accounting, leaving us with no way to tell how much of the taxpayer money was used wisely and how much was wasted. While the Premier and his ministers continue to promise improvement, senior health officials have said on the record that, for example, emergency wait times cannot be met.

In 2008 concerned physicians revealed over 300 cases of compromised care at Edmonton emergency rooms in just a few weeks, but this government won't offer whistle-blower protection for health care professionals, nor will they launch a truly independent investigation. Even more serious allegations have been raised, allegations that deserve an independent public inquiry so that Albertans can get the facts. Doctors and nurses want to speak out, but they live in fear of their own government. In order for Albertans to have confidence in any inquiry, all witnesses must be protected, with immunity for testimony guaranteed.

This Tory government has proven time and again they cannot manage public health care, Albertans' most important public institution. There is a better way, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Access to Child Care

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize an outstanding achievement. The Ministry of Children and Youth Services established the creating child care choices plan in 2008. This plan was designed to greatly improve parents' access to quality child care in our province. This plan provided communities across Alberta with a wide range of incentives designed to offset the cost of opening new child care spaces, increase the number of qualified child care staff, and ultimately make access to quality child care more affordable for lower income parents.

Our government's goal was to create 14,000 new child care spaces in this province. Recently we surpassed the 18,000 mark. I feel that this is an incredible achievement, Mr. Speaker. Now that the goal has been exceeded, our government's focus will shift to sustaining the more than 90,000 quality child care spaces that exist across the province. We are already under way with this plan. In fact, in my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods I was able to present a cheque for $95,500 on behalf of our government this past November, ensuring the sustainability of current child care spaces as well as helping to create new ones in the community. This funding helped offset the cost of opening 103 new spaces in the community.

I would like to thank again the Minister of Children and Youth Services for establishing and creating the child care choices plan in 2008. I commend this very important program and have seen first-hand the benefits it has produced.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Juvenile Curling Provincial Championships

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge and congratulate all the teams which curled in the Optimist International Alberta juvenile curling provincial championship held at the Granite curling club in Coaldale this past weekend. The six top qualifying Alberta juvenile curling teams in both the men's division and the women's division played off for the opportunity to represent Alberta at the Canadian juvenile championships in Ontario later this month. The teams that participated are from throughout our province, including Grande Prairie, Fort Saskatchewan, Edmonton, Peace River, Calgary, and Airdrie.

The women's winning team was the Rocque team of Fort Saskatchewan. Second place went to the Brown team of Airdrie. The men's winning team was the Vavrek team of Dawson Creek, B.C., and the Harty team, that came in second, came from Nanton.

As all members certainly know, Alberta has been a dominant force in both the Canadian and the world curling scenes for many years now. After watching the games this weekend, our province looks to be well placed to enjoy this dominance for years to come.

In addition to the participants, I would also like to congratulate the Coaldale Granite curling club and all of the volunteers for doing such an excellent job of hosting this event.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Foster Parents

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a very important service in our world. We talk about standing on guard for thee, standing on guard for our country. I would profess that we don't do that quite enough, and I would also profess that I think there are many ways of standing on guard for one's country, many ways that aren't out in the public eye. One of those ways is by being a foster parent. That's where you step up and take responsibility for children in times of absolute crisis.

Mr. Speaker, in 2008 I started a bit of an effort to recruit foster parents from various different ethnic and religious backgrounds so that children in a very difficult situation could be made that much more comfortable going to a foster family that perhaps understands their culture, language, and heritage a little bit better.

I'm incredibly proud today to rise and say that one family that I've been working with has now been foster parents for about six months, and they're incredibly proud of becoming foster parents. Rupinder and Sukhjit Sran are the first foster parents of East Indian heritage in the city of Calgary, and they love it. I've had the opportunity to meet with them on several occasions, and they as parents, as members of the community are more fulfilled now by being foster parents than ever before.

Mr. Speaker, I once again ask people to consider being foster parents, especially those from various different ethnic and religious backgrounds.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

South Health Campus Operational Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The south Calgary health campus is a year away from completion, and Tory mismanagement is again jeopardizing patient care. Last week the minister of health claimed to fully staff new hospitals, but the Alberta Health Services' chairman says that the current five-year funding proposed by the Tory government is not sufficient to cover the costs of operation. To the Premier: are we to believe your minister of health or Alberta Health Services' chairman?

1:50

Mr. Stelmach: My minister of health.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, the now defunct Calgary health region had to threaten to borrow or issue bonds to get the facility built. What other political games will Alberta Health Services have to play to get properly funded for operational budgets as well as building?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll allow the hon. member to clarify what he said, because I'll challenge him on that remark.

Dr. Swann: Well, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier doesn't have much confidence in the Health Services Board chairman.

How can Albertans rely on the Tory government to sufficiently budget operational costs when this Tory negligence tripled the original construction budget to a whopping $1.3 billion?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the budget was not tripled. The budget kept pace with the requests coming from Calgarians in terms of what they wanted to see in the south Calgary health campus. There were more services added, teaching capabilities, to the health campus. Quite frankly, it is one of the largest hospitals being built if not in western Canada, indeed, in all of Canada.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, this government continues to ignore the needs of 2 out of 3 Albertans who believe the health care system is in crisis. Last week the minister of health chose to further erode public confidence in health care by not calling for an independent investigation into compromised care for 322 patients. This government has no credibility in investigating itself, and it's Albertans who are suffering. To the Premier: will the Premier direct the minister to call for an independent investigation of these 322 cases where Albertans received compromised ER care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned last week in this House and then the hon. minister again read out very clearly the policies of Alberta Health Services. If there is any employee of Alberta

Health Services that has any evidence of any compromise of any health services in this province, it is the duty of the employee to make that public.

Dr. Swann: At risk to their future, of course, Mr. Speaker. I have some personal experience with that.

To the Premier again: will the government finally do the right thing and allow the Health Quality Council to launch its own independent investigation free from political interference?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I'm sure that the person who raised those allegations will question the leader today, and I will be able to respond to those so-called allegations that were made publicly, by protection of immunity in this House.

Dr. Swann: Three years of allegations, Mr. Premier, from emergency doctors across the province. Total neglect. How can Albertans trust a government who for over three years ignored these 322 Albertans, all within a few weeks in an Edmonton emergency room, and their care? How can you justify that?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this province has one of the best health systems in Canada. We have invested a lot of money. In fact, this morning I attended the opening of the Villa Caritas, a 42 per cent increase in beds for the mentally ill. If I remember correctly, this opposition opposed the construction of those additional beds for mentally ill seniors in the province.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. [interjections] Okay. I'm quite prepared to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, but if you want me to wait, I'll wait.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

South Health Campus Operational Funding (continued)

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We just heard as an Assembly the Premier essentially throw the chairman of Alberta Health Services under the bus in a dispute or difference with the minister of health. This is on an issue in which the funding of the largest hospital being built, potentially, in Canada is at stake. My question is to the Premier. Given that he does not have confidence in the position of Mr. Hughes in saying that the budget will not cover operating costs of the south Calgary hospital, will he ask Mr. Hughes to resign?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one thing I don't have confidence in is the kind of quotes that they bring to this House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Well, the quotes will be in Hansard for the Premier to review.

My next question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister please explain what the funding plan is for the operation of the south Calgary hospital?

Mr. Zwozdesky: A good question, a rare one but a good one. I want to clarify right now that the chair and I had this discussion, and we're both on the same page in terms of the funding. There's $84 million or thereabouts in the forthcoming budget, which I would encourage this member and others to vote for when the budget comes up for discussion. That will assist in the recruitment and training of the people needed to staff that hospital. There's an enormous amount of new capacity coming on stream, and we will be there to fund it now and in the years to come.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's barely a start on the issue. Eighty-four million dollars is not going to operate the largest hospital in Alberta and western Canada. So tell me, Mr. Minister, what will be the operating budget on an annual basis for the south Calgary hospital?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it'll be ramped up. Perhaps he didn't hear what I said: $84 million in this coming year's budget, which I hope he will vote for, which starts April 1. That will be for the recruitment piece and for the training piece. There's some off-site virtual training that has to occur. Next year when we bring in the budget for that year, you'll see probably $150 million – I'm ballparking it – for the first year as we ramp up 233 beds that will open there, thousands of other staff. I'll get you the exact figure. The important thing, hon. member, is that in the year where those monies for operating are needed, they will be there in that budget, and you'll have a chance to debate it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a Health Quality Council in the province for a reason. Part of its mandate is to assess, inquire into, or study matters respecting patient safety and the quality of patient care that are referred to it at the request of Alberta Health Services. We have 322 documented cases of emergency room delays, with painful and sometimes fatal results, and that's only one emergency room. Given that the Health Quality Council can't investigate until directed to do so, why hasn't the health minister given such orders so that we can get to the bottom of it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't think I quite got exactly what the question was all about – it was all around everywhere – but I'll read it later, hon. member, if you don't mind, and I'll try and respond to it. [interjections] It's just that there were some distractions from the other side, just like there are now.

Mrs. Forsyth: Okay. Mr. Speaker, I'm going to ask this question very slowly. The 322 emergency room delays that caused some very painful hardships for Albertans: will you call the health council and let them investigate so that we can get to the bottom of it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: That's a decent question. Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this issue is relatively old news. It's already been addressed. We have some people who have looked into this, and as a result of that, in fact, I did a press conference today. So we are reducing the wait times for emergency in-patients by as much as 70 per cent in some hospitals in Calgary and in Edmonton by as low as 42 per cent. Improvements have been made to address exactly what the emergency docs asked us to do last October, and the protocols are working.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, those emergency doctors have been asking for two years.

Let me ask you this very simply, Mr. Minister: will you call in the Health Quality Council to investigate the 322 cases that were documented previously?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, should that become necessary, I will take the appropriate steps. At this stage what became necessary was to address the issues that the doctors wanted addressed.

They wanted more beds; we just added 360. They wanted more continuing care spaces; we just added almost 1,300, and we'll be adding another 4,000. They wanted new discharge protocols; we've got that in place. They wanted patient navigators. They wanted other improvements. All of these things taken together with home care and so on are making a huge difference, and people are getting in and out a lot faster than ever before.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

NHL Arena Funding

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's NHL franchises are making millions in profits but asking the public to pay for new arenas. Many successful Canadian arenas have been entirely privately funded. Will the Minister of Infrastructure commit to making sure that not one dime of provincial funds goes towards new arenas for NHL franchises in Alberta?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question. As you are well aware and as the member of the fourth party, I guess it is, knows, there is ongoing discussion between the city of Edmonton and the group that is hoping to have a hockey team in Edmonton. Those discussions are continuing to happen.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister completely dodged the question, I'm going to have to phrase it again. Will he assure the House today that not one dime of provincial government funds goes towards privately owned NHL arenas in this province?

Mr. Danyluk: No.

Mr. Mason: So that's no assurance. So you're saying yes. Okay, Mr. Speaker.

Given that I asked for an assurance that public funds would not go towards NHL arenas and the minister said no, I'm assuming that he said that he's not going to give that assurance. So does he agree that the citizens do not give their hard-earned taxpayer dollars in order to privately fund profitable corporations of whatever kind? Yes or no?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I find it a little bit ironic that I have to interpret the question or at least explain the question that the member of the fourth party is relaying. I want to make this very clear. No, the Alberta government is not going to directly support the arena.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Delays in Medical Care

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness say: show us the proof. Investigations cost money, but this government has received ample evidence over the past four years, which the Clerk will table later on. Today credibility is on the line. In front of the Premier there is proof of his written word and e-mails to his past health ministers with pleas for help from the front lines of health care and hundreds of cases where Albertans have suffered due to delays in care. To the Premier: where is the public investigation into these hundreds of cases and the proof that you took immediate action to address these concerns?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member delivered a letter to the office earlier today and in that letter said: "Would you please stay here for the sixth question? And I'm also with this letter tabling these documents." Well, I just got these documents, and the first letter here is a letter from February 23, '08, to a Dr. Peter Kwan that was issued by me, and that was during the campaign. I have looked through these documents. There's a list of e-mails, quite a number of e-mails.

The Speaker: Okay. That's fine. Thank you. No documents have been tabled in this House yet. Documents may be hand delivered to some member, but the rest of the members have no idea what documents are being referred to. Proceed to your second question.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that proof is the issue of the day, what were you thinking? What were you thinking when you brought in the hon. Member for Calgary-West, who immediately reversed all the previous minister's decisions and implemented the code of conduct to silence front-line staff when, in fact, you already had solid evidence to call for a public investigation? Premier, what were you thinking?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, these allegations have been made in the House under protection, of course, by immunity. None of these allegations were made outside the House. I'm going to ask that hon. member to in particular provide the proof and the supporting documents of the 250 people that died on the wait list for cancer surgery as that's what he said in the House and that Ministers Mar and the hon. Member for Sherwood Park were aware of this along with Dr. Trevor Theman and Sheila Weatherill. "Physicians who raised these issues were either punished or driven out of the province or paid out in millions to buy their silence and the costs buried in the books under the former . . ."

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't realize that I had to answer questions.

To the Premier: the ER doctors are sitting up above and awaiting your answers. Before you leave public office, will you guarantee to them in writing and in legislation that patient confidentiality will be respected, that they will have full protection for the front-line staff so that this Legislature can restore Albertans' confidence by ordering . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that any ER docs here in the audience, if there are, and anybody that's working for Alberta Health Services are fully aware of the policy that Alberta Health Services has. Please, let's not hide behind the fact that: oh, I don't want my name out there. Anybody working for the organization has a duty to report, and that reporting, of course, has the supporting documentation that comes directly to the minister so he can assess all of these allegations that have been made time and time again in the House but never outside this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health Services Financial Reporting

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to spend billions of dollars without adequate financial control. I have sent over in advance all the background information to the minister of health for the questions I would like to ask him now. To the minister of health: are you confident that the amount of $308 million in one-time funding that was granted to Alberta Health Services on page 17 of the 2008-09 annual report is accurate?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I can only assume it's accurate because these numbers are audited by the Auditor General, and before he signs off on them, I think that he does his due diligence. So I'm going to presume on that basis that the Auditor General's audit of those numbers would be accurate.

Mr. MacDonald: The numbers on page 17, Mr. Speaker, in my view, are not audited. However, on page 126 of the same report they are audited, and it lists $377 million in one-time financial assistance to Alberta Health Services while, again, you indicate $308 million in one-time funding. Why is there a difference of $69 million, and where did it go?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's an undertone there that is a bit nasty sounding. He did send me some documents. I'll have a look through them. There are four or five pages here. I didn't have a chance to read them through – I was busy answering other questions – but I'll have a look and see if the hon. member is onto something here or if he's just blowing some wild smoke, and we'll find out.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I can't help it if the minister of health is uncomfortable about his own financial statements.

Again to the same minister: why does the business plan for 2010 list for the year in question one-time operating funding for Alberta Health Services as $297 million? You have one report. You have two sets of numbers. Why, sir? That's not a nasty question.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this member is so completely out of touch here. Do you not understand one-time funding, hon. member? For heaven's sakes, there's a lot of one-time funding. Sometimes it's for recruitments; it's a one-time initiative. Sometimes it's for training; it's a one-time initiative. Sometimes it's for deficit elimination. Sometimes it's just to keep up with the excellent services that we provide. There are a lot reasons why you could have one-time funding of this amount and one-time funding of that amount because there will be different reasons why it's used. That's the whole point: one time.

Speaker's Ruling Questions about Detail

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to repeat this again. Twice last week I indicated one should look at Beauchesne to see the nature of question period and what have you. Some members obviously didn't have time this past weekend, but that last series of questions – no disrespect, hon. member – would probably best be served in Public Accounts Committee, which meets once a week. It's rather specific.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Federal Public Building Renovations

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, $115 million is being invested in this year's budget for projects on the Legislature Grounds, the redevelopment of the federal building, the Centennial Plaza, and the parkade. My questions are for the Minister of Infrastructure. Are you considering stopping or delaying any of these particular projects?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, no. There are no plans to abandon the project. The project is well under way, and the plans are to finish it in 2012. We started this project in different economic times, but continuing the project, I think, is very prudent. The construction costs are lower now than first estimated. At first it was for $356 million, and now the project costs $275 million.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: what would be the impact of abandoning any of these particular projects midstream as some have suggested?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you want to talk about employees, there are 550 employees that are moving from three other buildings, two major upgrades and one leased, staff from Finance and Enterprise and the Treasury Board and Legislative Assembly staff and, yes, some MLAs. It's the right thing to do. It's the right location, it's the best use of an existing building, and it is the right time to build.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question for the same minister: given that there's still misunderstanding about the federal building, can the minister explain why the offices and the office space are needed in the federal building?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I mean, the offices are very important. As mentioned before, we need them for the staff that we do have. The importance of the building, of course, is in having the space for those individuals.

Mr. Speaker, going back, I just want to say that it is definitely the wrong message to give to industry in the province of Alberta when we talk about needing confidence and stability in the workplace.

Secular Public Education in Greater St. Albert

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, parents in Morinville have no choice but to send their children to schools permeated by religious theology. That's because in Morinville the Catholic board is a public school board. When I asked the Minister of Education if this situation is acceptable, he simply replied: no. To the Minister of Education: how can the minister acknowledge that the situation in Morinville is unacceptable, then choose to do nothing about it?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I didn't say that I was going to do nothing about it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why don't we follow up on that? What are you going to do about it, then, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to ask the school board in question to do its job, and I'm going to meet with them to encourage them to do their job.

Mr. Hehr: So by that answer will the Morinville people have a public school to send their children to very shortly?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Greater St. Albert Catholic school board is a public board. It has an obligation to provide public education to the students that are entrusted to its jurisdiction, and it is incumbent upon that board to meet with the parents to determine what the appropriate way to provide that type of education to those children is. If I perceive that there's a difficulty with them doing that, I will be meeting with the board to encourage them in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

South Health Campus

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The south health campus in Calgary-Hays is quickly becoming a considerable landmark on the south side of Calgary. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell us what impact the opening will have in creating what we need most in our health system, improved access?

Mr. Zwodsky: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary south health campus is the single largest project on the capital plan books right now. The short answer is that there will be a tremendous increase in capacity. In short, there will be room for 40,000 more patients to come through the emergency department alone. There will be capacity for over 200,000 visits for outpatients. There will be approximately 2,600 staff.

While I'm up, I'll just clarify. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview asked how much the funding would be. I said approximately $150 million. In fact, it's incremental funding of about $143 million next year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second and third questions are for the Minister of Infrastructure. Can the minister assure my constituents that this project is going ahead on schedule?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, yes, we are going ahead on schedule. It is in our budget, and it's the top priority, and it's on track to be phased open, if I can say, in 2012. Presently on that site we have 1,500 tradespeople working: 500 mechanical tradespeople, 500 electrical tradespeople, carpenters, painters, landscapers. This project is important for the people of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, please.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question for the same minister: can you explain how this hospital will benefit my constituents in the city of Calgary?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, it is going to reduce the times for south Calgary residents to travel. This hospital is also built for the future for thousands of people who live and move into the south-east Calgary neighbourhoods. It's also for nearby residents of Okotoks, Langdon, and High River. But, most importantly, the hospital will be a shining example of the Premier's vision for the most advanced infrastructure in North America.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Public-private Partnerships

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government clings to the short-sighted P3 infrastructure model, off-loading future funding obligations to the next generation. Last week the Minister of Transportation was bragging about the cost savings of the P3 contract model; however, he didn't have any idea of the amount saved. To the Minister of Transportation: how can this minister know that there are any cost savings without actually knowing the cost?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, needless to say, this hon. member has never ever listened to what the P3 model is all about. When we go out and do a P3 model, we have to do a public market comparator, and we do that market comparator on what it would be like to deliver the project conventionally. We put that market comparator into an envelope, it gets sent to the Justice minister, and it gets opened at the same time that the other bids are opened, to make sure that the public-private partnership is a cost savings . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Give me the envelope, please, so we know the savings.

To the minister again: how can there be any accountability in this year's infrastructure when you are off-loading the costs to future generations? How can there be any accountability there?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the P3 model that we are doing in southeast Calgary right now showed a billion dollar savings from conventional delivery in that market comparator, and that's public knowledge. He could have gone and looked at all of the contracts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, will you make the contents of that envelope public after the fact? Make them public.

To the minister again: given that the P3s have a decades-long maintenance commitment, what happens if a company with P3 obligations goes bankrupt?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, there's a bonding company in place.

But I want to let this hon. member know, Mr. Speaker, that we do make the market comparator public. We've done it on all of the other ones.

An Hon. Member: It's like Ray's secret list. The P3 tunnel.

Mr. Ouellette: Everybody is talking about tunnels and everything else now, Mr. Speaker. It's hard to keep on track with this hon. member because he bounces around.

The Speaker: Well, hon. minister, what you do is look at me and speak to me, and I'll listen.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Abandoned Wells

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issues surrounding an abandoned well in the town of Calmar have highlighted a need for changes to regulations to ensure that development accommodates abandoned wells. My questions are for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister outline what steps his department is taking to ensure that a similar situation does not arise elsewhere?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta takes this matter extremely seriously, and Municipal Affairs is working with the ERCB to address the Calmar situation, the broader issue of abandoned wells and the development around abandoned wells. In my department we're proposing to amend the subdivision and development regulations to ensure that developers and municipalities identify and accommodate abandoned wells during their development.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you give this Assembly a time frame in which the amendment will be enacted? Who have you consulted with, and in particular have you consulted with the residents of Calmar?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a need to ensure that the location of abandoned wells is identified at the time of development. It's equally important that setbacks from wells are maintained, and we are using what happened in Calmar to look at that. We want to make sure that should it be necessary to do additional work on wells, the proper setbacks are there. We are going through the government process to enact those proposed changes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A final question to the same minister: what else is your department doing to address the Calmar situation, in particular for the homeowners affected in this subdivision?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I understand that Imperial Oil plans to remove five of the homes in this particular summer coming up, in 2011. The company has presently purchased four of those five homes. Municipal Affairs will continue to and has been providing assistance to mediate negotiations between Imperial Oil and the homeowners to allow the purchase of their properties. Hopefully, the parties involved will have an agreement in place in the not-too-distant future to purchase that remaining home.

Electricity Transmission Lines

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Energy surprised many when he said he was aware of only one planned natural gas power plant, referring to TransAlta's Sundance project in central Alberta. This statement was bizarre coming from the Energy minister because there are, in fact, two additional natural gas power plants being built right now in and near Calgary that will bring almost 1,100 megawatts of new clean energy online to meet Calgary's needs. To the minister: how did he not know about these projects, when they are so relevant to the debate surrounding the need for billions of new transmission lines between central Alberta and Calgary? How did you miss that?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I assume that what the member is referring to is the Shepard plant, that is being proposed by Enmax, and the Bonnybrook plant, that is also being proposed by Enmax. What I said was that I was only aware of one that was actually ready for construction.

Mr. Anderson: There are two that are ahead of Sundance in order. Anyway, he can look that up later.

Given that 560 megawatts of power has been permanently shut down at TransAlta's central Alberta Sundance facility, yet the lights remain on in Calgary, and given that almost 1,000 megawatts of new power is being built in Calgary to help meet the city's 1,600 megawatts of peak demand, will this minister agree that the AESO assessment for billions of new transmission between central Alberta and Calgary is outdated and that the need for it should be objectively reviewed by the AUC instead of rubber-stamped with Bill 50 and divvied out to PC friends without competitive bidding?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, let's just be clear. What happened with both the Bonnybrook and the Shepard plants was that there was the necessary review, that was undertaken by an independent assessment, to make sure that because it's a Crown corporation, there were no special advantages to Enmax. That work has been done. I have signed off on the document that says they are able to build. There is nothing in the ground, so for this member to say that the lights are still on in Calgary today: well, duh, they are. We're talking about 30 years down the road.

Mr. Anderson: It's frightful the amount of ignorance on that front bench on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, with billions of dollars in new transmission lines that look more and more unnecessary with each passing day and with those billions in building contracts being handed out to friends of the PC Party without a competitive bidding process, does this minister not understand why so many Albertans, who have to pay for this on their power bills, are furious with this boondoggle and view it as Alberta's version of the federal sponsorship scandal? Have you figured out how awful this looks, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think that, as I've said several times in this House, there is an entity called the Alberta Electric System Operator, which is an independent group of professionals that looks at the long-term needs of the province. The long-term needs are that the current transmission system in this province is inadequate to move power from where it's produced to where it's required. That's exactly the essence behind Bill 50.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Logging in the Castle Special Management Area

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After listening to the minister's responses to Wednesday's Castle concerns, Albertans would be justified in thinking that the S of SRD stood for snake oil. The minister suggested that it was sustainable to cumulatively level one-third of the Castle as long as only 1 per cent per year is clear-cut and that there wouldn't be any perceptible long-term damage with two trees replanted for every one ripped out. I'll try the Minister of Environment. How long does it take for a lodgepole pine to reach maturity, and what are you advising locally affected landowners, businesses, and recreational enthusiasts to do while they wait?

The Speaker: If that's government policy, proceed.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Environment I'm acting on behalf of the Minister of SRD today, and in that capacity I'm prepared to certainly take that question on advisement. I don't have the technical background to answer that kind of a question. If the member would like to ask questions with respect to what I have some background in, I'd answer those. Otherwise, I'll have to defer to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Hopefully, somebody has the answer, Mr. Speaker. Crossministerial initiatives would link Environment and SRD. Unfortunately, that doesn't happen in this province.

What are the survival rates of the two-for-one monoculture reforested pine tree beetle fodder, particularly on slopes where the ground cover has been so ripped up by heavy machinery as to be unable to retain either water or soil nutrients? That's an environmental question.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that is an operational question that has to do with forestry, for which I am not responsible. But I can only assume, in answer to the member's question, that the reason it's a two for one is because the survival rate is about 50 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Does the Environment minister maintain that clear-cutting is an environmentally sustainable practice compared to the preferred processes of selective logging and controlled burns practised by his federal and European counterparts, which are more in line with natural environmental processes?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that clear-cutting does not take place in Alberta any longer. We're talking about limits on the size of areas that can be harvested at any one particular time. We're talking about a 100-year rotation. So for this member to suggest that we have massive, you know, denuding of forests in Alberta is absolutely wrong. We've had forestry going on in this province for a hundred years, and there are a lot of Albertans that are very proud of the job that we do to protect our forests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

School Board Funding

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Through the School Act the government of Alberta delegates much of its authority for the governance of education to locally elected school boards. Schools boards rely on funding from the government of Alberta to operate. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Can your ministry provide adequate, sustainable, and predictable long-term educational funding in order for the school boards to properly plan years ahead?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, this government does. We went to three-year business plans a long time ago. The reason for three-year business plans is to provide for the voted sums in the first year and for predictability and ability to plan for the out-years.

Mr. Benito: To the same minister: if a school board were to consider borrowing money to achieve its goal, would the ministry support this?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of different aspects to that question. Obviously, it's not appropriate to borrow money to pay operating costs. This government doesn't do that, and no public body should do it. We should be able to pay our operating costs: today's groceries with today's dollars.

With respect to borrowing for buildings, school boards can borrow for buildings, with approval, if they're nonschool buildings. They can borrow for buildings, with approval, if they can show that the energy savings will pay for the cost of borrowing. At this point they cannot borrow for buildings unless there's a long-term way to show that that borrowing could be paid for.

Mr. Benito: My second supplemental is to the same minister. Would some change in taxation levels be an acceptable way to achieve this long-term school board funding?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, currently we do fund school boards in an equitable fashion across the province. It was quite a number of years ago that we went to a common provincial levy for educational property tax to ensure that it didn't depend on who had the largest industry where the dollars for education went but, rather, that every student across the province had equitable access to an educational program. That funding model is working and is working well.

Municipalities have on an ongoing, constant basis told us that they do not want us raising the educational property tax or putting school boards back into the property tax business. But we do have to look at other ways to help fund over the long term.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Environment Department Budget

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Environment minister protested last week that I was being unfair when I questioned his ministry's budget priorities. But since 2007, when this administration took over, the Environment budget has plummeted 30 per cent while the communications portion of the Environment budget is up 60 per cent. Now, that sure looks to me like propaganda is more important than action in this ministry. To the minister: if it's not about propaganda, then why has the action part of the budget dropped and the communications part increased over the last four years?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm looking forward to three hours of intense debate on my budget in this very Chamber on, I think, the 22nd of March. These kinds of in-depth questions I think are much more appropriately dealt with at that time. [interjection]

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Question period is no time to ask something of the minister.

Well, let me try again. Here's another example. The industry monitoring system RAMP is discredited in study after scientific study, and this ministry only put $17 million into its monitoring system, so why does the government continue to pour money into communications rather than actually getting the work done, specifically providing the monitoring that both industry and the public require to know that all is well?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, this member knows the answer to that question because she asked the same question during estimates last year, at which time I explained to her that the reason for the change in the communications budget is because we amalgamated the ministerial correspondence unit with the communications unit. There was no increase in overall spending. I told her last year in estimates, and I'll tell her again today.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister. Given that this government has relied on federal dollars to justify not taking action itself on climate change, how will this ministry make up for an estimated 95 per cent decrease in climate change funding over the next two years?

Mr. Renner: One of the things I think is interesting to note that often gets overlooked is that we are the first jurisdiction in all of Canada that has brought in legislation that has a requirement that large industrial emitters contribute to a technology fund. Mr. Speaker, that fund thus far has allocated about a hundred million dollars. No other province has done that. Oh, and by the way, the chairman of that fund, Mr. Eric Newell, in making the announcement last week, pointed out that there's a multiplier effect on that fund, and that $100 million has resulted in direct investment of in excess of $450 million in this province. It's not in my budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Apprenticeship Supervision Ratio

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recently the journeyperson to apprentice supervision ratio for 37 of 50 designated trades in Alberta was doubled from 1 to 1 to 1 to 2. Having worked in the trades and taught trades for a number of years, while that may seem like a relatively small change, when you double the number of people that can be supervised, some concerns may arise. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What was the motive for changing this very important ratio, Mr. Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important proactive change that the government of Alberta has made to ensure that we will be ready for the future. We're being told that there will be a shortage of tradesmen in the province of Alberta. To understand it, training of a tradesperson, an apprentice, requires three things. It requires an employer, it requires a journeyman that can help provide on-the-job training, and it requires Advanced Education and Technology to provide the classroom experience. This will allow both the journeymen and the companies to provide those opportunities for our students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Next question to the same minister: are you concerned that safety will be compromised as a result of this change?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. None of the rules around safety have changed in this province. It is incumbent upon a business and a journeyman to ensure that every workplace is safe, that every apprentice is only working on the kinds of things they've been trained to do, that they're properly supervised. This will continue to happen, and I don't believe there's any concern for safety.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much. My final question to the same minister: why were the ratios in the remaining 13 trades untouched, and is there is a list somewhere where the employers can look it up?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. To the final question 37 of our trades out of 50 were increased from 1 to 1 to 1 to 2; however, the balance of those trades, the other 13, already had ratios in excess of 1 to 1 and met the needs of those industries.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Municipal Sustainability

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Cold Lake is a classic example of an Alberta municipality that, despite being surrounded by robust oil and gas activity, is struggling to provide basic services to its citizens. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: is he prepared to develop a strategy to assist these municipalities that are experiencing real challenges to their viability? There are so many.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Cold Lake continues to express concerns regarding its long-term sustainability, especially in light of the mounting infrastructure challenges that that particular city has. We've done a lot of work with the city of Cold Lake, and we're going to keep on working with them to make sure that they reach a sustainable level.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that from the minister. One of the things that I would be upset to see is that these small municipalities are dissolving themselves. How is this helping competitiveness to maintain our rural roots, and are you working with other municipalities?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the ministry is certainly working with all municipalities across the province of Alberta as part of the municipal sustainability strategy. We are working with our small municipalities. We are providing financial assistance, but furthermore we are providing additional training. There is a tool kit that was developed for municipalities that is available to them to use if they are experiencing some challenges.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I wonder if the minister could give us an update on the success of how this is moving forward for Cold Lake, using that as an example for other municipalities. Is what you're doing really working?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we found out that the city of Cold Lake does have particular challenges but not much different from a lot of other cities the size of the city of Cold Lake. There is ongoing work that we are doing with the base and the city to ensure that the city is sustainable. We are looking at alternatives, and we are maintaining our communications and discussions with the city of Cold Lake and the surrounding municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Legal Aid

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard a lot about funding for legal aid, and while it's a very important service, I'm also aware that the funding provided is essentially just being used to pay for legal services. To the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: what are you doing to ensure that the legal community is contributing their share to fund legal aid in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to acknowledge, of course, that the legal community plays a huge role in the provision of legal aid services, and I want to acknowledge the work of Legal Aid Alberta, which is a separate entity from government, the role that they play in providing these services as well. There are three sources of funding for legal aid. The primary source of funding comes from our government. Also, the federal government provides funding. As well, money comes from lawyers' trust accounts through the Alberta Law Foundation to support legal aid.

Mr. Allred: Again to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: given that the funding from the legal community has been cut back considerably in the last two years – and I recognize that is a result of the interest rates being low for the trust funds – what are you doing to increase the nongovernmental sources of funding for this important program?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we're looking at all sources of funding to see what we can do. As the hon. member no doubt noticed, in the current budget we propose an increase of some 10 per cent in funding by our government. The funding from the federal government has been pretty much static for about the last 10 years. The drop has come from the Alberta Law Foundation. I haven't had a chance to talk to them yet, but I'm very interested in sitting down with them and the Law Society to see what some options might be there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess that's some of my concern. The provincial funding goes up 10 per cent every year, but the funding from the other agencies is flat.

I guess my question is basically: other than full service from a lawyer, how is legal aid serving Albertans vis-à-vis the legal community?

Mr. Olson: Well, particularly in the last year there have been a number of initiatives taken to see how we might adopt a more targeted approach to providing services that will actually do people the good that they need. So rather than a cookie-cutter approach we will provide services to people that are specific to their needs. Things like legal service centres, enhanced criminal and civil duty counsel, family mediation services, and so on are all things that we're doing to address that need.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes Oral Question Period. There were 19 members recognized, 114 questions.

In 15 seconds from now we are going to continue with the Routine and Members' Statements.

2:40

Members' Statements

Snow Conditions in Southern Alberta

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans are saying: "Global warming. What global warming?" There are two generations, albeit one young, in southeast Alberta who have not experienced a winter such as this one. In fact, the circumstances that contributed to the flood in June of last year and now the weather conditions this winter are having residents of southeast Alberta concerned.

Over the last year we experienced record and near-record snowfalls. Many in this Assembly will remember the serious floods caused by the spring snowfalls and huge rainfalls in our area last year. I'm sure that image of the Trans-Canada highway washing away is fresh in the minds of many members. I was pleased that the government acted to reduce the damage caused by this disaster, and I would hope that this support would never be needed again.

Back to the generation point, Mr. Speaker. I remember winters when the roads were plugged for weeks and the drifts were over the caragana hedges. In fact, my family had canned milk for my baby sister flown in to our farm by a local pilot with a small plane on skis, and our farm was only 18 miles from town.

Most of us have not seen snow like this for a long time: the huge drifts along highway 41, especially south of the Trans-Canada highway to the Cypress Hills, as well as the drifts in our yards. There has been no real chinook since the snow started falling last November. Remember that this is southern Alberta, folks, not northern Alberta, where people are perhaps more used to this. This is the prairies, folks.

For many who have snow machines, not only is the gas stale in them, but they won't start. Most don't run anymore and are so old you can no longer get parts for them. The people who have new machines and usually take winter holidays to the mountains to use them now are using them right at home for both pleasure and business.

After last year's large crops of hay many ranchers felt they had perhaps enough feed to last three years. It's not so now as many ranchers have used nearly two years of normal feed. No one is complaining badly yet, but all are very tired of the snow and worried about the spring. It's all about to melt and needs somewhere to go.

National Social Work Month

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak on National Social Work Month. Social work began in the mid-19th century by charity workers. Social casework emerged as a new way of understanding and assisting vulnerable populations at the turn of the century with the advance of social sciences. The widespread poverty experienced during the Great Depression helped governments recognize that poverty was not only an individual's private trouble but, rather, a public issue. Since that time the social work profession has expanded its scope of practice to meet the needs of a rapidly changing society.

Today professional social work practice ranges from enhancing problem solving and coping capacities of people and systems to contributing to the development and improvement of social policy. Core values and principles of the social work profession respect the unique worth and inherent dignity of all people and the upholding of human rights. For this reason the Canadian Association of Social Workers and the Canadian Association for Social Work Education proclaimed National Social Work Month with the theme Social Workers for Dignity and Inclusion: Upholding Human Rights.

In the words of CASW President Darlene MacDonald, "The social work profession is dedicated to protecting and defending the rights of the most vulnerable in our society," and she's inviting people everywhere to celebrate the social work profession and its dedication to bringing about inclusion and dignity for all. Accordingly, during National Social Work Month CASW and CASWE call upon all levels of government to address human rights in Canada through an integrated national plan that will reduce poverty and dedicate sufficient federal investments in social security for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta College of Social Workers is dedicating March 13 to 19 as Social Work Week in Alberta. I would like to invite my colleagues from the Alberta Assembly to recognize the role and contributions made by social workers in Alberta and Canada during this month.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Bill 11 Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 11, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011, for first reading.

Currently legislative responsibility for the regulation of farm cervids is shared by Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development, ARD, and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development, SRD. This change would see the transfer of legislative responsibility for farm cervids as identified in the Wildlife Act and wildlife regulation to the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011. Once the transfer is complete, ARD will have full administrative authority to administer and enforce all programs related to farm cervids.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 11 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Bill 12 Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce Bill 12, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011.

The Alberta Investment Management Corporation, or AIMCo, is responsible for managing nearly $70 billion in investments for the government of Alberta, including the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and public-sector pension funds. This bill will clarify the government's ownership structure of the corporation to remove any ambiguity. Language around directors' conflicts of interest will also be updated to match industry standards. We're also adding an amendment to make it clear that AIMCo must act in the best interests of its clients when delivering their investment management services. The changes within Bill 12 will allow AIMCo to continue to operate effectively while managing the province's substantial assets on behalf of all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 12 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you. I'm pleased to rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of the Alberta's Promise 2010 annual report. It highlights some of the success stories from the more than 1,200 partnerships Alberta's Promise has helped to develop. Since 2003 Alberta's Promise partners have made investments worth more than $325 million to help create a brighter future for all children and youth in Alberta. For that, I would like to say thank you. To let you know, Mr. Speaker, the annual report is also available online at www.albertaspromise.org.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In support of and in anticipation of the discussion on Motion 502 this afternoon I am tabling an item bearing warning labels. They read as follows:

GOVERNMENT WARNING: (1) According to the Surgeon General, women should not drink alcoholic beverages during pregnancy because of the risk of birth defects. (2) Consumption of alcoholic beverages impairs your ability to drive a car or operate machinery, and may cause health problems.

I would also like to thank my colleague the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs for his assistance in providing this empty bottle bearing this label.

The Speaker: No. Take it home.

Mr. Amery: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling e-mails from the following individuals, who are concerned that the Castle will be turned into the clear-cut of Cataract Creek. They come from Dan Fredrick, Jamieson Lamb, Christina Kozak, David J. Brown, Barry Geates, Taku Hokoyama, Rob Befus, Patricia Jacobson, Carolyn Waddle, Wendy Ryan, Ken Johnson, Scott Stanway, Eric Stutzman, Penny Coates, Oliver Kent, Colin Ferguson, Jill Bhar, Dale Kirschenman, Rosemary Partridge, Irwin Barrett, Harriet Allen, Susan Como, Marie-Josée Yelle, M. Tincherr, and Mike Buxton.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first is an e-mail from my constituent Paul Shamchuk, who is a teacher and is quite concerned about what he is hearing about the negotiations between the government, the ATA, and the ASBA concerning things around wage freeze limits on instructional time, the description of duties of teachers, the roles of principals and superintendents and is quite concerned that he can't seem to get clear answers.

My second tabling is from Benjamin Pond, who I believe is also a constituent and is concerned about the cancellation of the avion-ics engineering technology program at NAIT. He was hoping to be able to complete his studies and move overseas to work with an organization doing medical relief work, but since the program is somewhat uncertain, he's very concerned about that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition to my other tablings today, I would like to table this very personal and tragic story posted on my website blog. It's about a good Albertan who unnecessarily suffered and prematurely died of lung cancer in 2005 during the period questioned. It's from his wife.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of postcards signed by 560 Albertans calling for greater public funding for child care. In particular, these postcards focus on the need to dedicate funding to high-quality and affordable child care, something which is sorely missing in this province. These postcards were collected as part of a campaign by the Alberta union of public employees.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of Dr. Sherman, hon. ### Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 202

Legislative Assembly (Transition Allowance) Amendment Act, 2011

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, it's 10 minutes speaking time. There is no Standing Order 29(2)(a). The first three speakers recognized will be the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, then the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. To this point in time I have 14 members who have indicated their interest.

Proceed, please.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand in this Assembly and move second reading of Bill 202, the Legislative Assembly (Transition Allowance) Amendment Act, 2011.

Mr. Speaker, before speaking to what this bill is about, I'd like to first speak to what it is not about. This bill is not meant to be any kind of attack on the integrity or worth of members in this House. Despite my often serious disagreements over policy issues with different members of this Legislature, especially those across the way, I have the highest respect for anyone who is willing to sacrifice years of their life to serve the public. I know how hard everyone in this House works. I know the financial sacrifices many of us have made to do this work. I know that it's often a thankless job. I know that we are often unjustly accused and that expectations on our time are often impossible to fulfill, and then the time that we do commit is generally unrecognized or grossly understated. I know that the time away from loved ones is an ongoing painful sacrifice and a constant balancing act.

My purpose in this bill is not to criticize or undervalue the members of this House, their service, or their worth to this province. My purpose is to do the opposite. The purpose of this bill, in part, is to help restore the reputation of this House and its members, which has, whether we care to admit it or not, been tarnished by the perception, and much of it is justified, that provincial politicians are filling their pockets with cash while our province is mired in the worst string of deficits in recent history.

A 34 per cent increase to cabinet salaries behind closed doors only worsened what was already a disdain for politicians setting their own generous salaries and benefits. This is seen after every election cycle as retiring MLAs walk away with severance packages that look more like a winning lottery ticket than severance packages to the average Albertan. And every time it happens, Albertans shake their heads in collective disgust and disappointment. Talk to anyone outside the walls of this Legislature about these salary hikes and severances, and they will roll their eyes and they'll sigh loudly and they'll have a look of unsurprised but still very serious disappointment.

My fellow members, we need to do better than this. We need to set an example of integrity and frugality and fairness. When Albertans look at us, they need to have confidence stemming from our actions and not just our rhetoric that we perceive ourselves as the servants of the people of this province rather than politicians who feel that the people of Alberta are there to financially serve us. Albertans are craving this kind of leadership. They want to believe the best about the intentions, the integrity, and desires of those serving in this House, their leaders, but we need to give them a reason for feeling thus.

Bill 202 is by no means a silver bullet in strengthening public confidence in this Legislature or in its members, but it is a start, and it's a large one at that. Bill 202 is simple and straightforward. It would lower the formula for MLA transition allowances by two-thirds on a go-forward basis. This means that on the day this bill is passed, if passed, MLAs will earn one month of salary for every one year served up to a maximum of 12 months' salary for 12 years of service. All severance earned by MLAs under the current formula of three months for every year served will be respected and paid out upon the retirement of a currently serving member of this Legislature, but the new, more modest formula would apply for any time served by an MLA after the passage of this bill until the time they retire or are replaced by voters.

The amount of one month for every year served to a maximum of 12 months is much more in line with private sector severance packages as seen in case law. It is still on the generous side, in my opinion, but it is within reason. It is within the ballpark, as they say. It will give a departing MLA some funds to live on while they transition to a new job, if they so choose. This is what transition and severance packages are for. They are meant to help newly out-of-work former employees pay the bills while they find another job or secure another source of income. They are not meant, nor should they be, to act as a generous pension fund or, even worse, a winning lottery ticket.

I will not recite the large amounts of severance due to members of this House upon their retirement nor the circumstances surrounding the passing of the current severance formula. This would be counterproductive at this point. I'm here to look forward to the future. 2011 is not 2001. We live in a different time with much different challenges. The world's economic future and, most unsettling, the economic future of our greatest economic ally, the United States, is entirely unsure. Although our provincial and national economies have been sheltered from the worst of the world economic downturn due to our vast natural resources, we have not been entirely immune, obviously. The days of $7 billion surpluses have been replaced with $7 billion cash shortfalls due to exasperating overspending and a slowdown in provincial revenue growth.

The two most recent record deficits of Budget 2010 and, as announced last week, Budget 2011 will result in almost the entire depletion of our province's savings fund. We must correct our financial course, and we must do so soon, or we shall risk a return to annual debt financing, tax increases, or steep cuts to core social programs. We run the risk of squandering our province's highest income-earning years because we were unable to restrain ourselves from overgoring on all-you-can-eat spending buffets rather than prudently planning and saving for our and our children's uncertain economic futures.

Will Bill 202 balance the budget? No, it won't, not by a long shot by any means. But it will change the tone. It will show leadership. It will show a willingness by the leadership of this province to cut back on that which is unnecessarily generous. It is an opportunity to lead by example.

How can we expect our hard-working public servants in Health, Education, as well as others to agree to have their salaries indexed to the cost of living, for example, or roughly 2 to 3 per cent per year, when MLAs have their salaries indexed to the average weekly wage index, which is constantly more generous and, even worse, raise their salaries 34 per cent behind closed doors? It's not fair to ask anybody to cut back in the public service if we're unwilling to show an example ourselves.

So it is with all benefits. Why should the public service lower their hopes for more lucrative and expensive benefits packages when MLAs are walking away with severance packages in the high six or even seven figures? The answer is that we as a government and as a House have no right to ask them to moderate their expectations until we have shown by our actions that we are willing to moderate our own. Perhaps the abhorrent severance packages paid out by this government to individuals such as Dr. Duckett and Jack Davis or Paddy Meade and many others are products of the poor example that we have set.

My fellow members, we are the elected representatives of the people of our great and unique communities, the face of our great province. We must act like it. We must act above all reproach.

When I was first elected, one of my favourite MLAs, one of the greatest gentlemen and statesmen of this Assembly, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, gave me this short poem, which I would like to share. The author was a man named Andrew Oliver, who lived from 1706 to 1774 and was a British Loyalist in America during the lead-up to the American Revolution. His poem was entitled Politics. It reads thus:

Politics is the most hazardous of all professions. There is not another in which a man can hope to do so much good to his fellow creatures, neither is there any in which by a mere loss of nerve he may do such widespread harm; nor is there another in which he may so easily lose his . . . soul, nor is there another in which a positive and strict veracity is so difficult. But danger is the inseparable companion of honour. With all the temptations and degradations that beset it, politics is still the noblest career any man [or woman] can choose.

May we in this House live up to this idealism. May we help restore the nobility of our profession in the eyes of Albertans. Passing Bill 202 will work slowly towards this goal, and I ask every member of this House to support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, then Calgary-Buffalo, then the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, then Calgary-Fish Creek.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the things I always enjoy about debating private members' bills is that in the Official Opposition caucus these are free votes, so I'm looking forward to hearing my colleagues' points of view on this because I know that in at least one case they don't agree with me. But here we go.

In reacting to the ideas that are put forward in Bill 202, sponsored by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, he's right. We are dealing with public perception of what we do. He's also right in that the source of our biggest public perception problems these days is us, when we stand up in this House or in debate and we talk about how others are challenged with veracity and are lying low and are snake oil salesmen and all of the other trivialization that happens when we speak one to each other in this House. When I ask a question, I'm regularly greeted by the front bench members standing up, and first they demean me, and then they trivialize the subject that I've raised. It's pretty common stuff. The biggest creators of this problem is ourselves.

As well, hon. member, this is an easy target. It's a popular one with the public, who don't really understand what we do, and it's very easy to find anyone who thinks that a politician is overpaid.

One of the things that isn't well known is that after 40 years of one-political-party rule in Alberta there isn't a lot of experience in what happens to people that serve in the opposition benches, and I'm going to spend my time talking about that. Indeed, the hon. member and his party has had some small experience in things like trying to get funding for your caucus, and that's more complicated than you anticipated, no doubt. In fact, I bet you were a little surprised to find out you were going to have to fight for funding for your caucus just so you could go to work every day and have enough staff to type up a letter or help you write a question. But that is what happens in this province, so we have to deal with it.

I will tell you that the issue of resettlement allowances, or transition allowances, for MLAs in opposition who lose their seat, resign, or die in public office is a very different experience than, I'm sure, what happens on the government side. For starters, in my experience – and I'll be specific to what I'm aware of – there's no soft landing for someone in the Official Opposition. I cannot see government ever appointing this gal to an agency, board, or commission that carries a salary with it. I just don't think that's going to happen. I don't think you're going to see me as head of the northern Alberta development committee or any of those kinds of things. That just doesn't happen to members of the opposition, but there are lots of examples you can find where previous members on the government side, indeed, were placed in those positions. I can't see a lobbying firm that's going to be seeking me out to work for them because of the instant access that I have to my former colleagues and buddies in the government cabinet. That's not going to happen for a member of the opposition either.

I can tell you that with three exceptions all of my colleagues that I have worked with and who are no longer in the opposition benches for one reason or another took at least two years to find a replacement job that paid a reasonable salary. At least two years to find another job with a reasonable salary. Not a big salary, not a wonderful job; just a replacement for what they were earning as an opposition bench MLA. The three exceptions were members I've served with who were teachers, who, in fact, had their full teacher's pension; the small business owners and entrepreneurs, who had an entrepreneurial position they could move back into like real estate; and three of my colleagues who went into municipal politics. Two years to find another reasonable-paying job. So the idea that you're going to get one year of a transition allowance: not sure what you're supposed to do for the second year.

The last opposition member on this side who qualified for the pension that the previous Premier stopped in 1993 was Grant Mitchell, now Senator Mitchell, who was elected in 1986 and retired in '98. He had to totally retrain. He took his settlement allowance and totally retrained into a different career in order to have a job to continue on with because he was in his mid-50s when he left the Legislature.

I believe strongly that the Legislature should be a mirror of the public. It should be a mirror of the people that we represent. So I am delighted when I can look around and I can see police officers and people who were nurses or long-term care geriatric staff, who were farmers and real estate agents and pharmacists and lawyers. A wide, wide range of the public. I'll tell you, I come from the not-for-profit sector. Not that common coming into politics, I'll give you, but it's very unlikely that when I leave politics or I'm not re-elected, I'm going to find another job in the sector that I came from. Probably the fault of the not-for-profit sector, who will self-censor and go: we can't possibly hire her because it would jeopardize any grant or contract that we might be getting from the government if we've got her on our payroll. And that may not be true, but they will believe that it will be true. It may well be true. I don't know.

As I said, I'm not going to get hired by a lobbyist. I'm not going to be appointed to a job with a salary that's a government appointment. So I'm going to have to go back to school because the degree that I had is not going to get me another job, and neither will I be able to move into a master's program with any kind of ease. I've already talked to people along the way, and it's been made pretty clear that I'm going to have to do at least a year's qualifying before I can get into a master's program. So I'm looking at three years of university, not earning any money but certainly spending it for tuition and for living, in order to be at a point where I as a member of the Official Opposition will likely get another reasonable job.

I'm not complaining. To be perfectly honest, the settlement amount that is offered now is a heck of a lot better than what was offered when I was first elected. I came in knowing that. So this is a much, much better deal, but the idea that is proposed by the member putting forward Bill 202 I don't think quite understands how difficult it can be to be a member of an opposition in a place with a government that's been in place for 40 years.

Well, times are volatile. Things could change. Things could change in the next election. In fact, I'm sure that members from the party that the member represents are counting on the fact that his folks are going to be sitting on the other side next time. Fair enough. But does that mean that there will still be an understanding? When you travel and talk to other politicians, governments change. People end up on both sides of the aisles. They have a good idea of what it's like to be in opposition and be in government. If you've been around for 10 or 15 years, you very likely would have served on both sides of the House. So there's a much clearer understanding of the limitations that exist on both sides.

The other small thing that I'm always aware of is that the resettlement is based on the best three years of earning. Now, here government members consistently earn more than opposition members because they are paid, for example, for sitting on cabinet policy committees or to chair various things like the Seniors Advisory Council. So even though I may have been considered a private member right along with one of the government backbenchers, they will consistently have outearned me or been paid more than I have been paid. That, of course, is included in the calculation when you look at the resettlement allowance. If they consistently made that $20,000 or $30,000 or $40,000 a year more than any member in the opposition, when you base the resettlement on it, they're going to be getting more resettlement allowance based on that as well.

So there is a real inequity here and a misunderstanding about that. I appreciate the opportunity to put it on the record. I bet most people are not aware of it. I will soon be celebrating my 14th anniversary as an elected member in this House, moving into my 15th year, so I'm able to bring you a bit of an historical vignette if you will. Thank you for the opportunity to put that information on the record. I do think we need to do something, but it's about an independent commission.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to speak to Bill 202, the Legislative Assembly (Transition Allowance) Amendment Act, 2011, brought forward by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. This bill would amend the Legislative Assembly Act. It would abolish the transition allowance that members currently receive upon leaving office. As it stands right now, when members leave office, they receive three months' salary for each year as an MLA in the name of the transition allowance. Under Bill 202 members would instead receive a retirement allowance, which would be worth no more than one month's pay for each year served.

Mr. Speaker, I think MLA compensation is, of course, an important topic to discuss, and our compensation should be in line with public expectations and the demands placed upon us. However, it is important to look at the issue of MLA compensation in its totality rather than looking at one part of it.

I'd like to read a few paragraphs from the report of the Independent Commission to Review MLA Compensation from British Columbia in 2007, which was the last province to look at their compensation package. It states:

Few positions are more important to our status as a free and democratic society than those of our elected representatives. Our MLAs collectively make laws that affect the lives of the 4.31 million residents of the province, which is now the third largest in Canada.

This is of course talking about British Columbia.

Their position has become more challenging in recent years as the complexity of social, economic and environmental issues continues to increase.

Our MLAs are expected to exercise judgement and make decisions that involve millions of dollars and affect the immediate quality of life of individuals, as well as the long-term success of the province overall. No other group in our province has such a significant impact on our lives. Unfortunately, few members of the public fully understand the responsibilities and burdens shouldered by MLAs collectively or individually.

As citizens, we expect our MLAs to be available to handle a host of issues from the minor and personal to the strategic and global. We demand that decisions be made for the benefit of our families, neighbourhoods and businesses, often without remembering that there are few issues where others see the result in exactly the same light as we do. Like legislators elsewhere, our MLAs must continually balance competing interests and regularly face issues where they know that no resolution will satisfy all interested parties.

Members live their lives under constant public scrutiny, to which their families are also often subjected. The concept of a private life or a "normal" family environment disappears the moment an MLA is elected. There is no job security and often few job prospects and little thanks when the position comes to an end. One may ask why anyone would voluntarily subject themselves to such a working environment. The reality is that very few MLAs themselves understand the demands of the position, the significance of their responsibilities, the impact of their decisions and the intensity of the media attention until they are elected.

Mr. Speaker, because of its singular focus on one aspect of MLA compensation I believe that Bill 202 is an incomplete piece of legislation which misses the big picture. After all, the transition allowance is only a part of the compensation we receive as MLAs. We also receive expense allowances and stipends for serving on certain committees, and of course we also receive a base salary. Looking at the transition allowance in isolation without looking at the remainder of our compensation package does not really address the important question of whether or not MLA compensation is fair.

This is because the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere simplifies the conversation about MLA pay by proposing this legislation.

Of course, as all members of this House surely know, we do not have a pension plan to which we contribute, and this differentiates us from every other provincial Legislature. Therefore, comparisons between our compensation and that of elected officials in other jurisdictions are not always easy to make given that slight differences in pension rules or allowances can make a large difference in total compensation. Furthermore, our lack of pension differentiates us from other public servants in our province.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to comment from the Independent Commission to Review MLA Compensation on pension arrangements, and this is MLA benefits, one of the recommendations that was accepted:

We recommend the termination of the Group RRSP and the re-instatement of a defined benefit plan. The plan will be effective from April 1, 2007 and contain the following key provisions:

- A benefit accrual rate of 3.5% of the highest three-year average earnings (with the benefit calculated separately on the member's basic salary and on any additional salary earned), to a maximum of 70% of the three-year average earnings.

When you cost this out, this is a tremendous package, which is a lot more expensive than the package we have now.

Of course, as all members of this House surely know, we do not have a pension plan to which we contribute, and this differentiates us from other provincial Legislatures. The reality is that pensions are important as they provide financial security through the duration of retirement for many individuals. The lack of a pension is a drawback in our compensation structure as it increases the uncertainty members face upon re-entering the workforce or retiring. To be clear, I'm not advocating a renewal of MLA pensions, but I think that talking about a transition allowance without giving serious consideration to the fact that we do not have pensions is an important omission on his behalf.

Another point I'd like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that I believe that this legislation sets a precedent going forward for MLA compensation that we may not want to establish. I don't think it's appropriate to simply legislate limits on one part of an MLA compensation package while ignoring the rest of it. I am saying that we should not simply have legislation for every rule we wish we could make regarding MLA compensation.

Mr. Speaker, I think also, in looking at the report from British Columbia, there are a number of observations. The commission did a phone survey of 601 B.C. adults.

- BC residents express a limited knowledge of the number of MLAs. On the question of "How many MLAs do you think are in the BC Legislature?" answers ranged from 1 to 500, with the average being 64 (median 55), but only 1.2% had the correct answer of 79.
- B.C. residents believe that MLAs work on average only 38 hours a week, and 196 days out of the year (equivalent to 5 days a week with 13 weeks off for holidays).
- When it comes to compensation, 51.9% think MLA salary is about right, with 34.8% believing it's too high and 15.1% thinking it's too low. However, few of the respondents knew how much MLAs earn, with only 20% coming within 10% of the real salary. The mean perceived average salary was $195,824, with 39% overestimating the annual base salary.

Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that over half of the MLAs responded to the survey. It's also interesting that the majority of respondents were married, with a university degree, typically in middle age, 45 to 60, and few had children still living at home.

The average length of service was also interesting, only 6.72 years.

- The MLAs uniformly reported working long hours, averaging 70 hours a week when the House is sitting, and 62 hours when not – the more rural the constituency, the shorter the work week, which I find interesting because I find in my position that the farther away we are from the Legislature, the longer our days are.

- A typical day in the life of an MLA is a very busy one. On any given day of the week, an MLA receives 77 incoming emails, 17 incoming calls, 13 phone interactions and attends 7 meetings.

Mr. Speaker, I can only imagine a successful company asking for a review of an executive pension one month, then executive allowances another month, and then executive bonuses yet another month. It would be an inefficient process to look at compensation one piece at a time, yet this legislation would set a precedent for MLA compensation being set piecemeal rather than all at once. Of course, if a piecemeal approach to setting MLA compensation is used rather than a holistic approach, an inefficient overall package is the likely result.

Mr. Speaker, the reality is that MLA compensation is an important subject. We all know that. There's no doubt that we should be open and transparent about our compensation so that Albertans could judge for themselves whether or not the pay is justified. But to change our compensation package one stage at a time rather than doing it all at once is not the best way of doing things. These one-off ideas are an inefficient means of restructuring MLA pay and in the long run are costly to the taxpayers. Right now the Members' Services Committee has in front of it the issue of MLA remuneration. I believe that's where it should be.

For those reasons I will not be supporting this piece of legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and then the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me an opportunity to speak to this bill being brought forward by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I believe the subject of our MLA transition allowance on the narrow point and, more importantly, MLA compensation to the larger extent are very important for us to discuss here, important not only to us here who work in this environment but to the taxpayers of Alberta. We have to walk the fine line here of not only representing what is best value for the constituents but also looking at ways where we can attract decent people to the profession. Those are awfully difficult things to balance.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

This is a politically sensitive issue, how much we make, and rightfully it should be. Yet, again, we do want people from all stripes, from any profession to be willing to consider serving as either a member of government or a member of opposition and not really look at the pay, to realize that they are going to be recompensed for the time they spend in this Legislature, to commit four, eight, 12 years of their life to this and realize that they're going to get a reasonable salary but that it may have some repercussions on other things they want to do in their lives. That's a decision that we all must make.

To that end, if you look at this, in my view, it would be better, like the hon. Member for West Yellowhead just said, to look at this in its totality. I believe that has been the position of the Alberta Liberals for some time. You will remember when job number one of this government, I believe, was to put through pay raises not only for rank-and-file MLAs but for cabinet ministers and the like. That was the first thing we did as a Legislature. That, in my view, was a piecemeal exercise. We didn't look at the compensation of retirement packages at that time. It may have been done with a view to attracting decent and honourable people to the profession, but it still was done piecemeal.

I don't believe I supported it being done then, and to be consistent, I probably will not be supporting this bill as a result of this not being done within that total compensation realm.

On that note, if you look at a three-month transition period, it does seem somewhat large when you compare it to a regular package out there in private industry. Now, there could be reasons for that. One reason is because we leave professions in the middle of our careers, and we have to then go back and start over again. I understand that. But to try and debate those in a one-off session, where we're looking at different moving pieces of the puzzle, I believe would not be supportive to the larger issue.

I believe that the situation that we are faced with now should go ahead to our Members' Services Committee. We should commend the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, who brought this forward I believe approximately a year ago at this time, to look at MLA pay and to have an independent committee come back and set a reasonable benchmark, where we can go ahead and have an independent committee set that pay and be proud of the fact that an independent committee came up with a reasonable pay.

I'm not one who comes in here and says that we're overpaid. In fact, I make the argument all the time that I want my politicians to be reasonably paid. I want them to come in here with an ability to take a wage to do their best service. At the same time, you have to be able to look your taxpayer in the eye that you're giving them value for judgment. In my view, we should look at this as a total compensation package and go forward and do it but to two ends, attracting people from all walks of life to come into government service and with the same view of being able to then balance that off against public perception. In my view, that is best done through the auspices of Motion 501, not through Bill 202.

That said, I would like to commend the hon. member for bringing this forward, for keeping the pressure on the government, for trying to look at MLA pay in a total fashion. What happened back in 2008, when we were elected: job number one of this government was to ram through some pay increases. I was quite surprised at that. I believe that one of the reasons the hon. member continues to bring this up at this time is to continue to have the government move forward on Motion 501. I know that they've stated in this House that they will, but with a new administration coming in, whoever that may be, we wish to keep this topic front and centre, and hopefully this can be worked out in future sessions of this Legislature in an open, honest, and transparent fashion that will serve all Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to be able to speak to this bill, Bill 202.

3:30

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A lot of good comments, I think, from all the previous members who have spoken about this particular bill, Bill 202. I want to acknowledge first that MLA compensation is a sensitive issue, and it has to be perceived as fair in the public eye but also fair to all members, so there's a balance that you need to actually achieve. Our salaries, like everything else in the public sector, are paid, of course, with taxpayers' dollars. The money just doesn't appear magically out of somewhere; it comes out of someone's hard-earned tax dollars. That's something that we also have to respect in dealing with any compensation, not just our own, in the public sector.

In proposing this bill, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere talked to several media outlets about this. You know, I think it's important that we do have this particular debate, but in order to have a productive debate, we have to be a little more specific, Mr. Speaker. We must be sure to look at some comparables, and the Member for West Yellowhead, before me, has done that. I also think that we need to look across the entire country at what our MLAs and MPs are paid for. Most jurisdictions have a pension, which I'll deal with shortly. If one wants to compare member benefits from workers in the public or private sector, you have to be prepared to talk about total compensation. You have to weigh MLAs' duties against those of individuals with similar workloads, responsibilities, and job stability.

I have to agree with previous members, Mr. Speaker, that everybody here works long, hard hours and that it involves a significant amount of travel unless you're from the capital region. Even then, this is a job that does involve a lot of hours. We're here because we want to serve the public. That is what public service is about.

Dealing with compensation is not an impossible task by any means, but at the same time it's not as simplistic as this bill, in fact, would imply. Perhaps a starting point would be to compare ourselves with other Canadian jurisdictions. After all, the best comparison would be with other MLAs or the federal Parliament. So here are some facts, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost, I think it's important to note that a transition allowance is not a pension. As I've stated before in this House and outside of this House, I do not support MLA pensions of any kind. A transition allowance is a one-time payment whereas a pension is a longer term liability which gives the retiree some certainty during retirement.

Alberta differs from other provinces and, of course, the federal Parliament in that in many cases there is a pension in addition to a transition allowance, and of course this isn't the case in Alberta. I'll repeat this again, Mr. Speaker. Alberta MLAs are not entitled to a pension plan like their colleagues in other jurisdictions. In fact, it was the PC government, Ralph Klein, of 1993 who did away with pensions here once and for all, and I hope that these pensions never come back.

More specifically, most of our colleagues from other Canadian provinces receive what is known as a defined benefits pension plan – that's opposed to a defined contributions pension plan – meaning that the amount they receive for their pension is, in fact, fixed. This is in contrast with a defined contributions plan, which is what Ontario and Saskatchewan elected officials receive, where the amount received varies with the market.

Most jurisdictions, in fact, Mr. Speaker, allow an individual to collect a pension before they reach a set retirement age. Members receive their pension as long as they live, so the cost of a pension can be very significant for taxpayers.

I did a bit of a calculation here earlier, Mr. Speaker. I have a friend who is a Member of Parliament in an Ontario riding, and he laughed to me early last year that he passed the six-year mark. I started doing some calculations. With federal pensions you receive 3 per cent per every year you serve after you get to six years. So if you presume that they make about $200,000, after he turns 55, if he quits today, he'll get $36,000 a year. Presuming he lives until 85, that's $720,000 whereas if he serves six years in this House, presuming that he'd make $120,000, if he retired after that point, he'd receive $180,000. Now, we know which one is obviously more expensive and why many people here don't support pensions, in fact why Premier Klein had the wisdom to go and do away with it in the first place.

On top of that, some of these provincial pensions are actually indexed. I found that Nova Scotia's pension is indexed to a portion of the rate of inflation every year, so they can be quite generous, Mr. Speaker.

I don't want to get into too many details, but pension benefits are calculated typically, again, by the amount of time the member has served, to a maximum of 15 years, multiplied by the MLA's highest three-year average salary. It's been noted upon leaving office that you do receive some inflationary increase. This typically gets to a full pension once you reach age 55, which is substantially lower than the CPP age of 65, or 60 if you take early CPP. This policy has led to several members across the country actually receiving pensions of close to a hundred thousand dollars a year, Mr. Speaker.

Other provinces are in similar situations. The bottom line is that MLAs in other jurisdictions receive a transition allowance and a pension plan, and the taxpayers will have to pay sometimes seven figures each year to keep up with pension payments for previous members of the particular Assembly or Parliament.

Another example is the Premier of British Columbia, who's going to be leaving office right away here. Upon leaving office, he's entitled to an annual pension estimated to be in the six figures, again, on top of a transition allowance. So this is very costly for taxpayers.

In other words, what we're seeing today, Mr. Speaker, though, is that the devil is in the details, and this gets to the point of why I cannot support this particular bill. The perception people have of politics and all politicians can be challenging to all parties, and we must be careful not to devalue the work done by this province's elected officials of any party. In other words, all angles must be examined, and the right balance must be struck through maintaining the status quo or otherwise. I submit to this House that this balance must be tailored to the reality of the province and to the particular Assembly. This bill itself is two pages, and with a bill of two pages I don't think we can have a comprehensive debate over total compensation.

The speaker before me, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, has shown strong support for his review of an MLA compensation package as proposed in the previous sitting of this Assembly by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. Motion 501 passed with strong support from both sides of the House. For the record I did vote for it. It's important that this committee that she talks about actually works through the process. We need a global review. I look to the clients whose contracts I would negotiate in my previous life. You wouldn't just simply reach an agreement on one clause in the contract and then move forward thinking that you're done. You'd reach a global agreement on all of these particular clauses, and that's what I think is most effective here as well.

Motion 501, as I mentioned, states:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government [of Alberta] to establish an independent commission to review the current salaries and benefits for Members of the Legislative Assembly and to report to the government and this Assembly on whether the current overall remuneration for [all] members is fair and adequate.

The Member for West Yellowhead has made a lot of good comments, and I trust his background in labour negotiations is very helpful here. I would have to agree with a lot of what he says because, in fact, Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 as it stands today, I would submit to this House, is poor public policy as it runs against the decision made by members of this Assembly for, in fact, a comprehensive review, which is exactly what we should be doing and what all members of all parties should actually be co-operating with instead of not submitting their committee members as discussed in a September 17 meeting.

Mr. Speaker, I'm saddened that this bill was brought forward when we all knew exactly what was going to be happening. I trust the intention is noble. I trust it's not just the desire to make oneself conspicuous. I trust it is to actually have an ongoing debate. I think that's, in fact, what we're having here.

This definitely isn't the place to debate compensation for MLAs. This is not the place. The proper place is the Members' Services Committee and not just on one particular basis, Mr. Speaker, but on a global and a comprehensive basis. That is what I support. Let's have the independent committee go through this all, and let's not deal with this one clause at a time in a two-page bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before we continue, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the Assembly, for giving me the opportunity to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a person very special and important to me, my son, Jeremy Jablonski. Tomorrow, March 8, it will be 36 years ago that my husband, Bob, and I had a dream come true, when our son was born.

Today Jeremy is a very successful entrepreneur who is deeply involved with his community. He's the CEO of the Coverall Shop and Clearwater spa. He's the chairman of the Red Deer College athletics leadership fund, the past chair of the RDC Alumni Association. He's a member of the Red Deer College Foundation board, a member of the Central Alberta Economic Partnership, of the Red Deer College fund development advisory committee, and he's past co-chair, for the years 2009-2010, of the central Alberta Premier's dinner. He's a member of the Red Deer-North PC Association, and he's the father of two beautiful and brilliant little girls, Camryn and Morgan Jablonski.

I would ask my son, Jeremy Jablonski, to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Bill 202 Legislative Assembly (Transition Allowance) Amendment Act, 2011 (continued)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A proud mom and grandma, obviously.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to speak to Bill 202, the Legislative Assembly (Transition Allowance) Amendment Act, 2011, put forward by my caucus colleague the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. In times of financial deficits Albertans are expecting changes from the top. This bill, I believe, satisfies some of those demands. As a result of this bill, elected officials will receive one month's salary for every year of service up to 12 months' salary as they transition into private life. This seems fair to me. It strikes a balance that Albertans can appreciate. There should be a level of support for elected officials as they move back to private employment. It shouldn't be a million-dollar golden parachute but enough to help them land on their feet.

Mr. Speaker, when I first ran for office, I knocked on doors to meet the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek, and they were truly upset at what were overly generous pensions for their elected representatives. Albertans wanted public servants to be treated with respect, but the situation in the past seemed fundamentally wrong. In the early '90s we as a province and country were struggling. Unemployment was high, economic growth was sluggish, and governments across the country were running deficits and adding debt. To see elected officials collecting generous pensions did not ring true with Albertans. The greatest leaders set an example for others. The Premier at the time, Ralph Klein, made the right decision when he made changes to the pension plan for MLAs. What should have been a benefit for public service was in reality a luxury parachute with lots of goodies. Albertans couldn't expect this for themselves; why should they for their elected representatives?

The elimination of the pension package didn't deter quality candidates from stepping forward. The class of '93 was one of the best Alberta had ever seen. It tackled deficit spending and debt accumulation and led the way as Canada turned its fiscal ship around. It made tough decisions that others had avoided. Alberta walked the talk, and it showed real leadership and great sacrifice to leave a better future for our children. Great leaders, Mr. Speaker, are never complacent. They never say: good enough. They consistently try to leave the world a better place. I'm proud of the earlier years, and so are Albertans.

As I talk to my constituents, I'm starting to feel a sense of déjà vu; I have a familiar feeling. We are living through record deficits in this province, the highest we've ever had. We have a government that cannot control its spending. The average Albertan doesn't feel like their leaders are listening. They don't feel that they are part and parcel of what Alberta should be.

It's hard for Albertans to believe that we're right back where we started. The sacrifices made by all during the '90s now seem like a dream. We're about to run our fourth straight deficit. In no time at all our sustainability fund will be empty; the piggybank will be nothing but a paperweight. It seems strange that the government has no memory of where we came from. We're right back where we started, Mr. Speaker.

When the going gets tough, the tough get going. Alberta is the success it is because we endure. We shoulder our burdens and keep driving forward. It's time for elected members to once again lead the way with sacrifice. We're all in this together. Some civil servants have had their pay frozen for years; other positions have not been filled. We're asking more of everyone. Now it's time for MLAs to give a little. To Albertans this government has taken too much and for too long. In 2008 the government gave itself a 34 per cent pay increase behind closed doors. After much public outrage there were some rollbacks, but to the Marthas and Henrys it wasn't enough to fix the broken trust. The Premier continues to be the highest paid in the country.

Not only was the pay increase bad policy; it sent the wrong message to Albertans, that politicians only care for themselves.

Quite frankly, Albertans have every right to that opinion. It's how it looks. Because the government is looking out for itself, we suggest that a sacrifice has to be made. Going forward, there are changes that must happen. For every year of service MLAs will receive a month's salary up to 12 months. This is reasonable to Albertans. It's balanced; it's a middle ground between all and nothing.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I'm the beneficiary of the current system. As I was elected in 1993 for the first time, it's the only system I've ever known. The only rules I've known are the rules that are in place right now. I've made my future plans based on the rules we have now, but that doesn't mean that I'm against change. I think it's time to move forward and show Albertans that we can lead again. That's why I'm standing up and supporting Bill 202.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be an MLA. I've never shied away from the tough decisions; neither has the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. He and I together made some difficult decisions to change parties. I was a proud member of the government for many years, but I lost faith. Albertans are losing faith in this government also. They had a faith that assured them that the elected representatives have the best interests of their constituents at heart, and that faith is wavering.

The Member for West Yellowhead talks about the whole package. It was his boss, the Premier of the province, that committed to establishing a committee to look at the salaries and the benefits, the whole package, after the motion from the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East passed in this House unanimously last year. The Premier gave his word at looking at it, and he has now broken his word.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans do not shy away from tough decisions. We take pride in making the toughest. It's time the politicians in this Assembly made a tough decision. It's time for us to show leadership. It's time to do what's right. In the '90s we led the way by balancing the budgets. We balanced our personal budgets, too. It's time again to make tough decisions. Albertans are ready to lead, and so am I.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to share some thoughts and comments on Bill 202, forwarded by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. If passed, this bill would change the formula used to issue allowances to MLAs when they retire from political life and would stipulate that a member would be eligible to receive a transition allowance of no more than one month's pay for every year worked to a maximum of 12 months.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, this gives us a chance to talk about compensation and the role it plays in supporting our democracies. Perhaps the best way to explain this is to take a look at the history of parliamentary democracy. As we all know, our system of government evolved from the Westminster system practised in England. This system, in turn, came to be through a series of historical events too lengthy to mention here today, but what is worth mentioning is the pay structure of MPs at that time or, rather, the lack thereof.

For many years the elected representatives in our founding system were not paid for their service. Rather, they were expected to cover their expenses through their own financing. This meant that only the very wealthy could sit as a Member of Parliament. Not surprisingly, with a House comprised primarily of wealthy individuals, the issues of the wealthy always took precedence over those of the poor or less fortunate. Paying elected representatives to serve has allowed people who might not otherwise have been able to have their voice heard run and serve in office. The talents required for good governance are not limited to the wealthy but, instead, are held by all those who earnestly wish to serve and improve the communities they call home. It stands to reason, Mr. Speaker, that these talents are all found in the members of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, after establishing the need for compensation, the question then becomes a matter of: well, how much? Compensation is intended to ensure that all people, regardless of personal wealth, can enter the political process. This means that the compensation figure set by government needs to reflect three key considerations: first, the cost of living in the province, county, or city; second, the cost of conducting business as elected members – what does the job entail? – and, finally, the cost of compensation for service or, in simpler terms, the amount of money a member should have left over for his or her own personal use.

Mr. Speaker, the first point, cost of living, is very subjective and can vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. One city or province may have a much higher or lower cost of living compared to another area. The second consideration is also very subjective and most notably so for rural representatives. Rural members often need to travel great distances to meet their constituents, and many require several constituency offices, and they also need to travel regularly, of course, to the capital city. These three points are all very relevant and should be taken into consideration whenever the issue of compensation is brought before this House.

While I agree with all these points, I feel, though, that a fourth point should be taken into account in this debate. That issue is, of course, competition, Mr. Speaker. Governments at all levels have to compete with other sectors of the economy to attract the brightest and the best. We are all looking for a few exceptional individuals who can successfully and effectively lead, be it in government, business, or the charitable sector. Compensation in government must be attractive enough so as not to detract individuals who are in the prime of their careers from seeking elected office. The individuals most suited to contribute to our governing process quite often find themselves having to decide whether or not to interrupt their careers during their most productive earning years.

Mr. Speaker, this is a major decision that affects not only the lives of these persons but the lives of their family members and their ability to adequately provide for their needs today and in their retirement. I'm intimately aware of this as I'm currently in my 19th year of public service, having been first elected to city council in Leduc at 34 years of age. I left a thriving business in 2004, when I was sworn in as an MLA, because I wanted to dedicate myself completely to serving my constituents.

Compensation in the Legislature can never completely replace opportunities lost in the private sector, but it should reflect a reality that the skill sets required to be an effective MLA should be reasonably compensated both while the member serves and provide some reasonable allowance to allow the member to transition back to private life.

Let's not forget that in our society today, Mr. Speaker – and it was raised by some of the other members earlier – it is not easy for anyone, male or female, to easily move into another career, particularly when they reach middle age. We should not have a situation where serving in this House is seen as a detriment to one's career or future. If this were to become the case, the people of Alberta would miss out on a great deal of talent.

Mr. Speaker, some years ago the pension plan was disbanded because it was viewed by the public as not appropriate or consistent with anything available in the private sector. I believe that the decision was short sighted as what was required was an appropriate revamp of the plan. In later years the transition allowance as we know it today was instituted. While this allowance is an easy target for criticism, experts in the pension industry believe that it is a much cheaper alternative for the taxpayer than a comparable pension.

It is never easy for elected officials to discuss compensation, and that is very evident in the history of this subject in this House. There have been numerous reviews conducted by private agencies or academia over the years, and the usual conclusion led to recommendations of very large increases relative to the talent level and the amount of effort required for the job. These recommendations have never been followed as they were all seen to be too rich. I expect the same result if another similar study were to be commissioned today.

Mr. Speaker, this matter is already the subject of a motion brought forward by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, and it is before the Members' Services Committee. I am very confident that a reasonable, comprehensive solution will be found through an all-party process and not a piecemeal solution as proposed by this hon. member.

Mr. Speaker, I will not be supporting this bill. I encourage all parties represented in this Assembly to provide positive input to the committee, as proposed in the motion by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A number of hon. members have made reference to Motion 501, first proposed by our hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. I believe that the solution lies in an independent committee as opposed to any type of influence from MLAs setting their own salaries. Whether it's the Members' Services Committee or one of the standing policy committees, I don't believe we should be setting our own salaries. We're servants of the public, and the public, through an independent committee, should determine our worth. Obviously, if people feel that that worth isn't sufficient, then they may not consider public office. But it's that independence that is absolutely key to the process.

Mr. Speaker, when I ran in 2001, I did not run for financial benefits. I can recall that when I was unsuccessful in my running in 2001 and when I was door-knocking again in 2004, an individual in Varsity Estates said: well, you were a teacher; I guess you're looking for a pay increase. I said at that time very honestly that I had no idea what the compensation was that MLAs received. That wasn't my focus. My focus was on trying to make up for the damage done to education and the cutbacks that began in 1993 and, as far as I'm concerned, have continued thereafter. I wanted to make a difference.

That said, Mr. Speaker, the salary I am currently in receipt of as an MLA is very close to twice the salary that I was making as a teacher when I retired from full-time teaching in 2004. I'm not going to compare the job I do now as a politician versus the job I did as a teacher. Both require considerable commitment. The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon talked about being in public service for I believe it was in the area of 22 years, possibly 25. As of this September I'll have been in public service for 40 years, and I am very proud of that public service.

I wanted to contribute to this debate, Mr. Speaker, though I have previously announced that I plan to retire when the next election is called. While I would not be very subject to this bill should it go forward, I can understand the reasoning behind it. As I said, I don't believe it's something that can be solved by either a bill or a motion in this Assembly. I think it has to be solved, as the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East pointed out, by the formation of an independent committee.

Unfortunately, that independent committee, which was proposed towards a year ago, has still not been established. I would encourage all members of this House to encourage the government members, in particular our Premier, to have that committee established as a legacy act. From here on in MLAs would be free of any accusations of interference with their salaries, whether it be raises, whether it be in the form of committee salary, whether it be in the day-to-day working. My feeling is that as MLAs if we're to do the job right, I would hope that we're worth the money that the public has paid us and entrusted us to perform the duties. But it's the public that should determine our salary, not ourselves.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have an additional seven speakers. If we all go less than the 10 minutes, we'll get them all in.

The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, then Strathmore-Brooks, then Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to share some thoughts on Bill 202, the Legislative Assembly (Transition Allowance) Amendment Act, 2011, brought forward by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I'd like to thank the member for bringing forth this piece of legislation.

I'm sure all members of this House want their compensation to be appropriate. That being said, by focusing solely on transition allowances, I believe this bill misses the point. If the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere wished to engage in a discussion on the entirety of MLA compensation instead of only focusing on transition allowances, I think we'd have a more beneficial debate. Given that transition allowances are only part of the picture, I'm not convinced that we can definitively say whether or not they are too generous without looking at the other indemnities and allowances received.

Of course, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is part of the Members' Services Committee, and if he truly wants fair compensation for MLAs, he should bring these issues to Members' Services, where we can look at transition allowances while taking into account all of the other aspects of our compensation.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to share some thoughts on this legislation. The fact is that when we discuss MLA compensation, we don't really have a lot to compare it to. Of course, we can compare it to the compensation received by members of the other provincial Legislatures and of the federal government. The total number of elected officials serving in this country today is less than 2,000.

That being said, looking at private-sector compensation structures could allow us to step back and view our compensation in a larger context. Of course, many private-sector executives are compensated very well, and part of the allure of working for some private corporations is the possibility of large compensation and benefits packages along with bonuses.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not suggesting that elected officials should be compensated like these executives, but I do think we can learn from examining the structure of private-sector compensation agreements, which are generally carefully vetted to ensure that the pay is fair. All things considered, I think the concept of long-term value that's mentioned in the contract of many private-sector executives is applicable in our situation. As elected officials we're constantly working towards providing long-term value for taxpayer dollars. That's not to say that the private sector and the public sector should be treated the same when it comes to compensation, but I do believe that a comparison of the underlying structure is valid given the similarity of certain objectives.

Mr. Speaker, an interesting clause in the compensation structure of many large corporations is that severance pay is not always guaranteed. Should an executive do something unethical or irresponsible, there's often a mechanism by which that executive's severance pay can be avoided. I think that's another useful conversation that we could have if we were discussing compensation in its entirety.

I know that in Manitoba, for example, the transition allowance paid to a member is dependent on the manner in which they left office. For example, a member who leaves voluntarily prior to an election is not entitled to a transition allowance in most instances. Of course, there are exceptions if the leave is due to a medical reason or other circumstances. However, Manitoba and the rest of the provinces have a pension plan for MLAs, which can help them secure a reliable income after leaving office, which of course we do not have here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not suggesting that we establish a similar policy here in Alberta. I'm just making the point that MLA compensation is multifaceted, and there are many angles to be considered when contemplating changes. If we're going to look at the structure of our severance benefits, then perhaps we could have the discussion about policies like they have in Manitoba. Ultimately, I think a serious discussion on transition allowances also obliges us to look at the requirements of this transition allowance.

Just to go back over some of the comments that we've heard here this afternoon, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere did talk about nobility. I just don't understand the connection between nobility and transition allowances, Mr. Speaker. Also, a reference to winning the lottery: I don't think that transition allowances really generally compare to any kind of lottery winnings. It's also an unfair comparison because it needs to be pointed out that these transition allowances are fully taxable, not like a lottery.

The Member for West Yellowhead mentioned that very few people do know what MLAs get paid, and I have to agree with that. Most people don't. I hear frequently, myself, about the big pension I'm going to collect after I leave here. There is no pension in this province. I've clarified that over and over.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out the wide variety of backgrounds that our members have, and we do. Looking around here, we have a forestry executive, a lawyer, real estate, another lawyer. We've got cattle ranchers.

Mr. Groeneveld: It's scary, isn't it?

Mr. Quest: It's quite frightening, yes, Member for Highwood.

It is a broad range, but I think that, in fairness, when you look at the total compensation that MLAs receive, and that's what we need to focus on, most of us – the Member for Calgary-Varsity pointed himself out as an exception – are being compensated on a range much lower than we were when we came here. A lot of us gave up very, very good careers to come here, and we may or may not be able to go back into those careers. If we do go back, we certainly will not be going back at the level we left them at.

Those are all things, I think, that we need to take into consideration before we consider even supporting this bill, so I will not be supporting this bill.

Just one comment also. I think the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek mentioned that our Premier is the highest paid in Canada. I doubt that very much when you take into account the fact that our Premier along with the rest of us will not receive a pension when he leaves here.

I think it's important that we have regular reviews of MLA compensation. I think that's critical to make sure that there's fairness there. But I think any and every time we look at it, we need to look at total compensation packages, not picking out bits and pieces.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, then the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of Bill 202 because I believe that this is an important first step in reflecting today's economic reality. This is the same reality that Albertans are facing each and every day, and I believe Bill 202 is a reflection of leadership, leadership to go forward relative to the issue of what Albertans are facing today, our constituents, who are our bosses.

Over a year ago in this Assembly the Member for Lethbridge-East proposed relative to an independent committee, and I support the philosophy of an independent committee because I do believe, similarly to when I was mayor in Fort McMurray, that elected officials should not set their own salaries. However, as I reflect today, the bill that is put forward by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, which I commend, is an important first step. At this point there has been nothing as concrete as this bill that has been brought forward, which I think, again, is an important first step to reflect the current economic reality that our bosses, the people of Alberta, are facing.

It was once said that the ultimate measure of a person's character is not where they stand in moments of comfort and convenience but, rather, where they stand in times of challenge and controversy. Well, today's economy should reflect that it is not a time of comfort and convenience; rather, it is a time of economic challenge. Therefore, I believe that today is a defining moment, and I commend the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for recognizing, in terms of his consultation with Albertans based on what they are facing, that it should be reflected and mirrored in this very Assembly. So he chose to put forward this bill, which I one hundred and ten per cent support, and the reason why? It reflects the current economic reality of our bosses, our constituents. Nowhere does anyone receive what is presently in place. Consequently, I think somewhat in frustration because of nothing coming forward at this point, he has brought forward this Bill 202.

I think it's also equally important to recognize that today's economy should also mirror what is happening relative to the conditions that we have faced over the past period of time. It's hard for Albertans to believe that we're really right back where we started. The sacrifices made by all Albertans during the '90s now seem like a dream.

The government is about to run its fourth straight deficit. In no time at all our sustainability fund will be next to empty, and clearly, as you can see, the piggybank is going to be nothing more than a paperweight. It seems strange that the government has no memory of where we came from.

If I can reflect back on history just for a moment, I reflect back to the year 1993, when the then new leader and Premier – and a defining moment of that Premier was that he had to demonstrate to his bosses, the people of Alberta and members of the Progressive Conservative Party, that he was ready to lead. What did he do? He abolished pensions, and I believe that that decision, that political decision and the economic decision that that Premier made, Ralph Klein, back in 1993 was the correct decision in reflecting the pulse and the winds that were blowing in Alberta at that time. So here we are today, many years later, reflecting those same winds of change that are in the air.

I might add that during that time it came to a near defeat of the actual governing party of 25, almost 30 years, when Ralph Klein was almost defeated by the then leader of the Liberal Party, Laurence Decore, who was actually at the time considered more conservative than the Progressive Conservative leader. But the leader of the Progressive Conservatives did read the winds of change that were blowing.

I would strongly suggest to all members from all political parties: read and hear and feel the winds of change that Albertans are saying are blowing in Alberta. This Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, I believe, is reading those winds correctly. I believe he is demonstrating leadership, and he is taking an important first step.

The Member for West Yellowhead made reference to it being nothing more than a piecemeal bill, Bill 202. Nothing could be further from the truth because at least it is some form of action. This government had an opportunity over the last year to take action. They chose not to. In fact, they chose to increase behind closed doors the salary to its cabinet ministers almost 34 per cent. That is fundamentally wrong. It is fundamentally a total disconnect to the people of Alberta in terms of what they have been facing.

The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has a young family, four beautiful boys and his lovely wife. Only one is in school. Believe me, he is more concerned about the future than what has gone on in the past.

I think there is a tremendous opportunity to demonstrate leadership, to take the first concrete piece of action. Government and this Legislature do not have to be behind. It can actually lead, and leadership in this case would be by supporting Bill 202. I would encourage all members to do that because this today is the same defining moment that was being faced by the then-leader, Ralph Klein, in 1993.

You can come up with excuses. You can come up with how many e-mails you receive in a day. By the way, some of the members, the government whip and the Member for West Yellowhead, used the example of receiving 70 e-mails. Well, welcome to the club of receiving over double that. So if he thinks that's work, come on and join the Wildrose. No. Thanks. Don't come and join the Wildrose. We'll allow Albertans to decide. That clearly will show you what real work is.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will say that I believe everyone comes here – the reference from the other side talks about all the hard work. This Wildrose Party is not interested in hard work. We're interested in smart work, which includes hard work, and it reflects the values of all Albertans.

As we go forward, Mr. Speaker, clearly, today is a defining moment. This Assembly has a unique opportunity to vote in support of Bill 202 from the Member Airdrie-Chestermere. I support this bill that is being proposed. I also support the motion that was put forward by the member from Lethbridge last year, but no action was taken. This is concrete action in a defining moment, and history will judge how you vote today. Do the right thing and reflect the values of Albertans by supporting this bill today, Bill 202.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 202, the Legislative Assembly (Transition Allowance) Amendment Act, 2011. This is a sensitive topic for all MLAs to discuss and debate. After all, we ultimately have the ability to set our own compensation. As such, we must be especially prudent in making decisions about our pay.

Mr. Speaker, I don't necessarily disagree with the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere's assertion that transition allowance should be looked at. I agree with a number of others who have spoken in the House this afternoon with regard to this bill. My understanding of Albertans is that they have a very high expectation of the role of integrity and transparency in government, and they expect that of all of us. I appreciate the general, I think, acceptance of that across this House, the fact that we're all here to serve the best interests of our constituents, and we do that at considerable interruption to what we would otherwise do in our lives. For everyone that sits in this House or any Legislative Assembly across this country, the members do so in service to their province or to their country. That is certainly, in my opinion, a noble and high calling. I do have to say, Mr. Speaker, that I'm a Member of this Legislative Assembly with great honour with regard to the constituents of Strathmore-Brooks.

It's not my intention to speak to the specifics of this bill or to the specifics of remuneration for Members of this Legislative Assembly. I think that the importance of looking at remuneration for MLAs is always important, and probably one of the things that is most important is that it is reviewed on a periodic basis. I know that hasn't necessarily been the case in Alberta, that it is done on a matter of anniversary or anything like that, but it does get reviewed from time to time, and I think it's important that that be both transparent and a process that deals with the realities of the work that we do and reasonable to compare with other types of activity and work in the country. Clearly, the kind of work that we do in this Legislature is somewhat unique compared to the other jobs that many Albertans are involved in.

With regard to considering just the transition allowance by itself, I think that's an inappropriate way to deal with this issue. I believe that the whole matter of remuneration needs to be considered in the bigger picture, as a number of other people have suggested here, and to suggest that we narrow in on just this issue really oversimplifies the whole matter. This should be looked at, as I said, on a regular basis. I certainly would not have a problem with the concept of an outside review of salary and remuneration, but whatever the process, it needs to be a process that is transparent. I think that we have a good pattern in this House in that we have an all-party Members' Services Committee, that does deal with these types of issues, and that would be a more appropriate place to have this dealt with.

As I said, I haven't taken time to consider what the details of remuneration are for me or any of us or what the implications of that are on an ongoing basis, but I do agree that Albertans are favourable to that compensation package, the way that MLAs are compensated, to be fair and reasonable. It's important, in our method of dealing with this, that we recognize transparency and that we deal with it on a periodic basis but with due process. That's the part that is most interesting and most important to me, that there is a reasonable process to deal with that. There's no need to cover up any of the activity or the discussion that's held around matters of compensation, remuneration, or transition, but there's also no need to shine a light or to create undue attention on the matter.

Albertans really want this approach to be reasonable, and for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I support the good work that our Members' Services Committee has done in the past and the fact that it's an all-party committee. They have the ability to deal with this and all of the factors that can be considered around compensation and benefits, and that's the more appropriate place for this to be dealt with.

The compensation that MLAs receive, Mr. Speaker, and particularly the fact that our retirement benefits are front-loaded makes apples-to-apples comparison between other compensation structures difficult. To refer to other jurisdictions in the context of this is probably not appropriate whereas in the forum of the Members' Services Committee all of those variations can be considered more in detail.

As such, I don't think we can make a responsible decision on this particular policy change today as more time is needed to adequately weigh the costs and benefits of the proposal. Seeing that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere sits on the Members' Services Committee, it is probably best that he raises this issue there, where it can be given the time it deserves. I certainly respect the statements that have been made with regard to the concern for the bigger picture that is behind this motion.

Therefore, I'm not offering my support for this bill, and I would encourage other members to do the same.

That being said, I do thank the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for bringing this topic forward. I think the discussion we've had so far has been productive and useful, and time will tell with regard to the integrity of the whole process.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the Minister of Environment, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere bringing forward this motion. However, in light of the fact that Motion 501, which was passed in the fall of 2010, specifically said an independent committee reporting back to this House, I really feel that the conversation and debate around this motion at this time are inappropriate.

I'm going to try to restrict my remarks to the essence of the intent of Motion 501 and, certainly, Bill 202 because I don't believe that actually speaking about MLA salaries or benefits is what we should be doing. We should not be setting our own salaries. That's exactly what ticks Albertans off the most, that we go in the backrooms and say: "Fine. I'll take this. I'll take that. I'm going to have a great transition allowance. I'm going to do this, that, and the other." That is what ticks Albertans off.

My vision, of course, is an independent committee that reports to this House. It actually should be binding, and it should never go near Members' Services, where, in fact, the MLAs could change it. So why bother? Why are we even thinking of an independent committee? That would cost us a fortune because these committees don't come cheap. Why would we waste that money if we're going to diddle with it in Members' Services? It has to be one way or the other. It's not boogie-boogie. It might be diddling there.

One of the examples, of course, that I always use is that, yes, we're very lucky, and we are indexed according to the average weekly earnings. Of course, my mantra always is: if it's good enough for us, then it certainly should be good enough for AISH recipients as well.

MLAs are required to vote. That is because it is part of the budget process. Those dollars come out of the budget. Yes, MLAs must vote on their own salaries, but that doesn't say that they should be setting their own salaries. The federal government at this point is looking at cutting sick days and pay. I think there are a lot of unhappy, probably, civil servants that don't want this kind of inconvenience, I suppose, for lack of anything else.

The Member for West Yellowhead explained what our job is. You know what? Yeah, we all work hard. We are on 24 hours a day. No, we can't go to the grocery store without listening to everyone's complaints, this, that, and another thing. You know what? That's our job. When we took this on, we knew how hard it was going to be, how much we were going to be paid, and if you didn't, then that's your own damn fault.

If you go to a job interview, one of the last questions that they'll ask you is: "Is there anything you need to know about our company? Is there anything you need to know about our expectations of you?" Those questions should have been answered before you ever ran for public office. Yes, I have always considered this a job. It's a job. It is nothing more than that. It's a job. Yes, we have tremendous responsibilities for our fellow citizens, but you know what? I know what it's like to work shift work, and I worked just as hard when I was working shift work as I am now. You work days, evenings, and nights. Your whole social life is destroyed. You go home, you try to get the kids off to school, you grab a few hours of sleep, you have dinner, and then you're back off to work again. Shift work is not easy, and a lot of our people in this province work shift work.

What about single mothers who have not a hope in Hades of probably ever getting a pension and are working two or three jobs? Don't tell me they don't work harder than us. It is a job. It is a part of our society, and all jobs are important. Long-distance truckers are away from their families. What about the guy that picks up our garbage? Is he as important as I am? In the major scheme of things he is. In the big picture everyone that has a job and contributes to our society is just as important as we are.

Yes, we're close to the top of the food chain. However, when I look at the salary – and I'm going to use the example of the president of Scotiabank, at $17.5 million a year – we're not even close. We're not even in the picture in terms of being the top of the food chain. We are in this House, I think, very lucky to receive the compensation that we do. Do I think it's probably a little bit too generous? Yes, I do, but it's not up to me to decide that. It really should be somebody independent.

I don't have a pension. I've never had a pension, and I don't stand alone. I am probably in the majority in this province, people who do not have pensions, and it's particularly the women that I worry about. Often the pensions that their husbands get aren't translated over when they become widows, and we've got an awful lot of senior widows existing – they aren't living; they are only existing – trying to keep a roof over their head or, in fact, living in a very lonely little apartment.

We talk about getting the brightest and the best and that we have to pay them. No. You know what this job is. If you're the brightest and you're the best and you want to do public service, this is what happens. You work your tail off, and this is what you're paid.

One of the other examples that perhaps was used is that you really can't count on everything. I look at a number of people, particularly those with disability pensions from Nortel. They have really been shafted. We will never be shafted by whatever compensation we have or whatever our transition allowance or whatever you want to call it is because we get it from the taxpayers. We aren't counting on a company to be honest. This is, hopefully, an open and transparent process, where, in fact, we are pretty lucky to be able to be protected, and we are protected by the taxpayers.

So back to my original. I believe that Motion 501 is the one that was passed. I believe that it should be independent. It should report to this House. Yes, it should have some kind of a review process in it, but that's not up to us to decide. It should be an independent committee.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, then the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm hesitant to get involved in this debate because, frankly, I'm not so sure that we should be having this debate. Some members have actually already pointed out that this is probably not the venue where this kind of a discussion should take place. Nevertheless, it is taking place. We are having that discussion, and I think it's appropriate that I, like any other member, participate in the discussion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, some have suggested that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has brought this particular bill forward for political reasons. I won't go so far as to suggest that. I will give him the benefit of the doubt, and I will suggest that he has the best of intentions in this bill. He truly is trying to bring forward something that is going to improve the situation and bring better governance to the people of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, on that account I would suggest that he is mistaken. This is not going to result in an improvement, and many members have done a very good job of enunciating the reason why. We have a process in this Legislature. We have a motion, that has already been passed by this Legislature, that recognizes that it is difficult in the extreme for politicians to be engaged in setting their own compensation. But that set aside, it's even more difficult and more inappropriate to try and piecemeal some kind of a compensation package together, and that's exactly what this bill does. This bill takes one tiny piece of the compensation out of context and then begins to make changes to an overall compensation package without taking into account the bigger picture.

Mr. Speaker, I think that bigger picture is exactly what the Member for Lethbridge-East was suggesting should be done in bringing the motion forward that was supported by members in this Assembly, that there needs to be an independent review, and it needs to be all encompassing. It can't focus just on one component of compensation because, as some members have very rightly pointed out, most other Legislatures that are sometimes used in comparison have one form of pension or another, and those pensions are paid out over an extended period of time and, at the end of the day, have value to members.

This particular Assembly made a decision some time ago that we would not have pensions. Instead, there is a process in place that provides for a transition allowance. Some members have greater benefit from that transition allowance than others. Like the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek I was elected in '93 as well, and I also would see a significant amount of transition allowance that would be paid to me under the current system. But, as she pointed out, that is something that is part of my financial planning, something that I have been able to put into some kind of a plan to determine how I am going to provide for me and my well-being into the years that other people would perhaps have had the opportunity to participate in some kind of a pension plan. I have considered that as part of the overall compensation package.

Mr. Speaker, I think that's what we are asking and what the Legislative Assembly has suggested needs to be done in agreeing to an independent review. Now, I understand that the Members' Services Committee has begun the process to begin that independent review but is awaiting names to be submitted by members of the opposition to move that process forward. I would at this point urge all members of the Assembly not to support the bill that's before us, to defeat this bill, but at the same time urge the Members' Services Committee to move forward with the implementation of the motion that was passed, I think unanimously, by this House last year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, then the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. At 4:50 I shall interrupt to allow the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to conclude the debate.

The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it an honour to rise and to speak to Bill 202, the Legislative Assembly (Transition Allowance) Amendment Act, 2011. I am speaking in favour of this, of course. I find it interesting the number of government members who have gotten up and spoken that it isn't appropriate to talk about this here in this Assembly, yet they find it perfectly appropriate after an election to go behind closed doors and give themselves a 34 per cent raise. So I find that almost comical, to think that they would come up with this idea of not appropriate.

I also find it quite entertaining that even yourself and the Members' Services Committee read into the Hansard saying that you've received no instruction. Bill 501 was passed over a year ago.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down. Do not bring the Speaker of this Legislative Assembly into this debate. Do not. There is great risk for you.

Proceed.

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. In Members' Services Committee it has been brought up and discussed, but there was no, to my knowledge and understanding, actual committee struck to do anything. So we'll continue to go forward with that. The government members continue to say that all of this is happening in the Members' Services Committee, that that's the appropriate place to bring it up. No. I think this is the appropriate place to bring it up, where we need to talk about it and the fact that it needs to be in front of an independent committee.

A number of members have gotten up from the government side saying: well, we need more time. How is it that we need more time to strike this independent committee and enact it? They've had over a year, and they've failed to do anything on this. Again, it's very disappointing to listen to those speakers get up and say: oh, we need more time to address this.

This government has failed to act on the promise to strike that committee. They've failed to address the problem; therefore, it's starting to boil over again. Again, it's interesting that they say now: oh, this three months for every year is good; it's appropriate.

Why is it that back in '92, when they struck the pension plan, they didn't find it appropriate then when they were looking at it?

It's also interesting to me that if you go to the library, there are still currently, Mr. Speaker, over 20 former MLAs that served prior to 1992 that are receiving over $50,000 a year in pension. It clearly got out of hand. That's why former Premier Klein said that we need to strike the pension plan. It's just not appropriate. It's interesting that when you look at the list of the total people, there's a yearly expense to the Alberta taxpayers of $3.8 million for those who are still collecting the old pension plan. Again, that varies from a very meagre amount of $1,596 per year up to a top payment of $109,000 a year on the old pension plan. Are we going to learn from that, or do we have to go through the cycle and go past the point of no return almost before we address this?

It's interesting to me that one of the first things this government did after they won the election was give itself a raise. I would want to say that if this House was in fact to set its own wage, I would find it – and I've spoken on this before – far more appropriate that that should be the last act that we would do going out into an election.

It's always amazing to me the talk about how humble we as MLAs are when all of a sudden we're faced with going to the electorate and saying that we want to be re-elected. Why not start at that point and say, "Oh, you know, we deserve a huge raise of 34 per cent," and then go out campaigning on it. It wouldn't happen. There would be retribution to be paid on that. Again, it's comical to say, "Oh, we can look after it ourselves," but it's always after the election, and they hope to have three and a half, four years before they have to be accountable.

It's interesting when you talk to people – and, again, I agree with the committee report from B.C. – that most people do not know what MLAs earn. I have to confess that when I ran the first time, it wasn't something that was a concern to me. I gave up my personal businesses and whatnot to get involved because I was frustrated with the direction government was going, and it wasn't until after I got elected that I found out what I was getting paid. I also found out the huge discrepancy between opposition members and government members. It was quite astounding to me to see how much they received in pay. It was interesting to see those old committees that they had that often hadn't met for three years, and then they were getting paid $20,000 a year to chair committees that weren't even meeting. Again, when that was brought to light, those committees were struck, and a new system was set up.

We need to realize and look at the history here of how things changed from one month to two months to then three months per year served and that transition. Why is it that we start off humble, and then all of a sudden think that, oh, we're the most important? As my colleague mentioned, are they PCs or PPs? Are they, you know, Progressive Conservatives, or are they politicians putting themselves on pedestals? That's the question. Are we going to put ourselves on a pedestal? There's no question that the work that we do here, the legislation that we pass, has a major impact on the people of Alberta. I would venture to say that we have the biggest impact on their daily lives: the services that we provide, the schools, the hospitals, the roads. That is what we do here in the Legislature. We prepare for the future in looking at what services need to be there.

Again, it's offensive to the Alberta taxpayers to see MLAs set their own wage. Once again, it's been over a year. Motion 501 was passed unanimously, yet this government has failed to move on there. Like I say, the number of MLAs that say that we need more time, I would argue that what we need more time for is as-essment on what the value is of CO<sub>2</sub> storage, what we need is more time to assess the need for $15 billion in power transmission lines, but we don't need more time to strike an independent committee to decide the future of MLAs' pay. It just doesn't need to happen.

Again, where are we on the pedestal? When I listen to some of the government MLAs, you'd think that we were on the top of the food chain because of our position. I ask the question: is there anything more honourable than serving our country in the armed services? Where do they fit in? They put their lives on the line, not just their lives on hold or a business on hold for a year or four years or 12 years. They actually go out there, and they put their lives on the line. So I just don't think it's appropriate for us to think that: "Oh, this is a great service. We should get compensated above the average of anyone else because, oh, we're government MLAs." It's so critical that we need an independent commission to do the research, to put out the reasons, as were read from B.C. – this is why they're paying these individuals this amount of money – and keeping it at arm's length so it's not quite so self-serving.

Why is Bill 202 so needed? It's because we are running major deficits at this time, the fourth year that we are running a deficit here in the province. We have a problem. We have a problem with the payment to the huge number of civil servants out there working, and we need to set the example. It's critical that we set the example. This government set a bad example by getting elected last time and giving themselves a major boost and then going and having to renegotiate contracts with unions and the teachers and the firefighters, just all the way along, and saying: well, you should only have a 2 or 3 per cent increase, but it's okay for us to have a 34 per cent increase.

The purpose of this bill is to send a message today, a clear message to say that we get it. Times are tough again. We don't want to go back to the '92, when we had billions and billions of dollars of actual deficit. We have a cash deficit in our operating. We don't want to go in debt to the people of Alberta, which is where we're running in a big hurry. It is the time to do this. Today's a good day to pass that, send a wonderful message to the taxpayers of Alberta. There will not be a better time. Every day delayed will increase the pain that we're going to have to pay and to look into the future, so we need to do it now. There's no reason to say: "Well, let's wait for a commission to come together. Strike it. We'll wait another three months, six months, a year." Today is the time to say yes to Bill 202.

I hope you'll reconsider and vote to send a loud message to the people of Alberta that we understand these are tough times, and we'll start here by cutting our pension plan, which is too lucrative.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak on Bill 202, an act that is geared towards revising downwards quite substantially the severance package currently received by MLAs in this House, and I'm pleased to indicate that it is the intention of the NDP caucus to vote in favour of this piece of legislation.

I want to say that, you know, there was some need for consideration in that regard because there is certainly one element of this bill that I have a concern about in that it talks about referring the matter back to the Members' Services Committee rather than having the matter addressed by an independent commission to establish what is a fair salary and a fair rate of compensation for MLAs. I don't believe that MLAs should be setting their own salaries. I just simply don't believe that it passes the smell test for most Albertans. It may be a function of parliamentary tradition, but I just don't think it's fair. I don't think industry should be monitoring itself when it's exploiting the environment, and I don't think MLAs should be setting their own salaries.

Notwithstanding that, here we have an opportunity to vote on this bill. The reason I will vote in favour of this bill and our caucus supports this bill is that to do otherwise is to then have us fall back to the status quo, where nothing is happening, and meanwhile we continue to receive these severance allowances. The question is, you know: are the severance allowances fair? Well, maybe they are; maybe they aren't. But here's the thing. As legislators I believe we need to be fair to the taxpayers and the citizens of this province, who elected us, and here's what we have done in the last two years in this Assembly to the taxpayers and the citizens of this province, who have elected us. We have frozen the minimum wage. We have frozen AISH payments. We have failed to revise the labour code to promote unionization, which is the most effective method of improving the rate of pay of most working people. We have stood in the way of pension improvement, genuine pension improvement, for all Canadians across this country. We have led the way in impeding low- and middle-income Albertans and Canadians from receiving a fair pension.

That's what's come out of this Legislature, so I cannot in good conscience be part of this Assembly, even though I didn't support those decisions, and quietly accept our gracious and generous package while at the same time we are doing the kinds of things to average working Alberta families that have happened as a result of decisions taken by the majority of members of this Assembly over the course of the last two years. When given the opportunity to act, to make a decision that would bring about some fairness, it's hard to avoid doing that.

Now, the history of the severance package is interesting. Many people have commented on the fact that it was brought in in 2001. I'd simply like to remind members of this House that at that time the NDP Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was the only member to vote against the package being put in place. Taking this position at this point would be consistent with a 10-year position that has been advocated by the Alberta NDP caucus.

As well, in 2009 the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood also brought a motion to the Members' Services Committee to have this matter addressed by an independent group of people, to have the question of our salaries addressed. That motion was voted down by the majority of members on the Members' Services Committee. [interjection] Sorry; I can't quite hear. There's a member talking, but I can't quite hear what he's saying.

Many people have commented on whether or not we should be talking about simply one piece of the MLA compensation package and that somehow by talking about one piece, we're being unwise and thoughtless and reckless and not true to the taxpayers and whatever the other arguments are. The fact of the matter is that three years ago there was a decision made by the Members' Services Committee to change the process for committee compensation such that many of us received roughly 20 to 35 per cent increases in our salary. It varied from member to member somewhat. Of course, that was one piece of it. I mean, that was committee compensation, and that was one piece. There are other pieces. There's salary. There's the severance allowance. There's the RRSP. There are all different pieces. But that was a clear example of us dealing with one piece, so I have some trouble with everybody now suggesting that dealing with one piece would be irresponsible.

I'm also concerned about the argument that this severance package – and I've sort of touched on this already – is designed to deal with the fact that MLAs don't receive pensions. You know, I happen to think it would be great for MLAs to have pensions, perhaps not the rich pension that was eliminated in the early '90s but some form of pension. I'd like an opportunity to maybe buy into a pension, something like that. I'm not suggesting we should have anything like what was happening in the past, but I'd love an opportunity to take my savings and try to buy into a pension because I've never had the opportunity to do that since I moved here from B.C.

That's fine, but the fact of the matter is – and one member talked about how pensions are very important, and they are very important. But as I've said before, this is a government that is actively working to limit people's access to pensions across this country. It just really doesn't sit well with me that we're going to defend this package for ourselves as a quasi-reasonable quid pro quo for having no pension and that implicit in that decision is the notion that pensions are valuable but at the same time work as hard as this government is working to stop regular Albertan and Canadian families from having access to genuine, poverty-eliminating pensions in their future. It just truly doesn't make sense to me.

I had a couple of more points here, and I'm just trying to remember what they were. I may have covered them.

It is with those points in mind that we will vote for this bill. I believe it's an important issue to address. It's been raised in a variety of contexts a variety of different times by different folks. Although some folks, for instance in the Official Opposition caucus, are suggesting they don't want to vote for it because of the piecemeal element of it or because it would put the matter back to the Members' Services Committee, at the end of the day I think that we need to do something. I think that by failing to vote for it, we support the status quo, and I just simply don't believe that in the current context that is a fair decision to make on behalf of regular Albertans.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. You've got about one minute.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for noting that I do only have one minute to speak. I can't say everything I wanted to say, but I'll say some things that I believe are important.

I believe that we do have a very important job as MLAs, and I think that we have a big responsibility in making sure that we have the proper compensation, not too big and not too small but just right. I do also believe that our current approach to MLA compensation is already a cost-efficient and responsible method. Before that minute is up, I would just like to point out that if we were in Nova Scotia, we would be able to have pension compensation and benefits of $100,000 per year after our service, but we're not in Nova Scotia. We have a more reasonable way of having compensation after we serve.

Mr Speaker, I would just like to add that I did support Motion 501 by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. I look forward to having that go forward. I would also like to thank the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for his responsible actions in bringing this very important issue forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 16 members have been able to participate this afternoon.

I'll now call on the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to close the debate.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members who participated in the debate. Obviously, I'm somewhat disappointed with how it would seem that most of the members are going to be voting against this bill. I would commend the hon. members for participating in the debate and specifically my Wildrose colleagues and, of course, the hon. member from the NDP caucus for explaining why it is so important that we show fiscal leadership as we move forward and that this is a good start.

There have been some comments made that do need to be corrected regarding this committee. As we all know, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East had a motion passed saying that we should have an independent committee look at legislative compensation and benefits. That was over a year ago. There has been some suggestion in here that the process for that committee has just been wending its way through the Members' Services Committee and so forth, and that is just simply not the case. It is just simply not true.

In the Members' Services Committee prior to the last meeting of the Members' Services Committee there became some uncertainty as to what the status of this committee was at that current time. We had the Member for West Yellowhead say, you know, that we're just waiting on the opposition members to give us some names for this independent committee. I'm sure I can speak on behalf of the NDP caucus and the Wildrose caucus when I say: absolutely, we have not received anything, any formal request, any request at all. We don't even know what we would want. We don't know the parameters. We don't have any terms of reference whatsoever from the government side on this matter. To say that we've had that request is absolute malarkey.

I go specifically to the Hansard notes from two meetings ago. When this came up, the Speaker frankly and truthfully spoke exactly on what the status was of this committee at that time. He says:

This is the Legislative Assembly, and this is a committee of the Legislative Assembly. We are not the government of Alberta.

The motion urged the government to establish a committee.

The government of Alberta is, essentially, the cabinet.

My understanding from previous comments made in this particular meeting by [an hon. member] is that some discussion was held between the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition, and they were holding discussions. Then somebody asked [the Member for West Yellowhead]: well, does that mean other people can provide some names as well? I do believe that's where [the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere] got that information. It was very clear. I have received no indication from anyone in the government that we are to be looking at this matter. This is not at this point in time a matter of the Members' Services Committee.

I'm a little ambivalent about this. I indicated before that we always do our assessments. We always get everything up to date in terms of comparatives across the country, but we've done nothing further. I'm just pending, awaiting somebody to tell me that this is what we should be doing. Then I'll put it together. That's where we're at.

So it's very clear – very clear – from the Hansard, and we've received no correspondence from the government, from the Members' Services Committee, from anybody regarding such an independent committee. When we receive a letter from the government or from the Members' Services Committee, from whomever, on how they would like us to participate, we will gladly participate at that point. But what really has happened here, clearly, is that the government is embarrassed that they're voting against this bill, and they're looking to blame someone other than themselves for voting against this bill. The fact of the matter is that we have done nothing on this issue over this particular Legislature the entire time we've been here. Nothing.

Well, we have done something. We've seen salaries go up 34 per cent, and that of course was done behind closed doors, in cabinet. On top of that, because of that 34 per cent increase, transition allowances will of course go through the roof because they're based on the top three years of average salary. That's the record of this government, to raise their salaries indiscriminately.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-East, we've dealt with the tablings situation, right? No liquor bottles in the Assembly. Please proceed.

Mr. Amery: Yes, sir. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not tabling right now.

Alcohol Warning Labels

502. Mr. Amery moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation to make warning labels mandatory on all alcohol sold at retail outlets in the province.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 502. I'm proposing this motion because I feel that the potential adverse effects of excess alcohol consumption make it necessary to label these products effectively. Perhaps in the future I will also wish to introduce a motion that seeks to address a larger and more serious issue at hand, impaired driving.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, Motion 502 urges the government “to introduce legislation to make warning labels mandatory on all alcohol sold at retail outlets in the province.” The institution of alcohol labelling in and of itself is not the end goal of this motion. The primary intention of Motion 502 is to be a necessary first step to raise awareness of prevention of impaired driving. Another purpose is to make citizens aware of the adverse effects of alcohol consumption, especially when consumed in excess or carelessly.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 502 also intends to inform citizens who are in the highest risk group such as minors and pregnant women of the harmful effects that even a little alcohol consumption can have. If consumed in a responsible manner, alcohol poses a much lesser threat than if it is consumed inappropriately. Labelling alcohol would act as an educational tool for those who choose to consume it. If consumers are already aware of the adverse effects, the warning labels will act as a visual reminder.

Mr. Speaker, this labelling initiative seeks to deter at-risk consumers like those who pose a threat by driving impaired as well as those who consume to excess or irresponsibly. The proposed warning messages on the labels should warn of the harmful effects alcohol can have on its user and have a visibility profile similar to those on tobacco products. These warning messages would intend to be precise and consistent while having the visibility to attract the consumer’s attention.

The health-related effects of excessive or irresponsible alcohol consumption can be rather serious. I think that goes without saying. In addition, Mr. Speaker, alcohol is dangerous if consumed while or before driving or taking certain medications and carries a strong risk of dependence.

Mr. Speaker, a number of countries around the world have moved to legislate warning labels on alcohol containers in their jurisdictions. Most of these jurisdictions do so with the intention of educating the public on specific health effects. Among these is the United States, which has had government-mandated warning labels in place since 1989.

The Yukon territory and Northwest Territories are currently the only two Canadian jurisdictions to mandate such labels. The labels in the Yukon are fluorescent pink or orange and are designed specifically to attract attention. Introduced due to public concerns about FAS, these labels have warnings that alert individuals that drinking alcohol during pregnancy can cause birth defects. A survey conducted three years ago, after the introduction of the warning labels, indicated more than 90 per cent of Yukon women were aware of the FAS risks of drinking alcohol during pregnancy.

Perhaps somewhat like the intent of the alcohol warning labels in other jurisdictions, Motion 502 seeks to initially address a much bigger issue at hand. That issue is impaired driving and the deadly effects that accompany it. While deaths involving impaired drivers have decreased in recent years according to MADD Canada statistics – Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have Denise Dubyk, MADD Canada’s national president, with us here today watching this debate from the members’ gallery – our province still sees among the highest impaired driving deaths per capita in the country. The culture around the consumption of alcohol must change in order to further decrease these statistics.

With this in mind, MADD Canada has outlined a number of recommendations to reduce the number of impaired driving cases. Among these is introducing a mandatory seven-day administrative vehicle impoundment program for suspended drivers. Another recommendation involves making alcohol ignition interlocks mandatory for all impaired driving offenders. What this would specifically do is prevent a driver from starting his or her vehicle if the device detects a preset level of alcohol.

Mr. Speaker, realizing the benefit of alcohol warning labels is merely a first step and a catalyst to providing change to the bigger issue at stake, the issue of impaired driving. The implementation of these labels would not come at an overt cost. Motion 502 would require all retail alcohol distributors to put warning labels directly on the product, and the cost of the labels would be assumed by the distributor. When you consider that the distributors must already label the products, adding one more label should not greatly add to the cost. In fact, one Alberta distributor already supports placing warning labels on alcohol products. Ravinder Minhas, owner of the Alberta-based Mountain Crest Brewing Company, already places warning labels on his products through his own initiative. Mr. Minhas does so, as he said, because it is the right thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 502 does not intend to harm or otherwise intrude on those who consume alcohol responsibly. Likewise, Motion 502 does not intend to harm businesses or liquor distributors. There are many Albertans who drink alcohol in a moderate or otherwise responsible fashion. This would be especially vital to help educate both minors and pregnant women that any alcohol consumption can be seriously hazardous to their health.

Mr. Speaker, a Canadian community health survey published by AADAC in 2005 indicated that 9.4 per cent of Alberta women reported consuming alcohol during their last pregnancy. When you consider the fact that women who drink alcohol during pregnancy place themselves at an extremely high risk of having a child with FAS, zero alcohol consumption is clearly what is best for pregnant women. The sad fact is that some women are not even aware of this. A warning label could help educate these soon-to-be mothers on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, when looking at statistics related to the question of whether or not warning labels really work, one need look no further than a recent study of Ontario smokers. The survey demonstrated that 91 per cent recalled having read the warning labels and demonstrated good knowledge of the content. This same survey found the respondents reported having a higher intention to quit upon seeing the often graphic warnings. What these findings indicate is that warning labels and the multifaceted messages that they can include can be effective.

With Motion 502 we could take a positive step towards raising awareness of the adverse effects of excessive or irresponsible alcohol consumption. This could at the very least help to reduce the number of FAS births by better educating soon-to-be mothers.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to propose anything too dramatic or too unrealistic, nor do I wish to have this harm business or liquor distributors. I believe Motion 502 to be a very moderate and realistic step towards better educating the Alberta public and raising awareness of alcohol misuse and the dangers of impaired driving.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would invite all my colleagues to join in the discussion surrounding Motion 502, and I hope they vote in favour of this motion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This particular Motion 502, for which I am very thankful to the hon. Member for Calgary-East, follows very much along the line of a former motion put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, which called for cigarettes and cigarette advertising, basically, to be no longer visible. That’s why, for example, you no longer find pharmacies selling smokes and why, when you go into garages, cigarettes, et cetera, have to be behind closed cupboards so as not to potentially appeal to individuals and to encourage them to develop better habits.

In terms of developing good habits, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure whether I was a fast learner or a slow learner, but it basically took me my first year of university to realize that smoking wasn't meant for me although I thought having a pipe and a goatee along with my blazer emblazoned with the University of Calgary colours would make me absolutely appealing to all women who trotted around the campus. But I found, after continuously sucking on this pipe and inhaling for a period of about two and a half hours, when I opened the door to my car and fell out, that this was not a good habit to pick.

Likewise, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that I learned the alcohol lesson very early on, in my first year of university, without compromising my safety or that of my date, but I must admit that my father's Ford Galaxie 500 was worse for wear than the driver who left it positioned poorly on an island. I was fortunate. I learned my lesson early on, and no one's health or safety was compromised by my individual actions.

Going forward, I am very concerned, as the hon. Member for Calgary-East is, about the impact of alcohol, particularly behind the wheel, where the greatest number of accidents and fatalities are caused. The stupidity of the driver and the stupidity of the passengers that potentially get in the car with that driver: we're of the assumption that at least if they're of a legal driving age, they potentially know better. The unborn child has no such say; therefore, encouraging not only women but men to realize the harmful effects to a child of the consumption of alcohol would go greatly towards the elimination of fetal alcohol syndrome, which can at best be managed, but so much better would the world be if it were absolutely eliminated.

One of the things that I think most people, especially of my mature vintage, would notice is shows like Mad Men, where the smoking in the workplace is so obvious, and they almost shine a spotlight on the pregnant women smoking their cigarettes or consuming alcohol. We say to ourselves: "Well, that was then. How could they not have known? What were they thinking?" That was the circumstance that people of my vintage grew up with in the late '50s and early '60s, yet when we look at that program, it seems so obviously wrong to the majority of individuals who went through that time period.

Anything we can do such as the labelling on alcohol, as proposed in Motion 502 by the hon. Member for Calgary-East, and getting that message out can only do good. It certainly cannot do any harm. I know as a schoolteacher who spent a great deal of my time in junior high the risks that junior high students would take. Given the opportunity to get behind a wheel, as they grew older, I've lost children, students, to death behind an automobile wheel. I've also had my grade 9 students participate in AADAC programming, where they realize that alcohol and driving or drugs and driving don't mix. So if this message gets out to even one mother or a responsible father, who is responsible for not only his child's well-being but his family's well-being, if this message saves one child, then this Motion 502 is valuable.

I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing it forward, and I would hope that more young people learn their life lessons before the age of 19, which it took me to realize going forward. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and share some of my comments on Motion 502, but before I do that, I would first like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing this idea forward to the Legislature today. I believe this idea should generate some spirited debate.

This motion proposes to urge the government to make warning labels mandatory on all alcohol sold in the province. These labels would function in a similar way to the warnings we see on tobacco products, informing consumers about the potential negative consequences of alcohol use.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that responsible alcohol use is acceptable within our society, and I believe that an informed adult should be able to consume alcohol provided that he or she do so in a manner that does not harm themselves or others, as in cases of alcohol abuse and drunk driving.

With this, however, I also agree that people should be informed about the potential negative consequences of alcohol use. As it stands now in Alberta, we have several programs designed to inform people about the dangers of alcohol use and abuse as well as several programs designed to help people who have succumbed to these afflictions.

5:30

Programs and organizations like Alcoholics Anonymous and Mothers Against Drunk Driving are all designed to stop or treat alcohol misuse. In addition, the government regularly issues warnings against drinking and driving, drinking while pregnant, or drinking while under the effects of drugs. Mr. Speaker, the issue with these programs and warning labels is not that they don't work; rather, the issue is cost. As large as our advertising programs may be, they will never reach every consumer of alcohol, and as effective as our treatment options are, the cost of preventing someone from becoming alcohol dependent will always be less than treatment. As such is the belief, the strength of this motion rests on its cost-effectiveness.

Motion 502 would essentially require that all retail distributors of alcohol be required to put warning labels directly on the product in question. The cost of these labels would be borne by the retail provider but would not greatly add to their cost of production because they already put labels on their products. The cost of developing the specific labels would be negligible and could be borne by either the government or by the alcohol industry. In fact, other jurisdictions in Canada already have this requirement, so the cost of developing these labels could be next to nothing.

Mr. Speaker, with the cost of this labelling program well established, the question then becomes determining whether or not these labels are effective. Looking at other jurisdictions around the world, it is apparent that programs like the one proposed by Motion 502 are on the rise. For example, in 1993 only nine countries had alcohol warning labels, but by 2006 this number had grown to 16, including nations like the United States, Finland, and Brazil.

Closer to home the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories have enacted measures similar to the ones proposed by Motion 502. In fact, according to a survey conducted in the Yukon, three years of labelling was required. Over 90 per cent of the drinking population were aware of the risks associated with drinking while pregnant. This survey did not suggest, however, that people stopped drinking while pregnant as a result of this label.

The end result, in my mind, is that we have a proposal that may or may not be effective, but it is one that has grown in popularity around the world. Perhaps the most important consideration is cost. The cost to implement this program, I would say, would be minimal for both government and industry. Even if the program is not completely effective, we may in the end get good value for our money.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I will conclude my comments on this motion except to again thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for introducing this idea. I believe that a thorough debate of this issue is in the interest of all Albertans. I'd like to thank all the members who are going to speak about this issue. I look forward to the remainder of this debate.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a privilege to rise and speak to Motion 502, brought forward by the Member for Calgary-East. I appreciate this motion very much and congratulate him for bringing it to this floor for us to debate. I do note that I will be speaking in favour of this motion as I believe it is an idea that is, in my view, long overdue and can have some benefits for many people in our society, actually the entire society if you look at it like that.

Let's face it. Alcohol is a legally sold product that governments earn revenues on. It has been thus, and it shall be thus for a long time to come. But with that comes, in my view, some responsibility by government to provide some sort of warning to individuals out there who are about to use and consume this product. Now, it's very easy for us to sort of rationalize and say: "Everyone knows that binge drinking is bad for you. Everyone knows that pregnant women shouldn't drink. Everyone knows this, that, and the other thing." But the fact is that I'm not so sure everyone does know. Okay? The simple fact of the matter is that if they do know and they're willfully blind to it, I don't think that is really one of those things that is good either.

The government being there to remind them of the fact that this could be destroying their lives and, in fact, destroying the lives of others is one of those things that government has to do. I think that these labels will serve that purpose. If a person, say, who's between 18 and 30 is consuming far too much alcohol and maybe this helps him or her realize by the end of their 30s that, well, this can't continue, and this is one of those small things that seeing that label for 12 years leads him or her to a better decision, well, that's one of those things. Or if a woman who may have been a heavy user of alcohol becomes pregnant, well, then she changes her ways as a result of seeing that for the last seven years.

Also, for our beginning drinkers. We heard the MLA for Calgary-Varsity say that many people when they're younger tend to imbibe a little more heavily than when they're older. I might have been guilty of that a time or two myself, Mr. Speaker. Nevertheless, maybe having that would have given me some cause for recognition that an extended stay on this would lead to health implications. You can see there are a variety of upside benefits for this, you know.

Always the argument is what the cost is. In my view, the cost to industry for switching labels over would be a one-time expense, possibly no more, maybe a touch more. It would provide people with information on an ongoing basis on an important issue. Frankly, from what I've seen from the statistics, Albertans for whatever reason consume more alcohol per capita than, I believe, any other province, possibly because we're younger, possibly for a whole host of whatever reasons. That has ramifications for our different government-run programs: the education system, the health care system.

Statistics in Alberta on FAS – that's fetal alcohol syndrome – for people being born in this province are, again, startlingly high when you look at comparisons around Canada. What are the reasons? Who knows? But there are definitely concerns around alcohol. Our drinking and driving rates are higher than generally other provinces around Canada. A whole host of reasons. We're not saying right, wrong, or otherwise.

What we're saying is that the government is involved in the provision of alcohol. It is legal for us to do so, and it's legal for our citizens to consume it. Let's fire a warning on there. Let's make sure that no one can say: well, nobody told me. If by chance they honestly were not of the view that this could happen, well, now they're assuming more personal responsibility sent their way and some possibility for some help along the way.

Those are my points. I think it's a great initiative, and I again thank the Member for Calgary-East for bringing this forward. I urge all members to support it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, followed by the MLA for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to join the debate today on Motion 502, brought by the Member for Calgary-East. I will keep my comments brief, but I first would like to apologize to this House and also to the Member for Calgary-East because it was me who, in fact, gave him the bottle that he referred to earlier, that I found when I was on vacation in Hawaii. I saw on the bottom of the bottle the warnings, and I knew that we were having this one. So if there is any scorn, it comes to me and not to the Member for Calgary-East.

This is a motion, Mr. Speaker. It's a nonbinding, symbolic vote we have. We debate it for about an hour. It's not a bill like the previous bill that we were discussing. It's just an indication. It's just a debate going forward. I think that if this were something that we would want going forward as an actual government policy through regulation or through legislation – be it a private member's bill or a government bill – there are some things, in fact, that we just would need to go and ask ourselves.

Now, Denise sitting up there has visited me before, talking about the many dangers of drinking and driving. When I went to university – and yes, I did have a few bubbly pops in university as well – we knew it was not socially acceptable to drink and drive. I think that MADD Canada, SADD, and other people as well have done many, many good things in making that less socially acceptable. Nonetheless, Alberta does have a very high drinking and driving rate. Drinking and driving or fetal alcohol syndrome or anything negative from alcohol, where you have one too many: one too many is more than is acceptable.

I do want to ask a couple of questions here as well, and perhaps the Member for Calgary-East can address this in his closing remarks. Before we institute any regulation – we have many regulations in this province – we need to always do a cost-benefit analysis, Mr. Speaker. We put in regulations, and sometimes they don't have exact costs associated with them as far as outlay of government funds, but at the same time they can impose a negative economic externality upon others. That's not a bad thing. We have a lot of good safety regulations in this province. Some say we need more; some say we need less. Regardless, we need to ask ourselves: is the negative externality that that may impose upon consumers, producers, distributors, in fact, actually worth it? I don't know the answer to that question. We need to go and look and learn from other jurisdictions.

I mentioned that I was in Hawaii when I saw the bottle itself. The question, again, that I would ask is: have the warning labels on the bottles made a reduction outside of the margin of error on the rate of things like fetal alcohol syndrome or the rates of drinking and driving? If it has, then it's worth going through. If it has not, well, maybe we should look at other ways that might be more cost-effective to the consumer before moving forward. I don't know how much this is going to cost, even if it does actually cost. They say, though, that producers will pay for it. Well, of course, that's passed on to the consumer as well.

The other thing is that a lot of alcohol is imported. I know some people here like to drink Alberta Springs. I don't. But most of the alcohol is imported to this province. We'd have to go and see how that would affect the importing of what is, in fact, a legal product.

Mr. Speaker, I favour a lot of individual responsibility. I want to applaud Ravinder Minhas at Mountain Crest Brewing for having darn good labels on this. I think it's good leadership they are taking, to go and put this on on a voluntary basis. But if this were to go in a bill, I would just want to see the hard evidence. I think the public would respect that as well as to where it, in fact, is going.

I want to again commend the Member for Calgary-East for actually bringing this up because this is a worthwhile debate to be having, the fact that we're drawing attention to this. The more attention that you can draw to the negative effects of drinking and driving or things like fetal alcohol syndrome, I think, the better, Mr. Speaker. So he should be commended for that.

Those are my comments. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to congratulate the Member for Calgary-East, but I'd like to congratulate him on actually having drawn a low number for the motion so that, in fact, he could bring this forward.

In my mind this is a no-brainer, to use the colloquialism of the kids of today. It really is a no-brainer. Drinking and driving has not been beaten either here or in many other places. However, in Europe there really is zero tolerance. We don't have zero tolerance here. If you get caught drinking and driving in Europe, your car is gone; you walk home. If you're in Europe, you'll also notice that people congregate in different ways. There are often little pubs, for lack of a better word, in many of the small communities, and because people's houses are smaller or they live in apartments, often the partying is done in these small pubs. It's just a given. You can always pick who that designated driver is. It's not even up for discussion. Someone is the designated driver.

One of the other things that I think about putting a label on is that maybe it won't be understood the first time. Maybe it's just: oh, well, there's something else. But repeat, repeat, repeat. After a while someone who is thinking will know what that label means. They may not have to read it; they'll know if it's red, this is what it means or if it's pink or neon or whatever it is. It will be repeated.

I think one of the worst side effects of alcohol, particularly for our women who are pregnant – look at our jails. Look at the number of people that are in our jails that suffer from mental health issues. Many, many, many of them have fetal alcohol syndrome, which is something that we didn't know about or how to actually evaluate it. This information is coming forward all the time.

I would like to see the kids of today educated in grade 5 to know and start talking about the issue of: do not drink if you're going to get pregnant. I know that there are a lot of careless pregnancies that happen out there, but in this day and age of reliable birth control there is absolutely no reason for young girls to get pregnant accidentally or whatever excuse they use at the time. If they start in grade 5, they'll know simply: you've decided to have your baby; do not drink. More often than not the damage is done in the first trimester, and a lot these young girls don't even know they're pregnant. It's a huge, huge issue. The kids of today, through the education in the school, know what green means. They know: don't smoke. They know: don't eat junk. They know: eat your veggies. They know, "Wear a helmet," even if this is a law at this point. They know these things. It's through the education system that they know it. I would like to see part of the education around these.

Also, they would learn in school that this red label, however they're going to do it, is a label that's warning you to use alcohol very, very responsibly. There's nothing wrong with having wine, whatever. I think probably we all learned. I think that first-year university is when many young people learn some of the things that they can't handle and shouldn't be doing. However, it's fun at the time, and away they go. It's all part of the growing up process.

Fetal alcohol is a huge, huge issue. This is something that cannot be reversed, but with proper supervision victims can be helped to be functional in society. Many, many, many of these young people will never be able to handle a job, so we are looking at gigantic social and health care costs in the future. Anything that can be like a flashing sign, a flashing warning sign, I think is good, so I would certainly take pride in being able to support this. At least it will push the conversation forward. As it's been pointed out, it's not a bill, but it does bring the conversation forward. It does make people think.

Again, thank you to the Member for Calgary-East. This is an exceptionally important discussion that must happen.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today and share some comments on Motion 502, proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. This motion urges the government to consider legislation whereby alcoholic beverages would have mandatory warning labels.

Mr. Speaker, alcohol abuse is a problem that affects many Albertans. A Canadian community health survey taken in 2008 shows that one-quarter of males and 10 per cent of females in Canada are classified as heavy drinkers. More problematic, however, is the number of heavy drinkers in younger demographics. For example, the same surveys showed that 47 per cent of males aged 18 to 24 are classified as heavy drinkers. There is no simple solution to reducing the incidence of heavy drinking. After all, adults have the right to consume alcohol as long as it is done in a safe manner. I believe this motion's idea may help change certain problematic drinking behaviours.

There is an obvious parallel between the legislation this motion proposes and legislation which requires tobacco products to contain warning labels, often of a graphic nature. In fact, Canada was the first country to enact legislation to require such labels, and now most western countries require them as well. While definite conclusions have not been established, the general consensus is that the effectiveness of these labels depends largely on the size and whether or not they include pictures. Given this research I believe that the efficacy of warning labels on alcoholic beverages would also depend on the size and type of warning.

I think the fact that warning labels on certain consumer products are useful in curbing their use is a bit surprising. After all, one would think that an individual's decision to smoke or drink is made before they see the product. However, repeated exposure to such warning labels may actually get the message across that consuming this product is dangerous.

Mr. Speaker, I also believe that including such labels may educate some people who may be unaware of some of the hazards associated with alcohol consumption. For example, some individuals may be unaware of the fact that alcohol consumption can cause fetal alcohol syndrome. Furthermore, even those that may be aware of the link between alcohol consumption during pregnancy and fetal alcohol syndrome may not be aware of the fact that there are no accepted safe levels for consumption of alcohol during pregnancy. So I think that a warning label could be an effective tool that reminds Albertans of the risks associated with alcohol consumption during pregnancy.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that warning labels on food products are generally considered to be the federal government's jurisdiction. While this does not mean our government is absolved of any responsibility with respect to this issue, it does mean that there may be other ways to achieve the intended result. Rather than proposing legislation, for example, perhaps we could work with other provinces and the federal government to encourage such legislation federally.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks. I would like to again thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing forward this idea. I think he has shown very good leadership on moving this idea forward. I'd like to mention that in Alberta there are more than 100 Albertans who die in drinking and driving related accidents. For that one reason alone I think that we should support this motion. I think that this discussion addresses a public health concern, and further consideration of the matter could be useful.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and speak about Motion 502, which proposes to mandate labels on alcoholic beverage containers, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Do I get to speak until 5 to 6?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, according to Standing Order 8(3) there are 55 minutes allowed for motions and five minutes for closing. We started at 5:11, which means that 55 minutes would be 6:06. We stop at 6 o'clock. Therefore, it will carry over until next week. Then we will debate for six minutes on Motion 502, and then we're done, and there will be no other motion next week. There can only be one motion per week.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will speak until 5 to 6 in hopes that Moe will be able to speak to finally end it.

I just wanted to say that I'm in favour of this and that we do have a choice here. Maybe we can even alternate here in terms of what actual problems with alcohol we most want to address with this. Different countries do it in different ways. The one thing that I doubt will work is in terms of heavy drinking. Heavy drinkers have much bigger problems than a little bit of text will address. I'm hoping that FAS is something that we can address very well and, of course, the drinking and driving.

In hopes that the mover of this motion could possibly finish up with his final words, I will sit down. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and join the debate, if only for a few minutes. As the minister responsible for the AGLC, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, I thought I should rise and give a couple of comments and my thoughts. I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods' assertion that food labelling and product labelling is often the purview of the federal government. It could be argued that that would be the case here although we could, I suppose, do something provincially.

I have to say that I'm really torn, Mr. Speaker, and I'm kind of on the fence. I think I might lean slightly at the moment towards support but only because it's a motion that's not binding on the government. I do think it's an issue that we need to consider.

First of all, as the minister responsible for the AGLC, I need to stress that alcohol sales in this province are a business. They are not the purview of the government. We're talking about private businesspeople that manufacture, wholesale, and then retail alcohol. It's a government-regulated business. The government is involved in the movement, the shipping, of alcoholic products to liquor stores, but they are private businesses. Any time that we put costs anywhere in that system, they only wind up in one place. It doesn't matter if we add costs to our own, to the manufacturers', or to the retailers', the cost winds up in the consumer's product. Whether we have to raise taxes to pay for it or the prices have to go up, the consumer pays for all of it.

I need to point out that the cost would be significant. You're talking about thousands of products and thousands of different types of drinking bottles. Next time you walk into a liquor store, have a look at the front counter. There are hundreds of tiny shot glasses and odd-shaped little drink containers, and all of them would require a label. Then some of the products arrive pre-wrapped, you know, those Christmas gift packages and stuff. Those are shipped from some other place. So there are a few problems, and the costs are not insignificant. I'm a little tempted by the argument, though.

Mr. Speaker, I never bring a minister to my constituency without taking them to Sonja Schmidt's house in High Level. Her entire house except for her master bedroom is devoted to the care of FASD, fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, children. She and her late husband, George, did that for years and years. They adopted something like 30 kids and cared for hundreds in their house. She does that solely on contract to one of the First Nations up there.

When I'm finished there, I take them over to 10005 House, which is a shelter for people that are severely in need of emergency shelter and who otherwise, quite simply, would freeze to death in High Level.

I'm very moved by the impact of alcohol on the lives of those people, as all the ministers always are. Most of them, quite frankly, are reduced to tears by the end of that tour. I'm also mindful of the fact that none of those people would be helped by a warning label on a bottle. I don't believe that for a second. Much as the Member for Calgary-East talked about the warning labels on cigarettes, the people that were aware of the warning label, what it said and everything else, there's some irony in the fact that they were smoking while they were telling you that they knew what was on the warning label. I think the case is similar with alcohol.

Impaired driving is absolutely an issue, and I thank the great people of MADD for the work that they do. But sometimes I think we're at the point where we really need to do something on the enforcement end, on the other end of that. The education end is covered in a lot of places.

I'm kind of torn. I'm basically prepared to support this motion because it furthers the discussion. It's nonbinding at this point. But I can't go beyond that without some solid evidence of what good there is in this: what it's going to accomplish, how effective the warning labels are going to be, and who's really going to listen to them. The problems that I see out there I don't think are going to be solved by a warning label.

I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing this up. It's a discussion that always has to happen. I thank MADD for the wonderful work that they do. I honestly do think we have to do something in this area. I'll support this, but beyond that we need a thorough discussion with more statistics before we move on.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, it is 6 o'clock, and according to Standing Order 4(2) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

There are 10 minutes left for debate on this motion. That will happen next week.

The policy field committee will reconvene tonight at 6:30 for consideration of the main estimates of Service Alberta. This meeting will be video streamed.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 8, 2011

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you 52 bright young students from my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie and Ellerslie Campus elementary and junior high school. They are here with their teachers to enjoy a week at the Legislature. Joining them today are their teachers Mark Campeau, Blair Faulkner, and Tom Klimaszewski. At this time I would ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly leaders from Alberta's francophone community who participated this morning in a ceremony in the Legislature rotunda as part of Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, a national celebration of French culture and history.

The executives are from the Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta, or ACFA. The ACFA is the provincial organization representing all francophones. We also have members from the Campus Saint-Jean choir. Forty choristers from the Chorale Saint-Jean lent their amazing voices this morning to the ceremony in the rotunda. The group has been invited to tour France this summer, and in 2012 they will be hosting more than 1,000 choristers right here in Edmonton for the Choralies Internationales, the most important international French-language choir competition.

The Alberta government is proud of its strong relations with the francophone community in making sure French-speaking Albertans have access to the services and resources they need. We also appreciate the good work that they do in representing the province across Canada and around the world.

I would ask our guests to stand as I introduce them. Dolorèse Nolette, Denis Perreux, Laurier Fagnan, Casey Edmunds, Marcelline Forestier, and Denis Fortin. Also joining them on this special day is a member of my staff, M. Denis Tardif, executive director of the Francophone Secretariat. These individuals are in the public gallery today. Please join me in offering them the warmest welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure today to introduce two gentlemen who are very familiar to members of this House, the chairman of the Energy Resources Conservation Board, Mr. Dan McFadyen, and his sidekick, Rich Jones. I'd ask them to stand and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I don't get as many people up from Calgary as I would like. In fact, I'm thinking of adding something to my newsletter, inviting more of my constituents up here. But today I do have a constituent who is here. He works with the Calgary Zoo, as you know the second largest zoo in Canada. He works on the whooping crane, building the population of the whooping crane. If everyone could please join me in welcoming Mr. Dwight Knapik. If you could rise, Dwight.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. One of the real privileges of being the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is that I get to be the MLA for the University of Alberta, and I'm honoured today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly some special guests from the university. They represent one of that institution's most notable organizations. It's known as WISEST, which stands for Women in Scholarship, Engineering, Science and Technology. I will be rising later today to make a statement in recognition of International Women's Day and the important role that WISEST plays, but for now let me make the introductions: Denise Hemmings, who is chair of WISEST; Grace Ennis, who is the WISEST co-ordinator; Kerry Humphrey, who is the WISEST assistant co-ordinator; Jen Duffy, who is the WISEST outreach co-ordinator; and George Pavlich, who is associate vice-president of research at the University of Alberta. Please stand, and please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you well know, today is the 100th anniversary of International Women's Day, and there are two sets of introductions that I would like to do. The first is a representative from an organization called Equal Voice, which is a not-for-profit devoted to the still-bold idea that we need to get more women elected to every level of government in Canada. That is Sandra Ngo. Sandra, please rise. She's a third-year nutrition and food science student at the U of A. She found out through another member at the U of A, Meagan McLavish, who was not able to join us. I note in the paper today that Equal Voice is sponsoring a speaker in Ottawa for a conference, Leveraging Women's Leadership for the 21st Century: Changing the Game. That speaker says: today it's understood that if we only use men, we lose a lot of potential and opportunities. Thank you very much, Sandra, for joining us today and representing Equal Voice. Please join me in welcoming her.

My second introduction is of two members of a very long-standing organization that has been very supportive of women and women's status in our community. Jacquie Foord is the fairly recent chief executive officer of the YWCA here in Edmonton. With her is Amber Niemeier, who is the communicating and market manager. I'll have them rise. As you know, the YW has been working for women in Canada and Alberta for many, many, many years. Please join me in welcoming these two representatives here today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my distinct pleasure to introduce to you a couple of my friends who are members of the francophone community. One is originally from the Haitian community, and the other one is originally from the Congo. Mr. Amson Saintimé is the president of the Haitian community services centre, and Mr. Sugar-Eric Yumba is the president of the SOS Amitié friend association. I would like our colleagues to give them warm applause from this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you have an introduction on behalf of your colleague.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona I would like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly our guests from the Sexual Assault Voices of Edmonton, also known as SAVE. SAVE is a coalition of sexual assault centres, educational organizations, community members, and the police. It works to change societal attitudes about sexual assault through awareness-raising campaigns that place responsibility on the perpetrators of sexual assault and challenge rape myths and victim blaming. I would ask our guests to rise as I read their names so that they can receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly. They are Dorian Smith, Laura Collison, Lise Gotell, Monique Méthot, Pragya Sharma, and Cindy Davies. Welcome. Thank you.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children and Youth Services.

1:40 International Women's Day

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured and privileged to rise today and recognize March 8 as International Women's Day. This is a very special day as it is the 100th anniversary of International Women's Day. Today we celebrate, recognize, and honour the many extraordinary achievements of women in Alberta, Canada, and around the world. Our province proudly acknowledges this day and reaffirms our commitment to the equality, freedom, and advancement of women.

Alberta's Famous Five – Emily Murphy, Louise McKinney, Nellie McClung, Irene Parlby, and Henrietta Muir Edwards – helped pave the way, Mr. Speaker, for future generations of women in Alberta and across Canada. My colleagues and I appreciate the great contribution that all women have made to make this day possible.

Canada's theme is Girls' Rights Matter, which focuses on the importance of equality and access to opportunity for all girls and women. We know that a young woman who enjoys equality has a greater likelihood of being self-confident and aware of her own potential and of being empowered to access the education, training, and career opportunities that will contribute to her success in life. We also know, Mr. Speaker, that women still have many difficult challenges, which is why Alberta continues to take action on women's issues.

Women have told us that better access to quality, affordable child care would make a real difference for their families. Our Premier heard this request, and over the past three years we have created more than 18,000 new child care spaces. This means that women and their families now have access to more than 90,000 spaces across the province, and we also have child care subsidies to help lower income women with the cost of quality care for their children.

We are working hard to help prevent family violence.

Our Persons Case scholarship is awarded each year to students whose studies contribute to the advancement of women.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that incredible progress has been made, but we know that more still needs to be done to address challenges such as poverty and inequality. To help address these challenges, we work nationally with the federal-provincial-territorial groups on women's issues for aboriginal women, economic equality, and human trafficking.

Today across Alberta, Mr. Speaker, many communities are celebrating the achievements of women, and they're shining their light on their efforts as they encourage the next generation to follow in their footsteps.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask that all members of the Assembly join me in honouring the contributions, the talents, the leadership of women across the province as they are a true inspiration to all of us.

The Speaker: On behalf of the Official Opposition, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A hundred years ago, as the world struggled to come to terms with rapid population growth and technological progress, socialist parties in Europe and the Americas spearheaded an international movement to force recognition of the inherent right of women to vote, work, and be free of gender-based discrimination. Several years later Albertans elected Louise McKinney to our Legislature, the first woman to achieve this feat across what was then the British Empire. More milestones followed here in Alberta, across Canada, and around the world as women asserted their rights throughout the course of the 20th century.

Now recognized and supported by the United Nations, International Women's Day has grown in importance year by year with thousands of events held worldwide annually.

We have had, however briefly, a woman Prime Minister. We've had female Premiers, Lieutenant Governors, Governors General. Women lawyers, judges, businesswomen, and administrators are now, if not common, at least present in greater numbers than ever before. We haven't had any women Premiers in Alberta yet, but that could very easily change sometime in the next few months.

There has been definite progress, a century's worth, but the journey to true equality for women continues. Women still earn less than men for doing the same work. Women are still under-represented in politics and far less likely to serve as CEOs. Worldwide, women do two-thirds of all human work yet earn only 10 per cent of the total income and own 1 per cent of the world's property. Women are far more likely than men to be the victims of domestic abuse and sexual assault. The sexual behaviour of women is judged by a far different and hypocritical standard than that of men. Women continue to be objectified and stereotyped across the media. Positive portrayals of women are still far outnumbered by these regressive stereotypes. Even in the developed economies women are still risking their careers when they become pregnant. The list of barriers and struggles goes on, and that's why International Women's Day is as much a call for continued action as a celebration.

I firmly believe that when it comes to these issues, the instigators of change are middle-aged women and young people, the middle-aged because we've seen injustice and stupidity, lived through it, and felt the effects, and the young because they're still full of idealism and a powerful desire to change the world. The middle-aged women effect change with their experience and money; the young provide energy and time.

Today I salute all women who fight daily to ensure their inherent rights to respect and equal treatment are recognized. Thank you.

The Speaker: I suspect that requests will be made to have a representative of the third and the fourth parties participate in this, so I'll ask the question. We'll need unanimous consent, and the question will be in the negative form. Does anybody oppose seeing two additional speakers participate? If so, please say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak about the 100th anniversary of International Women's Day. The first Women's Day was observed in 1909, during a time of great expansion in the industrialized world. In Alberta we have a strong tradition of female empowerment. In 1927 Emily Murphy, Henrietta Muir Edwards, Louise McKinney, Irene Parlby, and Nellie McClung convinced Prime Minister Mackenzie King to ask the Canadian Supreme Court to clarify the word "persons" under the British North America Act of 1867. When the Canadian court confirmed that persons were men and only men, these women persuaded the government of Canada to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the British Privy Council. There they won their case, and on October 18, 1929, Canadian women were legally called persons. These pioneering women came to be known as the Famous Five and stand as role models to this day for women young and old. Now equal rights are enshrined in the 1982 Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, you have noted that Christy Clark was recently elected as leader of the B.C. Liberal Party and will soon be the Premier of B.C. It's clear now that women can do whatever they set out to do, whether it's raising children, driving a tractor-trailer, or becoming the next Premier in this province.

I'd like to end with a quote. Golda Meir, the first female Prime Minister of Israel, said: "It's no accident many accuse me of conducting public affairs with my heart instead of my head. Well, what if I do? Those who don't know how to weep with their whole heart don't know how to laugh either."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One hundred years ago thousands of women marched in the streets of New York to call for better pay, decent hours of work, and voting rights. Women's Day began in a very practical way, with recognition of the unfairness that marked the lives of women.

International Women's Day is rooted in working for economic, political, and social justice for women, the full and equitable citizenship of women. We need this clear perspective on the day in 2011 as well because full equality still needs to be something we struggle for, something that is not easily delivered.

Today in Edmonton women are marking this day at NorQuest College to draw attention to the importance of equal access to education and training as the pathway to decent work for women. Later this month the Network for the Advancement of African-Canadian Women will mark the day to draw our attention to the many achievements of African-Canadian women that result in better lives for all of us. The NDP opposition is thankful for the work of organizations that take the full participation of women seriously and call our attention to what this means.

Alberta has the biggest wage gap between women and men in Canada, and it is getting worse. Two-thirds of low-wage workers over the age of 25 in Alberta are women. Women depending on EI are increasing while the numbers for men are falling. Amongst our seniors poverty is a more serious challenge for women, yet this government resists pension reform that would offer women a better chance of economic security in their senior years. During the working years women are challenged by Alberta's inadequate number of regulated, affordable child care spaces. Recent additions do not meet the demand, and on a per capita basis Alberta is still near the very bottom of spending on child care.

1:50

Looking around this Assembly, we also make note on this day that there is still much to be done to ensure that women are able to actively participate in the political arena in numbers equal to that of men.

Ultimately it is very important to remember and celebrate the successes of the courageous and uncompromising women of the past. However, we do a disservice to their efforts if we fail to acknowledge that true equality for women remains elusive. As such, this day is a good one, in which all members of this Assembly can commit themselves to working for the change needed to obtain true equality amongst all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Before we move on to the question period, I do want to recognize one woman in this Assembly, and that's the Member for Calgary-Elbow. Happy birthday plus one day.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government continues to duck, dive, and stonewall by not calling for an independent investigation into compromised emergency room care for 322 patients. The chairman of the Health Quality Council of Alberta is saying that the government's internal review lacks independence. We applaud the Health Quality Council's effort to restore public confidence in health care even as these Tories mismanage health and continue to fail Albertans. To the minister: will the government do the right thing and support the Health Quality Council request to expand their mandate, allow them to investigate . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council does a tremendous amount of good work in this province. They do quality assurance reviews when they're asked to by either me as minister or by the Alberta Health Services folks. Under the regulation that they exist, they have a very clear mandate, and to my knowledge they're accomplishing it very, very well.

Dr. Swann: I did say duck, dive, and deny, didn't I, Mr. Speaker?

Will the government finally do the right thing and allow the Health Quality Council to launch an investigation into the 322 cases that you've had on your government books since 2008?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let's put this into context. On Thanksgiving Day weekend last year I was written a letter by the chair or the president of the emergency doctors, and along with that he cited 322 cases. His request at the time was: please use these 322 incidents to help address the backlogs in emergency departments. That was the primary purpose of that list of 322 cases. We immediately got Alberta Health Services' senior team clinicians onto that. They are looking at that review right now. But where do you start that review when you don't have names? You have to verify 322 people. It's just about impossible, but they are doing the best they can as fast as they can.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's clear this government isn't into building trust in our health care system. How can Albertans, including the health care workers in this system, have any trust in this government when since 2008 you have failed to investigate 322 concrete cases of malpractice?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's a pretty serious allegation right there. I think he'd better be prepared to say that where it counts, out there. We've already had one doctor alleging this; now we have another one. Step up to the plate, step outside, and say that if that's what you're going to say. Otherwise, what conclusion can we come to? If you know something, say it.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Workplace Safety

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An explosion at a natural gas well southwest of Edson has left 12 workers injured. The Alberta Liberals have been advocating for years for the government to ramp up work site safety enforcement, but this government is only belatedly taking our advice. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: if the minister now believes we need to boost the number of safety inspectors significantly to deal with the economic upturn, isn't he conceding that this government severely understaffed and underfunded worker safety programs during the past boom?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, there is a prime example of someone blowing out a candle just to prove that it's dark. A 52 per cent increase in occupational health and safety officers over the last year, new office in Fort McMurray, enhanced enforcement of the Occupational Health and Safety Act, enhancement of education, training for our staff, full adherence to the Auditor General's report, full adherence to some of the criticism levied against this department in the media: how much more proof does this man need to show him that this government is committed to occupational health and safety?

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, what I'd like to see is that we don't have four sets of industrial gas- and oil-related accidents within a two-month period going forward.

Haste makes waste, Mr. Minister, and it leads to errors and injuries but not in the case of hiring occupational safety. Given that the number of safety inspectors stayed practically constant throughout the recession, was this government's hiring freeze behind the failure to increase safety enforcement before the incidents at Horizon earlier this year and now in Edson?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, occupational health and safety is a co-operation between workers, employers, and this government. All initiatives, including hiring the additional occupational health and safety officers, are paid for by the employers of Alberta through the Workers' Compensation Board; hence, hiring freezes or any budgetary restraints of this government had nothing to do with this, and this member knows that very well.

Mr. Chase: Workmen's compensation is a sad commentary, Mr. Speaker.

Given that an enhanced inspection program uncovered gross safety violations in the construction industry last December, will the minister order a similar program for the oil and gas sector after these four incidents within a two-month period?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, what this member is also not willing to tell you is the fact that the gas and oil sector, particularly in northern Alberta, actually has some of the fewest incidences of occupational health and safety violations and incidents in Alberta. The fact of the matter is that we have taken, also as part of our enforcement, focused inspections of businesses. We're focusing on forklifts right now. We will be looking at the residential construction industry. We will be looking at young workers. Commitment is showing. This member just chooses to ignore it.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Gender Equality

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two things, I believe, are critical to women's equal participation in the life of this province, economic equality and representational equality. To the President of the Treasury Board. Today is the 100th anniversary of International Women's Day. Let's do a report card. With fewer than 10 exceptions why is it that none of the rest of the government agencies, boards, and commissions have enough women appointed to achieve the critical mass necessary for equitable representation?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I've got to tell you that I would be the last one to suggest that there was anything about the total respect and equality in my life for women. But I've got to say this: these boards and agencies that are mandated to run the different responsibilities they have have a job to do first. While we all need to work in our lives and in government to provide opportunities for women to achieve those goals, it can't come at the expense of the skills that are in that board. Why there are not as many women I can't tell. Possibly there weren't as many applications, but the fact is that this government is very committed to equality for women.

Ms Blakeman: With respect, that is utter nonsense.

To the same minister: given that this government has contracted delivery of many services to not-for-profits, which have predominantly female employees receiving lower pay and fewer benefits than in the public sector, how much has the government closed that wage gap? By how many cents per hour?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what the wage gap is and how much it has closed or not closed.

Ms Blakeman: Well, you are the minister in charge of the Treasury Board. Let me try one more time. To the same minister: given that the poorest families are those headed by single-parent females and that although 70 per cent of them are working, they still have just one-eighth of the assets the average Canadian family enjoys, what has this government done to reduce this gap in the last five years?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I've got to tell you that when we hire, we don't hire based on whether they're a man or a woman. We hire on credentials, and our paycheques don't know where they're going. We do not discriminate at any level in this government. To suggest that somehow Alberta is different from the rest of world, where across the world we recognize that there's a long way to go so that women do achieve final equality, to try and push out some of the good work that corporate human resources have done in departments in this government is detestable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

2:00                      Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The verdict is in. Clearly, there is enough evidence to go forward with an independent review by the Health Quality Council, as reported today by the highly respected Dr. Lorne Tyrrell, chair of the council. Will the minister of health today commit to all Albertans and this Assembly to launch an investigation right here, right now, today?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's been any evidence or proof provided yet to substantiate the allegations that were made in this House last week. However, I am prepared to consider any type of appropriate action at the appropriate time once we have the appropriate information in front of us. So far we don't.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, given the response, the non-answer by the minister, Dr. Lorne Tyrrell, a highly respected medical doctor, who is the chair of the Health Quality Council, said that there should be an investigation. Will this minister for this Assembly and for all Albertans do the right thing and launch an investigation today?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I have said already that I don't have the basis upon which to launch such a request to the Health Quality Council. What we do have is a review of the 322 cases, which the member tabled essentially yesterday, which were brought to our attention last fall for the purpose of helping out emergency rooms. We've looked into that, and we've taken concrete action. We've opened more beds, we've got new protocols, and we have more people on staff. That's what we're doing. We're looking after protecting this system and improving it, and that's very positive news for Albertans to hear.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, one more time: will this minister respect Dr. Lorne Tyrrell on his advice to launch an investigation for the 322 that he's referenced in the ER crisis? To protect all Albertans, will you launch an investigation today? Yes or no?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is no, not at this time because there is nothing upon which to base such a launching. You have 322 cases. There are no names attached there. There are dates that would have to be verified; there are locations that have to be verified; there are other physicians that would have to be contacted. That's what the senior clinicians are doing today and have been doing for the past four months. It's complicated because usually a health quality assurance . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Villa Caritas Geriatric Mental Health Facility

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier opened the geriatric psychiatric unit at Villa Caritas. Amidst all the fine words and self-congratulations the Premier failed to mention the recent suicide of a patient at Villa Caritas. The government was warned that Villa Caritas was designed as a long-term care facility and lacks many essential features necessary to ensure the safety of psychiatric patients. Now a patient is dead. To the health minister: will the minister admit that this government's negligence and incompetence have resulted in psychiatric patients being placed in unsafe conditions, which led to the death of a patient?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, how unfortunate to characterize a question that way. Our hearts go out collectively and directly to the family of the person who suffered this particular demise.

I can assure you, having been at Villa Caritas on a few occasions now as well as at Alberta Hospital as well as at the location in Ponoka, that outstanding care is provided for people with mental health difficulties in this province, including the circumstance referred to by this member.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, well, given that a cursory inspection would show that the showers and bathrooms are potential places for suicide, that there are blind spots in the buildings, the light fixtures are potentially dangerous, and there's insufficient staff and given that upgrades to Villa Caritas were inadequate to ensure the safety of psychiatric patients and given that the geriatric unit at Alberta Hospital was properly designed for seniors with serious mental illnesses, why did this minister proceed to transfer patients, knowing they were being put at risk?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no patients were put at risk, and no patients ever will be knowingly put at risk. Let's get serious here. We have a state-of-the-art facility with hugely improved facilities and amenities. If you'd just go over there, hon. member, and walk through, take a look at the increased space that they have, take a look at the integrated services that they now enjoy, take a look at the extremely capable staff that are providing those services, you'll come to the same conclusion we all have, that it's an outstanding facility doing outstanding work for some very vulnerable people who need it.

Mr. Mason: Then how, Mr. Minister, did a patient manage to commit suicide within days of moving into this safe facility?

Given this government's record of mismanagement, that includes unnecessary deaths in ERs and on surgery wait-lists, and given the tragic and preventable death at Villa Caritas, will the health minister admit that his government's abysmal mismanagement of the health care system has led to numerous deaths, unnecessary deaths, of Albertans?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, there is a lot that can be done to help protect the safety of the individuals in question. That's one reason why we upped the dollar amount for the building of that facility to 51 and a half million dollars, to ensure that the best protections possible could be there, to ensure that the state-of-the-art equipment necessary to help these people would be there, to ensure the best possible environment for them to live out their years. That's what we've done, and that's what we're going to continue to do: help those people, not attack them, not accuse them.

Speaker's Ruling
Decorum

The Speaker: I would think that when an hon. member raises a question about the suicide of an individual and an hon. minister was giving a response, most members would listen attentively instead of acting out. For what reason is beyond me.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I have to go back to the health minister and ask him again. In all seriousness, the confidence in our health care system is at an all-time low. We know that two-thirds of Albertans have said that they don't believe the government is managing it appropriately. Health professionals in their survey indicated nonconfidence in the management of the health system. Returning these 322 cases to the Health Quality Council would help to restore trust in the health care system. Will you do that, sir?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I will be speaking with individuals involved in this review very soon. If there are some appropriate actions that they feel are warranted or that I feel are warranted, I can assure this member and I can assure all Albertans that those steps will be taken.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's almost unprecedented that the head of the Health Quality Council, Dr. Lorne Tyrrell, a well-respected physician in the province, has requested this. Is there something that you don't trust about his judgment on this?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member is getting his information. I have not had a request of that nature put to me by Dr. Tyrrell. I know Dr. Tyrrell very well; I respect him highly. If he has a request like that for me, then I will certainly sit down and consider it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the minister: does he deny that his department has been aware of these 322 cases since 2008?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I believe those cases were referred to Alberta Health Services. I think they are the ones who are the custodians of the 322 incidents. As I've indicated before, a typical health quality assurance review deals with one case, maybe two. That's typical. In this instance there's just not enough information upon which to accelerate that review. It's taking its own course. It's being done by doctors not unlike the doctor who is questioning me right now. It's being done in a very thorough fashion. So let's allow that process to move along, and if they find something, they will let us know.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Securities Regulation

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government has been challenging the federal government's move to establish a single national securities regulator to the point where it took its case to the Alberta Court of Appeal in January. This morning the court released its opinion, and it agreed that securities regulation is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. My first question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. What are the repercussions regarding Alberta's future fight against a federal securities regulator? Where does it go from here?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, thank you, hon. member. Mr. Speaker, obviously, we are happy that the Alberta Court of Appeal has interpreted and adjudicated basically along the same lines that our argument was based on, that securities regulation is a provincial matter constitutionally. They reinforced that. This isn't the end of the fight, but it's always helpful to have a level of court at that stage that supports your argument totally.

Mr. Rodney: My next question is to the same minister. Perhaps not surprisingly, Alberta has been accused by some as fighting with the feds for no good reason in this case. What's the minister's rationale for these efforts in this particular case at this particular time?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, I think that on the securities regulator there is a very good reason. Maybe more importantly, Mr. Speaker, there is a matter of principle involved, that constitutionally we have rights and responsibilities in our province, and we need to make sure that we challenge these on an ongoing basis. The simple fact around the securities regulator is that most of the other provinces support the initiative. So I'm not trying to pick a fight with anybody. Well, maybe with some people but certainly not with the federal government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. Canadian provinces support the system which is already in place, so can the minister please clarify why he feels there's such a need for Alberta and other provinces to continue to push back regarding the latest federal proposal?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's because history has shown us through these very difficult times in a recession that the system we have works. The American system falls under a single regulator. It was a disaster. We've got a national-in-scale system that the provinces administer. You know, to use the old saying, if it's not broken, don't fix it. That's where we are with Alberta. It's our responsibility, and we're doing a darn good job of implementing it.

Political Contributions by Municipal Officials

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, a freedom of information request revealed that seven elected representatives from the county of Barrhead's council, their spouses, and two staff members attended a 2009 fundraising event for the Barrhead PC association at a cost of $720. I'm certain that it was a wonderful event. Now, I wouldn't be asking about this except that the elected officials' tickets were paid for by the county of Barrhead or, in other words, their taxpayers, which is a clear violation of the Election Act. To the Minister of Justice: will the minister notify both Elections Alberta and the PC Party of this incident so that monies can be returned to these taxpayers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to be corrected, but I believe the money has already been returned.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I thank you for that honest and clear answer, but if I gave you some documents, could you further investigate? And if you find out that this matter has been taken care of, I would be happy, and we'll move on from there.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. I'll certainly undertake to look at whatever documents the hon. member wants to pass along, and we'll act accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much. I'll leave it there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Heartland Electricity Transmission Project

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the proposed routes for the heartland transmission line runs through the east TUC and through my constituency. Many of my constituents are very concerned about this 500-kV line being so close in proximity to homes and a nearby school and are strongly advocating putting this line underground. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. I understand that the cost of underground is generally higher, but what's being done to ensure that an accurate estimate for at least a portion of this line being buried will be considered?

Mr. Liepert: Well, first, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to note in the Assembly that the Alberta Utilities Commission, which is an independent, quasi-judicial body, will begin its hearing into this particular line in just over a month. We need to ensure that no comments are made that are going to be perceived as trying to influence that decision. But there have been a number of studies done over the past year, and I'm sure that those will be presented during the hearing. It will be up to the commission to make its decision relative to the siting of the line.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: what can you tell my constituents to reassure them that environmental and health concerns will be thoroughly considered during that process?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, Health Canada assesses and monitors health and safety risks that are associated with radiation-emitting devices – that includes power lines, cellular telephones – and ensures that Canadians are protected under our laws. I know that on the website of Health Canada it states that there is research that has shown that these electronic currents are not associated with any known health risks. That being said, the commission is obligated during the hearing process that if there's any evidence to the contrary that may be presented . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, again to the same minister: what assurances can the minister give that all possible routes and technologies will be given fair consideration? Minister, I've heard today that the TFO crews may already be working in the TUC.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we need to be clear on the very last comment made by the member. There is some soil testing going on both in this particular route and the alternate route. That's part of the pre-engineering work that's needed to ensure that they have adequate information relative to costing and should in no way be construed that the project will be approved. In fact, the AUC, just to be clear, can either approve the application, approve it with conditions, or deny it. So let's let the hearing take place, and the decision will be rendered.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Twinning of Highway 63

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fort McMurray is booming again, and highway 63 is as dangerous as ever. Twinning is essential. We have been at it since 2007 and are not expected to be completed before 2015. That is over eight years later. There is no excuse for twinning this highway in small, time-wasting increments instead of one dedicated project. To the Minister of Transportation: why has the minister chosen the most delayed method of completing this project?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, I'd like to thank the hon. member for bringing that question forward because I'd like to clarify what that's about. Highway 63 is a huge, huge project, and we plan on getting it done. But let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it's a $2 billion project. I have to go by what the hon. members on the other side keep saying: delay, delay, delay. We don't want to delay. We're trying to get it done as fast as we possibly can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister has already been delaying, delaying, delaying that project.

To the minister again: with Alberta coming out of the recession and the oil sands being very much in demand world-wide, would it not be essential to complete this infrastructure in a timely fashion?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'd like the hon. member to know that we're spending $190 million on highway 63 this year. We're carrying on with two complete interchanges. We're carrying on with a five-lane bridge that we're building in Fort McMurray. I agree that people in Fort McMurray deserve a great quality of life. We're moving ahead with the infrastructure as fast as we can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: will the minister commit to completing the twinning of highway 63 before 2015? You found $2 billion for carbon capture, but you don't have enough money to fix this highway properly.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, again I have to tell you that we're moving ahead as fast as we can. We partnered with the federal government on this, and they're actually going to put $150 million into this project. We are moving ahead with it. We can only do as much as our budget allows us to do, so I can't promise an actual date of finishing it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Villa Caritas Geriatric Mental Health Facility (continued)

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I attended the official opening of Villa Caritas, which is an outstanding state-of-the-art facility for geriatric mental health patients in west Edmonton. While everyone was very supportive of this new facility and the outstanding mental health services it will provide, several attendees had some questions, which I will be addressing to the Minister of Health and Wellness. While this appears to be a good move for the patients referred, why is it taking so long to present concrete actions for numerous other Albertans who are experiencing mental health . . .

2:20

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's true that we're working on a province-wide strategy to help people with addictions and/or mental health issues. In fact, it's a staple in our five-year health action plan. But let's not lose sight of the fact that we're already spending over $500 million to help people with these particular circumstances. We are also opening up new mental health treatment and residential beds, about 35 of them, that I just announced. We're also adding 65 mental health staff into our schools and clinics throughout Alberta. We're also augmenting the 90 clinics that we have across Alberta that help people with mental health and/or addictions issues. Finally, we're also doing everything we can to bring in experts in this area to help us craft the best strategy for mental health going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: what impact will the decision to use Villa Caritas as a facility to support seniors with mental health issues, not as a long-term bed facility as originally intended, have on seniors looking for long-term care beds in Edmonton?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the good news is that the long-term care beds that were available at the old Edmonton General hospital site still are available. I was there not long ago visiting some folks, and I can tell you that the care there is truly outstanding.

With respect to other people who might require these kinds of services, please know that the services will be there. We're opening a lot more continuing care spaces for people who have that level of need, and we're opening more residential and detox beds, or treatment beds as they're called, for people in those circumstances.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: since only 106 of 150 beds will be occupied by the patients from Alberta Hospital Edmonton, what are the plans for the remaining 44 beds, and who will be occupying them?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in fact, we're going to augment the 106 beds up to 120 beds specifically for geriatric mental health patients. When you combine that with the other beds referred to, that will increase our mental health capacity for that group by about 42 per cent in our area. That's a huge increase. With respect to the other 30 beds those are going to be specialized transition beds to help address the needs of seniors with mental health issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Workplace Safety (continued)

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The nine workers injured in a well explosion yesterday remind us of this government's chronic record of failure on workplace safety. The minister's self-congratulatory announcement on new inspectors merely brings Alberta up to the national average a few years from now. To the minister: will he agree that injured workers and their families can't afford to wait and hire 40 new inspectors this year?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this government has made a solid commitment to occupational health and safety. We have increased enforcement of occupational health and safety. We have increased education. We are working in co-operation both with organized labour and with employers to make sure that we develop the best practices. We have increased the number of occupational health and safety inspectors by 52 per cent just in one year. We will be monitoring it. If there is economic growth and if we find that it is warranted to have additional officers, that is always open. The number 40 is as good a number as . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, given that Tory funding for worker safety is lower today than it was in 1991 while at the same time the number of Albertans working in dangerous occupations has more than doubled and given that our province's worker fatality rate continues well above the national average, will the minister admit that his hold-the-line budget for worker safety in the face of increased industrial activity is a predictable recipe for more worker injury and deaths?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this member calls it Tory funding for occupational health and safety. I have clearly indicated that occupational health and safety is fully funded by all employers in the province of Alberta. So maybe indirectly she is correct because most sensible employers in Alberta tend to be Tory supporters. But the fact of the matter is that there is a great expense for occupational health and safety, and we have full commitment not only by employers but also by workers within the sectors.

Ms Notley: Well, employers are Tory supporters because they pay the lowest WCB premiums in the country, Minister.

Given that Alberta is one of the few provinces in the country to not mandate worker safety committees by law, giving the tools to the very workers whose lives are otherwise at risk, can the minister explain this glaring omission and tell us how workers are supposed to keep themselves safe in this province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the member just contradicted herself. The reason Alberta employers pay the lowest WCB premiums is that that reflects the caseload and the number of claims that WCB is dealing with. However, I don't know how many times I can reiterate it. I'm not only saying it, but I'm actually walking the talk to show all Alberta workers that their safety on the job is our priority. Albertans demand safe workplaces, and they shall receive safe workplaces.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Energy Efficiency Building Standards

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An updated national building code featuring higher energy efficiency standards for all large buildings is expected by the end of 2011 and for houses by the end of 2012. Three years ago this government committed to implementing energy efficiency standards in building codes for homes and commercial buildings in its climate change strategy. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: have Albertans been misled as it appears there is no action on this file three years later?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the hon. member. No doubt, we continue to do our work. The building codes and the energy codes are part of a national process that we are undertaking, and we are working with our federal and provincial and territorial counterparts to see this move. The member is right. The building code, the one part, was actually published, I believe, on November 29 of 2010 to become effective in 2011, and we're following that.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Minister. You've answered part of the question, which would be: is this government going to adopt national building codes for large buildings and houses, or are we waiting for an Alberta solution? The building codes are there. Why don't we just slip in underneath, and they're effective?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's appropriate to say that we should have only one building code. Rather than having interim codes, we are working with our national counterparts to bring in one code that will be suitable for all Albertans. Certainly, we are hearing from Albertans as well that they want changes for both the commercial buildings and their residential buildings and that energy efficiency is extremely important to them. We're looking at all of those aspects.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister: will you commit to having these national energy standards for large buildings by the end of 2012 and for houses by the end of 2013? How close are we to having the national standard by those dates?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we are still doing a review of the consultation that we did. There was a lot of consultation that occurred in the fall of 2009. We met with stakeholders. Now that we're talking about energy efficiencies, we met with them to see how they might be implemented in the Alberta building codes for both homes and other buildings. We are waiting, basically, to look at implementing the model codes when they become available later on this year and into 2012.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Health Research Funding

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've all heard about Alberta's excellent track record when it comes to life-changing and life-saving health research. If you haven't, please call me; I'd be glad to fill you in. We're making great strides towards curing diabetes, eliminating viruses, and better understanding the human brain. Yet I still get challenged with rumours that funding for this kind of research is in jeopardy. My questions today are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Bottom line: is funding for health research in Alberta increasing or decreasing?

Mr. Weadick: Well, I'd like to thank the member for that question. I'm very pleased to say today that in 2010-2011 Alberta Innovates will be putting $83 million into health research in this province. That's up from $75 million only one year ago, so a significant increase. This research will go into all types of health research across the province, and we're so excited to see this research being done right here.

The Speaker: And his budget will be dealt with on April 12. Proceed.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. My second question is to the same minister. Will research funding be available for research that has the potential to reduce wait-lists or address other challenges facing our current health care system here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is one of the focuses of health research being done. In fact, on Friday we were in Calgary at the University of Calgary opening the medical ward of the 21st century, a place where companies and doctors can go to test the newest equipment, look at new ways of delivering health care that are more patient focused. There's a company called Xsensor out of Calgary that has designed a sheet that goes on the bed and will detect pressure points and allow nurses to turn patients in time to get rid of bed sores and those kinds of things. This is critical research that's moving us forward.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. To the same minister: there are also questions that this strategy is considered political interference in research.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. Yes, I have heard that. I think it's critically important that the government sets priorities for its spending of tax dollars. At the high level the government has set some priority areas around maternal and child health and around addictions and other things. I think that's critically important. Alberta Innovates will determine which areas are going to be funded, how they're going to be funded, which programs will receive the funding, and it's up to them to try to prioritize those projects. So it is at arm's length to government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Capital Infrastructure Planning

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's obvious that this government continues to miss the lesson when it comes to prioritizing infrastructure. We have a government that is putting MLA offices ahead of children in severely overcrowded classrooms and ahead of seniors stuck in acute-care beds and ER patients in the halls of our hospitals. To the Minister of Infrastructure: are you as ignorant and as fiscally irresponsible as the Member for Edmonton-Calder to say that had you prioritized schools and seniors' care facilities ahead of the federal building, construction workers would have no work?

The Speaker: We're going to find some temperance in language in here, or we're going to have a real shambles, points of privilege included.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear. I think the hon. member opposite needs to know that we are building 14 new schools at this time: 10 core schools, four high schools. We have 41 health projects that are on the go, five major hospital builds, five cancer institutes that we're building, and we are also building 13 seniors' projects, that are going to have over a thousand spaces. That is part of what this government is doing in relation to infrastructure.

Mr. Hinman: It's good that he prioritizes his answers. I wish he'd prioritize his buildings.

Given that this government was in complete denial of the economic conditions that we were in when they decided to go ahead with the federal building, does the minister really think that if we were to have had a prioritized public infrastructure list at the time, the citizens of Alberta would have agreed to renovate the federal building ahead of desperately needed long-term care beds for seniors and classrooms for our overcrowded children?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I need to express to the hon. member opposite that there is a balance. There is a balance to having health care facilities. There is a balance with educational facilities, schools. At the same time, we do have to have office buildings, and those office buildings hold individuals that are there to help Albertans, to serve the needs of Albertans. We cannot stop development or construction.

I also need to say to you that this project was started in 2008.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the federal building stood vacant for 20 years, a delay of two or three more years would not have changed the value or the opportunity to redevelop the property.

How long will the minister continue to declare that new MLA offices are more urgent than the need to move our seniors out of acute-care beds and into long-term care facilities and our children out of severely overcrowded classrooms into new schools? He needs to make the list public. Prioritize the list and make it public.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe that the hon. member opposite heard. The list is public. All he has to do is look it up on the website, maybe pay attention to the newspapers as he usually does. I would say to you: 14 new schools, 41 projects in health care, seniors' housing. That is the list. That is the list that you have before you, and if you can't understand that list, I'm not sure how I can help you . . .

The Speaker: If the two of you don't start talking through me, I'm not going to recognize either one of you again for a long period of time.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Cattle Price Insurance Program

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta cattle producers face great risks due to the volatility of the Canadian dollar and other market forces that are beyond their control. To the minister of agriculture: what, if anything, is your ministry doing to enable cattle producers to protect themselves in these turbulent times?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government does recognize the effects of the volatility of the cattle market on our Canadian dollar, and we have produced an insurance program for calves that's being handled through the AFSC. It's a market-driven program to add some surety to the industry. It reflects the market prices as indicated through our auction marts throughout the province to make sure that there are safeguards for these producers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Berger: Thank you. Back to the same minister. Now, that sounds good if you're a large-scale producer, but is this available for smaller and medium-sized producers, or are they even eligible to apply?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The size of the operation doesn't matter for coverage in this program. You have to be an agricultural producer that raises livestock and to have them for over 60 days. You have to be over the age of 18. That's the policy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Okay. We've enabled the beef producers with this price insurance option, and that's good, but is it available to the producers of any of the other livestock species we raise here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This program is fairly new. We started it with a portion of the livestock, the cattle industry, initially. We are moving now to develop a program for the hog sector also. Of course, agriculture is our largest renewable industry in this province, so it's important that we keep it viable, and these programs are going to help.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Health Authority Administrative Expenses

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government until 2006 gave taxpayers a breakdown of administrative expenses incurred directly by health authorities. These expenses were broken down by general administration, human resources, finance, et cetera. My first question is to the minister of health. Why did this government in 2006 stop the good accounting practice of giving taxpayers a breakdown of the millions of dollars that were spent annually on administrative expenses by health authorities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't carry around information going back to 2006 in my hip pocket. I'm sure that the accounting that is done and the reporting back to Albertans that is done on a regular basis would cover off some of those questions the hon. member is asking.

Secondly, if he has that kind of detail that he wants to go back five years, perhaps he should bring it forward in a more proper forum.

Speaker's Ruling Questions about a Previous Responsibility

The Speaker: I would refer all members to Beauchesne's 409(6).

A question must be within the administrative competence of the Government. The Minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his or her present Ministry and not for any decisions taken in a previous portfolio.

Proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: This minister is responsible for the budgets of not only this year but of previous years for the health department.

The Speaker: Sit down. He is only responsible for the budgets that he is minister of during that time frame. He's not responsible for anything that happened in 1934.

Proceed.

Health Authority Administrative Expenses (continued)

Mr. MacDonald: I'm not talking about 1934; I'm talking about 2006.

Given that after 2006 – after 2006 – hon. minister, administration fees skyrocketed by millions of dollars annually, who ordered the changes to be made so that there was no longer a full disclosure of these administrative fees in your annual reports?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there is full disclosure. There always is. Not only that, but it's also audited.

I think that what the hon. member is missing here, though, is the large population growth that this province has experienced. People are moving here for a reason, and one of them is the best health care services anywhere in the country.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, more money was spent, and there was less disclosure.

Again to the minister: are any legal fees directly incurred by the health authorities hidden in the category of general administration?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where they put legal fees specifically, but I'm sure that they're there. I'm sure they're accounted for. What we can do is find out exactly which line item they're included in.

I can assure you that it's important to have people who represent you on legal fronts. Sometimes you need them for your own protection here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

NAIT Program Closures

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions this afternoon are for the minister of advanced education. Minister, every year an academic review is conducted to determine the long-term need for programs of study at an institution such as NAIT in my constituency of Edmonton-Calder. Apprenticeship training programs have never been in question, yet others have been terminated due to a lack of enrolment. Given the current demands for avionics and airframe professionals and that both programs are fully subscribed, can the minister tell me why these and seven other programs are being considered for termination?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an important issue, and I would like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Calder for bringing it up. Each and every year all of our postsecondary institutions review all of their programs, and we believe that they should. We believe it's critically important that they deliver the programs that Albertans need, that they deliver the services so our young people and our tradesmen can get jobs. Each and every year they review them. Through that process they come up with new programs they'd like to add and programs they'd like to remove. This is one of those where that particular school has suggested these programs for removal.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you. My only supplemental is to the same minister. Mr. Speaker, given that this minister has the final say in these matters, what will he be basing his decision on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, the institution NAIT will come before the department and make their recommendations as to what we should do with these programs, what enrolment for the future looks like, what the employment picture for these trades will be, and what it would look like across Campus Alberta for delivery. We'll wait, and we'll work with that institution to see what the outcome is.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: No further questions.

The Speaker: That's it? Okay.

Hon. members, 18 members were recognized today. That was 104 questions and responses

In a few seconds from now we will continue with the Routine. We will be going to Members' Statements in 15 seconds from now.

Affordable Housing Project in Strathmore

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We often hear about the high cost of living in Alberta, and as we come out of this economic downturn, I don't expect this to change. What has changed, however, is the public expenditure of resources and know-how to make home ownership affordable to more lower income Albertans.

I had the pleasure of attending the project launch for the perpetually affordable housing project, that highlighted the innovation in housing that we're seeing across the province. The town of Strathmore has entered into a partnership with Classic Communities to develop a 48-unit perpetually affordable home ownership project. Housing and Urban Affairs has committed over $1.6 million to the town of Strathmore.

This funding along with commitments from the town of Strathmore, the Strathmore affordable housing society, and Classic Communities has created a unique opportunity for low-income families. These are two- and three-bedroom units and are affordable to families making as little as $25,000 a year in annual income. The units will remain affordable in perpetuity, approximately 70 per cent of market value, regardless of changes in the market, thanks to the public funds remaining in the equity of this project. While people of all ages can qualify to invest in this project, it is particularly attractive to young people who want to invest in home ownership. This project offers the opportunity for home ownership at a cost that is competitive with local rental rates.

Mr. Speaker, partnerships with the private sector, municipalities, and nonprofit organizations have enabled Housing and Urban Affairs to reduce its budget by 36 per cent while at the same time meeting targets for increased affordable housing and, in this case, home ownership. This project is an example of an innovative and responsible expenditure of public funding.

I would like to acknowledge the town of Strathmore, Classic Communities, and the Strathmore affordable housing society for enabling home ownership and allowing lower income earners to make an investment in their future through equity in their own homes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Children's Mental Health and Addiction Initiatives

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2009, after consultation with mental health and addictions experts, parents, and children, I introduced the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act. With the support of this very House it passed. Upon proclamation of the bill children abusing drugs would be held in treatment for 10 days and not the current five. PCHAD, as it's known, was the sixth bill out of 62 introduced by government during the spring session. That shows me that it was a priority of the government at the time.

Sadly, Mr. Speaker, I can't say the same now. It is still waiting to be proclaimed and made into law. Addictions professionals have all indicated that five days of treatment is not enough to unpickle their brain and get them ready for the rest of their lives by keeping these children clean and sober. The government's track record on children, especially our most vulnerable, is shameful. The Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act is another one of the 62 bills that are waiting to be made the law of the land. This sends a clear message, Mr. Speaker: abused and vulnerable children do not seem to be a priority of this government.

Mental health and addiction treatment is a growing concern for all Albertans. While the government talks more and more about the importance of treating addiction and mental health issues, they do not back this talk up with action. Action, Mr. Speaker, talks louder than words. Action would be proclaiming these bills immediately. People with mental health and addiction issues are stuck in a vicious cycle that they cannot get out of alone. There are people that end up in hospitals, correctional facilities, or even homeless. If the government was truly serious, as indicated in the Speech from the Throne, they would properly fund mental health and addiction initiatives and consult with the experts in the field.

We need to move forward, Mr. Speaker. We need to move forward now and do what's right for our Alberta families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, en français, s'il vous plaît.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie

Dr. Brown: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui je me lève à l'Assemblée pour souligner le début des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, une célébration nationale de la culture, de la langue, et du patrimoine français qui se déroulera du 4 au 20 mars.

Ici en Alberta les communautés francophones ont lancé les festivités le 4 mars 2011 avec des levers de drapeaux partout à travers la province, et les festivités se poursuivront pendant les deux prochaines semaines pour tous les Albertains de tous les âges et d'origines diverses. Le thème cette année célèbre comment l'interaction enrichit la compréhension, quelque chose que l'on connaît bien en Alberta.

Pour les francophones cette interaction est ancrée depuis 150 ans avec l'établissement de St. Albert, la plus vieille colonisation de langue française de la province. Les Pères Oblats et les Sœurs Grises ont travaillé étroitement avec les Premières nations et les Métis afin d'accroître le commerce et afin de construire certaines des premières écoles et des premiers hôpitaux de la province.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie sont une occasion pour interagir l'un avec l'autre et pour découvrir le nouveau visage de la francophonie albertaine. En valorisant l'interaction et le partage de notre richesse culturelle, nous aidons nos communautés à croître, et nous créons une société plus accueillante et inclusive.

M. le Président, je tiens à remercier les membres de cette Chambre pour leur appui continu, et je vous invite tous à participer à ces célébrations afin de souligner les contributions des francophones au riche patrimoine albertain.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Northland Community Engagement Team

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January 2010 the Minister of Education dissolved the Northland school division board and appointed an official trustee to oversee the jurisdiction. He also appointed an inquiry team to look at the governance, management, and operations of this vast northern jurisdiction. In January of this year the inquiry team issued its report, calling for an improvement strategy to focus on three priorities: English and aboriginal language and numeracy development, improving student attendance, and strengthening parental engagement with schools by improving communication and trust.

Earlier this month a team with strong connections to aboriginal education was established to provide strategic advice, direction, and leadership to address these issues. This team will engage the community in the transformation of Northland into a special-purpose authority for aboriginal education, one able to capitalize on its unique character to provide excellence in First Nations and Métis education. The team will be led by the capable Member for Lesser Slave Lake and Dr. Colin Kelly, the official trustee, and includes community elders, Métis and Treaty 8 members, a postsecondary member, and a member of the FNMI Education Partnership Council.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased that two of the members are from my constituency, Mr. Alvin Findlay of the Métis local 1994 and Dave MacPhee of the Aseniwuche Nation. Their mission will be to develop and deliver strategies and initiatives we know are crucial to the educational success of the boys and girls who depend on Northland schools to prepare them for their future. Clearly, communities need to be involved in those strategies and initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, I echo the sentiments of the Minister of Education, who said that "engaging Northland communities in the future of education of their young people is essential if we want the students in those communities to find genuine and lasting success."

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this Assembly I thank the members of the team for their commitment to FNMI education and their willingness to participate in this incredibly important work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Meadows Fire and EMS Station

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the Meadows fire and rescue station. Located at 28th Avenue and 34th Street in my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods, the Meadows fire and emergency medical services station opened in October of 2009. The cost of constructing the more than 14,000 square foot facility was $6.5 million. Going forward, the station will save resources by having fire and emergency medical services at the same site. It also means quicker response time if the call is coming from the same area.

I was very fortunate to be in attendance at the grand opening alongside many community members and Edmonton's mayor, Stephen Mandel. Mr. Speaker, the construction of the Meadows fire and EMS station would not have been possible had it not been for the funding from the provincial government under the guidance of this province's Premier.

This funding was made possible through the municipal sustainability initiative, known as MSI. MSI is the province of Alberta's commitment to providing significant long-term funding to enhance municipal sustainability and to enable municipalities to meet the demand of growth. The opening of the Meadows fire and EMS station is a perfect example of how MSI funding can directly impact a community and help it meet its needs.

I commend this very important program and would like to recognize its benefits to the Meadows community of Mill Woods. To all the officers and members of Meadows fire and rescue station: keep up the good job you are all doing, and we salute you for making our community better.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Women in Scholarship, Engineering, Science and Technology

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, this year marks the 100th anniversary of International Women's Day, celebrated today by people around the world, people who are doing their best to ensure that women everywhere enjoy better health, safety, respect, freedom, and equal pay for equal work. I'm proud to say that in my constituency of Edmonton-Riverview there's an organization dedicated to pursuing those goals. WISEST, Women in Scholarship, Engineering, Science and Technology, is an organization created by the University of Alberta designed to increase gender diversity in the workplace, especially in the fields that constitute its acronym.

Since 1982 WISEST has been encouraging women to choose careers in science and engineering. Over 600 volunteers develop programs to draw more women to these fields. WISEST reaches out to girls and young women while they are still in secondary school, providing opportunities to get a taste of what it's like to work in science or engineering. Their efforts have certainly borne fruit. Across Canada women are now pursuing undergraduate science degrees at university in roughly equal numbers to men.

Of course, much work remains to be done. Women remain in the minority at the postgraduate level and in high-level leadership positions in industry and academia and government. Women still don't earn as much as men doing equivalent jobs, and the glass ceiling remains firmly in place across a wide spectrum of industries and institutions. But, Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that one day we'll solve these problems and create a society with true equality and freedom for everyone, a society rich with opportunities for girls and boys, women and men, one in which culture, religion, sexual orientation, skin colour, or gender never interfere with anyone's human rights or potential.

People like the folks at WISEST are working to create a better world, and I thank them for it.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. As chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I'm pleased to table five copies of the committee's report on its 2010 activities. Additional copies of the report have also been provided for all members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the topic of occupational health and safety, while our inspectors right now are doing focused inspections of forklifts and related equipment, I would like to table the required amount of a new publication known as Forklift Health & Safety: Best Practices Guideline.

It's a brand new guideline that is available to employers and employees both in paper and electronic format. I would encourage all employers to take a look at it. It's showing them what the best practices and usage are of these potentially very dangerous pieces of equipment.

Also, Working Alone Safely: A Guide for Employers and Employees. For situations where workers are required to work alone, guidelines and best practices for those.

On a somewhat different topic, Mr. Speaker, today I'd like to table five copies of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association 2010 annual report, as required.

Also, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I will be tabling the required number of the annual report of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta for the year 2010.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I have down the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. Is anybody doing a tabling on his behalf?

Then the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, one from Wendy Aikins in Fort Macleod and Bonnie May in Lethbridge, both of whom are appalled at the permission given for the deforestation of blocks of forestry in the special places Castle-Crown area.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Centre, were you doing a tabling?

Ms Blakeman: No, sir. That was yesterday.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling e-mails from the following individuals who are seeking the preservation of the Castle wilderness area: Peter McClure, Randy Jaggard, Lin Heidt, Cat Neshine, Carole Gregoire-Voskamp, Barb Collier, Kelly Marsh, Lisa Mutch, Ena Spalding, Tim Coogan, Shirley Whalen, Jim Laird, Lois Betteridge, Ruth Zenger, Tom Wispinski, Peter Ward, Tracy Jacobson, Siobhan Brennan, Susan Brooks, Brian Vaccaro, Shirley Langlois, Gordon and Ann Rycroft, Lynn Taylor, Geraldine Young, and Chris Brown.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I have a tabling here, and it's the requisite number of copies from the county of Barrhead. It's a copy of the minutes of the council meeting held on July 21, 2009, where a resolution was carried to purchase two tables for a supper scheduled on November 21, 2009, a copy of the cheque that was sent to pay for two tables, a copy of the invitation to the event, and a copy of the list of people who attended. I just put that on the record. It is in regard to my question earlier today.

The Speaker: In regard to my 30th anniversary.

Mr. Hehr: Yes, it was. I hope it was a wonderful time.

The Speaker: It was, and they all ate.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 9

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few comments, a little bit, in response to some of the opposition members who were actually interested enough to be here before. To the point, the budget. The $4.8 billion deficit is actually very close to what was forecast. As a matter of fact, it's within $73 million.

I think it's interesting, Mr. Chairman, to look historically at the trend around the sup estimates: from 2005-06 a supplementary estimate that was 13 per cent of the budget falling over time in '06-07 to 7 per cent, in '07-08 to 6 per cent, in '08-09 to 3 per cent, in '09-10 to 3 per cent, and now to 2 per cent. I think the direction that the government has gone to manage and forecast as well as possible their expenditures and then to live with them is not only backed up by the numbers; it's certainly backed up by the trend.

It is interesting that some of the counsel being provided to the Wildrose's last opportunity was three and a half times what our supplementary supply is now, but that was then. Mr. Chairman, it's a simple point that this is the smallest sup in the absolute dollar amount and relative to the original appropriation of the year. So I look forward to the comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to again get an opportunity to participate in the debate or discussion regarding Bill 9, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011. We again are looking at significant amounts of money in various departments, but I'm told – I'm reassured, actually – it's not as much as usual. It's puzzling to me, just the general tone of the government these days. They're certainly like an unrepentant teenager asking for a larger allowance without any explanation as to where they spent what they already got and what they intend to do with this.

I was startled in question period today when I was directing questions regarding the financial statements of a ministry. "Well, we don't want to talk about this. We can't talk about it because it was in the past." Well, whenever you look at the past expenditures of this government and their past habits of requesting additional funding through supplementary supply, certainly it is an indication that the budget and the budgeting process initially, regardless of what year we're in, is not a sound exercise.

The numbers that we're dealing with are not sound because we seem to be always coming back, regardless of the circumstances, asking for more, whether it's in Aboriginal Relations, whether it's in Advanced Education and Technology. Certainly, in Children and Youth Services and Employment and Immigration, when we were discussing this before, it struck a chord with me because last year I looked in government estimates and the same elements that were cut last year around this time in the budgeting process: well, we're now looking for that money back. We need that money.

I don't for a minute doubt the sincerity of the hon. minister of children's services nor the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As a result of circumstances that are very, very difficult to control, they need the money to fund their programs. I have no doubt about that. But there are other areas to be cut, Mr. Chairman, other than those programs last year. The people programs seem to be the first to go.

Now, the other day I was waiting for the budget to be released, and I thought, for instance, I would add up the amount of money over the years that Horse Racing Alberta has received: $365 million plus what's there this year. That's pretty close to $400 million over a short period of time. I would use that, Mr. Chairman, as an example of the wrong priorities of a government. That program should be eliminated, but it's not. Instead what do we do? We nickel and dime ministries like Children and Youth Services, like Employment and Immigration, and we have to at some point go back through the supplementary supply process and ask for more money. That would only be one example, and I'm not going to discuss it any further now.

Certainly, I think if this government was sincere about fiscal control or fiscal restraint, they would reduce the size of cabinet. A smart government is not necessarily one that's 24 or 22 ministries. It could be reduced significantly, perhaps as far down as 16 or 17 portfolios. I think that would work. That is not unreasonable or, I don't think, unusual.

Now, I would like specifically at this time to talk about Justice and Attorney General, the Justice department and the request here for 9 and a half million dollars. We are looking at initiatives for safe communities. Good idea. You can go back and you can see in previous annual reports where some of that money – and I'm on memory here, Mr. Chairman, and please correct me if I'm wrong – went unexpended. The additions from this supplementary amount plus interim ministry transfers will increase the budget for the safe communities program from $18 million to over $30 million. That's better than 65 per cent. The supplementary amount will contribute 49 per cent more than what was originally budgeted and, I believe, the same amount more in a percentage than was spent in the last fiscal year.

Safe communities initiatives, as we know, cover a wide range of activities. Could the government please explain precisely which of these activities require the additional funding? In particular, how much of the additional funding is for the safe communities innovation fund, which provides funding to community-based crime prevention and crime reduction projects?

Now, according to the ministry's 2009-10 annual report the ministry developed elaborate processes to educate communities about plans, services, and funding opportunities relating to the safe communities program as well as a process designed to deliver grant funding effectively. I had the opportunity of attending in a local school gymnasium one of these meetings to educate the community members, and I was kind of taken aback by how the grant funding programs worked. I had to correct some of the government employees that were there, that this was taxpayer money; it didn't belong to the governing party. That was what the people in attendance were led to believe. There were two parts of this funding, and again I had to correct those who were there on behalf of this government, explaining the safe communities program, about exactly where the money was coming from, who was responsible for it, and where it should go.

One would assume that spending on grant programs is well within the control of the ministry. Also, this is, as far as I know, certainly not a new grant program. The ministry reported funding 30 pilot projects in 2009-10, so it has significant experience in administering the program. Again, can the government please explain why this program exceeded its budget by close to half and what the ministry has done during the current fiscal year to bring this overspending back into line? Since the funds were delivered to the local communities, can the government explain what specific results were expected from the spending this year and how, specifically, the recipients of grant funding are contributing to the ministry's performance goals with respect to safe communities?

In conclusion of my questions regarding Justice at this time and this 9 and a half million dollar request: can the government please explain why the program again exceeded its budget and what we're doing to ensure that this doesn't happen in the future?

Now, I have a few more questions as well, Mr. Chairman, regarding the Infrastructure budget. Certainly, we heard earlier in question period from the government how important they consider infrastructure. With this request we're looking for a little better than $57 million in infrastructure spending. But I note that last year in the fiscal plan, not the current one that we're debating in budget estimates, there was anywhere between a 10 per cent and a 20 per cent reduction in construction contracts from what was anticipated to what eventually happened after all the bid packages were opened and a decision was made regarding who was going to do what, where, and for how much. With that kind of cost saving it's not unusual to expect that a capital plan can be stretched out over a long period of time and get more projects built for the budget that is set aside. You may have to wait a year or two longer – that's true – but, certainly, you're going to get a much better bang for your buck.

If I can believe what I'm reading in the fiscal plan, if I can believe that it is true and that there are these savings that I talked about, 10 to 20 per cent, then my question would be: why, then, do we need this additional money?

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I would like to remind this House of the news program I watched, where the Premier was talking about getting ahead of all this construction now, before inflation hit. I was wondering what sort of economic advice the Premier was getting that wasn't being shared with the citizens or the taxpayers. I know that in Brazil there are significant pressures on the cost of living. Certainly, there are in other areas of the world. We, fortunately, are not faced with that here. But the Premier seemed bound and determined that we had to proceed with a lot of these projects before costs went sky-high, and I would like an explanation as to the Premier's concerns and issues regarding this inflationary threat and how the $57.6 million that's requested under Infrastructure may or may not be affected.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. To begin with, Mr. Chair, I think what we as Alberta's Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, have been saying all along with regard to health – it's not money; it's management – can basically be applied to the whole budgetary process. I find it absolutely amazing that we are spending in this month of March alone practically three-quarters of a billion dollars to tide us over.

Now, I appreciate the statistics that the hon. minister of the Treasury Board and finance provided us, that we're within 2 per cent of where we should be. In other words, if you were to look at it from the other end and you were assigning a mark, you'd say: well, let's give the government 98 per cent on their ability to anticipate. What other province has this kind of money? Yet the efficiency with which they choose to invest their monies seems to create a much more productive result than what we're seeing here in Alberta.

If three-quarters of a billion dollars represents only 2 per cent of the 2010-2011 budget, then surely we can be using that money in a better fashion, investing, as we have suggested and in my response to the throne speech, in terms of putting people first. But that's not what's happening. People are getting hammered in this budget. Again, what we see is the government continuing, for example, to underwrite horse racing to the tune of $25 million; $400 million on the ponies has been sort of bet away.

Now, when you look at what happened with the AISH budgeting and the supplemental supply, AISH has been frozen. Talk about vulnerable people: $1,083 plus some pharmaceutical benefits.

We look at what happened with ESL. There's a growing trend. It's called: beat up on your immigrant population. Last year the government cut funding for the English Express newspaper, that was a key tool in teaching English as a second language to students throughout the province. Now, not only did Advanced Education beat up on ESL students last year, but they seem to have set a trend because this year Education reduced the funding for English as a second language, and Employment and Immigration also cut back on ESL support programs. What are we saying to the world, that immigration isn't important to us?

The minister tried to pass it off as being a federal problem. Yes, the feds determine what the immigration rules are, but once the individuals arrive in this province, we don't expect the federal government to keep providing the additional subsidy and support. The province should be responsible for the people within its borders.

Another example of a very sad circumstance and a very vulnerable population is special-needs funding in Education. It's frozen for the third year running. The Education proposed budget barely covers the cost of the increased bargained wages for the last year of a five-year contract. Unless the Minister of Education can persuade his counterparts in Treasury, we're going to see severe reductions in teachers and staff throughout the province, which is going to have a very adverse effect on students and their learning.

Speaking of students and learning, the government seems to have something against innovation. AISI, the program that's supposed to stimulate out-of-the-box thinking in the education program: its budget was sliced in half. Now, I don't see that as being progressive. Possibly it fits into the conservative half of the equation, but it certainly isn't progressive.

Also, in advanced education, instead of increasing grants and bursaries, what the government has done is increased loans. In other words, it's increased debt. In speaking with members of the representatives of students in colleges and technical institutes this morning, they're very concerned about what happened, for example, at Red Deer College, which seems to have followed what's happened at the U of A and the U of C. At Red Deer College their facility fee, basically, from which they derive no direct benefit, academic or otherwise, has been increased by $290 for the year. At the U of A and the U of C it's closer to $500. Again, there's no comparative benefit for that increased funding.

The whole nature of the budgeting process, what the government considers to be a priority – for example, my hon. Member for Calgary-McCall was concerned with the Minister of Transportation about how long it's taking to finally twin highway 63, which is the direct route to Alberta's most valuable, hopefully sustainable resource wealth. The government was willing to spend $2 billion on carbon sequestration, which is just a single tool, versus getting people and goods safely back and forth to Fort McMurray.

Again, Mr. Chair, it's not the amount of money so much as how the money is invested. My concerns with sup supply may seem to the Treasury ministry as just being a small amount, only 2 per cent of the actual amount of the 2010-2011 budget, but 700-plus million dollars is a significant amount of money and should be invested wisely. I don't see renewable projects being supported. We've seen reductions in Education. We've seen reductions to Employment and Immigration. We've seen freezing in programs like AISH and special needs. There doesn't seem to be any investment in people or diversification.

The government has further subsidized drilling projects where incentives are no longer required to get the drilling up and running. The government has basically given the majority of the money that it earned through the increased land sales, that it bragged about, back to the industry in terms of drilling initiatives. It's the sense that Albertans have trouble getting a handle on.

Then we not only have supplemental supply, Mr. Chair, but very shortly we're going to have interim supply, and then as of April 1 we're going to have the main budget kick into effect.

Mr. Chair, I am concerned about how quickly we're burning through the sustainability fund. I'm very grateful for that fund. As has been pointed out frequently, it was a Liberal suggestion that was gratefully taken by this government. But even in the worst of economic times, if we're not using the money that we have in the wisest manner possible, which, incidentally, includes putting at least some away in the heritage trust fund – it has not grown, basically, since Lougheed left it.

Now, one of the financial arguments that I find rather ludicrous is the notion that had we built up our heritage trust fund to a greater extent last year, we would have lost even more from it in terms of poor investments. Again, Mr. Chair, this draws a direct relationship with the types of investments the government made and continues to make that don't produce the types of returns that are necessary.

As I said under putting people first in my response to the throne speech, if we are to diversify our economy, then we have to invest in education. We have to bring into account the English as a second language students, whether it's in immigration and employment or whether it's in education. We have to invest in early childhood/kindergarten programs. We have to provide that half-day programming support. We have to provide full-day support for kindergarten students. This would serve two purposes. It would reduce the need for child care, and it would also provide an education for those young children.

We are so fortunate in this province that we are still able to have nonrenewable resources serve as the basis of our economy, but, Mr. Chair, if we don't use the money that we currently have from those nonrenewable resources to diversify our economy, chiefly through education and through supports for our people, where are we going to be years down the road, when our nonrenewable resources are depleted or alternative energy sources are discovered that render them less attractive? There is this tremendous rush to get everything out of the ground, and in so doing, we're not only exploiting our resources, but we're exploiting the people who take those resources out of the ground.

Mr. Chair, we're fortunate to have this economic circumstance. We should be viewing it as a blessing rather than a problem. Until we start to manage our economy better and prioritize our investments, beginning with people, we're going to continue to be riding these boom-and-bust cycles because the majority of our economy is based on external, globally set prices. We've got to get off this rollercoaster and invest in our people, diversify our economy. It's going to take more than 14 per cent participation in postsecondary or a two-thirds graduation from high school rate in three years as opposed to going back for a fourth and a fifth.

Mr. Chair, probably our least realized resource yet the source of ongoing problems is our support for First Nations. Seventy per cent of the children in care come from First Nations. First Nations are the most rapidly growing portion of the population. First Nations represent the solution if we invest in First Nations in terms of restoration of pride, opportunities to participate in the economy, not through converting or subverting but in recognizing the abilities and qualities and moving forward.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members?

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we adjourn debate.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:30 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

For the motion:

4:10 Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 10 Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move second reading of Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011.

Mr. Speaker, there is in the province of Alberta, I believe, a pressing need for land-use planning. In the period of time of 2001 to 2006 the province of Alberta gained a population that was almost four times the size of the population of the city of Red Deer. We have, indeed, got a population growth that also includes a growing economy and a fast-paced economy; industrial, residential, and community pressure on the land base in the province of Alberta; and concerns around the quality of our airshed and the quantity and quality of water resources. All of these things need to be taken into consideration with regional plans.

We need to remember, you know, the issues that we had. Some of the members of the House, in certain ridings in the province, would remember the issues that we had around providing adequate housing and services for the people that had come to the province to work and the issue around infrastructure that was felt to be lacking with respect to that pressure. People were very worried at that point in time about the impact of development on air, land, and water in the province and the impact also on critical habitat for wildlife, on habitat for recreational areas, and the like. So, Mr. Speaker, we needed to manage multiple pressures on the landscape.

Out of that was born the land-use framework and nearly three years of consultation with Albertans with respect to land-use planning. There were always questions when we did the planning that we had initiated in the land-use framework – where is the plan? what is going to be the outcome of the land-use framework? what is this government's commitment to co-ordinated regional planning? – and the differences across the province, southern Alberta being completely different from areas in the oil sands or the forestry-intensive northwest parts of the province, and each region's unique needs and the challenges that each region had. We wanted to make sure that we considered the combined impact of all of the activities that were occurring on the land base, considered the needs for conservation, the needs for more balanced development over the long term.

From these questions that Albertans were posing to us came the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. We created the Land Stewardship Act to support regional planning, Mr. Speaker. It gives the authority to establish seven planning regions in the province based on watersheds. It will define, and has defined, what a regional plan may address.

Some examples, Mr. Speaker, would be the environmental impact and the identification of lands for conservation. We have established a role for regional advisory councils to take a look at each of the regions and provide government with their advice and a vision for a plan for each of the regions. The act would help us to establish that we can look at conservation tools that might do things like help reduce agricultural fragmentation. There are opportunities there for making sure that the eco stewardship of the land and the opportunity for eco goods and services, the benefits of that, could perhaps be enjoyed by the agricultural community.

We have respected local decision-making and people's property rights in the legislation. I can't express strongly enough, Mr. Speaker, that when we're looking at these amendments, we cannot cancel or take away, remove, or rescind somebody's land title or their freehold mineral rights or a number of other issues that, you know, had been discussed in our opportunities to be around the province talking to individuals and groups of people relative to what happens when you put a regional plan in place.

Mr. Speaker, we've also in this particular amendment made sure that we provided for compensation if private land that is identified for conservation is indeed put into things like a conservation directive. We've defined that there are statutory consents that, indeed, may require us to look at compensation. We have also defined that statutory consents do not include things like land title. Also, it's very clear that the existing provisions for compensation and appeal remain for any individual that is directly or adversely affected by what might happen in a regional plan.

I think that there have been some, probably deliberate, interpretations of the original act that were never intended. I believe that in certain circumstances as I've gone around and talked to Albertans, they in some cases were fearful, in most cases anxious. In some cases, most certainly, landowners were angry.

The Premier asked me to review the original act and to be sure that I could clarify for Albertans what the intent of this act is, and where there was necessity for change, we should look at the requirement for change and put the changes in place that would give Albertans a feeling of some comfort with respect to what the plans were intended to do. Also, Mr. Speaker, a thing that happened at that point in time was that there is now an indication that none of these regional plans will actually be enforced or approved until this review is completed and until we've had the opportunity to come here to the Legislature, look at the outcomes of Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, and be sure that we've had a good, open, and frank debate and discussion about this situation, again, on the floor of the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, the changes, I think, most certainly clearly define the scope of regional plans and the focus on land and land-related activities. We do have as an intent here to be sure that we look at the pressure on the land base and to be sure that we have an opportunity for species, human settlement, natural resources, and the environment to all be considered as we move forward and design the plans that we have thoughts on for Albertans in the future.

I've got to comment a bit on property rights and compensation. We have a respect for property rights clearly stated in the front end of the legislation now, and we have also indicated that the right to all existing compensation and appeals to any other compensation issues are clearly stated. Land titles, of course, Mr. Speaker, as I've said, were never included in the definition of statutory consent, and we've clarified that. The amendment act very clearly excludes land titles from any definitions that we have, and it also excludes freehold mineral rights and a range of other personal matters. A regional plan cannot cancel a land title, and it cannot affect freehold mineral rights.

The issue of compensation, of course, you know, has been hotly debated by groups and individuals across the province, and we have clarified that nothing in this act takes away any existing right to compensation. With compensation and compensable taking of property interest under the act or under a plan, there is an opportunity for compensation, an opportunity for appeal, and an opportunity to get to the courts if you're not satisfied with what you may see at the appeal process and with the Land Compensation Board. You can apply to the Crown if you're not satisfied. If your rights are affected and you're entitled to compensation, you're certainly allowed to appeal and to go before the board, and if you're not satisfied with that, Mr. Speaker, you can indeed go to the courts with respect to your compensation.

The consultation that we've gone through, Mr. Speaker, commits the government and the province of Alberta to openness, transparency, and fairness. There was, I think, an original concern that there might be an ability for a regional plan to be established without consultation, but clearly in the amendment consultation is required. We're committed to regional plans and the advice that we get from consultation, and as we've done already, we've laid out a way for this consultation to occur through the lower Athabasca and South Saskatchewan. We've received from the lower Athabasca a vision and advice to government, and of course we continue to move forward. The consultation on the lower Athabasca regional plan will take place over the next number of months, and we would continue with the amendment indicating that consultation is required. We'd continue with that framework that we have laid out. Before a plan or an amendment is made, it's clear now in the amendments that consultation is most certainly required. So there's a legal requirement for consultation.

The act would also now be amended to address unintended direct and adverse impact. Anyone that is directly and adversely affected can ask for a review. That, of course, is a new piece that is in the amendments that we're putting forward. The persons could apply to the minister for a review of a plan.

Mr. Speaker, another thing that I think would give a lot of comfort, particularly to titleholders, landowners who may have issues, is that you can actually request at any point along the progression of a regional plan that a variance be granted to you with respect to a plan. You know, you might not realize when the plan is initially incorporated that something could affect you, so you have a bit of breathing space there to look and see how the plan is going to work. If there was some suggestion that something that was happening in a plan might affect you, you can actually apply for a variance. There's a process set out for listening with respect to variances and hearing the variances, and under most circumstances I think we would be able to grant variances and avoid any unreasonable hardship that individual might be facing with respect to regional plans.

Mr. Speaker, our opportunity here to work with local governments again is very clearly defined. We want to be sure that we co-ordinate the decisions and not override decisions that are made by regional governments and municipalities. We put an amendment here that would ensure that prior to the incorporation of a regional plan municipal development that's under way, municipal bylaws that operate relative to their land use, et cetera, would be maintained, and if there is development that is under way, that would be allowed to be completed. So there's no intention to take away the opportunity for municipal governments to do what they need to do and continue to do what they have always done with respect to regional planning in their own municipalities.

The amendments that we've made will help us, I think, to sit down and work with municipal governments across the province to be sure that there's no intention here that we would make laws in the province of Alberta that, you know, would override or change the intent of municipal bylaws. We've actually removed part of the original act, taken away a piece that actually indicated that that, in fact, could have happened.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think there is a democratic tradition here of elected representatives determining policy for Albertans, and one of the policy areas that we do determine is the area around land use. I think it's very important that as we move forward, we have cumulative-effect management that takes into consideration the pressures on the air, water, land use, the environment, and social aspects of the province of Alberta and that we continue as elected representatives to determine that policy and make good policy that works for all Albertans.

The amended act, Mr. Speaker, most certainly creates some new checks and balances for cabinet, and it starts with the requirement to consult. It moves into an era, I think, where we'll be placing draft plans before the Legislative Assembly before they can be approved by the cabinet. New processes for review, new avenues for appeal, and I think that the result is a much more transparent regional planning process. I think that the regional plans respond to the needs and the interests of all Albertans.

As we debate, I hope we keep in mind that land-use planning is a requirement, I think, for ongoing proper development of the province of Alberta. I hope that we can also recognize that the amendments that we have put forward recognize and protect the rights and compensation of individuals and, most certainly, protect the opportunity for local decision with respect to development.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Well, this has been a long time in coming. I'm glad to get the opportunity to get up and get some observations on the record in the second reading portion of Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. This is a singularly important bill because it has significance in so many different arenas. There's no question that it has considerable significance and opportunity for political parties to further a particular cause. I know that one of the opposition parties, my colleagues to the . . .

An Hon. Member: Political right.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. They're seated to my left, but they certainly are not, politically, over there.

They have made hay with this over the break and have probably increased their membership based on the reaction to the initial bill. Of course, now we see the government trying to reclaim credibility and the lost ground around this.

I think this is also a significant bill because it has great impact for rural and urban issues and, in some cases, rural versus urban issues, but I will come back to that. I think that what we also see here is property rights versus public good and those two concepts coming into conflict with each other.

I was given, you know, the import of all of this. I was surprised to see the intention signalled by the government that they wanted to push the entire second reading through this afternoon, which I never think is wise because it tends to get backs up. We certainly had that signalled. I don't know that that's in fact going to happen now, but we'll see how it rolls out.

One of the things that I see in the original bill and I still see in this amending bill is reflective of a government philosophy of centralization of power, and this administration in particular has been centralization mad. You know, the health regions were centralized into one. The children's regions have been centralized down into fewer of them. This land-planning initiative is very much centralized into control that goes back into cabinet.

I also see the government's philosophy of very careful control of public input reflected in the original Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and it still exists in what I'm seeing through the amending bill.

I'm sure the minister is going to argue back with me, so I look forward to that, but I would also argue that certainly in the original bill there was a deliberate clouding of process. Very difficult to figure out what the heck was supposed to go on here and how it was all supposed to work.

I've been working my way back and forth. This is what the pages laugh at me for, but I've now managed to cover three desks with reference papers because I'm going back and forth between the original land stewardship bill, the Municipal Government Act, the amending act that we have here, and a number of other notes and reports that have been produced on this bill. I end up a taking up a lot of space, and I apologize to my colleagues for that, but it's not easy to track this stuff. You really are going back and forth between all of these. Really, I do legislation for a living, so I have a better sense of how to do this. I can't imagine being someone out in the community trying to put this one together and follow it. It doesn't surprise me that people have been flooding into information sessions that have been offered in certain areas of Alberta to try and get information on how this works.

Again, I see a downloading of certain processes or expectations or requirements that municipalities take and carry through on directives from the provincial government – also a philosophy that we see a great deal of from this administration – and a continuing drive to development. I'm thinking back to when the Athabasca advisory committee report on the land-use framework for that area was released. That was just stage 1. The advisory committee made recommendations about how the land-use plan for that area should start to look. I remember the minister defending, you know, that a whole 20 per cent of the land was going to be held aside for conservation, and wouldn't we be thrilled, to which I immediately thought: that opens up 80 per cent of it for development.

That's a discussion that we haven't really had as a public in Alberta. We have so much land here for not very many people, a huge amount of land, but we've also never discussed how we think it's appropriate to go ahead and divide that up. Should we open 80 per cent of it up to development? That doesn't mean that there will be somebody living on every square inch. Through my snowmobiling encounters I've been able to travel a lot of Alberta and a lot of land that is off the beaten track, off highway 2. I'll tell you that I can get a long way into places where I couldn't have gotten 30 and 40 years ago because of the seismic lines that were put in to find where the best places were to put a wellhead and to drill exploration wells.

Mr. MacDonald: What's the horsepower on your sled?

Ms Blakeman: About 500.

Mr. Denis: Not horsepower; 500 CCs.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, 500 CCs. Oh, sorry; not horsepower. Oh, boy. No, no. You guys get me off track here.

The point is that I can get a long way into what I think should have been fairly pristine land. The development that has gone on has opened up all of Alberta. If you look at it from space, we're a pincushion. We're absolutely latticed with lines that cut into our public land and give access to humans to get into that space, which is going to affect the wildlife.

The other significant observation, the other significant part of this bill, is that for the first time I really saw this administration tangle with rural property owners in a major way, and I can't say that the government came out of it unbruised. I think they actually got roughed up quite a bit. Ultimately, what I am seeing as this debate progresses on how this act has been adjusted continues to be a wrangle between the current administration and my colleagues to the ideological right, which are essentially the conservative elites – let me call it that – on the land-use regional plans and sort of agreeing and setting out how land will be used in the future.

What I want to do is just go over a couple of the points of concern that came to my attention that I think have not been addressed. I'm not going to go into the details because that's not appropriate in second reading, but I notice that there is a requirement that regional plans or amendments be tabled in the Legislature. My question is: will this be debatable as a concurrence motion? Are these just being tabled in the Legislature for information purposes, or are they being tabled in the Legislature for concurrence, for us to agree to that change of the land-use plan? I think that's very important, particularly when we get back to my points later on about the Henry VIII clauses. There's one question for the minister to answer, and it specifically appears on the bill on page 3, amending section 5.

On page 7 section 12, which amends section 15, allows title holders to apply for the variance in respect of restrictions that have been put on. The minister was just talking about this at the end of his remarks. That and a section towards the end make me think how much resource is going to be necessary with the request to review the regional plan.

You know, I have a lot of experience with municipal variances because I live in a neighbourhood that completely came under a redevelopment plan by the city, and 75 per cent of the neighbourhood was redone. A lot of changes. I lived through this for 10 years, and honestly on some days I got three variance notifications in my mailbox, so I'm very familiar with this. In the city there is a development appeal board, so those variances can end up in front of that, but I don't see what the administrative process here is around the variances. Someone applies for a variance, but what if somebody else doesn't want you to have it? Is there notification for other people?

If you've got a land-use plan and someone applies for a variance on it, that's going to have consequences down the line. Who manages and foresees those consequences? Who is the decision-maker about whether that variance is going to be granted and allowing anybody else to have their say on that, or is this just cut off at a certain point? You can apply for your variance. Nobody else has anything to say about it, and either they grant it or they don't. So that's the second question that I have.

Section 14, which is amending section 19 of the act, was the one where the burden was put on the landowner to apply for compensation within a specific period of time. By going back and forth, I was able to answer my own question there, which is: how did they get notification that this was going to happen? There is another section that actually deals with the notification. They don't just have to be constantly monitoring the Alberta Gazette, which, I'm sure, we all do every day. No, we don't, obviously. There was an official notification section to landowners that something would happen with the regional plan or would happen with their property so that they would know and be able to deal with that. So I answered one of my own questions there.

An Hon. Member: That's efficient.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, I know.

I'm also curious that there was no change to section 20. I'm pretty sure that section 20 was one of the ones that was being talked about as a Henry VIII clause, in which the minister or the cabinet is able to change legislation without coming back to the House. At the time the government defended these clauses very strongly, and I argued against them, and I still am. You know, as much as this place has been diminished, it's a bit of an echo chamber today, so I suppose that's proving my point. There's a lot of legislation now that can be dealt with by the minister away from this Chamber, and we never know about it unless we're reading the Alberta Gazette.

I don't see that there was a change in section 20 from the main bill, and I also question what was going on in section 19.

Mr. Knight: You have to look at section 21 as well when you're looking at section 20. All that's suggesting, of course, is that for all decision-making, municipal and provincial decision-making, the same rule applies.

Ms Blakeman: The minister is coaching me on the side that if I look at section 21, I will find out that everybody is treated the same, but I don't think that's quite answering my question.

When I look under – sorry; I have to go backwards and find out where I started here – section 14, which is changing section 19 of the original bill, by the time you get down to the bottom of page 10 in the paper bill, it's talking about, again, 19.1(10), that the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is cabinet, may make regulations – that's regulations – “respecting the form and manner of making applications to the Crown, the Compensation Board or the Court of Queen's Bench under this section.” I don't like it, but I understand what that's about. Then it talks about “respecting the application or modification of Part 3, Division 3, and the regulations made under that Division, in respect of applications to the Compensation Board or the Court of Queen's Bench under this section.”

Part 3, division 3, of the main bill is that compensation section. The whole thing is conservation directives. That says that this can be changed without coming back here because it's empowering cabinet to change that part 3, division 3. I'm still questioning that, so I'd like to hear the minister talk about that one.

Now, what I would expect to see, what I would hope to see from this bill, what the Official Opposition really wanted to see, was a fair and transparent expropriation process. First of all, it needs to be a transparent process for determining the need of a given project, and this is referencing other bills that have come through at the same time, in particular the big electrical one.

An Hon. Member: Bill 50.

Ms Blakeman: Bill 50.

There does need to be a transparent process about the need for something. If the government, you know, believes that it's right to proceed with that, then it shouldn't be worried about a process in which it explains itself to the public. So demonstrating the need; two, the transparent expropriation process; three, a fair compensation process; and four, a clear appeals process. You always have to have an appeals process built in. Any of us that work in our constituency offices are often dealing with that appeals process that's built into almost everything that we have in provincial government rule. So with this bill in my portfolio, that's what I as critic for Sustainable Resource Development wanted to see out of this. I'm not entirely convinced that that's what we got.

The whole issue of a land-use framework and the ability to make that plan is critically important, and trying to get that concept of public good is really important. When I talk to my constituents in downtown Edmonton, they say to me: “What? Land use? What are you talking about? I don't know it. What is this stuff?” It's true that for many urban dwellers this stuff doesn't touch their lives. But you talk about public good, you know: are my people interested in a high-speed rail link between Edmonton and Calgary? Now their eyes light up. Yes. Now they get it. When you say that the government would need to be able to assemble the land in order for that track to run on it – okay? – now they've got it. When you say, “We're talking about not having urban sprawl decimate agricultural land,” that's about the plan.

Those are some of the questions I'd like the minister to answer. I look forward to continued debate.

The Deputy Speaker: From my list here the next hon. member I recognize is the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011. The amendments in this act explicitly protect and enshrine landowner rights and make them front and centre in Alberta's land-use planning. The freedom to own and enjoy private property is a fundamental right that Albertans have had since Alberta became a province.

I would like to speak today on the importance of land-use planning in the protection of property rights. Mr. Speaker, the connection that Albertans have with the land is something that this government respects and will always protect. Land is unlike any other asset on a number of grounds. Every parcel is unique, it is fixed in place, it is finite in quantity, it will outlast any of its possessors, and it is necessary for virtually every human activity.

As a landowner myself my own family's livelihood has been dependent on the land for generations. As a rancher property rights are not only fundamental to my way of life but to all Albertans. This is why I strongly support the land-use framework and Bill 10, which will enhance the rights of rural landowners.

Mr. Speaker, the necessity of land-use planning is essential for Alberta's future prosperity. With 5 million people projected to reside in Alberta within the next 10 to 20 years, it is of paramount importance that we have planning legislation in place that will co-ordinate in an organized fashion the goals and objectives of Albertans. It should be Albertans, not the courts or foreign environmental groups, that provide input and decide on Alberta's future.

While some in opposition suggest they would rather have land-use decisions decided in the courts, I believe Albertans know what is at stake and that Albertans should have the final say on land-use planning. So I have to ask myself: what is behind the motives of the opposition when they throw out wild accusations about the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, or ALSA? I've had friends call me up and ask questions like: "Why did the government pass legislation that will take away my land? Why did the government pass legislation that will turn Alberta into a Soviet-style communist state?" There are many other wild accusations that are so far out there, it's almost laughable. All I can guess is that they are telegraphing their innermost thoughts to Albertans on how they would use such legislation if they were ever in power.

However, Alberta's future is a very serious matter. We need to get it right, and, Mr. Speaker, we have got it right. Bill 10 will make it absolutely clear that ALSA must respect the rights of individual property holders, that Albertans will continue to have a right to compensation, and that public consultation and transparency in the development of regional plans will be required.

These amendments make it so plain that this government supports landowner rights and their right to compensation that even the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere should be clear on the matter. Once a supporter of property rights, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere previously stated about the Alberta Land Stewardship Act that "at first glance much of this legislation may be interpreted as a regression on property rights, but it would be a very large mistake to think so as this bill, in my view, does the exact opposite. It strengthens landowner rights." He also stated that the former Bill 36 "is an unprecedented victory for the rights of landowners in this province." Mr. Speaker, the member's analysis of this legislation was as correct then as it is today. Albertans who earn their living from the land know how important land-use planning is for their livelihoods.

Long-time rancher Harvey Buckley recently stated to the Cochrane Eagle that "ALSA is the best piece of legislation this province has done in 60 years" and that "it does not infringe on your property rights."

Mr. Speaker, I believe that there is a direct correlation between land-use planning and property rights. Albertans enjoy their property entirely based on previous land-use initiatives. To see this, we can go back all the way to the pioneers that settled our land in accordance with the Dominion Lands Act. The Dominion Lands Act encouraged the orderly settlement of western Canada, which included numerous land-use regulations. For example, prospective landowners were required to be at least 21 years old. They were required to occupy the land for a set period of time, to build improvements on the land, and to cultivate a portion of the land, usually around 30 acres.

The Dominion Lands Act also set out how land should be divided; for example, into townships each containing 36 sections and for each section to be divided into quarter sections. It provided for public road allowances every mile by two miles to enable the travel and transportation of people and produce with minimal use of private land.

Mr. Speaker, these were land-use initiatives needed at that time to establish private property. It was through this planning process that Albertans gained proprietary interest in property. This is because the value of property comes largely from factors that are beyond one's property line. External qualities like infrastructure improvements, road access, water quality, and views are examples of external elements which can quantify the value of property. That is why I would suggest that property rights go beyond the four quadrants of a piece of real estate in that effective land-use planning as provided in ALSA would strengthen property rights, not diminish them. Essentially, proper land-use planning is an effective method to optimize property values of landowners.

However, there are also rights protecting what lies within your property, which is why it is essential that any land-use plan find an acceptable balance respecting both public and private property rights. That is why fair compensation is a key element of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and Bill 10 makes this abundantly clear.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote a long-time friend of mine, Mr. Neil Wilson, the immediate past president of the Alberta property rights initiative, who stated last week on CBC radio in relation to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act that if in any way proprietary interest is diminished, compensation should be available. When asked if ALSA achieves that, he replied: I think this government has tried its very best to take legislation in the interest of public and make it compensatory, certainly.

The Alberta Land Stewardship Act creatively found a balance which protects and enhances both external and internal property rights, and Bill 10 makes this even clearer. Albertans have told us they want leadership in provincial planning, and I believe that our economy is dependent upon ensuring we have the proper land-use plans in place. Property rights, economic growth in Alberta's future are all tied together in this important piece of legislation. We need to ensure investors that their rights are protected, and this bill does that. We need to ensure property owners that their property rights, whether it be surface, subsurface, or public, are respected, and this bill does that. We also need to assure Albertans that our province will continue to be a beacon of prosperity, freedom, and democracy, and I believe Bill 10 is a shining example of this Alberta tradition.

Mr. Speaker, I support Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, and I would suggest all members stand in support of this legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comment or questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. member if he can clarify comments which he attributed the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I was shocked, frankly – shocked – to hear those comments, and I would like it if he would please identify his source.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, hon. member. I would clearly identify the source. It is Hansard, May 13, 2009.

An Hon. Member: Say it isn't so.

Mr. Berger: It's so. It's a page and a half, pages 1137 through to 1138, if that clarifies that for you. It's quite a lengthy speech on that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutillier: Yes. To follow up on the question to the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod on the comments that were made, I have not met anyone more knowledgeable in terms of property rights than the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. It's clear to me that the understanding of the hon. member is something that he needs to review because, quite simply, what was said in Hansard is not the rest of the story.

Clearly, the Wildrose caucus supports the infinite rights of landowners. In fact, in some recent town hall meetings in many of your constituencies I understood that a gentleman by the name of Keith Wilson had presented some very, very interesting facts impartially, Mr. Speaker. I'd be really interested in the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod — he heard the comments that were made. In fact, it's my understanding that the Minister of SRD invited Mr. Wilson to meet with him, and I understand he had a very clear understanding of the facts. I'd be really interested: is he saying that what Mr. Wilson is saying is not accurate relative to the issue of the assault on property rights of Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I kind of got lost in the preamble there, but I think what he was really asking is: was this the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere's actual speech? I would submit it, table it, if he would like or give you copies. There are lots of them.

Mr. Boutilier: Keith Wilson is what I'm asking about now.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Wilson's comments at those meetings: I would like to comment that it would be nice if he would put the whole line of the act in when he quotes a line. Dot, dot, dot doesn't really extend to the content of it.

To go a little further on that whole issue here, when we go through this, there was a point here where the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere had claimed that he was given a speech to read. I think he also claimed something similar to the 1974 or '75 abduction of Patty Hearst, where she'd been kidnapped, and then she went and robbed a bank and just acted like her kidnappers. So that was why he read this speech, because he had been kidnapped by our party and then read this speech.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to submit that when you go through the content of this speech, the content of this speech has a lot of local content on the area of Airdrie-Chestermere, and I think the member did a wonderful job of putting forward his points in this exact speech and on the members of his community that he brought up and talked about freely here. He quoted Doc Seaman's generous donation of conservation easements on the OH Ranch. He spoke of a fellow here, Jim Hole, who would have really liked this legislation because it would have enabled him to continue on with his operation and gain some value out of it without actually selling it. And it goes on for the next page, basically discussing these different things.

I think the member, being a trained legal fellow, four years of postsecondary, three years of legal training, knew what he was reading here and was very impressed with it. I have to say that that was one legal opinion, now we have another legal opinion, and I'm sure we'll have more legal opinions to come forward. But I have to say that I think he was bang on on this one. He did a wonderful job of conveying it. Now I'm surprised that he's not in here this afternoon to discuss it further.

Mr. Boutilier: Excuse me. Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: You should not mention the presence or absence of a member.

Mr. Berger: Oh, okay. I apologize. Point well taken. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The point of order has been retracted. He has apologized for that.

On my list here, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Do you wish to speak?

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 10. I think that some context is valuable here, and I think also some history is valuable here. The context of this is the fact that there is widespread discontent in the province, in rural areas in particular, with a suite of Tory legislation, and that's not just Bill 36, but it is also Bill 19, and it is also Bill 50. The three of them have to be taken together, in my view, in order to get the entire picture of what this government is actually attempting to do.

Some of the history is attempts to site a north-south transmission line in this province a few years ago which fell afoul of landowners in rural Alberta, particularly in the Rimbey area where a group of landowners got together and actively challenged what was actually being proposed. The whole process was compromised when the ERCB was caught spying on this group. That created quite a firestorm of conflict. So the government decided that they were going to basically legislate a sledgehammer in order to crush the flea that had thwarted their attempts. But it wouldn't have been thwarted had there been more openness about the proposal and if the ERCB had not resorted to illegal tactics in its attempt to overcome opposition. Keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, the ERCB is supposed to be a neutral body that adjudicates these sorts of things and does not take sides or advocate one side or the other. So it was kind of a dark day, I think, in terms of privacy and basic civil rights of Alberta citizens.

The government, having gone ahead with its deregulation of electricity in the area of transmission, decided that a massive set of projects was required. Now, we have about $2 billion worth of infrastructure for transmission currently in the province, and it serves the province well and has for a long time. It's getting older, but it's by no means going to fall apart. The government wants to initiate a whole series of new projects that would be worth $16 billion when you add everything in; in other words, an eightfold increase in value over what we have today.

No adequate explanation has ever been provided for this massive increase in transmission infrastructure. But the one explanation that presents itself is that they want to create a huge market for the buying and selling of electricity, the generation of electricity in Alberta for export purposes to the United States because domestic consumption cannot explain the massive scale of infrastructure that's being proposed.

In order to ram this through, the government passed a series of laws to give them the power that they needed to do this. I know that Bill 36, which this is supposed to amend, gave the cabinet a huge amount of power. It gave them overwhelming control over every aspect of regional plans, and it doesn't reflect the land-use framework's commitment to public input and community involvement. The government can create regional plans, regional advisory councils, and so on.

I think that you also have to take a look at Bill 19, which preceded it, and that allows for an area of land to be designated as a land assembly project. The minister has to publish a plan of the project to create a project area, but once it has been declared, the cabinet can make regulation about how that land can be used, developed, or occupied. Some amendments were made to that legislation, but it gives an enormous amount of power to the cabinet in order to essentially designate any land that they wish and to control any sort of development on that in a long-term sense. So if they are going to build a project 10 years down the road, they can effectively sterilize that land.

So Bill 19 was a key piece of this. With Bill 36, again the same thing. Bill 50 took away the authority from the Alberta Utilities Commission, the power to approve the need for transmission lines. It eliminates that the public interest needs to be shown before the project is approved, and it is paving the way for the construction of this massive infrastructure for transmission for profit, all of which, by the way, will now be paid for by all electricity consumers in the province. These pieces of legislation need to be taken together as a way of taking away traditional rights of landowners and taking away regulatory oversight of major projects in our electrical system in this province. That is really, I think, what has to be seen.

Now, it is true that some members of the Wildrose caucus, who were then members of the Progressive Conservative caucus, did support these bills. We made a motion, for example, to try and stop Bill 50, and that was opposed as well. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the role that the NDP played as the only party at the time leading the fight against these three bills and trying to connect the bills to the root source of this problem, which is electricity deregulation, which has created a situation where in order to allow big electricity companies to make more profits, the very ratepayers who are supposed to be served by them are going to be shaken down dramatically to pay for all of this unnecessary infrastructure.

It's interesting that in recent weeks the Minister of Infrastructure has gone on the record in his community newspaper indicating that some of this infrastructure is required in order to facilitate the development of nuclear power in our province. That is a startling admission which flies in the face of other statements that we've had from the government.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate one more point, and that is the distinction between the position of the NDP on this legislation and the present position of the Wildrose Alliance. Both parties are opposing these pieces of legislation, but the Wildrose Alliance is taking the position of property rights as an absolute, and that's not the position that we take. They would like to protect property rights absolutely, and we would like to protect the public interest.

Where we draw the line with the government is that we think you should never be able to take peoples' property unless there's an urgent public necessity to do so, there is full consultation, and there is full and adequate compensation. These bills violated those principles, and that's why we were so strongly not in favour of them. There is a risk that in the reaction against these bills that the government has created, there may actually be changes that take away the legitimate role of land-use planning by municipalities and by the provincial government, so it's important to us that the ability to plan land use and the ability of the public interest to trump property rights when that's necessary should be retained. We don't want to throw the baby out with the bathwater, as do our friends in the Wildrose Alliance.

The point that I think is most important is that there is a drive towards centralizing power that's inherent in each of these pieces of legislation that I find very disturbing. In other words, the government has decided that because of some problems down the road, largely of its own making and of the ERCB's own making, they're going to abandon the democratic process when it comes to approval of these projects and push ahead with centralized decision-making, and that goes too far in our view. For those reasons I think we are going to draw the line here.

Bill 10 does not remove all of the egregious elements of Bill 36, and I think that it's certainly insufficient as far as I can see. For example, the minister will be able to issue directives to the stewardship commissioner and staff. The minister will still maintain, in our view, an undue amount of political control in the regional plan process, in their implementations. Some of the changes are cosmetic. It replaces the word "extinguish" with "rescind" in reference to statutory consent in section 8. Instead of saying, "No person has a right to compensation by reason of this Act" and then listing the exceptions to the rule, the act will now state, "A person has a right to compensation by reason of this Act" and then list the avenues available for compensation.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the bill fails to adequately address the problems in Bill 36, and it certainly does nothing to address the significant problems that the other two companion pieces of legislation provide: overriding the rights of property owners, overriding proper regulatory oversight of the construction of major infrastructure projects that would be paid for by ratepayers.

For those reasons we cannot support the bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened intently to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I have a couple of clarification questions, I guess, that I'd like to ask him. He made reference to the Wildrose several times, wanting to make distinctions. I do not believe that at any time the Wildrose has ever said that the Expropriation Act isn't valid or shouldn't be in place. There is actually a long tradition since, you know, the BNA Act where expropriation can and should be allowed for public good. What we have been referring to over and over again and have declared is that we need to entrench property rights in the Constitution because if those were in fact entrenched in the Constitution, bills 19, 36, and 50 could have been challenged in the courts. Again, the Member for Livingstone-Macleod says: oh, we don't ever want to be in the courts. This certainly sounds like a monarchy, that they will control the courts.

I guess I would take issue and ask for your clarification on why you feel that we do not think the Expropriation Act is applicable in developing, whether it's power lines, pipelines, roads, transportation, and in having that process if, in fact, someone has been challenged by the government.

You've eloquently talked about Bill 50 and how they can push these power lines through, and it's not in the public good. In the old act, where they had to have proof of need, that was critical. Now, like I say, with Bill 50 they've wiped that aside and said: "Oh, no. This is essential." Again, it's a policy that the government has put out, thereby not allowing us to challenge it in the courts because they can just dictate it. It's a government policy. It goes forward.

Perhaps you could clarify why you feel that we do not think the public good is ever addressed through the Expropriation Act and that property rights are paramount, and therefore there would be an absolute juggernaut of any movement forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I'm surprised that the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore would want us to be making legislation in the courts. I didn't think that was a conservative principle.

I think that entrenching property rights in the Constitution really takes away the ability of elected bodies to make decisions about what the public good is. I think these bills stink, but I think that it is a democratic issue, not a legal issue, to determine property rights. So as much as I dislike these bills and oppose them, I don't want our laws fixed by court decisions with entrenched property rights. That's really the difference between us.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I appreciate this opportunity, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. This series of acts or bills that we have dealt with over the last number of years certainly has called into question the province's land-use plans. If you are not satisfied with the amendments to this legislation as proposed in Bill 10, what further changes would you like to see to make it more contemporary and – I don't know what the word would be – to make it more appealing to the New Democratic Party?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that regional plans need to be strengthened, especially with respect to environmental protection. There are only a couple of things that it must do here: describe a vision for the region and state one or more objectives for the region. I think that regional plans have to be detailed and specific to be effective, so I'm not sure that the legislation really deals with that.

I think that we need to take away more control from the minister, and I think that we need to have more direct community control.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The Committee of the Whole shall now continue.

Bill 9 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (continued)

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's with a great deal of disappointment that I rise at this point to speak now to the supplemental supply estimates. This government seems to take great glory in jumping back and forth and switching the game. You put on all of your hockey equipment, get ready to play, and then they want to go out and play football or something else.

It's simple for them because they have multiple members, and they are able to just have a new person step up. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out when we were talking about Bill 10 how she had three desks covered with material to try and address the situation. Unfortunately, I only have two desks in front of me, so I use the floor as well to try and prepare. Now the government, though, is switching back and saying: oh, no; we need to go back to supplemental supply.

They seem to take pleasure in trying to cause as much confusion and problems as possible, which, again, is very disappointing, that they cannot communicate and extend a little bit of courtesy as we discuss the various bills that are coming forward. They sit over there with smirks on their faces and think: oh, this is a wonderful democratic process. Like I say, I'm somewhat dismayed at their behaviour. [interjections] Now we'll have some chatter from the backbench, former ministers that are no longer allowed to sit on the front bench. I guess they chattered too much in caucus and cabinet, so they got booted out. I don't know. They have quite the disciplinary process over there that, again, I don't understand.

But we'll continue on. Supplemental supply. It's interesting that the minister got up and spoke eloquently about how this is the smallest supplemental supply that they've needed in years. When you look at the other half of it, this is the biggest budget, the biggest deficit that they've had in years. So they're saying, "Actually, we came in very, very close." – I believe the number he used earlier was $4.8 billion, and – "Aren't we grand to be able to run such a fiscally responsible ship?" The fact of the matter is that this ship is heavily overburdened, and it's sinking. It's got problems. It's not fiscally sound. Again, because it's carrying a $4.8 billion deficit, what's the future of this going forward?

It somewhat reminds me of the famous Stanford marshmallow experiment back in the 1960s, Mr. Chair. At that point they brought in three-year-olds and put them in a room and put a marshmallow in front of them. First, they'd ask them, "Would you like the marshmallow?" Of course, those children at that point were thrilled with the marshmallow. Then they'd say: "If you wait 10 minutes, we will give you a second marshmallow. But we need to excuse ourselves. We'll be back in 10 minutes. When we get back, if the marshmallow is still there, we'll reward you with a second marshmallow." It's interesting that at the young age of three years I believe it was 20 or 30 per cent of those children were able to have the discipline and the understanding to say, "I will wait because I will have twice as much in 10 minutes." As they followed those individuals through life, they realized how successful those people were because they had the discipline and the ability to think forward and wait to get that reward.

What this is relevant to, Mr. Chair, is the fact that this government was exceedingly lucky to have some real lottery winnings from 2005 to 2008. It's kind of interesting because when you talk to financial advisers, they say that when someone all of a sudden comes upon a big windfall, if they don't talk and collaborate with the right individuals, they will in all likelihood lose that windfall. In a very short period, between one to three years, that money will evaporate, and they will not know or be able to show where it went. They'll be fiscally irresponsible.

That's exactly the situation we're in, Mr. Chair, with this supplemental supply. We're only the second year in. We're going to burn over two-thirds, perhaps three-quarters, of what I call the political slush fund, the lottery winnings. This government didn't have the discipline to look at: "How do we spread this out? How do we ensure that we get good value for our dollar?" They've gone out and frivolously spent it on many projects that are not necessary or for the fact that they couldn't say: "You know, if we just extend this over four or five years, what's the value that we could do? Are these projects sustainable?"

What I'm speaking about, Mr. Chair, is exactly the situation we're in with the infrastructure building that's gone on in this province. In 2003 the infrastructure budget was cut in half, and it was devastating to the industry. We were running about $3 billion a year at that time. It was cut in half, to $1.5 billion. The capacity of the industry was literally destroyed. But worse than that, the confidence of the building industry in this government has never been the same since because of the yo-yo effect of this government spending great amounts of money because they have it in their pocket, saying, "You must spend this within 18 months; you must spend it on this infrastructure," with no thought about down the road 10 years or 15 years. It's just, "Well, what do we need to do to retain power and to be able to buy as many votes as possible for the next election?"

Once again we're here addressing the supplemental supply because of this government's inability to come within budget and function for even a single year. They're caught in the problem of overspending, expenses, always these unforeseen disasters that hit, and there's never any planning in place to look after that.

We need to go back and look exactly at the supplemental supply. Like I said, I've got to dig it out from my Bill 10 notes now, that we've got to throw over top. It's just disappointing that in such a year as this, with such a huge deficit, that you wouldn't think we could stay within the budget that was set out. They've been doing this for 40 years. You'd think they'd have a little bit of experience and understanding that you need to plan for these things, these problems that arise. But, no, they failed to do that, so once again we're doing supplemental supply.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity referred to the three budgets that we're going to have to debate here, with interim supply coming up. Again, this is another failure of this government. They promised that they'd actually come in and present the budget early so that we wouldn't have to go into interim supply, to be more efficient. But do they do that? No. They don't ever seem to comprehend their own words or be willing to follow through with them in order to say: "You know, we're going to be fiscally responsible. We're going to be prudent with the taxpayers' money. We're going to invest wisely."

Zippping back here again to the infrastructure and the building that's going on, in question period it's very difficult under a 35-second rule to be able to expound a little bit, so I want to talk a little bit more about the problems that we see with the huge spending on infrastructure and the wall that we're going to hit. Interim funding, supplemental supply: there isn't going to be anything that this government can pull out. There's certainly not going to be any sustainability fund where they can go and say: we need to continue this.

What I'm referring to, Mr. Chair, is that consistency of planning and understanding what's going forward. If we understand those things, we can remain and come in under budget and not have to go through the problems of addressing supplemental supply. But at this current rate of $6.1 billion in infrastructure this year, how much longer can they continue that sustainability? If they've created that capacity in the industry here, in two years we're going to have to shrink down to perhaps $3 billion, $2 billion if we're going to actually balance the budget. We have this huge yo-yo effect, then. Once again, back prior to 2003, when this government had a little bit of consistency, industry knew that they were going to, you know, spend about $2.5 billion, $2.7 billion, $2.8 billion, $3 billion, and they actually built the capacity. They looked at paying off their equipment over a five-year period and realized that not all of this equipment will last that time.

When the drastic cuts came and then the huge spending in 2005-06, with them wanting to spend I can't remember whether it was $7 billion or $8 billion, most of those businesses looked at it and put bids in to say, "Well, we'll go buy the equipment, but because this isn't sustainable" – they've had a lucrative year this year, but who knows if they're going to win the lottery this year? – "we'll bid at a price to make sure we pay for our equipment in this year." The building industry has never been the same since that because of the erratic behaviour of this government.

I just have to say how disappointed I am that after 40 years this government is not capable of coming in under budget. Even in the biggest deficit ever in this province's history – the government is saying $4.8 billion, but really it's closer to $7 billion when it looks to revenue versus expenses – they're taking this huge amount of money out of, supposedly, a sustainability fund and using it for infrastructure building saying, "Oh, now is a great time," and it would have been a great time had we had triple or quadruple that money in there and they were having the gradual expenses.

But these great times are going to come to a sudden halt. In two years, when that sustainability money is gone, then what is the government going to say? "Oh, this is a great time to borrow money and to continue building infrastructure." That's what I see them doing. Or they're going to face the realities of an election before that budget, and Albertans can send them on their way. They certainly deserve to be sent home, saying, "You're irresponsible and not able to budget properly" and, more importantly, "Your priorities are very poor."

We've had a few members talk. I believe the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, if my memory reminds me properly, talked about the importance of, you know, seniors, community services, and how they took the money away early in the budget only to find that they couldn't meet that, and now they're having to return that budget to Children and Youth Services. It's very discouraging, this yo-yo effect. Again, what are they going to do to these different government services going into this next year? They're going to immediately retract what they've been given. They make the announcements; they make the retraction.

It is very frustrating for these front-line workers, for these managers, that are trying to do the best they can with the dollars, being promised this, only to have it rescinded. Again they say, "Well, here it is in supplemental supply" at the end. This government just doesn't seem to understand the importance of consistency, of budgeting long term, not one year.

Yet they've supposedly caught that vision with Alberta Health, saying: oh, this is going to be consistent funding over the next five years. Well, why has it taken so long, with us having gotten into such a disaster, before they say in one area, "Here's the five-year funding" whereas they refuse to do it in other areas? Yet they promise and say: "Don't you worry. We're there. We signed a five-year contract with the teachers." They're no sooner into that contract than they're wanting to fight with them or to say: well, please give it back.

They certainly don't give back their raises. They takes three steps forward and say: "Oh, well, we'll stop here. Okay. Well, we'll take a quarter of a step back. Aren't we wonderful now?" Again, it's just disappointing to the Alberta taxpayers. They're so frustrated with the spending, the priorities of this government.

Again, it's been brought up by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere about the federal building. We're not saying not to ever do it, but what we're saying is that the priorities were well known in advance, and if we had an actual list of what's coming down the chute, not what's actually been announced, we could do a lot better in prioritizing properly and listening to Albertans on what they want. The money that's being spent on that federal building could have easily been budgeted two or three years down the way. We were well into the eye of this economic storm before that started. They could have said: "You know, we're not going to go forward on this. We're going to prioritize seniors' care facilities. We're going to prioritize schools." Yes, they're putting in some, but they're not putting in enough.

The President of the Treasury Board said that we need balance. I think a toddler has better balance than this provincial government when it comes to balancing the budget. The bottom line is that it's not just balance; it's priorities. It's being able to look down the road and realize that, you know, this isn't over in 2012 or 2013. The province needs to continue. Infrastructure is going to need to continue. Are we going to be there? Are we going to do what the government needs to do to ensure that the funding is there, that we have a competitive industry that understands the viability, knows what's coming down?

Again, we've got this supplementary supply. Why doesn't the government come out with some more details? Let's have the details. Let's have a public, prioritized list of infrastructure. When the deficit is growing like this, we could shrink back and say, "We're only going to spend $4.1 billion on infrastructure this year" and then see where the bidding goes and how many projects we can do.

Mr. Chair, I have to say that I am very disappointed that we have to spend the time going through supplemental supply, even more disappointed that this government jumps back and forth while we're in the House here rather than allowing the discussion to continue with one specific bill. It's quite amazing to look at this and to realize that they cannot even budget for one year. I just have to be disappointed overall that we're spending this time on supplemental supply.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll sit down and listen to other members. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the bill.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Sorry I was away earlier. I was interviewing a fantastic candidate for the riding of Livingstone-Macleod, and I unfortunately couldn't make it. We'll make sure that I'm here a little bit more often. He's a doozy. You'll love this one. Anyway, we'll leave that till 2012 along with a few others.

I'd like to comment on the supplementary supply bill. In particular – honestly, I'm not going to mince words – this government talks about balance and finding the right balance. They've got about as much balance as a drunk. I mean, they wouldn't know balance if it was, you know, flashed right in front of them, if their life depended on it, and indeed it does at this point.

It's just something else when we're listening to the tripe that was expressed yesterday by the Member for Edmonton-Calder with regard to the federal building. I got a couple of e-mails from some folks who had watched question period and watched that member's statement. They're just amazed that it actually hasn't occurred to this government yet that spending $275 million on new offices for bureaucrats and MLAs with, I might add, interactive water features, an ecozone, an agrizone, a skating rink, a new plaza . . . [interjection] I know. The interactive water features, Member: maybe we'll have to wear our swimsuits to work. I don't know.

The point is the fact that they can't see that it is so clearly not a priority for Albertans. The interactive water feature in the federal building somehow was a higher priority than new schools, than long-term care, than balancing the budget.

That's the whole problem with this government. They keep saying: "Where would you cut? What would you do? What would you do differently?" Then you tell them: "Let's have the list. Give us the order of projects that you have. Give us the list of projects that you feel are important for Alberta, and give us the criteria that you used to arrive at those projects, and then we'll have a debate. We'll talk about what stuff can wait an extra year. We'll have that debate." That's a good debate to have so that we can balance our budget and get our province back on the road to prosperity. Yet all they can do is go back to the same tried and trusted method that they always use, which is to fearmonger, to spin half-truths and entire mistruths, to personally attack.

It's amazing. You know, it just doesn't make any sense to me that a government that is elected to serve the people can be so out of touch with reality that they would actually think that the renovations to the federal building, including skating rinks and interactive water features, are somehow more important than seniors and long-term care and schools for kids and balancing the budget, for that matter, all three.

The problem people have with this government is that they have not been able to prioritize. They are a Seinfeld government; they are a government about nothing that stands for nothing. There are individuals in that government that do stand for things and do have principles, but as a whole they don't stand for anything. I mean, the term "Progressive Conservative" is an oxymoron in and of itself, but aside from that, there's just no grounding that they have with regard to what they're doing, what the plan is other than to spend as much as you can to satisfy as many people as possible. You know, it just blows my mind away that that's the limit of their vision and imagination.

Obviously, as a Wildrose government we would have looked very carefully and would have clearly said that that federal building along with carbon capture and storage and many of the other boondoggles and waste that this government has come up with over the last several years – we would clearly put those projects off. We would delay them, and we would focus on the priorities of Albertans, which are, for example, long-term care so that we can unclog our hospital beds, schools for our kids so that we can educate the next generation of Alberta entrepreneurs and health professionals and scientists and artists and all the talent that we have.

Anyway, the biggest failing of this government – and it's reflected in this bill – is just a complete lack of ability to prioritize needs before wants. Ultimately, that will be their undoing because as we saw with Paul Martin federally, as we see with other politicians throughout time, anybody whose priority is everything, stands for nothing. That's the problem with this government. They don't know what they stand for other than satisfying the whims of every possible special-interest group under the sun. [interjections] That's right. There you go.

Anyway, I hope that this government will find it in their minds at some point to realize: "You know what? The people of Alberta want to see what their priorities are." They want to see the list top to bottom so that we can have this debate. I'd like to know from the members opposite: what did the federal building beat out? What long-term care facility did that $275 million beat out? What school did it beat out? What on that priority list got left behind because of the blinking $275 million federal building? Until they answer that, they don't have a leg to stand on.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, but pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) the chair must now put the question proposing the approval of the appropriation bill referred to the Committee of the Whole. The question goes: does this committee approve Bill 9, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011?

[Motion carried]

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) the committee shall immediately rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 9.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 10

Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, clearly, as much as the hon. minister is attempting to do what he believes is the right thing, I think the Expropriation Act has adequate provisions for compensation already. So the question, really, I have to ask is: why are we willing to overrule that? The bill is unnecessary simply because other provinces have rivers, other provinces have industry, other provinces have growth, but other provinces use a balanced approach to managing these things, and that's the difference.

I heard the Member for Livingstone-Macleod earlier. I wish him well with his police college. That's supposed to be coming somewhere down the road, but I'll believe it when I see it.

In my view Bill 10 – I believe that this government always thinks it knows best and views the rights and claims of individuals and local governments more as nuisances than it should in terms of, you know, the inconvenience that they face. So we're here today to speak on behalf of those municipalities.

I might by way of history go back. Back in the earlier years it was said by a very distinguished former cabinet minister here that there are three things you have to do when you're bringing forth the original Bill 36, and that is that if you don't get it right, you have to listen, listen, and listen. What happened was that this bill is essentially amendments to Bill 36 and, really, 12 amendments because this government was not willing to listen to Albertans.

That is where a verdict will be rendered to you and all of us at the next election. If, in fact, you had listened, listened, and listened – I know the members of the Wildrose caucus have listened, the member for the New Democratic Party has listened, members of the Liberal Party sometimes have listened, and the Alberta Party have listened. There are even some members on the other side, especially the one that might have been on the wrong page today, who occasionally listen. But, Mr. Speaker, there's a majority over there who haven't been listening, and the verdict will be rendered to you in the next provincial election.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the minister, whom I call a friend, just simply doesn't understand the magnitude of what is taking place here.

You've heard me often in this Assembly say that it's an example of the inmates running the asylum. I believe that holds true, but this is an example of not only running the asylum; you've turned over the keys.

Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, there's an opportunity. I have solutions to what is being proposed here. Rescind it. Repeal Bill 36. Retract, rescind, repeal. I think the option is this: we have an existing infrastructure for the minister already in place. I proudly served as a Minister of Municipal Affairs. The Member for Highwood: I'm glad he's listening to me now. Well, maybe he's not listening, but he's going to have to listen.

The bottom line is that the Municipal Government Act is a governing body with 365 municipalities where we have the infrastructure in place already. We have the infrastructure in place under the Municipal Government Board. There is a board there that actually can arbitrate, that can take a look at regional plans and accomplish what was intended in Bill 36 without violation of the principles of a person's right to own property. There is the Expropriation Act, that has worked very successfully over the last hundred years for Alberta. That is an appropriate measure, but what you have done in this bill is literally taken a maul hammer to something that is so important in terms of the values to Alberta.

For instance, the Water Act. We have under the Environmental Appeals Board today, another ministry that I served under, a very strong Water Act that can protect the value of our water, our blue gold as it's often referred to by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: No, not by me.

Mr. Boutilier: Also the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has mentioned the words "blue gold" often.

Mr. Mason: Just a point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: You have a point of order?

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Mason: I do, yes. Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), language to cause disorder. To suggest that it's me that talks about blue gold flies in the face of reality, hon. member. It's you.

The Deputy Speaker: On the point of order.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, Mr. Speaker, I saw on YouTube a sergeant who talked about blue gold. I might have mistaken who had used that. I do know I've often talked about blue gold, the water. I often have gone forward and said: if you were in a desert and you had a choice between oil and water, I would always accept blue gold as the preferred option. I know the hon. member would agree with me on that point.

The Deputy Speaker: There's a point of order there. You posed a point of order.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order.

Mr. Mason: That would be up to the Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Do you speak to the point of order?

Mr. Anderson: I absolutely say that I am witness, Mr. Speaker, to this YouTube piece of evidence. Clearly, there was a sergeant on a YouTube video that looked strikingly similar to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and he said blue gold, sir. He talked about blue gold. He admonished this member not to talk about blue gold. There is no doubt that he has referred to blue gold, and I'll stand by my caucus colleague. There is no point of order, in my opinion, on this, Mr. Speaker. The evidence on YouTube speaks for itself.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on this point of order.

Mr. Chase: Yes. On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think it may be hard to get members of other parties to volunteer at future Christmas videos if we bring them back to haunt them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I think we have enough information. I haven't seen the YouTube, so I would say that if the hon. member said that he's not on the YouTube, then I would rule that there's a point of order, that you have to apologize to the member if he's not.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, it is within my humbleness to apologize to the sergeant, who happens to look like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, regarding blue gold. I'm very proud to then be the architect of the words "blue gold." And "mother ship" if I could add as well.

Mr. Mason: Fair enough.

The Deputy Speaker: All right. Thank you.

Now we'll continue on the bill.

Debate Continued

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 10, clearly, is a violation of the rights of Albertans when it pertains to property. I think the hon. Minister of SRD perhaps may have listened to too many lawyers. In my mind it is missing the point, to the point where it's lacking the measured approach that this minister has taken before in many other examples.

I actually want to thank the minister. I understand that he invited a very knowledgeable lawyer, who is not with the Justice department, a gentleman by the name of Mr. Keith Wilson, who has spent his entire career dealing with the issue of property rights. I can say that in the town halls when he explains the issue and the assault on Albertans pertaining to property rights, it is very concerning. I'm sure and I hope the minister would share that same feeling because this is an assault on property rights.

Do the right thing. Repeal the bill. Rescind it. Go back to the principle of listen, listen, and listen. If you table a bill like what was tabled previously, Bill 36 – and here it is now with 12 amendments – something has not gone right. Albertans are not fooled. You've violated the principle of listen, listen, and listen. If a minister cannot get an original bill through with these amendments, even though it might not have been this minister at that time, I sincerely say that the right thing to do would be to rescind the bill and repeal it.

I want to say that Albertans probably would have rewarded you if this government after 40 years had chosen to take that action. But what they did was that they didn't listen, didn't listen, and didn't listen, and now they've come forward with 12 amendments. Mr. Speaker, those 12 amendments: we'll wait until the next election to render the judgment on that.

I can only say today that I do not support Bill 10. I want to say that although this government always thinks that it knows best, I still have faith in some of the members on the other side.

At this time I would say to all members: thank you for being so quiet and listening. I again will apologize to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Whoever his look-alike is, I'll certainly hunt him down. In saying that, Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's perfectly apparent that the hon. member had not much to say. He stopped with two minutes left before 6 o'clock. He could have added a lot more to the debate in two minutes. In two minutes you can really say a lot. But, obviously, the hon. member didn't wish to. So at two minutes to 6 I would move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 9, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Renew us with your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege and pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and to all of the Assembly 45 of the brightest grade 6 students in the province from Sir Alexander Mackenzie school in St. Albert. These students are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Roger Bouthillier and Mrs. Janet Hurley, and a student teacher, Miss Chantal Fournier. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the Alberta Students' Executive Council, or ASEC. This organization has advocated on behalf of postsecondary students in our province for over 29 years. They represent over 120,000 postsecondary students in Alberta from colleges, technical institutes, and universities. ASEC is an active stakeholder in postsecondary education. They work hard to ensure that front-line student issues are clearly communicated to government, and that's what they're here doing this week. This week there are 10 members here, and I'd like them to stand as I introduce them: Carol Neuman, Steven Kwasny, Timothy Jobs, Meghan Melnyk, Kerri Hartman, Jeff Desjarlais, Brady Schnell, Ben Wilson, Martha Affleck, and Jamie Fraleigh. Let's give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my honour and my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the members of the Central Alberta Women's Outreach Society. They've joined us here today to tour our beautiful Legislature and to celebrate with us, in a member's statement to follow, their outstanding achievement of opening Julietta's Place.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Red Deer-South and I would like to thank this dedicated, hard-working group, who work tirelessly to create a safe and supportive place for women and children in transition. They are helping people in Red Deer who are seeking refuge from domestic violence to achieve a better life. I would like to introduce Barb Barber, executive director. Barb, if you would stand. Charlie Turnbull, who is a staff member; Kelsey Steeg; Christina Gagné; Alesia Kossmann; and Danielle Klooster, who is a board member. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd like to ask you to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly eight seniors and organizers from the Northgate Lions seniors' centre. They are Miss Amber Ritco, Mrs. Norah Dias, Shirley Jones, Barbara Appleton, Jim Appleton, Doris Derko, Lori Weishaar, and Agnes Gartner. Over the lunch hour I was lucky to get a photo taken with them.

I have visited the centre many times, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, due to the extreme weather on January 25 the roof on the facility collapsed, and renovations are needed. This centre serves so many seniors for their recreation and is a gathering place for the community. I would like to thank them for still making the trip to the Legislature. I will look forward to seeing the centre rebuilt as soon as possible. Now I would like to ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Joining us today is a group of some of the hardest working, most ambitious young people in my constituency from Aldergrove elementary school. These are the future teachers and doctors and nurses and leaders of this community. They are joined by their teacher, Ms Amber Nerenberg, and by their parent group: Parry Chizawsky, Mrs. Pat Goodwin, and Jeff Bartlett. I would ask all of my colleagues here to give them a warm welcome and ask my friends to rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Julietta's Place

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and recognize the Central Alberta Women's Outreach Society, a Red Deer based agency which began in 1984 to help women who have chosen to pursue a safer, healthier, and more secure life for themselves and their families. In November 2010 I was privileged to attend along with the hon. Member for Red Deer-North the grand opening of Julietta's Place, the first of a second-stage housing initiative for central Alberta. This home ensures a safe, supportive, and healthy environment for women and their children fleeing domestic relationship violence and pursuing a better life with long-term stability. Women can live in Julietta's Place for up to 18 months while they work with an outreach worker to access supports, transition to independence, and heal from abuse.

Mr. Speaker, programs at Central Alberta Women's Outreach Society include crisis intervention, intensive domestic violence support, legal support, court preparation, housing support, monitored exchange, safe visitation, and a support group. These proven programs position the women of Julietta's Place, not to mention numerous other community members, to develop personal skills and resiliencies that can help them achieve long-term success.

Julietta's Place receives 70 per cent funding from the municipal block funding through Housing and Urban Affairs. Since this project was initiated, continued generous outpouring of community support has been a tremendous benefit.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to congratulate the Central Alberta Women's Outreach Society board of directors, staff, and all community supporters of the outreach project for their dedication and hard work on the opening of Julietta's Place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Making life better. I recently had the opportunity to visit a well-respected community agency in Calgary, the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured, ARBI. When I was touring the facility, I learned that making life better is the mission statement of the organization, which began over 30 years ago as the result of the vision and dedication of one woman.

This is an ongoing story of overcoming incredible odds. As part of my tour I met individuals of varying ages fighting to move past their limitations. With the dedicated efforts of trained staff and a host of volunteers, despite very little government recognition or financial support, these traumatic brain injury and stroke survivors are working hard to regain what they had lost, and in many cases they were written off as being irretrievable. ARBI is the only community, nonprofit day program in the province that offers hope to people who are affected by a severe brain injury or stroke. Through intensive, longer-term therapy and support, survivors experience amazing improvement. ARBI has been providing specialized services for more than 32 years. They often help their clients leave long-term care and return home to their families.

ARBI's model, using community volunteers, is clearly a cost-efficient and effective model of delivery. More than 92 per cent of ARBI's referrals come from Alberta Health Services medical professionals. For these reasons, I believe that Alberta Health Services should be compensating them for the essential services they are providing for the Calgary region and rural areas of our province.

I recommend a tour for anyone who is interested. I guarantee you will be inspired.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Math Curriculum

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is interesting to note that we use mathematics on a daily basis whether we realize it or not. Just like reading and writing, a solid foundation and understanding of mathematics is essential for everyday living and for our workforce. These skills are highly valued in science, business, trades, and technology but also in other areas like fine arts, music, and sports. More than ever, Alberta students need a strong grounding in mathematics to meet the challenges of learning in the 21st century and to be successful in their futures.

In keeping with Alberta's reputation of world-class creation of curricula, the revised kindergarten to grade 12 mathematics program maintains the standard by integrating current research, developments, and trends in mathematics learning and teaching.

Mr. Speaker, the programs of study were developed in collaboration with teachers, administrators, parents, business representatives, postsecondary institutions. Heartfelt special thanks to all those involved.

Students from kindergarten to grade 10 across Alberta are currently being taught the revised math curriculum. The implementation of the program will continue this fall in grade 11 and in 2012 in grade 12.

I encourage all Albertans to visit Alberta Education's math website, which contains the most up-to-date information, in English and French, about the revised mathematics curriculum.

This renewal of the mathematics program emphasizes and reinforces, Mr. Speaker, the government's commitment to Albertans that education is indeed a priority and is forward thinking, a commitment that benefits our greatest resource, our children and our youth.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Sexual Exploitation Awareness Week

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to recognize March 7 to 11 as Sexual Exploitation Awareness Week in Edmonton. Sexual exploitation has devastating and lasting effects. That is unacceptable in any form. By proclaiming Sexual Exploitation Awareness Week, the city of Edmonton is shining a light on this important issue and reaffirming that it will not be tolerated. There are a number of events occurring to raise awareness and help citizens learn more about sexual exploitation and what they can do about it.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a national leader in working to protect children and youth who are at risk of being sexually exploited. Our Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act is the first and only legislation of its kind in Canada. We also provide resources to assist parents and caregivers in educating their children and teens about dangers they may face online through Internet luring.

Sexual exploitation can happen to anyone, male or female, from any background. There is help available. If an Albertan knows a child or a youth at risk of being sexually exploited or young people of their family are looking for help themselves, they can call the child abuse hotline at 1.800.387.KIDS.

I congratulate all of the partners in Edmonton and area who are working together to recognize and support events during the 2011 Sexual Exploitation Awareness Week.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Trico Centre for Family Wellness

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure and honour for me to rise today and talk about a great community neighbour in Calgary. For over 28 years they have worked with 28 surrounding community associations and 36 communities in south Calgary to support healthy kids, healthy families, and vibrant seniors. Everyone appreciates the need for children to live happy, healthy lives, and any of us would be thankful for assistance for seniors to meet their unique health and physical needs. This great neighbour, who does all of this and more, is the community-owned, nonprofit Trico Centre for Family Wellness, located in Calgary-Egmont.

The Trico centre is one of the true jewels in the city of Calgary. The Alberta government has provided over $6 million grant funding from Culture and Community Spirit since 2008. The physical infrastructure includes a large redeveloped fitness area with running tracks, aquatic centre, and twin arenas. The centre also includes a seniors' club centre, a child care facility, and several multipurpose rooms. The combination of impressive amenities and the long-standing relationship with the local communities forms one of the most popular destinations for families in the entire city.

I would like to thank and congratulate the board members, staff, and volunteers for nearly three decades of service in south Calgary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Wildrose Alliance Party Inclusiveness

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the Member for Edmonton-Calder in a childish tirade said that I attacked trade workers for suggesting that the $275 million MLA offices should not have been undertaken during a time of record deficits. He then invoked the classic left-wing nugget of class warfare in a manner that would make my friends in the NDP blush, saying: what could a white-collar worker possibly know about running a business, meeting a payroll, or working with ones' hands?

Well, I'm not going to stoop to this member's rhetorical level, but I will say this. I have started, owned, and operated a small business, and aside from my father and one brother I come from a large immediate and extended family of tradespeople whom I love and respect, and these tradespeople are telling me that they would rather be working on a school for their kids than on some fat-cat offices for politicians. Others, still working on oil rigs in B.C. and Saskatchewan, would like to be working in Alberta, which they were until this government's ignorant policies drove them out.

They would like their government to keep their election promise to balance the books instead of spending like drunks on a binge. They would like their MLAs to stand up and vote for a cut to their golden parachutes rather than talk about how much they've earned them. They want to know that when their kids have a health issue, they can go to an ER and not have to wait 24 hours to be treated. They are ticked off about the impending increase to their power bills because their government awarded billions in unneeded transmission line contracts to their buddies. And they are fed up with their PC MLAs continually showing that they are more loyal to their political party than to those who voted for them.

We in the Wildrose don't do class warfare. We're here to unite all Albertans, every ethnicity and religion, old and young, male and female, healthy and sick, rich and poor, blue collar and white collar. We're here to let Albertans turn the page and write a new and better chapter for the province they love, and let me tell you, for the majority of them the next election can't come soon enough.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Liepert: I have some significant documents to table, Mr. Speaker, and these are the processing and marketing agreements under the agreement that the government of Alberta signed with North West Upgrading recently. I'd like to table five copies of each.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from nine physicians and their families from communities in Alberta requesting continued support for the physician and family support program, which is in jeopardy.

The second is from an individual whose family member has been seeking transsexual surgery for three years and has been under terrific duress with suicide threats that are affecting the whole family and is requesting urgent attention to that problem.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings this afternoon. The first is the Calgary Herald editorial yesterday entitled Throwing Bricks: Halting Legislature Project in Mid-stream Makes No Sense.

The second is a letter from the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, a short note.

The third one is my response to that letter.

The fourth one, Mr. Speaker, is his response to me.

I table the appropriate number of copies right now. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, one from Dr. Alexandra Howlett in regard to the AMA's physician and family support program and the other one from Dr. Nicola Watkins in relation to the proposed termination of nine programs enlisted to help Alberta doctors achieve a patients-first agenda.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an excerpt from the Occupational Health and Safety Code 2009 relating to hazard assessment, elimination, and control. The document relates to my questions still to come.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Medical Service Delays

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Is it any wonder that Albertans have lost confidence in this Tory government over their mismanagement of health care? The government can't even get its story straight on whether it will proceed with an independent investigation by the Health Quality Council affecting 322 patients who received compromised emergency room care. The Premier now says that he's open to allowing the Health Quality Council to investigate serious medical issues on their own, yet the minister of health continues to stonewall. To the Premier: how can Albertans have any faith in this government when at least two ministers and the Premier himself were directly aware of these 322 cases?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I said that I'd never close the door on any matter to be reviewed by the Health Quality Council when it comes to improving health care delivery and performance, and that does include waiting times in the emergency rooms.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, will the Premier allow the Health Quality Council to independently investigate these 322 cases? Yes or no?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday, of course, in speaking to the issues that were raised, I was very clear that some of the allegations made against third-party members that are not members of this House: there was no substantial evidence tabled in the House, so we are not going to proceed with those. Anything that we can do to improve the confidence of Albertans in our health system, we will continue to do.

Dr. Swann: I guess one would have to ask, Mr. Speaker: what is the Premier afraid of? Why will you not allow the Health Quality Council, which has a direct mandate to investigate patient quality? After three years, Mr. Premier, what is holding you back?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, after yesterday, of course, we have one doctor in this Assembly that's accusing doctors of taking hush money. Another doctor in this Assembly accused our Alberta doctors of malpractice. I am here to support our doctors, and we will do whatever we can to ensure that Albertans have confidence in the Alberta health care system.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: For the record, Mr. Speaker, I was accusing the government of malpractice, not the physicians.

Today the AMA's Paul Parks flatly refuted the Premier's spin that the Alberta Health Services internal review and its employee code of conduct will help get to the bottom of 322 cases of compromised care. Dr. Paul Parks said this: The picture is being painted of an open, friendly environment to come forward with our concerns. That is not accurate. There is a subtle culture of dissuading any kind of discussion on health care. End quote. How can the Premier continue to ignore a growing chorus of experts, including nurses, who believe a culture of fear and intimidation is contributing to the crisis in health care today?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I also said yesterday in reply to a number of questions that we are moving on everything that ER docs told us and advised us about some months ago. One is to open more continuing care spaces, appropriate care for seniors that happen to be in acute-care beds; increasing the number of nurses, and we are firmly committed to increase that number by 2,000 by 2012; and also increasing up to 370 physician spaces in the province of Alberta. That is a substantial gain on what we committed to, and we'll continue to do that.

Dr. Swann: I'm talking about the freedom to speak in this province, Mr. Premier. Will you agree along with many health professionals that the Alberta Health Services code of conduct is a publicity ploy? It does absolutely nothing to address compromised patient care.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, all physicians take an oath, and I'm sure part of that oath is a duty to be responsible for their patients. Also, the Alberta Health Services policy is very clear that they have a duty to report to Alberta Health Services any issues that may question the delivery of health care to any one individual in this province. That is the duty.

Dr. Swann: Will the Premier finally do the right thing for all Albertans, for health professionals, and for patients and call an independent investigation through the Health Quality Council? After three years. Three hundred and twenty-two cases. We've said it over and over again. You know what we're talking about.

Mr. Stelmach: I think I just heard the hon. member ask us now to do a review of the Alberta Health Quality Council. Just earlier he asked us to have the Health Quality Council do the review, so I'm a little disconcerted in terms of what he actually means.

Here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. Six in 10 Albertans say that health care is in crisis. Six in 10 also are very confident that when they need health care delivery in this province, it's going to be there. We've also seen substantial improvement. Since 2004 at 40-some per cent to 50-some per cent, now 62 per cent of Albertans have confidence in their health system.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Villa Caritas Geriatric Mental Health Facility

Dr. Taft: The Auditor General has reported serious concerns in writing about the conversion of Villa Caritas from long-term care to a psychiatric facility. With news of a tragic death at the facility the health minister's glib response was: I didn't design the facility; why don't you ask the Infrastructure minister? So to the Infrastructure minister: given that the minister of health is shirking his responsibility, are the reversals, problems, and huge cost overruns of this project your department's fault?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is very much a tragic and unfortunate situation. The facility was redesigned for the needs of seniors with mental health issues, and the design changes were reviewed by mental health experts, physicians, and union reps.

Dr. Taft: Well, to the same minister: given the sad irony that this redesign, as the minister says, cost taxpayers $40 million more than budget and we still ended up with a facility that's unsafe for residents, will the Infrastructure minister tell us how much more money will be needed to make Villa Caritas safe for psychogeriatric patients?

Mr. Danyluk: First of all, Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear that the facility is safe. Secondly, I want to say to you that to change from a seniors' facility to a mental health facility did not cost $40 million. I need to reiterate that we did have mental health experts, we had physicians, we had people of expertise looking at the revised changes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister apparently is responsible for the construction and design of the facility, was he aware of the concerns for safety that were brought to the attention of the operator of the facility just a couple of months ago? Was he aware of those?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I need to say to you that Infrastructure was involved in the late stages. As I said before, the design changes were reviewed by experts. They were also sent to us to review the design plans as well.

Mr. Speaker, I again say to you that any time that we do have a tragedy or we do a review, we definitely look at safety. We make sure that all facilities are safe.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This current government from the Premier right down to MLA 67 continues to undermine the public's confidence in our health care system by failing to allow a public inquiry. Morale amongst our health care workers is a major concern. Dr. Parks' call for a process where immunity for people who come forward is needed because of punitive actions taken on health care workers in the past. Does the Premier not understand that his refusal to open this inquiry only adds to the doubt and speculation that there is a major cover-up?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again to the hon. member I said that all of those allegations that were made in this House against third-party members that have no way of defending themselves we're not going to chase because there was nothing that was presented in this House that was any credible evidence.

In terms of the issues tied to health quality, confidence in the system, I've always had the door open to do the review and ensure that the steps that we're taking as the government – the substantial investment that we've made in health, the five-year funding commitment, the only one of its kind in the country of Canada – make sure that this money is going to good use.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, we didn't say to chase after innuendos. We said to open up an inquiry, to give immunity.

Given that this Premier and the health minister insist the system is working great, that whistle-blowers aren't being silenced, that there is no basis for allegations of hush money or a cover-up, and that the Premier is stating himself that he just wants to see this issue die, shouldn't they be eager for a full public inquiry to clear their names?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, allow me to quote, please. Today Dr. Cowell, who is a member of the Health Quality Council and is the chair, said this, and I quote. The allegations are very serious. There's no question about it. Dr. Sherman is saying there's up to 250 people that died on a waiting list. He needs to provide further evidence that this is, in fact, true. Right now they're allegations. We would need to see some factual evidence. End of quote.

The Speaker: Hopefully, the documentation will be tabled later.

The hon. member from the third party, please.

Mr. Mason: I have a point of order.

The Speaker: Okay. Proceed.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given this Premier's reluctance to investigate this situation, are Albertans to conclude that he is afraid of what this investigation would bring to light? They need to open up the investigation to clear this up. They can't keep declaring themselves innocent. Open up the inquiry.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the answer I gave to the previous question deals with this situation appropriately. When it comes to quality of care, access, all of those areas that can be investigated and reviewed by the Health Quality Council to make sure that the money is going in the right direction, they will be able to do that. In terms of these allegations that were raised, we already heard very clearly a quote from the chair.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Villa Caritas Geriatric Mental Health Facility

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This question is for the Minister of Infrastructure. We were informed by staff that the occupancy risk assessment which is required for the Villa Caritas facility was not conducted in accordance with the occupational health and safety code, specifically 8(1), that "an employer must involve affected workers in the hazard assessment and in the control or elimination of the hazards identified." I want to ask the minister why this was not done and why he is not taking responsibility for the fact that we are unable to provide . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I was very clear before. I did say that the expert committee that was in place, that looked at the redesigns involved my ministry to ask them their opinions and their input, and we did that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that Villa Caritas was not designed as a mental health facility, and given that a patient has died as a result of flaws in the design, and given that this minister of health forced Covenant Health to convert their long-term care facility into a psychiatric unit to justify the government's plans to close Alberta Hospital, will the minister stand up and accept responsibility, at least some responsibility, for this tragic situation?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I stand by my view of Villa Caritas. It is officially designated under the Alberta Mental Health Act as a location that can provide the type of services that geriatric mental health patients require. It's on par in that respect with legal standing, the same way that the Alberta Hospital Edmonton is, or the same way that the Centennial Centre for Mental Health and Brain Injury in Ponoka is. There are over 300 staff members there. There are something like eight psychiatrists there and one general practitioner doctor, and they're providing outstanding care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that this Premier and his health minister were anxious to get credit for Villa Caritas at the self-congratulatory opening ceremonies this week, and given that the death of a patient has revealed serious concerns about the safety of the facility, how can the Premier and this minister now try to dodge responsibility when things go wrong?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we were invited, as were other members. One of them is now a private member sitting there, from Edmonton-Meadowlark. I don't know why the hon. member who asked the question wasn't invited, but if he would just go over there and have a look, I can tell you that enormous improvements have been made to upgrade it from what was intended to be a long-term care type of facility to what is now a fully accredited mental hospital: shatterproof glass, additional monitors in the TV hallways, better sightlines from the nursing station to the rooms, and I could go on. It's an outstanding facility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Emergency Medical Service Delays

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I mean, the essential piece of this puzzle, the essential theme of all the questions asked so far today is that the people of Alberta have no idea who to trust and what to believe about the health care system they need to rely on. To the Premier: if the Premier is unwilling to call for a public inquiry, how is the air supposed to clear, and how is the public supposed to understand the situation?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, the hon. member hasn't said what area he wants investigated. Does he want to investigate those allegations that were made in the House or to open up the door and see if we can further have the Health Quality Council review the operations, see if the money that we have invested in the system, the changes we've made are actually doing what we wanted them to do, and that is to reduce waiting times? That door is open to that but not to the other.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's good to hear that door is open because that is what I'm asking about.

Again to the Premier. Dr. Lloyd Maybaum, the president of the Calgary & Area Physician's Association, believes that an independent inquiry is essential to restore public faith in the system. For the sake of public confidence in health care – and yes, I know, the Premier and the health minister have talked about all the wonderful things that they're doing to improve the system; the problem is just that people don't believe it – will the Premier launch that independent inquiry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in 2004 52 per cent of Albertans had confidence in the system. In 2006 we moved that up to 58. In 2010, the last Health Quality Council review, it was 62 per cent. It is moving in the right direction. I know we have a lot of work to do, but it's certainly heading in the right direction, not going backwards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Sixty-two per cent won't get you into medical school.

My final question is again to the Premier. In order to regain public trust in the health system, will you commit today to changing the mandate of the Health Quality Council of Alberta so as to allow them to independently launch investigations when they feel it's necessary?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, 62 per cent gets us elected. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. [interjections] Athabasca-Redwater. [interjections] Athabasca-Redwater, you've been called three times.

Student Loan Remissions

Mr. Johnson: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's postsecondary students are already concerned about the level of debt they are accumulating to pay for their education. Some of them have even said that they don't want to go to postsecondary because it will end up costing them too much in the end. My question is for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. With loan amounts increasing, what is the minister doing to ensure that students are graduating with manageable debt and able to get a good start on their futures?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to answer this question today with the students in the House. This government is really committed to trying to ensure that students' loan amounts are maintained at the lowest possible amount. To help them with this, last year we came out with the repayment assistance plan, and this is to help any student who has a loan they simply cannot make the payments on. We'll work with that student on an individual basis to ensure that they have an opportunity to pay. As well, we ensure that the rates for these remain low.

Mr. Johnson: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why was the eligibility for loan remission limited to only students who complete their programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Completion has always been a requirement, but the definition of completion up until this year was that when someone quit a program, that was determined as completion. We have now changed that. We are trying to ensure that tax dollars and the investment is properly done, so completion now means that a student completing a program would have the potential for remission for part of that loan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe it's the fault of the previous minister. What about the students who have to leave their program early due to unforeseen circumstances and don't get to finish their program? What does this say about the value of learning in Alberta and building a culture of lifelong learning?

Mr. Weadick: Well, I'd like to thank the member. Actually, that is an important question. As long as a learner comes back into the system, they're always going to be eligible to have remission. We all know that there are opportunities when students have to leave a program for a while. It could be because of family requirements. It could be because of work requirements. It's critically important that we create flexibility, so if a learner comes back into the system, they'll be eligible for the remission.

2:10 Health Services Financial Reporting

Mr. MacDonald: The Auditor General's report last October indicated that Alberta Health Services found numerous errors in the way data was being processed from the ledgers of former health authorities, including Capital health. One error resulted in more than $500 million in misclassified expenses. Another resulted in the omission of $420 million of expenses. My first question is to the minister of health. How does the minister explain these errors and expenses totalling $920 million?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll have to take a look at that and just see if it's correct or not. I'm not familiar with the exact line that he's talking about. When you're looking after and are responsible for a budget of $15 billion, there are a lot of lines that you have to pay attention to. I can assure the member that I will have a look at that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's obvious. To the minister: it's on page 165, and I'm disappointed that you do not read the Auditor's reports. I'm going to read directly from it. The Auditor General states: "Transactions with Covenant Health were classified uniquely in Capital Health's general ledger. This unique classification was not picked up by the topside ledger and approximately $420 million of expenses were omitted.” My question is: can the minister explain why these expenses were omitted?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I could assure the House and I could assure all Albertans: I do read what the Auditor General says. I just don’t memorize it all. However, I will take a look at that, and I will get the member an answer. He should know that he could bring it forward as a written question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: is this unique classification, as described by the office of the Auditor General, of the omission of $420 million of expenses an example of one organization with two sets of books?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I hardly think so. The fact is that whatever the numbers, they are fully audited, they are fully available to the public, and I’ll get him some more details if that’s what he wants. He chairs Public Accounts or he used to chair it. He should know that there is a process to access that level of detail, but since he doesn’t know how to do that or has forgotten how to do it, I’ll do it for him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Tuition Fee Policy

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many high school students in my constituency are starting to apply to postsecondary institutions for the fall, and some of them have been contacting my office, asking if this government has abandoned its commitment to predictable and affordable tuition at our postsecondary institutions. For students and for parents who are fearful that they will not be able to help their children, this is a real concern. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Can the minister assure these students, my constituents, and their parents that the tuition fee policy will remain in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to assure this member and his constituents that we are absolutely committed to the tuition cap policy in this province. That cap: any increases are set to the rate of inflation. We’re going to stick by that this year. That is .35 per cent, or approximately $20 per student. That’ll be the increase, and you can make sure that your parents and students are aware of that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How is the minister going to balance the need for postsecondary institutions to generate the revenue required to offer the high-quality programs demanded by students with the need to ensure affordability and accessibility of these programs for all?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That remains the balance that we always work to include, to make sure that the programs are affordable for the students, that they’re accessible to the students, but that we can maintain the quality that we must have. Our students demand programs that provide quality, and that’s what we do. The tuition cap to this point has continued to provide a high-quality education at an affordable rate for our students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: will the minister prevent the institutions from going around the tuition cap policy by changing so-called noninstructional fees?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We’ve heard many concerns from students about the noninstructional fees, and we also are very concerned about that issue. We don’t believe that noninstructional fees should be a way to simply increase tuitions. The students in the province have a very good working relationship and have come up with some options where we may be able to manage this. We’re working with them, and I believe we’ll have a solution for that.

ESL Funding

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, you’ll be happy to know that I won’t be asking questions today about the county of Barrhead using taxpayers’ dollars to send people to an event organized by the local Barrhead Progressive Conservative association. Instead, I listened to the advice of the Justice minister and will forward these concerns to Elections Alberta.

My question today is for the Minister of Education. Given that high school completion rates are 10 points lower for typical ESL students, how will cutting supports for students with the greatest language problems help them earn a high school diploma?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was unfortunate that we had to show some restraint in the Education budget this year, and one of those restraints was the enhanced ESL program. That grant has been in place for six years. It was originally put in place in order to help those jurisdictions that had a particular type of immigrant coming in with extra problems to learn how to deal with those problems. In the six years we hope they have learned how to do that and that they will be able to handle the needs of their ESL students within the regular grant, which is about $1,155 extra for each ESL student.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, I heard that explanation, but given that 70 per cent of all ESL students are not completing high school within three years, does it really look like the problem has been solved in the six years you’ve just emphasized?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would hazard to say that the problem that’s exhibited is not simply an English-language learning problem. There are a number of issues that we need to deal with in terms of the supports for students who come into the jurisdiction. We’ve been putting a lot of focus on wraparound services and other ways that we can support families. I’ve asked my parliamentary assistant to work with some of those communities to actually help us discern how we can work with, particularly, the major school boards in the urban areas with respect to how to deal with those students. It’s not simply an English-language learning problem.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the largest thing, from my point of view, that ESL students would need would be English-language training, why are you cutting this part of the budget and emphasizing these other wraparound services? Give them the English training they need.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in fact, we do. We've supported English-language learning significantly and continue to support it significantly. It is the enhanced grant, the extra, I think, $405 per student for a certain segment of those students that has been cut. That particular grant has been cut because, as I say, it was put in place for a specific purpose, and that was to help school boards discern the better methods that they needed in order to help those students learn. In the six years we hope that that's been accomplished.

Now, those students are still being funded not only with the per student grant but with the supplemental English-language learning grant of . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Abandoned Gas Well in Calmar

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The town of Calmar is located 10 minutes west of the city of Leduc, where I reside. Last year a capped gas well drilled many years ago by Imperial Oil was found to be leaking within a new Calmar residential subdivision, causing the relocation of five homes and families. To the Minister of Energy: why is it not required that the ERCB notify the town of Calmar of the location of abandoned wells prior to subdivision approval?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that earlier this week the Minister of Municipal Affairs in response to a question from the MLA for Drayton Valley-Calmar stated that his ministry and the ERCB are working together to amend regulations to ensure that abandoned wells and pipelines are identified before these new municipal developments occur. The ERCB does have a land development information package available, but the onus is really on the municipality to inquire before they permit a development. The ERCB is not aware of every development that is proposed or taking place in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how is your department or the ERCB ensuring that industry is fairly compensating the affected homeowners who've had to sell their homes for the well to be properly abandoned? These people are not at fault. Why should they face potential losses on the sale of their home?

Mr. Liepert: Well, under existing legislation, Mr. Speaker, the ERCB does not become involved in matters of compensation. In cases like this it is really the responsibility of the company involved to provide the compensation. It is my understanding that Municipal Affairs has either offered or is involved in mediation. It's mediation with only one homeowner. Four of the five homeowners have resolved the issue.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what role do the departments of Energy or Municipal Affairs have in ensuring that the remaining residents in the crescent are treated fairly while this abandonment takes place?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I can only comment relative to the Department of Energy, Mr. Speaker. The ERCB reports through the Department of Energy. The Energy Resources Conservation Board is responsible for regulating safe, responsible development of Alberta's resources and is also responsible for ensuring that the company's technical and public safety plans are followed.

That being said, there's no question that there will be inconveniences in the neighbourhood as this remediation takes place. In situations like this I would suggest that it's incumbent on all the participants to work together to resolve the issue, and that includes the town of Calmar.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We just heard the Premier of Alberta say that he only cares about the health of 62 per cent of Albertans so his party can get elected. It's obvious why the Premier wants the issue of health care to die given this government's incompetence in managing health care. To the minister of health: have you been instructed by your party's boss, the Premier, to kill this issue, and is that why you are refusing to call in the Health Quality Council to investigate emergency rooms?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this is a member who brings shame to himself and to other members of this House by misrepresenting a statement like that. The Premier said nothing of the kind, and he knows it. He should be called to order and immediately asked to retract it.

With respect to the other question, I said, "No, not at this time," but at the appropriate time I will take appropriate actions if necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The health minister doesn't want this issue to die – and I applaud him for that – unlike the Premier, so they're in conflict. He told the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar yesterday that he would, quote, find exactly what budget line legal fees are included in. To the minister of health: have you found out how much of these legal fees were for settlements?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's common practice when people come and go from jobs that sometimes they have contracts that are bought out early and that some severance pay might be given. That's precisely what happened in the case of some of the CEOs. As you know, we had 12 CEOs. We brought it down to one. That meant curtailing some of those agreements early.

The allegations that were made yesterday by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar – well, there weren't really allegations, but there were some insinuations there – just pointed out the fact that he didn't fully understand what one-time payments were, and I tried to clarify that. We're looking for more detail because it really is a question for Motions for Returns. I'll do the best I can to get him the detail he needs.

Mr. Boutilier: The minister thought it was a good question yesterday. Now he's saying that today it's not a good question.

Given the awkward position that the minister of health is in, that his boss wants the issue to die, the minister needs to answer first to Albertans, not to the Premier. Will you stop putting your party's boss ahead of Albertans and get Albertans the answers that they are demanding in this Assembly?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. What the Premier indicated yesterday was one set of answers for one set of allegations. What he also said was that he would do whatever was necessary to restore some public trust because of some of the allegations made in this House. If that requires me doing something to support that, I will be there to support the Premier, and I'll be there to support Albertans asking the questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Workplace Safety

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in this Assembly the Minister of Employment and Immigration asked how much more proof Albertans required to believe that worker safety in this province is improving. The answer, unfortunately, is a lot. To the minister: given that this government completed only 11 workplace safety prosecutions last year compared to 47 in Saskatchewan, when is our Alberta labour minister going to get serious about the prosecution of safety offenders? Or is his reluctance due to resistance from elsewhere in the government?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the number of prosecutions depicts the number of violations. If our Crown prosecutors have no basis on which to prosecute, they don't prosecute. If in one province there are more murder prosecutions, that means they have more murders. This is not a competition for who has more prosecutions. I'd rather have zero prosecutions. That means there are no violations.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, a race to death and injury certainly isn't a competition, but Alberta has more workplace injuries and deaths per population than the majority of other provinces. If the minister favours more transparency in occupational health and safety, will he tell us how many workplace safety cases his department forwarded to the Department of Justice last year with a recommendation to prosecute? Are you saying . . .

The Speaker: Okay. We've had three preambles. We're not supposed to have any.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, if you want to talk about transparency, you would be glad to know that Alberta is the only province in Canada if not in North America that actually has a full online, free-of-charge disclosure of the occupational health and safety record of virtually every employer in this province. So get on the computer, look up your employers, and you'll see exactly what their safety track records are. Only in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Given that the minister told the Calgary Herald that he would speak with the former Minister of Justice about increasing the number of workplace safety prosecutors, does that not indicate, to the minister's credit, that he was and is dissatisfied with the resources available for handling OHS cases in the Department of Justice?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this minister and the Minister of Justice are in constant communication. However, one thing – one thing – Albertans should be assured of is that neither this minister nor any other minister of this government is in any collusion with the Minister of Justice, telling our Crown prosecutors whom to prosecute and whom not to prosecute. They make that decision based on evidence, and they choose whom they should or should not be prosecuting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Water Quality Monitoring in the Oil Sands

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week the government received the final report from the Water Monitoring Data Review Committee, set up in the fall of 2010 to examine oil sands environmental monitoring work from Alberta Environment, Dr. Schindler, and his colleagues. My question, in fact all three questions are to the same minister, the Minister of Environment. Given that the academic work relied on methods which differed from those used by the government studies and made strong conclusions regarding the water quality in the oil sands region, what was learned from these studies?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the work of doctors Kelly and Schindler identified monitoring techniques that, frankly, are worth consideration. The report also made it very clear that sweeping conclusions cannot be based on the available data, either by the government or by the university studies. We need to recognize and monitor the adverse effects rather than just monitoring the threshold levels. That is what we intend to incorporate into our future plans for monitoring.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since we've heard about the government multidecade, long-term commitment to monitoring in the oil sands region but this report highlights a needed enhancement to the overall focus of monitoring efforts, how is the minister ensuring that the government's environmental management efforts are based upon the overall impact to any ecosystem rather than simply inputs?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that's precisely what we've been talking about in the development of the cumulative effects environmental management scheme, where we concentrate on outcomes rather than constantly concentrating on inputs. In the past it's been a site-by-site monitoring system that hasn't taken into account, to the extent that perhaps we could, the overall impact on the environment. That is the scope and scale that we intend to develop in the new world-class monitoring system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because the oil sands are an important provincial and national resource and many of my constituents benefit from this industry, how will this minister ensure the continued credibility of oil sands developments?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're working very closely with Environment Canada to improve the monitoring. One of the areas that was very clear that came out of the report that I read this week was that we need a more co-ordinated approach. We can't have water monitoring going on in one area, air monitoring going on in another area, biodiversity monitoring going on in another area, and not combine the strategy behind all of them. That's why we've asked the panel to put together a co-ordinated approach that deals with all media from one central monitoring body.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Gender Equality

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 the Premier's Blue Ribbon Panel on government agencies recommended that appointments should reflect the people of Alberta, 52 per cent of which are women, and should use a transparent, non-partisan, and competence-based process. But when I quickly checked, there were zero women of nine on Alberta Capital Finance Authority, two women of 13 on Environmental Appeals, two women of nine on Alberta Innovates. To the minister of finance: would the minister agree that the government could look a little harder to find qualified women to sit on government agencies, board, and commissions?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, first, I do want to apologize to the hon. member for yesterday because I did not anticipate questions that I think would have been more celebratory of the hundred years of success women have had.

We do use a competence-based approach to boards we are establishing. In the Alberta government, Mr. Speaker, 67 per cent of our employees are women; 47 per cent of them are in management positions. We are working towards equality, and we're striving very hard to get that.

Ms Blakeman: A little harder on the agencies, boards, and commissions.

To the same minister: it's nearly two years since the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act was passed, so why has it not yet come into force?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have a lot of different responsibilities from the government's boards and agencies, and they have special tasks. We talk about the need to have specific abilities on those boards, so while we transform and we've moved into a consistent process for evaluating membership to it, we are still only able to process people that apply to be on the boards. So if there's a question or if I can ask her consideration, encourage very capable women that she knows to put their names forward, and then we can at least deal with their applications.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for that. I will certainly follow through on it, and I will also throw the gauntlet down to the minister of finance because I want him to agree to champion increased appointments of competent, skilled women to government agencies, boards, and commissions. He's a well-respected, leading member of that front bench. Will he agree to champion this?

Mr. Snelgrove: How can I say anything? Seriously, Mr. Speaker and hon. member, absolutely. Not only will I do it, but I can guarantee you that all of our government will do it, and I know you will help. We all agree on the same thing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Transportation for the Disabled in Calgary

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Both provincial and municipal governments in Alberta are well known for providing supports to persons with disabilities. In the past couple of weeks I've seen labour negotiations between the Calgary HandiBus Association and the Amalgamated Transit Union local 583 come to a halt. My questions are all for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Can the minister please tell us the status of these negotiations?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'll be glad to. As you may know, on December 31 of just this last year the collective bargaining agreement between the Calgary HandiBus employer and employees came to an end. I know that the union has met on a number of occasions with the employer. On March 2 they held a vote to strike, and I believe that the day for strike has been set now for Friday, March 11.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what impact would a strike have on the Calgarians using these services?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the impact obviously will be immense. Let's just put it in perspective. First of all, this particular service provider provides transportation services throughout Calgary for the most vulnerable residents of Calgary. Those would be persons with disabilities and others who require daily rides. Furthermore, just imagine. They provide approximately 40,000 trips per month. That's a large number of the population to very important points of destination, so any form of disruption to those services will obviously have a negative, adverse effect from many perspectives on those who rely on the service.

Mr. Johnston: My final question. Given the nature of the services provided, what options does the province have to ensure that this invaluable service is not disrupted?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, ideally, I would like to see the two parties come to a negotiated agreement. It is always better when two parties compromise their positions and find a mutually palatable solution. It seems like it's difficult at this point for those two parties to do that. I certainly hope that both parties keep the value of the service that they provide to those vulnerable clients in mind. However, our labour code allows the minister to utilize a number of tools, and ultimately I can tell you this, hon. member. My number one priority always will be vulnerable Calgarians that rely on that service day in, day out for very important purposes.

Noninstructional Postsecondary Fees

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Given the question earlier this afternoon about mandatory noninstructional fees for postsecondary students, the minister indicated, it seemed, that he was confident that a solution would be found. Well, I think he owes it to this Assembly and to students across Alberta to give some details. Exactly what solution is in the works?

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you to the member for that question. We've had discussions over the past year with student organizations, and clearly the students, as people funding their education, should be involved in any decision on these instructional fees. What we've been discussing is a way that the students could be involved in supporting or voting on any of these types of fees to ensure that they meet the needs of students.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, it sounds like the minister is putting the solution onto the students. If they had the power, they'd be happy to implement it, so let's see if they will get the power. Is this minister considering binding votes by students on any proposals from postsecondary institutions to charge mandatory noninstructional fees?

Mr. Weadick: At this point that is an issue that has come forward by the students as acceptable to them to be involved in. The ideal way is not to do it through regulation but to work with the institutions and to create a partnership between the institutions and the students. We're going to work together with our institutions and students to create an environment where the students can be involved in the decision.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, that was a pretty evasive answer, so let's try something else. Will the minister at least use his authority as a minister of the Crown to ban the practice of some institutions of charging mandatory fees that provide zero additional services? Will he ban that?

Mr. Weadick: Mr. Speaker, at this point I haven't had any of those types of fees come forward that provide zero service or quality for the students. We haven't had any of those come forward, but there is some question about the value and whether or not there is true value to the students for some of the fees that they have seen.

Agricultural Research

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, as the world population continues to rise, so does the global demand for food while land and resources available for agricultural production continue to decrease. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. With agricultural exports being such an important part of our economy, what is the minister doing to address the challenge of feeding a growing global population?

The Speaker: Stick to Alberta. That would be helpful. Go ahead.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I will stick to Alberta. Because we export 80 per cent of what we produce, the world is our customer. By 2050, as an example, we are going to be requiring our producers to produce twice as much as they are today, so we're investing in research to get that production. Gentec is one. We've got two studies right now in research projects that are happening. The other is Phytola at the University of Alberta. We're looking, of course, towards increasing production but also quality. The Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency, as an example, has invested $1.5 million in the Gentec project.

Mr. Drysdale: Again to the same minister: how will these initiatives benefit Alberta's livestock and oilseed industries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The genomic research with respect to the livestock sector has advantages for us environmentally but also production increases. We're talking increases in quality and quantity with respect to both dairy products and also beef products.

With respect to the research in the oilseed sector right now 43 per cent of a canola seed is oil. Through the work that we're doing now and the research that we're doing, if we can increase by 1 per cent that oil, we'll be looking at about an extra $9 million just in that sector in Alberta alone.

Mr. Drysdale: My final question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What other types of agricultural research is your ministry supporting?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to say that Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions provides a broad range of agricultural research. One really exciting piece of research I'd like to highlight today is the prion research that we're doing in animals, especially after the BSE crisis. What we're finding is that research in livestock is now starting to provide some answers to human health issues around Alzheimer's and Parkinson's disease. It's really an interesting area of crossover, where research into livestock health is now providing some answers for human health as well.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the Oral Question Period. Eighteen members were recognized today, with 108 questions and responses.

We'll continue the Routine with Tabling Returns and Reports in 15 seconds from now.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of tablings. The first is a set of informational pamphlets from the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured, that I referenced in my member's statement.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is from Vecova. Vecova is the new branding name for what has been formerly known for the last 43 years as the Vocational and Rehabilitation Research Institute in Calgary-Varsity, which has been providing service for both able and disabled individuals.

My last set of tablings, Mr. Speaker, has to do with concerns over the Castle-Crown. They are from Douglas Brown, S.J. Harrison, Mae Stolte, Lisbeth Mousseau, Alan To, Robert Laing, Frances Reynolds, Jess Harding, Trudy Baker, Colleen Campbell, David Fulton, Sarah Hutchison, Thomasine Irwin, Brad Jones, Sarah Elmeligi, Janice Ryan, Beverly Kaltenbruner, Bob Borreson, Jim Patterson, Marc van Sluys, Catherine Gill, Roberta Olenick, James Harlick, Alan Chomica, and Yvonne Ellingson.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to table five copies of a letter from Gerald Foster. He's a constituent of the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. Throughout this cancer issue, he said in his letter, he had to wait at least three months, so he actually had to go down to Vancouver and purchase health care. He said: I'm the president of a company. But what I'm really concerned about . . .

The Speaker: That would be fine. You've tabled it.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Snelgrove, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, pursuant to the Alberta Economic Development Authority Act the Alberta Economic Development Authority activity report 2010.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, three points of order today, so we'll start with the first one. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, quotations of documents would be very helpful.

Point of Order

Referring to a Member by Name

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am referring to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, chapter 13, rules of order and decorum. "The Speaker will not allow a Member to refer to another Member by name even if the Member speaking is quoting from a document such as a newspaper article." During question period the Premier specifically referred by name to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I think that should have been dealt with, but it was not, and that is why I stood up to make a point of order.

The Speaker: Fair game. I can deal with this. The member is absolutely correct. The long-standing tradition in here is that members should not refer to other members by name, and absolutely the long-standing tradition is that one shouldn't do indirectly what one can't do directly.

The Premier did quote, and I asked that the document be tabled. It hasn't been tabled yet. We've gone through the tablings. Government House Leader, you might want to look at that, please. As I understand it, the quote says:

Today Dr. Cowell, who is a member of the Health Quality Council and is the chair, said this, and I quote.

So I presume this is the quote.

The allegations are very serious. There's no question about it.

And then the name is put in. He could have said, I guess, "the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark."

... is saying that there are up to 250 people that died on a waiting list. He needs to provide further evidence that this is, in fact, true. Right now they're allegations. We would need to see some factual evidence. End of quote.

Yes. I guess the only dilemma with respect to this is if it adds or takes away from the quote if the name is in there, but the member is right. Another member should not be referring to the name.

This has happened now on several days in this Assembly by members from various parts of the House, and it seems to always be in a unique circumstance, which this was. The bottom line is that the name should not have been mentioned. Absolutely correct, right to rise on a point of order. Clarification made. Tabling still to come.

Okay. Number two. Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Questions about Detail

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order with reference to a question that was raised by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar earlier today. In essence my point of order is around raising questions in the House which ought to be raised either by written questions or in another forum. The citations that I would use would be Beauchesne's 409(5), which reads,

The matter ought to be of some urgency. There must be some present value in seeking the information during the Question Period rather than through the Order Paper or through correspondence with the Minister or the department.

And 408(1)(e), that such questions should not be of a nature which would require a lengthy and detailed answer, and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 504, which provides that it should not request a detailed response which could be dealt with more appropriately as a written question placed on the Order Paper.

In essence, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was raising questions, pulling out budget documents or other documents, quoting from a specific line – now, as he held up the document, you could see that that document was a significant number of pages – and making the assumption for the public and others watching that the minister of health ought to have memorized all those lines and ought to be able to provide a detailed response to a detailed question. Clearly, in our orders of procedure there are places for those sorts of questions, and Written Questions and Motions for Returns are specific opportunities for that type of question.

As well, in our practice, I think, the rules that I just read from Beauchesne's and from the House of Commons Procedure and Practice would suggest that where you're asking for a detailed response, it might be more appropriate just to write a letter to the minister as opposed to trying to grandstand in the House.

One of the most important pieces that should be referenced by this House under this point of order is that the member asking the question is, in fact, the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, and he knows full well where those types of questions can be brought up. If it's a matter of a current budget issue, it should be raised in the House during discussion in the Committee of Supply or in the policy field committee during discussion of estimates. If it's with respect to a prior year's accounts, the Public Accounts Committee is the appropriate place for those questions to be raised, and the hon. member, as chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, ought to know that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on this point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. This is quite an interesting point of order if you could call it that, Mr. Speaker. Now, certainly, the first thing I would like to say to the Government House Leader – and he should know this – is that the government majority which sits on the Public Accounts Committee is now setting the agenda. I would love to have the ministry of health come frequently to Public Accounts, but that is no longer possible because last year we changed those rules.

Now, I certainly would like to say that I was clear when I asked the question of the minister of health, and I was clear in my opening preamble, Mr. Speaker, that the Auditor General's report last October indicated that Alberta Health Services found numerous errors in the way data was being processed from the ledgers of former health authorities, including Capital health.

This isn't a budget document. This is the Auditor General's report from October 2010, which should be required reading for each and every hon. member of this Assembly. For the Government House Leader to say that this is an obscure budget document or a big budget document is untrue. That is untrue because this is required reading for every member of the Assembly.

Certainly, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview used the same report in a question previous to me today to ask the Infrastructure minister about Villa Caritas, and there was no problem with that from the hon. Government House Leader. He didn't have a problem with my colleague asking the question, so I think I should be given every opportunity to ask questions about the Auditor General's report.

I have an obligation. It's not grandstanding, as the hon. member indicated. In fact, this point of order, one could conclude, may be grandstanding on the hon. member's behalf. Certainly, I have every right to ask questions from the Auditor General's report.

I'm going to quote, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, from Beauchesne 409(6). "A question must be within the administrative competence of the Government. The Minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his or her present Ministry and not for any decisions taken in a previous portfolio." This question certainly had to do with the recent financial statements and the recent report from the Auditor General.

Beauchesne 410(5) goes on to say, "The primary purpose of the Question Period is the seeking of information and calling the Government to account." That's exactly what I was trying to do. I didn't get any answers. Again, 410(6), Mr. Speaker: "The greatest possible freedom should be given to Members consistent with other rules and practices."

I can't understand why anyone would try to exclude the use of this Auditor General's report or any of his previous reports from examination in this House during question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. I'm quite prepared to deal with this matter as well. This is the point of order raised by the Government House Leader. First of all, a bit of information: the Minister of Health and Wellness is scheduled to appear before Public Accounts on May 11 of this year. That has been scheduled.

Gee, when I was listening to all of this and I was paying attention to all of this, I thought that this point of order would have to do, basically, with the phrase, "I'm disappointed that you do not read the Auditor's reports." That kind of phraseology was a casting of aspersions upon another member, but the Minister of Health and Wellness has made it very, very clear that he did. Certainly, he's got a photographic-type memory, so he remembered that as well.

The Auditor General's report is fair game in this House. Questions can be raised from the Auditor General's report and should be dealt with and answered.

Sometimes it gets a little technical. Sometimes the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is a bit pedantic in his questions, and if he just eliminated the preambles in his second and third questions, we probably wouldn't have points of order raised with respect to that. So this is not a point of order that I'm going to spend any more time entertaining.

We're all going to move on, and we're all going to learn from this that, number one, the Minister of Health and Wellness will appear before the Public Accounts Committee on May 11. Done. The chairman knows now.

Number two, the Auditor General's report is fair game, any questions coming out of the Auditor General's report. Let's try and keep it at the policy level rather than specific – you know, the dollar, dollar, dollar figures – because that can surely be dealt with in the Public Accounts Committee rather than this Assembly. If we stick to policy and no preambles in the second or third questions, we won't have these kind of details to have to deal with.

Okay. Let's move on to number three now. The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was precisely my point, that the pedantics and the dollar figures and the specifics were for Public Accounts. Obviously, policy is for here.

That was not what the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was dealing with when he blatantly mischaracterized what the Premier had just said in response to a question, when he said that the Premier only cares about the health of 62 per cent of Albertans. Every member in the House was a witness to what the Premier had said and what the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo said. It was an absolute, blatant misrepresentation of what the Premier just said. However, I don't believe I need to raise a point of order on it now because the hon. minister of health dealt with it quite succinctly in his response.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness did deal with that. This would have been a point of order, and I would have asked for a retraction from the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I've got the readings of both of them, both Hansards, in front of me, and that's not at all what one member said, that another member said that he said. That would've been dealt with, but we're finished with that one now.

Yes, sir.

Mr. Anderson: I just wanted to respond.

The Speaker: I looked. Nobody responded. Sorry. It's already dealt with.

Mr. Anderson: I'd like to make a defence on the part of my colleague, but that's all right.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, sir. I looked. You didn't move. I looked to see people stand, and I was starting to talk already. We've dealt with this one.

Mr. Anderson: Okay.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2011-12

Energy

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, do you wish to speak?

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll make a few opening comments if I could and then be happy to spend as much time as we can on an exchange back and forth. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo said that he wants to be educated, so we'll make sure that we at least get him through grade school here today.

Mr. Chairman, before I start, I want to introduce some staff that will be assisting me today: my deputy minister, Peter Watson; I also have with us the chairman of the Energy Resources Conservation Board, Mr. Dan McFadyen, and the chairman of the Alberta Utilities Commission, Willie Grieve. We have additional staff in the gallery. Before I make some remarks, I'd just like to thank all of the staff from the various sections of our department. The year 2010 has certainly been a year of incredible progress in the area of the Department of Energy, and we owe a great deal of thanks as Albertans and as members of the Assembly to a number of hardworking staff that we have in the Department of Energy.

I'm here, as we all know, to present the Minister of Energy's business plan and budget for 2011-12. I want to start by saying that our province is making a solid recovery from the global economic downturn, and as expected, we will have one of the strongest economies in North America as we move into 2011. Renewed activity in the oil and gas sector is leading that recovery. The final numbers for petroleum and natural gas land sales for the 2010-11 fiscal year are not yet complete, but I think it's fair to say, Mr. Chairman, that the numbers will be very similar to what the calendar year 2010 delivered, and that's somewhere in the range of $2.3 billion to $2.4 billion. That surpasses the previous record, which was set in 2005. It exceeds that previous record by half a billion dollars.

Now, in Budget 2011 we're forecasting revenues in the range of just over a billion dollars. It's hard to predict, but we want to ensure that we don't overshoot this number. Obviously, as the year goes by, if those numbers show the same kind of strength as they did in 2010-11, we will revise them on our quarterly updates.

What those numbers mean is that land sales illustrate that Alberta continues to be competitive in attracting new investment. Its record sales also mean new jobs and new opportunities for industry. In 2010, Mr. Chairman, 17,000 full-time energy jobs were added in Alberta, and I can tell you that there's a feeling of optimism and confidence in our sector in Alberta today.

I want to spend a few minutes and look at some of the budgetary asks that we have before the committee today. Our operating spending for the Ministry of Energy with two exceptions is pretty much consistent with the previous year. Of the approximately $445 million, $231 million is allocated to the Department of Energy, $175 million to the Energy Resources Conservation Board – I know that there is some interest in knowing just how that budget breaks out, and I'd be happy to answer those questions – and $39 million for the Alberta Utilities Commission. The $83 million increase that's forecasted in our department estimates this year is mainly attributed to two clean energy initiatives. One is the carbon capture and storage initiative, and the second is the bioenergy producer credit program.

Budget 2011 continues to build on our strong long-term strategy to green our energy supply. In support of climate change we will maintain our commitment to carbon capture and storage. This year's allocation is $73 million. This increase includes the reprofiling of originally budgeted amounts for carbon capture and storage to future years. An overall investment of $2 billion for those four CCS projects, however, continues. In turn, Mr. Chairman, for that investment we are expected to start removing by 2015 some 5 million tonnes of CO<sub>2</sub> emissions from the atmosphere. We started that process last month with the first project that we had go out the door, and that's the one with Enhance Energy. Work is continuing on the remaining three projects. I hope that we're in a good position to make those announcements this year.

Another part of our commitment to clean energy, of course, is the bioenergy projects. Since 2006 government has invested some $239 million into three grant programs to stimulate bioenergy development, which in turn has encouraged more than $1.4 billion in additional private investment. Biofuel initiatives will see an increase from $43 million in '10-11 to $58 million in '11-12. This budget will fund a five-year extension to the bioenergy producer credit program. The extension will encourage the development of new technologies that use nonfood crops, waste biomass, or wood to produce products like fuels, power, and heat.

Some of the projects that are being supported through the program include wood waste gasification facilities in Edmonton and Fort McMurray, a bioenergy applied research facility near Vegreville, an organic waste-to-energy facility in Lethbridge, and an industrial park in Drayton Valley converting wood waste into electricity. These projects are creating new value-added products, spurring investment, and contributing to important clean energy research.

This budget also allocates $10 million to implement the recommendations of the regulatory enhancement project. The task force has recommended a long overdue streamlining of our regulatory process in the province as it applies to the oil and gas sector, and I'd be happy to go into any discussion about that over the next couple of hours.

I wanted to spend a few moments speaking about our nonrenewable resource revenue forecast. Now, many factors are considered when forecasts are developed, including supply and demand, world economic growth, and non-OPEC supply growth. But as one can see from the recent civil unrest in the Middle East, those forecasts are often outdated within days, let alone a year, which our budget is attempting to predict. So while forecasting prices in a market as volatile as oil and gas is a challenge, the Department of Energy based its forecast on assumptions regarding factors such as economic growth, demand trends, and expected supply levels. This forecast is then compared to estimates made by a number of other industry analysts, including banks, investment dealers, and forecasting agencies.

Budget 2011 shows prices equal to the average of those industry experts and private-sector forecasters that were surveyed by the Department of Energy. I must add that it's clearly below what oil is trading at today, but in saying that, I would say that when our final numbers are produced for the budget year 2010-11, our forecasts will be likely within about $2 of what we'd forecast in the budget some 12 months previously. This budget assumes that natural gas prices in '11-12 will average about $3.45 per gigajoule and that oil prices will average $89.40 per barrel of west Texas intermediate crude.

Budget 2011 also estimates that nonrenewable resource revenue will increase quite dramatically over the next three years, Mr. Chairman. Resource revenue is forecast to increase by $319 million, or 4 per cent, to $8.3 billion in '11-12 and grow to $10.2 billion in '12-13 and $11.9 billion in '13-14. That growth is attributed primarily to three things: the increase in bitumen production, the payouts that will start to occur with our oil sands plant, and increased prices. Now, I know that we're running close to my time limit, so I'll just conclude by saying that bitumen royalties are forecast to increase by some $556 million in '11-12, by 1 and a half billion dollars in '12-13, and by $1.497 billion in '13-14.

To conclude, Mr. Chairman, energy will remain Canada's economic driver for many years. Alberta's role will continue to be one of leadership and responsible development of those resources, which will ensure sustained prosperity for all Albertans.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to engage in answering any questions that may arise.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, do you want to go back and forth?

Mr. Hehr: Yeah, that'll be fine.

The Deputy Chair: Then we'll work 20 minutes back and forth.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you for the comments, hon. minister. It is indeed a privilege to be here at estimates debate, and I'd like to thank your staff for coming through what no doubt has been a challenging couple of years. I know that when I first came to this House, we were going through a rapid advancement of oil prices, which, I think, went all the way to $140 and then went all the way back down to $35. Many people were out of work. Lord knows, I do a lot of complaining about things, but I know that when I was born at the Holy Cross hospital in 1969, I was lucky and blessed to be in Alberta, and some of that is because of the fact that we have a large abundance of oil and gas here. I realize the benefits it brings.

You also realize that I'm new in my capacity here, so if some of my questions appear to be naive or redundant, I'd appreciate some leniency. I'm sure I will get the appropriate answer to move ahead. At the end of the day I hope you realize that I, too, hope that we have a strong oil and gas culture and community providing us with a revenue stream where we can build a better province for not only today but tomorrow.

On that note, we can go right into some of the plans. Again, the hon. minister recognized and even my soliloquy showed that predicting oil and gas revenues is often very difficult. However, if we look at this year's postings by the government and what the prognosticators are saying out there, one has to question why we have permanently incorporated into our royalty framework the drilling stimulus initiative we have, which is essentially 5 per cent of royalty being paid for any new well. I'll start with that question.

Mr. Liepert: Well, that's a very good question. I think the easy answer to that, hon. member, is the fact, as you will probably recall, that we had a situation in the province where we weren't competitive. Capital can flow, and when we made the announcement that that would become permanent, the results speak for themselves. The land sales are clearly an indicator of that. I don't have the information in front of me, and I'm going from memory, but I saw yesterday the report from the Canadian association of drilling contractors, which said that the number of rigs working in this province in January is back to 2006 levels. Member, there aren't a lot of things that we do in government where we have the data that can back up that the decision that we made was right, and those are two very important pieces of data that I think justify that the changes we made to the royalty structure a year ago are working and will continue to work. I make no apologies for them.

3:10

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you. I didn't ask the minister to make an apology for it. I realize that at the time, about a year ago, it may have been necessary. Okay? Given the timing, given the political ramifications that were at stake here in the province, it probably should have been made.

Now, what about the permanency of it? That's more what I'm worried about. Would there be some mechanism that we could incorporate into the system where after three quarters of oil and gas over $100 we will have this come off? Then after three quarters of it under a certain price the royalty incentive would go back on. I realize that the industry likes certainty. But at some price point, when we're reasonably certain that the Alberta people are employed, that the government is doing all right, that oil companies should be doing all right, maybe there could be some mechanism like that put in place. Is that the strangest idea you've heard? I'd just like to hear your response to that.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, I should say to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo that when I made my previous comments, I must admit I was kind of looking over his right shoulder because I know what the question from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is going to be, so I wanted to prime him for that.

Let me answer the question this way, hon. member. When we did our competitiveness review and we held our meetings with industry, there were three issues, I think, that came to the forefront. One, we needed to work on streamlining the regulatory process in this province, two, we had to adjust our fiscal regime, but probably just as important was number three, which was that when we adjusted that fiscal regime, we then left it alone.

Predictability and stability in the investment community is paramount. One of the things that we continue to hear as we meet with the investment community, whether it's in Toronto, New York, or London, as it was most recently, is the question: well, are you going to leave it that way? The answer I gave them last spring was: you've got to take my word for it. We're meeting with them now, a year later, and they're seeing that we're serious, that the fiscal regime we've put in place is the one we're going to move forward with and that we're going to stick to it. As a result, investment is flowing into the province.

Mr. Hehr: I will agree that you had to leave it. That was probably because you had changed it six times in the year previously. So to give them some measure of confidence, you may have had to do that. I understand that. They were difficult times.

What percentage of growth – and I know this is difficult – for the economy or the oil and gas industry is forecasted because of these changes in the royalty framework? Can you put a number on it? Does your department attribute a number to it? How much was due to the change in the royalty framework, or how much is due to the price of oil here? Some skeptics say that we got caught in a bind of low oil prices, political pressures, what have you, and the like.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think it's a bit of both. You know, I take as an example land sales. We have noticed in the last year both with land sales and the number of rigs that are working that there has been a shift from gas to oil. There's an obvious reason for that. I'm not sure if we can put an exact number on it, but I think the number that is important is that if you have collectively the right regime in place, the investment will flow.

You know, the thing that's interesting is that even in natural gas and certainly in the shale plays in the province and actually throughout North America there is continued strong investment in gas even though the price is low. It is only an estimation on our part. I don't think there's any way we can actually decipher it to say what percentage led to the decision. But I would say that what we're seeing in gas is telling me that the fiscal regime is more important than the world prices right now.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you. If we can go to royalty performance measures, the old performance chart for the collection of royalties was Crown revenue share. That was a portion of the oil and gas industry's annual net operating revenue that is paid to the Crown as a royalty. A three-year moving average of between 20 and 25 per cent was the target range. Now, the department – really, I think you know this – only ever received 19 per cent. This was mentioned in the Auditor General's report, and it mentioned a lot of big problems with this measurement. This has now been replaced with the competitive performance target, which is combined tax and royalty rates for Alberta natural gas and conventional oil production compared with other jurisdictions. I think this is a good measure because it includes both taxes and royalty rates, and you have to factor in both because in Alberta we expect our workers to be paid decent wages.

Why can't this government have two performance measures, one to measure competitiveness and the other to measure the province's take? Can you separate out these two to make it a little more easy for maybe just me to understand or possibly other people? Can you have a competitiveness number, how we're doing on competitiveness? What is our province's total take? Can you separate that on just our total take on the oil side of things and then our total take on the side of taxes?

Mr. Liepert: I'll try and answer the first part of the question first. I have a slide, that I'd be happy to provide to the member, which shows that our combined royalty and tax structure makes us the second most competitive jurisdiction in North America. Saskatchewan is slightly ahead of us in a competitive environment, especially on the oil side, but their royalties are very, very low. From a competitive standpoint we are very confident that the regime we have in place now puts us in that competitive environment.

What I think you have to be careful of, though, when the member receives a copy of this slide, is that you have to remember that Alberta producers have to get their product to market. For the market, whether it be on the east coast of the U.S. or California or wherever it is, there is a significant transportation cost that Alberta producers have to incur. As an example, new shale plays in New York state or even Texas shale plays that are supplying gas to many of the major markets in the U.S. don't incur those same transportation costs. I'll get a copy of this to the member.

I'd ask if you could repeat the second part of your question.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I think that there could be, in our view, two, I guess, performance measures, one that measures competitiveness and one that measures the province's take. I mean the take just out of oil and gas revenues and then the take out of oil and gas and natural gas and taxes. Could we have the two numbers? Is there a way to separate the two numbers, or am I just misreading it?

Mr. Liepert: I think that, you know, I won't use the term that the member is using, which is "take." What we try to do is put in place a regime that encourages the private sector to invest. The private sector invests, it creates jobs, it pays taxes, and I think the proof is in the pudding. I don't know that you can kind of break it out that way. I know there are a lot of academics who try to use that terminology, try to use that measurement. It's not one that we necessarily subscribe to.

Mr. Hehr: I believe the hon. minister will recognize that our job is not only to provide jobs and do a competitive thing. It's also to have resources that will not only pay for things now but, hopefully, pay for things later. It's not only being competitive for businesses to do work here but to have a relatively competitive, to use a term that we're throwing around here, capture of royalties – okay? – a capture of the economic rent from what is, to use a term that would be out of date, the people's oil.

Mr. Liepert: Do you want me to respond to that?

Mr. Hehr: Sure. Yeah.

3:20

Mr. Liepert: Again, there's a balance. I mean, when we implemented some royalty changes, I don't think we found the right balance two to three years ago. As I said earlier, capital can flee on a moment's notice, and there are lots of places in the world to drill for oil. So it has to be a balance. There's no question that we need to ensure that Albertans receive fair return on the investment that's being made, but at the same time the investor also has to not be seen as overly penalized. It's a balance, and I think all indicators are that we've now found the right balance.

Mr. Hehr: Just a question. If you look at our basin and our types of oil reserves and our type of marketplace, where, actually, we encourage large companies to come in and invest like Suncor, Total, all these different plays, what areas of the world are we in direct competition with for this type of investment? Where are the other jurisdictions in oil? It's my understanding we've got 25 per cent of the world's oil resources, in and around there, and it's my understanding that the world is getting fewer and fewer of these places that are really open for business to large commercial enterprises like the Suncors, the Totals, and whoever. Can you name me some of the jurisdictions we're in competition with that allow for that sort of open competition as we do?

Mr. Liepert: Well, the reality of it is that Alberta and Canada sit on the largest proven reserves by far of any democratic, not-state-owned country. You know, to answer the question is difficult because when a company makes a decision to invest, there are a number of factors that are taken into account, and I'm sure that on that list of factors that are taken into account today, civil unrest has jumped to the top. I don't think there is a formula where any particular company will say: "Okay. We're going to plug the pieces into this formula, and then we'll make our decision." You know, there are a lot of factors that are taken into account. The percentage of the profitability is one thing; the climatic conditions are another thing. But, clearly, how stable is the government in the jurisdiction that we're planning to invest money in for decades? How stable is that government? I think that's jumped to the top of the list of considerations that are taken into account.

Mr. Hehr: I would agree. Maybe I can find this in a textbook, but would some of the people here be able to answer the question: where do they see the jurisdictions that are competing for the kind of investment dollar that we have? I think you said Saskatchewan.

Mr. Liepert: Well, you've got to remember that we're talking about, really, four different commodities here: conventional oil, unconventional oil, conventional gas, and unconventional gas. When it comes to unconventional, or shale gas, clearly northeastern British Columbia has been a hotbed of activity and investment. A good chunk – maybe we'd like to see a little more – is moving over the border into Alberta. But we know that our competition for investment in shale gas is primarily in the U.S., huge discoveries of shale gas.

When it comes to conventional natural gas, you know, it's a tough go out there today because of the price. We're in competition, primarily when it comes to conventional natural gas, with the North American continent. We have no ability right now to get it off the continent. If we got it off the continent, we'd be competing with countries like Qatar, who are big into liquefied natural gas. Clearly, Russia has become the number one supplier to Europe of natural gas. So in conventional natural gas that would be our competition globally if we could get it off the continent.

When it comes to oil sands and heavy oil, there are other countries in the world that we compete against. I would say: offer it as a package. The oil sands, clearly, are at the top of the list. I think the best measurement of that is when you take a look at who's been investing in the oil sands in the last year or two. We've had significant investment from mainland China. We've had investment from Korea, Thailand, across the globe. Then when it comes to conventional oil, that's been around for a long time. We get back to what I just said a few minutes ago, that our competition is – again, we don't ship off the continent. So when it comes to who do we compete with and who do we sell to, it's primarily on the North American continent. That graph that I sent you is a pretty good indicator.

Mr. Hehr: It sounds like there are various different areas in the world we compete against. I'm just trying to get a handle on what the geopolitical sense is in these areas, to really see which areas are open for business. That's more of what I'm getting at. But I can do that on my own time, not in this time.

Mr. Liepert: Well, if I could, Mr. Chairman, I think the number is that something like 50 per cent of the reserves in the world are state owned, so they have limited ability to invest by the private sector. We can't say that they don't because they're joint ventures, but by and large the environment that we offer in Alberta is only available in about 50 per cent. We have about 50 per cent of the world market.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Thank you. Just one thing. I get questions about this one. You hear us talking a lot about Norway sometimes, and I realize there are different tax regimes and all that stuff there. This is a different time period. Did we maybe make a wrong decision in '93 in getting rid of the Alberta Energy Company and paying off the debt, when we have groups like Total over here now who are setting up shop and sending what I view are profits back to the motherland, if you want to call it that? I always thought that that at one point in time was owned by the Alberta people and that Peter Lougheed set it up so that 50 per cent of the industry would be controlled by the Alberta government, where we could play off, keep the private system but know we've got a competitive system here. If the privates won't do it and we find it viable, then we'll go in. It doesn't look like we have the balance to be able to do that anymore. I know you don't like to look backwards, but are we missing that sort of play here?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think that when you mention the Alberta Energy Company, you have to really go back and look at the essence of why the Alberta Energy Company was formed. In many ways it was formed because there was a market void, if you might. The decision was made over a period of time that the company no longer served the purpose that it was set up for. The private sector was adequately developing the resources in Alberta, and Albertans were receiving appropriate return on the reserves that they owned.

I think that the history of the kind of marketplace that you talk about is not something that we want to see in Alberta. I go back to Petro-Canada. I mean, Petro-Canada was a federal intrusion into what we saw was the marketplace. Ultimately, the government of the day in Ottawa concurred with us; it sold Petro-Canada off. You know, I think it's almost a situation where you either have a private sector developed industry or you have a state-owned company that does it all and forms partnerships with the private sector. [interjection] I know the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, but I wouldn't get too excited over there, Member, because the election results tend to speak for themselves.

The Deputy Chair: Just to note, we're on our second 20-minute segment.

Mr. Hehr: While we're on sort of this trip down memory lane on Alberta Energy, I was a youth, and I think my dad owned six shares and was very proud to own those shares.

3:30

Nevertheless, you were talking about voids in the marketplace. That's when governments either step in to incent things to get done, or they do it themselves. I look at that as a situation that may exist in our bitumen upgrading right now. In my view, the government should maybe be doing more to incent this. It's easy for me to sit over here and say: "Why don't we have seven upgraders going up here? When I'm going to sleep at night, I dream that they're there. Why aren't they there?" That type of thing.

I realize you're saying that there are already these places down in the United States, that we can send it down there, and they're ready to take it. It's an investment by industry. There is money already spent there. Why are we going to make industry invest twice? I understand that argument. I understand the economics of it. I don't understand it from a province-building capacity.

Why don't we take a calculated decision as the Alberta government? These oil sands: I'm making a logical bet that these things are going to pump oil for 300 years. Okay? I've heard that number banging around. I, for one, hope they're pumping for 300 years. Why don't we bet the world is going to need these resources for 300 years? Why don't we say: "Piss on it. Let's build these upgraders here." Why don't we have these jobs? Why won't we build the province? Why won't we build the infrastructure here?

Mr. Mason: You can say that. You could get away with it, Ron.

Mr. Liepert: I've got to figure out how I respond to that.

Well, in many ways, member, that's exactly what we're doing. Under the leadership of my colleague here, the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, we developed in this province what's called the bitumen royalty in kind, or BRIK, program. You know, I doubt that either one of us will be here 20, 30 years from now. If we were, I'm not so sure that what you're asking for wouldn't in fact be happening. We could be in a position 10, 15, 20 years from now as the Crown, the largest handler of bitumen in the province, and that number could be 200,000 or 300,000 or 400,000 barrels a day. I think, though, the strategy that we're on right now is that we want to use the leverage of BRIK, bitumen royalty in kind, to ensure that we get as much of our bitumen upgraded in Alberta as we can.

I think it's also important, as the steward of the resources of the province, to ensure that we don't put all of our eggs in that basket. If we end up in a situation where the differential between what the refiner is prepared to pay for bitumen and what you can sell it for on the open market is a losing proposition, we need to be in a position where we are what I call hedging. Some of our product flows out, sold as straight bitumen because the price might be a better return for Albertans. Other product can be upgraded through our bitumen royalty in kind.

In essence what we're doing is following what the member is saying, but we are not going to get into the business of government building upgraders. That is not part of what this government stands for. The BRIK program accomplishes exactly the same thing, and we don't have that capital outlay, because we'd have your friends to the left giving us the gears for being in business.

Mr. Hehr: I understand that. Then to the extent the BRIK program is doing it, I wish you would do it more quickly, get more of that business up, get more of our private-sector friends involved in building those upgraders so we can get our bitumen upgraded here. I encourage you to make those incentives. Those are a gamble on the Alberta people, too, to gamble how much we're going to incent that industry to do that. I would encourage you to incent whatever you can to get those things because that's, in my view, what I would like to see. Okay? We'll leave it at that.

No, we won't just leave it at that. How much bitumen of our bitumen in total are we upgrading currently in the province?

Mr. Liepert: I'm going from memory, but it's in the range of 65 to 70 per cent currently. We think that with North West coming on stream in a couple of years and the announcement by Suncor-Total that they're going to complete the Voyageur upgrader at Suncor's plant, with those two projects we will continue to stay within our energy strategy of 60 per cent being upgraded in Alberta for late into this decade. Clearly, in order to continue to meet that 60 per cent, we need more upgraders coming online down the road, and we believe that ultimately through our BRIK program that will happen.

Mr. Hehr: You guys have alluded that in the next 10 years we'll have a massive amount of bitumen coming that has a possibility of being upgraded in Alberta.

Mr. Liepert: The projections – and these are real projections based on actual investment in construction and expansion – are that the slightly over a million and a half barrels today will double by 2020.

Mr. Hehr: Any projections to 2040?

Mr. Liepert: Well, they're harder to determine because at least between now and 2020 we see a number of projects that have already been announced or are under way. When you get beyond 2020, you're making projections that are that, projections. They're not really based on anything other than a projection of what the price will be, what the investment will be, so I can't.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you.

If we can just turn to natural gas, what will happen to government revenues if, say, natural gas goes up a dollar and/or goes down from where you guys forecast it now? Are those significant?

Mr. Liepert: I have to go from memory, but my recollection is that every dollar in natural gas pricing is about a billion, I think. Sorry. I'll correct myself on that. It's about half a billion. Every 10 cents is $50 million.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Now, this question has something to do with your department, but we'll just maybe have a discussion about it anyway. I know you have cross-ministry groups going all the time, so I'll ask you as the Energy minister how that cross-ministry has worked to reduce Alberta's reliance on funding core programs with nonrenewable resource energy and whether we can get to a day when there's going to be 30 per cent of it saved. Or are we really in a fool's paradise? From what I see we've done for the last 20 years, we've shown nothing, that we can blow through a lot of royalty revenues. I understand that. We have $11 billion more tax from there.

I know I'm essentially asking what you do, what I'm suggesting here, so I'm not running from that either. Are we just going to say: "Is that content? At the end of the day we'll bring in a sales tax when the oil and gas run out and leave our children and their children with higher government services." Is there some discussion going on in your cross-ministry group with regard to the use of these once-in-a-lifetime spending opportunities?

Mr. Liepert: I'm not sure that there's anything that I can say that would help the hon. member there. I mean, as a government we're always looking forward as to what the best policies might be around taxation and around resource development. I'd maybe make a couple of comments because I think it was at the start of the question. I think one area that we can look at where probably we're making excellent progress is in the electricity file, relative to getting a higher percentage of our electricity generation from nonrenewables. We're at 12 per cent today. Eight per cent of that is wind. I think the projections are that wind is going to be up to about 11 or 12 per cent on its own in three to five years.

Those are all very encouraging numbers because there's no question that coal-burning generation is going to be under the gun. The environmental constraints around coal burning are going to make it a challenging business to be in, and we're still relying on 50 per cent coal. I think you're going to see a greater shift to natural gas. So that's the electricity side.

You know, until the member can prove to me that Canadians and North Americans are prepared to drive smaller vehicles shorter distances, I don't see that insatiable desire for resource products to reduce over the next period of time. I think the demand is going to be there. It's going to be a growing demand over the next decade and beyond.

Mr. Hehr: I'm not sure that the minister answered the question I was asking. He turned it into a question on whether North Americans are going to be driving or looking at saving resources. I was actually asking a question on the relative merits of our policy of spending royalty revenue the way that we do in Alberta.

Mr. Liepert: With all due respect, I think that's a bit of an unfair question. We generate the revenue as our department, but the decision on overall government taxation policy is not one that falls within the Department of Energy. I think we as a government have been and will continue to be always engaged in what is the right balance, what is the right amount that we put away for savings. Thank goodness we did put away savings, not only in the heritage trust fund but the sustainability fund, which is allowing us now to balance our budget. That's a good, healthy debate, but I don't think it's appropriate for the estimates of the Department of Energy.

Mr. Hehr: It probably isn't, but I tried to get you there anyway. I understand completely.

The province is no longer forecasting natural gas and by-products to be the largest source of royalties. It's the second time ever. Do you find this a permanent change?

Mr. Liepert: Well, it will be for the near future because of two factors, the significant increase in production and the continued high price of oil and, especially, bitumen. But that could change fairly quickly if the price of natural gas were to triple as it did three years ago. I can't predict that. Under the current estimates we are forecasting that the royalties from bitumen production are going to exceed conventional oil and gas combined for, I think, as long as the business plan projects us out.

Mr. Hehr: If you can bear with me, I'm going to read through something here. For 2012 it is estimated that $1 billion plus will be collected from gas and natural by-products, with a sizeable chunk being returned in royalty credits to gas producers. In October 2009 the Auditor General's report on page 204 recommended a different accounting method for funding of these initiatives, and I think some of these initiatives were the 200-metre drilled royalty credit, the one-year program to incentivize new wells, deep well drilling, and a deep natural gas and oil incentive drilling.

Anyway, in this particular case these initiatives shouldn't be accounted as netted revenue royalties minus royalty credits but as expenses. By not reporting them as an expense, we can't determine if the incentives have resulted in incremental revenue. This recommendation still remains outstanding. Can you answer me: why does this remain outstanding? What are the benefits of doing it the way we're doing it? Is the Auditor General out to lunch? What's the deal here?

Mr. Liepert: Those were your words relative to the Auditor General, not mine, so let's make that very clear.

The only answer I can give the hon. member – and I'm meeting with the Auditor General here in, I think, the next week – is that all indications that I have are that the Auditor General is satisfied that all of the accounting processes that we now engage in meet what he is asking. We have to remember that a couple of the programs that you referenced will expire at the end of March of this year.

I have no indications from the Auditor General that we haven't complied with the recommendations as set out in his report.

Mr. Hehr: Now, it's my understanding that we're incentivizing production right now in the natural gas industry. You know, I guess that's fair. Is there a point where it doesn't make any sense to bring this resource out of the ground, where the price is just too low to countenance that? If you leave your incentives in place, and the market decides it doesn't matter if we make 3 cents a gigajoule or whatever you're going to sell it for, is there any arbitrary number where you say that we're shutting this down because it doesn't make any sense?

Mr. Liepert: That would be a decision that the private sector would make. What we attempted to do on the natural gas side is – the changes that we made last spring were very much geared at new technology, new means of extraction, trying to get more out of existing reserves. I know that in the meetings I've been having with folks on the natural gas side of it, they recognize it's a tough market out there. This is an industry that is incredibly resilient. This industry knows that they have to find markets off the North American continent, and we're working with them on that.

I think that in some cases some of the shift in natural gas has been to shale, where the volumes are so much greater. We also have to recognize that there are price differentials when it comes to liquid-rich natural gas versus dry natural gas. So there are a whole bunch of combinations that come into play.

I don't get the feeling from industry that they feel they're at that point yet, but clearly they are prepared to stick it out. As one CEO said to me, it's going to be a matter in the next two years of toughing it out. But part of toughing it out is also finding new markets, and that's going to be job number one.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we're into our third set of 20 minutes.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you. We discussed this a little bit earlier. I think from your comments – and maybe I'm reaching here a little bit – that one of our main competitors here in oil and gas and even our oil sands is Saskatchewan, and right now they have a lower royalty program than we do. They collect less royalty rent than we do. I know we've agreed on things like TILMA and the like to encourage the three provinces to work together so that we're not chasing each others' tails, so we're maximizing, I guess, our competitiveness both for the taxpayer and the industry at the same time so that we're not creating competing races to the bottom.

An Hon. Member: Form a cartel.

Mr. Liepert: We have a cartel, hon. member. It's called the western economic partnership or the, whatever, northwestern partnership.

Royalties and taxes paid by the industry are only one factor that industry takes into account when it makes a decision on where to deploy their dollars. You know, I think there's everything that comes into play, from lifestyle to whether one province has a sales tax versus another province. I mean, it's the whole basket of goods.

Where you see the royalty regimes in the three western provinces, my guess is that they're probably going to stay there for the foreseeable future. There may be some incentives that certain provinces might take. As an example, I know Saskatchewan made a significant change around natural gas because they haven't had a lot of natural gas play, so they were trying to encourage natural gas investment.

I would say that what we will be working on together as three western provinces are two things primarily: number one, jointly trying to find new markets for our producers offshore, and number two, working to see what some of those regulatory barriers that exist are. What does Saskatchewan make industry do once they cross that Alberta-Saskatchewan border that we don't and vice versa? It's almost a no-brainer to say: why can't we harmonize those regulatory barriers, the permitting, all of those kinds of things?

I'll give you an example of a fellow who works with one of the drilling companies. His job is to set up all of the various camps. He said to me one day: do you realize that when you got rid of nine health regions and made one health region, I now have to only apply for one permit when it comes to all of my camps? Those are little things that we sometimes don't think about, but those are real burdens on industry.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you for removing those for the industry. I guess some people may disagree but nevertheless. As long as you're keeping that industry happy.

Anyway, on opening up our partners, I think that is an excellent thing for your government to be concentrating on. We know the pipeline in the Northern Gateway to Kitimat is extremely important. We share that view. How is that going? Are you guys making progress? I realize that you guys are not the only ones at the table here, and there are many partners and procedures that need to go ahead.

Mr. Liepert: Well, if the hon. member is serious about what he just said, I would suggest that he pick up the phone and phone his federal leader and tell his federal leader to call off the dogs relative to tanker traffic on the west coast because you cannot ship product off the west coast if you don't allow tanker traffic. I recognize that to your colleague behind you there that's an impossible ask. But I have great confidence that the Liberal opposition could pick up the phone, phone their Liberal leader in Ottawa, and say: smarten up.

Mr. Hehr: Well, this may surprise the minister there, but I'll just inform him that I'm not really in contact with Mr. Ignatieff that much. It may surprise him. It may surprise him that we actually don't run any of our policies by him. I didn't confer with anyone in their energy department before I met with him. So if he needs that information – I know that one time in question period last week, Mr. Chair, he brought up the Liberal government in Ontario. Let me tell him here and now for the record that I don't talk to them either, okay? I'm just trying to make that clear because this minister keeps making that mistake. If he can try and remember that for the future, that would be all right. Needless to say, next time Mr. Ignatieff calls me, I'll answer, and I will pass that request along.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, let's try and stick to the estimates.

Mr. Hehr: Yes. Actually, I think, on that note, I'm going to pass it along to my friends here to carry the burden, shoulder the load for a little while, and I'll think about my next questions that I'm going to ask the minister.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. For the next 20 minutes, then – did the minister have any more comments? There are 13 minutes left in this segment for the opposition.

Mr. Liepert: Well, maybe, if I could. Maybe I was a little – I can't resist taking a shot at Liberals, Mr. Chairman. We recognize the importance of not only Gateway but the natural gas line to the west coast. Anybody in Alberta who doesn't recognize that our future and the future of the North American continent as an exporting nation in many ways is in Asia, they're fooling themselves. I hope that we can have a civil hearing relative to the panel that's going to be hearing the Gateway application and that the right decision is made because we absolutely need that access to the west coast.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. If there are no other questions on this one, we go to the members of the third party.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, you have 10 minutes, and the minister has 10 minutes. Do you wish to combine your speaking time back and forth?

Mr. Hinman: I would on the caveat that – and he's been excellent so far with quick, brief answers – if he was to go on pontificating, I'd like to be able to stand up if he's past the limit.

The Deputy Chair: Well, he could only go on for 10 minutes, and then he'd be shut down.

Mr. Hinman: Well, that's my worry, that he might shift gears.

The Deputy Chair: Well, it's your choice. You have 10 minutes to go straight forward, and he can then answer for 10 minutes.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, I will give my commitment that my answers will be brief and succinct.

Mr. Hinman: He will continue, and I appreciate that. He's been excellent so far.

The Deputy Chair: Okay, hon. member. Then the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, you may begin.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you, Mr. Minister. It is an honour and a privilege to be here, and I appreciated his opening remarks as he talked about clean energy and the future and pointed out a few things that were his goals going forward.

Because of the shortness of time, I'm going to jump right to goal 3, which the minister has, and the fact that we need to lead and support the development of energy-related infrastructure. This is a major concern for industry and for us in the Wildrose, and I feel this will be the heart of our questioning today, to try to go to this.

On point 3.3 in goal 3, "Alberta has a competitive and efficient energy system ensuring Albertans' electricity and natural gas needs are met." This is where we're very concerned, Mr. Chair, that Bill 50 seems to go against everything that the government's goal is in trying to have the Alberta advantage to bring in investments in all of those areas.

Several years ago in this House the government came up with this whimsical idea that we could raise the royalty rates and we'd be able to collect an extra $1.4 billion. They were wrong, and it's taken a great deal of money and a lot of time to recover from that.

My first question is: has the minister read any of the other reports to look at the cost that the $15 billion infrastructure is going to have on the actual transmission costs, and do we have any projected charts that show the cost of power production, the cost of transmission, and that being related to other jurisdictions, whether that's Saskatchewan, B.C., or down in the States? Our fear is that when you spend all this money on this infrastructure, we are going to be uncompetitive and lose industry, just as we did with the new royalty regime. A quick response on that.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Chairman, the quickest way to lose industry is to ensure that it doesn't have the necessary infrastructure to expand and operate, and the reality of it is that in this province we need to set some things straight. I hope that this particular member takes what I'm saying as constructive advice and then uses it as we move forward.

He refers to $15 billion – I've heard $13 billion; I've heard $16 billion – but if we're talking about the critical transmission lines that I think the member is talking about, we're in the range of $3 billion to $4 billion. What the $13 billion, $15 billion, $16 billion number is is the Alberta Electric System Operator's projection out 20 years.

What we have is a situation in this province where our transmission system is 30 to 40 years in service. Over the years we have had major attempts to deal with that. I don't have to repeat history about some of the things that went on in the past, but I look at it this way, Mr. Chairman. When the government of Alberta decided we needed ring roads around Edmonton and Calgary, there wasn't a hearing for a need. There was a determination that the need was there, and then what we needed to do was ensure they get built. That's exactly what we're doing with the critical transmission lines, and we have determined that they need to get built.

Now, what will happen is that each one – and I have the chairman of the Alberta Utilities Commission with me today, and I'm sure that he'd be happy to hear your comments. Over the course of 2011 there will be hearings around costing, around siting, and I'm sure they will diligently ensure that those costs are appropriate.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member. And we're going to stay to the estimates, the main estimates.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I thought that was, Mr. Chair. I mean, I quoted from 3.3.

The Deputy Chair: I know. I know. I knew you were giving a background, but we'll stick with the estimates.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I appreciate the counsel there.

I guess the minister earlier acknowledged that there was going to be a major shift, he believes, from coal to natural gas over the next 10 to 20 years. You've got the vision. I agree with you on that. I think most people would agree, especially with the change, you know, with the shale gas play and everything else. It's abundant now, and where we thought we had a limited resource, we're looking at, you know, 50, a hundred years again now.

With that thought, it just appears to me that with the parameters you've given to AESO and the Alberta Utilities Commission board that say, “Well, we want zero congestion in building that” when, in fact, we’re looking at these plants being decommissioned even early – would you not agree that the natural tendency is going to be putting up power generation through natural gas close to the actual demand rather than these large lines for coal plants?

Mr. Liepert: No, I don’t agree, Mr. Chairman, because there are some factors – I don’t know if it’s convenient or not – that are left out of this discussion. I’m not sure if the member is aware that to build a natural gas fired generating plant at Calgary is 10 per cent less efficient than it is at Wabamun because of altitude. That’s not my information. That’s what the industry is telling us, that’s what the Electric System Operator is telling us, and I think it’s one of the reasons why there has been no significant effort made. Despite what the member’s colleague tries to relate in the House, there are not two gas-fired generating plants being built in his constituency of Airdrie-Chestermere. That is flat-out wrong. They are being contemplated, but they’re not moving ahead.

The second factor is water. We have to recognize that around the city of Calgary water is a scarce commodity, and in order to generate power through natural gas fired plants requires a lot of water. There happens to be a lot of water at Wabamun, and I’m assuming that’s the reason why TransAlta in their decision to build Sundance 7, even though it’s gas fired, is building it at Wabamun and not in Calgary.

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate that, Mr. Minister. Again, yes, I’m very aware of the factor of altitude and efficiency in production. The problem here is that we’ve tilted the playing field because if you look at the cost of transmission versus the 10 per cent loss from being close and factor in that $3 billion, that is a far higher percentage rate than the 10 per cent loss from the production being close. It’s a policy that this government continues to perpetuate by saying: “It doesn’t matter where you produce it. We’ll transport it free of charge, basically, so that you can compete.” It’s an unbalanced field, and we need to redirect that. Again, we’re not allowing the true competitive nature of industry to set up where it is.

I would ask the minister to look back at the parameters that they’re asking for and that we’re setting up in producing the report that says that these power lines are a need. I mean, just from the fact that we’re going with DC power lines, we either need to check our thinking, like we did with the new royalty framework, or say: “Well, no. What we want to do is to be able to export, so putting in this first major link is going to make it cost-effective.” The reports that come out show that the costs are going to be a 61 per cent increase in transmission costs with these power lines. Again, my understanding – and you can clarify this – of Bill 50 is that those are declared essential lines, that I thought originally came in at $14.3 billion, that aren’t going to go through a needs process because Bill 50 has declared them as needs. The inflation has put it up over $15 billion now.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, this particular member waxes on about a competitive environment. What more competitive an environment could you have in the province than to say to industry: you can build a plant wherever you want, and we’re going to ensure that that power moves to where it has to move. What this member is saying is: “Don’t build transmission. Tell industry where to build their plants.” That’s exactly what I heard him say. If that isn’t what he said, then stand up and say the opposite.

Mr. Hinman: I will clarify that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. That is the problem here. What we have is an unfair playing field because the government is saying: build a plant anywhere, and we will build a power line for you. You might as well go to the farmers in California and say: “We will buy your crop, and we’ll pay for the transportation here, but, Florida, we won’t transport yours here. We buy from one area.” What we need to do is create a level playing field that allows industry to say that the need for electricity is in Calgary or it’s down in Medicine Hat or somewhere else, and they can look at the decision. It goes back to 2001, when this government had a proposal going on here that we needed a charge, like we do in the pipelines, per kilometre that it’s travelling. It’s important that we have the true cost of the overall bill and not that.

What’s going to happen and why we’re bringing this up is that we’re going to have industry go offline because the cost of transmission exceeds the cost of power. When that happens, they can go in and build power at these major industrial facilities. This is another question: have you got any estimates on the number of industries that are going to go offline when, in fact, the price of electricity transmission reflects on their bill that they’re no longer competitive and what that ripple effect is going to be on other industries in the province? A big, major industry can go offline, produce their own electricity, and then we’re stuck with I don’t know how many billions of dollars in transmission lines after Bill 50 has been implemented. What is the minister’s number?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Chairman, all I can say is that we talk regularly to all of the major industrial players in the province. We don’t go out and make stuff up, like certain members of this House. We go out and talk to industry. Industry is telling us that they need the transmission.

We can have this debate all night. All I can say is that if that particular member and that particular party are truly interested in a competitive environment, I would say that a competitive environment is when you let industry determine where they want to locate their facility, and you put the infrastructure in place that accesses the entire province. He’s arguing against himself, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hinman: Well, what’s going to happen, then, is that we’re going to see, again, just what we did with the oil and gas industry. They moved to B.C. They moved to Saskatchewan. Industry is going to move to those two areas to have the electricity cost at a greatly reduced price. Again, the minister, in my opinion and in our party’s opinion, is falling on false principles to think: transportation is free, so set up anywhere. With a nuclear power plant right up in northern Alberta we’re going to pay for the transmission all the way down to southern Alberta? It’s ridiculous to even think that the cost of transmission isn’t a factor in the consumption costs.

I look at my electrical bill every year, and the power is the lowest cost. It’s the transmission, the fee services, and everything else that costs more than our actual power. That is not an Alberta advantage. We’re going to lose industry. It’s going to go to other provinces, just like it did when you raised the royalty.

It’s good to see the former Energy minister here. You talk so much about how you understand and that the new royalty regime hit the right balance. You’re going to do the same thing with our electricity that you did with the new royalty framework, and it’s going to be extremely damaging to business here in the province.

To go to another question, you’ve talked about the regulatory burden. That really is a problem. It’s good to hear you address that. Again, under goal 3, page 55, 3(d), timeliness of the needs and facility applications: "Percentage of needs and facility applications determined within 180 days of the application being deemed complete." Could you give us any comparison numbers on what the timeline is in B.C., Saskatchewan, or U.S. states versus our 180 days?
