There was also a comment on how the weekend would complement the work that our government is already doing. Programs and policies such as Healthy U and active Alberta are promoting healthy lifestyles for Albertans, and GO weekend will play a significant part in solidifying their message that physical activity is absolutely imperative for people to enjoy the best possible quality of life.

Throughout the debate we've considered how the weekend will support our government's health care goals. We've worked incredibly hard over the years to promote healthy communities, yet our entire world is facing increasing incidences of illnesses related to sedentary lifestyles. Alberta GO weekend is just one source of inspiration for Albertans to become more active, which will help to reduce the rate of obesity and heart disease and diabetes and other life-threatening illness. Again I say: it's just the start. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the relevance and importance of this weekend will become even more pronounced in the years to come as issues of lifestyle-related illnesses and rising health care costs become even more salient. People are starting to wake up to the fact that we need to shift towards a focus of prevention, and Bill 203 will play an important part in realizing that strategy.

But above all else this bill is about the quality of life for all Albertans. This is a quick, easy, inexpensive way to kick-start the process of having individuals improve things for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, getting outdoors and being active is fun, and it enhances the development of the whole person mentally, physically, emotionally, spiritually, culturally, and more. Alberta GO weekend will help Albertans to discover and often rediscover outdoor physical activities that they love. We're so fortunate to live in a place with so much natural beauty, with such a robust range of active living opportunities and with a government that's committed to excellence in health and wellness.

Our province has the written support of over 100 sport and active living organizations to create Alberta GO weekend, and it will be those organizations in partnership with the citizens of our great province who will carry this weekend forward and ensure its success.

The next step is passing Bill 203 so that we can establish this weekend officially for all of our residents to enjoy. I hope that all members will turn this little dream into a reality by simply voting in support of Bill 203, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act, as we move towards a healthier and more active Alberta together.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the bill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to having another opportunity in third to speak to Bill 203. I am already on the record as being supportive of any piece of legislation that encourages physical activity. I have also expressed my concern that this is such a low level. This is the equivalent of putting a small seed in the ground and then hoping that that seed will sprout and action will take place and we'll have a healthy plant. [interjection] Yes. Cataract Creek is a great place to get outdoors. Unfortunately, in April it's closed off because of the upcoming elk calving, so you can't access Cataract Creek as easily.

Now, in terms of encouraging physical activity, over a period of 17 years I've played rugby, first for the University of Calgary Stags, then for the Saracens, and also at times for the Saints. Mr. Speaker, I probably would have played rugby for more years, but my wife refused to pick me up at the Foothills emergency anymore. So at that point I switched to soccer, and I played that for about 10 more years. Throughout my 34-year teaching career I participated in and coached a number of sports: wrestling for a period of 25 years. So I value the idea of getting out and getting active.

Mr. Speaker, in my community of Calgary-Varsity I believe one of the reasons I was elected was that I had been a Blizzard soccer coach for years, both indoor and outdoor. I had refereed soccer. So I get it from a very personal point of view. While my achievements fall far below the crest of Everest, which the hon. member can attest to, I did it my way, and I enjoyed doing it. I would encourage other people to get outdoors.

But my concern, Mr. Speaker, is that simply saying, "The second week of April why don't you get outdoors?" is such a low level of encouragement. To my students, to my grandsons, who, fortunately, enjoy outdoor pursuits, I encourage that kind of activity, and I don't limit it to the second week of April. Whenever we get the chance, my wife and I, when we're looking after Rohan and Kiran, we take them out to playgrounds. We take them to a variety of outdoor activities. Their favourite, I would suggest, is going camping with their grandma and grandpa. One of the places besides the Cataract Creek, that I've previously mentioned, is the Three Sisters campground in Bow Valley. I think it's one of the grandsons' and my wife's and my favourite.

Again, simply talking about it without demonstrating it doesn't achieve the results that the hon. member is asking for. I want to encourage individuals to get out in the second week of April and every other time they get an opportunity to do so. I'm very aware, for example, of the limitations put on my personal fitness by being in this House at 1 a.m. during a two-week legislative period debating legislation. I would much rather be at home with my family at 1 in the morning, getting a good night's rest so that the following morning I could get out for my daily run, which was a large part of my teaching career. Mr. Speaker, talking about physical fitness as opposed to actually interacting in it brings me to the idea of talk being cheap.

3:10

This piece of legislation, which I support even though it's a minimal effort because there's no money or commitment to upgrade facilities attached to it, still has value. I do appreciate the hon. member bringing forward this get outdoors the second week of April, but I'm hoping that in future opportunities, if his draw turns out to produce further private member's bills, he'll talk about upgrading in parks; Cataract Creek, for example, where the trails have fallen into disrepair because of a lack of funding. I'm hoping that the hon. member will encourage members of the alpine club, for example, to follow in his footsteps carefully in the taking on of mountain climbing or ice climbing.

Mr. Speaker, just simply saying, "Psst; it's a good idea the second week of April to get out there and enjoy yourselves," isn't going to cut it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 203, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act. I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed worked very hard on this bill, and I commend him for his efforts. As we've all heard in the House, he's received a significant amount of positive feedback from our local communities and organizations, which is truly encouraging.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 is very straightforward. Its purpose is to set aside a weekend in April each year where Albertans are encouraged to get outdoors and participate in an array of activities. Of course, many Albertans are already very active in the great outdoors. However, I believe that having a particular weekend set aside as a get outdoors weekend is going to encourage even more Albertans to take advantage of the natural beauty that we have in this province and that, I might add, people come from all around the world to enjoy.

With this legislation individuals who do not often get outdoors may be more willing to check out the opportunities that Alberta's wilderness affords them. Of course, I think get outdoors weekend can be very beneficial from a health perspective also. We all know the benefits of exercise and activity, and this bill will encourage both.

I want to focus my comments today on the benefits of the bill and those benefits that it's going to bring to the tourism industry in the province. Generally speaking, we think of tourism as people coming to Alberta from other provinces and other countries. However, internal tourism is very important to us. When people stay in Alberta for their vacation rather than going to, say, British Columbia or the United States or elsewhere, we get the benefits in our economy. Mr. Speaker, I think that Alberta provides unmatched opportunities for those looking to explore the outdoors with an active lifestyle and interactive nature.

In particular, I believe that the spring is an excellent time for Albertans to take part in a number of outdoor activities. This, of course, is when a lot of things occur. I'm talking about traditional activities such as golf, as an example, or fishing, but there are also opportunities for far more exotic activities such as rappelling in the Rockies or whitewater rafting on many of our rivers. Perhaps the best part of these activities is that they don't cost nearly as much as a vacation abroad, as an example.

For many Albertans a camping trip is just as much fun as any other vacation or more and is, obviously, much more affordable, Mr. Speaker. Rather than spending a hundred dollars per meal at a resort in another country, as an example, a hundred dollars can feed a family for an entire weekend on a camping trip. This is especially important to many Albertans with young families, who have to tighten their belt to make everything work for them.

Mr. Speaker, the best part of internal tourism is that money that would otherwise be spent elsewhere is, instead, spent right here in Alberta. There are countless businesses in our province from hotels to retail outlets and so on that rely on a steady stream of tourists to thrive. With our Canadian dollar being as strong as it is, these businesses are seeing fewer tourists from some destinations. One weekend of people staying in Alberta can and will have a positive impact on our economy.

An Alberta GO weekend would also make Albertans more aware of the excellent opportunities that exist right here within our own province. Get outdoors weekend may encourage an Alberta family to take a fishing trip to Lakeland provincial park, as an example, by Lac La Biche or a hiking trip to the Kananaskis Country or even a camping trip in Dinosaur provincial park. As many of you here today, I'm sure, have visited many of our provincial parks, you'll know that this family may be inspired to experience and take future vacations within the province.

Of course, I'm not using just these three parks as an example. I'm sure that all members in this House have their own favourite vacation destination. There's no shortage of good vacation spots, with over 480 parks in the province and over half of those where people can actually go camping. This bill encourages Albertans to get out and check out some of these fantastic vacation opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, finally, I'd like to talk about the cost of this bill, which would be, in my opinion, very small. This would not be a weekend where employers would be obliged to give their workers a day off – that could adversely affect many businesses – nor would it be a weekend where the government would have to actively partake in activities. Instead, this is a weekend to simply encourage Albertans to take advantage of the various outdoor opportunities that already exist in this beautiful province of ours. Of course, we want to ensure that Albertans are aware of the great get outdoors weekend. However, the costs of doing this are far outweighed by the benefits that the legislation will bring to our province's tourism market and to our province's economy as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to again thank the hon. member for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing forward this legislation. We truly are lucky to have a province with an abundance of natural treasures. While many Albertans are aware of these treasures, I think that the get outdoors weekend will encourage even more Albertans to explore this amazing province. I know that this could open the eyes of many residents who may be unaware of the gems that actually exist in our own backyard. It's also going to benefit our economy and our local businesses as tourism dollars will be spent in Alberta rather than elsewhere. And it's going to allow some Albertans to save some money.

For all these reasons, I'm going to be supporting Bill 203, and I hope that other members do the same. I look forward to hearing the input from the rest of my colleagues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate this afternoon on private member's Bill 203, Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act. Bill 203 would designate the second weekend in April as Alberta get outdoors weekend. Certainly, we would increase physical activity, and it would improve the quality of life for all Albertans and reduce health costs in the health care system.

Now, I was looking, Mr. Speaker, at community programs and healthy living. It's a separate element in the Department of Health and Wellness budget, element 6. It is interesting to note that it was anticipated that we would spend well over $200 million on a number of programs to make our communities and the citizens that live in them healthier. However, $46 million of this amount went unexpended. Now, I don't know what reasons there are for this significant amount that went unexpended, but certainly the hon. member is absolutely correct that we should do everything we can to encourage individuals to get out and get active and get healthier.

I find it ironic that with this private member's bill, which has so enthusiastically to date been supported by hon. members in this House, we can fix a date, the second weekend in April, as the Alberta get outdoors weekend but that, on the other hand, with another piece of legislation we can't have a fixed election day. We've got this two-month window, and some people think it's a three-month window, a 90-day period, but the election has to be over, as I understand it – we can start March 1.

Mr. Denis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Relevance.

Mr. MacDonald: What? That's ridiculous. You didn't even give a citation, hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we are talking about the bill, so please get back to the subject.

3:20

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can understand why the hon. minister of the Ministry of Solicitor General is so sensitive about this issue, but it is quite ironic that we can have the second weekend in April devoted to this outdoor activity, the entire weekend, yet we have to have this window for a provincial election.

Now, certainly, we would have increased activity, as suggested by other hon. members. This activity would . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, this hon. gentleman is distracting me.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. If he wants to talk, he can go outside in the government lounge and chat, and he can even e-mail and text people if he wishes, but I would appreciate it if he could remain courteous whenever I am speaking on Bill 203.

Now, while it is certainly difficult to disagree with promoting the second weekend in April as Alberta get outdoors weekend, this bill does raise a number of questions that, of course, need to be debated in this Assembly, and I think it's actually relevant that we would be comparing this bill to a government bill that is giving us this wide-open window for a provincial election, depending upon the whim of the Premier's office and those who work in it.

First, regarding this private member's bill, the level of physical activity of Albertans is not sufficient and needs to be improved not only for the sake of Albertans themselves but – we were talking about it earlier – to reduce pressure and, hopefully, reduce costs in our public health care system. We need more than a special weekend to do that, particularly for those Albertans that would love to be more active outdoors but cannot because they are working multiple jobs or lack reliable child care or face other challenges.

Now, there have been other initiatives, private members' bills, that we have passed in this Assembly, and it's worth noting that I don't know where they are. I do know one that was to be a tax credit for tradesmen, that was introduced by the former hon. Member for Strathcona. That is resting somewhere – I don't know where; I'm totally unaware – but it can be used to reduce the cost of tools for, particularly, heavy-duty mechanics, other automobile mechanics. It was passed with great fanfare, and it was a private member's bill.

Another one is a tax credit. I don't know where the tax credit bill is that was proposed. I forget which hon. member on the government side did it, and it's hard to keep track of which bills that are debated and passed here become law and which ones sort of lay in legal limbo.

Mr. Rodney: Hugh, is it on physical activity?

Mr. MacDonald: Physical activity: that's the bill. Yes. Maybe we can get an update through the course of debate.

Mr. Rodney: We're waiting for proclamation.

Mr. MacDonald: We are waiting for proclamation on the physical activity bill. I hope, if we pass this bill, that it won't meet the same fate as the others that I referenced.

Now, this bill also reminds us of the importance of protecting and preserving our natural environment, places like Cataract Creek, very important places. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity spends a lot of time out around Cataract Creek, Mr. Speaker, and I understand from the hon. member that it is a very beautiful, unique place.

We can preserve our natural environment by investing in environmental protection and in our parks and protected areas. This province certainly has a lot more work to do. Efforts such as this bill do not harm, but by themselves they will certainly not solve the problem.

Now, some of the health risks associated with inactivity include premature death and disease from coronary heart disease, stroke, adult-onset diabetes, hypertension, depression, and even colon cancer.

The 2009 Alberta Survey on Physical Activity, conducted by the Alberta Centre for Active Living at the U of A, found that 41 per cent of Albertans have an inactive lifestyle – 41 per cent. That's unfortunate. I think we can do better, and if for no other reason than that, hon. members, please consider the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed's bill here. I think we could certainly do better.

The portion of adult Albertans who are obese increased from 16 per cent to 25 per cent between 1986 and 2004 according to a January 2010 study by Alberta Health Services. That's a significant increase, and this bill, hopefully, would reverse that trend by encouraging people to get active, get outdoors, have some fun, and see our province.

The same study also found that total costs attributable to obesity in Alberta in 2005 were approximately $1.27 billion, and that was in budget dollars from that budget year. This figure includes, as I understand it, both direct and indirect costs.

Certainly, we all know there are a number of social benefits that flow from being active in society. They include reducing our public health care costs, as I stated earlier, improved scholastic achievement, fewer cases of employee absenteeism, and a better quality of life for each and every citizen.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would remind hon. members to please, if you can, support this private member's Bill 203. If we can have a dedicated day or a weekend, a couple of days in April, as Alberta get outdoors weekend, I would also suggest that we can have one day set aside, maybe early in May, to conduct a provincial election and take the vote that way.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to be able to speak to Bill 203, Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act. I, like my colleagues who have spoken previously, am in support of this bill. Alberta get outdoors weekend can hopefully highlight some of those bad habits we've developed over a number of years, where we see more and more people who are not physically active and who are becoming unhealthy as a result.

We see obesity rates rising here in Alberta, yours truly included in that. We see other situations where young kids who growing up today are, due to eating habits, lack of physical activity, and the like, substantially reducing their abilities to participate later on in their lives in activities that would probably add a considerable amount of enjoyment to them. Of course, some of the health difficulties they pick up from eating habits and unhealthy living will no doubt impact our health care system. If you look at that and at the spirit of this legislation, Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act, we can couple that with some ideas, whether to get outdoors, get on a stationary bike, whatever it is, just do something and recognize that health is very important. It will not only add to your enjoyment of life, it will allow you to be more productive, and it will keep costs down in our society.

3:30

Not much to say other than that. It's a fairly simple bill. Much more will need to be done if this is to be successful. I think it's going to take some government initiatives on this front to really get a handle on this problem facing not only Alberta but North America and other places in the world due to our habits over the course of the last 50, 60 years, that are going to have to be reversed if we're going to live more productive, more healthy lives.

In any event, I'm in support of the bill and would encourage all members of the Assembly to support it as well. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to join debate on Bill 203, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act. To begin with, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing forward this important piece of legislation. The objective of Bill 203 is to set aside the second weekend in April to encourage Albertans to participate in outdoor activities. Bill 203 would encourage people of all ages to get outdoors and enjoy the vast amount of recreational activities that this great province has to offer. For example, families could organize walks, bike rides, kite flying, activities that give the whole family a chance to play, relax, and have fun, all while getting active. The provincial outdoor weekend would also provide an opportunity to educate our children on the health and lifestyle benefits of outdoor activities.

Mr. Speaker, it is important for every person to lead a healthy, active lifestyle, but it's especially important for all our children. Not only do children love to play, but getting regular outdoor activity as a child is a great way to help develop healthy habits that last a lifetime. Research shows that children who are more physically active and who demonstrate stronger physical literacy show greater perceptual skills and achieve higher grades in school. In addition, children who partake in healthy lifestyles benefit from higher self-esteem and self-confidence while developing greater leadership skills. These are just some of the reasons why it is so important for our government to promote a balanced lifestyle for all Alberta children.

Mr. Speaker, it's reported in the 2010 Active Healthy Kids Canada Report Card on Physical Activity for Children and Youth that only 12 per cent of Canadian kids meet the recommended guideline of at least 90 minutes a day of physical activity. It's also noted that obesity rates in children in this country have almost tripled in the last 25 years, and approximately 26 per cent of Canadian children ages two to 17 are overweight or obese. These statistics are concerning, and we should all be thinking about them. With these rising obesity rates and less time being spent on physical activity, it is more important than ever for us to teach our children about the benefits of active, healthy lifestyles. Physical activity can lead to a longer life expectancy, reduce stress, and improve a person's overall quality of life. Similarly, increased outdoor activity for children has the ability to reduce the costs and burdens on our health care system.

Prevention is our greatest tool to fight childhood obesity. Research continues to show a link between a physically active lifestyle and a healthy diet and chronic disease prevention. It is important to note that research shows that kids engage in more active play when they are outside as opposed to inside. When they play outside, they are free to be more active, and more opportunities for sports and physical activities exist, especially when compared to time spent indoors, which tends to offer more opportunities for things like watching TV and playing video games.

Canada's physical activity guide for children and youth recommends that parents limit the number of times their kids spend doing these kinds of activities. The guide suggests that children and teens be moderately active at least 90 minutes every single day and that screen time should be limited to no more than two hours to ensure that there's adequate time for active play.

Ultimately, there are many benefits that a child experiences when they play outdoors. For example, with lots of space and fresh air children are free to jump, run, swing, and climb. Outdoor play is a way to learn active skills and get better at throwing, catching, kicking, and jumping. When kids feel good about their abilities, they are more likely to be active.

Also, going outside helps children learn to interact with and understand the natural world, offers a chance for more social interaction with peers, and provides more opportunities for creativity and free play. Ultimately, the more time a child spends outdoors, the more likely a strong link between physical health and outdoor play will form, and I believe that the Alberta get outdoors weekend would be a great way to do that.

With that, I'd like to conclude my comments on Bill 203 and again would like to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-

Lougheed for his inspired idea. I support Bill 203 and think it's a step in the right direction for our province to take.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wish to speak?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the bill.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today to join the debate on Bill 203, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. Before I begin, I would like to commend the hon. member for his hard work and dedication in bringing forward legislation that would have such a positive impact on Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, this bill would establish a weekend each year where Albertans are encouraged to get outside and be active. This is certainly an idea worth exploring. The positive impact physical activity can have on both our mental and physical well-being has long been recognized, and given the increasing incidence of chronic diseases related to sedentary lifestyles, it is important to continue coming up with new and creative ways to improve the physical activity rate in Alberta.

Bill 203 provides a new way to promote physical activity that fits right in with all of the existing initiatives in Alberta but doesn't overlap with them. As such, I believe that an Alberta get outdoors weekend would make an excellent addition to Alberta's current active living programs. For this reason I stand today in support of Bill 203.

Mr. Speaker, in this day and age Albertans are busier than ever, and sometimes it is difficult to find time to be active. The existence of a wide range of sport and recreation activities that meet a variety of interests helps to draw Albertans towards taking part in regular physical activity. After all, when you're doing something you enjoy, physical activity is fun and not a chore. To this end, our government currently supports many organizations and programs that promote a diverse set of activities.

These initiatives range from government of Alberta policies and programs to nonprofit sport and recreation associations. One organization that comes to mind when talking about outdoor activity is the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation. This agency is doing such tremendous things in our province. Reporting to Alberta Tourism, Parks and Recreation, the foundation is one of the main vehicles through which our government promotes active living. They do everything from developing and maintaining outdoor facilities to funding a variety of sport and recreation programs.

The foundation also supports our government's health and wellness goals, guiding Albertans towards better health through physical activity and fitness. They do so by encouraging active lifestyles, promoting athletic excellence, and partnering with sports and recreation associations. Mr. Speaker, this organization makes a major contribution to the variety of physical activities available in Alberta. In fact, they currently fund over 100 provincial sport and recreation associations.

These associations offer a plethora of activities for Albertans to choose from in the pursuit of a healthier lifestyle, whether they wish to train for a biathlon, a triathlon, or just want to play some lawn bowling. Other activities these associations promote include badminton, curling, karate, rowing, yoga, and wheelchair sports among many others.

3:40

Every four years the foundation also funds and co-ordinates the Alberta Summer and Winter Games and the Alberta 55 Plus Games. These games are invaluable to our province, fostering a sense of accomplishment in our athletes and a sense of pride in the communities that host them.

Mr. Speaker, in this single foundation we find an impressive array of active living initiatives, and there are many more. This government has done a remarkable job of fostering a diverse range of active living and health initiatives in our province. Bill 203 would add to this impressive list of government initiatives designed to encourage Albertans to be more active. An Alberta get outdoors weekend would be a great way to promote physical activity on an annual basis, and it is hoped that even more will be achieved through this bill.

An Alberta get outdoors weekend would also help us to better utilize what we already have in place, acting as a gateway to guide Albertans toward existing initiatives. For example, Alberta Health Services could take advantage of the festivities on the Alberta get outdoors weekend to promote all the valuable resources available on their Healthy U website. This website contains everything from recommendations about physical activities for people of all ages to healthy recipes to details about upcoming educational events.

Another of our innovative websites, called Active for Life, could make use of the weekend in the same way. This innovative site promotes physical literacy in families in the hopes of helping our children establish lifelong healthy habits. In addition to these provincial family-oriented programs Alberta also has localized initiatives to support other groups. Bill 203 would provide an opportunity for local health providers to promote these initiatives as well.

In Lethbridge Alberta Health Services could promote its building healthy lifestyles program, which provides free counselling and classes about healthy eating and physical activity to individuals diagnosed with chronic conditions such as asthma, diabetes, and heart disease. In Edmonton the active anytime anywhere initiative could be promoted. This is a program that provides fitness opportunities and physical education sessions to low-income older adults in Edmonton to help them improve their vitality and quality of life.

The weekend would support the work of all these programs and associations as they continue to encourage Albertans to get outdoors and be active. In fact, many of the organizations I have spoken about today have already picked up on the potential of Bill 203. As we heard from the Member for Calgary-Lougheed last week and just a few minutes ago, to date over 100 communities and active living associations have signed a letter of support for this bill. These letters demonstrate that an Alberta get outdoors weekend would be a useful tool to raise Albertans' awareness about the importance of physical activity and about the options that exist to do so.

These organizations do much to support the health and wellness goals of our government. It is important that we also support them. After all, they help Albertans to stay active year-round and will continue to do so long after the Alberta get outdoors weekend will have ended each year.

With all this in mind, I will be voting in support of Bill 203, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act, today, and I encourage all of my colleagues to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology on the bill.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 203, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act. Before I begin, I would like to thank the hon.

Member for Calgary-Lougheed for his continued efforts in promoting physical activity. His commitment to fitness and health is an inspiration to us all.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of Bill 203 is to establish the second weekend in April every year as an opportunity for Albertans to get outdoors and enjoy the world around them. There are a number of reasons why the bill would be beneficial. On the one hand, it could promote an understanding of the natural world and encourage Albertans to take an active role in protecting our environment. On the other hand, encouraging outdoor activities promotes exploration and tourism within this wonderful province.

While I appreciate the educational and recreational value of getting outdoors, I support Bill 203 for a different reason, and that is that outdoor activity leads to healthier lifestyles. Mr. Speaker, we are facing a growing concern in health, not just in Alberta or in Canada or North America but in the entire developed world. Our sedentary lifestyles coupled with an overabundance of processed and fast foods have led to a situation where close to 50 per cent – I repeat, 50 per cent – of the population is overweight or obese. Today we are experiencing the negative effects associated with obesity. Heart disease and diabetes are on the rise, and the rates of high blood pressure, blood clotting, and strokes are growing at an alarming rate.

Mr. Speaker, the causes for this development are as numerous as are the solutions. At some levels it will always fall to personal responsibility and accountability. We as individuals are the gatekeepers of our own health, but that's not to say that there is no role for government. Rather, I believe that government should take an active role in informing people about the risks of negative health choices and should actively promote healthy activities.

One way to do this is by simply encouraging people to get outdoors. Mr. Speaker, Alberta is filled with world-class parks and recreation centres. We have mountains, beaches, forests, playing fields, and wonderful opportunities across this province. There are places that almost compel people to get out and explore, places like Writing-on-Stone, Waterton, Banff, and many other places.

Setting aside one weekend every year, a weekend where we actively encourage people to get outside, may begin to create an environment where people reflect and take accountability for their own personal health. If this weekend is marketed correctly and coupled with information on healthy lifestyles, it may begin to set a positive pattern in people's lives. After all, the hardest part of becoming fit is not losing 20 pounds, running a marathon, or reaching a particular body mass index but, rather, maintaining a constant level of health over the long term.

Mr. Speaker, in order to maintain good health, people need to develop a routine or lifestyle that includes physical activity every day. One weekend a year will not develop this routine, and to be fair, this is not the intent of the proposed bill. Instead, I believe that this bill could be a starting point on the road to good health. One weekend outside could spark a passion for the outdoors and perhaps even a lifetime commitment to fitness and personal health. The reality is that we need to help Albertans improve their health. Without action our hospitals, our long-term care centres, and health care system as a whole could become overloaded with people suffering from preventable diseases. It is not outside the scope of government to encourage activities that are beneficial to citizens or to ban activities that are harmful.

Now, some may argue that it is not our government's place to tell people how to live or what choices to make, and I agree with this. People will make their own choices when it comes to their health and the health of their families. They will make these choices with the best information available to them coupled with the freedom to choose their own lifestyles. After all, that's one of the benefits of living in a free society. But this does not mean that our government has no role to play. I would argue that our government's role is not to ban junk food or mandate physical activity but, rather, to encourage positive lifestyle changes, not with a carrot or a stick but with information and opportunities. Ladies and gentlemen, Albertans are smart, and they will make smart choices if they have the information at hand and the ability to act on it.

3:50

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the best part of Bill 203 is that it is so broad. It does not compel people to go hiking or jogging or kayaking. It simply asks Albertans to go outside. This could be as elaborate a production as organizing a ball tournament or a simple walk around the block. It could be as physically demanding as a 30-mile hike or a laid-back canoe ride on a quiet lake. As I see it, the effectiveness of this bill is not that it demands any specific action but, rather, that it creates opportunity for people to make their own choices.

I envision a scenario where an outdoor weekend is taken up by the community at large, a situation where people gather together to plan events that bring out people from all backgrounds, cultures, and fitness levels. This bill creates, for lack of a better word, an excuse to get out and get active. The best part is that being active outside doesn't require any money or government funding. It simply involves getting outdoors to enjoy this beautiful province.

Mr. Speaker, to sum up my comments today, I would again like to state that I applaud the intention and thought behind Bill 203. I believe that passing this bill will help promote Alberta tourism, encourage environmental consideration, and connect us with our natural heritage. Without a doubt the strongest reason I have for supporting this proposed legislation is that it has the potential to promote healthy lifestyle choices. In Alberta, as in the rest of the developed world, we are facing serious health challenges, and unless we step up as individuals and take responsibility for our own health, we will be exposing ourselves to health risks and will be passing an unhealthy future to our children. Bill 203 does not overstep the boundaries of government control or impose changes on free society. It simply aims to find a balance between encouraging what is good and allowing us to make our own choices.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to again thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for his well-thought-out bill. I will be standing in support of Bill 203 and urge all other members to join me.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members? Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, you have about two minutes.

Ms Pastoor: Two minutes. Oh, okay. Fine. That's great. That's all I was going to talk anyway.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to support Bill 203, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, and I certainly thank him for that. I also believe that one of the things that we can work on for our seniors is to encourage them to get out. Often they're afraid of weather or whatever, but if this is a weekend in April, it just might be a wonderful way to start off the spring.

We also have in this province an extensive outdoor infrastructure which includes a plethora of pathways, parks, and natural heritage sites, which make recreation activities that much more accessible. In Lethbridge we have 37 kilometres of paths that go through our entire city. They go up and down through the coulees, which I'm proud to say are really very well used. If established, an Alberta get outdoors weekend could be used as an educational tool to foster deep appreciation of Alberta's natural habitats and to raise awareness of the importance of conservation and preservation efforts.

One of the things that I would like to talk about, too, is the fact that we keep talking about the outdoors as if they're outside of cities. Most of our cities have amazing, amazing parks. If you're in Europe or in some of the other countries, their parks are utilized all the time. Families will go for picnics. They'll have ball games. They'll have soccer games. Some parks have soccer pitches. So it isn't just to get outside of the city; I think it's to get outside and be able to get the benefits of sunshine and fresh air.

I would have a caution, perhaps, from some of the things that have been coming through my office that this may put huge increased pressure on some of our campgrounds. My understanding at this point is that some of our campgrounds are already booked for the entire summer, and then other people can't use them at all. So I would use that as a caution.

For these many reasons I'll be supporting this bill today, and I urge my fellow hon. colleagues to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair notes that the bill has received 55 minutes of debate, so Standing Order 8(7)(a)(iii) now applies. I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close the debate.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you could please clarify: five minutes for my remarks?

The Deputy Speaker: Five minutes, maximum.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you.

It warms my heart, Mr. Speaker, to witness the informed and energetic discussion on this bill – that's only appropriate – and I sincerely want to thank everyone from every corner of the House who has participated, not only today but in the past two years, as a matter of fact.

Bill 203 is about improving the lives of Albertans, Mr. Speaker, just like Family Day and arts weekend, but in a completely new and different way. It's about recognizing that through active living and experiencing the outdoors, Albertans can create a more balanced and healthier lifestyle, especially after a long, cold winter. As members have suggested, considering the many letters of support, when we asked them only one time for that, it's proven that Albertans do agree with this as they value the benefits that come with such endeavors.

We all know that our lives are moving much faster, faster than ever, as people look after their families and their careers and their bills and more, but this comes with a cost often of ignoring the best care that we could possibly give ourselves. Stressful lifestyles, we see, lead to a myriad of health problems. To counteract some of these effects, it's incumbent upon us to support initiatives that encourage Albertans to engage in activities that have a positive impact on their health.

Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge very readily that Bill 203 is not at all the final answer to ensure that Albertans become more active and healthy, but it will be a huge, important kick-start to the solution, which complements other government initiatives that are related to increasing active living. Bill 203 will not only encourage people to get outside and be more physically active but also provides the perfect opportunity for all sport and recreation and other organizations in our province to work together – they do it, not us – to encourage Albertans individually to be active while promoting tourism and encouraging people to explore Alberta's pristine natural environment.

During Committee of the Whole I started to read just the names of some of the groups – and I'll continue with the time I have – that have written us wonderful letters of support, including Alberta Recreation and Parks Association, KidSport, Alberta Trailnet, University of Alberta Faculty of Physical Education and Recreation, Alberta Association of Recreation Facility Personnel, Alberta Conservation Association, AOHVA, Alberta Equestrian Federation, Alberta Amateur Baseball Council, Alberta Sailing, Alberta Soccer, Alberta Bobsleigh. And there are more: ecotourism and outdoor leadership program, Alberta Centre for Active Living, Yoga Association of Alberta, town of Castor and its recreation department, village of Ferintosh, Point Alison summer village, county of Newell, Alberta Lacrosse, village of Coutts, AVA president, Dr. Monika Schloder, Marco Gervais, and at least one of our former MLAs, Bill Purdy.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I once again want to sincerely thank every member, all of these folks and more who've mailed in their support in the past two years, and everyone who's spoken on Bill 203 in first reading, second reading, Committee of the Whole, or third reading, this year or last. I humbly request all members here to do the one last thing that we need to do to make this official, and that's simply to vote yes as you call for the vote.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a third time]

4:00      Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 204
Justice System Monitoring Act

[Debate adjourned November 21: Mr. Boutilier speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: We have a total of 46 minutes left of debate on this bill. Hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, you have five minutes left.

Mr. Boutilier: Five minutes left? Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, indeed, it is a pleasure for me to rise and speak through you to members of the House and to all Albertans relative to this important private member's bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who served in the ministry of children's services and also as Solicitor General, clearly has an outstanding record when it comes to initiatives such as this. Her ultimate goal is to streamline the system that has been in place and that requires some major help.

One often wonders when things go in front of the justice system: does the justice system actually move quickly? Clearly, in some cases it does. In this particular case and with the motivation for this private member's bill and from her vast amount of experience as Solicitor General, clearly, contrary to comments made on the other side relative to the system – and I quote – that there have been examples of the system as very efficient, we take an attitude that not only can we do things well, but we can do things well and then some.

I frame my comments this afternoon around those powerful three words “and then some.” The enemy of excellent is just good old average. What I'm seeing more and more on the opposite side, on the government side – in the Solicitor General, in what's going on within Justice – is just average. We want more than average because Albertans are more than average citizens. They are truly remarkable, and I want to compliment Albertans based on the input that has been provided to the Wildrose caucus and to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and this member, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, from the oil sands capital of the world, I'm also proud to say.

In the important Keeping Communities Safe report and recommendations, that I'm holding up for everyone to look at, there are numerous examples where they say what needs to be done and what needs to be done more of. What needs to be done, clearly, is a greater streamlining of the existing system because this system does not provide the expediency that is required in our justice system.

I might also say that there have been examples by different ministers on that side who have indicated that our system is working very efficiently. Well, I'm afraid to say and to indicate to the Solicitor General and to different ministers involved in highways that it is far from perfect, and that's why I would be looking for their support for the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and her initiative.

For instance, what needs to be done? I quote from the Keeping Communities Safe report and recommendations that have not been acted on.

11. Track and report on key indicators of the results of the criminal justice system in Alberta (e.g. use of diversion and its outcomes, delays in court proceedings, bail application results, lengths of sentences, breaches of court orders and the outcomes, guilty pleas to lesser charges, etc.)

Consistent with recommendation 10, steps should be taken [now].

That is the purpose of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and the initiatives she has taken. Steps need to be taken now. This, by the way, is from a government recommendation of indicators of the effectiveness of the criminal justice system in Alberta, particularly in areas where Albertans have serious concerns.

Where do Albertans have serious concerns? They have very serious concerns in delays in the process pertaining to sentences and bail. “Trends in these key indicators should be tracked and the results should be provided to the Minister of Justice.”

Contrary to the Minister of Justice indicating that things are running along tickety-boo, the fact is that they are not. The sooner the awareness that has been created by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and the Wildrose caucus – I am hopeful that members from all sides will support this private member's bill because I believe that Bill 204 is an important bill in terms of enhancing and helping and then some, moving away from average and moving towards excellent. I think that's where Albertans want to be as well. “Legislation should be [clearly] implemented requiring annual reports on a number of indicators including” – for instance, you asked – “the time it takes from when a charge has been laid to the eventual outcome or court decision.”

The Deputy Speaker: The next hon. member on my list, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and join the debate on Bill 204, the Justice System Monitoring Act. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for providing us the opportunity to showcase all the great work being done to improve timely access to justice in Alberta. I'd also like to thank the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for his comments on the bill.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 requires that Alberta Justice track various measures of efficiency in relation to our criminal justice system and present these statistics to the public annually. Many of these statistics relate to the time that it takes for an accused individual to make his or her way through Alberta's criminal court system. This, in turn, is thought to reveal ways in which the system and access to it can be improved.

Mr. Speaker, providing Albertans with timely access to justice has always been one of this government's top priorities. In fact, the Ministry of Justice is guided by the vision of ensuring that Alberta leads the most innovative and accessible justice system in Canada. To this end, there are several initiatives already under way that aim to improve the efficiency of our system.

The court case management program, for example, was implemented to help manage criminal cases before provincial courts in Edmonton and Calgary in a more effective and efficient manner. One of the goals in this program is to ensure that Provincial Court judges and Crown prosecutors only appear in court to address the most important events such as contested bail hearings, contested motions, trials, preliminary hearings, and sentencing hearings. The program aims to delegate other court appearances of a more administrative nature such as uncontested remands or adjournments to paralegals, who would appear before justices who have the appropriate jurisdiction. The goal of this initiative is to free up time in the courts for additional cases and will ensure that all resources at our disposal are used efficiently.

In addition to these measures, the court case management program also aims to make the scheduling of trials more efficient. It also recognizes the need for more specialized courts in areas such as domestic violence and youth, much like the specialized drug court already established in our province, as a way to further streamline operations.

All of these initiatives accomplish what Bill 204 sets out to do by working to ensure that court time is used in the most efficient and effective way possible in order to ensure timely delivery of justice in Alberta. If we are already addressing potential inefficiencies, I fail to see what this legislation would do to enhance current efforts.

Another measure that has been undertaken is the Crown file ownership system. This system also aims to promote proper case management and the efficient use of Crown prosecutors' time by ensuring, wherever possible, that the responsibility for a given file is vested in only one prosecutor, who can see its progress through from start to finish. This will cut down on the amount of time each case takes to navigate through the system and to ensure that it will always be attached to a specific prosecutor, who is intimately familiar with the details of the case, thus speeding up the process.

Yet another measure undertaken by Alberta Justice is the justice innovation and modernization of services initiative, or JIMS as it's called. The goal of JIMS is to streamline the ministry's business process in order to expand its ability to provide new and innovative programs that are designed to improve access to justice in Alberta and ultimately strengthen our justice system. The multiphase initiative, which began in 2008, will eliminate wasted time by implementing new technologies that will allow the ministry to successfully address existing pressures.

Mr. Speaker, JIMS is yet another example of how Alberta Justice is working to address the issues brought forward by Bill 204. Currently we are in the JIMS readiness project phase of the initiative, which is committed to finding ways to improve the ministry's delivery of its core business. For example, in 2008 Alberta Justice began a detailed examination of its business processes, which provides the baseline information for harmonizing processes across the province. This examination also provides opportunities to optimize processes that are not effective and allows gaps in areas of overlap to be identified and corrected. In all, more than 600 opportunities for improvement were identified, and a strategy was subsequently developed that will direct all future JIMS activities.

4:10

Mr. Speaker, JIMS and other initiatives that I have discussed clearly show that this government is committed to streamlining criminal justice processes and improving the overall justice system in our province. Alberta Justice has done an incredible job of identifying areas for improvement, from case management to trial scheduling to the need for new technologies. Moreover, the ministry's annual report, which is available to the public on the web, provides statistical information and performance indicators that allow us as Albertans to assess the overall functioning of Alberta's criminal justice system.

It's worth noting that in both the time to case disposition and the median elapsed time from first to last appearance indicators for provincial criminal court, Alberta is below the national average. In fact, in recent years no cases in Alberta have been dismissed because the lead time to trial was too long. Further, to the many initiatives currently under way, this government has added more judges, prosecutors, and courtroom staff in an effort to address pressures on the justice system.

Mr. Speaker, with all of the measures that have been implemented since the last provincial election, I fail to see how critics could suggest that we aren't doing enough to improve the performance of the system. I also fail to see the value in collecting some of the data this bill would require. Compiling many of these statistics would no doubt require additional resources, resources that could be better spent working towards implementing the changes prescribed by the JIMS initiative or the court case management program. Furthermore, there are a wide variety of factors that could contribute to the delay of a trial, and not all of these factors relate to the inefficiency in the court system. It would be difficult to extrapolate which delays were caused by these external factors, and as a result statistics relating to trial delays may not be representative of the actual situation within the system.

Put simply, Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Justice and Attorney General along with Alberta Justice are already addressing many of the concerns raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. They're working hard to improve court case management, to render trial scheduling more efficient, and to implement new technologies that will save both time and money.

I believe that the proposed legislation is unnecessary given the many initiatives currently under way and that it could also serve to undermine current efforts. Furthermore, our time could be much better spent working towards increasing timely access to justice for all Albertans. For these reasons I'll not be standing in support of Bill 204, and I urge my hon. colleagues in the Legislature to do the same.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my comments and look forward to other members standing up and debating this issue.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you wish to join the debate?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to speak on the Justice System Monitoring Act, Bill 204, as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Certainly, I was listening to the comments from hon. members. I know that a couple years ago we started our own statistics Alberta, which I believe was in the old employment and immigration ministry. I don't know whether it's in human resources or where it is these days, but I certainly will look.

The information that this act is suggesting we have, detailed statistical reporting on a wide range of matters that affect the time it takes for a criminal matter to proceed through the court system, I think is noteworthy. It's certainly interesting. Whenever I looked at those statistics previously, I didn't see anything directly related to court times. Now, I may have missed it. I'm not suggesting it's not there, but I certainly did not see it. If it is not collected and not presented through – I don't want to say statistics Alberta because this government could get inflated ideas about that, so I will say the office of statistics instead.

Certainly, to collect accurate statistics to measure the performance of the criminal justice system, to disseminate the information, and require consideration in the Legislative Assembly is noteworthy. Bill 22, which is a government bill going through the Assembly at the moment, certainly is a rather large, comprehensive consolidation of a number of acts, and we are essentially in parts of it trying to measure at least the performance of the criminal justice system.

This act, as presented, would provide data on various factors that are likely to extend the time between an accused's first and last court appearances. Reporting generally results in improved performance on the matters reported upon. I certainly hope that is true. It is agreed by everyone on all sides of the House that court delays are a very, very important issue. According to the most recent Statistics Canada data – and it's up to four years old – Alberta has the second-highest mean elapsed time to complete a case in adult criminal court at 270 days. Quebec is the highest at 294 days. Now, the model for a program, in my view, to address court delays is Ontario's justice on target, or JOT, program, which requires the dedication of resources but does not require reporting at the level of detail that the hon. member is proposing.

Alberta Justice has a performance measure on this matter. If I had my way, Mr. Speaker, I think I would ban performance measures by any department in this government. I think they're a complete and utter waste of time and valuable resources. If it's a bad performance measure, it's usually taken out or it's changed so that it doesn't embarrass the government. These performance measures, of course, allow hon. members across the way to stand up and brag about how wonderful things are, but in reality those performance measures are created to suggest that things are wonderful. I would imagine that we'd save considerable money and free up a lot of resources within the civil service for more practical matters if this idea of performance measures was completely forgotten about. Of course, we all know the most important, famous performance measure that was not used was the one on royalty collection, and that, to say the least, is disappointing.

There certainly is a need for information or analysis, and it is generally agreed that justice should be administered in a timely manner. As the previous speakers have suggested, justice delayed is justice denied. So timely court proceedings are important from a range of perspectives: administration of justice, public safety, rights of the accused, rights of victims, and efficiency.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we look at some of the significant delays in Alberta – Alberta's crime rate is higher than the national average, so the criminal court system certainly deserves attention. As I said earlier, Alberta has the second-highest mean elapsed time from first to last court appearance, a factor considered significant by the Supreme Court in the past. Several recent cases in provincial court have resulted in stays as a consequence of delay. Statistical data allows for analysis of the system.

4:20

In the time that I have, I don't think we're going to go through this sectional analysis in detail, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to certainly encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to consider this legislation. I think it would be an improvement, and I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing this forward.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today and join my colleagues in second reading debate of Bill 204.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, have you have spoken on this bill?

Mrs. Sarich: No, I have not, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: According to our record here you have spoken.

Mrs. Sarich: I have? I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] So am I to proceed?

The Deputy Speaker: No. Please, we only speak once.

Mrs. Sarich: Okay. Thank you for that clarification. My mistake.

The Deputy Speaker: I shall now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to join the debate on Bill 204, the Justice System Monitoring Act. I would first like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing forth this legislation.

As has already been discussed, this bill proposes that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General prepare a statistical report on the justice system at the end of each calendar year. This report would have to include eight metrics that describe certain data about our justice system. These metrics would include the length of time from the laying of a charge until the final judicial determination of a matter and the approximate cost of delays in the commencement of trials, among others. While collecting detailed statistics about the justice system may help us improve the efficiency of trials, I think that we should further consult lawyers, judges, and other professionals, both inside and outside of the department, before we can make an adequate decision about the collection of statistics in our justice system.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, our justice system is based on the principles of fairness and objectivity. We go to considerable lengths to ensure that these principles are upheld. Before we make changes to our justice system, it is imperative that we ensure that the principles of fairness and objectivity are not being compromised. There are rules as to how trials work, an exact process which they must follow. Lawyers in the department know these details, and we should consult with them on this legislation in order to carefully select which statistics ought to be tracked and published. Judges and other legal professionals throughout our province also know these details, and they would also be able to provide some insight to help us understand what data is important.

While collecting all of this data about the system may seem like a great idea, we have to be worried about any unintended consequences that this legislation may have. Legal professionals will best be able to inform us of all these unintended consequences. My point here, Mr. Speaker, is not that it's a bad idea to keep track of and publish certain statistics. My point is that the judges and lawyers who know the justice system inside out should be consulted before we decide to pass legislation that compels the Ministry of Justice to produce an annual report with detailed statistics.

Of course, this is not to say that we should not keep track of any statistics in our system. Indeed, there are certain statistics that are published in the Ministry of Justice annual report which track the performance of the system in certain ways, such as the median number of days it takes to process a case in court from the first to the last appearance. Additionally, many indicators about the justice system in various provinces across the country are already collected by the Canadian Centre for Justice Statistics and the University of Regina.

Before we go ahead and publish the metrics that are required by Bill 204, we need to be especially careful about the consequences of publishing such data. While I understand the desire to increase the efficiency of the system, I believe that the publication of certain statistics could have undesirable consequences if we do not carefully select which statistics ought to be tracked and published. The best way we can select the relevant statistics is to work closely with the lawyers, judges, and other staff who know more about trials than we do and who know more about which statistics could potentially be problematic.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also concerned that some of the statistics that Bill 204 would force the Minister of Justice to track and publish are overly vague. For example, the bill proposes that the report would have to include statistics on the approximate cost of delays in the commencement of trials, including costs of the peace officers and prosecutorial staff and approximate costs to witnesses, victims, and jurors. I'm not doubting that these statistics would provide valuable and insightful information if available. However, I'm rather skeptical about the feasibility of collecting objective data on the cost of delays to witnesses, victims, and jurors. It seems to me that it would be rather difficult to estimate the tangible cost of delays to witnesses, victims, and jurors.

Theoretically, Mr. Speaker, to estimate the cost of such delays, we would need to know the salaries or wages of the jurors in order to calculate the opportunity cost of serving as a juror. We would also need to put a price on the cost of delays to victims, which cannot be adequately done because the cost of such delays are hard to define and measure.

Of course, the legislation asks for approximate costs for these parties, but since there's no set methodology to calculate such costs, I think that the value of such statistics would end up varying greatly depending on the methodology used, thereby rendering such statistics extraneous. Further, the legislation asks for the precise cost of delays as it relates to prosecutorial staff and peace officers, which would be time consuming to calculate, thereby increasing bureaucracy in the Justice department. So I think that this legislation is overreaching in terms of terms of the statistics it requires to be tracked and published, especially since some of these costs are not tangible. It is, of course, of the utmost importance that the trials are completed in an efficient manner as victims of crime shouldn't have their suffering prolonged by unnecessary delays in trials. Further, unnecessary delays mean that the criminals aren't brought to justice in a timely manner.

4:30

So while I thank the hon. member for bringing forth this legislation, which seeks to increase the efficiency of our justice system, I think we ought to tread carefully before we publish and track some of these statistics. There may be some unintended consequences of including some of the statistics in the report that this legislation requires to be published, and these consequences could ultimately serve to decrease the efficiency of the justice system. Prosecutors, judges, and other stakeholders ought to be consulted before we can responsibly track and publish the statistics Bill 204 requires.

For these reasons, I will not be supporting this bill, and I encourage all other Members of this Legislative Assembly to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and discuss Bill 204, the Justice System Monitoring Act, which is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. The objective of this bill is to track and present various measures of efficiency in relation to the criminal justice system on an annual basis. The proposed legislation's goal is to increase access to and enhance public confidence in the administration of justice.

We can all agree that timely prosecution contributes to fair and effective processing of criminal matters. This helps foster public confidence in the integrity and effectiveness of the criminal justice system. Public confidence can sometimes be gained by publishing statistical figures, so I do understand the desire to develop a more robust monitoring system, but we need to examine if these stats will inspire public confidence, whether Albertans will believe the system is indeed fair and will deliver for our law-abiding citizens.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to recognize that the Ministry of Justice already keeps track of many of these statistics. However, not every statistic can be monitored due to factors outside the sphere of influence of the Minister of Justice. These factors include the complexity of crimes, changes to laws, procedure changes by legislation, involvement and availability of witnesses, unrepresented mentally ill accused persons as well as defence of appeals and retrials. Nonetheless, with the implementation of the resolution options policy framework we are working on mitigating these factors.

Again, I'd like to state that statistics are important, but we need to remember that our primary goal is to improve the fairness and effectiveness of our justice system. The Court of Queen's Bench, the Provincial Court, and Alberta Justice are all working together to improve the processes available to meet the needs of those who come before the courts.

Mr. Speaker, there are obvious concerns that arise when I think about what this proposed legislation would mean for Alberta; for example, additional resources needed to compile what would be required by Bill 204. I'm also concerned that this extensive data retrieval could be a costly and time-consuming procedure. So we need to ask ourselves: who would have an interest in collecting this information, and how will it help achieve our current goals and initiatives in the criminal court system?

Mr. Speaker, our government is doing all it can to create a more efficient criminal justice system. The ministry is trying to implement the resolution options policy framework in order to increase access to justice and to improve confidence in the administration of justice. All efforts are being made to work collaboratively with other divisions within the ministry: the judiciary, court field operations, the Bar, the rules committees, justice sector partners, other ministries, and other jurisdictions.

We've put measures in place to ensure that justice is administered in a sequential, orderly, and technology-intensive series of well-defined processes. For example, the JIMS initiative will improve the efficiency with which the ministry delivers justice services and will introduce new technical systems to automate processes and support the work of the ministry. Furthermore, it focuses on eliminating wasted time and implementing modern technical systems that will improve efficiency and address new opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that when the objectives of our current initiatives are obtained, the end result will be exactly what the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is trying to achieve by the introduction of this proposed legislation, that being a more effective and efficient criminal justice court system. The only difference is the process and how we get there.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's intentions with this bill. However, I do not see a need for this legislation due to the fact that Alberta is already making sufficient progress in managing our criminal court system. Bill 204, in my opinion, is therefore unnecessary, and it will only serve to impede the progress we have been making to this point. Furthermore, this bill would mean taking away elements from our already constrained resources that could be wisely invested in projects where they are really needed.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I do not support Bill 204, and I urge other members to give it similar consideration. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My comment . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you already spoke before.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I realize. I'm speaking to the process, not to the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: You already spoke before, according to the record.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Well, the reason for my standing is not to debate the bill. When the question is called, I would like to have the bell recess reduced to a minute rather than 10.

The Deputy Speaker: So you have a motion for the division bell if it occurs. We need unanimous consent for that motion.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Mr. Chase: That's unfortunate.

The Deputy Speaker: We will carry on with the bill. We have five minutes for closing. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I have had I guess what I'm going to say is fun listening to some of the debate that I've heard from the members opposite. I guess what I would like to do, first of all, is thank my colleagues for taking the time to consider and debate Bill 204. I think what's been interesting is that members are not obliged to speak to a bill, and I appreciate those who have stood up and spoken. I appreciate their efforts.

Mr. Speaker, victims of crime and their journey for justice have been a passion of mine, and we've heard that on the floor. I've long advocated for those who are abused and, everyone knows, especially children. I've seen delays in the court system and the emotional turmoil it causes. Absolutely it breaks my heart, and I'm sure it breaks many people's hearts.

Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you that I worked hard on the safe communities task force, and I have to tell you that I was and I still am proud to have presented it to the Alberta government and, more importantly – and this is important – to the people of Alberta. My pride in the safe communities task force work is matched only by my disappointment that I have in the government. I've listened patiently to the speakers, and the message from the government seems to be: don't pass this bill; trust us instead. I have to tell you that that trust has been broken.

4:40

The safe communities report urged immediate action to make Alberta safer, yet years later, just like those in the court system and in the health care system, we're waiting for the government to finish a job that they had promised they would take care of and that they would do. The report recommended streamlining the justice process and tracking key indicators. We've seen neither from this government.

There is no better time to pass Bill 204. The Premier had the opportunity to make these proposed changes when she was Justice minister. Throughout her leadership campaign she told Albertans how important the program was. Now it's time for the Premier to take care of her unfinished business. Her time, quite frankly, is up.

The government claims they're making good progress on the justice system. Just a few days ago the Minister of Transportation said that court cases were taking up to five years to be settled. I urge them to be honest with the people of Alberta. Where are the bottlenecks? Why is it taking so long? Why the secrecy? This seems like the way this government operates on health care and education and other important files. Decisions get made behind closed doors, and the people of Alberta never seem to get the truth.

The Minister of Justice has offered some reasons why this bill just can't work. The reasons were not nearly good enough, Mr. Speaker. He stated that it's too onerous to file a report once a year and then have to respond to the legislative committee follow-up to that report as well. An annual report is not a lot to ask for an important issue.

The thing about annual reports is that the first one can sometimes take quite a bit of work, but updating it the following years gets pretty easy. I think the House should be somewhat offended that the minister thinks it's not worth the time to respond once a year to questions that the committee might have on these different subjects.

He also stated that the department is already developing a robust internal tracking system. Well, you know what? That's great. It should make updating these measures in Bill 204 that much easier. If his tracking system isn't tracking these same measures, then I wonder just exactly what he's tracking. Internal systems are important, but Albertans deserve to know some of the highlights, and only a bill like this would make sure that that happens. The thing about internal reports is that the government shares only the good news with the public.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, this bill doesn't ask a lot from the government. It brings into law what they've already promised they would do anyhow. But they've had their time to get it done, and now they need the full force of the law to make sure that it gets finished. Albertans can't wait any longer. Every wasted day is a tragedy. It's time for this Premier and this minister and this government to stand up and keep the promises that they've already made.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member who sponsored the bill has closed the debate. The chair shall now call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:44 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Anderson	Forsyth	MacDonald
Boutilier	Hehr	Taylor
Chase	Hinman

Against the motion:

Allred	Griffiths	Lindsay
Amery	Hancock	Marz
Benito	Hayden	Pastoor
Brown	Horne	Prins
Campbell	Jablonski	Sarich
Danyluk	Klimchuk	Tarchuk
Denis	Knight	Vandermeer
Drysdale	Leskiw	Xiao
Fawcett

Totals:	For – 8	Against – 25
---------	---------	--------------

[Motion for second reading of Bill 204 lost]

Bill 205 Municipal Government (Delayed Construction) Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hereby move second reading of Bill 205, the Municipal Government (Delayed Construction) Amendment Act, 2011.

We have very few minutes to talk about this today, and I hope that I'll be able to begin debate today and that we'll see this continue next Monday, when we can delve deeper into this bill. I'll quickly thank the hon. members of this Assembly from all parties for the interest they've shown in this bill, for their feedback, their questions, and their comments so far. Thank you for the opportunity to debate this bill in second reading, and thank you in advance for what I anticipate will be your participation in a week's time.

[The Speaker in the chair]

This is a simple and straightforward bill that seeks to serve Albertans and the best interests of the communities in which we all live by identifying a problem and providing a solution. The bill seeks to amend the Municipal Government Act to allow municipalities to better regulate construction within their own boundaries and to ensure that projects are not significantly stalled, suspended, or delayed for unreasonable lengths of time. This legislation will give municipalities clear authority to intervene when construction sites become significantly stalled, suspended, or delayed. In these cases, municipalities should hold the authority to require the owner of a delayed project to improve the appearance of a site within a specified time frame.

This bill comes as a response to a number of stalled, suspended, and delayed developments throughout the province, and it is my hope that this bill will allow municipalities to avoid similar situations in the future. Delayed sites hamper the vitality of a community and make the community less desirable for businesses, residents, and as a destination for visitors. This bill, if approved, would allow municipalities to protect the economic and societal interests of communities existing near to such construction sites. Specific examples of past stalled development sites which have significantly hampered the vitality and growth of their surrounding communities would include the Atrium Building in downtown Lethbridge and the Mission pit in downtown Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, one can make the argument that the Municipal Government Act already provides municipalities with the authority that they need, and I'm sure some from the Ministry of Municipal Affairs would like to make that argument, but I would point out that the genesis for this bill was a request by the city to myself to make a change because they felt they did not have . . .

The Speaker: I hate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, but the time limit for consideration of this item has now expired for today.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Adverse Possession

507. Mr. Allred moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation abolishing the common-law doctrine of adverse possession in Alberta and all statutory references to adverse possession in Alberta legislation.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise in the Assembly today to introduce private member's Motion 507. The first thing I should do is make it clear to all members exactly what adverse possession is. Adverse possession is commonly known as squatter rights. To give you a very current example, the Occupy Edmonton group was squatting on private lands in downtown Edmonton until I believe last week, when they got evicted. If they had continued to squat on those lands continuously for 10 years, they would have had the right to go to court and claim those lands as their own. Now, we know that that occupation has now been discontinued and would never have lasted for a 10-year period, but that is what adverse possession is all about.

I recall from the 1970s a situation in the west end. Adjacent to an office where I worked there was an old fellow that lived in a shack at the rear of an industrial property who, I can only assume, was squatting. I know he was there for at least five years, but I don't know if his possession ever resulted in an adverse claim.

A more common example, an example that happens on an occasional basis, is where a landowner, either urban or rural, places their fence on a neighbour's property, likely with no ill intent. After a period of 10 years they have the right to claim that land as their own. I will speak to an example of this in a moment.

Adverse possession is part of the law of limitations, the law that places limits on when you can commence an action in court. How did this situation come into play in Alberta? Well, Mr. Speaker, a little history is in order.

Adverse possession is part of the common law in England. In 1870, when Canada purchased Rupert's Land to create the North-West Territories, the Dominion of Canada adopted the laws of England as they existed in 1870. I'm going to paraphrase a section of that law: insofar as any such act is, for any reason, inapplicable to the territories and insofar as the same are applicable to the territories and have not been or may not hereafter be affected by any act of any law of the Parliament of Canada.

In my opinion, the foregoing exceptions stated in the 1886 North-West Territories Act amendment should have barred adverse possession from being introduced in the territories and eventually Alberta. The land tenure system is clearly different in the United Kingdom than in the North-West Territories and always has been.

English real property law is based on a system of settlement before survey, where lands occupied during the enclosure movement were defined by fences, hedges, stone walls, and ditches. This is known as a general boundary system. Ownership was based on possession rather than on grant.

In western Canada, on the other hand, the Dominion Lands Act set out a system of boundary surveys whereby the land was laid out in sections and townships prior to land grants being given out for settlement by the Crown to homesteaders based on an accurate description relative to fixed boundaries.

The system of land ownership was also vastly different. In the U.K. land ownership was based on a deed system, where an owner had to prove his ownership based on the deeds of his predecessors and title, whereas under our Torrens system a title was issued and guaranteed by the government.

Unfortunately, when the early court cases were argued in Alberta in 1911, the arguments put forward were only whether limitations law, upon which adverse possession is based, could coexist with a Torrens system of guaranteed title. The court decision was based on a case from British Honduras which had gone to the Privy Council and was decided in favour of adverse possession being allowed in Alberta despite our adoption of the Torrens system of guaranteed title.

The issue of our land tenure system being vastly different from that of the U.K. was not argued. If this issue had been argued, I would expect that the 1911 court decision may have been different, but that was not the case, and the precedent was set.

Over the years our legislation has been amended, firstly in 1921 to allow a court order upholding an adverse claim to be registered in the land titles office and directing the registrar to cancel the title of a registered owner and issue title to the adverse possessor. Subsequent to a 1948 decision of the courts whereby a landowner was unsuccessful in making an adverse claim and lost possession of buildings which had been built by mistake on a neighbour's land, an amendment was passed which allowed a person who had built on the wrong property through mistake of title to claim the lands occupied subject to payment of compensation as determined by the courts. This, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, is a very practical remedy to some of the most common encroachment claims and has served Albertans well over the past 60 years. There is no intention in my motion to modify this procedure.

In 1960 there was a case in Calgary where an adjacent landowner had used some city-owned lots for a garden for the required period of 10 years and was successful in obtaining title to the lands through an adverse claim. The law was subsequently amended to prohibit adverse possession against lands owned by a municipality. Similarly, in 1993 there were two cases against lands owned by irrigation districts. These cases resulted in an amendment to the Irrigation Districts Act which barred adverse possession against an irrigation district.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the Legislature has been responsive to remedies that create equity in our system of real property law. However, the Legislature in the 1980s appears to have overlooked the clear direction of the court in the leading Alberta Court of Appeal case of Lutz versus Kawa. This was a case of a fenceline dispute in the city of Edmonton where a neighbour had claimed a wedge of land tapering from an inch at the front of the lot to 16 inches at the rear. Justice Laycraft made it very clear that where the law was unfair and created hardship and disputes between neighbours, it was only in the power of the court to uphold the law, and it was up to the Legislature to take whatever action is necessary to enact the remedies. I quote from that decision.

This case is one of special importance far beyond the value of the strip of land in dispute. A decision in favour of the plaintiff would seriously cloud the security of boundaries assumed to be inviolable under registered plans of survey or descriptions under the Torrens system. We can all take cognizance of the fact that there are countless instances in this province where fences have been erected, by eye on what was intended to be the true boundary line between adjoining properties without the assistance of a qualified surveyor, as there are also countless instances where there are no fences at all to mark the boundaries of large cultivated areas. Deviation from the true line in such cases, as in the case at bar, is almost inevitable . . . Such a result was never contemplated by statutes of limitations.

The remedy, if one is thought necessary, must also come from the Legislature.

Justice Laycraft was very much to the point in his decision. This decision may have been one of the reasons that led to the Institute of Law Research and Reform conducting a comprehensive review of limitations law in Alberta. In their 1996 Report No. 4 the institute did a very detailed analysis of the application of adverse possession in Alberta under four heads. They completely debunked the four objectives of adverse possession and thus the need to retain the doctrine in our system of land ownership in Alberta.

Report No. 4 led to considerable discussion in Alberta and across Canada about limitations and the need to standardize limitation periods across jurisdictions. There is little doubt that this led to the introduction of private member's Bill 205 by Denis Herard, MLA, in 1996, which followed the recommendations of the institute regarding limitation periods. The bill was passed and subsequently proclaimed in 1999. For one reason or another Bill 205 was silent on the issue of adverse possession, and it was assumed by many that Bill 205 did away with adverse possession in Alberta. A provision in the Land Titles Act, however, was not amended or struck out, so the issue was somewhat unclear.

This led to a further study and report No. 89 of the Alberta Law Reform Institute, the same body but a new name. This report was presumably intended to clarify the law of adverse possession in Alberta, and it recommended several amendments to clarify the same. The 2002 report did not, however, address the very clear recommendations of the 1996 report. In 2007 Bill 17 was passed, clarifying the issue of adverse possession, amending the Limitations Act, making it clear that adverse possession was still part of Alberta law.

I am now of the opinion that government needs to have a close look at the concept of adverse possession, as I have done, and abolish the doctrine once and for all. Alberta is the only province in Canada that accepts adverse possession within a guaranteed Torrens system of land registration. British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba have legislated against adverse possession. Ontario only allows adverse possession under their registry of deeds system but not on lands once they have been brought under the Land Titles Act. Nova Scotia introduced a land titles act in 2001. Pursuant to the Nova Scotia act adverse possession will only be acknowledged for a period of 12 years from the time land is brought under the act and subsequently will be barred.

It is also worthy of note that the United Kingdom has recently adopted a land registration system . . . [Mr. Allred's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: I'm sorry, sir.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm speaking in favour of the hon. Member for St. Albert's motion, which is a direction to the House to take a particular look at Alberta's laws and take it, I would suggest – I don't want to put words in the hon. Member for St. Albert's mouth – from sort of an archaic ruling on the books to a more modern realization.

5:10

I do have difficulty, though, with the example the hon. member gave in terms of adverse possession. He talked about either of the Occupy movements, whether it be in Edmonton or in Calgary, because part of adverse possession is the intent to occupy an area for 10 years. While I have difficulty with the idea of what would be considered squatting or a legal assembly, we still have a series of inalienable rights such as the right of assembly, the right of free speech, so when that sort of example is being used, I have a little bit of trouble with it.

If we go back to the origins of democracy and we go to Athens, would Plato and Socrates, when they travelled about ancient Athens and stopped with their students at a particular spot to do a lesson, have been subject to adverse possession? Of course not because they were only there for a little while, while either of the two wise men provided their explanations.

Now, if we take adverse possession and put it into an historical aspect – and we're talking about British law – I think a rather interesting argument could be made about the illegal possession of Red River land, that Louis Riel, who was an elected parliamentary representative, then found himself having to flee to the States. Now, Mr. Speaker and all members of this House, I do not believe in violence as a way of either taking property or solving property disputes, and I do not believe that the massacre that occurred at Frog Lake was a justifiable activity, nor do I believe that the temporary possession by the hostage-taker of the WCB was a legitimate act.

But it would be interesting, in looking at history and given the First Nations and the intermarriages of French-Canadians and the formation of the Métis, which now in Alberta have legitimate claim to a number of settlements in Alberta law, whether if we looked at the adverse possession aspects of it, what led to the Red River Rebellion was – we didn't have a Canada nation at that time; we were still a British colony – that we had surveyors coming out from eastern Canada without any rights staking out land areas, surveying in areas, as I say, that had been traditional hunting grounds and trading grounds for First Nations for hundreds, thousands of years. Now, in our desire to open up the west for settlement, I could see this very much as an adverse possession or an attempt to take over land in a very illegitimate fashion.

I think it's important that we remember these historical examples. At a recent remembrance at the museum of the regiments in Calgary I confronted Member of Parliament Jason Kenney for celebrating the achievements of the British soldiers that in no uncertain terms dispatched Louis Riel and his followers with Gatling guns and heavy cannons and so on at the famous Battle of Batoche. And I said that by celebrating the British army members who took part in the settling of what was considered a rebellious act, you're ignoring the contributions of the First Nations, the Métis, and the French Canadians who had occupied this land for years. So it isn't that simple. I don't believe in rewriting history, but when we're talking about adverse possession and legitimacy, then we have to take these things into account. An example of adverse possession was the demolition of Africa town in Halifax, Nova Scotia. We have to be careful how we lay out what we consider to be right.

Mr. Speaker, an example of one of the biggest instigators that brought the North West Mounted Police as opposed to the British army out to Alberta and provided support for First Nations, for Métis, for all races was Métis Jerry Potts, whose father was a Montana trader and whose mother was Blackfoot. The reason for bringing the Mounties out was the Cypress Hills massacre, where a group of American whisky traders cornered a group of First Nations and massacred them.

The other reason for the Mounties coming out, of course, was to establish what was, in fact, our possession north of the 49th parallel. We were very concerned about competition with the States and the potential loss of Rupert's Land and British Columbia, which had been explored and competed for by American and British and French explorers. So when the North West Mounted Police came out to establish our possession, they did things in as legitimate a manner as they could. We had, as a result, Treaty 6 in northern Alberta, Treaty 7 in southern Alberta.

Unfortunately, at the time there were First Nations like the Lubicon who were not signatories to these treaties: therefore the argument of adverse possession. We have seen companies – various oil and gas-extracting and drilling companies – going into what is considered traditionally claimed Lubicon land. So are the drillers adverse possessors of land that has been inhabited by the Lubicon or the Chipewyan in the Fort Chip area? What I am saying is that while adverse possession is now more clear – and I understand why the Member for St. Albert wants to bring that clarity forward – the question of right and wrong and whose land was illegally possessed or trespassed upon is still the subject of not only historical novels but also of court proceedings.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, historically the law has not been a black and white circumstance. It's still the subject of much debate, and I'm pleased that we have a Supreme Court that attempts to sort things out when they can't be resolved locally. But on the record the occupying movement was . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

5:20

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank hon. members on both sides for definitely giving me a little bit of a history lesson. I want to say that I'm pleased to join the discussion on Motion 507, and I want to thank the hon. member for bringing this motion forward. My position on this is very simple. This is about a law that is outdated. You know, as members of this Assembly it's important that we continually look at ways to improve and update our provincial laws, and I urge that you support this motion. I would also like to thank the Member for St. Albert for, really, his excellent description of what this law means to individuals.

Adverse possession is a doctrine that permits the transfer of landownership from the legal owner – and I say the legal owner – for the possession of land after a specified period of time. Mr. Speaker, you heard previously where this originated and what the purpose of the law was. The purpose was very legitimate because before you had any ability to have the surveying done, it did serve a purpose for individuals who, you know, had entered some land and done some improvements to land that possibly was not utilized or possessed by anybody. But I believe that this needs to be eliminated because I would say that our lands right now are very much surveyed and well documented as far as ownership is concerned. British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba have made it very clear and have taken the steps to go forward, and I would say that we need to follow.

Mr. Speaker, that's all that I have to say. Well, I'm sorry. Maybe I could say a little more just for you because you gave that indication. Anyway, it does concern me that once on the land for 10 or 12 years, a landowner has only 65 days to appeal that ownership or that possession or that squatting. That isn't fair. Also, when we look at it, the legitimate landowner has to give the squatter two years to be able to take him off that land.

You know, I say to you with great regret that those are my points. I would say to you that we need to support this hon. member and also the presentation by the member opposite, that we need to update this law.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Elniski: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to rise and speak to Motion 507 brought forward by my good friend the hon. Member for St. Albert. I want to thank him, first of all, for his work with this motion. As an Alberta land surveyor and a Canadian land surveyor he knows more about this particular issue than any other person I know. I know he speaks not only with authority, but he certainly speaks with a commitment and some compassion for what would be largely regarded as being fair for everyone else.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, encourages the government to end the policy of adverse possession, otherwise known as squatters' rights. For those who may be unfamiliar with squatters' rights, it's a possession of land without legal title for a period of time that is deemed sufficient to become the legal owner. It's a very nice concept, but it does present with it some problems. The basic principle of adverse possession is that an individual who operates a piece of land for a continuous length of time without complaints from the landowners should be able to claim that land after enough time has passed. This practice is grounded in the tradition of English common law and has existed in our province for nearly a century.

Adverse possession can be seen as a legitimate means of acquiring property in medieval England primarily because at the time property boundaries were marked with such landmarks as hedges, stone walls, and large trees. Naturally, such a system caused many, many disputes and land claims. Many of these disputes lasted for generations as land was passed down amongst families. The idea of adverse possession was proposed in order to ensure that an individual or family would not have property boundaries unexpectedly redrawn.

As is the case of most laws, Mr. Speaker, adverse possession is a remnant of an age and a place where such a policy was necessary in order to keep a degree of order. Clearly, the technology we have in place today allows us to much better track land titles. Nowadays we have advanced survey systems in Alberta which ensure that we are able to accurately define and record land boundaries. Under the system, which is based upon the Torrens land registration system, the government is responsible for ensuring the accuracy of land titles. If there is a dispute between two landowners due to a mistake in the land titles registry, the government must provide compensation for damages that resulted from that mistake.

Yet despite this, the policy of adverse possession continues to exist. It is indeed unfortunate that in the original adverse possession laws in Alberta an argument was not made that the laws of England that were adopted in 1870 did not make sense in Alberta given the adoption of the Torrens system of land registration. Instead, the decision that adverse possession could coexist with a registry system was made based on the precedent set by the Privy Council decision in a case in British Honduras in the late 19th century.

Mr. Speaker, those of you who have had the privilege to travel to British Honduras, or Belize as it is known now, will understand that, certainly, the country and its history are far different from our own. It's always interesting to go back in these early cases to try to understand how we rationalize our current laws. Even in 1913 it was unlikely that a case in British Honduras, or Belize, could be relevant compared to the western Canadian context in terms of land tenure. Today, in 2011, this reasoning is even more irrelevant.

It is now up to this Assembly to rectify these laws of the past and establish laws that are reasonable for the future. This legislation has already modified the application of adverse possession in certain practical Alberta situations, and it is time that we abolish the doctrine altogether. It has been determined that abolishing adverse possession would not be administratively costly, which, of course, is an important consideration. I cannot see any reason why this doctrine needs to continue to operate in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I would yet again like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-St. Albert . . .

An Hon. Member: It's all in Calder.

Mr. Elniski: . . . for St. Albert for bringing this forward.

Yes. Thank you, hon. member. I was just briefly confused there because I thought we had actually annexed, but I understand we never quite got that off the table.

I believe the decision we have here today has been productive, and I hope that my comments about the nature of adverse possession will add to the debate. I will be supporting this motion and urge my fellow colleagues to do the same. In the meantime I look forward to hearing more input from my hon. colleagues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We'll proceed with the recognition of two additional members, but first of all, I'd like to advise the House that I've received a note from one member, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, advising of his absence because of a potential conflict of interest, which is the appropriate way of dealing with this matter.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to Motion 507 and to comment on adverse possession as it applies in Alberta. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for St. Albert for his excellent summary at the beginning of this debate of this legal doctrine and how it came to be part of our provincial laws.

It's certainly interesting to note that adverse possession still exists in Alberta after all these years. Part of the reason for this is that when issues concerning this doctrine have arisen, the Legislature has amended Alberta's laws in order to limit the scope of adverse possession. In doing so, the Legislature has established some very practical laws that benefit Albertans today. For example, in the Boyczuk versus Perry case, in which a landowner lost ownership of buildings he had mistakenly built on his neighbour's land, the Legislature passed the lasting improvements on land by mistake of title legislation

Now found in section 69 of the Law of Property Act, this law reads:

69(1) When a person at any time has made lasting improvements on land under the belief that the land was the person's own, the person or the person's assigns

- (a) are entitled to a lien on the land to the extent of the amount by which the value of the land is enhanced by the improvements, or
- (b) are entitled to or may be required to retain the land if the Court is of the opinion or requires that this should be done having regard to what is just under all circumstances of the case.

(2) The person entitled or required to retain the land shall pay any compensation that the Court may direct.

Mr. Speaker, this new legislation has eliminated the need to argue for adverse possession in many recent cases. This legislation has been adopted in several other Canadian jurisdictions.

5:30

In 1965 the city of Calgary lost several lots through adverse claims. The Legislative Assembly subsequently amended the Municipal Government Act to bar adverse claims against municipal lands. Section 609 of the Municipal Government Act now reads: "No person can acquire an estate or interest in land owned by a municipality by adverse or unauthorized possession, occupation, enjoyment or use of the land." I see no reason why individuals can't enjoy the same privileges that municipalities can, and under this act they can't. Similarly, two adverse possession claims against irrigation district lands in 1993 led to the following prohibition in the Irrigation Districts Act, section 182: "No person may acquire an estate or interest in land owned by a district by adverse or unauthorized possession, occupation, enjoyment or use of the land."

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, it's clear that the doctrine of adverse possession has caused a number of problematic situations. While the Alberta Legislature justly amended provincial laws in order to prevent these situations from occurring, the doctrine of adverse possession remains in place today. I believe the Legislative Assembly did the right thing in amending these pieces of legislation.

In the leading case of Lutz versus Kawa in 1980, a dispute over a fence located 15 inches over the property line into a neighbour's yard, Court of Appeal Justice Laycraft commented:

A decision in favour of the plaintiff would seriously cloud the security of boundaries assumed to be inviolable under registered plans of survey or descriptions under the Torrens system.

He added:

There are countless instances in this province where fences have been erected, by eye on what was intended to be the true boundary line between adjoining properties without the assistance of a qualified surveyor, as there are also countless instances where there are no fences at all to mark the boundaries of large cultivated areas. Deviation from the true line in such cases, as in the case at bar, is almost inevitable.

Finally, he noted that the justice system is only responsible to interpret the laws, and if a law is deemed problematic, the remedy must come from the Legislature. Mr. Speaker, one can interpret this statement as a pretty strong indication from a respected Justice that adverse possession is no longer a viable remedy for neighbourly fence-line disputes and that it is the responsibility of the Legislature to rectify this recurring situation.

Similarly, in a 1996 report the Alberta Institute of Law Research and Reform argued that there was no need for adverse possession in Alberta. In their analysis they describe many of the arguments that are often made in favour of adverse possession and explained why those reasons are no longer valid today. First, the report pointed out that the doctrine of adverse possession does in fact promote the productive use of land but that since most of the productive land in Alberta is now being put to use, this doctrine is no longer required to achieve this objective.

Next, the report tells us that adverse possession may help to satisfy the expectations of land purchasers, who frequently identify the boundaries of the land they wish to purchase based on physical markers such as fences. However, it argues that this reasoning alone is not sufficient to justify extinguishing land ownership due to adverse claims.

Finally, the report states that adverse possession can help to prevent unjust enrichment because if someone unknowingly builds on his neighbour's land, he has the ability to claim adverse possession and keep his buildings. However, as I spoke about earlier, section 69 of the Law of Property Act protects landowners from losing lasting improvements which have been mistakenly built over the boundaries of their land.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Institute of Law Research and Reform offers a number of reasons why the doctrine we are discussing today is no longer necessary or applicable in our province. As such, I'll be supporting this Motion 507 and urge all my colleagues in this House to do so.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, do you wish to speak on the motion?

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak to Motion 507, which seeks to abolish the doctrine of adverse possession in Alberta. I would also like to thank the hon. member for putting forth this motion. His commitment to improving our land tenure system is truly commendable. I quite enjoyed his diligent description of adverse possession and how it applies in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, today I would like to speak in support of Motion 507. Alberta has one of the finest land titles systems in the world, and I cannot help but see that adverse possession really has no place in our laws. The system we use was first introduced in South Australia in 1858 by a gentleman by the name of Robert Torrens, who had become concerned about the complexity of registering land sales at the time. As such he devised a system loosely based on the method of registering ships. This became known as the Torrens system of land registration. Since then the system has been adopted in many jurisdictions around the world. It was also adopted in Alberta, then part of the North-West Territories, in 1881 and is still in place in our province today.

The Torrens system is based on three principles: the curtain principle, the mirror principle, and the insurance principle. The curtain principle means that the property lawyer does not need to look at past titles to determine ownership, simplifying the previous process by which one had to search back approximately 40 years to ensure that the previous owner had a good title. Under the Torrens system all titles issued by the government are examined and guaranteed by the government as being true and correct. That is what the insurance principle is all about. It offers government assurance that the purchase title it issues is correct. Finally, the mirror principle provides that the current title reflects the current ownership of the land and all encumbrances that apply to it. This means that if a title is incorrect, the government must compensate the aggrieved purchaser.

Mr. Speaker, the concept of the Torrens land tenure system is that you only need to examine the current title to determine who the owner is and if any charges have been laid against the land. The doctrine of adverse possession, however, places a cloud upon the title in that a person other than the registered owner, if in possession of the land for a period of 10 years, can make claim against all or part of that land. Herein lies the incongruity between the Alberta Torrens system of land titles and our laws of adverse possession.

Despite this inconsistency the doctrine of adverse possession was included as part of Alberta's law when we joined the Commonwealth. It was argued in the early 1900s based on the precedent from a case in British Honduras, that was appealed to the Privy Council in England, that adverse possession could coexist with the Torrens system, and ever since that time adverse possession has been enshrined in Alberta legislation.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta remains the only Torrens jurisdiction in Canada to permit adverse possession. British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba do not allow adverse possession. Ontario, which has both a Registry Act and a Land Titles Act, does not recognize adverse possession once land is brought under the Land Titles Act, and all newly subdivided land is automatically brought under the new act. Similarly, Nova Scotia only recognizes adverse possession for 12 years after land is brought under the act. Ironically, now even the originators of adverse possession, the United Kingdom, have adopted a Land Registration Act, which also recognizes adverse possession for a period of up to 12 years after land is brought under the act. Yet in Alberta in 2011 we still recognize the antiquated doctrine of adverse possession.

Mr. Speaker, I would argue that it is time to abandon adverse possession and relegate it to the history books. As such, I urge all members to support Motion 507, introduced by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:40

The Deputy Speaker: Is there any other hon. member wishing to speak on the motion?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for St. Albert to close the debate on the motion.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to start by clarifying a few points that were made in debate. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity picked up on my example of Occupy Edmonton. I clearly stated that in the Occupy Edmonton situation, that was private land, and that was subject to adverse possession. With the Occupy Calgary group, which is occupying Olympic Plaza, which is municipal land, that would not apply because of the amendment to the Municipal Government Act that was mentioned by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul made a comment regarding 65 days to appeal. One of the problems with adverse possession is that once the 10-year time limit runs, yes, you have 65 days to appeal, but your hands are tied. You have no claim. It's almost senseless to appeal unless there is a problem with disputing the 10 years or some of the continuous possession rights. But if the land has been occupied continuously and subject to the conditions after 10 years, your hands are tied. You're history.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder talked about land titles guaranteeing titles. That is absolutely correct, but just for clarification, under a land titles system the Land Titles Act guarantees titles. It does not guarantee boundaries. Boundaries are guaranteed by the survey monuments on the ground.

Just a couple of points I didn't quite get to that I'd like to make before I conclude. Alberta after all these years, with a totally different land tenure system than the United Kingdom, continues to bear the burden of this antiquated custom of legalized land theft even though the United Kingdom has seen fit to abolish it. It's also somewhat ironic that the acquisition of an easement or an interest less than fee simple is absolutely barred by virtue of the Law of Property Act. Yet adverse possession, which is the acquisition of the entire title, the fee simple, is still allowed in Alberta. That's a bit of a contradiction in our law.

In concluding this debate, it's important to note that the doctrine of adverse possession is an outdated common-law practice that has remained as an impediment to the very successful land titles system that has protected Alberta's landowners for 125 years, even before we became a province. In that time period there have only been about a hundred claims for adverse possession that have been decided in the courts, and only a very few of those have been successful. In several of the successful cases the Legislature has taken the initiative and amended the law to correct the problem caused by the adverse claim. I strongly urge the Legislature at this juncture to cure the problem once and for all.

Just to summarize, there are several reasons why the law should be abolished in Alberta. Firstly, the Alberta system of land tenure is vastly different than that of England, where the common-law doctrine came from, and even now England has seen fit to abolish adverse possession. Secondly, adverse possession is, arguably, contrary to the intent of our Torrens system of land registration. Thirdly, the Law of Property Act adequately protects parties that have erected improvements on the wrong property through mistake of title, and we do have common encroachments that happen all the time. Those can be corrected by the Law of Property Act, where there's adequate compensation for the mistake.

Fourthly, adverse possession is no longer permitted against Crown, municipal, and irrigation district lands, so it should not apply to private lands either. Fifthly, the Institute of Law Research and Reform in their 1986 study has clearly debunked the need for adverse possession. Sixthly, I guess, members of the judiciary have hinted strongly that the law needs to be changed. It is up to the Legislature to change the law. All other Canadian Torrens jurisdictions bar adverse possession. Lastly, if it makes sense to disallow prescription yet allow adverse possession to acquire the fee simple estate, that just doesn't stand up to common sense.

Mr. Speaker, just to wrap up, I think we've had a very good debate this afternoon. I thank all of my colleagues for contributing to the debate. As I indicated, I think it's time for the Legislature to take the bull by the horns and get rid of this antiquated law.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert has closed the debate, so the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 507 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that this House rise and reconvene at 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:46 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers .....	1379
Introduction of Visitors .....	1379
Introduction of Guests .....	1379
Members' Statements
Holodomor Memorial Day .....	1380
Physician Supply in Rural Alberta .....	1380
University of Lethbridge IGEM Award .....	1381
Catholic Social Services .....	1389
Mount Royal University/Medicine Hat College Joint University Degree Program .....	1390
Foreign Qualifications Recognition .....	1390
Quilt Donations for Slave Lake Fire Victims .....	1390
Oral Question Period
Long-term Care for Seniors .....	1381, 1383
PC Party Benefit Plan Trust .....	1382
North West Upgrader .....	1382
Political Party Financial Benefits .....	1383
Calgary Windstorm .....	1383
Seniors' Benefit Program .....	1384
Community Spirit Program .....	1384
Inspection of Long-term Care Facilities .....	1385
Accessibility of Medical Education .....	1385
Grain Marketing .....	1385
AIMCo CEO Personal Investments .....	1386
Child Poverty .....	1386
Public Health Inquiry .....	1387
Cypress Hills Provincial Park .....	1387
Funding for Private Schools .....	1388
Peavine Métis Settlement Grade 7 Students .....	1388
Gravel Extraction Management .....	1388
Postsecondary Education Preparedness .....	1389
Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees .....	1390
Tabling Returns and Reports .....	1391
Orders of the Day .....	1392
Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading
Bill 203 Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act .....	1392
Second Reading
Bill 204 Justice System Monitoring Act .....	1399
Bill 205 Municipal Government (Delayed Construction) Amendment Act, 2011 .....	1404
Motions Other than Government Motions
Adverse Possession .....	1404

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fourth Session

Alberta Hansard

Monday evening, November 28, 2011

Issue 42e

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 27th Legislature

Fourth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Hon. Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Hon. Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Hon. Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Hon. Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hon. Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC)
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Hon. Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Hon. Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Hon. Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Hon. Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (PC)
Stelmach, Hon. Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC)
Webber, Hon. Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Clerk	W.J. David McNeil	Committee Research Co-ordinator	Philip Massolin
Law Clerk/Director of		Sergeant-at-Arms	Brian G. Hodgson
Interparliamentary Relations	Robert H. Reynolds, QC	Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Chris Caughell
Senior Parliamentary Counsel/		Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Gordon H. Munk
Director of House Services	Shannon Dean	Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard	Liz Sim
Parliamentary Counsel	Stephanie LeBlanc

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 68      Alberta Liberal: 8      Wildrose Alliance: 4      New Democrat: 2      Alberta: 1

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Sustainable Resource Development
Janice Sarich	Education
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Mr. Zwozdesky
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Rodney
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
Mason
Pastoor
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	McFarland
Boutilier	Mitzel
Brown	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Ms Pastoor

Bhardwaj
Blackett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Ouellette
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, November 28, 2011

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to ask leave of the Assembly to introduce guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening to introduce four esteemed colleagues of mine in the Alberta bar, one of which I happen to have worked with for a number of years. If you could just please rise as I call your names. Derek Allchurch is a senior counsel at Miller Thomson in Calgary. Analea Wayne is also with Miller Thomson and the past president of the Canadian Bar Association. In addition, we have Lyn Bromilow, the executive director of the Alberta Civil Trial Lawyers Association, and last but not least, Constantine Pefanis with the firm Pefanis Horvath, who is the president of the Alberta Civil Trial Lawyers Association. I would like to thank them for their continuing support and wisdom that they provide to me. I ask all members to please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 23

Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011

[Debate adjourned November 24: Mr. Ouellette speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the bill.

Dr. Taft: On Bill 23. Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. Well, this is a continuing saga – isn't it? – a saga without a very happy ending and a saga, I think, that this bill is trying to bring to a conclusion as quietly and innocuously as possible.

Just to be clear, the bill before us right now is intended to amend a previous bill that was very controversial for this government, that stirred up a lot of concern among landowners about limitations on their rights and controls over their own land. So this legislation, which in and of itself is fairly brief, is intended to reduce or diffuse the concerns of people opposed to the existing legislation.

What this bill will do will be to add a preamble to the Land Assembly Project Area Act. The intent of the preamble is, I think, to try to give some context or try to explain away the government's intentions here. Then it makes some other substantive changes which in effect, Mr. Speaker, will really appear to make this amended act, if this amendment goes through, kind of pointless. It feels like the government has gone in a great, long circle here, and there may be a lesson here for this government. There could be a lesson if it was open to learning.

One of the issues I've heard a lot about in the last few days is the heavy-handedness of a government that's in too big a hurry to get things done. Right now we're living through a two-week period when the government introduced at the beginning of that period six bills, and they want them all through and law in a total of eight sitting days. Well, the reason some of these are here is because the same thing was done a few years ago. Bills were introduced quickly. They were rammed through. There was very little consideration of the problems they would produce, and then the government ends up in a big controversy and ends up backpedalling like crazy through what turns out to be another rushed piece of legislation. So there's a lesson to be learned here, but I'm afraid we have students across the way, Mr. Speaker, who are not open to lifelong learning, and it's too bad because there's a lot to be learned by all of us.

Mr. Speaker, I might as well get on the record right away that I'll be standing with my caucus and not supporting this legislation. I wanted to reflect, given that it's second reading, on some of the background that I think brought about this bill. I think it's a background that goes back well over a decade. It goes back to some deeply flawed government policies to deregulate the electrical industry and to weaken some of the very good regulatory frameworks that were in place for things like transmission lines and pipeline rights-of-way and so on.

When the government in particular deregulated electricity, it actually had such a complicated and prolonged and painful birth. It went on through about five years of labour. That's something that no man and especially no woman would like to contemplate, but that's a pain that the people of Alberta went through. One of the side effects, symptoms of that pain was that all planning for transmission lines came to a halt. In fact, all planning for the electrical system as a whole came to a halt. It used to be that there was very methodical, systematic planning for generation capacity, for power plants, for transmission lines: for the whole system. It worked really well. That all got shattered in the deregulation process, so the planning ground to a halt until – guess what? – we're in a crisis, or at least we're told we're in a crisis.

Suddenly by 2008-09 the industry and others were screaming about a crisis that was brought about by this government's policies, and the crisis was that we hadn't planned and built enough transmission capacity. Suddenly the whole electrical system was in danger, and we had to ram something through, and of course there wasn't the legislative basis, Mr. Speaker, for ramming things through because it had never been needed before because things had been well planned.

The reaction, predictably, by a government that relies so often on a kind of knee-jerk response was to put together a bill that they rammed through the Legislature a couple of years ago and got themselves into an even bigger mess. It was a piece of legislation that was seen to remove many safeguards on landowners' rights and really expose landowners to extraordinary powers that were out of their control.

That led to a reaction which fuelled the rise of a new political party in Alberta, the Wildrose Alliance, which has a strong base in the interests that objected to that original bill. So what we really have here is a piece of legislation in Bill 23 which is driven by power politics. Pun intended. It's politics over electrical power, and it's politics of the raw political power nature. What we have is a government that's trying to pull the carpet out from under some of the support for the Wildrose Alliance. I don't think this particularly comes from any interest in good public policy. It doesn't come from any interest in public well-being. It comes from an interest on the other side in blocking the rise of one of their opposition parties.

Mr. Speaker, it's regrettable that we've come to this, and I guess that I would like to have to ask this government: why did they bring forward the bill that we're amending in such a hurry if we're now bringing in amendments that weaken the position of the government to ram things through? Is our electrical system in any less desperate need than it was a few months ago? Can we suddenly allow time for due process to play itself out? Can we suddenly take the time to listen to landowners and have public hearings and so on? What's happened in the real world, outside from under the dome, to make this possible? I don't know. It just all feels like smoke and mirrors to me, political smoke and mirrors, and I'm sorry that it's come to that and that we're putting so much effort into it.

Mr. Speaker, those comments outline the approach that I'll be taking to this legislation as it moves through the Assembly. I've no doubt, given that the government in a majority, that it will get pushed through, but I think it's a vivid example of poor legislation created by a government that's been in power for 40 years and suffers the arrogance that results from that.

Thank you.

7:40

The Deputy Speaker: Standing order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes for comments, questions, and clarification. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate the remarks from the member. I guess I have a question. You know, you often refer to it as being deregulated, but it was much more oligopolized. I mean, it was never deregulated, from what I would say. It's been some time ago, as you pointed out, from 1996 to 2000. Can you maybe talk a little bit more about the process of how this was oligopolized and how there wasn't really a deregulation that came into effect?

Dr. Taft: Sure. The member actually puts his finger on an interesting point. The irony of so-called electricity deregulation is that the volume of regulations multiplied. In fact, one of the great challenges that came about as a result of the changes made 10 years ago now to the system was not fewer regulations but far, far more. There were binders and binders. I was actually doing some writing on this exact issue at the time. Those of us who were paying attention witnessed hundreds and hundreds of pages of incredibly complicated rules being brought in to try to create a market out of a situation and a product that is, in fact, a natural monopoly.

Now, I think the members in the Wildrose Party and the members in the Liberal caucus would disagree on how well things have worked out. I'm not sure of that. But certainly it's our view in the Alberta Liberal caucus that electricity deregulation has not served the interest of ordinary Albertans well at all, that it was a misguided policy initiative from the beginning that saw the transfer of billions of dollars of publicly paid-for assets into the hands of investors. It exposed Albertans to serious abuse, whether it was Project Stanley, which the traders at Enron used as their pilot project for some of the activities that got Enron into so much trouble. The victims of that sort of test driving of market abuse were the people of Alberta through something called Project Stanley, which the Member for Calgary-Glenmore may or may not be aware of. Then it just played out until as recently as this fall, when we have cases before the regulators and the court systems involving multimillion-dollar manipulation of the market.

I should say that this coming winter we've been warned that prices will spike again because a number of generating systems are being taken offline for maintenance, all at the same time, in the season when we have the greatest needs for power. So what happens? The price of power spikes. Well, isn't that a coincidence? The price of power spikes, driven into that spike by the very companies that will benefit most from that spiking. They could have and they would have been required under a regulated system to manage their maintenance in a much different way.

I am a sharp opponent of the electrical system as it has played out in Alberta, and I think it's been to the massive disadvantage of the general population of this province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is very short. There's been a lot of discussion about transmission lines, the cost of electricity, and deregulation. Are we not on Bill 23, the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011?

Dr. Taft: Yes, indeed, we are.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, could you please tell me the relevance of what you're talking about, then? That has absolutely nothing to do with Bill 23.

Dr. Taft: Sure. Well, my previous question was in response to an issue from Calgary-Glenmore. But the simple fact of the matter is that we're talking about administrative structures and legislative structures that have to do ultimately with assembling land rights for things like pipelines and other rights-of-way.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much. My question to the hon. member is: the statements which we all understood on the Wildrose side clearly the government and the Minister of Transportation did not understand. Could you please articulate it again and speak just a bit slower so he would understand?

The Deputy Speaker: You don't need to. The time has run out.

On my speakers list here, the Minister of Transportation. You wish to speak on the bill?

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I do want to speak to Bill 23, the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011. I'm pleased to speak today about what I call the land assembly project area amendment. This is not to do with power lines. This is not to do with the price of power. This is not to do with what the hon. member opposite talked about. It very much has to do with the assembly of land for major projects into the future and not power lines or transmission lines at all.

As former Minister of Infrastructure and as a landowner I strongly support the intent of the original Land Assembly Project Area Act. The intent has always been to ensure that landowners are properly notified, consulted, and compensated when government designates land for long-term projects. Mr. Speaker, the intent was to replace the old system under the restricted development area regulations with stronger legislative protections for landowners. Also, why the legislation is stronger than what came before: we did hear that landowners still had questions about their rights to consultation, compensation, and access to the courts. As a landowner I am pleased with the amendments to this legislation. The amendments have clearly been designed to fit landowners' needs, realities, and expectations.

It accounts for the varying circumstances we all may have and it empowers landowners with many more choices and options. For example, once a landowner has been informed that their land is in an area proposed for future development, they do not have to wait and wonder about what will happen and when. They can start the process themselves, Mr. Speaker.

The legislation gives landowners the option to begin the expropriation process whenever they choose. It makes it easier for landowners to access the courts and also ensures that government covers those costs. In triggering expropriation on their own instead of waiting until the government is ready to move forward, landowners can better plan for their own futures. Perhaps they will choose to sell now or move away into a new phase of their lives, or perhaps they will choose to lease back the land and carry on with farming until the infrastructure project begins.

Mr. Speaker, if a government offers landowners a price for their land that they are not satisfied with, they can ask a third party to decide. The Land Compensation Board or the court can decide on what price the landowner should be paid, and again government covers all the costs. Landowners can still choose not to sell until the government comes to them with an offer when a project is ready to begin. Looking at the ring road projects, we know that it could be decades from the time landowners are initially notified until the project actually begins. Within those waiting years landowners can go on with their business as usual, in fact, or they can sell their property to a third party. They can even will their land to a family member.

7:50

Mr. Speaker, this legislation ensures landowners are properly consulted and fairly compensated. The amendments ensure that we as landowners have more options and more choice. They provide us more protection while also placing greater obligations on government. With these amendments this legislation will ensure that future Albertans will benefit from the highway and water projects that they will need while also ensuring that I and my fellow landowners are treated fairly and with respect.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to assure all members of this Assembly that this does not take away any rights of landowners; in fact, it adds rights to landowners. If I can also say it, this has come a long way since the restricted development area regulations. The reason that this legislation came forward to start out with is because when we looked at the restricted development area regulations, it truly did not provide the landowners with the opportunity of choices that this bill does today and also with the amendments.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I'd sure be pleased if the minister would perhaps be able to get up and explain why for the last two years they've been in denial, saying that it wouldn't affect land prices, why they said that they could appeal to the cabinet if there were any discrepancies or they weren't being treated fairly, why they said that Keith Wilson has been fearmongering and not telling the truth about these bills, yet they've brought in all of these amendments now so that you can trigger a land sale and say, "No, I want my money now up front," and they can say, "No, what the cabinet has decided here isn't good enough, and you can go to the courts." I mean, how do they flop so many times?

An Hon. Member: He just said it's for clarification.

Mr. Hinman: For clarification.

Mr. Speaker, they have hounded property owners and Keith Wilson and the Wildrose for two years. They continue to talk about how there are no problems with this legislation, yet they brought it in. I mean, they need to apologize is what they need to do. The amendments are good, and we're grateful for them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to answer. First of all, I want to say that the individual that the member speaks of very much – there was no what I would consider fearmongering. It was basically confusion between three different bills – Bill 50, Bill 36, and Bill 19 – at that time.

I want to say to you also that when we looked at the Land Assembly Project Area Act previously, there were a couple of things. One is the access to expropriation immediately. In the previous bill it talked about two years. We heard very clearly from the people of Alberta that they wanted to have expropriation and access to the courts immediately. That's what happened. That's what this bill does. That's what this bill says. This is about listening to Alberta landowners and ensuring that, you know, their choices are there and exemplified.

Also, Mr. Speaker, if I can, I'm very glad to hear that the member from the WRA is very much in favour of what this bill proposes, by the sounds of what he's saying. He's just saying that it didn't happen soon enough. Well, I think it did happen soon enough. What happened is that we did listen to the landowners, and we have consulted with the landowners, and we have talked to landowners.

This bill has gone a long way from where we were previously to the land assembly project area amendment. This, Mr. Speaker, is an opportunity for a landowner to have choice. It's an opportunity for a landowner to decide what he needs to decide today, or he can decide what he wants to do with his land into the future. I'm very glad to hear that the WRA very much supports that direction and that focus because that's what this government has always stood for, and that is to ensure that we listen to landowners, listen to the concerns they have, and give landowners the options that they want to have.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. The minister seemed a little bit perplexed earlier about how this had anything to do with electrical deregulation and land accumulation. I guess I'd like to ask him, then: do you not remember in 2004 the spies that were sent out when they were trying to get the line from Edmonton to Calgary, that one 500-kV line, and would you not be willing to realize that these amendments to Bill 19 and Bill 50 were in direct response to the fact that the government failed to get that 500-kV line then, and this was the response that triggered all of that? That's what the Member for Edmonton-Riverview was referring to when he was going back in history and bringing forward this.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview did not talk about that. He was talking about the electricity, the transmission lines, which was not part of the bill at all or the discussion that you had.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up and speak on Bill 23, which is the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011. It should really be called Replacing the Screwed-up Bill 19, Land Assembly Act. Something that this government fails to realize is that Bill 19 was the bill that we stood up in the Legislature and spoke against over and over and over again, spoke up on behalf of what we consider, as our Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo wants to always call, our bosses.

Mr. Speaker, I find it very interesting that the government's own news release that came out on the 21st of November talks about amendments giving more power to property owners. It talks about:

Amendments introduced under Bill 23, Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011 also clarify what types of projects fall under the Act and give property owners a clearer process when government buys land for long-term, large scale transportation projects like the ring road or water reservoirs.

It's interesting how after two years they have to clarify or clear up something that was brought to their attention when we were debating Bill 19 right here in this Legislature and, you know, we tried to bring those concerns forward on behalf of Albertans. I don't think there was one person that spoke for Bill 19, including the Minister of Transportation, that wasn't eloquently going on and on and on about how it was the best bill ever since sliced bread, and there was nothing wrong with that damn piece of legislation, and the only people that had it wrong was the opposition, being the Wildrose, and a fellow that has spent an incredible amount of time going across this province trying to clarify, and his name was Keith Wilson.

You know, Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, the best thing this Assembly could do is to repeal the Land Assembly Project Area Act, which is known as Bill 19 and, as I said, is being replaced by Bill 23. This would be a very, very simple solution to what seems to be a very complex problem.

8:00

Now, Mr. Speaker, why should it be repealed? Because landowners will still be ripped off if the government needs the land. The Expropriation Act was perfectly suitable to the task of buying land for necessary projects, and the Expropriation Act was fair because it better reflected the true value of the land. The original bill, Bill 19, had only limited projections and compensation for landowners, and they couldn't get fair compensation let alone their day in court to make sure that they were properly compensated.

Another flaw that we're finding in the proposed bill is that the power of deciding necessary projects still lies behind the closed doors of cabinet. You know, Mr. Speaker, I brought this up in question period today when I talked about the new proposed bill, whatever it is, Bill 24, the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, and their decision-making powers behind closed doors with the cabinet. I have to tell you that my constituents have a problem any time a cabinet makes decisions behind closed doors, especially when it affects the public, and it has . . . [interjection] I hear the Education minister sort of chirping in the background. I'm sure he'll be standing up and speaking in support of Bill 23. I look forward to hearing what he has to say about that.

As I was saying, I have a problem when we start making decisions behind closed doors without the input of the public. What is really, really surprising is the fact that all of a sudden the government in their press release and their briefing note that they provided our critic is going to go back to consultation. They're going to engage the public. They're going to talk to the public. They're going to listen to what the public says. Well, where the heck were they when we were discussing Bill 19, when there was an outcry on this particular piece of legislation?

Hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of people turned up at these consultation meetings. You know, 200, 300, 400 people were at these meetings, and the Minister of Transportation says: well, that was because there was confusion between Bill 19, Bill 36, and Bill 50. You know what? There was no confusion. The only people that were confused, actually, were the government. That's where the confusion was, and they were the ones that were trying to confuse a very educated public that was attending these meetings.

You know, it's too bad that the government insists on passing laws, and then they're going to consult later. The last time I heard, a good piece of legislation is usually based on consulting, listening to what Albertans have to say, and then they start bringing legislation forward. The Premier talks all the time about how she's going to consult on this, consult on that. They're always, always consulting after the fact, quite frankly, when it's too late. Even the Premier has to take some blame. She has sat on that cabinet since, I guess, 2008, whenever she became Justice minister, and all of a sudden all of this legislation is bad. You know, I'm still searching and I have been searching for some time to find anywhere she spoke out publicly in any of the press in regard to the royalty, Bill 50, Bill 19, Bill 36: any of the pieces of legislation.

I'm going to again listen as we are in second reading of the bill, and I'm looking forward to hearing, actually, several members of the government speak in support of the bill because I probably listened to the same members that spoke in support of Bill 19. It'll be interesting to go back into Hansard and see what they had to say about Bill 19, and then these same members speak up on Bill 23 and talk about Bill 23 being better than Bill 19 was. I can bet you dollars to doughnuts that after the next election we're going to come back with Bill 31, that's going to be replacing Bill 19 plus Bill 23. We'll have Bill 31, and by then we might – might – get it right.

With those short comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll sit down, and I'll listen.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the member accuses me of chirping, I might as well speak for the record.

A couple of questions the member obviously has issues with, the process by which decisions are made. I know that she spent a great deal of time in cabinet and did some good work as a cabinet minister in this government. I wanted to know whether she made any decisions in cabinet that she now would perceive as behind closed doors and what made those decisions righteous at that point in time and wrongful now.

I also would like to ask this member how it is possible that in that same vein her colleague the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere eloquently spoke in this Chamber in favour of the initial bill, before the amendment which is on the floor right now, but now the bill is so wrong. Can she identify the hypocrisy between making decisions then and making decisions now, how they were right then and the process was right then, and all of a sudden it is so wrong simply because she happens to be sitting on the other side of the House?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: With pleasure. I cannot tell you how much I'm glad he asked that question. I hope I have at least 30 minutes, but I probably only have five.

Let me tell you the difference between now, where they are, and when I was in cabinet. We listened to what Albertans had to say. We discussed it in front of the cabinet table. Now, there are some people here who've been around since when I was there. We didn't make decisions like: let's intimidate the doctors and not do anything about it. We had an open and accountable government, quite frankly, under Premier Klein.

Mr. Speaker, when we had the wonderful Premier Stelmach come in, all hell broke out, and these guys decided that they weren't going to listen to their constituents. [interjections] I was asked the question, Mr. Speaker. I'm answering. If you thought that the question was out of order, then you should have called him first instead of me.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I left the government is that they quit listening to the people who put them there, and that's Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My further question to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on the point: what is the role of an MLA relative to this bill when it comes to the land assembly project, and do you think that they should be apologizing to Keith Wilson, a lawyer who is famous for property rights?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I think that one of the things that Mr. Wilson did so well – again, I'm going to repeat this – is that he listened to Albertans. If Mr. Wilson was so wrong and if the government was so right, then we wouldn't be dealing with Bill 23. We would still be with Bill 19. Bill 23 is a screwed-up Bill 19.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the restricted development area regulations didn't give the opportunity for government to notify. They didn't give the opportunity for individuals to buy the land sooner. They didn't give landowners options.

The hon. member talks about: she wants to repeal it. Please tell me with what that's going to protect landowners.

Mrs. Forsyth: The Expropriation Act. I've already said that if you were listening. Mr. Speaker, I said it twice.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, speak through the chair.

Mrs. Forsyth: I am. Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the member to read Hansard. Quite frankly, I said it twice in my speaking notes. It's like I said right from the beginning, they don't listen.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, you can camouflage it any way you want, as they have done. It's a simple question. If you're going to repeal it, what are you going to repeal it with? You tell me to read Hansard. Just tell me.

8:10

Mrs. Forsyth: With the Expropriation Act.

Mr. Danyluk: It's there already.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. We didn't need Bill 19. We didn't need these. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you have the floor.

Mrs. Forsyth: You know what? It's the funniest thing. I can hardly wait to get Hansard and to put this on YouTube. The Minister of Transportation just doesn't even get it now.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am so pleased to speak today in support of Bill 23, the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please, the hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, I'm not surprised that tonight as we discuss this, the same thing happens to cause confusion and fear in people that it shouldn't be happening to. Reviewing and changing the law is what a responsible and progressive government does when better ideas come along. Occasionally better ideas come along from the opposition. It's possible, and I wait with great anticipation. This is a deeply rooted and deeply personal issue for so many people across our province.

Mr. Speaker, this is a government that has a third of their sitting members that are landowners and are directly affected by legislation such as this, unlike many others. We're talking about important rights that people are dealing with, some of the most important rights in the democratic process. It's irresponsible for people – and I think we all in this House would agree – to unnecessarily frighten people, especially senior landowners, but that has in fact happened.

The new legislation must reflect and abide by landowners' needs and concerns, and I'm happy to say that the amendments tabled here today go far beyond what happens in most other jurisdictions if not all other jurisdictions. In fact, it goes far beyond what is common practice, that many of the members in this House that have spent some time in municipal government know can take place right today.

If, in fact, this land is needed for a major transportation or water project, which is all that this can be used for, which, I must say, has not been fairly represented by some people in the province either, bringing fear over things like transmission lines, which, of course, can't even be dealt with under this legislation. This gives us an opportunity to treat people fairly and to treat people properly with land, that wasn't available to us in the past.

To go back to simply expropriation, Mr. Speaker, does not address at all the difficulties that we went through in the assembly of the land, as an example, that started in the '70s for the Calgary ring road and the Edmonton ring road. We wound up at the end of that process spending an awful lot of money on a legal process with landowners because of the confusion. The legislation came into place to correct that. The government of the day relied on the restricted development area regulations, which virtually left landowners at the mercy of the government right to the very end of the process.

Opposition members tonight suggest that that's what we should go back to, back to not letting people have the rights to make decisions and be part of that discussion process upfront on these large projects.

Mr. Boutilier: Point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j). This member is impugning members. He just said something that I'd ask him to retract. That is simply not true.

The Deputy Speaker: We can deal with it after the speech.

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, nor did the former process give landowners the power to choose when government should buy their land. That's what's been suggested tonight, to go back to that.

I suggest to you that what we've done now in involving landowners upfront in the process is exactly what landowners need in order to make plans. They are very sophisticated, these landowners today in Alberta and the people especially in the agriculture industry that I'm referring to now. That is the land base that we are talking about for the majority of these projects that we're talking about. This is a very sophisticated industry. It's very dependent on a land base. It's very dependent on packages and parcels that are the right size and the right combination for them to make a living. We are now required by law to consult with those landowners on a project so that we can find out how they're affected. This means that landowners can have input on the details of a project and how it might impact their land.

Secondly, the government must make a decision on whether the land is going to be part of that project, and they have to do it within a two-year period. This is because landowners deserve to know, and they deserve to be a part of it within a reasonable amount of time, Mr. Speaker.

Thirdly, landowners can sell their land to the government whenever they choose, and that's the important part of this. They can make a decision, and history shows that if that decision is to wait until a closer time to the project's actual completion or to when the project is being done, they can choose to wait till that time period. In the case of a larger water body we've seen historically higher land prices. Also, transportation infrastructure close to land, as is shown with our bypass roads, shows a great increase in land value. But the landowner can make that decision themselves.

Of course, most importantly, what this government has listened to is the opportunity for a landowner to trigger expropriation at the front of the process. Mr. Speaker, that's a very, very important amendment. That's an amendment that gives the landowner right up front the right, should they want to, to do what others have suggested shouldn't be available to them until just before a project starts. I don't believe that's fair.

The new act is going to give property owners choices and options respecting their land. The act does not give the government any new powers, Mr. Speaker. It gives landowners new powers. What we're discussing here today and what is shown here today is that this government listens and that this government responds to the wishes of those people.

We can't go back in time. We're a very active province with very sophisticated industries in it. We have landowners that require and deserve the property rights that we need to give them. We don't need convoluted processes that put money in the pockets of people that are not directly involved. We need proper compensation for the people that are involved, and that's what this legislation speaks to. I'm very proud of it, and I'm very pleased to stand up today in support of it. I will be supporting this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments, questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the minister is actually meant in the spirit of dialogue, where we exchange rather than debate, where we just butt heads. It also comes out in response to the point earlier from a different minister. If I'm understanding the ministers correctly, their indication or their information to the Assembly is that this doesn't have to do with things like transmission corridors and so on. Maybe that's the case, but I'm looking here at briefing slides on the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011, from November 2011, government of Alberta, and about – I don't know – half a dozen slides in or so it actually, if I'm reading this correctly, talks about background, what types of projects. It refers specifically to utility corridors, which I'm assuming includes transmission lines. Am I wrong – heaven forbid – or am I misunderstanding this information, or is this information wrong? What's up?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for a wonderful question. Absolutely, this legislation is very clear. It can only be triggered on these land purchases for a large water project like a reservoir or for a transportation corridor. It cannot be triggered for a utility corridor. But, to the hon. member, after a transportation corridor is built – obviously, planning goes into these things. If we look around throughout the history of our province, you will see telephone lines going down the ditches of the roads. You'll see power lines. It's probably in the best interests of Albertans to make use of our transportation corridors to house all those things that we possibly can. But the legislation is very clear. This cannot be used to trigger the purchase of a utility line. It cannot be used for that. The legislation is absolutely clear on that.

8:20

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the hon. minister maybe explain how this legislation compares to what municipalities do today on private land?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a wonderful question. There are many members in the House tonight that have a municipal background, and every one of them has changed land-use designations in the history of their time in office, and they've done it on a weekly basis in many cases for municipalities. They've changed it from a residential to a commercial or an industrial, or they've changed it from a commercial or industrial to a residential, or they've changed it and expanded it for a transportation system. They've taken land and expropriated land and houses in order to accommodate light rail transit for the better interests of the people in their community.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to you that municipalities in Alberta today have far more powers to manage people's lands and use of those lands and to change the use of those lands than this provincial government does. This legislation is very, very strong in support of landowners.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to ask the minister and also the former president of the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties when he is basically, if I understand him correctly, saying that the province wants a catch-up with all the incredible authority that they've given to municipalities already. Let me think about the logic of that for a moment. The province wants a catch-up in taking people's landowner rights, to catch up with the very power that they gave municipalities, when municipalities are listening in public hearings to citizens each and every day in a council meeting. You can see it on Shaw TV. This government, in determining it, will be behind closed doors in cabinet determining: no, we're not even going to listen to landowners because there is no mechanism in place to be able to achieve this.

Getting back to my most important question, does he really believe what he is saying? Keep in mind the Member for Rocky Mountain House, that hon. member who served as a reeve and now has served as an MLA. This member understands clearly what landowner rights are all about, and he has fought hard in the PC caucus relative to that point.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a point of order raised by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: I didn't raise any point.

The Deputy Speaker: You did.

Mr. Boutilier: Sorry. Yes. You know what? I want to say that at one point the hon. member – if I misinterpreted, I'd certainly look for clarity. Actually, my point is that I thought he suggested that we were misleading landowners in terms of what members were saying, but it could have been applying to all opposition members. Mr. Speaker, at this point, for the sake of brevity, I withdraw my point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: All right. So we have no point of order.

We will continue the debate on Bill 23. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Enough has been said about Bill 19, and what gave birth to Bill 19 was Bill 46. As the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek put it, this bill is trying to defuse or put the fires out which were started with Bill 19 and Bill 50. Maybe we should call this bill, the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011, bill number one. Maybe you will be bringing in another Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act in 2012, and we will probably be calling that one amendment act number two. Had the government gotten Bill 19 right the first time, we wouldn't be here debating this Bill 23, the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011.

We on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, are not disputing. There is no doubt that we need better utility and transportation corridors in Alberta if we are to have better planning for growth and development. These corridors will play a key role, and we need them. Sure, this is going to have an impact on landowners in a variety of different ways. If the land is currently being used for agricultural purposes and a highway is going to be built across it, that will be a problem, sure, for landowners. If transmission towers are going to be built on it, the disruption will only be partial and minimal, and it will be worse only during the temporary construction. Sure, the government needs to be prepared for the utility corridors, and we should be thinking of the future in order for progress to go on.

There were some hearings. Bill 46 was brought in after the government's EUB board hired, I believe, some private investigators during the hearings, and that gave birth to Bill 46. Bill 46 in 2007 split the EUB into two parts, the Energy Resources Conservation Board and the Alberta Utilities Commission. In doing so, Bill 46 restricted the public's ability to participate in the commission's, formerly the EUB, decision-making process. It restricted the public's ability to have a public hearing with regard to a proposed transmission line, gas transmission pipeline, hydro development, or power plants.

It restricted the public's ability to hire legal counsel to represent them in public hearings and narrowed the requirement to be eligible to intervene at public hearings. It removed the funding for legal counsel who represented members of the public while intervening in public hearings. It also removed the requirement to consider whether a proposed transmission line for which approval is sought is and will be able to meet present and future public convenience and need. This particular change was grandfathered back to 2003, so any current legal challenge is based on principles that are no longer valid.

There was a big hue and cry on this, and that brought in Bill 19. Bill 19, when we do the section analysis, caused lots of problems. It gave more powers to the government and to the minister. For instance, in section 3(1) there was a notwithstanding section allowing the LG in Council to make regulations relating to the project area that apply regardless of the legal and regulatory provisions. They included controlling the use and development and occupation of land in the project area but also giving the minister the ability to exempt land they choose from those restrictions.

That was serious power, the minister being the arbiter of landowners' activities and how those decisions were to be made. That kind of led to an impression that landowners have to be nice to the minister because of the power over land use that the minister holds.

8:30

This goes on. Even section 4 had problems. That was section 4(4), which ensures that while the notice is required, it isn't in any way a necessity for the regulations to have impact. In other words, even if no notice was to be given, everything could still go ahead, and that was a problem. What was the point of having a notice if it isn't integral to the process? So that showed in Bill 19 the government's contempt for landowners. If they really cared about landowners, then notification would be entirely a necessary part of the deal, and failure to notify would cause a project to fail. It's not like the notification process was even particularly difficult. Ultimately, it was a sign that the government doesn't really care about notification and landowners.

With this Bill 23 the government is trying to fix Bill 19, and they're trying to give more powers to the landowners and more clarity. But we should have done Bill 19 with more consultation with Albertans to get that right. I think, still, the government should go back to the blackboard and do it over again, repeal Bill 19 and go back to Albertans and get it right.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for your comments. They are good comments. They are good comments from the aspect – and I was listening all along – that, you know, maybe there were some places that Bill 19 needed to be changed. You said that Bill 23 gave more power to the landowner, and I agree with you. But you said: go back and get it right. Is there anything that you feel as a member of the opposition that should be expanded on in what Bill 23 is right now to make it feel that you would believe it's adequate?

Mr. Kang: I think, Mr. Speaker, Bill 19 should be reviewed, and still maybe there's more improvement to make in this bill. We shouldn't be pushing this. There's no rush. You could have come back in the spring session and, you know, gotten it right once and for all.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member? Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available.

Seeing none, we'll go back to the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on the bill.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to speak to Bill 23, the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment

Act, 2011. This amendment act seeks to amend an extremely controversial bill that was seen to limit landowners' rights and controls over their land and to negate their concerns. It also addresses the apparent lack of recourse to compensation and legal consult that's equal to the rights under expropriation with a preferential leaseback offered to the original owners.

The bill's political object, of course, is to begin to fulfill the Premier's leadership promises to reform the suite of land-use bills which have caused significant political damage to this government. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that they've had to do a lot of backpedalling since those three bills, all of which were, as the previous member has stated, hasty, lacked consultation, lacked respect for the owners of property, and didn't take into consideration some of the key aspects of concern that landowners had.

For example, Bill 19 formed the basis for the government's purchasing of land corridors for utilities and transportation as a potential solution to landowner opposition notwithstanding the previous minister's comments that this isn't designed for utility corridors. He then went on to say: well, it could be used for utility corridors but not directly, not immediately, only after further decisions are made under the cover of Bill 23 to do what amounts to the same thing.

Here are three reasons that the government felt could help them to move decisions forward. If the government owned a wide enough corridor, there would be no other landowners within the traditional, quote, consultation distance from transmission lines. With no opposition hearings could be done rapidly, and the needed transmission, in this case, could be built. The second part of their solution to the failure of the traditional process was Bill 50. Bill 50 removed the needs assessment for transmission projects the province was able to designate as critical.

Taken together, bills 19 and 50 could have led to a very streamlined public process of building transmission should the government mobilize all the resources at its disposal albeit at significant cost to the government. The strength of the provisions of these acts showed the worries of the government of paying a political price due to the possible absolute failure of the electricity system, including brownouts. The weakening economy has not reduced the likelihood of this eventuality. It's only delayed it. This act backs away from a formal process for direct government provision of corridors for private projects in the near term.

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding some of the comments from the government side we see that this Land Assembly Project Area Act, Bill 19, which was never used – why does it need to be fixed? Why not simply eliminate it? We have an existing act for which expropriation can be used. The changes proposed limit the powers of the Land Assembly Project Area Act so much that we think it would become useless. Since the government has never shown why the bill is useful, it should be repealed.

Mr. Speaker, there are many perspectives on the responsibility of government to look at the long term to establish corridors and in the public interest develop projects, whether it be in the area of water bodies, as was indicated earlier, or transportation and utility corridors, developments in the public interest. By all means, there needs to be a balance between designating areas of the province for the public good and designating those in a way that allows for appeal, that allows for adequate compensation, that allows for proper process so that everyone feels respected in the process. This government has failed to do that. On the one hand it bends over backwards with this amendment to the point where it's going to render almost nonfunctional the ability of the Legislature or even this cabinet to carry out the public interest and make decisions in the long-term, best interests of the public.

It speaks again to the lack of long-term commitment in this government to set aside land use in a way that ensures that the long-term public interest will be served not only in terms of transportation, utilities, public infrastructure, and water bodies but also conservation areas. How is it that we are now faced with so much pressure on development that we are not moving forward on some of these issues in a timely way in the public interest? There has been so much lurching forward and pulling back because of the lack of really thoughtful approaches to planning and endorsing what I think most everyone in the Legislature has supported in terms of the land-use framework.

8:40

That has been seen as leadership in this province, setting aside and planning for the longer term public interest on our public lands, designating specific areas for development, for transportation, for recreation, and for conservation. And all we can see – all we can see – is this tremendous quagmire of legislation, confusing, blocking: first of all, going too fast and too hard without consideration of some of the key elements of the public interest and then pulling back so far that we see paralysis and the lack of any process, the lack of any progress in terms of some of these long-term public decisions. [interjection]

I guess one could argue, as I hear an hon. member saying, that everybody's upset, so it must be the right thing. Sorry. It cannot be assumed that just because everybody is upset on all sides that you are doing the right thing. The other possibility that one should consider is that you're not doing anything that serves the long-term public interest or the private interest. You're simply in a stalemate with such fear around, again, the coming election and whether you will or will not please the rural and the landowner base and therefore are willing to sacrifice significant power, significant progress, significant planning interests to this fear of upsetting various groups, in this case landowners.

So we will not be supporting this bill, Mr. Speaker. I regret that we are spending even more time and energy and public dollars once again because of hasty decisions two years ago and now an even hastier decision leading up to an election that is designed to protect the bottoms of a party that will do almost anything to stay in power at this stage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. member, I just want to make a couple of things clear if I can and ask him a question. That is, there was expropriation in place when we dealt with the restricted development areas regulations. There was expropriation in place in Bill 19. There is expropriation in place in Bill 23. Those are all common. The question, of course, becomes the choices for landowners. The first: the landowner didn't have much choice. The government basically had the option to decide when to buy and could put land in a restricted area for an extended period of time, which wasn't fair to the landowner. Bill 19 basically said: "You know what? The farmer can force the government to buy within two years."

Now what this bill says is that the farmer, in a progressive state, can have the option of purchasing the land right away. That's one of the differences. It just gives the farmer or the landowner more of an option. I mean, I know what you're saying, but if I ask you when you're looking at this bill – and that's my question – what do you see this bill doing into the future? I see another ring road possibly planned for Edmonton or Calgary or possibly, as the hon.

minister talked about, in regard to irrigation or water reservoirs. That's where I see it. I don't see it applied to anyplace else because it isn't about transmission lines. It isn't about that direction. It is about looking to the future. If I could just ask you to comment on that because I understand where you're coming from except that you're not giving the landowner any options or any rights.

Dr. Swann: So the minister is suggesting that by repealing Bill 19, we're not giving the landowner any options or any rights?

Mr. Danyluk: No, no. We're giving them more.

Dr. Swann: Well, I guess I see this as somewhat similar to the amendment to the land-use framework, Mr. Speaker. They're bending over backwards so far that the land-use framework is basically nonfunctional. You are paralyzed from making decisions that are in the long-term best interests of the public because you have given away so much to the appeal process and to those who have a particular private interest that you cannot exercise the powers of the long-term public interest.

Again, you can argue, as the former minister commented earlier, that this is not for utility corridors, but everybody knows after the decision is made around a road that there's an assumption that there may well be a utility corridor there. So it's somewhat disingenuous to say that utility corridors are not part of this plan because clearly they go hand in hand with transportation corridors. We remove the words "utility corridor" and everybody is supposed to assume that that's not there. That's to me a sleight of hand.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just for clarification, is the hon. member suggesting that it's not in the best interest of landowners with Bill 23 to give them the opportunity for expropriation at the front of the process? And is the hon. member suggesting that anyone in any government anywhere would build an expensive road in order to put power lines down the side of it?

Dr. Swann: Well, to the second question: I can't imagine a government building a road just so they could get a power line. I guess the question really is: would a government build a road without speaking about a utility corridor when that was also part of the plan? I think that's possible.

The Deputy Speaker: We have 32 seconds. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. In 32 seconds, Mr. Speaker, I would say: do you feel that this government, based on their track record on property rights, truly has lost the trust of Albertans based on what's taken place?

Dr. Swann: Well, I think it's very clear, Mr. Speaker, to a lot of Albertans who have given up voting that the majority of Albertans have lost trust in this government. It's been reinforced, of course, in the health care system, where professionals all across the board have said that we must have a public inquiry because we don't trust this government's willingness to respect . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 23, the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011. I first of all want to say that a gentleman who's a scholar and a legal mind, who belongs, I understand, to no political parties, has been in a tireless effort criss-crossing the province, he and his 16-year-old son, in defence of property rights. I first learned of him in the discussion of the original bills that were put forward by this government. He was so outraged with the arrogance of the government in taking away the right of property owners that he felt compelled to take action.

Like anything in life, every step that one takes, you can make a difference. I want to first of all commend this Albertan, who not only has made a difference, but he's created quite a discussion and an awareness to the point where it's made this government very uncomfortable.

Some of the amendments that have taken place pertaining to the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, that's in front of us tonight, really go back in terms of history. History is a revealing, shall I say, tale in terms of what has gone on in Alberta.

First, I want to take a moment to thank Keith Wilson for his incredible sacrifice as a legal mind who has championed property rights. We would not be here discussing the legislation were it not for the hard work and dedication of this particular individual and other Albertans he has harnessed energy from, corner to corner to corner, across Alberta. It's really been like he stood up to the Goliath that is the Alberta government, but he was on the right side of right.

The Land Assembly Project Area Act remains unnecessary and burdensome on landowners. The Land Assembly Project Area Act should still be repealed as the Expropriation Act does a better job. I repeat: it does a better job. For the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud let me say that slowly: a better job than this amendment. This amendment has been nothing more than a reaction to what Albertans have been saying, that this government has not been listening to. They haven't been listening to Albertans. So this is an opportunity.

8:50

Now, I want to say on a positive note that Bill 23 does contain positive amendments to the original land assembly act. Of course, there's nowhere to go but up. It allows landowners to trigger expropriation of their land – that's a positive, and I want to say that I was pleased to see that – and restores access to the courts by landowners, because under the original that was not going to be allowed. Clearly, landowners and Albertans have spoken out to their government and told them: we will not accept that, or you will pay the price. So this amendment from that perspective was positive. It also, I want to say, allows landowners to sell their land beyond just market value. We also believe that is important.

The amendment that is missing in the bill is in regard to section 10 of the original bill. You may ask: what is section 10 of the original bill?

Mr. Mason: What is section 10?

Mr. Boutilier: A very good question from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I'll take that question if you ask me it when the time is appropriate.

It allows the government to freeze development on property. Again, it allows the government to freeze development on property. Can you imagine? This could result in the land being devalued even further, losing value to property owners and also in the eyes of the banks. When a landowner needs to remortgage his or her land or they want to change the terms of their mortgage, this will take away the leverage of negotiating with the banks. It's as if the government and the banks are in it together. This is very unfortunate.

I want to say tonight that – and I know the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood would clearly indicate this 40-year government being in cahoots with the banks is something that, really, we'll have to investigate further. We all know what it's like to deal with bankers, and for the most part we don't like it. You know, it's the only institution I know that goes and takes your money and gives you less than 1 per cent, but they go ahead and lend you money and charge you 10 per cent. That's bordering on legalized loansharking. So I will say that with the sad partnership that is going on there, if it wasn't for the Wildrose Party standing up for rural Albertans and putting pressure on this government, these amendments would never have come to fruition. Never come to fruition.

I'm glad to hear that the government, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud can hear high-heel steps. I'm glad to know that. By the way, that's not your own boss; that's the boss of the Wildrose Party, Danielle Smith. She has been a champion of property rights, and what she has done in harnessing the energy is that she has spoken in every corner of this community, almost the 364 municipalities that I know the former president of the AAMD and C would recognize, as he used to represent that. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I can see there's a lot of chirping by the Minister of Education. I welcome his questions at the appropriate time. I understand that right now he's consulting with grade 1 students on the education bill, and that's important consulting. I will say that my son had an important recommendation for you. It's called nap time. So there's a recommendation you can get for free. Okay?

Now, Mr. Speaker, what I find interesting is that it's clear that this government doesn't represent the concerns of rural Albertans. They do not represent the interests of rural Albertans; it's clear. I think that, clearly, that point will be made during the campaign, that we're all excited about, during their fixed election seasons that they're having. It's clear that this government doesn't represent the concerns of rural Albertans after introducing Bill 19, after introducing Bill 36, and also introducing Bill 50 and patronizing landowners and individuals like the scholarly and learned lawyer Keith Wilson, who doesn't belong to any political parties yet who's a huge advocate for landowner rights and who has clearly criticized these bills. In fact, he has spoken to ministers, but I think they really didn't quite understand what he was saying based on what he interpreted that Albertans were saying. I think that is something they should take heed of.

One thing that is missing from this bill, Mr. Speaker, is a resolution of the problems with banks that is related to the development freeze on land. So if the government even contemplates the future need to expropriate someone's land, they can send a notice to your bank. Albertans that are listening tonight who are landowners: what will happen with this bill is, in fact, that they send a notice to the bank saying they're going to freeze your land. Then when it comes to a remortgage, the bank can say: sorry; we're not going to loan you any more money. That is the result of what this bill is, the treatment by this government. I say to all Albertans that are watching at home tonight: this is what it could do to you. This is clearly one important point that I want to say that the Wildrose believes is missing from this bill, so let's resolve the resolution pertaining to the problems with banks related to the development freeze on land.

Maybe it was unbeknownst to this government, but in terms of what we have witnessed over the last two years as the assault of property rights, in my view, if you have to do so many things to a bill – be it Bill 19, Bill 36, Bill 50 – with all that has been going on, it's clear that you haven't been listening to Albertans, the true bosses of Alberta. This Wildrose caucus will continue to listen to its bosses.

If you want to remortgage your property or apply for a loan with your land as collateral, the bank will not take you seriously because of the action of what this bill does.

Now, it is good that the government decided to no longer determine that the cabinet would do it behind closed doors. At one point that's exactly what the bill was. It was going to be behind closed doors, and you never had a chance to even go to court to be able to appeal. To a judge or to a lawyer, like the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, it would be amazing to determine that you had no recourse. That's how the original bill under the Stelmach government was written. Now you're trying to basically rewrite something with amendments, yet you've ignored Albertans. That is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker.

I can say that the Wildrose will continue to work hard for rural Albertans when it comes to this important issue of protecting property rights of landowners. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Standing Order 29(2)(a). I wanted to go back to something a bit earlier that I heard the hon. member say, and that was the big, bad banks. Really, you know, I heard echoes of the political heritage that this hon. member comes from, the Social Credit Party. I wonder if he could elaborate on ways in which the banks trample on the rights of ordinary citizens and landowners in our province.

Mr. Boutilier: An absolutely excellent question by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and it's my pleasure to take the next four and a half minutes to respond. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the member raised an important point, in fact, a point in history for the members on the government side. They might have forgotten how the Alberta Treasury Branches actually started. It was because of those big, bad banks in central Canada that were reaping and literally taking farmers and rural Albertans for everything that they had during, of course, the drought.

The history was rich where the leadership of the day, not a PC leadership but other leadership, decided that they would form the Alberta Treasury Branches, that we have today, that is strong and is prospering because of Albertans' support. The reason is that they actually understood because they were listening to Albertans, something this government is not doing. It truly has been a shambles what has happened. I will say that I believe that, clearly, even the member of the New Democrat Party recognizes that this is about equality of property rights for landowners, something that this government is trampling on, the rights of every single Albertan who owns land.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood again.

9:00

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I will certainly agree with the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo that this government has certainly disregarded the rights of property owners in its legislative agenda over the past several years. I wonder if we could hear more, however, about the hon. member's support for a state bank.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I really have no knowledge of what a state bank is. But I will say that – the New Democratic Party apparently is interested in that – it would mean a state bank that's owned by the Alberta government. We actually have one called Alberta Treasury Branches. That is in place based on, you know, the central banks in Canada that actually had no sensitivity to Alberta families and rural Alberta farmers. Clearly, the Wildrose is sensitive to those needs being met in the agricultural industry.

I will say that we will stand up to banks when it comes to fairness for Albertans. It's something that this government should do when it comes to standing up for property rights and landowners. Anyone who owns land in Alberta needs to be fearful of this legislation, the amendments that have all gone through. It actually looks like the work of a Liberal government in Ottawa who says: we are entitled to govern. That's federal, not provincial. It's like Jean Chrétien or Pierre Trudeau saying: we are smarter than the rest of you Albertans, and we'll decide what's best for you.

Well, I was in Eckville, which is, actually, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Over 700 people from the community, agricultural Albertans came for it. Mr. Speaker, I was so impressed with Albertans in that area. Actually, the Minister of Energy was there. Honest to God, I think I saw a rope going around a tree from what I thought was going to happen to the representatives of the government because of the outrage of what the people in Eckville and other parts of Alberta were facing when it came to the situation.

Mr. Speaker, regarding the state bank that was made reference to – actually, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was there and, of course, was taken to task for interrupting the fine, learned lawyer, Keith Wilson. I remember that because I think he had to be escorted out of the building that night because of his chirping at the time.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I thought of some amendments that we could make with regard to this bill. One was to rename Bill 23 to We Should Have Listened to the NDP in the First Place. I think that another amendment might rename the bill to Oops, We Made a Terrible Mistake Here. There are a number of ways that the government could rename this bill. But I think the important thing here is that the government has persisted for a couple of years now in embracing this legislation. It's not just the act that's being amended by Bill 23 but a series of pieces of legislation that really trampled on the rights of people in this province and, interestingly enough, trampled on the rights of people who are historically strong supporters of the Progressive Conservative Party.

I watched with interest, as public meetings were held around the province, the clumsy and awkward and ill-advised interventions of various government ministers as they tried to defend these bills without actually understanding them or understanding the concerns of the public. Now we've come to the point where on the cusp of an election the government is finally listening. Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a saying that says that nothing sharpens the mind like a hanging. Clearly, this government has offended a major part of its political base, and it's done so because it was prepared to trample the basic rights of people that it had claimed to uphold.

It was interesting that it was the NDP at the time when these bills were brought in that stood up and championed the rights of property owners in the province. That's something that the Conservative government should have been doing by all accounts. You know, we've been clear all along that we believe that there should be no expropriation except in cases of urgent public need, there must be due process with respect to the rights of landowners, there should be no freezing of land for future projects, all utility projects need to be subject to full public scrutiny and a full regulatory process, power companies should not be required to pay for utility projects of for-profit companies, the protection of power consumers' interests is paramount, and, ultimately, an end to electricity deregulation, which is ultimately what's driving much of this legislation on the part of the government.

There are three pieces of legislation that need to be substantially amended or repealed, not just Bill 19; there are Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act. Bill 50, in particular, gives the authority to define essential transmission infrastructure to the cabinet and does not require a public process to consider diverse input, cutting out the Alberta Utilities Commission. It identifies several major transmission line projects as being critical, including lines between Edmonton and Calgary, Edmonton and Fort McMurray, and Edmonton and Redwater-Gibbons, despite strong public opposition. And it fails to protect consumers from having the costs of massive overbuilding of transmission systems passed on by companies directly to consumers.

Mr. Speaker, it's difficult to address just Bill 23 as it amends the former Bill 19 without addressing the broader issue. This all came about as a result of some decisions that had been made in terms of building new north-south transmission lines. The different pieces of legislation that affect that had worked well in the past. Other governments had managed to use existing legislation in order to bring about the needed infrastructure development of this province and manage public concern and protect the rights and interests of affected property owners. But this government couldn't do it. It failed where previous governments had succeeded.

It failed to use the legislation that was there for them all along because of their mismanagement. We all know about the scandal that arose with the spying. The ERCB at the time employed people to spy on people who were appearing before it and, therefore, fundamentally undermined its own process. How can you expect a fair hearing from a body that's spying on you to find out what you're up to?

That completely destroyed the credibility of the process. So the government, instead of restarting the process and using the legislation that was there, decided that they're going to bring in some very, very heavy-handed legislation, and it took away the rights of property owners to a fair hearing, to fair compensation. It allowed the cabinet to ram through all kinds of changes to land use, and it allowed cabinet to ram through whatever infrastructure projects they thought were necessary without public discussion, without having due process, without letting people who were affected have their day in order to speak and to provide that input.

9:10

It was a very, very authoritarian, heavy-handed, and undemocratic series of legislation that was passed by this Progressive Conservative caucus, by the people – the government proved itself to not really be committed to either landowners' rights or to democratic process. The government showed themselves to be in the pockets of the big utility companies and interested in ramming through the utility projects that those companies were demanding, and not only that, Mr. Speaker, but to add insult to injury, to make the consumers of this province pay for that infrastructure, billions of dollars.

It comes down to that, as it always does in these cases: very powerful special interests with massive private profit at stake wanting us to build them a $17 billion transmission system and pay for it so that they can use that transmission system to sell their power to the United States or to British Columbia or wherever they want in order to make money. There is nothing wrong with that – I want to be clear, Mr. Speaker – but they should be covering those costs. If they want transmission infrastructure to enable them to export power from this province or to sell it from one end of the province to the other or to B.C. or wherever, that's fine, but don't ask us as consumers to pay for it.

Mr. Speaker, the government ran into a lot of trouble because of that heavy-handed approach, and the government realized it. I mean, you can see the backtracking. This particular bill that's before us is backpedalling. If this government were a bicycle, they would need rear-view mirrors to see where they're going because they're just in reverse on so many issues.

Now, I wish I could say that I thought that that was because the government had come to its senses, that it realized that it should protect people's rights, that it should protect democratic processes, and that it should make sure that private interests pay their own way, but unfortunately, sadly, I don't believe that to be the case. I think this government has taken a look at its future, and it didn't like what it saw. So it has changed its direction, not because they have become enlightened but because they have become frightened, Mr. Speaker.

As we move now towards an election, the government is undoing some of the things which it has done. But what's missing, Mr. Speaker, is a comprehensive approach to rectifying the mistakes of the last couple of years. That's not happening. What we see instead are selected amendments in Bill 23 to the former Bill 19 and a task force to talk to property owners.

They're very big all of a sudden about talking to people and listening to people. The hon. Minister of Education has undertaken a wonderful tour of talking to everybody about the education bill. Mr. Speaker, it is not a consistent, sincere approach that we see from the government every day. It's a last-minute realization that if they want to get re-elected, they have to appear to actually listen to Albertans. So it is a deathbed conversion rather than a clear and ongoing commitment by the government.

I want to just indicate to you that if the government had listened to the NDP in the first place, they would never have gotten into this mess.

Mr. Hinman: And to the Wildrose.

Mr. Mason: To give credit to the Wildrose, they did listen to us, and they have corrected the mistakes of their past much sooner than the government did, Mr. Speaker.

I want to just really, really indicate that the government is doing in this case too little and too late, Mr. Speaker. We do believe that there are important considerations in the building of a province. You obviously have to accommodate growth. You have to be able to get people from point A to point B. You have to make sure that our industry, our business, our farms, and our cities and towns have electricity as they grow, and there is a legitimate role for planning. There's a legitimate role for the government to undertake these things on behalf of the public interest. But when the government doesn't follow the public interest and, instead, gets hijacked by private concerns like TransAlta and other large utility companies and undertakes legislation at the expense of the rights of the ordinary people, then that government is badly off track and needs to be called to account.

That's what I think has happened, Mr. Speaker. It's not that the government has just considered what the public interest is and is acting out of the public interest. If they were, then we wouldn't need some of the draconian legislation that they've passed: Bill 19, Bill 36, and Bill 50. But because they are not acting in the public interest, because they're acting for private interests, they need to act in an undemocratic fashion because given a choice, the public will not accept where they're going.

I think that it's the resistance of the public, the resistance of the people of Alberta that has forced this government to introduce Bill 23. It is, in my opinion, a defeat for this government and its antidemocratic direction. I think that the public, the people of Alberta, have stood up to the government and stared them down. The people of Alberta have won, and the government has lost. Mr. Speaker, I want to say very, very much that I believe that this bill is an admission, a partial admission, of defeat on the part of the government. I wish that it was a true act of contrition and a desire to really change their ways, to mend their fences, and to move on and accept the principles that they once stood for, but I don't believe it to be the case. It is an admission of failure on the part of the government, and it should be taken as such.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, I could be wrong, but I got the impression that this member was going to support this bill. Is that the case?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill with some amendments could be supported, but as it stands now, it does not completely address the issues that have been raised by other members. In particular, it still allows the government to freeze the land, requires them to notify banks to deprive landowners of the ability of credit, and I think that there is further work. But, clearly, I want to say that it has done some things. I think it has given full access to the compensation entitlements under the Expropriation Act, and it allows the landowners to sell their property if they're subject, but it does not deal with the ability of the landowners to access credit, and I think that's a serious flaw yet in the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'd like to first thank the hon. member for that short time when there were no Wildrose elected in the Assembly, but they were very much going around being property advocates. It was very generous of the NDP to step forward and to protect property rights for that time and to still be standing there.

9:20

I guess I'd have to ask the hon. member about his comments specific to property rights. In your pamphlet you recognize the importance of property rights, but I thought that that was kind of a little bit of a step to the right for you, that normally you see the collectiveness of government in taking these projects forward. I would say that it was almost you having to expand your tent to protect property rights here in the province of Alberta. Perhaps you could explain that a little bit for us.

Mr. Mason: Thank you for that question. If the Wildrose can support state-owned banks, then surely we in the spirit of compromise can find a way to work forward.

But, no, Mr. Speaker, to be serious and for the record, the NDP has always supported the rights of individual property owners balanced with the public good and supported due process with full consultation and rights of appeal for landowners whose land may need to be taken in the interests of the public good.

We also think that it's very important, as I talked about earlier, that we make sure that it is actually the public interest that is being secured rather than private interests. In this case I believe the government is acting on behalf of private interests against the rights of people within the province, so we are very much against that sort of direction from any government.

Mr. Hinman: Just to clarify, then, I guess it's exciting to see the opposition members understanding the importance of the due process of law, understanding that the government shouldn't be able to freeze property rights for up to 20 years with them wondering where they're going to . . . [An electronic device sounded] It's the hon. minister across the way there playing with his toy. It's chirping away.

We realize that the due process of law is critical. We understand the need for and are willing to support the Expropriation Act as it is, but the one clause that we continue to have a problem over is in section 10, on the notification to the banks and what that can do to a property owner when they find out that all of a sudden this land is under consideration. It can have a major impact on that property owner or a small business or a homeowner being able to renew a mortgage that all of a sudden the bank can have great fear of.

I think it's the northern Badger case where this has implications in that banks that perhaps had a mortgage on an old service station and the government moved. . .

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just rise to make some very short comments with respect to the bill just because there's been so much that's been said tonight and otherwise with respect to this matter that is so completely, for lack of a better expression, out to lunch.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood talked about power lines and people bearing the cost of power lines. Of course, as my hon. friend the Minister of Transportation indicated earlier, this bill makes it very clear that land assemblies are not about assembling for power lines or pipelines but assembling for roadways, water projects, and those sorts of things.

One thing that should be very clear on the record is that if anybody was intending to build a power line for export of power, the cost of that line would be borne by the exporters, not by the people of Alberta. That's very clear in Alberta law. Even though it's irrelevant to this bill, I just wanted to put that on the record because the hon. member keeps bringing those sorts of arguments to the floor and misleading Albertans with respect to the effect of this act.

I've actually had the privilege of being a practising lawyer in the area of land use for a number of years. Our law firm acted for landowners within what's now known as the transportation/utility corridor, which previously was known as the greenbelt, around Edmonton. I can tell you that notwithstanding the fact that the Progressive Conservative Party and this government have been the strongest proponents of private property rights in this province for years and years and continue to be that, the process for assembling land for the Anthony Henday and for the ring road around Calgary was not a very viable or acceptable process for landowners.

First and foremost, government attempted under the environmental acts of the time to set aside a greenbelt. That was taken to court and was struck down. In fact, the transportation corridor around Edmonton was struck down three times in court because there was no appropriate law in place which allowed the government to assemble a piece of land such as that for a transportation corridor.

Now, the hon. members opposite and particularly the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo – he should understand there's a significant amount of development in his area – should understand that you need to set aside corridors for major roadways. He says that we should leave the land assembly act out altogether and just rely on the Expropriation Act. Does the hon. member have any idea how much it would cost to expropriate developed land for a ring road? If that land had been allowed to progress without being set aside, if you will, without being sterilized, as some people would call it, for the period of time – and it was 30 years – if there hadn't been the notation on there, do you think there wouldn't have been houses built, that there wouldn't have been development on it? Then where would the ring road have been built? Further out? Would you assemble it further out?

I mean, if you're going to do land-use planning, you have to have an appropriate tool, which is this act, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, to plan the area, to designate the land, and then to appropriately deal with the landowners involved so that they can have appropriate compensation for their land at the time that it's set aside. If they wish to stay on that land, of course it's going to impact the further growth of the value of the land, but it's not going to impact the land value that's currently on it.

This whole idea about going to the banks: they keep quoting section 10 of the Land Assembly Project Area Act. Section 10 actually says that "a person who holds or acquires an estate or interest in land in a Project Area holds or acquires that estate or interest subject to this Act and the regulations," nothing about sending a notice to the bank.

In any event, it is quite appropriate that if you're going to assemble land for a public purpose, normally what you would do would be to expropriate that land at that time. If you're assembling land for a public purpose, which is planning long term into the future, then you need to have an appropriate mechanism to set aside that land and then work with the landowner to determine at the appropriate time that the landowner wants to give up the land and obtain compensation rather than moving a landowner off the land 30 years before they need to do so. That's the interest. That's why this Land Assembly Project Area Act is so important.

Now, there's been a lot of talk about people coming back because we need to fix the act. Well, to be perfectly frank, the act that was passed in the first place did what it was intended to do, and that is to provide a scheme to set aside land for future planning purposes for major projects and to appropriately compensate landowners. Confusion has been raised in people's minds as to whether it does that. What this bill, this amendment act, does is clarify those compensation processes, clarify that people do have the right to the heads of compensation under the Expropriation Act. The Expropriation Act was mentioned in the original bill. This makes it very clear that all the heads of compensation are available to them. The issue in the original act was the term "market value." That provided some confusion for some people. Well, there should be no confusion now. A landowner would be entitled, when this act is passed, to compensation on any of the heads of damage that you could get under the Expropriation Act.

Let's be perfectly clear. You cannot live in a modern, cosmopolitan province like Alberta without planning for the future, planning sensibly for urban growth, planning for where the major transportation corridors should go, and then fairly treating the landowners in that area because – and that is an unusual situation – their land is being taken for a public purpose. But in the case of these types of projects, that are being assembled for future purposes, it's not being taken right at that moment, and that landowner shouldn't have to sit and wait to see what happens. That landowner should have the right to ask that their land be purchased at that time or to make a deal with the government to be able to stay on the land for as long as the land is not needed for the public purpose.

In any event, we should not be in a position where that land gets overgrown with all sorts of different development and then have to come back and expropriate at a much more significant level to achieve that public purpose. Good planning requires us to think further ahead than the opposition, obviously, wants to do.

9:30

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, first.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister trying to explain the position the government is in. It was their failure to act long-term and, again, their deception of the people on what they wanted to do. The fiasco and why it failed three times in the court is because of the behaviour of this government in acquiring that land and not being honest, saying that they wanted it for environmental purposes when they didn't.

We agree and understand the importance of setting aside transportation and utility corridors. This bill, Bill 23, definitely goes a long ways in repairing much of the damage that this government has inflicted on property owners for the last two years and 30 years if we want to go back in the dilemma that this government has had in failing to plan for the future.

If we actually go back to the founding of this country, it's quite interesting that those founding fathers had the foresight to understand and see the importance of utility corridors and transportation. They actually went out and surveyed the entire country and put it on a grid. Every two miles and every mile there was a road allowance of 66 feet to allow development. So Canada started off on good terms looking forward, understanding the importance of being able to have access to property and not having to cross over private property rights.

This government failed Albertans miserably. Again, even with the southwest ring road in my area this government for 30 or 40 years has talked about it, and said: "Oh, we're looking at it. We want to do it," but they haven't taken the steps to actually secure that transportation corridor. Now we're in a position where we can't access that because the government has failed to be honest and upfront with what they're wanting to do, using behind-doors cabinet meetings, meeting with individuals from the First Nations and other areas but never having an actual plan, Mr. Speaker.

The question for the minister is: how can you stand up here in this House and act like this is the first bill that you're putting forward when this is nothing but the second and third time to attempt to make proper amendments to an extremely flawed bill? Yes, this is the best yet. You're covering all those things, but you haven't covered section 10 on the notification and section 5 of the land assembly act, and that needs to be. We'll be bringing some amendments forward on that. To get up and say that this was all part of the foresight when you literally ripped property rights right out from underneath every Albertan that was in an area where this government wanted to put a power line or a road allowance – you keep denying that has anything to do with it. I just can't for the life of me, Mr. Speaker, understand how the minister can act like this is Bill 1 and everything has been great.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, that just shows the hon. member doesn't have a clue really relative to the history of the whole thing.

First of all, the government of Canada 100 years ago didn't survey the whole country. We have a Torrens system in western Canada, a series of surveys in western Canada that does quarter sections and sections and that sort of thing, and it isn't a hundred years old. What is a hundred years old, well, not quite, but 40 years old at least, is our respect for private property and the individual landowner in this province.

What this bill does – and if the hon. member had been listening, clearly he would have heard me say that the Land Assembly Project Area Act in itself was a very important act in that it set aside a process, first of all, to let landowners know when there was a land assembly happening that might affect their land and an ability for them to participate in that process and, then secondly, when a land assembly area was designated, a way in which they could ensure that they were fairly and properly compensated. There was some confusion created around that. I didn't say that the confusion was caused by the Wildrose Alliance, but I could've.

This amendment act is here very clearly to clarify, to make it very, very clear, that the heads of damage under the Expropriation Act, which were always intended to be there, are there and that land assembly will only be done when it's in the interest of long-term future planning for roads and for water projects and those sorts of projects. It's absolutely important that landowners have that right, to be able to approach government and say: if you're going to set aside our land for a future project which limits our ability to develop it, we need to have the opportunity to get compensation now.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Well, we ran out of time.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the bill.

Mr. Anderson: On the bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, that was a riveting debate there. I thought there were some good points shared there.

I'm going to take a little bit of a different tack with regard to speaking in second reading on Bill 23.

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

I heard this mentioned earlier. There's a real habit and pattern developing here where the government really feels the need to ram bills through so quickly that I really don't think – and there was some cheering to that on the opposite side, that they like to ram bills through quickly. I don't think that they understand that in order to pass truly effective and solid legislation, there really does need to be a lot of very sober second thought given to every bill that's introduced. It's very important that we as a Legislature have that opportunity.

The example is these three land bills or four land bills if you include Bill 24: Bill 36, Bill 19, and Bill 50. They got rammed through so fast and so quickly that there were some pretty glaring, gaping holes that were there that didn't get addressed. I don't blame actually in any way, shape, or form, nor should I, having voted for one of these land bills – the Minister of Education was earlier incorrect. He was mentioning that I had spoken in favour of Bill 19. I think he meant Bill 36, which I absolutely did the first time speak in favour of.

What's not understood on that side yet I think is the reason for that, and I think they should all relate to it. These bills are often essentially delivered to caucus with a couple of days' notice to read over them. No time – oh, don't give me the puzzled look. Unbelievable. The final draft of Bill 36 was given to caucus two days before it was introduced in the Legislature. You know that. Don't look confused. Two days before.

We have no time to go to the public . . .

The Acting Speaker: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Anderson: . . . to our constituents and actually go through the bill and say: "Look, this is what's in there. These are the points that are in there. Here, take a look." There's no time to go to, you know, people that we trust, lawyers that we trust to go and say, "Take a look at this bill, and see if you're seeing anything untoward in here or a problem in that, to go to someone like a Keith Wilson or like a Stan Church or someone like that who has some background in these land bills and go through it with them top to bottom and make sure that the people of Alberta have an opportunity to look through these things and to give us feedback, to put it to a committee and let that committee bring in stakeholders and bring in experts so that we can make sure that we get the right piece of legislation passed at the end.

We didn't do this with bills 36, 19, 50. Bill 24: I was on this side of the House for that one. For those first three there was no time to do that, so mistakes are made. Obviously, mistakes are made. Clearly, with regard to Bill 36 I made a mistake. Clearly, I did not fully understand the legislation. Thankfully I was able to go to actually two seminars by two different individuals about Bill 36 and these property rights bills. I was able to talk to people in my constituency about them after the fact, and it became very clear very quickly that my judgment was completely wrong with regard to voting for and speaking for Bill 36. As I've said in this House many times, I apologized to my constituents for being hoodwinked, so to speak, for not reading that bill as carefully as I should have, and for voting for it and speaking for it.

9:40

I guess that's where the difference between myself and some of the other folks in this room is. I was able to make that clear decision that I'd made a mistake. There seems to be a problem with many members in this House who still to this day don't seem to think that they've made a huge mistake with regard to these land bills, including Bill 19. They still think that all these land bills were perfectly fine and perfectly necessary. The only thing was that there was a little bit of a communication problem. You know, it was always: the bills were fine; it was just that they were being misunderstood. Incredible.

When you make a mistake, admit you made a mistake. It's okay. People don't expect perfection from their politicians. Good grief, that's for sure. They do expect that when a mistake is pointed out to them and it's clearly a mistake, admit it, move on, and make the correction. Make the correction. I think that was the real problem with this government.

Now, I will say that with regard to this bill they did eventually make a correction. It has come a couple of years later, and that's fine, but they did make a correction. Better late than never is the adage. Boy, oh boy, think of what it took to get through those two years. Think of the slagging, of the character assassination that occurred by many of the members opposite on an individual, Keith Wilson, who went all over the province talking to thousands of people around the province about these bills, pointing out all four of the bills' flaws – why they were wrong, why they needed to be changed, how they needed to be changed – again and again and again, did all this work, and his character was repeatedly assassinated by this government for just stating what his opinion was on Bill 19. It is just incredible.

I mean, this individual, as much as – you know, obviously the Wildrose was speaking strongly against these bills as were the NDP and others. Had this individual not been able to go around and raise such a kerfuffle in rural Alberta, there is no doubt in my mind that none of the changes that have occurred to these land bills would have been done. Frankly, this province and every landowner in it owe a huge debt of gratitude to that individual, Keith Wilson, and that government opposite really should give that individual an apology, a sincere apology for the way that he was treated and maligned and harassed frankly by this government.

If you were at the Eckville debate, I use harassment for a reason. He was literally harassed by certain people on the other side while giving his speech, just totally disrespectful. Yet here we are. All those things have been taken and changed. Most of the things that he pointed out about Bill 19 have been changed. That's good, and it's good that their listening. Why the character assassination? Why the assassination of character and judgment of members on this side of the House?

You know, if we could go through all the different quotes – and I'm sure one day we will – talking about how members on this side of the House were out of their minds, that we were misinterpreting every single clause, taking it out of context, fear-mongering, all these different things, for simply . . . [interjections] The member says that it's all true. Still he thinks that all of those mistakes in the legislation that were being pointed out – and, really, we were just looking at the reports with regard to Bill 50 from the University of Calgary and from IPCCAA, with regard to Bill 36 from folks such as Keith Wilson, and just repeating those criticisms. We were called just absolutely the worst names for it. It really is quite something to watch a government of 40 years. The arrogance is just breathtaking in that regard.

We were just doing our jobs, and that was to represent the landowners in our constituency and around Alberta, trying our best, trying everything we could to stop a 70-seat majority government. We did everything we could to do it, and frankly with the help of many good friends and landowners we were able to stop that government. That's a huge accomplishment for every opposition party in this House, for Keith Wilson, and for others. We were able to turn this legislation around, this piece of legislation.

Now, unfortunately, we still have a couple of other outstanding pieces, Bill 50 and Bill 36, that are still unacceptably poor pieces of legislation, that we will hopefully get to work on in the future and try to fix or, in the case of Bill 50 and Bill 36, repeal and start afresh, but at least we've slowed down the process. I think that's a huge testament to fighting tooth and nail against all odds in support of something that you believe in. So we're very happy with that, and we're grateful to have had that opportunity to defend landowners in that way.

I do have one issue with this, and it is that I think the government has basically – you know, I still would like to see us go back to the drawing board on Bill 19, go to a special committee, meet with some of the stakeholders and so forth on this and come up with a truly good piece of legislation, but if this is the way we're going to go, they've got it pretty close here.

The one issue that is still outstanding for me is section 5 of the Land Assembly Project Area Act. I'm still not understanding this, and perhaps someone can clarify it for me. It is an honest question. I'm trying to figure this out. This is after a piece of land is frozen, et cetera, whatever.

5(1) The Minister . . .

- (b) shall file a notice of the project area order and its associated regulation, together with a certified copy of the order and a certified copy of the associated regulation, with the Registrar . . .

And registrar is defined as the registrar at the land titles office. . . . and, on its being filed, the Registrar shall endorse a memorandum of the notice on each certificate of title pertaining to land within the Project Area.

That would seem to suggest to me that that will go on that specific land title, so on a person's land title. If that's the case – and this is an honest question – it would seem that that would be a situation where if someone wanted to use that land as collateral or wanted to sell it, it would devalue the property because it would be very limited in what it could be used for, and a bank wouldn't take it as collateral in some cases. I don't know.

I'm not an expert in this particular area, but I do have some worry on that end, and in full disclosure I think that that has been brought up in this House. It's been brought up by several lawyers, including Mr. Wilson, as kind of the only deficiency remaining in this bill. I would really like to see an explanation on that, perhaps an amendment on that so that we can make sure that this piece of legislation is as good as it can be prior to moving forward. That's really the only question I have with regard to a specific clause in the bill.

Again, I would like to personally and on behalf of the Wildrose Party commend Mr. Wilson. He is a fine gentleman. He truly believes in the province of Alberta and the values of liberty, the values of property ownership and respect for property ownership and how important that is to our entire system, to the rule of law, to a functioning democracy and one that respects people's rights. Although I do not believe for a second that the folks across the way were interested in using this as a way to subvert democracy or anything like that, I do think that there is a slippery slope, and the people that are in those chairs right now won't always be in those chairs. The problem is that we always have to be looking forward into the future to make sure that the laws we pass now, as well intentioned as they might be, are not used as a sword in the hands of people in the future who aren't as committed to democracy and property rights and things like that principle. So I do thank Mr. Wilson for that.

Respectfully we ask that question, and hopefully the Minister of Human Services will answer my question with regard to section 5 in the assembly project area act. I look forward to his answers.

9:50

The Acting Speaker: Section 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to just make a bit of a comment. I know that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has indicated that this particular piece of legislation goes most of the way toward erasing the egregious clauses of Bill 19. Previously the Minister of Human Services and Government House Leader stood up and suggested that we were creating confusion and misleading the public with respect to the provisions of this bill. I want to just be on the record here that when I talked about power lines and so on, I was referring to Bill 19, the existing legislation, which this act amends.

It's clear to me – and that was the subject of my speech – that the government has realized that they've run into real trouble and have really seriously crossed many Albertans that have traditionally supported them. The point of the speech was that they have finally had a conversion at the last possible minute and that the reason we're here is for the government to correct some awful mistakes, which they could have avoided had they simply listened to the opposition and listened initially to the NDP when we pointed these things out. I want to be really clear with the minister that under Bill 19 the government could designate any land that they wanted for a public project, including things like power lines, and then give themselves the power to make regulations by cabinet, behind closed doors, around what the land would be used for and if and how any compensation would be paid.

The fact that this government could pass such legislation really, really, I think, undermines its credibility and its commitment to the basic principles that it allegedly stands for. Anyone who takes a look at this situation should not just look at the bill that is being passed now, at the last minute, but at the actions of this government over the past couple of years to really understand the lack of commitment they have to basic principles and democracy.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. Does anyone else wish to speak on 29(2)(a)?

If not, then we'll look for another speaker on second reading of the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act. Are there any other speakers at second?

If not, the hon. member to close debate?

Are you ready for the question, then?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Zwodzesky in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 25 Child and Youth Advocate Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this Bill 25? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to offer a few comments just as we open debate in committee with respect to Bill 25. There were a number of comments made in second reading which I wanted to very quickly address and then offer one technical amendment.

There was a question raised about the distinction between the roles of the advocate and the child and family services council for quality assurance. I think it should be clear that the council for quality assurance is intended to provide advice related to quality improvement with a focus on the child intervention system. In other words, the council should look broadly at how numerous systems interact in providing services to a child and family and investigate the incidents to determine what immediate advice should be made relative to the improvement of our processes.

The advocate provides individual advocacy services not only to children and youth receiving child intervention services but also under the Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act and children and youth in the youth criminal justice system. The systemic review piece of the advocate's role is very important as the information gathered during the day-to-day work of the advocate provides a unique perspective in identifying areas where improvements can be made.

The advocate will have a seat on the council to ensure that the work of the council and the advocate's office is linked with ministry quality assurance's activities and that the advocate has the same information as the council to carry out his mandate. In other words, it's not intended to in any way limit the advocate but actually expand the access the advocate might have to the work of the council and to be able to build off that work if he or she feels that that's an appropriate thing to do. The fact that we're indicating that the advocate will be on the children's services quality assurance council is intended to provide access to more information to the advocate and assist the advocate in his or her endeavours.

An external panel is called by the council, the same as the Serious Incident Response Team, as discussed by the Premier during her campaign. The quality council, actually, is that response. The quality council is to look into every serious incident and any death of a child in care or receiving services from the department. So it can set up the external panels as a serious incident response process. In other words, rather than waiting for a fatality inquiry or for a criminal process, it could set up an expert panel to have access to and to look at every aspect of the service that that child received, the protection that child was suppose to receive, and the incidents surrounding what happened to the child. This intense scrutiny on the incident at several levels allows us to be proactive in terms of identifying opportunities for improving and helping to ensure that changes to services are being made long before the court proceedings are complete.

Concerns about the current advocate staying on as an independent advocate and the length of his term were raised. I want to be very clear on this. We need to have some transition between the current office and the new office. A children's advocate was just hired after an appropriate process and came into office I believe around the beginning of June. That children's advocate has a four-year contract. The legislation provides for a transition, so the advocate who is currently in place with a four-year contract will become, when this act is passed, the children's advocate until such time as the Legislature chooses a children's advocate.

Now, I would have to admit that it would be my hope that the Legislature, through Leg. Offices, would respect the advocate's office. We've had a process, a competition. He's been selected as a result of that competition. We've brought him in from wherever he was before – I believe it was Prince George, British Columbia – and from whatever he was doing before, and it would be, in my view, not the most appropriate thing to do, just because we've now decided to make this an office of the Legislature, to in essence terminate his contract.

10:00

It is clear in the act that the current children's advocate serves until a children's advocate is chosen by the Legislature, presumably under the recommendation of the Leg. Offices Committee. Now, it's also clear, however, that even if he does so, he doesn't get the five-year term that's in the act. He gets to continue his contract until his current contract is terminated, essentially, which would have to be the case.

There is a strong need, I would suggest, for consistency in the leadership in the advocate's office during the transition. The current advocate is a strong voice for children and will do a great job in his role, but again there is nothing in the legislation that prevents the Legislature from deciding to appoint a new advocate before the current advocate's contract expires.

Why the advocate's reports from investigations of serious injuries and deaths would not disclose identifying and personal information about a child? Well, the advocate's reports should and will be public. They will be tabled in the Legislature by the Speaker or the Clerk. They will be reports to the Legislature. But it's important to consider in writing public reports that disclose private information, that disclosing a child's name, even if the child has died, may disclose the status of other persons in the family or disclose the family status itself. That in itself would be a breach of their right to privacy. There are appropriate processes which can be undertaken when it's believed to be in the public interest to disclose that information. Other parts of the act help to clarify when it's appropriate to disclose, but it wouldn't be appropriate to publish that automatically in the child advocate's report.

Does the advocate have access to cabinet information like the B.C. advocate does? It's clear in the act that the advocate has all the powers of a commissioner under the Public Inquiries Act. The Public Inquiries Act clearly sets out what information can be subpoenaed, requested, and obtained. It makes it clear that information from cabinet, which has the privilege of cabinet attached, is not automatically available but can be available in appropriate circumstances with appropriate review.

Will the privilege aspect of information reporting be something that protects the minister's office, or will it instead be really the removal of the barrier? Well, the advocate will access or compel information as needed to assist him in an investigation or as part of his day-to-day work. Again, there's not an automatic compelling of information, but it can be accessed in appropriate circumstances with appropriate review.

Is the advocate going to address concerns about the overrepresentation of aboriginal children and youth in government systems? That, Mr. Chairman, is a very important question, a very important issue. I think it's quite unacceptable that close to I believe the number is 67 per cent of children in care or being assisted by the system are aboriginal children. That's unacceptable. That's a piece that needs to be dealt with. I would hope that the advocate would lend his expertise to providing advice with respect to that, as I would hope everyone else in the system would. That's a societal issue that we absolutely have to overcome, and we will overcome it. I hope to have advice for as long as I'm in this office from every appropriate source, and the advocate is certainly one of those appropriate sources. It's not a problem that's unique to Alberta. But it's certainly a problem that we need to address.

Age of youth served up to 22 to be consistent with the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act or 20, as indicated in the legislation? That confuses me a little bit because I'm not sure where the reference to age 20 is. The legislation in Section 1(c)(ii) does in fact reference the age of youth served as 22, not 20.

Do former youth in care still have access to advocate services? Yes, in most cases, because youth are asking for help within designated services. If youth are asking for services that are not designated – i.e., help for applying for a student loan – then there is not support from the advocate's office, but if a youth who was in care is looking for services that are supported or designated, then clearly the advocate's office is open to them.

Can anyone contact the advocate to report a child in need of advocacy services? Well, absolutely. Of course they can.

Section 9(1) talks about the rights of children. What does it mean, and could it include the child's right to access to their parents? Well, rights include those under the United Nations rights of the child. It includes specific rights related to receiving services, such as being involved in decision-making, requesting contact with family and friends, and access to education and health care.

Can the advocate call a public inquiry? No, but the advocate has all the powers of a commissioner under the Public Inquiries Act when conducting an investigation. So, in fact, there's quite an open authority for the Child and Youth Advocate to conduct an inquiry using all of the authorities of the Public Inquiries Act and without waiting to be asked or told that he can.

Then the question is why the advocate doesn't apply in matters of financial administration under the Public Service Act. Mr. Chair, I would have to acknowledge that there was an oversight while drafting the legislation in not including the advocate in certain parts of the Financial Administration Act. In fact, there is a reference in the consequential amendments to adding a deputy head of department, but there aren't the other corollary amendments which would be adding a department and department head.

Those are the issues that I have a concern about, so I would be moving an amendment to the act to strike out 29(3) and substitute new wording in there which makes it very clear that, like other offices of the Legislature, the Child and Youth Advocate's office is considered a department, the Child and Youth Advocate is considered a department head, and there's also a reference, as was already in the act, to a deputy head. I would ask support of the House for that amendment, just to add in two pieces which should have been there in the initial drafting and were unfortunately overlooked.

I believe that answers most of the questions that were raised in debate in the House earlier in second reading. I'd be more than happy to respond, once we've dealt with this amendment, to any comments or questions that other members of the House might have.

I believe it's being circulated, Mr. Chair, and once it's circulated, perhaps we could then deal with the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We'll just give the pages a moment to complete the circulation of amendment A1 to the Child and Youth Advocate Act.

Does everyone now have a copy of the amendment? Is there anyone who does not? Please signal.

Are there any comments on this first amendment? Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, did you wish to lead off?

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister has given us a very brief outline of this amendment, and I gather that the oversight was simply to include the office of the Child and Youth Advocate under the financial administration of the Child and Youth Advocate. Perhaps the minister could just say a bit more about what that means.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Certainly, Mr. Chair. Under the Financial Administration Act officers of the Legislature are included for financial purposes to provide for appropriate provision of spending and controls on spending, so it's appropriate, when there's a new Child and Youth Advocate established as an officer of the Legislature or an office of the Legislature, that that office be added into the sections of the Financial Administration Act which deal with that area for other leg. officers. This amendment is intended to do just that. It adds a subsection (vii) to that section 29 to include the Child and Youth Advocate and the office of the Child and Youth Advocate.

10:10

On page 23 of the bill, section 29(d) was amended by striking out "and," et cetera, and it included it in only one of the sections when it needed to actually include it in three sections. It was just a simple oversight by the drafters with respect to the number of areas where the Financial Administration Act had to be amended in order to include the office of the Child and Youth Advocate. By leaving it the way it is in the bill now, it would simply amend the area referring to a deputy head, and we also need it in the area that refers to a department head or a department. In other words, it will make it parallel with how other leg. offices are treated in the Financial Administration Act.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other speakers to the amendment? Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other speakers at Committee of the Whole to Bill 25? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Well, notwithstanding the comments of the minister earlier, I want to move that Bill 25, the Child and Youth Advocate Act, be amended in section 26 by striking out subsection (4). I'll circulate these prior to making any comments.

The Deputy Chair: We'll give the pages a moment, then, to distribute the next amendment, which we will call A2.

Do all members now have a copy of the amendment? If not, please signal.

Let us proceed, then, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, since the bill is supposed to be about establishing the independence of the Child and Youth Advocate, reporting directly to the Legislature, free to review issues in the child intervention system in an unbiased and objective fashion, I guess the question is: why do we need a cabinet-appointed council for quality assurance, which the advocate is supposed to be a member of? It strikes us that if there is a real, sincere interest in the independence of the Child and Youth Advocate, the advocate should have the power to establish a quality assurance council and mandate or provide direction to that council to investigate certain areas of uncertainty or concern or redundancy and not have a council that could potentially be in conflict with the independent advocate himself or herself.

If an advocate is properly funded and staffed, we believe that a lot of the quality assurance work could be done under the auspices of the independent Child and Youth Advocate as opposed to in some ways neutering the impact or diluting the impact of the independent Child and Youth Advocate. We're suggesting that we go back to the drawing board on the council for quality assurance and ensure that they are, in fact, independent also of government.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. minister, to this amendment.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I certainly, after a quick review of this, understand the concept the hon. member is raising. There was, as I indicated in my opening remarks, some concern about the need for both the Child and Youth Advocate and the quality council, and there was some question raised about the independence of the advocate being a member of the council, those sorts of issues. I think it's extremely important in this area of the protection of children to make sure that we have the best possible system for children, that we use every opportunity and avenue that we can to ensure that we're doing the right thing for the right reasons, that we're bending over backwards to ensure that children in care – well, all children – are protected, are dealt with appropriately.

The previous minister set up a quality assurance council in September, and it has its first meeting next week. Now, that council is set up under a ministerial order. But when I was reviewing the process moving forward with the children's advocate, I believed that we really should make that council a public council, given the strength of statute behind it. We could have brought that in with a separate act, but I think it is consistent with and supplemental to the role of the Child and Youth Advocate. It doesn't in any way denigrate the Child and Youth Advocate's role. The Child and Youth Advocate's role is very clear. His authorities are very clear. Nothing that the quality council will do will interfere with the Children and Youth Advocate's authority. In fact, in my view, it will enhance the ability of the Child and Youth Advocate to have access to information.

One of the amendments that is included in this is the last amendment, which purports to amend Section 105.74 under director's duty, which says, "the director must, as soon as practicable, report the incident to the Council;" that is, "a serious injury to or the death of a child." The provision there is to add "the Child and Youth Advocate and" before "the Council." I wouldn't have any concern with that because, in fact, there is a duty to report to the Child and Youth Advocate anyway. So I think that might be surplusage. It certainly wouldn't be offensive at all, but in the context of being buried within the rest of this amendment, unfortunately, I won't be able to recommend that we accept it.

I think it's very important that this council be there, that people know and understand that we take issues seriously and need to have a thorough look at them and learn from them at the earliest possible date, and that that work can happen either adjacent to the work of the advocate, in advance of the work of the advocate if that's the advocate's desire, or in any other way. It doesn't have to inhibit and shouldn't inhibit the work of the advocate. It's important that the advocate have a collaborating role, so to have access to everything they're doing and putting him on the council ex officio I think is important.

The ability to have the expert review panels is extremely important. The ability to put together people who are knowledgeable in the area to look into it thoroughly I think is extremely important, and the advocate having access to their work is important. Again, it doesn't detract from the advocate. If he believes that it's not being done thoroughly or appropriately or that it needs to go further, it doesn't stop him from doing that. From my perspective, I don't believe there's any reason why we shouldn't pull out all the stops for kids.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The minister's comments relative to this Child and Youth Advocate Act: I can say that the Wildrose certainly agrees with him. Make a note of that. The Wildrose agrees with this minister on this topic. As a father with a son who is four years old and for any parent with a youngster we want the ultimate protection of them. I commend the government. I think that on this one they have been listening to what the Wildrose has been saying and what opposition members have been saying. I'm very pleased to say that this is reflected in the act as well as in the amendments put forward here tonight.

To that, you know, his ministry today is one that includes the previous ministry of children's services. I'm very proud to say that a member of our caucus was minister of children's services for numerous years and did an excellent job in that area and laid the foundation for much of what's going on.

He did raise one point, though, on the question of independence. Certainly, I would welcome further comments in terms of the perception of independence as opposed to how this act and the amendments are being structured.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the amendment.

10:20

Mr. Mason: Thank you. On the amendment, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak in support of this amendment because I believe that to advance the best interests of children in government care, we need to make sure that we don't have officers and agencies of the government that are operating at crosspurposes, that are in fact operating in the same area with similar areas of responsibility and jurisdiction, because that's a formula for a lot of confusion and a lot of inadequacy in terms of effectively carrying out their respective responsibilities.

From the current bill one of the things that this amendment will change has to do with the role of the council. In section 105.73 it says:

The role of the Council is

- (a) to identify effective practices and make recommendations for the improvement of intervention services, at the direction of the Minister and in co-operation with the Department.

That's the role of the council that's created by this bill.

The functions of the advocate: section 9(2)(g) and (h) say that the advocate is to

- (g) undertake or collaborate in research relating to improving designated services or addressing the needs of children receiving those services;
- (h) provide information and advice to the Government with respect to any matter relating to the rights, interests and well-being of children.

That's essentially, Mr. Speaker, the same things, the areas of responsibility.

If you go back to the role of the council, 105.73(b) says that the role of the council is

- (b) to appoint an expert review panel to review incidents giving rise to serious injuries or deaths of children as reported by a director under section 105.74.

If you go back to the functions of the advocate in 9.2(d), the advocate is responsible to

- (d) investigate systemic issues arising from a serious injury to or the death of a child who was receiving a designated service at the time of the injury or death if, in the opinion of the Advocate, the investigation is warranted or in the public interest.

So you have the council that may under the direction of the minister investigate exactly the same incident that is being investigated by the advocate. You've set up a duality here. You've set up a redundancy that can't do anything but create confusion. And the advocate may say, "Well, I'm not going to look into this because the council is," or he or she could say, you know, "Since they've looked into it, and I don't agree with them, I'm going to come up with something different." There are all kinds of things that can go wrong. It is the role of our Assembly, I think, when we pass laws to look at them and say: "What can go wrong? If we do this, what are the consequences not necessarily likely to be, but what are the consequences potentially that arise from this?"

Potentially there is an opportunity here for a serious risk of the council and the advocate stepping on each other's feet and creating a lot of confusion. Potentially, because each thinks the other is going to act or should act, there is the potential for neither of them taking any action when they should take action.

So I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View's amendment will improve the bill. I think it will make sure that it's cleaner, that the lines of authority are clearly identified so we know just whose responsibility it is.

I don't know why, having agreed with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that the advocate should be an officer of the Legislature, the government then creates a council that's responsible to the minister unless, you know, there's just some desire to make sure that there's somebody that can do the same thing that's accountable to the minister. So it strikes me – I could be wrong – that the government just can't let go of having control, of having somebody that's accountable to the minister doing the same thing as someone who's accountable to the Legislature. And I think that it puts them both in a very difficult position, Mr. Chair, so I would urge members, actually, to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all I want to say thank you to the members in the public gallery who are here at 10:30 at night, several of them, watching democracy in action, as it were. We are, for their information, right now in the committee stage debating amendments on the Child and Youth Advocate Act. I don't know if you're able to follow along or make sense of anything we're saying here.

I am also going to speak in favour of this amendment. I appreciated the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and I think that he's putting his finger on one aspect of an issue here, which is that we have progress on one hand, which is making the Child and Youth Advocate an independent officer of this Assembly, and then we have sort of a break in that process when we have the minister able to essentially duplicate that through appointing his or her own committee.

I can see all kinds of problems with that, as previous speakers have said. That's what energizes this amendment. I don't want to repeat what others have said, but I want to draw attention to one other concern I have, which probably comes out of best wishes or goodwill here. It's my concern that we are losing track of the front-line workers in all of this. We're up at the top, giving the minister powers to create panels and committees and so on, and we're creating an officer of the Legislature, and I'm concerned that we're losing track of where the work really happens, which is the front-line workers.

In fact, it's quite possible that by appointing not just one but two new top management levels that can create all kinds of stress at the front lines, we're going to make the front-line services even more difficult. My heart goes out to that child welfare worker who is doing the best they can with very limited resources in sometimes horrendous circumstances, as this minister knows, and then has the advocate looking over one shoulder and then a ministerial appointed committee looking over the other shoulder. I think that could be quite paralyzing, and my concern is that it's going to end up with more forms and more paperwork and more reports and inadvertently, through the best of intentions, we end up actually slowing the system down or making it even more difficult for the front-line workers to do their jobs.

I wanted to get that on the record. In our good intentions here we may inadvertently cause more problems than we solve, and I think there's double that risk by creating not just the Child and Youth Advocate but continuing with this other committee of the minister.

Goodness knows those office managers and case managers who will have – what happens to them if, for example, a Child and Youth Advocate comes down with one set of recommendations and the expert panel comes down with a different one? What then? I think we need to be very careful. Obviously, I support the Child and Youth Advocate, and I commend the minister for bringing it forward, but I am concerned that we're really taking a sideways step at best by having this second structure as well.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I really appreciate the hon. member raising those remarks. I disagree with his conclusion. I'll make that statement right up front, but I believe that it's very important that we understand that people on the front line, the social workers and others who are engaged directly on the front line, have one of the toughest jobs imaginable. They have to make judgment calls using their skill and ability on a daily basis and deal with some particularly horrific situations and, of course, also deal with the concern that we have that government and society and community not interfere unnecessarily with a parent's rights as well.

10:30

There's a balance to ensure that children are protected without unduly interfering with the family but then facing some of the most horrific things you can possibly imagine happening to vulnerable children in the province. I really appreciate the hon. member raising that as a concern because I think we want to make it perfectly clear that, first of all, neither the quality council nor the advocate has a role to find liability. Liability for any incident should be found by the courts. The role of both the advocate and the council is to help improve the system, on one side, and the advocate has the further role of being able to advocate for children and for systemic change for the benefit of children.

The quality assurance council role and mandate are to review incidents and to look into situations and provide advice with respect to how we can do things better. The advocate has a broader mandate to, yes, look at serious incidents as well, with powers to investigate and the commissioner's powers, but also to advocate. I think we want to have, first and foremost, the understanding that we need to hire well-skilled people, appropriately trained people. We need to ensure that they have competent people working with them and that they have the resources necessary, and we can't be second-guessing them all the time. We have to allow them to do their job, empower them to do their job, enable them to make principled decisions, and to back them up when they do it, even in the circumstances when sometimes mistakes are made.

We do have to look at incidents and learn from them and make sure that we inform ourselves better and constantly strive to do a better job, and I think that's a very important thing to put on the table. I would not be in favour of setting up either an advocate's office or a quality assurance council if it meant that we were constantly second-guessing and riding the people who have to make these difficult decisions in the face of some of the most horrendous information you could possibly see.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Just a question for the hon. Minister of Human Services. Would it not be possible to more clearly delineate and separate the functions in this legislation? What I heard the hon. minister just say is that one has a different task than the other, but it's clear for me that the language doesn't support that. The language here has them both doing very similar functions. If there are two separate functions to be carried out and one is more appropriate with a council reporting to the minister, another an independent advocate reporting to the Legislature, then can the government not come forward with some language that would clearly delineate those separate functions and make it clear that they are separate functions?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I think that those are reasonable comments, but the only concern I would raise is that the advocate has a clear independence role that must be maintained. While it's appropriate for the minister, I think, and the advocate to have discussions from time to time, it must be clear that the advocate operates under his own volition under the mandate that's given to him by the Legislature and reports to the Legislature.

There may be times in an area, which I think the council has, which is much more restricted than that of the advocate, when the minister actually wants to engage in reviews but wants to go externally from the department to do it. It's better to have sometimes external eyes looking at something, reviewing a situation, and you need to have an appropriate body to do that. My purpose in asking that to be established under the act is to make it clear that that body is there – people don't necessarily always see ministerial orders and understand, and if they didn't read the news release, you wouldn't necessarily know it was there – and to have that body established.

That is a much closer body to the ministry and one which the minister can interact with to ask it to look at certain aspects, to investigate certain areas. It's not in the purview of the minister to go to the advocate and direct the advocate's work in any way, shape, or form. It is in the purview of the minister to ask the quality assurance council to look at certain aspects. Now, they can look at other aspects on their own volition, I believe. Certainly, they have a legislated mandate here, if it's passed, to investigate serious incidents and deaths. Yes, to a certain extent that could provide for an overlap, but I think the good people on the council and the good office of the advocate working together can determine how to appropriately manage their two mandates to ensure that they're complementary, not contradictory efforts.

Dr. Swann: Well, I guess that's precisely the question here. With similar mandates, one identified by the minister, the other identified independently by the advocate, are we not seeing a recipe for either redundancy or conflict? Can we not be more clear by establishing the quality assurance council under the auspices of the advocate so that there isn't that double direction attempting to be given to this quality assurance council?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think we've been around this base several times now. I think, obviously, we have a clear difference of opinion. In my view, what I've asked the Legislature for is a more comprehensive set of reviews. I believe it's appropriate to take the risk that there might be a divergence of viewpoint in the benefit of making sure that we've done as thorough and complete an analysis and that we do everything we can, both internally and externally, to make sure that we have the best system possible for kids.

I have faith that good people working on these sorts of things will be able to delineate rather than duplicate their efforts, delineate what things could most appropriately be done by the quality assurance council and what things are most appropriately done by the advocate. We've clearly left the hammer in the advocate's hands to say that if he doesn't think the quality assurance council has done a thorough enough review or isn't prepared to wait for what they're doing or thinks they're going in the wrong direction, as an independent officer of the Legislature he can go on and do it himself.

The advocate clearly has the final view as to whether or not he or she needs to go further, but in most circumstances, because he's a member of the assurance council and has access to everything they're doing, they can work together to set up a more collaborative framework. I'm prepared to err on the side of doing it twice as opposed to the side of not doing it at all or not doing it properly or thoroughly. I think it's that important.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to say that my concern here – and I don't think the current minister would do this, but we have to anticipate for the future – is that a minister who is less guileless than this minister might, if that minister didn't like an investigation or a report done by the Legislature's children's advocate, trigger his own inquiry to find a contradictory result. It creates the opportunity for not just legitimate confusion but to potentially interfere with the independent officer of the Legislature. I really think it's unfortunate that the minister is still unwilling to accept this amendment because I certainly think it strengthens the children's advocate.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other comments with respect to amendment A2? Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to Committee of the Whole, and I have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood next on my list.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I also have an amendment. This is my only amendment this evening to this particular act, and I'm moving it on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona. I will move that Bill 25, the Child and Youth Advocate Act, be amended by striking out section 24.

10:40

The Deputy Chair: There is an amendment being circulated. It will be amendment A3, I assume. We'll give the pages a moment to distribute it to all members.

If all members have a copy now of amendment A3 as presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on behalf of Edmonton-Strathcona, then we'll proceed. If not, signal, and we'll get a copy to you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The motion eliminates section 24, and section 24 is a transitional provision. The minister addressed this in his comments earlier, but I don't agree with him, with respect. If we're going to have an independent officer of the Legislature, it ought not to be somebody who is appointed by the government. I think that it just contradicts the basic principle behind the whole piece of legislation.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has fought long and hard for a Child and Youth Advocate that is independent of government, and we've seen over and over again, Mr. Chairman, that we need to have that strong, independent voice. It doesn't mean that the ministers and the departments have not worked very hard, to the best of their ability and sincerely and with skill, to protect children in government care. But we have seen cases where children have been injured, abused, or killed in government care, and we have seen that we haven't been able to get all of the information all of the time and get, clearly, to the bottom of it.

With something as emotional as that, it's difficult – and I understand why – to be completely objective about it when you are in part responsible for the situation that has arisen, not that you're responsible for the death. There may have been something that could have been done that wasn't done, something that was missed. All of those things happen. The advantage of having a Child and Youth Advocate who is an officer of the Legislature, as they did in every other province besides Alberta until this piece of legislation was introduced, is an important way to ensure that objectivity, that dispassionate view of a very emotional and stressful and difficult situation that could arise from time to time, that does arise from time to time. So it's important that that officer be directly responsible to the Legislature.

This transitional provision basically continues the contract that was given by the government to the person who's in that job. This has nothing to do with that person or their skills or ability. This is the principle that the Legislative Assembly, in selecting an officer, needs to have the authority to make that appointment itself. It can't really be an officer of the Legislature if it's a government appointment. Admittedly, this will disappear in four years, but that's a long time. I think we should do this right from the beginning.

Mr. Chair, I am urging members to support this amendment, which would have the effect of placing in the Assembly's hands the responsibility of conducting a search and interviews to select the person who's best suited to be an officer of the Legislature and accountable to the Legislature as opposed to someone who is hired in a position where they expect that they're going to be part of a management team within a government department. It's two different things, and the principle, I think, is important. We should take responsibility for this from the beginning so that we create a culture of independence right from the beginning, right from the get-go.

I think that pretty much concludes my comments. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

I have the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View next on my list, but I don't know if it's to the amendment or if it's to Committee of the Whole in general.

Dr. Swann: To the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: To the amendment? Proceed, and then the Minister of Human Services.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to stand and support the amendment. I guess it's self-evident that if it's going to be independent, we should have some say in the identification of this individual.

The government has finally come to the notion that this advocate must be independent of the minister and be seen to be independent not only by the families out there but by the elected representatives, who are trying to ensure the very best conditions and the very best of assessments independent of any political influence.

Well, one has to say that even as elected members we know that our term may be short lived as a result of the decisions of Albertans, so the individual who has been already identified by the government – I see no reason why we can't begin the process that the government decided to take on in choosing the most recent child advocate. That individual could certainly be considered again in the broader context of the committee that will identify the child advocate, and everyone, I think, would feel that there was a serious commitment in the short term as well the longer term to getting independence and to addressing some of the long-standing concerns of Albertans and members of this opposition, who have been calling for this for many, many years.

I certainly will be supporting this amendment. I hope other members will see the wisdom of setting the record clear and clean and identifying independently this child advocate so that everyone can go forward with confidence and support that new advocate. Now there's going to be second-guessing. There are going to be questions about the advocate's decisions and his independence. Let's set the record clean and clear and remove any doubt and second-guessing about this individual as far as his independence from the minister is concerned, because it's not there.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I certainly understand the concerns that are being brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on behalf of Edmonton-Strathcona and supported by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. However, I think there are two or three points that I did mention in my opening remarks that I want to reiterate.

First and foremost, we're not talking about a five-year period. We're not talking about a four-year period. We are talking about the three and a half years that are left in the current advocate's contract. This is somebody who went through a process, a public service objective, a public service competition, to be chosen for the job and was selected from a number of applicants for that job. It's not his fault that we're now transferring the office and making it an office of the Legislature through this act.

So, first and foremost, I think that in any aspect, unless there's a good reason, a really good reason to interfere with people's lives like that, we should be conscious of the fact that people make decisions based on promises made to them. I think that there was a fair, open, honest public service competition. This isn't a political appointment. This isn't anybody's friend. This is somebody that was hired through an appropriate public service competition.

Secondly and probably more importantly, we're talking about an office that's already established and transitioning it into the Legislative office. That requires, in my view, some consistency in leadership and approach until that office is established. That could be a year. It could be six months. It could be two years, whatever it is. But there needs to be an advocate in place to help with that transition.

10:50

Thirdly, there's absolutely nothing in the current act which prohibits the appropriate committee of the Legislature from meeting and starting a process to select a new children's advocate. There's nothing prohibiting that. Now, personally, I don't believe that's necessary right away, but it is within the purview under this act. It is within the purview of the Leg. Offices Committee to start a process to select a children's advocate.

So there's no need for this amendment to remove the transition process because if the effect of this amendment is essentially to say that there's a vacancy as soon as the office is created and that Leg. Offices should go ahead and do the selection – well, if that's the desire, they can do it. I would counsel against it. I would suggest that it's not necessary. I would suggest you let this advocate establish, and at any time if there's any question about his independence, which I can't imagine, any question about who he reported to, any question about his ability to carry out the job, Leg. Offices has the opportunity at any time to select a new advocate. That's clear in the act, and I think it's clearly within the mandate of the Legislature to do that.

I think this is presumptuous in terms of saying that we automatically assume that this advocate is not the right person for the job and won't do a good job. It's unnecessary in terms that Leg. Offices can do that job if they want, select a new advocate. It's not helpful in terms of not allowing for someone to be in place to work with the Clerk and Leg. Offices with respect to, for example, what their budget should be for the next year and those things that need to be put in place fairly quickly and in carrying out the transition. It's unfair to the individual who's in the job now.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on amendment A3.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to be able to get up at this time and discuss amendment A3. I guess in spirit I have to say that I agree with this amendment, but I guess sometimes we have to have some reality checks. It's interesting that the minister has said that, you know, well, the government has gone out and had . . .

The Deputy Chair: Sorry to interrupt, hon. member, but your microphone may be covered because we're not quite hearing you here.

Mr. Hinman: I don't think so. It's open. I don't know what else I can do. I usually am accused of speaking too loudly, not of not loudly enough. Anyway, I'll speak up a little bit more, and perhaps that will help.

The minister got up and spoke and said that it's not his fault for the contract that the government entered into. I would certainly agree with him on that fact, but he didn't go on to say whose fault it was, so I guess I'd like to point that out. It's the government's fault, and the problem here is that the government continues to put the cart ahead of the horse in so many of these pieces of legislation that it brings forward or is so concerned about fast-tracking things in the short sittings that we get this haphazard legislation that doesn't really have the openness and the accountability that Albertans would like to see.

With the amendment and with wanting it to go to a special select committee for the child advocate search, a committee I'm on, I guess I just want to point out that the majority of the members are reflected in there in how the House sits. The government has the majority of members. As much as in principle I would like to see the government do this in the proper steps, the reality is that this bill is going to go through because the government has brought it forward and they have a whip. I have yet to see in the years I've been here where a government bill gets defeated, because there isn't an open and individual vote on these things as much as the government likes to say: oh, everyone is free to vote how they feel they want to. It never happens, and it always amazes me how there's never any dissenting vote, yet we always hear of the robust discussion in caucus but no dissenting votes once we come into the House here, which I think is where that discussion really belongs.

The point on this amendment is that the government shouldn't be the one selecting the Child and Youth Advocate, yet it has. We're in the conundrum of being six months into a four-year contract and debating whether or not we want to go through the process, which I don't know will be productive because of the process that this government goes through, whether it's in the select committee or here in the House. Like I say, as much as I in spirit agree with this and that the government, I guess, had the foresight to have waited till now and even had a temporary person or something that could do it, I just don't want to upset the apple cart now even though it's ahead of the horse and say: well, let's open the process all back up and start over. So as much as I wish the government would have gotten it right, I would rather, I guess, go along with what we've got now than to switch here next month and say that we need to start over. But that is where it should be.

With that, I'll sit down and listen to what the minister or the mover has to say on the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other people who wish to speak to amendment A3?

If not, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Back to Committee of the Whole. Did anyone else wish to speak to Bill 25 at the Committee of the Whole stage? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I have one more amendment to present to try to strengthen this bill. Obviously, we believe that the minister and the government have moved some on this issue, and we're pleased with some aspects, especially the independence of the Child and Youth Advocate.

I'll circulate amendment 2, I will call it.

The Deputy Chair: It will be called amendment A4, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: A4. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll give the pages a moment to distribute amendment A4 as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and then we'll get on with the debate.

Hon. members, if the circulation is complete or nearly complete, we'll proceed with the debate. If somebody hasn't yet received a copy and wishes to, please signal. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to continue with the debate on amendment A4.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm moving that Bill 25, Child and Youth Advocate Act, be amended in section 26 by striking out subsection (4). The rationale behind this, of course, is that since our amendment to remove the council for quality assurance was voted down, we propose the council's role at least be limited to providing strategic child intervention advice to the minister. We envision this looking something like the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness, which advises the minister on homelessness. The design is to minimize conflict, redundancy, or a watering down, again, of the separate but somewhat equivalent roles now of the advocate and the council.

11:00

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Services on amendment A4.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I guess it will probably go without saying that I would ask the House not to accept this amendment. By virtue of the amendment, what would in effect happen is that we would take the publicly directed process in the act for setting up a council for quality assurance and some things that the public can easily look at and see in terms of what it does, what its mandate is, what's expected of it, and how it reports in a way that is clear so that the public gets reports from it and that they do a public report, not submit a report to the minister for tabling, and that would leave the status quo.

The status quo is that we have a quality council which is appointed by ministerial order, on which the public doesn't know its mandate other than what was in the news release, doesn't understand how it reports or how it engages, and doesn't have the benefit of understanding that there is this thorough analysis by expert panels of what's going on other than from time to time, as has happened in the past, where the minister might say: well, I will have that referred to the Health Quality Council.

Here we have a publicly established, publicly reporting council with an expert opportunity to engage in review of serious incidents and deaths of children in care, to assist in improvement of the ministry's mandate and role, and to make sure that what we're doing is in the best interests of kids and that we constantly have a view for quality assurance with external eyes on it. We have that, established recently. What we have now, though, is not in the public eye, and the public doesn't have an ability to look at its role and mandate. By accepting this amendment, in my view, it wouldn't be deleting the need or the opportunity for such a council to exist. It would simply take away its public establishment and its public reporting.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other speakers to amendment A4? If no other speakers wish to speak on A4, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The question has been called, then, on amendment A4 as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Back to Committee of the Whole in general. Are there any other speakers to Bill 25 at committee? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I get up with a little bit of hesitation as this has had an impact in my riding. It's one of those questions where people have come and asked: why? The Premier: one of her promises during her campaign was a children's serious incident review team. I can't help but ask, you know: is this the response to the serious incident review team, that we now have a child advocate and we are trying to mesh the two together when, in fact, we haven't addressed, I guess, the problem? That's one of the questions, you know. Is this child advocate going to go back and review some of the serious incidents and especially one of those here in the province that caused the tragic death of a young child that went through a very painful 60-day process? This government failed to respond and protect an individual that needed protection though day after day someone should have stepped in.

Again, after a one-year review of it, never has anything come of the incident with Baby Elizabeth. When the paper finally broke the story after the ruling came out that it wasn't an accident, that it was abuse that caused the death and that it was a homicide, this government now seems to be responding to that with this bill. It's a great concern for me in the way that they're addressing this. It isn't adequate, and I don't know what they're going to do, like I say, to do the serious incident review.

Just for the record, Mr. Chair, I want to go over a little bit of the process with Baby Elizabeth and the 60 days that led up to the homicide and how this government seemed to fail to respond to this very serious incident. Again, it's one of the questions in Bill 25, and I don't know if it's addressed yet – and maybe it is – the proper sharing of information and, again, an individual who takes charge.

In early March 2010 Baby Elizabeth was taken to a drop-in clinic because she was fussy, and she was prescribed some medicine for an ear infection. Two to four days later, while babysitting, Elizabeth's paternal grandmother, Francisca, notices that the baby is in pain and asks the mother to take her to the hospital. The child is taken to the hospital, saying that her baby is fussy, and doctors discover that the baby's leg has been recently broken. The injury is recorded as a toddler fracture, which at that point, five days in, is certainly something that isn't unusual. Again, as the minister has been very eloquent in saying, we don't want to interfere, yet when the signs become evident, we need to step in.

On day 13, at a follow-up appointment with an orthopaedic surgeon, a doctor discovers that the other leg has recently been broken. No one contacts child and family services. On March 15 Elizabeth's grandparents call the social services response team with concerns about the baby's unexplained broken legs. The history on the file of the family shows that there's been a history of problems there. The family also calls Crime Stoppers to report a suspicion of abuse and neglect.

On day 14 CFSA supervisors assign the case as an emergency investigation. This is 14 days in. A CFSA assessor interviews one of Elizabeth's half-siblings at school, then interviews the mother and another child at their Forest Lawn rental home. The other caregiver is interviewed, and a safety plan is made, allowing only adults to look after the baby, not the other children in the home.

On day 15 a CFSA assessor attends the baby's medical appointment with the mother. The assessor speaks with the police child abuse unit, but with no complaint of inflicted injury no police investigation is initiated. On day 20 or 21 the assessor attempts to have the child examined by an Alberta Children's hospital child abuse specialist.

On day 22 the assessor talks with the orthopaedic surgeon, who makes a referral to the hospital's child abuse specialist. A follow-up appointment is booked for six days later. Unbelievable. Here is a child with two broken legs, they have the experts coming in, and it takes six days.

Day 28. Mother and baby attend an appointment with the child abuse specialist, where a full skeletal exam and blood work are ordered on Elizabeth. After learning of the family history, the specialist advises the CFSA assessor to call police. A detective from the police child abuse unit is assigned to the case.

Day 38 now. We've jumped 10 more days down. Skeletal examination results are received back from the hospital from the child abuse specialist.

On day 42, four days later, the specialist calls CFSA with the news that the child has two newly identified broken bones on her arms. The injuries are dated. After an internal meeting the CFSA assessor contacts the mother and the police and the child abuse detective.

11:10

On day 43 the CFSA assessor meets with the mother to discuss changing the safety plan so that she is Elizabeth's sole caregiver. On day 45 police detectives interview the mother and the child's older half-siblings.

On day 48 the CFSA assessor, a police detective, and a hospital child abuse specialist meet to discuss the case. No notes are recorded. This is the part, Mr. Chair, that is so frustrating to the grandparents, who initiated this. They had offered to look after this child. There was a history of abuse in the family, and the paternal grandmother said that, yes, she would look after this child. They had this meeting, and there were no notes ever kept in that meeting. You have to ask: why? How did they have a meeting, and who were they trying to protect? This child or themselves?

This is why it's critical that we get a child advocate, so that these things can be addressed in an orderly manner and a time-efficient manner. It is so heart-wrenching for this family to have gone through 48 days at this point, with this child going from being jovial, happy, easy to get along with to crying, fussy, with multiple fractures.

On days 49 through 58 the CFSA assessor has three telephone conversations with the mother. On day 61, again, three days later, Elizabeth is found unresponsive at the home by the police. She is rushed to hospital, where she is pronounced dead at 4:41 a.m. Her death is initially recorded as accidental. An autopsy later determined that she died from asphyxia.

Mr. Chair, the story of Baby Elizabeth is unacceptable. The family is still very concerned that nothing has happened there. It's interesting that earlier the minister in speaking said that liability should be found in the courts. This family has asked and asked for an investigation, and an internal investigation has not ever produced anything on why there were no responses, on why the team didn't work. There have been allegations that they have a quota. There have been allegations that, you know, they've had other incidents.

One of the questions that the family has asked over and over again is to have a public review of this and to make it public. Again, we understand that you don't need to bring the names forward, but with the previous 10 children that have been withdrawn and taken into government custody, what were the triggering points, and what caused them to take a child into custody to protect that child? This is a clear case where, in looking back with 20/20 hindsight, you can only ask one question: why was nothing done? We need to have the comparison.

With this Bill 25 are we actually going to address and will the child advocate go back and look at something like this and find where the breakdown was, and are we going to fix the system so that we protect children in the future? There's nothing more heart-wrenching than to have one of these precious little ones that are being beaten and abused – and everybody seems to know that – yet no one takes action to do anything. It's just wrong, Mr. Chair. How can we live in a society today where we say that we're so civilized and that we're so politically correct, yet we lose the life of a precious little one like this over, it just seems like, bureaucracy, that it's not my job or that it's someone else's job, the lack of communication, not being able to bring people together immediately?

Going back to the Premier's statement that she wants a children's serious incident review team, is that another broken promise and we're just going with this new bill, or is the child advocate going to be given that job not only to be able to have a public inquiry or whatnot but to be able to bring in a serious incident review team that is serious about reviewing something in a timely manner and not letting days turn into weeks and turn into a couple of months?

Anyway, we certainly have a big hole here in this area. I hope that when this bill is passed, the new Child and Youth Advocate will look back at this, that it will be made public so that we know what triggered, what caused these problems and why there was no response. That's the hard part. I think that most people in here have seen that video in China where that little child got run over and 18 individuals walked by and didn't do anything. How callous can we become as human beings when it's not our responsibility? I'm ashamed to say that when I see what happened here – here are specialists that are all supposed to be concerned about a child, yet

60 days went by with multiple broken limbs and nothing done, Mr. Chair.

I do with all my heart hope that this bill will set it up so that in the future we respond in a quick and efficient manner. I couldn't agree more with the minister that we don't want to infringe on a family's rights, but when this type of abuse has taken place and that question is there, especially when it comes from family – this is the grandmother who looked after this child often and offered. Children's services called and said, "Would you take this child if we were to remove it?" and she said yes. Yet no action was taken when all of the signs showed that there was a problem there. Now the other three children after a year have been taken from the custody of that parent.

It's just disheartening to see something like this happening in our province, and I truly hope that Bill 25 will address that, though we have many concerns, and we're not sure that it really is going to be definitive and have that emergency response team. Again, the distance, we hope, will be presented there, that the minister won't somehow be overseeing this, as it seemed to appear in the case with Baby Elizabeth.

With that, I'll let others speak on this bill, and hopefully we'll do better in the future, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers at Committee of the Whole for Bill 25? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to indicate that despite some failures in the bill, some confusion, which have been the subject of some amendments tonight and which I regret were not accepted by the government despite their eminent good sense, this is a good change. This is, in fact, change that we have been pushing for and fighting for for a number of years. I'm pleased to see that the government has accepted and adopted the principle, which has been fought for by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona quite relentlessly, that the children's advocate should be an officer of the Legislative Assembly and not someone who is part of the management team of the minister of children's services or the minister of whatever the department is called at the time.

I think that this is a very good change. I'm looking forward to having a children's advocate that can strengthen our protection of children, that can strengthen our awareness of the issues faced by children in care and by the people who are there to enforce and protect them. I expect that this legislation will save lives, improve the quality of life of children who are in care, and make a difference for people.

I urge all members to support this legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I realize that there is one other question that I failed to get on the record, that, hopefully, the minister will answer. I realize I certainly have no expertise in this area, just a concern. My understanding is that B.C.'s advocate was originally able to access cabinet documents and report on problems that she found on how cabinet was handling things. Is Alberta's advocate going to be able to access those documents so that we don't have to go forward to learn? We've got incidents now that we need to go back to, that we can learn from. In this bill will the child advocate have that authority to go back and access all those records so that we can actually learn from our mistakes rather than having to repeat them in the new position that's been brought forward?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are a number of items that the hon. member has raised in his previous comments and now in these comments, which I won't dwell on at length. Obviously, the situation with Baby Elizabeth was a very tragic situation. The least we can do is learn the most we can from that incident and make sure that we implement systemic and individual improvements to ensure that those sorts of situations don't happen again. That's the least we can do, arising out of that very tragic incident. There was, in fact, a serious incident review team put in place and a report from that serious incident review. Many of the recommendations have already been acted upon, and I hope that we can continue to learn.

11:20

The purpose of setting up the quality council and making it a statutory council as opposed to simply a ministerial order council is to make it clear that those serious incidents and deaths that happen need to be reviewed immediately, responsively, and we need to learn as much as we can. They should never happen. But let's face it; these are children at risk, and we will continue to have incidents. We need to do everything we can to find ways to improve the system so that we don't have incidents. I want to learn as much as we possibly can, and I think that process has been undertaken. There's nothing in the act which stops the advocate from using past circumstances to enhance his advocacy and look for opportunities for learning from them and to advise us as well on those circumstance.

I addressed the hon. member's concerns in my opening remarks, so I won't repeat them all. I would just asked him to go back and read that. Then if he wants to have a discussion about it at another time, I'd be more than happy to do it. But I did go through sort of a litany of the authority that the advocate has under the public commissioner's act and the opportunity that they have access to cabinet documents in that circumstance. I would indicate to the member . . . [interjection] Well, no, it doesn't have complete and unfettered access to cabinet documents. There are very few circumstances, in fact none that I'm aware of, where there is complete and unfettered access to cabinet documents. They do have the power to compel evidence and ask for information, and if it's appropriate to be released, then the decision can be made to release it.

What the hon. member indicated in his remarks was, in my view, a little bit of confusion because cabinet documents would not deal with the incidents that the hon. member is referring to. Obviously, the minister would get advice with respect to it if there is a serious incident or a death of a child in care, but under this act the information also will go to the advocate, obviously, and to the quality assurance council for their automatic review. They won't have to wait for any direction to review. [interjection] If there's information with respect to an incident with respect to a child in care, a serious incident or a death of a child in care, it automatically goes to the quality assurance council under this act and, obviously, also goes to the child's advocate, and then the appropriate investigations will automatically happen. They don't need to mine paper in order to find incidents. Those incidents are by law under this act reported to them.

Mr. Hinman: I appreciate the minister helping me clarify that, but the point that I was trying to make is that this information has already happened in the past. Is the new child advocate going to be able to go back and review what the minister received? I mean, to put it bluntly, Mr. Chair, the family feels that there had to have been political interference or something because common sense says that there should have been an action. To help clarify that, it would be good to know that the child advocate can go back and look at those documents, and if there was something, they would bring it forward and show it.

It's not about going forward, as the minister has talked; it's going back. Is this child advocate going to have access to those briefings and the information that was given to the minister and if there's anything from the minister to the former child advocate, I guess, at that time?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. minister, do you wish to respond?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think that's a very troubling allegation, actually. What I would say to the hon. member is that there was a very serious incident. It begged a thorough response. It got a thorough response. There was a team appointed to investigate it, and that team investigated and reported. The Child and Youth Advocate can continue to look at that circumstance if he wishes. It's certainly in his power to do so to see that everything that can be learned from it has been learned from it.

But I would say two things to the hon. member. First and foremost, again, as I said in response to Edmonton-Riverview when I thanked him for his comments about the work that's done on the front lines, I don't think there's any front-line worker who would put up with the type of interference that the hon. member is talking about. People might have made bad calls. There may have been a failure to exchange information appropriately. Those things we need to learn from and understand. But to suggest that there was some interference in them doing their work would be sinful.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Hinman: Maybe interference isn't the correct word.

Again, I haven't read that report that came out. Whether it's case overload, I mean, when you go through this case, there are just problems there that shouldn't have happened. The family is extremely disappointed in the way it was handled. Like I say, they feel that there needs to be more information given out as to how no decision was come to over 60 days, you know, just the honesty in saying, "Look, there was case overload, and they couldn't address it for 10 days though it was critical," and "Look, there are these other ones that we saved." I mean, this is a very serious, tragic incident, yet to the family's knowledge there is no explanation. Their question is: how was there not a decision made? Something went wrong, yet that's never come out. That's why looking back is so important for them to understand and to learn more and, again, to have that open vetting, I guess, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 25 as amended?

If not, please be reminded that the committee has already voted on amendment A1 and accepted it.

[The clauses of Bill 25 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Those opposed? That's carried.

Bill 26
Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Indeed, it is my pleasure to rise to speak in support of Bill 26, the Alberta Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011. Let us remember what the act is intended to do. It's to make our roads safer, save lives and reduce injuries, and change behaviours. Our approach focuses on three main areas: targeting repeat offenders, building on existing penalties in .05 to .08, and tightening rules for new drivers, which will be incorporated under regulations.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the toughest sanctions bar none are drivers with a blood-alcohol content of over .08. Probably the biggest change relates to licence suspensions for those over .08 until their court case is resolved. There are also big changes in the mandatory interlock. This has been proven to be successful in changing behaviours. The interlock system will be implemented for one year for the first offence, three years for the second offence, and five years for the third offence. Also included are vehicle seizures: three days for the first offence, seven days for the second offence, and seven days for the third offence.

11:30

Mr. Chairman, I want to also stress and suggest to you that I believe that it's very mandatory that we monitor the records of individuals for 10 years. We need to get a long-term behaviour change, and that's how we're going to try to address or partly try to address the repeat offenders. Our approach to repeat offenders favours monitoring, education, enforcement, and addictions assessment, all designed to help change behaviours. It has been proven that consequences need to be immediate and meaningful to change behaviours. In Alberta those consequences will be paid for by the driver and not the taxpayer. Also, studies show that no single approach changes behaviour, and that's why we're acting on many fronts.

As well, Mr. Chairman, one of the areas is building on existing sanctions for drivers with blood alcohol of .05 to .08. Right now these drivers are given a 24-hour suspension with no consequence for repeat offenders regardless of how many times they have committed. This legislation proposes that the first offence would be a three-day licence suspension and a three-day vehicle seizure. The second offence would be a 15-day licence suspension and a seven-day vehicle seizure and for the third offence a 30-day licence suspension and a seven-day vehicle seizure. Very importantly, on the second offence education courses kick in. Not only is this supporting the existing need and practice to keep drivers off the road at .05; it is also about prevention and early intervention.

I would suggest that the argument of roadside justice is puzzling to me because that's simply not the case. Law enforcement officers can issue a 24-hour licence suspension now. They also currently have the ability to issue penalties at the roadside; for example, a ticket for failing to stop. These are not new powers. I need to be very clear with you that the .05 to the .08 are not new powers. I would also say that if an individual gets stopped and a police officer looks at them and feels that they are impaired and they are asked to blow, what happens is that if they blow over .08, they are in a criminal act, and if they blow between .05 and .08, they will be in the newer legislation.

The penalties are not based on an officer's judgment. They are based on calibrated equipment, on the basis of a scientific reading for the same device that is used now. Anyone can ask for a second test from a second device, Mr. Chairman. We've learned from B.C. We already have full, fair, and just opportunity for independent review.

Forty years of research, and I want to say solid research, since 1991 on .05. I'll quote three different findings: Chamberlain and Soloman; Moskowitz and Fiorentino; Howat, Sleet, and Smith. At .05 a person is simply not fit to drive. Skills deteriorate with very low levels of alcohol, as do vision, steering, braking, information processing, and divided attention. One review showed that alcohol impairs some driving skills starting at any significant departure from zero, and I stress to you, Mr. Chairman, that's "some." Also, at .05 the majority of experimental studies reported significant impairment. So .05 is a realistic statutory level at which most people's driving performance is impaired.

This one is important, Mr. Chairman. The Traffic Injury Research Foundation of Canada found that drivers with a blood-alcohol content of .05 to .08 were seven times more likely to be involved in a fatal crash than drivers with zero blood alcohol. I mean, we can't argue with those facts and those outcomes. Jurisdictions which have gone from .08 to .05 have seen 20 to 40 per cent less fatalities.

Mr. Chairman, let's be very clear. We are not criminalizing .05 to .08. It's absolutely not the case. There are no criminal charges, no fines, no demerits. The Supreme Court of Canada in 2009 acknowledged both the rights of the provinces to legislate in this area and how the carnage impacts matters within provincial jurisdiction: health, highways, vehicle insurance, and property damage.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say to you that I have met with the hosting industry. I have met with the hotel industry. We've consulted with the Restaurant and Foodservices Association. It was one party at the table. The restaurant association, in particular, had two major concerns. One of them was the 10-year monitoring. I want to say that I explained that this is how we need to get to repeat offenders. The other concern that they had is being different than B.C., and we assured them that it was very different than B.C. We have an independent appeal, a tribunal for appeal. Also, we don't have fines.

We talked to industry about working together to educate consumers. This is about safety, plain and simple. We are not advising Albertans not to drink. We're not saying that you can't have a glass of wine over the course of dinner. Our position has been clear. It is no different than what was there before, but the penalties are different. We are saying: don't drink and drive. We aren't saying the amounts. It's not different; .05 is nothing new for the customer.

Industry is an active partner in many initiatives to support safe alcohol service in Alberta's bars and restaurants. For example, to date over 140,000 Albertans working in licensed premises have been trained on responsible alcohol service, including how to identify and not serve individuals who appear intoxicated. This is mandatory training for anyone working in a licensed premise. We want people to think ahead before they make a decision that they will regret.

National and international evidence shows that monetary penalties are not effective for this offence. There are no revenues to the province. There are no fines and no demerits, as I said before.

Also, provinces cannot regulate on vehicle standards. Transport Canada does.

Mr. Chairman, our work is based on a solid, growing body of research, and whatever the numbers or configurations of statistics, all of the research tells us one thing. Impaired driving causes deaths on our roads. The research tells us how to change behaviours for the long term. It's swift consequences, early intervention, education, and monitoring and progressive penalties.

The changes to impaired driving involve an integrated approach, which balances enforcement with education and prevention, while maintaining a process to address appeals. Let us not lose sight of what we are trying to accomplish. We are working to prevent alcohol-related collisions and deaths, and I will not apologize for making our roads safer.

Mr. Chairman, I do have an amendment, and I believe it's at the table. I'm not sure if you're going to call it A1.

11:40

The Deputy Chair: Yes, hon. member, we'll call it A1 as soon as I receive it.

Mr. Danyluk: I can wait for a minute to have it passed around.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Here it comes.

Mr. Danyluk: Would you like me to speak to it, or shall we wait?

The Deputy Chair: Let's give it a moment to be circulated. Thank you.

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. No problem.

The Deputy Chair: Is there anyone who still wishes a copy of amendment A1?

If not, then please proceed, hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that we are proposing a very minor amendment to Bill 26. Actually, it does not change the language but changes the spacing and the indentation to clarify the intent.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 26 adds subsection (6) to section 88 of the Traffic Safety Act. This subsection outlines the appeals available to drivers at roadsides. There are two possible avenues of appeal. Subsection (6)(a) is to go to the police station for a breathalyzer test on an evidentiary device, and (6)(b) is to take a second roadside breathalyzer for a second approved screening device.

The clause that begins with "the purpose of which is to show" was intended to apply to both (a) and (b). It specifies that the appeal is successful if the second test is below .05. However, it is printed as part of (b) only, so the amendment makes it clear that it applies to both appeal methods. We ask all members to support that decision, please. It's just, basically, a clerical error.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Comments with respect to amendment A1? Are there any speakers to amendment A1?

Dr. Taft: I think we should all congratulate this minister on making what is probably the most minor amendment that we've ever seen in the history of this Assembly. I didn't know it was possible to make an amendment without even changing a word, but I guess it is. I'm okay with that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other speakers to amendment A1? If not, then I'll call the question if you're ready.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Going back to Committee of the Whole on Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a great pleasure to speak to Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, which is about proposing changes to the Traffic Safety Act. This act is about making our roads safer from drunk drivers. The main points in the bill are that drivers who will be charged over the legal limit of .08 will have their licence suspended at least until they have their say in the courts and, the second one, that drivers blowing between .05 to .08 will have their licence suspended for a first offence, as the minister pointed out, for three days, 15 days, and 30 days.

First of all, I want to say that I support the bill. As whatever will make our roads safer, save us the pain, the misery, and the carnage on our roads, I think we should all support that effort. I fully support what the minister is trying to achieve by bringing in this Bill 26.

Recently it caused lots of pain in Grande Prairie, and just the day before yesterday there were, I believe, three deaths in Beaumont. It is the innocent people, Mr. Chair, that get killed. Innocent people suffer, and the drunk drivers most of the time walk away. In my personal experience, back in 1971 I believe, I was rear-ended. I was just waiting to make a left-hand turn on 17th Avenue and 15th Street S.W. The guy was drunk. He rear-ended me, and my car was on fire. I didn't know what happened. All of a sudden other people came and pulled me out of the car. I could have been dead myself. I could have been cooked alive in the car. So I've got personal experience. We were also victims of a guy who was drunk who ran over my father's car, and he killed five people, including my father. I know the pain it causes the families. You know, it's lots of money: insurance, property, health care.

Mr. Chair, in 2008 the stats, you know, were that 60 per cent of people were not drinking and that 22.5 per cent of people were involved in fatal crashes. Yeah, we see this. Although the drinking and driving accident numbers have been coming down, still I would say that even one death by a drunk driver is one too many on the roads. In Alberta our drinking and driving accident rates have been kind of higher than in the other jurisdictions, and this is a very, very serious cause for concern. We should all as Albertans be taking very, very seriously the drunk drivers on the road. We should let Albertans know that drinking and driving will not be tolerated on our roads. It is not acceptable to be on the roads drinking and driving.

As we have seen in B.C., from the latest stats, for the year ending September 30, there were 68 alcohol-related motor vehicle deaths across B.C. They were averaging about 113 such deaths in the province in, like, the previous five years. With the new law in B.C. – we have only been talking about B.C.'s stats – it goes on to prove that the law is working. It is the enforcement part, I believe. That's why, you know, the accidents have come down. Right now our police have the power to have those 24-hour suspensions. They can suspend a licence for 24 hours. According to today's paper the VPD didn't have to hire more police officers to enforce this law. Even the Calgary police are saying that they would need to hire more officers to enforce this proposal if it becomes the law.

11:50

What I kind of struggle with, you know, is why our drinking and driving accidents are way up there when we have those 24-hour suspensions. We should have maybe better enforcement. I don't know what's happening out there. Maybe 24-hour suspensions are not being enforced that much.

When I go back to the distracted driving legislation, there were lots of accidents caused by people talking on their cell or grooming or whatever, and we were all concerned that with the distracted driving legislation, you know, lots of people would be getting tickets. The same thing with the seat belt law. But Albertans are law-abiding citizens, and whatever law or legislation we bring in, they will abide by the law.

With this legislation, too, I kind of find that I've been struggling because the stats say that only 2.2 per cent of people who have been in the limit of .05 to .08 are involved in drinking and driving accidents and that 98 per cent of Albertans who had a couple of drinks coming home from work or just a social drink have been pretty responsible drivers. You know, I'm struggling to support this legislation. Just because 2 per cent of Albertans who have been in that .05 to .08 zone, that limit, have been in accidents, we are going to be penalizing, I think, 98 per cent of Albertans who have been very responsible drivers on the roads.

The minister is saying that we are trying to change the culture. You know, if you bring in this legislation and we pass the law, then maybe it will change the culture. It remains to be seen. We make the laws, and people think: oh, I will be in trouble with the law if I break the law. Maybe it will change the culture, but I think that with this legislation we will penalizing the 98 per cent, the responsible Albertans that I was talking about.

The restaurants and the hospitality industry, too, are concerned about their business dropping and that there may be layoffs in the industry, and that may affect lots of families, too. There will have to be, you know, some kind of an adjustment period there. Who knows how much effect passing this law is going to have on the hospitality industry? I have been getting e-mails to my office from the restaurants down close to my house. My house is close to Barlow Trail, and there are lots of restaurants on Barlow Trail. They have been saying that their business will be hurt if we pass this legislation.

I don't know what the government is going to do to educate Albertans on this. I don't know how we're going to bring this awareness: it's not okay to drink and drive; be responsible. I don't know where the responsibility line is that we're going to draw. Definitely it has been proven in B.C. that it has hurt the hospitality business there. It came down 21 per cent, and it came back up 10 per cent. Whatever we do here, we should be, I think, keeping the hospitality industry in mind as well.

You know, I'm really struggling, like I said before, with this legislation, between supporting and opposing this legislation. I don't know what the government is going to do to address the concerns of the hospitality industry. The minister said that we had the consultation with the hospitality industry and that they were okay with it.

The AMA, you know, says that they are supporting this legislation. I think they claim to have 700,000 members. I'm a member of the AMA, and I never heard from them with regard to whether I am for this legislation or against this legislation.

Dr. Swann: That's the Motor Association, not the Medical Association.

Mr. Kang: No. That's the Alberta Motor Association. There was something I got in the mail.

Then the penalties. The minister said that it's not a cash cow for the government, but there will be indirect penalties for the drivers who will have their licences suspended and their cars seized. It's going to cost them maybe 500, 600 bucks just for being responsible drinking drivers. [interjection] Well, you know, people do it now. They have a drink with their dinner, and then they're driving home, and they're not impaired. They are under the legal drinking limit. They are not legally impaired. You know, that's another problem I have. Maybe we should have the law changed, and we should drop the legal limit to .05.

Those are the issues I'm having with this. You know, there are constitutional issues. If a person is charged, his licence will be suspended until he goes before a judge. I don't know how this is going to stand up in the courts under the Charter of Rights because of the presumption of innocent until you are proven guilty. I don't know how this is going to stand up. Our courts are already clogged up, and this will put more burden on our legal system.

You know, I'm sure this bill is going to save lives. It will give the police the tools to make our roads safer. It may change the attitudes about drinking and driving although, like I said before, accidents have been coming down, and the rate of drunk-driving charges has dropped by close to two-thirds in the past 20 years. Still, too many people are dying, and Alberta has the second-highest rate of charges in the country. Those are my concerns with this bill, Mr. Minister.

I remember that before the no-smoking ban came into effect, you know, the hospitality industry was concerned that their business would suffer badly. There was a transition period. I think their business came back up. After we pass this legislation, maybe the people will be – I don't know how people are going to adjust to this new legislation about having a social drink. Those moms going to the hockey game or pops going to the hockey games or the guy who is driving home from work: they want to have a drink with their buddies on Friday or whatever.

Those are my concerns. With that, thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Transportation wishes to comment briefly on the previous comments.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to talk about a couple of things that were mentioned, and that's the responsible drinking and driving. Please be very clear that the criteria, if I can say that, for drinking and driving of .05 to .08 have not changed. Right now you would get a 24-hour suspension. The penalties that we're asking to put in is where there would be the change, but the criteria are not any different.

12:00

Mr. Chairman, I want to say to you that when the hon. member talked about a cash cow, still costing people to get their vehicle back, I have to emphasize again to you that they are driving impaired. It's not as if they're not drinking and driving. They are drinking and driving, and there's a penalty in place right now.

You also made mention that we would punish 98 per cent, you know, that shouldn't be punished. Mr. Chairman, they're still drinking and driving, and they would still be under the same penalties that we have today.

You talked also about the hospitality industry. Mr. Chairman, I have met with the hospitality industry. I have met with the hospitality industry a second time. I will be very clear that the hospitality industry looked at a couple of different things. One of the concerns they had is that they thought we should leave the 24-hour suspension in and then have three other stages, so have a four-stage system. They thought that would address it.

When we met also with a group of hotels and restaurants, I mean, there was no doubt that one of their main concerns was that 10 years was too long to hold an impaired driving on your record. I think that's one of the most important parts of the bill, that we can look at repeat offenders. That is the hardest part for us, the repeat offenders. It's so critical. We need to develop that history, and people need to know that we are serious.

I look at it that there is no excuse for drinking and driving. As I said before, I mean, I don't apologize for individuals that are drinking and driving. I truly believe that if there is anything that we can do as citizens, as parents, for our children, I think it's critical that we try to make some changes, whether the changes are in culture, whether the changes are real.

Also, Mr. Chairman, please know that there are eight other jurisdictions that we have looked at. You mentioned B.C. That's one of them. We've looked at other jurisdictions. Saskatchewan is at .04. We didn't feel that we should go to .04. We stayed the same so that if individuals understand what .05 is right now, there is no change. They don't have to learn something different. There's no change in the law, but in the penalty there is. I say to you again that the .05 to .08 is the small part. It is the repeat offenders and the .08 with the interlock system as well as the suspension of licences as well as the seizure of vehicles.

Mr. Chairman, just a last comment. You know, one comment struck me that the hon. member made, and maybe I heard it wrong. It was the discussion about impacting people. I would say to you that the impact is on families. We've seen all of that in the news. I need to stress to you again, if I can, that this is not about changing areas; it is putting more penalties in.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, did you wish to comment as the critic? Okay.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the debate that we're having tonight. It's a good debate. There are some good points on both sides. But I can't help, hon. minister – and I know your intentions are good. You're a good man, and you certainly want folks to be safe on the road. I truly believe that. But this discussion is quickly turning into the same type of discussion that we as Albertans had with the federal government with regard to the long gun registry. That's what this is sounding like.

The reason I say that is because, obviously, the gun registry came out of that horrific shooting at the Polytechnique in Montreal. After that there was this outcry to do something about it: we've got to do something about it so that this heinous type of crime and this heinous happening doesn't occur again. So the federal Liberal government brought in the long gun registry. I hope that most of us or, certainly, most of the members on that side of the house – and I'm not saying that you all feel this way, but I would say that probably the majority of you do – would pretty clearly say that the long gun registry didn't keep people from being murdered or stop shooting sprees from happening in Canada.

It was an initiative that essentially targeted the wrong people. It didn't do anything to curb crime. It didn't address the problem. It was a knee-jerk reaction that had unintended consequences for people that would never cause crime. Of course, it was gun owners and taxpayers who had to foot the bill of $2 billion for a gun registry that didn't do anything to curb crime.

These are the same arguments that I'm hearing from over there. It's the exact same argument. I know it's well intended, but this law is not going to save lives. I'm convinced that it will not save lives. It will not do anything to save lives, and I'll tell you why I say that. I absolutely am convinced that when we see these pictures, these horrendous pictures – there was another crash over the weekend with a drunk driver that killed three people. Terrible. We see what happened in Grande Prairie, the awful, tragic circumstances and tragic ending to those poor boys' lives. Everyone in here agrees that we need to end drinking and driving as quickly as possible for this reason. But think of what you're proposing here. Is this really getting at the problem? Statistically is it really getting at the problem? Or are we doing something here that isn't going to solve the problem, and we should instead be looking at a totally different way of addressing drunk driving deaths and injuries?

I would say that we should absolutely be looking in another spot. There was a study done – hold on; I'm going to get my notes together here real quick – by the Canadian transport association. It's called the Alcohol-Crash Problem in Canada: 2008, prepared for the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators and Transport Canada, which, of course, is the federal ministry, by the Traffic Injury Research Foundation. This was in December 2008 but given and presented in December 2010, so just late last year. The figures for this came from Statistics Canada, the CANSIM database and Juristat, so these are pretty ironclad statistics. This is what the statistics say, okay? For 2008 61.3 per cent of all fatally injured drivers had a zero blood-alcohol level. That makes sense. Thankfully, most people on the road are not intoxicated, so obviously there's going to be a lot of accidents that – okay. It makes sense. Of the fatally injured drivers who had been drinking, the remaining 39 per cent or so, 85 per cent exceeded the legal Criminal Code blood-alcohol limit of .08. The remaining 15 per cent were within the legal limit.

For all provinces the largest proportion of drinking driver fatalities is at blood-alcohol levels greater than .08. If you break down the BAC, blood-alcohol content, levels further, most fatally injured drivers who were tested had BAC levels more than double the legal limit. In Canada 22.6 per cent of fatally injured drivers had blood-alcohol levels greater than .16, with 10.3 per cent from .081 to .16. Get this: only 2.2 per cent had blood-alcohol levels from .05 to .08. For the provinces this pattern also held, with only a small per cent of driver fatalities in the .05 to .08 blood-alcohol level. In fact, the statistics show that more people were killed by those who blew from zero to the .05 level – more people were killed by that group – than the group from .05 to .08.

12:10

Now, statistics are funny things. I know that these are snapshots in time and all that sort of thing, and I understand that. But one has got to look at this and say that if all but 2 per cent of drivers were injured by people – outside of the ones that were injured by people who had a zero blood-alcohol, for the remaining. To say that such a small fraction of those were actually caused by those blowing .05 to .08, one has to question if we are trying to punish the wrong group here. One really has to question that. What are the unintended consequences?

Just like with the gun registry there are unintended consequences. There were unintended consequences for taxpayers and unintended consequences for gun owners. So too here. What are the unintended consequences? Well, (a) are we going to cause a situation where it's easier for police to use the administrative penalties under this law and then walk away from someone who maybe should be fully charged and investigated, blowing .08 and above? Police have discretion to do certain things. In those borderline cases do they use their discretion in both those administrative penalties and walk away when really they should be throwing the book? Maybe.

What about the hospitality industry, which has been devastated by the new B.C. law? I'll find it for another time up, but it's something like a 30 per cent decrease in sales for the hospitality industry in B.C.

An Hon. Member: Forty.

Mr. Anderson: It was almost 40 per cent. That's right. Think about that. That is going to cause businesses to go under. It's going to cause major economic problems for people. For what? Is it saving lives? I don't know. I don't think it will. I don't think the proof is there to say that it will save lives at all.

What about this? It's funny, you know, that people say: we've got to do something about these laws about drinking and driving. So the ministers come up with this. Well, I guess I would say that if you're looking at it, would this law have saved the lives of those boys in Grande Prairie? Would it have saved the lives of the people who got killed over the weekend? No. It wouldn't have.

You want to know what would have saved the lives of those people? If we had had greater enforcement of the existing laws, if that drunk driver had been pulled over and had blown into that gauge and it read .05 to .08, and what happened was that the police officer had taken that person's licence for 24 hours and had taken him off the road. That would have prevented it, if it was – that's if – .05 to .08, which is very unlikely. Almost certainly the person that killed these folks was way over .08, as the statistics clearly show, in which case more enforcement would have caught that person and would have charged that person with a DUI, and those individuals would have been safe. That is what likely would have occurred.

If you want to stop drunk driving, you need to enforce the existing laws that say that between .05 and .08 it's a 24-hour suspension. You take the person off the road. That is good enough for those folks because they're right on the edge. There's no doubt that as the study says, hon. minister, judgment does start to get clouded at .05. But guess what? It starts getting clouded when you turn the radio on. It starts getting clouded when it starts snowing outside. There are a hundred things that cloud your judgment. Absolutely. You should try driving with four kids if you want clouded judgment. Holy. That's clouding your judgment. That's distracting. There are lots of things that distract us. Obviously, if you're on some cough and flu medication, that can make you a little bit drowsy. There are all sorts of things that can impede our judgment.

We have to make a call as a government as to where we are going to draw the line. Where are we going to draw the line on this? Is it when our judgment is impaired this much and we're going to cast a broad net for, you know, virtually anybody who goes out for a couple of drinks after work and above? Or are we going to focus our limited resources – our limited court resources, our limited enforcement resources, all the resources we can – on the people that are killing people? Those folks are the ones blowing over .08. I think it's very clear that that's the case.

You know, again, it reminds me of the debate that I heard coming from the federal Liberal Party during the issue of the gun registry. There's no doubt that shooting sprees in colleges are heinous, terrible things – everyone can agree with that – but did the gun registry save anybody? Did it? No, it didn't. I wonder if it put anyone in jail that wouldn't otherwise have been caught. I guess we'll never know that. What we do know is that it was a law that was far too expensive, and if we had spent that money on enforcement and more police officers, we probably would have had better results.

This, I think, is actually an even starker difference than the gun registry because I don't think this will in any way, shape, or form save lives. What will save lives is putting more checkpoints up, getting police out enforcing these laws more, throwing the book at those that blow over the legal limit of .08. There are education programs that we should be looking at. There are issues that we can be working with the hospitality industry on with regard to testing folks before they leave and so forth to help them identify that they're intoxicated and so forth. There are all kinds of different things that we can be doing that are going to have far more of an effect on saving lives than this law will. The unintended consequences to the hospitality industry are too great.

Let's just not stop there. What if somebody is blowing .05, .06 into the breathalyzer and they have their car taken from them for three days and then seven and so forth? Let's say three days. How is that person supposed to get to work? What if they weren't intoxicated at all? What if the device was faulty? We know for a fact that the devices are not always accurate. They're presumed guilty until proven innocent, essentially, so there's nothing that they can do. Their car is gone, so how do they get to work? Do they lose jobs? Do they not have the ability to go to an interview? What things happen at seven days? [interjection] There's a voice over there that seems to think: "Three days? Oh, they'd survive." Okay. Well, then, it's not a stiff penalty, so it's not a worry.

If we're going to place penalties, it should be something that's actually going to be uncomfortable for people. But why would we give it to somebody who's a perfectly law-abiding citizen, who's maybe had a glass of wine to drink, who is not a danger to anybody, is on the way home, blows .052 into the breathalyzer, and has their car taken away for three days on a Sunday evening or on a Friday or on a Thursday night or whatever after work, whenever it is? Again, are we targeting the right people? I would say that we're not.

The other unintended consequence I wanted to talk about was rural Alberta.

Mr. Hancock: I thought you had an amendment.

Mr. Anderson: I do. This is my first round, just to kind of get it all out there, and then I'll put the amendments on there.

The Deputy Chair: Let's keep it through the chair, gentlemen. Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Rural Alberta. You can say what you want, but the fact of the matter is that in rural Alberta it is difficult, very difficult. It's not like you can just hop on the public transit and go home. You can't even do that in Airdrie, and we're 45,000 people. If you're from a smaller town, you know, it's pretty difficult to get a taxi cab or something like that. So what happens, of course, is that instead of going out for a drink with their friends – I do that a lot; I usually end up buying and not consuming, but I do go out for a drink often with friends in my constituency – they just won't bother doing it.

12:20

I'm not talking about getting together for a drink and getting plastered, that they're having – I don't know what would get someone plastered these days – six, seven beers, whatever, and that they're just going out the door. Well, of course, that's not who we're talking about here. We're talking about going out and buying your buddy a beer or two. Then they go out the door, and they're over the legal limit, or there is a chance they'll be over the legal limit. They just won't do it anymore. They just won't do it. How is that going to affect our hospitality industry in rural Alberta? It's not going to be a good effect.

I do have some amendments, and I will bring them forward.

An Hon. Member: Not now.

Mr. Anderson: No, not now. I'll let somebody else speak. I'll bring them another time, soon.

I want to encourage a free vote on this issue because I think that we all come from different areas. We all come from different constituencies. You know, we have members from very, very rural places. I think of the minister of tourism: very rural. [interjection] At least I remembered, Minister, which is more than I can say for your House leader there about the Minister of Transportation a few moments ago. That individual is in a very rural riding. How does he feel about this? Does he feel that this is something that he can support? Maybe it is. But he should be free to vote. The same with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and so forth. We all come from different areas, some of us very urban, like the Minister of Education. He's quite the urban socialite.

I would like to see a free vote on this issue to truly represent your constituents, to truly represent what you think is best, what, in your judgment, you think is going to be something that they're going to want and is something that's going to be for the good of Albertans. I hope that you will do that in the cabinet. To those that are not in the cabinet, you are technically private members, and I hope that you will vote your conscience on the matter and go from there.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll take my seat. I look forward to more solid debate on this issue.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I need to start off the discussion with, you know, all of the different comments that were made in regard to what the hon. member sees as a problem: don't drink and drive. I mean, that's it in a nutshell. Don't drink and drive. We are targeting the right people, and we're targeting the right people by addressing the .08 and above. I told you what the penalties were, of course, with the mandated ignition interlock, also with the suspension of licences and also with the seizure of vehicles.

I heard the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo comment the other day about rural Alberta. You know, that brings me a concern that we segregate rural Alberta because rural Alberta may not have the taxi. Well, if you're going to drink and drive, you figure it out. You know, that's the point. The point is that you're drinking and driving. Seventy per cent of the fatal accidents that take place in rural Alberta involve alcohol. When that happens, that's partly because of the speed. I mean, you need to organize. You need to have an individual that's the designated driver.

The other point, Mr. Chairman, is that if you read the legislation, it would very specifically say – and you would read that – that we are doing educational programs. That is critical. We're doing educational programs so that people don't get into the situation of repeat offenders.

One comment that I found interesting is that they hit the .16: "Leave the .05 to the .08 even though they're impaired. Leave them alone even though they will be charged at this time for a 24-hour suspension." They have to get from .05 to .08 to get to .16 or higher. This is about the change of culture as well. That's why we're not only doing the .08 and above. That's why we're doing the graduated licences as well, making sure that there is a culture change, and it's necessary to change how people think about drinking and driving.

You're probably right. You said that the individuals that were involved in the accident could have been at .16 or that they would have been above the legal drinking limit. But you know what? If we would change the culture – you said that, in your mind, you believed that none of this would have an impact on how people do things. I truly believe that we need to change the culture. Do you know that our kids are changing the culture? Our kids do not believe in drinking and driving. In fact, they believe in zero tolerance.

You also made mention about having four children and that you are impacted by the four children. I want to say to you: you know, if you're impacted, you're impaired. You'd better do something because you're a hazard on the road. I don't care. You put up a barrier. You do whatever you need to. But if they're distracting you, then you are not doing the job of being a parent and safe on the road. You are truly impaired. So do something different. I don't care if you put in a cage, but if that's a problem, you need to do it. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the chair is very interested in hearing what you have to say. Thank you.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Chairman, the next point that I want to say is that we need to look at the B.C. law and look at how the B.C. law is different than what we're doing here. There is always reference to the B.C. law. The B.C. law did a lot of things differently than what we're doing here. One, the penalties. We've heard that. Two, there was no opportunity for appeal. I want to say to you that our position is very much education, not only the education of individuals that are driving but very much education with the hosting groups. I think that's critically important.

I'm very puzzled with the long gun registration. To me, we have a record in this province that has twice as many deaths per hundred thousand people than the average of Canada. What ends up taking place is that we need to look at ways that we can change the culture, and we all have responsibility.

You mentioned the Traffic Injury Research Foundation of Canada as being the right people with the right information. Well, they very clearly say: 7.2 times more likely to be involved in a fatal crash than drivers at zero. That's drivers at .05 to .08. It's the same one that you had claimed. I'm saying here: hey, we could do everything with stats. The thing that hurts me about stats is that in five years I think it was 587 people that died in alcohol-related accidents. Also, what ended up taking place is that there were over 8,000 injured. I mean, to me that's a real stat. I stand before you and say: what can we do to make a change? We look at it in that direction.

Mr. Chairman, going back to you again, at the end of the day I need to say to you that, as was said, this may not be the whole answer. Somebody is still going to drink, somebody is still going to speed while they're drinking, and somebody is still going to kill somebody. So part of this has to be cultural change, part of this has to be a deterrent as far as penalties, and part of this has to be education. It's all of that combined together. It's not one thing that's going to change it. I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman; this is not gun registration. This is lives that are being affected every day.

12:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm appreciating this debate generally tonight. I want to once again read into the record the determined attendance from people in the public gallery, who I think have waited hours and hours now for this debate. Well done.

I want to start, as the Member for Calgary-McCall did, by reflecting on my own experience and my family's experience with traffic safety and alcohol. There are in my family and my wife's family at least three people who have lost their lives because of impaired driving, three different accidents. So, you know, this is an issue that's very close to my heart, very close probably to the hearts of many people here who have had friends and family killed or maimed by impaired drivers. I can't help but bring that experience to this particular debate. That's how it goes.

I've heard much from the government side and well expressed by the minister about a shift in culture. He talked about the kids today having zero tolerance for drunk driving. I'm not sure if that's quite true, but I have no doubt that the culture has shifted. I reflect on my own life experience. The simple reality is that 35 or 40 years ago impaired driving was no big deal. It was kind of a joke. It has gradually shifted so that it's taken much more seriously. It's common now to be at a dinner party or out somewhere, and somebody will agree not to have a drink or will cut themselves off after one drink. That's a change in culture, and I'm certain that the culture will continue to change.

I do want to say to the government that one of our problems with this bill and with the previous bill is that the whole process is too hurried. This legislation was brought forward a week ago today along with five other significant bills. I know that government wants this to be law by Thursday. That's bad process. I don't care what you say. That's no way to run a Legislature. That's no way to run a Legislature, to dump six bills and try to drive them through in two weeks. What happens is that mistakes get made. We in the opposition don't have a chance to consult with stakeholders. And let's be honest. I'm not convinced that all of you on the government side have had a full chance to explore the issues and consult with stakeholders either.

So I think that fundamentally the biggest victim of this hurry is the victim of public consensus, if I can put it that way. We are not letting enough time pass for the public to come to a consensus which will legitimize this law. If I contrast it to the process through which the distracted driving law was put through, that was a piece of legislation that worked its way through many steps of motions and private members' bills and years of debate. I think it was a better bill because of it. I also think that the public finally came along and understood what was going on. I wish we were taking more time on this.

This feels like the hammer has come down from the Premier's office. She had a meeting with the Premier of B.C., got this bee in her bonnet, and bingo. A few weeks later it's going to be law. Good law or not, that's bad process. So I think that comes to the concern.

A number of questions come to mind, and some of those were brought forward by the members for Airdrie-Chestermere and for Calgary-McCall. I think an issue that I've heard from stakeholders is that perhaps we should focus instead on better enforcement of the .08 level. I can't remember the last time there was a checkstop that I encountered, for example. Some of the evidence brought forward in earlier debate makes me wonder if we shouldn't be focusing on people who are drinking more. Is the group who are at the .05 to .08 level really the problem? I don't know; maybe they are. But I'd like a little more time to figure it out. I want to make a decision and vote on this legislation based on the evidence. In the course of so little time I'm not sure the evidence is clear. It's certainly not unequivocal in my experience.

I'm also confronted with the possibility that there might be legal challenges on this, even constitutional challenges, and that may well play out. We've seen that occasionally with government legislation pushed through before. At times this government has lost, and it's because bills have been whipped through without enough consideration and enough, shall we say in this case, sober second thought.

I am also wanting to know if there were alternatives explored. What else might we do to achieve the same result through other ways? Working with the hospitality industry, educating the public: did we look at anything else? This came up in such a hurry that I don't know that we did. I always like to have two or three options to consider when we're making a decision because you get a better decision that way. In this case it doesn't feel like we have those options.

There are a number of concerns, and I say all of those in light of my opening comments, which are that, sadly, my family has been directly affected repeatedly by drunk drivers. So my nature is to support this. I want safer roads. I find impaired driving to be one of the most appalling of crimes in many ways. Yet coming to the debate as I do with that feeling, I'm not convinced about what we have here.

Mr. Chairman, I do have an amendment that I want to bring forward. It's on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who is not – I will stay on the correct side of the protocols.

Mr. Hancock: Kevin, can't we debate a little more before?

Dr. Taft: You know what? We'll have lots of time for debate.

There's the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I'll wait a minute for this to get handed out.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. The amendment before you will be called amendment A2, as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. Does everyone who wishes to have a copy now have it, and may we proceed with the debate?

Dr. Taft: Mr. Chair, just for people's reference, the amendment relates to pages 2 and then pages 17 and 18 of the bill.

12:40

The Deputy Chair: Are we able to now proceed with the debate? Yes, we are. Thank you.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I'll read the amendment into the record. I am quoting here. Ms Blakeman moved that Bill 26, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, be amended as follows. Section 5 is amended by adding the following after clause (a):

(a.1) by adding the following after clause (a)(iii):

(iv) extend a disqualification or suspension under section 88.1, provided that the disqualification or suspension shall not extend beyond the time of the disposition of the criminal charge.

Section 12 is amended in the proposed section 88.1(3) by adding "or until the expiration of a period of two years, whichever is earlier, subject to an extension of the two year period by the Board after a review under section 30" after subsection (2)(a), wherever it occurs.

I'm sure that didn't make any sense to most people here without a bit of interpretation. The intent of this amendment is to increase the constitutionality of a disqualification of persons from driving after they are charged with a Criminal Code offence for drunk driving but before the case is heard. The intent, as I understand it from the Member for Edmonton-Centre, is that this puts a time limit on how long proceedings can take and how long a vehicle suspension may occur. The amendment makes sure that should the proceedings for the Criminal Code offence continue over a long period of time, the disqualification should not extend beyond two years without a hearing by the board or four years ever. Since people have the right to justice within a reasonable time frame under the Charter, this change may actually help the law stand up in court.

I do want to note that while some of our members do not agree with the proposed law in our caucus – and we will be having a free vote in our caucus – we can at least try to fix what is here.

Essentially, what this does is put a tighter time limit on how long a disqualification occurs. Currently as the bill is proposed, a disqualification will last until the whole thing is sorted out. Well, if it takes four years or five years to sort it out, that's too long. This would put a two-year limit on that disqualification.

With those comments, I'll open it up to debate. I think I'm just about out of time anyway, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Danyluk: I would like also to have the hon. Solicitor General comment. I just need a little bit of – and I should say that the workings of this act for sure is the involvement of myself as the Minister of Transportation, the Solicitor General, and the Minister of Justice. If I can just for a minute ask one question, and that is: does the two years and the four years have any implication if the time extension is with the person who is accused? I'm not quite understanding that, okay?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Okay. I'll do my best to explain. Perhaps we can continue this debate even tomorrow because you may find you like this amendment. What it would do here: let me just give you an example. I'm on page 17 of the bill right now. Subsection (3)(a) right now reads:

(3) Where

- (a) a person's operator's licence is surrendered under subsection (2)(b), that person is immediately disqualified from driving a motor vehicle in Alberta and remains so disqualified until the disposition of the criminal charge referred to in subsection (2)(a).

That's how it currently reads, and we all know how long it might take for a criminal charge to be disposed of.

What this amendment would do, Mr. Minister, would be to add after that "or until the expiration of a period of two years, whichever is earlier, subject to an extension of the two year period by the Board after a review under section 30." What we are saying is that it is not an open-ended disqualification. There is some time limit.

I am told that this actually improves the chances of the legislation withstanding a Charter challenge. Now, I'm not a lawyer, and we're not supposed to give legal opinions in this Assembly anyway. I'm just telling the minister what I've been told. I hope that made sense.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

On amendment A2, any other comments? Anyone else wishing to speak to amendment A2?

If not, is the House ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there other speakers? I have Calgary-Glenmore on Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Hinman: Committee of the Whole on Bill 26. Well, it's a pleasure to be able to get up and to address Bill 26 on behalf of the Wildrose, to speak against Bill 26 and go over a few reasons why we feel this is not in the best interests of Albertans. I would like to start off by saying, though, that the Wildrose is very concerned with the lives of Albertans. It's easy to skew and for people to turn and say: oh, so you're against enforcement for legally impaired drivers. No, we're absolutely not.

I guess what I want to start off with, Mr. Chair, is the precedent that what Albertans and Canadians stand on is that we're innocent until proven guilty. This bill changes all of that to where you're guilty and going to pay the penalty up front, and as per the amendment that just got defeated, maybe you'd have only two years or four years before you have your day in court. That is just wrong here in the province of Alberta and here in Canada. We need to have due process and our day in court and not just be able to appeal to go to a second tester.

You know, I appreciate the Minister of Transportation's passion on this. He keeps saying: zero tolerance. Well, if that's what it is, why are we not bringing in a bill with zero tolerance? It doesn't seem to be there. Again, numbers are always interesting, and we can look at them and react.

I, too, like my Wildrose colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere, feel that this has a lot to do with what happened with the long gun registry. I want to start off, again, with what the relevance is for me, which is that that tragic day in Montreal had nothing to do with the long gun registry. That weapon that they used was already illegal and shouldn't have been there, just as when someone who is two times the legal limit for drinking is in an accident, yet we seem to be pointing at someone that owns a gun or someone who has gone out for a social drink and saying that that's the problem.

It's interesting to say that you're seven times more likely, if you're between .05 and .08, of getting in a fatal car accident, but if you look at the statistics, I think it works out that you're nine times more likely if you're from no alcohol to .05. There's more in that segment in the study than there is from .05 to .08. Maybe that's just purely because of the fact that it covers a larger range from zero to .05 as opposed to from .05 to .08, which is a smaller segment of the chart.

12:50

We just have problems with this in so many ways. It's perplexing why the government has brought this forward and even more perplexing why the Premier has said: I want this passed and in place before Christmas. She's broken many promises on her election platform. I don't know where this one comes from, yet she seems to be so passionate about this.

Again, there are too many Albertans that have been impacted by deaths on our highways. We've seen way too many recently. These are individuals who are often two or three times the legal limit that are causing these accidents. We need to go back and look at the actual numbers again here and ask ourselves: you know, is this a knee-jerk reaction? Is this just the old liberal parent looking out for individuals, and government can make us all safe? That's very much the "Big daddy will look after you; we'll make our citizens safe" mentality that has certainly taken over this government's thought process.

Dr. Swann: Do you feel the same way about seat belts?

Mr. Hinman: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View wants to know if I feel the same way about seat belts, and I actually have a personal story on that. I was driving back from visiting my son in Grande Prairie and was somewhat dismayed at the number of people that were blowing by me. I was driving the speed limit of 110, 112 from Edmonton to Red Deer. I came over the hill, and I saw a police car down at the bottom. I thought, "Oh, great." Traffic was bad. People were just soaring. I figured some were going 140, 150 kilometres an hour, causing some danger, I felt, on the road. Yet all of these people zipped by. I looked at the police as I went by, and I was just shaking my head, you know, like: what are you doing there?

His lights came on, and he pursued me. I couldn't understand why for the life of me. This was early on when it first started. He pulled me over and gave me a ticket because I didn't have my seat belt on but had all these speeders going by. And I said: surely, with all of this going on, you think that you're going to increase the safety of Alberta drivers by pulling me over while people are zipping by, going 140 and 150 kilometres an hour? I learned by the school of hard knocks that you have to have it on.

We focus on the wrong things, and this is a classic example of focusing on the wrong things. Putting on your seat belt does not make you a safer driver. It actually says that people feel they're more invincible and drive a little crazier because they don't think they're going to get hurt. Seat belts are a good . . . [interjection] This is the same mentality. We know that seat belts are safer, but to have a policeman sitting on the side of the road looking for people that aren't wearing seat belts while people go speeding by at 20 and 30 and 40 kilometres over the speed limit is wrong. We're missing it.

This bill is wrong. It's addressing .05 to .08 when, in fact – and I shouldn't say “this bill.” This section of this bill is wrong. What we want are those that are over the legal limit. What we want are those repeat offenders. We should go after them, and we should go after them really hard. We should set the example.

I mean, we keep hearing, Mr. Chair, that Alberta has, I think, 40 per cent more accidents than other regions. Or the other regions have reduced by 40 per cent; we've only reduced by 17 per cent. And we think: oh, that's because we don't have ours at .05. No. If citizens know that there are no police and there are no tickets given for speeding, Alberta is going to be the zone where everybody is speeding.

Everybody knows that in Alberta there's very, very little enforcement on drunk driving. That's why we have a problem, Mr. Chair. It's not that we didn't lower our level like other areas. They've lowered their level, but they've increased their policing. They're out there with checkpoints. I mean, I don't think I have seen a checkpoint in probably 11 or 12 years. I remember when I was young, going to university. You know, 30 years ago we had a lot more checkpoints then. It was serious business.

When my friends went out, they always loved me because I was the designated driver. I didn't participate in the drinking. So everybody said: “Hinman, do you want to come along?” “Sure, I'll come along.” They got to do the drinking; I did the driving. We've grown up with that idea, but the fact of the matter is that if we stop giving speeding tickets, the real problem, speed, which causes more accidents, will go up. The problem is that we're not enforcing the laws we've got.

I've put out many questionnaires and on the web asking Albertans that. It's overwhelming; 95 per cent want stricter enforcement. Enact it. Do it. We're not doing anything. For some reason government seems to think: oh, if we just pass new legislation, we're doing our job. It's popular. It's the nice thing to do. But it just doesn't cut it, Mr. Chair. It's disappointing.

Again, the minister keeps getting up and stressing that this is not a cash cow. Today it isn't, Mr. Chair, but when this bill passes – because I'm confident with the Premier and her arm-twisting that it will pass here in the next few days, and it will be enacted before Christmas. Like I say, I can't understand how something like this can't go to committee and we can't do some study and we can't listen to Albertans. If we're representing Albertans, maybe we should listen to Albertans and not just say: “We know best.

We're a liberal government, and we know best. We're elitist. We know best. We don't need to consult.”

They say that they consult, but it's an insult because who do they consult? Oh, their special guests. Bring them in. We'll talk about the budget. Bring them in. We'll give out a list of people to come in that we'll consult with. It's not an open session, you know: doors will be open at the civic centre from 1 until 5 to hear from citizens. It's a very specific group that they bring in. They don't consult; they insult the average Albertan because they're not allowed to be part of the process. It's very easy for this government to open up and allow Albertans to be part of the process.

The studies that we see – again, so many have gone over them that I hate to bring them up – you know, are that in 61 per cent of the fatal accidents there is zero alcohol involvement. Zero. Sixty per cent. That's the majority. If we're so concerned – and we all are – maybe we should be analyzing that first. Is it speed? Do we need to lower the speed limits? No, I don't think so. Is it young drivers? Possibly. Is it older drivers? What are we looking at? Why are we pointing at this very small group of 2 per cent? Two per cent of the fatal accidents are from .05 to .08. Do we even ask if that's just an anomaly, if it just happens to be that there are going to be accidents and there are going to be a certain number that will fall in to each of these categories? As I said, there are actually more that fall into the category from zero to .05.

Mr. Chair, I just have to say that with the questionnaires that I've sent out and with my web page that I've got up, 95 per cent of the responses that I am getting back are saying: enforce the law that we already have. We don't need to lower it to .05. We don't need to go on this witch hunt after individuals who want to have a social drink and then drive home. I've heard from businessmen that work downtown. They like to stop in at the bar, have a couple of drinks, visit for a while and drive home. Two drinks: they're all very specific about that. They know that: two drinks to be able drive home. They won't be able to do this anymore.

This government is notorious for passing legislation and not knowing the economic consequences. This is going to have a huge impact on the hospitality industry. We know it. B.C. has shown it. I believe it's a 40 per cent drop in the hospitality industry. That's fine if that's the desire of the government, but say that. “You know what? The hospitality industry is doing too well. We don't like individuals going out and having a good time, and we want to limit that. People are just living too high and too happy, so let's reduce that and bring misery to them because that's what government likes to do, inflict misery on the citizens to know who's really in charge.”

There's no question, Mr. Chair, that it is a privilege to drive. We've passed some legislation. Again, another one that went through very quickly was the distracted driver legislation. For the overwhelming number of people that I talked to, it's not whether or not you're holding a device in your hand; it's whether or not you're talking on a device. So, again, we've kind of missed the mark on trying to create that safety. [interjection] That's what I'm saying, that we missed the mark. If you're talking on your cell phone, you're distracted whether you're holding it or not.

1:00

Anyway, the point is that this government is continuing to extend its track record of passing laws that they're proud of, yet they serve no purpose or they're actually a detriment to the people that they're trying to protect. They're protecting them from themselves, it seems. I just don't think that that's government's job. If we want to go to zero tolerance, then let's put that in the bill and say that it's zero tolerance. Let's not be wishy-washy and set up this arbitrary number where we can hopefully catch people.

Again, I want to go back to this idea that the government keeps saying that there's no cash cow here. I agree. In this bill there isn't. It's always one step at a time. Today there's no penalty, but I will bet you that when the next budget comes out in April, there'll be a penalty attached to this because they need the revenue. These guys are desperate. They don't say that they have a spending problem. These guys have a revenue problem, and they've said it over and over again. They won't commit to saying, "We're going to balance the budget," but what they will commit to is: we're looking for revenue sources; this is going to be a great one. They'll have a four-month period or whatever and see how many they're catching, and then they're going to extrapolate it out and say: we can't afford not to be putting fines out there; we'll be able to bring in $15 million.

I need to recognize that it's awesome that in the stands we've got, I think, 11 or 12 people here. It's 1 o'clock in the morning. Obviously, this is an issue. Anybody give a thumbs-up to this bill? How many thumbs down? It's unanimous that the citizens of the province here are 100 per cent against this bill, and here we have the ministers laughing at them. That's pretty sad. [interjection] Well, I think that it's more representative than what's sitting over there. What's been discussed over there is not representative. We need to get out and listen a little bit.

Mr. Chair, I have to speak again. The Wildrose caucus is not in favour of this. This is no more than big government reaching out with their heavy hand. For what reason? I just don't know what the political motives are here. Usually you can see something in this. I really think that the biggest political motive is for them to be able to stand up and say: we're against drunk drivers. Everybody is. This isn't about being against drunk drivers. This is a setup to be able to introduce their cash cow in four months, six months, or a year from now. Once again, that's not going to be for the benefit of Albertans.

I'll sit down and to listen to other people speak against this bill. Perhaps the government is going to speak in favour of it. We'll see.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. House leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I needn't remind any members of the House that committee is intended for clause-by-clause analysis of the bill, and usually that's when people deal with the clauses of the bill and bring forward amendments. I do appreciate the fact that we were able to deal with one amendment to the bill tonight. I had anticipated that there'd be others, but it appears that we're back on debating the principle of the bill as opposed to clause-by-clause analysis, and therefore I would move that in light of the hour we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. House leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 25 and report progress on Bill 26 and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 26. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 25. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report? If it does, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Those who are opposed, please say no. That report is carried. Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 1:06 a.m. on Tuesday to 1:30 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Introduction of Guests .....	1411
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 23    Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011 .....	1411
Committee of the Whole
Bill 25    Child and Youth Advocate Act .....	1426
Bill 26    Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011 .....	1437

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fourth Session

Alberta Hansard

Tuesday afternoon, November 29, 2011

Issue 42a

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 27th Legislature

Fourth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Hon. Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Hon. Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Hon. Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Hon. Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hon. Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC)
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Hon. Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Hon. Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Hon. Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Hon. Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (PC)
Stelmach, Hon. Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC)
Webber, Hon. Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Clerk	W.J. David McNeil	Committee Research Co-ordinator	Philip Massolin
Law Clerk/Director of		Sergeant-at-Arms	Brian G. Hodgson
Interparliamentary Relations	Robert H. Reynolds, QC	Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Chris Caughell
Senior Parliamentary Counsel/		Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Gordon H. Munk
Director of House Services	Shannon Dean	Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard	Liz Sim
Parliamentary Counsel	Stephanie LeBlanc

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 68      Alberta Liberal: 8      Wildrose Alliance: 4      New Democrat: 2      Alberta: 1

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Sustainable Resource Development
Janice Sarich	Education
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Mr. Zwozdesky
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Rodney
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
Mason
Pastoor
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	McFarland
Boutilier	Mitzel
Brown	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Ms Pastoor

Bhardwaj
Blackett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Ouellette
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 29, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a rather large group of grade 6 students from Muriel Martin school in St. Albert. We have 82 guests in both the public and members' galleries. They are accompanied by Mrs. Rhonda Surmon, Mrs. Jody Bialowas, Mme Roxanne Arnett, Mrs. Katie Boyd, Mrs. Janine Jespersen, Mrs. Lynda Saunders, and parent helpers Mrs. Tanya Doran, Mr. Rolando Garcia, and Mrs. Cindy Gilmore. I had the opportunity to of course get my picture taken with them at the Leg. I asked them the questions I ask all the grade 6ers, and I have to say that this is a very bright group of students, and the future of Alberta is, indeed, in good hands. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. One of the many wonderful things about Edmonton-Riverview is that it contains the University of Alberta, and one of the privileges of that is being able to introduce guests who attend from that university. Today it's three guests from the University of Alberta International Centre, and I'd like to introduce them to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. They're seated in the public gallery. Their names are Jeremy Burns – you could rise as I read your name – Naoki Yonezawa, who is here visiting from Japan, and Jason Kakakaway. They are, as I said, standing in the public gallery, and I would ask all members to please give them a hearty welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly valued staff members from the office of the public guardian. These dedicated staff members of my department provide decision-making supports to Albertans who no longer have the capacity to make these personal decisions. They are here today to be recognized for their important and dedicated work for vulnerable Albertans and to be recognized for receiving a Canada award for excellence, which we'll hear more about in Members' Statements. They're seated today in the public gallery, and I'd ask them all to stand to be recognized by all my colleagues here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to the House a friend, a Calgarian and paramedic. Pete Helfrich lived in the region and worked for Calgarians for 20 years. He is passionate about excellence in the health care system, and he's here to watch how we do the procedure of legislating. We hope to have him as the nominated candidate in Banff-Cochrane. I'll have him rise. Give him the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you the Wildrose candidate for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Linda Carlson. Prior to taking the plunge into politics, she worked as a policy analyst for Health Canada, where she reported on the Alberta health care system. Having met with Linda, I can tell you that we're lucky to have her representing us in the coming election. She brings a lot of energy that's so contagious, I know it'll catch on with the residents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. I want everyone to meet Linda, and give her the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly employees here today from my department of Alberta Health and Wellness. I'm particularly delighted because the group of young men and women I'm about to introduce are participating in the government of Alberta policy internship program. They're here to observe question period.

Over lunch we had the opportunity to discuss their ideas and their advice with respect to Alberta's health care system. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend each of them for their dedication to public service and for taking seriously the very important work of public policy, particularly as it relates to health care. These members are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask each of them to rise as I call their name: Layne Douglas, John Gaye, Harpal Hothi, Brittany Wiebe, Ben Wong, Rose Geransar, Katelyn Erickson, and Matthew Robertson. I'd ask that all members join me in extending our traditional warm welcome and our thanks to these very important guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two guests from the constituency of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Brendan Van Alstine and Ken Kirk are two hard-working volunteers who've been instrumental in the Alberta NDP's East Edmonton health centre postcard campaign. Along with other volunteers from that member's constituency they've assembled numerous signatures from people who support our call for the government of Alberta to immediately provide full funding to open the family medicine and urgent care sections of the East Edmonton health centre. I would now like to ask Brendan Van Alstine and Ken Kirk to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Public Guardian Office Award for Excellence

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to announce to all Members of this Legislative Assembly that the office of the public guardian has received a Canada award for excellence. Canada awards for excellence are awarded to both government and private-sector organizations in recognition of their pursuit and commitment to excellence. These prestigious awards are presented by Excellence Canada, an independent not-for-profit organization committed to improving organizational performance and recognizing excellence in organizations across Canada.

On behalf of this government I am pleased to applaud the office of the public guardian on receiving a silver quality award for their continued commitment to quality and to improving the lives of the vulnerable in Alberta. Winning this award in 2007 and again in 2011 means that the office of the public guardian is one of Canada's top organizations. As part of the Ministry of Seniors the office of the public guardian provides decision-making support for Albertans who are unable to make personal decisions for themselves.

The office of the public guardian plays an important role in this province. Over 2,000 represented adults rely on public guardian representatives to make personal decisions for them that best meet their needs. As well, this department has worked tirelessly since 2005 on new and enhanced legislation to replace the 30-year-old Dependent Adults Act, and on October 30, 2009, their hard work came to fruition when the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act came into effect. This important piece of legislation provides Albertans with a range of decision-making options and safeguards.

The staff of the office of the public guardian and the Ministry of Seniors work hard every day to promote excellence and to improve the quality of lives for some of our most vulnerable citizens. This Canada award for excellence is truly deserving. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask all Members of this Legislative Assembly . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

1:40 Tom Baker Cancer Centre Pathology Lab

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow the Alberta health superboard, with the full blessing of the Premier and the health minister, will shut down cancer testing at the Tom Baker cancer lab in Calgary. They will proceed despite dire warnings from the lab's former director of pathology, Dr. Tony Magliocco.

Last week Dr. Magliocco sounded the alarm over the pending closure, expressing grave fears that the PC government is setting Alberta up for a repeat of what happened in Newfoundland, where women with breast cancer died because of faulty cancer testing. He did all that he could behind the scenes to stop this closure, but his patient advocacy was met with threats, bullying, and intimidation from superboard officials. He was even told that he would regret it if he didn't shut up and go along with it.

Fed up with how he was treated and frustrated at his attempts to stand up for his patients being ignored, Dr. Magliocco resigned his position, and he has since left the province. He has taken a position at a Florida lab, where he has been asked to re-create the same test down there that our government is shutting down here.

They tell us, the government, that they have a transition plan in place, but they won't show it to us. They say that they have been validating tests at Mount Sinai in Toronto for six weeks, but they haven't.

Mr. Speaker, how many more world-class doctors will Alberta lose because this government runs them out of the province? How many more are being bullied and threatened into silence while the superboard makes decisions behind closed doors that affect patients? More importantly, how many patients won't get the care and the treatment they desperately need because their doctors are being ignored? These are the questions Albertans are asking, questions that they refuse to answer. How appalling that our government is more interested in saving its political skin than saving lives. Call the public inquiry now so that we can get answers before you call the election.

Initiative for Welcoming and Inclusive Communities

Mr. Benito: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege today to share details of an exciting initiative called Come Together Alberta. Come Together Alberta is led by the Minister of Human Services. Newcomers play a significant role in the economic prosperity and social fabric of Alberta. The purpose of Come Together Alberta is to help Alberta communities find ways to ensure newcomers get support to build connections, establish roots, and feel at home within their communities.

This initiative encourages communities to plan and prepare for newcomer population growth. Of course, every community has its own unique needs. Through the Come Together Alberta initiative communities take the lead to keep those needs in focus and build upon their existing settlement and integration services.

Come Together Alberta encourages all Albertans to connect and work together to welcome newcomers into their communities. The government of Alberta is partnering with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association to establish and promote best practices with online tools, resources, and community outreach.

I believe the Come Together Alberta initiative is vital in ensuring that we welcome and retain newcomers so all Albertans benefit from a dynamic, inclusive, and multicultural community. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is going to deliver the private member's statement.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Provincial Revenues

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, today I'd like to pay my respects to two of the hon. members on the government's side, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Finance. Both of these gentlemen deserve kudos for recognizing that at some point in time our province needs to address the issue of revenues. During his leadership bid the hon. Minister for Municipal Affairs pointed out that while Alberta spends $39 billion annually, we're only taking in $12 billion in corporate and personal taxes. A good chunk of the other money comes from nonrenewable oil and gas revenues. He recognized that this is a massive structural deficit and it can't go on forever. As the minister pointed out, we need to look at increasing revenues. The minister was brave enough to even use the T-word, taxes, as maybe they need to be higher to address this significant structural deficit.

The Minister of Finance, in his usual diplomatic manner, suggested more recently that the province might need to start collecting a provincial sales tax, and he took some flak for floating the idea. But I applaud the minister for admitting that we need to do something on the revenue side. Sure, we could cut a billion or two in legitimate wasteful spending, but we can't cut nearly enough to make up for Alberta's structural deficit.

As people we Albertans need to start looking at our books and our desires for the future more closely. We can choose to live high on the hog now, using oil and gas revenues to pay the bills, taking a free ride, but a responsible civilization would recognize that oil and gas are finite resources and that we should be saving a significant portion of the royalties from oil and gas for future needs. The heritage trust fund should be sitting at $100 billion, and it would be if we eliminated that structural deficit.

I confess that I don't know what the best way of increasing our revenues would be, but one way or another we need to fix our revenue problem. I applaud the two ministers I've mentioned for having the guts to raise the issue.

The Speaker: There has always been a courtesy under this section of the Routine called Members' Statements that members would actually listen to what other members said.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Safe Communities Initiative

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about an outstanding program of our Alberta government that has made a tangible difference in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung. In 2008 the former Minister of Justice, now the Premier, launched the Alberta safe community initiative, and over the past three years this program has had significant and meaningful results in improving the safety and the security of our neighborhoods.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, my constituency is located in the west end of Edmonton, and the responding police station for our constituency is located on Edmonton's south side on 51st Avenue and 97th Street. This police station is approximately 30 kilometres away from the south end of my constituency. Due to the lack of police presence the issues of safety and security had become everyday concerns for my constituents.

Thanks to the funding for the safe community initiative in September 2009 an office was established in the centre of Edmonton-McClung, in the community of Callingwood, for the southwest division neighbourhood empowerment team. This team is now raising awareness in our community about home, apartment, and auto safety. Antibullying, park watches and patrols, youth programming, crime councils, and safety groups as well as traffic safety, graffiti removal, and community spirit events are all important aspects of this NET program.

As a result of the safe community initiative my constituents are now more secure, educated, and empowered in their personal safety.

Mr. Speaker, our government has invested over $550 million into the safe community initiative since its inception. This is an excellent example of tax dollars well spent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Impaired Driving

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, is generating a lot of correspondence to my office and, I suspect, the offices of every one of my colleagues in this House. I'm sorry to say that most of the e-mails flooding my office oppose the bill as it stands. Bar and restaurant owners are writing, protesting that this bill adversely affects their businesses. While I can empathize with that, if this bill is in the public interest, then there comes a point where you have to say:

"Look. If you can't make a go of this line of work, then you have to find another line of work."

I've always believed that when private interests and the public interest are in conflict, the public interest must prevail, although let me say again: I don't know whether this bill is in the public interest.

The constituents who are writing to my office complain that they believe Bill 26 will put them in jeopardy of draconian consequences if they have a glass of wine with dinner out or a pint of beer after a hard day's work if they get pulled over on the drive home. The other side of this coin, Mr. Speaker, is that another three young Albertans died this past weekend in a car accident in which alcohol might have been a factor.

Drinking and driving is a huge, unacceptable, and utterly preventable problem in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. As I pointed out in the House last week, there are many jurisdictions in the world that have zero tolerance, not .08 or .05 but zero tolerance, for drinking and driving and, at the same time, often have more liberal liquor laws than we do. So what we're trying to achieve can be done, and my guess is that not more than, say, 1 in 5 Albertans would disagree in principle that it should be done, but a lot of my constituents don't believe that Bill 26 is the right way to go about doing it.

I truly believe the people need a chance to weigh in on this issue. I urge the government to refer Bill 26 to an all-party committee, have the committee hold public hearings, and then bring back a revised bill for the Assembly to consider next spring.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

PC Leadership Race Vote Solicitation

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This fall Albertans had front-row seats to a perfect display of slimy pork-barrel politics. The chief administrator of St. Paul told voters, quote, it is imperative for future funding, unquote, that their MLA remain in cabinet. This same MLA, now the Minister of Transportation, just gave $14 million in supplementary supply funding to his own constituency. To the Premier or Deputy Premier: was this $14 million the price Albertans had to pay to get the right results from the PC leadership race?

1:50

Mr. Horner: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I find the question offensive. It besmirches the integrity of the hon. minister, and I think that in order for the hon. member to ask such a question, perhaps he should come up with some verifiable proof.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the only thing offensive was the activity and the allegations made in this article from St. Paul.

Given that the Minister of Transportation provided supplementary supply funding only to his constituency – and, not surprisingly, this is the same constituency that delivered 1,400 second ballot votes to elect the Premier and 1,600 votes for the Deputy Premier – how can the Premier or her deputy claim to be any different when it's this warlord-style politics that clearly put them in their positions and they did the same by rewarding the MLA with a cabinet post?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I take great offence to the comments, that are basically an attack on the integrity of my office and of the Minister of Transportation's office. I would ask for a point of order on that.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, Albertans take great offence at how politics are done in this great province.

Given that there are many valid projects requiring funding but only those that support the governing party get first dibs on taxpayer dollars, will the deputy put an end to this slimy pork-barrel politics that makes greasing the wheels of the PC Party a requirement for government funding?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member has a history of making allegations without proof. Today is another one. The contention that a number of votes generates a lot of investment is simply not true. In the leadership race I happened to have a number of votes cast for me in a number of other ridings, including my own. That's not to say that they're going to get any special treatment from anyone in this House. It simply means that we're the governing party. We look after the priorities of all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

PC Party Benefit Plan Trust

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Yesterday the Minister of Justice failed to answer questions around the PC Party benefit plan trust, which has been listed for the last four years in the member's disclosure statements pursuant to the Conflicts of Interest Act. The minister yesterday could not answer, and the president of the PC Party would not answer. To the Minister of Justice: again, what is the value of the PC Party benefit plan trust?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, that's not information within my purview as Minister of Justice.

Mr. MacDonald: I disagree. It certainly is.

Again to the same minister: given that taxpayers are subsidizing the PC Party benefit plan trust, what is the amount of money provided by taxpayers to subsidize this trust?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I am responsible for the legislation. I am not responsible for the operation or administration of this act. If the member has questions, he can ask the Chief Electoral Officer, or he can ask the Conservative Party. It's not information within my purview.

Mr. MacDonald: Unbelievable.

Now, again to the same minister: will the minister ask the president of the PC Party, the association, to release all the details of this benefit plan trust, and why is it necessary in the first place?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not about to be doing the hon. member's work for him.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, we have a point of order? Okay.

Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. True Blue Alberta was incorporated to be the legal vehicle for fundraising and for the payment of expenses relating to the leadership campaign of the former Premier. It had no other purpose. True Blue Alberta was investigated in 2007 under the Conflicts of Interest Act. Again to the Minister of Justice: given that True Blue Alberta had no other purpose, why did it pay taxable allowances, over $5,000, to the former Premier and his spouse years after the leadership race was over?

Mr. Olson: Again, a common theme, Mr. Speaker. I am also responsible for the Conflicts of Interest Act, but I do not administer or operate everything that happens under the Conflicts of Interest Act. If he's got questions, he can talk to the Ethics Commissioner.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, that's unbelievable, sir, because you are responsible under the Government Organization Act for the Conflicts of Interest Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. Why will you not exercise the authority under your office?

Mr. Olson: I'm sorry. I couldn't hear the question over all the yelling.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister, and I will speak slowly so, hopefully, he can understand. Why was it necessary to pay the former Premier and his spouse the taxable allowances from True Blue Alberta at the same time the PC Party set up a benefit trust fund?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this organization I have no responsibility for, I have no information about them, and if he wants, he can ask them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Impaired Driving

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The federal Liberals responded to a tragic shooting in Montreal by creating the gun registry. Although it was well intended, the gun registry did not increase public safety and trampled the freedoms of law-abiding Albertans. This government's new impaired driving law is similar. It will not save lives but will instead penalize Albertans who drink responsibly and will do nothing to crack down on drunk drivers over the .08 limit. To the transport minister: why not focus on a policy of increasing enforcement and penalties on drivers over .08 rather than passing a bill that does not address the real problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, as you know, this legislation is in the House at this particular time, but I would be very glad to answer the question in regard to the member's comments. That is, this bill is about safety on our roads in Alberta. This bill is about legislation that very much focuses on repeat offenders. This bill . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. We're not going to use question period for debating a bill that has already passed second reading and is in Committee of the Whole this afternoon.

Proceed.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it's clear Albertans want more time to analyze any policy change of the government, weighing the pros and the cons, the good and the bad, in terms of determining about enforcement and penalties on drivers over .08 we believe is a better solution. Will you do the right thing, Minister, and ask your caucus to refer this to a committee so all of the strength and weakness of this can be done and investigated so we can have a safer highway for all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is about safer highways, and I want to say to you that the three ministries, the Ministry of Justice and also the Sol Gen and Transportation have been working on this for a number of years. We have looked at this legislation. There are eight jurisdictions in Canada that have brought forward legislation before this province . . .

The Speaker: As I said, we're not going to have a debate this afternoon. Question on process. Go ahead.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the same type of federal Liberal Party rhetoric that was used on the gun registry . . .

The Speaker: No. That doesn't help at all.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Okay.

The Speaker: There are to be no preambles. You know that.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that, since you seem unmoved by the vast majority of Albertans and many in your own caucus who do not approve of this policy change, will you at least do the democratic thing and let the Wildrose and the opposition parties have an opportunity to bring forward and fully debate proposals of stronger enforcement, of helping police make our highways even safer?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the flavour of policy, the policy is that the opposition party, the third party, has every opportunity to discuss this bill. They had it in second reading, and it is now in Committee of the Whole. The opportunity is there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Kyoto Climate Change Agreement

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the federal Environment minister suggested that Canada might withdraw entirely from the Kyoto protocol. While Canada has failed to take meaningful steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and has missed its targets by a mile, pulling out altogether would send a terrible message to the rest of the world. My question is to the Minister of Environment and Water. Does the Alberta government support the withdrawal of Canada from the Kyoto protocol? Yes or no.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has always said that the Kyoto protocol doesn't work for Alberta and doesn't work for Canada because it's a protocol that doesn't include all of the world's large emitters. What we say is that if there's going to be a protocol, it has to include all of the world's large emitters.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that such a withdrawal would remove international monitoring of Canada's emissions, including Alberta's oil sands, will the minister admit that this government simply wants to permit unchecked growth in carbon emissions without any accountability?

Mrs. McQueen: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. In fact, Alberta and Canada want to make sure that we have a comprehensive strategy going forward that deals with all of the global emitters and that we, in fact, with our own monitoring system here – and I'll have the opportunity to meet with the minister. We're upping the monitoring here in Alberta. We're committed to doing more here in Alberta. We're committed to doing more as a nation but not without all the large emitters at the table.

Mr. Mason: Given that Alberta has the highest emissions per capita in Canada, amounting to 32 per cent of Canada's total emissions, will the minister admit that its measures, including the $15 per tonne carbon tax, have been completely ineffective, and if not, will she please explain why Alberta's results are among the worst in the world?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, Alberta has been a leader in this area with regard to putting a price on carbon: the first in North America with regard to putting $2 billion into carbon capture and storage, $2 billion into GreenTRIP. Alberta is taking action and will continue to take action.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Services for the Brain Injured

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to ask some more questions about support services for the brain injured. I want to thank the minister of health and the Minister of Seniors for meeting with me last week and for taking an obvious interest in this issue. But they've been busy, I've been busy, and we haven't had a chance to connect since late last week. Alberta Health Services, whose motto these days seems to be, "We're not happy until you're not happy," continues its relentless push to relocate clients who want to stay where they are. To the minister of health: will the minister please ask Alberta Health Services to hold off on moving any more of these clients at least until after the holidays?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I believe the hon. member knows based on our meeting last week, I have endeavoured to get additional information from Alberta Health Services with respect to the transition of these residents. My understanding today is that all but six of those residents have moved to their new placements. There are, in fact, additional funds that have been allocated by AHS to provide more programs and services and enhance staffing levels for these residents in their new places.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question turns around the kinds of services that are available in one ministry versus another. To the minister again: given that the families of these clients have asked to have support services for the brain injured transferred from AHS to Alberta Seniors and given that he, the Minister of Seniors, and I are discussing whether this might be feasible in some fashion, will the minister again ask Alberta Health Services to please delay the relocations?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does point out that in our meeting he did raise a policy issue with us, and that is the question of the appropriate program through which these services should be provided. That is a question that we have agreed to continue to discuss. The Minister of Seniors is a part of that discussion. With respect to the relocation of the residents to which the hon. member refers, I've said before in this House and I'll say again that I've been thoroughly assured by Alberta Health Services that the appropriate staffing and programs and services are in place.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of health again: since a maximum of 21 clients are involved here, given the wishes of their families and since this should be relatively easy, will the minister agree to support setting up this transfer of support services as a pilot project and instruct AHS to leave the clients in their homes while we all work out the details?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm in no position to make such a commitment on behalf of Alberta Health Services or anyone. The fact of the matter is that the new placements for these residents were determined through a request for proposals process that was administered by Alberta Health Services. The agency to which the hon. member refers did not bid as part of that process.

I want to continue to state that I'll work with the hon. member to address the policy questions that he's raised. I think it's a valid discussion. But as far as the transition of current residents, that matter is proceeding as planned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Residential Construction Safety

Mr. Elniski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In early November this government released the results of a topic very near and dear to my heart, that being a focus on safety inspections in residential construction. The numbers appear to be anything but spectacular. In fact, some other members of this Assembly have referred to them as extremely disappointing, and I would tend to agree. My first question is to the Minister of Human Services, responsible for occupational health and safety. Minister, what is your department doing to get a handle on these dangerous and potentially fatal situations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is absolutely right. The numbers of orders issued from this campaign were absolutely unacceptable. I'm not sure that I was shocked by the data because I think it's almost common knowledge that in that particular industry there are a lot of safety violations. We need to really get to the root of that, and we need to do that in a number of ways. One of the ways that we're attacking it is that we're meeting with the Canadian Home Builders' Association, and we have a good relationship with the Alberta Construction Safety Association, working through those associations and through employers to make sure that those sites are safe and that there is good knowledge and education about that issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. With the heightened concern about safety in this industry, what is the government doing with regard to the training of residential construction managers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would agree with this member that increased training opportunities for residential construction managers is very important. We've been working with the New Home Warranty folks as well as with the Professional Home Builders Institute of Alberta to create a training program. It has worked extremely well, and we now have training available which will enhance the safety levels in this area. We also have voluntary certification for residential construction managers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Given the amount of residential construction activity and its relative importance to the province, Minister, why did you go with the residential construction manager approach as opposed to designating this occupation as a trade?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, we have designated it as a designated occupation of residential construction manager. We believe this is a very important first step forward. It will allow for that training to proceed and for certification of residential construction managers, and overall the quality of construction and training will continue to go up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

PC Party Benefit Plan Trust

(continued)

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's time the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act was amended. For example, True Blue Alberta, the company set up to support the former Premier, is 100 per cent owned by a senior partner in a law firm. This firm also receives lucrative contracts from the government. While True Blue was benefiting the Premier, the government was benefiting the sole shareholder of True Blue. To the Minister of Justice: why doesn't the government bring in legislation to limit relations like these?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act applies to everybody. It applies to all parties, and it allows parties to raise money. The activities that they undertake are to support their electoral success. Again, it applies to all parties equally. So I see no reason why we should have to make changes when we've got legislation in place that already does the job. It does provide for disclosure.

I think this whole issue is probably precipitated by disclosures that were made several weeks ago. That's nothing new. It's been done for a long time.

Dr. Taft: Well, let's try to improve that legislation, Mr. Justice Minister. Given that the value of government contracts paid to the firm of the sole shareholder in True Blue soared from $780,000 in 2006 to $1.3 million to $1.8 million to $2.4 million to $2.6 million in 2010, how can Albertans know that these huge increases weren't facilitated by an inside track to the Premier's office unless there are better laws?

Mr. Olson: As I said just previously, Mr. Speaker, if there are issues of conflict of interest, we have an Ethics Commissioner who polices that. This member can take it up with the Ethics Commissioner. That's the Ethics Commissioner's job.

2:10

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: given that the current governing party has a long history of arranging special funds and accounts to pay its leaders, that are exempt from legislative controls, can this minister tell the taxpayers of Alberta if there are any special funds in place to make payments to the current Premier?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I do not answer for the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta. That's not within my purview as Justice minister. I have no information. If the hon. member wants to ask the president of the Progressive Conservative Party, he can do that, just as he can ask the president of his own party about their finances. The rules that apply in this act are the same for everybody.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Hydraulic Fracturing for Gas in Shale

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, hydraulic fracturing, also called fracking, is the process of pumping fluid or gas down a well many hundreds or thousands of metres below to depths considered appropriate for natural gas production. Recently there have been calls from some jurisdictions for a ban on fracturing operations, and many of the concerns are centred around water contamination. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What is the status of hydraulic fracking in Alberta at this time?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report that for this government and this Premier protecting water is the number one – number one – priority of this government. That's reflected in the strict regulatory regime that we have in place, run through the Energy Resources Conservation Board. The track record proves this. In the past 30 years 167,000 wells have been fracked. There's no proven record – no proven record – of any contamination of groundwater through that fracturing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. He talks about stringent rules the ERCB has in place. I'm wondering if the minister could expound on some of the rules he's speaking of.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just mention one – I could mention others – and that is the stringent regulations the ERCB has around cementing casing in the top 200 or 300 metres of a well. We have the strictest regulations in North America on that. That ensures that there's an impenetrable barrier in that section of the well that prevents contamination of any of the groundwater that would occur in that area. I'm happy to report that other jurisdictions have come to Alberta, looked at that, and are copying that best practice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Environment and Water. With the fast pace of growth and development and the increased use of hydraulic fracturing in the province, how can Albertans be sure that the government is doing all it can to protect our groundwater?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was indicated by the previous speaker, we've had tremendous success in Alberta over the past 60 years. We do recognize that shale gas is in its infancy, and we want to ensure that the system that has worked in the past will work as well in the future. For me it's important to protect our water resources while we are working with other ministries now to ensure that policies and regulations are in place to allow for responsible development activity in this area in the future.

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton Islamic Academy openly states on their website that they will not enrol students with behavioural difficulties or students with special needs. In Airdrie the Koinonia Christian school requires a confidential pastor's report before it even considers enrolling students, and in Lethbridge a Christian school states on their website that their sole purpose is to instruct their children – and get this – in the fear of the Lord. To the Minister of Education: how can you persist in defending these exclusive and elite schools when they openly state that they do not offer inclusive educational environments?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have been very clear over the last few days to this particular member. In Alberta parents are given choice in what schools they enrol their children in. We have a public education system that offers options, which is fully paid by the taxpayers of Alberta. We're making a great investment in education. However, some parents choose to opt out and put their children either in charter or private schools at a higher cost to themselves. They pay tuition fees, registration fees, and it costs them a great deal of money. If they choose to do that, we allow for that choice to occur.

Mr. Hehr: Given that public money funds these institutions, will the minister change the legislation to make these schools inclusive by obligating them to enrol special-needs students and students with disabilities?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, it is common that taxpayers do partially fund private schools. That is correct. Alberta Education in its commitment to all children in Alberta will fund the cost of instructing the core curriculum of Alberta. However, if schools choose to deliver additional or enriched programs, be it religion or be it any other academic programming, that's what the parents are on the hook for. There is nothing elitist about it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that the Premier has openly expressed her concern over the rise of private and chartered schools, why does this government insist on committing taxpayer dollars to institutions that are not interested in offering an open and inclusive environment?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Going further, Mr. Speaker, to the second part of the member's question, if there was a situation that was to arise where a parent wanted to send a child to a private school and was ready and willing to pay whatever fees the private school has and the child had disabilities and the child was refused attendance at that school purely on the basis of the child's disability, that would be something that my office and I personally would be interested in looking into. I am not aware of such cases right now where parents are being refused enrolment simply because their child has a disability.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Human Services Ministry Mandate

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the recent formation of the new Human Services ministry, some Albertans are wondering about the impact of the changes. To the Minister of Human Services: what was put in place to ensure minimal disruption in vital services to Albertans in need, and how did the ministry communicate these changes to the public?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the creation of the Ministry of Human Services, first and foremost, is not about reorganizing everything in the ministry. It's about bringing together a number of elements that are continuing to exist in government, and they will continue to exist in their present form until there's intelligent redesign to do them differently. So the public is not impacted by the fact that the Ministry of Human Services was created. We still have all the programs that were there under the former children and family services, all the programs that were there under employment and immigration. We still have Alberta Works. We still have Alberta Supports.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how did the expanded ministry actually improve outcomes in services to Albertans who require support?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, that's really a very important question. How can we ensure that we have a comprehensive social policy framework which has outcomes identified with respect to what Albertans want as a base level and has the optimal opportunity for every Albertan to participate? By creating a comprehensive social policy framework and making sure that all program delivery is aligned, not just in Human Services but across government and in collaboration with our community, we can achieve the outcomes we want for Albertans.

Ms Woo-Paw: Again to the same minister: how will Albertans be involved in the development of the proposed social policy framework?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's absolutely important that Albertans are involved in the development of the social policy framework. We're designing that now. In terms of how we go about engaging, first and foremost, we want to engage those people who have been actively involved in supporting individuals and assisting individuals in the community. We need to work across government to make sure that there's alignment across government and input across government but also out into the private sector as well because there are many businesses which provide services to Albertans. So we need to design that process, we need to engage the community, and it needs to be a full consultative process.

Critical Electricity Transmission Infrastructure

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, last month the Premier and the Energy minister did the right thing by abruptly ordering the suspension of two massive overbuilt transmission lines approved under Bill 50.

The companies building those suspended lines have already dramatically overspent their budget by more than $500 million. This kind of runaway spending is not only allowed under Bill 50; it's encouraged. Companies are guaranteed a rate of return based on their expenditures. In other words, they're paid to spend money. To the Energy minister: have you sent a letter that prohibits these companies from spending more money at taxpayers' expense, or are you not even allowed to under Bill 50?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is speculating about things he knows nothing about. We're in the process of setting up a committee that will review Bill 50 and the AESO recommendations, and we're continuing on that plan.

Mr. Hinman: It's clear that he knows nothing about it.

To the same minister. We have been told that more than $600 million has been spent on these projects when they're only authorized by AESO to spend $100 million. Is this accurate, and if so, will the ratepayers be on the hook or these overspending companies? Be honest.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, he can pull out those numbers he's been told by somebody. Who has he been told by? Those speculative questions don't get answers in this Chamber.

2:20

Mr. Hinman: Where do they come from, then? It is unbelievable how disconnected you guys are.

Given your government's apparent death-bed conversion on the ill-advised transmission lines you know that they need to be downsized or even cancelled altogether. Will you accordingly insist that the companies immediately cancel contracts related to this overbuild so that ratepayers are only on the hook for a couple of hundred million rather than a billion plus? When is it going to stop?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, for the fifth or sixth or seventh time: we are proceeding with a review of the two north-south transmissions with a committee that will review all of the issues that they're concerned with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Registry Service Fees for Municipalities

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In what can almost be described as a comedy of errors, this government imposed a $15 motor vehicle licence information fee on municipalities and police in last year's budget, without warning, then abruptly postponed the fee's implementation until September, and then announced a further and indefinite suspension of the fee on the eve of its new implementation date. To the Minister of Service Alberta: are you presently in discussions with the municipalities and the police about the suspended fee, sir?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to take my first question from the member opposite. Let me be very clear. On this side of the House we listen to our municipalities; we work with them. They raised concerns. We have cancelled the fees, and if we are to move forth with any sort of fees, we will consult with them beforehand because they are partners with us and our government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question: is it still your intention to reintroduce the fees in the 2012-13 budget?

Mr. Bhullar: Mr. Speaker, the budget is forthcoming. However, it is not the intention of my ministry to bring forth any fees without consulting with the municipalities. If the hon. member would like, he can pick up the phone and call an alderperson in Calgary or pick up the phone and call the mayor and ask if they've been consulted. If the answer is no, then my answer is no, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: if the fee is absolutely off the table now, please explain how you intend to make up the forfeited revenue, and if it can be absorbed fairly easily through other means, why was it deemed a necessity in the first place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me be clear. Service Alberta provides a very important service to our police services and our municipalities every single day by running that registry. There is a very significant cost to running that registry system. At present we the government of Alberta, the taxpayers of Alberta, pay for that, and we are proud to provide that service to our police services and our municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Private Registry Service Fees

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Service Alberta gave such a good response to that last question that I'm going to ask him another one. Last year the cost of filing a corporate annual return was $21 from the registry offices. This year it is $51. That is a 243 per cent increase in a single year, and I understand that the $30 increase is all a government increase and not a registry fee increase. My question is: what is the justification for such a huge increase to file a one-page document?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's Service Alberta day in the Legislature today. I'm very proud.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that before this last year's budget there was zero fee recovered by Service Alberta. The $21 was a fee for the registry agents. So it's an exercise in cost recovery. It's very important for me to note that our price for filing a corporate return is still 42 per cent below the national average. We are still a leader in supporting our businesses.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: given that the promises that have been made for several years now to review the fees for registry agents have not been granted, why has the government taken this opportunity to increase their own fees so drastically?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that the fees better reflect the cost of providing the service. It's that simple. It was a decade, ten years, since the fees went up, and the costs have more than doubled during that period of time. Alberta has competitive fees. Another example of that is that we have the lowest incorporation fees of any province in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question again to the same minister: given that a registry financial analysis and fee model development report was completed in March 2011, what action has the ministry taken to address the concerns of registry agents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I actually had a very productive and positive meeting with the agents' association yesterday. The fact is that in 1994, when the model was developed, we had 4.2 million transactions and a population of 2.6 million. Today we have a population of 3.5 million with 8.1 million transactions per year. That's nearly a 93 per cent increase. We have a very positive relationship with the association, and we as partners will ensure that Alberta has the best service for our citizens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Lubicon Lake First Nation

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is all about words and promises, but inaction remains its trademark. A 2010 Amnesty International report states that the Lubicon nation in northern Alberta have "disproportionate numbers of miscarriages, stillbirths and other maternal concerns" as well as "high rates of . . . suicide." To the Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations: given these grave health problems, which include residents suffering from industrial pollution, when will the minister stand up for aboriginal rights and carry out a health investigation?

Mr. Dallas: Thank you for the question, hon. member. Mr. Speaker, the declaration that the member refers to is actually a declaration amongst countries around the world. Canada is a signatory to that. It's not an issue for Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First Nation, second-class citizen, Third World treatment. How can you affirm working in collaboration with First Nation communities when the Lubicon Lake nation still do not have running water and sewage facilities in 2011?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, the Lubicon people are very important to Albertans. They have some very significant challenges, that we all work together as Albertans, as Canadians to address. The Lubicon people have had negotiations over a long period of time with our federal counterparts, and those continue today.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the ping-pong game with the Lubicon ball continues.

Given that in July 2011 an oil spill caused irreparable damage to the Lubicon nation's territory, how can this provincial government justify its failure to help the Lubicon rehabilitate their affected Alberta land?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose I could defer to one of my colleagues that could comment on the remediation work that's been done there, but I understand that that work has been completed and satisfactorily.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Early Childhood Education

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the Progressive Conservative leadership race the Premier talked about implementing universal full-day kindergarten. Many people see universal full-day kindergarten as nothing more than glorified daycare, fully funded by the taxpayer with very little incremental education value for most five-year-olds. My question is to the Minister of Education. Does the minister support the implementation of universal full-day kindergarten as an expensive program when most school boards already fund full-day kindergarten available to those students who most need it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this member may have more recent memories of kindergarten than I do, but I will tell you that there is a big difference between a kindergarten and daycare. Daycare is a phenomenon in North America that came about as a result of increased divorce rates and both parents working. They have no educational requirements as opposed to an early intervention program, that, indeed, was shown over time to have positive effects on a child's cognitive development.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government already funds half-day kindergarten, does it make sense to implement universal full-day kindergarten for all students when most evidence suggests that only a small percentage of students actually derive any educational benefit from attending full-day kindergarten versus the half-day already delivered by this government?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will have to differ with this member on evidence. As a matter of fact, evidence goes as far as the early 1800s with the Montessori program and then the Head Start program in the United States, and they do show positive effects on a child's development. [interjection] However, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere obviously didn't benefit from one of them because he can't pay attention, listening for less than 30 seconds. I will answer that question in my next supplemental.

The Speaker: Well, we're not going to have a debate. We're going to deal with policy.

Go ahead, sir.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Wouldn't it make more sense to utilize resources in a more concentrated and specific way such as creating a social innovation fund targeted at early childhood development, much like the safe communities innovation fund that was implemented by this Premier as Justice minister, rather than being trapped in the old paradigm of universal programming?

The Speaker: Well, if it's policy you're aiming to deal with, proceed.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a fair question, and that is exactly what we're looking at. We're asking all Albertans to share with us what their view is. Do they want full-time kindergarten? Do they want part-time? Do they want it mandatory? Do they want it optional? Now is the time to discuss this, and we will probably get some good, solid answers from not only educators, not only parents, not only experts but Albertans, students and others, who now have a forum through which they can contribute on this particular issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An excellent emergency medical service in Alberta was arbitrarily ripped from municipalities to Alberta Health Services in April 2009. Alberta EMS was considered among the top 5 per cent of services in North America before the change. Alberta Health Services promised the transition would improve quality and efficiency. Well, current staff morale is at an all-time low across the province according to workers in the field. To the minister: what are the indicators that the EMS transition has been a success? What are we getting for $219 million?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have a lot of details at hand about the transition to which the hon. member refers. I'd be pleased to get him some more information down the road. What I can tell you is that the culture within the system and particularly among EMS providers has in my view improved considerably in the last few months.

Dr. Swann: Well, I would challenge the minister, then, to do a survey, as Dr. Duckett did, and actually find out what the morale is.

Given that there used to be weekly reporting of EMS response times, why have you stopped measuring response times and performance since 2009?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to a performance reporting exercise undertaken by Alberta Health Services, I can certainly attempt to provide him with some information about that. The other alternative is for the hon. member to ask AHS on his own. I would submit to you that emergency medical services workers take the same tremendous pride in their work as all other partners in the health care team. Response times are among the highest indicators of their performance. As well, their integration with other members of the health care team, their ability to have input, responsibility in day-to-day decisions, which has been a focus of AHS management, is another important feature . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Dr. Swann: Well, the minister is right. Response times are the best indicators of emergency response. Why aren't they measuring them and reporting them? Given that soaring overtime costs now in EMS have meant that Edmonton has been down as many as 10 ambulance units at a time, what assurance can the minister offer Albertans that emergency services will be there when they need them?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the hon. member, I don't have any direct knowledge that, in fact, AHS is not reporting and monitoring response times in the system. I would be very surprised if that was the case. As I said, I'd be pleased to get him some additional information on this and provide it outside of question period.

International Medical Graduates

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, a couple of weeks ago in Calgary I had the opportunity to sit in on a presentation from the Alberta International Medical Graduates Association. This association represents doctors who graduated from World Health Organization accredited medical schools around the world, and they are now living here in Alberta. I was enlightened by the frustration expressed by this association on how difficult it is to get into residency programs. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why are there not more spaces available in medical residency programs when there are international doctors that can fill them?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, both our medical schools are addressing residency issues at this time, and they are both working to increase their capacity. I can tell the hon. member that since 2004 the number of international medical graduates in residency training has doubled, from 21 to 42, and while that program has been growing, so has the number of domestic seats in our medical programs. All these people, of course, need residency spots, so we've been working with the universities to ensure that there are more available, but I must tell the hon. member that our first priority is to ensure domestic students can complete their medical training.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Now, assuming that these doctors are able to find residency positions here in Alberta, are there programs in place to help them with their language and their social barriers and training opportunities for them to one day serve Albertans as medical doctors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member hits the nail on the head. Language barriers can be critically important for people within the medical field. Under the health workforce action plan there are programs available through both the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary to help international doctors to bring their language skills up to a level where they can meet the Canadian medical practice standards. We believe it's important. We'll continue to work with these partners to ensure that international doctors can get the language training so that they can meet the requirements and practise medicine here in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Webber: Okay. Again to the same minister: now, what if an international student comes to Alberta halfway through their residency program from another country? Can we accommodate them at our universities so that they can finish their program here?

Mr. Weadick: Well, that too is a very good question, Mr. Speaker. Some universities have articulation agreements with other schools, which makes it much easier to transfer in mid-program. For other schools there's a requirement to apply to the university of your choice, apply to the program, and then have that reviewed so that you can see how you'd fit within the program. We want all of our medical students to be successful in their programs so that they can practise here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Health Accord Negotiations

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week our minister of health joined other provincial and territorial health ministers in a health summit that addressed a number of health issues facing Canadians today. My questions are all for the minister of health. The health accord with the federal government will expire in 2014. Can you please explain Alberta's position on these discussions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Last week, in fact, the federal, provincial, and territorial ministers did meet. While there were not detailed discussions on the 2014 health accord, we did have a very good discussion as ministers about what we thought should be the focus of that accord. We talked at length about an accord focused on population health outcomes, about improvements to the health system, and about other areas that we know are of common interest to all Canadians.

Mr. Johnston: During the discussions at the health ministers' meetings in Halifax were there any specifics raised around funding or terms of the next agreement?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, a number of provinces and territories expressed some initial views on details of the future health accord, but what I would advise the hon. member is that those detailed discussions, in fact, take place among the Premiers, and Premiers will meet in January as the Council of the Federation, where they will consider those sorts of questions and others.

Mr. Johnston: I understand that Alberta will be joining the Health Council of Canada. Can the minister explain Alberta's rationale for joining this group?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to announce at this meeting that Alberta will in fact join the Health Council of Canada. The council was created in 2003 and is a partnership of the federal, provincial, and territorial ministers of health. Among the benefits of joining are, of course, the opportunity for Alberta to build strategic partnerships with other jurisdictions, to share some best practices, particularly some of our knowledge and experience here in Alberta with initiatives such as the electronic health record, and also to learn about what other provinces are doing. The council is also committed to reporting to Canadians on progress on issues of common interest.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the Oral Question Period for today. Nineteen members were recognized, 114 questions and the responses.

There is a request from the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to amplify an answer given in the House yesterday. I will recognize him to do that, and our policy is, then, that the person that raised the original question to him will have an option to raise an additional question.

The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

2:40 Gravel Extraction Management

Mr. Oberle: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and clarify an answer I gave in question period yesterday. Yesterday, in addressing a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre first directed at the minister of environment and then supplementally to me regarding gravel and groundwater and concerns surrounding those, I answered the question to the hon. member by indicating that SRD has no outstanding recommendations with the Auditor General.*

That's clearly not a fair statement of the situation, I must say, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we have three outstanding recommendations with regard to reforestation. The work in my department is implemented. We're awaiting a follow-up audit. We have four outstanding recommendations with respect to sand and gravel, the issue that the hon. member was concerned about. We've taken action on those, and we are also awaiting a follow-up audit, which probably won't happen till 2012.

Given that information, Mr. Speaker, that clearly would indicate that those are still outstanding and that I spoke incorrectly in the House. My answer was short and curt and was not fully respectful of this Chamber or of the hard-working Member for Edmonton-Centre. I apologize to this House and to that hon. member for the answer, and I hope I've clarified the situation today.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre I would like to thank the hon. Sustainable Resource Development minister for his clarification and correction today.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, is there a motion?

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give oral notice of two motions, the first motion reading:

Be it resolved that the following change to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing be approved: that Mr. Zwozdesky replace Dr. Brown.

The second motion is:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the Select Special Information and Privacy Commissioner Search Committee report and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Jill Clayton be appointed Information and Privacy Commissioner for the province of Alberta for a five-year term commencing February 1, 2012.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, yesterday a question was asked by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Part of that question was: what rules are in place to govern the activities of AIMCo managers? I would like to table today the appropriate number of copies of the code of conduct and ethical standards of AIMCo.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, sir. I have a few tablings today. The first one is from the Airdrie Koinonia Christian school. It shows the confidential pastor's report that parents are obliged to fill out, and one of the questions on there is whether they've accepted Christ as their Saviour.

I do note, too – this is from a school in Lethbridge currently receiving taxpayer dollars to run their school – where it says, “The purpose of our school is to assist parents in their God-given duty to instruct their children in the fear of the Lord.”

Here is another copy of the speech of the debate from this summer from the PC leadership convention where she indicated that she was concerned about the growth of private and charter schools.

Tomorrow I will table the reference to the Islamic school that is not having disabled children or special-needs students at their school.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings today, all on the same theme. These are all pieces of correspondence from constituents regarding their opposition to Bill 26 as it stands now. I am tabling correspondence from Bob Jonathan, Vivien Jonathan, Richard Ritz, Marcie Turpin, and Janice Wood.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition signed by 321 Albertans asking the Legislative Assembly to pass Bill 208, the Health Statutes (Canada Health Act Reaffirmation) Amendment Act, 2011, which is sponsored by me.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have two purported points of order.

The hon. Deputy Premier.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon during question period the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition I believe contravened our Standing Order 23(h),(i), and (j) by imputing the false motives of another member, in fact several members of this House, including the Premier of this government. He used allegations against a member based on a newspaper article that the hon. member had, I'm assuming, read around a town official sending an e-mail out to solicit votes, and then insinuated that by a solicitation of those votes it actually rewarded them with a $14 million sum of money.

Mr. Speaker, I've taken the liberty of doing a very little bit of homework and have looked at our supplementary estimates. On page 61 of the supplementary estimates, transfer of voted appropriations, we find the $14 million amount that the hon. member had referred to. That amount relates to the annexation and creation of an improvement district in the Cold Lake region, the air weapons range, which was brought up in this House. I distinctly remember it being discussed.

There was a memorandum of understanding between the various counties, an understanding regarding the adjustment of the boundaries between the city of Cold Lake, Lac La Biche, and the municipal district of Bonnyville. Included in the MOU was a provision that the government of Alberta would provide capital contributions to Lac La Biche county for infrastructure projects due to funding shortfalls arising from the MOU based on the agreement which all parties had agreed to.

Mr. Speaker, the e-mail that the hon. member referred to was dated September 22. The MOU, I believe, was signed somewhere around September 8. It's an impossibility to link the two together.

*See page 1389, left column, paragraph 6

I believe that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for political reasons made and imputed false motives to the Premier, to myself, and to the current Minister of Transportation by trying to link these things together during question period. I believe that he is liable under those three sections.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The acting opposition House leader.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you. That's a nice title. Thank you very much.

First of all, I want to point out to the Assembly and to the Speaker the information that the opposition leader was relying on. It was a widely reported account. It's very clear in the information what the town official in question wrote, and it's quoted at length here.

Anybody can vote how they want, however, in order to keep Ray in a ministry position, either Horner or Redford have to get in as premier. Therefore, on the next ballot we would have to vote for either Horner as our #1 pick and Alison Redford as our #2 pick.

And then it goes on.

It is imperative for future funding that Ray remains in a powerful position.

That was widely confirmed and never denied.

The nature of the question was such that after referring to this quote by the chief administrator of St. Paul, the Leader of the Opposition asked a question. I have it right here, as the Speaker does, and I'm assuming for my purposes that the Official Opposition Leader followed the script. The script was, "Was this $14 million the price Albertans had to pay to get the right results from the PC leadership race?" Then it goes on to two more sets of questions.

Now, in the interest of harmony here I think the Deputy Premier has been able to provide some further information that he had access to concerning the timing of the MOU and the e-mail. Given that further information, I'm going to take the liberty on behalf of the opposition leader to acknowledge that correction and withdraw any offence that was offered.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that suffices.

2:50

The Speaker: Hon. members, I appreciate the position put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Words such as "slimy pork-barrel politics," "warlord-style politics," "slimy pork-barrel politics" again, and "greasing" and tying it together with innuendo are totally inappropriate for utilization in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. They violate all of our rules with respect to casting aspersions. They violate Beauchesne, page 409(7). They violate the House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 502. I appreciate that withdrawal. There would have been a point of order. There would have been a request for withdrawal. But that's now been dealt with.

I sincerely hope that between today and tomorrow the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition will actually take some time to do some editing. He's a learned man. He's an educated man. He's a university graduate. He's educated in the English language. He knows how beautiful the English language is, how definitive the words are, how many words there are, how one can create prose to have the same effect without using real gutter phrases that take away from the dignity of this Assembly.

All right. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Questions about Political Party Activity

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rose on a point of order earlier today during question period when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was asking questions to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. There was a series of questions of which all, in my view, offended today the provisions of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, page 503, which require that the questions address matters that are within the purview of the minister and within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the individual minister addressed, on page 502, and, on page 504, cannot concern internal party matters or party or election expenses.

There's a very important, I think, rule that we need to have understood in this House. The hon. member knows this rule because you admonished him on this rule on an earlier date with respect to a similar series of questions. He came back to the House and asked questions which he managed to frame in a way that dealt with an act which came under the purview of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, although in my view barely, in terms of getting his questions in, but then today reverted to his old, bad habits of asking questions which were outside the rules with respect to things which came under the purview of the Minister of Justice and, indeed, things which were internal party matters.

Now, I can understand the hon. member's reason for wanting to ask some questions, but clearly he's been in this House long enough to understand the rules and understand that it's not within the Minister of Justice's purview to answer questions about things that he does not have information on at hand and to answer questions with respect to party matters. If there are questions with respect to election finances in terms of monies that have been raised, those are questions which ought to be directed to the Chief Electoral Officer, who collects financial reports and does audits as an officer of the Legislature. That's the appropriate purview. If there are questions about what should be in legislation or about policy, that might be an appropriate question for the House.

But, again, there's nothing in the election expenses and finances act which controls the spending of political parties. Every political party can utilize the funds that they raise for their appropriate political purposes, and there's nothing in the legislation which curtails that. Therefore, a question about party spending under the guise of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act is out of order.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should be definitive and clear on this point because it comes up time after time, and it's certainly coming up in this circumstance. If the hon. member has queries about something which was disclosed in a member's disclosure statement, that's a question for the Ethics Commissioner. If the hon. member has a question about legislation and length of legislation, that could go to the appropriate minister. If the hon. member has a question about how a party spends their money, quite frankly, it's none of his business.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I listened with interest and disbelief to that from the hon. minister. The purview of the Minister of Justice would be the first thing that I would like to address, and I would draw to the attention of the House and the hon. minister the order in council from October 12, 2011, which is issued under the authority of the Government Organization Act and comes from the President of Executive Council. It states that “the Minister of Justice and Attorney General continues as the Minister responsible for the following enactments,” and it gives you a long list, including the Conflicts of Interest Act, which is where my questions were directed today. They were obviously directed there yesterday. I was encouraged yesterday, in my view, to seek additional information, which I was disappointed was not provided again today.

Now, the Conflicts of Interest Act is, of course, under the purview of the Minister of Justice. I have every right to ask that question. It’s only last week, Mr. Speaker, that you were pleased – pleased – and I can quote from Hansard if you would like. I believe in this matter I will. It’s in Hansard on 1233, November 22, 2011. “Pursuant to section 46(2) of the Conflicts of Interest Act the chair is pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Ethics Commissioner. This report covers the period April 1, 2010, to March 31, 2011.”

This is a document that’s under the purview of the Minister of Justice. It was tabled here last week. In this report if you look at page 9, you will see the disclosure process from the Ethics Commissioner regarding private disclosure forms for all 83 members. It goes on to talk about other things, but in the time that I have, it’s these disclosure statements which were the basis of my questions today.

I also had questions relating to True Blue Alberta Ltd. and a report to the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly on the investigation by the former Ethics Commissioner into allegations involving the Premier, the former Minister of Health and Wellness, who is the current Minister of Human Services, and a former Minister of Finance. It may be a sensitive document to the hon. House leader. He’s shaking his head. This is information that was put before this House, and it’s True Blue Alberta Ltd.

True Blue was incorporated to be the legal vehicle for the fundraising and for the payment of expenses relating to the leadership campaign of the former Premier. It had no other purpose. My question today, Mr. Speaker, was: if it had no other purpose, why then was it used to have these taxable allowances paid in two separate years to the former Premier and his spouse? If I don’t have the opportunity to ask those questions in this Assembly to the minister responsible for the Conflicts of Interest Act, I don’t think democracy is well served.

Now, as for the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, if we go back, Mr. Speaker, to the order in council that was issued on October 12, 2011, by the President of Executive Council, there’s another section in here that designates – and the Minister of Justice is a very, very busy minister. There’s no doubt about that. There are a lot of statutes that are involved in this.

This is what the Government Organization Act has to say specifically about the Minister of Justice and Attorney General and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act in (2). “The Minister of Justice and Attorney General is designated as the Minister responsible for the following enactments,” and fourth on the list is the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. So the minister is clearly responsible, and he has the authority. I can’t understand why this government would be interested in abdicating responsibility and authority for those acts. Those are under the hon. gentleman’s control, and he should stand up and answer those questions.

3:00

Now, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out Beauchesne 410(5): “The primary purpose of the Question Period is the seeking of information and calling the Government to account.” That’s my job as Official Opposition. I’m sorry if any

hon. members are offended by that, but that’s my job, and I try to do my job. Also, 410(6): “The greatest possible freedom should be given to Members consistent with the other rules and practices.” So there’s leeway here.

I really don’t think that there is a point of order here. I just can’t understand why the hon. Government House Leader would bring this matter up about True Blue Alberta. This certainly is a matter of public interest. We have a benefit plan trust that has been provided in the four years that these disclosure statements have been made. There is mention of the benefit plan trust, and in two of those disclosure statements, in two of those years, there is specific mention of these taxable allowances. If I’m reading this correctly, they are over $5,000 in value, and taxpayers, who are subsidizing this system potentially, particularly with the PC Party benefit fund trust or whatever you want to call it, have every right – every right – to know.

I think they would want me to ask these questions. I’m sure, Mr. Speaker, that they’re very, very disappointed that we are not getting the answers that we should on behalf of taxpayers from the hon. members across the way.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any additional comments to be made by anyone with respect to this?

Hon. members, there seem to be two things at play here. Will the skill with which the question is written allow the question to be asked one day that may not have been asked the day before? Last Thursday, when I intervened, I said no, that the words of the question were such that they were not warranted under the rules that we have, particularly with those dealing with internal political party matters.

I do believe that that was the correct assessment. I do believe that quotations were given by the chair, and the chair also challenged the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who said that he disagreed. Well, fine. He disagrees with everything, it seems. But I also asked him to come back on Monday to give me some citations. They did not arrive, so I’ll deal with that one.

Yesterday the questions were written in such a way and posed in such a way that the chair did not intervene. Today the questions were posed, and the chair did not intervene, but the Government House Leader did intervene with respect to the questions at hand. What is really odd about this is that the report in question is issued by the Ethics Commissioner, who is a legislative officer of this Assembly. The document in question is the disclosure statement that was issued on behalf of everybody – there are about three pages that define what all of us disclose – and certainly under the one of the former Premier there is a certain section in that public disclosure that basically says Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta and for the usage that has already been explained, the benefit of that.

Then the questions come today, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar basically says:

What is the value of the PC Party benefit plan trust?

That’s the question that was given to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. The Minister of Justice and Attorney General said:

That’s not information within my purview as Minister of Justice.

And the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said:

I disagree. It certainly is.

He goes on to say:

Again to the same minister: given that taxpayers are subsidizing the PC Party benefit plan trust, what is the amount of money provided by taxpayers to subsidize this trust?

The hon. Minister of Justice goes on to say:

Mr. Speaker, I am responsible for the legislation. I am not responsible for the operation or administration of this act. If the member has questions, he can ask the Chief Electoral Officer, or he can ask the Conservative Party. It's not information within my purview.

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar goes on to say: Unbelievable.

Now, again to the same minister: will the minister ask the president of the PC Party, the association, to release all the details on this benefit plan trust, and why is it necessary in the first place?

The minister basically then says:

Mr. Speaker, I'm not about to be doing the hon. member's work for him, at which point the Government House Leader said that he had a point of order.

I don't know how a minister would know what is the value of the PC Party plan trust, and I don't know how that is part of his purview as Minister of Justice, which he answered quite correctly. Despite the fact that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said that he disagrees, that it certainly is, I don't know how that makes it any different.

The subject matter itself has to be dealt with someplace. We do have an Ethics Commissioner. The Ethics Commissioner issues this document, and he has this information, and all 83 of us are identified. If the expectation is that one minister of the Crown is supposed to be cognizant to know what the assets are of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar or the hon. member for anywhere else and that he's supposed to have that at his fingertips, then that may be more, I think, than would normally be expected. Now, I think that the hon. Ethics Commissioner as an officer of the Legislative Assembly might be contacted by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

If it has something to do with the act – it has to do with amendments; it has to do with policy statements of the act – okay; that's fair game. The minister has got to deal with that. But I don't know how he's supposed to have that kind of knowledge. If the expectation is that he should, then that is really quite a remarkable conclusion. If a minister is supposed to know what the Ethics Commissioner does, writes, and publishes and know every line on that document, at his fingertips, that's quite a remarkable conclusion. Quite a remarkable conclusion, how anybody would ever have that knowledge before them.

Importantly, there also is another mechanism, and it's called the Legislative Offices Committee, which is an all-party committee which all of the legislative officers have to appear before. It's all-party members that are there. They can ask the man to come in – in this case it is a man – and ask him to review this with them. We also know that if matters are referred to the office of the Ethics Commissioner or any other legislative officer, these matters should not be raised in the Assembly pending an investigation by these legislative officers.

It's one of those matters that I certainly, you know, can see the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar – and I applaud him for his aggressive nature. He gets up in the morning, and he's looking under everything to try and find a question. He spends a lot of time trying to put it together. One day he's on it, and the next day he's coming right back again. That is his job. That is his job. Members on the government side shouldn't be overly sensitive about that type of question.

There has to be a way of dealing with this that's realistic. I just don't know how somebody can get mad at a minister because he doesn't have 249 pages of 20 lines in front of him to go through.

The 83 times three is 249 pages. And I've looked at these public disclosure statements and all you have. There are about 20 lines on each page. How is he or she supposed to have that at their fingertips at any given moment?

Let's just try and make sure we can use the words that we have, again, to basically get to seek the information that we need.

3:10

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 27

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and President of Treasury Board and Enterprise.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that eloquent dissertation and education for us on those points.

It is my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 27, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2).

The supplementary amounts provided by this bill reflect the fiscal picture outlined in the second-quarter fiscal update, released on November 21. These amounts are necessary for the government to conduct business and fulfill its commitments during the current fiscal year. The additional amounts are mainly related to assistance for disasters and emergencies such as forest fires and floods as well as funding increases to core services like education, Mr. Speaker, which we all believe is extremely important. It is important to note that funding to assist Slave Lake and surrounding communities to recover from this year's devastating fire accounts for approximately $234 million of the total supply estimates.

I urge my colleagues in this House to support this very important bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to speak on the government's supplementary supply bill. Certainly, I had an opportunity – actually, it was last week – to sit in on the second-quarter update. I've been concerned for quite some time about this government's spending habits. It was very symbolic, hon. members, to witness the Deficit Twins, the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board, delivering the second-quarter update. I thought to myself while I was sitting there listening to the hon. gentlemen how different it was with their first-quarter update, when we only had one minister in charge of both departments.

Mr. Liepert: That's a stretch.

Mr. MacDonald: No. I know he's tall, but it's not a stretch.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, when he was President of Treasury Board, also filled in as Minister of Finance, and to my delight taxpayers didn't notice that there was one individual doing the job of two. This went on all summer long. It's no disrespect to the current Minister of Energy, who formerly had the job, but certainly taxpayers didn't notice that he had resigned and run for the Progressive Conservative leadership. So the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was doing the work of the current two ministers.

Mr. Liepert: It wore him out.

Mr. MacDonald: No, it didn't wear him out. He's just having a rest. Whenever Muhammad Ali gets tired, he goes to the corner, too, and that's just where he is at the moment, in the corner.

Now, certainly, we look at the current relationship, and I'm not surprised whenever the Premier – and we looked at this a little earlier in the discussion on a purported point of order. It's the order in council that set up this government, and the Premier, I think, in discussion with her inner circle in the Premier's office set up the organization of government. It's quite interesting when we get to the Finance department, Mr. Speaker. I'm just going to find it here. If you'd have patience with me, I would appreciate it. It's quite interesting what they have done. It's not like they put the Minister of Finance on a leash. I think the individual is on a choke chain here.

Now, the responsibility for the following enactments is transferred to the Minister of Finance.

There's a long list, again, of statutes, and they're all important. Horse Racing Alberta has been moved into the Minister of Finance's department under his responsibility and control and authority.

It goes on here, but what I noticed – and this is a change – is that in the finance and enterprise grant regulation these powers, duties, and functions are transferred to the common responsibility of the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board and Enterprise. I thought automatically that the Premier's office and the Premier were putting the Minister of Finance on a very short leash by making him go to the President of the Treasury Board to get a cheque signed because if you look at this finance and enterprise regulation, which I did, that was the authority for the Minister of Finance to cut grant cheques. But now I find it interesting that he has to ask permission from the President of the Treasury Board first.

This is a direct change from the Premier's office and the Government Organization Act. If we look at the past history of this hon. minister's spending habits, particularly in health, we'll find that there is cause for concern. If the Premier – and I'm not involved in any of these internal discussions by the Progressive Conservative Party, but certainly I can see why she would want to share that responsibility between the two individuals so that one doesn't spend wildly. There is always someone there asking the question: why?

Whenever we look at supplementary estimates – and there is a lot of money in these difficult times being requested – you have to look, Mr. Speaker, at why it is necessary for close to but not quite an additional billion dollars. Certainly, the situation in Slave Lake is a valid reason. What I do notice – and maybe I missed it – is that there is no money for Health and Wellness. The five-year plan: it's not necessary for money to be used there.

Now, there are a lot of places where there are surpluses anticipated, Mr. Speaker, with this government, and there are a lot of places where we certainly are going to have to be very, very careful with the money that we spend. We could reduce the size of government and save some money. I don't think that's going to happen. We could tighten our belts in a number of ways.

The total expenses for the opted-out and the management employees' pay increase: we could have a few more details on that, I think. That would be appropriate at this time. I know that when the hon. Speaker was talking about the officers of the Legislative Assembly, who appeared before the Leg. Offices Committee requesting additional money to meet their commitment on those employee top-ups, or employee pay increases, they made a compelling argument. The majority of those requests certainly were granted.

When we look at the money that we have in this province, we look at the royalty stream. We look at taxes. We look at transfers from the government of Canada. It certainly will be interesting, Mr. Speaker, to read in the newspapers the negotiations as they take place in a little over a year from now, negotiations on the Canada health transfer between, of course, the federal government and the provinces. The Minister of Finance – and I don't want to get off topic here. I don't want to speculate on whether or not he will be at the table, but that's a source of revenue that we've got to watch very, very closely.

3:20

The investment income: well, who knows where that's going to go? We had anticipated an additional billion dollars in investment income from the heritage savings trust fund. I don't think that is going to be realistic, but we still see this large request for supplementary supply. Regardless of what's happening in the rest of the world, we are still getting this request that's before us in this bill.

Now, the sustainability fund. It's interesting to note that the investment income from that is essentially doubling and supposedly the higher balance is doing that while the heritage savings trust fund account is going exactly in the reverse, where there is $578 million less than was anticipated. The argument made is the weak equity markets. We've got net income from commercial operations, we've got gaming and lottery revenue, and we've got, of course, liquor revenue. The Treasury Branches: again, we have sort of a spotty record there with a reliable source of revenue. Sometimes I wonder about the Treasury Branches, but that's for another day, Mr. Speaker. Premiums, fees, and licences, and there are other small revenue streams as well. Well, they're not small. They're in the hundreds of millions of dollars, but whenever you compare them to personal and corporate income taxes and resource royalty, they're small.

We have an anticipated revenue stream of $36.8 billion, but I'm sure there will be money left over and transferred like there is any other year, so that'll be up around $38 billion. That's the revenue stream. But for whatever reason, we have to have this supplementary supply.

Now, one item that caught my eye in there – and it was an unrelated matter in question period today and yesterday – was gravel and sand. Gravel, sand, and salt, I believe, were the three items. I think it's a $15 million request. I don't understand, after all the years of planning for winter road maintenance, how this would be overlooked. Did a groundhog somewhere tell this government that you don't have enough sand and salt for winter roads, and you're going to need more? You're going to need $15 million worth of additional material to keep our roads safe.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I have a number of questions around that. We privatized these road maintenance contracts. My research indicates that certainly wasn't a good deal for taxpayers. You only have to look in public accounts to see these large sums that are annually provided to five companies. It has got to be close to $400 million, Mr. Speaker, annually. Why can't they pay for the sand, salt, and gravel if I'm understanding this request correctly? Is the amount tendered? Can everyone across the province aggressively compete by price and delivery for these materials, or is it another way of doing business?

There are a lot of questions, certainly, with this bill. But, Mr. Speaker, we have to remember that this bill is a reflection of this government's spending habits. It's a reflection of how they budget. With that being said, I've got to repeat myself and say that we understand there are necessary requests for disaster funding. Sometimes I think we should set that up in the budget quite differently and have that as a dedicated amount. Hopefully, it would not be needed, but if it's there, it can be used. Then if it's not used, it can be transferred back like so many hundreds of millions of dollars are done each and every year. Citizens may not realize that there is a lot of money that goes unexpended and is transferred back.

Now, last year there was over $600 million, Mr. Speaker. People would say: "Well, how do you know that? Where is that money?" Well, it's in the consolidated financial statements which come out, and if you look in the fine print, you will see where they park – I'm going to use the word "park" – this money in another account and then they move it. They usually wait until 90 days or so go by, and they move it into the current fiscal year. I don't know why that practice goes on, but perhaps in the course of debate we can be provided with an answer to that.

If that can be done, I don't know why we couldn't look at another way of funding disasters. Would it be cheaper? I don't know, but it certainly would be more transparent, and I think we would have better accountability.

With those remarks, I appreciate the opportunity to discuss supplementary supply, and I would like to say thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just take a couple of seconds to finish up. I won't take too long. I wanted to rise on behalf of the Wildrose again to note our caucus' great alarm at the size that this deficit has ballooned to. The reason it has ballooned to the $6 billion cash shortfall that it's now at – the roughly $3 billion accounting deficit, $6 billion cash shortfall – is because this government is unable to find savings within its budget, to look to their programs, to look at the way that they fund their departments, and find ways to be more frugal. Instead they allow outdated programs to perpetuate. They continue to spend money on pet projects that are not priorities. We Albertans are suffering the brunt of that.

An example of this is the $2 billion carbon capture and storage scheme. We keep hearing more and more every day about how unnecessary this scheme is and how there are so many different things that we could be doing that are far less expensive and far more effective with regard to promoting energy efficiency and so forth, things like helping the grid to be one where consumers can put energy back onto the grid in a more easy fashion and, through leveling the playing field with other forms of energy, promoting the use of natural gas for things like our vehicles and truck fleets and things like that. Those types of things are initiatives that will help consumers and will also save the government the need to fund these massive projects to the tune of $2 billion, which, of course, contributes to our deficit. I also think to the $3 billion that over the next 30 years is going to be given to North West Upgrading. I think: why is the government in the business of doing business? If it is a truly lucrative business, would not the private sector fill that role?

3:30

Upgrading is not an unproven science such as the oil sands were in the 1970s. Upgrading is a proven science. The companies know how to upgrade the product. They don't need government's push. If it's feasible, if it's cost-effective, if it's economically viable, the private sector will step in and will upgrade bitumen into synthetic crude. We do not need to be spending $3 billion or promising $3 billion of taxpayers' money and risking that kind of money.

We've seen with Gainers, we've seen with the plant in Lloydminster, and we've seen with other initiatives that the PC government has taken: where they have taken a direct stake in a company or in a project like this, we've seen the results, and it's not pretty. That's why Ralph Klein, when he was Premier, often said, you know, that the government, the PCs are not in the business of being in business. Well, that doctrine has gone out the window, and the PCs are back in the business of being in business and risking a lot of taxpayers' money because of it.

There is the $300 million being spent on new MLA offices. I always tell that to every single door I go to in Airdrie because we have a school shortage, as other places do. Fort McMurray, Beaumont, Chestermere, and others have major school shortages, yet we're spending $300 million on new MLA offices, and we have a $6 billion deficit. Even the new Alberta museum: there's nothing wrong with museums; museums are good things. But, again, is that something that we need today? Is that something that we just can't survive without right now, that $300 million for the new Alberta museum? I would say that that project can wait until our budget is back in balance, and then we can afford to pursue projects like that. That's just good common sense. It's just like the couple, the family that puts off buying the new vehicle and tries to get a couple more years out of the old one until maybe better times when they have a little bit more money in the bank account. Clearly, there's a lack of ability to prioritize by this government.

With regard to this particular supplementary supply bill one of the things that is very troubling is that the new Premier promised Albertans that she would find in-year savings, that she would find money in this year's budget to pay for the restoration of the $107 million education cuts, which every opposition party over here opposed when they were done originally and which the Premier today voted for when she was not yet the Premier. Then four months later she reversed that. We're glad she reversed that, but she said she would do so in a fiscally responsible manner, by finding in-year savings, and she didn't do that. She found the money in our sustainability fund, took it out, and it's just going to be an extra $107 million on top of the already massive deficit that we already have. This is yet another broken promise, another signal that this Premier is not willing to look within her government for fat that can be cut and to delay projects that can be done without for a couple more years, like the ones already spoken of.

An example is carbon capture and storage. She says, you know, that we're going to cut carbon capture and storage now. Well, we've already promised most of the money, and the amount remaining she says she's going to put into other green initiatives. Well, I don't know what those other green initiatives are, but if they're as effective as the CCS adventure, then I'm not too hopeful. So this is a problem.

There's a repetitive problem here of tax and spend. We saw it, actually, I thought, with the Liberal Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who feels that the answer to our budgetary woes is to increase our revenues in some form, whether that be through taxes or fees or whatever it is. He said that he didn't know the exact answer but that we needed to increase revenues. He applauded the Finance minister and the Municipal Affairs minister as well for bringing up the possibility of increasing revenues through things like a provincial sales tax, through restoration of the health premiums, which were essentially just a head tax as they didn't go to health care but just went straight into general revenues, or some other tax or fee increase that they're contemplating over on that side.

I doubt very highly that in the next election or before the next election, the next budget, they will propose a tax hike at that time. Highly doubtful. That would really be – sorry. Remind me to never look at the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood in the middle of saying something.

There's absolutely no reason why we should believe that this government will not increase taxes after the next election because they are absolutely seemingly unable to get into their minds and through their heads that the problem in Alberta today with regard to our budgetary situation has nothing to do with a lack of revenues. You can argue, as the Member for Calgary-Buffalo did, that we need to be more sustainable. He wants to put more money away, a larger portion of the oil and gas revenues away, and in order to do that, he wants more sustainable taxation, as he calls it, which would give us surpluses. Then we could put that back in, and we wouldn't have to adjust our program spending or infrastructure spending. That is one way to do it.

That's not the way I think Albertans want it to be done. It's certainly not the way the Wildrose wants it to be done. The Albertans that are talking to the Wildrose – you know, there are a few of them – are saying that what they want us to do is take a very careful look at our spending, defer things that are not priorities, cut the fat out of the budget that needs to be cut, particularly in the massive middle management of the bureaucracy and so forth, cut things like executive bonuses for health executives, cut things like salary increases for politicians, and cut the MLA offices. These are the things they want us to cut.

With regard to important things like front-line staff – nurses, doctors – important infrastructure projects like the ring roads, for example, they want us to go ahead with those and focus the dollars on those issues rather than on these pet projects, which seemingly pop up every couple of months, that the PCs want to undertake.

That is what I think Albertans are telling us. If we can't balance our budget on $100 oil – today the price of oil is about $100 a barrel. Brent crude is over $110, and the price in North America for west Texas is $100. It has been at this level for a while now. This is the longest period of time we've had oil at such a high, sustained price. It shot up to about $147 a barrel one time; that was very temporary and very quick. Frankly, it was one of the catalysts for world-wide economic recession. But that price has come down. It has been sustainably high since then, yet we still can't balance the budget. Not only can't we balance the budget on $100 a barrel for oil, but we can't even come close to balancing the budget. A $3 billion accounting deficit, a $6 billion cash shortfall: this is just an absolutely massive failure on the part of this government to manage our finances appropriately.

Look at the result for our children and for our grandchildren. You know, we see all of these sovereign countries around the world in this huge debt crisis. They try to come up with all kinds of schemes. If it wasn't so serious, it would be funny to watch these left-wing politicians in absolute denial about the cause of these problems.

Mr. Mason: Berlusconi?

Mr. Anderson: Berlusconi. Absolutely. Left-wing, not Liberal.

The causes are very simple. The causes are absolute, unrelenting. Mr. Chair, the causes of the financial crisis that is in Europe and in North America right now, particularly in the United States, are politicians . . .

3:40

An Hon. Member: George Bush.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, absolutely.

. . . fiscally irresponsible politicians across the board that continue to raise spending over and over and over again, government spending, raising taxes, doing everything that they possibly could to increase the entitlement state, the social state, to the point where it is literally impossible to sustain for any period of time. They keep wanting to find ways to sustain it just a little longer because they don't want to hold the potato. You know, it's like musical chairs. When the music stops, they don't want to be the ones without the seat.

Well, the fact is that we're past the point of no return. The only way to recover from this economic insanity that has occurred is to deleverage as a society, as individuals, certainly as governments, deleverage the massive amount of debt that has been built up and the massive amounts of entitlements that have been promised on the backs of future generations.

In this situation we as Albertans need to be leading, and this government needs to be leading. They need to be taking the bull by the horns and saying: "You know what? We need to balance the budget. We need to rein in our spending and be fiscally responsible. We need to balance the budget without raising taxes. We need to put a little of our oil and gas money away for a time when oil and gas won't be worth $100 a barrel or $120 a barrel."

That's what we should be doing. That's the conversation we should be having. Instead, the conversation we are having is one that was occurring across Europe for many years, which is, "Well, the only way to perpetuate the social welfare state is to raise taxes, to make ourselves uncompetitive." Guess what? Europe became uncompetitive. It became bloated. They couldn't afford all the entitlement programs. Debt, debt, debt: the only way to pay for it was more debt, more debt, more debt. Now we have them in this death spiral, essentially, where they can't get out of it. That's the problems that we face here, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have Standing Order 29(2)(a). Five minutes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can't resist asking my friend a question or so about his take on the debt crisis in Europe. I wonder if he is aware of the approach that has been taken by Iceland in response to their debt crisis. I know that the hon. member has characterized it as overspending, and he's talked about all these programs and stuff, but he hasn't really addressed the role of the banks in all of this. He hasn't really talked about whether or not the banks have some responsibility for this crisis and whether or not he actually thinks it's fair that these companies should be repaying these banks by cutting the very programs that the people depend on, programs that here in Alberta this hon. member is quick to defend, things like health care, education, and so on. Whose responsibility is it, really? Is it government's fault? Is there some private-sector involvement in terms of the banking system? And who is being asked to pay the price?

If he's not aware of what Iceland has done – they've taken a very different approach, and that's why I think you don't hear about it very much. They have basically put the bankers in jail. They have consciously defaulted on their foreign loans. They've taken a completely different approach, and they're doing just fine.

Mr. Anderson: The hon. member brings up a very good point. There is no doubt that it is not only governments' fault, this financial mess that we're in. There's no doubt that there was huge corporate irresponsibility, fraud, just awful things happening around the boardroom table. And what did governments do? What did they do for their buddies in the banking industry, specifically in the U.S. and in Europe? They bailed them out. They used taxpayer money to bail these banks out, and that is just as bad or worse than what has gone on with regard to governments expanding the welfare state to the point of collapse. So I would completely agree that that is a huge issue.

I think that we have to also understand, you know, what the solutions are now going forward. Is the solution to continue to perpetuate a banking industry that is clearly allowed to, certainly in the United States, run amok of any kind of proper financial disclosure and without proper regulations on the asset-backed commercial paper and so forth, that was one of the major reasons for that? Do we perpetuate that broken system by bailing those banks out, and do we perpetuate the broken welfare state by bailing it out continuously by printing money that doesn't exist – printing it, printing it, printing it – and that, hopefully, it takes us to the point where we can enjoy our retirement and that maybe our kids will have to deal with the fallout from it? No. That's not what we should be doing. We should be talking about: how do we deleverage now? How do we make our entire system, our entire social safety net as well as our economies sustainable for the long term so that we're not burdening our children?

An Hon. Member: Raise taxes.

Mr. Anderson: Well, that's one way of doing it. That's one way of doing it, raising taxes. I, respectfully, feel that raising taxes is not the way to go. I think that that's not a solution. It doesn't spur growth, it doesn't spur investment in the economy, and it hasn't worked. We've seen it in Europe. They have raised taxes. They have very high tax rates in Europe. It doesn't work because they get so high that, you know, it becomes basically an underground economy, where people don't pay taxes, where everything is done in cash. There's only so much that you can raise taxes, and the businesses that actually do follow the rules – some sure don't – find a way to move to another jurisdiction, a lower taxation jurisdiction.

Raising taxes is just simply not the solution out of this. The solution is smart, surgical austerity, that makes sure that things that are not priorities are cut first, delaying projects that are a priority but could be delayed, and focusing money on making sure that the most important things like public health care, education, seniors, and so forth are taken care of. That's how we can solve this problem, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Liepert: I just wanted to take a couple of minutes to try and answer a couple of questions that were raised by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I didn't hear any questions from the most recent speaker. All I heard was the negative rhetoric that we've consistently heard in this House. You know, I think there's a direct correlation, Mr. Speaker, to negativity and their own plummeting popularity. I would say that, based on the negativity in this session, they recognize, as most Albertans do, that their popularity is at an all-time low, and I think we'll just let them continue to hang themselves here in the House.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did raise two questions. The first one was that he wanted some information around the expenditure on salting, sand, and gravel. I'm afraid I don't have that at my fingertips, but I will give the commitment to the member that we will get him that information for when the resumption of the discussion takes place.

The second question was raised around why we can't more accurately predict disasters. I would throw out the challenge, Mr. Speaker, to the member that if he can stand in this Assembly and accurately predict the disasters that are going to be happening in budget year 2012-13, I will gladly put it in the budget.

With that, I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:50

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 23

Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: Any questions, amendments, or comments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, hon. Mr. Chair. This is a very important bill that definitely is making some improvements on the three-year boondoggle, coming up on three years, of this government failing to understand property rights, failing to recognize the need to protect property here in Alberta and wanting to move it into cabinet and just saying: trust me; trust me. We need to continue discussing what different aspects we can try to finish fixing this bill.

Like I say, it's very encouraging that the government has taken these first three steps, the first one being that when land has been designated as an area, the property owners can actually trigger the sale of that land, realizing, you know – and it's been brought up by the government – that there are times where if you can hold, the land value will go up. But there's also an economic opportunity, and if you're in a type of business and you need to grow and it's been frozen, that definitely, Mr. Chair, causes some problems in the fact that I've met several people whose property has been frozen, and they haven't been able to develop. They feel that they're not going to be fairly compensated, and they haven't been able to go through an appeal process. It's been extremely frustrating for them and caused a lot of strain on their business and their family.

The other one that's a huge improvement – and we're very appreciative of that – is the fact that a person can now with this amendment, if this bill passes, say: "You know, I'm not happy with the process that's gone through there. I want to go to the courts." They can have their due process in the courts. There the Expropriation Act takes over, and they can actually show that there is some value in their business and future growth and be compensated for that because of the freeze. That truly is an important aspect, Mr. Chair.

There are a few other concerns with the bill that at this point have not really been addressed as well as we would like. Section 10 of the original bill allows the government to freeze the development of their property, and then by doing that, they send out notification to those people who have interest in that land. That interest often is held by a bank that has a mortgage on it. When that notification goes out, the bank or the mortgageholder can get kind of antsy and say: oh, we didn't realize that this was going to be taken away. Worse than that is that all of a sudden if there are any problems, especially if these are to deal with environmental problems, the bank or that mortgageholder could actually be held responsible for the activities or the problems that have taken place on that property. The government has still failed to address this area, which we would very much like to see be addressed in a more appropriate way.

These areas, Mr. Chair, are a concern. We keep going back to the real root of this problem, and it is the bill. The minister brought up some interesting points, you know, that historically the government has failed to plan. They need a land assembly act, and

I would agree with them that it would be much to the benefit of both society and the property owners to have an act that puts forward a process where the public need is, in fact, shown. Whether we need to store more water – I think that's something that could be perhaps one of the first and most important things that this land assembly act should be looking at.

Calgary only has one real reservoir. The water flow from the glaciers is going down, yet the total amount of stream flow seems to be going up. It's over a shorter and shorter period. They've looked around the areas. Where could they do some on-stream or off-stream storage? That is the purpose of the land assembly act, to look at those types of public needs and then go through a process to get those lands to fulfill those needs. It's one area, again, where this government for years, Mr. Chair, has failed to act.

I think 1993 was the last time that we built a structure, the Oldman River dam, of any sizable amount to store water. I know that there are many studies that the government has done in the past to look at places for on-stream storage and off-stream storage. It's one of those things, Mr. Chair, that this government is spending billions of dollars on saying that we need to address the CO<sub>2</sub> problem rather than actually addressing the fact of the climate change that we're experiencing. What can we do to actually, I guess, mitigate those circumstances?

In the south there is a complete freeze or a ban on any increased water allocations. They're fully allocated. Some areas are up to 110 per cent allocated. The question is, you know: do we stop our growth, or do we realize that a huge percentage of our water is passing right through Alberta and heading out east, never to be utilized? This is a natural, renewable resource that we should be doing a much better job of capturing and enhancing our quality of life and industry and food production here in this province.

I believe that 3 per cent of the arable land here in Alberta produces 20 per cent of the food, and those are the irrigated areas of this province. I know that there are many different areas that we've looked at and have possibilities of moving that water to be utilized, to be vertically integrated in producing, for processing. It would be a huge benefit.

I mean, when you look at Europe, it's interesting. They still have vivid memories of the starvation. We just had a ceremony on Monday in commemoration of Holodomor, the starvation in Europe. That wasn't because of bad weather or not being able to produce. That was, again, an evil, corrupt government confiscating property from the people and trying to take that to destroy a region which the government was having difficulty controlling. [interjection] It's interesting that the Education minister wants to ask if that's for real when many of the acts that were taken in Europe during World War II and other times very much were brutal acts that didn't respect property rights.

There are many areas in these bills that have no respect for property rights. When you step down that trail, we can see the end results, and we don't want to go there, not even one step, here in Alberta. Yet many government members seem to pride themselves on this and say: "We know best. We'll put it in cabinet. Cabinet will make those decisions." It's just wrong, Mr. Chair. That's the last place we want those decisions to be made. What happens when cabinet makes those decisions is that they become political decisions, and political decisions are rarely in the interest of the people. They're usually more in the interest of a party in retaining and holding that power.

4:00

We have this dilemma with Bill 19, the land assembly act, which has come along, and now we're trying in Bill 23 to bring in these amendments when, in fact, we should just restore all property rights. Again, they've asked many times: well, how do we do that? We go back to the Expropriation Act. Is there a role for a land assembly project? Yes. I think Bill 23 is addressing that in a much better way than when they started, but it's taken over two years. Thousands and thousands of Albertans have gone to meetings. They've sent letters. They've made phone calls to their MLAs. It wasn't until this new Premier came in that we're finally starting to recognize it, but then you add the insult of bringing in this bill.

The Premier says, "Well, we're going to have a task force to study property rights" when, in fact, they've received the information multiple times over. The people that have contacted our office of the Wildrose have very much said that they're insulted that this government has at this point created a task force of individuals that have spoken out against any aspect of amendments, yet these amendments have come forward. It is a little bit disappointing that they would like to go down that route and say that everything is okay.

Mr. Chair, we are disappointed, as Albertans are disappointed, in this government, their lack of respect for property rights. It was only when they finally received so much heat from property owners and those who understand property throughout this province that they brought forward this amendment. Too often it's like the Hollywood shoplifter, that when they're caught, they just say: oh, no, no; we didn't mean any of that. The question is: why did they ever do it? If they didn't mean it, why did they do it? Why did they defend it for two years and go around slandering such excellent citizens as Keith Wilson and saying that he's fearmongering, doing it for personal interest, going after the land groups that have been fighting this adamantly and having meetings, taking a lot of time and energy, and just basically mock them for their activities and say that's it's totally unnecessary?

Yet we get this bill coming in that is exactly addressing three of those concerns. One, they can trigger the buyout, which is a huge improvement, and people throughout the province are grateful for that. Two, they can go through the due process of law. Again, it's so critical that that is reinstated in here. We are grateful that that has come out in this new amendment.

It's just hard for me to understand how they wanted to bypass that for so long, to say that cabinet can make that decision. "You don't need to worry about us. Trust us." What percentage – is it 50 per cent? – say that they own land over there. A high percentage of them, Mr. Chair, declare: "We're landowners. You can trust us." The last thing I would want to do is trust them. They want to grab power and hang on to it, and they want to grab land in order to extend their dynasty in whatever way possible. Or, more pathetically, it's to be able to reward those with political connections. I still feel very strongly that PC stands more for political connections than anything about being progressive and, certainly, nothing about being conservative. It's about their political connections. It's about power. It's about control. It's just a desperate act to try and change things without ever acknowledging that they were wrong.

Probably the most disappointing point in all of this is that nobody from the government has yet to get up and apologize to Mr. Wilson and thank him and say: "I don't know how we didn't get this. I don't know why we took two years and put you through so many struggles to wake up Albertans to realize what was done." This government continued to say day in and day out: "We've done nothing wrong. This bill is there for the public good. You can count on it. We would never take your land without fairly compensating you." Yet they had no interest in what future opportunities were there. They had no problem with freezing land for 20 years and saying that, you know, this is for the best interests of the people of Alberta when it isn't.

This government has a long, bad track record of not respecting contracts that they don't want to. I remember when the last leadership contestants all said that what they really want to do is to review the royalty revenue, which in itself could be fair, Mr. Chairman, but what they didn't want to recognize or respect was the rule of law and those contracts that were signed. They didn't say, you know, that starting in January 2009, when you bid on mineral leases, bid accordingly because this is what the new rate is going to be.

What they did was say: "We're going to go retroactive, and though you've bid on this land and you wanted to have the conditions, we're not going to respect those conditions. We're going to change those before we do anything. We're not going to respect the rule of law. We're just going to simply enact this. It's new. It's going to be retroactive, and though you bid with a formula that you thought you were going to pay royalties on, we're changing that."

Anyway, I guess, Mr. Chair, what I would like to do is move an amendment, so if we could take a minute to distribute it.

The Chair: We shall pause a moment for the pages to distribute the amendment.

We have distributed the amendment. The amendment is now known as A1.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Point of Order Inflammatory Language

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, before we get to the amendment, I would like to rise on a point of order under section 23(h) of our standing orders, using language that entices, I believe it is, a disorder in the House.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore about three or four minutes ago in his comments made a statement that I was hoping initially I was mishearing. Then he repeated it several times, so without a possibility of denial he said exactly what I think I heard. I know what he said. Mr. Chairman, he compared the Alberta government's land-use policies legislation to the atrocities and genocide of Holodomor in Ukraine. What he's doing is comparing policies that we're passing in this Legislature right now to Stalin's genocide during the 1930s in Ukraine, known as Holodomor, which killed somewhere between 6 million and 10 million people. If this isn't reaching a new bottom for the Wildrose, I don't know what is.

4:10

This is disgusting, Mr. Chairman, because yesterday we were sitting in this Chamber with ribbons and buttons on our lapels, and they were wearing them, supposedly feeling sorry about what happened, and today they're comparing that and trivializing that event. It's a very important historical event that killed thousands upon thousands, millions of people, many relatives of Albertans who live over here right now. And he compares those atrocities that Stalin put upon Europeans and Ukrainians to what's happening in this Chamber right now.

Mr. Chairman, that member should be ashamed of himself. He should apologize not only to this Chamber but to every person of Ukrainian heritage in this province and in this country. This is a bloody shame.

The Chair: On the point of order, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: On the point of order.

Mr. Liepert: Stand up. Stand up.

Mr. Hinman: You scum-bucket. I will . . .

Mr. Anderson: You know what? What this really shows . . .

Mr. Liepert: Point of order.

Mr. Anderson: You can't call a point of order. Sit down, Finance Minister. If you can't follow the rules in here, sit down.

The Chair: The point of order.

Mr. Anderson: On the point of order.

You can't call a point of order on a point of order, clearly. We know that's a clear rule. He doesn't understand it. Everyone else does.

The Chair: All right. It's a point of order that you're talking about, hon. member, and then there's another point of order that the minister raised.

Mr. Anderson: On the point of order. This minister once again has sunk to an absolute new low. It is absolutely amazing to me that a minister of the Crown would stand up and blurt out such absolute obscenities as I just heard. To try to paint this member of my caucus, of the Wildrose caucus, a member of this House, in such a disparaging light is despicable. He should be absolutely ashamed of himself.

All this member was doing, all he was doing was because of the incredible – you know, we have these events at the Legislature, these commemorations of things like the Holocaust and things like what happened during the atrocities in the Ukraine and so forth. We have these commemorations in order to remember these atrocities and make sure that they never happen again.

Now, what this member was saying in that light was not saying that this government was interested in committing atrocities. He never once said that. Find it in the record. Where did he say that? He didn't say it. What he was saying is that it is absolutely imperative to a functioning democracy, absolutely imperative to a place that respects human rights, a government that respects human rights and will always uphold the rights of its citizens and protect them, to remember to protect things like property rights and to not trample on the rights of individuals. That's an important principle.

He wasn't accusing this group over here, obviously, of wanting to commit atrocities against its people. He was just saying that we've got to be ever vigilant to make sure that when we pass laws, Mr. Chair, no matter what, we think of the long-term effects of those laws. The very first law that was passed, for example, Bill 36 and Bill 19 as a part of that and Bill 50, specifically gave the government the ability under the law – it was completely unintended; I'm sure it was. They clarified it, and they even clarified it in subsequent legislation. But it gave them the right to take away people's land titles without compensation.

Was it on purpose? I don't think it was. I would be willing to bet anything that it sure was not their intent to take away people's land titles. Nonetheless, that's what was in the law. So people like Keith Wilson and people like this hon. member and others stood up against that law and said: "You know what? This is a dangerous, slippery slope we are going down, and we cannot just willy-nilly pass laws like this that could have very detrimental effects over the long term."

In summary, I just want to say that this member would never and did not say anything that was relating this government to the atrocities of Stalin, and it is despicable that this person over there has such a thin skin that he would be willing to make that accusation against a member that has clearly demonstrated with his work that he cares very much about people that have undergone those atrocities. He speaks about it regularly. He feels as passionate about it as anyone else. I would ask that that member take his remarks back and apologize to this member for insinuating such absolute stupidity. Because that's what it was. It was a stupid comment.

The Chair: Hon. member, we should not use such personal language with each other.

I have to make a decision here. I will wait for the Blues so that I have enough information to make a ruling on this. So that's the point of order that the hon. Minister of Education raised.

I also noticed the hon. Minister of Finance stand up on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chair, under Standing Order 11(1) I want to make sure that the member has the opportunity to withdraw the comment that he said, that was clear on this side. He used the term "scum-bucket." If he doesn't want to acknowledge it, that's fine. He has the opportunity to stand up in this House and withdraw that comment from the floor.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the point of order.

Mr. Hinman: Well, we'll wait and see if it's in Hansard. But the fact is that people should behave honourably. If they want to behave in a manner that is described only in poor language, those are sometimes the consequences. I don't know that I said anything in Hansard, Mr. Chair. I was responding to him personally on the disgusting language that he was using and the accusations that he was making. [interjections] No. It's the way you're behaving, so quit behaving that way. Why don't you behave honourably, and then maybe you would be treated that way?

The Chair: Hon. member, you have made your point. Other hon. members heard the word, and I heard it, too, so please stand up and withdraw that word.

Mr. Hinman: If the chair would like me to withdraw it, I will withdraw it.

The Chair: Now we will go back to amendment A1. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on your amendment A1.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is a sensitive subject. I can understand why many people are getting somewhat riled up about it.

I would like to comment, first of all, I guess, on the Deputy Premier at the function on Monday. In his speech he talked about government taking the property of those individuals and not fairly compensating them for it. Those were the words of the government member, which I totally agree with. But to realize that in Bill 36 and Bill 19 that that's the exact same wording that was in there, that is not fairly or properly compensating them for the taking of property. That's what this issue is about because we have some members here that want to try and act like they wouldn't ever do that, when, in fact, they've passed legislation. It's truly disgusting, and what they had to say is even more disgusting, Mr. Chair. The hon. member should leave the House and go out and cool off a little bit and see if he can get his thoughts back together.

I'd like to make the amendment that Bill 23, the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011, be amended in the preamble in the fifth recital by replacing "appropriately compensated for their lands" with "fully compensated for their losses." This is again a critical point, which it's obvious that members over there don't understand. They sit there and want to say that they're honourable: you can trust us. Every tyrannical leader that's ever raised its ugly head to commit such atrocities to humankind has always started on that good first step: oh, we're looking after the people as a whole. Yet they don't respect that the most critical starting point is property rights. That's what they do. They don't respect the property rights. They say, "We don't need to fairly compensate them," and they go forward from there. Then they say such things as "unbelievable." It truly is unbelievable, Mr. Chair.

In the preamble it says "appropriately compensated for their lands." What does appropriately mean when you're compensating someone for their lands? This government and its members have said many, many times, if we go back through Hansard: oh, we'll be fair. I mean, that was the whole basis, Mr. Chair, of the royalty review, this word "fair." They wouldn't even respect the rule of law and the contracts that had been signed by those companies and individuals. They get to make this cabinet decision, and it's wrong.

What we want to see in this bill, to ensure that it really is what they're saying, is "fully compensated for their losses." That is in itself critical because in the preamble it says, "appropriately compensated for their lands." But lands have opportunities, and there are losses if you can't use that land in a way that is the best economic possibility for you. I understand and we all understand zoning. We're not going to say that you can build some nuclear reactor on that piece of property because it's your right. No. There's zoning, there's industrial, there are all of those areas. And they jump to these conclusions and seem to think that because you want to be fully . . . [Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired]

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, I can understand why the hon. member has put this amendment, that you refer to as A1, before the Assembly. Certainly, compensation and what's considered fair compensation has been an issue of significant concern in the public meetings that I have attended around this Land Assembly Project Area Act. This amendment should be given due consideration by this Assembly.

I can understand where the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore is coming from on this. I know the concern that landowners have with this government's initiative here. When we look at the controversy that has surrounded this legislation and this amendment act – of course, we all know, Mr. Chairman, that this is the second time we have been amending this legislation, I think, within a year. It may be 13 months. There have still been many outstanding questions presented at public meetings by concerned landowners. The right to compensation and legal recourse equal to rights under expropriation are important, and the questions that are asked by landowners, again, are significant.

The member here is anticipating that landowners would be fully compensated for their losses. There will be a discussion, certainly, around that. There will be a discussion on what is fair compensation, what current market value is. I can imagine where all of this is going.

Amendment A1 is of interest, and I would be considering supporting the amendment as it's been presented. I think it would improve this bill, and I think we should hear from other hon. members of this Assembly who may have more to add on this.

Thank you.

The Chair: On the amendment, the hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chair, thank you for the opportunity to speak to the amendment and the bill in committee here. I am very encouraged to hear language from the opposition with respect to this bill and some of the language that was just said here in terms of them being very encouraged by the changes in the bill. I believe the hon. member also said that he would agree that these changes are of benefit, and he said: we are grateful for the amendments.

One thing I fail to understand a little bit, Mr. Chair, I think, is the lack of knowledge on the land planning, restrictions on land. They like to say a freezing of land. I know the hon. minister of agriculture asked the hon. member yesterday or two days ago if he could articulate the difference between a permitted or discretionary use in terms of land use and bylaw planning in municipalities, and he didn't know the answer to that.

I'm also confused by the fact that he refers to section 10 with respect to sending notices. It's not section 10 within the bill that speaks about sending notices to the registrar. It's section 5 of the act. I noticed that the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo said the same thing last night or yesterday in second reading. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, I believe, said that we all know what it's like to deal with bankers, and for the most part we don't like it. I don't know why he's criticizing bankers so much. He also says . . .

The Chair: Hon. minister, we are talking about amendment A1.

Mr. Johnson: I'll get to that, Mr. Chair.

The other thing I would just speak of as part of speaking to this amendment is the assertion that the opposition is the champion of property rights. I remember very vividly when we were debating Bill 26 in this House, when this caucus supported a very significant change to landowner rights, and the Wildrose caucus was nowhere to be seen in spite of commitments made by their leader.

With respect to the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I want to thank them for bringing forward ideas and possible solutions just like all Albertans have done over the last many months. Clearly, through the act, the way it's amended, the intent is to deal with the request from this opposition party and Albertans that landowners be fully compensated and that they have full access to the courts. Clearly, in the legislative piece, not in the preamble, the act points to the Expropriation Act and all the heads of compensation in the Expropriation Act. So there's not a big requirement to try and articulate those details so specifically through the preamble, which is just to put the bill in context.

My feeling, Mr. Chairman, is that when we leave the wording at "appropriately compensated for their lands," it's very wide. It's very encompassing. You know, folks that are working on these deals either through negotiation or using the heads of expropriation or going to expropriation or reverse expropriation have a very wide range that they can use in terms of establishing what kind of compensation is there for landowners. Of course we want them to be fully compensated, but essentially what we're talking about is removing the word "appropriately" and putting in the words "compensated for losses."

I think we want to go beyond compensating people just for their losses and leave the people that need to negotiate or interpret this in the Land Compensation Board and in the courts all the latitude possible through access to the heads of compensation and the Expropriation Act and any kind of negotiations that may take place to make it appropriate and very fair and even generous for landowners.

The Chair: On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In amendment A1 the Member for Calgary-Glenmore clearly has indicated what needs to be amended here. The Member for Athabasca-Redwater made some reference to this amendment. He made some interesting points, but I would caution government members and that member to guard against self-deception.

As I look here at the Athabasca Advocate, in term of comments he made relative to the situation, I find it interesting that people who are living in Athabasca right now, who own a hotel, who have invested money over many, many years – and when I drive from Fort McMurray, sometimes I move off of highway 63 because of its condition and actually drive on highway 2 through Athabasca. In speaking to folks at the coffee shop there, I find it interesting that if you own a hotel in Athabasca, you've invested your life savings, you've invested your capital, but in this particular situation they'll go ahead and give you the market value. What this ultimately means based on what the member has said is: too bad, so sad relative to the issues of fair compensation and opportunity pertaining to what is lost. So the opportunity lost is a real value when it comes on a balance sheet, but it seems like this government does not believe that. You can invest money in putting up a hotel that's sitting there for 20 years. This government comes in, and they just plow through it. They expropriate your land, and by the way you're not going to get any compensation or any value for the loss of your capital asset that has been there.

4:30

I'll speak very slowly. I understand he was confused about what was being said. We are not confused. What we are certain of is that they are confused relative to this mismatch of amendments that they have put forward, that really got it wrong from day one.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say to you that when I drive back to Fort McMurray this weekend, I'll be stopping in Athabasca again. It's very interesting to say that the people there, relative to their investment of capital on this amendment, are looking to be fully compensated for their losses. What they have put forward does not cover that. In other words: "So sad. Too bad you invested in Alberta or in Athabasca. Your life savings are just going to be lost because we're just going to compensate you for the actual market value, nothing to do with the loss and projected loss of the future."

To anyone who looks at financial statements – and I pride myself on my background in teaching this type of situation – I want to say to you that the real message to the government should be this. "You got it wrong at the very beginning. Now you're getting it wrong again with amendments and amendments and amendments and amendments and amendments and amendments."

You know, if it looks like a duck, quacks like a duck, the bottom line is that it's a bad piece of legislation. I can only say to you, Mr. Chairman, that this government should do the honourable thing and withdraw it rather than trying to jam through the kind of amendments and the type of things that have gone on here. They should really be looking at and guarding against self-deception. The fact is that what we have witnessed here is a day and a half in session, then a three-week holiday that this government gave themselves. Then they came back. Now what are they doing? In a 10-day period they're trying to ram through pieces of legislation and amendments on something that they know they got wrong from day one.

You know, it's often said that when you're digging a hole, you have two choices: keep digging or stop digging. Clearly, this government has not stopped digging on this issue, and they will pay the price at the next provincial election.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Since there's no 29(2)(a), I just wanted to ask the hon. member if he could repeat his saying about ducks. As I got it, it's: if it looks like a duck and it quacks, then it's bad legislation. Is that how it goes?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chairman, that's a very, very good question. The reason I say that is that I have a lot of experience with my four-year-old son. He actually likes ducks a lot. There have been rumours that we don't like ducks in Fort McMurray. Well, we love ducks in Fort McMurray. I will say that, in fact, the hon. member occasionally brings a duck into the House, and I'd ask him to bring in a duck if he has one. Well, there you go. He has one right here, and all the power to him.

It looks like a duck. It quacks like a duck. It means that it was legislation that actually was being driven through because of the fact that this government didn't listen to Albertans.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure on amendment A1.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just a couple of questions for the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I am a little confused as well because he wants us to throw out the legislation, yet last night he said: "Bill 23 does contain positive amendments. . . It allows landowners to trigger expropriation of their land – that's a positive, and I want to say that I was pleased to see that," and he goes on to actually say a few fairly positive things about the bill. He says, "The amendment that is missing. . . is in regard to section 10 of the original bill."

Well, the amendment they've brought forward has nothing to do with section 10, of course. He did mention fair market, Mr. Chair. I'm wondering if he can point out to me in the bill anywhere that it says: fair market.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I empathize with the member for the confusion that he speaks of, but we are very clear in the Wildrose. Number one, we believe that when an Albertan invests in capital such as a hotel or a business in his area, where they have for the last 25 years had a successful business, and then all of a sudden the big, bad government comes in and takes over the property and says, "We'll give you market value for what's going on," they do not recognize the actual opportunity cost and what this hard-working agriculture family, if they owned the business, would lose in the future. This government is failing to recognize that, and that is fundamentally wrong.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on amendment A1.

Mr. Anderson: On amendment A1. Thank you, Mr. Chair. The amendment is with regard to the preamble, of course. I think it's a good amendment. I think that it's solid. You know, appropriately compensating landowners for, essentially, expropriating their property is certainly very important. It's very serious when they're not compensated fully for their losses.

I like the language used here. Too often government-speak means something very different than what it means to the average Albertan. You know, I think of the fixed election date debacle, for example, where you had the Premier say, "We're going to have fixed election dates," and then that turned into fixed election seasons. The average human being out there would say: "A fixed election date is the same thing that's, you know, basically defined in all the other legislation around the country. It should be, clearly, on a specific day every four years." But, then, of course, we come out with these fixed election seasons. The point is that this kind of doublespeak, or Tory-speak as it's sometimes called, just frustrates people.

I think it's a very good amendment because this makes it very clear whereas the government says: we will appropriately compensate their lands. What does appropriate mean? Well, it depends on what the government feels it means. Who knows what appropriate compensation means? It could depend from year to year on who's sitting in the chair over at the Ministry of Infrastructure. I think it is good to say "fully compensated for their losses" because it will give Alberta landowners the knowledge that when their land is taken, whether it's a business loss, whether it's any kind of loss, whether it's a loss of opportunity because their land was tied up so that they couldn't move forward with a different project and so forth, they will be fully compensated by the government for those losses. Anyway, I think it's a very good thought to put into the act. I will say that I do intend on supporting this amendment because it is an improvement, clearly, from the previous legislation.

Getting back to what the hon. minister, who I have very high regard for, said earlier, he said that amending section 10 isn't in this current bill before us. I would say that that's why it's so important that he look at amending that portion. We would like to bring amendments to that effect, Mr. Chair, but apparently we're not permitted to do so because it's not in this Bill 23. We can't amend something that isn't taken up in this amending bill.

That's why we're trying to urge the government to take the opportunity to bring forward a bill that will take into account that specific situation, which is that when banks are notified under the Land Assembly Project Area Act of a person's property being frozen and so forth, then basically that will affect their ability to use that land as collateral in business ventures and so forth. That's a very serious omission that has occurred. But, as I said before, this act is a vast improvement over what the original land assembly act gave us.

4:40

I would note again and I want to congratulate in particular the Member for Calgary-Glenmore as well as Keith Wilson as well as our Wildrose and caucus leader, Danielle Smith, for being ardent, ardent supporters of landowner rights and for fighting tooth and nail from the very start. Long before the three individuals, other than the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, came to this party, they were out fighting tooth and nail for landowners and making sure that they got the government's attention. Because of that, we have this Bill 23, which is clearly a lot better than what was out there previously, so I'd like to thank those individuals.

I hope that there would be enough class on the other side – well, certainly not from some members over there but certainly from this minister – to say: “You know what? We were wrong. We blew it. That’s what happens in life sometimes, and we’re going to make up for our mistake.” If they would just say it, I think that it would gain a lot of people’s respect. They still seem to keep putting out there, “We had to do this clarifying legislation because of all the lies and so forth that were being fed by other individuals, by Keith Wilson, by opposition parties, and so forth,” which is not true. Clearly, if they were lies, they wouldn’t be amending this legislation to make it clearer and to make substantive changes, as we see.

On balance, Mr. Chair, I think that amendment A1 is a very appropriate amendment. It brings the preamble a little bit more in line with what I hope is the intent of the bill, which is to make sure that landowners are fairly and fully compensated for the losses they incur when the government comes in and expropriates their land. I think one of the most serious of government interventions other than perhaps putting somebody in jail is the expropriation of land.

When you put someone in jail, you’re taking away virtually all of their liberty. Of course, that’s why we have a system in place to, you know, try to make sure and prove beyond a reasonable doubt that we only put those who absolutely are a menace to society in jail. Just below that is the expropriation of people’s property. That’s a very serious thing, especially since it’s done not because of any bad thing that the individual or property owner did. So when we do that, we have to make sure that they are absolutely fully compensated for the taking away of that property in the interest of the public good. It does sometimes need to occur – we do need to build highways; we do need to build power lines and all these other things that the government has to do at times – but we should make sure that people are fully compensated for their losses, not just adequately.

What is adequate, clearly, has a very different meaning to this government over here and the opposition parties and, clearly, between this government and regular Albertans, as witnessed over the last two years of what has been a complete debacle with regard to upholding and respecting property rights in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on A1.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I’d like to start off and thank the minister for getting up and sharing his concerns. I hope to be able to answer a few of his questions but also to make a few comments.

He started off with a very profound word that has been used many, many times by this government, and that’s the intent of the preamble. Yes, the intent is there. But the whole reason, hon. member, why we’re doing these amendments or why you’ve brought forward Bill 23 is because the intent wasn’t clear enough in Bill 19, so you’ve brought it forward. The intent is critical.

Also, Mr. Chair, it’s very important that we realize that with this Land Assembly Project Area Act there are going to be those people that end up going to the court. The courts always look at the preamble because that sets the parameters for what they’re going to look at. It is critical that the preamble is right when it comes to property rights because it sets the overall parameters. A judge, in our view, could look at this and basically state: “Oh, all we need to do is compensate them for their land.” The hon.

member rightly points out that the Expropriation Act allows for greater latitude, but the question is: is that latitude in Bill 23? We’re concerned that it’s not.

This is a minor change. It doesn’t jeopardize the government’s side at all. I think that it clears the intent on what is actually happening there. So I’ll personally be shocked, Mr. Chair, if they don’t accept this friendly amendment to the bill. As he has pointed out, we have praised them for coming forward and making these three major improvements in the bill: one, we can trigger expropriations; two, they’ve restored access to the courts; and three, landowners can sell their land beyond the market value, which is in this amendment. Those are great steps forward. The whole purpose of this amendment is to ensure that that intent, what we’re trying to clarify here, is set out in the preamble of this bill. The preamble as such says, “appropriately compensated for their lands.” It does not cover the entire area that this government seems to say we want to do with the bill. This is where we’re trying to cover it.

He’s brought up that, you know, we refer to section 10. Again, the dilemma that we’re in here is that we can only speak on the bill that’s in front of us, which is an amendment to a bill, and in that bill – again, because the government has been bringing these bills forward so fast and going late at night, I’ll be the first to confess that I haven’t gone through them nearly as well as I would like to. This government doesn’t think that it’s important to go through these bills in any detail. They’re experts. That’s why we’re here doing these amendments, because of their expertise in sticking their foot in their mouth and doing it wrong, their expertise at somehow looking past the rule of law and saying, “That’s not important; cabinet will do it,” their expertise in saying: “You know what? Our intent is good. Trust us.” That’s what they’re experts at, Mr. Chair, invoking this talk of: “Trust us. Trust us.”

It’s not good enough. They cannot be trusted. So we need the time to go through these bills with a fine-tooth comb and try and make sure that it’s right. When are they going to come back and bring the amendment to Bill 19, which really needs to be done? Again, I believe it’s section 10 where it refers to all those with interest in the land. Then you revert to section 5 where the hon. member is talking about such things as banks and those who own mortgages or interest in those lands. But we can’t make any amendment because that’s not in this bill. It’s fine to say, “Well, let’s put the amendments through,” which we will agree to, but let’s make sure that the intent is fully covered in here, which it’s not. The hon. member even said, you know, that we’re going to allow the Expropriation Act, which does allow for unforeseen or, let’s say, unacquired losses yet for that opportunity, the opportunity lost, which we see all the time, especially in a society as fast growing and paced as what we have here.

I also want to say that, you know, property rights are paramount. They seem to mock me for talking about that, about how important property rights are and that they’re paramount. The property rights are where the rule of law grows from. I mean, back in June of 1215 when the Magna Carta was originally written down and signed by the king, the essence of that whole fight for freedom was the respect for property rights; you know, are they going to be entrenched? That was a turning point in what you might want to call Western Civilization, where property rights were entrenched. They were protected. You couldn’t just go and kill somebody and then seize their property anymore because it was recognized that they had ownership. That’s what this is all about: ownership.

4:50

Mr. Chair, our coat of arms says Fortis et Liber. We can ask ourselves: what is liber? I don't imagine that they even know what liber is. [interjection] I'm no expert on Latin, but I've had many people say that it's liber.

What you have is the inner bark of a tree, if you look it up in the Latin dictionary. What correlation does that have with freedom? I don't think there are any members over there that have any idea what it is. I should probably sit down and let them answer because that's what they like to do to us. They say: "Oh, what is this?" Maybe I will sit down and ask them: what's the correlation between the Latin word "liber" and property rights? See if any of them have the so-called knowledge of what that is.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak on amendment A1?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Now we're back to Bill 23, the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011. Not surprised. Not being surprised, I shouldn't be disappointed that this government and their members do not know what freedom is. They can have the assignment of going home and looking that up.

I'll share a little bit about it. Liber is the inner bark of a tree. The reason why we go back to that is because under the early law when they had to write down the ownership, where did they write it? They wrote it down on the inner bark of a tree. That was their paper. That was their designation for ownership. Whether that was ownership of slaves, whether it was ownership of property, that was the book they kept. That's the root word for it. It also is in "library." It's in "libro," the Spanish definition for book. That's where it goes back to.

When it comes to the rule of law and writing it down and owning property, it's critical, Mr. Chair, that we get it right. This bill has made some very good improvements, which we will be voting in favour of, but amendment A1 would have cleared up the intent in the preamble to a much better degree if we would have looked at that. Like I say, it's very disappointing that these government members do not understand the importance of the rule of court. They're merely putting these amendments in there because of the pressure that they've been feeling. It's always disappointing when government or individuals act because they're pressured into doing something rather than doing it because they know it's right, setting the example and protecting those properties.

There's no question that this government does not have that respect for the rule of law. They don't have that respect for property. What they do have respect for are the voters out there. They realize that every now and then there's this check on them. If people are upset, they don't have to vote for them. As they pointed out with their other bills, Mr. Chair, they're going to set a season when there's an election coming up. There are certain areas where they've upset property owners and those in rural Alberta, but they say: "Oh, we don't have a choice here. We need to actually pass these amendments in order to ensure that we have support in the next election."

I'm proud to represent property owners throughout the province. I am proud to fight the good fight for freedom, for property rights. I think that it's critical that we continue that fight because there are other bills. Bill 50, which I spoke of earlier today in question period, is not in the best interest of Albertans. If this government truly understood property rights and understood the process of law and the rule of law, we would have other amendments coming in for Bill 50 and Bill 36. Instead, all we have, Mr. Chair, is a task force that's going to be brought forward. We have a Premier who says: "Oh, what we're going to do is review it. We'll scrap all of the infrastructure that we previously said was critical." We know it's not, yet this government wants to continue that cloud of misinformation: "Oh, this is critical. We need to do it." It's interesting. I've heard that a lawsuit has actually been brought forward today on the heartland line, which I wish the people good luck on, to stop that line. We need to go back to a proper review.

This government truly doesn't understand the need. They're being pushed into a corner, and they're responding in a positive way because they're forced into it, yet there are no bills being brought forward on Bill 50, which is going to cost taxpayers billions of dollars. The Energy minister, when he got up today, again said that we don't know what we're talking about on the overrun of the expenses from what AESO has told those two companies that they can do.

Mr. Chair, Bill 23 is just one step of many steps that really, really need to be addressed by this government, yet they're failing to address them. We would sure like to see them take a couple of steps forward. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere talked a little bit about the penalties and the fact that this government made the amendment, which we are grateful for, to say that, you know, if you refuse to go along with the government, they're going to put them for two years in jail for fighting for your property rights. Then they sit over there and say: "Oh, no. We understand. Oh, no, we would never do anything to hurt the landowners or our citizens." Yet, it's very clear with these amendments that they're very problematic, and we need to do something about it.

We are disappointed, like I say, that this bill doesn't have the context of all of Bill 19. It's only amendments. So when it comes to the notification of people with interest in that land, that letter is going to go out to the banks. I don't know, hon. minister, how you're going to address that or acknowledge that. It's not in this amendment, so how are we to amend Bill 19 when you don't bring all that forward. That's one of the arguments on why we say that it should just be scrapped and start over.

You are going a long way forward. We're appreciative of the distance that you've gone here in Bill 23. Like I say, restoring access to the courts is critical, and Albertans are grateful for that. They're grateful that you are striking out the heavy hand of the threats of putting people in jail for wanting to fight to try and keep their property or to be fairly compensated.

Again, you've got in here to sell their land beyond just the market value, which is a huge step forward, which again is good. The problem and the root of the problem is that you don't seem to show that respect for the rule of law and property rights. By voting down that amendment – I don't understand it. What could possibly be harmful to the government or the taxpayers of this province by fully compensating someone for their losses. It's a critical point. The difference between losses or their land, your opportunities or your day, is huge. We just feel that by not taking that amendment, the intent, which you speak so eloquently about, has to be questioned. We very much want to ensure property rights. We want to assure those property owners that they'll be fully compensated. It's very easy.

This has been a long, drawn-out process. When land is frozen for future development, it really undermines people's opportunities. It's not always easy to move and to go in a new direction and say, "You know, you don't need to worry about it; we're freezing your land, but it won't have an impact on you," when it has a major impact. We would sure like to see those changes made to recognize fully that they'll be compensated for all their losses, not just for their land.

5:00

Again, it's kind of what I would want to call a silent freeze, to say that, "Well, we'll fully compensate you for your land" when in fact they had a business that they were going to build there. You know, we hear all the time that when it comes to land, it's location, location, location. If someone happens to have a great location and they're wanting to build maybe a golf course – they've got that opportunity there, and they have investors – and then the government in its wisdom realizes that, "Well, this valley really needs to be flooded; we need to put up a dam," do they lose that economic opportunity? It's tough to ensure that that economic opportunity is going to be realized anywhere other than the courts, where they can bring their case forward, they can present it to a judge and, hopefully, be able to be fully compensated and not just be told that, "Well, that land is only good for grazing" when, in fact, it has many opportunities to be upgraded.

We just really have concerns. Albertans have concerns. We want it to be a quick, easy process where people can go forward and be compensated properly. This bill goes a good ways down there, but we sure wish that you would have accepted our amendment on the preamble to really say that your intent is what you say it is and that you want to compensate for all losses and full market value, not merely just for the price of the land, which you have there.

With that, I'll step down and see if there's anybody else who wants to address this bill.

The Chair: Any hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing no other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 23 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 21 Election Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, on the bill, Mr. Chairman. We're looking at the Election Amendment Act, 2011, here. Of course, on the surface this bill provides that a general election must be held between March 1 and May 31 every four years, beginning with the period March 1, 2012. This bill does not impact the powers of the Lieutenant Governor.

Now, while this bill provides some certainty for when an election will be held, it seems to me that the writ period must be within the three-month period, but it maintains a wide-open window for political posturing as to the exact date. If I'm to look at this bill, I'm led to believe that you start on March 1 and you end on May 31, but the election essentially has to be over by that time, so you really don't have that wide open a window. It's not really what the government indicates it is publicly. It's a lot more limited than that, Mr. Chairman.

The government indicates that this is a made-in-Alberta piece of legislation. However, the reality is that Alberta faces no extraordinary situations that would make an actual fixed election date impossible. Eight other provinces have managed to have fixed dates, as has the federal government, and I'm not going to get into the federal government legislation, that was passed in 2007. I think we need to once and for all make a set date, have some flexibility for the Lieutenant Governor, and leave it at that. I don't think this election date, whether it's 60 days or 90 days and you have this window – there's no need for this window.

We can have a budget. We can debate the budget. We can pass the budget. This Legislative Assembly can do a lot of things, and then if the government and the Premier are confident, they can call their election. If they're confident with their budget and with their policies and with what they have done over the last period of years, then we can certainly have an election and let the citizens decide.

One of the things that concerns me, of course, with elections is the voter turnout rate, Mr. Chairman. The voter turnout rate seems to be going down and down and down, and it's puzzling. Everyone seems to have an opinion on the government, on any government, and they should be encouraged to express their opinion. Certainly, they have opinions on the government's performance, but for some reason they don't think that their voice matters or that their voice counts. I'm disappointed in that. If we had a fixed election date, I think we could start reversing that trend. People would know in advance, barring unforeseen circumstances like a Legislative Assembly in a minority position, and then we could go that route with a fixed election date.

What would be an ideal date? Well, with the legislation that's before us, it rules out the fall season. A gentleman phoned me up and said that he didn't want the election in the fall because it was hunting season. I thought: fair enough.

Mr. Mason: I didn't know that Ted called you.

Mr. MacDonald: No, it wasn't that Ted, but it was a gentleman that likes to get out and hunt.

Mrs. Leskiw: Very important.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, it is a very important pastime for a number of people.

He didn't want to have it in the fall. That was one constituent with one issue. Now, I never thought to ask him if he had voted in the 2004 election, which was held in the fall. It never occurred to me.

I think we can do a lot better with encouraging people to vote. Now, what would be a suitable day? Well, we could pick any number of days. The Americans have a day, they have a week where they elect their President. It seems to work quite well, but it's in the fall.

5:10

We are limited here to the springtime, and the springtime may be the best time. University students, whom we really need to encourage to vote, are perhaps back in their hometowns and in their home cities from their semester, and they're working. They're paying taxes. They're noticing the taxes they pay on their pay stubs. Perhaps they will notice the performance of this government, and they will ask questions, or they will read with interest or listen with interest to what is being proposed, not only by the government but by all parties, and they will say: "I'm going to make an effort to vote. This matters. It's important. I'm going to make an effort to vote. When is that election day?" That would be an example.

Seniors. Someone suggested to me that this government really likes to hold the election in the middle of the winter because many seniors are down south enjoying warmer weather, and they can't vote. Many seniors are very suspicious, for good reasons, towards this government. So if we have it in March, then, hey, the seniors aren't in play.

Then there are the farmers. What is a good time of the year for farmers? Well, the fall is harvest season, and farmers are very, very busy, but they're also very, very busy tilling and planting in the spring. So what's a good time?

When we reflect on Remembrance Day, which all hon. members, I'm sure, had the occasion to do, people were willing to stand up and fight and sacrifice, in some cases, unfortunately, their lives, in order that we live in a functioning democracy. Everyone over the age of 18, if they live here for six months and they're a citizen, gets the right to vote. Out of respect to those individuals, again, we need to encourage all citizens to get out and vote.

Fixed election dates, as we know, Mr. Chairman, were one of the Premier's campaign promises during the Progressive Conservative Party leadership race. "Fixed election dates give Albertans the opportunity to focus on issues that matter and mobilize for an election, without the behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that sometimes characterize the timing of an election." That's a statement that the current Premier made when she was campaigning for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Now, we are not the first Canadian jurisdiction to introduce a fixed election date, but we are the only jurisdiction that provides this three-month election window. I think we should have a look at changing that, Mr. Chairman, and I would like to at this time propose an amendment to this bill. [interjection] Yes, indeed, an amendment to Bill 21. I would take my seat and request that a page distribute this to all hon. members.

The Chair: The committee shall pause for the amendment to be distributed. This amendment is now known as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, continue on your amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. There is already controversy surrounding this amendment, Mr. Chairman, and hon. members who have another opinion can express that on the record.

Certainly, I'm going to read this amendment into the record: "Subject to subsection (1), a general election shall be held on May 8, 2012, and afterwards, on the second Tuesday in May in the 4th calendar year following polling day in the most recent general election." I think we should have a specific day for the general election. In this case the next one would be on May 8, 2012, and then the second Tuesday in May in the fourth calendar year following. So the second Tuesday in May would be the day that we would have the election. Now, it was a pleasure to hear the opinions of some hon. members adjacent regarding my suggestion.

In B.C. the election is to be held the second Tuesday in May every four years, with the first being held May 17, 2005.

Now, in Saskatchewan it's the first Monday in November. Saskatchewan is like Alberta. There is a lot of agricultural production; there is a lot of harvesting. But also in British Columbia there's a lot of farming activity.

Manitoba, it's interesting to note, amended their Elections Act in 2008, and the election is to be held on the first Tuesday in October every four years, with the first, of course, in October of this year. It recently happened.

In Ontario the Election Statute Law Amendment Act was passed five and a half years ago, I believe, and the election is to be held on the first Thursday in October, starting in 2007, and every four years or in the years that leave a remainder of three when divided by four. Now, this act does allow the day to be moved forward up to seven days if it conflicts with a cultural or religious holiday. That is interesting to note.

Now, in New Brunswick the election is to be held on the fourth Monday in September every four years.

In Newfoundland the House of Assembly Act and the Elections Act were amended in 2004. The legislation in Newfoundland provides that if the Premier resigns during the government's mandate, an election must be held within the year of the new Premier being sworn in. That's an interesting idea. The general election in Newfoundland is to be held on the second Tuesday of October every four years.

Now, the government here and the Premier's office suggested we have this in the spring. The rest of the country seems to, at least provincially, think that we should have this in the fall.

In P.E.I. the general election is to be held on the first Monday in October every four years, beginning in 2011. That's a jurisdiction that has significant agricultural production, and that's in the midst of harvest season. I don't think we can limit or restrict democracy because of one or more activities by a specific sector of the province.

In the Northwest Territories the general election is to be held on the first Monday in October every four years, beginning in 2007. It's interesting that the Northwest Territories decided to hold their election in October. A major motivation, as I understand it, for the fixed date was to attempt to mitigate the practical difficulties of holding an election during the winter.

Now, I have run for election four times for this Assembly, once in the fall, about this time of the year, and it was quite pleasant, actually. You didn't need the winter gear. You didn't need Sorels, you didn't need a toque, you didn't need mitts to go door-knocking.

5:20

It was a lot different than a March election. Three of the elections that I ran in as a candidate were held, of course, in March. In one election I remember, where you could only take one step off the sidewalk – the good people of Edmonton-Gold Bar are very diligent in keeping their sidewalks clean – the snow was up to your hip. You could only take one step off and put your lawn sign out. That was it. Conditions were, to say the least, quite harsh.

I suppose they're harsh for all different candidates, but in the last election in particular it was difficult for people to get out to vote. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview would certainly relate to this, but I was embarrassed in the last election, which was conducted in March, to go to a polling station in the evening and find a family carrying through the snow – they were knee-deep in snow – their mother, who was confined to a wheelchair, to a polling station that didn't have disabled access. It was a school that didn't have disabled access, and it was embarrassing. I was embarrassed to see this family have to do that, but the mother really, really wanted to vote. I can appreciate their energy, but it was not the best. I think we can do better. Of course, in a May election you wouldn't have, hopefully, snow like that in this province.

Now, May is a very good time to hold an election. I think we could extend polling hours. Maybe we could have polling stations set up for two days so that individuals who are tilling and preparing their fields for seeding could have lots of opportunity to exercise their franchise. I don't think that should stop us.

I would really encourage hon. members: please, if we are committed to a fixed election date, then let's pick a date. This amendment certainly gives all the flexibility that's needed or that is necessary to do this, and I would encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to please consider making May 8, 2012, the date of the next general election in this province and afterwards on the second Tuesday in May in the fourth calendar year following. I think it's reasonable, I think it is what citizens would like, and I think it's workable for rural Albertans, for urban Albertans. I think that if we have a fixed election date, we can reverse the trend and increase those who are actually on the voters list. We can increase their participation, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to rise and speak to this amendment being put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Now, this amendment improves the present act. It doesn't make it perfect, but it improves it by setting an actual date.

Actually, when I first heard of the government's intention of bringing forward a three-month fixed election period, I was a little bit taken aback, to say the least. In fact, I kind of chuckled about it because it seemed so obviously not really what the government or what the Premier promised. But, obviously, it's what the caucus decided.

The amendment at least makes a specific date, narrows it down, so it improves it. Now, it doesn't necessarily mean that it's the right date, which is the problem. The hon. member is proposing a date. It's better because it's one date instead of 90 days, but it's just a picked-out date.

I know that I or my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona will be bringing forward an amendment, should this one and others not pass, that would require the Premier to consult with the opposition parties and fix a date within six months of the election for the next election four months away, within the range set out in the act.

Mr. Chair, I have to say that this government's action with respect to this really did lift the scales from my eyes with respect to how this new Premier was going to conduct herself and what the tone of this Premier and the government, the cabinet that she's appointed, was going to be. I actually had a glimmer of hope and a thought that, in fact, this would be more consultative, that the new Premier and her new cabinet would in fact change the way the government had traditionally related to the public and to the opposition parties and to this Assembly.

Those illusions were quickly shattered when I heard about this. The way I imagined this happening, Mr. Chairman, was that a government that actually wanted to involve opposition parties and show respect for the Assembly and take into account other views and other interests aside from the narrow self-interests of the Progressive Conservative Party would have done this quite a bit differently. The Premier would have talked to other opposition parties, would have had some discussions about it.

You see, the election, Mr. Chairman, is something that affects us all. The whole point of having fixed election dates is to reduce the unilateral advantage that the governing party has in the British parliamentary system that allows the government to call an election when it's ready to go, in its own interests and not necessarily in the interests of fairness and certainly not of other political parties. It gives an unfair advantage.

It's clear to me that this government does not want to give that up and is not prepared to have a conversation with other opposition parties to recognize that they also have an interest in the election, not to mention the interest that the public as a whole has in the setting of an election. You know, it's clear to me that the same sort of arrogant, unilateral, self-supporting attitude has not changed.

I will support this amendment, but should it fail, what I'd really like to do is put forward an amendment that would require the Premier to consult with other party leaders in the Assembly within six months of an election and then set the date for the next one within the parameters, the three-month parameters, that have been set out in this act.

Mr. Chair, I recognize that this issue probably doesn't have a lot of saliency outside of this place, that this would be something that Ralph Klein would have referred to as something that's under the dome, not something that the public as a whole really cares a whole lot about, but to me it is a very telling act by the new Premier. To completely exclude other parties, to refuse to answer questions put to her in question period with respect to this piece of legislation, and to impose through the force of its majority its political will on this Assembly and on the province is quintessentially how this political party, the Progressive Conservative Party, has conducted itself for the last 15 or 20 years. It's very high handed, it's not really very democratic, and it is manipulating the tools of power for its own benefit. I guess that people on the opposite side are so used to this that they really don't think that there's anything wrong with it. They think that it's the norm. They think that that's how you do politics, and maybe it is.

All I know is that I actually listened to the new Premier when she was running for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party and in the short period of time after she was elected, and I actually had some hope that things were going to be different and that things wouldn't be quite so arrogant and high handed as they are. But that did not come to pass, and I really do regret that, Mr. Chairman. I thought that there was actually some substance behind the words.

5:30

Even though this does provide a 90-day period for an election and really does, you know, kind of fix it and the public probably doesn't care whether it's 90 days or one day, what it says to me is that this is a broken promise. This is something that was promised and has not been delivered. It's a facsimile of what was promised. You know, I think I called it a cheap knock-off of the actual gift that was promised. It is enlightening to me at least, and I think it's going to be enlightening to lots of people in this province when they really begin to think about how much the Premier's promises are actually worth.

Mr. Chairman, having made those comments, I am prepared to support the amendment because it improves the act because it actually narrows down the 90 days to one day, but I think that what it lacks is a process by which in a mutually respectful way the various political parties are consulted with in arriving at an election day or a fixed election day. So I'll support it, but I have scant hope that it will pass.

Thank you.

The Chair: On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate that. Pertaining to the amendment put forward by the hon. member, I certainly appreciate the fact that he is trying to move from a period of over 90 days to zoom in on fixed election dates like in other provinces where it's actually only one day. I do agree, to the hon. member, that his amendment is an improvement from what had taken place on the opposite side, the government, relative to what this means.

Now, I will say that on fixed election date quotes pertaining to the amendment, it was on October 5 in a Calgary Herald online chat, a Sunday, where it said that it would be after a spring sitting and a budget and a throne speech. This is of course coming from the other side. It said that it could be June. Sometimes the Legislature takes on a life of its own, so it is a little unpredictable.

Then on September 23, 2011, in the Canadian Press relative to the amendment the Premier said that she would commit to calling an election in March 2012, her quote, and every four years from that date. Now, she said that Albertans are supportive of the idea and that several other provinces already use the same model. Well, to be quite clear, she said also that fixed election dates are important because they understand the issues that are coming. They don't believe any political party should have, even if it is theoretical, an upper hand in managing the political agenda and then picking the date accordingly. She goes on then and is quoted on the amendment, Mr. Chairman, as saying that the status quo of no election dates needs to change so as to deny the government the behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that characterizes the timing of an election.

Then again in an interview on the Rutherford show on QR77 and 630 CHED on October 25 she goes on again to say: when I make a commitment, I keep it; I'm not going to start making willy-nilly pronouncements when they want me to, and I hope the Legislature will be satisfied with the approach we take on fixed election dates. Fixed election dates give Albertans the opportunity to focus on issues that matter and to mobilize for an election without the behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that sometimes characterizes the timing of an election, said Premier Redford.

The candidate: personally, I was very disappointed by the voter turnout in 2008 when I was elected, of course, because I think it truly failed to engage the public in the most important democratic right, voting. In some ways low turnout may indicate the lack of faith in this system, and that is a very dangerous road to travel. I'd like to reverse that trend. I think the hon. member who's put forward this amendment is actually zeroing in on something that's very important; that is, picking a date, not a season, not one month or another month or another month. It's almost like saying – can you imagine? – when you have your birthday: well, your birthday is in this season. You know, you're not born on a day; it's in the season.

Well, the bottom line, let me say, for those that are following the holiday season and the Christmas season: "Guess what? December 25 is the day, for those who are Christian, relative to an important date in history." Now, I sincerely say, Mr. Chairman, that an election date is certainly not as important as December 25, but I will say this. Why do we continue with the games? Okay. Honour the commitment that was made. Clearly, with the amendment that's being put forward, I do believe that we're beginning to zero in on something that we refer to not as an old boys' club because right now the old boys' club is alive and well for that three-month period of the season.

It's really interesting that you really have to take every word of this government and look at the true meaning of what is being said. In my judgment, that is very unfortunate because it really doesn't zoom in on the commitment and the promise that was made by this Premier when she was running for the PC leadership.

That being the case, Mr. Chairman, certainly, I believe that the date that is being put forward in the amendment is at least, if anything, making the best out of, you know, a promise that was not delivered when this person as the head of the PC Party decided to come forward and say that she would have fixed election dates when, in actual fact, she has a fixed election season.

You know, I've seen the movie with Bill Murray called Groundhog Day, and I think that Chevy Chase was in Groundhog Day as well, but it's almost as comical as when you say you're going to have a fixed election day and here you are within a three-month period, or 90 days or 91 or 92 days. It's almost laughable. It's actually as laughable as the actual movie Groundhog Day because every day is repeated. Perhaps the old boys' network wants to go ahead and repeat every day so they can get everything ready for them because they know it's unavoidable. They have to go ahead and have an election.

This member has put forward, I think, an improvement from the commitment that was broken as well as the date. Now, is May the time? In the time that I have served as an alderman or a city counsellor or as a mayor or as an MLA, I don't ever actually recall campaigning in May. Certainly, it's far better than the season, you know. We all know that in March we have freezing rain going on.

Mr. MacDonald: The Stanley Cup playoffs.

Mr. Boutilier: And, of course, the Stanley Cup playoffs, that the member makes reference to. As we know now, the Stanley Cup actually goes to almost mid-June because of the length of the playoffs. Certainly, it's my hope and prayer that either Calgary or Edmonton are in the playoffs again this year, but only time will tell.

5:40

That being the case, Mr. Chair, you know, the amendment that I'm speaking to is at least a good first step, and it's certainly a better step than what has been offered in the broken promise on the other side. For that reason, I will support the amendment. But I would say that I anticipate that there will be a Speech from the Throne. After the Speech from the Throne, the Minister of Finance wants to go ahead and deliver a budget, and I think that this government will not dare to try to come back into this Assembly with a budget. What they will do is go and ask for a mandate from the people of Alberta. My goodness, how simple is that?

So why couldn't the Premier have just simply said: "We're going to have a Speech from the Throne in February. The Lieutenant Governor will go ahead with the mandate of this government of 40 years, old and tired as it is. We'll talk about democratic rights." Why couldn't she just simply say, "With the Speech from the Throne I will drop the writ and go for an election," which means sometime in February, meaning that based on the season that she's talking about, the actual election would be in March. She then, Mr. Chair, would indicate: oh, well, I said sometime between March – nowhere in the comments that have been made by the new leader did she talk about when it would be announced. Again, that's part of the old boys' network. They didn't consult with, of course, any other political party because they're interested in two things: power and holding onto power. That's rather unfortunate because it is an assault on democracy.

You can learn from the many other provinces that have fixed election dates as opposed to seasons. Only this government of 40 years thinks in terms of seasons, which means that, really, when they have a birthday, it can be over a 90-day period as opposed to a fixed date. That's unfortunate.

Let me conclude, Mr. Chair, by saying that I anticipate that in February there will be a Speech from the Throne. After the Speech from the Throne the Minister of Finance will come up with some goodies to buy back Albertans' support, but he will not have the courage to debate all of that, his budget, in this Assembly. Ultimately, we will then, of course, go to an election.

Could they have done that in an open and transparent manner? No. They couldn't. Why? Because the old boys' network is alive and well still on this government side.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment, which has been brought forward by the eminent and hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. The bill proposes that the next election "be held on May 8, 2012, and afterwards, on the second Tuesday in May in the 4th calendar year following polling day in the most recent general election."

Mr. Chairman, I thought it might be interesting to look at the significance of May 8 in history, some of the things that happened on May 8 in history, just so we, you know, really get it into our minds. Some of these are a little bit more political or less political, but they could all be read as political.

On May 8, 1921, Sweden abolished capital punishment. How about that? I bet there were a lot of politics around that. I wonder if there was even a general election? I have no idea.

May 8, 1945: a different form of politics, the most brutal kind, Canadian troops move into Amsterdam.

May 8, 1952: this could be the event that launched the career of any number of people in this Assembly because on May 8, 1952, Mad Magazine was launched. I bet the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was a big reader of Mad Magazine. I was, too.

In 1968 Catfish Hunter pitched a perfect game. That's what the Alberta Liberals are going to do in the next general election on May 8, right?

On May 8, 1970, the Beatles released what could be the theme song of the PC Party in Alberta, Let it Be.

In 1971 Joe Frazier defeated Muhammad Ali so he could continue. I'm just trying to bring a little levity into an afternoon session that's gotten a little grim at times, Mr. Chairman.

Like so many who have commented before me, I think the government's effort of bringing in a fixed election season is woefully inadequate. It's a silly kind of compromise, a half-hearted effort. Every other province in Canada that has a fixed election date actually has a fixed election date, municipalities in Alberta, the U.S. federal government, and on and on. There's no big science, no big trick, no big problem to having a particular date on which elections are held. It's beyond me why this government chose an election season, other than that we have some kind of riff within the Tory caucus between the Premier, who probably wanted a set date, and a lot of backbenchers who just weren't going to follow along. So – I don't know – somebody internally negotiated this silly compromise.

Mr. Chairman, it's important to note some things about fixed election dates. First of all, the starting point for all of this is that under the Charter of Rights the number one right, the very first right of Canadians is the right to vote. Okay? That's the fundamental activity of a representative democracy. If we move forward from there to protect the right to vote, well, let's think for a minute about that. What does it mean to have the right to vote? If we have the right to freedom of religion, that doesn't require the government to do anything. We can just go ahead and pray to whomever we want. We have the right to free speech. Again, it doesn't put any big onus on the government to do anything.

But think for a minute about the right to vote. You cannot have the right to vote unless the government sets up a voting structure, and it's not a meaningful right to vote unless that voting structure or that voting system works properly. Over the last 25 years or so in Canada the courts have actually ruled repeatedly on this and have expanded on what it means to have the right to vote. That's based on a much wider discourse or approach across democracy and across democratic philosophy.

In order for the right to vote to exist, the government has to put in place a meaningful voting system. What does a meaningful voting system require, Mr. Chairman? Well, it requires a whole bunch of things. It requires a place to vote. It requires a school or a community hall or a voting station somewhere. It requires people to work either as volunteers or paid staff at the voting stations and throughout the voting period, the returning officers and enumerators and so on. It requires a way to identify voters, a voters list. And it requires a system to enforce all of that and to finance all of that. In other words, a well-run election system requires an awful lot to be put in place. Those are practical challenges, Mr. Chairman.

For those practical challenges to be met when there is no fixed election date makes it much more difficult for the election apparatus to be put in place. How do you rent a hall for a polling station if you only know four weeks in advance when the vote is going to be held? It's particularly a challenge when the economy is booming. How do you recruit staff to enumerate if you're having to guess when the election is going to be held? How do you build the voters list and on and on?

I predict that the day will come when the courts in Canada actually press governments to settle on an actual fixed election date because as our understanding of what's involved in the right to vote expands, we begin to realize that a whole lot of things have to be put in place. There's only one sensible way to do that, and that's by beginning with a fixed election date.

5:50

Mr. Chairman, I think this is an important – an important – amendment. Let's just turn this around and ask ourselves: what happens if this amendment doesn't go through? If it doesn't go through, we're stuck where we may have the returning officers in each constituency, but are they able to rent an office space when they have to guess the date and the month the election is going to be held? Well, it's a lot more difficult. "Let me see, Mr. Landlord. I might need that office next month or, oh, maybe the month after or maybe the month after that. I don't have the money to rent it for all three months because I don't need it for all three months." What's the landlord's response going to be? "Well, you know, I'm not going to rent to people like that."

What about hiring enumerators or other election staff? Again, you're left with this huge uncertainty. All of that weakens the electoral system, the electoral machinery, and in turn all of that increases the risk that people's right to vote will be infringed or even denied, Mr. Chairman.

So while this seems like a fairly small amendment, I think it's of fundamental importance. I don't see the downside to this, honestly. I look across at the government. What have you got to lose here? I don't understand the government's position. When we look at so many other provinces with fixed election dates, I think this is one that is kind of embarrassingly weak from this government and mysterious.

I would urge all members to just go ahead and support this amendment, and then we'll move on. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to amendment A1 on Bill 21, the Election Amendment Act, 2011. I understand that if you're going to try and amend subsection (2) and narrow it down from a floating fixed date to a truly fixed date, you have to pick a date. I appreciated the rationale that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar gave for picking the date that he did. I don't see any particular flaws in that logic. I think other dates could have been chosen as well. Again, it comes back to the notion that either you are going to pick a fixed election date, or quite frankly you might as well not go through this exercise at all.

To say that you're going to have a fixed election season or a range or whatever you want to call this 90-day period is, in many respects, I think, making a mockery of the whole notion of fixed election dates, in any event. You're either in or you're out. You either go big or you stay home. There's no such thing as being a little bit pregnant, and there's no such thing as having a 90-day fixed election period.

Although I have reservations of this whole concept of trying to set fixed election dates within the context of parliamentary democracy and the constitutional conventions that surround that because as we saw in the last federal election, you can pass a, quote, unquote, law that sets a fixed election date and then turn around and break your own, quote, unquote, law when it suits your political purposes because this, quote, unquote, law is not really a law at all any more than when you're watching a car commercial on television and it claims you will get 38 miles per gallon, and then down below you see in the small print that that's the EPA, the Environmental Protection Agency, rating and that your mileage may vary. This is an exercise we're going through in making it look like we're doing something here, but it's not really committing anybody to anything.

When you have a fixed election date or a fixed election range within our system of government, within our system of democracy, you really depend on the word and the good graces of the Premier of the day, and you depend a heck of a lot on faith, Mr. Chair, for the election to actually happen on the date that was prescribed in the, quote, unquote, legislation.

Having said all that, if we're going to go through this dog-and-pony show to begin with, then I would prefer that we do it properly. I would prefer that we pick a fixed election date so that if the Premier in her wisdom or the Premier's successors in their wisdom – or perhaps the voters will show that it was a lack of wisdom – decide to violate this fixed election date that's being set, we all, the people of Alberta, can see very clearly what date they violated as opposed to: well, you know, we said it could be in March or it could be in April or it could be in May or somewhere in around there because you never know when it might snow. Gosh.

Somebody on the other side of the House actually asked somebody on this side of the House earlier this afternoon whether they had the ability to predict disasters. I would turn that question right back around on the government and ask if anybody in the government has the ability to predict what the weather is going to be on election day early enough in advance to honour or to back up – because I don't think there's much honour involved in it – the contention of the Government House Leader that: "Well we need this 90-day period because you never know. If we've had a really harsh winter, you know, maybe we want to hold the election later in 2016 as opposed to earlier in 2012 if this one turns out to be a mild winter." I don't know if this is parliamentary language, Mr. Chair, but that's just a load of hooey. It's an absolute load of hooey. We'll see if that passed parliamentary language muster or not.

I mean, it will be 2012 by the time the next election comes along. There are some of us who believe that it's about time that some serious investigation was done into the possibility of allowing the people of Alberta to vote electronically, to vote on the Internet to elect their next government. It certainly is something that needs to be tried as some kind of a pilot project at some point because, Mr. Chair, if I can do my banking online and not fear that all my money is going to be ripped off and end up in the hands of a Nigerian prince somewhere, then I can certainly trust security measures around a general election online. I see no reason why we can't go there.

Having said that – because I don't think we're going to be there in time for the next election – most people have car heaters, block heaters, in their car. Most people have a means of getting around in a snowstorm. If there's just a terrible, awful snowstorm on election day, well, that's unforeseeable 28 days out, let alone 28 months out. Sometimes that sort of stuff happens, right?

Here's the thing, Mr. Chair. We live in the province of Alberta. I live in the great city of Calgary, one of whose claims to fame is that it has snowed every month of the year in Calgary. I remember that, I believe, in 1991 – we'd have to fact check this because I'm going from memory – in Calgary the warmest day of the year was in February. It got up to 22 degrees. For Stampede parade that year in July we were all watching it wearing parkas. So you can't use weather as an excuse to have an election or not. Elections can go ahead and must go ahead and will go ahead regardless of what Mother Nature is doing on election day. These folks, prescient as they are, on the government benches, brilliant as they may be, are no better at predicting the weather than the average guy on the street.

The Deputy Chair: The chair hesitates to interrupt the hon. member. It's 6 o'clock. Under Standing Order 4(4) the Committee of the Whole is in recess until 7:30 p.m.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers .....	1447
Introduction of Guests .....	1447
Members' Statements
Public Guardian Office Award for Excellence .....	1448
Tom Baker Cancer Centre Pathology Lab .....	1448
Initiative for Welcoming and Inclusive Communities .....	1448
Provincial Revenues .....	1448
Safe Communities Initiative .....	1449
Impaired Driving .....	1449
Oral Question Period
PC Leadership Race Vote Solicitation .....	1449
PC Party Benefit Plan Trust .....	1450, 1452
Impaired Driving .....	1450
Kyoto Climate Change Agreement .....	1451
Mental Health Services .....	1451
Residential Construction Safety .....	1452
Hydraulic Fracturing for Gas in Shale .....	1453
Funding for Private Schools .....	1453
Human Services Ministry Mandate .....	1454
Critical Electricity Transmission Infrastructure .....	1454
Registry Service Fees for Municipalities .....	1454
Private Registry Service Fees .....	1455
Lubicon Lake First Nation .....	1455
Early Childhood Education .....	1456
Emergency Medical Services .....	1456
International Medical Graduates .....	1457
Health Accord Negotiations .....	1457
Gravel Extraction Management .....	1458
Notices of Motions .....	1458
Tabling Returns and Reports .....	1458
Orders of the Day .....	1461
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 27   Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2) .....	1461
Committee of the Whole
Bill 23   Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011 .....	1465
Bill 21   Election Amendment Act, 2011 .....	1473

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fourth Session

Alberta Hansard

Tuesday evening, November 29, 2011

Issue 43e

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 27th Legislature

Fourth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Hon. Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Hon. Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Hon. Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Hon. Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hon. Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC)
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Hon. Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Hon. Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Hon. Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Hon. Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (PC)
Stelmach, Hon. Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC)
Webber, Hon. Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Clerk	W.J. David McNeil	Committee Research Co-ordinator	Philip Massolin
Law Clerk/Director of		Sergeant-at-Arms	Brian G. Hodgson
Interparliamentary Relations	Robert H. Reynolds, QC	Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Chris Caughell
Senior Parliamentary Counsel/		Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Gordon H. Munk
Director of House Services	Shannon Dean	Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard	Liz Sim
Parliamentary Counsel	Stephanie LeBlanc

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 68      Alberta Liberal: 8      Wildrose Alliance: 4      New Democrat: 2      Alberta: 1

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Sustainable Resource Development
Janice Sarich	Education
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Mr. Zwozdesky
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Rodney
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
Mason
Pastoor
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	McFarland
Boutilier	Mitzel
Brown	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Ms Pastoor

Bhardwaj
Blackett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Ouellette
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 29, 2011

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 21 Election Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Do we have some comments on this bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that we adjourn debate on Bill 21 and that when the committee rises, progress be reported.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 24 Health Quality Council of Alberta Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any speakers at committee to this bill? The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I have a number of comments with respect to the bill arising from debate in second reading, and at the conclusion I will propose two amendments to the bill, which I understand have been or are about to be distributed.

Mr. Chair, I'll start the comments this evening just in a quick review of the purpose of the bill. As members are aware, the proposed legislation has two very important components. First, the bill delivers on this government's and the Premier's commitment to enhance the independence of the Health Quality Council of Alberta. Second, it establishes new inquiry powers that are customized to the health system.

Mr. Chair, today the Health Quality Council is established through a cabinet regulation. Bill 24 repositions the Health Quality Council so that, first, it operates under its own statute and, secondly, it reports directly to the Legislative Assembly. This is a very important next step for the Health Quality Council.

What began as a ministerial advisory committee in 1999 has grown in experience and expertise, and over the years the Health Quality Council of Alberta has garnered increasing respect for its knowledge and insight into patient safety and health quality matters. In 2006 the Health Quality Council was transformed from an advisory committee into an arm's-length corporate body operating under the Regional Health Authorities Act. With Bill 24 the council will fully stand on its own under its own statute.

Mr. Chair, Bill 24 is intended to strengthen the position of the council's work on health system improvements. The council will continue to deliver on its core mandate, which is to promote and improve patient safety and health service quality on a province-wide basis. And because of Bill 24 the council will report on this important work directly to this Assembly.

Members have spoken at length about the great work being done by the Health Quality Council. The only concern I have heard, Mr. Chair, is whether the health system inquiry powers will have an impact on the council's work. I assure you it will not. Bill 24 will enhance the independence of the council, and its work will in no way be impeded by the inquiry powers that are also in the bill. This is because a health system inquiry will operate independently from the Health Quality Council.

Allow me to explain further. Bill 24 provides for a public inquiry that best fits the requirements of the health system. The bill is similar to the Public Inquiries Act. It provides for cabinet to call for a public inquiry into health system matters. It gives the individuals conducting the inquiry the powers, privileges, and immunities that commissioners have under the Public Inquiries Act. This means that witnesses can be compelled to attend, answer questions, and produce documents in the same manner as under the Public Inquiries Act.

Let's make certain we are clear on this point, Mr. Chair. Members have wrongly alleged that we are trying to exempt certain people from appearing before an inquiry. This is simply not the case. Evidence will come forward in a health system inquiry as it would under the Public Inquiries Act. The bill is designed to bring information forward so that an inquiry can get to the bottom of a matter.

So why do we need a new inquiry power? Given the strong similarities to the existing Public Inquiries Act, there have been several questions about why we need this new health system inquiry power or why we did not simply amend the Public Inquiries Act. These are good questions, Mr. Chair, and I appreciate the opportunity to address them.

The government is committed to having a public inquiry and to this end has incorporated the key provisions of the Public Inquiries Act into this bill. However, we are concerned that the current inquiry legislation would not be as effective in providing for a full and fair inquiry into health system matters, which is, I think, a goal for all of us in this House. For example, it may not provide for a full inquiry in regard to nondisclosure agreements. We have heard concerns that this information may not be accessible even under the Public Inquiries Act. To remove any doubt, Mr. Chair, the new inquiry provision in Bill 24 provides for information under nondisclosure provisions to come forward in an inquiry.

Fairness is also an important consideration that's been discussed in this House. Health information is not currently protected under the Public Inquiries Act. This is a very significant concern. The protection of private health information is important, and Bill 24 provides for the proper protection of this information. The bill will allow a person to make application for evidence to be heard in camera, or in private.

An application to have a matter heard in camera may or may not be granted. The individuals conducting the inquiry have to consider whether or not the circumstances merit an in camera hearing. For example, it must be first determined whether private patient information is involved or whether the information is about a third person who has no involvement in the inquiry. There is no guarantee in the act that certain matters will be heard in camera. This is different from the Public Inquiries Act, which has a mandatory provision for certain matters to be heard in private. We have not followed the Public Inquiries Act in this regard.

Some members have also questioned the in camera provisions. These questions ignore the fact that a public inquiry is a powerful and blunt instrument. Witnesses may be compelled to answer questions and produce documents on a broader basis than in a court proceeding. It is important that the bill includes basic provisions that balance the extraordinary powers of an inquiry with basic principles of fairness. For example, application may be made to hear evidence that includes a patient's medical records in private. Before the hearing goes in camera, it must be determined whether the matter involves patient information that, if made public, may injure or harm the condition of a patient or a third person.

I was surprised to hear comments in second reading that matters must be weighed and considered before a decision is made for an inquiry to go in camera. If I understand those comments correctly, Mr. Chair, they dismiss the possibility that making a person's health information public could ever harm a third person. In regard to those comments, I give the example of people who advocate on behalf of family members who are suffering a mental illness. These advocates will tell you about the type of third-party information that may be included on a patient file and why this information needs to be protected from disclosure under the Health Information Act and the Mental Health Act.

I was also surprised to hear hon. members be so dismissive of provisions that speak to upholding justice and the public interest. As lawmakers in this Assembly it is our job to make legislation that operates fairly and that best serves the public.

Another thing that differentiates Bill 24 from the Public Inquiries Act is that the proposed bill will have the Health Quality Council of Alberta appoint one or more individuals to a panel to head the inquiry. Under the Public Inquiries Act cabinet appoints the commissioners to head the inquiry. Going in this direction, Mr. Chair, ensures that we have an opportunity for the council's tremendous knowledge and experience to be used in appointing the panel members independently.

Some members have raised concerns that this means health professionals will be appointed to the panel and then will be expected to become legal experts. This is not the case at all, Mr. Chair. Once a panel is appointed by the council, the panel will be authorized to hire its own staff resources, including lawyers to advise it. I also want to reiterate that once the panel is appointed, the council has no further role in the inquiry.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, I hesitate to interrupt. You're talking here to Committee of the Whole in general. You have not yet tabled your amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. Horne: That's right, Mr. Chair. I intend to do so at the conclusion.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Carry on. We had some members seeking clarification.

Mr. Horne: Yes. Thank you. If I could ask that the amendment be circulated.

The Deputy Chair: You want the amendment circulated?

Mr. Horne: I'll speak to the amendment at the conclusion of the remarks if that's acceptable.

The Deputy Chair: All right. We'll ask the pages, then, to please abide and circulate the amendment.

Please continue, hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: My apologies, Mr. Chair.

Once a panel is appointed by the council, the panel will be authorized to hire its own staff resources, including lawyers to advise it, and at that point, once the panel is appointed, the council has no further role in the inquiry.

Mr. Chair, in second reading the opposition has suggested that somehow the public inquiry provided for in this bill will not allow a judge to be appointed to the panel. The suggestion has been made that under the Public Inquiries Act the appointment of a judge is automatic. The opposition has it wrong on both counts. Nowhere in the Public Inquiries Act does it say that a judge must be appointed as a commissioner. When a public inquiry is called, a judge may be appointed in accordance with court protocol. The court protocol is in place because the courts are independent. When a request is made for a judge to be appointed to an inquiry, the courts must be assured that the appointment will not impair their operation and that the matter is of sufficient importance to warrant the involvement of a judge.

7:40

Bill 24 is more specific than the Public Inquiries Act in providing for the appointment of a judge, which, as I have noted, is always subject to the approval of the courts. The amendment that I am proposing this evening and is being distributed now will clarify this matter even further.

Other questions raised during second reading were regarding potential conflicts of interest. Under the proposed bill the inquiry authority will protect against conflicts. Section 17(4) prevents the Health Quality Council from appointing anyone to an inquiry panel who is or was

(a) a member of the board, or

(b) an agent, employee or contractor of the Council,

who has had any involvement in a matter that is the subject of the inquiry.

In addition, Section 7 requires the council to establish and implement "a code of conduct for the board and the employees of the Council." This will also guard against conflicts of interest. This proposed legislation will provide the same powers to the health inquiry panel as those under the Public Inquiries Act.

Lastly, Mr. Chair, several members opposite suggested that Bill 24 is intended to delay a public inquiry. Let me be clear. The Premier made a commitment to hold a fully independent public inquiry into health care. What Bill 24 does is make sure that the public inquiry will be effective in addressing health system issues.

I will now speak to the two amendments distributed to members this evening. The first amendment, which you should have in front of you now or very shortly, amends section 17(1), (2), and (3). This amendment makes it clear that a health system inquiry can be carried out by a judicial panel, which is one that consists only of one or more judges. It underlines this government's commitment to providing for a judicial inquiry, Mr. Chair, into current health system issues.

The second amendment is a housekeeping amendment. It simply maintains the status quo. The Public Service Employee Relations Act does not apply to the Health Quality Council under the current regulation, and this amendment simply maintains that position.

Mr. Chair, I'd just like to ask, then, how you wish me to proceed. I would respectfully ask the Chair if I could introduce both amendments and ask for them to be voted on at the same time.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, perhaps a good starting point would be for you to move the amendment formally. Then we'll have the debate on the amendment.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move the document that has been distributed as one amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

All members now have a copy of the amendment, which will be called A1.

Ms Blakeman: Excuse me. I would ask, under the precedents of the House and according to Beauchesne – I will find the citation for you – that we sever the two parts so we would be voting part A separately from section B here. We don't need to split the amendment. We just need to be able to vote on it separately, please. I don't want to have to vote against one because they're part of a whole. According to the precedents of the House I would ask they be severed for voting purposes.

The Deputy Chair: Actually, there is an option available. It can be voted separately, or it can be voted all in one. What are your wishes, Mr. Mover?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Chair . . .

Ms Blakeman: Excuse me. This is done by a request from any member of the House. The mover does not have precedence.

The Deputy Chair: Are you moving it as one amendment?

Mr. Horne: Well, just to clarify, Mr. Chair, I am moving it as one amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The chair will rule that we'll proceed with it as two separate votes, then. We'll split it into two.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any speakers to amendment A1, which is the first section of the amendment tabled? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity to speak to amendment A1, which is probably the first of numerous amendments I would expect tonight. We may in the early hours of the morning see amendment A20. It may not still be on this particular Bill 24.

Mr. Chair, what I see in this proposed amendment is what I would call weasel language, ways to get out of doing anything, with words like "the Lieutenant Governor in Council where it considers." So the whole power rests with the Lieutenant Governor in Council – in other words, the cabinet; in other words, the government – "where it considers it to be in the public interest."

Well, there is a tremendous difference between public interest and government interest. Think back to this past fall, 2010, when the government was continuously pushed to call a Health Quality Council, and then it took the following spring for that recognition to happen. It wasn't the public interest that drove it; it was the government's self-survival interest. Day after day the combined opposition battered the government on its credibility.

Now, when we read further into this first part of the divided amendment A1, it talks about "may by order." Again, we have considerations with regard to the wording. As opposed to "shall," which is a definitive term, we have "may." This whole business of leaving it up to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, who may or may not "consider" as opposed to "require," is very disconcerting.

Skip down to the new Section 17(3).

The board may recommend to the Minister that one or more judges of a court in Alberta be appointed as the Panel, and if one or more judges are to be appointed, the appointments must be made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Now, which word is the more important? The board "may recommend" or the appointment "must be made"?

Again, I talked about weasel. I should also be talking about wiggle. This gives the government more opportunity to change the nature of the panel, whether it's judicially led or not. The only compulsion is that the minister may listen to the recommendations of the panel. At some point they must do something, but it's not absolutely clear.

The government frequently uses the term arm's length. That's very convenient when you're trying to pass off your own responsibility for an action. It claims that the Health Quality Council will be an independent body, yet it's the government, the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the cabinet, that appoints the members of the Health Quality Council before they get down to the point of creating their business and calling their witnesses.

Mr. Chair, this is very much like what the government has tried to do with bills 19, 24, and 50 with regard to the land assembly act. The hon. minister of health in opening debate tonight on Bill 24 in general and then referencing specifically this amendment talked about how Bill 24, which would be amended if passed with A1, is similar to the Public Inquiries Act. I can't help but think that another way you could call something similar to is counterfeit. This is a counterfeit of the Public Inquiries Act.

The Public Inquiries Act compels testimony. The Public Inquiries Act is sensitive to third-party potential for harm. The whole explanation on Bill 24, including amendment A1, is – the politest word I can come up with is suspect.

Everything this government has done in terms of trying to bury a public inquiry into wrongdoing by this government which has comprised the health of individuals, which has potentially led to – well, it has not "potentially" led to queue-jumping. The Flames hockey team: there is no doubt about their getting their flu shots earlier.

7:50

Amendment A1 doesn't make the proposed Health Quality Council of Alberta Act one bit better. I'm not sure of the hon. minister of health's intention when he put forward this amendment thinking that somehow this is the equivalent of a spoonful of sugar makes the medicine go down. Well, the medicine is bad. What we're asking for, what the public is demanding, what doctors have required is a public inquiry, not something similar to it, not a counterfeit, but the actual public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act that currently exists in this province.

Now, again, the minister of health, in introducing and attempting to respond to concerns that the opposition members have raised, talked about this as not being a stalling device, that at some point in the future the truth would be out. But there's nothing in amendment A1 that talks about speeding up the process. There aren't any time limits provided in amendment A1. So even if we accepted amendment A1, we'd be no further ahead than we were with the original Bill 24. There is no specific date for the Health Quality Council, with its limited additional powers, to report, and the chances of this Health Quality Council reporting prior to the election that's to be called sometime within a 90-day period in the spring is very unlikely.

Should we even get more detailed reports on the preliminary concerns that the Health Quality Council raised already that were so adamantly dismissed by a former health minister, the current Minister of Finance, there is nothing in amendment A1 that would suggest that the authority that is being granted to the Health Quality Council under Bill 24, which is similar to the Public Inquiries Act but not the same as, would have any compulsion on the government to change the way it's acted. There is nothing in this amendment that would, for example, roll back the idea of a superboard. There is nothing in amendment A1 that would suggest that it's in the public's interest to have local autonomies on elected health board members in large constituencies or representatives in rural constituencies.

The Lieutenant Governor in Council might consider having an elected health board, which we had for a nine-month period under the reign of error of former Premier Ralph Klein before he realized that the elected members of the health council were actually speaking for the members who had democratically elected them. Well, that couldn't be. Why would we consider the people who elected the council to have any authority? We can't have that. We better have a superboard instead.

Now, "may by order": again, wiggle room, room to squirm. The squirming that should be done in this House should be by this government to realize that nothing short of a public inquiry is going to get them off the hook. They can claim that amendment A1 or the whole unpalatable Bill 24 is going to be accepted by Albertans, but, Mr. Chair, the truth will be out in the next election. Albertans have been unbelievably tolerant. They've tolerated this government for 40 years. I think a lot of that tolerance stems from the fact that it started well with Premier Peter Lougheed, but what it has descended to is rather unfortunate.

There's an expression, Mr. Chairman, that relates to amendment A1 of Bill 24, and that's that you can't teach an old dog new tricks. What this government is trying to do is with a relatively young dog now in charge, teach her the old tricks.

Mr. Hinman: Is it a young one or a mean one?

Mr. Chase: I wouldn't suggest mean. At times it would appear mean-spirited, but I wouldn't go to mean, but consider may, may.

Mr. Chair, amendment A1 is just more, as the expression goes, lipstick on the pig. The only thing that should be done with this pig is to bury it under the sand, barbecue it, and at the right time resurrect it and we'll feast on it. Tonight that feast isn't going to occur. We see more of what I spoke of last Wednesday night, and that's democracy in darkness.

Mr. Chair, we find ourselves in Alberta's own version of the Heart of Darkness, and I'm hoping that other members of the opposition will be able to shed some light on amendment A1. There's not a whole lot to light up here, but when we're finished and we're back in the comfort of our own homes, possibly we could use this as the fuel for the fire that this paper so deservedly should be placed in.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity. I look forward to hearing from other members, both of the opposition but also the government, attempting to explain why amendment A1 salvages a poor piece of legislation.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, just for purposes of clarity let's be clear that what you have before you is one amendment with two parts. Members are welcome to speak to either part at this stage. When the question is called, we will vote on one part first, and then we'll vote on the other part, but it will be considered as one amendment for purposes of debate.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before we proceed, could I ask the consent of the House to revert to introductions real briefly?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we've been requested to revert to Introduction of Guests briefly. Does the House concur in that request?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: Proceed.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you, Mr. Chair, two friends, and if we could get them to stand up as their names are called. The first is Mr. Paul Nemetchek, who is the Wildrose candidate in the riding of Strathcona, not Edmonton-Strathcona, just Strathcona. The second is Ms Jackie Lovely, who is our candidate in Edmonton-Ellerslie. If we could give them a round of applause, that would be great.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Bill 24

Health Quality Council of Alberta Act

(continued)

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other speakers wishing to comment on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased – I'm not so pleased, I guess, to speak on amendment A1. I find it very interesting. We're talking about Bill 24, the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, and I believe we're in committee. We're already getting amendments from the government on a piece of legislation. They've clearly said that this particular piece of legislation is going, quite frankly, to save the health care system, taking what we consider a broken health care system, where we've got our health care professionals within the health care system being the glue to the health care system, and keeping it together.

8:00

Interestingly enough, it's 8 o'clock on Tuesday, the 29th of November, and we've had the first government amendment hit the floor as A1. It's talking about section 17(1) to (3), which the health minister wants to amend. In looking at this, I look at Bill 24 under section 3, and it clearly says:

If in the opinion of the board it is desirable that a judge of a court in Alberta be appointed to the Panel, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General shall consult with the Chief Judge or Chief Justice of that court regarding the appointment, and any appointment by the board of a judge of that court is subject to the agreement of the Chief Judge or Chief Justice of that court.

Well, Mr. Chair, quite frankly, we do not have a problem with that. What we do have a problem with is the amendment that has come before us.

Now, this is interesting, so I'm going to read this into the record: "The board may." I love that "may" and "must" that we get in government. As we all know, "must" is telling the government that they must do something, and "may" is saying: "Hmm, it's Friday. Maybe if you want to, you can do that" or "It's raining today" or, as the government talks about in the Election Amendment Act, that we might have a disaster between – what is it? – March 1 and May 30 or something.

"The board may recommend to the Minister" – now, that "Minister" is creeping in here again – "that one or more judges of a court in Alberta be appointed as the Panel, and if one or more judges are to be appointed, the appointments must be made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council." If somebody doesn't know, Mr. Chair, what the Lieutenant Governor in Council is, they'll think: that must be somebody that's pretty darn important. What they don't realize is that the Lieutenant Governor in Council is cabinet. You know because you've been there, and you agree, but I bet you that if you and I went door-knocking in Edmonton-Mill Creek, and we said to some of your constituents, “Do you know who the Lieutenant Governor in Council is?” they’d be pretty darn impressed, but I’ll bet you dollars to doughnuts they wouldn’t know who the Lieutenant Governor in Council is.

There we have cabinet making the decisions in regard to the Health Quality Council, that the minister has been talking about and bragging about, quite frankly, about all of the things they can and cannot do. Well, let’s talk about what the Health Quality Council of Alberta can do and what they can’t do. What they can do is that they have the ability to review, and a lot of times, you know, they’re looking at where we went wrong on the H1N1, what happened in Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. We task them, or the previous Premier did, in regard to the independent review of the quality of care and the safety of patients requiring access to emergency departments, cancer and cancer surgery, and the role and process of physician advocacy.

Well, this particular Health Quality Council took on this job. Yes, it’s a very, very, very important job. Somewhere along the way they decided that they had to break it up into two parts. First of all, they had to look at the scope of what they were asked to do. In the first part what they wanted to do was look at the wait-list issues related to lung surgery in 2001 and the patients that had died. Then they said, “Well, gee, we’ve got to break that out to a second part, and we’re going to look specifically at the role and process of physician advocacy,” which is pretty darn simple to do.

Well, Mr. Chair, guess what? That report was supposed to be to us in the fall, and you know that as the previous health minister because you were intimately involved in this, as was the former Premier. You made promises to Albertans about taking on this role, the seriousness of this role, and that you were going to have all of that information, the first report in the spring and the final report in the fall of 2011. Fall to me is just about over – are we finished fall yet? – and we’re into winter. I can’t even remember when the first day of winter is, but I know we’re well into the fall session.

Now we’re going to bring in this report, expected early in 2012. They don’t say what early in 2012 means. It could be January; it could be February. It’s kind of like the Election Amendment Act. “We’re not sure, but we’ll make sure we bring it in when it doesn’t hurt us politically or when we don’t have some weather problems so that people can’t go to the polls and vote. We’ll bring it sometime in 2012.” That takes us back to Bill 24, the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, this wonderful piece of legislation that hit the Legislature a week ago plus a day.

The government says that they consult, that they’ve talked to the people that have been involved in this piece of legislation. Mr. Chair, on this Bill 24 I was at the briefing. The minister wasn’t there. He was supposed to be there. He originally had us booked for 8:30 in the morning. We had to cancel that because he’s busy and, of course, doesn’t realize that everybody else might be busy, too. We postponed that meeting till I think it was 5 o’clock that night or 5:30, and on the phone was the special adviser to the minister and a couple of lawyers. But the minister wasn’t there, so the minister couldn’t be part of the briefing on this very important piece of legislation, the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, when we were getting briefed. The minister at the time really couldn’t even provide a three-column document to help us with the briefing.

But they eloquently went on about all of the consulting that they did on this particular piece of legislation, all of the time and thoughtful process that they went through on Bill 24, and lo and behold our first government amendment hits the table. That’s even before the opposition has had the opportunity to bring forward our three, four, five, six, seven amendments that we’re going to be proposing to help them fix the bill.

Mr. Chair, in conclusion, I would like to tell the minister, as eloquently as I can, that we will not be supporting his amendment A1. Maybe he would like to explain. I listened intently when he was speaking, and he was giving his what I consider long-winded: “Believe in me. Trust me. This is, again, a really good piece of legislation, but I’m going to bring forward my first amendment of two, and maybe if you’re smart enough or dumb enough to accept it, you’ll allow us to do both at once. So please trust us. Please accept what we’re telling you” on probably one of the most important pieces of legislation that I think is going to affect our health care workers in this province.

I will tell the minister that I have spent literally hundreds of hours talking to health care professionals on what they want to see in this legislation, including yet today two more meetings with two more doctors. In fact, we even met with CARNA, the Canadian association of registered nurses, this morning because I think it’s important to reach out to all of the health care professionals to find out what they consider is a good piece of legislation versus a bad piece of legislation.

8:10

I can tell you that the health care professionals in this province do not trust this government on this piece of legislation. In fact, I’m just reading the latest letter that I’ve received, and it’s a PDF version of The President’s Letter from Dr. Linda Slocombe from the AMA in regard to what they’re talking about and how they see Bill 24. What’s very cute and, I guess, to me honest is that they recognize that they’re not professionals and that they’re not lawyers, and they can only talk about what they see in this piece of legislation.

They even have suggested to the government and made some recommendations to the government and to the health minister, that I know is listening very intently, about “making the scope of the inquiry very clear, articulating who and what shall be included,” and there we go with that “shall” again, Minister; “ensuring true independence by supporting the public inquiry with appropriate budget and resources, including support staff” – and, Minister, it is important for you to listen to this – “who have never been involved with the current [Health Quality Council] review; and “being fair to those who came forward to testify with the expectation that quality assurance confidentiality protection would apply.” A public inquiry, Minister, must, not may, ensure that that protection continues.

Then, Minister, they talk about the fact that the freedom to advocate is a fundamental issue for the AMA. I don’t think anybody will dispute that. It’s so fundamentally important that we still are seeing the intimidation, the harassment, and the bullying of our health care professionals today. We clearly articulated that to you over the last week, over and over again, with the case of Dr. Tony Magliocco. We even tabled in the Legislature and provided you the intimidation that he got from Dr. Wright telling him: if you don’t agree with what you’re doing, you’ll regret it, and you’ll be sorry.

What kind of crap – and that’s the only word I can think of – is that that you would even consider or allow that to happen within our system when you have spoken in this Legislature about the fact that you think that health care professionals should have the ability to advocate on behalf of the people that they’re taking care of, which are, quite frankly, Minister, you and I? We are their patients: your mom, my mom, our kids, and your kids. If they see something wrong in the system, the ability to advocate – you know what? You said in this Legislature about the breast cancer tissues being taken care of in Mount Sinai and that. We've now got documentation proving that that's not happening for six weeks; it just started.

Minister, for you to put in a "may," that "the board may recommend" to you, I don't think the board can recommend to you anything. Quite frankly, Minister, I have trouble accepting your word on this, and I don't know how you can expect that the board can recommend to you that one or more judges of a court in Alberta be appointed to the panel. I mean, for goodness sake, why would anybody want to recommend anything to you? You don't listen, and you don't advocate on behalf of the health care professionals, quite frankly, that you as the minister of health should be representing.

With those words, Mr. Chair, I look forward to hearing others speak about this amendment A1. I can tell you that as the health critic for the Wildrose and as the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek and, quite frankly, as an Albertan I will not be supporting this particular amendment. I think my role as the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek, my role as the health critic, and all of the wonderful health care professionals that I have had the honour and privilege to speak with over the last it will be two years in January – I'm not letting them down, and I will not be supporting on their behalf, on my behalf and, quite frankly, on behalf of Albertans this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other speakers? I have the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View and then the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to comment on the government's amendment to Bill 24, which, regrettably, raises the question again of independence. The whole purpose of establishing the panel under the Health Quality Council as opposed to under the government or under the cabinet, also called the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the whole purpose of this bill was to try to distance itself from any sign of influencing either the makeup or the outcome of the panel approach.

With the amendment suggesting that the board may recommend to the Minister that one or more judges of a court . . . be appointed as the Panel, and if one or more of the judges are to be appointed, the appointments must be made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, it basically undermines, I think, the fairly sincere effort that I saw the minister making earlier to create an independent body, a body that was not influenced by the minister himself or his cabinet. Now we see a bit of a flip, or shall I say a flop because I can't see this side of the House supporting an amendment that takes back some of the control – particularly in such a central figure in the panel, the judge – into the hands of the government.

On the face of it, Mr. Chairman, the first amendment isn't supportable. I have no difficulty with the second. Given that, I want to circulate to the House a subamendment, which I will comment on after it's circulated, a subamendment particularly for this section. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I'll circulate it and then talk a bit about it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. A page will retrieve the subamendment and distribute it as quickly as possible. Then we'll get on with the debate on the subamendment.

Hon. members, you have before you a subamendment as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and we will call it SA1. I'll call on the Member for Calgary-Mountain View to continue his presentation on the subamendment unless there is somebody who has not yet received a copy. If so, please signal.

It appears everyone has, hon. member, so would you proceed now with the discussion on subamendment SA1?

8:20

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the record Bill 24, Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, be amended as follows: in section 1 by striking out clause (e); subsection (b) by striking out sections 17 to 22 inclusive; subsection (c) in section 23 by striking out "or a member of a Panel"; subsection (d) in section 25 by striking out clause (l).

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but what I have before me is A.1, followed by A.2, followed by A.3, followed by A.4. Perhaps you're reading from an earlier version. Would you mind clarifying that, and just reread your motion so that we have it correctly in the record, please?

Dr. Swann: Could we pause a moment just to confirm that we have the correct one?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, certainly.

The hon. House leader.

Mr. Hancock: While we're pausing to reflect on that, I'm wondering how this is a subamendment. It doesn't amend the amendment. It essentially amends three other sections and then strikes out the section being amended as well as five other sections. That's not a subamendment. That's a new amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. House leader, what we were just discussing with the table officers is the fact that this subamendment in A.2 recommends that sections 17 to 22 inclusive be struck out, and the original amendment actually is about section 17. So one of those sections is there. The table officers have advised that, therefore, this qualifies as a subamendment.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, a subamendment is an amendment which amends the amendment. This does not amend the amendment. This serves to strike out the section being amended, which is an entirely different amendment. It goes on to strike out five other sections and amend three other sections entirely unrelated to the sections being amended. The two sections in the amendment are section 17(1) to (3) and section 26. There's nothing inherently wrong with either passing or defeating this amendment and then going back and amending the bill to take out the section entirely.

The Deputy Chair: Just a moment. I just require five minutes with our parliamentary advisers here. Give us a moment.

Hon. members, the parliamentary legal advice on this issue is along these lines. If the original government amendment were to pass, then it would be impossible to come back and subamend any part of it. Therefore, this has to be ruled as a subamendment and allowed to proceed. So the chair is going to rule in that regard, and that's how it'll be.

Hon. member, would you like to start over with your clarification?

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This amendment is designed to eliminate the powers of the Health Quality Council to establish an independent new public inquiry process. It essentially says, as many Albertans have raised, that we have a Public Inquiries Act. It's been working for decades in this province. It may or may not be led by a judge. It can do all the things that we have said that we wanted done under the Public Inquiries Act. The fact that this government, on the one hand, committed to a public inquiry and, on the other hand, decided to pull it out of the Public Inquiries Act raises a lot of questions about what the motives are, what the ultimate goal is, why the Public Inquiries Act would not be sufficient when it has served the purposes across this province for decades of investigating, putting in camera those issues that are not in the public interest to be heard, establishing the terms of reference.

It smacks again of a government that is on the run, that is trying to do anything possible to avoid a fundamental inquiry into the health system because of the unfortunate facts that may be revealed. It is a desperate, unnecessary, wasteful attempt to subvert democracy, subvert the truth, and hide from Albertans the terrible mismanagement in our health care system, the recriminations and retaliations against health professionals who have tried to point out the mismanagement and the destruction in our health care system and the demoralization of health workers and who have attempted to make the kind of changes that would improve the cost-effectiveness of a system and, indeed, return it to some semblance of accountability.

May I emphasize the word accountability, Mr. Chairman? A public inquiry can call anyone, from the Premier to ministers to chief administrative officers, right down to cleaning staff, anyone in the health care system who has been affected and adversely affected by mismanagement. The Public Inquiries Act enables this. It has proven itself over many decades, and the attempts by this government to pull it out of that traditional, long-standing, respected capacity within government is testament to a desperate government who is looking, through any means, to give the impression of following through on their commitment, a Premier that has said she would call a public inquiry but got cold feet once she looked at the readiness with which the existing Public Inquiries Act could be brought into force.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, I hope will serve to both cut through the waste of time and energy and money that's going into this establishment of a whole new judicial inquiry and bring us back to the basic question. If there is a problem in the health system, let us investigate it. Let us investigate it with the tools that we have that are time proven. Let us use the Public Inquiries Act and ensure that we get the information out there and we start to solve the problems of nonconfidence, demoralization, and lack of accountability in the system by making this information public.

There is no need to establish a whole new inquiries act in order for us to get to the bottom of this, any more than there would be a need to establish a children's services quality assurance inquiry act or an infrastructure quality inquiry act. It flies in the face of reasonable and responsible use of the public purse.

I'm hoping that we will see support for this and stop this waste of time and money and energy going into a deviation from the norm.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

I have next on the list Airdrie-Chestermere but only if it's on the subamendment.

Mr. Anderson: No, it wasn't on the subamendment.

The Deputy Chair: No? You're on the amendment? Okay.

I have, then, Edmonton-Strathcona next. Are you on the subamendment or on amendment A1? Edmonton-Strathcona, you're on the amendment? Okay.

I'll be happy to recognize Calgary-Varsity, then, on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I won't hold it against you, Mr. Chair, that I was your third choice tonight.

Speaking on subamendment SA1 to government amendment A1, what subamendment SA1 does is that it doesn't beat about the bush. It basically says that sections 17 through 22 inclusive aren't worth the paper that they were printed on; therefore, let's terminate those particular sections. Now, what the hon. mover of A1, the Minister of Health, suggested by putting forward amendment A1, he recognized that section 17(1) through 17(3) should be struck out. He sort of got halfway to where our subamendment SA1 is going. We're saying: forget trying to fix this unfixable circumstance, and just get rid of it.

8:30

Subamendment SA1 takes a very direct approach. It says: forget the Lieutenant Governor in Council making appointment.

(4) A person appointed under subsection (2) shall not include a person who is or was

(a) a member of the board.

That's not sufficient change to make this more acceptable. So subamendment SA1 says that for the sake of efficiency and for the sake of due process for the Alberta public, that has been poorly dealt with by previous health ministers and in a system that has been constantly in flux from 19 health divisions down to seven down to a single superboard – and now, again, we're trying to come up with some way of attaching all of these broken pieces.

Mr. Chair, when the government so very early into the process of introducing Bill 24 introduces an amendment, then you've got to wonder about the government's commitment to the bill. Amendment A1 didn't provide the fix. It had flexible language just as, I suppose, we have a flexible election period.

Subamendment SA1 cuts to my familial surname, Chase, and says: toss it. You can't fix it; therefore, toss it. I appreciate the direct approach that subamendment SA1 takes because it attempts, Mr. Chair, to clarify a process that is so badly damaged as to not be repairable. Jesus was able to raise Lazarus from the dead, but nothing in the way of amendments from the government or from the opposition is going to raise Bill 24. When I talk about raise, I'm using the term r-a-i-s-e. What needs to be done and what amendment SA1 attempts to do is raze, r-a-z-e, the concept of the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to SA1. I look forward to other individuals wanting to get to the heart of the problem by not only eliminating subsections but eliminating the act altogether.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on subamendment SA1.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'm pleased to be able to rise to speak to subamendment SA1, having had a chance now to look it over and have a clearer understanding of the objectives which are being pursued through this series of amendments.

What is clear to me is going on here, obviously, is that we're simply in a position where the mover, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, is endeavouring to effectively remove all reference to the so-called public inquiry or the inquiry element of this act. Of course, were that to happen, we would be left simply with the Public Inquiries Act, which, of course, was what was always in place and which is what the Premier originally promised Albertans she would do, which was call a public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act. So that is the sum total of the many amendments put forward by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Well, why is it that the opposition appears to be so concerned about having the inquiries, particularly inquiries in relation to the functioning of our health care system and, in this specific case, inquiries in relation to allegations of intimidation within our health care system? Why is it that the opposition is so concerned about having that matter addressed under the Public Inquiries Act rather than having it addressed through this new system that the Premier and her newly minted minister have concocted? Well, that's because the new system that the Premier and her newly minted minister have concocted does not meet the standards that were originally contemplated by everybody, including the Premier herself when she talked about the need for a public inquiry on this important issue.

This concoction is significantly different in some key areas. What are some of those key areas? Well, one of the areas that I'm concerned about is this notion of having the Health Quality Council appoint the panel that would engage in the review. You know, Mr. Chair, I'm a lawyer, and I understand that in certain areas where people become experts and develop an expertise, a fraternity develops. A sense of connections and contacts and linkages develops.

In this particular case what we have is a Health Quality Council which consists, in part, of medical professionals who are clearly connected to the government, in whom the government has a great deal of trust. Let's be clear. That trust doesn't just exist in this province on the basis of who's the most qualified and capable individual. Trust, in this province, for this government, also includes being prepared and committed, no matter what, to cover the butt of this government. That is what this government defines as being qualified to be someone who sits on a board or a commission in any kind of capacity in this province. We see that across the board in countless examples. You know, one interesting example was the report that came through the Ethics Commissioner's office a couple days ago, the most ridiculous twisting of the English language around what constitutes lobbying and what does not in order to ensure that the government is not deemed to have done anything wrong.

Throughout the system this government appoints people that they trust politically. Their qualifications for the job otherwise are secondary, and sometimes, I would say, there are cases where the government actually looks away from qualifications because they wouldn't want the person that they appoint to actually get uppity and maybe start debating with them and saying: "Well, I know we're friends. You know, we're in part of the same party, and we all want to keep each other in power, but really in the interest of best public policy this is probably not the best way to go." The minute people like that start talking, well, the government downgrades the qualifications another level for the people that they appoint to these positions because they want to make sure that these people owe them their job and are not prepared to get uppity. That's the overarching scheme through which this government appoints people.

So now we have a Health Quality Council, and it is this organization of loyal Progressive Conservative health care experts or functionaries who will then appoint the so-called panel. In this particular case we're talking about a panel that's going to investigate allegations of intimidation immediately after the Health Quality Council has itself prepared a report. This is quite silly. This is like a first-level judge being the one who appoints the person that oversees his appeal. I mean, it is one of the strangest arrangements that I think we've ever seen.

The Health Quality Council is going to come up with a lovely little sanitized report about issues of intimidation within our health care system, and then they're going to be the ones responsible for picking more loyal friends and family to engage in a review of their sanitized report. It is truly a recipe for inside deals and continued mutual handwashing. In no way is it a recipe for getting at having a reasoned, independent, qualified, legally trained person who has a fresh set of ideas, who has no obligation otherwise to come into the system and review it. That's not what this is. This is a strange concoction put together to try and sort of meet the promises or appear to meet the promises that the Premier made while maintaining enough control of the process to ensure no one gets too embarrassed in the process.

So I'm not happy with the idea of the Health Quality Council being the body that appoints the panel. By eliminating the whole section in the bill that suggests that the Health Quality Council would be the source of the public inquiry panel members or that the public inquiry would happen through this bill, we get rid of that problem. That's what the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is attempting to do with this series of subamendments.

8:40

Now, there are other problems with respect to this bill and the degree to which anyone could ever suggest that this bill actually amounts to the Premier keeping her promise on the issue of a public inquiry. The Public Inquiries Act, another key element of it, talks about the issue of public disclosure of what occurs inside the hearing process. Of course, as has been discussed already, this piece of legislation is a completely different kettle of fish. This piece of legislation will ensure that it all stays behind closed doors.

You know, it's interesting because in defending that difference between this legislation and the Public Inquiries Act, the minister immediately suggested: well, it's really important to keep people's medical records secret and quiet, and we need to respect privacy. Well, I have to tell you, Mr. Chairman, I've been in this Legislature and, frankly, acting as an advocate for a number of people outside this Legislature for long enough to know that this government has long since learned the skill of using our privacy legislation not as a shield but as a sword. In this particular case the sword is being used to negate any kind of transparency or disclosure.

Interestingly, this legislation does not limit the grounds upon which the panel can scurry behind closed doors, draw the curtains, and make sure everything happens in private to simply those cases that deal with individuals' private medical records. First of all, it's not a case where we have a very limited exception, where one person comes in and says, "I'd like this discussion of my particular medical record to remain private," and on the application of that one person it remains behind closed doors. Oh no, no. The panel itself, the panel appointed by those friends of the Tories that I talked about earlier, gets to decide: well, maybe someone out there may find that this information is a bit too private, so we're going to go in camera.

It doesn't matter if that person's saying: "No, no. You know what? It's fine. Go crazy. The system has already really not worked for me. At this point I've lost all dignity, and I just want justice, so if my information has to get out there, that's fine." It doesn't matter. The panel still has the authority to say: "No. We're worried about you, so we're going to close the curtains. We're going to make sure that this stays quiet." In addition, what the panel has the ability to do is say: "There is a possibility that this could undermine the public interest, so we're going to go dark. We're going to go behind the curtains. We're going to close the curtains. We're going to close the doors behind that. We're going to throw on the padlock. We're going to tell the press to stay 20 metres away from the front door and not come close because we don't want any of this to be publicly discussed."

Now, interestingly, under the Public Inquiries Act when that kind of decision is made, the minister has to specifically certify the particular issue which they believe needs to be kept private, and they do that. Then the public inquiry panel, when they do their report, will report on that piece that the minister specifically engaged in, demanding that it be quiet. So the minister is held responsible for specific exceptions from public disclosure of issues that would be discussed through the public inquiries process.

That's to be distinguished from this little concoction that we have here in this bill that the government is putting forward because in this bill, just to review, we have the minister who appoints their pals to the Health Quality Council, and the Health Quality Council appoints their pals to review their decisions, and then that panel of second-rate pals decides on the basis of a whole number of things whether or not they should go dark in terms of their inquiry. So we've got two layers of: we don't have to take political responsibility for this. But, just to be clear, you will.

Those folks have a long list of reasons why they can go private. Frankly, the list of reasons why they can go private is so long, I mean, it might have been a shorter list if they just outlined the circumstances under which they might still remain in the public eye. I think you would have saved paper that way if you'd just listed the very rare circumstances under which the public might still get access to this process. But you didn't. You listed a whole bunch of things in section 19, and all of them are very vague.

Then the icing on the cake, of course, is that when this panel of appointed friends and insiders appointed by other friends and insiders comes up with their reason for why to take their whole inquiry behind closed doors to ensure that the public gets no access, none of it is appealable to a judge or to a court. We've written a prohibitive clause to ensure that the courts will never get a review over this ridiculous decision that the friends of the friends of the friends of the insiders made on the basis of these very broadly written exceptions to transparency.

Again, it really, truly is an act that was constructed in order to ensure that the Premier is not compelled to actually keep her promise to Albertans, which is to ensure that there is a full, public inquiry within the meaning of the words that Albertans have come to understand based on their experience with the Public Inquiries Act as it currently exists. Instead, we have a potpourri of these other things which have a whole new set of rules which ensures that we don't get to the story the way Albertans thought they would when the Premier made her promise, which she is now not keeping.

The Public Inquiries Act also sets out that under their process, people who are affected by the issue have a positive right to testify. That's not as clear in this piece of legislation. So for people who really want to go before it, it's not clear that they get to go before it. That, too, is another concern about a significant difference between what we've created through this piece of legislation and what would be the governing sets of rules had the Premier decided to keep her promise around this issue.

This series of subamendments essentially serves to take this whole piece out of the act. What we are left with, then, is a clear set of roles and responsibilities for the Health Quality Council, which may well have some value in and of themselves. We're not saying that the Health Quality Council doesn't have something to do to keep themselves busy. There's lots of room for systemic considerations and all that kind of stuff. But clearly the Health Quality Council is not the forum through which this particular inquiry, an inquiry that generated this piece of legislation in the first place, should occur.

Previous members talked about the recent letter from the president of the AMA, and it's clear that the AMA themselves do not believe that the inquiry into physician intimidation ought to occur through the Health Quality Council process, which is laid out in this piece of legislation. When you consider that the very set of circumstances that drove the creation of this forum, this mechanism for a so-called transparent review is itself being questioned by the very people who are at the heart of the concerns that were raised, one then also questions whether there's really sound thought and sound analysis that went into the creation of this particular forum and structure. Again, it's really not clear to me why it is that the public inquiries process would not work. It's not clear to the advocates with the AMA why the public inquiries process would not work.

I totally get it. I mean, we're talking about issues of physician intimidation. So you're talking about taking this well-connected, Tory-friendly group of people on the Health Quality Council who are all hanging out with all the other folks who over time have been, perhaps, connected to the allegations of folks that are high up in this ministry and in this department of health, and we're taking those people and having them investigate themselves and their friends.

8:50

It makes perfect sense that what people within the health care profession would really want is a completely fresh set of eyes, fresh eyes with fresh experience who can come in and apply what would be considered the reasonable person's view of the matter to the way things have been conducted within our health care system. Having a bunch of people who are up to their elbows in all these dysfunctional practices be the ones who are participating in the review isn't going to provide any sense of comfort amongst and within those who have requested the review and who've gone out on a limb in order to get us as close to this review as we have gotten so far. That's another good reason to have a different process. Instead of having a bunch of old boys review the actions of another bunch of old boys, what we really ought to be doing is providing a clean, fresh set of eyes.

That's what the foundation is behind the notion of having public inquiries. When you look at what drove the notion of creating public inquiries, it was that very idea of pulling away from all the people who were involved in the process originally and getting a fresh set of reasoned, intelligent eyes to look at it on behalf of the reasonable citizen instead of having those who are deeply enmeshed in it review the actions of others who are deeply enmeshed in it. There's nothing wrong with, say, getting a certain bit of advice periodically on what industry practice is and what's reasonable and what's not, but those people should not be driving the process. The way this is constructed right now, that's exactly who's driving the process.

It is an idea and a structure which, from a public policy point of view, is separate and apart from all the different escape hatches which exist within this legislation to keep the government safe from public scrutiny for their actions over the last many, many years, separate and apart from all that, even from within. In this particular case I think there are good public policy arguments for not having the inquiry structured this way. That's what the subamendments would achieve, were they to be passed, that we would not move forward with this particular structure.

With that, I think I've made my point for a while. I will now sit down and let other speakers have the floor.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Any other speakers? The hon. Member from Edmonton-Centre on subamendment SA1, and then Airdrie-Chestermere after that.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to be able to speak in favour of subamendment SA1, which is amending the government amendment 1, which is amendment A1. Just let me put this in context again. We had the Premier, when running for the leadership, promise that there would be a public inquiry around the oft-raised issue of intimidation of doctors when they tried to advocate for their patients. So that's the setting. That issue goes back almost a decade and seems to have really reached a fever pitch sometime sort of between 2005 and 2010. In some cases we had exceptional doctors leave the province, purportedly because of this.

There was an issue there. People wanted it investigated. They wanted it done in a way that was transparent. The public inquiries process, which is available under the Public Inquiries Act, was referred to often, and the Premier, then a leadership candidate, had confirmed that that's what she was interested in and would put in place when she became Premier, which she did. Then that didn't happen, and this is where members of the opposition, members of the media, and members of the public go: well, why not? Because if that's what everybody thought was such a great idea in the first place, why isn't it a great idea anymore? And that explanation has never been forthcoming.

Second to that, I would argue that in Alberta there have been a number of – how do I put this?

Mr. Chase: Incestuous relationships?

Ms Blakeman: Well, no. I was going to say fast deals, sleights of hand that have gone on with the government, where they say one thing and give you another.

People are deeply suspicious. They don't take what the government says at face value anymore. They always look for what's behind it. Some people look for a variety of conspiracy theories behind it. This is not behaviour that was generated by the people or the media or the members of the opposition. In fact, the behaviour was generated by the choices that have been made by the government.

It was supposed to be a public inquiry; it wasn't a public inquiry. Now we have the government saying that it's going to be the Health Quality Council who will appoint another inquiry body in order to carry on this independent inquiry. Well, you can see why you've got people talking about incestuous relationships, with the government choosing a certain group of people who then choose another group of people. It does all start to either ravel together or unravel, however you wish to regard this. There's just a lack of trust here, I think, that is what ultimately is happening here.

I think that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona did a very good job talking about the appointees to the panel and who might be appointing them. I think for the most part she's right although I will stand up and say: not always. I don't want anyone to leave this feeling that all government appointments are somehow suspect or tainted or not qualified.

I had the pleasure of working with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues. It was definitely appointed by this government or a previous incarnation of the government. Yes, every single member on there was a card-carrying Conservative Party member except for one, which was a complete accident and so funny. You wouldn't believe it. She was actually a card-carrying New Democrat, but because her family were all card-carrying Conservatives, they just assumed that the daughter would be as well. She wasn't; she was ND. We all laughed about that the whole time she was appointed to the council. See, I'm getting laughter from behind me. So it doesn't always work.

I have to say that some of these women fit the description that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona gave, but a number of them didn't. They worked very hard. They were very diligent. Where the politics came into play – everyone agreed on the agenda that needed to be achieved. Where the disagreement came was how to achieve it, how to get there, how they were going to change something, not the fact of what needed to be changed. So I just want to say that not everyone that's appointed by government is somehow not a great person. I think sometimes they are.

Certainly, the government does want to stack the deck. If you follow the appointees, you see people get sort of recycled over and over and over and over and over again. They're serving on all these different committees, and then they get passed on to another one and then another one. You do start to realize that there is a sort of pool of – I don't know? – maybe a hundred people that get appointed to every single committee one way or another that's in this province.

My concern and why I'm in favour of this subamendment is because in striking out sections 17 to 22, which I know the Government House Leader is not in favour of – 17 is the authority to establish a hearing, 18 is the hearing section, 19 is considerations re an in camera hearing, 20 is disclosure of evidence from an in camera hearing, 21 is witnesses, and 22 is the report to the Legislative Assembly – in wiping all of that out, you are wiping out the establishment of this committee that's done by the Health Quality Council. In other words, you'd be going back to a public inquiry set-up.

Where I am particularly keen on the amendment are the sections around in camera hearings. I will say that this government is so fast to go into in camera hearings. I can't believe it. It's always done with the excuse that, well, this is somebody's job or this is somebody's pay scale or this is private in some way, shape, or form.

9:00

What I started to do in the policy field standing committees was to insist that everything would be posted online. If someone approached us and said, "Well, I'll give you this information, but you can't make it public," then we simply didn't accept it, and it would not be part of our considerations. I wanted anybody to come along after the fact or during the fact and look at what we were looking at and know how we made our decision and know that they were looking at the same information that we were. They could listen to the audio of how people presented and what they said in the public presentations. They could read any written presentations online, so they had access to exactly the same information that we did, and it should be clear why we made our decisions.

Where you get into trouble with stuff like this is having: oh, well, we were in camera. Well, now we don't know what was discussed. Further, I can tell you, from having sat on a number of these committees, that the committee itself starts to fight because there's no record made of what you do in camera. Then somebody says, "But you agreed to this." "No, I didn't. Where is that written down?" It's true, but it's not written down anywhere.

I've seen it. The committee members actually start to fight with one another because nobody can remember who was responsible for what or who had the idea first or who disagreed with it the most or whatever is the argument of the day. So what I have found with the standing policy committees is that, in fact, if you say to people, "Everything we're doing here will be public," people understand that. They will come to you with their medical stories and say, "I understand that," and go and put it up there.

What I find most often with stories that have become known in here by code names or whatever is that those individuals or their families want their medical story told. They want to make sure it never happens to anyone else again. The Lundys, where Rose Lundy had a miscarriage in an emergency ward in Calgary; the family with the boy who died of meningitis: all of those are families would happily be involved in a public inquiry because they want the information public.

So clauses 19 and 20 and 22, which we're proposing to take out through this subamendment, all deal with sections that I think people would prefer were not there. They want that information public. They want everybody to understand what happened. They want them to be able to look at it and see how decisions were made.

Thank you for the opportunity to talk in favour of subamendment SA1. I urge everyone to vote in favour of this subamendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm sure our guests in the gallery must be just riveted, nailed to their seats just at the entertainment and the incredible depth of the debate and the subamendments and the amendments and everything else. This is great practice for them for their soon-to-be jobs.

Mr. Chase: Do you want to reconsider now?

Mr. Anderson: That's right. This might be a way to dissuade them from running, just being here tonight.

I'm grateful for the opportunity to stand up to debate amendment A1. As has been stated previous to this by other members of this Assembly, the gist of this amendment is essentially to get rid of anything under this legislation related to a public inquiry. I'm assuming that – and from the remarks it's clear – the meaning is that the public inquiry should be called using the Public Inquiries Act, that is already on the books, is already a piece of legislation that's just sitting there waiting to be used by any transparent and thoughtful government, which we do not have. So here we are in this conundrum.

I do get amazed at the doublespeak, though.

The Deputy Chair: We're on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Okay. Subamendment SA1. You're right. We're discussing whether there's really relevancy at all to having a public inquiry allowed for under this bill or this special power. It's kind of a quasi-power to call an independent inquiry. I would say that it's clear to me that this subamendment is probably right on the money.

There is no doubt – the record is clear – that the new Premier repeatedly promised during her leadership race for the PC Party that she was going to call an independent, open public inquiry led by a judge, a judge-led inquiry, and that that inquiry would be conducted prior to the next election. She made this promise over and over again starting on June 8. It's right in the top of the Calgary Herald: "Redford calls for judicial . . . inquiry." You'll remember that that was – I won't bring the chair into this – a big deal at the time because she was essentially breaking ranks with her party and with the health minister at the time and with the Premier at the time.

She said: we need a public inquiry. She was very clear about it. When she called for it, she said that it's about what has happened in the system, to ensure that we get to the bottom of this and that if there has been any of this – meaning intimidation, queue-jumping, and all of this different stuff – that we all are completely open about it, very open about it. She said: "I know that it's not something that Albertans are going to accept and nor should they. That's why we need to have this inquiry." June 8, 2011. That's five months ago. That's what she said then.

The Edmonton Journal the next day says that – and I can't mention the names – the former Premier and the current Premier, before she was the current Premier, "clash over probe. No need for medical waiting list public inquiry yet," says Premier. And what did she say? Basically the same thing, that it's getting to the point now that the only way people are going to have confidence in the health care system is to have some independent inquiry take a look at this, that she has no idea whether those suggestions are true, but it's important that we find out. So here she is talking about the need for a full judicial public inquiry. This is June 8, 2011, as well. She's promised the public inquiry.

There's more. On October 5 it talks about the current Finance minister resisting the call for a judicial public inquiry. October 26: that's a magic date because that's after October 2, which is when she was elected PC Premier, so all of a sudden these promises turn. Instead, the Premier alters the health inquiry: "opposition charges probe has been watered down."

Then the next day, October 27, she's urged to honour the health care inquiry, but doctors group is feeling "a little bit betrayed," says the doctors group.

October 29 – and this is after the nomination – the Premier says that the judge is going to lead the public inquiry. Stephen Carter, her chief of staff, says: "Any inquiry that is led by a judge and has the ability to compel evidence is a judicial inquiry. That's what we're going to have." So an inquiry that is led by a judge and has the ability to compel evidence is a judicial inquiry. That's what we're going to have, says the Premier's number one right-hand man. Left-hand man is probably more fitting.

October 30: health inquiry. "Premier repeats promise of judicial probe into medical system." It goes on.

9:10

Then we start to see the changes. She promises all these things, and then she brings this little beauty, Bill 24, and all of a sudden everything is changed, all those promises that she made during the leadership and after the leadership for a full judicial public inquiry before the next election because we've got to restore confidence in the system. I'm open and transparent, and you can vote for me: all those great promises. Promises are fun to make. [interjection] That's right. Promises are fun to make.

And she won. She won by 1,600 votes out of 70,000 cast, a very, very thin margin. This promise was a huge part of that leadership victory. There's no doubt about it. It was a huge part of that, maybe the most important promise that she made. There were a couple that were important, but that one was right up there. It kind of differentiated her from the pack, so to speak. How many health care workers, 30,000? I wonder how many of those folks voted for this Premier because of that promise. Well, I guess we'll find out.

So that was the promise that was made, and then we get this piece of legislation. What does it say? It talks about a public inquiry, but there are all sorts of caveats on it. The caveat on it is that it is optional whether this will be a judge-led inquiry. In fact, the government's amendment, for which this subamendment has been brought, specifically muddies the water further. If they haven't muddled it enough, they muddy it yet again.

It used to say,

If in the opinion of the board,
meaning the Health Quality Council,

it is desirable that a judge of a court in Alberta be appointed to the Panel, so if the quality council wants a judge, the Minister of Justice . . . shall consult with the Chief Judge or Chief Justice of that court regarding the appointment, and any appointment by the board of a judge of that court is subject to the agreement of the Chief Judge . . .

What that is saying, basically, is that if the council wants a judge, the council is going to get a judge as long as it's agreed to by the Chief Judge or Chief Justice of that court. Okay? I'm assuming that's because of scheduling and all kinds of different reasons. The point is that the ball is in the justice's court, and they're not going to say no if the Health Quality Council comes and says: we want to under this act appoint a health system inquiry. That's what it says here now.

Then this amendment. That's bad enough because it's kind of: if in the opinion of the board. It's very murky. Maybe the board thinks they need a public inquiry; maybe they don't. Maybe it should be judge led; maybe it shouldn't. Okay.

Then they bring it, and they make it even murkier. The board may now "recommend" not: if the board decides. No. The board may now recommend – and it's just a recommendation – to the minister that one or more judges of a court in Alberta be appointed as the panel, and if one or more judges are to be appointed, the appointments must be made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. So they're not even made by the Chief Justice; they're made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Okay.

All of a sudden this has become more optional. So we have a health inquiry. It is now completely optional at all to be called depending on what the Health Quality Council says. They can say, "Ah, we don't want it" or "We want it" or whatever. So that's optional. It's completely optional whether it's judge led. It's completely optional whether – and we'll get to that in some other future amendments here because we've got a couple of them. It's optional whether it is completely open to the media, whether it's completely public, and what parts can be put back behind closed doors. There are some obvious protections in here, I think, for ministers and people that they don't want publicly testifying about things of this nature. We'll get to those in other sections.

It's now optionally open, optional to the media, optional to be judge led, optional to be called at all, and there is absolutely no guarantee whatsoever – in fact, it is almost impossible because of the delay tactics of this government – that this will even be called before the next election, let alone conducted or, as the Premier said in her promise to Albertans, that it would be well under way, unquote, before the next election. That is what she said, and it was very, very misleading. That's the parliamentary way of saying it. I know there's a bunch of different words to describe what it was. Misleading.

Ms Notley: Not cool.

Mr. Anderson: Not true.

Ms Notley: Just not cool.

Mr. Anderson: Not cool. Shameful.

Mrs. Forsyth: Disgusting.

Mr. Anderson: Disgusting. There are all kinds of different ways we can call it other than the obvious word. But that's what it was.

Now we sit here, and we're going to debate this bill. Eventually, it will be rammed through by this government, and they will optionally be in a position where they can clearly wait till after the next election. They will call some sort of silly – who knows what it will look like? Who knows who will and who won't be allowed to testify and whether it'll be open and public or whether it won't? But they'll call something just to say that they did it, and it'll probably be next to useless. At the end of the day there will be no justice for those health workers that have been scared out of the province by AHS officials and by officials of this government. And that is sad, very sad.

So here we are debating whether we should have a public health inquiry at all in this bill. I would tend to agree with regard to this amendment. I would say that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View – and I think most people in this House should have a lot of respect for this gentleman and what he's brought to this Legislature and his expertise as a doctor – knows first-hand what it is like to be intimidated by government officials. He knows very much first-hand. So does the member that sits next to him, the opposition leader. It's tempting to go into that one, but I know that's raw with certain people, so in the interest of speeding it up I will not go there so that I don't get a thousand points of order called on me. That's usually what happens. Needless to say, this Official Opposition leader has been clearly intimidated, I would say, by certain individuals.

I know that in our own caucus our Justice critic, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and myself and all of the members of this caucus have been approached by dozens, literally dozens, of doctors, not to mention nurses and other health care workers, who have reported incredible accounts of physician intimidation, mostly by those in AHS but often by those in the government. Yes, often by those in the government: let us just say that. They are scared to come forward.

The reason they're scared to come forward is because the government has a monopoly on the health care system, obviously, and they can't go anywhere else in Alberta, especially now that we have a centralized superboard and we don't have a variety of different health regions, where you could go to a different health region. Although, you know, the fingers, the tentacles were long even in the previous system, at least you could go to a different health region if you had a falling out in one. Well, you can't do that anymore. You're underneath the same massive, centralized bureaucracy of Alberta health, reporting to the minister of health.

There is nowhere to go but out of the province, so what do we do? We lose fantastic doctors like Dr. Magliocco. We lose them to places in the United States, as they take the expertise that they used in Canada and developed in Canada and developed in Alberta and made a great system for testing cancer patients. Now that expertise is being lost. Patients are going to suffer and possibly pass on prematurely because of that stupidity. That's the problem.

Dr. Magliocco is just one. I mean, there are literally dozens. Obviously, Dr. Maybaum, who had the unfortunate – Dr. Maybaum was interesting because of the letter he got. There are people in the government, said his superior, that if you continue to speak out about this children's hospital for children with disabilities, if you keep on speaking out about that delay, there are people in the government that want, quote, your head on a platter. Now, how are you supposed to function as a physician and advocate for your patients when you know that there is someone high up in the government who wants your, quote, head on a platter? Think about that. What kind of place do we live in that that is permitted to occur?

To the Premier's credit she said at the time that that's unacceptable. She called for the public health inquiry at the time.

9:20

Ms Notley: She never expected to win. Come on.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. Maybe she didn't expect to win. She didn't think she'd actually have to fulfill the promise, but here we go. She delayed it, and she has clearly broken her promise to Albertans and to any health care workers that voted for her and just to Albertans in general, even if they didn't vote for her. It's just a disgusting broken promise is what it is, and it really is shameful.

There's that old saying: fool me once, shame on you; fool me twice, shame on me. I just have to believe that Albertans are nobody's fools and that they are going to see this for what it is and that they are going to at some point say: "You know what? We are sick and tired of being deceived. We are sick of it. We're sick and tired of the broken promises, being told one thing on the public health inquiry, on the fixed election dates, on Bill 50 and the transmission lines through Strathcona county and other places." They're just going to say: "You know what? We're just sick of being lied to." At that point I think that the people of Alberta are going to say: "You know what? Whether we're left leaning or right leaning or centrist leaning or whatever leaning we are, we're going to find a different group of individuals to lead us."

Who knows what that will look like? But I cannot believe that Albertans, when all the facts are laid before them, are going to look at it and say: "Yeah. You know what? These folks deserve another chance." Albertans are not fools, and they will make changes when they feel that they're being deceived. That's our hope here in this province, I think, right now, and we'll have to see how it goes. The tentacles are all over the place, the PC tentacles, but those tentacles don't extend into the ballot booth.

An Hon. Member: Oh, sure they do.

Mr. Anderson: Maybe they do. I don't think they do yet. I will differ with you there. I think that in the privacy of the ballot booth, where no one can see them or intimidate them and it's just them and a pencil and a little piece of paper, they'll put an X by the individual or parties or what have you that have not intimidated them, have not disrespected them by deceiving them and so forth. I sure hope that they do.

I will be supporting this subamendment, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we now adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd move that the committee now rise and report Bill 23 and report progress on Bill 21 and Bill 24 and beg leave to sit again.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 23. The committee reports progress on the following: bills 21 and 24. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Does the Assembly concur in the report? Those who do, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Those who do not, please say no. The report has been concurred with. Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 27

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2)

[Adjourned debate November 29: Mr. Liepert]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: I'm good.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other speakers to this? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: I don't know if there's a pattern developing here, Mr. Speaker. Again I'm your third choice. Whether I'm first or third I will gladly speak to supplementary supply.

Mr. Speaker, one of the concerns I have is about how supplementary supply is arrived at. I fully appreciate that supplementary supply is there to supplement what hasn't been sufficient supply before. I have no problem at all in providing support for the residents of Slave Lake or individuals affected by the flooding of the previous spring, individuals down in Medicine Hat or Irvine. I fully understand the need to, in one case, when they were flooded, bail them out and in the case of the fires in Slave Lake to re-establish the infrastructure that was unfortunately destroyed through a fire that appears now to have been deliberately set.

Where I do have trouble, Mr. Speaker, with regard to supplementary supply, is how the various budgetary amounts are arrived at. There's been a tremendous amount of debate in this House as to what our debt, or deficit, was going to look like. The previous President of the Treasury Board – in springtime possibly he was smelling too many blossoms – suggested that our debt would be down to $1.3 billion. Then we have a leadership campaign, a new Premier is selected as opposed to elected, and it seems that his $1.3 billion estimate no longer held up to scrutiny, and we're back to a $3.1 billion or $3.4 billion deficit. If that same discrepancy and reasoning of 2 point some billion dollars is applied to the main budget and the budget estimates, what faith can we have in the supplementary supply budget?

As I say, when it comes to damage done such as the fire in Slave Lake or fires throughout the province, we know what the bill is, and obviously taxpayers, in terms of fairness, would want to see the individuals compensated for their losses. But where we get into problems, Mr. Speaker, is the guesstimating that goes forward, how much money we will need to tide us over until the spring, when at such time we may have a budget tabled in this House or we might strictly go to an election. It's very hard to tell because originally we weren't going to have a fall session, and now we're having a fall session, a two-day followed by a two-week session. When the government predicts what budget requirements may be, it's very hard to have faith in that predictive process.

9:30

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that within supplementary supply there will be a guarantee that our constituency offices, for example, will continue to function, that the supportive members of the Legislative Assembly offices will continue to receive their paycheques, and that the civil servants, who work so diligently and who have been so decimated to such a large extent in the paying down of the debt, will continue not only to receive their salaries but, as was approved in Members' Services, the increases which they haven't seen since 2008. Supplementary supply will make sure that those paycheques continue to be sent out and that those deserving individuals are compensated for their hard work, which is much appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that so much of our budget, approximately a third of it, is determined externally because of our dependency on nonrenewable resource revenue, where prices are set outside of our domain. With the about-to-occur environmental conference in Durban our credibility both as a province and as a country is very much in question. I am concerned that our reliance on foreign investment can potentially be undermined by our failure to follow through with environmental commitments.

Ms Blakeman: I think it was the Liberals.

Mr. Chase: Yes, it was a Liberal government that committed to the Kyoto protocol, but it appears that our Minister Kent is going to backpedal as fast as he possibly can from that earlier commitment, so Alberta and our hon. Minister of Environment and Water will unfortunately be the recipient and the target of another set of fossil of the day awards.

Mr. Speaker, part of our credibility or lack thereof is our ability to set budgets and stick to them with the exception, as I say, of emergent circumstances. This supplementary supply is just another example of our government not being able to come up with a figure that is within reason and, therefore, having to go back to our taxpayer bank and ask for another bailout.

Mr. Speaker, it concerns me that the government continues to put us further into debt, whether it's borrowing money conveniently internally from the Alberta Treasury Branches or whichever institution is still willing to lend us money. We've heard concerns about the management of our wealth. A number of members in this House have brought forward their concerns that we're not saving. Peter Lougheed's notion of a heritage trust fund and putting small amounts aside as an insurance policy: that's been a dismal failure. That's part of the ongoing fiscal calculation that this government applies to supplemental supply and in this case under Bill 27's auspices.

Mr. Speaker, while the outcome of the supplementary supply vote is preordained based on the majority government, the process is flawed. I am hoping that at some point in, hopefully, the near future we'll come up with a more accurate process. When we take into account whether it's the main budget or a supplementary supply, hopefully we'll come up with more stable forms of revenue generation.

My personal preference, as opposed to a sales tax, Mr. Speaker, would be the notion that all other provinces have accepted, and that's reverting back to a progressive tax, where the expectation is not placed solely on the middle class to bail out the government but that the people who make the greatest amount of money are then required to pay their fair share.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak on supplementary supply, Bill 27. I look forward to our new speaker, who has been handed the torch from not failing hands he threw. I'm sure he is glad to at least have a break. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort at 20 minutes to 10 has taken over the whistle, put on the black-and-white shirt, and I look forward to his rulings as the evening progresses and the morning dawns.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to Bill 27, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act (No. 2), wherein the government is coming to this Assembly seeking additional funds to pay for items that were not addressed or predicted in the spring, when we had our budget discussions at that time. There are a number of items that are being considered within this piece of legislation.

I want to start by laying out the position of the NDP caucus, which is that while I have no doubt there are a number of areas of government expenditure that warrant some critical review given the propensity of this government to hand out money to people, organizations, businesses that might otherwise be quite successful on their own volition, generally speaking, in this province I think we do have a problem with revenue, and we are going to continue to have unpredictable budgeting processes as long as we continue to attempt to rely solely or to too large an extent on oil and gas revenues and at the same time refuse to engage in a more long-term and sustainable revenue generation plan.

That's in two respects. I mean, I think that we actually have to look at issues around fair taxation. It might be time to look at whether having a flat tax in Alberta, that arguably costs us anywhere from $4 billion to $11 billion a year, is something that actually helps Albertans. Certainly, it helps very, very, very wealthy Albertans, but the majority of Albertans, I would suggest, it does not help, and since so many of them are paying out of pocket for other expenditures that the government is not making, I would suggest that globally it's not in the best interests of most Albertans.

As well, although we need to find a way to develop a more regulated way of managing the oil and gas revenues that come into this province, we also need to develop a way to collect a greater share of the revenues that are owed to us as owners of the resources. We simply have capitulated to a very effective lobby from the oil and gas industry over the last few years, and we've made decisions which have not been in the best interests of public policy and Albertans in this province.

9:40

Having said that, we're here today because the government has come to us looking for more money, and I raise those issues because it's not entirely disconnected. One of the areas where the government is seeking more funding is in the area of education. This year is the second year in a row, Mr. Speaker, where the government started out by trying to yank funds from our education system. They get all nervous because they're not able to make the budget balance, so they start looking at places to cut. Because they're very sensitive on issues of health care and because the previous Premier made a three-year funding commitment, they look to their next item, which is education.

Twice in a row they've gone to the education pot to try and find money there, and twice in a row they've changed their mind into the budget year. Now, when they do that, Mr. Speaker, they create an absolutely unnecessary and unforgiveable level of chaos within our school system, chaos that is felt day in, day out by teachers, by kids, by parents. It's a real thing. You would think that after this many years in government, with something as important as education, where everybody says, "Oh, yeah, we all think education is so important," they would take more responsibility and deliver, with a greater sense of the public trust, on their obligation to create a first-class education system. Instead, what we have is that it's the first place they go. They've tried two years in a row to cut from that system of education, and I'm not convinced that we're not going to see that happen again.

This year the cut lasted longer. Instead of the cut being fixed in the middle of July so that we were only dealing – you know, actually, two years ago the cut was in the middle of July. They finally came around and decided to undo the cut in the middle of July, so we had an adequate amount of teachers. I won't say adequate but a similar number of teachers in our schools that we'd had in June, when school was finished. Now we had different teachers. They created huge chaos. Principals and administrators were back in the schools in the middle of the summer – they were probably already there, but they were working extra hours in the middle of the summer – trying to deal with the fact that they could rehire the people that they'd let go because of this government's incompetent, incompetent management of the education file.

That was 2010. Now we fast-forward to 2011, and they are correcting their incompetence and their desire to go after extra dollars in education. That decision wasn't made until October, so in fact we haven't undone the damage. In some schools we've undone the damage; in some schools we haven't. Every school suffered from the lack of that funding for the first two months of the school year. Then it changed in some schools, but in other schools it hasn't because they haven't been able to adjust quickly enough to make those changes. They haven't been able to find the staff in smaller communities. Those teachers moved out of the communities, so it takes longer to rehire the teachers that were fired as a result of this government's decisions.

That level of incompetence drove deeper this time, and it stuck more. We see it in a more real way in our schools. Certainly, I have two children in the education system, and I can tell you that I saw it in a way that, without question, compromised the quality of education of children that I saw day in and day out. There's no question that the government's decision to do that with that money resulted in that. I find it really frustrating that we have the supplementary supply, where the government once again a little bit farther down the road decides to undo the damage that they've done in education. They, frankly, should be quite ashamed of themselves for this level of incompetence.

Now, the fact of the matter, though, just to be clear, is that the government or the new Premier is trying to take a lot of credit for putting that money back in this time. I think it's really important for people to remember that the system as it is, even with that money returned, is not what it should be. Eight or nine years ago the Learning Commission made significant recommendations around class sizes. The government has not met those recommendations around class sizes. Class sizes are too big. They've never met the independent recommendations of the Learning Commission. For three and a half years now they have frozen funding for special-needs children, which means in the face of inflation that they're actually cutting funding for special-needs children. That affects the most vulnerable kids in our schools, and it affects all the kids in our schools. So these are things that they very intentionally do and continue to do, which are not actually fixed by the supplementary supply, and again they need to take responsibility for that.

They are looking for $317,000 for the reinstatement of operating support to accredited private schools. Well, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo raised some very good points in question period not only today but over the course of the last few days around this government's dogged determination to subsidize the wealthy in this province, which absolutely is unacceptable to me. The minister keeps saying: we've got to pay 70 per cent of our taxpayers' dollars to facilitate what he refers to as choice. What I say is that if someone chooses to use their relative economic superiority or whatever, their relative economic wealth to buy better education for their kids than what other kids have, well, that's fine, but I don't want to subsidize it. You know why, Mr. Speaker? Because one of the fundamental components of a public education system is equality and equity. The minute we start funding mechanisms to allow people to buy their kids out of equality is the minute that the whole system starts to go down the tubes. That's why it's wrong.

Now, I've had people sometimes come to me and say: I have to put my kids into private schools because they are special-needs kids and they're not getting the support that they need in the public system. I have sympathy for those people, and I have sympathy for parents who just want the best for their kids at that moment, at that time, and they see that the public system is not able, because it's not adequately funded, to give the support that their child with a learning disability or some kind of special needs requires. So those parents choose to go to private schools. That is the kind of thing that will just happen more and more the more that we fund private schools. That 70 per cent that we are putting into those private schools ought to be reallocated to ensure that we can provide the services needed by those children and those families in our public system. To be clear, in our public system one of the tenets of public education is this notion of equal opportunity and equal quality of education.

The passionate defence of this government of certain parents to buy their way out of equality is just not something that I think our taxpayers' dollars should be supporting, certainly, within the context of us knowing that our current education system is failing so significantly so many children who are not able to buy their way out of the public system, whether that be children who struggle with not having English as their first language, an area that is a growing challenge but that we are not addressing properly within our urban centres, whether we're talking about children with special needs, or whether we're talking about other specific interests that kids have. We need to be able to address those concerns within our public system. Allowing people to buy their way out of it is like partially funding somebody who is queue-jumping looking for tests for certain diseases. That's not something that is part of the principles that underlie our system of public education.

Now, another thing that we're looking for in terms of supplementary money is $94.3 million for faster than previously anticipated P3 construction. Now, I'm sure it's no surprise to this Assembly that the NDP caucus is opposed to P3s as a mechanism of capital investment. It is a short-term answer, and in the long term it costs more. It's yet another example of this government deferring a difficult financial obligation down the road to generations that, I guess, they won't be accountable to, you know, 25, 30 years from now. It's like buy now, pay later; that's basically what the P3 is. Not only is it economically unwise if viewed over the term of the contract of the P3, but it's also not particularly effective most immediately.

9:50

I have been advised, as I'm sure many others have, about an example of one particular P3 school in Edmonton where, as predicted, problems surfaced with the maintenance provided by the private partner in that lovely little P3 relationship. So what happens is that the private partner is the one that's responsible for acting on the maintenance obligations. For every replacement or maintenance procedure that they do, they end up having to report back through the private operator's office in Calgary. Replacement parts have to be ordered through the private operator's office in Calgary, and the whole process is slowed down.

We've heard a report about one school where the heat was out for three weeks because of the time that it took the private partner to fix the heating system. Where there are similar issues in schools that are fully owned by public school boards, the employees of that school board are directly accountable for the prompt repair of that asset which is in the public domain. Instead, we've got this situation where, you know, we say to our kids: "Yeah, we know. It's a bit awkward to go to class with earmuffs on, but we're doing what we can to negotiate with our partners, and we've got all the lawyers at the table, and we sure hope that we get the matter resolved within a few weeks. Sorry. I wish we could serve you more directly, but really in the short term this is going to cost us a lot less." I'm not convinced that it is.

This is money that is being asked to further enhance this buy-now-pay-later strategy of school construction, that is so popular with this Conservative government, for which they will be apologizing at some point in the future.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I heard the cry for help. There is so much more to say. I'm sure there is a lot more to say about P3s, private, for-profit, and the government being in the business of being in business again. I will defer to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to bring up some of the other serious mathematical calculations that I previously alluded to if she so desires.

Ms Notley: Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Varsity. There are a number of other areas that, of course, are covered by the supplementary supply bill, but the one other that I did want to simply raise is that under the immigration line item, there was a request for $700,000 for English as an additional language. I think it was line item 17.6. I'm hoping that the minister will consider dedicating this money towards reviving the publication called English Express. That was a publication that was cut by advanced education in 2010, and it was a very cost-effective tool for English-language learners.

At the time our caucus suggested that employment and immigration take on the responsibility for maintaining that publication because it was a very low-cost yet very efficient and effective tool for assisting the many new immigrants who, as I've already alluded to, are not getting the support that they need from this government in terms of settling in in the way that is most effective not only for themselves and their families but for all community members in Alberta. The question of whether that $700,000 might be dedicated to English Express would certainly be an interesting one, and I would hope that, if not immediately, certainly in the very near future the minister who is responsible for employment and immigration now would consider reviving that particular publication.

As I said, there are a number of other issues that are touched on through supplementary supply, but I think most of the key ones I've had an opportunity to discuss, so I appreciate the question from the member.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I, too, appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona bringing up the English Express concern. I'm just wondering if the member, of course through the chair, was aware that many of the government's own ministries provided articles for English Express to help English as a second language students better understand governance in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona if you wish.

Ms Notley: I wasn't aware of the degree to which government departments were contributing to the English Express, but I do know that all the research is telling us that the opportunity for developing real competency in language levels is a key element to labour market success for new immigrants and that, in fact, it takes much longer than we'd originally thought.

The English Express was a significant way to bring people into the overall Alberta community and a way to encourage their ability to develop their language and reading skills while assisting them in becoming connected with key institutions within the Alberta community in a way that would allow them to integrate and be part of our community more successfully and faster than would otherwise have been the case.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members? We still have time for Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill at second reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 27, supplementary supply, and, I guess, make just a few brief comments to perhaps add a little balance to what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had to say. The first and most important thing about what this is is balancing the budget. We can look at Europe right now, and we can look at the States, and we can look around at most of what we call the western democracies. The problem that they're facing is one of spending more than they have revenue. To listen to many in this House purport that we're an exception to the rule here, that our problem in Alberta is that we don't have enough revenue, that we're not taxing higher and looking at more new taxes – Mr. Speaker, it's just blatantly wrong. It's about balancing the budget.

There are some good things here in supplementary supply. We had Slave Lake, just terrible incidents there, but gratefully we were able to step in and help and get temporary homes and those types of things which are essential when those types of crises hit, and that's good. We have the pine beetle, which is another dilemma that we're struggling with. It's hard to budget for those areas. I guess the most important thing, Mr. Speaker, is that, you know, we were blessed and had a good little cycle there where we were able to put $18 billion, $19 billion into the sustainability fund, which every Albertan is grateful for, but abuse of that fund is very alarming right now.

To think that this year we have a $6 billion cash deficit when we have record revenue is a real concern. We have to take a couple of steps back, and we can't take the simplistic attitude that the previous member just spoke about: "Oh, there's $4 billion on the table if we just switch to a progressive tax. Oh, there's $1.4 billion on the table if we just increase the oil and gas levies." They talk as if there's no economic consequences to raising taxes. To me it's the same as having a pack horse and saying: well, we've got a thousand pounds on that beast of burden; what difference will it make if we put on 1,500 or 2,000 or 3,000? It has a huge impact, and eventually you hit the tipping point, which many western democracies have long past hit, and they're on a down-slide right now with record deficits. They're spending money that they'll never be able to raise.

It's interesting that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood spoke earlier today about Iceland and the fact that there was no – what would I want to say? – outside interests that wanted to bail them out, and they had to hit their economic wall and default and not pay things. That's what we need to do in a lot of these things. But for government to just continue to print money, to spend foolishly, and say, "Oh, we need to do all these things" – we need to have a reality check, Mr. Speaker.

10:00

Supplementary supply: understand the need for it. Like I said, there are some things in here that are unforeseen circumstances. Basically, they are doing this, but supplementary supply should be coming out of the sustainability fund. That's what it's there for, for these unforeseen emergencies, where we can reach in there and not have to run a deficit. I guess I want to say a cash deficit, that we are actually running fiscally responsible because we could pull it out. This government is pulling, you know, billions of dollars – billions of dollars – out of the sustainability fund and acts like that's just the normal way of doing business. They're moving their target further and further down the road when they say that they're going to balance the budget.

That just isn't acceptable to Albertans. They are required to balance their budgets, and they expect government to balance their budget. It's always interesting to see municipal governments struggle. Under law they're forced to balance their budget, and the way that they do it every year is by increasing taxes. For some reason they seem to be able to do that, whereas provincial and federal governments don't take that view. They figure that they're Big Brother, and it's okay for them to borrow or spend money that they don't have.

Mr. Speaker, it's disappointing, with the record revenue that we have and the poor planning that we see going forward here in supplementary supply – and the one that everybody, you know, likes to point their finger at, I guess, is the $15 million for salt and gravel for our roads. Why did we fail to plan for that? There are just areas where government needs to do a better job of realizing the actual costs, realizing that there's going to be a World Cup in 2012 or that we're going to have the Olympics or whatever it is and plan for those things in advance, rather than needing to come back here in the House, go through supplementary supply, debate these things, and say: oh, they're critical.

You know, it's the old saying: failure to plan on your part or my part or our part doesn't make it necessarily an emergency. Yet with government it seems like that's what they can always fall back on: "Well, this is an emergency. These are unforeseen circumstances. Nobody could have realized that this was going to happen." Well, there are a lot of nobodies out there that do business year in and year out, who know how to balance their books, how to put money away for their retirement, for their future, and here in Alberta it should be no different.

We're very blessed. We should have the discipline of putting money into the heritage trust fund every year to develop that fund for when our resource revenues are no longer able to sustain us. That's what we want the heritage trust fund for. It's shameful to see the number of governments that are passing on a deficit and saying: "We're doing it for our children. We're spending all this money for our children." I don't think that those are the Alberta values and the Alberta way.

I'm very disappointed that we have such a large amount, you know, just shy of a billion dollars, needed in supplementary supply. We shouldn't need to have that much. But we'll carry on and try and do better in the future.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I would just appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore providing insight on when cutting is appropriate and when supportive funding is required. An example would be what is happening in the city of Toronto. The mayor and some of the councillors that support the mayor are celebrating the fact that they're laying off 10 per cent of the civil servants working for the city, and they're also cutting back severely on services. I'm just wondering, in terms of achieving balance, the role of the sustainability fund, the role of the heritage trust fund, and where you see areas in this potential budget that could be cut and possibly should be cut.

Mr. Hinman: I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity for that excellent question. I'm going to use the health analogy: the health of our economy, the health of our body. We live in a land of abundance. I mean, we just have so much that's out there for us. It's easy to be guilty of, I guess I want to say, overindulgence. You know, you go out to eat, and it's easy to start putting on the extra pounds, and it's difficult to take them off.

What we have said over and over again in the Wildrose is: limit government spending to inflation plus population growth. Had we done that since 2000 I think we'd have – how many billions of dollars? – $3 billion or $4 billion of surplus today. What's critical on good government is not to get bloated and spend money foolishly. I mean, even through attrition in many areas we could, I guess I want to say, start that diet to get back to a feasible size. There's lots of waste in different programs. We've really hit, you know, the big ones where, for example, the government says: "Oh, it's a great economic time. Let's spend $350 million on new MLA offices." It was a very poor decision back then. You know, they now talk about: oh, you're not just going to implode it. Well, of course not. But those are the types of things.

It's always that 20/20 hindsight. Why did we get into it? Why are we spending $2 billion, and now the new Premier all of a sudden is taking $500 million of that out saying, you know, that we're going to diversify it a little more on CO<sub>2</sub> sequestration? I mean, if there is anything that we want to store in this province, I would say the first priority would be H<sub>2</sub>O not CO<sub>2</sub>. We have a shortage in southern Alberta most of the year, but we have an abundance at a time where we can collect that and store it. It's no different with our money.

The bottom line is if we want to be fiscally . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, speak through the chair.

Mr. Hinman: I thought I was, but okay. Thank you.

If we want to be fiscally responsible, we need to be looking long term, and not because we have some extra money and say: "Oh, you know, we can grow this department. We can spend more money here." It just seems like if there's money in our pockets, it's just so hot and burning that we need to spend it immediately and expand programs. I'd be the first to say that there are many programs that we do need to expand, but there are too many that have expanded that we didn't need to.

The principle to go back to is inflation plus population growth, and limit that growth and meet the demand on a year-by-year basis, rather than, "Oh, we can expand 15 per cent; oh, we can expand 20 per cent; oh, we need to catch up, you know, on our infrastructure," and we spend billions of dollars. That's probably my biggest concern right now, that we went through this, you know, up to 2003 where the government had drastic cuts in infrastructure, and it basically undermined that whole industry, and then all of a sudden when they had their surpluses after 2005, they wanted to spend all this money, and there was no capacity there. What's going to happen in three years after spending $7 billion a year when all of a sudden, if we haven't come out of this economic dilemma, we've got to cut it back to reality to $4 billion? Had we left it at that steady rate and kept a good strong industry growing and being competitive, we'd be able to continue on.

We're going to hit that wall that Iceland did because we're spending so much. We can't spend $7 billion every year and think that it's sustainable. It isn't. Yet, for some they seem to think that someone's going to step in and take over those billions of dollars and say, "Oh, private industry is going to be healthy then," when it's actually being undermined because it's being overtaxed in a time when it needs its breaks.

Thanks for that question.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Hon. Deputy Premier and President of Treasury Board, would you like to close the debate?

Mr. Horner: No. I'd just ask that you call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:10 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

10:20

For the motion:

Allred	Horne	Ouellette
Amery	Horner	Prins
Calahasen	Jablonski	Quest
Danyluk	Johnson	Renner
Denis	Johnston	Snelgrove
Drysdale	Klimchuk	Tarchuk
Elniski	Liepert	Vandermeer
Goudreau	Lindsay	Weadick
Hancock	Mitzel	Woo-Paw
Hayden	Morton	Xiao

Against the motion:

Anderson	Chase	Notley
Blakeman	Hinman	Swann
Boutilier

Totals:	For – 30	Against – 7
---------	----------	-------------

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 22

Justice and Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm sure you are thrilled to be in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre tonight. Not everyone is feeling that way, but I do welcome everyone to my fabulous constituency.

In looking again at the various proposals that are made for changes under Bill 22, the Justice and Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011, which is amending, I think, 14 acts: Administration of Estates Act; Civil Enforcement Act; Court of Queen's Bench Act; Family Law Act; Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010; Fatality Inquiries Act; Justice of the Peace Act; Legal Profession Act; Proceedings Against the Crown Act; Provincial Court Act; Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act; Wills and Succession Act; Witness Security Act; and Builders' Lien Act – yeah, there are a number of them.

I had raised a number of points last time because of the process that we were involved with, that being that although the department had given a technical briefing to members of our staff and, I think, to the member of our caucus who was identified as the critic, they had not had time to write the briefing nor to communicate it to anyone else. So when I came in that night, there was no time to communicate with me, and I started going through the bill piece by piece as I am wont to do. There was some consternation and some scrambling, and the Minister of Justice offered me a separate briefing.

I do apologize to the members of his staff that had to spend time with me to give me an additional briefing. I do appreciate that from them, and they were very kind and patient and did in fact manage to allay most of my suspicions, some of them pretty simple. For example, in the Administration of Estates Act I was reading the word "grant" as a money grant, and it's intended to be a grant as in a legal authority. [interjection]

Yes, as in grant of probate. Anyway. When you put different interpretations of words into legal documents, you can certainly end up in a different direction than you thought you'd be in.

I had a question about the Civil Enforcement Act, which was: the storage costs for whom? The answer to that question is: for everyone, for anyone that was involved in any stage of that. They probably all had a piece of the storage costs, and therefore it was saving everyone money.

The Court of Queen's Bench Act, which was giving the judicial office of master the option of retiring and sitting on a half-time basis, is vehemently opposed by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. He really feels very strongly that this is not appropriate that they would be collecting a pension and be able to charge for their time. He disagrees with every aspect and piece of this.

I argued back with him and said: "Well, you know, this is no different than, say, my mother, who put in her 35 years as a teacher. She retired. She got her pension." Often people don't have a choice about whether they get their pension or not. They get it. Even if they wanted to postpone it or not take it at the time, the rules say they get it, so they get it. My mother got her pension, and she'd earned it, every penny of it, and I don't think anybody should take any of it away from her. She earned her pension, but she was in her mid-50s and still wanted to do some things and went off and did some other things and took some other contract jobs and was paid for those, as she should have been. She did the work; she should have been paid.

I made that argument back to my colleague, saying: “You know, if these masters have earned their pension, great. They should draw their pension.” If they’re indeed continuing to do work on a part-time basis, I didn’t see the difference between that and what someone else collecting a pension and doing additional work was doing.

But my colleague – and this is difficult; I don’t want to put words in his mouth – felt that this was an opportunity for some close friends of the government to be appointed to positions and to put in 10 years and then they get a full pension, and they get to go off and work at the same job and be paid for it. So he does see it as inappropriate and double-dipping, so I needed to put that on the record.

The Family Law Act was almost like a typo. It had to update the references that will be repealed with the coming into force of the Wills and Succession Act. The Family Law Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, was the act that I was referring to that people thought wasn’t in this amending bill, but it is. That is the interjurisdictional support orders. It does allow reciprocating jurisdictions to obtain and verify support orders in Alberta, and there were some typographical errors in it. So I was right about maintenance enforcement being in here, and that’s where it was.

The Fatality Inquiries Act looked alarming because it kept talking about taking out voting and voting members. It looked like they were disenfranchising someone. The fact of the matter is that they haven’t been voting members for some time. They used to have voting and nonvoting. Everybody has been a voting member for a very long period of time. They just haven’t corrected the act. The act still distinguished, and it wasn’t necessary for the act to distinguish anymore because they didn’t exist. Everybody is a voting member, so that’s fine in changing that.

10:30

Both our critic of the bill, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and myself still have troubles with the Justice of the Peace Act. My comments last time earned me a sharply worded e-mail from someone in central Alberta that I didn’t know where certain pieces of my anatomy are in relation to other pieces of my anatomy. But, no, I meant what I said there. I don’t mean to be casting aspersions upon any member, but frankly justices of the peace are not trained in the same way as full law enforcement officers like city of Edmonton police officers or the RCMP. They may well be trained more particularly in one aspect, but that’s the one aspect they’re trained in.

I am very cautious about putting in more and making more and more use of justices of the peace – sorry; I’ve switched wheels there; I started talking about sheriffs, and now I’m talking about justices of the peace – and the reason is because we have more and more sheriffs being delegated jobs under new legislation, and they are taking their desire for a warrant to be issued to a justice of the peace. These things both become much more important than they used to be.

The Legal Profession Act was something requested by the Law Society of Alberta, and it is allowing for a faster process and mobility of lawyers between Alberta and Quebec, which is better.

The Proceedings Against the Crown Act: again, I missed this one. The sponsoring member did actually say small claims court, which is how most of us would refer to this, and that is no reflection on how wonderful the judges are that are in charge of the Provincial Court, civil, which is the proper name for this particular court. What this really means is that somebody could take a claim worth less than $25,000 – if there was a claim against the government, they could take this to the Provincial Court, civil, known to the rest of us as small claims court, instead of taking it into a higher court. It would save everybody money, time, and grief, which I think is an excellent thing, and that is why the Provincial Court, civil, also known as small claims court, is so valuable.

Removing the birthday commencement date provision from the Provincial Court Act is excellent. That kind of information should not be out there in the public realm anymore. It’s dangerous for identify theft and a number of other reasons. It also ensured that an appeal from the civil division of the Provincial Court, of which I was just speaking, if it is appealed up, then that court must make a decision. They can affirm the decision that was made, they can look at the facts and make their own decision on it, or they can in effect hear everything over again, which is a new trial. They cannot send it back. They have to make a decision.

The Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act: this one I’m less keen on. This is around the current minister’s, the former Justice minister’s, move to seize property believed to be derived from illegal acts. This is often property seized prior to someone actually going through court. Or maybe they never go through court, but their property has now been seized. This allows the department that’s in charge, the civil forfeiture office, to appoint others to do some of the work.

For example, if they did seize somebody’s car believing it had been used in trafficking in drugs, they had to be responsible for seizing the car, which is towing it, for storing the car, and maybe for selling it, and they had to do it all themselves out of one office. This change allows them to contract with or appoint other bodies to do that; for example, contracting with Cliff’s Towing to tow the car and, you know, with a different group to store the vehicle and with someone else to auction it. It allows them to use resources other than civil enforcement agencies to carry out functions related to this property. I still think there’s a real serious problem and a sort of step that was skipped, and I see it continuing on in some of the other acts that this government is doing, and that will show up later. Yeah, I’m not over the moon about that one.

The Wills and Succession Act looked pretty clear, and it seemed to be something that was being asked for by private practitioners asking for minor adjustments. Now, there was something in the paper today that said, “Ooh, bad, bad, bad idea” because it sets up a situation where the spouse would be entitled to basically what she or he would get during a divorce proceeding, which is half of everything, rather than perhaps what was actually put into the will. I don’t think that that is actually flowing out of this amendment under the justice statutes act, but I could be wrong because the wording looks pretty innocuous from what I’m looking at.

It talks about a contested application. Basically, it does say that a lawyer who is acting on behalf of somebody should be discussing alternative methods of resolving the problem and to inform people of collaborative processes. That doesn’t seem to be the problem that’s been mentioned in the paper today. That would put it into being a contested application. All they’re doing is saying that “every lawyer who acts on behalf of a party in [a contested application] to the Court under this Act has a duty,” blah, blah, to talk about alternative methods.

Then it goes on about repealing section 5(1), which is the one about if two or more individuals die at the same time or in circumstances where it’s hard to determine, as an example a plane crash or a car crash, who died first. Then it’s their estate that’s being willed to the second one, and if you’ve got a good lawyer, they will make you draw your will in such a way as to deal with that problem. This is setting out that all rights and interests of each of the individuals with respect to property must be determined as if that individual had predeceased the other or others unless the court, in looking at the will, believes that that’s not what the will was looking for, that sections 599 and 690 of the Insurance Act come into play – I’m sorry, I don’t have a reference for that, and I didn’t have a chance to get a reference for that – or that a provision of an act provides for a different result. So I don’t think that’s the section that’s being talked about either.

Lastly, it’s talking about section 8, striking out “unless otherwise expressly provided” and substituting “except as expressly provided otherwise in section 23 or 25.” That’s about when this is going to come into force, so this part applies to wills made on or after the day this section comes into force, et cetera, et cetera. I don’t think that’s the one it’s talking about either. Then it’s talking about witnesses and things.

I’m not sure where someone believes that someone is going to lose – oh, wait a minute. Here it is, I bet you, section 109:

If a deceased, during life, has transferred property to a prospective beneficiary, a person who alleges that the transfer was intended by the deceased to be an advance against, or otherwise repayable from, the prospective beneficiary’s share of the estate may make an application to the Court.

They’re striking out “a person” there and making it “an applicant,” which is, again, legal terminology.

10:40

Mr. Hinman: It’s under section (6), section 25(2), page 36.

Ms Blakeman: You think that’s what it is?

Mr. Hinman: The following is substituted: “a former adult interdependent partner.”

Ms Blakeman: Well, yes, but it “does not apply in respect of an individual . . . who is a former adult interdependent partner of the testator.” That’s this government’s incredibly obtuse language for, usually, a same-sex partner but very occasionally groupings like two elderly siblings or a mother and an adult child. So it’s that, usually, same-sex partner who’s also “the spouse of the testator at the time of the testator’s death, or . . . related to the testator by blood or adoption.” That’s really just expanding the original section 25(2), which says that “subsection (1) does not apply in respect of a former adult interdependent partner who is related to the testator by blood or adoption.” I think they’re just clarifying something there, and I don’t think that it does all the dangerous things that it seems to be thinking that it does, but maybe someone else is more up to speed on that than I am.

I really appreciate the extra time and effort that the minister’s staff put into clarifying all of this for me. In final words, in the Witness Security Act it was an actual error in the name of the act, and that was fine. The Builders’ Lien Act, as I talked about at the time, was fine because it was allowing the process to be done cleaner and not being constantly sent out to another group who had to do something and bring it back to the court clerk. They could just do it all themselves. So with the exceptions of the sections that I’ve noted here, I’m perfectly in favour of proceeding with this amending act.

I will note again that it takes a heck of a long time to work your way through this stuff, and I would really appreciate it if the government would give us enough time to do this appropriately. Even when you give us a technical briefing on this, that’s not the same thing as trying to read every word that’s in there. I mean, this is a dense act. It’s 38 pages long, and trying to make that work and to make sure that you’re not making a mistake and that you’re doing your best on behalf of Albertans is no small task when you’re faced with a bill like that, amending 14 other bills. Although I’m okay with most of what’s going on in here, that was not a nice thing to do to anybody in the opposition or any of our staff, and please don’t do it again.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. As always, it’s a very hard act to follow when the Member for Edmonton-Centre has preceded you in the speaking order, but I want to also extend a thank you to the Minister of Human Services, who was very helpful on second reading of this bill in quietly providing clarification to us on various sections of the bill that were of difficulty to comprehend. Also, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, our appreciation to government staff within the Justice department for further clarification. That type of collaborative, co-operative effort is very much appreciated.

Mr. Chair, I especially, as well as being in the debt of the hon. Minister of Human Services and the staff of the Justice department, want to acknowledge the terrifically helpful briefing efforts of our researcher, Karin Kellogg. Karin provided me with a terrific amount of improved understanding.

The hon. members who have legal training might have noted my floundering in second reading, trying to comprehend the intricacies of the legal language. Obviously, I was having difficulty. Now, the hon. members might have misinterpreted my misunderstanding as being simply stalling, but of course that was not the case. Now that I understand so much better, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre indicated, the two areas our caucus has difficulty with have to do with the Justice of the Peace Act and the Court of Queen’s Bench Act amendments.

Now, with regard to the Court of Queen’s Bench Act amendments I understand and appreciate the mentorship role that the masters in chambers provide because, in fact, in order to be a master in chambers you have to be a retired judge. Based on the amount of time the person has spent on the bench, obviously their mentorship is important.

I had a similar opportunity to provide mentorship and also a degree of continued employment in an area that I thoroughly enjoyed, as a substitute teacher. In 2003, when I retired from full-time teaching, I found myself very rapidly missing the contact with the students, so I applied to be a substitute teacher. At that time that opportunity to be a substitute teacher, which I equate with a master in chambers in terms of their part-time provision of support, was possible. But the other side of that mentorship was that if I was occupying a place on the substitute roll, then up-and-coming young teachers might not have had an opportunity to hone their teaching skills because I was taking their place.

I wonder, Mr. Chair, if the same argument could be made that for qualified lawyers who would be in line for a bench appointment, that appointment might be delayed by the half-time continuation of employment of retired judges in the form of masters in chambers. We have to look at both sides of it. We have to value the mentorship provided by individuals who are long serving and can provide mentorship, but we also have to allow for spaces for individuals to come forward.

With regard to the Justice of the Peace Act and those changes in some cases it’s worth while to facilitate the application for a warrant. Rather than getting a judge out of bed, if you can go to a justice of the peace – and there are obviously more justices of the peace available than there are judges – then potentially the facilitation of justice can be improved.

One of the concerns that is not dealt with in this bill but is dealt with in another piece of legislation – and that has to do with the Traffic Safety Amendment Act – is the positioning of peace officers and placing them in the role of not only arresting officer but judge and jury in terms of the suspension of a licence. I'm not sure that providing all of that level of authority, that on-the-spot judgment, is necessarily a wise circumstance.

10:50

One other area that I would have liked to have seen included in this Bill 22, Justice and Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011, is what I called for a number of years ago as a motion, and that was a unified family court. Unfortunately, Alberta still hasn't proceeded. What happens, particularly for children in the justice system, is that the Court of Queen's Bench deals with divorce, but there are a variety of other courts, including the Provincial Court and the juvenile court, that the young person may be bounced through. Until we have that court unification, that other provinces have preceded us in achieving, children are going to find themselves basically being bounced back and forth, as are parents trying to work out custody arrangements, because of the lack of a unified family court system.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre noted, with the clarifications provided, we are much more supportive of the intent of this omnibus bill and believe that sufficient changes have been made, notwithstanding the two areas we mentioned, the Justice of the Peace Act and the Court of Queen's Bench Act, to see this piece of legislation passed.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity to participate from a more knowledgeable standpoint in the Committee of the Whole on Bill 22.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. Mr. Chair, I will be very, very quick and just say that I support this bill; the Wildrose caucus supports this bill. I want to commend the mover of the bill as well as the minister. These are good amendments. The one in particular that I thought was very, very good was the ability for masters to now practise part-time after they've stopped practising full-time. That's good because these masters, some of them, especially the senior ones, are incredibly qualified. They know the law inside and out, and it's good that we can keep them working even if it's just in a part-time capacity, especially given the backlogs that our court system has and various things.

I thought that that was a very good amendment, a very good change, that has been made as well as many of the others in the bill. On behalf of the Wildrose we support it moving forward.

Thanks.

The Chair: Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to this bill. Like previous speakers I am a little bit concerned about how much is being jammed into it. It's sort of a theme of this little session-let, that I would refer to our currently being involved in, in that we have this little, it'sy-bitsy session, and in it we decide to ram to through a whole bunch of legislation. As part of that theme we create an omnibus bill which amends one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 acts. That's a lot.

You know, the problem with looking at these acts, of course, is that we get assurances from the government that it's all housekeeping, but then to really know that, we have to dig through each one of the acts and look holistically at what the implications are of the change. It really is a bit of a stretch. I will say that already I've seen some summaries that were provided in the briefing notes which I think maybe don't do as good a job of explaining the implications of what are otherwise characterized as minor amendments as well as they might.

There is a change here to the Wills and Succession Act. There are some concerns raised by this, and again it was characterized to members of the opposition as being sort of a nonevent. There are several amendments to clarify the act before its proclamation, which is expected in 2012, which substitute "a contested application" in place of "an application" and change survivorship rules where two or more individuals die at the same time.

The amendment also changes the entitlement of surviving spouses in a way which may allow a surviving spouse to receive a larger share of the estate than the deceased intended. At least, there are some lawyers who make this argument. It's interesting because this was provided to us as simple housekeeping which had no significant implications, yet it sounds as though there may be implications which go beyond the simple status quo, which certainly were not communicated to opposition members in our briefings.

Concerns have been raised that suggest that the amendment may allow a spouse to make a claim for division of property under the family law legislation. That is in particular a claim for what he or she would have been entitled to had they divorced. The spouse would be able to claim this property as well as any gift left to the spouse by the deceased. Again, I'm not entirely sure that that qualifies as minor housekeeping. It sounds to me like there's a bit of a policy decision there that ought to have been identified in the briefings that we received so that we could make a determination on that.

Again, as a member of a caucus that currently has two researchers on staff, asking us to review 14 acts in order to determine the implications of one is a little bit concerning.

Another one that jumped out at me, that I was a bit concerned about – again, I'm kind of flying blind here, so maybe it's a real concern; maybe it's not – is this whole notion of making some fairly significant changes around seizure of property under the Civil Enforcement Act. Currently the act allows seized properties to be kept in storage for at least 90 days before a civil enforcement agency, or a sheriff or bailiff or whatever they're called, gives a 30-day notice to the creditors that the property will be released. The bill reduces that period from 90 days to 45 days, and then the notice period is reduced from 30 to 15. What that appears to do – again, I'm kind of flying blind here – is that it reduces the opportunities for debtors to fix their debt and to retrieve their possessions, having paid off their debt. It makes for easier collections on the part of creditors, but it does so at the expense of the rights of those who owe money.

I mean, it's never a black-and-white situation. What we would want to know is: what's the profile of the people that are being affected by this? Are we talking about consumer collection, where you've got people who are low-income, who have gone too far into debt, who are relying on their credit cards to pay a number of bills – and this is one of those examples – so now we've given creditors greater opportunities to get at their assets faster? Or are the majority of people that are affected by this act, you know, businesses that have expensive lawyers at their disposal to delay a collection process from creditors who have long since proven their claim? We don't know what the profile is of the people that are being affected by these changes, and we certainly didn't get briefed on that, so that is a concern. The stated purpose of this change is to reduce or avoid unnecessary storage costs, but it does also appear to reduce the amount of time in which debtors can pay back money or essentially make whole the creditor.

Also, the requirement that a creditor go to the court to seize property in order to get a court order for property that's already under seizure is being eliminated. What that appears to do is again streamline opportunities for the creditor at the expense of the debtor. The government calls this administrative streamlining, but of course it has implications for people. Given the economic upheaval that we've just been through and, you know, what we see happening in many other jurisdictions, in the U.S. and throughout Europe, I don't really know that this is the time that we want to decide that we're going to make things fast and easy for creditors. Certainly, that would not be, I think, what policy-makers would have chosen to do in the U.S. given the state of their economy. So I'm not entirely sure that making these plans now is in the best interests of average Albertans. Again, we could have used a bit more of a detailed briefing, and this ought to have been separated out from this bill with more clear explanations as to the objectives that were being pursued.

11:00

Conversely, the amount of time through which garnishee summons can be used to collect off somebody's wages has doubled. Now, in that case we clearly know who is being impacted there. The employee now has a garnishee summons on their wages for two years rather than one, and whoever it is that's collecting the money from that employee's wages has to go to court less frequently. Again, the question becomes: is this a reasonable decision to make? The government argues that the court costs are perhaps more generous to the debtor, but it also provides for less work on the part of the creditor. So there are different ways to argue this one.

When you get into processes for collecting from employees when people have run into financial difficulty, these are not administrative, housekeeping issues. These are policy choices, and this is something that ought to have been clearly separated out so that we had an opportunity to fully identify what's going on. Generally speaking, these are two examples of cases where I think that what we're really looking at are changes that are a great deal more significant than simple housekeeping.

The Legal Profession Act. I mean, I'm a lawyer, but I also know that there are a lot of people out there who feel incredibly hard done by sometimes by the conduct of their lawyers. One of the key mechanisms for keeping lawyers accountable and holding them to the standard of public trust and high regard in which, notwithstanding all the other jokes, they are generally held – you know, they have that because they're part of a professional body, and that professional body plays a very critical role in regulating the conduct of their members. What we have here are changes to the Legal Profession Act which simply say that the bench has reviewed the process and decided that there were changes needed for timeliness and efficiency. Well, really, again, that looks to me like a bit of a public policy issue.

As things stand now, the Law Society of Alberta is the primary consumer protection agency, shall we say, for people who run afoul of a shabby practice by lawyers. Certainly, that's a small minority of situations, but when it does happen, it has huge implications for people. So the Law Society is the means through which those issues are addressed. We have here a number of changes to, quote, review the process for disciplining lawyers as the bench has recommended with no particular discussion of exactly what those changes are or how they will impact either the lawyer who is the subject of the complaint or the person who has raised the complaint, the complainant. We don't know. Again, another perfect example of what I think is actually a substantive policy issue which needs further discussion which is being wrapped up in a 14-bill omnibus piece of legislation and shoved through this Legislature at 11:06 p.m. It's part of the overall theme that this government is working on, which is to pretty much thumb their nose certainly at opposition members but, also, through them at the people of Alberta, who rely on this Assembly to have a certain amount of thoughtful debate periodically.

Those are my points, Mr. Chairman, and the concerns that I have around this piece of legislation. Although much of it may be benign, I will not be supporting it because I do not appreciate the manner in which it's been presented, and I think there are issues that require greater explanation and greater time for debate.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise today during Committee of the Whole to speak on Bill 22. I would like to take some time to address some of the questions raised by the hon. members during second reading and also tonight during Committee of the Whole. I agree that there's a fairly involved piece of legislation within a fairly condensed process. I will try my best to respond to some of the points raised this evening.

One of the points raised is about the language changes in the Administration of Estates Act. This is one of 14 justice statutes that have proposed amendments. The Administration of Estates Act amendments reflect that certain responsibilities have been transferred from the Public Trustee's office to the court clerks. This is mainly aimed at avoiding duplication of grants, as recognized by the member this evening.

Another point that has been raised is the Civil Enforcement Act. The amendments to this act improve civil enforcement procedures and clarify provisions. For example, civil enforcement agencies holding seized property in storage will not have to wait as long to notify creditors that the property will be released. This will encourage creditors to deal with property. This amendment was recommended by civil enforcement agencies and will help avoid unnecessary storage costs initially paid by the agencies, passed on to the creditor and then, ultimately, on to the debtor.

The length of time a garnishee summons remains in effect will increase from one year to two years, reducing renewal costs and making it consistent with other means of court enforcement. The requirement that the creditor obtain a court order to seize property that's already under seizure is being eliminated, streamlining procedures and helping to ensure that creditors do not lose rights of priority with respect to seized property.

I think another point that has been raised this evening is in regard to the Court of Queen's Bench Act. The Court of Queen's Bench Act will be amended to give those appointed to the judicial office of master the option of retiring or sitting on a half-time basis. Now, this option was requested by the masters and is the same option that has been made available to Provincial Court judges since 2005. The option will be available to masters who are 60 years of age or older and who have served on the bench for at least 10 years. This option benefits masters who, after serving full-time for a considerable period of time, wish to continue serving but on a less than a full-time basis.

Now, I think these provisions essentially will help to reduce costs, provide greater flexibility to the court system, and help us to retain experience, and I think it would be a benefit to enhancing the effectiveness and efficiency of the court system.

I would like to also respond to the member's point on the Legal Profession Act. The new provision under this act is allowing for an expedited process for an immediate plea by a lawyer. With minor infractions often the lawyer is prepared to admit to their misconduct and accept a sanction. The current process does not allow for an expedited process. The lawyer must often wait up to a year to have the matter heard by a three-member bench or committee.

11:10

The current process can result in delay and aggravation for the complainant and the lawyer, which may be out of proportion to the seriousness of the complaint. With an expedited settlement process resolution is more timely and better serves both the lawyer and the complainant.

Another provision is to permit the benchers, when appropriate, to appoint nonbenchers to sit on hearing committees. This will allow for more scheduling options and quicker resolution. All other Canadian law societies have the ability to use nonbenchers to hear discipline matters. Other regulated professions in Alberta allow for this. Examples are the professions regulated by the Health Professions Act and the Regulated Accounting Profession Act.

One other point I'd like to raise is the provision for the intermediary step of appeal to the benches for minor decisions. It is anticipated that this will reduce the number of appeals to the Court of Appeal on minor matters. Appeals will be dealt with in a more timely way and at less cost.

I mentioned only a few of the amendments within Bill 22, all of which will improve the functioning of Alberta's courts and increase the effectiveness of our justice and courts legislation. As I have said previously, the amendments are mostly housekeeping in nature. I'm pleased to have had the opportunity to address some of the members' concerns and points this evening.

Thank you.

The Chair: Is any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 22 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 21 Election Amendment Act, 2011 (continued)

The Chair: Any comments or questions?

We have amendment A1 since the last adjournment. On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. As you see, I am frantically trying amongst all the bits and pieces of paper and amendments to find amendment A1. As I recall – and you can certainly clarify for me, Mr. Chair, if I'm incorrect in my assumption – amendment A1 is as follows. Proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that the Election Amendment Act, 2011, be amended in section 2 in the proposed section 38.1 by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) Subject to subsection (1), a general election shall be held on May 8, 2012, and afterwards, on the second Tuesday in May in the 4th calendar year following polling day in the most recent general election.

Now, this amendment does what the Premier promised in her precampaigning, that we would have no longer fixed elections but we would have a fixed election date. Taking the now-selected Premier at her word, we're making that commitment in the form of amendment A1 that was lacking in the discussion of an election season, a 90-day period. It is our belief that for the sake of more participation in the democratic process providing of the specific type of date that other provinces have achieved and, as a result have seen greater voter turnout, is the way to proceed. The date of May 8 was selected basically because it falls within that period. In subsequent amendments to Bill 21 we will be talking about the potential of flexibility within the week surrounding the specific day but certainly not within a 90-day period.

Now, it'll be interesting, Mr. Chair – and I don't want to take up a tremendous amount of time speaking to this amendment, but I would like to listen to the government defend the indefensible in terms of explaining how a 90-day period provides for greater democratic participation and commitment in the process than a well-defined day. If this amendment were to be accepted, four years out from the May 8, 2012, date we would expect another election to be called.

The need for individuals to be able to plan, Mr. Chair, is absolutely essential. You can't run a business, you can't provide an education system without specific dates. What an election date is is basically the starting gun, the indication that the citizens of Alberta have awarded a particular party the right to be their representative and to provide the type of governance that the individuals expect to be followed through.

Mr. Chair, the abandonment of promises is of great concern. We earlier this evening debated the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, and prior to that discussion this particular Bill 21 was adjourned before we had a chance to speak to it. Now, as I look at the clock, it is 11:18.

I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who first introduced this amendment at some point this afternoon with the belief that by defining very specifically a day as opposed to a flexible season, the sense behind this amendment as proposed would be so overwhelming as to be grasped by every member of this astute Assembly. By proposing this amendment, he also provided an out for members of this Assembly who had trouble with the idea of a flexible election period as opposed to a defined day.

I'll look forward, as I say, Mr. Chair, to the discussion that follows on the idea that is held sacred by other provinces and that was originally held sacred during the campaign for leadership by not just the current serving Premier, but the idea of a fixed election date that was supported by a variety of the candidates who felt that as part of the improvement and transparency and accountability sticking to a defined date was important.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity to speak to amendment A1, that calls for the election to be held on May 8, 2012.

The Chair: On the bill, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: On the bill or on the amendment?

The Chair: On the amendment, A1.

11:20

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chair, we're talking, obviously, about fixed election dates here. I applaud the amendment. I think that it's a good one. I have another one that I think is slightly more appropriate, something that I think is a little bit superior. I'll tell you that what I do like about the amendment, which is that it fixes a date. That's, I think, pretty critical to this whole process.

You have a Premier here who has once again flipped on a very key promise from her election campaign. I don't know if this promise was as key to her getting elected as, say, the promise to call a public health inquiry, but this was clearly a promise that was part of a package of reforms that the new Premier was campaigning on to increase transparency and accountability in government.

That is why it was so disappointing to see, along with her flip-flop on calling a public health inquiry, along with her flip-flop on how she was going to essentially put a stop to all the Bill 50 transmission lines permanently and kind of go through the whole process from scratch in order to make sure that there clearly was a need identified by an independent body and so forth. Right now really all she's done is just delayed it until after the next election.

All of these different things that have happened, these flip-flops, have really spoken to one of the major character attributes of this new government, of this new Premier, and that is that what she says before an election is not necessarily what she will do after an election. In fact, whatever promises she makes during the election, you kind of have to roll the dice to see if she'll keep them.

She kept the promise to restore $107 million in funding cuts which she voted to cut in the first place along with her government, but after that she said: yep, we will restore those cuts. She did, but she said that she would restore those cuts with in-year savings, meaning she'd find areas of fat in the government – and good grief, there are areas of fat in this government that could be cut; that is for sure – to find that $107 million for the education system. She made that promise. She broke that promise.

We could go on and on and on about all these different promises that she has broken, and we will for as long as it takes to be heard on it. But this one: although I don't think that this is a promise that necessarily got her elected, I think it probably helped. It was a big part of her transparency reforms, as I said, that she was promising. But it is one of the most egregious. The reason why it's so egregious is because, probably even more than any of her other promises, this one was very, very specific. There was no grey area here.

You know, with the public inquiry – there was no grey area there either, come to think of it. I think her gamble is that she thinks that she can put this out there and say: "Look, I've created a venue for this public inquiry to happen; it just won't happen until after the election. It probably won't be completely open and led by a judge but probably by a panel. But I've at least made the vehicle where it's theoretically possible that it can occur."

This one, on the other hand, is just so blatant, such a blatant broken promise, such a blatant deception that it is really quite shocking. I don't understand it. It just doesn't make sense to me, the other part being that it is so simple. It's one of the simplest promises to keep. We know the election is coming up. It's not like she's going to be surprising people that there's going to be an election in the spring – we all know that's happening – so why not just set the date? I mean, we all know it's coming. It's just a matter of setting the date.

Just to make sure everyone understands what she has said in the past, on October 5 – this is a couple of days after the election; there are a whole bunch before it, too, but I'll start with this one – on an online chat at the Calgary Herald the new Premier said: "On Sunday I said that it would be after a spring sitting," meaning an election, "a budget and a throne speech and thought that based on the practical timing that could be June – sometimes the legislature takes on a life of its own, so it is a little unpredictable!" This is not more than two days after she was elected. She has already completely flip-flopped on the promise. Think about that.

She said: "On Sunday I said that it would be after a spring sitting, a budget and a throne speech and thought that based on the practical timing that could be June – sometimes the legislature takes on a life of its own, so it is a little unpredictable!" She's already saying June. That's not what's in the bill. She already changed from that first initial thought. Will it be after the spring sitting? Who knows? She might call it after the throne speech. She might call it after the budget. She might call it on February 1. That's the earliest that she could. It gives new meaning to openness and transparency; that is for sure.

What's so incredible about it is that that was October 5. On October 23, so that's 12 days roughly, or less than two weeks, after her saying that on October 5, she said this to the Canadian Press. She "would commit to calling an election in March 2012 and every four years from that date. She said Albertans are supportive of the idea and that several other provinces already use the same model." So she referred to other provinces that use the same model. She said that it would be in March of 2012. She said that she would commit to it every four years after March 2012 as well.

You cannot get any clearer than those points: "March 2012 and every four years after that;" I'm going to do it like they've done in the other provinces. Every other province has a specific, the second Tuesday or third Thursday or whatever it is of X month . . .

Mr. Boutilier: But none of them have a season.

Mr. Anderson: But none of them have a season.

So she says that, and then 12 days later she says: well, I said on Sunday that "it would be after a spring sitting, a budget and a throne speech and thought that based on the practical timing that could be June – sometimes the legislature takes on a life of its own, so it is a little unpredictable!" There you have it. That is one of the quickest flip-flops. So this promise was made seven days before the election, and then four days after the election she flips on it. That is solid. That is a solid, trustworthy Premier we have there.

She said that fixed election dates are important – this is in the September 23 interview with the Canadian Press – because "they understand the issues that are coming." She's talking about Albertans. Albertans "understand the issues that are coming. They don't believe any political party should have even if it is a theoretical upper hand in managing the political agenda and then picking the date accordingly." That is just awesome. Albertans "don't believe that any political party should have even a theoretical upper hand." Not even a real one, just a theoretical one. Just the appearance of unfairness is not good enough for Albertans, according to the Premier seven days before she was elected, and then four days later she completely reverses her position on that. I honestly don't know how she expects Albertans to believe anything that she says. It's just so blatant. I mean, it's just guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

She is quoted in that same article as saying that the status quo of no election dates needs to change so as to deny the government "the behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that characterize the timing of an election."

Then on the Rutherford show on October 25 she stated as follows – so now we're 25 days out, and remember that on September 23 she recommits to a fixed election date, March 2012, and four years after that, just like the other provinces in its clarity. That's what she says. On October 5 she waffles and says: no; it could be after, probably sometime in June maybe; you never know; the Legislature has a life of its own. Then, of course, she gets on Rutherford, and you know how Dave is sometimes. He asks those direct, tough questions, trying to get an answer. This is what she says: when I make a commitment, I keep my commitment; I'm not going to start making willy-nilly pronouncements when they want me to; I hope the legislation will be satisfied with the approach we have taken on fixed elections; when I make a commitment, I keep that commitment. That's incredible.

11:30

She goes on in that same interview to say:

Fixed election dates give Albertans the opportunity to focus on issues that matter and mobilize for an election, without the behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that sometimes characterizes the timing of an election . . . Personally, I was very disappointed by the voter turn out in 2008, when I was elected. We failed to engage the public in our most important democratic right – voting. In some ways, low turnout may indicate lack of faith in the system, and that is a very dangerous road to travel. I would like to reverse that trend.

Well, she certainly has done a great job of making sure Albertans can trust politicians to do what they say they will do.

Again, on November 22 – that's just a few days ago – this is what the Premier said in Hansard when questioned about her flip-flop, her clear deception and flip-flop on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans want to know there's going to be an election every four years. We think this legislation, that's before the House and can be fully debated in a fully transparent manner, . . .

At midnight.

. . . represents what Albertans want to see. They want certainty. They want security. I'd suggest that if the opposition is concerned about ensuring that they have a head start, they can read the legislation to get ready for a provincial election. That's democracy . . .

Mr. Speaker, this legislation does exactly what Albertans want it to do. What Albertans said is that they wanted certainty. What other political parties said is that they wanted to be prepared for the next election. I'd suggest that the political parties better get prepared for the next election.

Wow. This is the best line of that last quote.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation does exactly what Albertans want it to do. What Albertans said is that they wanted certainty.

Remember what she said on September 23, that they wanted certainty? Okay. September 23 she said that fixed election dates are important because Albertans understand the issues are coming. "They don't believe any political party should have even if it is a theoretical upper hand in managing the political agenda and then picking the date accordingly." She said that the status quo of no election dates needs to change so as to deny the government "behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that . . . characterize the timing of an election."

It is an absolute failed, I mean, just a complete breakdown of trust with regard to this Premier and the people of Alberta. Now, this one was very flagrant. There are literally at least seven or eight others that have occurred in the last several weeks since she's been elected. One has to ask again: you know, fool me once, shame on you; fool me twice, shame on me. At some point I think Albertans are going to realize, when these choices are put before them in the next election – and one thing we've learned over the last little while is that elections certainly matter. If you look at what happened with the mayor of Calgary, if you look at what happened with the new Premier, if you look at what happened in the federal election, particularly in Quebec and Toronto, in the GTA, with the Conservatives, during the election those numbers changed dramatically once the facts were put before the people.

At some point I think Albertans are going to want to ask: am I going to continue to allow myself to be taken advantage of? Am I going to continue to be deceived and not punish the sitting government for that? Am I going to continue to allow this to occur? Just on principle, regardless of whether you agree with it, are you just comfortable being told one thing and then having the exact opposite occur?

My guess is that Albertans in droves will very clearly say: no, that's not acceptable. We expect to have the truth told to us, and when someone makes a promise, we expect them to keep that promise. We will see. We will see what happens. There is always, of course: rather the devil you know than the devil you don't. I'm sure, you know, that is one of the uplifting arguments the government side will make. Who knows? Maybe some people will buy into it, but I know there are thousands and thousands of Albertans across this great province that are certainly not going to take it anymore. They are not going to be deceived any longer, and they'll make their voices heard at the next election because of this kind of silliness.

Mr. Chair, I will certainly give my support to this amendment. We have, obviously, an alternative amendment, that we like a little bit better, but we will support this one. If we were to get this set election date, we would be very happy with it because it's better than nothing. It certainly would help the Premier regain some credibility with the people of Alberta, and I think that's important for her. I think it's important for us as politicians because there's a real credibility gap that's occurring every time a politician says that they're going to do something and then does the exact opposite.

Mr. Chase: It makes us all look bad.

Mr. Anderson: It really does make us all look bad.

People don't mind, you know, politicians honestly changing their mind on things as circumstances change and as new information comes to light. They understand that – they do – as long as you're honest and upright and it's not a pattern, as long as it's the exception to the rule and there are thoughtful, nonpolitical reasons behind it. But when the reasons are clearly political, when they happen in a two-week span, when they happen in order to get votes one week before an election, obviously knowing full well that it's completely optional whether you're going to keep that promise or not, that's what drives voters crazy. They can't stand it no matter what area of the world you live in, specifically Canada and specifically Alberta.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: On the amendment, any other hon. members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on amendment A1.

Ms Notley: Yes. This is simply a brief comment on amendment A1. I think there will be more discussions around this particular section and different amendments for it. There have been some really good comments thus far about the many statements made by the Premier in her election campaign and around the merits of fixed election dates and how critical they are to the issue of ensuring fairness and why it is that she would certainly do everything she could to give us a fixed election date, only for us to then be subjected to really, truly, Mr. Chairman, what I have to say are the lamest, just truly the lamest, most tortured rationales for why we now have a fixed election season.

I've heard some tortured rationales out of folks from the other side. I mean, they really will get remarkably creative in trying to justify things that are really so clearly designed for political purposes.

Ms Blakeman: It's like kids, right? "I didn't break that."

Ms Notley: Yeah. Exactly. It's like kids. You know, they're sitting beside a broken jar of jam and are covered with jam, yet they will argue that, no, in fact aliens came in, landed their spaceship, broke the jar, covered their face with it, and then left.

They'll do it with a straight face, and that's kind of what it's like listening to these folks talk about why in Alberta, apparently, the weather here is so unique that it is absolutely essential we give ourselves the option to call the election when we're not in the middle of a weather emergency because we have no experience with that in Alberta. We need to respect Albertans enough to ensure that it is a sunny day, and of course we all know that we can predict the weather 30 days out. I mean, it truly is a tortured dance that they're doing.

11:40

Saskatchewan and Manitoba have been known to have weather events. Some of them might suggest that, indeed, they've had to put up with more weather events than us. But in any event, I can tell you that nobody can predict the weather 30 days out. Even if you did want to somehow deal with the untenable, intolerable weather conditions that are unique to our province, this is not the answer because you've still got to give voters 30 days' notice or 28; I'm not sure which. You've got to give voters notice, and we all know that you just can't predict the future 28 days in advance.

This has nothing to do with that. Here is the natural disaster and emergency that this legislation allows the government to address, a really bad poll. That's the natural disaster that they're worried about. They're really concerned that Environics or Angus Reid or somebody is going to come along. I mean, right now they're flying high, but, you know, we've seen polls go up and polls go down. In fact, they do go up and down in a 90-day period. We've seen that. Clearly, that is a natural disaster that they want to do everything they can to avoid, and that's why they're giving themselves the opportunity to try and schedule the election around that natural disaster.

Now, if they were prepared to do that in consultation with the opposition, maybe there'd be something to it, but, you know, I am pretty sure that that's not the plan. Anyway, a tortured, illogical, silly group of explanations coming from folks over there: as I said before, I suspect there are a good number of them that will not actually get up and speak to it because they are as embarrassed by this silliness, as they should be.

You know, it would be better for the Premier just to say: "Well, you know, I said that we'd have fixed election dates, but it's not going to happen. We'll talk about it after the next election. It's too much too soon." You know, just be honest about it. This tortured interpretation of what she said and what she didn't say just irritates people because it is so . . .

Mr. Anderson: Brazenly political.

Ms Notley: So brazenly political. Indeed.

One thing I just did want to talk about in this particular instance, on this particular amendment. I mean, I'll support the amendment in general because any date is better than the season, but I have said in the past that, personally, as a member of the opposition and one who has a number of students residing in my riding, I have suggested that we ought not to have a fixed election date that is scheduled for when students are out of school. My hope is that at some point in the future we will get a government that's actually interested in increasing voter turnout. I know this government is not the government. I'm hoping that at some point we will get a Chief Electoral Officer who believes it's his job to increase voter turnout. I certainly understand that our current Chief Electoral Officer, as selected by the majority of Conservative members on the Legislative Offices search committee, is not the Chief Electoral Officer who will make that decision.

Indeed, the Chief Electoral Officer who was quite interested about increasing voter turnout and addressing opportunities to have students vote is the one that the majority of Conservative members on the Legislative Offices Committee chose to fire three years ago. Nonetheless, someday it could happen. We could get a government that cares about democracy, we could get a government that sees that it's in their best interests to actually get people to go to the ballot box, and we could actually get a government that respects the process enough to appoint a Chief Electoral Officer on the basis of their commitment to the democratic process and improving that process in the best interest of all Albertans rather than according to the agenda of the Conservative government.

Should that happen and should we be in a position to have that situation occurring and we actually change the legislation so that we're not intentionally confusing and discouraging students from casting their ballot in this province, it would be very helpful if we did not have an election on a day where they have finished school and in some cases, maybe temporarily, are moving to other locations or being in different locations. We would want to do everything we could to increase their opportunities to vote. So I would like to see a fixed election date earlier in the spring to accommodate that.

On that basis the date that's proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is not my first choice, but again the concept of a date, one that the Premier so eloquently argued for during her leadership campaign, is a good one, and for that reason I will support the amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member on amendment A1? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to speak to the amendment. Albertans were promised fixed election dates; instead, we have fixed election seasons. It's important to fix the date, number one, to help the Premier maintain her promise. If the goal is to have true democracy and true representation and have a good, fair competition, it's incumbent that everybody starts the race at the same time. Many of the issues that I hear from new people who want to run for public service is that people need to take time off work. They have families. We want young people to run. We want parents to run. We want professionals to run for every party. They need to be able to get time off work, a leave of absence from work.

I can understand. On the government side you have 68 incumbents, and their work is here. They know when the elections are going to happen. They've won elections before. Some have lost elections and won again. They're fully financed, fully ready to go, and they know when the race is going to start. But for true democracy to prevail, the other political parties have many members who haven't been elected, who are new, and they deserve to have a fair and equal chance, an equal shot at getting to all their constituents.

For example, you have to rent an office. When the starting gun goes, one team knows when to rent all the office space and the billboard space. The other team has never run a race before, and they have to start hunting for office space, get their phone lines hooked up, take their leave of absence from work, arrange for daycare for their children. By the time everything is organized, the election is half over.

As you know, generally governments call elections because they know they're going to win them. The polling shows that. The government already has the advantage of having a $38 billion budget to play with just before an election. The government has the advantage of not only the polling, not only the budget, but the 4 and a half million dollars they've got in the bank. They've got the advantage of never having lost an election.

At the same time Albertans need to know when an election is going to happen so that they can plan their vacations around it. If they're going to be out of town, they can arrange to cast their ballots. It's incumbent on the Premier to keep her promise if she wants to be considered fair, if she wants to be considered as somebody who keeps her word. What are they afraid of? Why do they have to be afraid of keeping an election commitment? Mind you, this wasn't an election commitment; it was a commitment made during a leadership race.

Officially I thought it important to get on the record. I was quite enthused when the Premier got elected based on the commitments that she had made about fixed election dates. I have to say that I became quite disappointed when that date became a season. It could be this time or that time. They're asking people to rent offices for three months, and God knows if the election is even going to be called in that time period if they're not high enough in the polls.

11:50

So I feel it important to support the amendment from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Let's set a date. We know, especially being Liberals in Alberta, that it's tough enough to fight an election. Let's be honest. It's tough. It ain't easy. We're not the wealthiest of the bunch. We haven't won since 1917. We don't have $4.3 million in the bank. We don't have 68 incumbents. We don't have a $38 billion budget to play with. Come on, guys. Come on. At least set the date so that we can get our candidates prepared, ready to commit to take 30 days off to fight a race that, hey, in many parts of Alberta we don't have a chance. No, we can't finance it. But what are you scared of? The Premier said she'd set a date. Set the date, run on it, and give everybody a fair chance.

It's like the world's fastest sprinter saying: "Listen. I want to start on the 75-yard line while the other kids, who've never run a race, start at the starting line." This is Alberta. Albertans believe in fairness, but their government doesn't. So I just ask everyone on the government side to be brave, set the date, and be prepared to fight an election where you already, even if you set the date, have a 50-yard head start, on my team at least. You already have a 50-yard head start on this other team over here and maybe a 90-yard head start on the other team. What are you scared of?

Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I thank you for this opportunity. I challenge the PC caucus and the Premier and her team to remain true to their word and set an election date, not an election season.

Thank you.

The Chair: On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The Leader of the Official Opposition raises some very important points, the point being: quite simply, just set a date. How simple is it? I'll say it very slowly; he said it slowly: just simply set a date.

Now, I understand that the PC caucus, in light of the fact that a very small minority actually supported the Premier, who came in with this idea . . . [interjection] Well, I'm being gracious when I say that. Obviously, the majority of caucus does not support what she had purported. But now here it is, and they probably don't support the idea of the fixed election season. That being the case, the hon. member who brings in a date of May – personally I foresee this. Soon we'll be in the Christmas season, the holidays will take place, then January. The bottom line: I understand the PCs are having their candidate school on February 10 or 11, somewhere in there, for those candidates who are running again. Of course, the Liberals and the New Democrats and the Wildrose already have their campaign school set up.

So what's going to happen in February is no different than before. It's going to be simply a Speech from the Throne, the Minister of Finance is probably going to try to add 1 and 1 together to equal 3, and then he will go forward and ultimately there will be a budget, and then the mandate will be called.

Now, it'll be done, though, to try to surprise the opposition by trying to do it in February so that it still meets the date of somewhere between March and – when is their election? Their date I think is March 1 to May 31, which is, again, as I mentioned earlier, like Groundhog Day 2 or Groundhog Day 28. Really, there's nothing fixed about it.

So I think that what is very important is to just do the right thing and, quite simply, come forward with a date. How simple can that be? It's like when you're born. You're born on a day; you're not born in a season that can fluctuate. You can't be born on 92 days of the year. The amendment at least begins to improve what was started on that side, but I think it's very important that this government not flip-flop anymore and actually come up with a date so that all Albertans know.

The Leader of the Opposition asked the question: why don't they want to do that? I'll tell you why. They don't want to do it because they want to keep the upper hand. They're interested in two things: power and keeping it. It's not, in my view, what is in the best interests of Albertans in terms of being open and transparent.

I will say that I believe in calling a date; it's as simple as that. In fact, I'll even state it to the new leader of the PC Party, the old and tired 40-year-old dynasty over there. You know, they've simply run out of ideas. They couldn't even come up with a date. It just simply had to be a season. Come up with a date, and I'll say: "Hey, good for you. You finally came up with a new idea for once." That being the case, though, new ideas have to be protected like newborn children. They have to be protected, fed, nurtured, and they need to be given an opportunity to grow.

The other provinces that actually came up with fixed election dates, not one of them has a season. It's all a date, one particular date. The reality of it is that this new leader of the PCs, the Premier, came up with this idea. The rest of the caucus didn't support it, and now they are obligated to support it. Really, they have some major explaining to do when they go back home. I don't think she won her PC leadership based on this.

The amendment put forward regarding May at least is much more open and transparent than what is being proposed by the government. Congratulations to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I congratulate him on at least being more open and transparent than what we've witnessed on the government side.

Having said that, Mr. Chair – I have spoken already once – I will say that it is my hope that the Government House Leader, who's talking to the Deputy Government House Leader – they're smiling. I think they might have come up with an idea of actually coming up with one day.

The bottom line is that there can be 68 of them, but one person can overrule them. That's just simply how their democracy works. I think what's really important is that it might be a good idea to never forget who your bosses are, and that's the people of Alberta, not the people who have a title called Premier.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get up and to speak on Bill 21, the Election Amendment Act, 2011, and to support the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in his amendment to actually help the Premier come forward with her idea that she so eloquently talked about during her leadership race.

The problem here, Mr. Chairman, is that the new Premier spoke many times of the importance of having a set, fixed election date. It's interesting because when she first got elected, the first thing that she did was call off the fall sitting. Again, I've never, not that I'd ever want to, had the benefit of sitting inside that PC caucus to understand the dynamics. It's one of those bewildering things for me, always being on the outside, to see how decisions are made and who's calling the shots. You kind of wonder, you know: how does it work?

I must say that from my outside observation it seems apparent that the Premier doesn't always get their way. I think it was quite evident when the first thing the newly elected Premier declared was that there would be no fall sitting. Then they had a caucus gathering, and all of a sudden we have a contracted, short fall sitting, obviously the will of the caucus because the Premier had said she didn't want one. It was good that she was listening to a few at that time who were politically astute enough to say: it's not good if we don't have a fall sitting; we can't wait until next February to present a budget. So here we are, and they brought a few bills forward.

It's interesting. I just want to read a few quotes, and there have been many from her. She was quoted as saying that the status quo of no fixed election dates needs to change so as to deny the government "the behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that . . . characterize the timing of an election." She said that she doesn't like to be willy-nilly, that she likes to speak her mind. She was very much speaking her mind there. She understands it. She's only been in here four years, and she was one of those that had to make some adjustments to know when they're going to run.

12:00

So behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation characterize the timing of an election. She said that fixed election dates are important because – again, she's talking about the people – they understand the issues that are coming. They don't believe any political party should have even if it is a theoretical upper hand in managing the political agenda and then picking the date accordingly. These are quotes from our new Premier on why she said that we need to have a fixed election date.

Yet we don't have one, Mr. Chairman, and the question is: why? Once again, I think that caucus overruled her and said: "No, no, no. We haven't had to pin down an election date. It's been to our favour. We just got through by the skin of our teeth several times because we could call it at a very inopportune time for the opposition and capitalize on the current volatile political environment that we live in here in Alberta." They throw out some real boondoggles, yet time and money – it's amazing how that goes forward.

Mr. Chairman, we have a great opportunity here to bring this bill to a wrap by accepting this amendment of May 8, 2012, to set a date. As you have been aware, the government members have been silent on this amendment and silent in this House. When it's an amendment coming from the opposition, it means that they oppose it and that they won't vote for it. It's very disappointing that they don't have, I want to say, the integrity to follow their leader and do what is right and set an election date. She's tried.

Obviously, caucus has overruled her and said: not on our watch; it's not going to happen. So here we are with an election season.

I have to say that probably the number one question that I get asked by people that are thinking about running . . .

Ms Blakeman: It's: are you crazy?

Mr. Hinman: No. That's the first statement. I've never run for the Liberal Party, so they wouldn't ask me that question.

An Hon. Member: Oh, hey. In the spirit of bipartisanship.

Mr. Hinman: Well, no. That's the number one question that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre gets.

The number one question that I get from people that I talk to is: "When are they going to have an election? I need to plan my life around it. I can't all of a sudden just wrap things up on two days' notice." They need that certainty. They need to be able to plan in advance.

People want to know. I mean, here we are picking a date. I like this May 8. I think that the third week in June would be a better one, though. I like lots of sunshine, and late in the day you can go door-knocking. People are upbeat; they want to talk. June is a great time to go in there, but May 8 is a good time because the sun is warming the earth and warming the hearts of the people, and they're a little bit interested in talking and opening up the doors and discussing those things. I do love door-knocking. I have to confess that I'm guilty of that, that door-knocking is probably the most fun of this job, going out one on one, meeting the constituents and taking it in the ear or getting those great ideas that they have.

If they have a set election date, there are seniors that know they can plan and be back in the province. If, in fact they don't know – and many have left now to go south. They don't know whether it's going to be March 3, April 3, May 3. They don't know, so they can't plan, and they're disappointed in that. People can't plan and set their time aside and allot it so that they can participate and help and get enthused and work with an election, all of these things. If we have a set date, people can plan. When people can plan, they participate. When you just call a snap election or a snap gathering, you don't give Albertans that chance to participate and plan.

I mean, the Premier talked about it on October 5 in the Calgary Herald: "On Sunday I said that it would be after a spring sitting, a budget and a throne speech and thought that based on the practical timing that could be June – sometimes the legislature takes on a life of its own, so it's a little unpredictable." Well, that's what we want, to remove the unpredictability, Mr. Chairman. We need to set a date.

Amendment A1 is a great opportunity for this government to say: "You know what? We made a mistake. We didn't follow our leader. We didn't allow her to set a date, but let's fess up and say that this is the democratic thing to do. It's the right thing to do. Let's go for that." Looking at the people across the floor, it just doesn't seem like it's sinking in yet that they need to pick an election date, so we're going to have to keep hammering them on that.

Another quote:

Fixed election dates give Albertans the opportunity to focus on issues that matter and mobilize for an election, without the behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation . . .

Again that same wording.

. . . that sometimes characterize the timing of an election, said Redford, the candidate.

Personally, I was very disappointed by the voter turn out in 2008, when I was elected. We failed to engage the public in our most important democratic right – voting. In some ways, low turnout may indicate lack of faith in the system, and that is a very dangerous road to travel. I would like to reverse that trend.

Well, if the Premier would like to, obviously her caucus does not want to.

It's interesting when she brings up the election of 2008. I remember that. Premier Stelmach earlier that year and late in 2007 had said that the election was going to be on a four-year basis, and it would be in November. The one in 2004 was on November 22, so at that point many Albertans were taking the then Premier at his word, that it'll be in November. But there was a funny event that happened on the 19th of January 2008. The Alberta Alliance and the Wildrose joined, and two weeks later the Premier called an election. It was a great opportunity at that point to seize the moment and run with the ball and call an election.

It's also interesting that if you look at that month before, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, I think, tallied up that the government spent close to $1.2 billion in January of '08, and then they called an election on February 2. So they spent $1.2 billion for 30 days, had all these wonderful ideas, and then they called an election. Behind-the-scenes manipulation is what the Premier calls it. It's quite evident.

There are a few other interesting things that went on at that time. They told Suncor and Syncrude that they had to sign a deal by January 31 or else, by January 31, 2008. One of the two companies did sign a deal, and that's one of the things that they took to the polls to say: "Oh. Look at us. We took this big corporation on, and we won. We threatened them, and we won." They took that. They also had the teachers' union sign a deal by January 31, a five-year deal. These guys really think out loud. Five years. That goes through a whole two election cycles, and that's really good. What did they promise?

Again, I remember that in 2005, Mr. Chairman, speaking in here when they had their first budget surplus, I said: your law says that you have to pay all of your debt. At that time they had an unfunded liability in the teachers' pension plan of $2.1 billion. I said: "You have no surplus. You owe that money. You've promised it. They've been patient from 1993. Pay your dues into that fund, and show some good faith." Would they do it? No, Mr. Chairman, they wouldn't do it.

The 8th of May could be a great day to replace this government.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, stay on the amendment.

Mr. Hinman: We are staying on it. We're talking about fixed election dates.

Fixed election dates are important. It reduces, as the Premier said, behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that sometimes characterizes the timing of an election. Well, she understood that very well because there was a lot of behind-the-scenes and upfront, blatant purchasing, buying of votes, with billions of dollars at play back in 2008, when this Premier first got elected. She spoke out eloquently about it, and she said that she wants to defend democracy. Yet this government fails to set an election date after all that she's said. They sit back there like it's no big deal. It's obvious that these government members think that saying one thing and doing another is perfectly fine, that there's nothing wrong with that.

12:10

As I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity said earlier – and maybe it was someone else; we've got lots of people talking on this – it paints all elected representatives with a bad brush when one doesn't honour their word, when they say one thing and do another thing. Again, when you look at that chart that comes out every three or four years on who you trust the most, I think the pharmacists are one of the top-rated ones. The bottom two on the ladder: what are they? Lawyers and politicians. Then, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you might ask: why are we doing this? Why do we get together?

My colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek always says: don't get off the horse to fight with the pigs. Well, sometimes the pigs have to be rounded up and put back in their pen. I believe the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner gave a good analogy about capturing pigs, about throwing out the grain for the wild pigs, and they would come. Then they'd put up one fence. Then they'd put up a second fence and then a third fence because they'd all come to the trough to eat. Then, finally, when the pigs are all in there that one day, they come and shut the gate because they've gotten used to being fenced in there. Then they're caught because they're coming to the trough and getting the free feed.

Mr. Chase: I think George Orwell wrote that story, Animal Farm.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, but the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner eloquently talked about that one day here in the House.

It's a problem, Mr. Chairman. That's why it's simple. Let's do the right thing here tonight. We could close this off by accepting this amendment and getting this through instead of trying to ram this through with an election season. It's going to take a season for these individuals to understand that that isn't acceptable to the opposition or to Albertans. So I just can't urge them enough to come to their senses, to show some integrity, to support their Premier and say: "Yes. We were wrong. We should have picked the dates." And then pick one.

Again, we've got enough time. If there is a special date they want, bring it forward. We in the opposition would be happy just to help you in passing a law that's good for Albertans, that's good for democracy and good for participation. That's what it's all about. We want increased participation. We want people to have faith in their elected representatives. We want them to be able to understand, you know, that they're going to be held accountable on this date. Then they can start working and pushing their politicians to accountability because they have a date. They can set that, and they can see it.

Right now what they're saying is: "Well, you know, if we have a little mishap here or something else, we might need to postpone it for a couple of months. We can spend some money. We can do some behind-the-scenes manipulation and recover from this fall." But if they set a date now, again, they can't – oh, and I guess I've got to comment on those three or four phony excuses. The first one was the weather. "Well, how could we possibly pick a date when we don't know what the weather is yet?" You know, we can't figure that out a year in advance, but we can figure it out 90 days in advance. We can pick a date, maybe March 5, and they'd say: oh, we've got 30 days of good weather; it's a good time to call an election. That was pitiful. Albertans said that.

What was the next one? "Oh, well, there are religious holidays, and they kind of float around, so I don't think we could pick a date because it might be a religious holiday." Well, there are ways to address that quite easily, to say that if, in fact, something falls there, it will go over to the next week. Very easy. Again, another pitiful excuse. As the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona says, it was lame, incredibly lame.

Then the feeble excuse: well, we've got to consider the farmers. How? The weather is so unpredictable. I mean, they could pick a date, and it could be the one good day that doesn't work. I mean, it's just pitiful the excuses that they try to come up with. As parents we've all had our children come home and give pitiful excuses why they couldn't make it: "Oh, I lost the keys," or "I didn't see what time it was." [interjection] Yeah. I've even had some come home and say: "Oh, the weather was terrible."

Anyways, Mr. Chairman, this is a great amendment. It's a good amendment for the people of Alberta. May 8, 2012, would be a great day for the people of Alberta to know that the next election is coming. I hope that all the members here will vote in favour of this amendment. Then we can move on and fix a few more bills and make some progress.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak on amendment A1?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We are going back to the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the bill.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Well, you know, we've had some good conversations tonight about why this piece of legislation is so silly. Of course, I have to compliment the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for rolling out such an impressive bit of research, outlining all of the different statements made by the Premier in her successful attempt – I think much to her own surprise as well as that of probably 95 per cent of the people sitting across from us – to get herself elected as Premier of the province by a small group of quasi-Tories. It's interesting because from those quotes we see a lot of her alleged concern about ensuring fairness and ensuring that no party gets a leg up over another party, even if it's a theoretical leg up, that we need to convince Albertans that the process is fair. She's all about fairness and transparency, so let's do that.

In a genuine effort to assist the Premier in undoing the unfortunate discrepancy between her statements and her actions and in an invitation to the Premier to actually consider an approach that would ensure the kind of fairness that she ran upon when she was pursuing the role of leader of the Conservative Party, I have an amendment that I would like to propose and distribute to the members of the Assembly this evening.

I shall just do that and then wait for it to be distributed before I speak further.

The Chair: The committee shall pause a moment for the distribution of the amendment. This amendment is now known as amendment A2.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, please continue on amendment A2.

12:20

Ms Notley: Okay. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm moving this motion on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. In doing that, let me begin by simply describing the motion.

The plan would be to amend section 2 in the proposed section 38.1 as follows: in subsection (2) by striking out "Subject to subsection (1)" and substituting "Subject to subsections (1) and (3)"; and then by adding the following after subsection (2). This is the key element of this amendment.

(3) Prior to March 1, 2012, the Premier shall determine the date of the next general election in consultation with the leaders of the opposition parties represented in the Legislative Assembly, and for subsequent general elections, the consultation and determination of the date shall occur no later than 6 months following polling day in the most recent general election.

The point of this amendment is to give the Premier some assistance in keeping her promises. Through this she can keep two of her promises. Now, there was a point at which she talked about being the harbinger of transparency and consultation and respect for the Legislature, yada, yada, yada. That was the first promise. Then the second promise, of course, as has been discussed at some length already in the Legislature, in this Assembly tonight, is the promise of a fixed election date. This amendment would meet both those promises.

Just to be clear, for the current situation what it would ensure is that at some point between now and March 1, 2012 – we still would maintain the season, but what it suggests is that the season, the date within the season, has to be determined in consultation with all opposition leaders in the Legislature. Then what it does is that after that election there's a six-month window. In that six-month window, the government has to consult again with all the members of the Legislature to select a date. Then that date is set, and it is for three and a half years later. It still exists within that season, but for the course of that term everybody has roughly three years and three months to three years and six months' notice of the exact date of the election.

Now, I understand that you cannot predict the weather three years and three months in advance, nor can you predict the weather three years and six months in advance, but to review, you cannot predict the weather 28 days in advance. So in terms of addressing your weather concerns, your weather anxieties, I would suggest that this is no less effective at meeting that objective than the current plan.

Conversely, what it does do is that it provides a fixed election date for parties to be able to establish some sort of equal footing when we come to the campaign so that voters can actually make a choice based on a reasonable understanding of what each of the parties stands for as opposed to the degree to which they have been exposed to the ridiculously imbalanced ability of parties to use Public Affairs Bureau PR and/or corporate-funded 10 to 1 election financing ads. Rather, the parties would each have an opportunity to prepare in a way to provide actual policy choices to Alberta's voters. Then they could make their decisions based on that, which I know is a novel idea, but what the heck.

By doing this, this acknowledges the role of the opposition leaders within this Assembly, and as I said before, it allows the Premier to genuinely meet not just one promise but two and be the hero of the day.

I thank the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for this unique idea. Based on all of the many conversations that have already taken place with respect to the need for a fixed election date and based on the Premier's own passionate advocacy for the need to ensure more transparency and openness and to give Albertans a strong faith in the fairness of our election process and to ensure that they have true faith in the process, this would be an opportune step forward.

I would certainly encourage members of this Assembly to consider this amendment. It's a little creative, but far be it from us to let that stop us. For the moment I will take my seat and invite other members to engage in conversation on this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader on amendment A2.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think it would be a scintillating thought to engage in discussion on this amendment. We've heard so much about election seasons, and now we have an election committee, I guess. A delightful thought, to actually have a six-month period to consult with the leaders of the opposition parties represented in the Legislature. Presumably, if we couldn't come to agreement, we could just continue to govern forever.

An Hon. Member: You'd love that.

Mr. Hancock: No. I wouldn't love that because I love elections, and I love to go back to the people. I actually enjoy being on the doorsteps and talking with people in the community about what kind of a province they'd like to have and what kind of a future they see for their children and grandchildren. I see a future for my children and grandchildren.

I'd like to see them again, and I know that if I go much later tonight, I may fall asleep on the way home. So I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 22 and report further progress on Bill 21.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 22. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 21. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report, does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:29 a.m. on Wednesday to 1:30 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 27 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2).....	1491
---------------------------------------------------------------------	------

Division .....	1496
----------------	------

Committee of the Whole

Bill 21 Election Amendment Act, 2011 .....	1479, 1501
--------------------------------------------	------------

Bill 24 Health Quality Council of Alberta Act.....	1479, 1482
----------------------------------------------------	------------

Bill 22 Justice and Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011.....	1496
-------------------------------------------------------------	------

Introduction of Guests .....	1482
------------------------------	------

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fourth Session

Alberta Hansard

Wednesday afternoon, November 30, 2011

Issue 43a

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 27th Legislature

Fourth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Hon. Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Hon. Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Hon. Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Hon. Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hon. Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC)
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Hon. Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Hon. Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Hon. Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Hon. Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (PC)
Stelmach, Hon. Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC)
Webber, Hon. Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Clerk	W.J. David McNeil	Committee Research Co-ordinator	Philip Massolin
Law Clerk/Director of		Sergeant-at-Arms	Brian G. Hodgson
Interparliamentary Relations	Robert H. Reynolds, QC	Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Chris Caughell
Senior Parliamentary Counsel/		Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Gordon H. Munk
Director of House Services	Shannon Dean	Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard	Liz Sim
Parliamentary Counsel	Stephanie LeBlanc

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 68      Alberta Liberal: 8      Wildrose Alliance: 4      New Democrat: 2      Alberta: 1

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Sustainable Resource Development
Janice Sarich	Education
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Rodney
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
Mason
Pastoor
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Ms Pastoor

Bhardwaj
Blackett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Ouellette
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 30, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Hon. Errol McLeod, Minister of Labour and Small and Micro Enterprise Development of the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago, and his delegation: His Excellency Philip Buxo, High Commissioner of the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago to Canada, and Ms Elizabeth Sealy, chief manpower officer from the government of Trinidad and Tobago. They are here today to represent the productive relationship Alberta has with Trinidad and Tobago. We have strong cultural ties as well as partnerships in trade, industry, and education. I'm confident that this visit to our province will mark the beginning of an even stronger relationship between our two jurisdictions. They are seated in the gallery today to watch our proceedings. I now ask Minister McLeod, His Excellency, and Ms Elizabeth Sealy to please rise and receive our best wishes along with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mittel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two people who are seated in your gallery. The first is Mr. Drew Hutton, who as an MLA for Edmonton-Glenora from 2001 to 2004 sat in this Assembly. He's now director of U.S. trade and investment for Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations. With him is Mr. Michael Reeves, the president of the Ports-to-Plains Trade Corridor Alliance, of which Alberta is a member. They're here this week meeting with ministers, ministry staff, and economic development agencies. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased and honoured to introduce to you and through you today 48 grade 6 students from Archbishop Joseph MacNeil school who are joining us today accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Brooke Kuntz and Mrs. Moira Lintz. They're also joined by parent helpers Conrad Bodnar and Tammy Jurijew and a student teacher, Ms Colette Tercier. Members may remember Colette as a former page in this Assembly. I've had the opportunity to meet with them very briefly. We took a picture on the steps, and they answered my questions brilliantly. They are great representatives of the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you some very, very bright students from a brand new school in my riding of Edmonton-Mill Creek. The school is called A. Blair McPherson school, and it's one that I'm happy to say I supported being built. There are 60 students who are here today. They are accompanied by Mrs. Lorelei Campbell and Mr. Tom Henderson, their teachers, and by parents and helpers Mrs. Mussa, Mrs. McGowan, Mrs. Palak, Mrs. Aberle, and Mrs. Kaptzy. I would ask all of these guests to rise and please receive the warm recognition of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It is indeed an honour and a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 20 students here from Queen Elizabeth high school in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore who are new Canadians and representatives from all around the globe. They are joined today by their teacher, Mrs. Sarah Lees. The Assembly should know that Queen Elizabeth high school is celebrating 50 years of learning success, and I know that these students today are top notch, working very hard, and are future leaders. I would ask them now to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly six individuals here today to support more administrative penalties for impaired driving. They have been advocating increased safety on our roads for a number of years, and I'm very glad that they are here today. They are from Mothers Against Drunk Driving. I want to, first of all, introduce Denise Dubyk, the national president – she's standing in your gallery – and also Louise Knox, the manager of the western provinces.

I'd also like to introduce Brenda Johnson, who is a regional director; Leila Moulder, the Edmonton chapter president; Susan Semotiuk, an Edmonton volunteer; and Jillian Phillips, who is also an Edmonton volunteer. They are now standing in the members' gallery, and I'd ask this Assembly to welcome them.

I have one more introduction, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Gabe Rohr and his daughter Cheryl Rohr. Tragedy struck the Rohr family on July 23, 1987, when Cheryl was struck by an impaired driver. Cheryl was not expected to survive this tragedy; however, through hard work and determination Cheryl is here with us today. Cheryl and her mother, Sharon, went on to form the survivors program, which brought them to many classrooms across Alberta to speak with children about the dangers of drinking and driving. I'd ask again for members of this Assembly to welcome them.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege today to introduce to you and through you to all members three members of the Calgary Foothills medical centre team. The Foothills intensive care unit recently received the prestigious 2012 intensive care unit design citation for its commitment to creating a safe and healing environment for patients and their families. This award, given out once a year, recognizes ICU designs that demonstrate the most leading-edge approaches to caring for a hospital's sickest patients. I would ask that the three members of the Foothills medical team sitting in the gallery rise as I mention their names: Caroline Hatcher, executive director of critical care at Foothills; Dr. Paul Boiteau, department head of critical care medicine for the Calgary zone of Alberta Health Services; and Dr. David Zygun, medical director at the Foothills intensive care unit. This is an accomplishment of which we should all be very proud. I'd ask all colleagues to join me in extending our congratulations and warm welcome to these individuals.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly nine members of the Camrose Kodiaks junior A hockey team. They are Coach Boris Rybalka, Captain Rylan Wiest, Sam Jardine, Craig Bokenfohr, Jonathan Lashyn, Nolan Marshall, Kieran O'Neil, Brayden Hopfe, and Landon Kadatz. The Kodiaks have been in Camrose since 1997. In that time they've become great community contributors. They are also one of the premier teams in the Alberta Junior Hockey League and, I would suggest, all of Canadian junior hockey, having won a national championship, five Doyle Cups, and six league titles, something that the organization and the community are very proud of. I would like them to rise and offer the warm welcome of the Assembly.

One more word, Mr. Speaker. We didn't have another place for him to sit, but my special assistant, Nick Harsulla, is also a former Kodiak.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been looking forward to making this introduction to you and through you for the past seven years. It's a distinct honour for me to introduce Darlynn Linn, who has made invaluable contributions to her neighbourhood, city, province, and beyond. Darlynn has been the constituency manager for Calgary-Lougheed since April of 1997. Our constituents know that once she is on the case, things will be taken care of. Dar believes that constituency assistants could not do their jobs without the wonderful staff in all departments of the LAO. She enjoys working with community organizations, including as a volunteer, and with groups such as the Calgary-Lougheed PC board. She has made countless friends, had a lot of fun, and made Alberta a better place to be all at the same time. Her late husband, David, is indeed her inspiration. Dar along with David had two fabulous children, Nathaniel and Sabrina, and they've overcome incredible obstacles together. Darlynn Linn is a wonderful friend, and I trust that all of our hon. colleagues will join me in welcoming Darlynn as she stands in our House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you nine fabulous parents from Morinville who, as we are all aware, are battling for secular schools for their children in that area. Could you please rise when I call your name: Donna Hunter, Marjorie Kirsop, Gillian Schaefer Percy, Rayann Menard, Eva Scrimshaw, Stacey Buga, Carol Sparks, Jessica Logan, Colleen Moskalyk, Lara Thompson, Tannis Caverly, and anyone else who came today. Needless to say, can we extend a warm welcome to our guests and visitors today?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce two of my constituency office staff who braved the weather and the roads coming up from Calgary this morning to be here this afternoon. Michelle Bodnar, my constituency office manager, has been working in the Calgary-Currie office for almost two and a half years, which makes her the longest lasting constituency association manager in my history as an MLA. I think that's a good thing. Michelle comes from a background in writing and communications and is also a resident of Calgary-Currie and certainly is an indispensable help to me.

Also, with her today is Gwyneth Midgley, a long-time political activist in Calgary who recently joined our staff at the Calgary-Currie constituency office. A graduate of the University of Cambridge, she worked in London for the British Ministry of Defence before immigrating to Canada 20 years ago. She believes that the hon. the Premier bears a striking resemblance to a young Margaret Thatcher albeit we think – it remains to be proven – with a somewhat more moderate political philosophy.

If this House would please give Gwyneth and Michelle the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a couple of powerful advocates for the disabled, one of whom has just won a key judicial review concerning the PDD appeals process. Gail Wilkinson is a parent of a young man with autism and cerebral palsy. He was diagnosed at age three, and with some support was able to complete high school and go on to university. Gail and Mary Jo Hague, also a parent of a child with autism, are fighting for the rights of disabled Albertans to be participative and productive members of Alberta society. They are seated in the gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Mr. Speaker, today I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two great guests from southeast Edmonton. Vanessa Sauvé and Justine Leszczynski are both mothers of school-aged children. Like many parents in our province, they are concerned with this government's lack of clear, long-term vision for a stable education system and, as such, were critical in organizing a rally in front of this Legislature back in June. Now along with other volunteers they have collected signatures from 654 Albertans who want to make it clear that simply reinstating funding to the education system, that was cut a few months ago, is not enough. Instead, they're calling on this government to provide sustainable and adequate long-term funding to address the needs of every student every day, without exception. I would now like to ask Vanessa and Justine to rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon.

Members of this Legislative Assembly Dr. Josipa Petrunic. Josipa is starting as an adjunct professor of the history of mathematics and engineering at the University of Alberta. She is also an excellent researcher. She currently is writing a book on the history of thermodynamics and mathematics in Scotland. It was Scotland where she completed her PhD in 2009. Dr. Petrunic is starting a new project on the history of bitumen in engineering here in Alberta.

Josipa also studied French in the Edmonton-Gold Bar constituency, of course, at the Faculté Saint-Jean. French is one of the five languages that she can converse fluently in. She also has a degree in journalism. She worked as a reporter here in Edmonton with the Edmonton Journal before moving on to the Globe and Mail, where she received a prestigious national journalism award for an article on arts and science. Born and raised here in Alberta, Josipa is also an accomplished marathon runner. She learned to train for the marathon on the beautiful river valley trails that weave through the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar.

I will be very proud to stand on Monday evening at the Alberta Liberal Party nomination meeting in Edmonton-Gold Bar and nominate her as the next candidate for the Alberta Liberal Party when the general election is called. When it comes to upholding the values and the interests of Edmonton-Gold Bar, I can think of no better candidate than Josipa Petrunic. She is in the public gallery. I would now ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Impaired Driving

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2010 8,500 Albertans were convicted of impaired driving. Over the past five years more than 41,000 Albertans were convicted of impaired driving, enough people to populate a small Alberta city. The number of 24-hour suspensions issued over the same time frame is shockingly similar. This is Alberta's drinking and driving record, and it is something that we as Albertans are not very proud of. After years of increased awareness about the deadly consequences and countless horrific crashes in which loved ones were lost, too many Albertans are still drinking and driving. When will this end?

We must do more to stop these drivers and their complete disregard for the lives of others and, sadly, even their own. We need to take action now. Drivers must be held accountable for the choices they make and their behaviour behind the wheel. Stronger sanctions for drinking and driving are one way to achieve that goal. We also need more education and monitoring to help change their behaviour permanently. At the same time we need to change societal attitudes towards drinking and driving. We want to develop a culture in which drinking and driving is unacceptable always and no one operates a vehicle if they feel their driving ability is impaired, regardless of how much alcohol they have consumed.

Now is the time to make our roads safer before more lives are needlessly taken and more families are left behind to grieve. Now is the time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Political Contributions by Municipal Officials

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In yet another example of Alberta municipalities contravening the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act by making illegal contributions to the PC Party, the town of Hardisty voted to send as many as six people to the Battle River-Wainwright PC Association MLA fundraising dinner. Can the Minister of Municipal Affairs tell us how many municipalities, including those in his own constituency, are making these illegal political contributions?

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a lot of insinuations in that member's comments. The town of Hardisty did pass a resolution to send some, but as far as our records go, no cheque came from the municipality to our constituency association. I'd like to point out to the member as well that the Chief Electoral Officer sent a letter to every single municipality in the province just over a year ago telling them they should not send cheques, and our constituency has never accepted a cheque.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, in my hand are the minutes of those meetings.

Given that this illegal activity has now spread to include some school boards such as Holy Spirit Catholic school, which sent their people to a $250-a-plate Premier's dinner, can the Minister of Justice tell us if he is aware of this or other violations of the act and what he will do when he finds out about these issues?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, as I've said a number of times before, that's the job of the Chief Electoral Officer. If the member has issues regarding this type of matter, he should talk to the Chief Electoral Officer.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, yet another abrogation of responsibility from the minister.

Given that town councils and school boards are so worried about protecting their funding that they feel compelled to misuse public funds, will the Minister of Justice finally direct Elections Alberta to conduct a full investigation on how many of these illegal contributions are being made and why?

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Speaker: There's a point of order here.

Speaker's Ruling

Referring to a Legislative Officer

The Speaker: I'm not sure, hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, that any member of Executive Council can direct an officer of the Legislative Assembly. So let's be very careful about the words we use here.

Minister, do you wish to say something?

Political Contributions by Municipal Officials

(continued)

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, you took the words right out of my mouth. If this member and his friends saw me interfering like that, I'm sure I would be hearing from them. Let the Chief Electoral Officer do his job.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

PC Party Benefit Plan Trust

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, forgive me for assuming that you are actually responsible.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of interest this week and questions surrounding the top-up fund for the Premier's salary. Unfortunately, Albertans have received very few answers in this House. The Minister of Justice, who is responsible for the election finances act, has denied any knowledge of or responsibility for the Premier's top-up fund. As Albertan taxpayers are ultimately the ones paying to top up the Premier's salary, is the Minister of Justice able to tell us today the total value of the Premier's trust fund?

Ms Redford: I'm sorry. I've been out of the House the last couple of days. You can tell from my voice that I haven't been able to speak, but I'm sure glad to be back, Mr. Speaker.

I understand that there have been questions with respect to how the Progressive Conservative Party pays for expenses related to the leader. I will tell you that I believe it's important for political parties to pay for partisan activity that their leader undertakes. Our party does that. I am also aware that there are other parties represented in this House that follow the same practice, Mr. Speaker. I think it's critical that it be transparent. I think it's critical that if there are expenses related to pure political activity that they not be paid for by either the government of Alberta or the taxpayer of Alberta, and we're completely above board about that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier and cabinet gave themselves a whopping pay raise just a few short years ago, can the Premier please explain why it would be necessary to top up your whopping $215,000-a-year salary, and can you please tell us how much you're getting paid?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to the fact that there are expenses that are purely political that should be paid for by political parties. There have certainly been other disclosures in this House from other political parties clarifying that that is also the case for other political parties. I am sure the hon. member is not suggesting that the salary that I receive to be either a minister or a Premier should be money that's being used to pay for partisan expenses. And I would ask why, perhaps, with respect to the Official Opposition they've never declared anything.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I find as the Liberal leader is that the leader actually has to give the party money versus receive it from the party.

Mr. Speaker, given that Albertan taxpayers have a legal right to know how much of their public funds are used to pay the Premier, taxpayer public funds, will the Premier take some action and tell the public how much she's getting for her expenses or her top-up salary? And for the previous Premier?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have a financial regulatory structure in place where all parties must disclose their party expenses. We do that as part of the normal course of events. That's part of what we deal with under the financial disclosure act, and it's a completely transparent process.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I appreciate the hon. Premier's interest and questions and answers in this matter, but I would like to know, please: what is the difference between the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta's leader's expense reimbursement and the benefit plan trust that has been paid to the former Premier for at least four years?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: That would strike me as being clearly without the rules that we have, which I explained last Thursday, being a purely party matter. If the member wants to refine the question with other words, proceed. I won't bypass him today. I'll ask him to do it. Refine the question, and we'll see if it applies within the rules.

PC Party Benefit Plan Trust

(continued)

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. The disclosure statement that is made pursuant to the Conflicts of Interest Act, which is a statute, a law of this province: what is the difference between the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta's leader's expense reimbursement and the benefit plan trust that has been made available for at least four years for the former Premier? As I understand it, the PC party president indicates you're going to . . .

The Speaker: I'm afraid, hon. member, that isn't helpful. If you have a second question, proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. The disclosure statement that is issued by this House for all Members of this Legislative Assembly, which is pursuant to the Conflicts of Interest Act, clearly sets a difference between the leader's expense reimbursement, which you talked about in the question to the hon. opposition leader, and the benefit plan trust. They are different. What is the difference, and how much is the benefit plan trust worth?

The Speaker: Once again, hon. member, I'm going to give you a second chance to refine your question, to make it applicable within the rules.

Mr. MacDonald: Wow. I'm getting lots of chances, Mr. Speaker, and I really appreciate your generosity.

Now, again, to the Premier: how much money will you receive under the benefit plan trust that is being set up and is being subsidized by the taxpayers of this province?

The Speaker: Well, I think, hon. member, I'll invite you back tomorrow. Okay?

Now we'll move on to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Public Health Inquiry

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a very sad day. The cancer lab at the Tom Baker cancer centre closes its doors. After more than a decade and after serving more than 10,000 patients using research and testing developed exclusively in-house, the lab closes despite dire warnings from Dr. Tony Magliocco. He did everything he could to stop it. Not only was he ignored; he was threatened and he was smeared for daring to speak out. My questions are to the Premier. We know that you dismiss this critical issue as a workplace disagreement. Is that how you're going to treat the countless examples of bullying and intimidation of health care professionals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much. Well, this issue was discussed in question period previously. The questions were asked and answered. I guess what I'd like to say, Mr. Speaker, is that this recurrent theme of innuendo and rumour with allegations of physician intimidation has become quite tiresome to this government and, in fact, in our opinion, is an insult to the dignity of this House and to the people that work in our health care system.

2:00

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, that is unacceptable. He's already got his own Health Quality Council investigating intimidation, and as the minister he has the right to stand up and say that it isn't happening. What are they doing now?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'd be very happy to tell you what's unacceptable, in my view. What is unacceptable, in my view, is when I have briefings with my staff, as I did earlier today, and I discover that my staff have been accused of intimidation and collaboration with respect to bullying physicians of this province on the basis of no information, no fact. My staff are simply out there doing their job, conducting a regular billing review, and they are accused of physician intimidation. That is clearly unacceptable.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are not going to accept what he's saying, and the health care professionals in this province are not going to accept what he is saying.

Given how Dr. Magliocco was shamefully treated simply for advocating on behalf of his patients and given that he has stated that he would return to Alberta to testify at a judicial inquiry, will you commit immediately to having a judge-led public inquiry as you promised?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what is unacceptable is what passes for a definition of intimidation in this House by the hon. members opposite. Disagreement among people in the workplace does not constitute intimidation. Staff of my ministry conducting a regular billing review under the auspices of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act and being threatened with court action as a result of undertaking their responsibilities under law is not intimidation. What is intimidation is these continual allegations based on rumours, innuendo . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Proposed Mandatory Minimum Sentences

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-10 is a federal piece of legislation that will see young Albertans put away for marijuana possession and will impose minimum sentences for a variety of other offences. Imposing lengthy minimum sentences has done little to reduce crime. The United States stands as a prime example of this. The increase in prison populations as a result will undoubtedly be significant for Alberta's criminal justice system. My question is to the Premier. Has the government determined how many more people will be incarcerated in Alberta under this government's control as a result of Bill C-10? Has it estimated the costs that will be downloaded onto Albertans to pay for it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-10 is actually still before Parliament, and I'm travelling in a couple of weeks to meet with the federal minister, Vic Toews, regarding this bill.

The one thing that this hon. member does not note is that Bill C-10 has many positive elements, including modernization of laws relating to Internet predators. This is something we should get behind as a government and not go and criticize it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister doesn't deal with the question, but I'd like to go back to the Premier, if I can. Given that the crime rate in Canada is the lowest in 40 years, with Alberta and B.C. recording the largest declines in Canada in 2010, and given that the parliamentary budget office has estimated the bill to provinces will be nearly $5 billion, are the large expenditures required to support Bill C-10 in Alberta the right priority today for the government and for the province?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-10 is important legislation for Canada, and the reason for that is that what we know when we work with our partners in the community is that we have to ensure that we're dealing with the root causes of crime. We need to deal with social issues. We need to deal with education and health issues. The other side of that is that we can't allow people who are committing crimes to get away with those crimes.

Mr. Speaker, when I was previously in my portfolio as Minister of Justice, one of the things that we asked the federal government to do was to be very specific and very firm and very clear with respect to what sentencing would look like so that we could deal with crime as it happened.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Premier's federal Tory cousins continue to ignore widespread and credible opposition to Bill C-10 and they continue to ram the bill through Parliament, will the Premier follow the lead of Ontario and Quebec and Newfoundland and refuse to pay for the additional costs that are being foisted upon the provinces?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we know in federal-provincial relations is that sometimes we have shared jurisdiction. One of the ways that we can be most effective in ensuring that we're achieving good public policy with positive outcomes for Albertans is to work both with other provincial governments and with the federal government to ensure that we're actually having the success that we want to have.

Mr. Speaker, we're pleased with what we're seeing in C-10. We know that it's going to allow us to do what we need to do in the province provincially. It's also going to ensure that we're sharing resources in a way that's going to allow it to have the best impact it can for Albertans.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, just in time for Christmas Alberta citizens are seeing their power rates jacked up by 48 per cent. Businesses and families alike will pay 13.5 cents per kilowatt hour, the highest regulated monthly rate ever. This makes clear that there are continuing problems for Alberta consumers since the deregulation of the markets some 10 years ago. To the Minister of Energy. The Premier stated that if the government finds policy and structures are not working as expected, it would be time to revisit those mechanisms. Accordingly, given that it's clear the system is not working, what is this minister doing?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, it is true that the projected price for electricity for the month of December is going to be higher than it has been in November. Interestingly enough, November was lower than October. In the system we have the price varies from month to month, but studies have proven consistently that over time if you compare Alberta to nonhydro jurisdictions, our rates are middle of the pack and competitive.

Mr. Hehr: Given that consumer groups and energy experts alike have recommended many ways to this government to address this price volatility, why is this minister sitting on his hands and not acting on the Premier's concerns on behalf of Alberta's consumers?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, all of the solutions that the hon. member likes to point to that other provinces have been using have led to huge, huge public debt in their electrical and hydro systems. Quebec is $36 billion in debt right now for Hydro-Québec; Ontario, $64 billion. I'm happy to tell this Assembly that the total public debt in this province, the province of Alberta, is zero. There's no public debt on generation.

Mr. Hehr: Given that the only conclusion Alberta consumers can draw is that they're being royally rooked on their power bills, when will this minister sit down with the energy industry, energy experts, and academia and come up with a reasonable solution for Alberta consumers that more accurately reflects the price of producing power?

Dr. Morton: I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta's electrical prices compared to nonhydro jurisdictions are competitive – we're middle of the pack – and unlike all these other jurisdictions the hon. member points to, there is no public debt in Alberta on power generation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Diabetes Supplies

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents have informed me that about 57 per cent of people living with diabetes are unable to comply with the prescribed therapy because they cannot afford their medications, medical devices, and supplies. As a result, they face a high risk of developing complications. While research clearly indicates the health benefits of insulin pump technology, pumps and supplies remain unaffordable for most Albertans. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why is Alberta 1 of only 3 remaining provinces in Canada that have not made a commitment to fund insulin pump therapy?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question because this is a topic that has been very much on my mind over the last few weeks. It is true that Alberta has programs in place for patients with type 1 diabetes. In some cases those do include insulin pumps and supplies. In fact, only four jurisdictions in the country provide complete funding for an insulin pump for everyone with type 2 diabetes. The decision is something that is under review in my ministry right now. We need to assess the health technology and its potential benefits to Albertans.

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, Albertans with annual incomes greater than $15,000 face the highest out-of-pocket costs in the country. Again to the same minister: what is the ministry doing to ensure that those with limited income have equitable access to the health services they need?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans with very low incomes can in fact access some financial assistance through Alberta Seniors. But it is true – and I've heard a number of my colleagues mention it – that the financial burden of diabetic supplies, test strips in particular, and access to advanced technology like insulin pumps is an issue. We're looking very seriously at it right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. To the same minister: as I have been contacted by numerous constituents on this issue, when can Albertans expect a decision from your ministry?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, we have a health technology assessment review under way now to evaluate the potential application of insulin pumps for all Albertans with diabetes. I expect it will take a few more months before that review is complete, and I certainly look forward to informing this House and the hon. member of the outcome of that.

Thank you.

2:10 Secular Public Education in Greater St. Albert

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Alberta Civil Liberties Research Centre gave Morinville mothers an award to recognize their right to fight for secular education. These parents have repeatedly asked the minister to meet with them, and he's always denied their request. To the Minister of Education: given the Premier's promise of transparency and accountability, why won't this minister make the meetings with St. Albert school boards public and include the parents in these debates?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this member is wrong again. As a matter of fact, I met with the parents in a very interesting way. The parents were at the Legislature with their children, and believe it or not, we had a little bit of a picnic in the rotunda of the Legislature. I had the pleasure of chit-chatting with the mothers. I had a very good, constructive meeting with three of the school boards involved, and the school boards are now working on a resolution. I am very proud of the mothers, and so should the children be. They're advocating for education, and the school board is responding.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that the children are already crammed in a small office and that the promised modular classrooms are once again delayed, when will this government assure parents in Morinville that secular education will be provided with proper infrastructure so that you can have a good picnic?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, this member is not well apprised of what's going on. I met with the mothers, I met with the children, I met with all of the three school boards, and they're working on a resolution. As a matter of fact, yes, all children are entitled to a top-notch education, and as the member knows, we promote choice. Now he's asking for choice; yesterday he was against choice. We are promoting choice, and we will make sure that at the end of the day these parents and children will get the education they asked for and deserve.

Mr. Hehr: Well, we'll get back to talking about choice another day, Mr. Speaker.

Today we're talking about picnics and the right of these people to have a secular school option. I will ask the minister: when will you commit to having a firm date established for when this mess in Morinville can actually be ended so that people can have a secular school option that they can go to, that they can be proud of sending their children to? Commit to a date.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I am very happy that this member is such a big promoter of choice when it comes to secular education, but when it comes to religious education, he wants choice eliminated. That's good to know.

However, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you that the school boards in that area have been given about a month to find a solution that is agreeable to all parties involved. The best solutions come from the local area, not from here and definitely not with that kind of rhetoric. We will resolve this issue. We will make sure that all parties involved are satisfied.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Disaster Assistance Benefit for Slave Lake

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many businesses in my constituency were significantly impacted by the devastating fires that occurred this summer. Approximately 20 per cent of businesses were left dealing with damage or destruction to their buildings and are stretched to the limit. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Could you please explain to my constituents what your ministry is doing to help rebuild businesses that have been affected by these fires?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for that question. Ag Financial Services Corporation is working closely with the businesses in and around Slave Lake. In May a multimillion-dollar disaster assistance benefit was announced. This benefit provides those businesses with loans of zero per cent interest for up to two years and then financing further out. They have the ability to defer that payment as well for two years. To date 60 loans have been processed and confirmed for over $51 million back into the Slave Lake area.

Ms Calahasen: To the same minister: is AFSC mostly refinancing existing loans, or are they also supporting new loans because of the businesses that have been affected?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, to date one-third of the loans out there are refinancing existing debt in operation of these businesses. Two-thirds of the loans are going to facilitate new construction and rebuilding. These business owners are able to address the challenges of keeping their businesses sustainable while the rebuilding takes place. Also, they're facing costs through high labour, temporary housing, and many other issues, and these loans are helping to facilitate all of those issues.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no office in Lesser Slave Lake for AFSC. How is this going to impact the turnaround times on the loan applications if there's no office there?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, as the new minister responsible for AFSC through agriculture I'm very proud to inform this House and all Albertans that immediately after the fire 50 per cent of the AFSC staff from all over Alberta had moved into Slave Lake, and through temporary accommodations at the time they were operational right after the fire. In October we opened a new permanent office in Slave Lake, and the turnaround time on our loans there is now 15 days. I'm very proud of that, and we look to continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

PDD Appeal Panel Decision

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta struck down a decision of the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Appeal Panel. That decision was procedurally unfair, ruled the court, in part because the panel had relied on the evidence of an expert witness who was also a PDD employee. To the Minister of Seniors. Judicial reviews can cost as much as $70,000. What about families that can't afford this? How are they supposed to ensure that decisions affecting the supports that their loved ones receive are made fairly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, thank you for that question. To the member opposite: I have been made aware that the justice did in fact quash the decision of the appeal panel and has remitted it back to the appeal panel for a further decision.

Mr. Speaker, you'll have to help me on this one. The appeal panel now is going to hear that, and I think I'll be tight on my comments.

Speaker's Ruling Sub Judice Rule

The Speaker: Yes. And I would not know that. You'd have to explain to me where we are in the judicial process. If it is before the courts or any one of the stages within it, then the minister should be very, very careful in what he says, and so should the member raising the question, by the way.

Mr. Chase: Oh, of course, Mr. Speaker.

PDD Appeal Panel Decision (continued)

Mr. Chase: How does the minister account for such procedural irregularity given that the statement of mandate and role signed by a previous minister requires that the panel provide "a fair and unbiased mechanism" of dispute resolution?

Speaker's Ruling Sub Judice Rule

The Speaker: Well, it would strike me by the very words of that that we're within one of the processes, hon. member, so I'm going to really caution here again.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with the court process.

The Speaker: Well, I'm sorry, hon. member. You and I now have a distinct difficulty in dealing with this because I do not know where it is in the process, but you did mention appeal.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Hold on just a second. We're going to deal with this in an orderly fashion. I'm sure all the legal experts, including the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, will have a statement to make with respect to this.

Did you use the word "appeal" in your second question?

Mr. Chase: No, I didn't.

The Speaker: Did you use any word that says that it's under further review?

Mr. Chase: No. Would you like me to read it again?

The Speaker: Fine. I just want to be very clear here.

Mr. Chase: Okay.

The Speaker: The minister has the floor now. You raised the question.

PDD Appeal Panel Decision (continued)

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The matter is now under the appeal of the appeal panel.

I can say very clearly that 417,000 seniors, 43,500 people on AISH, 9,400 people on PDD: all of those people I take very, very seriously. They're under the care of this minister.

I know there's a process that's under way, and I'm going to respect that process, sir.

Speaker's Ruling Sub Judice Rule

The Speaker: I just heard the minister say that it was under appeal. Is this not correct?

Mr. VanderBurg: Yes, sir. The justice has referred it back to the appeal panel.

The Speaker: Okay. Let's be very careful what we're talking about now. I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity for the third question. But if it is in any of the stages before the law courts, we do have a sub judice rule that we have to be cognizant of. That's all I'm advising.

PDD Appeal Panel Decision (continued)

Mr. Chase: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, your qualification. This is about government policy as opposed to court process.

Why must families in this province go to court to see that justice is done for their vulnerable loved ones?

Mr. VanderBurg: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you that people who are applying for PDD go under an intense process. It's called the SIS program, or supports intensity scale. Everybody is judged fairly. We want to make sure that Albertans that apply for PDD are given the utmost respect. There is a process that each and every one has to go through.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:20

Climate Change

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With the United Nations 17th annual climate change conference kicking off in Durban, South Africa, people are looking to Alberta to see where we stand regarding an international greenhouse gas reduction framework. To the Minister of Environment and Water. I've seen various people comment on what that framework should look like, including the federal Environment minister. Does Alberta support the federal government's position?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. Certainly, Alberta supports Minister Kent's goal of working towards a realistic, international, comprehensive, ambitious agreement that would include all of the large major emitting countries. We do that, but we want to make sure that it focuses on technology development and that it's a comprehensive agreement throughout the global world emitters.

The Speaker: The hon. member

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that an international agreement is unlikely and since Alberta attends this international conference as part of the Canadian delegation, is Alberta's presence really necessary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be there as a proud Albertan and will stand up for Alberta's interests and speak about our significant climate change achievements. We'll also be completely honest in saying that we don't have all the answers. We'll be there to share our best practices but also to learn from others.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. You say you're attending as a proud Albertan – and I appreciate that – to talk about our significant climate change achievements, but critics suggest that you're not doing enough. Can you tell me what this government is actually doing to address climate change?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, if you can do it in 35 seconds, proceed.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be very happy to talk about our achievements: operating North America's first emissions reduction program; setting mandatory targets for all large emitters; creating a regulatory offset market; putting a price on carbon; developing a clean energy technology fund, which has already collected more than $257 million; committing $126 million towards 27 clean energy products. We've also committed a $2 billion investment in carbon capture and storage and $2 billion in GreenTRIP.

The Speaker: If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre could be just a little patient, I'll recognize her two members from now.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Access to Information

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Information and Privacy Commissioner released a report saying that this government is on the road to making “Swiss cheese” of Alberta’s access to information by overusing paramouncy to create holes in access. The commissioner points out that this government has blocked access to information through 38 pieces of legislation and regulation, often with little or no rationale. My question to the Premier is: will she admit that this record of shredding holes in access to information is proof this government is far too secretive for Albertans to accept?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I note that the hon. member didn’t read the entire quote. It said: “Left unchecked, the practice of taking other enactments out of FOIP by making them ‘paramount’ to FOIP has the potential to turn” the act – I think that what the Privacy Commissioner is doing is sending some messaging out to the next officer of this Legislature. This side of the House always respects the officers of this Legislature and will continue to work co-operatively with them.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the next officer of the Legislature has no ability to deal with the 40-plus pieces of legislation that are creating this problem and given that the current commissioner says that it calls into question this Legislature’s commitment to access to information and protection of privacy for Albertans, will the Premier or the Deputy Premier agree that almost 40 acts require review to protect Albertans’ access to information and commit today to conducting that review before the next election?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, as I believe this document has been tabled, Albertans are free to read it at their will. Let me also quote another piece from the letter. He is “through this report, urging the next Commissioner to adopt the practice of writing the responsible Minister directly whenever a proposed regulation contains a paramouncy provision so that it can also be considered in full knowledge.” I’m sure the next Privacy Commissioner will do that.

I would also point out, Mr. Speaker, that when you review the paramouncy pieces that have been pulled from . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Notley: Well, given, Mr. Speaker, that paramouncy has been used to prevent Albertans from learning about oil sands industry testing and processing, royalty collection, insurance, and income supports or deals between health authorities and surgical facilities and given that all this information is needed for citizens to hold government accountable for their policies or for citizens to defend themselves, why does this government not understand that this information doesn’t belong to it or to the Premier or to the Deputy Premier but that it belongs to the people of Alberta and make sure that they can have access to it?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the information in many cases belongs to the person. It belongs to the person that that piece of legislation might indeed be trying to protect. It belongs to the company whose livelihood may depend on the fact that that information is kept confidential. I’m sorry that the hon. member, especially with her background and training, doesn’t understand that.

The Speaker: Okay. Some documents were referred to in this exchange. I trust that they’ll be tabled at the appropriate time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Hydraulic Fracturing for Gas in Shale

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Now, Alberta has more expertise in oil and gas than anywhere. When it comes to fracking, we should have the best science, regulations, and information, but we don’t. What we do have is leading scientists in the area of deep drilling and fracking stating that the studies done to date have largely lacked vigour, quality control, follow-through, and peer review. My question is to the Minister of Environment and Water. Why does the government state otherwise?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly with regard to fracking, as I mentioned yesterday in the House, there is lots of work that we’re doing with other departments to make sure that when we come forward with a strategy, we have one that’s comprehensive. Alberta has a great regulatory system, over 60 years of a strategy with regard to regulating in this province. We will continue to make sure that as we move forward with fracking, we do it in a way that is responsible for Albertans.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister, then. When occurrences of water contamination follow drilling in areas such as Rosebud, the Wildmere field, and the Campbell and Jack wells in north-central Alberta, why didn’t the government take every possible scientifically rigorous action to determine the cause and find any potential solutions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I told you, what we said yesterday was that we are working to make sure that before we move heavily into fracking, we’re going to work with other ministries. We’re going to have a comprehensive plan to make sure that as we regulate the fracking industry in Alberta and that continues to grow, it is done as it has been in the past with other oil and gas activities, in a very responsible manner.

Ms Blakeman: We’ve had fracking for 15 years, and they’re just starting to think about a policy?

Okay. To the same minister: why doesn’t this government require companies to submit their fracking fluid ingredients, not the recipe but the ingredients, so that comparisons can be made scientifically with any contaminated water? There’s a starting point. Why can’t you do that?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, there hasn’t been fracking going on in this province for 15 years; it’s been going on for 30 or 40 years. There are 167,000 fracking jobs in this province. There’s not one documented instance of where the fracking itself led to contamination. Not one. In fact, the New West Partnership is undertaking to pool information precisely on the question she’s looking for, where the fracking companies will actually provide information on ingredients.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

School Council Teleconference

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that for the very first time in the history of this province the Minister of Education held a province-wide teleconference and spoke to 416 parents. I also understand that 370 parent-teacher associations were represented in that teleconference. To the Minister of Education: can you tell me what were the most important concerns that you heard from the participants in the teleconference?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, actually that was a very interesting event. We held a teleconference, and some 370 parent councils dialed in. Every parent council consists of some six, seven parents, so a large number. We assumed there could have been up to 2,000 parents on the line. Some of the issues that were brought up were the ones that we know as MLAs from our constituents: transportation, infrastructure. We did discuss PATs and had quite a split opinion on a number of issues. I will elaborate further.

2:30

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, given that this was a provincial conference attended by parents from all regions, can the minister tell me if he found that different areas had different concerns or if there were similar concerns throughout the province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the benefits of these teleconferences – and I'm going to hold them more often and more of them – is that parents get to hear other parents from different parts of the province and see some of the similarities and even perhaps share in the ways they address issues within jurisdictions. Yes, there are trends throughout the province. It's a vibrant province, a growing province. The population shifts a lot. So in high-growth areas, no matter where they are, you will find some of the pressures that occur are similar no matter where they are.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Given that the age of technology changes the way we do things and definitely changes the way we interact with each other, will the ability of parents and stakeholders to have direct discussions with the minister in any way diminish the roles of school boards?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, not at all, Mr. Speaker. I find us all to be partners in education. School boards play a very vital role, and so do parents and students and MLAs and others. As ministers and as policy makers in this Chamber, we can never have too much information. Hearing directly from parents and hearing directly from teachers and directly from students is just a smart thing to do, giving us more perspective, and by doing so, we'll develop much more reflective policies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Impaired Driving Legislation

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, on Monday night the transport minister stated that if parents, including myself, are distracted by our children while driving, we should think about putting them in a cage or not driving with them at all. This government sure has a firm grip on the realities of life in Alberta. What Albertans wouldn't mind seeing, though, is this government caged before they pass any more bills that penalize law-abiding Albertans like Bill 26. To the minister: given that the Supreme Court today found parts of the B.C. impaired driving law that Bill 26 is modelled after unconstitutional, will he refer this bill to an all-party committee so we can amend the law into one that actually saves lives?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, let me clarify something that the hon. member had talked about. The hon. member talked about that his kids were out of control in his vehicle, and he didn't have control. I said that it is imperative that the driver of the vehicle have control of the vehicle, and there may have to be different ways that that could take place.

As well, referring to the B.C. judgment . . .

The Speaker: I think we'll go on to the next one because of the time.

Mr. Anderson: Well, that's out of control.

Given that the overwhelming majority of drunk-driving deaths on our streets are caused by drivers over the .08 limit and given that only 2 per cent of all driver-related deaths are caused by those between .05 and .08, will this minister agree that a far more effective way to end drunk driving is to dramatically increase the number of checkstops on our roads and elevate penalties for those over the .08 limit rather than targeting responsible Albertans, who just aren't the problem, Minister?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how the hon. member can say that impaired driving is not a problem. [interjections] As we heard the hon. member say earlier . . .

Mr. Anderson: Point of order.

The Speaker: Please. A point of order has been raised. If you wouldn't debate the subject in the question period, we wouldn't have these points of order. Stick to policy.

Minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As mentioned earlier by the hon. member, 41,000 people have been convicted of impaired driving over .08 in the last five years, and a similar number have been charged and convicted.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: These are the same arguments that the federal Liberals used on the gun registry, Minister.

Again, to the same minister. Given that almost half of your caucus and the majority of Albertans are against this legislation and given the negative economic impact this new law will have and given it will do nothing to save lives, will you please take a breath, refer this to an all-party committee, and let's come up with a drunk-driving law that will save lives and leave law-abiding Albertans alone.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, I asked the hon. member to stay tuned because it is on the agenda paper tonight, and if he's there, he will hear that discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

LEED Standard for Buildings

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The leadership in energy and environmental design rating system, known as LEED, encourages the building industry to build responsibly with the environment in mind. To the Minister of Infrastructure. I'm hearing from the forest industry that the LEED process actually discriminates against regionally grown wood products. If this is the case, I would like to know: why do we continue to use the LEED process?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, our goal is to reduce the environmental impact of our public buildings and ensure our public infrastructure is responsible and sustainable. LEED is an independent third party review that's kind of the gold standard of excellence in this regard. You achieve LEED standards through a points system, and points are awarded for a lot of different things that you can do in the building, including water usage and energy efficiency and recycled materials. In Alberta we've adopted the LEED silver as a design standard, which is that you get a maximum of 100 points in the building and you get the silver standard.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. If, in fact, this is discriminating against Alberta wood products, then I would like to know: why do we continue using it?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for the very good question. I know it's a concern with the forestry industry, and I want to just say that many of my colleagues, and specifically the Minister of SRD, have been strong advocates for that forestry industry and on this topic. The forest industry is a critical industry to Alberta. It is true that some jurisdictions have moved towards having mandatory FSC-certified wood in their buildings. Alberta will not be making FSC wood mandatory in its buildings or with its proponents, and we actually have design guidelines that prescribe specific points to ensure regional materials so we make sure we are not going to discriminate against Alberta businesses.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lund: No, that's it. Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Primary Care Networks

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A two and a half year evaluation of the primary care initiative found that relative to patients not served by a primary care network, the primary care network generated considerable benefits to patients with respect to access to a family doctor, less use of an emergency room, and greater patient satisfaction, yet we hear planning from the Premier on developing family clinics rather than decisions to strength the development of primary care networks. To the health minister: why was this costly publicly funded report kept from the public?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. I couldn't agree more with respect to the success we've seen in improved care for Albertans through primary care networks. I continue to work closely with PCNs and with the Alberta Medical Association to look at ways we can better support PCNs in the future. That said, family care clinics are also a part of the evolution of primary health care in Alberta. We'll have more to say about that model as it is developed, but I want to make it clear to this House that family care clinics are not a substitute for PCNs.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. To the minister: what is the Premier trying to fix through her family clinic proposals and at what cost?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, this is very much a model in development. The Premier has talked about family care clinics as an enhancement to primary health care in Alberta. Perhaps in future, as this is developed, we'll be in a position to talk a bit more. But they will emphasize the use of other health professions to support physicians, notably nurse practitioners, pharmacists, and others. We intend them to offer standard hours of service in local communities, and we intend for communities to have a role in planning a family care clinic for their community.

Dr. Swann: Well, that's good to know, Mr. Speaker, and all of these changes would be welcomed by the primary care networks, I'm sure.

Just how committed is the government to primary care networks if it keeps them funded at 2003 levels? What is the plan to strengthen them and help their development?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, certainly, financial resources are an important part of the support that's offered to primary care networks and to all practitioners in primary health care. I would direct the member to discussions that we had earlier this week wherein I explained to him the work we were doing collaboratively with PCNs and with the Alberta Medical Association to look at what we can do to better support primary care networks in the future. We're very proud of the fact that there are 41 of these networks today, serving approximately 2.8 million Albertans.

2:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-answer period for today. Seventeen members were recognized; 100 questions and responses were provided.

In 30 seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

Members' Statements

(continued)

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, it was my hope to recognize you prior to the question period, but your colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar went on with such a lengthy campaign speech and introduction that you were precluded, so it's your shot now.

Mr. Hehr: I'm surprised by that, too.

Civil Liberties Award for Morinville Mothers

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, parents in Morinville have been fighting for months to secure their basic rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to a secular education option for their children. Thanks to Donna Hunter and other parents in the greater St. Albert region we're making progress toward securing a proper secular option for Alberta kids despite the reluctant, sluggish response from government and stubborn resistance from the entrenched faith-based school board.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Hunter along with Marjorie Kirsop, Gillian Schaefer Percy, Rayann Menard, Eva Scrimshaw, Stacey Buga, Carol Sparks, Jessica Logan, Colleen Moskalyk, Lara Thompson, and Tannis Caverly were granted a special civil liberties award from the Alberta Civil Liberties Research Centre. It's never easy to speak out against the status quo to correct an injustice, but Donna Hunter and her fellow parents have fought tenaciously for their kids. In a secular society no child should be compelled to be exposed to any religion day after day in the classroom.

I'm very pleased to offer my most sincere congratulations to Donna Hunter and the mothers of Morinville for the award, and I will continue to push the Minister of Education and the Premier to come up with a better solution than portables for secular education in the regions.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I applaud all the people involved in the fight for secular schooling in Morinville.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North. [interjections] Okay. [interjections] Okay. Let's hear from the hon. Member for Red Deer-North now.

Pan-Canadian Assessment Program Award

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to rise today and acknowledge the outstanding performance of grade 8 students in the Pan-Canadian assessment program, or PCAP. PCAP is a national standardized test that is conducted every three years. On Monday we learned Alberta's grade 8 students achieved the highest marks in the country in science and the second-highest in reading and third-highest in mathematics.

Alberta students are among the best in the country and are developing skills that will serve them well throughout life. This student success is due in part to excellent teachers, high-quality curriculum, outstanding resources, and a high-quality assessment program. Without this combination I would not be able to stand here and offer congratulations to all involved.

National testing complements Alberta's provincial assessment programs and classroom assessments. Participating in national testing gives Albertans the opportunity to see how our curriculum and students are doing in relation to other students across Canada. Sometimes we need to critically examine what we're doing, look at what other provinces are doing, and make adjustments. Albertans can be proud of how our students are doing.

If there are ways we can be even better, we should look at them, and we are looking at them. The government of Alberta is committed to the transformation of our education system for the 21st century. This is an exciting journey, and we are already starting from a very good place.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Democratic Reform

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we look across the Atlantic Ocean and monitor the economic storm which was created by a boggling amount of red ink from governments that continue to pile up debt like Greece, Italy, Spain, and France, we are reminded that we may face similar challenges in the not-too-distant future if we don't make the right choices now. Margaret Thatcher said it best. "The problem with socialism is that eventually you run out of other people's money." It suppresses the strength and freedoms of individuals and their communities. Even worse, it creates mountains of debt that our future generations will not be able to pay.

It appears our government is committed to similar policies. We are in the midst of running our fourth deficit. The spending is not sustainable. Our savings are plunging right before our eyes. Over the past week we have listened to ministers declare that they need to increase revenues from Alberta taxpayers, this after it was revealed that the government received record revenues this past year. It is clear that this government has developed a massive spending problem coupled with poor management.

This Premier and her government have shown that they are committed to a centralized decision-making process that takes away control from individuals and communities and puts it in the hands of big government. They created the Alberta Health superboard, that has undermined our health care system as we have seen a deterioration of many of our services while spending has increased. They passed Bill 50, which gives the Premier the power to decide on billion dollar transmission lines that will punish Alberta ratepayers and trample on landowners' property rights. The Premier has shown that she is anything but conservative by pushing a tax-and-spend agenda on Albertans and infringing on the rights of free Albertans.

It's time for a government in the province that knows what the fundamental principles are to ensure a strong and free country. A constitution for a free and prosperous people must protect the life, liberty, and property of its people and respect the rule of law. These are the fundamental principles of peace, freedom, and prosperity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Grain Marketing

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For far too long grain producers in Alberta and western Canada have been restricted in the way that they can sell and market their wheat and barley. While farmers in eastern Canada have always enjoyed the freedom to market and sell their grain products however and to whomever they choose, western farmers were restricted to selling their wheat and barley through the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and applaud the government of Canada's decision to provide choice for western Canadian wheat and barley growers. On Monday Bill C-18, the Marketing Freedom for Grain Farmers Act, was passed in the House of Commons. This bill removes the Canadian Wheat Board's monopoly on western Canadian wheat and barley as of August 1, 2012. Grain producers will now be free to sell through the Canadian Wheat Board or to whomever they choose.

Alberta's wheat and barley producers deserve the right to freely market their own grain products. They make incredible investments and take great risks, and they deserve the same freedom to market their products as other farmers and Canadian businesses are allowed. Alberta farmers are some of the best entrepreneurs in the world, and they must be allowed to adapt and react to changing markets and new market opportunities.

Not only does the passage of Bill C-18 benefit Alberta's grain producers, Mr. Speaker, but the value-added industry will improve as well, with more direct marketing opportunities between farmers and processors. In fact, we already had a recent announcement of a $6 million expansion to Rahr Malting in Alix in my constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka as a direct result of Bill C-18.

Marketing freedom will enable producers to participate in a competitive marketplace and maximize their returns. Alberta, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia farmers produce more than 80 per cent of the wheat and 90 per cent of all the barley in western Canada. Mr. Speaker, it's about time they were given the freedom to choose how to sell and market their products.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Secretariat for Action on Homelessness

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago leaders in community organizations, foundations, faith-based groups, and municipalities throughout Alberta requested support and resources to assist an estimated 11,000 homeless Albertans. At that time as the minister of housing and urban affairs I was privileged to work with these outstanding community leaders and made a commitment to address the underlying causes that lead to homelessness. A 12-member secretariat was appointed to create A Plan for Alberta, Ending Homelessness in 10 Years, and I'm pleased to say that this plan was endorsed by all members of this Assembly.

Today we are seeing great results. As of March 31 this year close to 4,000 homeless Albertans have obtained permanent housing and the supports they need to help them break the cycle of homelessness, and this success rate will continue. Over 700 people have done very well with transitioning into their communities and are now living with a higher level of independence. In fact, over 80 per cent continue to remain housed. As well, shelter use in Alberta is down by 6 per cent. You can see that the plan is working, Mr. Speaker.

As the weather becomes colder, our thoughts naturally turn to those who do not have a safe and warm home to go to at the end of the day. This plan is helping people to stay warm and safe in the short term, and it is also helping them with breaking the patterns that led to their homelessness. We are on target to achieve the bold objective of ending homelessness in Alberta by 2019, and because of the 10-year plan Alberta is now recognized as a leader in Canada in its approach to addressing homelessness.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the members of the Assembly now join me in thanking the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness. Their outstanding leadership and their commitment to the implementation of A Plan for Alberta, Ending Homelessness in 10 Years is greatly appreciated.

Thank you.

2:50 Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition which reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to consider increasing the funding to the Ministry of Education so that sustainable and adequate funding is provided to address the needs of every student, every day, no exceptions.

The petition has 654 signatures.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. chair of the Legislative Offices Committee.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I have two tablings today of reports by the Information and Privacy Commissioner entitled Report on the Use of "Paramount" Clauses in Acts and Regulations to Override the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and Report on the Government of Alberta's Management of Ministerial Emails. These reports are being released today by the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and the accompanying news releases are attached to each report. Copies are being distributed to all the members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the second annual report of the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness. Three years ago this government made a commitment to address the underlying causes that lead to homelessness by creating and endorsing A Plan for Alberta, Ending Homelessness in 10 Years. The Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness developed this plan in 2009. In the first two years of the plan thousands of homeless Albertans have been helped to reclaim lives of dignity and self-reliance. The plan has also pushed Alberta to the forefront as a national leader in ending homelessness. I table this report as a record of the great work that has been achieved under this plan to address and strengthen the lives of the homeless and to say thank you to the secretariat for homelessness as we work with them to evolve to an interagency council to involve communities in an even stronger way than they have been already in addressing this important issue for our society and community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is entitled Persons With Developmental Disabilities Appeal Panel, Statement of Mandate and Roles. The second is the judicial review that I referred to in my introductions and in the preamble. When disabled children reach age 18, they frequently run into a government wall.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, four tablings today. The first two tablings are done on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition. Tabling 1 is the minutes from the town of Hardisty council meeting held on February 28, 2007, in which council approves up to six persons to attend the Battle River-Wainwright PC association annual MLA dinner.

The second tabling is the agenda and minutes of a meeting of the Holy Spirit Catholic schools on September 23, 2009, in which the board approves the purchase of up to four tickets for the southern Premier's dinner on October 8, 2009.

The following two tablings are from constituents of mine. The first is an e-mail response from Doug Battaglia regarding my questions around the Alberta building envelope report. He notes that as a board member and condo owner their buildings are 11 and 12 years old, and they're still finding new issues even now.

My last tabling is from Anna Davidson, which is a copy of a letter to Minister Klimchuk explaining her delight. She wants to sing the praises of the importance of Theatre Alberta's Artstrek program and thanks the government for their support of that program.

Thank you very much.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I want to table some documents that relate to an exchange in the Assembly yesterday just to ensure that protocols are followed appropriately. These are documents that relate to the exchange between the Leader of the Opposition and some cabinet ministers, and they are copies of quite an extensive article that is entitled Alberta Town Official Used Office Email to Solicit Votes in Tory Race.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the appropriate copies of a release issued by my office today, November 30, 2011, announcing that the Hon. John (Jack) Major, an Albertan and former justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, will conduct an independent review of MLA compensation and benefits, and also included is the mandate for the review.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of documents that were received through a FOIP request completed by the Alberta Federation of Labour regarding meetings that had not been accurately described to either the media or the Ethics Commissioner around plans between the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers and government officials to devise a communications plan to convince Albertans that fracking is an entirely safe activity.

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. Government House Leader, a purported point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against Nonmembers

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today during question period in an exchange involving the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition he raised a series of questions that related to, essentially, allegations about, and I think I'm quoting when I say, quote, the misuse of public funds. End quote. In doing so, he linked his comments to creating an aspersion against people who are easily identified by the public and are not present in the Assembly.

I would suggest to you that that offends the practices of this House, particularly page 121 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, at 409(7). "A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it." It is considered to be the usual practice of this House that we do not make attacks on people who are not in this House and cannot defend themselves here.

I think it's fair to say that the questions that were raised today with respect to donations and that were supported, I would suggest, just a few moments ago by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre tabling documents purporting to be minutes which would allow for or approve payments – with a modicum of research the hon. members could have determined the accuracy of the aspersions that were being made. Even in that circumstance, I'm certain that it would not be appropriate for them to make aspersions against those individuals in this House.

In fact, if there are any concerns about the propriety of any person making a political donation – and there are rules about who can and who cannot make political donations. If there are any questions about the propriety of a particular action or donation, there is indeed an appropriate process to do that. The Chief Electoral Officer has the authority to investigate. The Chief Electoral Officer is an officer of this Assembly. It would be appropriate to refer any such allegation, even if they didn't want to do any further investigation on their own, to the hon. legislative officer for investigation.

Instead, what we see time after time after time, Mr. Speaker, is people taking – there was a tabling of a newspaper article today with respect to an earlier question, which again relates to allegations that are being made involving people outside of the House who cannot speak to or defend their actions in the House and casting aspersions on their character.

Mr. Speaker, I'm always reluctant to raise points of order, but it is absolutely appropriate from time to time for us to refocus and to understand the true privilege that we have in this House to attend and to debate in an appropriate way matters that are of public importance to Alberta and, indeed, not just the opportunity but the duty of members of the opposition and private members on the government side to call government to account. Absolutely. But in doing so, there are, I think, levels of decorum that must be respected. Question period should not be used in a bullying way, and it should not be used in a way which casts aspersion on the character of members of this House or of people outside the House who are not able to defend themselves.

3:00

I would suggest the tone of questions that we've had – and it's not inappropriate to ask questions and hold government to account by any stretch, but it is quite inappropriate to do less than reasonable research into a matter and then, based on a newspaper article or even minutes that they might have read, assume that something has happened and then cast an aspersion in this House as though that was fact.

People do listen, actually, to question period, and when they hear a statement made, they may assume that it is true. That's another one of our rules, in fact, Speaker, that the question should be based on something that's accurate. It "cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion . . . must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations." That's Beauchesne 409(3).

There are a number of other citations I could make, Mr. Speaker, but my point is that the tone of question period is getting to be such that we are seeing day after day after day and certainly in the hon. Leader of the Opposition's questions today people ignoring the proprieties and casting aspersions on the character of members and the character of people outside the House who cannot defend themselves, which is my point of order today.

I think we really ought to consider what we're doing, who's hearing what we're doing, and what effect it might have on people's impression of this institution, of democracy itself. We want to encourage people to participate in democracy. Why would anybody participate in democracy if what they see us doing is denigrating each other, casting aspersion on each other's character, dragging down public officials without the opportunity for defence, and making statements that are based on newspaper articles and other documents which have not been investigated when there is an appropriate way to deal with those particular queries?

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader on this matter.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't agree more with the Government House Leader's last statements. However, persons were not named in the questions that were brought forward, and only factual references were made. As far as the citation that the member has listed in Beauchesne, page 121, I think he was specifically looking at 409(7): "A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it."

Now, that just didn't happen, Mr. Speaker. The exact questions that were asked talked about the town of Hardisty. Well, that is not individual persons that have been named here. He was very clear to say that the town had voted to send as many as six people to a particular function, and that, in fact, is factual as well and is documented in the sessional papers that I tabled.

So as far as imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons, that did not happen, particularly those who are not in the House. They weren't named.

Asking the Chief Electoral Officer to investigate: well, I suspect he already has in these instances, which is why we have the information in front of us and knew where to look.

Now, calling the government to account, Mr. Speaker, is at the core of the exchange today. Given that donations to political parties are tax receiptable, and that means that Albertans do not have the benefit of the money that would have otherwise flowed to government coffers and provided programs for Albertans, they do have a keen interest in where that forgone revenue is and what it has been used for. That is at the basis of the questions that were being asked. That is forgone revenue, in some cases as much as 75 per cent of the money that was voted to be used to purchase tickets in those two examples that were given to the Speaker. So it's perfectly within order to be questioning the government on what it did with forgone revenue, and that is what we were attempting to do.

I did actually write down and carry around with me the Speaker's request to pay particular attention to certain sections. Looking at M and M, that was concerning internal party matters, which is not part of the discussion today; election expenses, which is not part of the discussion today. But the third part that's mentioned is party expenses, which I suppose could be interpreted as part of what was being questioned today. Under 410(17) "Ministers may not be questioned with respect to party responsibilities." Well, no one did question them with respect to party responsibilities, so 410(17) is not in play here. The last reference that you used was House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 497, that the Speaker can rule any question out of order, and there's no dispute about that, Mr. Speaker.

But I think what is at the heart of this is an attempt to question the government on money that would have been taxed, and those taxes would have been used to fund programs. That is for us to be questioning the government as to how that money is being used, and we were trying to find out how that money was being used and were not successful. So there is no point of order.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we could have the debate forever on this particular subject, so we'll just listen very attentively to what I would like to provide by way of thoughts on this matter. I hope you'll listen attentively, anyway.

All right. The Leader of the Official Opposition:

Mr. Speaker, yet another abrogation of responsibility from the minister.

Just park that thought for a second. That's directed to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. I intend on coming back to that statement.

Given that town councils and school boards are so worried about protecting their funding that they feel compelled to misuse public funds . . .

Misuse public funds.

. . . will the Minister of Justice finally direct Elections Alberta to conduct a full investigation on how many of these illegal contributions are being made and why?

Well, so we've got misuse of public funds and illegal contributions.

Number one, my understanding of the law that we follow in this country and in this province is that an action may be found illegal if you have been charged with something, prosecuted, gone through the courts, and a decision has been rendered that it is illegal. I am not necessarily saying that this wouldn't happen if this would have been followed, but to my knowledge no such case has existed yet in the province of Alberta.

It's very correct that persons were not mentioned, but there's a clean sweep in here of town councils and school boards, and as I understand it, there are about 350 municipalities in this province and probably, Minister of Education, you've got another hundred school boards?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Sixty-two.

The Speaker: Sixty-two. So that's over 400 times eight or nine, nearly 4,000 public servants at one level or another, I guess, that come under this wave: "are so worried about protecting their funding that they feel compelled to misuse public funds."

Then there's the interesting role of the Chief Electoral Officer. But before I get to the Chief Electoral Officer and the abrogation of responsibility from the minister, how can one conclude that because someone makes a contribution to a political party, they're actually going to get a tax receipt for it? How is there a direct connection that because you make a donation to a political party, you're going to get a tax receipt? I know many people who make donations who don't want tax receipts. I just throw that into the air of this whole discussion with respect to this.

3:10

And then there's the question of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, the act itself, page 37, section 53. I come back to "yet another abrogation of responsibility from the minister," in this case the question to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Section 53 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act reads, "No prosecution shall be instituted under this Act without the consent of the Chief Electoral Officer." So how can the minister initiate such a thing if the laws of Alberta say that no prosecution shall be instituted under this act without the consent of the Chief Electoral Officer?

I have no doubt at all that there will be additional questions with respect to this whole matter in days to come, but I do believe the following should play a role in it as well. The Legislative Assembly of Alberta has, due to its wisdom in years gone by, appointed a number of legislative officers who have been given direct responsibility to do certain things, have direct responsibility, in fact even have laws, acts, that usually govern each and every one of them. They are officers of the Legislative Assembly. If a member has a concern about another member, he may make a petition to the Ethics Commissioner. He or she may make a petition to each of the officers, and investigations can occur.

It would be really helpful if, in fact, there was, quote, an illegal act that perhaps might be drawn to the attention of the Chief Electoral Officer. If the Chief Electoral Officer investigates such and makes a suggestion that there should be a prosecution, then he would be giving that guidance to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. But the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: if I read the law that this Assembly has passed, it says, "No prosecution shall be instituted under this Act without the consent of the Chief Electoral Officer."

I have no doubt that these kinds of questions will continue to come. I just really would like people to make better use of the words. How does one know in their question that there actually was a misuse of public funds? There may be a suggested misuse of public funds, yes, but let's have the facts.

Yesterday or the day before we had an incredible situation where a person gets up and accuses a minister or somebody in his constituency of getting a whole big grant because somebody sent an e-mail or something. Then an explanation was given, and everyone backs off. Why even go through that heartburn? Why not just ask the question? There are only 83 of us, well, 82 excepting me. Talk to one another. Maybe even solve these things. Or does it have to be a political theatre?

Let's talk about policy, for crying out loud. Let's get some facts on the table before we proceed. The matter is finished.

The next item has to do with the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Ms Blakeman: Standing Order 13(2), Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I've explained it all.

Ms Blakeman: Are you refusing me the ability to question?

The Speaker: No, I'm not refusing. I just wish you would listen to what I said.

Ms Blakeman: I listened very carefully. I even took notes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Go ahead. Go ahead.

Ms Blakeman: Your rulings are always very complex, and I want to make sure that I understand exactly what you've said and how I need to proceed in the future.

Do I understand, from your references to the number of people that would be in the school board at any one time or the number of people that might be elected to municipal councils at any one time, that that means that we do not need to refer to specific persons anymore to qualify under the citations; rather, any reference to an organization that contains individuals will satisfy the Speaker?

He seemed to be saying that although there weren't names mentioned, somehow mentioning school boards – and then you went on to talk about how many individuals would be in the school boards. I understood from what was being said there that persons didn't need to be named anymore according to the citation. So I look for clarification on that.

Secondly, is the Justice minister not empowered under the government act to solve issues by changing legislation, including the Election Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act?

My third question is: in section 16 of the financial disclosures and contributions act it sets out what is a prohibited contribution. It does name a number of particular organizations, including prohibited corporations – that appears on page 5 of the legislation under section 1 and in a number of subs – to come up with in (1) that a prohibited corporation includes under (1)(iv) "a school board under the School Act," which would mean that contributions coming from a school board under the act to a political party would be prohibited under this section, and also a provincial corporation, which I believe is where municipalities lie.

When the Speaker wonders about how this is determined, is it not determined through the legislation that points out that it's illegal for a school board under the School Act to make a contribution and also for a provincial corporation? If I could just get clarification under 13(2) on those three questions, please.

The Speaker: The second question you asked has nothing to do with what we talked about today, changing legislation. Of course the question is always appropriate, but that wasn't raised today in any of the discussion that we had. If a member wants to stand up and is asking a minister of the Crown if they're prepared to advocate the change of legislation, that's very much an appropriate question.

Ms Blakeman: I'm just looking for your clarification on your points.

The Speaker: No, no. You're trying to filibuster an afternoon where there's government . . .

Ms Blakeman: No, I'm not, sir. I'm looking for clarification from you.

The Speaker: Well, okay. We'll get it in writing in the next couple of days.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'll keep this very brief. Standing Order 23(h) and (i) in particular: "makes allegations against another Member" and "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." This is with regard to the transport minister earlier today. He clearly said that I did not understand or do not feel that impaired driving was a problem. Clearly, that's not what I said, Mr. Minister.

In the question in question – and I'll be done – I said specifically:

Given that the overwhelming majority of drunk-driving deaths on our streets are caused by drivers over the .08 limit and given that only 2 per cent of all driver-related deaths are caused by those between .05 and .08, will this minister agree that a far more effective way to end drunk driving is to dramatically increase the number of checkpoints on our roads and elevate penalties for those over the .08 limit rather than targeting responsible Albertans, who just aren't the problem?

I think it's pretty clear that I do feel very strongly that impaired driving is a problem, but I differ very strongly with the government on how they're going about addressing this problem, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I think that even from the member's argument it's pretty clear that he thinks that we should be putting more enforcement in place on the roads to deal with the impaired drivers that are over .08, but he's not so concerned about the impaired drivers that are under .08. I think that was the nature of the comment that was made by the hon. Minister of Transportation. It's clear from the discussion and the debate that's been in the House. In fact, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View quoted extensively from a report which indicated that alcohol impairs the functions which are necessary for driving and that that impairment starts well below .08.

That's been the gist, actually, of the debate that's been in the House under Bill 26, about impaired driving. Clearly, the distinction here is: obviously, people are opposed to impaired driving, but the hon. member seems to think that it's more important to deal with impaired driving for those who are over .08 but not important to deal with impaired drivers who are under .08.

I think that was clearly the gist of the comments back and forth and, quite frankly, an exchange which would have been much more appropriately dealt with later on tonight as we debate Bill 26 in committee.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Okay. Well, we've heard what the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere said, but the hon. Minister of Transportation said:

Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how the hon. member can say that impaired driving is not a problem. As we heard the hon. member say earlier . . .

And then there was a point of order.

The point of order was raised by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Is there a reason why that was done, according to the Blues? I heard the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, so there's an error in the Blues if you go and check the Blues. [interjections] Well, it doesn't make any difference. It's a moot point.

I repeat what the hon. Minister of Transportation said: "I'm not sure how the member can say that impaired driving is not a problem." Well, I see what the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere said, and I think that was too quick a response from the Minister of Transportation. I'll accept that. We'll clarify it that way by accepting it but also providing another caution.

3:20

These kinds of questions, once again, are part of debate. They're not dealing with policy. If people stuck to questions of policy instead of sticking to questions of debate when there's ample opportunity in the legislative agenda to deal with this – it is scheduled, as I understand, for committee review, perhaps this afternoon, perhaps this evening. It has already cleared second reading. Is this not correct? Is it not correct that the major debate has been done?

Now we're dealing with very specific questions. We have committee assigned for that. Time is scheduled for it. This is not the purview and the purpose of question period at this point in time in the motion of a bill. If members continue to do this and members continue to deal with personalities instead of policies, we will have these little sojourns every afternoon at 3 o'clock for 10 or 15 or 20 minutes. Some people will use it to try and filibuster our Routine. We've seen this happen on previous occasions in the last couple of years in this Assembly. It's up to the chair to try and make sure that that is understood and guide it through.

There's a lot of business that has to be done. Why don't we just deal with policy for once and see if it works? Just try it to see if it works. Forget about personality, and forget about debate in the question period. It would be a novel approach.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Adjournment of Fall Session

27. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the schedule for the 2011 fall sitting as outlined in the calendar published pursuant to Standing Order 3 be modified to allow for the fall sitting to be extended beyond the first Thursday in December until such time as or when the Government House Leader advises the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded, and at such time the Assembly stands adjourned.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this motion is such that it is not debatable, so I'm going to call the question.

[Government Motion 27 carried]

Committee Membership Changes

28. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the following changes to the Standing Committee on Education be approved: that Ms Pastoor replace Mr. Zwozdesky, that Ms Pastoor replace Mr. Zwozdesky as chair.

The Speaker: This motion is debatable.

Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 28 carried]

Committee Membership Change

29. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the following change to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing be approved: that Mr. Zwozdesky replace Dr. Brown.

The Speaker: This motion is not debatable under Standing Order 52(3), so I'll call the question on the motion.

[Government Motion 29 carried]

Information and Privacy Commissioner Appointment

30. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the Select Special Information and Privacy Commissioner Search Committee report and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Jill Clayton be appointed Information and Privacy Commissioner for the province of Alberta for a five-year term commencing February 1, 2012.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion. All those who wish to participate, please indicate.

[Government Motion 30 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I call the Committee of the Whole to order, but before we get into business, there is an item that I want to deal with.

Chair's Ruling Inflammatory Language

The Chair: Hon. members, yesterday during the Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill 23, the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011, the hon. Minister of Education raised a point of order concerning comments made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. The comment exchange can be found on pages 1465 to 1468 of the Alberta Hansard for November 29, 2011.

At page 1466 of Hansard for yesterday the Member for Calgary-Glenmore references atrocities in Europe, especially the Ukrainian Holodomor, and attempts to compare them with a perceived threat to property rights in this province. He states on page 1466 that “many of the acts that were taken in Europe during World War II and other times very much were brutal acts that didn’t respect property rights.” His next sentence is, “There are many areas in these bills that have no respect for property rights.” The chair believes that the reasonable person would conclude that the member is trying to compare legislation concerning land assembly to the Holodomor although the member does not say it expressly.

It is the chair’s responsibility to rule on this matter in the committee where it occurred, as stated in Standing Order 65(2)(a) and House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, at page 922.

In the chair’s view, comparing some of the greatest tragedies in history to the legislation concerning protections of property rights in Alberta would trivialize those horrific events. The chair can well understand that members and members of the public may find the rhetoric offensive and insensitive.

With the great privileges that we as members enjoy permitting freedom of speech in this Assembly comes great responsibility. Members have shown their respect for the victims of atrocities in Europe. It reflects on all members when one member can be viewed as trivializing those horrific events.

On my personal note here, as recently as 1954 my family suffered from the harsh Communist rule and the deadly collectivization programs. My dear grandmother died of starvation and sickness during such social re-engineering enforcement of a Communist government.

In my view, communication is to say things for others to hear and listen to. It’s not about what one says but about what others hear and feel or understand. While the chair finds it difficult, given the context in which the words of the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore were spoken, in this case to find a point of order, the chair will give the Member for Calgary-Glenmore an opportunity to do the honourable thing and briefly clarify his comments from yesterday should he choose to do so.

The chair would also like to note that a similar incident occurred on May 16, 2006, when a now former member during debate on a bill used terms like Nazis, Stalinism, and fascism, Alberta Hansard for that day, page 1633. The next day the member apologized to the Assembly and withdrew the words, Hansard for May 17, 2006, page 1649.

Hon. member, do you wish to make a clarification?

3:30

Mr. Hinman: Very much, Mr. Chairman. I sincerely apologize. If anybody would think that I would ever trivialize any of these atrocities in history, I absolutely have no intentions of that. I go to those ceremonies to remember those tragic events, and they are burned in my heart. They’re burned in my mind. I did not in any way mean to correlate the two when I was talking about property rights. It was merely a discussion on property rights. They’re paramount for our freedoms, and the atrocities that have happened are never to be trivialized. I apologize if the chair took it that way, that I was trivializing those events.

The Chair: Well, thank you, hon. member.

I just want to conclude by saying that in our long-respected parliamentary law-making process the committee stage of a bill is for speaking and debating on its details; namely, the title, the preamble, and the clauses of the bill. If we all focus on this principle at the committee stage, then we will make our law-making more effective, efficient, and show respect for our constituents who elected us for the task.

With that, I want to conclude, and we will go on with the business of the day in Committee of the Whole.

Bill 27 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2)

The Chair: Hon. members, any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold-Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We had an opportunity to discuss the supplementary supply estimates yesterday in Bill 27, and certainly I have at this point in time a number of questions not related to what we had placed on the public record yesterday. Certainly, I note with interest the changes in how supplementary estimates are presented, how the information is presented to the Assembly, how the transfers with the government reorganization are organized. I note with interest the responsibilities that are outlined in this bill that relate to it regarding the budget presentation methodology, how this again relates to the Government Organization Act and the supply votes and the estimates amounts that we are discussing.

[Mr. Zwodzesky in the chair]

Now, it’s noteworthy that we state here, Mr. Chairman:

The supply votes and estimates amounts in the 2011-12 Supplementary Estimates are consistent with the fiscal plan amounts presented in the Second Quarter Fiscal Update. The relationship between the amounts in the two reports is determined by the consolidations procedures outlined in the . . . 2011-12 Government Estimates, and the requirements of the fiscal plan basis of reporting set out in the Government Accountability Act.

Now, that’s fine, but when we look at the second-quarter fiscal update, which I had referenced, on page 10 at the very bottom is a note or, I could say, a caution.

Actual results for the first six months of 2011-12 (April 1 to September 30) are not being published in the 2011-12 Second Quarter Fiscal Update, as there was insufficient time to accurately assimilate and reconcile numbers from the old to the new ministry structure established by the October 12, 2011 government re-organization.

But here in the supplementary estimates that were presented to us last week, we have this statement that, of course, the supply votes and the estimates amounts are consistent with the fiscal plan amounts presented in the second-quarter fiscal update. Well, I certainly hope that would be the case, but when you look at the fine print, it’s not. That’s a sign of the budgeting, or the lack of proper budgeting, Mr. Chairman, that this government is famous for.

Now, with that comment I would like to move on. We can certainly see the schedule of amounts to be voted. Again, it is noteworthy that Health is not on this list. That’s an omission, as I recall, that is not a usual practice of the government. There are adjustments approved by reorganization. We have original estimates here and restated original estimates. I’m assuming that all these adjustments are being made and that they would certainly correspond with what is in the designation and transfer of responsibility regulations set out.

Have I had an opportunity to go through this and see what was taken from one department and placed in another? No, I have not. I do have confidence that if I were to do that, those amounts that are in this bill would certainly reconcile, or at least I hope they would almost reconcile – I'll use the word "almost" reconcile – with the Order in Council 440/2011, which sets all this out.

Now, again, we have the adjustments made and approved by the Treasury Board. I must confess, Mr. Chairman, I can't keep track of who's on the Treasury Board these days. I don't know who's in and who's out, but the Treasury Board is a very, very important and powerful and influential group within the government caucus.

You know, there are a lot of adjustments approved here, and again I'm going to go on the record and talk for a moment about the openness and transparency of this government and how naive I was. I thought at one point I could go to the Legislative Library downstairs and look up the Treasury Board minutes. I thought that would be a public document since it's taxpayers' money we're talking about here, and we are talking about millions and millions of dollars. I quickly found out, and I was disappointed – as the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo would say, I was profoundly disappointed – in this government that the Treasury Board minutes, which I can only assume, Mr. Chairman, are the details around the Treasury Board's decisions on why money is spent and why it is transferred.

Dr. Morton: You would be more disappointed if you saw the minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: I would be more disappointed, hon. member, if I saw the minutes? Are you implying that these decisions are made . . .

Some Hon. Members: Through the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I can only assume that these decisions are made very quickly and the minutes are very limited or sparse. If that's the case, I can understand why after four years there is an $11 billion deficit and we have this promise that, well, it may be controlled, it may be limited, it may be restricted. I'm not so sure that this government has the discipline to do that.

I think the hon. Minister of Energy agrees with me because he had a period of time, of course, Mr. Chairman, as Minister of Finance, and it was very, very difficult. In fact, he was so frustrated with this government's ability to budget that I think he left the cabinet. Now, I could be wrong on that.

3:40

Dr. Morton: You're completely wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm completely wrong on that. Okay. I stand corrected, Mr. Chairman. It could have been for other reasons.

Certainly, there are quite a number of changes here. It would be interesting, and I would read the Treasury Board minutes if I was given an opportunity to. I think there are lots of people who would. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation would probably read them sentence by sentence, minute by minute, if they were given the privilege of looking at them.

Now, I'm going to go specifically to Culture and Community Services. We see that the supplementary request here in the bill is $20.6 million. There's $6 million here, a little bit better, for the Canada's Sports Hall of Fame. There's $500,000 for the Citadel Theatre, support for the GO Community Centre. I understand these amounts. I don't know if it's for all three or just the GO Centre, but the funding is offset by a transfer from the federal government's infrastructure stimulus plan. We've got support here for Fort Calgary.

We have support for the Ukrainian Canadian Archives and Museum of Alberta, $3.1 million. I believe that's going to be sited on the east end of Jasper Avenue on the north side of the street. I think that's the location. I'm curious why that amount couldn't have been in the original budget. But it's in there now, and I would like an explanation as to why that was added. You know, the former Premier was very fine and very proud to represent Albertans who have Ukrainian ancestry, and he has every right to be proud to be the first person of Ukrainian ancestry to be elected Premier. The gentleman worked very, very hard in the five years that he was Premier, in my view. Why that couldn't have been included in the budget from before, I don't know. This is what confuses me about this request.

Support for the Cantos national music centre, a provincial contribution towards the construction, $3.5 million. Again, why can't we put that in the original budget estimates? Why do we need to do that at this point?

Now, the GO Community Centre, you know, was presented by the former Progressive Conservative candidate in Edmonton-Gold Bar in the last election, who campaigned on fiscal responsibility. We've got to control government spending. The same gentleman ran for mayor here, ran on keeping the airport open, I believe, was one of the main arrows in his political quiver. Now I'm surprised and disappointed to see this support for the GO Community Centre. I thought it was already constructed. I was left with the impression that it had already been paid for, but here we have this additional request for $3.2 million. I'm surprised.

I was at a public meeting over in the constituency of Edmonton-Riverview, and many, many people, Mr. Chairman, talked about the GO Centre. They didn't think that it was a good example of urban planning. It had created issues around parking, congestion, and the overall design of it was certainly questioned. I listened with interest to these constituents from Edmonton-Riverview, who were talking to the hon. member. I listened and I thought: they are taxpayers; they are making a contribution to this community centre, and somehow they felt they weren't consulted. They weren't consulted in the design or the location. They seemed to think that this all of a sudden appeared overnight, and they didn't have the community input that they wanted. Yet we are asking them, through their taxes, to pony up another $3.2 million to complete the GO Community Centre.

I do know people that go there to exercise and play basketball, and they think it's a great facility, and they have a good time there. It's adjacent to an LRT location.

But if we're going to practice fiscal responsibility, particularly those who are promoting these facilities, then they should abide by that. It's not long since we had budget estimates here with an additional requisition for this GO Community Centre. So these people that run around and talk about fiscal responsibility: whenever you give them a chance to act, they fail. They're back here looking for $3 million at a time. We're going to have at least a $3 billion deficit this year. Now, I thought, Mr. Chairman, it was going to be a lot lower, but financial situations have changed, particularly with our investment income. Who knows? But that's how it is.

People, in my view, that are promoting this GO Community Centre don't practice what they preach, and that's fiscal responsibility. If you have a budget to build something, well, then you build it, and you don't come back at a time of considerable financial uncertainty looking for more money.

The $3 million? Well, in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar $3 million would go a long way toward school lunch programs for a lot of the schools that need them, not only in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar but in other constituencies as well. There are, unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, children going to school hungry in our fine province. I think we can do a lot better. I really, really do.

Certainly, when we move on to Education and we see the $107 million amount for the reinstatement of operating support to public and separate school boards – we started working on this back in April. I was really proud to see Vanessa Sauvé introduced in the Assembly earlier today. She is a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar now with the redistribution. The hon. Deputy Chair of Committees would be her current representative, but with boundary redistribution that neighbourhood is moving into Edmonton-Gold Bar. She and her neighbours, to their credit, who saw right from the beginning the mistake that was made in not providing this additional funding where it is needed, in public education, organized a rally. It went something like this. Don't pass the ball. They really started the campaign to have funding restored.

The hon. Premier to her credit did restore the funding, but it should have been restored early so that school boards could use that money to plan for staff and for classrooms in September. This is really unfortunate. The right thing was finally done here, and this is a part of this requisition that I can certainly support.

3:50

Now, there's $317,000 in here that I know this is going to make the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo's hair stand up. I can guarantee that. This is the reinstatement of operating support to accredited private schools. The hon. member was asking some very interesting questions on the role of private schools and what support they should get from the public purse. I'm listening with interest to his very good questions and to the answers that are being provided or the responses to his questions. I'm not going to give them credit by saying that they are answers. That certainly is an amount that is noteworthy.

Environment and Water. There's $13 million for climate change, and the funding is offset by a transfer from the federal government. This is quite interesting. I'm looking forward to hearing from the Minister of Environment and Water on the conference that is being organized in South Africa. I think it's in Durban, but I'm not sure. Certainly, the travel expenses for that conference would not be included in that amount. But we will wait, and we will hear back from the hon. minister.

Now, Human Services. Wow. What a big department. It includes everything, the Workers' Compensation Board, occupational health and safety, the Labour Relations Board. There's a lot of stuff in that department. There is an $18 million supplementary estimate here. I certainly find it quite interesting. You know, the learned gentleman across the way, from Edmonton-Whitemud: his legal skills are going to come in handy in this department. He has responsibility for a lot of different statutes that used to belong in what was children's services. You have everything from the Child and Family Services Authorities Act to the Architects Act to the Burial of the Dead Act, Employment Standards Code, Family and Community Support Services Act. [interjection] I'm sorry, sir? Yes, the Burial of the Dead Act is under your authority.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers to the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It is indeed a privilege to follow up with a few more comments regarding the supplementary budget that we're going through right now. It was very interesting to listen to some of the comments from the esteemed MLA for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I was particularly intrigued by his comments regarding minutes from the Treasury Board and the like.

You know, I guess one thing I'd like to sort of see in a government, maybe this government or future governments, whatever that may be, Mr. Chair, is that we could go to a system where in almost every government meeting that people are participating in there is a record. We could go on to posting these minutes in a public way in order that people can access this material. I'd almost like to see a soup-to-nuts approach, everything from ministerial meetings to the price it costs for staples in Legislative Offices. I think technology is available that would allow us to incorporate this in a relatively easy fashion, that would allow the citizens of Alberta to be able to participate more freely and to understand the decisions that are made, hopefully with their best interests at heart, and to see the actual decision-making process close up.

Oftentimes I believe the citizenry, even people on this side of the House, are one minute trying to keep a handle on some of the issues of the day, and then almost without warning, without notice, the government will go in another direction or will introduce a bill that we haven't seen coming, primarily because we haven't been informed of the process. My argument would be that if we haven't been informed of the process, I would doubt very much that the average citizen has been informed of the process and the ability to question, to take part in, and to really engage themselves in what today and tomorrow holds for Albertans. I guess that is my hope, and that was derived primarily from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's comments.

Also, if we look at the supplementary supply estimates – I was talking about these with my good friend from Calgary-Glenmore on the amount of detail provided in these supplementary supplies. We were both commenting on how it is rather scant of details and scant of information to actually assist us in doing our jobs. Primarily we were talking about the supplementary additions to the Education budget. Of course, if we go back, there was a decision by this government to cut educational funding by, I believe, $107 million. I believe all members of the opposition, at least, saw this at the time as being wrong-headed, a direction that this government should not pursue. I remember all opposition parties asking for the reason and the rationale behind this, and why, if we're going to cut something, it would come from an Education budget and from programs that were apparently working very well for our children.

Nevertheless, despite our cries the government proceeded to cut. It threw many of the school boards into disarray and threw much angst into parents' lives and into children's lives. I was actually very impressed that the new Premier campaigned on this, promised to reverse those cuts, and has done so. That said, there has been, in my view, quite a lot of disruption caused at the school board level in trying to get this money into the classrooms, where it can be best used, because of this process that was followed, again, wrong-headedly by this government.

If we look to sort of the details that are provided here, I'm assuming that most of this is going back as a result of being able to reinstate those programs. Nevertheless, the detail isn't quite there. As we look at $317,000 for the reinstatement of operating support to accredited private schools, what actually is the operating support? Of course, I could say that that might be teachers' salaries. It might be for X, Y, or Z. Simply, those are pretty broad words: operating support. We're left here on this side of the House to ask questions on it. We don't have any details on it. It makes us very confused as to what this is actually going for.

What I would like to see is a little more detail put into the supplementary estimates requested and the reason and the rationale behind them and how it relates to the entire funding mechanism of the Alberta education system and whether it is in the public's best interest to be supporting private schools, to be funding them on a grant basis, roughly 70 per cent of the operating costs and the like, when many people question the wisdom of this. Nevertheless, it's tough to discern what this money is going for.

4:00

I also looked at some of the other expenditures coming through here. I believe it was Culture and Community Services which notes that there are significant grants to Canada's Sports Hall of Fame, the Citadel Theatre, the GO Community Centre, support for Fort Calgary, support for the Canadian archives, support for the Cantos Music Foundation. All of these are at first blush excellent projects. For instance, the Cantos Music Foundation is in my current riding. It will then be in the Deputy Speaker's riding. The Cantos Music Foundation is a wonderful project. It's going to sort of revitalize the East Village. It's going to add a lot of zip and pomp and circumstance to the whole neighbourhood and, in my view, is a very, very good project.

It was my understanding that support for the Cantos Music Foundation is going to be ongoing. It's going to be up to $25 million over the course of the next seven or eight years. I'm not sure whether that is going to be budgeted in a different way in the upcoming years or whether this was something that should have been budgeted at the start of the year. Although that's an exciting project, Mr. Chair, it causes me concern that those details are not provided as to what taxpayers are spending the money on, what the length of the funding agreement is, and where the money will be coming from to fund these operations.

I also note – and I believe it was in Municipal Affairs; it may have been someplace else – that there's, again, a rather substantial grant to the Calgary Stampede. Lord knows, I love the Calgary Stampede. It happens in an area of town where I live, and I particularly enjoy going out to these events. Nevertheless, when we look at the timing of this announcement – I believe it happened after the former Premier resigned; I don't believe we were sitting in the Legislature – it appeared, at least from this side where I sit, that this was almost policy made on the fly. It was made with a magic wand in a backroom that said: we will give money to X, Y, and Z as a result of various reasons. And we have no idea what they were. I'm certain they were valid reasons. I'm certain they were great reasons. But at the same point in time with no opportunity to see how that transpired, with it not being in the original budget and the like, it gives me great concern.

As many members have pointed out, we have run four years of deficits. Yes, that's quite concerning considering the wealth that Alberta has in comparison to other jurisdictions. I believe that in Manitoba they have a balanced budget. I believe Newfoundland this year has a balanced budget, and some other provinces have a balanced budget. It really strikes me as odd that a place as wealthy as us – on any comparator if you compare the wealth we create in this province through the luck of having a large pool of nonrenewable resources, we should be leading in terms of being able to not only provide the citizens with the services they need and require but should be able to save.

It's just astounding to me that other jurisdictions across Canada, who are living through the exact tough economic times we are, are able to do better budgeting or budgeting that ends in better results. I'm dumbfounded by the fact that Newfoundland is running a budget surplus this year. [interjection] The hon. minister didn't know that? I read it in the paper, so there you go. I'm telling you that I'm not making that up. They are living through the same exact economic circumstances that we are, and in my view we have to have a similar amount of resource base that they do. Maybe I'm wrong there, but by all accounts that's my understanding. So if we look at that, we have to be concerned about dollars that are going out and dollars that we're bringing in.

I gave a member's statement the other day, Mr. Chair, applauding some members of this government for actually recognizing that we haven't been able to save a dime over the last 25 years. Not a cent has gone into the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. I think those members – well, one of them here, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, who ran a great campaign to become leader of his party, recognized that there was a fiscal deficit here in this province that was not going to go away unless we put a concerted effort into finding out what we use, what we do, what we budget for, and what we as Alberta citizens should contribute to what we use today.

If we merely just pay our bills by sending oil down the pike, a nonrenewable resource, well, that's akin to selling off pieces of the family farm to pay today's expenses. Simply put, I don't think that's good enough. I don't think it's a responsible position to take for stewardship of this province or for stewardship of our future. In my view, it would be a real travesty. That is one of those travesties over the last 25 years, Mr. Chair, that we have not been able to harness or secure some of this wealth for future generations, save for a rainy day or what have you.

Mr. Chair, this may be wrong, but I'll state it anyway. In my view, I believe a large part of the Alberta advantage is our oil and gas resources and the current revenue stream it brings in. I might suggest – and I would even hazard to guess I could be right on this – that after the oil and gas is gone, we will not have quite the competitive advantage that we do now. This is a one-time gift from the heavens, you may say, that we can build something for the future. Build a little for today, but let's build something for tomorrow as well, where we can have something that says: "No, we didn't flush it all down the drain. No, we didn't live all high on the hog and do it all for today." I think that would be the responsible way to go about things if you look at it at face value.

The members opposite, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and, in fact, the Minister of Finance, right now seem to have a good understanding that when you spend $39 billion a year and you only bring in $12 billion – that's $6 billion in corporate and $6 billion in personal income taxes – that, really, there is a structural deficit that cannot be replaced once the oil and gas revenues go.

It's not even just these two gentlemen who speak about it. It's the Canada West Foundation. It's the Haskayne School of Business. It's the government's own committee on the economy that I believe came back with a report that stated these things and laid it out. It's going to be painful. It's tough for you to go to the electorate and say: "My goodness. We're not doing enough right now, and we're ignoring our responsibilities to future generations." I don't know exactly what the answer to that is, but I applaud those organizations for recognizing the elephant in the room, that what we have here is simply unsustainable in the long term in terms of spending and, in fact, saving and is maybe even a revenue problem. [interjection] You've got to make a decision.

The hon. Minister of Transportation has brought up a good point. I really don't mind it if we have an honest conversation with the electorate and say: "My goodness. If you don't want to pay for public services and don't want to pay taxes, then we'll rightfully cut our spending down to X, and you will do without some public health care. You will do without some public education. You will do without some of the things we take for granted.” I do not mind that.

4:10

But I don't like the fact that we simply sell off pieces of the family farm to live for today. Okay? I think that's irresponsible. I don't think it's forward thinking. I think we have a duty to my nephews, their future kids, other people in this room to do better. That's what I would like to see because otherwise we're going to look back 25 years from now if we don't do something and say: oh, my God, that's 25 more years of selling off pieces of the family farm that we're not going to get back. And some day there's going to be no more farm to sell.

Anyway, those are my comments, Mr. Chair. I really appreciate the leniency you've shown me. I tried to hopefully assemble some coherency of thought, which may or may not be reflected in the comments I just delivered. But it is the effort that counts. There we go.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

It's the tradition to alternate with government members at this point. If there's no one from the government side or from private members on this side, we'll go to Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'll be very brief on Bill 27, the supplementary supply estimates. I gave a member's statement today. Just to be brief, we have a spending problem here in the province. We aren't doing our due diligence, planning in advance. There are some things in here, like I say, the pine beetle devastation, the Slave Lake forest disaster, that are understandable. But there are just other multiple cases in the supplementary supply where this government has failed to plan adequately going forward.

The biggest part of what the plan needs to be is: are we going to strive to do all of our due diligence to balance our budget? You know, we've got $850 million in spending in here for supplementary supply when we have a $6 billion cash deficit in our yearly budget. It's critical that we look at these things and realize what is sustainable. We've got this rush to build all of these structures, we've got this infrastructure, and we need to do it now, now, now. We're creating this huge need to build, yet in two or three years from now all of a sudden we're going to have no cash, and we can't spend $7 billion a year. That's going to contract down to probably $4 billion or less. Maybe we'll have to make a supercontraction because of the amount of money that the government is spending each fiscal year.

It's just not in the best interests long term for Albertans. We need to scrutinize this supplementary supply. I encourage the government as we go to recess for next spring that they really go through with a fine-tooth comb and say: “What do we do so that we don't have these supplementary supplies next year? What do we do to balance our budget? We've got to do more.”

The Wildrose gives every encouragement, every idea that we possibly can on areas where they can make cuts. You know, we've got the $2 billion carbon capture, which the new Premier now says: well, we're going to take $500 million of that out, but we're going to redirect it. It's not about reducing these things. There's just case after case where the money is being spent where what we should have is a three- or five-year infrastructure plan saying: “Yes, that's on the priority list. It's number seven. We're going to spend $4 billion a year, and we're not sure whether it's going to be year 2 or year 3 or maybe year 4 before we get to that.”

We need to prioritize. It's critical. We need to balance our budget. We see the economic storms that are going on across the Atlantic in Europe, and this is all because of governments who aren't being fiscally responsible. That's the problem with this supplementary supply. We're not doing our due diligence. We're not serious about the problem because we can just say: oh, it doesn't matter; we have our sustainability fund. The spending is not sustainable. They need to go through it and do a far better job of scrutinizing it. And next year let's see supplementary supply only have emergency disasters and things that were beyond our ability to forecast, not such simple things as $15 million because we need more salt and gravel for our roads, which is just one of the ones that is somewhat amazing in the supplementary supply.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll sit down and see if anybody else wants to address the bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other speakers who wish to speak to the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 21 Election Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members who wish to comment on Bill 21 at this time?

Mr. Anderson: We already voted on the amendment – right? – the Liberal amendment. This is on the bill?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, hon. member. My understanding is that we are on amendment A2.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, not the Liberal amendment. The ND amendment. Sorry.

All right. I'd like to speak to amendment A2 to Bill 21, which is kind of a way of determining the election dates every four years. This is how the member puts it.

Prior to March 1, 2012, the Premier shall determine the date of the next general election in consultation with the leaders of the opposition parties represented in the Legislative Assembly, and for subsequent general elections, the consultation and determination of the date shall occur no later than 6 months following polling day in the most recent general election.

Although I applaud very much the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for her spirit of co-operation and consultation, which the Wildrose clearly would like to see more of in this House, I don't think I will be supporting this amendment simply because I think a fixed election date is a fixed election date. You don't want uncertainty.

Part of the problem with seasonal election dates or no fixed election dates at all is that there's uncertainty out there as to when it is going to be, so it makes it difficult for Elections Alberta to figure out what date to work back from in their preparations. It's difficult for the recruiting of candidates because they have jobs and things that they're doing, most of them, if they're good candidates. They have nothing to work back from with their employer, and it's very difficult for them to plan to run in the election. I don't think that having, essentially, a six-month window is the way to go in this case.

Again, I think the member is talking about consultation and how important that is. I think that for this whole bill it would be a good idea, and I agree with her that there should be consultation between the Premier and the opposition parties with regard to picking the date that we're going to go on every four years. I think that would have been a very, very good olive branch to the Premier should the Premier really have been someone who was interested in collaborating and co-operating. But, clearly, she's not; she's done nothing of the sort since taking power.

She's been every bit as autocratic, I'd say actually far more autocratic than her predecessor, the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, who actually did refer bills to all-party committees and did do some things that were a little more democratic. Of course, there were issues. He certainly didn't want fixed election dates. I disagreed with him on that. But the way that this Premier has conducted herself since taking the helm has been far more autocratic than her predecessor. I think that this would have given her an opportunity to show that she was serious about being more transparent. She has not taken that opportunity at all.

That said, I like the part of this amendment which says that we should be talking and consulting on this first initial date. I like that idea a lot, but I don't think that every four years doing a consultation makes a whole lot of sense because the whole point of a fixed election date is to have that certainty, that rock-solid certainty for everybody so that all parties know, all the teams know when the puck is going to be dropped, not just one of the teams. That's very important.

4:20

I don't understand why the governing party is so afraid of picking a fixed election date. It doesn't make any sense to me. They have every advantage under the sun. They have a huge bank account, certainly larger than any of the other parties although we're certainly catching up; well, maybe. You know, we certainly have a little bit of money, the Wildrose Party, but nothing compared to the massive amount in the PC coffers. They have that advantage.

They have the advantage of incumbency, 68 MLAs. It's a huge advantage to have that name recognition and so forth, so they have the advantage there. They have the advantage of being the incumbent government, so people know the PC Party is the government. They'll recognize the brand, so brand recognition and so forth. They have the powers of government at their disposal, so they can throw around taxpayers' money any way that they want right before an election in order to secure support from those who respond to being bought with their own money. They have all sorts of advantages of incumbency and government.

But that's not good enough, apparently. They also need the ability to call an election on the day that they want without the other parties knowing. That is a huge advantage even if you're talking about a one-month window, let alone a three-month window. The reason is simple. You can plan your advertising; the other side can plan their advertising.

I would like to hear specifically from the Justice minister, who's a very honest and sincere person, in my view, why he thinks that it's fair that the PC Party or the provincial party that's in government is able to have the advantage of knowing the date so they can choose all of their advertising dates in advance. They can get all of the advertising production set forward. They can make their pamphlets and mailers and everything else because they know exactly when they're each going to be sent out. They'll be able to inform their candidates or let them know exactly when they need to be ready to go and when their paperwork needs to be filed and all that sort of thing. All of those advantages.

I know this because I was one of the folks with the advantage last election. I knew when the election date was coming, you know. [interjection] I know. It's baffling. There were rumours – rumours – a few weeks in advance, confirmed rumours a couple of weeks in advance that that day, that weekend, it was going to be there. So, you know, as a candidate I was able to really throw it into high gear. Absolutely. I went out, looked about for sign locations, made sure I had the best sign locations on day 1. I just peppered the place and was able to get the best corners at the best intersections and so forth because I had that advantage.

My signs were ready on day 1. I had them the day before. They were ready to go. There were no problems. The reason I was able to do that is because I had the advantage. So for the first week of the campaign the only signs you saw out there were the ones with my name on them. That was it. Then slowly but surely – luckily, in our riding for the other parties, the two other candidates had run before for the Liberals and at that time for the Alberta Alliance. No, no. It was the Wildrose Alliance. I forget what it was called before. [interjection] Wildrose, anyway. Yeah, Jeff Willerton.

Anyway, the point is that the other two people had run before, so they had signs, but it still took them a good week to get them up because they were surprised by the call date. They got them up. Then, of course, for the poor guy who was running for the NDP, it was the first time he was running. You think: man, talk about a disadvantage; you're running as an NDP candidate in Airdrie-Chestermere. This is the place that voted in Myron Thompson for, you know, however many terms it was. This is a very conservative area, a very small "c" conservative area. That poor guy didn't get his signs up until literally – I don't think I saw any until about 10 days out. Not exactly a great amount of fairness to that.

You know, that's the situation that we're in, and the government thinks that that is somehow fair. It just blows me away because, clearly, it's an unfair advantage. It tries my faith in the fairness of whether some individuals over there, who I think are fair-minded indeed, are truly fair-minded and whether they do really feel that democracy is important and that everyone should be treated fairly or if that's just some lip service that they pay to that. I hope that by the end of this debate they'll prove me wrong, that they'll restore my faith and Albertans' faith in their devotion and their commitment to fairness and transparency in elections by passing a fixed election date. I certainly am not holding my breath although hope reigns eternal. That is for sure.

I guess I would wind up by saying that I don't think I can support this amendment. I don't think it creates the certainty that we need. I like the idea and the principle behind it of consultation. I certainly can support consultation for this first amendment. In some ways this would even just expand the fixed election season that the government is bringing in from three months to six months. For that reason I will not be supporting that amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on A2.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's intent in amendment A2, in which she's trying to bring forward the determination of an actual fixed election date.

An Hon. Member: On behalf of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Hinman: Oh. Okay. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, then. I was here when it was tabled, and I didn't bother reading it. Yes, I see here, in reading it, that it's from that other member.

I appreciate the NDP bringing forward this motion, but I have to say, though, that I will not be voting in support of this motion, as much as I want fixed election dates. I appreciated the motion by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, which we had previously, A1, where we had an actual fixed election date.

The biggest problem that I see with this bill, though, is that this is a case of what I want to call big government getting bigger. To collaborate and try and bring in the four parties in this House to pick a date just seems to me something that would only create more chaos, more uncertainty as they would debate. I think the Government House Leader maybe even referred to this, that we might not be able to agree and never be able to have another election date because we couldn't agree on one.

It's very vague that way, the consultation. Again, being in opposition, there's no illusion on this side that when the government says "consultation," it has very little meaning. They can open up the door or open up a phone line and say, "Oh, we're waiting for consultation," but then being the majority, they can just go ahead and pick and say that they're in consultation. I'm somewhat amazed that, you know, on Bill 26 – I keep hearing from them that they've been consulting Albertans for two or three years, but everybody is shocked that this has come forward. Nobody knew that it was on the table and being consulted on. We really do need a fixed election date. We need it set.

I just want to read a few quotes from our Premier. Last night, when I was debating amendment A1, I kind of gave the Premier the benefit of the doubt that perhaps her caucus was overruling her on her commitment to have fixed election dates. It's amazing who you run into in the halls here and everything else. I was told: "No, no, no; it isn't caucus that's trying to do this. This is coming from the top. She doesn't want a fixed election date." You know, everybody denies that they're responsible for these types of things, so take it for what it is.

4:30

On October 5, shortly after she was elected, she started her retractions. She said in the Calgary Herald:

On Sunday I said that it would be after a spring sitting, a budget and a throne speech and thought that based on the practical timing that could be June – sometimes the legislature takes on a life of its own, so it is a little bit unpredictable.

That's the problem with all of this. It's a little bit unpredictable.

Going back a little bit, you know, to September 23, 2011, the Premier then said to Canadian Press that she would commit to calling an election in March 2012 and every four years from that date. She said that Albertans are supportive of the idea and that several other provinces already use this same model.

But, Mr. Chairman, one thing that is really amazing to me is her, I want to say, frank honesty when she describes the problems of not having fixed election dates. She said that fixed election dates are important because they – and she's referring to the people – understand the issues that are coming. "They don't believe any political party should have even if it is a theoretical upper hand in managing the political agenda and then picking the date accordingly." I think she was very open and frank there, yet now she's flopping and saying, "I said that, but again, well, that's just to get elected; now that I've got that position of power" – again, I'll remember the wisdom of Abraham Lincoln, that the way to truly test the character of an individual is to give them power. We are seeing the character of this Premier over and over again since she's been elected. It's that old saying: say what you need to to get elected, and then don't worry about what you said after you've been elected.

Another one. You know, on Rutherford on October 25 she stated: when I make a commitment, I keep my commitment; I'm not going to start making willy-nilly pronouncements when they want me to; I hope the Legislature will be satisfied with the approach we take on fixed elections. Again, she has this lawyer ability to say that she's being clear when it could be anything but clear. Here she's saying: fixed elections. For most Albertans I think that if you were to take a poll, 99 per cent of them would say: "Oh, that's the date. It's the 8th of May. It's the 21st of June. It's, you know, the 22nd of November." Those are dates. Those are fixed dates. Yet she didn't do that. Quite hard to understand.

Here's another quote:

Fixed election dates give Albertans the opportunity to focus on issues that matter and mobilize for an election, without the behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that sometimes characterize . . . [elections].

She says:

Personally, I was very disappointed by the voter turn out in 2008, when I was elected. We failed to engage the public in our most important democratic right – voting. In some ways, low turnout may indicate lack of faith in the system, and that is a very dangerous road to travel. I would like to reverse the trend.

Please, Madam Premier, reverse the trend. Give us a date.

There will be other amendments coming forward. I don't approve of this amendment A2. I just see government problems with more committees and trying to say: well, let's have a committee to pick a date. No. It's very easy to set a date. If she wants to do a little bit of consultation, she's certainly free to do that.

I've said before that I prefer, you know, June, maybe the third Monday in June. The reason why I like that is because everybody is still here. They haven't left for the summer. But most important for me, it's the long summer days, June 21 being the longest. There's nothing more important for me than to have those long days to be able to go door-knocking with the sun up, to meet your constituents, have a good visit with them, hear their concerns, hear their ideas.

As the Premier said, you know, we need to mobilize the people. Let's do it when we can really get out there, meet them, have a great opportunity to talk to them. The weather is usually good at that time. We don't need to worry like in March, when we can't pound our stakes into the ground or we have snowdrifts that they're put into and they melt. There are lots of different times of the year we look at when the weather can be a problem.

The Premier even, you know – I don't know what I want to say – used that as a first excuse: "Well, I can't really pick a date because I don't know what the weather is going to be like," acting like 28 days before, she could determine what the weather is going to be like. Well, she should be in another business if she can determine the weather. That has a major influence around the world and all of those other things.

Mr. Chairman, I have to say that I don't agree with this amendment. I understand the intent, and I appreciate it coming forward, but we don't need a bigger bureaucratic consultation period to pick an election date. We just need to do it, inform people, and live with that.

With that, I'll let someone else perhaps, who wants to, speak to this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Is there anyone else who wishes to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to speak to amendment A2 to the Election Amendment Act, 2011, otherwise known as Bill 21. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is suggesting here – and I can certainly live with this – that prior to the March 1, 2012, date the Premier shall determine the date of the next general election in consultation with the leaders of the opposition parties represented in the Legislative Assembly, and for subsequent general elections, the consultation and determination of the date shall occur no later than 6 months following polling day in the most recent general election.

Now, certainly there was a robust discussion around the suggestion that I had made yesterday around having a fixed election date. This is notable, and it's an interesting idea that is certainly worthy of the consideration of this Assembly.

I don't know how this consultation process would work, but at one point I was astonished to hear from an hon. member in the run-up to the last provincial election that what Albertans really want is a consensus-style government, that they don't want opposition, that they want consensus-style government. I asked: what is consensus-style government? Well, we'll all work together, and we'll get along, and no one will criticize the government because criticizing the government is wrong.

I thought, you know, that in the British parliamentary system, that has developed for centuries, it seems to be quite an effective, useful way to govern. Some of the corners of the globe, as I would say, that are very stable democratically are governed in this way, where you have a government and you have an opposition. Each has a role, each has an obligation to fulfill, and there seems to be nothing the matter with that. I hope no one would suggest that this is, you know, a step towards consensus-style government because I don't think it is. To have a consultation with the leaders of the opposition parties regarding a date for a general election: I think that would be a good step.

Now, certainly, we have consultations. I will use the consultation from the Members' Services Committee. The member who is responsible for this amendment certainly didn't go to the dinner that was organized and, I believe, hosted by the chairman of the Members' Services Committee to discuss what eventually became policy today regarding MLA compensation and benefits, to undergo an independent review. When that discussion was going to occur at the Members' Services Committee, I believe, if I've got my facts correct, the day before there was a consultation. It was a dinner, but I'm sure over dinner there was going to be consultation going on about what direction the Members' Services Committee would take.

4:40

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I believe, could not make that dinner date either. No; he's shaking his head. I would use that as an example of a consultation that has occurred recently in this Assembly. Even if members for one reason or another who were on the invite list could not attend, we have deputy leaders. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I assume, is the deputy leader of the New Democrat caucus. We have a deputy leader of the Wildrose Alliance. We have the deputy leader of the Alberta Liberal Party here. If the leader was busy getting a party organized or speaking at a constituency nomination, one of the deputies could get to go and work on this consultation with the Premier and her designates.

Now, in conclusion, regarding amendment A2, Mr. Chairman, I certainly would urge hon. members to take this under consideration. I really don't see any harm in this. I think it would improve the process. It would improve the dialogue between all respective leaders of the parties who are present in the House.

With that, I will conclude my remarks, Mr. Chairman, and cede the floor to another hon. member.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It is a pleasure to speak to this amendment proposed by the member from the ND Party. In my view, the amendment as drafted and presented here to the House has some merit.

To back up a little bit and to follow some of the thoughts presented here today, I agree that the better solution would simply be to pick a firm date, a date that Albertans can see as the date of the election. Simply pick that date, a singular date. Let's stand by it, and let's all gear up towards that event.

I listened with great interest to the news clippings that were quoted regarding the Premier's comments early in her tenure here as Premier and even prior to that, when she was running for election. They seemed to pretty clearly indicate that she was going to support Albertans' desire to have a fixed election day, not a fixed election season as it has become referred to. Obviously, it's a political winner to have fixed election days. Not only is the electorate supportive of it, but I believe it also serves to give some stability to your political structure, ensures some essential fairness between the political parties, and allows for what, in my view, would possibly lead to greater voter participation.

All of these things are laudable goals. They're not only laudable; they're easily accomplished by picking one date to set now and to simply run on and then to set further elections on that same date going forward. This is really not something hard to institute. Other jurisdictions have done it, and in fact it appears to be well received by their electorate. In my view, that is really the singular course of action we should be taking in this House.

I would encourage the Premier and her staff to relook at this issue and just say: "My goodness. What's all the fuss about? Let's just pick a date here, and let's go." I think that would be the right thing to do given the Premier's comments about this in the past, given the particular advantages there could be for the electorate as well as essential fairness. That is my first view of what should happen. I believe it was probably the hon. member's view, too, even though she has proposed this amendment. Although I haven't heard her speaking on this bill to date, I would assume that she was in favour of fixed election dates. It would provide for a more open and transparent process.

What I see this amendment as is trying to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear. We're trying to take a piece of legislation that is not quite what we'd like or not quite what the Alberta people would like and that doesn't really do justice to open and democratic forums, open and democratic participation, or essential fairness when it comes to political parties trying to lead this great province.

The member of the third party drafted this bill and said: well, I'm going to try and reinstitute some of those principles into this amendment. I believe she's done some of that in this thing. It allows for consultation. It allows for parties to get together on an open and even playing field and decide jointly when an election is going to be held. It would then establish dates after the fact when an election could run and then again would follow that same process.

I'm not saying that this is as good as the first option, clearly not, but I appreciate what the member is trying to do. She's trying to instill some of that essential fairness that was originally desired by not only the Premier in her comments, or at least in her earlier comments when she was running to be the leader of the party opposite, which is currently in power, but also trying to woo the electorate to support her candidacy. Although not perfect, this amendment will go some way to restoring public confidence in the system and in some way to ensuring essential fairness.

In that view, I would encourage other members of the House to support this measure. I realize it's not a perfect measure, but I believe it has merit. I believe it makes the bill better than it currently is, and if that's where we have to make a silk purse out of sow's ear, well, let's try and start from there. Maybe after this election is over, we can come back here, set a firm date, and stop the monkeying around. I think that would probably be the best.

Those are my comments, sir. I leave them for other members to consider. I hope to hear some government members maybe comment on the bill. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We have under consideration amendment A2. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak in regard to amendment A2, that the hon. member brought forward. I find it interesting, to say the least. By adding a subsection he's talking about:

Prior to March 1, 2012, the Premier shall determine the date of the next general election in consultation with the leaders of the opposition parties represented in the Legislative Assembly, and for subsequent general elections, the consultation and determination of the date shall occur no later than 6 months following polling day in the most recent general election.

Mr. Chair, I've been listening to the debate on this particular bill. Bill 21, the Election Amendment Act, a bill that has – and I think I counted them – less than 150 words, actually, has caused so much discussion for such a small piece of legislation. I can tell you that I wanted to listen to the debate and hear what everyone has to say in regard to this particular amendment A2. While the idea is admirable and it would be nice to be able to sit down with all of the House leaders from the opposition parties, which would, of course, be the government, the Liberals, obviously the Wildrose, the NDP, and the Alberta Party, to talk about trying to find a date that the opposition parties would find agreeable, I think we probably would be struggling to come up with something between five different parties. I still like the idea of a fixed election date, and say, "Here, Alberta people, this is when we go to the polls. This is the date." You know that that's the date that's going to be coming forward.

4:50

I guess where everybody is struggling – and we haven't heard, that I can recall, anything from the government members. We've already put in some long nights. I always find it interesting that none of the government members have an opinion on any of the pieces of legislation that are brought forward in the Legislature. I have to say, Mr. Chair, that when I was with the government, I always admired that the opposition could get up and they could speak on any piece of legislation and speak quite eloquently, quite frankly, and seemed quite knowledgeable about any piece of legislation that they were speaking about.

It's been a big learning curve for me, coming from the government, where you have everything at your fingertips. You have millions of dollars in research. You rarely, if you're lucky, have the opportunity to speak on a piece of legislation. Whether you agree with it or you disagree with it, you kind of just sit there collecting dust and listening to what everybody else has to say, and you're thinking: I would just like to speak a little bit about this piece of legislation.

I know that there are some people over there, quite frankly, that support fixed election dates, and I know that there are people over there for sure that don't support the .05 to .08 legislation because we've had conversations with them, and I know for a fact that there are people over there on the government side that are struggling with the health quality amendment act. You know what,

Mr. Chair? It's fuel for the fire for us because we're going to be coming to an election very shortly. I know for a fact that the government is going to candidate school in February. That is a very telling thing.

I've spoken in this Legislature way back on fixed election dates and how I supported it. I still support that particular piece of legislation. Even to try and get the six parties forward, that the member from the NDP has brought forward, even to just start the process, to my mind, is better than nothing. We could at least talk about – okay, we could look like we're all going to get together and we're all going to sit and we're all going to talk about what ultimately is the most important thing, and that's what is in the best interests of Albertans.

I know we're going to be debating this legislation probably long into today or long into the night tonight. I know for a fact that we're going to bring several more amendments forward on this legislation. I know I am, and I know my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere is going to because we think it's important to spend hours and hours and hours debating a bill that's less than 150 words. I think that's our role as opposition members, to bring forward what Albertans are telling us, quite frankly, whether we like it or we don't like it. I've been in the situation where I'm bringing forward, when I was with the government, a piece of legislation that Albertans aren't really comfortable with, yet we sit there and we sit there and we sit there, and then we all vote because we were the majority at the time. Here we are – how many of us are there? – 15 or so members, where we all stand up and vote.

Mr. Chair, I guess, when we're talking about amendment A2 – you don't need to wave a piece of paper at me. I know what I'm talking about, but thank you for reminding me. I appreciate that. Sometimes we get a little off kilter, and it's your role as the chair to just make sure that we stay on this particular amendment.

I'm going to support this, actually. I wasn't sure how I was going to feel about this. Quite frankly, I think that somewhere, somehow we need to get the process started. In our caucus we believe in free votes. That's the nice thing about free votes. I know our colleague for Airdrie-Chestermere said that he wasn't, but I think we have to start the process somewhere. This is a process that we can start. That doesn't preclude – once we pass this particular amendment, we're on a roll, and we can get a fixed date period. You know, then we can all have the same opportunity to discuss that.

Okay. We as opposition have said: "Hmm. Okay. We've got the amendment A2 from the hon. member from the NDP. We've got that ball rolling, so we're going to just keep pushing our luck. We're going to then go in and support, possibly, the amendment that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is going to bring forward." Having said that, Mr. Chair, I am encouraged at what has been brought forward. While it is not exactly the fixed election date that we've been looking at specifically, I think this is an opportunity to start the ball rolling, get the discussion going, and I look forward to bringing another amendment forward.

With those remarks, I'm going to sit down, and I'm going to hear who else is going to talk.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall on A2.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll just speak on A2. It's a great pleasure to stand up and speak on amendment A2, brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. The whole idea of Bill 21, Election Amendment Act, is to set the election date without actually setting an election date. It provides that a general election must be held between March 1 and May 31 every four years, with the period beginning March 1, 2012.

While this bill provides some certainty when an election will be held, it seems the writ must be dropped within a three-month period, and it brings in a great deal of political positioning as to the exact date. There is still potential for a budget that could be debated in the House before an election is called, for example.

The government is touting the same old line that this is another made-in-Alberta piece of legislation, Mr. Chair. However, the reality is that Alberta faces no extraordinary situation that would make an actual fixed election date impossible. Eight other jurisdictions, eight other provinces, have fixed dates, as has the federal government. As far as I know, in India, too – the state I come from – they have fixed election dates that have been working very well. A fixed election date will create a kind of same-level playing field.

The amendment A1, which was brought – I'm talking about the previous amendment, sir – from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was the best way to go, to have a fixed election date.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, A1 has been debated and defeated, so if you could tie in the points to A2, that would be much appreciated. Thank you.

Mr. Kang: Yes, sir. I'm coming to A2, sir.

The Deputy Chair: That would be much appreciated.

5:00

Mr. Kang: This is the best second option we have, A2, sir. At least, we will have some date that will be decided in consultation with the opposition parties. There will be some input from the opposition parties. I think the Premier is trying to give us an election season like we have a Christmas season, a fall season, or a spring season. Premier Don Getty gave us Family Day in February, and this Premier is trying to give us an election season so that she will be remembered as the Premier who gave us the election season, Mr. Chair.

In the Premier's own words she said, "Personally, I was very disappointed by the voter turn out in 2008, when I was elected. We failed to engage the public in our most democratic right." That's a right in the Charter of Rights. So the Premier said that she wanted to have fixed election dates. "In some ways, low turnout may indicate lack of faith in the system, and that is a very dangerous road to travel. I would like to reverse that trend." That's in the Premier's words. That was then, but now the Premier has started to like this flexibility, Mr. Chair, as well.

I think this will be the second-best option, amendment A2, to have some kind of fixed election date with consultation of the opposition parties, and that will be best for everybody. I urge all the members to consider this amendment so we can have the second-best option, and I will be supporting this amendment, Mr. Chair.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd just like to rise and really quickly address a couple of the comments that have been made since the amendment was put into place and just clarify a little bit what the intention of the amendment is. First of all, the amendment is still very focused on achieving a fixed election date. It's true that you would not know 12 years from now the date of the next election, but you would know no less than three and a half years ahead of the time of the election when it would be. So for the purposes of addressing a number of the concerns that underlie the rationale for fixed election dates, you would still, I think, be able to address that concern through this piece of legislation.

Conversely or in addition, what this amendment would achieve would be all those things that the Premier and those who, presumably, support her over on the other side have said that they want, which is to open up opportunities for more consultation, more transparency, and more collaborative working relationships with opposition members. Why not inject that sensibility into Alberta's election designation process? In the absence of inviting opposition leaders to participate in the process in a way which would be unique and groundbreaking in Canada in terms of its level of transparency and collaboration, in the absence of that, you still need a fixed election date.

The one thing that does frustrate me is that we have spent so much time talking about this piece of legislation. It's such a waste because this piece of legislation as it currently sits, without this amendment or some of the other amendments that we have talked about coming forward, is basically same old same old. It does nothing different from what's already in place. It allows the same imbalance. It ensures that the control and the advantage which arise from being the one to shoot off the starting gun remain firmly vested in the hands of the Conservative government. We've had all this conversation about a piece of legislation that is meaningless. All it really actually serves to do is to be a written, recorded piece of evidence of one of this Premier's first broken promises.

This amendment was brought forward in an effort to save the Premier from putting it so clearly on the record that she can't be trusted to keep a promise and, instead, to not only keep the promise but raise the bar and add an additional benefit to this process, something for which I'm sure members on the side opposite would actually be given credit were they to do it.

So a good-faith attempt to pull a win-win-win situation out of what is at this point a loss-loss-loss for the people of Alberta, the people on that side of the building, and the people who have been wasting their time printing up these pieces of paper, which at this point offer nothing new to our election-setting process here in the province of Alberta.

With that intention in mind, I do certainly urge members in this Assembly to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others who wish to speak to amendment A2?

If not, is the House ready for the question on this amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to Committee of the Whole in a general sense on Bill 21, the Election Amendment Act. Are there any speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to be bringing forward an amendment, and I have that amendment here. I will have that amendment passed forward, and if I may, Mr. Chair . . .

The Deputy Chair: Just one moment, please, hon. member. Did we get the original with the rest of the copies? Hon. members, we'll refer to this as amendment A3. I see it's being circulated now. If there's anyone who doesn't yet have a copy and wishes one before the member proceeds with her speech, please signal.

Hon. member, you may proceed, then.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I am to move that Bill 21, the Election Amendment Act, 2011, be amended in section 2 in the proposed section 38.1. Now, this isn't very, very complicated because, as I said before, we have a piece of legislation that, I think, is less than 150 words, what I referred to earlier.

It's striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) Subject to subsection (1) and (3), a general election shall be held March 12, 2012 and on the second Monday in March in the 4th calendar year following polling day in the most recent general election.

And then it just adds the following after subsection (2):

(3) The date for any general election after March 12, 2012 may be advanced up to 7 days by the Lieutenant Governor in Council . . .

And that's cabinet.

. . . on the advice of the Chief Electoral Officer if the date of the election coincides with a religious or culturally significant holiday.

Pretty simple, actually. It's also very similar to what's happening in Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, I'm actually pleased to rise and speak on not only Bill 21, the Election Amendment Act, but I'm also pleased to rise and speak on amendment A3.

5:10

There's been a lot of chit-chat from the government that this bill is about improving the democratic process for all Albertans and that this bill will do more to improve transparency and accountability for all Albertans when it comes to elections. But when the times get tough for this government, when they have to face real scrutiny on their performance or on legislation that they are putting forward, they regress to old patterns of behaviour, where the real loser becomes the institutions of democracy. You'll understand where I'm going on this, Mr. Chair, as I speak.

There is no better evidence of this than this past week, when the Premier was faced with some difficult questions from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood about stuffing her bills through this Legislature. She promptly responded, "Mr. Speaker, I really don't think that the hon. member wants to get into a debate with me about what democracy is or why it matters." Well, actually, Mr. Chair, that's exactly the type of debate that we want to have in this Legislature, especially when it comes to Bill 21 and especially when it comes to amendment A3. As I go through this, you'll understand why.

Now, Mr. Chair, it's commendable and it's true that the Premier has done some work overseas to improve democracy for different groups of people who may have never had the chance to vote in their life. She brags about that, and rightfully so. I say with no reservation that the people in places like South Africa and Afghanistan are better off for the work that our Canadian people have done in those places to improve democracy.

While the Premier was on the campaign trail – you know what? – I have to tell you that I was impressed by the comments made by the Premier when it came to transparency in government, especially with regard to fixed election dates. I'm going to quote: "Fixed election dates give Albertans the opportunity to focus on issues that matter and mobilize for an election, without the behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that sometimes characterize the timing of an election."

Well, Mr. Chair, guess what? In the Canadian Press on Friday,

September 23, this story was filed at 4:25. She wasn't the Premier then, but she was running to be the Premier. "Redford said she would commit to calling an election in March 2012 and every four years from that date. She said Albertans are supportive of the idea and that several other provinces already use the same model."

Mr. Chair, hence my amendment as the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and, quite frankly, on behalf of my colleagues that I have the honour and privilege of sitting with, in regard to March 12, 2012. We're going to follow through with what the then Member for Calgary-Elbow said to all of the members of the PC Party and, for that matter, Albertans. The debate on a fixed election date law should have been relatively pain free. With three opposition parties in consensus that would be a good step forward to democracy. We discussed this earlier about democracy and about fixed elections.

What is frustrating, quite frankly, Mr. Chair, with what we would like to call the floating election season law that is now before us is that it's perplexing for all Albertans. It's due to the fact that while this Premier was working in Afghanistan under appointment of the United Nations, the Afghani people knew then exactly when there was going to be an election day. I guess the question is: why can't Albertans be afforded the same luxury date in the Premier's own home province? Does the Premier not understand that Albertans want to have the same democratic opportunities of not just seven other provinces in the country but also the exciting opportunities the people in Afghanistan had in their first election?

The amendment that we're bringing forward in regard to the Election Amendment Act, A3 as you have referred to it, talks specifically about having March as the election date in 2012 and every four years after that. Mr. Chair, in this Legislature we talk about consensus, and when you talk about consensus, you try and bring forward an amendment that will appease the government or get them to agree with you on something. You know that, Chair. You sat as the former health minister, and I know you had a position before that. It's about, "Here's what we have to say" and then "Here's what you have to say," and somewhere you come up the middle and say: "You know what? We agree."

When we were talking about the fixed election date, we thought, "Well, what's going to twig with the government, or what's going to twig with the Premier?" As I said earlier, we have an article: Alberta Tory Leadership Candidate Alison Redford Wants Fixed Election Dates. I'd be pleased to table that if you want me to. As I explained a little bit earlier, she talks about the fact that – and she is saying this to Albertans – she's committing to calling an election in March 2012 and every four years after that.

Mr. Chair, we have decided to bring that forward from the Wildrose and say: "Premier, this is what you said you were going to do. This is what you promised to do when you were running. We also think it's real important for you to keep that promise and not break your word and stick to a fixed election date, which you had no problem doing when you were running for the leader of the province." What we've done with amendment A3 is exactly what the Premier of this province said she would do specifically, even down to the date that she said she would do it in her article.

What I would like to do, Mr. Chair, if I may – I've moved this amendment, and I know everybody has a copy. I will look forward to actually listening to the rest of the debate. I'm especially looking forward to hearing what the government has to say and particularly looking forward with interest to hearing what the Justice minister has to say because I know that this falls under his portfolio. I know what the opposition members are going to say, and I know my opposition colleagues are looking forward to speaking to this particular amendment. But, truly – and I alluded to it when I was speaking earlier – the government, I know, will want to have the opportunity to speak out and say why they supported this particular amendment or, for that matter, why they didn't support this amendment.

Mr. Chair, I know that we're going to be going into an election sooner rather than later. What we hear is that it's probably going to be February or March when they'll call the election and drop the writ, and we'll all be campaigning for the next 28 days.

What I love about our social media and about technology now is that you've got all this stuff, and you've got it all on YouTube. You have the opportunity, quite frankly, in a forum, at the doors, when you're talking to the people that put you here or, as the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo likes to refer to them, to our bosses, to say: gee willikers, we debated this amendment A3 in the Legislature on the 30th day of November at 20 after 5 and challenged the government to support the amendment that we've brought forward in regard to the bill and what the Premier said she would do, and the government agreed or did not agree.

I'm going to sit down. I'm going to look forward to listening to some debate from others in the Assembly at this particular time.

Thank you.

5:20

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there others on A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I can appreciate amendment A3. I'm not going to suggest that March is a better month than May – I would much prefer to see a fixed election date in May – but this is another attempt at getting rid of this election season and having a fixed day.

Now, A3 certainly would indicate that March 12 of next year, 2012, and on the second Monday in March in the fourth calendar year following would be an appropriate provincial election date. The hon. member is absolutely right about the commitments made publicly by the current Premier when it was stated during the Progressive Conservatives' most recent leadership race that Alberta needs fixed election dates. As part of the democratic reform platform – and we have to view this current legislation as a broken campaign promise by the current Premier – this amendment A3 allows that broken campaign promise to be fixed with a fixed election date.

According to the hon. Premier's press release – and I'm afraid I don't have the date of this, unfortunately, Mr. Chairman:

Fixed-election dates give Albertans the opportunity to focus on issues that matter and mobilize for an election, without the behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that sometimes characterize the timing of an election.

This is a statement from the current Premier during that Progressive Conservative Party leadership race.

Now, the current Premier goes on to state in this press release:

Personally, I was very disappointed by the voter turn out [rate] in 2008, when I was elected. We failed to engage the public in our most important democratic right – voting. In some ways, low turnout may indicate lack of faith in the system, and that is a very dangerous road to travel. I would like to reverse that trend.

Amendment A3 certainly allows that to happen.

If we were to adopt the date here in March that has been proposed, I think it would be an improvement over the election season that is proposed and this sort of window or wiggle room that this government always wants. Now, this amendment would, of course, fix that broken promise, and I think it would also restore faith. We talked about this with amendment A1 probably about this time yesterday, Mr. Chairman.

Certainly, we need to reverse voting trends in this province. We need to encourage more and more people to get out to vote. I don't have the book with me here, but there are some areas of the province which have a very, very low voter turnout rate. I think that a fixed election date would certainly improve that.

The hon. members from Medicine Hat are probably very aware that 30 per cent of the eligible voters in both Medicine Hat and Cypress-Medicine Hat voted in the last election. In Fort McMurray, as I said earlier, it's even lower than that. Now we're going to have twin constituencies in Fort McMurray, and hopefully it will be a much higher voter turnout rate.

Where opposition members are elected, it's interesting to note that voter turnout rates are usually higher. The higher the voter turnout rate, the less likely there is to be a government member either elected or returned. That's a fact. You can look that up, hon. member, and you can see. I certainly hope that this is a government that's not afraid of a substantial increase in the voter turnout rate and what it would mean for their electoral success. [interjection] It could happen. If the voter turnout rate was to go way up, the number of desks on this side of the Assembly may go way up as well, so yes, hon. member, it is true. It certainly is true.

We need to do everything we can – everything we can – to increase voter turnout rates. Fixed election dates, whether it's March or whether it's May, certainly work, in my view, if we give them a chance and if we encourage people to vote. I'm not convinced we're doing that now.

I mentioned Medicine Hat. I mentioned Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, certain areas around Edmonton, and certain areas around Calgary. It surprises me how low the voter turnout rates are. These are neighbourhoods, Mr. Chairman, where the voters have the most to gain or lose from good or bad public policy by this government.

This amendment, again, as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, would certainly, I think, "reverse the trend" and restore faith in the election process, like the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow originally stated during the summer. Also, it would eliminate the "behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that sometimes characterize the timing of an election."

In the lead-up to the last election, Mr. Chairman, there was the controversy over the appointment of the returning officers. Again, I don't have the opportunity, I don't have the resources to have all the details with me, but certainly there were allegations made that, of course, this is not happening from Elections Alberta; this is happening from the Premier's office.

These appointments are made, of course, through order in council, and they were made from the Premier's office. There was a recommendation made by the former Chief Electoral Officer. I just did some research outside, Mr. Chairman, and I thought there were over a hundred recommendations made by the Chief Electoral Officer, but it was 180. I think it was 183, to be exact. And we all know what happened to that gentleman. His contract by the Legislative Offices Committee, which I happen to sit on, was not renewed. There was no reason, really, given, but it wasn't renewed.

5:30

We do know that there is a very, very large majority of government members on all these legislative committees, and it's real easy for government ministers, whenever they're in a bind, to say: well, go to the legislative committee, to the respective one where you have your issue, and you can work it out there. A real large majority of government members sit there, most of the time silently, until it's time to vote. Then they vote, and the issue is quickly decided.

The point I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that this Assembly is where these decisions should be made. We certainly should take advice from the Chief Electoral Officer – I'm not suggesting otherwise – but when you look at the history of the advice that the office of the Chief Electoral Officer wanted to provide to this Assembly and what the government majority did with it, well, there are a lot of really sound recommendations that were made not only on the Election Act but also on the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. That's, I know, another matter. But, certainly, when you think about all the recommendations that were made and what happened to that gentleman – he was going to Winnipeg, all right, because I think that's where he came from. He was going back because his services were no longer required here, needed. The advice that he provided wasn't listened to.

Again, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I would like to thank the hon. member for giving this Assembly another chance to have a fixed election day, another chance for the Premier to have a change of heart and realize that the current legislation is, in reality, a broken political promise. This amendment A3 gives again an opportunity for that broken promise to be fixed. I'm hoping that a fixed election date would increase voter participation.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Amendment A3 is available, and I have the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am quite amazed. The opposition is doing everything in its power, making every effort to help our new Premier keep her promise, yet we have the caucus sitting on their hands over there. They've got their lips zipped. [interjection] Yes.

Anyway, I am pleased to rise and speak to amendment A3 under the Election Amendment Act, 2011, brought forward by my good colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek. Basically, to sum up what this amendment is, this is our best effort to try and guesstimate what day in March the Premier wanted when she promised back on the 23rd of September that she thinks March would be a great time to go to the polls. Now, it's interesting, even on little debates, even in a small caucus like ours, that we can all agree to disagree. I would have liked to see it a little bit later in March, but this is the date they came up with.

Like I say, we'd be thrilled to sit down and have the government bring forward an amendment on what day it is that they want. We'd be happy to support it. The feedback I'm getting from constituents and Albertans is that they would be happy to support it. Just give us a date. Just keep your promise, Madam Premier. Keep your promise. Give us a date.

Again, I think probably the most astounding thing for myself, Mr. Chair, sitting in this House and listening to our new Premier answer the odd question here and there, is when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was asking her about democracy. She got up, and the facial expressions that she used I cannot describe. From the glare and the look at him and the finger pointing: you don't want to get into a debate about democracy with me.

Well, I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, there is nobody – nobody – on this side of the House that is intimidated by the eyes, the finger, or the words of our new Premier. In fact, we were very disappointed in it. I would be thrilled to have a debate with her at any time on democracy, and I'd love for her to participate in this debate about picking a date for the people of Alberta to engage in the democratic process. But I think, like all of her colleagues, they're going to sit there and say nothing and do nothing and try to mitigate their promises in any way possible.

Mr. Chairman, we are doing everything we can to help her keep her promise of a fixed election date. We've gone over, you know, the purpose of fixed election dates, everything else. I guess I just want to go over a few more points again to help direct this government in being able to come up with a good bill that will serve Albertans going forward and, as the Premier was asked, to do her best to try and engage Albertans. Give them a date.

When I was sitting on committee and we heard from the election officer, he talked about the expenses. Again, I think this even came up in supplementary supply there, trying to plan, because he didn't know. Several of the leadership contestants for the PC Party had mentioned that we might have a fall election, so that puts our election officer into high gear, saying: "Oh, my goodness. We've got to rent facilities. We've got to get our people hired. We've got to get them trained." There is an incredible amount of work to organize an election.

One just has to ask, you know: when she's talking about this fixed election date, is she going to renege on her promise to have a senatorial election with that as well? All these things need to be planned. That's why we need to set an election date. We need to set what's going on in there. Are we going to elect new Senators-elect from the province of Alberta? We have a proud heritage of doing that first, back in 1989. I believe Stan Waters was the first one to be elected, and we should be following that. The Premier talked about that.

Mr. MacDonald: Did the Reformers have a fixed election date? I can't remember.

Mr. Hinman: I believe that was one of the big things that they were pushing. The Reformers had a fixed election date.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, through the chair, please. I'm not sure how senatorial elections would tie in with this, but I'm sure you'll explain briefly.

Mr. Hinman: Well, because that's all part of people, whether they're going to engage and be part. I mean, we don't even know the fixed election dates, and we don't know whether or not she's going to keep that promise. She mentioned that and said that. These are both what I guess I want to call a democratic process of: are we going to have a fixed election date? If so, when, and what all is going to be involved on that date? There are people that are interested in participating in that, taking her on her word. I hope that that kind of correlates.

We think that that's all part of the democratic process with a fixed election, that should be coming up sometime soon. I must say that we do appreciate having a season. That's good to know: here's the season. That is a step in the right direction. But why not take the last, too, and make it simple, even for our election officers so that they know that they can plan their holidays, so that they can do things? I mean, this adds so much chaos to the whole system that it just doesn't work.

If they want to pick where the election is going to be, they could have places scoped out, and those places might be good until March, but then all of a sudden in those places new renters come in. [interjection] I have to chuckle that there's even any heckling on this from that side, but the hon. minister of agriculture seems to think that this is not important and questions the idea. Again, when you have deep pockets and all those things, it doesn't matter, you just pick and pay whatever you need to, but I don't think that's prudent with the taxpayers' money.

To gear up for a fall election and then have it all fall down and then he comes and says, "I need money again for next year" for, like I say, the training, the hiring – these people are paid and trying to be held for that election. I just think that out of common courtesy to those people you say, "You know, this is when we're going to have it" so that they can plan their life a little bit better rather than being on call. They're not paid a lot. It's not like we're, you know, paying them full-time wages, but we go through the training and all of those things.

5:40

There are just so many points from the government side why it is just about good governing to have a fixed election date. We do it with municipal elections, with the school boards, all of those. I mean, if the Premier really didn't mean what she said, why doesn't she bring forward legislation that gets rid of fixed election dates for municipalities? Why doesn't she bring, you know, other legislation forward and say: oh, this is democratic. Actually, she wouldn't want to discuss democracy with us because she wouldn't want to belittle us or – I don't know – shame us in our misunderstanding of what democracy is according to her expertise, I guess.

I just don't understand, Mr. Chairman, why she won't step forward and give us a set election date. It just seems to be a pattern on what she said. Again, it's always interesting, too, when an election is called. In her quote she talks about this, about the importance of a fixed election date and how people start to engage more. When they know that an election date is coming up, it mobilizes. Here it is:

Fixed election dates give Albertans the opportunity to focus on issues that matter and mobilize for an election . . .

And then I love the next part of that.

. . . without the behind-the-scenes deal-making and manipulation that sometimes characterize the timing of an election.

I mean, why would she say that and then not bring forward a fixed election date? I just would love for them to get up and explain why they think that a season is an election date. I don't know of anywhere else in the world that has an election season where, "Oh, it's going to be sometime in the spring" or "It's going to be sometime in the fall." I'm not aware of that. What's their answer to that, Mr. Chairman? "Oh, this is a made-in-Alberta solution because our weather is not predictable" or "The religious holidays might interfere" or "The farmers might be busy." Unbelievable. From everybody that talks to me, this is the one election promise that they don't understand. They understand her broken promise on having a full judicial inquiry into health care because most Albertans think that there would be a lot of bad information that would come in in a full judicial inquiry. They understand that.

They don't understand why she didn't talk and promise like she did to give the $107 million back to education, which Albertans got excited about and felt that that was a need. Nobody that's talked to me was aware of new legislation coming forward on driving under the influence, yet that's all of a sudden a democratic process. She says: oh, we've been consulting for two or three years, and this needs to be passed before December. Again, the Albertans that have been contacting myself and my office are very disappointed with the speed and the force with which this government wants to pass that bill.

It's just truly disappointing that we have to be debating this and not have the government come forward and say: "Oh, you know, you're right. I don't know why we even thought about having an election season. Here's the date." We will continue to ask the government, you know: bring forward an amendment. We'd be happy to vote on it. It would be great for democracy here in the province. That's really what it's all about. As the Premier said, we failed to engage the public in our most important democratic right – voting. In some ways, low turnout may indicate lack of faith in the system, and that is a very dangerous road to travel. I would like to reverse that trend.

I, too, agree with her and would love to see that trend reversed. I would love to see Albertans engaged in the next election. It would just truly be exciting to be jumping back up to new all-time highs, to 75 or 80 per cent voter turnout. It would truly be exciting and fun to be able to say that I was part of that election. We engaged Albertans, and they came out in droves. That, to me, would be something that we could all be proud of in this House after the next election, whenever that will be, sometime between the 1st of March and May 31 of next year.

I've spoken on it before. Let's switch it now from the government's pros and why it would be good and the good image that they would be sending out to Albertans on their desire to improve democracy. Now let's go to the other side, as I was mentioning last night in the wee hours, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre came up with a little different answer than what I was getting. One of the biggest questions that I get is: when is the next election? People want to plan their lives around it. More importantly, for those who want to participate in it, that want to perhaps run and try to become an MLA and represent their people, it's very difficult to plan their business or their job when they don't know when that election is going to be.

I had an engineer call me that works for a pretty big company here, and he said: "Paul, I need to know when it is. I need to be able to give notice. We need to plan our work. How come the Premier won't give us a date?" I just said: "I wish I could answer. I don't know why she won't do it" other than the fact – again, I guess we do know why she doesn't. They want that advantage. They want to be able to fire that gun and get that first step out of the gate. They want to be able to rent their office space in prime locations. They want to be able to tie up billboards in prime locations. They want to have their signs ready to go and out, to be the first one out the gate. There are all kinds of advantages by not letting your competition know when we're going to actually call the election.

Just another quote from our Premier on that. She said that fixed election dates are important because they understand the issues that are coming. They don't believe any political party should have even if it is a theoretical upper hand in managing the political agenda and then picking the date accordingly.

I've spoken before about the last election, in 2008, where this Premier got elected, and she said that she was disappointed at all the manipulation behind the scenes that went on back then: the $1 billion spent in January of '08, before the election was called in February, the huge contracts that were signed with the teachers, and the multibillion-dollar deals that were signed by the end of January so that they could time their election just a short few days after that. I think it was February 2 or 3 they announced that it's time to go to election, just three days after they sealed the deal with the teachers.

Again, it's still very disappointing that we have a sustainability fund, yet we won't fund their pension plan. We've taken over the responsibility, saying, "Well, don't worry; we'll pay for it," but that unfunded liability could run away from us at a speed where we can't catch up. We see that in Europe they have these unfunded liabilities. Well, there are many places in the States where municipalities and cities are declaring bankruptcy because of these unfunded liabilities. It's fundamentally and ethically wrong, I believe, that we don't put the money into those funds and say: "Here it is. We owe it to you. Manage your funds. Go forward."

These are all things where, if we would fix an election date, this manipulation can't go on or where they'd know that they're doing this. That would be a good way to improve the democratic process here in the province of Alberta. That would be a way to renew a small bit of faith in the government that they are actually trying to serve the best interests of Albertans by giving them a fixed election date. You know, make sure you're back from your holidays, or plan on this, get your work set up so that you can be engaged and can go help door-knocking or can get on the phone banks and do those things. That's what we really want to do. We want to engage Albertans.

Democracy is at its best when the highest percentage of people are coming out and voting, that they're understanding the debates. They look at the options. They have that choice. Do we want to be fiscally irresponsible? Do we want the government to go into debt? Do we want them to balance the budget? Do we want them to build more infrastructure? All of those things can and should be asked during an election. It always amazes me how often these things are not ever spoken of.

5:50

Again, Bill 26 is a classic example. For six months this government and the government members had the freedom to say what they wanted because there was no real Premier, and they were looking at speaking. Over that six months it was refreshing to hear the debate that was going on. Then they picked a new head, a new head to an old beast that says: zip your lips; do what the new head of that party wants, and don't question it.

I find it astounding that the Premier said that there was a robust discussion about driving under the influence, yet there's no robust discussion coming from the government when I know – I've had members over there tell me – that they are not in favour of this. Actually, to the credit of the Member for Little Bow, he did get up and say that it was a real concern to the constituents in his area, yet I don't think that he'll be voting against it. It will be interesting to see. He did at least speak on behalf of his constituents, and I applaud him for that. It is so important that we have elected representatives that actually will come into this House, speak while the Hansard is being put down, and know that they actually are representing them.

It's another thing that people come and talk to me about, and they're very disappointed and say: Paul, why don't we know what they're actually saying? It's such a great cover for a government member to say: "Oh, we had a great debate. I fought for that in caucus, but I lost. Now there's nothing I can do. I need to vote on the government side." This isn't about a government falling because a bill doesn't pass. This is about trying to pass good bills.

Once again, we will reach out to the government members and say: "Bring the amendment forward on the date that you want. We're all for it. We're here to support you. We're here to help the Premier keep her promise of a fixed election date. We want it. Albertans want it. The Premier said that she wants it. Do the right thing. Tell Albertans that here is the date."

You know what? If the problem is that she doesn't want to do it in the spring now, we're fine with that. Just give Albertans a date, whether it needs to be postponed out to the fall, whether they want March 2013. Just tell Albertans: here's what we want. Albertans want that date. They want to know that this is when the next election is. It'll be to everyone's benefit.

We'd ask that you consider that while we take a short break here to come back with an amendment that is going to be for the benefit of everyone in this House.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is with great pleasure that I see this other amendment from the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek trying to get a fixed election date from the fixed election season, which is being promised in this bill.

I'll go back to the article from the Calgary Herald of Friday, November 25. It goes on to say: Fixed Election Law a Joke. The Premier said, from the editorial, that "the change that Albertans are looking for – namely the transparency and democracy [the Premier] spoke of before winning the Tory leadership – is not what's being delivered."

Bill 21 is being questioned from all corners of Alberta. The government's bill calling for fixed election dates sometime between March and May and every four years starting in 2012 – this is like guesswork. Pick a date. Here we are trying to pick a date with this amendment, again. There was an amendment from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. He was trying to pick a date. I prefer May to March.

I remember what happened the last election. If we pick a date, I think we can plan better. Last election the returning officer from Calgary-McCall was scrambling to find a place to set up her office. She called because I had my campaign office set up already because I was in real estate. She approached me and said, "Darshan, can you find me a place to rent?" I said: "You know, I will gladly give you half of my campaign office. You can come and set up your office here in my campaign office, and that will be easier for everybody because people will know where the returning officer is." She ended up finding a house in Saddle Ridge, way out. That's where she set up her office. I think we had a special ballot.

Mr. MacDonald: What was the voter turnout like?

Mr. Kang: Well, voter turnout, indeed, was very, very low. You know, I think we were two weeks into the writ before she found a place. By setting fixed election dates, the returning officers will know when the election is, and they can hire all the staff and set up their place. They will be ready for it, and they will not be scrambling at the last minute to set things right. Because she didn't have time and she didn't have a place to rent for the advanced poll, we were stuck in the basement, where people were waiting in the hallways and down the stairs for hours and hours to vote.

Setting up even for March, I think we can live with it as long as it's a fixed date. Setting up fixed dates, I think, makes it easier for everybody, the candidates and the returning officers. You know, they can rent their place, and they can set it up. It will be easier for the voters, too. It will be a level playing field for everybody. It will also fulfill the promise that the Premier made.

Here the Premier went on even further. That's October 6, 2012. She made a commitment to hold the election within 12 months. She also went on further to even have voting online, I see somewhere here. She was trying to make it easier for Albertans to vote. She was trying to encourage Albertans to vote, the right we have under the Charter. The best way to have Albertans exercise their right to vote is if we make it easier. We had a record low turnout in 2008. You know, if we encourage Albertans to come out and vote and they know when to vote and they can plan around it, we could have better turnouts at election time.

This is only helping the Premier to keep her promise. I'll quote again. She in her own words said:

Personally, I was very disappointed by voter turn out in 2008, when I was elected. We failed to engage the public in our most important democratic right – voting. In some ways, low turnout may indicate lack of faith in the system, and that is a very dangerous road to travel. I would like to reverse that.”

By bringing in this amendment, we are trying to reverse that trend, as the Premier promised us, Mr. Chair. I urge all the members to consider this amendment. Let's fix this once and for all so that we can get it right, so we won't have to guess when the election will be. I urge all the members to support this amendment so that we can fix this mistake.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. However, it is 6 p.m., and according to Standing Order 4(4) we must now adjourn and reconvene in Committee of the Whole at 7:30 this evening.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers .....	1511
Introduction of Visitors .....	1511
Introduction of Guests .....	1511
Members' Statements
Impaired Driving .....	1513
Civil Liberties Award for Morinville Mothers .....	1521
Pan-Canadian Assessment Program Award.....	1522
Democratic Reform .....	1522
Grain Marketing .....	1522
Secretariat for Action on Homelessness .....	1523
Oral Question Period
Political Contributions by Municipal Officials .....	1513
PC Party Benefit Plan Trust.....	1514
Public Health Inquiry .....	1514
Proposed Mandatory Minimum Sentences .....	1515
Electricity Prices.....	1515
Diabetes Supplies .....	1516
Secular Public Education in Greater St. Albert.....	1516
Disaster Assistance Benefit for Slave Lake .....	1517
PDD Appeal Panel Decision.....	1517, 1518
PDD Dispute Resolution .....	1517
Climate Change .....	1518
Access to Information.....	1519
Hydraulic Fracturing for Gas in Shale.....	1519
School Council Teleconference .....	1520
Impaired Driving Legislation .....	1520
LEED Standard for Buildings.....	1520
Primary Care Networks .....	1521
Presenting Petitions .....	1523
Tabling Returns and Reports .....	1523
Orders of the Day .....	1527
Government Motions
Adjournment of Fall Session .....	1527
Committee Membership Changes.....	1527
Committee Membership Change .....	1527
Information and Privacy Commissioner Appointment .....	1527
Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole
Bill 27   Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2).....	1528
Bill 21   Election Amendment Act, 2011 .....	1532

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fourth Session

Alberta Hansard

Wednesday evening, November 30, 2011

Issue 44e

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 27th Legislature

Fourth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Hon. Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Hon. Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Hon. Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Hon. Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hon. Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC)
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Hon. Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Hon. Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Hon. Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Hon. Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (PC)
Stelmach, Hon. Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC)
Webber, Hon. Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Clerk	W.J. David McNeil	Committee Research Co-ordinator	Philip Massolin
Law Clerk/Director of		Sergeant-at-Arms	Brian G. Hodgson
Interparliamentary Relations	Robert H. Reynolds, QC	Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Chris Caughell
Senior Parliamentary Counsel/		Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Gordon H. Munk
Director of House Services	Shannon Dean	Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard	Liz Sim
Parliamentary Counsel	Stephanie LeBlanc

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 68      Alberta Liberal: 8      Wildrose Alliance: 4      New Democrat: 2      Alberta: 1

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Sustainable Resource Development
Janice Sarich	Education
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Rodney
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
Mason
Pastoor
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Ms Pastoor

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Ouellette
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 30, 2011

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: Please be seated.

May the chair ask for your indulgence to revert to introductions?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you a person that works in my constituency office. She does a very fine job there looking after the constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. She's seated in the members' gallery tonight. Sharyl James-Wright, would you please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you another candidate for the Wildrose, Mr. John Corie from Edmonton-Riverview. It warms my heart, actually, to see our candidates coming out and watching us debate in the Legislature. We introduced two last night, and they ended up being here until 11 o'clock. John has joined us. He's been out door-knocking for months every night, and he said this is the first night he's taken off for a long time. He's looking forward to watching the debate in the Legislature. I'd ask John to rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to reintroduce two individuals from Mothers Against Drunk Driving. Number one is a long-time friend, Louise Knox. She is, I want to say, the western Canadian manager. I'm not exactly sure of the whole title. Also, Denise Dubyk, who is the president of MADD Canada.

I would also like to introduce Trish McOrmond, who works in our ministry and has been working on the impaired driving file, as well as Shaun Hammond, who is the assistant deputy minister.

It also gives me great pleasure to introduce Don Wilson. Don is from the Alberta Motor Transport Association. As we were talking about earlier, his truck drivers have approximately 200,000 kilometres a year on the road. He's here as well supporting this bill.

I also want to introduce, if I can, Donna, who is with my office as well. There are two more introductions. I'm sorry; I can't remember the names, but I know that you're here supporting. Very important people.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Any other introductions? The hon. Minister of Environment and Water.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to help my hon. friend out and just make sure that we have the names of the fine folks that are here visiting us this evening. Today we have Brenda Johnson and Dale Friedel with us. So please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly again.

Bill 21 Election Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: The chair shall now recognize the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. When we adjourned, we were on Bill 21. I would like now to move that we adjourn debate and that when the House rises, we report progress.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 26 Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I'm not sure if the minister has commented publicly. I bet you there was a media conference on the effect of the decision on what you're doing in Alberta, but maybe I could just request that he consider updating us a bit so that I don't have to read this while I'm standing here.

In the meantime this has turned out to be a really interesting bill for me, mostly, I think, because I represent downtown Edmonton, so I have certainly had a number of people express their opinion fairly forcefully. I admit that a number of them are connected with the restaurant and hospitality industry. I don't think that makes their views any less pertinent or valuable although they have a certain interest in the outcome of the bill, I suppose. I want to acknowledge them because I think it's important, when we're in this House and we're representing people, that we do bring their voices to the floor.

I have heard from Vivien Jonathan, who is appalled – I'll quote this, I'll send this stuff to Hansard, and I'll table it all tomorrow – that as a law-abiding citizen she'd be “criminalized without breaking the criminal code of Canada – it's a travesty.” And this isn't to say, necessarily, that these people are right. I'm almost positive the minister would feel that they're wrong. But I think it's important that we understand how they're feeling because it's going to relate to what I'm going to say later.

Nathan Kyler from the Union Hall agrees with my stance – I didn't tell him to say that – but I think it's because I'm questioning the one section, which is section 12 amending section 88 in the main bill.

Joyce Ingram. Again, she doesn't indicate that she's affiliated with any particular – no. “As an Albertan I do not support the .05 limit and the penalties proposed. This bill . . . should be forwarded to a Policy Committee for further input by Albertans.” All right, Joyce.

Jonas Van Ginhoven, who works for a construction company. He would like to say that he's not against measures to reduce drunk driving, and he's also the first to admit that he's not overly well read on this subject. He really feels very strongly that “we have a problem with the enforcement of current laws and a problem with the justice system allowing repeat offenders to still be allowed to get behind the wheel.” So he would be very keen on two of the sections in Bill 26. He suggests that it's “rare that impaired drivers are caught” and asks: “Why not change the checkstop program? We need more Checkstops. Why not have police dedicated to late night surveillance of trouble areas?” So that's Jonas, and he does not have a stake in the hospitality industry.

Dan Peet. His family has been dramatically affected by impaired driving with a death in the family caused by an impaired driver, and the driver was apparently over double the legal limit of blood alcohol content. "By lowering any limits to 0.05, these same 'type' of people are still going to drive with no regard for the potential consequences. They had no regard for the law before, why would they have any regard for it after a change in the lower limit?" He believes two things will happen: "The law would effectively make people who are law abiding 'regular Joe' people who have 2, maybe 3 drinks with dinner say, criminals. This will drastically affect lives, careers, and families." "The law would tie up the courts dramatically with the new found criminals," and the law would not "dissuade anyone who previously would have driven over 0.08 from driving now."

Oh, my Lord. I have a whole whack of them here.

7:40

I think I've raised the issues brought forward by Mike Yasinski from Hudsons earlier. Of course, he has a number of statistics.

Oh, there's Jim Thornton. He is not connected. I know he's not. He fully opposes the proposed impaired driving legislation.

Okay. So that starts to give you a sense of what my life has been like recently.

I thank the members opposite who've taken the time to spend with me and outline their vision for a change in culture. I complimented the minister's staff already on what turned out not to be their speech because I think the minister ripped it up and spoke from the heart, and I felt it was very effective. I was certainly partially swayed by it and also by the Minister of Transportation.

As I said before, I really like the two pieces in the bill that are about strengthening the administrative sanctions of seizure and suspension that are available for .08 drivers. I get what you're trying to do by changing the culture, and I think you're right. I just think you're not right right now for a number of reasons. I think, having looked at a lot of this, we're not quite ready for you. That's what makes regular citizens – what did the one guy call them? – regular Joes feel like the government is looking upon them as criminals when they're not and putting them in a position where they would feel that they had done something terribly wrong when, in fact, they hadn't contravened the Criminal Code.

I get your distinction that you keep making that you do this already. I finally got it. It took you awhile. I'll admit that you tried hard to get me to understand that. But I will say to you that the culture right now is not that. The culture right now, certainly, for anybody over – this reminded me of somebody else I got a message from. Certainly for anybody, let's say, over 25 – I'm generalizing wildly here; please, forgive me – what we learned was: don't drink and drive drunk. Don't drink and drive smashed. Don't drink and drive out of control. Don't drink and drive . . . [interjection] Yes. And I get it. You guys are trying to go to: if you have one drink, do not drive. That's where you're trying to go.

But that's not where most of us are at, and that's where you're getting the push-back because we were assured when this original legislation was brought in that you shouldn't drive drunk, and now you're telling us that you shouldn't drive if you have a drink at all. That is a change in culture, and that's what is giving you the push-back because we're not ready for it. We can't figure out and don't have at hand for us all of the supports that are going to make that an easy transition. You are putting us into a very leaky boat on a very rough sea, and there are a lot of people sensing the seasickness to come, if I might stretch my analogy a little bit, and that's because of a number of things.

Let me talk about alternative forms of transit. Now, we know that this is an issue in rural Alberta. I have no idea how that's going to get dealt with. I don't live in rural Alberta. I've been pretty clear about that. I'm a city girl, and I'm a downtown girl. So I have no idea how you're supposed to get to an occasion – a party, a Legion function, whatever – if you're living in the rural area, and you know you're going to have one or two drinks, a glass of champagne, a toast. How are you supposed to get home? I don't know how you work that out because there's no transit for you at all. Unless you are literally phoning your friends and organizing some sort of designated driver situation where you're carpooling with four or five adults, I cannot imagine how you're going to do this. Does that mean that you're expected to stay home or not drink? I just don't know how you're going to organize that because there is no public transit available to you.

In most of the cities in Alberta there isn't public transit available except for in the larger cities. Even for us, I can tell you, as citizens of Edmonton we're not too thrilled with our late-night public transit system. With most of our buses the last bus is pulling out at 12 something, and I think the LRT is at about the same time. So if you're actually trying to leave a bar at 2 o'clock – and it's fair to question me about, well, really, are we trying to deal with the people that leave the bars at 2 o'clock? Do we care? They're probably beyond hope, anyway.

I'm still trying to work my way through how we do this culture change, and I think if I was in the city, I would be coming right back at you guys and going, "Okay; pony up money for an expansion of our mass transit right now, kiddos," because you are putting us in a position where we need to be providing it pronto. You guys are talking about bringing this bill into play by either this winter or next summer. I mean, cities are capable of doing this, but they're not going to do it on buttons. Honestly, I'd be coming back to you guys right away and be going, "Okay; where's the money for additional transit?"

In Edmonton we're playing around with the idea – and I think we've done a pilot project – of a night bus. For Harry Potter fans out there what we're talking about is exactly the same as the night bus. It's one or two buses that leave the central areas and go out to the bus centres in the more remote and suburban areas, and then people are expected to probably walk home from there. It runs all night long or runs into the wee hours.

Again, that's something else that can be used in the major centres. I'm close enough to walk because I'm smart enough to live in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, but frankly a lot of my friends are not lucky enough to live in this fabulous constituency. They're in Strathcona, for example. So if they happen to be downtown, well, they can walk, but it's a heck of a walk, and they're not doing it in high heels, I'll tell you. So considerations there.

There are also still considerations about how you are going to still need increased police for all of these fabulous checkpoints that you're going to run in order to catch these people that are impaired between .05 and .08, and if you don't have enough police running the checkpoints to catch the really bad guys now, how on earth are you expecting to catch the other ones later? Again, as a municipal councillor I would be looking right back at you guys, going: "Pony up. You have stuck us with this one. Where's the money for us to be able to provide our citizens with what they are now asking for?"

I think there is also a question about the provisions in the court system that may be called upon for this kind of thing, especially – and I don't think you guys intend to take a soccer mom and her minivan and seize it for an extended period of time, but according to these provisions if she is caught in one of those situations of blowing between .05 and .08 twice in 10 years, she would be caught in it. Then she loses her vehicle until her court case comes up. Once again, I'm looking at you – oh, the minister has got that face on, so he's going to correct me. That's good. I'm looking forward to it.

But, you know, her vehicle could be seized until she comes up in court. Well, if we can't get people through court fast enough now, how are you guys going to deal with getting even more people through the court with your anticipated change of culture and clampdown on people later? I don't think you guys want to be unfair.

7:50

Speaking of unfair, let me go on to the civil liberties portion of this. This is the bottom-line crux of it for me, the idea that you are laying sanctions upon people without due process and without an appeal process. By the time your case gets to court, you've already been punished, and that is still wrong in my books. If I let you guys do that now, what else are you going to decide you want to bring that in on? What's the next thing that appears to be reasonable in your terms to take away people's due process? And this, I think – I bet you – is where B.C. got into trouble because there is a right, a capital R right, in our Constitution that says you have the right not to be unduly subject to search and seizure. It's a right.

Now, all of us in this House know how many times someone comes into your constituency office or your office going: "Gol darn it; I have a right to raise as many smelly animals in my yard as I want to, and I don't care what the neighbour thinks" or "I have a right to subsidized housing" or "I have a right to this and a right to that." I will admit, for all of my raving, lefty leanings here, that at that point I rise to my full 5 foot 3 height and point with a severe teacherlike finger at the Constitution, which is on the wall in my office, and I say: those are your rights.

But, folks, one of the rights you are talking about contravening with this legislation is in that document. You are contravening it, and that one is the bottom line to me. [interjection] No, it's not to be subject to unreasonable search and seizure or whatever it is. I'll find it for you. If you're desperate for it, I'll get the library to send it up for me right away.

That's, at the bottom line, what's wrong. I do understand how well intentioned this is. I can look at the face of the Minister of Justice and I know he means this and he means it for good reasons, and I believe that. I've worked with him, and I believe that. I can look on the face of the Minister of Transportation, and I know he's doing this for all the right reasons. It's not a happy place for him to be, necessarily.

But, my friends, you cannot do this before you are ready, and you are trying to do this before you have allowed Alberta to get ready, before you have allowed the citizens to understand what you're trying to do here in changing that culture. As a result, you are making them feel like they have done something terribly wrong. You cannot violate those fundamental rights. You just can't. Frankly, you guys play fast and loose with that stuff a little too often for my liking, and it's my job to stand up here and say to you: "No, you can't. You've got to figure out another way to do this. You need to figure out another way to do this."

My suggestion – and I did run it by some of you, but it kind of fell flat somewhere in the well between the two of us here – was that you take section 12, which is amending section 88, out of the bill for now, go forward with the other two sections, and then work on the longer range of what you're trying to do in implementing your changed section 88 with public education programs, with enhanced policing, with enhanced legal . . .

Mr. Hehr: Analysis.

Ms Blakeman: No. Not the analysis but the actual people to do the work in the law courts. Sorry; I've missed something off that list I had in my head.

I think that's what's wrong with this. You've talked me into the importance of changing the culture, but you need to change the culture, not stand up and announce: we've decided this is different, and all of you are now going to have to do this because of our say-so. You haven't allowed this process to evolve in a natural way; you're imposing it.

Finally, I'm going to go back to where I started. Oh, that reminded me. I did have an e-mail from one person who said: hey lady, I happen to be in that age range you were talking about, and I didn't . . . [interjection] Yeah, it was fairly colloquial in the way they were talking to me. Their point was that they weren't keen on it either even though they were in that younger age range. Why do you let me get off on tangents? Then I forgot where I was going.

I'm coming back to where I started, which is the effect on the small business. On this side, in the opposition, we understand how important small- and medium-sized businesses are to the Alberta economy. They, in fact, create more jobs than the big guys. They are locally based, and the money stays here, and the paycheques stay here. Frankly, the hospitality industry doesn't escape my wrath here because they are very same ones that lobbied behind closed doors to have a two-tiered minimum wage so that they could pay their servers less money, which I still will not forgive them for.

But I am concerned about the effect that this is going to have on those local, for the most part. I haven't heard from anybody that owns, you know, restaurants outside of a given centre. Those that have written to me and said that they own four or five restaurants: they're all located in the same industry. So these are small business people, and you are going to change their economy.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: May we revert briefly to introductions?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would to introduce to you and to all members present here this evening Sharon Schooler from the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research, who's up there in the gallery, and also her daughter Hannah Grandt, who's also joining us in the gallery this evening to hear the proceedings of the House. Could I ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome.

Thank you.

Bill 26

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011

(continued)

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to say a few words to address some of the comments made by the hon. member opposite. As I did when I started my comments a week ago, I want to thank everybody in the Assembly for their comments. I want to go out of my way again to acknowledge that everybody wants the same thing here. We want safety on our highways. I wouldn't attribute any ill motive to anybody who's speaking on any side of this issue.

We obviously may not agree on some of the steps that we're taking, but nonetheless I feel very good about where I'm at on this and where my colleagues on this side are at. I would very much like to persuade the Member for Edmonton-Centre to see things my way. I don't know if I'll be successful, but I'm going to just say a few things to try.

I want to make a comment about the term "criminalization" because we hear that every once in a while. It's a lot of the criticism. We hear people talking about criminalization. The only way you become a criminal by impaired driving is if you blow over .08, and that's federal Criminal Code sanctions. What we are talking about here, and the only power we have in this House, is to levy administrative sanctions, and that's what we're doing. This is well within our constitutional authority to do.

I resist that characterization of some of these things, that we are criminalizing people who are between .05 and .08. We are not. We are withdrawing the right to drive, which the province of Alberta has. The province allows the licence, issues the licence, and the province can take it away under circumstances it deems appropriate.

Now, on the .05. I just need to keep on hammering away at this. I will say that I haven't read the B.C. case that just came out today, but that has been in the news. My department tells me, and I think this is on good authority, that there's nothing in that decision that impacts this legislation or what we're doing here. As a matter of fact, that decision doesn't in any way criticize the .05 standard that B.C. was using. The court's comments relate to something different, and it's not the way we do it here.

8:00

As a matter of fact, as I think has been said by a number of my colleagues, we were watching what B.C. was doing, and we could see that some of the problems they were having were with the roadside treatment and the appeal process. There was a feeling that maybe there wasn't administrative fairness there, so we have gone out of our way in this legislation to create that administrative fairness, that appeal, and the right to appeal to an independent, quasi-judicial panel. We feel as though, if anything, that B.C. case actually supports our legislation. Again, this is a preliminary look because I haven't read the case, but that's the best information I have right now.

A few other comments back to the .05. We just need to keep on hammering away at this. Point zero five has been the guide, the standard that has been used as an indicator of impairment for years in Alberta, so I find it difficult to accept this criticism that somehow now we've all of a sudden gotten tough on people. There were 7,700 people in Alberta last year who had roadside suspensions because they blew over .05. They blew a "warn," which starts at .05. If we tore up this legislation and threw it in the garbage, next year there'd probably be another 7,700 people who would be sanctioned by the province of Alberta for blowing a "warn" over .05.

The Minister of Transportation over and over and over again talks about: "There's no change on the front end. The practice is the same. What's different is the sanction." Again, I'll just repeat some of the comments that I made a week ago about studies. We can look at studies, and they show all kinds of things. We've got some people in the audience today who are living proof of some of the damage that can be done by impaired drivers, and I want to thank them for being here, by the way.

The studies show that deterrence works, that this is a behaviour that does change, that can be changed. It can be modified. Not all undesirable behaviours are easy to change. This isn't easy to change either. But deterrence works, and for a deterrent to work, it's got to be immediate, and it's got to have some bite to it. That's the purpose of this legislation. We acknowledge that it does have some bite. We don't want to be seizing people's vehicles. We want people to drive safely. We don't have fines, by the way. We don't want their money. We want them to drive safely.

I want to talk a little bit about business. As you can imagine, for the people in this caucus, the last thing we'd want to do is offend small-business people in Alberta, but there are some times when you've got to do the right thing. Safe highways aren't for sale. The argument that there's some sort of economic argument that trumps safety on the highway: I'm sorry; it just can't be that way. We are convinced that these sanctions will make a difference. They will save lives. Remember that we had 96 deaths in Alberta last year on our highways. In B.C.: a reduction of 40-plus per cent since they implemented this new process, this new procedure, their new penalties. They've been reduced by 40 per cent. I don't know what the number is.

Now, you know, I've heard the comment: well, sure, but you can't attribute all of those reductions to this new law. Possibly not. But then how is it that the people who argue that want to tell us, want to have us believe that they've had a 21 per cent reduction in business in the last year, in a post-Olympic year, I might add?

That number, the reduction in B.C., means something to us. We have gone out of our way to avoid some of the pitfalls that B.C. has with their legislation, as was, I think, supported by that court decision today. I really ask the members of the Assembly to support this legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I just want to go back to a couple of things that the minister has said. I get it. I understand the point about deterrence and that it has to be immediate and have bite. This may well be the point where we start to repeat ourselves because we can't convince the other person, but my point to the good members opposite is: fine, but why do you have to put that in place now, without allowing a period of time for people to understand the arguments that you're making and be able to adjust to the things they need to have to support them in this, which is increased travel options, which, by the way, would also include cabs in the cities? The city has just announced that it is going to allow an additional 100 medallions, which means a hundred more cabs on the road, but I think there's also an argument for seasonal increase in cabs in the cities. I still don't know what you're going to do in rural Alberta. You need to talk to your rural people there.

You have failed to convince me why you need to bring this into place now and why you can't either proclaim parts of this bill immediately and proclaim this one in a year and in the meantime work on increasing the capacity in the court system, the capacity of the police officers, the capacity of the public transit. That's where I'm failing to understand why you're doing this. It does look punitive to me that you're putting this in place as a deterrence – and you admit that – but it is like changing the rules of the game midpoint, and the people get caught going: I didn't get that that was what I was supposed to be doing.

You will argue, again, that you've always been doing this, but seriously most of the people I think you would stop on the street out there would not understand or know that you guys have had – the minister had two new expressions. Blowing a warrant: that was correct, right? [interjection] I'm sorry. Blowing a warning. Diction is so important in this job. Blowing a warning, not a warrant. Thank you. He also had: safe highways are not for sale. The minister is cracking hot tonight. But you still haven't given me an argument as to why you need to do that immediately. Oh, good. The other minister is getting ready to stand up.

Two other things. You still have not addressed the fact that you are unable to deal with the chronic abusers of the system, who are killing people and creating so much of the carnage that we see now, who are blowing well over, that 2 per cent or 20 per cent or whatever it is that is responsible for 86 per cent of the deaths and maiming out there. You still have not addressed that. You're not doing it, and I don't see you doing it in this bill. That's a point that a number of people have raised, so step up. Where is that?

8:10

Lastly, I'm going to challenge those numbers out of B.C. a bit because those were the numbers – and they're impressive – from a five-month pilot project. They have not been able to give us the numbers from the end of that pilot project to now, so we don't know if they're able to maintain that level or are like the insulin/islet transfer program that we discovered here in Edmonton, the Edmonton protocol, which did such amazing things out of the gate and then we find that the effect of the protocol actually pulls back a bit and that the long-line average is quite a bit less than what we saw at the beginning.

There are all kinds of things that could have happened to those numbers. You are quoting me numbers, because I'm seeing the same numbers everywhere, from that five-month project, which went from May to February or February to May, probably May to February, which is where they got those numbers from, but they have not continued it. I still wonder if it isn't partly a surveillance effect, where people knew they were in a pilot project or that that was running and therefore they were a bit more careful, and that gives you part of the results that you're looking for.

I'm looking forward to the Minister of Transportation.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I want to say that I very much appreciate the hon. member looking for solutions. I think that's critically important. I need to just touch on a little bit, okay? I'm not quite the philosopher that others may be. I'm just going to try to answer some of the questions that you proposed as you started, and hopefully that will be helpful.

I need to repeat first of all the B.C. legislation. When our staff looked at the court case that happened in B.C., in essence it supported what we were doing because what happened was that the appeal was not successful in what we were doing, especially the .05 to the .08. The appeal was very clear. There were some challenges about .08 and above and its noncriminal aspect. Please understand that we are not touching that. We are leaving that as a criminal aspect. There was the concern there. When I look at it and our staff look at it, we look at, you know, that the appeal results were very successful as to what we were looking at. Of course, we were very interested.

One of the comments that you made very early, hon. member, is that the laws would have an effect on time in court. I would say to you that that's the time, I think, you were talking about .05 to .08. I would suggest to you that the .05 to .08 are the appeals where, if you had blown .05 to .08, you'd be able to have the appeal on another breathalyzer on the scene or else, secondly, to appeal to be able to go into a barracks, I guess I can call it, or an RCMP detachment and blow again to verify. The .05 to .08 is not a court type of situation. In fact, if there is an appeal for the second and third convictions, it is to the Alberta transport safety board, which is an independent and quasi-judicial board. It doesn't affect the courts in that manner.

You talked about the culture. You know, I really believe and I'm very passionate that we have to change the culture. I look at impaired driving convictions over the last five years of 41,466 in this province, and I say to you: impaired convictions. That's over .08. You know, that's astronomical for . . . [interjection] You'll get your chance. So what happened? Forty-one thousand, four hundred and sixty-six.

Now, when we look at the 24-hour suspensions, the suspensions that have been given in the last four years – and you've heard the hon. minister talk about 7,700 in the last year – in the last five years it's been 42,762.

I think that one of the things that probably concerns me the most, and that's myself as a father and a grandfather, is the number of zero-tolerance suspensions in Alberta, I'd say, in the last year. Last year we still had 1,665 suspensions to people who were on probationary licences. That is a little bit scary to me. The majority of those – and I say the zero tolerance, of course – I would think would be students, so let's clarify what that category is.

A graduated licence basically is a learner's permit and probationary. A graduated licence you need to have for at least a year. Probationary you need to have for two years. When we look at the probationary licences, before you get your permanent licence: last year 1,665. I go all the way back. I mean, it was 1,487 the year before, et cetera, et cetera. To me that's a concern because that's one of the things that isn't in this House but will be looked at and taken care of in the regulations when we're looking at the graduated licence.

You've been asking the question also about, you know, .05 to .08 and that it's like a new culture. I want to say to you that this is what's been used. People are used to .05 to .08. There's nothing new. I don't know how I can tell you that there's nothing new. When we look at the statistics that we have and we see what has happened, it's not only ourselves as a province. It's eight other jurisdictions – well, I shouldn't say eight because it's really seven; Saskatchewan is using .04 to .08. It is something that the people of Alberta have been used to. It's not like waking up one morning and saying: "Whoa. Jeez, we've got this new law, and everything is different. We have to be able to get used to it."

I want to say that the discussion has been taking place. The discussion has been taking place between our three ministries for three or four years. I know the hon. minister talked about that. When he was first appointed as the Minister of Justice, that was one of the first things that was on his plate. When we look at the impact that it has on Albertans, there isn't that change. But – but; I've got to say but – the penalty is different. The penalty was 24 hours. Whatever you did, you know, if you had a .05 or a .07, that was all the same. Now the penalty is different. The first time it is three days' suspension and three days' seizure. Is that different? Yes, it is different.

When I look at it and say, "Is it important to have that change?" I still don't like the 42,000. I think you have to do something. It is a culture, and there has to be a change somehow. When I see these numbers of graduated licences or probationary licences, there's no doubt that it is a concern for me. I mean, my comment was, of course, that we've been working out the – oh, I've got to make this comment or I'll forget. Like you said you were doing, I'm forgetting, too.

You know what? We've been figuring this thing out in rural Alberta for years. Don't all of a sudden say we don't have taxis. You know, we've been figuring this out for years with our children and ourselves as designated drivers. It's not all of a sudden. We still have .05 to .08, but now that we're going to escalate the penalty from 24 hours to three and three, holy smokes, we don't have any designated drivers? The designated drivers have to be there. They have to be more prominent, and that has to be throughout the province.

8:20

Your comment was to pony up money for transportation, pony up money to support transit because we have people who are drinking and driving. To me, that's not the subject. The subject is very clear. Don't drink and drive. It's not about the responsibility of ponying up for a situation to try to address. I want to say to you, hon. member, that I'm sure that you would not stand up in front of this House – maybe you did – and say: “You know what? We're having people who are drinking and driving, so we have to have a better transit system.” That's not the solution. The solution is to try to address the individuals that are drinking and driving. That's the challenge I have.

You said we need to have more police – I think it's a quote – to catch these guys. I say to you that, you know, that's part of the importance of having a change in culture. We will never have enough policemen to catch everybody. I'm going to refer just for a second to health care. What ends up taking place in health care is that we will never have enough health care to be reactive to all of the symptoms that are happening in this province or in the country. We have to do some prevention. We have to do wellness. We have to be able to somehow convince people that being healthy is more important than having the ability to go to a doctor or to go to a hospital to receive the reaction. I think that's the point I wanted to make there. It is about the culture again.

I'm going to go back to your comment about the soccer moms. You said that it's not right that we seize a vehicle until the court case comes up for a soccer mom. Well, I want to say to you that if there's a court case coming up, that's .08 and above. So if it's .08 and above and we seize her vehicle for seven days and we don't let her have a licence until her court case, that's what it should be. If she is drinking to .08 and above, then I say to you unequivocally that she should not be on the road, okay? You know, I've had kids in sports, so I'm not too sure if I want one of the soccer moms to say, “I'll take the kids today,” and her not having the judgment if she should drink to .05 – I'm sorry; I don't want her drinking, okay? There's a little bit of responsibility.

You made comments about civil liberties. I should let the hon. minister answer these, but I'm just going to make a couple of little comments. You talked about laying sanctions without due process. I think I talked a little bit about that ability, especially the .05 to the .08, that there is that opportunity for an appeal. This is very different from what took place in B.C. I need you to understand that. B.C. really didn't have the direction of appeal or opportunity for appeal. We do. When we stand up here today and say that we have learned from other jurisdictions, you know, we have. I also said that we've been working at it for three or four years. We're looking and have looked at what others have done. Of course, B.C.'s is very new, and it's very prominent to us. But it didn't take long to see that some of the things they were doing were not where we wanted to be, especially the high penalties.

One of the more important points that you had talked about – and it's quite interesting that you make those comments from that side of the House. I'm not making any sort of comments about where you may be on that side of the House. I would say to you that on this side of the House our respect for small business is unsurpassed. I would say to you that when I talk about taxation and I talk about revenue for this province, I say that small business and corporate business is what provides the taxation for this province. You know, someone like myself as a politician and yourself and teachers and nurses: we all provide a service. We get paid from the pot of budget, of revenue, and then we put some back. But all of our money comes from that pot.

In actuality, with the exception of maybe a little bit of licence fees, et cetera, et cetera, you know, most of our revenue comes from small business and from corporate business. That's a direct input. I truly understand that. You know, to stand up and say, “Geez, I have a concern because I'm having an impact on business,” I say: “You know what? Yes, that does affect me, but at the same time I have to look at some of the effects.” We do need to have a culture change.

I hear about what happens in B.C. All of my blood relatives are in B.C., and they talk about how it had a major effect at the beginning. Theirs was a change. It wasn't a cultural change as happens here. Theirs was a change. Those businesses are adapting. Are they back to where they were? I'm not sure, and I don't know how long it'll take. It is a cultural change. It's going to go down, and it's going to come back up. It's no different than smoking. It's no different than people saying, “Oh, can't smoke in a bar; we're going to close the bars down,” right? What happened? You know, they were able to adapt.

If I can just reiterate – because you went on a second round about why now. Why now? I think it's that we have looked at it for a long time. We have looked at, you know, what kind of impact it has on people, on families, on individuals that have had families that were injured. I know there's a lot of discussion that was had about a 2 per cent effect. Please, let me reassure you that that was 2 per cent of drivers. It didn't talk about the other people that lost their lives that were passengers. It didn't talk about the individuals that were scarred for life or that had lifelong injuries. I hate to get into statistics and interpretations. In my heart I'm a mathematician, and I love it. That's why I try to stay with the stats that are real.

Going back to my perspective as to why now, it's because we've seen the results. We've seen what other provinces are doing. We've seen what we see as a solution that would work. Also, I very much need to say to you that our leader worked on this previous to the Minister of Justice in place right now, who was part of looking at that and felt that it was important for this province and to the people. This is not the Minister of Transportation standing up and saying: we have to do this. This is three ministries that have worked together to that solution.

8:30

One last question that you had. You talked about the chronic abuser. That's a challenge. It is a real challenge. That's why, number one, we have to change the culture from the probationary licence, we have to change a little culture on the .05 to the .08, and we have to stiffen up the penalties for the repeat offenders. That's why we have the ignition interlock. Right now in order to have an interlock, you have to blow .16, double, or refuse to blow. I want to tell you that if I was thinking about – what's that saying? One beer is too much and 50 isn't enough.

The Chair: Hon. minister, 20 minutes is up.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you. I am really enjoying the discussion that we're having here. There are things to learn, I have to say, doing research as we go and trying to follow the conversation that is still going. I really appreciate the Justice minister. We all know that we all want to improve the safety on our roads. That's what this is about. I hope as I discuss it that that's the spirit in which it goes forward because we just want the legislation that's going to serve Albertan's interests best.

The one thing that I'm still a little bit caught off on is the number of times that both ministers have mentioned that this has been going on for three or four years. I don't know. Maybe I'm disconnected on this, but, boy, I don't remember any discussion on this going to the public and talking about this like I do, you know, the land assembly act and the transmission lines and the water. I mean, lots of those things I saw going around. I don't ever remember seeing them going around talking about lowering the drinking level from .08 to .05. I don't know. I haven't seen that discussion with the public, though you're saying that it's been in cabinet. I certainly missed it. If any of the leadership candidates talked about this, somehow I missed that when you guys were selecting a new leader. I certainly don't remember her making a promise: if I get in – as Justice minister this was a big issue for three or four years. And so boom.

The reason I'm bringing this up is because I am a little bit concerned. The Minister of Transportation says: no, we're not changing anything. You know, this is a major change. I think that if I owned a restaurant that served alcohol, I would be pretty nervous. I've gotten an awful lot of letters from those people.

Again, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre brings up what I think is a very valid question: why such fast implementation of this bill when you've got bills that you've never even declared? Some of them are about child safety, safe communities, the mandatory reporting of child pornography, that haven't even been implemented, which are critical to the safety of our children. I just don't quite understand the motives of saying that this has to happen so far.

To switch gears for a minute, on the positive side, though, I'm thrilled with the ignition interlock. Again, I'm going to take issue that when you say things have been reduced by 40 per cent – I don't drink, so I'm safe, but I would think that if I was a drinker and I knew that there was going to be an interlock on my vehicle, that has bite. That is a problem, to say that, oh, the reason for the bite is because we got a three-day suspension. I think if you were to bring this forward in steps, we'd find out where the bigger bite is. This is where I think the bite needs to be is at the .08. Those people literally, and no pun intended, have gotten away with murder. It's illegal. We have people that have killed others, and they get a slap on the wrist. They're back to work. So that's where the bite needs to be.

I'm grateful for the ignition interlock. I think that, yes, this is something that we can go ahead with. It serves two purposes and that is why I really like the ignition interlock. If you are a chronic drinker and you have been caught and you have that on your vehicle, you don't lose that privilege to drive the times when you need to. But you've lost that ability to go and get plastered and get in your vehicle and go home and jeopardize people's lives. I think it's a great solution. Like I say, I applaud you in bringing that forward and making it tough. It's the repeat offenders.

Again, I love doing the math, too. I love looking at that and seeing it. I use the analogy that if I was to throw a bag of coins on the ground here, and I have, let's say – I don't know – 1,800 pennies and 18 one-ounce gold coins, which ones are we going to go after? To me I'm going to go after those gold coins. To me those drunk repeat offenders are the ones where the statistics are where more people get hurt.

We keep talking about these people from .05 to .08 and talk like that's where the really significant problem is. I just haven't seen it. I haven't seen it in the stats, in the numbers. The real problem is actually those people that haven't had any drinks, but they're causing 60 per cent of the fatalities. What are they doing? Is it cellphones? I mean, we brought in that bill. Here it is. We're going to ban hand-held cellphones. Again, I question that one because I don't think that we drive any better when we're talking hands free than we do when we've got a cellphone in our hand. I think, again, we've got a red herring there, saying, "We've passed these laws, and now we're going to be safe" when we aren't.

I'm also very concerned – and I spoke the other day about this – that we seem to be thinking that the real important thing to do is to be watching for people that are driving and, heaven forbid, don't have their seat belt on like that is a menace on the road. That's about personal safety. That's about, you know, the cost of our health care. I understand that, but the police seem to be focused – the point is that what we want to focus on are those repeat offenders.

We want to focus on those areas where we know people are drinking, and they're coming out, whether it's a football game tonight: you know, is there going to be a checkstop tonight after the Oilers game? [interjections] Really? And you don't think they drink? I talked to an individual tonight who is going there. He's planning on getting drunk. I said: how are you getting home? [interjections] I was taking the next step. Sorry. I'm trying to contract because we don't have a lot of time, and I thought you could follow me on that step. [interjection] Oh, no. We can talk all night about these things, and if they want to sidetrack me, I'm happy to sidetrack. We'll come back to it.

Again, the numbers. To change the thinking of drivers, tell me how many nights and under what events we have set up checkstops. I don't know that we're really addressing that. What we're kind of doing is setting them up at random and hoping to catch some of those 42,000 when, in fact, we know where a lot of those problems are. We don't go and focus in that area and say, "Let's zone in on these football games, let's zone in on a hockey game, let's zone in on the bars on the weekends" if that's the problem that we're after.

Again, what I want to stress the most is that we're changing several sanctions, and now we're going to jump to this conclusion that, oh, it's 40 per cent. I find it quite fascinating that we know the number of deaths in Alberta, but in B.C. – again, this is where statistics are always fun, and we use them to spin our little side – it's a 40 per cent reduction. Well, how many? We don't know, but it's a 40 per cent reduction. I'd like to know the actual numbers.

I mean, it drives me crazy when you listen to the people promoting the stock market or something that say: it's down 30 or up 30. Just tell me where it is. You know, is oil at $97.50? I'll remember that for the next day. To say that it's down $3, and you've missed it for three days is not significant. Maybe it went up to $110, and now it's $107, and you're doing great.

It's the same with these things. Let's just actually use the numbers and not the percentages. When people use percentages, usually to me there is a reason. They're trying to protect their position and showing this huge move when, in fact, there isn't one. You know what? If they had 10 people last year that they caught and now it's down to six, that's a 40 per cent reduction, but they only changed four. Why wouldn't they say that we reduced them by four? Because it doesn't sound very impressive. So we definitely have some struggles there.

8:40

Small businesses. I think one of the important things that we need to do is respect the rule of law and not have it all of a sudden changed at short notice. The businesses know that it's .08. Albertans know that you're legally impaired at .08. Again, I'll ask if maybe one of the two ministers can answer this because I don't have a lot of experience in this area. My understanding is that if you are stopped at a roadside checkstop and you blow, let's say, .06, the officers at this point have the discretion to bring someone out and walk the line, touch their nose, and then they actually do an assessment to see whether or not a person is impaired, and then they would put a 24-hour freeze on the vehicle. I don't know. If someone could elaborate on that, I would appreciate it.

I think there's a big change in that, where now if you're .05, it's going to be a three-day suspension of your licence and your vehicle. I think that's very different. I think that's going to have the biggest difference on those restaurants and bars where people before felt safe. They could have one drink, two drinks over a couple of hours, have a visit with their colleagues, go home from work, and they weren't intoxicated. They were able to drive safely. I don't know. I'd like a little bit more information on that if that would be possible.

Sorry. I've just got to go over my notes a little bit here as well. We have the numbers, but again sometimes I'm reading, so I don't always get them correct. Was it roughly 42,000? I guess it's 41,466. If I don't use the right numbers, you'll say I wasn't listening. Those were the actual ones that got caught, went through the process, and were guilty in Alberta last year? Was it 41,466 that were charged?

Mr. Danyluk: Impaired convictions.

Mr. Hinman: Convictions. Thank you. Yes. Okay.

Ms Blakeman: Then there were 7,700 suspensions.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. That's interesting to me that the difference in the numbers there is such a small amount: 7,500. You know, that's less than – what? – 7 per cent of the people.

Mr. Danyluk: Forty-one thousand four hundred and sixty-six convictions in five years.

Mr. Hinman: In five years? That's not in one year?

Mr. Danyluk: No, no. Five years.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. You see, that's what I'd missed.

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. And 42,762 24-hour suspensions in five years. Last year was the 7,756 suspensions and 8,500 and something impaired convictions.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. Thank you. Because I thought that you were saying that was per year and I thought: wow; that's a big jump in numbers there.

Mr. Danyluk: No. They're very close.

Mr. Hinman: That makes a little more sense. Thanks for clarifying that.

Again, I guess, what I'm most pleased about this bill is what we're doing with the ignition interlock. I really think that we need to hit and focus on that. I'd love to see that we'd move the bill in that area.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I couldn't agree with her more on the timing and what I want to call the lead time to say: "You know what? In six months we're going to implement this," and let people kind of adjust to this. I think there's going to be a boom in the business of selling those little $5 blowers so Albertans can get educated. I think Albertans will go out and get educated, but let's give them a little bit of time.

We always have that leeway in so many of the bills that we change. The cellphone ban: I think there was a six-month time before we implemented that, then they gave warnings for the first month after that. Yet it seems like this isn't going to be such. In those other ones all that was was a $150 fine or something. Here we're talking about the fact that you're going to lose your licence and you're going to lose your vehicle. I really think in all fairness there should be a little bit of time for people to adapt and not just immediately slap this down.

Again, I want to go back and reiterate absolutely. Do we want impaired people on the road? No. With the comments and the evidence and the reports that the government is talking about, I have to ask the question: are they doing research at lowering the legal limit to .05 federally? Are you pushing? I mean, you talk about all the discussion you've been having. Is there a discussion at the federal level of changing it to .05? I'd like to know because I don't think that we're in the know in these discussions that you say you've been having for two or three years. If you're having these things, it just makes sense to me that federally we should be looking at changing that.

I can't help but think that, you know, if it's zero tolerance that we want, then why aren't we passing a zero-tolerance law and just making that leap or saying: "Look. This is going to be staged. You know, for six months we're going to have leeway. Then it's going to be .05, and then from .05 we're going to go to zero tolerance. If you're caught with a blood-alcohol level, you're not going to have the privilege of driving."

Then we get to the anomaly of those people with – whether it's, you know, Helicobacter or something in their stomach producing that or yeast. What are the anomalies, the percentages of individuals, whether they're on cough medicine or in those other areas? Is there a crossover on that? The minister is smiling over there. I'm sorry. I don't have experience or time to research these things.

Mr. Hancock: You're into some junk science now.

Mr. Hinman: No. I'm asking the question. You're the ones with the junk science. You're passing the legislation. Junk. Unbelievable.

The Chair: Hon. member, speak through the chair.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the redirection on that.

Anyway, I guess I'll wait to hear a few of the responses on that, and we can continue with this dialogue and, hopefully, pass the best bill possible here in the next few days.

Mrs. Leskiw: Mr. Chair, all I can say is that it's about time. I've been wanting this law to be introduced since the first day I came into the Legislature. I wanted it to be part of my private member's bill, and I worked very hard on my fellow colleagues to address this issue. But it wasn't to be. The only one I was really convinced was on my side was at that time our Minister of Justice, who is now the hon. Premier. She was also on my side when I tried to bring this legislation in.

Twenty-four hours is not good enough. It's not good enough. When I brought this in, it was shortly after a family of four from Kehewin got killed by a drunk driver. Two of the students in the car were former students of mine. It got me mad enough that I wanted to pursue this law, and I didn't give up on it. I'm glad, finally, that I can thank my colleagues and this government, that finally had the guts to bring this law forward.

You talked about chronic people who have over .08. If we would have checkstopped them at .05 and seized their vehicle three times and then six times and then whatever, maybe by the second time they got their car seized, they might have learned their lesson. Twenty-four hours is not good enough. Twenty-four hours? They probably need 24 hours to sleep off their hangover, so 24 hours isn't enough.

The bottom line, as we've been saying, is no drinking and driving. It means no drinking and driving. How much more clear can that be? No drinking and driving. It is something that I instilled in my own children even though I did not believe that children under 18 should be drinking. They knew the consequences if they got caught drinking before they were 18, that they would have a heavy price to pay. If, by chance, they broke that house rule, they knew that their parents were a telephone call away, that I would rather drive and pick them up and give them heck for drinking to begin with at a later date.

8:50

My son was always a designated driver in high school. He put on kilometres. I'm from rural Alberta. In our family my husband and I always decide who's the designated driver before we go out to an event. It hasn't changed in our 36 years of marriage. In fact, I swear he married me because he had a full-time designated driver at his disposal.

An Hon. Member: What if you don't?

Mrs. Leskiw: It never has happened. We've always had a designated driver.

Parents tell kids that they should phone. We teach kids that you don't drink and drive. Now we're worried about: oh, gee; the person is going to have their vehicle taken away for a couple of days.

I'm going to give you another example from a constituent. In fact, she's angry. Her son got hit by a driver, who got his vehicle suspended for 24 hours, then got his licence back for 21 days in order for him to put his life together and decide what he had to do. The constituent's son, though, lost a complete semester of school because he had to go to therapy. He missed a whole semester of university. Yet the person who hit him, well, gee whiz, you know: we need to give him 21 days in order for him to put his life together and decide what other alternate modes of transportation he should have. Where's the justice? He's the one that drank and drove, hit my constituent's son, who lost a semester of school. But we're feeling sorry for the guy that was drinking and driving, was stupid enough to get behind the wheel and drive and hurt somebody.

Ladies and gentlemen, we're talking about lives. You don't drink and drive. Bottom line. Who cares about: "Oh, you know, we've got to change attitudes"? We've been trying to change attitudes for a long time. People don't learn unless you smack a strong enough deterrent that they will learn. I learned that in my 36 years of teaching. Slapping them on the hand and telling them that they had a detention after school didn't work. But if you told them they were going to miss their basketball practice or they couldn't play their game, it hurt. They knew better than to tick me off and break the rules in the classroom.

The bottom line is that I applaud my government for this. I don't apologize for sticking up for this particular law. It's something that I've wanted done right from day one when I got elected.

Thank you, Mr. Minister, and thank you, colleagues. We finally have the guts to say: this is the right thing to do. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to stand up and speak in regard to Bill 26, the Alberta Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011. I have to tell you that it's even more exciting to get up and speak after a friend from Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I think that's what we've been trying to say for the last two weeks, that if someone from the government would get up and speak about the legislation, whether they support it or whether they don't, it really kind of wakes up the Assembly. For her to get up and speak in regard to the legislation, quite frankly, I think is very, very courageous. I'm looking forward to continuing debate as we motor along with everyone else getting up with equal passion or not so much passion in regard to some of the legislation that they support.

I have to tell you, Mr. Chair, that I happened to be sitting beside this particular individual when she did come into the Legislature and talk about her passion in regard to how she felt about drinking and driving. I also remember her frustration at not being able to convince the government members about how important this legislation was. You know, how quickly things change.

Here's what I'd like from the Justice minister and from the Transportation minister. Both of these ministers and possibly the group up there, the MADD people, and some other names – because I did go onto the MADD website today. I know that I've talked to some of the MADD people in the past, when I brought forward the legislation in 2000 in regard to talking about drinking and driving and the .05 that I spoke about in the Legislature last week and my passion about that.

In my research today, I went onto the MADD website. I was looking for some statistics and some details in regard to what they found regarding moving it from .08 to .05 and to provide some information on some suggestions on the research that they've developed over the period of time. I know that when I was doing my private member's bill in 2000, I reached out to them. There was a fellow there by the name of Andy Murie that I spoke with at that particular time. I'm not even sure if Andy is still around. He and I had a great deal of conversation that was very instrumental in helping me when I brought forward my private member's bill that year, Bill 210, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000. So we're going way back in time.

At that particular time all I wanted to do was that if you blew a .05 to .08, to have the 24-hour suspension. Well, guess what? We have that 24-hour suspension right now, and it has turned out, as the Minister for Transportation created it, that it has caught thousands of people when they've been pulled over and they're blowing that .05. So my question to the Justice minister is – because I've heard over and over again that this has been a passion with government for the last three or four years. Well, I've got to tell you that when I was sitting in that government, I don't remember talking about it – period – in caucus, at any caucus discussions. The first time it came to light again was when the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake and I were sitting for hours in the back row in the Legislature, talking about private members' bills and things like that, and at no time – I'm a meticulous note taker. I will tell you that I have gone through my notes from when I was with the government, and I couldn't find any discussion on anything about .05 or .08 at any time.

Mr. Justice Minister, I'm going to ask you as the Justice minister and the minister responsible for the Safe Communities Secretariat: what studies have you done under your secretariat to talk about the .05 and .08? What action has the Safe Communities Secretariat under your purview and your ministry – and that's the former minister, the Member for Calgary-Elbow. What social media have you used to target the 18- to 24-year-olds, which was recommended by the safer cities community task force? It was one of the major recommendations to target drinking and driving and drugs, for that matter, in this province. It was one of the top recommendations from the safer cities community task force. I brought that up last week: the recommendations that were accepted, quite frankly, from the previous Premier about hitting people between the eyes in regard to advertising and the effects, especially between 18 and 24, which is one of the areas where we have some serious problems with drinking and driving. I'd like you to table that in the Legislature if you can, please.

I know when I was with the government, the secretariat was established to be able to look at the hot spots in the province, what the serious issues in the province were. We recommended in 2007 under the safer cities task force – we talked about that consistent research has to be done, and that's one of the reasons why we asked the government at that particular time to set up a secretariat so that we had this consistent research. I'm accepting the fact that because we've gone from .05 to .08, you would have some consistent research and you can show us that you've got some advertising, hit-you-in-the-face kind of advertising that's going to resonate with our 18- to 24-year-olds, so that we know.

9:00

I'd also like to just talk a little bit more, Minister, and maybe you can talk to your Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security – and I know the former Solicitor General is here – about what you've done at FPTs in regard to talking to your federal-provincial-territorial ministers in regard to the sanctions when we're talking about blowing over .08, the Criminal Code offence, and how you've tightened that up. Are we going to extend the length of time that we're going to incarcerate these serious, chronic offenders? If you could provide that detail for us, what you're doing at those federal-provincial-territorial meetings.

Now, I know the Minister of Transportation talked about the policing issue. He spoke very passionately when we talked about wanting more police, and he referred to health care: you're never going to have more. Well, I think it's really important that people in this province understand that our policing ratio in this province is the second-lowest in Canada and has been a problem for some time.

Now, the government will mix in their sheriffs, and I want it on the record that I love the sheriffs in this province. I think the sheriffs do an incredible amount of good work in this province. So if we're looking at changing the .05 to the .08, what scope are you going to change for the sheriffs in this province? Are they going to be able to provide on-scene – if they pull over a suspected impaired driver, instead of having to call a Mountie, are they going to be allowed to do that? We're talking about .05, so maybe the Justice minister can tell me now. If a sheriff pulls you over, he has to call the RCMP. I know it talks about peace officers in the legislation. Will these sheriffs be allowed to administer the roadside test and be able to say to someone in a rural community: I'm sorry, but you've blown over .05 so we're going to suspend?

Quite frankly, Minister of Justice, you do not have enough police officers to be able to do that. I have to tell you that the majority of people that I've talked to – and I've got to refer back to what Edmonton-Centre has said. I'm sure every member in this Assembly has been inundated with phone calls and e-mails that they are getting not only from their own constituents but from across the province. I'm trying to remember the last time that I had so many calls and e-mails from, quite frankly, very upset people about this legislation.

Our role as an MLA is to bring forward the concerns of our constituents. Minister, I need to tell you that my BlackBerry is still getting e-mails on this particular piece of legislation, and I'm struggling at this point in time to try and find one that supports the legislation. I've been around long enough that I know we have our silent majority, but I can also tell you I've been around long enough: when constituents and Albertans are upset, that's when they pick up the phone and let you know. Otherwise, they are merrily, you know, quite content.

I have kept my web page up for just about two years since I crossed the floor. I do an article in my web page every month called What's On Your Mind, where we track every phone call, every e-mail, every letter, every person that drops into my constituency office, and, for that matter, every constituent that stops me when I'm trying to buy my groceries or go to the dry cleaners to discuss what's on their mind. I can tell you that I'm going back, and what's on people's minds, quite frankly, is health care, education, and seniors. It has been over and over and over. In my last newsletter I just said, "See the previous month" because it hadn't changed.

If the minister can provide the data in regard to why they want to change and if the minister of health can talk about what the health department is going to do in regard to what the Minister of Transportation talked about, and that's prevention and wellness, and if we have so many of these drivers out on the road that have a drinking problem, how many more dollars are going to go into the likes of AADAC and all of those things? And, Minister of Transportation, they have had no increase for that.

When we talk about the suspension or disqualification, they're required to take a mandatory education program required by the registrar. Maybe either the Justice minister or the Minister of Transportation – or possibly we have to talk to the Minister of Education – can explain to us exactly what the mandatory education program is and who is going to deliver the mandatory education program so I have an understanding of that.

Lots of questions, Minister of Justice. I'm especially interested in the sheriffs, the expansion of their scope of practice. Will they be allowed to administer the roadside breathalyzer? As someone who drives down highway 2 all the time, I can tell you that I see a lot of sheriffs on the highway. Fortunately, I haven't had to have a one-on-one visit with them for some time. I learned my lesson once already, and the officer was very nice as he handed me my ticket, reminding me exactly what the speed limit was on highway 2.

I'm not one of these people that has to be hammered over the head a lot. I learned my lesson well from one mistake. I was quite embarrassed by the fact that he knew who I was, which even made it more embarrassing, quite frankly. I just said to him: "Please, just give me my ticket. I'm sorry. I'm not going to give you any excuses because I'm sure you've heard every excuse in the world. I just want to get home. Just give me my ticket."

MADD, I'm sure, will provide us the studies that they have in regard to what they've found over the last 10 years since I brought forward the .05 24-hour suspension. I know that they have to have tons and tons of material, so I look forward to that.

We have actually asked the AMA, the Alberta Motor Association, for their latest study, and we still haven't received that. I find that quite odd that I haven't received that as a member of the AMA for the last 27 years. But they did some big survey, and I asked my researcher to get that information, but we haven't gotten that.

What the government is going to do on their prevention and wellness and how much money is going to go in health to deal with that: if you have problems with people that are driving and they're drinking, then they have to be able to access some help for that. The sheriffs: are they going to have their scope of practice changed so that when they're pulling somebody over on the rural roads, they're allowed to do that?

9:10

The Minister of Transportation mentioned the huge increase in the number of impaired drivers. If we have this huge number of impaired drivers, then what exactly are we doing to address that? I know it's under the Criminal Code. I've been around long enough to realize that if you're charged for impaired driving and you're charged under the Criminal Code, it's a criminal offence. I'm not sure if it was the Justice minister or the Minister of Transportation that talked about the ability to have an administrative charge provincially. It was in the Criminal Code. I think they were pointing that out to the Member for Edmonton-Centre because they thought that she was quite confused. You know, knowing the Member for Edmonton-Centre – I'm not sure if I was right or wrong – it's very difficult to confuse the Member for Edmonton-Centre in regard to . . .

Mr. Hehr: Anything.

Mrs. Forsyth: Right. You know, love her or hate her, she's a pretty good parliamentarian and . . .

Mr. Hinman: She does her homework.

Mrs. Forsyth: She does her homework. I learned that extremely well when we did the FOIP review. I've got to say that I don't think there's anyone in this Legislature, probably, that could debate her on FOIP. I would just suggest to them that they throw in their hats then and now and don't even bother debating on FOIP. We had long hours of conversation.

I understand that we have the administrative penalty on the .05, and it's good because if we go back in time to the PCHIP legislation, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, there are two charges that you can go under. You can go under the Criminal Code, or you could have gone under the provincial legislation. At that particular time the idea was to see which charge would stick better with the Crown, if you could get it under the Criminal Code or you could at least get a fine under the provincial administration.

With those comments, we have lots more. We have amendments that we're going to bring in for it. If the Justice minister and the Transportation minister and, for that matter, the health minister can answer the questions that I've asked, I look forward to the answers.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I would describe that as an omnibus question. I tried to take notes and make note of as many of them as I could. I'll try to answer as many of them as I can.

Getting back to the Criminal Code offence of driving over .08, the information that I have is that there are about 1,100 alcohol-related deaths caused by, you know, criminal offences. That's the largest cause of criminal death in Canada, probably by at least 2 to 1. I understand that the MADD website says maybe somewhere between 1,300 and 1,500 or 1,600 deaths. The latest figure I have is around 1,100, so over a thousand deaths, anyway, compared to about 500 to 600 murders in the last couple of years that StatsCan has records for them.

This is just to underscore the fact that this is a serious criminal offence. I'm also addressing the issue that was raised by Edmonton-Centre about rights and having your rights taken away and so on. Keep in mind that the suspension that we're talking about, where you lose your licence until your trial, only happens if you've been charged, if you're over .08. This is a serious criminal offence. I would suggest that a provincial sanction that withdraws your licence in those circumstances is quite reasonable given the seriousness of the offence and given the fact that many people who are charged with serious criminal offences actually do time in jail until they get to their trial. That's an argument to the reasonability of being able to withdraw the privilege to drive in those circumstances.

I want to just make a point about rural driving. I also live in a rural area, and I think that, you know, there are lots of challenges about living in rural Alberta. There are lots of amenities that aren't handy. We choose to live there. We love it there. There are way more benefits than there are disadvantages. Frankly, I'm sorry, but I just don't accept that as a great argument against this legislation, and I would just note that Saskatchewan, which is far more sparsely populated than Alberta, has a .04 threshold.

In terms of repeat offenders I think there was a question: what are we doing about the repeat offenders? I think it is important that we have these escalating sanctions. That's a very important part of this and the 10-year look back. That is one of the problems with the current regime, as good as it is. The 24-hour roadside suspension, you know, is good, but one of the problems with it is that – and I think it's been mentioned here before – you could go out on a bender every weekend, have your licence suspended for 24 hours, and there's no record of it. There's no escalation of the sanction. Again, deterrence is something I'm interested in, and that is not a good deterrent.

There was a question, you know, about: why haven't we discussed this before? I look up and I see the MADD representatives, and I think they must just be rolling their eyes. We haven't been discussing this? This has been out in the public domain for a long, long time. These people have been working very hard, and many other people have been talking about it.

A question was asked as far as what my department has been doing, and I will address the questions that came from the hon. member about safe communities, too. All I can say is that shortly after I was sworn in, in February, one of the first briefings I had was about this. I concur with the Minister of Transportation that this is something that these departments have been working on for some time. So it's been out in the public domain. The government has been working on it. I don't really get that there's some sort of argument that because it wasn't dominating a caucus discussion last spring or something or a year ago, somehow this is now illegitimate legislation. The point is that lots of work has been done on this for a long, long time.

On safe communities, first of all, I want to commend the hon. member for her work. I know that safe communities is near and dear to her heart, and she was a big part of the beginning of that and a big part of the report. I feel as though I have big shoes to fill following her work and then the previous Minister of Justice, now the Premier. There have been numerous programs that were initiated because of the work on that safe communities task force. There's $60 million in the safe communities innovation fund funding 88 different projects. Many of those are under way. Some of them are starting to get into their third year of programming. I could talk for the rest of the evening about safe communities.

In terms of a specific example of something to do with impaired driving, I ask the hon. member to remember that the safe communities initiative is a partnership of nine different government departments, and it wouldn't necessarily be the Department of Justice that might have been involved in a program like that. It could be the Ministry of Transportation. It could be the Solicitor General. It could be children and youth services. It could be health. There have been lots of initiatives. I will certainly be happy to look into that and try to get some information for the member in terms of what's being done. But there are many, many initiatives that dealt with youth at risk, mental health, addictions, gang prevention, family violence, and on and on the list goes.

There was a question about whether it's been discussed at FPT, federal-provincial-territorial, meetings. Well, I haven't been to one yet. There hasn't been one since I was sworn in. There is one coming up in Charlottetown in January. I know that the Solicitor General is going to Ottawa within the week and is going to be talking to his counterpart there. So these conversations are going on. The question was asked: are we talking to the feds about this? I'm always open to talking to the feds about changes, increasing the sanctions.

9:20

Now, one of the questions was: would the feds be considering a reduction of their threshold from .08? It's my understanding that it used to be .1; it was reduced. So .08 isn't necessarily some magical number. It's a number that was chosen some time ago. I understand that there was some talk in about 2009 about perhaps reducing that Criminal Code threshold, but it's my understanding that at that time at least the federal government decided not to and said that it probably was more appropriate for provincial administrative sanctions to deal with those, which is what we're doing now.

In terms of the sheriffs I would refer the hon. member to the definitions section. Section 39 defines a peace officer as defined in section 87.1. Then section 87.1 says, and I'm paraphrasing now: in sections 88, 88.1 and 90 – and those are the sections dealing with these sanctions – “peace officer” means a police officer as defined in the Police Act; a person appointed under the Peace Officer Act as a peace officer for the purposes of those sanction sections who has been authorized under the Peace Officer Act to use the title of sheriff, has satisfied any applicable terms and conditions under the Peace Officer Act, and has been designated by the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security as qualified to enforce those sections.

So there is room there, but it's not going to be that every sheriff on the highway all of a sudden is going to be running roadside tests. This is something that's enabling, and I would prefer that the Solicitor General answer those questions in more detail.

I think there was a question about chronic drunks, and I think I referred to that when I said that that's the purpose of the escalating sanctions and the 10-year look back.

Maybe I'll take my seat and let others speak. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to raise a number of points and have the ministers respond, hopefully, to them. The first one is the decision of the British Columbia Supreme Court today. Now, we've had the Minister of Justice say that he has not reviewed the decision but that his staff has. I'm certainly not a lawyer, but I did look at the decision today, and in my bus driver's opinion, I think that the government should show a little more caution before dismissing it as something that's potentially going to affect it.

The judgment differentiates between provisions in the B.C. act that apply to people who are over .08 and people who are between .05 and .08. It has accepted what's there for .05 to .08, but it's not on the basis of the amount of blood alcohol. It's on the basis of whether or not sanctions are imposed without a fair opportunity to basically have your day in court. Well, let me just see if I can find it here: “The driver does not have the opportunity, even after the prohibition comes into force, to challenge whether he or she was in fact over 0.08 or whether there were problems with the ASD” – and I think that's the breathalyzer – “that may have led to an inaccurate reading.”

I think that as a Legislature, as legislators we are entitled to some analysis of the British Columbia Supreme Court decision before we're asked to vote on this piece of legislation. It may well be that the B.C. decision doesn't impact this legislation at all. I don't know that. Nobody knows that. The Justice minister himself is only taking the word of his staff. I guess he's entitled to rely on their professional opinion. But I think that it raises a troubling problem, and that is the inappropriate speed with which this legislation is being dispatched. From its announced conception – and it has some substantial social shifts that are envisaged by this legislation – there has been very little time to consider all of the points. That's my first point.

I think we as legislators are entitled to have an opportunity to get legal advice. I think that the government should provide their legal advice relative to the British Columbia case. It may be that things that are struck down in the B.C. legislation don't appear in our legislation, but it also might be that there are things in our legislation that aren't in the B.C. legislation that could also potentially run afoul of section 8 of the Charter or other provisions. That's the first thing.

The second thing is whether or not the minister feels that in light of the B.C. decision a reference of this legislation to the courts might be in order. I think that if we're passing legislation, we should make sure that it is constitutional and will not be struck down.

There are some things that the Criminal Trial Lawyers Association has said relative to this. It says that it could, given the congestion in the courts, take up to at least a year before it goes to trial. In section 88.1(1) on page 17, people must live without a licence until they prove themselves innocent or have the criminal charge resolved, it says: “That person is immediately disqualified from driving a motor vehicle in Alberta and remains so disqualified until the disposition of the criminal charge referred to in subsection (2)(a).” The Criminal Trial Lawyers Association points out that with the courts badly backed up, it could take at least a year to get to trial, and it argues that the legislation is designed to force people to plead guilty even if they're innocent just so that they can get their licence back more quickly. So it offends the principle of due process. I am concerned about some of those aspects.

9:30

The other thing that's been raised here – and it's not an argument against this legislation. This legislation might be a good thing regardless of the fact that it may not be the most effective thing that the government could do now to deal with the problem of impaired driving. Others have asked the question: why don't we do things to target people who have the potential to do significantly more harm because they're driving with significantly more blood alcohol? That's a question.

I am just going on anecdotal evidence. We've tried to look at the number of checkpoints that have been operated in Alberta over the last number of years, and we've also been trying to find information on the number of checkpoints operated in British Columbia before and after their legislation was enacted. Reliable statistics: well, we haven't found them if they exist. So some of it is anecdotal, but it certainly appears that in conjunction with the British Columbia legislation there was a significant increase in enforcement activities in that province, which contributed substantially to the success of the program. Now, this government hasn't talked about that.

On an anecdotal basis there have not been as many checkstops in Alberta as there were going back a number of years. To me, that's a significant thing. There are two things that can create more deterrence. One is that you can increase the penalties, or you can increase the risk of getting caught. You could do both.

I heard the minister talk about the application of the .05 now and that this is something which pre-exists so is no big deal. I don't usually do my research by reading newspaper columnists, but as we are moving very quickly through a number of acts, we are struggling to continue to do a good job as opposition, so I hope the minister will forgive me for reading from Don Braid's column today in the Calgary Herald. I would like to have his opinion on whether or not Mr. Braid accurately presents the situation.

He says that the government keeps saying that the .05 marker for licence seizures is already in place. Not much will change, they insist, except for tougher penalties. We've heard this line from several ministers in the past week.

It's a soothing approach – but completely untrue.

The current legislation (Section 89 of the Traffic Safety Act) makes no mention whatsoever of .05.

It merely gives officers the power to suspend licences for 24 hours if they feel a person's ability to drive is affected by "alcohol, drug or other substance."

Our leaders nonetheless insist that .05 is law; they also say police use it as a standard for seizing licences.

If so, there's a big problem. The current law also says that if a driver voluntarily asks for a breath test and blows under .08 – the federal standard – police must immediately return the licence "and the disqualification from driving is terminated."

So there is a test; but it's .08, not .05.

Despite the story the ministers keep telling, the coming measures are actually radical changes to existing law.

If that saves lives, wonderful. Most people want firm action against drunk driving.

I agree with that. Absolutely, Mr. Chair.

So those are some of the concerns. I absolutely think that we need more study of the B.C. decision, and we need as legislators clear evidence and clear legal opinions with regard to the constitutionality of this law. I'd like the minister to address the question of whether a legal reference on the legislation might be in order, and I would like his response to the issues that are raised by the Criminal Trial Lawyers Association and whether or not Mr. Braid's assessment of the existing law is actually correct.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. minister, would you like to comment?

Mr. Olson: Thank you. I'd like to thank the hon. member for his comments. Good questions. I'll try to answer them.

First of all, he's right about the B.C. decision; I haven't read it. My department has been in touch with officials in B.C. and the B.C. Attorney General's department. I've been getting e-mail tonight. They are very happy with that decision. The only negative for B.C. in this decision relates to charges over .08 and the feeling that there wasn't the necessary administrative fairness in terms of the appeal process and so on.

I don't know if this is permitted, but I can read from an e-mail that says that the judgment was critical of provisions applying to those over .08 as the results in those cases were not confirmed by a separate breathalyzer test, as would be the case if a criminal charge was laid. That is not something that applies in Alberta. We have, as has been mentioned, a number of built-in protections for people in terms of appeal, requiring a second test, and so on.

I don't want to comment too much on the B.C. case anyway because I wouldn't be at all surprised if there is an appeal somewhere along the way, and then there could be another appeal, so this could go on for a long time. I am not willing to sit and wait for that appeal process to go through. I don't think it's a good enough argument to just put a stop – I mean, at any given time any legislation we pass could be challenged by somebody somewhere, and that would completely paralyze the workings of this Legislature.

My understanding is that there are three likely constitutional arguments. One argument is that we are overstepping our authority and encroaching onto federal jurisdiction. We are very confident that these sanctions are reasonable and that they are well within the authority of the province of Alberta, the jurisdiction of the province of Alberta to levy.

Another argument might be that there's some sort of constitutional right to drive. Well, there isn't, as far as we've been able to determine. We would certainly argue that that's not a constitutional right.

The one place where there could be a constitutional argument would be on the lack of administrative fairness, and I think that's probably what we're seeing in B.C. We watched B.C. We looked at their legislation, and we saw that that was an area that we needed to address and beef up, and we did. That's reflected in this legislation in terms of the appeal process. I guess I would say that we can't give any guarantee that somebody isn't going to challenge us on this, but we're ready and willing to meet that kind of a challenge.

As far as Mr. Braid, with all due respect to Mr. Braid, I'm not going to rely on him for legal analysis and legal advice. He is referring to section 89(5) of the legislation. First of all, I should back up a step. Section 89 in the Traffic Safety Act is talking about impairment. For example, I'm a diabetic. I could be pulled over and have a roadside suspension if I'm driving impaired. So this is a section that's broader than just alcohol. It also talks about drug impairment.

I would invite you to talk to, for example, the Edmonton city police and ask them what their procedure is. I think they will tell you that if a person blows a "warn" – that's .05 and up – that is the proof of the impairment as far as they're concerned, so that's where the roadside suspension kicks in. That's why we say that there's really no change, because that's what they're doing now. If we pass this legislation, they're going to keep on doing that, but there will be more sanctions.

Again, I would encourage members to talk to police agencies and ask them, but it's my understanding that in every agency across the province that's the way they do it.

I hope I've answered the member's questions.

9:40

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you wish to speak?

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to try and provide a balanced approach to Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011.

I just wanted to share with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre my extensive knowledge of recreational life in a rural setting. I'm looking directly at the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House because it was in Rocky Mountain House where I had my first experience with rural varieties of entertainment. I wish I could remember the name of my foreman at Alberta Gas Trunk Line, but the gentleman – I think his first name was Al – was referred to as the one-armed bandit. I don't know if you're familiar with this gentleman.

Anyway, he was my first foreman, and I was very fortunate that I was able to get a job in Rocky Mountain House. I had thought that it was actually a resort town, so I brought along my swimming trunks and tennis racquet. I was all set to have a wonderful recreational summer while not working for Alberta Gas Trunk Line, but that wasn't quite the case.

Anyway, I was 19 at the time, not that far off from being 20, and my mother wept profusely as I straddled my 200-CC Lambretta and headed off down the highway to seek adventure, feeling very much like Peter Fonda in the famous road movie.

Ms Blakeman: On a 200-CC? Your imagination is vast.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Well, as members have noted, I had a wonderful imagination. I only rode that . . .

An Hon. Member: Relevance?

Mr. Chase: Yes. The relevance is entertainment in a rural setting, and I will get to the challenges associated with alcohol in rural settings.

As I say, I quickly learned that, unlike Peter Fonda, who had a significantly larger CC vehicle, I practically froze. The advantage of the Lambretta was that because of the sort of open space you could literally spin around on the seat. You could sort of go for a walk while you were driving down the highway, and you weren't fast enough to cause any terribly serious damage.

Getting to the point of the alcohol and the rural experience, in Rocky Mountain House the hangout that I recall was a dairy bar. Mr. Chair, the girls in Rocky Mountain House must have felt like they were contestants in a beauty pageant. There were so very few girls that the attention they received from the individuals working in the Rocky Mountain House area, whether they were like myself, working for Alberta Gas Trunk Line, or, more likely, working on the rigs — part of the entertainment was that there would be one poor young lady walking along the sidewalk, and there would be four cars sort of bumping along beside her, taking turns in passing each other and trying to come up with the best line that would possibly encourage that young lady to accompany them.

Of course, you can imagine being the fifth in line with your Lambretta, trying to encourage someone to hop on the back.

The Chair: Hon. member, we are speaking on Bill 26.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Right. And the dangers of alcohol. I want to relate it to the lack of public transportation in rural settings. [interjections] Pardon? Sorry.

Anyway, Mr. Chair, I'm attempting to be as focused as I can be. The hon. member, the Minister of Transportation, talked about alternative transportation in rural settings, that just because you didn't necessarily have a bus or a taxi circumstance, you could still manage to get to entertainment in a safe fashion. I don't know whether the hon. Minister of Transportation had sons or daughters or a combination of both, but I know from my daughter's point of view that double-dating with daddy was not high on her sort of entertainment enjoyment circumstance. I realize that you can certainly say under these certain circumstances: if you wish to go out to the high school dance or whatever, the only way you're going to get there is in my vehicle, and I'll see you at 12 o'clock when the dance is over. That doesn't always work.

Mr. Chair, what I found was that as glorious a resort town as Rocky Mountain House was and is, the entertainment options were very limited. The hangout that I experienced in terms of being alcohol related was Crimson Lake. Crimson Lake looked really great in the pictures, I must add.

Ms Blakeman: But the leeches are big as cucumbers.

Mr. Chase: That's right. The Member for Edmonton-Centre knows that it's a great place for triathlon training because when you hop off the dock, you have to outspeed the leeches.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: I have listened intently to this hon. member for some period of time now, and I have yet to find anything that relates to blood alcohol levels, .05, or anything that's in Bill 26.

The hon. member is entertaining; there's no doubt. He may well have met his wife driving whatever vehicle he was talking about down the streets of Rocky Mountain House, but we are actually here on some very serious business. I'd ask you to ask that hon. member to address his mind to the bill.

The Chair: Hon. members, the principle of Committee of the Whole is to talk about the title of the bill, the preamble of the bill, and clauses in the bill.

Please, back to the bill.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Speaking to Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, I realize that I'm being somewhat lighthearted in my approach, but where I'm coming from is the dangers associated without having a variety of safety measures such as public transportation, such as entertainment that is beyond a 12-pack or a six-pack.

I witnessed first-hand the effects of alcohol on others because, as I say, I was basically a teetotaler. I recall, for example, after a fairly significant drinking incident at Crimson Lake fights breaking out and the Mounties being called, and I'm carrying the loser in one of the fights back to the car to try and get him home safely. Likewise, Mr. Chairman, the rig workers, the roughnecks, many just engineering students in their first or second year of university. Their primary form of entertainment was heading to Sylvan Lake on a Friday night, and drinking was a large part of that entertainment. I was extremely worried about some of those young men who drank till 11:30, as much as they could, and then proceeded to go to work at midnight for the graveyard shift on oil rigs.

So in trying to give you the relevance, I agree with the legislation that would prevent people from getting up on an oil rig when they're impaired, never mind intoxicated. Mr. Chair, hopefully, you'll see the relevance. Again, I'm talking about rural circumstances.

9:50

In 1968 I had an opportunity to again work for Alberta Gas Trunk Line but this time in Fort Macleod. I enjoyed the experience in Fort Macleod. Again, Fort Macleod instead of a dairy bar had one step up. It had an A & W, and it still does. But I found that the major entertainment in Rocky Mountain House among the teenagers to slightly above was going back up and down the highway as quickly and loudly as they possibly could, then heading off into the countryside somewhere with a case of beer or whatever, and that was the major form of entertainment.

The point I'm trying to make is that in rural Alberta, I would suggest, there is a greater tendency to consume alcohol beverages because the possibilities of . . . [interjections]

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Now you're in trouble.

Mr. Chase: Well, I may be in trouble, but my perception based on my youthful years in rural Alberta is that there were fewer choices in terms of recreational opportunities, in terms of movie theatres; therefore, my limited experience in rural Alberta saw a fair amount of entertainment associated with drinking.

Bill 26 is addressing the concerns of impairment. Again, in rural settings once you're out of town, your main form of commuting is the highway. You add speed to alcohol impairment, and you've got a recipe for death. That's what Bill 26 is talking about.

Now, I personally am supportive of the majority of what Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, states. I have previously stated, and I will not go into great detail, that the one flaw is the dragnet approach, where one particular law catches everything and whether or not you're impaired at .05, you're still guilty. I understand that there have to be standards, and I understand that the measurement of .05 is a whole lot easier to judge than whether or not a person is impaired. But there has to be a balance in the legislation.

With previous legislation this government has been very slow to act. The distracted driving cellphone business comes to mind. In 2001 the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview attempted to eliminate hand-held cellphones while driving. That went nowhere. I tried it in 2005. Again it went nowhere. The hon. individual from Calgary-Hays gradually, over a two-year period, brought it successfully into the Legislature, leaving out the hands-free aspect of it. The hands free, the mental activity associated, the impairment of being involved in a conversation over the phone or looking at your dash and the information that's coming up on a GPS device: those unfortunately weren't taken into account. The time period for that to come into law was 10 years.

I agree with the hon. Minister for Transportation, and I agree with the hon. Minister for Justice that it's about time we got legislation that would save lives on the books. I think that if a member of the opposition had tried as speedy a process in terms of getting this through over a two-week period, they probably would have been ridiculed. They would have been accused of being members of a nanny state in terms of how much supervision, how much change in people's attitudes are necessary.

Well, Mr. Chair, with regard to the nanny state, I'm all for the government having responsibilities in terms of looking after individuals and acting in their best interests, whether it's funding for education, whether it's a decent allowance for AISH, whether it's treating individuals with PDD with respect. That's the role, I believe, that the government should have, and if people consider that to be a nanny attitude, well, so be it. I'm all for that type of supervision.

I am all for police on the streets. I'm not so sure about the surveillance cameras on every block because the surveillance cameras occur after the fact. They maybe prevent crime because they're out there, but the thing is that somebody has to react to that camera image if it's being monitored and then get out. What I'm concerned about is what other members have brought up, and that's the education process of this bill.

Now, a previous Traffic Safety Amendment Act, brought forward by Richard Magnus, resulted in Alberta adopting what a number of other provinces had done, and that's the doubling of fines; for example, in construction zones. That was a strong piece of legislation protecting 4-H individuals out collecting debris along the highways, protecting ambulance drivers, tow truck drivers. It forced people, because there was a significant sting to it in the form of a fine, to smarten up. I have no doubt that partly because of that fine, partly because of the education, partly because of the enforcement people changed their driving habits.

I know, having gone up and down highway 2 so many times, that when there are police at the side of the road or there are people with the orange bags doing cleanup, there is, for the most part, a better attitude. People do slow down.

Now, what hasn't been mentioned under Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, is how this information is going to be communicated to the general population so they see it as important and also feel its effects if they transgress. The discussion with regard to .05 to .08 previously being on the books and subject to discretion has been one of the contested points as to the degree of discretion. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek brought up what type of extended training sheriffs would receive that would bring them up to the level of the RCMP in terms of being able to conduct the tests that would determine the .05 or higher. It's the whole package.

I would look very forward to possibly the Minister of Transportation or the Minister of Justice – because I think the Minister of Justice is primarily the person driving this bill. Pardon me. It's the Minister for Transportation that's driving it. Also, the Minister for Justice has spoken very well in terms of why it's necessary. I would like to hear from the Minister of Transportation – and I'll take my chair shortly – on how we are going to get the message out besides simply suspending licences. What's the education program? Will there be any commitment to greater enforcement of this? Obviously, without enforcement attitudes aren't going to change. Then is there consideration of a fine?

10:00

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I need to make a couple of comments. The first one is on the question about greater enforcement. I think the hon. Justice minister answered that partially in regard to the definition of a peace officer and what we're hoping to accomplish with this legislation.

The other point that I wanted to make was on your questions at the end about the communications. If you ask my staff how I feel about communications, I think there are three most important parts that I look at as far as being a minister. That's communication, communication, and communication. I think this is going to be very critical for us to do for the public to understand, also to work with the hosting industry. I say the hosting industry being, you know, a number of different associations. I mean, we did meet with the hosting industry and different associations.

It is critical that people understand what we're trying to accomplish. It is critical that people know where the targets are. You know, you're not going to have a change in culture if you don't have education, and that's why it was imperative that when we looked at the .05 to the .08, education was part of it. Education was a major part of it in the change of culture.

Also very important as far as communication are the probationary licences. I say that's very important, but most of those individuals are way ahead of us. You know, I talked to the youth. Those numbers that I gave you scare me, but at the same time I talked to a group in my constituency. It just happened to be 3A girls provincial volleyball finals in my constituency. I was very amazed and, I would say, heartened by what they do and what they believe has to happen. We're not going to get everybody, but I think the more education we have, the more peer pressure we have, the more focus we have in that direction is absolutely critical.

I just wanted to make, if I could, a couple of comments in regard to the hon. member who is just leaving, just for a second, and that was on her comments about not hearing.

An Hon. Member: They're all leaving.

Mr. Danyluk: Yeah, so we're going to do it this way. How about that? I just wanted to make a couple of comments that since I have been a Member of this Legislative Assembly, we've always had discussions in regard to impaired driving: when we've talked Transportation budgets, when we've talked about photoradar, when we've had different ministers of Justice, when we've talked about the distracted driving and what implications it has. There has been that discussion because you always have to balance.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake was talking about her private member's bill. You know, I want to say that her discussion of her private member's bill elevated the discussion. It elevated the discussion in our caucus about the importance of trying to have safer highways. Of course, that's combining that with interchanges and with all kinds of different directions and avenues.

One of the interesting points I can remember is the discussion about impaired driving wherein our previous Premier was the Minister of Transportation a number of years ago during the BSE. What ended happening was that he spoke to us as a caucus and said: "You know what? These are the challenges we have in BSE and in saving lives." He said: "If this is strictly about saving lives, we need to address the safety aspect. We need to address the transportation or highway aspect, and I will tell you right now that it'll save more lives."

My point, Mr. Chairman, is that we have looked in many different directions. I will just close now.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will say this. I've been very encouraged and actually excited by the level of discussion in the House tonight. I appreciate the two hon. ministers adding to my learning curve, adding to my understanding of this bill, and moving me quite a ways forward from where I was in the reading of the bill. A lot of that has been primarily in the statistics that the hon. Minister of Transportation has cited, the explanation of how the law intertwines with other legislation and the provinces, a little bit of my learning on my own and reviewing some portion of the B.C. case. It has moved my understanding of the issue further, where I'm more compelled to accept the government's argument on this bill. That said, you know, can it be better? Can we do some other things? Should we consider it more fully? Those are some of the questions I have.

I must talk about another issue in order to really make us get tough on drunk driving and send a message to those in society who are clearly causing much carnage, much misery, much heartbreak as happens. I know as I am a victim of spinal cord injury. Many of my brothers and sisters in the situation I am in, who are a result of either, unfortunately, being involved in a drinking-and-driving accident themselves or being a victim of a drinking-and-driving accident, never recover, whether that's physically or emotionally, from that aspect. I understand that the effort is there to try and move forward on this issue. I applaud the government, at least, for that effort.

Now, if you remember, when I talked about this in first reading, I was concerned about some of the civil liberties aspects and the rush to judgments on that front. Having taken some time here earlier today to look into the B.C. decision, it looks to me as if there are some parallels with the B.C. legislation that will enable much of this legislation to go through on our side. It appears that the B.C. legislators had no trouble with their sanctions on administrative penalties in between .05 and .08. The trouble was with some of the rights infringements that occurred after .08. I've been told by the hon. Minister of Justice that our bill was highly cognizant of these challenges and was drafted accordingly.

10:10

Even with that, I am somewhat concerned with the fact that admittedly even here tonight, although apparently this has been discussed a great deal on the other side of the House, it has not been brought up a whole bunch since my time in the Legislature. In fact, tonight has been a very engaged discussion. I've heard some of the other people, especially the hon. leader of the third party, who brought up some salient points on whether there is some opportunity to review this further. Is there an opportunity for this to go to an all-party committee to really see if we've got this worked out, to discuss it further, and to go from there?

It is on those fronts that I would suggest that we look into those things and, I think, assure this House that we are moving in the right direction. It doesn't look like that is going to happen, Mr. Chair, but that would have been my preference, to discuss some of the things that we had brought up to continue not only our learning curve here but the education piece and allow Alberta citizens to weigh in on what is in fact happening. Those are some of my comments.

I also, you know, did some review, and it may help some other people in the room. Well, maybe I just like it when we sort of talk about the Oakes test and some of those things that arise out of this. We do have a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but it is subject to limits. Essentially what we're trying to craft is legislation that not only respects the Charter but understands that there are real, pressing concerns out there in society and that sometimes governments need to do things.

I'll just say this. It's from a court case: Canada (Attorney General) versus JTI-Macdonald Corp., 2007, Supreme Court of Canada 30, at page 33. It is referenced in the British Columbia case.

This engages what in law is known as the proportionality [test]. Most modern constitutions recognize that rights are not absolute and can be limited if this is necessary to achieve an important objective and if the limit is appropriately tailored, or proportionate . . . This Court in Oakes set out a test of proportionality that mirrors the elements of this idea of proportionality – first, the law must serve an important purpose, and second, the means it uses to attain this purpose must be proportionate. Proportionality in turn involves rational connection between the means and the objective, minimal impairment and proportionality of effects.

As Justice Dickson said in Oakes:

There are, in my view, three important components of a proportionality test. First, the measures adopted must be carefully designed to achieve the objective in question. They must not be arbitrary, unfair or based on irrational considerations. In short, they must be rationally connected to the objective. Second, the means, even if rationally connected to the objective in this first sense, should impair "as little as possible" the right or freedom in question . . . Third, there must be a proportionality between the effects of the measures which are responsible for limiting the Charter right or freedom, and the objective which has been identified as of "sufficient importance."

Well, I think we can all agree here that drinking and driving is of sufficient importance for us to engage in this debate here and for the government to look at crafting laws that limit this societal scourge. That's fair and clear.

What I'm concerned about here – and this may be why some of the comments made by the leader of the third party were very important, that it may be a reference test or that maybe an all-party committee will work – is the proportionality of this. I look at our sanctions in the .05 to .08 range and on the first offence – and the hon. Minister of Justice probably considered this – three days for the first suspension, that you lose your car for three days in the case of your first suspension, 15 days in cases of second suspension . . .

Bill 27
Appropriation (Supplementary Supply)
Act, 2011 (No. 2)

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I hesitate to interrupt you, but pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) I must now put the question proposing the approval of the appropriation bill referred to the Committee of the Whole. The question is: does the committee approve the following bill, Bill 27, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2)?

[Motion carried]

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 64(4) the committee shall now rise immediately and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 27. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 21 and Bill 26. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report, those in favour of the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole
(continued)

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The committee will continue now.

Bill 24
Health Quality Council of Alberta Act

The Chair: Any comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. I would like to confirm where we are in this debate. My understanding is that we are under a government amendment, amendment A1, and in fact are debating a subamendment put on the floor by somebody.

The Chair: According to our records we are still on subamendment SA1, moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

10:20

Ms Blakeman: Okey-dokey. That's what I was checking. Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

Okay. This issue or this subamendment, in fact, was around trying to take out all of the references to a public inquiry. I spoke to this before. Section 1 is amended by striking out clause (e), striking out the inquiry.

Sections 17 to 22 inclusive are those sections that discuss and give authority for hearings. Section 17 is authority to establish an inquiry, section 18 is hearings, section 19 is in camera, section 20 is disclosure, section 21 is witnesses, and section 22 is reports to the Legislative Assembly. Then section 23 is excluding a member of the panel, and section 25 is very similar to that.

What we're trying to do there is make sure that the inquiries would be conducted as an inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act. Part of the issue that is important in this section is the issue around the ability to go in camera. Members opposite have raised my concerns on the record, which are numerous, around personal privacy. The government appears to be wanting to give itself the ability to go in camera to protect people's personal medical information if that, in fact, would become a point under the inquiry.

What I want to argue back is that there are two sides to this. One is that I think it's really important that the public is able to look at the information of any government committee, or inquiry committee in this case, and be able to look at the same evidence and reports and submissions that the committee or inquiry or panel did to understand how the committee came to its final ruling.

I have always insisted and have brought forward a motion in each of the standing committees, policy field committees, when we are examining, reviewing an act, for example, or reviewing something that's put before the committee, that both the in-person submissions but also the written submissions are to be posted to the public website. If someone says, "No, I don't want my thing to be posted to the website," then the answer is: thank you, but we won't be using your submission as part of our considerations in rendering a decision.

What I'm trying to say there is that I think it's really important that what we do is available publicly and holds that transparency part in it so that any member of the media or the opposition or the public could look at something and read the same things and go: "Okay. I get it. I understand why they came to that decision."

The other side of that is the personal privacy of medical information. We here are talking about a situation of such magnitude that it is requiring either an inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act or, in the case of what's being contemplated under Bill 24, the creation and establishment of an inquiry-like panel under the auspices of the Health Quality Council. If we are dealing with a health issue that is that critical, my experience has been that people that bring forward medical information there want the information to be shared. They want to use their personal medical information or the medical information of a loved one as part of the educational process in moving forward a particular change in how we do things or as part of an inquiry.

I think that yesterday I got cut off, but I had started to talk about some of the well-known medical issues – let me group it under that – that this Assembly has dealt with over the years and that have in fact resulted in some of the fatality inquiries that we've had. Certainly, a really good example of this was Rose and Rick Lundy, where Rose Lundy had suffered a miscarriage in the ER in one of the Calgary hospitals and hadn't received what both of them felt was a dignified response to her medical treatment.

That one wasn't going to result in a whole bunch of huge changes. It did result in, particularly, Rick participating in some patient concerns committees that were around changing how people would be dealt with in ERs. But there's a perfect example of someone who wanted to take their personal medical information and use it as part of a process to change public policy.

I would submit to members of this House that that's exactly what I would be expecting to have happen under Bill 24 or, in fact, under a public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act. People are saying: "There's a problem in the system. Here's an example of how it affected me. Here's what happened to me. Here's my story. Here's my personal medical information." That information gets shared, and it's part of what somebody feels others need to know as a way of changing the public policy. [interjection] Yeah, I'm coming to that.

The minister of the department of human everything – I'm sorry; that one won't stick in my head – of Human Services is saying that you can't say that that's the way it's going to be with everybody. As I'm constantly told by my colleagues on the other side, you know, this is about balance, and this is about finding the best way through this.

I think we do have to say that this has to be a transparent process, and therefore everything will be published or will be available, and two, we want you to bring your stories forward if you're trying to change public policy. I'm really struggling with the idea that someone could bring forward personal medical information in private, the committee would meet in private, in camera – that's what that is; it's out of the eye of the public – and make a decision that would change public policy, and nobody would be able to know why.

If I'm going to be held at fault, I'm going to be held at fault because I'm depending on people willingly participating in a public process, but I think that's important. Nowhere in here am I saying – and do not accuse me of this because it's not true; it's not what I'm saying – that anyone would be forced or would be outed with their private medical information in order to participate in this process. That's not what I'm saying. But I am expecting that people that are going to come forward here are going to be willing to have that discussed in a public way. The bottom line: if they're not willing to, you know, can privacy be offered to them? I'd really have to question why, because I'm really concerned about a lack of transparency here.

No, I'm not willing to force them into outing their personal medical information if they really don't want that to happen, but I'm also struggling to think of where that would be likely to happen, and I just have not run across that. Maybe my life has been very narrow, but I've done a lot of work in health information, in protection of personal information, and in the FOIP Act, and I'm just not running across that. People that want to change public policy are more than willing to discuss that.

That's what's being anticipated under the amendment brought forward by the Member for Calgary Mountain-View, and I definitely am in favour of that.

I'm going to let others speak to this amendment as part of this process.

10:30

Really, what we're attempting to do here from the Official Opposition is to make this act better. The government has the votes to pass anything they want to, and if they're quite determined to do it, they're going to do it. You know, some days I walk up the hill to this building to do good, and some days I walk up the hill to this building to try and have the government do a little less bad. With Bill 24, I'm trying to have the government do a little less bad.

I am one of the people that believe that a certain thing was promised by the Premier and that we are getting a different version of that, and I have yet to receive a compelling argument from government as to why they refuse to give us what was promised and why we've had a replacement put in front of us.

I will leave it at that and thank the Speaker for the opportunity to speak to members.

The Chair: The hon. member for Calgary-Varsity on the subamendment.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you very much. Specifically to subamendment SA1. When the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was speaking about the process under which the Health Quality Council was formed, I could not help but think – and again, Mr. Chair, hopefully the Government House Leader will provide a little bit of leeway.

I flashed right back to my childhood in terms of how you pick people, in terms of inclusion, in terms of insider responsibilities. The song, Mr. Chair, that creates the activity here . . .

Mr. Mason: Don't sing.

Mr. Chase: I will not sing. I will simply quote the way the process works, okay? It made me think of the children's game the Farmer in the Dell. You know,

Hi-ho, the derry-o,
The farmer in the dell
The farmer takes a wife and so on. Think of it as a game. The Conservative Party picks the Premier, okay? The Premier picks the cabinet. The cabinet picks the Health Quality Council. But in the children's game what happens, Mr. Chair . . .

Mr. Mason: They all fall down.

Mr. Chase: No. That's Ring Around the Rosy.

In the children's game what happens, Mr. Chair, is that the circle expands. But the problem that SA1 brings to Bill 24 is that instead of the circle of authority expanding, what happens is that, in fact, it contracts. We get a smaller, smaller, smaller circle, very much like what happened with the superboard, where the Premier has such control of the activity that any chance of transparency or accountability on the part of the Health Quality Council is lost because it is so closely directed by either the Premier, whether it's himself or herself, or by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is the cabinet. They consider: this may happen, or this may not.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, the quickness to run in camera is a very legitimate concern. I don't want to attempt to repeat what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre stated, but what she did emphasize was the importance of transparency and accountability. People who voluntarily come before the Health Quality Council or, our preference, the public inquiry do so, for the most part, because they have a story to tell. Unfortunately, doctors who have disclosure statements or who are not permitted to talk about the financial remunerations are less likely, obviously, to come forward.

There are enough doctors and nurses, medical workers within the system, Mr. Chair, who have experienced the types of intimidation or the compromised work ability to deliver services. For example, even if we weren't able to get Dr. McNamee to come back, there would still be a storyline there of people willing to testify if they had the protection that the Public Inquiries Act provides. What amendment SA1, presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, points out is that rather than having a counterfeit process, a quasi-judicial attempt at the equivalence of a public inquiry, we should actually have the public inquiry and do it properly.

Mr. Chairman, we've heard several times, and you'll hear it raised again tonight, whether it's in amendment SA1 or when we eventually get back to the government's amendment A1, which was found to be so unsatisfactory as to require subamendments to be brought forward, that we're continually trying to fix something that is so broken that it can't be fixed. And until this government shows the same type of enthusiasm that we just experienced over the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, and sees the urgency in terms of saving considerably more lives than in our wildest hopes we could save with the .05 to .08 – we're talking about front-line circumstances. We're talking about emergency room operations. We're talking about cancer. We're talking about thoracic surgery. We're talking about circumstances where people's lives on a daily basis are being compromised because physicians are not able to deliver the services that they need to deliver.

Now, the government cannot just simply be enthusiastic about speeding up a particular process within a two-week period, talking about the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, and "Let's get this thing going. We're going to save lives." Well, I'll tell you that the way to save lives is to have a whistle-blower type of protection such as a Public Inquiries Act would result in, in terms of the summation and advice going forward, so that health care providers have the freedom to bring out the complications, the restrictions that they're experiencing, the intimidation. Amendment SA1 says, Mr. Chairman, that simply trying to create something that looks like a public inquiry but doesn't have the authority of a public inquiry is not going to work.

Mr. Chairman, again, I can't help – because we're jumping back and forth between bills. How can the government be so dramatically swift in seeking justice with impaired driving but be so foot-dragging when it comes to the delivery of critical health services? When is the government going to address the fact that seniors who don't want to be in acute-care beds are there? How long is it going to take? Two years, and the superboard cost us $1.3 billion more than the old system. The Health Quality Council will not deliver its first significant report until sometime in the spring, and then this new invention of the Health Quality Council will have 120 days to release its findings. How many compromised health circumstances are we going to have in that time period? You can't talk about alcohol impairment in one sense and then fail to talk about medical impairment. That is why we have been calling for a public inquiry into the impairment that our health system is currently experiencing.

10:40

Mr. Chair, I appreciate the fact that the government has uncharacteristically extended our sitting. I'm not sure why it was necessary to cram things into two days and then into two weeks and have us on a nightly basis as well as a daily basis showing up to debate things with such pressure and such speed, the majority of which occurs at night. If we're going to be thoughtful about the process, if we're going to correct circumstances, like amendment SA1 attempts to do, then there has to be a sufficient amount of discussion time. The potential of accepting amendments, whether it's the government's amendments or opposition's amendments or subamendments – the whole point is trying to improve the system. Again, it seems to be absolutely critical that we do things in a very speedy sense, whether or not we get it right, as opposed to having opportunities to think things through.

Now, Mr. Chair, the last thing I would want to do is further delay this process in the case of Bill 24 by sending it to committee. The facts are out there. They've been revealed over the last number of years. We've seen doctors forced out of the province. We've seen others leave because they could not endure the interference that they were experiencing in terms of delivering their health services. Premier Klein drove so many of our nurses out of the province with the deep cuts. So the last thing I want to do is prolong the status quo, and the only way we can get beyond the status quo is to create the type of transparency and accountability that the Premier spoke of when she talked about a public inquiry. This counterfeit operation that Bill 24 is suggesting does not achieve that.

Mr. Chair, I don't wish to take up more time talking about SA1, but speed is of the essence. We're going to have another election go by before any significant changes in policy occur. Without a public inquiry that compels testimony, we're not going to see an improvement. The cover-up, the cloak and dagger, the debating in darkness, unfortunately, will continue.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to speak.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on subamendment SA1.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chair, it's November 30, the time is 10:45, and here we are debating SA1, an opposition amendment for the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act. The longer I'm here, the more frightened I get, to be very honest with you. When I sit in the Assembly after the last – I guess we had two days in October and four days last week, six; we're on our ninth day. I look at some of the things. It's frightening, quite frankly. I think Albertans, actually, should be very concerned with what's going on.

I'm going to start off with the question that I asked the minister in question period today. I talked about today being a very sad day, and I talked about the cancer lab at the Tom Baker cancer centre closing its doors. I went on about how after more than a decade and after serving more than 10,000 patients using research and testing developed exclusively, the in-house lab closed despite dire warnings from Dr. Tony Magliocco. He did everything he could to stop it. Not only was he ignored; he was threatened. He was smeared for daring to speak out.

My questions were to the Premier, and the Premier didn't want to answer, so the health minister did. I said:

We know that you dismiss this critical issue as a workplace disagreement. Is that how you're going to treat the countless examples of bullying and intimidation of health care professionals?

Mr. Chair, I have to tell you that the answer that I got from the minister blew me away. I can't think of any other way. I said to my colleague: what did he say? The response back from him was something that we're going to actually post to the public. We're going to actually talk to the Health Quality Council. We're also going to talk to the College of Physicians & Surgeons and the AMA. He says:

Thank you very much. Well, this issue was discussed in question period previously. The questions were asked and answered.

Minister of health, I really hope you're paying attention here. I know you're pretending to read, but I know you're also listening.

I guess what I'd like to say, Mr. Speaker, is that this recurrent theme of innuendo and rumour with allegations of physician intimidation has become quite tiresome to this government and, in fact, in our opinion, is an insult to the dignity of this House and to the people that work in our health care system.

Why that is so shocking to me, quite frankly, Mr. Chair, is that we currently have the Health Quality Council investigating the cancer scares and the intimidation and bullying of physicians. The first report came out, and they said: no; we've got to divide that into two things because we're too overwhelmed to be able to deal with this, so we're going to put the cancer stuff over here, and we're going to deal with the physician intimidation over here.

The same council, the Health Quality Council, in their June 29 news release talks about this being so important that, as I explained earlier, they're going to break it into two segments. They have so much work to do, and they've done all this. "The complex nature of the review has proved challenging and the timeline for completing the report has shifted slightly. The next progress report will be issued in late autumn 2011."

They came out with their report October 27, their interim progress report on independent review. They talk about the quality of care and safety of patients requiring emergency department care and cancer surgery in that report. They talk about the findings to date on some of the things on the emergency. They talk about the role and process of physician advocacy in patient safety and health service quality. They talk about the intimidation and the bullying of the health care physicians, and this minister has the audacity to say in this Legislature that they're tired of the innuendo and the rumours of allegations of physician intimidation, and he's become quite tired of it. Does anybody understand what a dumb or stupid answer that is?

10:50

In this Legislature, when we have got a Health Quality Council investigating and that has been investigating since last March, to top it off – and I have to make sure I have the right word here; I'm trying to think of a ladylike term – he has the gall to bring forward the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, Bill 24, and tell everybody in this Legislature that this bill is going to solve all the problems for all the physicians and that they're going to take care of everything. The same minister in question period talks about the fact that he's tired of the innuendoes and rumours and allegations of the physician intimidation and that the government is tired of it. Mr. Chair, I hate to sound repetitious, but that is an unbelievable answer by the minister.

Then he goes on. Quite frankly, I'm shocked. I said: "Mr. Speaker, that is unacceptable. He's already got his own Health Quality Council investigating intimidation, and as the minister he has the right to stand up and say that it isn't happening. What are they doing now?" I'm not sure what he was smoking or what he was doing on his next answer, but he comes out here and he starts talking about the bullying of his staff.

Well, we have no idea who is bullying the staff. I can tell you that it isn't any of us. If he has, as he says, proof that any one of us, as far as the four MLAs, or any one of our staff has been bullying his staff, well, Minister, guess what? Show it to us. [interjection] If you have something to say, minister of inter-governmental affairs, stand up and speak. We'd be more than pleased to listen to you, quite frankly. You know what? Chair, I'm going to sit down because the minister of intergovernmental affairs: his lips are moving, and I'm sure he wants to stand up and speak about the Health Quality Council. I'd be more than willing to let him use the rest of my time if he would like to speak. He has all of a sudden become busy again.

I'm going on to talk to the minister about health care. He goes off again in regard to "staff of my ministry conducting a regular billing review under the hospices of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act." How the heck does that have anything to do with the question? We're talking about physician intimidation. We're talking about bullying. He is off somewhere in never-never land talking about "conducting a regular billing review under the hospices of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act," and we've got this: "and being threatened with court action as a result of undertaking their responsibilities under law is not intimidation."

What is intimidation is these continued allegations – and here we go again, Minister – to the people that you're supposed to be representing, the health care professionals in this province, and you're saying that it's rumours; it's innuendoes. You know what? Dear doctors that we're negotiating your AMA contract with in good faith: we don't believe a word you're saying, not one single word. Minister, you know what? You cooked your goose on that one.

Then we go to the introduction of his bill, and he's going to tell us all the wonderful things about the amendments and what he is going to do. I love this. This one is wonderful. This is the minister speaking. "The government is committed to having a public inquiry and to this end has incorporated the key provisions of the Public Inquiries Act into this bill." Now, get this, Mr. Chair. We have to listen to this. "However, we are concerned that the current inquiry legislation would not be as effective in providing for a full and fair inquiry into health system matters, which is, I think, a goal for all of us in this House." I'm thinking: wow.

The process that you were previously doing, that you're doing right now, isn't being done fairly? I'm not sure, really. I'm not sure what we mean by this. I'm especially not very sure after listening to his responses in question period today. I, quite frankly, have every intention of sharing this with the doctors that have come to us. I'm sure Dr. Parks will be real impressed with this as will Dr. Maybaum, some of the wonderful emergency physicians that have spoken out against this government, Dr. Parks especially.

The subamendment that the opposition is bringing is saying: okay; well, we don't believe you either. So we're going to take sections 17 to 22 inclusively, and we're going to say: we don't believe what you're saying to us about when you talk about the health systems inquiries.

Let's just go into the Public Inquiries Act, which is a good piece of legislation. We've seen that the last two provincial inquiries were Newfoundland and New Brunswick. We tried to bring that to the minister's attention in regard to the issues that Dr. Magliocco had brought forward in regard to the closure of the Tom Baker cancer laboratory and the breast cancer tissues, what happened, and the cancer treatments with the hormone receptors and all of the problems that they had in Newfoundland with the positive and negative testing on the breast cancers. Both of them were done under their public inquiries acts.

Having said that, I am prepared as the health critic for the Wildrose and the Calgary-Fish Creek MLA – my colleagues can certainly speak for themselves. The fact of the matter is that we will be supporting the subamendment brought forward. We're going to continue to discuss and debate this legislation because the more that the minister opens his mouth, the more information that we're getting, which is good for us because of the fact that the minute that the answers came out of his mouth today, our phones and my e-mails went crazy because there was significant disgust from the health care professionals that, believe it or not, are watching what's happening in this Legislature and our question period. When you talk about bullying and talk about intimidation, what was displayed in the Legislature today was absolutely nothing more than shocking and disgusting.

With that, I'll sit down, and I'll let others speak in regard to the amendment.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, you wish to speak?

Mr. Hinman: I sure do.

The Chair: On subamendment SA1.

11:00

Mr. Hinman: Subamendment SA1. I would like to stand and speak in favour of this amendment. I think that it really sums everything up. What we have here with Bill 24 is the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, which is trying to create powers and new provisions to investigate the bullying and intimidation that's been going on for some time here in the province with the doctors that have come forward, which the government continues to deny at length with an incredible amount of gall, in my opinion, and they use the pathetic explanation of: oh, it's just workplace disagreements. I think it's a lot deeper than that.

I appreciate immensely the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and the hours that she has spent with the different doctors. I haven't been as involved as I was prior years going back. But the intimidation is real.

Subamendment SA1 does what needs to be done, and that's to keep the Health Quality Council of Alberta doing what its job is, and that job is to have great insight into patient safety and health quality matters. But that isn't what the problem is in the province. Yes, you know, we've had some problems when it comes to such things as sterilization of equipment, other areas, and people being held in emergency rooms longer than they should, not seeing a doctor. That's the job and the expertise of the Health Quality Council.

To now take those individuals that are experts – so we're told, and so they've been selected – on looking at our health system here in the province and seeing where there are problems and making some improvements and recommendations to those areas and ask them what we're asking them to do: this is the problem and the gall of this government. What on earth does that expertise have to do with rooting out and discovering the bullying and the intimidation that's going on? Like, they're going to do something.

I was shocked that we got the new health minister that we did. With what went on prior to that in this province and the behaviour and the actions that he took, I wouldn't have accepted the position. It's obvious that what we have is the fox that still has feathers in his mouth from going after the last victim, saying, "Oh, I will go around and check and see if there's anything bizarre going on," as he's still trying to spit the feathers out of his mouth. He can't talk because there are so many feathers in his mouth.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is critical. Let's keep the Health Quality Council doing what it has been doing, and let's go to the Public Inquiries Act, which does serve this country and this province well, and do a proper investigation. When we have problems in the police force or there are allegations coming forward in the city of Calgary, they don't go to the north section and say: will someone over here please come and investigate here? They don't even really like to go to Edmonton and stay in their own province. They'll usually go outside of the jurisdiction and bring in new people to investigate so that they have it at arm's length.

This is so incestuous it's ridiculous, the groups that they're getting there and saying: oh, we're going to investigate it. I mean, we've got the letters where they say: "You know what? If you speak out against this, you'll regret it. This will be detrimental to your career." Yet they say: oh, this is a workplace disagreement. It's just amazing.

The minister should offer his resignation. They should call a full public inquiry, a judicial inquiry, and do the proper investigation. This isn't about quality health. This isn't about whether or not the equipment is in good shape. This is behaviour that's unbecoming inside the health care system. This superboard has been a super disaster. They started off right from the get-go saying: you do not speak outside; you talk to your superiors. They gave the protocol of who you spoke to, and they held the hammer of silence over them saying: don't speak out. Then six months later, nine months later, after people who then had spoken out were ostracized, lost their privileges and other things, set the example that if you speak out, you will pay the price, they say: "Oh, my goodness. What a big misunderstanding. We want them to speak out."

Supposedly they put their gun back in the holster and said: go ahead and speak out. But every time someone has attempted to, that hammer has come down. Then they expect doctors, nurses, even the maintenance workers – I've spoken to one maintenance worker who was so tired after trying and trying to make a difference with the problems that he left, and he said: "I don't know why I didn't leave five years earlier. Why did I put up and struggle for so long?" He is so happy to be out, doing maintenance work for a public firm and says: "It's just wonderful, Paul, to be there. I don't know why I hung in as long as I did."

The morale: we know how poor it is. This government thinks that all of those people that are working in health care are going to jump for joy because the Health Quality Council is going to appoint the new group that's going to do the public inquiry? I mean, he has the nerve to say in his opening remarks on Bill 24 that "we are concerned that the current inquiry legislation would not be as effective in providing for a full and fair inquiry into health system matters." It's not about the health system matters. It's about the behaviour of the people at the top. It's the behaviour of the individuals and the intimidation and the e-mails that go on.

Then he says that he thinks that's the goal of this House. I mean, to go on and say: "To remove any doubt, Mr. Chair, the new inquiry provision in Bill 24 provides for information under nondisclosure provisions to come forward in an inquiry." I think that under the Public Inquiries Act that is clear. Again, because this government is bringing so many bills so fast and going so late at night, we can't always do the verification that we'd like, but we will get to that and find out here in the next day or two whether or not that is correct. I believe that to be incorrect, Mr. Chair.

This is different from the Public Inquiries Act with a mandatory provision for certain matters to be heard in private. I think we're going to find hypocrisy here that this new act allows way more things to be held in private. That's not what we need. We need the open, honest reporting. I think public inquiries are very, very capable and that judges are capable of realizing what needs to be kept private and what can be made public. In the bill it talks about third parties, affecting them. Even though someone on their own wants to come forward, a third party could object and say: oh, I don't think that that's good for you.

What subamendment SA1 does is that it rips everything out of Bill 24 that tries to mimic and fraudulently put forward that it was going to be a public inquiry. It puts it back to where the Health Quality Council is looking after the health quality of the province and looking after those things that are important. Is the hospital running efficiently? Are people waiting too long in the emergency rooms? That's what the Health Quality Council is about. Is the reporting not correct? Are there problems, you know, in the electronic data that are not being put forward? Those are the things that the Health Quality Council are experts at reviewing and looking at.

Dr. Magliocco went to the Health Quality Council and testified for two hours, and when the report came out there was nothing at all about the intimidation going on, like it didn't exist. What was the wording? There was one sentence that said that it appeared that there may be a problem about intimidation inside the system. That's it. They've been going at it for months – months – now. Is it nine months? And what do we have as a result? Next to nothing. Just some papers that talk . . .

11:10

An Hon. Member: Feathers.

Mr. Hinman: Some feathers. Feathers, and more feathers. I don't think there are very many feathered beds anymore in the hospitals because of allergies, but there's sure a lot of feathers and chickens involved in this government that won't get to the root of the problem and be honest with Albertans, and that's extremely disappointing.

This government needs to do the right thing, and that is put some pressure on their leader and say, "You know what? Maybe we're going to take a few hits here." But after debating as long as they did and they're so worried about the safety on the road, I think they should be worrying about the quality and the safety in our health care system and not about their hides and saying: "We need to cover this up. We've got to make sure that this doesn't get out."

That's all that I see and that I hear people talking about, that this is about sterilizing all of the reports that are coming out and taking out anything bad and filtering it through and making sure that they put out a report and say: "All is well. We've gone through it. All those expert doctors, the best in the world that were here in Alberta and that have gone, we're grateful that they ran and left the province because they were the root of the problem. Now that we've purged all of these people that were advocates for their patients, we have a great system here going forward, and there's not going to be any more problems."

We need a full public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act. We don't need this government and this health minister coming up with some cheap copy saying: oh, this is going to serve the health quality way better. When you look at what went on in Newfoundland and New Brunswick, both of those inquiries – I think it was in 2007 and 2008 – were done with a full judicial public inquiry under their public inquiry act, and they did a good job. You don't hire the police in your own force to investigate the police in your force when allegations are being brought forward. This is wrong. It's not going to work, and we need this government to admit it, scrap this bill, and call a full public inquiry. There's nothing else that's going to do any better than that.

I've sent out a questionnaire and put up a questionnaire on my website. Again, the one member will appreciate this. They just sent me the percentages, that 76 per cent of the people that responded said that they want a full judicial inquiry and nothing short of that. I believe it's 129 responses that I've received so far. It's overwhelming.

If this government was to actually go out and ask and be honest, the people of Alberta not only want but they deserve a full public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act, not some phony lookalike that's concocted to put up smoke and mirrors and say, "We're going through the process; trust us; trust us," when in the last nine months they haven't been able to uncover anything. I don't think that these individuals are going to be able to appoint special experts in this area when they seem to be far more focused, which the Health Quality Council should be, on the quality delivery of health care.

Once again, Mr. Chair, that isn't the problem that we're trying to address. That isn't what's causing the low morale with our awesome workers in health care. It's not because of faulty equipment. It's not because of the working conditions or anything else to do with actually performing services for the people of Alberta. This is about intimidation. This is about when a doctor, a nurse, or a maintenance worker comes and says, "This needs to be changed; this isn't working right," and they're told to get back in their place. "Do you want to lose privileges? You don't understand. If something like that needed to be fixed, we would have already fixed it." It's inadequate. It's not going to serve the purpose.

We hope that all members in this Assembly will realize the importance of this amendment SA1 and that it will get voted in the affirmative and that we'll let the Health Quality Council go on being the Health Quality Council. The government can call a judicial public inquiry – and we can start on one tomorrow – which would be the right and the honourable thing to do. Our new Premier could take one step in trying to reclaim some credibility and start honouring her promises, that she made when she was running to become the next Premier, when she spoke out many, many times that we need a judicial inquiry here. Again, just like the set election dates, how she changes these things – it's amazing to me why she would do that.

But bottom line: this isn't good enough. It's not acceptable. We need to strip out those sections that say we're going to have a public inquiry underneath the control of the Health Quality Council. We need this decision to be judge led. It really should be federal. It has nothing to do with the provincial area. Better yet, we need to be bringing in experts from outside the province that will actually have the knowledge and the expertise to find out what's causing the problems in our health care system.

With that, I'll see if there is anybody else that wants to speak on this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: On the subamendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Chair, if I may just have special permission to make a couple introductions first in the Assembly.

The Chair: Shall we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, an introduction.

Mrs. Forsyth: I'm going to speak to the subamendment, Mr. Chair, but I seriously need to make some introductions. It just proves what a little caucus can do and how dedicated their staff is. It's 20 after eleven, and we actually have staff in the Annex doing double duty, but we've also got some people that are here to watch and have been working very hard. I'm going to start with Brock Harrison, who is our communications director. Then we've got Ryan Hastman, who is the director for the party side who's here watching; and lastly, Bill Bewick, who is our head of research. They need to be acknowledged by us because they're still here because we're here. We double shift, and we do a lot of work. Quite frankly, without these guys we wouldn't be able to function, so I'll just ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 24 Health Quality Council of Alberta Act (continued)

The Chair: On subamendment SA1, continue.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm actually sitting here with bated breath due to the fact that I've been waiting for members of the government to speak up on the Health Quality Council act because I really believe it's an important act, and I think it's important that we understand how the government feels and where they are on this particular issue.

I'm especially interested to see how the government feels, actually, after – before the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore I just brought up the reaction that I got in the House today from question period. You know, I always try and say to the staff or even to my children, for that matter, that once you've made a mistake – they know that I never get mad because we allow mistakes to happen, and that's how you learn. You learn from your mistakes.

You know, when you've been around long enough, you've got a whole bunch of mistakes in the back of your mind, and you're going to say: no, I'm not going to do that again. I brought that up when we were talking about the drinking and driving legislation. I shared my story of my speedy trip home one day on highway 2 and meeting a wonderful police officer at the time and the embarrassment that caused me as the former Solicitor General and the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek. I just said: give me my ticket, and I'll go merrily on my way, and I'm sorry. So you learn by that.

11:20

What isn't being learned by the government is the stupidity of the mistakes they continually make over and over again on the Health Quality Council. Mr. Chair, I've been around here a long time, honestly. I've been here since 1993. I'm going to go home after, and I'm going to lay in bed, and I'm going to think: when was the last time I honestly heard a minister answer with such a stupid answer? You know how David Letterman has the top 10, and they start from 10 and they go all the way up to 1? I think he's going to be number 1 on the top 10 – and I don't watch David Letterman – stupid answers or whatever David Letterman calls it.

You wonder why I keep repeating this, Mr. Chair. I don't want you to call on me because you're going to say: the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has to stick to the amendment SA1. I can see he's looking at his book, so I hope he's not going to call me on a point.

The whole crunch of the answer from the minister today stems from what we're trying to achieve with subamendment SA1, what we're trying to do with all of the amendments we're going to bring forward on this particular piece of legislation, and what we're trying to achieve under Bill 24. He really thinks that he's going to BS Albertans on this particular bill. For a minister of the Crown, when he has got a health inquiry going on that has been going on since March – we had our initial report in March, and then we had our second report in June, and then we had our third report in October that indicates clearly that Dr. John Cowell on TV, on radio, and on paper says: Albertans, ladies and gentlemen, we have a serious problem with physician intimidation, bullying, and harassment in this province.

I keep my little bullying bracelet on my desk, Mr. Chair, for a reason. I think the government should come up with one that says: stand up and stop bullying of our health care professionals in this province. They should have a 1-888 number just so that they can call the government and report the physician intimidation and bullying. They'd probably have a heck of a good fundraiser if they sold these bracelets because they'd probably make a whack of money. Then the doctors wouldn't have to try and go through all of the government: for this number press this, and for this number press this. They can just call the 1-888-I'm-a-doctor-being-bullied number, and I'm going to report it to you just for the fun of it and see what you can do about it.

Mr. Chair, we're going to continue to stand up in this Legislature, whether it's 11:30 at night or 1:30 at night, on behalf of the people who put us here, my constituents in Calgary-Fish Creek, Albertans, and we're going to be here, quite frankly, on behalf of the health care professionals. I'm really looking forward to the response that we're going to see from the AMA president, Dr. Slocombe, who in her last newsletter, that was dated November 28, scrutinized Bill 24. She indicates very clearly in here that while she's not a lawyer – and I've met Dr. Slocombe, and she's a very, very, very bright lady. She delivers babies. She stood up and said: I'm going to be the president of the AMA, and I'm going to stick up for and represent the doctors that I'm going to be representing and tell what it's like.

We don't need to be reminded that the last AMA president was Dr. Patrick White, and that was the minister of health's friend. He phoned him at 12:30 at night, and it's like we were in a spy movie. "Hey, guess what? I've got a report that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, that doc that's talking about all that physician intimidation, well, he's nuttier than a fruitcake. So maybe we should do something about that." He's now the minister of health. The same bozo that picks up the phone and calls Dr. White is the same person that stands in this Legislature and says that we are blowing smoke and making things up about all of the physician intimidation.

[Mr. Zwodzesky in the chair]

Having said that, I've already spoken twice on SA1. Again we're going to talk about the fact that what the opposition members are doing in this particular piece of legislation, sections 17 to 22 inclusively, is saying: okay; we don't believe what the government is saying and all of the rhetoric that they're speaking about on the health system's inquiries in Bill 24, so what we're going to is that we'll just go into the Public Inquiries Act. I think people don't need to be reminded that the last time we had the Public Inquiry Act, I think it was called the Code report – oh, Mr. Chair, welcome. Bright and fresh, I see.

The Deputy Chair: You bet.

Mrs. Forsyth: Us not so bright and fresh, but you, sir, bright and fresh and smiley.

So we're going to support this amendment, and we're going to bring forward some more amendments after that. We will hope that through this – I know my colleague for Airdrie-Chestermere is anxious to get up and speak and probably a little disappointed that his Oilers lost in a shootout, unfortunately. I'm sure the boys up there got their money's worth at a good game tonight. We were trying to run back and forth and check that score out.

Mr. Chair, having said that, I'm going to encourage all members – and when I say all members of the Assembly that means the PC government, and they're all very, very busy; I don't know what they're busy doing, but they're busy – to support this. Well, not you, Minister, because you're just sitting there very quietly. The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is just very quiet. I'm looking forward to him standing up and speaking on this piece of legislation. He's been around as long as I have, and I know that he can be very passionate about things that he believes in because he happened to be the Justice minister when I was Solicitor General. I've been around him when he's been very passionate about a particular issue. I can see that he's excited about this bill and that he wants to stand up and speak about this bill. I can see the adrenalin.

Having said that, I'll leave it to the next person.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

We're on amendment SA1. Other speakers? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, SA1. Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's great to be here and have the opportunity to debate this bill and this amendment.

Mr. Mason: You had a nap, didn't you?

Mr. Anderson: Oh, yes, I had a nap. Actually, I did not. I took some time to go to Vegreville. Vegreville is a good place to be sometimes.

Mrs. Forsyth: You didn't bring me my egg.

Mr. Anderson: No, but there's Tim Hortons coffee out in the room. So for anybody in the opposition, go out there and get that.

On SA1. Obviously, the point of Bill 24 is very clear. It is a delay tactic. The majority of this bill is written to delay what the Premier promised during her election campaign, which was a full judicial public inquiry completely open to the media – no one would be exempt – into the fear and intimidation that doctors and many health care workers are clearly feeling from AHS officials and, in some cases, from members of the government.

11:30

The Premier made it very clear in her leadership race – she made it an absolute pillar of her platform – that she would call a full independent public inquiry prior to the next election. So the reason we're here today debating into the night is because of a broken promise by the Premier.

We have a Public Inquiries Act. The Public Inquiries Act gives full authority for the Premier or for the Executive Council to call a public inquiry. That is all she has to do. She just has to write the note and stamp it, deliver it, and off we go. We have a public inquiry. She could do it tomorrow.

So if the question is, "Why are we here at 11:30 and probably later tonight and into next week" and so forth, if that's what we're doing, and it looks like we are, that's the reason. That's the reason. It's because we have a Premier – and I don't even want to blame them entirely because I know most of the government members over there supported a different individual for the leadership, so I'm not going to even blame them at this point. I am going to blame the person who made the promise. The person who made the promise made it very clear that she was going to call a full public inquiry before the next election. That was enough, I am sure, positive, to get her the 1,600 extra votes that she needed to win that election.

Right now the Premier of this province, if she had not made that promise that she broke, would probably be Gary Mar. I've got to tell you that if I'm the guy who voted for someone other than the Premier, I would be pretty incensed right now about having that promise broken. I'd be furious. She makes a promise that she can't keep or that she doesn't plan to keep. She can keep it, but she doesn't plan to keep it. She makes the promise and then just blatantly breaks it. It's just exceptionally disappointing. I couldn't imagine being someone who had supported another candidate over there seeing that. That almost certainly made a 1,600-vote difference in the end result along with her fixed election date promise and along with a whole bunch of other promises that she made and didn't keep so far, but this one most of all.

You know, the attempt here is to put into the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act the ability of the Health Quality Council to optionally request a public inquiry into issues affecting health quality and health-related matters. It's completely optional. It's optional whether it's a judge-led inquiry – and we'll get to that – but the amendment to 17 in this act basically makes it completely optional. The council actually recommends that they use a judge for a health inquiry, but they can only make a recommendation to the executive that it be a judge, and the Executive Council, meaning the government, doesn't need to approve that recommendation or doesn't need to agree with it.

Let's review. That means that it's completely optional whether it's a judge-led inquiry. It's completely optional whether it's open to the media or whether the minister or somebody else can just go outside or go behind closed doors and be questioned, and that's it. And it won't be held before the next election. So somehow she got out of all three of the promises that she made. That is pretty misleading on the part of the Premier to make that promise and have no intention of keeping it.

So, absolutely, I would love to support this amendment because what it would do is that it would clearly take these powers of public inquiry, or kind of quasi-public inquiry, away from the Health Quality Council and out of this bill because it's not needed. It's clearly not needed. The good parts of this bill – there are some good parts to Bill 24. One is that all of a sudden the Health Quality Council is responsible to the Legislature as opposed to the government. That's a good change, so this amendment keeps that change. But the change that it doesn't keep is this business about giving the Health Quality Council the opportunity to call a health inquiry, which is clearly not the right move. The right move is to do exactly what the Premier promised she would do, which was to call a public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act.

You know, we've talked with many different doctors. I'll tell you: the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has talked to I don't know how many health professionals over the last two years since we've been with the Wildrose, and there really is a culture of intimidation out there. You know, that culture of intimidation was made very clear – actually, it was about a year ago today, I think. It was about a year ago today, I think, that the opposition leader – was it Tuesday?

Mr. Chase: November 22.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, November 22. It's a little over a week and a year ago today that we witnessed some of this.

You know, I don't know what the intentions of the health minister on that day were. I have no idea of the intentions, whether he was well intended or whether he was not, but I'll tell you what the end result was. The end result was that we had a situation where we had a member in this Chamber, a doctor who was standing giving a speech, giving a couple of speeches in an all-night session about health care in this province. He was going on at length about the need for, well, various things, but the end result being that he was worried about this ER crisis and patient care. His father, of course, who has since passed away, at that time was suffering greatly and had some problems in the ER. He was waxing, obviously, a little bit emotionally about that, as you would think one might be in a situation like that.

This health minister decided that he would give a call in the middle of the night to Doctor P.J. White, the head of the AMA, and decided that he would – we don't know exactly the details of that conversation; I, therefore, won't speculate. The end result was that the opposition leader received a call from a colleague who said – and I listened to the phone message, actually listened to it that night and have listened to it two or three times since. On that phone message it was made very clear – well, the Official Opposition leader was told by that individual that Dr. P.J. White, head of the AMA, had been called by the now health minister.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the subamendment is what we have under discussion.

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely. This is part of that health inquiry that I'm assuming they would look into. I'm trying to say why it's so critical that we have a public inquiry and not just what this amendment talks about, this kind of quasi-inquiry. I'm trying to explain the importance of getting that out, of being able to freely subpoena folks like the health minister and being able to make sure that it's a judge that subpoenas people like that to get the full story out there. They need to talk to everybody involved. Maybe it's me. Because I listened to the call on the day of, maybe I need to be subpoenaed and go before the public health inquiry on that. Who knows? I don't know. I don't know what the judge would want to look at.

11:40

The point is that we had a situation in which that member was called by his friend, and it was told to him that Dr. P.J. White had called him and was concerned. His words were: concerned about your mental state. This is part of the inquiry that will need to take place under this amendment. If we get this out, we can have a public inquiry about this.

Anyway, to make a long story short, the next day representatives from the College of Physicians and Surgeons showed up at the Leader of the Opposition's member's office to talk to him about his mental state.

Mr. Mason: To do an evaluation.

Mr. Anderson: To do an evaluation of his mental state. And, of course, when that happens, if the evaluation doesn't go well, the insinuation is that the member would have lost his licence to practise medicine.

Like I said very clearly, I don't know the intentions of the now health minister. Maybe he was, as he says, completely just looking out for a friend or something like that. Maybe that's true. I don't know. But the end result was that the Leader of the Official Opposition certainly, I know, felt very intimidated, felt essentially under attack. It was really troubling for him.

This was a very public example, and it was just one example. It was one of those few examples that you see out in the public because most of this stuff doesn't happen as publicly as that one did. That should raise alarm bells. If that's what's happening now, if that's what happened a year ago, you know that this sort of thing is happening out there. And if it's not necessarily always going to involve at the time the deputy or the parliamentary assistant to the health minister, it could have involved other people.

We know of the case of Dr. Maybaum, of course, where he spoke out because he was advocating for a wing of the children's hospital that dealt specifically with children with developmental disabilities, and it wasn't going to get funded as promised for some reason. I forget why. Anyway, Dr. Maybaum was advocating very vocally for this.

In a letter that he supplied to the Calgary Herald that was public – it was made public; it was tabled in this Legislature. In that letter he showed an e-mail from his superior, at the time the Calgary health region, that said that he needed to stop advocating – basically, he needed to shut up about this new children's wing because there were people, quote, high up in the government that want your head on a platter.

Now, I don't know what high up in the government means there. Did it mean the health minister at that time? Did it mean the head of the Calgary health region? Who did it mean? Who knows who it meant? [interjections] That's right; high up in the government. That's right. Maybe that's what it meant, too.

The point is that there were people high up in the government, according to this senior officer at Calgary health region, that said: wanted Dr. Maybaum's head on a platter. This is one of the best physicians in the city. How on earth – how can one not feel intimidated? It's not like Dr. Maybaum can just go and say: "You know what? I'm going to stop working for the Calgary health region. If they're going to treat me like that, I'm out of here." Well, he could do that, but he'd have to leave the province. He'd have to leave.

I guess the big point here is that if we're going to have a Health Quality Council of Alberta Act that allows for this, we do not need what this is calling for. What's in the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act seems to be calling for . . .

Mr. Hinman: Indiana Jones.

Mr. Anderson: The Member for Calgary-Glenmore is exceptionally excited about Indiana Jones, apparently, and I've lost my train of thought. I've lost my train of thought.

My point is: how are we supposed to attract world-class physicians and retain world-class physicians in this province when they are treated this way? Whether it's Dr. Magliocco, who speaks out about the Tom Baker cancer lab being closed, which is now officially closed – he speaks out and says: look at the special expertise here; it is going to be devastating if we lose this. Devastating. He's told – what was the quote? – basically, to shut up and not say anything or he would regret it. If he kept speaking out about that, he would regret it.

I don't understand how that health minister, if he was really interested in getting to the bottom of this mess, can sit there and say, "Okay; well, we're so interested in getting to the bottom of this mess that we're going to pass a bill that is going to delay the process, essentially indefinitely, until after the next election," so that we don't have to deal with this before the election. Then it's going to be optionally led by a judge. It's going to be optionally open to the public. Only certain people are going to be compelled to testify but not others when it's not in the public interest, whatever that means.

I say that I have to question the motives of this bill because why would you need a Health Quality Council act? Why do you need this act if you have a Public Inquiries Act already? It's ready to go. We could call it tomorrow. We could get to the bottom of this. We could subpoena who we needed to subpoena. Not we; the judge could. The judge could do it in an independent fashion, and he could subpoena . . . [interjection] That's right. He could talk to Dr. P.J. White and see what he knew. Put him under oath and figure out what happened with what we just talked about earlier but also with all the health problems. He could talk to the now Minister of Finance, who was health minister before that, and the now Minister of Human Services, who was health minister before that, and the Member for Sherwood Park, who was health minister at one time before that, and so forth, and another health minister that we won't bring into the debate because he's sitting over there.

The point is that we could get these folks to come out and let us know what happened in the system, their staff members and the Leader of the Official Opposition and all the folks that have any knowledge of what's happened to cause this culture of fear and intimidation, so that we can get to the bottom of it. But I fear that if we don't pass this subamendment and then don't use the Public Inquiries Act to get to this information, we are going to not get to the bottom of this, and we certainly won't get to the bottom of this before the next election. I feel that the members opposite, specifically on that front bench, have a duty, especially given that they serve a Premier that made a promise, a clear promise to Albertans that she would get to the bottom of this before the next election so that they had the information that Albertans needed to make a proper choice, to see if their interests in health care have been protected by this government.

She made a promise, and she has failed to deliver. She has every ability right now to call this, and instead she's using this act to get around her promise. It is despicable that she has chosen to do that. I've got to say that at least the other member, Gary Mar, who probably would have been the Premier today – I don't think he would have done that. I think he would have kept his promises.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We're on subamendment SA1. Are there other speakers to the subamendment? Hon. Government House Leader, proceed.

11:50

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening attentively all evening. What I've heard is members, first of all, complaining that they don't have the time to debate and then being absolutely and completely repetitive. I don't know how many times I've heard the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere talk about exactly the same things. In fact, I think he's probably reading the same speech because it's almost word for word what he said the other day, this afternoon. I mean, it's over and over again.

I don't see the point. There's nothing new being brought forward. In fact, most of the debate isn't even on the subamendment. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 24. And I do hope that Hansard can write "progress" in the quite appropriate way.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on Bill 24. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:52 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

Bill 21	Election Amendment Act, 2011 .....	1545
Bill 26	Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011 .....	1545, 1547
Bill 27	Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2).....	1561
Bill 24	Health Quality Council of Alberta Act.....	1561, 1566

Introduction of Guests .....	1545, 1547, 1566
------------------------------	------------------

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fourth Session

Alberta Hansard

Thursday, December 1, 2011

Issue 44a

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 27th Legislature

Fourth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Hon. Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Hon. Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Hon. Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Hon. Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hon. Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC)
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Hon. Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Hon. Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Hon. Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Hon. Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (PC)
Stelmach, Hon. Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC)
Webber, Hon. Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Clerk	W.J. David McNeil	Committee Research Co-ordinator	Philip Massolin
Law Clerk/Director of		Sergeant-at-Arms	Brian G. Hodgson
Interparliamentary Relations	Robert H. Reynolds, QC	Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Chris Caughell
Senior Parliamentary Counsel/		Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Gordon H. Munk
Director of House Services	Shannon Dean	Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard	Liz Sim
Parliamentary Counsel	Stephanie LeBlanc

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 68      Alberta Liberal: 8      Wildrose Alliance: 4      New Democrat: 2      Alberta: 1

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Sustainable Resource Development
Janice Sarich	Education
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Rodney
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
Mason
Pastoor
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Ms Pastoor

Bhardwaj
Blackett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Ouellette
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, December 1, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Cao: Hon. members, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize a group of individuals in the galleries today who play a key role in the democratic process in our province of Alberta. The staff who work in our constituency offices often provide a first point of contact for our constituents and represent our offices and this Assembly. These special individuals are here today participating in the winter constituency employee seminar, which provides an opportunity for them to network with other LAO staff and obtain an overview of the numerous programs and services available through the LAO. Each year the service and contribution of these individuals is celebrated with the employee recognition dinner, which the Speaker will be hosting this evening. Today over 70 constituency office employees are here with us from all corners of the province, and I would like them to now please rise and receive the warmest welcome and recognition from the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to bring two introductions. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three representatives of the Edmonton YWCA Rose Campaign. The Rose Campaign is a national advocacy campaign to end violence against women and girls. It takes its name from the original rose button, created almost 20 years ago to commemorate the 14 young women who were tragically murdered on December 6, 1989, at École Polytechnique in Montréal. Each year December 6 marks Canada's National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women. On this day and every day we need to acknowledge the horrible harm that violence does to our families, communities, and society and take a stand against violence and abuse. By wearing a rose button, Canadians can help raise awareness about violence against women and show their support.

I'd ask these three guests to rise as I call their names: Amanda Vella, president of the YWCA Edmonton; Julianna Charchun, vice president and chair of the advocacy committee of YWCA Edmonton; and Jackie Foord, chief executive officer of YWCA Edmonton. Please give these women the traditional warm welcome. In accordance with your directions the rose buttons are available at the doors for members, and I would ask them to proudly wear them.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four young community leaders from Alberta's Youth Advisory Panel. These enthusiastic and inspiring youth provide our government with valuable advice that helps shape programs that make a difference for Albertans. I'm excited to meet with all 18 panel members in the new year along with the newly appointed Youth Secretariat chair, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, who is incredibly passionate about Alberta's youth and deeply committed to reinvigorating the panel's important role in shaping social policy. We look forward to hearing the panel's perspectives, learning from their experiences, and working to promote their innovative ideas for creating positive change.

With us today: Nicole Baker is working towards a bachelor of science degree and mentors young women about pursuing postsecondary education and careers in science. Samantha Sperber is in her second year of a bachelor of science degree at Grant MacEwan University. She plans to transfer to the doctor of optometry program and one day help improve the visual health of people in developing nations. Joseph Kubelka is a political science and business student at Grant MacEwan University. He's passionate about governance and volunteering, evidenced by his participation on the student council, the UN Club, and the Academic Policies Committee. Loryn Marcellus studies business administration at NAIT. He's a strong advocate for at-risk youth, serving as chairperson of a committee dedicated to ending youth homelessness in Fort McMurray. Nicole, Samantha, Joseph, and Loryn, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and thank you from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly staff here today from the Mental Health Patient Advocate Office. The Mental Health Patient Advocate Office is the only provincial investigative body in Canada created specifically to look into complaints and concerns from or relating to persons under certificates in mental health facilities or under community treatment orders. The advocate office works to promote and protect the rights of mental health patients and those acting on their behalf by ensuring that they are informed about their rights under the Mental Health Act. The office is a valued resource to patients, families, and health care providers and helps Albertans navigate the mental health system by providing referrals and links to all other programs and oversight bodies.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that each guest rise as I say their name: Fay Orr, Mental Health Patient Advocate of Alberta; from Fay's office, Carol Robertson Baker, Beverly Slusarchuk, Ryan Bielby, and Ronda Gauthier. I'd ask all hon. members to join me in welcoming these guests.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the future MLA for Stony Plain. His name is Arlin Biffert. He's a bright, young individual who works in public relations. More importantly, he has been knocking on doors for the better part of the year, listening to the constituents of Stony Plain. He wants to improve the lives of the First Nation groups and all of those who live in Stony Plain with better health care, better education, better opportunities for men and women in his future constituency. He's accompanied by Wade Izzard, another hard-working, young volunteer who has been getting to the doors with him. I ask all members of the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do indeed have an introduction today on behalf of the hon. Member for St. Albert. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Mr. Liam Connelly, a resident of St. Albert. Mr. Connelly instructs a business course at Concordia University College. He wanted his students to have a chance to see government at work, tour the Legislature Building, and to visit the library as well and see for themselves what a great Alberta treasure they have. With him today are some of his students. They are Drew Koning, Margaret Batty, Matt Jones, Chris Aloy Mora, John Panas, and Cara Kahlke. They are all seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I would ask that they rise and we give them a warm Alberta Legislature welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's no surprise to members of the Assembly that I have been bringing the views of a number of my constituents into the Legislature during the debate on Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act. A number of those people are small- and medium-sized business owners in the hospitality sector that are in my fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. I know that a number of them have joined us today. I'm just not sure how many and which ones actually came. Rather than introduce them by name, I'm going to ask that any people that are here representing that hospitality sector and concerned about their livelihood and the effects of Bill 26 on their livelihood, please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Hello, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this House a great Albertan and a great business leader in Calgary, Mr. Chris Challis. Chris is the former president and CEO of Phoenix Oilfield Hauling, a public company, and also the former president and CEO of EnQuest Energy Services, also a public company. He's a great Scout leader, and he's on the board of the Tuscany Residents Association. He's married with two kids, speaks fluent French, German, and English, and is the Wildrose candidate for Calgary-North West. If he could stand and receive the warm applause of this Assembly, that would be great.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two special guests. Our first guest is Amee Barber, who is a PhD student in political science at the University of Alberta. She works now for the Alberta NDP caucus as a research officer and has been with us for several months, and we're very, very pleased to have her on our team. Sitting next to her is her grandmother, Dorothy Ritchie, who is a leading member of the Women's Royal Canadian Naval Service, that is the WRENS, and served in the Second World War. I would like now to ask Amee and Dorothy to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Youth Secretariat

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is home to thousands of inspiring and talented children and youth whose enthusiasm, new ideas, and leadership in their communities help make our province to be a better place to live every day. Youth are Alberta's future, but they are also our present. There are no limits to what we can learn from our young people when we truly listen to their opinions and experiences and when we work side by side with them to find solutions to challenges we face together as a society.

Mr. Speaker, I'm so honoured that the hon. Minister of Human Services has given me the opportunity to serve as the new chair of Alberta's Youth Secretariat. As chair it is going to be my duty to help ensure young people continue to play an important role in contributing to social policy in effecting positive changes and in creating the vibrant and prosperous Alberta that they envision for their future children and grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, in the new year I will have my first opportunity to meet with members of Alberta's Youth Advisory Panel, 18 young Albertans between the ages of 15 and 22 who provide advice to our government about programs and services that help young people. Created in 2000, the panel has made key contributions in the development of the Alberta mentoring partnership, Alberta's gang reduction strategy, the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, and Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans.

I look forward to meeting with these inspiring young leaders, hearing their ideas, drawing from their experiences, and reporting back to this House through the hon. Minister of Human Services to highlight their contributions to our province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Fundraising for Leadership Campaigns

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. There is still no legislation in Alberta governing fundraising rules for political leadership campaigns. This has allowed some practices that many consider unethical. Over the course of the last few days I've attempted on behalf of concerned taxpayers to find out just how much taxpayer subsidized cash our Premiers have received and are receiving from the PC Party through the benefit plan trust scheme.

The government has evaded these questions, but a little digging reveals some troubling facts. True Blue Alberta was set up in 2005 as a legal vehicle for raising money and paying expenses for the former Premier's leadership campaign. According to a 2007 investigative report by the Ethics Commissioner True Blue Alberta had no other purpose than this. Yet according to the member disclosure statements of the former Premier under the category of Income, Other he received taxable allowances of at least $5,000 from True Blue Alberta in 2008. His spouse received taxable allowances of at least $5,000 in 2008 and '09.

If True Blue Alberta had no other purpose than fundraising and reimbursement for the 2006 leadership campaign, why were these individuals still being paid two and three years later? Where did this money come from, and why, interestingly enough, does a corporate registry search show annual returns are outstanding for True Blue Alberta for the last five years even though they are paying out taxable allowances during that time?

My job as a member of the Legislature is to ask questions, sometimes tough, uncomfortable questions. I'd submit that the current Premier and the ministers responsible for the laws governing these issues are compelled to and should answer my questions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

International Day of Persons with Disabilities

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Saturday, December 3, is International Day of Persons with Disabilities, a day of celebration both here in Alberta and around the world. It is a day committed to celebrating the lives of persons with disabilities and those who support them.

In 1992 International Day of Persons with Disabilities was proclaimed by the United Nations as a way to promote understanding of disability issues and the rights of persons with disabilities. Mr. Speaker, nearly 15 per cent of Albertans over the age of five have one or more disabilities.

This year International Day of Persons with Disabilities will be celebrated across the province with special events and presentations of awards from the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, of which I am proud to be a part. Presenting these awards helps us realize the positive impact persons with disabilities have on every aspect of the political, social, economic, and cultural life in our communities.

This year's awards are: an award of excellence in public awareness for Janine Halayko and John Collier for the You Can Ride Two program in Edmonton, an award of excellence in employment for Champions Career Centre in Calgary, an award of excellence in education for Sandra Hukalo of St. Gabriel school in Edmonton, an award of excellence in community for the Medicine Hat accessible playground initiative, and the Dr. Gary McPherson leadership award for Dr. David Legg in Cochrane.

Increasing awareness of the issues that affect the lives of persons with disabilities is an important first step in removing barriers in society and in our communities. December 3 also provides a great opportunity to learn more about the need in our communities for people to be included because they're part of our society and who also have a disability. They have so much to offer.

Mr. Speaker, as part of our efforts to promote this day, I invite all members to participate in their community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Human Rights Day

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to discuss international Human Rights Day. For the last 63 years the international community has recognized December 10 as international Human Rights Day. It commemorates the day in 1948 that the United Nations general assembly adopted the universal declaration of human rights.

The declaration arose directly from the experiences of the Second World War and represents the first global expression of rights to which all human beings are entitled. Since that time this declaration has become the most translated document in modern history. It's available in more than 360 languages, and new translations are still being added.

The declaration set out for the first time in history fundamental human rights to be universally protected and provided a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations. It has enabled remarkable progress in human rights and has inspired human rights frameworks across the globe, including Alberta's human rights legislation, the Alberta Human Rights Act.

The United Nations office of the high commissioner for human rights has proclaimed this year's theme for Human Rights Day: Celebrate Human Rights. It pays tribute to all human rights defenders and encourages others to get involved in the global human rights movement.

December 10 is a day to reflect on the meaning, importance, and need for human rights and to recognize the work of human rights defenders world-wide, who act to end discrimination. Progress is made by the people, Mr. Speaker, and each one of us has the potential to make a difference. On December 10 I encourage all Albertans to do just that.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public Health Inquiry

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier decided to appoint a judge to review MLA pay, and, presto, in just two weeks a Supreme Court justice miraculously appeared. Yet we have been asking for a judge . . .

Speaker's Ruling MLA Compensation Review

The Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down. You're absolutely wrong, and that question is out of order. The Speaker of the Legislative Assembly appointed the panel as per the direction of the Members' Services Committee.

Go on to your next question.

1:50

Public Health Inquiry (continued)

Dr. Sherman: Yet we have been asking for a judge to lead a public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act into what are incredibly serious problems in our public health care system, some of which are actually life-threatening. What's more, we've been asking for this for more than one year. What does the Premier see in MLA pay that is so much more important than saving Albertans' lives and protecting our public health care system?

The Speaker: Second question. Go on.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the clarity around who actually appointed the judge to the MLA review.

It's a singular review versus something that we want to have as an ongoing protection for Albertans around the health care system. The Health Quality Council has been investigating issues as they related to the allegations that have been brought forward, in fact, by this member, again without a lot of proof. Again, we have a piece of legislation in front of this House which will allow a judge-appointed inquiry to be held.

The Speaker: The second supplemental on that first set, leader.

Dr. Sherman: Can the Premier simply tell us why it's more important for MLAs to get a pay raise than to keep her promise to conduct a public inquiry into the financial mismanagement of AHS, cancer deaths, the ER crisis, and physician intimidation?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you very well know and will probably admonish the hon. member, this government doesn't give MLAs pay raises. The Members' Services Committee does that in consultation and in an open and public process. I think that it's almost shameful the amount of politicizing this hon. member has made of some very serious allegations which we take very seriously and will move to investigate.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

PC Party Benefit Plan Trust

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What's really a shame is that it's been a sad week for democracy in this province as Albertans have witnessed government stonewalling at its finest. First, the Minister of Justice refused to answer very basic questions regarding taxpayer funds used to top up the Premier's salary. Now the Premier has jumped into the act by intentionally confusing the issue in this House.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Sherman: Will the Premier be honest and tell Albertans how much taxpayers' money is being used by the PC Party to top up her salary?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is trying to mislead Albertans by stating that these are taxpayer dollars. The actual fact is that these are donations to the Progressive Conservative Party. They are listed in the members' disclosures, and I note that the unelected leader of the Wildrose Party gets paid by her party. I note that even members' disclosure statements for the hon. leader of the fourth party, the NDP, have made disclosure in which his party reimburses him for expenses, a perfectly legitimate thing to do. [interjections]

The Speaker: We have another point of order.
The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These are donations that are tax receipted, and the hon. leader of the Wildrose Party at least disclosed what she's getting paid.

Given that the Premier, who is leader of the PC Party, can at any time she wishes inquire about her party's use of tax-credited public funds, will the Premier agree to release all the details regarding the PC Party benefit plan trust that uses taxpayer dollars to top up her $300,000-a-year salary? [interjections]

The Speaker: A third point of order.
The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader should really utilize the resources that are available to him in this House because the reality is that we all disclose the revenue which we receive, and the former Premier and this current Premier will follow those rules and did follow those rules. In fact, the members' public disclosure statements listed the amounts, which is where they got their research from. It was based on a public disclosure that will continue to be done as per the rules of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's Premier is already the highest paid in the land and given that many Albertan families – Albertans with PDD, Albertans on AISH, and seniors on fixed incomes – are struggling just to put food on the table this Christmas, can the Premier please tell the people of Alberta and the people on AISH why they're still waiting for the $400-a-month increase in benefits that she promised them, when all this taxpayer money is going to top up her $300,000-a-year salary and benefits.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader should really do his homework. He should actually present facts in the Legislature. He's good at doing the innuendo. He's good at doing the politicizing of some very serious issues.

Mr. Speaker, all of the revenue or income that we receive as Members of the Legislative Assembly and from other sources as part of the rules are in the members' disclosure statements. The Premier and I and you and he, I hope, although he doesn't list any expenses reimbursed to him by his party, which is odd – that's what we would do as Members of this Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, from what I can discern from these first two sets of questions, we have three points of order arising thereof.

The Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Justice: why are the Premier and the Minister of Justice refusing to answer this very important question? How much money in tax credits is being used to finance the PC Party's benefit plan trust for the Premier?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, our party is committed to openness and transparency. That's why we have this legislation. That's why we use it. It's working well. We have no plans to change it. Everybody has to make disclosure. Again, I say that it's working well.

Mr. MacDonald: It's working well for some.

The Speaker: Member, question please.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, again to the same minister: how much money will the Premier receive under the PC Party's benefit plan trust that is being set up now and is being subsidized by the taxpayers of this province through the political tax credit process?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the legislation is working well. I don't need to know how much money his party is paying his leader. I don't know if it is. It's not for me to find out, and it's certainly not for me to disclose. Every party can disclose it if they wish. I know the third party discloses it. That's fine. Others disclose it. All leaders have to show what they're receiving. It's being done now. It's fully open and transparent.

Mr. MacDonald: To the same minister: if this is all working so well, why did a standing committee of this Assembly compel or order the Minister of Justice and Attorney General to bring back to that committee a detailed discussion paper to include issues about how the legislation around this is working, how it is to be implemented, and how it is to be recommended? If this is working so well, why was this recommendation made to your department?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we're always open to improving legislation. But if there are concerns about political contributions, that's what the independent Chief Electoral Officer is for. So if somebody wants to raise some issues about impropriety, let them speak to the independent Chief Electoral Officer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Critical Electricity Transmission Infrastructure

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Tuesday the Energy minister refused to confirm that the cost overruns for the three transmission lines under Bill 50 have reached half a billion dollars. He avoided saying what the government was doing about it and said that we are just speculating. Now we've heard that the spending is over $1 billion, all of which falls on Alberta ratepayers if the minister continues to deny and delay. To the Energy minister: are you still going to say that we're speculating when you know that this is the truth?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, how would I know that that's the truth when the source of their information is: we've heard. That's a terrific source.

What I can tell the Assembly is that we continue to work with the review, respecting the independence of the AUC. We look forward to appointing a review committee next week.

Mr. Hinman: Well, this is the problem about misleading the public. We have the documents here, and we will table them.

Given that I have a copy of the newest monthly report from the Transmission Facility Cost Monitoring Committee, showing that these companies have now spent $1.03 billion on three projects, and given that these power line companies have a guaranteed rate of return on their approved capital investments, will the minister please inform this House on whether they have a guarantee of $103 million to AESO, or have you and your cabinet, behind closed doors because of Bill 50, authorized the $1.03 billion that's been spent 10-fold?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm quite confident that when these documents are tabled, the word "spent" will not appear in those documents.

2:00

Mr. Hinman: It's disgusting that this government doesn't stick up for the taxpayers.

The Speaker: Okay. Let's ask the question, please.

Mr. Hinman: Sure. Given that the Alberta ratepayers need you to act now in their interest, not in your party's interest, and given that a lot of this spending is on contracts that could still be cancelled, will the minister and the Premier set aside their pride and do the right thing and tell these companies that Albertans will not fund the billion-dollar overspending and that they should cancel all their contracts until your review of those lines is completed? You've given them authorization.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, for months we've listened to the members of the third party talk about the sanctity of contracts and property rights. Now they're running around saying: let's cancel contracts. They'd better make up their mind.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Since deregulation electricity rates have continued to rise for the average Albertan. In December about 70 per cent of residential users in Alberta will pay 13 and a half cents per kilowatt hour, the highest monthly rate since 2002. Will the Minister of Energy admit that deregulation is a failure that allows large corporations to gouge homeowners and small businesses, and will he undertake to reregulate power rates in this province in order to protect those consumers?

Dr. Morton: I know this will come as a surprise, Mr. Speaker, but no, I will not say yes to the hon. member's allegations. What I will say yes to is that when fairly compared, the electricity rates in this province compare middle of the pack with other nonhydro-based markets. I'm also happy to repeat – I don't know; they must never listen to the answers we give – that unlike Quebec with a $36 billion debt or Ontario with a $62 billion debt, there is a zero-dollars debt in this province for generation.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, will this minister admit that since power companies in Alberta are private, there is an equivalent amount of private debt that is still supported by the ratepayers of this province through their electricity bills? Will he admit to this House that he is using a complete red herring in order to confuse the matter so that he can get out of answering the question of why the people of Alberta are experiencing extremely high electricity rates that just keep going up?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the red herrings and the confusion are coming from that side, not this side.

As I repeat yet again – yet again – in Alberta, fairly compared to nonhydro jurisdictions, the cost of electricity is middle of the pack.

Mr. Mason: Will the minister admit that power rates in Alberta are higher than they need to be? Will he admit that the power rates in this province are too high and that they're going higher, and will he admit that deregulation and this government's single-minded, ideological bent on privatization and deregulation has caused this situation and that government is to blame and no one else?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I think it's quite evident from that question that the single-minded ideology, the anti free-market ideology, is on that side of the aisle, not this side.

True Blue Alberta Ltd.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, despite the comments from the Minister of Justice it is time the Conflicts of Interest Act was amended. For example, True Blue Alberta, the company set up to support the former Premier, is 100 per cent owned by Allan Farmer, a senior partner in the law firm Reynolds Mirth Richards & Farmer. This firm also receives lucrative government contracts. So while True Blue is benefiting the Premier, the government is benefiting the sole shareholder in True Blue. To the Minister of Justice: why doesn't government policy define this as a conflict of interest?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we do believe in transparency and openness. This legislation provides for that. Every member of this Assembly has to provide information and disclosure about what they receive. I don't know what more I can say than that. It's obvious that the disclosure is there, so this member is beating a dead horse.

Dr. Taft: Well, again to the same minister: given that the value of government contracts paid to this law firm, which is closely linked and, in fact, partly owned by the sole shareholder in True Blue, soared from $780,000 in 2006 to $1.3 million to $1.8 million to $2.4 million to $2.6 million in 2010, how can Albertans know that these huge increases weren't facilitated by an inside track to the Premier's office unless there really are stricter controls on leadership funds?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to answer for private business and how they make their money. This organization is not within the purview of the Justice minister. If there are problems with electoral impropriety, then we have a Chief Electoral Officer to whom people can complain.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. The laws are clearly inadequate, and a committee of this Legislature has found it that way. Given that the Standing Committee on Public Safety and Services formally requested that the Minister of Justice – that's you – prepare a discussion paper on leadership disclosure legislation more than a year ago, why has the minister stalled on this request?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, there was a report that was received. It is being considered, and it is being worked on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Builders' Liens

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've spoken with a number of home builders, and they've all said that the Builders' Lien Act is not fair to home builders. I've been told that builders' liens stop construction on work sites, and they're also reported on the builder's credit rating. My question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. Given that liens have the effect of stopping construction, why does the government also allow liens to be reported against the credit ratings of construction companies? Is this not punishing the builders twice, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Builders' liens are actually registered against the property. The government does not apply them to a builder's credit rating. However, a credit agency may in fact look at that particular lien against a property and make their own decision. So, hon. member, yes, it may be applied against a builder; however, the government has no specific role in that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first supplemental to the same minister: given that this act is now 30 years old, when will the minister review and update this act to fairly represent and balance the need of the builders, subcontractors, and homeowners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are always willing to engage with stakeholders to see how we can make our policies, our procedures, and our legislation better. I would be happy to meet with stakeholders, hon. member, and if there are specific stakeholders that bring forward valid concerns, I would be happy to move forth and possibly review the act.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. What types of checks and balances do we currently have to protect the builders from receiving liens when a subcontractor is actually the one that's at fault?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have protections in place to protect builders and the public from frivolous liens. If the registering of an invalid lien causes damage to a property holder, section 40 of the legislation makes them civilly liable. I'll say that my department and our investigations unit would be willing to work with folks to see if, in fact, there have been frivolous and vexatious liens that have been placed on people. Quite frankly, that could result in criminal charges of perjury.

Regulated Rate Option for Electricity

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, Albertans see electricity prices spike, and we hear that the minister is not happy about it. But what does he do about it? Nothing at all. The minister could make simple changes to the regulated rate option to protect consumers without distorting his beloved market, but he refuses. This reminds me of a famous queen saying, "Let them eat cake" when the peasants were short on bread. If the minister is not happy and homeowners and small businesses aren't happy, why does he refuse to act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Well, of course, Mr. Speaker, we are acting. It's the reason that we're reviewing the AESO proposals for two new north-south lines. One of the concerns on that is the cost and the pass-along costs both to commercial users and residential users. To say that we're not acting is absolutely not true.

Mr. Hehr: Well, given that Sheldon Fulton of the Industrial Power Consumers Association of Alberta has suggested two changes to help consumers without harming the market the minister loves so much, will the minister consider the suggestion of a change to the economic withholding-of-power rule and allow utilities to sign power purchasing agreements beyond 45 days on behalf of regulated-rate customers?

2:10

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I guess most of us know that the opposition usually gets the material for their questions out of the morning newspapers, which is obviously the case this morning. The article that I know is the source of this has some confusion in it. There are two different electrical markets. There is the residential market and the wholesale market. Some of the comments by the individual he referred to apply to the wholesale market but not to the retail residential market.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I also heard that the minister wasn't happy about this from the paper. Hopefully, that was correct.

Given that the minister is not happy, that I'm not happy, our constituents aren't happy, and even industry groups aren't happy, will the minister in this House commit that by this time next year the regulated option will be changed to even out the peaks and valleys for families and small businesses so that our province isn't once again visited by the electricity Grinch at Christmas.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, finally we find something we agree upon. He's not happy with higher prices. I'm not happy with higher prices. I suspect nobody is happy with higher prices. We all like lower prices. What we're happy about is that we have a province with zero – zero – public debt on electricity whereas other provinces have tens of billions of dollars of debt.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Gasoline Prices

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are also for the Minister of Energy. Most Albertans drive a vehicle for personal use or for agricultural purposes or for commercial reasons. We all have to pay for gasoline regardless of the price. With all the volatility in the marketplace and the constant shift in supply and demand it can be challenging to keep up with the price changes. To the minister: where does Alberta currently rank in terms of gasoline and diesel fuel prices across the country?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What an appropriate question to come after all of these other ridiculous questions from the other side.

Lo and behold, the price of gasoline in Alberta this week is lower than in any other province. That darn free market: it just keeps pushing the price lower.

Mr. Prins: To the same minister. It seems that Alberta is blessed with an abundance of oil and refineries, yet for the past several months prices have been above and sometimes well above a dollar a litre for gas. Why is it that when the resource is literally beneath our feet, the prices are so high?

Dr. Morton: Well, it's that darn free market again. That darn free market. Refineries here do buy oil at North American or global prices. When the price goes up globally or in North America, the price of oil goes up here, too. But might I remind the Assembly that higher oil prices mean higher royalties. It means more jobs, and of course it keeps the gas tax in Alberta the lowest of any province in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you. I'm glad that prices of fuel are going down a little bit. Will the government ever consider regulating gasoline prices, similar to that which other provinces do, if we see the prices go higher again?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Yes. Will the government consider regulating the price of gas? Well, the gentleman with his hand up in the back row there obviously would like that approach, government regulation. The answer on this side is no. There are currently five provinces that do regulate it. Studies show that their prices are no lower than the others. What regulation gets you is less volatility but not lower prices, so this government has absolutely no plans to interfere in the marketplace when it comes to gasoline prices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Emergency Medical Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Emergency medical services is the canary in the mine of the health care system. EMS workers have never had lower morale than since their mismanaged takeover by Alberta Health Services in 2009. Disturbing reports of serious delays in response, potentially preventable deaths along with frequent red alerts – a red alert is when no ambulance is available in the city – undermine safety as well as prevent professional morale from improving. To the minister: will the minister table in this House the cost of the transition of the EMS services to Alberta Health Services? What is the annual budget for EMS in the province?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated to the hon. member, I don't have that information at hand with me today.

I'm not aware of a serious morale problem among EMS workers, generally, in the province. I am aware that there have been a number of changes in the last two years which have resulted in the consolidation and in some cases the change of operator in specific communities. As I've told the hon. member, I'll be pleased to get whatever information I can and provide it to him either through question period or outside the House.

Dr. Swann: Indeed, we did raise this question earlier. Since the minister's shallow reassurances what has he actually found out about the dire straits in emergency medical services?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we don't conduct reviews of operations in the health care system in my ministry by asking questions about dire straits. What we do is attempt to communicate on a regular basis with stakeholders both through Alberta Health Services and externally. We collect data where we can, and we provide that data in a forum that allows us to continuously improve the system. As I said, I'd be pleased to get the hon. member any information that I can and provide it to him.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, given that the Airdrie city council recently passed a motion and has been forced to keep its fire department responding to EMS calls because Alberta Health Services ambulances cannot meet the demand – I'm tabling their document today: 196 calls in six months; 50 per cent of the time the fire department arrives before the EMS team – will the minister admit that the EMS system is broken?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what I will do is that I'd be pleased to consider the information that the hon. member is going to table today. I will take it at face value. I will investigate, and I will reply to him.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

LEED Standard for Buildings

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked questions relative to the leadership in energy and environmental design rating system, known as LEED, and whether it discriminated against regionally grown wood. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: could you please assure me that this process is not discriminating against locally produced forest products through government contracts?

Mr. Oberle: Well, I thank the hon. member for his question, Mr. Speaker, and for his concern in this area. The LEED standard really demonstrates excellence in modern business practices. The LEED standard does in fact allow for the use of locally sourced wood. It provides points for the use of locally sourced wood, presumably because of the reduced carbon impact associated with the lower transportation distances. The province adheres to LEED, but this does not conflict with our desire to use locally sourced wood. We will do that wherever we can.

Mr. Lund: Well, to the same minister: why is it that the industry is required to use certified wood?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, in fact, the industry is not required to use certified wood. The LEED standard does give points for FSC certification, not for other schemes which we think are also legitimate certification schemes. But it also gives points for the use of locally sourced wood, regionally developed wood. Whether or not industry wants to certify is individual choice according to their own market conditions. We encourage industry to make that choice. The FSC is interpreted, not required in the LEED standard.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. Given the economic pressures facing Alberta's forest industry over the past half decade or so, are you contemplating any other measures that will help strengthen this sector in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed we are. These are tough times for the industry. The lumber and OSB prices are tied to the U.S. housing market, and that is in dire straits right now. I believe the future is bright for the forest industry. We are working with them on market development and new product development, and we'll continue to do that.

Mr. Speaker, this is Alberta wood cut from sustainably managed forests. It supports 18,000 Alberta workers and their families. We will stand behind this industry locally, nationally, and internationally.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, I take it.

Impaired Driving Legislation

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in 2007 the now Solicitor General was contacted by an individual who had given a roadside breath sample of over .08. The Solicitor General testified as a witness for the defence that this person's Charter rights had been violated during this process, which, if true, would have allowed this driving-impaired friend of his to walk. To the Solicitor General: given that the new impaired driving law presumes someone who blows between .05 and .08 is guilty until proven innocent, why would you help defend the Charter rights of your friend, who blew above .08, but not the rights of those who blow below the legal limit? Kind of inconsistent, don't you think?

2:20

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, this member is a lawyer and, for all of the six months that he did practice, I'm sure he knows that it's inappropriate to bring up private legal matters here. He also is incorrect in the fact that this drunk driving legislation does not presume people guilty. Rather, there are two levels of appeal process. If he'd read the legislation – I'm sure he's able to – I'm sure he'd see that as well.

Mr. Anderson: Given that the Solicitor General, by testifying for his friend who blew over .08, clearly understands the police time and resources that get tied up when we enforce our drinking and driving laws in court, doesn't the minister think that instead of using these scarce resources on pursuing those below the legal limit, we should instead be spending police time and resources on the drivers over .08, who are the ones actually killing and maiming people on our streets? Go after the right people, Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I took a drinking test with the Calgary Police Service, in which I drank four glasses of alcohol within 45 minutes. Going to .10, I wasn't able to drive, and when I fell below .08, I still didn't feel able to drive. Perhaps this member should take this test himself.

Mr. Anderson: Well, your actions speak louder than your words, Mr. Minister.

Given that the real solution to eliminating drinking and driving is clearly stiffer penalties and more enforcement of existing impaired driving laws for those who are over the .08 limit and given that you have a better chance of seeing a sasquatch in Alberta than you do a checkstop, outside of Christmas, will the minister please commit to actually doing something that will save lives, like increasing the number of checkstops on our streets, and send this new impaired driving bill to an all-party committee so that we can amend the law into one that actually saves lives? Your bill does not save lives, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This member, unfortunately, is incorrect. If he actually just refers to Robert Remington's article in the Herald, it focuses on the fact that 20 per cent of all traffic fatalities involving alcohol were of drivers between .05 and .08. And you know what, Mr. Speaker? We have checkstops, and it is downright insulting to our police officers in this province to say that they're not enforcing the law.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Labour Relations Code Review

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government recently had two Edmonton lawyers quietly conduct a review of the Labour Relations Code at the urging of a coalition of antiunion employers in the construction sector. It was reported that the findings of that review were supposed to be provided to the relevant minister by the end of October. I take umbrage with the term "relevant." It's "appropriate." To the Minister of Human Services: can he confirm receipt of that report and advise this Assembly on its principle finding?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'm offended that he doesn't consider me to be relevant anymore. I've just about had 15 years in this Assembly, next March 12, and I've always considered myself to be relevant if not always on point.

To answer his question: I haven't received it yet. I had a meeting arranged to meet with the two gentlemen in question. It turned out to be on a day when I was going to attend a Remembrance Day ceremony at a school in my riding, so we postponed the meeting. I anticipate meeting those two gentlemen, actually, Monday of next week.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister – and I do appreciate his relevance, and I know he considers me irrelevant – will he table the report in this Assembly so that Albertans can draw their own conclusions as to the validity of its claims and the objectivity of its authors?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I can't make a commitment to table any report right now. What I'm anticipating is some advice to a minister with respect to a number of questions with respect to productivity issues that may or may not be raised in the labour code. I have no idea at this point in time whether any action will be taken relative to that. If action is taken relative to issues that have been raised by any party in respect to productivity issues relative to the labour code, there will be a full discussion with the affected parties.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the hon. Minister of Human Services: can you provide us with any type of a timeline when this report might be tabled or discussed in committee? Before the election? After?

Mr. Hancock: What I can tell the hon. member is that I have just actually received today the first report that the two gentlemen were engaged to produce on MERFing, and I have anticipation of perhaps even reading that today. Once I read it and determine whether or not the policy that was put in place by this government with respect to MERFing is actually effective or not, I will be able to bring forward some changes if we need to with respect to MERFing.

With respect to the brief that was presented by Merit Contractors and others relative to productivity, that was one that bore looking into. We looked into it, and when I get the report, I'll advise the hon. member what we're going to do with it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Peter Lougheed Centre Emergency Services

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The delay in the construction of the new addition to the Peter Lougheed hospital caused a delay in relocating the lab to the new building, which, in turn, created a space problem at the emergency department. My questions are to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Could the minister advise as to when the construction will be completed and the lab will be moved to the new area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. There are a few facts here that need to be clarified. There has not, in fact, been a delay in relocating the laboratory at the Peter Lougheed Centre. There is shelled-in space available at the centre for the move to occur sometime in the future, but at the moment this is not an approved capital project and, as such, has not been identified by Alberta Health Services. The timing for the approval of this project as well as other projects is obviously dependent on the availability of provincial capital funds, although government has made a considerable capital investment in the Peter Lougheed over the past two years, investing approximately $285 million in capital funding.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once the lab has moved, the emergency department is scheduled to expand. When will this expansion occur to ensure that the emergency department can better accommodate the needs of my constituents and all other patients?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Appreciating the concerns of the hon. member's constituents, I need to point out once again that the expansion of the emergency department at the Peter Lougheed is not yet an approved capital project. There is not presently a time frame for that approval.

Again, we've made a considerable investment in improved emergency services in Calgary. Within the next three years people can expect a new emergency department to be opened at the Rockyview general hospital, and urgent care services will be opened at the Sheldon Chumir health centre in downtown Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: since the emergency room at the Peter Lougheed hospital is not large enough to accommodate the growth in northeast Calgary, would the minister consider adding the emergent care services to the east Calgary health centre similar to the Sheldon Chumir and the south centre clinic?

The Speaker: Go ahead, hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I can't make a specific commitment with respect to the east Calgary health centre, I can tell the hon. member that the availability of emergency room services in Calgary is a major concern for myself and my ministry. We will look at northeast Calgary on a global basis, determine the impact of the opening of the other emergency room facilities I just mentioned, and then be in a position to talk with the hon. member about what else, if anything, may be needed in his specific community.

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Education indicated that I was against choice in private schools. I want to make it clear that I am all for choice in private schools. In a free society if people do not wish to go to the public education system, go nuts. Go to a private school. Just don't ask the taxpayer to fund your adventure.

To the Minister of Education: given that the Webber Academy only accepts students in the 75th percentile and charges parents up to $16,000 a year – and this is just one of so many examples – why are we using taxpayer dollars to subsidize these elite private schools?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to start by saying that calling the thousands of parents who choose to send their kids to private school nuts is simply inappropriate. I hope that the member withdraws that statement.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, we pride ourselves in choice in this province, and if these parents choose to send their children to private school, pay the tuition or the fees that are associated with it, they can do that. The fact is that the Alberta government does not fully fund private schools nor do we contribute to the infrastructure for private schools.

Mr. Hehr: Given that many private schools charge large tuitions and make children take, essentially, IQ tests to establish a baseline of the type of student they want, clearly eliminating those students they don't feel are up to their calibre, why are we funding these institutions whose sole interests are to provide education to only a very specific segment of the population?

2:30

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, again incorrect. There are at least a dozen private schools that actually focus and specialize in children with learning disabilities and other disabilities. There are schools that are focusing on gifted children. There are schools that are focusing on kids with sports abilities or interests. There are schools that are focusing on religious or linguistic requirements. There is a vast array of choices, and that's what we pride ourselves on. These parents are neither nuts, nor are their choices limited.

Mr. Hehr: Given the Premier's concern for the rise of private and charter schools and given that private schools have smaller class sizes while charging parents astronomical fees, when will the minister implement the Learning Commission's recommendations on class sizes in our public education system, a promise that is eight years overdue?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, we're working with all school boards on meeting the guidelines that have been put in the Maskell report on classroom sizes. As a matter of fact, the Premier has very recently, just a few weeks ago, announced an additional $107 million that was intended to go into classrooms and alleviate some of the pressures.

We are now working through our budgeting process, and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that both school boards and parents and this government are working on creating the best environment for children to learn in.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Education Concerns in Lethbridge

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're very proud of our schools in Lethbridge, but I have some concerns that I've heard from my constituents regarding the future of the education system in Lethbridge. To the Minister of Education: how will the minister ensure that the people of the Lethbridge have a voice in the future of education in Lethbridge and, in fact, Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are currently holding a number of education forums today. This morning I actually opened one up in Calgary that some 300 parents, teachers, students were in. We will be heading to Lethbridge. I know the hon. member will be joining me, and we will be speaking with a large number of educators, parents, students, grandparents, and community leaders in Lethbridge. Also, there will be speak-outs led by students in Lethbridge, and we're using Twitter, Facebook, e-mail, phone lines, you name it. You can even send us a letter.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you to the minister for that answer. There are lots of people that actually don't use Twitter, believe it or not.

Another concern that I've had raised is: how will the local Lethbridge school boards not be left out of the current Education Act consultation process? How will the minister address these concerns? I really don't think they want to twitter.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, they won't have to twitter if they choose not to. They can use any means.

With school boards I pride myself on developing a really good relationship. I will be meeting personally with the school boards in the area. I'm meeting with school boards zone by zone right now, so both of the school boards in Lethbridge will have the ability to sit down with me one-on-one and have a good conversation about the success and challenges that they may be experiencing.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we're meeting with parents, and I have to tell you that I had some 1,800 parents on the telephone line just two days ago, and some of them were from Lethbridge.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The final question to the same minister: given that in Lethbridge our public and private boards work together with our city and have shared high school building facilities in addition to a public library which separates them, will the minister be looking at this model, that we're so proud of, when you visit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. You know, this is an experience that extends from my home to work. I always tell my three-year-old daughter: share, share, share. The message is to everybody, all the stakeholders. Sharing is great because it maximizes some taxpayers' investment in education. At the end of the day we have to focus on children, so wherever there are synergies between school boards, the private sector, and others, I strongly encourage the concept of sharing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Climate Change

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reality of this government's climate change initiatives is quite different from what the minister has painted: an emission reduction strategy that won't see reduction until 2020 at the earliest, a $15 carbon tax when experts insist that a tax has to be $75 to $150 to make a difference, and we have no plan to increase even that $15. We ask only the largest emitters, not all emitters, to reduce intensity, not emissions. Mandatory targets for large emitters are twice as weak as the federal ones. To the minister of the environment: how does any of this show us as a world leader?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Water.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'll say to the hon. member and to all in the House that Alberta is a leader with regard to this. We were the first to do this. What we have continued to say and what we've said in the House before and this week is that Alberta is committed to taking more action on this file, but Alberta is also making sure that when we do, as with Canada, all the large global emitters are part of that solution.

Ms Blakeman: Well, Mr. Speaker, how can the minister claim that this government supports federal climate change goals when Canada will never reach its emission reduction targets with Alberta's plan in the mix?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What Canada and Alberta have both said with regard to that is that we are committed to having a common-sense plan that will reduce our emissions and meet those emissions, but it's got to be a common-sense plan that has real direction and has all large global emitters at the table. Canada is 2 per cent of global emissions. The oil sands are one-tenth of 1 per cent. Between the United States and China that makes up 40 per cent of the GHGs. We have to have a global plan.

Ms Blakeman: Well, that's not leadership.

Back to the same minister: given that a decade of government resistance and inaction on health impacts has resulted in just barely signing a letter of intent, how will the minister respond when asked about health impacts from development in communities such as Fort Chip?

Mrs. McQueen: I'm very happy to answer that question, Mr. Speaker. With regard to some discussions that I've brought forward in this House and discussions that I've had with the federal Environment minister, Minister Kent, we are working on a first-class monitoring system. We'll be meeting and having some time together with regard to that, and when we're in South Africa, we'll have some time. I would like to say to the hon. member and to this House and to all Albertans: "Stay tuned. That will be coming very shortly."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Provincial Diploma Examinations

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A study conducted by a University of Saskatchewan researcher concluded that, on average, Alberta high school graduates are best prepared for postsecondary experience, with a substantially smaller reduction in their grades as compared to their peers from other provinces. That's good, but there are a lot of questions. To the Minister of Education: what is the process for developing your provincial diploma exams, and how do we ensure that these exams are fairly testing our students' cognitive skills so that our students have a fair chance at postsecondary institutions?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, for those who have a degree in education, they would know that there is a whole subset of skills in developing a test. There are experts within the Ministry of Education that develop tests, and these tests are designed to test not only the curriculum but in grade 12 the students' ability. That study that came from the University of Saskatchewan is another positive report card for Alberta because it shows that not only are our kids attaining the information that they should according to curriculum, but once tested, they are at par, and their mark only drops by 6 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that so much of a high school graduate's grade hinges upon a diploma exam worth 50 per cent of a student's grade, is the minister completely confident that that exam is balanced, constructed soundly, and completely reflective of the curriculum objectives?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, a twofold answer. I am confident that the exam is doing what it is designed to do because now this study from Saskatchewan again reconfirmed that our students, once they receive a mark, let's say 70 per cent, actually have earned 70 per cent, and it shows in postsecondary education. In some provinces their mark drops by as much as 20 per cent. But on whether the balance should be 50-50 or 40-60 or another combination, I'm always open to this discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A final question to the same minister. The fact remains that 80 per cent from Ontario is considered by many postsecondary institutions the same as 80 per cent from Alberta. What will the minister do to encourage his other provincial counterparts so that we have consistent standards across the country?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as you know, education is exclusively a provincial area of competence, but there is a national table at which all education ministers meet. At the next table I will be bringing this topic forward and encouraging other provinces to look at the Alberta experience and to adjust their testing practices to make sure that they don't artificially inflate their graduates' marks and so that we have a level playing field.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-response period for today. There were 18 members recognized, with 108 questions and responses. In 30 seconds from now we will continue with the Routine.

2:40

Members' Statements

(continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Edmonton Southside Primary Care Network

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to recognize the Edmonton Southside primary care network. Located in my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods, the Edmonton Southside primary care network, or PCN as it's also known, was first opened in 2005. For six years now the Edmonton Southside PCN has allowed my constituents in Mill Woods to receive professional and compassionate primary care health services locally. The approximately 138 family physicians and 53 nurses, dietitians, and other health specialists have also provided care for patients with chronic diseases and mental health issues.

Mr. Speaker, evidence shows that PCNs are altering the health care landscape in our province through positive changes in the delivery of primary care. Among them, increased patient screening for disease and illness have seen significant increases. Specific to this Edmonton Southside PCN, the annual average number of patient visits to the geriatric care program has risen from 2.8 to nearly 3.4 in recent years.

Primary care networks are contributing to the improvements across the entire health system. However, the impact of any one network still remains uniquely local. I can tell you that the positive impact that the Edmonton Southside primary care network has had in my community has been amazing, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Support for the Homeless

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The self-congratulatory communication from this government regarding its record on homelessness is both shameless and shameful. In fact, the government's milquetoast efforts to date will leave tens of thousands of Albertans either without homes at all or living in dangerous, unhealthy, insecure, or overly expensive homes. By talking only about the 10-year plan to end homelessness, the government distracts people from their inaction on the many other facets of what is truly required to address the overall crisis in housing in Alberta. Moreover, even that plan includes only about one-third of the resources this government's own task force stated were necessary to get the job done.

At noon today a new piece of public art was dedicated beside Edmonton city hall. Sculptors Keith Turnbull and Ritchie Velthuis worked with over 20 artists who have experienced housing problems. This sculpture is intended to get us thinking about how to end homelessness in this wealthy province.

There is a tremendous shortage of affordable, secure housing in this province. Most of the dollars for construction of affordable housing come from federal government transfers, and even as that work goes on, the overall number of affordable spaces decreases as private developers continue converting affordable units to luxury homes for the wealthy, with no government action taken to discourage this trend.

Earlier this fall I raised the crisis being faced by 1,300 Alberta families who are about to lose their rent supplement. The minister responded by saying that they would be covered under the other rent subsidy programs. What he didn't say is that those other rent subsidy programs already have wait-lists thousands of families long and many years long, wait-lists to receive money, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that those people who will be moved to a wait-list will no longer receive the supplement, and they will lose their homes, and the minister does not even have the courage to be straight with Albertans about this decision.

Without action to address other issues such as more low-income rental housing, programs to access near-market housing for others, and good support services for those needing more than just a physical space, there will always be more people becoming homeless than leaving it. We are a rich province, Mr. Speaker, and we can afford more than meagre funding and rich public relations strategies. Housing and homes are a basic human right, and it's about time this government started acting that way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Intercultural Dialogue

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last evening along with the MLAs for Edmonton-Decore and Edmonton-McClung I attended the Harmony Dialogue Group Intercultural Dialogue Institute friendship dinner. The Intercultural Dialogue Institute was founded by Turkish scholar Fethullah Gülen and is dedicated to the promotion of understanding amongst the various cultures, religions, and ethnicities.

Its cornerstone is the belief that civilization is far more than bricks, mortar, science, or technology. It is an undertaking to give value to common interests. A civilized world where a person or group is not threatened by others or threatening to others is profoundly common and remarkably rare. We easily accept the familiar; we have a harder time accepting the unknown. We seek an answer or a personal truth and then look for others who share what we've found or believe. We are not solitary animals, so this makes sense.

The challenge, Mr. Speaker, is to accept that differing or contradictory beliefs do not take away from your own beliefs, that you cannot give away more than you receive, and the acceptance of others' thoughts and opinions does not threaten or diminish. Recognition of and respect for another's rights is at the basis of the philosophy of Gülen and the Intercultural Dialogue Institute. They show a genuine commitment to civilization.

They are bold in their approach and they have good reason to be.

Türkiye, the land of Rumi, is a land of Divine love . . . where diverse faiths and cultures have lived in peace for a millennia: it is a land of dialogue and tolerance, it is the land of Abraham – spiritual forefather of Judaism, Christianity and Islam.

Our hosts came from the cradle of civilization, Mr. Speaker, and this is why they treat it with such profound seriousness. Their message, like many messages, is often lost in the white noise of our world, but they believe us to be more familiar than we may know so long as we are prepared to give each other a chance, certainly a civilized message often lost in times like these.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: First of all, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on a notice of motion.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Later today I intend to introduce a question of privilege pursuant to Standing Order 15(2). I provided written notice to your office of my intention to raise this matter, which I will do later today, with respect to "the government's consistent use of late-evening sittings this fall," which, in our view, "interferes with the ability of members of the House to fulfill their duties."

The Speaker: Such notice will be circulated at the appropriate time.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) to advise the House that on Monday, December 5, 2011, Motion for a Return 21 will be accepted, and motions for returns 18, 19, 20, and 22 will be dealt with.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter to the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. Attached to it is a report called Cancer in Alberta: A Regional Picture 2006. You'll recall that the other day in the House the hon. member had raised Motion for a Return 17, and we rejected the motion because it related to an analysis done with respect to a particular part of a report, and that report was inaccurate. I'm now providing the hon. member with the information he was actually wanting to get, which wasn't quite what was in the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to table the requisite number of copies of the 2010-2011 annual report of the Alberta Mental Health Patient Advocate office. This report highlights the key accomplishments and issues addressed by the organization. It also profiles individuals affected by mental health concerns and key individuals in the mental health system. As we work to continue to increase our focus on mental health, I would encourage all hon. members to take an opportunity to read this most important report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, do you have a tabling as well?

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of an online news story concerning the valuation by Forbes of the Edmonton Oilers. The proposed downtown arena, according to Forbes, would be worth an extra $20 million in revenue per season for the Edmonton Oilers.

I would also like to table a web page from Forbes concerning the valuation of the Oilers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

2:50

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling correspondence received from Marina Elena Tungland and Anna Muze, who own and operate the Il Forno restaurant, one of the really wonderful businesses in my constituency. The correspondence concerns Bill 26. I'll very briefly quote from the letter.

We also feel that the Alberta government needs to take a much closer look at the negative results observed in British Columbia. This would in turn require a longer period of time to dissect this issue. If after proper consideration and time, the Alberta government chooses to implement these changes, we suggest there be a strong educational component to the message being delivered to the public."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of the Provincial Court judgment which I referenced today in question period, where the Solicitor General on behalf of the defence is testifying as to the breach of Charter rights of an individual who had blown over .08.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling an e-mail from Gail Wilkinson, who I introduced to this Assembly through you yesterday, asking what the Seniors minister is going to do to fix the PDD appeal process, that was found unfair by the Court of Queen's Bench. Among the questions Gail asks is, "Why is it that families are having to spend their retirement savings to go to court to prove that government processes are unfair?"

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table three reports that have been submitted to the Transmission Facility Cost Monitoring Committee: one, the western Alberta transmission line; two, the heartland transmission project; and the third is the east DC project. These show that these companies have had an overrun in spending and have now spent $1.03 billion when they've been authorized only at $103 million.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is research, a sheet that I have done on the Alberta PC Party constituency association annual expenses between 2006 and '10, and it is noteworthy that Edmonton-

Whitemud, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, and quite a number of constituencies here have expenses that are significant. For the five years in total it's over 7 and a half million dollars. I won't bore you with the complete list.

I've also done the ND Party as well, and it's available for all to see. The New Democrats have over the five years spent $142,000 on annual association expenses.

The Alberta Liberal Party constituency association for the same time period had total constituency expenses of $302,000. That's very interesting reading. I didn't do the Wildrose Alliance because, of course, they're just getting started.

The Speaker: Okay. Let's get on with the tabling. It's not a debate.

Mr. MacDonald: My last tabling is a letter dated September 9, 2011, to the former Alberta employment and immigration minister regarding the Workers' Compensation Board 2010 special dividend to Alberta employers.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Four tablings today. The first is five sets, the appropriate number of copies, of various letters and phone messages that I referred to during the debate on Bill 26 last night: Mike Yasinski, Jim Thornton, Dan Peet, Jonas Van Ginhoven, Joyce Ingram, Nathan Kyler, Vivien Jonathan. These were all people that wrote to me, and I referenced them during the speech last night.

The second tabling I have today is from Inger Bartram, who's a resident at Lions Village Railtown. She is urging the government to produce legislation on life-lease contracts, please.

The third tabling that I have is a report, Mr. Speaker, from myself to you that I'm tabling on behalf of citizens that wrote to my office with regard to the future of Catholic education in Alberta. The message they wish me to convey is: "As one of your constituents, I ask you to ensure that the constitutional guarantee of Catholic Education in Alberta is preserved in the new Education Act." They look to me to include in this legislation "the right of Catholic schools to be governed . . . by elected Catholics." My report includes all of the names of those people that wrote to me on that subject.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have three tablings today, all with the correct number of copies. The first is a letter that I wrote to the hon. Minister of Energy regarding further questions we had on the incremental exchange program. You will recall that we had some information regarding that program that we want to clarify. In our view, we'd like some further clarification on that.

A second thing. I did make an error the other day in a tabling from a Lethbridge private school; I stated the wrong website. It's dot-org, not dot-ca. Needless to say, I have the correct Lethbridge website now referencing what, in fact, they say on their website.

My third tabling is from two concerned citizens, Gina Shimoda and Dimitria Fields. They're concerned about Wi-Fi wiring in our schools. They have a very interesting package of materials that suggest there may be better ways for us to be going about providing Internet services for our children in school.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Berger, the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to the Farm Implement Act the 2010-2011 Farmers' Advocate office annual report and Farm Implement Board financial statements.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 7(6) I would ask the Government House Leader to now share with us the projected government business for the week commencing December 5.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I anticipate that when we adjourn this afternoon, we'll adjourn to Monday, December 5. In the afternoon, of course, it will be private members' business; in the evening we would anticipate being in Committee of the Whole on bills 21, 24, and 26 and as per the Order Paper.

Tuesday, December 6, in the afternoon Committee of the Whole on the same three bills – 21, 24, and 26 – and as per the Order Paper; that would continue into the evening in committee and then third reading on the remaining bills, being bills 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26, and as per the Order Paper.

We would anticipate bills 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26 remaining in third reading until completed Wednesday afternoon, Wednesday evening, and Thursday afternoon.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have four additional matters to deal with. It seems to be a daily event now. We have a point of order; I'll recognize the Government House Leader for that, first. Then we'll have another point of order, and I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to proceed. Then we'll have another point of order with the hon. Government House Leader. Then we'll have a point of privilege application by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Because this, I'm sure, will take a considerable amount of time, the normal opportunity for members to access a refreshment drink, water or tea or something like that, please proceed now before me even having called Orders of the Day because I do expect that we'll have a leisurely afternoon now.

Hon. Government House Leader, please, your first application.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Questions about Political Party Activity

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the interest of time I'll try to be brief. I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j) with respect to an exchange with respect to one of the questions raised by the hon. Opposition House Leader, but it carries on a matter that's been present in the House for the last two or three days. In particular I refer to the use of the words "taxpayers' dollars" when describing payments that they were asking about, payments from the party to past Premiers and, I think, to the current Premier.

3:00

Now, first of all, it should be clear from the context of the question that the hon. member was violating rule 410(17) on page

122 of Beauchesne, sixth edition, which prohibits questions with respect to party matters, and you've ruled on that before. Indeed, my second point of order deals specifically with that question of party matters.

But in this point of order I want to particularly draw your attention and the House's attention to Erskine May Parliamentary Practice, 22nd edition, page 297, halfway down the page, where it refers to factual basis:

The facts on which a question is based may be set out as briefly as practicable within the framework of a question, provided that the Member asking it makes himself responsible for their accuracy, but extracts from newspapers or books, and paraphrases of or quotations . . . are not admissible. Where the facts are of sufficient moment the Speaker has required prima facie proof of their authenticity.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it's obvious on the face of it that the hon. member was using the term "taxpayers' dollars" when he knew or at least ought to have known that he wasn't in fact talking about taxpayers' dollars. He was talking about political party funds, which, as I've mentioned earlier, he shouldn't have been talking about in any event. If he wants to investigate party funds and party fundraising, as we discussed in the House the other day, he has a perfectly valid way of doing that through the Chief Electoral Officer, an officer of this Legislature.

He repeatedly refers to taxpayers' dollars. By doing so, Mr. Speaker, and knowing that he's not talking, in fact, about taxpayers' dollars – he's talking about party dollars – he is actually leaving the wrong impression with the public. He's giving the wrong idea. He's giving the public the idea that they're paying taxes to a government and that the only people who can spend taxpayers' dollars is the government with the approval of this Legislature. That, in fact, even on the basis of his question was not what he was talking about.

The hon. member should know that. He has a duty to be factual in the basis of his questions. He has a duty to make sure under this rule that the facts may be set out provided that the member makes himself responsible for their accuracy. I would suggest that we have seen that rule violated time after time after time, and in this particular situation it's particularly egregious.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry. Government House Leader, could you give me the page number for Erskine May again?

Mr. Hancock: Page 297.

Ms Blakeman: What edition are you looking at?

Mr. Hancock: The 22nd.

Ms Blakeman: Oh. I've got the 23rd. Okay. Mine is showing "extraordinary adjournments," which probably isn't what you're trying to tell me. I'm sorry. I'm at a loss as to actually responding to what you have there. I have a newer version than you do.

I think this is a really interesting point, Mr. Speaker, because we have had a number of exchanges and understandings or misunderstandings on language around the money that is donated to political parties by Albertans; therefore, those Albertans are eligible for and, one assumes, receive a tax receipt as a result. Depending on the amount of money that is donated, that individual would receive a tax receipt in which they are not taxed on a specific portion of that money. For example, if they are under the allocation of the 75 per cent tax receipt, if they donated $100, then they would not be taxed on $75 of the $100.

Now, that revenue that would have come to government to spend on government programs is no longer going to do that. It stays with the individual. As a result, citizens have lost that money from going into programs. So it's forgone revenue; it's forgone money. That tax-receipted money is forgone revenue into government coffers and, therefore, not available to citizens. But that money donated is going into party business, so they are intrinsically attached. It's very difficult to pull this out without a long-winded explanation, a question which, of course, the Speaker would never allow. So the shorthand that has been adopted is "taxpayers' money."

Now, I can certainly advise the Leader of the Official Opposition and I will undertake to advise the Leader of the Official Opposition that using the phrase "taxpayers' money" is confusing, and we should seek another brief choice of words that would convey the longer description that I have given as to exactly what this money is. It is money that would have come to government coffers but for being donated to political parties. Therefore, because it's forgone revenue, as the Auditor General has told us many times, there should be an evaluation of whether that forgone revenue achieved its purpose. That is the transparency that we seek. Did it achieve its purpose? That's why the questions are directed as to how the party is using that particular section of money. The rest of the money is not our interest, but that money is in particular.

I will certainly undertake to advise the leader that the phrase "taxpayers' money" is creating confusion and that he should avoid it in the future. We will seek another descriptive term to describe that particular exchange of financial interests.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, your House leader has spoken.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, and I have something to add on this matter, Mr. Speaker, as well.

The Speaker: Citation, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, certainly. After hearing from the hon. Government House Leader and his concerns around 504 . . .

The Speaker: Page 504 of what document, please?

Mr. MacDonald: House of Commons Procedure and Practice, sir.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Okay. Now, when we look at the annual financial statement under the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act for the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta, you will find a lot of financial details but none clearly outlining what the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was looking for. But if you flip over to the second page – and this is done on an annual basis. I have the last five or six years of the Progressive Conservative Party's annual financial statements. You will see where the documents to be attached to this financial statement include the Auditor's report, which is required by the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, copies of all official receipts issued for the calendar year. That's where this matter of tax dollars or tax credits certainly comes into play with official receipts because that is what the tax credit is based on. The tax credit is significant. It could be up to $5 million in taxes that is not collected as a result of this tax receipt, the issuance of an official tax receipt.

Now, there's a reconciliation of official receipts here, a list of contributors over $375, detailed lists of transfers received and transfers paid. There's a lot of information provided here, and there's a lot of information that supports the idea that we're getting less tax dollars because of these official receipts and these contributions made. So I really don't think there is an issue here.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, whenever we look at the private disclosure statements that were discussed in the hon. leader's question, as I heard it, certainly there is direct reference made to the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta leader's expense reimbursement and the benefit plan trust.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you very much for that illusive explanation. When I asked the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar what citation, he said page 504. I read page 502 and it says, "Furthermore, a question should not . . ." Then 504 says: ". . . concern internal party matters, or party or election expenses." So I have no idea what the citation has to do with what has just been stated.

The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

3:10

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really quite a simple matter we're dealing with here, and the hon. House leader, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, zeroed right in on it. There is not a single dime of taxpayers' money in the party coffers. Those donations come from individuals. Now, if they want to argue that we shouldn't provide tax credits, that's another argument. The fact of the matter is that there are no taxpayer dollars within the party coffers.

Taxpayer dollars arrive in the government's general revenue fund, and they are spent in accordance with approval of this Legislature and accounted for in the annual reports and audits by the Auditor General. You will notice that not one line of our annual report or of the Auditor General's report refers to anything about party expenditures because there is a very clear separation between party funds and taxpayer dollars. That is the very point of order that the hon. House leader brought up, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Well, first of all, Government House Leader, you intertwine point of order 1 with point of order 3, which we haven't heard from. Can I assume that both are one and same?

Mr. Hancock: Sure. Why not?

The Speaker: For the sake of brevity and the sake of dealing with this matter, they're both the same.

Mr. Hancock: Well, the second one, Mr. Speaker, was to do with PC Party matters, but you've ruled on that over and over again.

The Speaker: Okay. Point of order 3 doesn't exist, so we're going to deal with point of order 1. We've heard from several members, including the Opposition House Leader, who basically said that there's need for some review of the appropriate terms or words or usage, which seems to be the major concern in the item raised by the Government House Leader.

Look. Clarification is an important thing. It would just really be wonderful, though, if we'd ever get back to a question period where we actually deal with policy. That would be just a wonderful approach, that we would deal with policy. Anyway. Okay. That one's dealt with.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During question period in response to a question the Deputy Premier referred to questions of expenses of other party leaders. The question was in reference to suggestions made by the Leader of the Official Opposition that the Premier had received payments from the Progressive Conservative Party through a third organization.

The Deputy Premier – and I don't have the Blues, but my recollection is that he. . .

The Speaker: I'll help you, hon. member, if you sit down. Then I'll help you.

Mr. Mason: Okay.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier said something about somebody else, and then he said: "I note that even members' disclosure statements for the hon. leader of the fourth party, the NDP, has made disclosure in which his party reimburses him for expenses, a perfectly legitimate thing to do." At that point in time the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood rose. I presume it has to do with that.

Mr. Mason: Well, then, Mr. Speaker, I don't think I have a point of order because what I thought I heard – and I appreciate your doing that – was that I was getting payments in the same way that the Premier was getting payments, and that is like a salary, which is absolutely untrue. Any expenses that I claim are extremely modest and extremely intermittent. I just want to set the record straight.

I misheard the hon. member, and I raised a point of order inappropriately. I'll apologize and sit down.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, just for clarity for the House, the point that I was making was exactly that. The leader of the New Democratic Party receives reimbursement for expenses from his party, his association, which he rightfully and legitimately – and good on him for doing it – puts in his disclosure statement the same way that our leader does. That's what I was suggesting. It is the same, and that's what I was saying. Well done.

The Speaker: Okay. So that's clear, too, now. Everybody is cool? What an adolescent expression that is. Everybody is happy? Okay.

Now, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, your purported point of privilege, which all members should pay careful attention to.

Privilege Late-evening Sitings

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. Pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) this morning I provided written notice to the Speaker of my intention to raise a matter of privilege in this Assembly today. In my view, the government is interfering with the ability of members of the Assembly to fulfill their duties by continuing the daily sessions well into the night and well past the traditional hours of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it's the earliest opportunity for me to make a motion of privilege on this matter. This is a question of judgment. Perhaps on the first day we could have assumed that the government was going to continue the process of driving its legislative agenda late into the evening at the expense of the members of the Assembly. But in my judgment, the completion of two weeks of this Assembly, last night being the fifth night that we proceeded past midnight or close to midnight in the agenda, at the beginning of the session was the point at which I felt that I needed to stand up and raise the question of whether or not the government's actions are in fact interfering with members of this Assembly's ability to do their job.

Mr. Speaker, although Government Motion 26, which allows evening sittings, was adopted on November 22, it is the consistency with which the government has adjourned the House late in a sitting of short duration that is the basis of my argument.

Maingot at page 13 states that if someone improperly interferes with the parliamentary work of a Member of Parliament – i.e. any of the Member's activities that have a connection with a proceeding in Parliament – in such a case that is a matter involving parliamentary privilege.

Beauchesne's 92, on page 25, makes the same point.

Mr. Speaker, this is clearly a matter related to the parliamentary work of members of this House, and I believe it is a matter which constitutes improper interference. I believe that the late adjournments we have seen in this session are extraordinary and constitute improper interference with the ability of members of this House to carry out their duties. In the past we have seen the government bring forward a motion for evening sittings towards the end of a sitting. That is normal, and that is not the question that I'm referring to. In this fall sitting notice of such motion was placed on the Order Paper the first day following the long November break, and Government Motion 26 was moved and adopted on the second day, November 22.

Mr. Speaker, in and of itself the motion for evening sittings is not extraordinary. However, it is the use that the government has made of that motion since it was passed that is extraordinary. What we usually see with evening sittings is the House sitting until 10 p.m. or maybe a little bit later. Later adjournment times have in the past only been used by the government in response to opposition tactics to lengthen debates such as filibustering. This is quite different. This is the government introducing this at the beginning and continuing the practice even though normal debate and progress were being made with respect to the bills.

Mr. Speaker, this fall we've seen the consistent use of very late adjournment times, the effect of which is to push the government's legislative agenda through in a very short time. This has a number of effects. It has some impacts with respect to the ability to do our job in that you have a compressed sitting, first of all, which means fewer question periods and fewer opportunities to hold the government to account. It means that opposition members are prevented from properly researching and discussing with constituents and other citizens the impact of the bills that they are expected to debate in this House. It means that the quality of the debate, therefore, is substantially lowered. It means that small caucuses become overstretched and are unable to respond as well as they should to the debate on the government's legislative agenda.

The debate becomes compressed, and it reduces the ability of the citizens of this province to accurately understand what is happening in their Legislature. Their ability to learn about the bills that are put forward is constrained, and this hampers the ability of the opposition to consider all points of view on the proposed legislation.

Mr. Speaker, we've also seen the government bring forward a number of amendments to its own bills, which indicates that they have not had sufficient time to ensure that their proposed legislation is well thought out.

3:20

Mr. Speaker, I know that the government is going to say: the opposition wanted the fall session, demanded the fall session, and now they don't want to do the work. I want to strongly suggest that it was this government's initial intention to cancel the fall session altogether, and until it was brought to their attention by yourself that the Legislature had already passed a motion setting the date for its return, they were prepared to do that.

It was the government's decision to meet for the first two days and then adjourn for nearly a month in order to return with a number of bills. It is the government's decision to withdraw the legislation that could have been considered by this Assembly during that time, including the Education Act and a number of private member bills, including Bill 208, which I would have loved very much to debate. That's my bill with respect to public health care in the province.

The government had options, and the government made clear decisions with respect to how it wanted this fall session to proceed. In the end they chose a lengthy adjournment, leaving very short time in order to debate the bills. They chose the bills that would be brought forward, and they determined the amount of time that would be available in order to consider those bills.

Those are all decisions made by the government. In no way does that obligate, in my view, the opposition to work relentlessly overtime hours in order to accommodate that to the point that members become tired, exhausted. In fact, I would submit that members often late at night considering these bills are impaired in their ability to function as a Legislature. I've seen it, Mr. Speaker. I have seen the results of these long hours on the debate: members sleeping and members getting involved in acrimonious discussions that aren't very productive and that don't further the public interest.

Mr. Speaker, the government has made a great deal of its legislation with respect to impairment of drivers who have blood-alcohol content of .05 to .08, and that is a legitimate subject of debate. Nevertheless, what we do in this House is consider legislation that affects millions of Albertans. The things that we do in this place affect how much people pay for electricity, how much they pay for tuition. It affects what they have to pay for insurance. It affects the quality of their health care system. It affects the quality of their schools for their children. It affects their ability to have representation in court. In other words, it's extremely important and affects the daily lives of millions of Albertans in many, many different ways.

For the government to expect very tired opposition members and, for that matter, very tired government members to debate key pieces of legislation for long periods of time late at night, which may impair their abilities to make those decisions, is in fact a violation, in my opinion, of the rights of the people in this Assembly, who are elected to represent their public.

This is clearly a government strategy to wear down the opposition. Repeated late evenings are leaving members of the House deprived of sleep and not doing a good job scrutinizing the legislation. The government is forcing us to debate bills – well, I can shorten it up, Mr. Speaker. I think you're sending me some signals in that regard.

The Speaker: Well, we're talking about a brief thing, really about 10 minutes, but we are a little beyond that now.

Mr. Mason: Yeah. Okay. Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll just conclude. Given the manner in which the government has been pushing its legislative agenda through the House and the effect that this has had on the ability of members to fulfill their duties, I would ask you to find that a prima facie case of breach of privilege exists. Nothing is more important. There are rules as well with respect to nothing in the standing orders or the rules of the Assembly can be considered with respect to a breach of privilege.

It's my submission, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the rules of the House that are at question in this privilege but the decisions made by the government in the use of those rules that have in fact prevented members of this Assembly from doing a proper job on behalf of the people who elected them, and therefore a prima facie case of privilege exists.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Blakeman: I'd like to support the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood's privilege motion. I'll just give a few examples of why I think his bringing this privilege motion forward is important.

I like to do a good job. That's important to me. Whether other people know I've done a good job or not is less important, but I like to be prepared and on top of my material and be aware of what others have said in the House and not repeat questions that have already been asked and answered. That's why I read Hansard, so that I don't do that. I haven't been able to do that this entire session. I caused the Minister of Justice's staff to have to give me an additional briefing because I raised so many questions in debate. Although a technical briefing had been given to our research staff, they had not had the time to be able to give that briefing to the critic, and he had not been able to brief the rest of us. So we all came in here essentially blind even though there had been an attempt to have us at least be aware.

Mr. Speaker, I'm still going to do the job of analyzing exactly what's being proposed and comparing the bill with the legislation as well as looking at what the government has told us. That's my job, and I was not able to do that in this sitting. We have sat five nights and now, likely, more nights next week, most times for a six-hour time span, which is the equivalent of two afternoon sittings. We've essentially, by sitting in the nights, put in an extra three weeks of time, which we should have just done during the day because there are only so many hours in a day, and we are all expected to keep up our constituency work. I, particularly when I'm in the House, like to be able to take the time to get feedback from my constituents. I was able to do it with only one bill this time. I haven't been able to do a feedback loop on the other bills that are in front of us.

We have all been in a position in the opposition of having to prioritize how our time is spent and, as a result, have had to edit out some of the jobs that we normally would have done while we were in session: invited more people into the gallery, for example, done more private members' statements, raised additional points during debate. I, too, have noticed that this particular government's strategy at this time has had an effect on my ability to both complete work as a member of the opposition and also to do a good job doing that work. I resent that, frankly. I like to do a good job, and I don't like being put in the position of not being able to do that. So I will support the point of privilege that has been raised.

The Speaker: Are there other members that wish to participate briefly on this subject?

Mr. Chase: Yes. Extremely briefly, Mr. Speaker. The effect is not only on Members of this Legislative Assembly. There's a ripple effect. It affects our researchers, it affects our support staff, and it affects our families. It's not fair.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be very brief. I think that one of the things that happens when we are here at 12:30 or 1 o'clock in the morning discussing bills – serious bills like Bill 26, serious bills like Bill 25, some of those kinds of initiatives which clearly have engaged the interest and the intellectual investment of Albertans – and when we're debating at that time is that it's not only a question of how tired we are, which other members have identified impinges on our ability to do our best job, or what it does to the ability of Albertans to engage, but ultimately, to me, it appears as though it's almost a sense of unprofessionalism, that we deal with issues that are so important so late.

3:30

I think that it reflects very poorly on the import of the work that we do here in this Assembly. I think that in sending a message to Albertans that that's what we think about the Assembly, that it's an inconvenient impediment for government to get through as quickly as possible, we undermine this institution to Albertans and, in so doing, therefore interfere with our ability as individual members to do our job the best way we can. So I think that's an additional element that I would like to have considered.

As well, the federal House of Commons often sits well into December. The proposal was given very early on that we just begin this process by going well into December and that we could have then engaged in normal hours and that would have ensured quality of debate. So it's not one of these things that was unavoidable.

Having been here myself and having observed members on both sides of the House struggling to focus, to stay awake, to make the best arguments possible: it's a problem. Many members of this Assembly have young families, have children, and quite frankly having to engage in these hours also interferes with our ability to meet our obligations at home and to meet our obligations to the people of this province and to our colleagues in this Assembly.

For all those reasons, I think the hours that have been insisted upon by the majority members of this Assembly have interfered collectively with all of our abilities to function as well as we can as members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, briefly please, and then Calgary-Currie, and then we're going to ask the Government House Leader for a comment on this, and then we're going to have to move forward.

Mr. Anderson: Very good, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to stand and on behalf of the Wildrose caucus just quickly say that we support this motion brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. We feel very strongly that one of the – you know, I have noticed that the Government House Leader from time to time will express frustration that we take so long in going through some of the amendments. Two days ago, when we were looking over the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, there was a lot of running around chaotically, and unfortunately I feel kind of guilty in that we were putting so much tremendous pressure on counsel to come up with amendments and subamendments and so forth essentially on a minute-to-minute basis as things were changing so fast.

Again, it is so difficult to adequately prepare when we have stuffed so many bills into such a constrained period of time. Although I do understand that the government wants to get things done and get on with things – and I respect that – as an opposition we need to have the time to prepare to facilitate an actual constructive discussion rather than being forced into a situation where we're, you know, into the night and trying desperately to figure out not only what's in these bills but to get feedback from constituents and do a thousand other things in what should have clearly been a three-month process, not a three-week process.

So on behalf of the Wildrose caucus I certainly would like to support this member's motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, will be supporting the motion for privilege . . .

The Speaker: It's not a motion. It's a statement on privilege. Go ahead.

Mr. Taylor: . . . put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Frankly, I agree with everything that the speakers thus far on this point of privilege have had to say, and I want to add this. Whether by design or by default – and I certainly would hope that it's by default – the effect of having these repeatedly very long, late-into-the-night sittings to deal with legislation that may be rushed to begin with, that may be not properly thought through on that side of the House, as we're seeing some evidence of by virtue of amendments that correct typos in the original bills and things like that, has the effect of holding the people we serve, the people of Alberta, to contempt.

This is important work that we do in here. There are important roles for everyone in this House. There is an important role for the opposition to play and an important function for the opposition to fulfill in holding the government to account, not just so that the opposition can try and make the government's lives miserable but so that we can, working together, produce better laws on the floor of this Assembly on behalf of the people of Alberta.

It takes time to prepare things properly. We are not taking the proper time. We are putting ourselves under too much stress, and we are going to screw this up monumentally, Mr. Speaker, if we don't change our ways.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Members of this House on all sides have put in yeoman service over the last two weeks. In fact, I would suggest they've put in yeoman service for much longer than the two weeks because the work of the House depends on work being done before we get here, and it certainly depends on us being able to consult our constituents. Some of us have additional roles and obligations, whether it's as an opposition House leader or a member of cabinet, that require additional hours.

We get paid at a level of senior executives. Sometimes we wonder if we're getting paid an appropriate amount on a per-hour basis. Nonetheless, that's the nature of the job, and I would suggest to you that senior executives work hard. When people complain about executive compensation, often they have no idea of the level of responsibility or the time that people put into their jobs. Anybody who's earning more than a hundred thousand dollars a year, if they think they're going to work a 40-hour workweek – I haven't met one yet. When you're earning over a hundred thousand dollars a year, you're working long hours.

When I was in the private sector, I worked long hours, not every day of the year but when the job needed to be done, I needed to be there, and the people who worked with me needed to be there. When I was closing a corporate deal of large magnitude, we worked to get it done. We did the work in the period of time it needed to be done, and sometimes it was two weeks or three weeks of long hours; sometimes it was well into the night. That was what we did because that was the job, and we were being paid well to do the job.

Members on this side of the House have families. I know personally: my wife has a career, and it's not convenient for her when I come home late at night and leave early in the morning because it's disruptive to her, but she understands that that's the nature of my job. It doesn't happen every day. She'd like it to happen less, but that's the nature of the job.

Members opposite complain about jamming substantive business into a short session. It was only a month and a half ago when members opposite were concerned that there wasn't going to be a fall session, and they were calling on the Premier to have a fall session. The Premier had indicated that maybe we wouldn't have a fall session. The House could have been prorogued, and we could have gone without a fall session. That was an option.

I believe I'm quoting, well, not quoting but paraphrasing perhaps, the hon. member who raised this point of privilege that it was necessary to have the government come to the Legislature to deal with issues on education funding, the judicial inquiry, and fixed election dates. We have seven bills before us. One of them is supplementary estimates, and a substantial portion of the supplementary estimates is education funding, exactly what the hon. member wanted to have this fall in the House. He got what he wanted.

He wanted a judicial inquiry. The Health Quality Council of Alberta Act sets the framework for the appropriate authorities for the Health Quality Council to do its work independently and to hold a public inquiry with appropriate parameters with respect to the protection of patient information, exactly what the hon. member wanted debated in this House. He wants a different type of inquiry, but he wanted a judicial inquiry.

Fixed election dates. There's a bill before the House that deals with the issue of when we should hold elections. It's not a big bill, Mr. Speaker. It's a one-page bill. It deals with a very simple, straightforward issue: fixed election dates. It's not hard to comprehend. It's not hard to research. It's not hard to understand. In fact, the hon. member for years has been putting forward debate on this issue. He needs very little, I would suggest, preparation and very little discussion. It's a matter of putting the opinion on the table. It's not a matter of putting the opinion on the table over and over and over again. It's a matter of putting the opinion on the table.

Now, it's not up to me to determine how the opposition wishes to debate any particular bill, but I can say that if one goes and reads Hansard, the length of the debate could be shortened if it wasn't so repetitive. In fact, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has made almost the identical statements with respect to matters which aren't actually even a part of the Health Quality Council act at least three times that I can think of.

3:40

Mr. Speaker, I can say that because I've been here for virtually all of the hours, not quite all of the hours but virtually all of the hours, that the House has been in session this fall, and I will be here for the rest of them. I'm doing my job. I'm also doing my job as Minister of Human Services, and I'm also doing my job as a member of Agenda and Priorities, and I'm also doing my job as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. These are important jobs, and I can do them, and I can do them well. Sometimes it's tough, and sometimes we do it with a little bit less sleep than one might like to have, but we can do it. We're doing it this fall because it's important work, and we're doing it this fall because members of the opposition believed that it was important that we be here in the Legislature doing these jobs.

Seven bills, Mr. Speaker. Seven very straightforward, relatively simple bills. Important, straightforward, but simple. The first bill is the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011. I don't think I need to go into that too much. It has two points – I'll wrap it up very quickly – two points in the appropriations bill that really were the bulk of the spending: Slave Lake, education funding. The opposition wanted to be here to talk about education funding, and they can get back to it in about five minutes or less, depending on how long I continue, which will be short, and on how long you continue.

The second bill is fixed election dates. It's about a two-line bill, and it's very easy to understand. It's a very simple concept. It doesn't take much work.

The third bill, the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, I've dealt with already. There are really two main portions to it: improving the authorities and the powers and the independence of the Health Quality Council and giving it the powers of a public inquiry with some mandate around how they keep important information that should not be made public separate so that they can hear from a full variety of witnesses. I won't debate that one.

The Child and Youth Advocate Act, really, has two simple concepts in it. There are actually five concepts in it, but they're not hard to comprehend. Full briefings were provided.

The Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, again, is not hard to comprehend. We've dealt with over and over and over again exactly the same concept: whether there should be the sanctions that we're proposing with respect to over .05 instead of just the criminal sanctions at over .08. Most of the debate, I would suggest, has centred around whether or not there should be more enforcement of the .08 and not on the tenets of the bill.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if you were to read the bills, which I'm sure you have, you'd agree with me that there are seven bills, very simple concepts, very substantively important, not hard to comprehend, full briefings to the opposition. We proposed to proceed with the break, which was necessary to prepare these bills, because the new Premier wanted to put forward the new agenda. It takes time to develop the bills and to draft them, so there was a need to start later than normal. But there was a full signalling as fast as possible about what was going to be the subject of the session, full briefings on the subject of the session. Very simple concepts and, yes, some night sittings, which go until midnight or a little bit later.

It's not usual to have five night sittings or six night sittings, but we have had lots of night sittings in the 14 and some years that I've been in this Legislature. Some of them have gone all night. Sometimes we've had several nights. We used to sit as a matter of routine during the evening, and we used to go quite late as part of those sittings. In fact, it was not unusual to adjourn at or around 12 o'clock.

Mr. Speaker, I understand the concern the opposition members have. Certainly, in terms of quality of life we'd all like to have evenings where we could go home to our families. We would all like to have an easier opportunity to do the job. We'd all like more resources, quite frankly. I wouldn't mind having about double the resources I've got to be able to do all the jobs that I've got to do.

The fact of the matter is that we've got a tough job. We asked for the job, and we're here doing the job, and it's what the public expects us to do. It's not unusual for senior executives, people who are paid at the senior executive level, to work hard from time to time and to put in long hours to get the job done.

The Speaker: I've asked the question previously about who wanted to participate.

Hon. members, I am prepared to rule on the purported question of privilege brought by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Notice of this particular question of privilege application was received in my office at 11:07 this morning, so the requirements of Standing Order 15(2) have been met.

As the chair understands the submissions made by the member and others, he and they are arguing that his and their ability to perform their duties as members has been hindered by the late-night sittings of the Assembly. I must state that the argument put forward by the member is rather unique as I do not recall hearing a similar question of privilege in the 32 years that I've served in this Assembly as a member. I found it of considerable interest when it arrived on my desk this morning.

On the issue raised by the member, the chair agrees that there have been evening sittings of the Assembly. For instance, the Votes and Proceedings for yesterday, November 30, 2011, indicated that the Assembly adjourned at 11:52 p.m., and I've noted the times of adjournment on the other previous four occasions during this fall sitting.

Hon. members, Standing Order 10 in your Standing Orders is clear. "Every Member is bound to attend the service of the Assembly..." but there are still some other words as well, though. It says, "...unless notification has been given to the Speaker in accordance with the rules of the Assembly." We are bound to be here by our own rules. The Canadian House of Commons has a similar standing order as discussed in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, 2nd edition, page 213.

Under our Standing Order 3 sittings of the Assembly conclude at 6 p.m. Monday to Wednesday and at 4:30 p.m. on Thursday. The standing orders provide for the possibility of a government motion for meetings of the Assembly on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings. Some discussion has occurred in recent years about evening sittings, what length they might take and how frequent they might be. The government brought forward Government Motion 26, which provided for evening sittings on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Wednesdays for the remainder of the fall sitting. The motion was approved by this Assembly on November 22, 2011. Accordingly, the Assembly passed a motion to sit three evenings a week for the remainder of the fall sitting as permitted by the standing order.

In order to find a prima facie question of privilege, the chair would have to find that the decision of the Assembly to have night sittings was somehow a violation of the member's rights and immunities. The chair cannot imagine how sittings of the Assembly could be found to violate a member's rights. In doing so, the chair would have to find that Government Motion 26 and perhaps the standing order somehow violated the member's privileges as they allow for evening sittings.

I wish to acknowledge, however, that an opportunity was given to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and other members to express their views and, perhaps, some frustration with respect to the hours currently under way in this fall sitting. But there is no prima facie question of privilege. That, in essence, concludes the matter.

I would like to add several additional statements. Many other parliaments count evening sittings as separate days of sitting. So when we say that we sit 70 days a year but sit 30 evenings per year as well, in their jurisdiction, their nomenclature, that would be 100 days a year. We sell ourselves short in this Assembly by counting an afternoon sitting and an evening sitting as only one, and we must be very, very careful with that definition when members meet with parliamentarians from other jurisdictions in the country of Canada.

Number two. I listened very attentively to what the members were saying here in this discussion. I know that I've had many, many other discussions with other members. I actually implore you, before we return in the spring, to basically take a good look at this question because the question of fatigue is an important one. The question of clarity of mind is an important one. The question of family is an important one. The question of travel is an important one.

We all know, within all of the groups that members may belong to, that there are some who say: "Well, listen. If we could be here a few days shorter, that's better, so can't we just sit a few hours longer?" But I would suspect that most would conclude that the brain probably functions best earlier in the day rather than later in the day. I'm just guessing out loud on this one. I can't quantifiably say that for certain, but I would suspect that the more time there is to think and to read and to be prepared, the better off we all are as legislators in the province of Alberta.

The matter is now concluded.

3:50

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 27

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 27 for third reading.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on third reading of Bill 27.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, my...

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Hon. member, could I just, please, beg your indulgence?

Dr. Taft: Sure.

The Speaker: One hon. member has had a number of guests here for a period of time while we've dealt with this other matter. Could we revert briefly to the Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you a gentleman who has kept us safe in this building for many, many years in the past, who has now retired and who resides in the beautiful constituency of Edmonton-Manning, just a short walk away from where a former Premier of this province, Ernest Manning, used to live. His name is Nick Kutash. He is accompanied by his wife, Genevieve, and I'm going to assume that it's his two grandsons, Ryley and Brody. I'd ask them to rise and receive a very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me also a great honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members and all Albertans a great friend of mine, Dr. Cliff Soper. Dr. Soper is the former dean of health sciences at Red Deer College. He is a councillor for the Lacombe county. He was a colleague of mine for many years there and encouraged me to run for MLA at some time. He's currently the president of the Lacombe-Ponoka PC Association. He's here visiting today and watching us do the wonderful work of government. I'd like him to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 27

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply)

Act, 2011 (No. 2)

(continued)

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I just need to clarify. Do I have 10 minutes or 15 at this point?

The Speaker: Under our rules you have up to 20 minutes according to Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you.

I heard a groan from the government members, so I'll try not to take full advantage of that time, but I do want to speak. I do need to get some comments on record.

Actually, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker, I don't want to belabour the previous discussion that occurred on the point of privilege, but one of the challenges I've had in addressing the issues around this bill are the time constraints. In particular, when we have all of this legislation, all of the background and so on, dumped on us at once, it's easy for important details to get lost. A particular detail in this bill came to my attention today. I wish it had come to my attention in second reading because I would have brought forward an amendment, but there was just simply too big a rush with all the bills coming forward.

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

The particular detail I'm referring to – and I would invite the minister of advanced education to follow along with my comments – is on page 26 of the supplementary supply estimates 2011-12. This is, I think, the attached schedule. On page 26 it provides some detail for the amounts we're voting on today. This one in particular is for Culture and Community Services. I need to raise a concern about a specific amount of money in here for a project that is actually going into my constituency, Mr. Speaker, and which causes me some torn feelings. That project is the GO Community Centre.

In this allotment today there is a further $3.295 million being voted on for the GO Community Centre. Certainly, the GO Community Centre provides wonderful opportunities for basket ball players and volleyball players and the Ortona Gymnastics Club and various others to undertake their activities. I'm a big fan of physical activity and sports and so on, but this particular project raises some serious questions, Mr. Speaker, and I need to get those on the record because we're today voting over $3 million for this.

I will start by just noting that my understanding from documents and comments I have seen is that the GO Centre was originally envisioned to go into the Mill Woods area of Edmonton – the Deputy Speaker may well be aware of that – and that there were particular challenges around the GO Centre meeting some of the zoning and design requirements under municipal government. Somebody got the bright idea that we could put it on the south campus of the university. The south campus is exempt from any of those limits, so there is no requirement around parking or design or other issues. [interjections] I hope the ministers or government members who are objecting feel free to speak up later.

In any case, I do have documentation that this was originally intended for Mill Woods, and then it was suddenly plopped down into the south campus. Whatever the reasons for that were, the fact of the matter is that under legislation the University of Alberta, unlike any other postsecondary institution in central or northern Alberta, is exempt from any zoning controls under the Municipal Government Act: parking, traffic, design, anything like that. That has created problems because the entire consultation process around the GO Centre development, which is a massive development – I think people need to understand that the GO Centre is, I think, about three times the size of the Butterdome on the U of A main campus. It was put into my constituency without any due respect or due consultation with my constituents.

So what's happened is that it opened this fall, September, to big fanfare, and suddenly the neighbours in one of my neighbourhoods, Lendrum, are waking up to significantly increased traffic, parking and congestion issues, and everything that's related to that. They had no reasonable opportunity for any input into that. That raises tough questions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to draw particular attention to a document that, it may well be, very few members of this Assembly have seen. This is the memorandum of understanding and intent between GO Community Centre and the governors of the University of Alberta dated February 11, 2008. This was obtained through a FOIP request. I would like to draw attention to article 3, guiding principles, paragraph 3.01(c)(ii). I would hope the ministers are paying attention to this. This memorandum of agreement says

- (c) The business case for the [GO Community Centre] as well as the final design and site layout for the [GO Community Centre] shall . . .

And I quote exactly here, Mr. Speaker.

- (ii) have the broad support of the neighbouring community (with whom close collaboration must be established throughout the design and development phase).

This is the legally binding memorandum of understanding between the GO Community Centre and the governors of the University of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you unequivocally and I tell the government members, particularly the Edmonton caucus, that the residents of the neighbourhoods living around south campus feel, and I think they are fully justified, that that requirement was utterly ignored, that in fact there was no meaningful effort put in by either the GO Community Centre or the University of Alberta to fulfill that requirement. And sadly for my constituents – they've sought legal advice on this – because they are not signatories to this agreement, even though their interests are at stake, they have no say. So the university can sign a nice piece of paper with wonderful intentions, but if they don't enforce it, my constituents are on the hook, and they do feel on the hook.

4:00

The problem here in the bigger picture is that it has poisoned relations between the south campus neighbourhoods and the university. I also think it reflects very poorly on both parties that they would sign an agreement like this – this is a very extensive, multimillion-dollar agreement, which is the basis for the funding we're discussing today – and then ignore one of the fundamental principles in that agreement.

This agreement also goes on to raise other issues which I think are important to get on the record here. Section 2.02, actually, of the June 28, 2010, GO Centre venture agreement obligates the university to provide "sufficient parking and parking infrastructure in relative proximity to the GO Centre to accommodate the needs of users of the GO Centre."

Now, I want to refer you to another document here, Mr. Speaker, and I refer all members to this. This is a University of Alberta commentary, Friday, February 11, 2011, written by the vice-president of facilities and operations. Here's what he says: "While we [the university] do not currently control the decisions around the capital project, including final design and financial decisions, we continue to provide input and suggestions." What we have here – in fact, this same document refers to the GO Centre as a private initiative and so on – is the university agreeing to provide sufficient parking and parking infrastructure near the GO Centre to meet the needs of the GO Centre when the GO Centre isn't even a university project. The university doesn't own the GO Centre. I have concerns with that.

It goes on to say in section 2.03 of the GO Centre venture agreement, June 28, 2010: "In addition, the University shall on an ongoing basis during the Term [of eight years] . . . provide free parking in relative proximity to the GO Centre for users of the GO Centre."

Then it goes on, and this is where I think it goes even further astray. Why are we spending millions of dollars on beach volleyball? Well, you may wonder, Mr. Speaker. Section 10.01 of this same venture agreement – I hope the minister is listening here, Mr. Minister – is that "the University agrees that it will use commercially reasonable efforts respecting the setting aside of land in relative proximity to the GO Centre Building to accommodate sixteen (16) beach volleyball courts." Now, we have a multimillion-dollar agreement involving a university that's committing the university to use commercially reasonable efforts to establish 16 beach volleyball courts. Are we losing focus here, folks? Why is a university doing that? Why are we as a Legislature putting tens of millions of dollars into this kind of a facility?

Then it goes on. It addresses alcohol sales, revenue related to alcohol sales at events involving varsity sports, and it goes on and on for pages.

I have questions. I wish we'd had time to debate those questions. Sadly, this memorandum of understanding and the GO Centre venture agreement were not made public, to my knowledge, until they were uncovered through a FOIP request.

I also feel like we should set higher standards for the kinds of facilities we're financing. One of the things I have heard repeatedly from my constituents and from urban planners and from architects and engineers is that the GO Centre as a structure is a disappointment, to put it mildly. I've heard some rather over-the-top descriptions of it from my constituents, Mr. Speaker, but I think anybody looking at it is going to understand that it's essentially a big-box steel warehouse building with massive blank walls. I mean, we're talking about blank walls that are two or three storeys high, stretching for 50, 60, 70 metres. That's not good design. We need to aim higher than that. Then this facility is surrounded by acres of asphalt paving.

I won't name names in here, but I will tell you that a very prominent member of the Edmonton community has expressed concern that the south campus, when it's going in this direction, is in danger of becoming the South Edmonton Common of recreation facilities because in addition to the GO Centre we have the university wanting twin arenas, a new field house, three parkades, and so on. Essentially, what we're going to get are thousands and thousands of cars a day descending on the south campus, parking there, using these faceless facilities, and then driving away, generating significant traffic and congestion and, I think, most sadly and most disturbingly, Mr. Speaker, falling short of what we could achieve.

This is maybe where I'd like to aim for this Assembly. We need to understand that the south campus lands, over 600 acres of greenfield lands, are a breathtaking opportunity for this city and this university and this province to do something extraordinary. I've worked very hard with my constituents so that they don't get into a NIMBY mentality of just leaving it as a farmer's field. This was the university farm. They understand that having 600 acres of greenfield land already served by an LRT, in the centre of a city, adjacent to mature neighbourhoods does provide an opportunity for extraordinary achievement here, and building huge steel warehouse structures surrounded by asphalt parking lots is not good enough.

If we want the U of A to be a top 20 university – I do – then let's have a top 20 south campus. Let's follow the lead of the city of Edmonton, Mr. Speaker, and invite a competition of the world's greatest urban planners to look at the south campus lands and come forward with their ideas and do something extraordinary because we could – we could – elevate this university and this city and this province to something extraordinary. Spending $3.29 million further on this facility – I mean, we have no choice. But what I would challenge this government to do now is to draw the line. Don't do this again. Get the university administrators to think bigger, think better.

I'm concerned, frankly, from the information I've heard directly from the GO Centre builders, that it doesn't even meet LEED standards. So here we have the U of A partnering with the Helmholtz Institute in Germany, with various other international organizations who are leading the world in environmental sustainability, and we're putting up buildings that don't meet LEED standards.

I'm also concerned about the ongoing financial viability of this facility. The GO Centre hasn't been open three months, and they're already applying for CFEP funding. In fact, I received a copy of the application before it even opened. How is this thing going to sustain itself? And if it doesn't, where does it end up? It ends up in the control of the university. I'm not convinced that there's wise long-term planning here.

Mr. Speaker, I needed to get those comments on the record. I'm sure I'll hear static from the operators of the GO Centre and from university administrators, but my challenge to them and to all of us is to aim higher. Do something extraordinary here. Hold a global competition just like the city of Edmonton did. Bring in the world's best designers, and let's do something great.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, there was a request to revert to Introduction of Guests by a particular member. I realize that the guests have left, but I'd ask the hon. minister if he wants to just read them into the record with the permission of the Assembly.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

Mr. Oberle: Well, thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I'd be very honoured to do that. Present in the gallery just moments ago were some constituents of mine: Real Arsenault, who is general manager of Manning Diversified Forest Products, and his lovely wife, Kim. Kim, of course, is the brains behind the wildly successful cancer fundraiser that was held in Manning the other night. If their family is anything like mine, she's also the brains behind Real, I'm sure. Accompanying them was Bambi Morton – and the same, for sure, goes there – and Lauren Mendis, who is a constituent of the hon. Minister of Energy and currently works in his office, a recent graduate of Dalhousie University. I'd like the Assembly to give them the warm traditional welcome.

4:10 Government Bills and Orders Third Reading Bill 27 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2) (continued)

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we are in third reading on Bill 27. We have a few minutes left. Are there any other speakers to this important bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had an opportunity to speak to this to some extent in Committee of Supply, but there were some additional points that occurred to me for further consideration after that time. I thought today might be an opportunity to raise some of those concerns or questions in the ever-so-naïve hope that someone might respond to the questions with some answers. Nonetheless, I'll just go through some of the issues that we had with respect to what was identified with respect to supplementary supply.

I note that one of the additions is this $13 million to the ministry of environment, primarily for the Canada ecotrust for clean air and climate change initiative, $3.2 million of which was for operating expenses, and $9.7 million was in capital grants. No question that that little organization appears to have engaged in some useful work around doing some environmental renewable energy efforts closer to the ground, particularly some of the stuff that they've done in relation to Okotoks. I'm just wondering why it is that this federal funding initiative has triggered the need for supplementary estimates and why it is that we would not have known that this money was coming to us. What exactly is going on there?

Certainly, we have a bit of a history with this government in terms of a lack of communication between the provincial government and the federal government around dollars, the most profound and public of which was the really quite disconcerting breakdown in communications around the Royal Alberta Museum. One sometimes does wonder who's doing what in our government and in the federal government that little items like an extra $90 million were the subject of confusion. Always a concern when people are confused about those amounts of money.

One of the areas that is seeking additional money is, again, Municipal Affairs, an additional $20.2 million for affordable housing development that, I understand, is offset by a transfer from CMHC. Again, I'm sort of unclear as to how this operates within the budget, if that's sort of an additional revenue piece, too, or what exactly is going on. I'm obviously not getting the whole piece here. It does raise an interesting question, of course, on the issue of affordable housing. [interjection] One minute left? Why only one minute left?

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 64(5) requires us to call the question at 4:15 today.

Ms Notley: Well, then, I would just suggest that what we need to do is actually have this additional money going into Municipal Affairs assist the minister in finding the extra $2 million to $4 million that it would cost to ensure that the 1,300 Alberta families who are on the verge of losing their homes as a result of the end of a rent supplement program, that I believe is now the responsibility of the Minister of Municipal Affairs – rather than making misleading statements that they would be able to get in line behind a greater number of people and that somehow that answers their . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but in accordance with Standing Order 64(5) the chair is required to put the question to the House on the appropriation bill as it sits on the Order Paper for third reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that we have only 15 minutes left before the normal adjournment hour, it wouldn't be prudent to start another bill, and in light of the interests of all members to get in a little bit of extra reading time and rest, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, December 5, pursuant to a government motion which was passed earlier this week.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:16 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 4th Session (2011)

Activity to December 01, 2011

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned a chapter number until the conclusion of the fall sittings.

1 Asia Advisory Council Act (Stelmach)

First Reading -- 6 (Feb. 22 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 132-33 (Mar. 1 aft.), 189-95 (Mar. 3 aft.), 553-62 (Mar. 24 aft.), 618 (Apr. 12 aft., passed)

Committee of the Whole -- 862-73 (Apr. 26 eve., passed)

Third Reading -- 1063-69 (May 10 aft., passed on division)

Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on May 13, 2011; SA 2011 cA-44.5]

2 Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2011 (Brown)

First Reading -- 18 (Feb. 23 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 133-34 (Mar. 1 aft.), 380-82 (Mar. 15 aft., passed)

Committee of the Whole -- 408-16 (Mar. 16 aft., passed)

Third Reading -- 438-39 (Mar. 17 aft., passed)

Royal Assent -- (Mar. 18 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on proclamation; SA 2011 c4]

3 Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2011 (Rogers)

First Reading -- 18 (Feb. 23 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 134-35 (Mar. 1 aft.), 313-14 (Mar. 10 aft.), 382-83 (Mar. 15 aft., passed)

Committee of the Whole -- 416 (Mar. 16 aft., passed)

Third Reading -- 439-40 (Mar. 17 aft., passed)

Royal Assent -- (Mar. 18 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on proclamation; SA 2011 c3]

4 Securities Amendment Act, 2011 (Brown)

First Reading -- 18 (Feb. 23 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 135 (Mar. 1 aft.), 383-84 (Mar. 15 aft.), 416-17 (Mar. 16 aft.), 440-41 (Mar. 17 aft.), 618 (Apr. 12 aft., passed)

Committee of the Whole -- 858-60 (Apr. 26 aft.), 861-62 (Apr. 26 eve., passed)

Third Reading -- 947 (Apr. 27 eve., passed)

Royal Assent -- (Apr. 29 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on April 29, with exceptions; SA 2011 c7]

5 Notice to the Attorney General Act (Rogers)

First Reading -- 18-19 (Feb. 23 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 136 (Mar. 1 aft.), 618 (Apr. 12 aft., passed)

Committee of the Whole -- 797-99 (Apr. 20 eve., passed)

Third Reading -- 947 (Apr. 27 eve., passed)

Royal Assent -- (Apr. 29 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on proclamation; SA 2011 cN-6.5]

6 Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011 (Olson)

First Reading -- 19 (Feb. 23 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 136 (Mar. 1 aft.), 618 (Apr. 12 aft., passed)

Committee of the Whole -- 799-801 (Apr. 20 eve., passed)

Third Reading -- 1035 (May 9 eve., passed)

Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on proclamation; SA 2011 c14]

- 7        Corrections Amendment Act, 2011 (Oberle)
First Reading -- 73 (Feb. 28 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 137 (Mar. 1 aft.), 618 (Apr. 12 aft., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 801 (Apr. 20 eve., passed)
Third Reading -- 1035 (May 9 eve., passed)
Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on proclamation; SA 2011 c10]
- 8*       Missing Persons Act (VanderBurg)
First Reading -- 73 (Feb. 28 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 137 (Mar. 1 aft.), 618 (Apr. 12 aft., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 1024-35 (May 9 eve., passed with amendments)
Third Reading -- 1058-61 (May 10 aft., passed)
Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on proclamation; SA 2011 cM-18.5]
- 9        Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 ($) (Snelgrove)
First Reading -- 113 (Mar. 1 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 185-86 (Mar. 3 aft., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 244-47 (Mar. 8 aft.), 254-57 (Mar. 8 aft., passed)
Third Reading -- 305-08 (Mar. 10 aft., passed)
Royal Assent -- (Mar. 14 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force March 14, 2011; SA 2011 c1]
- 10       Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011 ($) (Knight)
First Reading -- 122 (Mar. 1 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 247-54 (Mar. 8 aft.), 257-58 (Mar. 8 aft.), 618 (Apr. 12 aft., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 877-85 (Apr. 26 eve.), 910-17 (Apr. 27 aft.), 919-37 (Apr. 27 eve.), 937-46 (Apr. 27 eve., passed)
Third Reading -- 1071-89 (May 10 eve., passed on division)
Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on May 13, 2011; SA 2011 c9]
- 11*      Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2011 (Prins)
First Reading -- 208 (Mar. 7 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 313 (Mar. 10 aft.), 552-53 (Mar. 24 aft.), 618-27 (Apr. 12 aft.), 661-62 (Apr. 13 aft.), 790-97 (Apr. 20 eve., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 826-27 (Apr. 21 aft.), 873-77 (Apr. 26 eve., passed with amendments)
Third Reading -- 1035-36 (May 9 eve., passed)
Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on proclamation; SA 2011 c12]
- 12       Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2011 (Dallas)
First Reading -- 208 (Mar. 7 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 364-65 (Mar. 15 aft.), 675-79 (Apr. 14 aft., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 802-04 (Apr. 20 eve., passed)
Third Reading -- 1036-38 (May 9 eve., passed)
Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on May 13, 2011; SA 2011 c8]
- 13       Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2011 ($) (Snelgrove)
First Reading -- 328 (Mar. 14 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 365-67 (Mar. 15 aft., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 403-08 (Mar. 16 aft., passed)
Third Reading -- 432-38 (Mar. 17 aft., passed)
Royal Assent -- 328 (Mar. 18 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force March 18, 2011; SA 2011; c2]
- 14       Wills and Succession Amendment Act, 2011 (Drysdale)
First Reading -- 328 (Mar. 14 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 365 (Mar. 15 aft.), 679-680 (Apr. 14 aft., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 804 (Apr. 20 eve., passed)
Third Reading -- 1038 (May 9 eve., passed)
Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on May 13, 2011; SA 2011 c16]
- 15*      Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2011 (Oberle)
First Reading -- 329 (Mar. 14 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 363-64 (Mar. 15 aft.), 680-684 (Apr. 14 aft., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 827-28 (Apr. 21 aft.), 853-58 (Apr. 26 aft.), 1013-24 (May 9 eve., passed with amendments)
Third Reading -- 1061-63 (May 10 aft., passed)
Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on proclamation; SA 2011 c15]

- 16 Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2011 (McQueen)
First Reading -- 482 (Mar. 22 aft.)
Second Reading -- 552 (Mar. 24 aft.), 820-26 (Apr. 21 aft.), 852-53 (Apr. 26 aft.), 969-70 (Apr. 28 aft.), 1009-12 (May 9 eve., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 1069-70 (May 10 aft.), 1071 (May 10 eve., passed)
Third Reading -- 1112-17 (May 11 aft., passed)
Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on May 13, 2011; SA 2011 c11]
- 17 Appropriation Act, 2011 ($) (Snelgrove)
First Reading -- 818 (Apr. 21 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 841-52 (Apr. 26 aft., passed on division)
Committee of the Whole -- 904-10 (Apr. 27 aft.), 937 (Apr. 27 eve., passed)
Third Reading -- 967-69 (Apr. 28 aft.), 970-71 (Apr. 28 aft., passed on division)
Royal Assent -- (Apr. 29 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on April 29; SA 2011 c5]
- 18 Education Act (Hancock)
First Reading -- 898 (Apr. 27 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 965-67 (Apr. 28 aft., adjourned)
- 19 Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2011 (Olson)
First Reading -- 989 (May 9 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 1053 (May 10 aft., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 1057 (May 10 aft., passed)
Third Reading -- 1117 (May 11 aft., passed)
Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on May 13, 2011; SA 2011 c13]
- 20 Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2011 (Lukaszuk)
First Reading -- 1052 (May 10 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 1053-56 (May 10 aft., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 1107-11 (May 11 aft., passed)
Third Reading -- 1117 (May 11 aft., passed)
Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on May 13, 2011; SA 2011 c17]
- 21 Election Amendment Act, 2011 (Olson)
First Reading -- 1203 (Nov. 21 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 1240-41 (Nov. 22 aft.), 1337-49 (Nov. 23 eve., passed on division)
Committee of the Whole -- 1473-78 (Nov. 29 aft.), 1479,1501-09 (Nov. 29 eve.), 1532-43 (Nov. 30 aft.), 1545 (Nov. 30 eve., adjourned, amendments introduced)
- 22 Justice and Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2011 (Woo-Paw)
First Reading -- 1203-04 (Nov. 21 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 1236-38 (Nov. 22 aft.), 1349-53 (Nov. 23 eve., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 1496-1501 (Nov. 29 eve., passed)
- 23 Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011 (Johnson)
First Reading -- 1204 (Nov. 21 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 1238 (Nov. 22 aft.), 1368-78 (Nov. 24 aft.), 1411-26 (Nov. 28 eve., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 1465-73 (Nov. 29 aft.), (Nov. 29 eve., passed)
- 24 Health Quality Council of Alberta Act (Horne)
First Reading -- 1203 (Nov. 21 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 1235-36 (Nov. 22 aft.), 1241-54 (Nov. 22 aft.), 1278-83 (Nov. 22 eve., passed on division)
Committee of the Whole -- 1479-91 (Nov. 29 eve.), 1561-70 (Nov. 30 eve., adjourned, amendments introduced)
- 25* Child and Youth Advocate Act (Hancock)
First Reading -- 1203 (Nov. 21 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 1238-40 (Nov. 22 aft.), 1283-85 (Nov. 22 eve.), 1300-06 (Nov. 23 aft.), 1319-23 (Nov. 23 eve., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 1426-37 (Nov. 28 eve., passed with amendments)
- 26* Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011 (Danyluk)
First Reading -- 1204 (Nov. 21 aft., passed)
Second Reading -- 1238 (Nov. 22 aft.), 1306-17 (Nov. 23 aft.), 1323-37 (Nov. 23 eve., passed)
Committee of the Whole -- 1437-46 (Nov. 28 eve.), 1545-61 (Nov. 30 eve., adjourned, amendments agreed to)

- 27 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2) ($) (Horner)
 First Reading -- 1366 (Nov. 24 aft., passed)
 Second Reading -- 1461-65 (Nov. 29 aft.), 1491-96 (Nov. 29 eve., passed on division)
 Committee of the Whole -- 1528-32 (Nov. 30 aft.), 1561 (Nov. 30 eve., passed)
 Third Reading -- 1590-93 (Dec. 1 aft., passed)
 Royal Assent -- (Dec. 1 outside of House sitting)
- 201* Health Insurance Premiums (Health Card Donor Declaration) Amendment Act, 2011 (Sandhu)
 First Reading -- 55 (Feb. 24 aft., passed)
 Second Reading -- 73-86 (Feb. 28 aft., passed)
 Committee of the Whole -- 464-68 (Mar. 21 aft.), 579-88 (Apr. 11 aft., passed with amendments)
 Third Reading -- 704-05 (Apr. 18 aft., passed)
 Royal Assent -- (Apr. 29 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on proclamation; SA 2011 c6]
- 202 Legislative Assembly (Transition Allowance) Amendment Act, 2011 (Anderson)
 First Reading -- 55 (Feb. 24 aft., passed)
 Second Reading -- 209-24 (Mar. 7 aft., defeated on division)
- 203 Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act (Rodney)
 First Reading -- 152 (Mar. 2 aft., passed)
 Second Reading -- 588-89 (Apr. 11 aft.), 705-10 (Apr. 18 aft., passed)
 Committee of the Whole -- 1210-15 (Nov. 21 aft., passed)
 Third Reading -- 1392-99 (Nov. 28 aft., passed)
- 204 Justice System Monitoring Act (Forsyth)
 First Reading -- 304 (Mar. 10 aft., passed)
 Second Reading -- 992-1001 (May 9 aft.), 1215 (Nov. 21 aft.), 1399-1404 (Nov. 28 aft., defeated on division)
- 205 Municipal Government (Delayed Construction) Amendment Act, 2011 (Taylor)
 First Reading -- 362 (Mar. 15 aft., passed)
 Second Reading -- 1404 (Nov. 28 aft., adjourned)
- 207 Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act (Jablonski)
 First Reading -- 989 (May 9 aft., passed)
- 208 Health Statutes (Canada Health Act Reaffirmation) Amendment Act, 2011 (Mason)
 First Reading -- 1105 (May 11 aft., passed)
- 209 Tailings Ponds Reclamation Statutes Amendment Act, 2011 (Blakeman)
 First Reading -- 1105-06 (May 11 aft., passed)
- Pr1 Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties Amendment Act, 2011 (Rogers)
 First Reading -- 550 (Mar. 24 aft., passed)
 Second Reading -- 1012-13 (May 9 eve., passed)
 Committee of the Whole -- 1057 (May 10 aft., passed)
 Third Reading -- 1117 (May 11 aft., passed)
 Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on May 13, 2011]
- Pr2 Galt Scholarship Fund Transfer Act (Pastoor)
 First Reading -- 507 (Mar. 23 aft., passed)
 Second Reading -- 1013 (May 9 eve., passed)
 Committee of the Whole -- 1057 (May 10 aft., passed)
 Third Reading -- 1117 (May 11 aft., passed)
 Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on May 13, 2011]
- Pr3 Auburn Bay Residents Association Tax Exemption Act (Johnston)
 First Reading -- 515 (Mar. 23 aft., passed), (Apr. 26 aft., not proceeded with)
- Pr4 Cranston Residents Association Tax Exemption Act (Johnston)
 First Reading -- 516 (Mar. 23 aft., passed), (Apr. 26 aft., not proceeded with)
- Pr5 New Brighton Residents Association Tax Exemption Act (Johnston)
 First Reading -- 516 (Mar. 23 aft., passed), (Apr. 26 aft., not proceeded with)

Pr6      Tuscany Residents Association Tax Exemption Act (Johnston)

First Reading -- 516 (Mar. 23 aft., passed), (Apr. 26 aft., not proceeded with)

Pr7      Hull Child and Family Services Amendment Act, 2011 (Rodney)

First Reading -- 516 (Mar. 23 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 1013 (May 9 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole -- 1057-58 (May 10 aft., passed)

Third Reading -- 1117 (May 11 aft., passed)

Royal Assent -- (May 13 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force on May 13, 2011]

Table of Contents

Prayers .....	1571
Introduction of Guests .....	1571, 1590, 1593
Members' Statements
Youth Secretariat .....	1572
Fundraising for Leadership Campaigns .....	1572
International Day of Persons with Disabilities .....	1573
Human Rights Day .....	1573
Edmonton Southside Primary Care Network .....	1581
Support for the Homeless .....	1581
Intercultural Dialogue .....	1582
Oral Question Period
Public Health Inquiry .....	1573
PC Party Benefit Plan Trust .....	1574
Critical Electricity Transmission Infrastructure .....	1575
Electricity Prices .....	1575
True Blue Alberta Ltd. ....	1575
Builders' Liens .....	1576
Regulated Rate Option for Electricity .....	1576
Gasoline Prices .....	1577
Emergency Medical Services .....	1577
LEED Standard for Buildings .....	1577
Impaired Driving Legislation .....	1578
Labour Relations Code Review .....	1578
Peter Lougheed Centre Emergency Services .....	1579
Funding for Private Schools .....	1579
Education Concerns in Lethbridge .....	1580
Climate Change .....	1580
Provincial Diploma Examinations .....	1581
Notices of Motions .....	1582
Tabling Returns and Reports .....	1582
Tablings to the Clerk .....	1584
Projected Government Business .....	1584
Orders of the Day .....	1590
Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading
Bill 27   Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2011 (No. 2) .....	1590, 1591, 1593

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fourth Session

Alberta Hansard

Monday afternoon, December 5, 2011

Issue 45

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 27th Legislature

Fourth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Hon. Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Hon. Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Hon. Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Hon. Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hon. Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC)
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Hon. Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Hon. Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Hon. Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Hon. Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (PC)
Stelmach, Hon. Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC)
Webber, Hon. Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Clerk	W.J. David McNeil	Committee Research Co-ordinator	Philip Massolin
Law Clerk/Director of		Sergeant-at-Arms	Brian G. Hodgson
Interparliamentary Relations	Robert H. Reynolds, QC	Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Chris Caughell
Senior Parliamentary Counsel/		Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Gordon H. Munk
Director of House Services	Shannon Dean	Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard	Liz Sim
Parliamentary Counsel	Stephanie LeBlanc

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 68      Alberta Liberal: 8      Wildrose Alliance: 4      New Democrat: 2      Alberta: 1

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Sustainable Resource Development
Janice Sarich	Education
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Rodney
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
Mason
Pastoor
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Ms Pastoor

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Ouellette
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, December 5, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of the Legislature. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, and boys and girls, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Paul Lorieau, who is in the Speaker's gallery. I would ask that all join in in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Urs Strausak, the consul general of Switzerland. This is Mr. Strausak's first visit to Alberta since being named consul general in May. Perhaps this may come as a surprise to some Albertans, but the Swiss helped shape our province's history. The Swiss provided much-needed mountaineering expertise in the early 1900s to help establish one of Alberta's greatest treasures, our Rocky Mountains. The towns of Stettler and Blumenau were also founded by the Swiss at the turn of the century. Today Alberta continues to have positive trade, education, and cultural relations with Switzerland, which we look forward to growing in the years to come. I would now invite Mr. Strausak to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to all members of this Assembly I would like to introduce a group of very bright individuals who are visiting the Alberta Legislature from the Edmonton-Glenora constituency. We have with us today 27 elementary students from St. Vincent Catholic elementary school, who are seated in the members' gallery. I had the privilege of taking a picture with them, and they are accompanied by their instructors. As I've said many times before, we usually have grade 6 students with us. Today we have grade 3 students, so it is wonderful to have them here. I'd ask them to all rise so that my colleagues may join me in giving them a warm welcome to the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members 10 students from the Countryside Christian school in Edberg. They are in grade 8. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Justin Thiessen, and Mrs. Monica Thiessen. Many of these students were here last year to observe the Legislature, but they were unable to watch the proceedings, so they've come back especially to watch us today. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly a visiting class from Mother Teresa Catholic school. There are 20 visitors: 18 students and two adults. The group is led by Melissa Guzzo, the teacher, and also educational assistant Ms Caren Robertson. This grade 6 class is very excited to be participating in the School at the Leg. this week. Mother Teresa is another fine example of the quality education that's provided by our separate school board in this city. They're in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a good friend of mine who is also a constituent. We grew up together in Camrose. He now lives in Athabasca and runs an oil field construction company in northern Alberta. I'd ask Darryl Andres to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

I have one other introduction, Mr. Speaker, to you and through you to members of this Assembly, a group of very special folks from my ministry, the Infrastructure capital projects staff, who have recently been recognized with a very prestigious national award, the Canadian award for quality, at the silver level. Excellence Canada awards government and private-sector organizations in recognition of their pursuit and commitment to excellence in performance improvement. These recipients were also recently mentioned in the past week's Financial Post. They do a fantastic job in a very busy ministry.

They're seated in the gallery, and I'd ask them to rise as I say their names. We have Assistant Deputy Minister Diane Dalgleish, Rory Mauricio, Sandi Ausmus, Richard Knutton, June Sadiq, Allan Foo, Brian Oakley, Elise Nelson, Gordon Stead, Kathryn Perepelecta, Tony Figueiredo, Rafique Khan, Wayne Fournier, and Tessia Williams. I'd ask the Assembly to please thank them with our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's always a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of my outstanding constituency members from Mill Creek, whose purpose I will elaborate on shortly. I will call their names and ask each of them to rise as I do so, and then we can greet them all together: Mr. Anuvir Bhullar, president and founder of Green Scholars of Alberta; Mr. Varinder Bhullar, Anuvir's father and secretary of Green Scholars of Alberta; Mrs. Arvinder Bhullar, a charter member of Green Scholars of Alberta and Anuvir's mother; and finally, Anuvir's grandfather, who is a strong supporter of Green Scholars of Alberta, Mr. Mohinder Bhullar. I would ask the Assembly to please greet my four guests with the usual accolades. Thank you for being here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an exceptional young lady from St. Vincent school in the Edmonton-Glenora constituency, Miss Julia Bowen. With Julia today is her mom, Mrs. Miranda Bowen; her dad, Brian Leach; and her aunt, Crystal Bowen. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly eight guests here representing the Edmonton Catholic school board district and the Ukrainian Catholic eparchy of Edmonton. Edmonton Catholic schools continues a tremendous legacy here in the city of Edmonton of enriching Catholic education today that has existed since 1888. My guests are here today in recognition of Edmonton Catholic schools' first annual Holodomor Memorial Day, which occurred on November 25.

As I mention their names, I would ask them to please rise. The guests include His Excellency Most Reverend Bishop David Motiuk from the Ukrainian Catholic eparchy of Edmonton; Mrs. Debbie Engel, board chair and trustee for ward 74; Mrs. Becky Kallal, vice-chair and trustee for ward 71; Mrs. Joan Carr, superintendent of schools; Mr. Boris Radyo, assistant superintendent; Mrs. Debbie Rowley, principal, Austin O'Brien high school; Mrs. Danielle Fortier, principal, École Frère Antoine elementary school; and Mr. Taras Podilsky, principal, St. Martin elementary school. I would now ask that the Assembly please give them the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

1:40

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three new staff members for the Wildrose caucus – if they could please stand as their names are called – Lianne Bell, Evan Menzies, and Brad Tennant. We are very happy to have them onboard. Lianne is joining us as our new project officer. Evan is the assistant director of communications and is doing an excellent job in that role, and Brad has come onboard to be the Legislative assistant for myself and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a constituent of mine who has just had published a very interesting book entitled Dismissed. The book is about her trials and tribulations as a victim of our electronic gaming machines. This courageous woman has laid her life out for everyone to see, describing her battle with VLTs, the crack cocaine of gambling, and her fight with the bureaucracy to understand the real figures behind our government's gambling addiction. My guest is seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask Gisele Jubinville and her husband, Len, to please stand and be recognized by the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Then, hon. members, would you join with me in wishing a happy, happy birthday to the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Green Scholars of Alberta

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's always such an honour to rise and recognize the truly outstanding accomplishments of our constituents and particularly so when those constituents are youth. Today my accolades are in support of a very new and very important not-for-profit group called Green Scholars of Alberta. This group was founded by my constituent Mr. Anuvir Bhullar, who I introduced earlier. He's a grade 12 honour student at Old Scona academic high school here in Edmonton.

Anuvir created the Green Scholars of Alberta in honour of his grandmother, Rajinder Kaur Bhullar, who passed away very recently from cancer. Soon after her funeral and along with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie we attended the special tribute in the Mill Creek ravine which culminated in the planting of a small tree that we hope will live forever in honour of Mrs. Bhullar. The connection, Mr. Speaker, is that Mrs. Rajinder Bhullar may very well have contracted her cancer because of the improper use of field pesticides in her native country, India.

As a result of this, the Green Scholars of Alberta was established to increase everyone's environmental awareness in our own communities. Green Scholars of Alberta wants all of us not only to be cognizant of our environment but also to practise more environmentally friendly lifestyles and habits. They also want us to follow the three environmental Rs: reduce, reuse, and recycle. These simple but effective strategies will help us to protect and preserve our precious environment, an environment that responsible citizens know we are only borrowing for a short time from our children and from future generations.

I fully support the Green Scholars of Alberta, and I would like to add two more Rs for implementation. First, let's rethink our own daily habits and how they impact our environment, and second, let's reinforce the positive messages that our youth are espousing on behalf of our environment. I would ask everyone here to please visit their website and/or to contact them directly by e-mail at greenscholars.alberta@gmail.com.

Mr. Speaker, young, concerned youth such as Anuvir deserve our full attention, our encouragement, and our full support. [Remarks in Punjabi] One hundred thousand congratulations. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

How Alberta's Grinch Stole Christmas

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With only 20 shopping days left Alberta's Grinch has a mixed bag of presents for her subjected. Very quickly after assuming the provincial throne, she gave us hope by releasing the teachers held hostage by the current minister of inhuman services. While smiles were temporarily restored to the children's faces, the same cannot be said for their parents about to receive a shocking 48 per cent increase in their power bills this month.

The biggest grin is on the faces of TransAlta Utilities, who, inspired by Enron's electricity market manipulation, scored over $4 million at Alberta ratepayers' expense. This is just the first small installment of the gift that keeps on giving courtesy of the government's transmission overbuilt contract commitments to export electricity.

While the Grinch wouldn't consider a judge to lead a public inquiry into health, by her royal decree the chair of Members' Services appointed one to review MLA salaries and benefits.

Instead of the promised $400 monthly increases to their benefits, AISH recipients will only find empty IOUs in their stockings this Christmas. The saddest expressions will be on the faces of long-term care residents and their families, who found themselves sold out to the highest building bidder by the Grinch when she took the cap off their residence fees and turned seniors into marketable commodities. Persons with developmental disabilities together with injured workers who qualify for but do not receive benefits owed to them by workmen's compensation and those thousands of Albertans who, like farm workers, don't even qualify for benefits or safe workplaces will be experiencing an especially blue Christmas this year.

While visions of clear-cuts and outages,
Dance in our troubled heads,
We'll recall the broken promises of
The Grinch we've all come to dread.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Edmonton Catholic Schools Holodomor Memorial Day

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Upon the recommendation of His Excellency Most Reverend Bishop David Motiuk of the Ukrainian Catholic eparchy of Edmonton the Board of Trustees of Edmonton Catholic schools on May 31, 2011, unanimously supported and declared in perpetuity that the last Friday in November will be dedicated as the Holodomor Ukrainian Famine and Genocide Memorial Day within the school district. Many Albertans and Canadians know that the Holodomor was a genocidal famine engineered by the Soviet Union in 1932-33 to attack and murder millions of people in Ukraine and to destroy the religious, political, and cultural identity of a Ukrainian nation.

Mr. Speaker, the impact of the decision by the Edmonton Catholic school board demonstrates leadership by acknowledging the historical importance and tragedy of the Holodomor and its significance to more than 300,000 Canadians of Ukrainian origin who live in our great province of Alberta. In addition, it affirms a commitment to social justice issues while underscoring a mission to awaken and educate the social consciousness of children and youth to have a shared determination to work for a more socially just world.

Mr. Speaker, the Holodomor is a mandatory topic of study in the Alberta curriculum, and Edmonton Catholic schools is collaborating with the Alberta branch of the National Holodomor Education Committee to create educational resources that will supplement the Alberta social studies program of studies. Also, Edmonton Catholic schools has made a commitment to develop and align the appropriate additional education resources for elementary and junior high schools, which will be made available across the province.

On November 25, 2011, 38,000 staff and students in the Edmonton Catholic school district recognized the first annual Holodomor Ukrainian Famine and Genocide Memorial Day. Mr. Speaker, I would like to wholeheartedly commend the Edmonton Catholic school board and the district for their role of leadership in that effort and to give thanks for adding immeasurably to the education of children and youth in the city and in our great province.

Truly, the remembrance of the Holodomor will never be forgotten through the public words spoken in the hallways and classrooms within Edmonton Catholic schools.

*Thank you, Mr. Speaker.**

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public Health Inquiry

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week you rightly corrected me when you said that a review of MLA pay came after you received a request from the Premier. The Members' Services Committee met and just two weeks later appointed a retired Supreme Court judge to investigate MLA pay. Why won't the Premier take out a pen and write a letter requesting a public inquiry into critical problems, many life-threatening critical problems, in our public health care system?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I think we've had a very successful session of the Legislature this fall, where we've introduced legislation that's mattered to Albertans. One of those pieces of legislation will do exactly what the hon. member has asked for.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it may accomplish what we want after a nice, long delay tactic.

Given that the Premier returned $107 million in education dollars, which we all support in this House, and given that the Premier also suspended two huge transmission lines, is the Premier honestly telling Albertans that she can do all of that with the stroke of her pen, but she's unable to keep her main campaign promise to Albertans to immediately call a public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act?

1:50

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the hon. Leader of the Opposition because what he has illustrated is that this government, since this party assumed new leadership, is keeping its commitment to Albertans. We will continue to do that. I hope that the opposition, in the spirit of that, will ensure that this legislation passes because we want to keep those commitments, and we will.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only thing that's changed is that they've become better at stonewalling.

Given that absolutely nothing can change the fact that health care workers just don't trust the government to run a fair review process – the same government that brought in the code of conduct, the same government that was firing nurses when we needed them, the same government that wrecked the system, and the same government that created a culture of fear and intimidation – and that the Premier promised a process Albertans and these health care workers would trust, what is she trying to protect her government from by breaking this promise?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it is important for Albertans to be able to trust the health care system. One of the reasons they're going to be able to do that is because we are going to have an independent public inquiry that's going to ensure that information that Albertans want will be available. At the end of the day what Albertans want to know is that this is a system that they can rely on. I have confidence that through this process we will have kept our commitment to Albertans, we will find out what Albertans want to know about the health care system, and we'll be able to move on and trust and respect the professionals running the system.

* The text in italics exceeded the time limit and was not read in the House.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is correct in that you can absolutely rely on front-line health care workers to care for you, but you can't rely on the government.

PC Party Benefit Plan Trust

Dr. Sherman: A change of pace. The game of he said, she said playing out between the Premier and the PC Party president last week regarding the PC Party top-up to the Premier's $300,000 salary and benefit plan has Albertans confused. When asked about the salary top-up scheme, the PC Party president said that there's a lump sum and that if there's any excess, it has to be accounted for by the leader. Will the Premier stop ducking the issue and tell . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I think the leader is confused because where we are is that there were comments made last week, as I understand it, with respect to what previous arrangements may have been. I was very clear on Friday that I believe there are certain expenses related to the work of the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party that it would be inappropriate for government to pay for. That is for party donors to pay for. I have not received any funds. If I do, I will publicly disclose them.

Dr. Sherman: Given that the Premier will receive a salary top-up, as confirmed by the PC Party president, will the Premier tell us what the party paid the previous Premier as his top-up?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition is making a suggestion as to what I will or won't do. I think I've been very clear that if I receive any funds with respect to the party, they will be disclosed, and it hasn't happened.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's Premier is already the highest paid in the land and given that many Albertans on AISH and many seniors on fixed incomes are struggling just to put food on their table this Christmas, can the Premier please tell Albertans on AISH why they still have to wait for those $400 benefits that she promised them when she's getting so rich on her own plan? It's sort of like the Grinch who stole Christmas.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is a situation where what the hon. leader is trying to connect are a number of issues that are going to raise fear and uncertainty in people's minds. This is a province that cares about vulnerable people. When I ran to be leader of this party and to become Premier of this province, I was committed to ensuring that we are able to deal with those AISH issues. We are going to deal with those, and these unconnected situations aren't fair for public policy discussions.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how much has been paid out in income to top up the Premier's salary in the last four years by the Progressive Conservative Party through the leader's benefit plan trust scheme?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Political Party Activity

The Speaker: Before we have another point of order on this matter, you know that that's an internal party – I ruled this type of question out several days ago. I gave citations from the statutes that we follow, from the rules that we follow.

Go on to your second question, please.

PC Party Benefit Plan Trust

(continued)

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I will try that, Mr. Speaker.

Again to the Premier: why does the Premier feel it is none – absolutely none – of the taxpayers' business to know how big the subsidy is that they provide through tax credits, through the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, to the leader's benefit plan trust scheme?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is a situation that I have no information about.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, that surprises me.

Now, again to the Premier: why release publicly $1.1 million worth of expenditures in another Progressive Conservative trust that is not listed in their financial statements – we can force this information from this government and from the party – yet you still refuse to release all the details on the leader's benefit plan trust scheme now?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier?

Impaired Driving Legislation

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, everyone in this Legislature wants to see an end to the loss of life caused by drunk driving, but Bill 26, the Premier's new impaired driving law, does not do that. It diverts already limited police enforcement resources at law-abiding Albertans below the .08 legal limit while ignoring those over the limit, who are 15 times more likely to cause a fatal accident. Furthermore, the Premier has no elected mandate from the people of Alberta to pass this law. To the Premier: will you do the democratic thing and put Bill 26 on ice for now and wait until after the next election before pursuing it further so Albertans can have their say on the matter?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I want to say again to this Assembly that this member's comments are simply insulting to the police in this province. The police in this province are enforcing the existing laws, with 42,000 24-hour suspensions over the last five years. This member knows the answer, and he can stop the grandstanding.

Mr. Anderson: God forbid. That isn't . . .

The Speaker: Okay. Let's get on with the question.

Mr. Anderson: To the Premier: given that Bill 26, like the former federal Liberal gun registry, will not save lives but will, rather, penalize law-abiding Albertans and given that this new Premier has no elected mandate from the people of Alberta and given that she is unwilling to take a breath on ramming this bill down the throats of Albertans before the next election without any citizen input, will she at least commit to this House that she will allow her caucus members a completely free vote on this issue given that dozens of them do not support this bill and neither do Albertans?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised a number of assumptions which I actually don't agree with. I do believe that this legislation is going to save lives. I do believe that it's going to allow police to enforce the law. In fact, through provincial legislation it is possible right now for people who blow over .05 or who are affected by alcohol and not able to operate equipment or vehicles to actually be penalized. So this assumption that people are, quote, law abiding at the moment is a false assumption. It's not the purpose of this legislation. What this legislation will do is make roads safer for Alberta families.

Mr. Anderson: More checkpoints will save lives, Premier, not Bill 26.

Given that you promised more respect for the democratic process during your leadership campaign and given that you have allowed this Assembly only six days thus far to debate seven contentious pieces of legislation, mostly while Albertans were sleeping, will this Premier instruct her House leader to allow the opposition to finish debating all of their prepared amendments, or will you chicken out and cut off debate with closure on this and other bills so you can take an early Christmas vacation?

The Speaker: "Chicken out" is not exactly appropriate parliamentary language. As a matter of fact, it's more schoolyard language.

Hon. Premier, do you want to comment?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we have a legislative session going on with respect to legislation that matters to Albertans. We as a government are committed to passing this legislation because it's legislation that reflects the values of Albertans, and we'll continue to do that in this session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is Canada's only deregulated electricity market, and prices have been climbing steadily. Power prices are unstable but moving steadily upwards. They jumped from $32 per megawatt hour in May to $126 per megawatt hour in August and are now close to double what they were a year ago. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier please tell Albertans what measures her government will implement to stabilize and reduce power prices for Alberta consumers?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the cost of electricity to consumers, whether they be residential consumers or industrial consumers, is key to our competitiveness. As a government we believe that critical to that is a deregulated system, and we'll continue with that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that last week the Energy minister defended higher power prices as the price of a free market, will the Premier tell the House whether or not Doctor Dogmatic's statements last week represent official government policy?

The Speaker: This Assembly is unaware of who Doctor Dogmatic is.

Hon. Premier, I don't know. If you want to respond, go ahead.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the government policy is the government policy; it hasn't changed.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's progress.

Given that power prices under deregulation have enriched large power producers at the expense of consumers and given that this government has stood by and done nothing while Albertans have been gouged, will this Premier admit that deregulation of Alberta's power industry has failed consumers? Will she commit to ending electricity deregulation, and if not, why not?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we've gone through extensive discussions in this House over a number of years with respect to regulation of the market, and in terms of where we are as Albertans, we're proud of the fact that we have a market that's working. We understand that sometimes that creates stress both for domestic consumers and for industrial consumers, but at the end of the day the most important thing that we need to do is make sure that we have an economically free environment in order for both consumers and industrial users to be able to access electricity when they need it. It's important for competitiveness, and we'll stay on that track.

PC Party Benefit Plan Trust

(continued)

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have seen how this government rewards its friends. In public disclosures under the Conflicts of Interest Act we see that members of the Conservative caucus, the former Premier in fact, create corporations so that they can take unlimited fundraising contributions that are not reported to the public. Those same corporations then cut a cheque to the former Premier and his wife. To the Justice minister: why does the government not regard this as a potential conflict of interest?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't have thought I would have to explain this to this hon. member. There's a difference between a Justice minister doing his job and an independent officer of the Legislature such as the Ethics Commissioner doing his job. The Ethics Commissioner is the one who oversees disclosures. We have 100 per cent compliance with disclosures in this Assembly, which I think everybody should be pleased with and proud of. The hon. member should just talk to the Ethics Commissioner if he has questions.

Mr. Hehr: Given that the Justice minister's job is to amend the Conflicts of Interest Act – and the minister seems to have rejected this – to stop the practices of unlimited leadership donations, why doesn't the minister learn from the example of True Blue Alberta, a corporation set up by Allan Farmer of the law firm Reynolds Mirth Richards & Farmer, which continued to pay taxable allowances to the former Premier and his wife years after the leadership race, and propose an overhaul to this act?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to get involved in internal, private corporate business. I'm also not responsible for party reporting. That is the job of the Chief Electoral Officer. Also, the work of the Ethics Commissioner and the Chief Electoral Officer has been beyond reproach.

Mr. Hehr: Given that this reeks to the highest heaven and True Blue's controlling shareholder, Allan Farmer, is a partner in a law firm whose government contracts grew from $780,000 in 2006 to $1.3 million to $1.8 million to $2.4 million and to $2.6 million in 2010 at the same time that the Premier and his wife were getting taxable allowances from True Blue, in what universe does this not sound the alarm bells of potential conflict of interest? Why doesn't he amend the act right now so that this doesn't continue?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of things to say about that. First of all, you only get legal work with the government of Alberta if you have one thing, and that's expertise and professional competence. There is no such thing as political competence.

The second thing I want to say is that this member and his colleagues are really proving my point. They're rattling off this information. Where did they get it? It's publicly disclosed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Grow Ops

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary-Mackay constituents have brought to my attention that homes that were used as grow ops in our communities have been left unfit for habitation for the past two years, which, as you can imagine, poses various safety and health concerns for my constituents. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what standards must be met to deem a home unfit for habitation, and why do we tolerate having properties in such a state for such a long period of time in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Municipal authorities can deem a house unfit for human habitation based on whether or not there's heat provided, based on sanitation, whether or not the building is structurally sound, or whether or not they're considered a health or safety risk to the occupants.

Mr. Speaker, returning the home to a fit condition is purely the responsibility of the homeowners. Municipalities can get involved if they have a bylaw that talks about unsightly premises, but really it's the responsibility of homeowners to keep their homes fit.

Ms Woo-Paw: To the same minister. The health and well-being of residents around the grow-op areas are still not protected. What is it that our government is doing to ensure . . .

The Speaker: Via the Speaker, please, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand and, in fact, this entire government understands the concerns that people have for having safe communities. That's why this province is very supportive of the safe communities initiative that it has undertaken. Our department is working with Justice in the lead and with the Solicitor General, Health and Wellness, Energy, and Service Alberta on policies for building homes back to fit standards and to make sure that we continue to work towards building safer communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. To the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security: what is your ministry doing to ensure that the publication of grow-op locations does not inadvertently cause personal safety issues for innocent residents such as home invasions when criminals target the publicized seized grow-op properties?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member raises an appropriate point about publication. Our department and our police officials do a review when, in fact, a grow op is identified.

I just want to complement the Minister of Municipal Affairs' earlier answer. I think it's very important that we also educate people that when they consume an illicit substance, they're contributing to the supply chain. It's not a victimless crime.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Emergency Medical Service Delays

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The barometer of our health system is our emergency rooms. The Health Quality Council says that ERs throughout Alberta are at their breaking point. In fact, things are so bad that the length of stay numbers on the AHS website were at 22 per cent at the Royal Alex and the Grey Nuns hospital just last week. In the face of all this evidence the Minister of Health and Wellness still claims that the number of people waiting on the ER stretchers is the lowest it's been in years. Will the minister stop treating this issue as a PR problem and acknowledge that he played a major role in causing the crisis when he helped close down the Villa Caritas long-term care facility?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, well, there are a number of things to respond to in that question. First of all, I have made no such claim that ER wait times are the best they've been in years. We're in fact working very hard on the basis of some very ambitious targets to improve the flow of patients, particularly for those who are admitted to hospital and have to wait in the emergency room. The target for that is an eight-hour target. With respect to the system overall, we are moving aggressively on continuing care, the expansion of home care, and other measures to improve patient flow.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An eight-hour target that after billions of dollars spent on the system we're meeting only 22 per cent of the time.

Given that the decision to close beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton and to deport complex mental health patients to a long-term care facility like Villa Caritas caused the ER crisis and delays in care and a few potential catastrophes, why has the Minister of Justice not called a public fatality review into the death at Villa Caritas and that of Shayne Hay, people who lost hope after waiting for care?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, there is a clear procedure for fatality inquiries. The chief medical officer makes a recommendation to the fatality inquiries board. They make a recommendation to me. I've received no such recommendation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The chief medical officer works in the Ministry of Health and Wellness. Will the Minister of Health and Wellness ask the chief medical officer to make a recommendation to the Justice minister to do a public fatality inquiry into the deaths that happened to Shayne Hay and the patient in the Villa Caritas, patients who were already in care? Untimely and unnatural deaths.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have no way to verify the information that the hon. member is presenting with respect to those two fatalities.* What I can tell the hon. member and what I'm sure he knows is that Villa Caritas is, in fact, part of the continuing care system in the Edmonton zone. It provides continuing care for hard-to-serve patients with advanced mental illness such as Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia and plays a major role in stabilizing those patients so that they can return to an appropriate community placement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

2:10 Support for Home Care

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has over 410,000 citizens who are 65 years of age and older. In less than 20 years the number of seniors in Alberta will double. Population projections estimate that by 2031 1 in 5 Albertans will be a senior. It's essential that we have planning in place now that recognizes the needs of seniors. Continuing care spaces are a very important part of this planning and so is home care. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What are the plans to provide adequate home care for the increasing number of seniors who will require supports to remain in their own homes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are, in fact, many plans under way to expand the availability of home care. Currently in Alberta we spend approximately $400 million per year to provide home care to about 107,000 Albertans. I'm really glad the hon. member raises this question because we do need to be looking at what more we can do to serve people already in the community but also to assist those who through a fall or another mishap have ended up in hospital and are capable of returning home with the appropriate support.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the minister of advanced education from one of my constituents in Red Deer-North, who states that she's very grateful for home care supports that her husband receives. However, they want to know what certification home care support workers in Alberta are required to have and what training programs are available.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's true. Health care aides do provide a very vital role in providing health care within our system. Our partners at Alberta Health and Wellness create curriculum around the programming for Alberta health care aides, and then that's provided through our institutions under licensing from Alberta Health and Wellness. To make it even easier, Alberta Health and Wellness also offers grants to people that would like to take this programming to make sure that we have enough health care aides available for the programs that we have available.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the Minister of Seniors. Given that the government of Alberta supports wellness and independence and understands the benefits of seniors staying in their own homes for as long as possible, are there any programs that provide medical equipment and supplies needed to assist in the care of seniors who require supports, and are they affordable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for that question. Of course we care about seniors. I work hard and this government works hard to make sure that there are programs available for seniors to remain in their own homes. There's a program called aids to daily living. We invest $124 million into this program. It serves about 85,000 Albertans, of which 67 per cent are seniors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Pathology Testing Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Laboratory pathologists in Alberta are overloaded and afraid to speak. Calgary Lab Services have two pending investigations from the Health Quality Council, the Rockyview general hospital and the Baker cancer centre, both about poor-quality diagnoses. This means preventable suffering and death for some Albertans and wasted public dollars. Pathologists have been raising concerns for years, but unfortunately the management of AHS has ignored and intimidated them. Small wonder pathologists are in short supply, overworked, and bound to make mistakes.

The Speaker: The hon. minister, please.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, well, I thank the hon. member for the question. Just to clarify, the review that is under way in Calgary is with respect to the processing of laboratory specimens at Calgary Lab Services.

With respect to the question around the culture of the system in which the pathologists perform, the hon. member has raised an important issue. Pathologists, like all physicians, need to feel the proper level of support both materially and within the workplace generally. I have every confidence that the Health Quality Council will look into this dimension as part of the review.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that Calgary Lab Services has recorded a $16 million deficit this year, what is the nature of the contractual relationship between Alberta Health Services and Calgary Lab Services?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, Calgary Lab Services is a wholly owned subsidiary of Alberta Health Services.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. It's my understanding that three members of the Alberta Health Services executive are also on the board of Calgary Lab Services and, therefore, make decisions regarding budgets and contracts. Is this not a conflict of interest?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not in a position to stand here and say what is or is not a conflict of interest. What I am in a position to say is that the terms of reference for the section 14 review that the member refers to are sufficiently broad. That issue, if it is an issue, would be addressed as well.

*See page 1661, right column, paragraph 5

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently AISH recipients receive $1,188 per month. This amount of money hardly makes ends meet when it's spent on rent, food, utilities, clothing, transportation, and other necessities. The Premier made a commitment during the leadership campaign to increase that allowance by $400 a month. Could the minister responsible for AISH update my constituents and all AISH recipients on the proposed increase?

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you for that question. Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to making sure that our most vulnerable are protected and that we have good programs in place. We have 43,500 people on the AISH program today. My commitment is, sir, to make it a better program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister advise my constituents and all AISH recipients on the amount of that increase, when it will be implemented, and if it will be retroactive so that they can budget accordingly?

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you again for that question. Mr. Speaker, we heard the Premier earlier in question period, and I heard her very clearly. I do expect that in the next budget year there will be an increase. Sir, it cannot be retroactive to this year. There's just no money in my budget for it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the Minister of Finance: can the minister update us on the budget process so AISH recipients would know when to expect that increase?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to do that. First of all, I'd like to say that there has probably not been a budget delivered in this House in history that has had as much public consultation as what has gone into this particular budget. The President of the Treasury Board and I held a series of round-tables. In fact, I apologize. I was late for the House today because there were a number of meetings in Calgary this morning on budget input. It will be all of that budget input – I think we've got some 5,500 online responses, now – that will determine the budget that will be delivered in all likelihood in this House in mid-February.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Hydraulic Fracturing for Gas in Shale

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Leaked government documents show the PCs are working directly with the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers to sell Albertans on fracking even as other jurisdictions are more responsibly taking the time to study its safety. Without these documents Albertans would not know that government officials and oil and gas lobbyists are colluding to manipulate public opinion. My question is to the Premier. Will she today commit that all further discussions with oil industry representatives about fracking will occur in public and will also include landowners and environmentalists with expertise in the protection of our water supply?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not at my fingertips privy to the advisory meetings and schedule that the Minister of Energy will be undertaking in the course of the next months, weeks, and over the course of the next year or so but certainly would take the question under advisement and have the minister respond at the appropriate time.

Ms Notley: Well, given that even the province of B.C.'s Oil and Gas Commission concluded that fracking operations in proximity to one another and to other wells can and do result in unforeseen contamination and given that Alberta has at least half a million oil and gas wells that stand to contribute to this risk, why won't the Premier stop shilling for oil and start seriously assessing the threats to our water supply through a public, transparent, science-based review?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd have to say that I and, I believe, the minister would probably take exception to some of the statements that were in that preamble to her second question. But, again, I will take that under advisement to the appropriate minister and receive the response.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the Ethics Commissioner's illogical decision included a finding that the government had approached CAPP based in part on an interview with Alberta environment staff and given that documents released last week clearly show that this information is false, can the Premier explain why the government officials are not providing full or truthful information to the lobbyist registrar?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the question was somewhat borderline inflammatory. I don't believe that the Ethics Commissioner is illogical at all. I believe that the Ethics Commissioner is a valued and respected member of the committee of this Legislature, and I believe he's doing a fine job.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to an Officer of the Legislature

The Speaker: That is a rather disturbing comment to be made about an officer of the Legislative Assembly. There has to be a process for dealing with these matters. We can't have it both ways. We can't have independent officers created that report to the Legislative Assembly and then have members attack their work without due course of attention. Quite frankly, hon. member, did you say: illogical conclusion? You did say that. I'm going to give you some opportunity to think about withdrawing that. I'll recognize you at the end of question period.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

2:20 Misuse of Electronic Health Records

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, last week's report by the Privacy Commissioner into violations of privacy of personal electronic health records is deeply troubling to anyone who has read it. It's clear there is a significant risk of widespread abuses and intrusions into people's personal medical information. To the minister of health: hospital staff obtained lab results and diagnostic imaging reports unlawfully by using co-workers' accounts to log on to patient health records. How widespread are such violations?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have no information that has been presented to me to suggest that this is a widespread problem. That said, I will express my wholehearted agreement with the hon. member that the incident that was reported on by the Privacy Commissioner is a disturbing one.

I take some heart in the fact that this issue was detected quickly, that our audit and assurance procedures are such that we can identify when someone inappropriately uses health information. I'm sure the investigation that's under way now will come forward with additional recommendations to help secure that information from similar misuse.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the reason to be concerned that it's widespread is that the report states, "It is common practice, at least at this . . . emergency department, for staff to simply use whoever's Netcare account is currently logged in and available," and that in this one case 12 different accounts were used. Has this minister launched action to safeguard the most personal of personal information?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the report also stated the fact that the emergency department was so busy meant that the security for access to the computer had not always had an opportunity to kick in prior to someone else walking by and perhaps having an opportunity to use that same computer. I believe the recommendation suggested ways in which this could be addressed, and I know Alberta Health Services is focused on doing that right now.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, given that emergency departments across this province are at least as busy as this one, we need to suspect that this practice is widespread. Given that 21 breaches were investigated at just this one emergency department, how does this minister know, if he's not going to look, that this case is not just the tip of an iceberg of privacy violations at emergency and other departments all around the province?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of logic, the premise of the hon. member's question would have us believe that the desire to inappropriately access health information on the part of health care workers is widespread. I don't believe that's true. I believe the appropriate recommendations have been made by the Information and Privacy Commissioner. I will look for assurance from Alberta Health Services that they are taking corrective measures.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Reporting of Gaming Revenue

Mr. Allred: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to direct my questions this afternoon to the Minister of Finance. The electronic gaming machines that we have in our casinos, bars, and racetracks have been called the crack cocaine of gambling because of their tendency to incent players to continue to play in anticipation of winning a big jackpot. What programs does the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission have in place to advise players of the true cost of gambling?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me say that the words that were used in the preamble are not mine. They are either the member's or someone else's. We have a number of programs relative to what the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission and other departments of government offer. The problem is around how the question was phrased around the true cost of gambling. The large majority of those who play our machines are very responsible. It's entertainment. There are, however, those who have serious problems, and there are a number of programs in place that I don't have the time in this 45 seconds to outline.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that response. Given that the AGLC claims that the player return is 92 per cent but the accounting system includes prizes earned in the revenue and expenditure figures as opposed to the actual cash put in the machines by players and the actual cash taken out and given that the AGLC supports a policy of openness and transparency, does the minister support this form of deceptive accounting that actually produces a player return of only 69 per cent?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, there were a couple of words in there that are troublesome. Deceptive accounting is not something that we practise either at the AGLC or within the government of Alberta.

Let me explain why the numbers differ. It is correct that on average 92 per cent of dollars that are played are returned to the player. However, if that player turns around and reinvests that 92 cents on the dollar, obviously, when that payout comes at 92 per cent of the 92 cents, it's no longer going to be 92 cents.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure I understood that. Nevertheless, given that the AGLC claims to have made a profit of $1.4 billion last year from gaming operations and given that most of this profit is at the expense of so-called problem gamblers, is the actual profit from electronic gaming machines worth the considerable cost to society for financial problems, bankruptcies, health care, suicides, and family disruption?

The Speaker: It's an opinion if you wish to give it.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, clearly, it's an opinion, but let me try and answer it this way. First of all, we have a number of situations in the province where addictions are an issue, whether it's in alcoholism or in smoking. I guess there are a whole other number of things that I won't go into. There are programs to address these particular issues, and one of the things the government is not going to implement is prohibition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Pathology Testing Services (continued)

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past year this government has presided over a health care system that Albertans and health workers continue to lose faith in. When doctors are being bullied and intimidated for advocating on behalf of their patients, they have a health minister that blows off these concerns as a mere workplace disagreement filled with rumours and innuendo. Now a new crisis with cancer testing is emerging under this health minister's watch. Given Alberta Health Services has been warned about the rapid changes affecting pathology practices in Alberta since this summer, what has the health minister done to fix the problem?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things there. I guess, first of all, I would be the first to say that I do not believe we have a crisis in pathology testing in this province, and I hope that all Albertans would take note of that. Alarming the public is the last thing, I believe, that we should be doing. With respect to what's being done about the concerns that have been raised both in Calgary and in Edmonton at the Royal Alexandra hospital, Alberta Health Services has asked for a review, a quality assurance review, by the Health Quality Council, which is currently under way. I have every confidence it will give us the information we need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that under this health minister the Health Quality Council has now announced two reviews of the handling of cancer testing, at the Rockyview and now the Royal Alex, will the health minister admit that there's a problem with pathology testing in this province and that the lives of cancer patients could be at risk?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the two situations are entirely different, as I think the hon. member knows. The questions surrounding the procedures at Calgary Lab Services have to do with the processing of anatomical pathology specimens in the laboratory. The review that's under way at the Royal Alexandra hospital has to do with the possible misreads of a number of samples by one pathologist in a fixed period of time, and that pathologist is no longer practising with Alberta Health Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that this government ignored the warnings about closing the Tom Baker cancer lab for the last two years, will the health minister continue to ignore the concerns of health professionals in this province, or will he finally admit that there's only one way to stop crisis after crisis in our health care system and call a judge-led inquiry?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, once again, I don't want Albertans to get the impression as a result of this exchange that this government believes that there is any crisis in pathology testing in Alberta. What I would say is that for this hon. member and for any other member of this House that is in possession of information that they think is relevant to this review, I would urge that member to contact the Health Quality Council without delay and support the process under way.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In keeping with the theme, less than one week after the Movember prostate cancer fundraising event ended, I was shocked and surprised to hear about the misdiagnosis of many men who had prostate biopsies read at the Royal Alexandra hospital. It's hard to imagine in this day and age and with the technology and expertise that we have that something like this could happen. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How were so many men misdiagnosed?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we don't know the answer to that question. As the hon. member mentioned, this circumstance is with respect to the practice of a single pathologist over the period from July to October of 2011. There are 159 prostate biopsies that are under review at the moment. My understanding is that all but about a half-dozen of those patients have already been contacted by Alberta Health Services.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. We've heard that because of the centralization of lab services we may have lost the expertise that was available in some of our specialized labs. Are these errors a result of the consolidation of services?

Mr. Horne: Well, it will be up to the Health Quality Council in the course of this review to determine to what extent, if any, the centralization of lab services played a role. I haven't had any information presented to me to suggest that at this point. It's incorrect, Mr. Speaker, to say that the Tom Baker testing centre was closed. It is being relocated to Calgary Lab Services.

Mr. Elniski: Finally, to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. This has created a great deal of concern and in some cases grief for many of the men who had recent biopsies, who may or may not be awaiting calls to tell them that, in fact, they have cancer. What are you doing to ensure that it never happens again?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it does create a great deal of concern, and our sympathy and our thoughts are with the 159 people that are going to be receiving these phone calls. That said, I think Albertans should take some confidence in that our system is strong enough to allow such errors to be detected on a timely basis and for the appropriate review to be undertaken. I'm sure we'll have the answers shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Highway Maintenance

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans count on being able to travel our highways to get to work, visit family, go shopping, and get to medical appointments, yet too often in winter we see our provincial highways behaving more like skating rinks than modern roads. To the Minister of Transportation: does the minister honestly believe that what we saw on the highways this weekend is the best we can do with our current resources?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. An opinion.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's a little bit of irony because last week the hon. member asked me a question on how come we were wanting to have more sand and more salt in reserve for our highways, and today he is worried about the ice. Let me make it very clear that the safety of our highways is number one. It is critical to ensure that individuals that are travelling on those highways are confident in our highways, and we're trying to do the best that we can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Where was the salt and sand when people were slipping and sliding all over the place on the highways?

To the minister again: given that almost all highway maintenance in Alberta is contracted out, can the minister give the House assurance that contractors don't have incentive to keep plows and sanders off the road until the last possible moment to increase their profits?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, we do have a highway maintenance network, that's divided throughout the province into different maintenance crews. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to you that they are on duty 24 hours a day if necessary, if the situation arises. We do everything that we possibly can to ensure that the highways are sanded, that the roads are bladed, and that the safety of Albertans is our paramount concern.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I travelled on the highway on Saturday, and I only saw one sand truck on the highway coming to Red Deer and one going back.

To the minister again: given that Albertans continue to be disappointed in the response to the snow on the highways, can you really say, sir, that your department is meeting Albertans' expectations?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure what distance the hon. member travelled to see the one sand truck, but I will tell you that if there is ice on our roads and if there is a safety concern on our roads, we will be there, and we will be sanding, and we will be clearing the roads.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Gas Line on Highway 40 Bridge Construction

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government invests in critical highway infrastructure, including construction upgrades to bridge structures across the province. It would make sense for the province to make the most of these investments and allow utilities such as natural gas to cross rivers at the same time. My question to the Minister of Transportation: why is the province discouraging gas crossing on provincial bridges, at considerable cost to gas co-ops?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we work with municipalities and utility companies to include utilities on our bridges. I want to say to you that if we were in a utopic world, or the perfect world, we wouldn't like to see gas lines on our bridges because it does provide some hazard if they are on the bridges.

First of all, our primary concern is to ensure that we have the ultimate safety that we possibly can, but we do make exceptions, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and final supplemental to the same minister. The current bridge across the Athabasca on highway 40 has a gas line secured to it and has caused no problems for the last three decades. The minister is considering a new bridge over the Athabasca north of Hinton, and I'm asking whether the new or refurbished bridge will have a gas line attached to it.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, we are working with the Yellowhead Gas Co-op, and we are looking and they are looking at an alternative. I want to assure you that if there are no alternatives, we will work with Yellowhead Gas, as we do throughout the province, try to alleviate the concerns, try to make sure that, you know, gas is provided where necessary, and try to make it as safe as possible. We are working with those companies, and we'll try to make it possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

PDD Appeal Panel

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we heard that a decision of the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Appeal Panel was quashed by Alberta's Court of Queen's Bench in part because the panel relied on evidence of an insider, an "expert witness," who is also a PDD program employee. To the Minister of Seniors. Supposedly, panel members are recruited through "an open, competency-based process." How does the minister explain such apparent lack of competence on the part of those charged with making decisions impacting the crucial supports and services vulnerable Albertans receive?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I take very seriously the work that I do and that the department undertakes on behalf of vulnerable Albertans. I take exception that anybody would question the mainly volunteer base of our appeal panels. We recruit experts from all across the province to ensure that we have the right people with the right training to make the right decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When children move to age 18, they run into a wall in PDD. It's a regular occurrence. What requirements are currently in place to ensure that panel members possess the considerable expertise necessary to determine eligibility for PDD supports and services?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, once again, I do recognize that there is an issue, you know, when you're a youth under 18 versus someone who's over 18 served in our department. It's our intent and that of the members of the appeal panel to make sure they know the case that they're dealing with in front of them. Our staff prepare and do lots of homework before they hear these appeals, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Will the minister save other families $70,000 in legal fees and undertake today to tighten the recruitment process for panel members to ensure that the most qualified people are in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I have to tell the member opposite that we do everything possible to recruit the right people to do the right job with the right training. These people are very valued members of our department and serve the needs of Albertans in an honourable way.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-response period for today. Nineteen members were recognized; 111 questions and the responses were provided. In 30 seconds from now we will continue the Routine.

2:40

Members' Statements

(continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Jasper National Park Dark Sky Preserve

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is one of the most beautiful, scenic, pristine places to live in the world. Everywhere we look, there is picturesque scenery, but one natural surrounding that we often forget to appreciate is the biggest one of all, the sky, and oftentimes this is because the bright city lights make it difficult to see anything above the street lights. However, this is not the case everywhere in Alberta. In fact, I'm proud to say that Jasper national park has just been named the world's largest dark sky preserve.

This is an international honour that brings great pride not only to astronomy enthusiasts but to Albertans in general. At 11,228 square kilometres, Jasper national park provides the perfect venue for sky gazing. Because it's such a natural landscape rather free of artificial light pollution, people visit the park for unimpeded views of the stars and planets. In fact, the first Jasper Dark Sky Festival recently brought in people from all over the world, and I encourage everyone to get out to next year's event from October 12 to October 14.

Mr. Speaker, the importance of darkness also goes beyond stargazing. We need natural darkness to reduce stress and promote a healthy lifestyle. However, it is estimated that 85 per cent of the world's population lives in urban areas without access to darkness. So when I hear things like Jasper national park is the world's largest dark sky preserve, it reminds me that Alberta is the best place to live and offers such an exceptional quality of life.

I hope that many of you will get out and attend the annual Jasper in January festival, held from the 13th to 29th of that month, and take part in the dark skies wolf howl or canyon crawl, two great events to get outside at night and explore the park.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Julia Bowen

Mr. Elniski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once in a while we come across an organization or an individual that really stands apart. In late October I attended the 2011 Women's Conference for the Alberta Regional Council of Carpenters and Allied Workers. The highlight of the conference was a speech given by Miss Julia Bowen, the grade 4 student I introduced earlier. Rather than paraphrase Julia's words, I would like to read her speech to this Assembly.

I think the women's movement is a big part of history and world changes, especially how it has changed lives.

Students in school learn a little information in social class when they are in grades 2 and 3.

Even today men are still making more than women.

If we didn't talk about it in school, the women's movement would've been forgotten, and men may have been the only ones working.

I'm helping in the conference because I enjoy presenting, and I'd like to learn more about women's history.

I'm thinking this could definitely help with my future.

It took long and hard work for the women's movement to settle in.

I am proud to be here, and I hope this'll help my presentation skills and that I might soon be able to make my own version of this conference.

Plus, this might help with essays or projects.

Anyways, it did take hard work for people like you who have a non-traditional job, and you should be proud because of all the people in the world, you achieved something someone wouldn't do every day.

I thank you because when I grow up I can be whatever I choose. Know that this will change the world forever.

You did something that'll change and help the world, and I thank you for this effort and the goals you've achieved.

Mr. Speaker, at the tender age of eight Julia speaks well beyond her years and delivers a message that makes us all proud to know that such bright and talented and committed young people are ready to take the stage. Julia and I had an opportunity earlier today to meet a role model who shows young ladies like her that they can be whatever they choose to be, our own Premier.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

International Volunteer Day

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. December 5 marks International Volunteer Day, a day that is of special significance to all Albertans for in some way every Albertan has been touched by the selflessness of our volunteers. The dedication and commitment of our volunteers is seen in every community in this province as they work to enhance the quality of life for their friends, neighbours, and often those they will never even know. Many of those served by the efforts of volunteers are among the most vulnerable of our citizens.

Mr. Speaker, volunteers are, quite frankly, the backbone of communities across this province. These individuals and the organizations they help support provide many of the programs and services that simply would not be available to our citizens without these everyday heroes.

We must also remember the many Albertans who have stepped up, leaving their friends and family and all that they know to travel to trouble spots around the globe to lend their talents to those in need. In doing so, they enhance the reputation of our province and our nation.

Mr. Speaker, our volunteers are driven not by the desire for recognition or praise but by a sense of duty and a sense of compassion. Earlier today the hon. Minister of Culture and Community Services presented the 2011 stars of Alberta award to six outstanding Alberta volunteers. Stars of Alberta is one of the ways the Alberta government is recognizing and paying tribute not just to those who have been selected for an award but to those who day in and day out are making the lives of all Albertans just that much better.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask all members and all Albertans to take the time today and every day to remember and to thank our volunteers, exemplary Albertans one and all. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

World Sledge Hockey Challenge

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend at the new Athletic and Ice Complex at Canada Olympic Park in Calgary our national sledge hockey team once again proved why our country is so well respected on the ice. On Saturday night Canada beat the 2010 Paralympic champions from the United States by a resounding score of 4 to 1 to claim the 2011 World Sledge Hockey Challenge title.

This world-class event saw teams from all over the planet come together here in Alberta to decide who was the best. Canada played incredibly well. They did not lose a single game all week. The group showcased their amazing ability to work together, and their huge win clearly demonstrated their fine teamwork.

Sledge hockey is an exciting sport which is gaining momentum in Canada. It offers a wonderful opportunity to recognize the abilities and talents of people with so-called disabilities. I think our MLA hockey team would be in tough if we ever had the chance to face off against the Canadian team.

The sport was actually developed back in the early 1960s in Sweden at a rehabilitation centre, and it is currently one of the most popular sports in the Paralympic Games for many good reasons. Sledge hockey is always on the leading edge of sport development, both in terms of equipment design and team membership. In fact, mixed teams of male and female athletes were allowed to compete together for the first time at the Vancouver Winter Olympics.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park reminded me this morning that fostering and promoting open and inclusive communities is paramount to a healthy and balanced society. Sports like sledge hockey do exactly that. This sport is innovative, disciplined, and inclusive. It gives every person, regardless of physical status, the ability to experience our country's national pastime.

Congratulations to the Canadian sledge hockey team for taking home the 2011 title. You certainly did us proud again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of three motions. The first motion reads:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 21, Election Amendment Act, 2011, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The second motion, Mr. Speaker, is:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 24, Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The third motion, Mr. Speaker, is:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 26, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table an appropriate number of copies of a 25-page report entitled CCMTA Road Safety Report Series: Alcohol-Crash Problem in Canada, 2008, prepared for the Canadian Council of Motor Transport Administrators' Standing Committee on Road Safety Research and Policies and Transport Canada by the Traffic Injury Research Foundation of Canada and dated December 2010.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the requisite number of copies of a document entitled Protocol on the Appointment of Judges to Commissions of Inquiry, which has been developed by the Canadian Judicial Council. This document was developed for the purpose of providing information and guidance to governments and others on the process for appointing judges to lead public inquiries. This will be useful background information in connection with government-proposed amendments to Bill 24.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of documentation I received from the Edmonton Catholic school board regarding the establishment of their district's Holodomor (Ukrainian Famine Genocide) Memorial Day, to be commemorated on the last Friday in November in perpetuity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings, each with the requisite five copies, of letters and donations that I have sent to food banks to keep the issue of indexing AISH payments in the public as I have done for the last five years. Certainly, I'm pleased to say that the Premier has moved the payment increase issue forward in a very positive way, but as long as the process for future payments . . .

The Speaker: This is tablings now, not speech-making.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is the appropriate number of copies of an opinion piece questioning the costs that will be downloaded on provincial and municipal governments by Bill C-10.

The second one is the appropriate number of copies of a report released today by the Parkland Institute entitled Alternative Water Futures in Alberta. The author, Trudeau scholar Jeremy Schmidt, notes that . . .

The Speaker: Okay. The same qualification as that for the last member. It's tablings, not speech-making.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the Amnesty International report entitled Canada, 20 Years' Denial of Recommendations Made by the United Nations Human Rights Committee and the Continuing Impact on the Lubicon Cree, which I referenced last week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I rise to table copies of letters from a constituent concerning Bill 26, and this is to follow up comments I made in the Assembly last Thursday.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I won't make a speech. I'm tabling two documents. The first one is information I received regarding motions for return 6 and 7 as amended on April 11, 2011. I appreciate this information from the Minister of Energy.

My second tabling is with respect to Motion for a Return 8 as amended on April 11, 2011, and it's from the Minister of Energy as well.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Dr. Morton, Minister of Energy, returns to orders of the Assembly Motion for a Return 6, Motion for a Return 7, and Motion for a Return 8, asked for by Mr. MacDonald on April 11, 2011; response to Written Question 1, asked for by Ms Blakeman on March 21, 2011; and response to Written Question 8, asked for by Mr. Hehr on April 11, 2011.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Olson, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, Alberta Human Rights Commission annual report 2010-11.

On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Klimchuk, Minister of Culture and Community Services, pursuant to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts Act Alberta Foundation for the Arts 2010-11 annual report; pursuant to the Historical Resources Act the historic resources fund 2010-11 annual report and the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation 2010-11 annual report; and pursuant to the Wild Rose Foundation Act the Wild Rose Foundation annual report 2010-11.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to an Officer of the Legislature

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, that was serious, what happened this afternoon. Do you want to rethink it? Do you want to withdraw your words? How do you want to deal with it?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure. I would like some clarification because I was commenting on a report that was tabled in this Legislature, and I wasn't sure if your previous comment suggested that I was commenting on an individual. The question was framed to characterize a report, and the question was about that characterization as a result of action taken by . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. I'm going to read the words. "Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the Ethics Commissioner's illogical decision . . ." That's, I believe, a criticism of an officer of the Legislative Assembly. There's nothing in those words that I gave you that talked about a report.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the remainder of the question went on to talk about why it was illogical as a result of information that was improperly given to the commissioner by an official of the government, and it was . . .

The Speaker: Perhaps I'll be good enough, then, hon. member, to bring you and other members of the Assembly up to date with respect to a matter such as this. This has been raised in this Legislative Assembly on previous occasions and viewed as a very, very serious breach of the rules of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Breaches of parliamentary references are found in Beauchesne's at paragraphs 493(3) and 493(4). It has been stated time and time again that great care should be given when making statements about persons outside the House who are unable to reply and, further, when they are individuals of esteem such as an officer of the Legislative Assembly.

The hon. member might also look at the House of Commons Procedure and Practice at pages 616 and 617.

I would like to draw hon. members' attention to an event that occurred in this Assembly on April 25, 2005. Hon. members are free to read Hansards of events in past Assemblies as they sit in the Assembly. The books are all here. Regarding comments made at that time about another officer of the Assembly, on April 25, 2005, a rather lengthy ruling was given. I quote from page 988:

If there is any doubt after reading those authorities, it is the chair's view that the officers of the Legislature in the province of Alberta occupy positions of "high official status," as the term is used in Beauchesne 493(3), similar to judges and senior public servants even though they are not specifically mentioned. To be absolutely clear, this chair will not tolerate personal attacks against officers of the Legislature.

Further, on that same day, in the response, then:

There will be a vigilance. I will not allow people who are officers of this Assembly to be chastised in this Assembly.

I'm sorry, hon. member. What you said this afternoon fits the bill. So I would just ask you to withdraw the words and declare your intent to avoid such usage in the future.

Ms Notley: Well, at your direction, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the words that were characterizing a decision that was rendered by the officer and tabled in the House.

The Speaker: No. You see, hon. member, you and I are going to have an interesting debate. Consider me the judge in the court and you one of the attorneys in front.

Mr. Chase: There's no jury.

The Speaker: Yes. In this case there isn't. This is a professional thing, 2 to 2, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, actually, is not part of it.

We're not going to debate because it's not about the report. It's very clear what it says, hon. member. It says, "Given that the Ethics Commissioner's illogical decision . . ." I mean, it's the Ethics Commissioner that you are talking about. You're not talking about anybody else.

I'm going to give you one more opportunity to do the honourable thing, and then I will tell you what the sanction will be if you don't do it.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my statement about the Ethics Commissioner's decision, which apparently is also a comment about the Ethics Commissioner.

The Speaker: Thank you. And in future you, as all members, will not do this. Period. This is just not fair. If we're going to have independent officers of the Legislative Assembly, then we have to accept the credibility that they provide or have a motion brought to the Assembly to censor and end any association with those individuals. We can't have it both ways. That's just fair, good parliamentary process.

Orders of the Day

Motions for Returns

[The Clerk read the following motion for a return, which had been accepted]

University of Calgary Budget

M21. Dr. Taft:

A return showing a copy of all internal documents that show the Ministry of Advanced Education and Technology's rationale for approving a deficit budget for the University of Calgary in the 2010-11 fiscal year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

3:00

Child Abuse Investigations

M18. Mr. Chase moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of any documentation or policies on how cases of reported child abuse of children under the care of the province are investigated, showing what organizations carry out the investigation and what oversight there is of the investigation process.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll look forward – well, that may not be true. I may not look forward to the reasons it was rejected, but I'll look forward to arguing my case.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising on behalf of the hon. Minister of Human Services to respond to Motion for a Return 18, made by the Member for Calgary-Varsity, who actually made me laugh today. The hon. minister has accepted his motion with an amendment to clarify the source of the documentation or policies referenced in this motion. As you'll see in your handout, the words "Ministry of Human Services," have been added so it now reads:

... copies of any Ministry of Human Services documentation or policies on how cases of reported child abuse of children under the care of the province are investigated, showing what organizations carry out the investigation and what oversight there is of the investigation process.

Mr. Speaker, the ministry's response will include only the documents that are related to the ministry's investigative process to avoid any confusion with documents from any other ministries such as Justice and Attorney General's fatality inquiries or other judicial process.

Mr. Speaker, this is a small tweak to the wording that provides the clarity needed about the documents and policies that are referenced in this motion. I understand the requested information will be provided to this member within the requisite time frame.

Thank you.

The Speaker: So, hon. member, there's an amendment.

Mr. Chase: I'm absolutely thrilled with it, Mr. Speaker. Please pass on my thanks to the appropriate minister for being so relevant on this particular issue.

The Speaker: Should I call the question, then?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Okay, hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, do you want to move your motion as amended, or shall I just call the question?

Mr. Chase: If you'd like to speed up the process, the question.

[Motion for a Return 18 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on behalf.

Oil and Gas Sector Incentives

M19. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Mr. Hehr that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all reports, studies, financial forecasts, or materials prepared for the Ministry of Energy regarding stimulus and incentives in the oil and gas sector between January 1, 2008, and February 20, 2011.

Mr. MacDonald: You betcha. I'm very pleased that it's due today.

Certainly, this has been a program that has generated a lot of interest. To get the information that has been requested by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I think, would be, to say the least, terrific and in the interest of taxpayers throughout the province.

Now, this issue has come up in a lot of forums, in a lot of different ways, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we heard earlier in the summer a series of questions that went through the media regarding this package and how effective it was. I listened with interest at that time, and it was suggested to me as chairperson of the Public Accounts Committee that it would be an issue we should deal with, but as the hon. Solicitor General would certainly know, the Public Accounts Committee had dealt with this, albeit in a series of questions that were proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. He asked the hon. member at a meeting with the Department of Energy officials just how successful this program was and how many jobs it actually did create. There was a senior official from the department who admitted on the public record that he had no idea how many jobs this had created. That certainly was an issue this summer when it was discussed.

We do know that it's a fairly significant program. We know that in 2009-10 $1.1 billion was issued in drilling stimulus initiatives. The following year, 2010-11, there was $730 million plus, and in the forecast for 2010-11 – and I'm looking at the fiscal plan here from last spring's budget – there was an additional $1.6 billion.

At a time when we're having record deficits, at a time when no one could publicly determine how many, if any, real jobs had been created, there was roughly $3 billion in drilling stimulus provided to both the oil and the gas sectors. It was provided to the oil sector at a time when prices were really quite healthy and there was a lot of activity going on. The same cannot be said about natural gas. Whether this program was a good idea or a bad idea or whether we'll need a similar program in the future at some time, that's another question.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has every right to ask for all reports, studies, and financial forecasts, and if the information is provided, I'm going to look forward, as the Finance critic, to reading it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am rising to advise that the House rejects this motion for a return. When we look at the wording of this motion, it states, "all reports, studies, financial forecasts, or materials prepared for the Ministry of Energy." This could conceivably mean anything and everything provided by anyone for the Ministry of Energy on the topic of stimulus incentives. As we know, the rules do not allow for a fishing expedition. The scope of this wording is, in fact, too broad; it's not specific. By complying with it in this form, we could end up releasing proprietary, confidential information, so I would respectfully advise all members to reject this motion.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question? That'll close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think, with no disrespect, that this is showing contempt to the taxpayers of this province, who spent $3 billion on this incentive program, this stimulus program, $3 billion, at a time in the history of this province that we racked up $11 billion in deficits.

We were talking earlier this afternoon about AISH payments and about how we perhaps could in next year's budget have an increase for recipients or clients of AISH. Maybe we could help out seniors in the next budget. Yet when we request information regarding this $3 billion program which some would say was unnecessary and some would say that they have no idea – and these are government officials – how many, if any, jobs were created as a result of this, the hon. member dares to say on the public record to taxpayers that the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is simply on a fishing expedition. I think that's cavalier, I think it's disrespectful of the taxpayers, and it's certainly a reflection on why we have racked up $11 billion in deficits in the last four years with an attitude like that.

This question is certainly in order. I'm very, very disappointed that the hon. member would reject it in the first place and then suggest it's just a fishing expedition when the total program cost at least $3 billion over its life since it was initiated until the time it concluded at the start of this fiscal year. I'm disappointed in the government's rejection of this Motion for a Return 19, and I'm very, very disappointed in the attitude that has been displayed towards taxpayers in this province by this rejection.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 19 lost]

3:10 Electricity Grid Expansion

M20. Mr. Hehr moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all financial forecasts, economic trend reporting, and any recommendations that were prepared by the Ministry of Energy regarding electricity grid expansion for the fiscal periods 2011-2020.

Mr. Hehr: First off, I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for handling my duties very ably while I was out using the washroom. I thank him for that.

The nature of this ask is quite simple. We are going down a path here where the government has put forward proposals and solutions to, apparently, some of our electricity needs. These entail a large expansion of our transmission system and will hopefully bring some peace and some relative stability to our electricity markets, that has been sorely missing for some time.

But at the same time, we on this side of the House feel it's necessary to get these reports because there are other people out there, other groups – utility advocates, the people who use power, our industrial users who use our power – who are concerned that this is a massive overbuild. Those are their words, not mine, Mr. Speaker.

Because there is so much conjecture, so many people who are questioning the need and the necessity of this process, in my view it would be imperative for us, the Official Opposition, to have a look at these financial forecasts and economic trend reporting and recommendations that were prepared for the Minister of Energy in order that we can look at the information that he has to base his decision on, and then we can inform these people that the Minister of Energy is perfectly correct; we do need these materials, and here is why.

Right now we are left listening to competing groups, all with varying interests. We know the Minister of Energy only has one interest at heart, and that would be the people of Alberta. We are confident that his reports would give us peace in that matter, would alleviate our concerns. It would allow us to quietly or even loudly back his decision to go forward with what some people are calling a massive expansion of our electricity grid. So we're merely looking for the same information that the minister has and that he's based his decision on so we can support him in this endeavour to bring electricity to our great province.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising again today on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy. The Alberta Electric System Operator is responsible for the information that the member is requesting. AESO does have the economic planning and operation of our provincial electricity grid. They provide the analysis, input, and long-term forecasting. If the Member for Calgary-Buffalo is interested in this information, the Minister of Energy suggests that he look at AESO's website and examine the long-term planning and analysis or even consider contacting them directly. In fact, the minister has also indicated to me that he'd be happy to provide the member with a contact name to assist them with this request.

But in response to this motion for a return the minister would urge all members to reject it. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, if I recognize you, that concludes the debate.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I'm highly surprised at that answer. Are we on this side of the House supposed to assume that the Minister of Energy has not been given any financial forecasts, economic trending, or any recommendations prepared by the Ministry of Energy in this regard, that it has all come from the AESO? That answer seems to me totally, to use the word, false. I would assume that the Ministry of Energy has been provided numerous reports, numerous economic trend reporting, and many recommendations in regard to this. I find that answer really surprising, to say the least.

Really, if the true answer is that the Minister of Energy has not been provided any of this information, I would fall out of my chair, and I've got side rails on. Okay? If that is the truth, you know, I think that's one thing. If the answer is that some of these reports have been provided to the hon. minister, he has the right to say, "No, we will not provide that report." I highly doubt the claim that no reports have been made. In fact, if that was the case, I'd really ask what the Ministry of Energy is doing on behalf of the Alberta people.

[Motion for a Return 20 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

National Securities Regulation

M22. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all reports, studies, financial forecasts, or material prepared for the Ministry of Finance and Enterprise regarding the discussion concerning the potential creation of a national securities regulator.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This has been an issue that has been debated across this country, province by province, and in Ottawa for quite some time. I am certain that information of this nature exists. I do know from looking at the Minister of Finance's website that there are references to various reports, studies, and forecasts. It's a very, very important matter. We have, of course, our own Securities Commission, located in Calgary. In fact, they have their own chapter in the Minister of Finance's annual report. It's an interesting read for members of this Assembly, as it is for the general public.

I would note – and this is in no reflection going back to Motion for a Return 20 – that we would be using an electrical market or an electric system. Well, I would be very generous in calling it a market. But we have a day-ahead market for electricity prices in this province; we have a futures market. These are all under the umbrella of the Securities Commission. I, for one, would hate to see the Securities Commission leave Calgary and move, say, to Toronto or to Ottawa as a national body. I can't imagine what that would do to our electricity market as it's known now. For the record I don't consider it to be a market. If it's anything, it's a fixed market, but it's not an open, competitive market. So I want to make that perfectly clear.

A national securities regulatory body: you have various opinions on this. I don't see any reason why we would want to close an office in Calgary and move everything to, say, Ottawa or Toronto, which has been suggested by some. I think that as the economy in western Canada grows and expands as we develop more and more resources, there will be more and more need for an Alberta Securities Commission and a regulatory body located here. I think some of the smaller resource companies use it quite effectively for capital requirements. So there are reasons why we should have it, but I would be very interested, Mr. Speaker, in what exactly the ministry of finance and enterprise has surrounding these discussions that have been going on for years.

I certainly would appreciate the information, and if it was to be provided, I'm not saying that I'm going to read it during Christmas week, but I would commit to reading it before the 21st of December. Thank you.

3:20

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure what's going on in that caucus, but three of their members have made me laugh out loud today – in good humour, I must say.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is asking for copies of "reports, studies, financial forecasts, or material prepared for the Ministry of Finance," specifically those regarding "the potential creation of a national securities regulator." Much of the information being requested by the member is already publicly available, and this includes without limitation reports, studies or other evidence, and submissions filed with the Supreme Court of Canada for the federal reference. The court's record also includes filings made in the two provincial references and the decisions of these courts. The member and the general public can also access a webcast of the two-day hearing on the Supreme Court of Canada's website. Any other materials prepared for Alberta Finance are subject to either confidentiality or legal privilege restrictions.

To sum up, the member's motion asks for information that is either publicly available already or, on the other side, information that cannot be provided for reasons of legal privilege or confidentiality. I'm sure that the Member for Calgary-Edmonton is going to appreciate those as well, given his background. For these reasons, I recommend that this motion be rejected today.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question?

[Motion for a Return 22 lost]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 205

Municipal Government (Delayed Construction) Amendment Act, 2011

[Debate adjourned November 28: Mr. Taylor speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to continue. The hon. member has seven minutes remaining in his speaking time, and there's a total of 117 minutes of debate remaining should the members choose to go that far. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When time expired last week, I was acknowledging that one can make the argument that the Municipal Government Act already provides municipalities with the authority to intervene when construction sites become significantly stalled, suspended, or delayed.

In the case of stalled developments posing a danger to public safety, there doesn't seem to be much argument that it does. Municipalities may issue orders requiring the owner to eliminate the danger to public safety, remove or demolish the structure, fill in the excavation or the hole, and level the site. In a stalled development dangers to public safety are pretty clear and quantifiable. Shorings, which hold back the land when a basement or an underground parkade, for instance, is excavated, will start to break down over time, allowing the land that they're holding back to cave in. That's dangerous and measurable. City engineers can monitor the condition of those shorings on a regular basis. When they begin to break down, the engineers can measure that, identify it, quantify it, and issue the appropriate order, most likely to fill in the excavation. You can't really argue that point.

When delayed developments are merely unsightly, however, no matter how much of an eyesore they are by any common-sense consensus definition, the MGA as it is currently worded seems somewhat less certain about how much authority a municipality really has to step in on behalf of the neighbouring residents and businesses in order that something be done about it.

This, Mr. Speaker, I believe, is the crux of the matter. If we at the provincial level argue that our laws give municipalities sufficient authority to address a particular issue and the municipalities argue that our laws do not, then we're at a bit of an impasse. The neighbours complain to the city. The city refuses to act, citing insufficient authority. The neighbours turn to their MLA, who in turn inquires of the appropriate people within the provincial government, only to be told that the city does have the requisite authority. And we're back to square one. Who wins? Well, I'm not certain anybody does, but I can tell you for certain who loses: the neighbours, the surrounding businesses, and the community as a whole.

[Mr. Zwodzesky in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, a brief lesson in the ongoing history of stalled developments. There is a place in Calgary-Currie on 4th Street SW in Mission known none too affectionately as the pit. The good news is that the owner of the site just last week began construction of a long, long awaited development at that location. The pit celebrated its 10th anniversary this summer. Perhaps I should have said: marked its 10th anniversary. That's more appropriate; it was hardly a celebration.

Ten years of partial completion. Ten years as a hole in the ground mostly filled with what will become the development's underground parkade. Most of the concrete for that parkade was poured before the original developer went belly up. Ten years of ugly plywood construction hoarding covered in peeling paint and various posted bills running the length of an entire block along a street that once was and, hopefully, soon will be again one of the most vibrant shopping and dining destinations in Calgary's inner city. For 10 years apartment and condo dwellers have gazed down on this eyesore from their balconies. People can't really see much of anything from street level except the hoarding crowding the sidewalk, making you feel as though it might push you out into traffic. It hardly makes for a pleasant stroll.

Along that stretch of 4th Street in recent years we've seen a lot of empty storefronts. It's the broken-window theory on a bigger scale. When vandals break a window and the owner doesn't replace it, it sends a message that people don't really care about their neighbourhood. When a development is stalled in mid-construction for months or years, it sends a similar message, and shoppers and diners go elsewhere.

About 15 months ago I attended a meeting at city hall in Calgary with the ward alderman, community representatives, the city solicitor, and senior officials from the city engineering and planning departments to discuss the pit, and I was told what the community had already been told, that the city of Calgary did not feel that it had sufficient authority under the Municipal Government Act to move against the owner and require it to improve the appearance of the site. Were the city to try under the existing provisions of the MGA, I was told, it would end up in court in a fight that the city might very well lose and which would cost a lot of taxpayers' money in any event.

I asked the city solicitor to help me draft a private member's bill that would rectify the situation. He did so. I brought the wording to Parliamentary Counsel, who put it into the language of this Assembly. I took that back to the city solicitor and asked if our wording met his test. He said that it did, and this is the bill that you have before you today. This bill, if approved, will give local governments clear authority to deal with what is absolutely, incontrovertibly a local problem. It's a local problem that local residents should be able to ask their local government to solve and to hold their local government accountable for solving it.

The government of Alberta has no particular interest, Mr. Speaker, in somebody's hole in the ground. Yet these holes and pits and partially-built parkades and building superstructures sticking unfinished as much as three stories above ground and partially built townhouse complexes and subdivisions are local problems in local communities all over Alberta. The pit at age 10 is a mere child compared to the granddaddy of them all, a development in Lethbridge that's been stalled for 30 years.

In the course of researching this bill we've discovered stalled developments in Two Hills, Sylvan Lake, Bon Accord, elsewhere in Calgary, Edmonton, Sundre, and Medicine Hat. The town of Irricana tells us that it has no control over any undeveloped land or partially developed land within its limits. It's all owned by developers who sought to build and either ran out of money or time or the will to finish what they started.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does not seek to expropriate property or to cancel development permits or to keep developers from building. This bill understands that business conditions in Alberta can change dramatically from the time a development permit is granted to the time the development is completed. It does not force a developer to continue building when it makes no economic sense or to prevent him from resuming construction when conditions improve, but it does give the municipality the clear authority to say that you just can't delay building the unfinished project indefinitely without giving the enjoyment of the space back to the surrounding community so that you're not hampering its vitality and making it less desirable for businesses, residents, and as a destination for visitors.

This bill will give municipalities certainty and confidence to act on behalf of their citizens in the interests of strong, safe, and attractive communities, and it will give the citizens a clear path to understand who to hold accountable for this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the rest of the debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have examined this bill for quite some time. Actually, it first came to my attention when the Member for Calgary-Currie came to me. I know he's got several of my fridge magnets. I have to say that the first duty of an MLA, of course, is to listen to his or her constituents, and I'm happy to do that to the Member for Calgary-Currie.

I do think that the member has done, actually, quite a good job on this particular bill. The bill proposes to amend the Municipal Government Act in order to clarify the power that municipalities in the province have when dealing with delayed or stalled construction projects. Specifically, getting on to the details, this bill would amend sections 541(a), 546(1), 546(2), and 550(1) to direct references to delayed construction developments as situations where the municipality can intervene.

3:30

Now, pursuant to the member's legislation as he has proposed, municipalities would have the authority to require the owner of a delayed project to improve the appearance of the site within a specified time frame or to remove any structures and level the site.

From discussions that I've had with this member, the motivation behind Bill 205 is to improve the overall safety and appearance of our communities. I'd also have to say that it has something to do with property values. When you have a construction site that has been delayed, it can often attract crime as has been the case in this member's constituency. There have been issues regarding crime in that particular area. It has become an eyesore, and it may be a negative drag on people's property values nearby, I would say, through no fault of their own.

Mr. Speaker, the Municipal Government Act as it exists today along with the Safety Codes Act currently contain provisions that would allow municipalities in Alberta to address delayed construction projects within their boundaries. I think it's fairly clear. However, Bill 205 may have the potential to strengthen and clarify the actions that municipalities may take to deal with extended construction delays in their jurisdictions. This could be done at the discretion of the municipality on an individual or site-by-site basis and would be up to the local municipality to do. That's the key. It's not the province actually coming in to tell the municipality what to do. Rather, we're just empowering the municipality to have these particular options.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the economic situation can change at any time, particularly in this province, with very little advance notice. We don't have to look too far into the history books to see what a drastic effect changing economic circumstances can have on the construction of the development centre, particularly, in that member's constituency, which has a lot of high-cost-per-square-foot properties.

Now that we are well on the road to economic recovery, circumstances for Alberta businesses have improved. Construction companies are able to continue with their projects as planned. But at this point, Bill 205 does not seem unreasonable to me at all; in fact, just the opposite. There are many reasons why a construction project or development could be stalled or delayed, not the least of which could be for financial reasons. We don't want to punish the neighbouring businesses and the neighbouring residents in the event that that happens. I can only imagine how many calls this member has gotten from neighbouring residents of the so-called pit on 4th Street. Many people have, in fact, even called me, and it's nowhere near my own constituency.

At the same time, it's important that municipalities have a process, a mechanism through which they can motivate private companies to continue their work when possible without leaving eyesores, construction sites inactive for months on end or, in fact, 10 years on end, as this member has mentioned.

Now, we cannot predict how economic circumstances over the life of a construction project might change. I think it's important to find the right balance between strengthening a municipality's powers to manage local construction projects and providing a productive business environment. The key, again, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill has absolutely no intention of specifically handcuffing local municipalities but, rather, just empowering them and giving them the tools to deal with a situation such as in this member's constituency.

I believe that this legislation, if properly implemented and enforced, could improve development in Alberta communities. As well, if done properly, Bill 205 could give municipalities a greater ability to oversee the activities that are taking place in their respective jurisdictions.

By developing some of these responsibilities, our government will have more time to improve programs and legislation at a provincial level. In addition, Bill 205 could have the effect of speeding up the construction process in Alberta, meaning that our cities and towns could actually develop more quickly but also in a more responsible and more sustainable manner. One of government's priorities, after all, is to make Alberta the best place to live, work, and raise a family. A part of that is ensuring that our streets are presentable and aesthetically pleasing for visitors and residents.

Also, specifically dealing with my current ministry, Mr. Speaker, we have to encourage community safety. I know that that particular site in the member's constituency on 4th Street has become a real cesspool of crime. There has been drug trafficking there, there has been prostitution there, and probably some other crimes that we don't know about as well, and that doesn't build a solid community in Calgary or anywhere else in this province.

I want to say that I think municipalities themselves have a big role to play in this whole process. Another way that our government can ensure that Alberta remains the best jurisdiction in Canada is by creating a favourable business climate for entrepreneurs and by giving them the best possible chance for success. After having weathered the recent economic storm and emerged in the strongest financial position of any jurisdiction in North America, there is a strong argument to be made that our current legislation is working, but at the same time Bill 205 could help development happen more quickly in our province by incenting construction companies to complete projects on time. In a sense, the bill could potentially enhance our current legislation and, again, empower municipalities to make appropriate decisions when, unfortunately, there are construction stalls or there are construction delays.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member again for bringing forward this piece of legislation. I do think it's an important discussion we need to continue having.

I wanted to mention as well that in my previous ministry of housing and urban affairs we dealt with some projects that progressed slowly and raised concerns in the local community. Bill 205, I think, is really a good, fresh start, and I do think as a government in the future we may want to look at adopting some of the principles, in fact, under Bill 205. I can also tell you that as the previous minister of housing many people consulted me about that particular area.

We have to remember that if we don't have a process like this, who ends up paying? Well, the neighbouring businesses could end up paying for this. The neighbouring people who live there may end up paying for this through decreased property values. At the end of the day if the taxpayer is the one that has to actually go in and step up to the plate and actually improve these particular sites, well, all of us end up paying for it through increased taxes.

I don't think that's right, Mr. Speaker. I think that we need a process in place where, in the event that someone does decide to go into a construction project, we have to know that they have a responsibility to the community. That responsibility is that in the event that there is some sort of stall in construction for a long and protracted period, well – you know what? – that particular developer has to step up because it's not just their particular property. It's the entire community's. We end up paying for it through increased crime costs and also, as I mentioned, the property externalities as well. In an economics textbook, going back to first-year university, I recall something called an external diseconomy, and that, in fact, is what this member is seeking to remedy.

I also know that this member has spoken to several members of city council who have voiced their support as well. I thank him for doing his homework in that respect because it looks like the local city council wants this bill passed as well.

I want to say that I will be supporting this bill as it goes forward. Occasionally the opposition does come up with some good ideas, Mr. Speaker, and this is one of them. I know that this is a free vote in our caucus, and I would encourage all members on all sides of the House and all parties to consider supporting this bill because it does address a significant issue in Calgary and Edmonton but also throughout the entire province.

Thank you very much. I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the bill.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege, as always, to rise and discuss this piece of legislation. To start, I will be supporting this piece of legislation because it's a good, forward-looking bill that addresses concerns in an area that has been dealing with an unfortunate situation for some lengthy period of time. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie indicated, this pit has been in the area for 10 years, and I believe this legislation will propose a solution that allows local governments and local communities to address situations like this, where properties have been purchased, development started and, for one reason or another, do not get finished.

As the members before me have said, we understand that sometimes a project that starts out doesn't get finished. Either the economics have changed, the time frame has changed, or the like. Nevertheless, that developer or that individual or the local government should have the ability to offer solutions to a community that finds this distasteful and finds this unnecessary. In fact, this impacts many things, as was said earlier. It impacts the property values, impacts the crime that's going on in that community, impacts businesses that are unable to develop and flourish, and, overall, it brings down the quality of life in that community.

3:40

We all know that this bill, Bill 205, attempts to address the MGA, the Municipal Government Act. The MGA is enabling legislation that allows for prescriptive rules on how our local communities govern themselves. I believe that the MGA, if altered in this way, would be strengthened to allow local communities to do things for themselves as they see fit. That's the direction we want the MGA to play, to allow for prescriptive remedies that allow for local decision-making and allow for people at the local government level to deal with the situation and address the problem.

What this bill does is seek to find that balance and find that ability to allow for constituents and people who like to go to their local councillor to discuss the situation and have that local councillor bring the information before their civic body and address a situation that has caused a great deal of concern. It sounds like all over this province, not only the Beltline in Calgary but, I believe, from Three Hills to Trochu to Lloydminster to Hardisty to Hanna to Hussar, they could all use the MGA being amended in this fashion. If they do not have a problem like this now, they may at some time have a situation like this in the future. That's why I believe this bill works. That's why I'm supportive of it.

I can also say that I have a little bit of a personal interest, although this is not economic or anything of that nature for then it would be a conflict for me to speak. I spend quite a bit of time in that neighbourhood. I go for coffee at the Purple Perk restaurant, which is near the pit. I go for the odd beverage at Earls or the other pubs in the neighbourhood. I have even seen the hon. Solicitor General in the neighbourhood, enjoying the various shops and the various locales and the various restaurants and the various pubs.

It is truly a remarkable community that has a livability to it but also has a sense of thriving businesses. This is being lost a little bit, to a certain extent, with the pit. It has caused many members of the community to become very angered that they have been unable to deal with this local situation.

I would like to applaud the Member for Calgary-Currie for diligently working with his community on this issue. He's taken their matters to heart and put it forward in a bill. He hasn't just proposed a solution; he's acted on their suggestions so that people have an ability, hopefully, to deal with this concern going forward.

I, like the Solicitor General and the Member for Calgary-Currie, am supportive of this bill. I'd encourage all members to support it. It's a very good bill, and I think that if they looked at it from that perspective, their communities could use it, and it would come into play to alleviate some angst all over Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We'll leave it at that.

The Deputy Speaker: On my list here I have the hon. members for Edmonton-McClung, Edmonton-Decore, and Strathcona.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to join my honourable colleagues in the debate of Bill 205, the Municipal Government (Delayed Construction) Amendment Act, 2011, sponsored by the Member for Calgary-Currie.

I would first like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie for bringing forward this legislation. After all, municipalities are at the heart of our province, and it is imperative that we do everything we can to ensure that our municipalities stay as vibrant as they already are. I commend the hon. member for proposing a solution to an issue that is, you know, prevalent in some municipalities, the issue of delayed construction sites that are unsightly, dangerous, or both.

This legislation would amend four sections of the Municipal Government Act: 541(a), 546(1), 546(2), and 550(1). It amends these sections in order to give municipalities the explicit authority to regulate construction sites and projects that are significantly delayed or otherwise halted. Mr. Speaker, I think that all members would agree that it is important for municipalities to have the ability to force the cleanup of construction sites that are dangerous or unsightly. After all, there are few things that are more detrimental to the beauty of a municipality than a project that has been stalled indefinitely. As well, we want to minimize the risk of accidents or injuries that may occur around abandoned construction sites, nor do we want to put workers in adjacent construction sites at risk of falling debris from construction whose completion has been delayed.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I also think it is important to acknowledge the fact that the province ought to give ways to municipalities in certain jurisdictional matters. Our government understands the importance of decision-making at the local level, and I believe that the Municipal Government Act is one of the most important laws that we have in our province. Through the Municipal Government Act municipalities already have some authority to regulate and deal with construction that has been delayed. This is something that must be taken into consideration as we debate the merits of Bill 205.

We have some of the best municipalities in the world. Counties, towns, and cities in Alberta have a unique character that is emphasized by their cleanliness, safety, and diversity. The Municipal Government Act is an important piece of legislation that properly balances authority that should be delegated to the local level with authority that should be delegated to the province, and the act helps municipalities maintain strong and healthy communities.

Mr. Speaker, the Municipal Government Act is a lengthy piece of legislation, and it takes some time to find the sections of the act that are relevant to the particular issue of delayed construction. First, I want to talk about section 546(0.1)(1) of the act, which begins by stating: "If, in the opinion of a designated officer, a structure, excavation or hole is dangerous to public safety or property, because of its unsightly condition, is detrimental to the surrounding area, the designated officer may . . ." The section goes on to state that a designated officer can require the owner of such a site to do a number of things such as level the site, eliminate any danger to public safety caused by the site, and improve the appearance of the site.

For those of you who are wondering what a designated officer is, it is an individual appointed by a municipality who has the power to oversee certain jurisdictional matters. The city auditor for Edmonton, for example, is a designated officer who has the power to oversee certain issues of an accounting nature.

Mr. Speaker, this section is an important one, and I encourage all members to read it in its entirety in order to fully understand its scope. In my opinion, this section gives municipalities the authority to handle construction sites that are delayed or otherwise unsightly, so I'm not totally convinced that the amendment the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie proposes will give municipalities any additional powers with regard to managing construction projects.

3:50

Another point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the local problems ought to be solved by municipalities. Of course, this does not mean we are dissolved of any responsibilities when it comes to regulating the actions that municipalities can take, but it does mean that once we give municipal governments sufficient authority to solve a problem, we should allow them to derive a solution. Indeed, municipalities such as the county of Strathcona have used the power bestowed upon them by the Municipal Government Act to pass bylaws that deal with dangerous or unsightly premises.

In the case of the county of Strathcona the relevant bylaw is 80-2007. This bylaw allows a designated officer to issue an order to improve an unsightly or dangerous premise by demolishing the structure or filling in the excavation and leveling the site. I believe that bylaws passed at the local level such as Bylaw 80-2007 in Strathcona are the best way to solve the problem of delayed construction sites. By allowing municipalities to take care of the issues at the local level, we are limiting bureaucracy and respecting the right of the municipalities to govern as they wish.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the issue of delayed construction sites, which are undoubtedly an eyesore, is certainly an important one. However, I think that the Municipal Government Act already gives a great deal of authority to municipalities to deal with this issue. In particular, section 546(0.1)(1) as it currently reads gives municipalities a range of options to deal with construction sites that a designated officer determines are either dangerous or unsightly. Furthermore, other sections of the Municipal Government Act allow municipalities to make bylaws respecting the cleanup of delayed construction sites as has been done in the county of Strathcona.

Given the power that municipalities have under this section, I wonder whether the changes proposed in Bill 205 would make any tangible difference in the ability to deal with construction delays. However, Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting idea, so I'm looking forward to hearing what others have to say on this matter.

I would once again like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie for bringing forth this piece of legislation, and I commend him for expressing concern about an issue that is impacting some of our municipalities. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to rise and speak on Bill 205, the Municipal Government (Delayed Construction) Amendment Act, 2011. I first would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie for providing the Legislature with the opportunity to speak on this particular issue of delayed construction sites within the province of Alberta and, more specifically, to have the opportunity to speak on this. I would like the Member for Calgary-Currie to know that although our calendars didn't line up to have a face-to-face discussion about the proposal, I have given thoughtful and serious consideration to the proposals that we are discussing this afternoon.

Bill 205, Mr. Speaker, would amend several sections of the Municipal Government Act with the intent of providing municipalities across the province with clear authority to deal appropriately with delayed construction sites. I'd like to say that this is very appropriate timing because it's my understanding that the Municipal Government Act is moving forward for a review. So the subject matter under discussion is very appropriate because of the other review of the MGA.

Mr. Speaker, any construction project that is significantly stalled, delayed, or suspended for an unreasonable length of time would be subject to interference from the municipality. It falls under their responsibility. If a designated officer feels that a significant delay has occurred in the construction of a development, the officer may issue written orders to the owner of the project, requiring improvements to the appearance or demolition and levelling at the particular site. In the instance that the site contains an excavation or hole, the owner would be required to fill in the excavation and level the site.

Mr. Speaker, I respect what the hon. member is aiming to accomplish with this particular amendment. Delayed construction sites can from time to time be an eyesore and a source of frustration for residents in the local community or in areas where they occur, and I understand that. However, municipalities know that they have the authority to resolve these issues. I have heard that in some instances within municipalities across the province perhaps there is a bit of confusion around natural person power. The authority is granted by the current Municipal Government Act. However, I think what is being asked for is some clarity, and certainly this particular amendment is providing just that. As stated in the act, municipalities are able to issue orders regarding structures, excavations, or holes considered unsightly or dangerous to public safety. The act also refers to structures, holes, or excavations that are determined to be detrimental to the surrounding area. These areas are clearly under the jurisdiction of the municipality in which it resides.

The hon. member has used a construction site in Calgary that has remained as an open excavation for nine years as an example of a stalled project, which is a very good example for consideration. It's my understanding that local residents in the area have been quite frustrated about the goings-on of that particular delay, while construction has been on and off again. I understand that. I would imagine that a site such as this, that has been delayed for nine years, could be classified as detrimental to the surrounding area, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, the municipality should have reasonable authority to address the matter.

However, at times there are always extra questions raised. I can't say for sure whether the municipality is using the current legislation to the fullest extent to resolve the issue. But, you know, as a government we have to listen, always consider other aspects, and try to help and intervene where possible. I think that the intent of this particular amendment is certainly going in that direction and is allowing for further considerations by the government.

Mr. Speaker, as I had touched upon, municipalities hold the power to regulate construction sites so long as they are detrimental or unsightly in the opinion of the designated officer. However, as we can see, at least one site has gone for over nine years without being completed or considered by the municipality. It concerns me, in particular, that definitive action hasn't been taken. If I may quote, the Supreme Court of Canada has said, "Lawmaking and implementation are often best achieved at a level of government that is not only effective, but also closest to the citizens affected and thus [should be] most responsive to their needs." I believe that this quote really is germane and says it perfectly. The current legislation that we have in place grants municipalities the power to deal with this particular issue, yet they have until now not dealt with the issue, and there should be further considerations regarding the current piece of legislation.

4:00

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I want the Member for Calgary-Currie to know that I support the direction of this amendment, and I would be encouraging all members of the Legislature to give it serious further consideration, given that the Municipal Government Act is under consideration for review in that process they've just started and that this amendment fits quite nicely into that review process.

I, therefore, would be supporting these directions. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll keep my comments brief. I do appreciate the opportunity to spend a few minutes to speak about Bill 205, the Municipal Government (Delayed Construction) Amendment Act, 2011. I know that the Member for Calgary-Currie has done a great deal of work on this bill and has had extensive consultations, as he has said, with some of the municipalities. We know that they do have the authority under the Municipal Government Act and their own bylaws to deal with these delayed construction sites.

Having said that, I think that after listening to the comments – and I'm not going to repeat them – of the members for Calgary-Egmont, Edmonton-McClung, and Edmonton-Decore, I just would like to say that I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has done a good job on this bill. So I will be supporting Bill 205, and I would urge all other members of our Assembly to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak for just a moment on this important issue. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Currie for bringing forward Bill 205, the Municipal Government (Delayed Construction) Amendment Act, 2011. I had the privilege of serving on Lethbridge city council for nine years, and I can honestly tell you that some of the most difficult decisions that we had to make were around issues like this, around issues with properties where construction may have been delayed or stopped.

You've heard from the member here about a project called the Atrium Building. Now, the Atrium Building in Lethbridge has gone on something longer than 30 years. I don't even know the exact amount of time because I can't remember far enough back, but it was many, many years ago. It might even be closer to 40 years ago that that building was started. It's in the middle of the downtown. Three floors were poured in concrete, and then the building sat. Mr. Speaker, that building has sat for three or four generations. It has been boarded and unboarded. It has had people in it, playing there. It has been unsafe. I know from my time on city council that trying to deal with these kinds of issues was so difficult.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the member. I had an opportunity to sit and meet with the Member for Calgary-Currie and talk about this issue. I went back to my community and talked to my council about the issue, and they strongly supported just a word from the government to say that they have the authority to do this. "We know that within the Municipal Government Act it appears that we may have the authority to do this, but we would like that clarified. We'd like to know that when these issues come up, we as municipalities can and will be able to deal with them."

On behalf of my community and on behalf of communities across the province I would ask members of this Assembly to please consider supporting this legislation. During the review of the Municipal Government Act I believe it will assist in some direction to the minister and it will allow him to move forward and see direction in municipalities, where they can deal with these important issues around unsightly premises, construction sites that have been delayed, and, ultimately, buildings that have never been completed.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity. I again compliment the Member for Calgary-Currie for the time and commitment he's put into this bill. We've met at least twice on it, and I know he's phoned me a number of times. I do appreciate his dedication.

Thank you so much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, want to congratulate the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie for bringing this forward because, certainly, it clarifies what a municipality has currently. It leaves no doubt.

The hon. member in his speech mentioned the fact that Sundre was one of the places where there was a problem. Unfortunately, this doesn't go quite far enough to solve the problem in Sundre, where a developer started doing a bunch of work and because it was a subdivision, he took deposits from some of the people that were going to be residents of the area, and then the company went broke. Well, now, of course, the municipality is sitting there with some holes in the ground, some infrastructure like water and sewer pipes partially completed. It's really, quite frankly, quite a mess, but even worse is that the people that made the down payments have lost their money. So while this is good – it's a good start – there would need to be some other kind of remedy to solve the kind of problem that is in the town of Sundre.

Once again, I'll be supporting this. I think it's a good move in the right direction. Certainly, as we move forward and do the review on the Municipal Government Act, this will be a good foundation to deal with that type of issue.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. I'd also like to take the opportunity to rise and speak briefly on Bill 207. Again, with many of the other members I'd like to offer my compliments to the Member for Calgary-Currie, who certainly, I think, pretty much must have spent his summer meeting with every member of the Legislature, trying to get their support for this bill. I know that that takes a lot of work. It was certainly something that mattered a lot to him, to do something to assist the members of his community.

I think it's an issue. I mean, many members have already outlined the fact that the current authority under the Municipal Government Act may be unclear in terms of whether municipalities can assert this type of authority with derelict developers when that opportunity exists. It seems to me that the public policy issue here is that this clearly relates to communities. It relates to the economic health of communities. It relates to the ability of people on the ground to improve the environment within which they live and also the local economy within which they live. So it's really important that the government that is closest to those issues have the ability to respond to members of the community who would rightly raise issues with them about it when there are problems.

It seems to me that there is certainly nothing that can be negatively . . .

An Hon. Member: Perceived.

Ms Notley: . . . perceived – thank you – or any sort of negative consequence to this bill. It certainly would clarify authority in a way that I think most members of this House believe it ought to be clarified. So that's very useful.

It's interesting, of course, that it appears as though there are really a number of members on both sides of the House that support this bill, so it really is quite unfortunate that we're probably only going to get the bill to second reading with the number of weeks that we've had sitting in the House this year. We're at Bill 207, and I'm afraid that Bill 207 will not . . .

An Hon. Member: Bill 205.

Ms Notley: Oh, sorry. Bill 205. My goodness, we've only gotten to Bill 205 of the private members' bills.

Where we have something that I think everyone can agree is an indication of good public policy, it's unfortunate that we're not able to have enough weeks in the Assembly to actually get it all the way through so that it would become law. Nonetheless, hopefully members of the government will have due regard to the points raised here and the general appearance of consensus on the issue and move forward to bring in this kind of legislation when the opportunity next arises. Certainly, our caucus would support that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on Bill 205?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. You have five minutes to close the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a simple, straightforward piece of legislation. It was specifically designed that way so that it would minimize unforeseen consequences. There are always problems with that happening, potentially, and the simpler, I think, and more straightforward you make a piece of legislation – and this one, in essence, really focuses in on one section, section 546 of the Municipal Government Act – the less chance you have of those unforeseen consequences.

I want to thank members on all sides of the House for speaking in support of this bill. I do believe that it is a good piece of legislation in that it gives clear authority to local governments to solve local problems. I think that's in the interests of all Albertans. I thank everyone in the House for speaking to this bill.

4:10

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has closed the debate. The chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a second time]

Bill 207 Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, please.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and begin second reading debate on Bill 207, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act.

Mr. Speaker, I'm bringing this piece of legislation forward because I believe that it could have a significant, positive effect on senior citizens in Alberta. Bill 207 would provide a fiscal benefit to the hundreds of thousands of seniors living in this province. This would be accomplished through a program that would give seniors the option to defer a portion or all of their residential property taxes. Through introduction by a member of the Executive Council, Bill 207 would grant seniors the opportunity to reallocate money that would normally be paid for property taxes into other areas of their lives.

Of course, certain requirements would need to be met by any senior wishing to take advantage of this program. In order to be eligible for the deferment, the applicant must have lived in this province for at least one year and have at least 25 per cent equity in their home. This is a deferral program, Mr. Speaker, not a grant. These taxes will be paid back in full, with interest, on the sale of the property, the death of the owner, or at any time the property holder wishes.

This bill could help a lot of people in this province. The number of seniors in Alberta grows every year, and it will continue to grow for many years to come. We currently have over 400,000 seniors living here, and this number is expected to double within the next 20 years.

It is of utmost importance that we take the proper steps to ensure that these citizens are comfortable and able to spend their latter years in a manner that best suits them. For many seniors continuing to live in their own home provides them with comfort. By allowing those who are eligible to defer their property taxes, we will be allowing them to keep more of their money in their pockets and to spend it on other priorities. They will be able to use this money on things like utility bills, groceries, medications, upkeep on their homes, and anything else they might need.

Costs of living are rising. This can lead to financial troubles for anyone living on a fixed income but even more so for an individual who may not be able to attain extra income. Seniors don't often have the options that many Albertans do, and that's to look for a higher paying job when times are tough. Whether it's a pension, government transfers, or some other income that they're relying on, the point is that it's often their only option. They don't have the opportunity to apply for a more lucrative pension or negotiate a raise with their boss. Their income is fixed.

Mr. Speaker, this is a government that looks after Albertans. Over the past 40 years we have introduced, implemented, and improved countless programs to lend Albertans a hand when they need it. For example, we have the education property tax assistance program, the affordable supportive living initiative, and the Alberta seniors' benefit, all of which help seniors in this province. The education property tax assistance program has given senior homeowners an annual rebate on the education portion of their property taxes since 2004. For low- and moderate-income seniors or those requiring supportive accommodation along with health and personal care services, we have the affordable supportive living initiative. Some individuals may also be eligible for the Alberta seniors' benefit. This program is based on income, and the amount of the benefit depends on other factors such as the applicant's type of accommodation and marital status.

These are all valuable programs that provide a great benefit to those who meet the requirements, but we can do more, Mr. Speaker. We can allow seniors to defer their property taxes so that they can use this money for immediate necessities. Alberta would not be the first province to introduce such a program. British Columbia currently offers the property tax deferment program. This program allows seniors or persons with disabilities to defer their annual property taxes on their home provided they meet certain criteria. The criteria they set forth are similar to what Bill 207 would require. A few of the B.C. requirements stipulate that a person must be the registered owner of the house, be 55 years or older or a surviving spouse or a person with disabilities, have lived in the province for at least a year, and have a minimum of 25 per cent equity in their home. Like Bill 207 the B.C. program charges interest on the deferrals for as long as the owner chooses to defer the taxes. The deferred taxes must be fully repaid with interest before the home can be sold or upon the death of the agreement holder.

Other provinces have property tax relief programs in place as well. Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, P.E.I., and several other jurisdictions in Canada provide their own variations of seniors' property tax assistance.

Bill 207 is also in stride with Alberta's continuing care strategy, known as aging in the right place. Part of this strategy is to provide Albertans with more options for home-care services and alternatives to strictly facility-based care. By allowing more seniors in need of these services to age in their homes, we will be helping to make this continuing care plan a reality. More seniors will be able to explore options they may not otherwise have available to them should they be forced to leave their homes for financial reasons.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 has a lot of potential. It has the potential to help seniors stay in their homes despite facing increased costs of home ownership and basic costs of living. I've listened to my constituents and the seniors in this province. They want to spend as much time in their homes as possible. Bill 207 would be a step in the right direction.

Seniors enrich our communities, our neighborhoods, and all of our lives. I believe that we should do anything we can to assist these valuable members of our society. That's why I'm in favour of Bill 207 and strongly urge every member of this House to support the seniors' property tax deferral program.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to stand and speak to Bill 207, a very progressive piece of legislation that, of course, the opposition party has been pressing for for a number of years and that, obviously, many other provinces embraced some years ago, including for people with disabilities, which I gather isn't the case in this case. [interjection] They are also included in this bill, the hon. member mentioned. That's good. That's progress

Especially in Alberta, you know, the question of property taxes is a big one and perhaps more so in urban areas than rural areas since the property taxes in rural areas have been frozen since about 1984, I understand, and the property taxes in urban areas have gone up something like 500 per cent over that period of time. So there are real questions among Albertans about just how seniors, particularly, can afford the urban hit that they're getting on property taxes, which has been so significant.

Mr. Speaker, I'm into prevention, as many people know. To ensure that seniors have adequate resources to work with to feed themselves, to transport themselves, to maintain a quality of living, to actually maintain some extra supports in their home based on their own income is critically important to health: mental health, physical health, social health. To be able to sustain themselves in their own homes is so fundamental to health that I think it's a very important thing that we recognize that the public purse can afford deferral of property taxes. Especially for those for whom the education system is hardly relevant anymore, it seems to make a lot of sense to have deferral of tax such as many other provinces have supported.

4:20

It's reasonable criteria that citizens have to be in the province for over a year and have to have something like 25 per cent or more equity in the house. These are some measure of security that there will be continuity and follow-through and the ability to deal with these taxes when the time comes.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberal caucus has been supporting this initiative for many years, and it was part of our policy platform in the '08 election. We certainly support this and feel that it will make a significant difference to seniors and their well-being, their sense of security, and their ability to meet some of the basic needs in their preferred place of residence. I'm pleased to say that at least from this vantage point – and a lot remains to be decided in terms of the details of how this is implemented – from what we have seen so far, I'm impressed that we're moving in the right direction.

Seniors deserve this. They helped create this province. In many cases they have over a lifetime contributed such a substantial amount to our province both in terms of their work and also in terms of their finances and have improved quality of life in this province. We should be making every effort to ensure that they can stay with dignity. Many of them have great difficulty asking for help.

This will anticipate some of the issues that many seniors are facing with the rapid inflation and cost of living that's happened in the last decade in this province. As I say, particularly in the cities, where the market value assessment has shot through the roof on many of the properties, urban seniors are spending so much more than their rural counterparts in terms of property tax. Of course, this has to be taken into consideration at some point and some protection given for these seniors to ensure their optimal well-being.

I look forward with interest to hearing the rest of the debate. These are positive indications, and I'm encouraged by this direction. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to debate Bill 207, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act. Like so many of my colleagues that I've spoken with in the past about this, I'm so pleased that the hon. Member for Red Deer-North has brought this bill forward. It concerns, obviously, a rapidly growing segment of Alberta's population. Our most experienced Albertans, of course, are seniors.

Mr. Speaker, upon introduction of this bill the hon. member rightly pointed out that while the Alberta seniors' population is currently at 400,000 citizens or so, it is expected to rise to well over 600,000 people as early as the year 2020. That translates into a more than 50 per cent jump in less than a decade. Needless to say, that's an enormous change in very little time. This trend is not about to recede as the baby boom generation, those who were born between 1946 and 1965, continues to age.

Now, Mr. Speaker, like the generations before them our seniors generally have no desire to move upon retirement. They want to maintain the high quality of life that they've enjoyed throughout their lives, and I can't think of anything more normal than this deeply entrenched human desire. As we all know, the comfort of a home, especially one we have lived in for so long, is unparalleled. It is only natural to want to stay there for as long as possible, and many seniors do.

For some, especially those who are on a fixed income, moving can rapidly become the only possible solution to financial hardship. I know that this is the problem that the hon. Member for Red Deer-North wanted to tackle when she initiated and introduced this bill. Indeed, Bill 207 brings forth a potential solution to this financial predicament by giving senior individuals the option to defer their annual property taxes if certain criteria are met.

While such a program would be a novelty in Alberta, that's not the case in many other jurisdictions as has been pointed out. As an example, B.C., our provincial neighbour, is facing similar challenges, and like Alberta they're also looking for ways to maintain and improve their senior population's quality of life. Today I'd like to speak just a little about our friends to the west and what they've done with their property tax deferral program, a program akin to the one that the hon. member seeks to implement right here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, B.C.'s property tax deferral program has been in place for some time already, and it does allow seniors and persons with disabilities to defer their annual property taxes on their home if they meet certain requirements, which are well defined, I might add, and I believe that they should be. Obviously, the person must be the registered owner of the home, must be 55 years of age or older, a surviving spouse, or a person with disabilities as defined in the act, which in B.C. is the regulation of the Land Tax Deferment Act. In addition, several other criteria must be met such as Canadian citizenship, B.C. residency, and minimum equity and insurance requirements.

Certain financial restrictions also apply. For example, if a person's application is approved, a $60 administration fee will be charged, and interest, the rate of which is set every six months, is also applicable. This ensures that other taxpayers aren't covering the costs associated with those taking advantage of the program, and that seems only fair. At the moment the interest rate for B.C.'s property tax deferral program is 1 per cent for the period covering April 1 to September 30, 2011. In B.C., Mr. Speaker, deferred taxes must be fully repaid with interest in these instances: one, before the home can be legally transferred to a new owner other than directly to the surviving spouse, that is; or, two, upon the death of the agreement holder or holders. A senior or a person with disabilities may repay all or part of the deferred taxes, fees, and interest at any time without penalty. That's a distinction worth noting.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to mention that B.C. recently implemented two other similar programs but with higher interest rates, which are at 3 per cent each. The first such program, which has since been terminated, was called the financial hardship program. It was offered in 2009 and 2010 at the height of the worst recession Canada had experienced in over 50 years. Given that B.C.'s economy has now largely recovered, it's no longer available. But I suspect that it helped many families along the way. In speaking with a number of friends, especially on Vancouver Island, I know that to be the case.

The other initiative is called the property tax deferment program for families with children. That just started last year. It's a new option, obviously, available to assist families during those years when household costs can be the highest. I know many of us can relate to that. It's more of a loan program that allows families to defer all or part of the annual property taxes on their home for the 2010 and following tax years. Of course, like the regular property tax deferral program certain criteria have to be met in order to be eligible. Again, like the regular property tax deferral program it's meant to give families in need some financial flexibility. It is not and should not be seen as a way to avoid one's tax responsibilities indefinitely.

Now, these tax deferral programs appear to be working well given that they've been in place for a while now. Similarly, the fact that B.C. has implemented more than one such program is surely an indication of success.

Mr. Speaker, supporting our most vulnerable is the intent behind Bill 207, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act. As I mentioned before, it targets a large, growing segment of our population. Given that seniors are among the most at risk when it comes to financial hardship, certain ones specifically, it makes a lot of sense to alleviate, if only temporarily, their financial burden so that they can enjoy their retirement, that they've worked their whole life for.

4:30

I know that this bill was introduced for all the right reasons. I also think that further debate would be worth while on this subject because what works in B.C. won't necessarily work here in Alberta. At the very least, we have to set our own parameters, a made-in-Alberta solution, so that such a program would suit the specific needs of the elderly population and the fiscal capacity of our taxpayers. Ultimately, one of my biggest concerns is that some individuals might become overreliant on such deferral programs and might overextend themselves by pushing back something that may be inevitable in the long run.

But let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. None of my concerns are insurmountable. In fact, overall I know that this is a good bill, especially considering the history of the author. For this reason I'd like to commend the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for her great work on this matter, and I encourage my colleagues from all sides of the House and everyone in the Assembly to continue this debate as I believe it will ultimately serve our experienced Albertans, our seniors, that we owe great respect and thanks to.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak on Bill 207, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act. This is certainly an interesting private member's bill. I appreciate the opportunity to speak, and I also appreciate the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne's interest in this matter.

There have been many proposals to help seniors out with their property taxes. There have been many, many different plans discussed over the years that I've been here on: what's the best way of helping out? For some seniors who are retired for a while, of course, their pensionable income gets eroded because of cost-of-living increases, tax increases, power bills. There are a number of pressures on the disposable income of seniors, and this is one way of helping them. The city of Edmonton has a program. It's a rather modest program, but it's a little bit of a help. There's no denying that.

Whenever we look at what's going to happen with the review of the Municipal Government Act, at how property taxes are going to be affected by that — as I understand it, there is a review of the Municipal Government Act going on now; another hon. member referred to it in the discussion and debate on the last private member's bill that was before us this afternoon. The Municipal Government Act provides the legislative framework, as hon. members are aware, for Alberta's system of municipal government, including the property tax system. The review that is to take place over the next couple of years will include public consultations. I know the Minister of Finance is very proud of the recent public consultations behind closed doors that he held. Certainly, this would be an area of interest.

This bill I could certainly support to defer tax requests or tax payments until a number of issues could be addressed or settled. I have no problem with that. Certainly, hon. members have talked about what happens in British Columbia. In British Columbia there are also exemptions from the education portion of the property tax for seniors. That would be a broader discussion, Mr. Speaker. Property tax in this province, as we know, is made up of two different areas, the municipal property tax and, of course, the provincial education property tax. What we're talking about here is the municipal property tax or that portion of the requisition.

Now, we collect over $1.6 billion in education property tax across the province on residential and farm property and nonresidential property, and the total tax bill for property taxes is significantly higher than that. I think it's in excess of — and I could be corrected on this — $4 billion or better. I certainly would like to know from the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne: how much does the hon. member anticipate that this program would defer? How exactly would this affect the entire property tax requisition or collection, as they would say? I'm just interested in a few more details than have been provided to date on this.

It doesn't seem like a bad idea. It would certainly give seniors one more option, and it's a good option. I certainly would like to see this come into force. I would like to see it passed by this Assembly and become the law of the province.

I would like to know how we would administer this, how much that would cost, and who is going to administer it. These are questions, I suspect, that the hon. member has a quick answer and a correct answer for. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, Bill 207, as I understand it, would be one more option, a good option, for seniors in this province, and I think it's time that we consider that.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind hon. members that we don't have an aging population in this province. I know it's easy for some hon. members of this House to stand up, particularly on the government side, and blame seniors for health care costs and the escalation of those costs, but we all know that there's between 10 and 11 per cent of the total population over 65. British Columbia and Saskatchewan have a larger number of seniors than we have, and they seem to be able to control and manage their health care costs much, much better than we can in this province.

The three youngest cities, according to the census of metropolitan areas from Stats Canada, again, are Saskatoon, followed by Edmonton, followed by Calgary. In Edmonton and Calgary the average age is around 36 years, the same age as the Solicitor General. I'm sure the minister of seniors and community supports would like to be that age again.

Mr. VanderBurg: Agreed.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Speaker, if you look at the Alberta Health Services annual report, you will see where for the last three years there have been over 50,000 babies born in Alberta hospitals. We don't have an aging population, and it's unfair for some on the government side to blame the mismanagement in Alberta Health Services and in health care for this population increase, supposedly, in seniors. Only 10, 11 per cent of the population is currently over 65, and they're not driving up health care costs. It's this policy or this ideology of this government that, in my view, is the problem.

This bill does give our seniors one more option, one more choice. If they want to defer their property taxes and we have a system that's in place to do that that's not cumbersome, well, then let's do it.

Thank you very much.

4:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to thank the Member for Red Deer-North for carrying on her commitment to the seniors of Alberta. It's an interesting way that this bill has progressed in the Legislature. It's one of a kind in all of Canada. There's never been a private member that's been able to pass a bill to a previous minister and that member that sponsored the bill be the new minister. It's a real tag team that we have in the Legislature working together on this important piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the previous member talked a lot about having another option for seniors and went on to talk about the health care issues. Let's get it very straight and very clear that this bill is all about keeping seniors in their homes longer. Right now a lot of our investments in our own personal portfolios have gone south, and if we can give the opportunity for seniors today in Alberta to be able to pull some of the equity out of their homes by having a tax deferral program, it's a great option.

I go back to when my mom was alive. In Whitecourt her little 750-square-foot house had a small property tax from the town of Whitecourt for $1,200. It wasn't a lot of money by the standard of a lot of homes, but it was $1,200 that she had to budget her hundred dollars a month for, and she was proud to do that. Many times I worried that mom's budget was so close that she wasn't buying the groceries and making the expenditures that she needed to make to keep independent and stay in her home. My brother and my sister and I would often tell her: "Well, mom, don't worry about it. We'll pay your taxes for you." But, no, our seniors wanted to be independent, and they didn't want help from others. I know that if a program like this had existed, mom would have taken advantage of it, and she would have deferred her property taxes, but being independent and wanting to do things on her own, she said: "No. You know, I can manage my own funds, and I can pay my own bills. You kids don't have to pay my bills."

She made her way, and I know her friends made their way, especially those single widows. There was quite a group of them that lived in their own homes and were proud to live in their own homes. But I listened intently to their conversations, and if there had been a government program, I know that they would have taken part in it.

The previous member talked a bit about expenditures. This will cost the government some money to set up, but eventually, you know, with a low, modest interest rate charged to the applicant, this program will carry itself, and this program over time will prove to be one of the most valuable programs we have to keep seniors in their own homes, to keep them independent. I think that it will be very, very well received. I know that it was a slow start-up in British Columbia, but a year and a year and a year come on, and more and more people sign on to this program.

As the new Minister of Seniors I am excited about this bill. I'm excited that it finally got to this point in the Legislature. I know it has wide support from members on both sides of the House, and I'm proud that we can talk about a bill that we all are excited about.

Mr. Speaker, once again, I want to say a thank you to the previous Minister of Seniors. I'm excited that she's excited about this bill, and I'm excited that all of you here are going to be supportive of this bill in the vote.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak on this bill, and I'll only do so briefly. It is a bill that includes in it some worthwhile components that, obviously, will in certain circumstances represent a hand and a level of support to seniors in our province. While it's certainly not close to being part of the kind of comprehensive seniors' support system that our caucus has been calling for for some time, it is a small, small step in that direction or a direction towards helping seniors in some small way.

When I first got elected I met with a lot of seniors quite regularly, and they were always very keen to remind me at the very outset about how they had lost their education tax exemption under Ralph Klein and they had all banded together and supported the need for the province to make serious cuts and for citizens in the province to sustain serious cuts as we all sort of worked together in order to balance the budget. Many of them at the time were supportive of those kinds of cuts.

What has happened, of course, is that up until fairly recently the budget was balanced. In the meantime we've been slowly reducing corporate taxes per cent by per cent by per cent each year. We've actually reduced the royalties that we collect from oil and gas producers in this province over the course of the last two or three years. So we've reduced taxes for the wealthy and for major corporations.

We've given back to them, Mr. Speaker, but we have not yet ever given back to seniors in the way that they believe they were promised back when former Premier Klein talked the majority of Albertans into believing they needed to tolerate grand and substantial cuts to our social support systems in this province to the extent that we are still recovering from those cuts and still feeling the symptoms of those very thoughtless cuts 20 years later. It has to be sort of looked at within that context, that that's what's happened here.

When you also consider that it's being done in the context of a Premier who has basically announced that she's going to take the cap off of long-term care fees so that if these seniors should be in a position that they are compelled to leave the house, that they may have lived in with any luck for 10, 20, 30 years after they retired, to go to a place where they need more support, those seniors will be paying much more than they were before. In the words of this Premier: seniors who have money should pay their fair share, and then we'll have, you know, little sort of special subsidies for those at the very, very, very lowest of the income rate.

Basically, what we're going to find is that in many cases these seniors will go to sell their houses in order to finance their transition to one of these now ridiculously expensive seniors' homes, which have been allowed to develop under the plan of this government to have the private sector develop our seniors' care regime and to do so with almost no limits on how much they can charge, and then, of course, they will have to first pay back the government for the property taxes that they didn't pay, that they used to not have to pay before Ralph Klein got into power. Yes, I know it was a long time ago that Ralph Klein was in power, but I hate to break it: this is the same government. We are still dealing with the downfall of those decisions 20 years later. Even though it is 20 years later, it's the same government, so the responsibility for those policies still rests at the feet of this government.

When you put it all together, what you do see is a wealth shift from seniors to the government and then through the government to the wealthy and to large corporations within this province. That's the situation that they're going to create. They will be asking seniors to fund far greater and greater levels of their own care as we go forward. That's clearly the plan of the new Premier. She has been very open that she thinks that's the model that we should use.

4:50

While this will be of some assistance in allowing seniors to manage those increased pressures and those increased demands on their relatively smaller pocketbooks, it is still just that. It's something done in the context of a government that refuses to look at the wealthier Albertans who've been benefiting for decades from an ill-thought-out flat tax and refuses to look at a royalty regime which is, without question, the lowest in the developed world, that leaves the most in the pockets of multinational oil and gas companies at the expense of Albertans and in this particular case, in this example, at the expense of Alberta seniors.

I do believe that both the original mover of the bill and the current mover of the bill are doing what they can to provide some assistance to seniors, but I think it's important historically to examine the context in which this is happening. While those particular members were not part of the decisions which took so much from seniors in the '90s and restructured our tax system so that lower and middle-income Albertans are paying more taxes than wealthy Albertans and large corporations, overall this is within that context, and it should be seen as such.

I appreciate the members for what I think are their best intentions. Of course, I would certainly never vote against a bill that would give some assistance to seniors, but I think we can do more, and I think we can do better. I think we need to reverse the long-term trends that this government has been leading at the expense of Alberta's families over at least a couple of decades now.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to be able to rise today and speak to Bill 207, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act, which is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. First of all, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for all the hard work she put into this bill.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 provides an opportunity to help some of our most treasured citizens: seniors. We all know how valuable seniors are and have been to our communities and to our province. Because of this, defending and protecting their interests is always a priority, and I can assure you that our government takes great pride in looking out for our seniors. The objective of this bill is to establish a property tax deferral program where Alberta seniors can defer all or a portion of their residential property taxes and can pay them back any time.

It is very important to remember that seniors have played such an important role in making our province and our country what they are today. As they age, they should both be helped and recognized for the many contributions they have made. Bill 207 could go a long way toward helping meet this outcome. Mr. Speaker, quite simply, our population is aging, and our government is already preparing for that reality.

On a personal note, I am in full support of those initiatives that help make the lives of our seniors better. The bigger question, perhaps, is whether or not Bill 207 and its financial implication of allowing seniors to defer their property taxes will truly accomplish this. I believe that this issue is a very worthwhile one to be discussing today.

[The Speaker in the chair]

With that, I would like to conclude my comments on Bill 207. I fully support this. Once again I would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for her work on this piece of legislation and for bringing it before us today.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to the remainder of the debate.

Mrs. Ady: Mr. Speaker, I'll just be very brief. I also want to support this bill. As I look at my husband's grandparents, who lived in their home 70 years and were able to be very healthy and happy there but saw their taxes rise and the value of their home rise to the point where they were having a difficult time affording it, I think this is the right way and the right motion.

The Speaker: Are there additional speakers?

Mr. Xiao: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I also just want to add my voice in support of this bill. There are a lot of seniors in my riding. Especially those seniors who have lost their spouses, have been living in the house for decades, and are living on a fixed income: I think this would relieve the financial pressure on those seniors. We have a lot of seniors we call house poor because of the escalating values of the house. The house is worth a lot of money, but the income has still not changed.

I'd like to add my voice to the support of the bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional speakers?

Shall I call on the Member for Red Deer-North then to close the debate?

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to hear other members in our Assembly supporting this bill. I think this is a very good option that we could put forward for our seniors, so I would just ask everyone to support this bill.

I look forward to having that vote now, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a second time]

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, it's three minutes to 5. Of course, 5 o'clock is when we will be discussing the private member's motion. I would ask for unanimous consent of the House so that we could begin this now.

The Speaker: Is anyone opposed? If so, say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Motions Other than Government Motions

Statement by the Speaker

Anticipation and Possible Duplication of Private Member's Motion 508 and Bill 23

The Speaker: The clock for 60 minutes will begin now. Prior to doing that, hon. members, my attention has been drawn to a similarity between Motion other than a Government Motion 508 and Bill 23, the Land Assembly Project Area Amendment Act, 2011, which is currently before the Assembly at third reading.

The issue arises because of the principle that the Assembly should not consider the same question twice in the same session and that the motion would violate the rule against anticipation found in Standing Order 23(e) and referred to in Beauchesne, sixth edition, paragraphs 512, 513, and 566(7). In short, the precedent is that a bill supersedes a motion on the same subject.

The chair notes that in recent years there has been a tendency to be more lenient when it comes to applying these rules to private members' business. The chair addressed this issue on May 1, 2006, at page 1150 of Alberta Hansard for that day with respect to a private member's motion on fixed election dates and a private member's bill on the same subject, and allowed the motion to proceed.

In this case, while the motion is on the same subject, the specific issues addressed in the motion differ from those in Bill 23. For instance, Motion 508 refers to amendments to the provincial constitution, and there is nothing in the bill on this subject. Also, the motion calls for the repeal of certain acts, but the bill does not repeal the statutes. The chair is not clear as to whether compensation for all forms of property loss are covered in the bill.

As noted in the chair's May 1, 2006, ruling, there is a tendency, not just in Alberta, to be more lenient in allowing private members to present their motions. An analogy is presented in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, at page 560.

An exception has been allowed, however, in the case of an opposition motion on a supply day related to the subject matter of a bill already before the House. Under the normal application of the rule, the Chair would refuse the motion because it ranks as inferior to a bill. The Speaker has nonetheless ruled that the opposition prerogative in the use of an allotted day is very broad and ought to be interfered with only on the clearest and most certain of procedural grounds.

On April 26, 2005, at page 1034 of Alberta Hansard for that day, the chair ruled a private member's motion out of order that dealt with the same subject as a private member's bill that had received third reading the previous day. In this case, Bill 23 has not received third reading.

As stated many times in this Assembly, the chair interprets the rules to give private members the greatest possible latitude in presenting their motions and bills. The process for private members' motions is such that the draw was held in June of 2010, the motion was submitted in early 2011, and it is coming before the Assembly now. The originating member had no idea that Bill 23 would be on the horizon when his name was drawn or when he submitted his motion. The chair has always supported giving private members the greatest leeway consistent with the rules and will do so again.

In this case, the chair notes that there may be certain points that are similar between the motion and Bill 23. This is not a time during which members get another opportunity to debate the principles of Bill 23, which have already been approved by this Assembly with second reading approval. Accordingly, if members choose to debate the provisions of the bill during debate on this motion, they will be reminded that this is not appropriate and should refrain from discussing the bill and address the motion. In other words, we're dealing now with Motion 508, not with Bill 23.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

5:00

Property Loss Compensation

508. Mr. Boutilier moved on behalf of Mr. Hinman:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation to repeal the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the Alberta Land Assembly Project Area Act and entrench property rights in the constitution of Alberta to ensure all forms of property loss are compensated fairly, with recourse to courts.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think your words are wise words.

As mentioned, I know the Member for Calgary-Glenmore certainly appreciates the opportunity for Motion 508. He's very disappointed that at this time he's not able to speak, but certainly later on he perhaps will.

This issue is very dear to my heart. It calls for the repeal of Bill 19 and Bill 36 as was mentioned a few moments ago. The core of the land-use framework, certainly, is believed to be somewhat disastrous. It is clear that citizens of Alberta view this as flawed and also unnecessary.

Now, I know the government has spent quite a bit of time in the last couple of years bringing things forward. I know that the government is trying to fix a variety of issues. I'm not expecting, you know, members of the House to wholeheartedly come and support this. But I want to say to members from all sides that just because we've spent a lot of time on a particular bill doesn't mean it ultimately has to be used. A wise man doesn't just work hard; he works smart. When I say man, of course, that implies man or woman. We in today's society want to work smart. I don't see much of the former or the latter.

If you want to show Albertans that you're listening, I think it's so important that repealing specific initiatives of the government is, certainly, a good way to go, particularly Bill 19 and Bill 36. This Motion 508 obviously recognizes that it went too far. Thanks to Albertans as a whole and people like the learned Albertan Keith Wilson, certainly a very prolific legal mind, who have continued to pressure people when it comes to getting it right. The motion is really intended in the spirit of getting it right.

The changes that the government has made are just simply not enough. The only things that makes the changes to Bill 19 worth supporting – and this is a positive – are the places where you say that it is subject to the Expropriation Act. Well, that's exactly what we told you to do. The Expropriation Act has the protections for landowners, and that should be all you really need.

Sometimes in public office there's a tendency to overcomplicate things, and Motion 508 is really an example of: let's just keep it simple. We have an Expropriation Act in play that will satisfy and protect the needs of landowners, and nothing more should have to be done. So just go a step further in repealing the act and let the already existing Alberta act, the Expropriation Act, do its job. It's simple. It's not complicated based on what has taken place over the last few years. Maybe make some alterations for long-term projects if you need to do so.

The Land Assembly Project Area Act still has too much centralization to it. It's a common trend of the government. We've seen that when we lost the local health authorities that are now being run by an Alberta Health Services superboard, when in actual fact it's another example of centralization.

We believe in from the roots up. The Wildrose caucus believes in from the roots up. We believe Motion 508 is from the roots up, listening to Albertans and people like Keith Wilson, as opposed to from the sky down. The sky down is a more centralized approach, a centralized approach that is losing touch with the community as a whole.

I believe that if we go forward, it lets the ministry come up with all of these big plans for future projects, and hundreds of Alberta landowners have these big restrictions put on their land because 20 years down the road the bureaucrats or the public officials of that time in Edmonton might want to do a project in this area. I'm all for planning ahead. In fact, my mantra is: not only do we want to be down the road; we want to be around the corner. But when you go around the corner, you don't want to hit a brick wall or be in an alleyway, where there is nothing but a dumpster.

We believe that Motion 508 is an important motion in terms of gathering evidence and gathering data from Albertans. I would humbly say that government members may want to really carefully listen to what Albertans are saying relative to this regarding repealing existing legislation. I'm all for planning, but I think there has to be a better way to do it.

Now, I know that as we reviewed this situation out there – I've sat, of course, on the government side at a cabinet table. They had a hassle putting the land for the ring roads together, so they said: hey; let's just put through a law that makes this a lot easier for us. That is wrong. What it means is that you're not listening to the grassroots. Rather, you're taking the easier way, from a centralized approach, from the sky down. I believe that approach is wrong. The government had to pretend for years that it was a green space that they were protecting around Edmonton and Calgary so that they could use environmental laws to secure the transportation and utility corridors. Between that type of trickery and these overcentralized laws, Mr. Speaker, there has to be a better way, and that is the purpose of this motion.

The same can be said times 10 when it comes to the Land Stewardship Act. This bill gives radical powers to the cabinet to shape whole regions. It really dismisses local capital at the local level. As you all know, under the Municipal Government Act local authorities certainly have greater capital in understanding what goes on at the local level than some bureaucrat in Edmonton under their centralized domain.

I know as well as anyone that in the so-called lower Athabasca region, which starts at Lac La Biche and Cold Lake and comes through the north end of the Wood Buffalo region, that I'm very proud to have formed with my council when we formed the first regional council of Wood Buffalo 15 years ago on April 1 – the limited knowledge of centralized planners from within the bureaucracy of ministries and government. It is beyond belief how little they know. That is certainly something that is very troubling.

This flawed plan, I believe, will affect me and my wife and our four-year-old son in my own backyard, you know, where I play with my son.

Wise men say that a failure to plan is a plan to fail, but sometimes the worst plans have the best intentions and are done with purpose. I think that this originally was an oversight. They thought they were doing what was best for Albertans. Obviously, what has transpired if you look – history is such a good teacher – over the past couple of years is that it's been clear that this is flawed.

You can't possibly see the harm. At first, no one disagreed. Isn't it ironic how a powerful government, that doesn't listen from the roots up, was surrounded by what I refer to as yes-men? But one man did stand up against this government, this Goliath, as I refer to it. His name wasn't David; it was Keith Wilson. I applaud this Albertan for all that he has done. He's travelled this province tirelessly like a marathon runner, with his 16-year-old son. He doesn't belong to any political parties, and he is doing it for the right reason because he feels he is on the right side of right. You know, it is certainly a good feeling to be on the right side.

5:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Could the chair get some indication of how many members might wish to participate to try and work them all in? Okay. We'll go, then, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, then the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 508 brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. Like the rest of my colleagues I appreciate the hon. member's interest in land-use planning, and as always I feel privileged to join the debate on such an important issue. Today I would like to address, in particular, the part of this motion that would urge the government to repeal the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the Land Assembly Project Area Act. I would like to share a point of view that I think reflects the perspective of the majority of people in our province.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot stress enough the importance of properly managing Alberta's precious resources. Our vast mineral, hydrocarbon, land, and water resources have been a boon to this province for well over a century, and it would be unfortunate if future generations of Albertans were not to enjoy the same benefits that we do. In this day and age governments around the world understand that effective land-use planning and land stewardship are critical to ensuring the sustainability of our resources, especially in fast-growth areas like Alberta.

Indeed, Alberta is undergoing tremendous demographic changes as our economic and industrial output grows. In fact, between 1996 and 2006 Alberta's population growth rate was more than 10 per cent, double the national average of 5 per cent. This is largely for the best. Growth has brought many advantages to the people of our province. One only needs to look at our very high standard of living, one of the highest in the world, in fact, to see how we all benefit from this economic and demographic expansion. Because of growth our largest cities are becoming more multicultural and international. Demographic and economic change also brings new ideas, technologies, and perspectives to Alberta. This is all great news for our province, especially in the context of the global economy.

But, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that while our population and industrial base continue to expand, our provincial boundaries do not. This is the challenge our government sought to resolve when we introduced our new and enhanced land-use planning framework, including the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the Land Assembly Project Area Act. As time has gone on, we have been able to see how this legislation fits in with landowners' and government's objectives.

In response to this feedback small amendments have been made to fine-tune this important piece of legislation, helping to ensure our land-use framework will meet the needs of Albertans now and in the future. In passing Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, residents directly affected by the regional plans can request a review of that plan. The amendments also make it even more clear that property and other rights will continue to be respected and that the Alberta Land Stewardship Act does not limit any existing rights to compensation or appeal. Instead, the act gives our province a long-term plan to ensure that our precious natural resources are managed in a responsible way. If we repeal this legislation, we will effectively be passing on the burden of managing our resources to the next generation of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, it is to be expected that implementing a modern land-use planning framework will require some changes in the way we approach land development. Our government and our residents recognize that need, and together we continue to move forward in improving our land stewardship, first with bills 19 and 36 and now with bills 10 and 23. In fact, it seems that it is only the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore and his hon. colleagues who do not recognize the need to protect and responsibly manage our landscape.

Mr. Speaker, finding the most effective way to manage our land use requires extensive consultation with stakeholders and Albertans. After all, this is an extremely important issue that affects every one of us. This government has already done a great deal in this regard, and under the leadership of our new Premier we are ramping up this consultation even more. In fact, just last month a brand new property rights task force was established, with the objective of talking with Albertans about property rights to find out what is important to them.

Finally and very importantly, maintaining straightforward and groundbreaking land-use legislation is for the benefit of all Albertans. For example, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act creates new conservation and stewardship tools to protect natural heritage sites and landscapes, and the Alberta Land Assembly Project Area Act helps us to plan for the long-term success of the province by enabling the government to buy land for large-scale, long-term transportation and water management projects like ring roads and reservoirs.

What this act also does is outline for Albertans the procedure they may follow to sell their lands to the province, helping them to be aware of their rights to compensation and mediation. Ultimately, Mr. Speaker – and I hope the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore would recognize this – the end goal of the land-use planning framework is to maintain and improve Albertans' quality of life. It is also about upholding our values and projecting them to the world. Alberta is a beautiful, innovative, democratic, energetic, and environmentally sensitive province. Let's make sure we and the rest of the world continue to view us that way.

Mr. Speaker, after what I just said, I hope that the hon. member recognizes the necessity of modernizing our land-use planning framework. Failing to do so would inhibit growth in our province in the long term and would likely affect the quality of life of our children and grandchildren. This government is determined not to let that happen. I can say with confidence that we will not repeal this legislation, like the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore proposes. This would not be in the best interests of our province or our residents.

I would once again like to thank the hon. member for his work on this matter, but I will be voting against this motion, and I encourage all others in this Assembly to also vote against it, to reject the hon. member's backward vision for our province, and to join our new Premier in building Alberta tomorrow.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise to speak to the private member's motion, Motion 508, intent on repealing the Land Stewardship Act and the Land Assembly Project Area Act.

I must say that I do have some sympathy with the spirit of this motion, having watched as this government in the '80s, I think it was, destroyed the regional planning councils, councils that were designed specifically to help us deal with longer term planning issues – the rural-urban and the interface between rural and urban planning – a seriously regressive step that we're still paying a huge price for today in terms of conservation opportunities, water management, and, of course, better land-use planning in the province. We're now playing catch-up some 20 years later, and it's unfortunate that we have come to this.

5:20

I will say that the government has been attempting through public hearings over the past number of years to address some of these issues and running up against some serious conflicts, as one would expect, and it's the reason why we need a thoughtful and trusted government that's dealing with the long-term public interest, that's reflecting in its hearings, in its processes, and in its legislation a trust and an integrity that people will honour and participate in actively.

Unfortunately, as we saw in some of the hearings, there was suspicion, there was undermining, and there was even the planting of people in the hearings that, evidence shows, were trying to undermine the public input, undermine the due process, and subvert especially the issues around a utility corridor in the past couple of years. This was blown wide open and raised again some serious questions around the processes, the integrity, the ability of the government to build a sense of listening and trust within the community. It has therefore been accused, and rightly so, of subverting the public hearing process around the power line issue.

It forced it back into the public domain and forced it back now into the position where they're trying to change the legislation that they brought in and fix what perhaps was not so egregious before seeing the lack of direction and the lack of authentic public consultation but since then has thrown a lot of this into disrepute and serious distrust issues.

Along with that is, I guess, an awareness in Alberta of the growing sense of power and control in a government that's had 40 years to consolidate power, to build very close ties with vested interests, to maintain financial pathways to their party and to their decisions around commissions and agencies and all the different elected officials that sustain a government that's lost touch with the people, lost touch with what is an authentic consultation process, and truly undermined the trust of a lot of Albertans in some of these most central areas that government needs to have trust in.

If they're going to take land, if they're going to plan for the future, if they're going to benefit some and cost others, they need trust. They need the ability to say to people: "We are thinking about the long-term well-being of the province. We're thinking about the management of our water. We're thinking about both industrial and commercial and individual citizens' well-being into the future." We're seeing this erode over time because of some of the efforts in a number of ministries, not only Infrastructure but the cabinet itself, increasingly centralizing power and control and making decisions on the basis of what looks like a vested interest or, at least, not listening to the public input and in some cases subverting the public interest.

While I have a lot of support for governments making decisions for the long term, planning ahead, having a vision for how this property called Alberta is going to be managed, how we're going to ensure lasting, good decisions in terms of our public transportation, our waterways, our residential developments, our parks, our protected areas, and utility corridors, all of these, we have to as government be able to make those decisions in the long-term public interest and show in a transparent way what the bigger plan is. It's for that reason, in fact, that I and many in our caucus supported Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. It showed some planning, some vision, some willingness to look at the river systems as key to all development that occurs in the province and ensured that we brought to bear the regional interests, the public interest, the public input into those plans. I am one who supported that Bill 36 as progressive legislation and would prefer to not see that repealed.

I think I can support some of the concerns around the Land Assembly Project Area Act, Bill 19, and its rather draconian efforts to not only, as they call it, sterilize a property for years – limit the development on that property, limit the compensation for that individual for that planned expropriation – but also limit their ability to appeal and the due process of the courts in that.

In some ways we're seeing before us in the Legislature a willingness to deal with some of those shortcomings, but I guess that, from my perspective, the government has come to this place, come to this impasse because of a failure to do the right thing for Albertans in the process of establishing these acts. Now we're trying to deal piecemeal with various concerns around them.

This particular motion, while it touches a lot of heartfelt issues in Alberta and has a lot of support across especially rural Alberta, where many of the biggest impacts may be felt, I think it touches on the very heart of what government is there to do for people, and that is to build a sense of trust, to establish a process where people feel they can participate in a meaningful way, where there's a process of appeal and recourse to the courts where people feel they have been wronged, and it gives people a sense of confidence that we have a bigger plan and that we're moving in that direction in the best interests of our long-term well-being.

While I have some reservations about this motion and, specifically, in relation to lumping the two acts together – I think there are some positive features of Bill 36 – I can certainly concur that Bill 19, the land assembly act, is fraught with problems, the most fundamental of which is the loss of trust that this government has experienced as a result of its ways and means of going forward in land-use development in this province; in particular, their lack of consideration for property rights and due process.

I will be interested in listening further to the debate, and I look forward to making my decision. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, and then Strathcona.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and speak in favour of the Member for Calgary-Glenmore's motion. I know this issue, of course, is very important to him and to all Albertans, certainly, in rural Alberta. He has certainly been a passionate advocate of property rights and should be commended for that.

His motion reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation to repeal the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the Alberta Land Assembly Project Area Act and entrench property rights in the constitution of Alberta to ensure all forms of property loss are compensated fairly, with recourse to courts.

This is a straightforward proposal. Clearly, it presupposes that we will be passing a constitution in Alberta, which is something that is certainly one of the policies of the Wildrose, in order to better enshrine the individual rights and property rights of Albertans in our great province. This, generally, is a straightforward proposal.

The government rushed through some pretty major pieces of legislation in 2009, not even giving their own MLAs much of a chance to review them and raise many questions at all, specifically with regard to Bill 36. The folks at the cabinet table thought they could get away with three quick bills that would centralize power, but they've realized now that they can't. What's changed? Well, by the end of 2009 the Wildrose had come onto the scene in a big way with our first MLA, Paul Hinman, and the election of our new leader, Danielle Smith.

5:30

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Anderson: Oh, sorry. My bad. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore. You're absolutely correct.

One thing these two great Albertans have in common is a passion for property rights. From the end of 2009 until the end of 2010 the growing numbers of Wildrose MLAs and supporters did their best to ensure that every Albertan knew about the big power grab behind these bills. It worked, and the PC government has been backpedalling ever since.

This motion doesn't mention Bill 50, the power line bill, which I had a motion earlier in the year regarding, but I'll say a few words about how it is similar to others at the end of this if there's time. The motion does call for repeal of bills 36 and 19, also known as the Land Stewardship Act and the Land Assembly Project Area Act. These two pieces of legislation put a tremendous amount of power in the hands of cabinet and the provincial bureaucracy.

Bill 19 was about giving the ministry sweeping powers to write up cabinet orders and put restrictions on land the government might want to use in the future for a big project. Because they hadn't committed to it yet and weren't actually kicking you off your land, they didn't need to use the Expropriation Act, which has pretty good protections for landowners. Instead, they gave you a short window after the announcement to decide if you wanted to sell. If you didn't, you'd have to live indefinitely with whatever restrictions the government put on your land until they decided whether or not to expropriate your land. Good luck selling or remortgaging a piece of land that the government has said you can't develop or make improvements on.

Why would they do this? Well, they were finding it a real hassle to negotiate with landowners whenever they wanted to secure the land for a big project, so they wrote this law in such a way that government had lots of power and landowners didn't. Problem solved, for the government that is. But that's where the problem actually started. This bill was such a naked power grab and showed so little respect for landowners that a few activists like Keith Wilson along with a surging new party were able to easily explain how offensive this bill was to landowners. Boy, did it ever take root.

After two years of this government insisting over and over that there was nothing wrong with these bills, denying and deflecting and accusing people of fearmongering and so forth, this fall we're looking at Bill 23, which makes major amendments to Bill 19. While most of the amendments to this bill we feel are good, they don't fix everything, but of course, with deference to the Speaker, I'll move on from speaking too much about Bill 23 today.

The amendments that are good work because they put most of the compensation clauses under the Expropriation Act. We said from the beginning that the Expropriation Act is what these activities should take place under. If you need to make a few changes to the Expropriation Act for long-term proposed projects, well, then that's a discussion that we should have, but you don't need to override it with the land assembly act. We said that Bill 19 was unnecessary then, and after going through these amendments this fall, we are even more sure of it now.

This is not the first time this government has tried one of these quickie bills that centralize power and then had to backtrack after the good people of Alberta caught wind of what they were up to. In fact, this spring the only legislation of any note was Bill 10, which similarly had some pretty major amendments to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, or Bill 36.

This one followed a similar pattern. The government came under attack when people realized what it meant. The government insisted over and over that it was just fearmongering by critics and that there was nothing to be concerned about, nothing at all, except that they realized that nobody, especially in rural Alberta, was believing them. They knew that Keith Wilson, the Wildrose, and other critics were right. Again, it was easy to persuade Albertans because the legislation was so one-sided in favour of the government over landowners that it was perfectly clear what the government was up to.

So they sheepishly brought forward Bill 10 this spring to try and answer these concerns. But unlike Bill 19, which they were able to approve by cutting big chunks of it under the Expropriation Act, this one was a lot harder to fix, and they are still a long, long way from fixing it. There is still a huge stick the cabinet wields over landowners and municipalities when it comes to regional planning, and there is still inadequate compensation for those affected by centralized decisions.

Nothing is more fundamental to economic growth than a respect for property. When the government can take your land rights away on a whim or even with the noblest project in mind and not compensate you fully, it makes people very jittery, and so it should. People investing money like to know that there is stability in the place where they are investing. Economic trends are difficult enough to predict, but what gave Alberta an advantage over other jurisdictions was that people used to have faith that our government respected our property rights among other principles. This government lately has severely undermined this reputation. The attempts to amend these bills this year prove that this government only respects property if hundreds of thousands of Albertans catch them in the act of taking them away and get angry at them. Then they all of a sudden are the huge defenders of property rights.

The way this government can admit they were wrong, the only way for this new Premier to really break with the past, is to repeal these bills, every single one of them. They are not necessary. As with the Expropriation Act for land the government needs to take for big public projects in Bill 19, we had acts in place for Bill 36 that managed the balance between growth and environmental and sustainability concerns.

The Water Act, for example, combined with other acts related to the environment ministry have adequate provisions for protecting our watersheds. If they need improvement, then we can improve them. We don't need a whole separate act. It's been working for decades. In fact, this avenue for allocating water use is superior for a number of reasons. For one thing it combines the local knowledge of capacity and needs with the best scientific awareness of ecological needs in the environmental department. These combine to produce something reliable and consistent, namely water licensing. Bill 36 overrides all of that with the stroke of a pen of the central planners in the ministers' offices. Water licences are suddenly of uncertain worth under this bill because the SRD minister is now empowered to extinguish or – pardon me; there was a change to the wording – rescind those water licence rights.

We recognize that there is a need for some greater regional planning, but the premise of this bill was wrong from the start. We need to go back to the drawing board and develop a truly regional planning process, not a centralized provincial planning process. The process that the Wildrose advocates for would see regional representatives at the table consulting and actually making the decisions in co-operation with neighbouring regions. Consultation is not enough. The decisions need to be made at the regional table, not at the cabinet table.

Besides the fact that most things were functioning pretty well before these bills, there's another reason we know they aren't necessary; namely, that no other province has these two twin towers of central government planning. Other provinces have rivers and ecosystems, other provinces have big industry, other provinces have growth, but other provinces use a balanced approach to managing these things. Other provinces think that it's inappropriate to have this much power concentrated in one body, namely cabinet. Other provinces would have the humility to know that this would be a dangerous power grab that could get them thrown out of office.

Other provinces respect the fact that competing business and residential and environmental needs have to be worked out one by one and that it can't always be just easy to do. It's not easy because there are two groups with legitimate aims, the landowner trying to make the most of his land and the government trying to manage a bigger picture. That's why there needs to be a third party to settle the disputes when the two can't come to an agreement.

This government, though, always thinks that it knows best, so it doesn't like third parties with any kind of power or influence or authority over it. This government views the rights and claims of individuals and local governments as nuisances to be eliminated as far as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 508, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. Before I begin, I would like to thank the member for the work that he has put into this motion. Motion 508 urges the government of Alberta to repeal the Land Stewardship Act and the Land Assembly Project Area Act.

This is a very serious issue we are dealing with here today. While I am well aware of the concerns that some people have had towards our current structure of land-use planning, to repeal these pieces of legislation would be an irresponsible decision and one that I cannot support. Land-use planning is essential to the sustainable development of our province. It provides the opportunity to make sound decisions in regard to Alberta's future environmental, economic, and social needs. Mr. Speaker, land-use planning is a complex process and one that will undoubtedly run into obstacles along the way.

With that being said, it is the responsibility of our government to overcome these hurdles to deliver this much-needed framework. As we all know, the major issue of concern regarding land-use planning is property rights. Some Albertans believe that the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, or ALSA, as it is often referred to, enables the Alberta government to set the agenda for all land use in Alberta, including private land, taking away the rights of landowners.

5:40

Although some would have Albertans believe this, I can tell you that this is absolutely not the case. What ALSA actually does, Mr. Speaker, is defend property rights. However, some confusion remains about how the act functions and what it really brings to Albertans, and this is why the government created Bill 10, the Alberta Land Stewardship Amendment Act, 2011, which clarifies the intent of ALSA and shows Albertans that Bill 36 respects all existing compensation and property rights. Bill 10 provides Albertans with a clear and concise affirmation that their property rights are not in jeopardy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, will additional changes need to be made as we continue to improve our land-use planning process? Without question. Alberta and the world, for that matter, are constantly changing, and we need to adapt accordingly. This government will continue to consult, amend, and review the planning process in order to ensure that we get it done right. But to have the Member for Calgary-Glenmore say that we should abolish all legislation for land-use planning is not only short-sighted; it would also be irresponsible governance. By repealing these two pieces of legislation, the hon. member would remove some of the strongest property rights protection we have in place today.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, the Land Stewardship Act and the Land Assembly Project Area Act were established to protect Albertans, not only by clearly outlining their rights to review compensation and access to the courts but also by helping to ensure that the resources and natural beauty of their home province are managed in the best possible way. I am very curious as to how the Member for Calgary-Glenmore would handle this situation in 20 years, when our population reaches 5 million and our land has been managed haphazardly from plot to plot, or in 40 years, when our population is expected to reach 6 million and we do not have the ability to meet all of our needs. I would like to hear him explain how this would be better for the people of Alberta.

Through this entire land-use planning process our government will continue to make adjustments for a stronger framework, but the fact of the matter is that this legislation is necessary to ensure a prosperous and sustainable future for Albertans. Our province is growing, and our land is facing increasing land pressures and conflicts, and without the strong leadership in land-use planning that our government has demonstrated, those conflicts could lead to much bigger problems. Mr. Speaker, as we heard last week in the debate on adverse possession, our province and all of western Canada has a history of excellent land stewardship and planning. Our land-use framework will continue this tradition well into the future. This legislation is taking us down the right track, and we will be better off because of it now and in the future.

Once again, I would like to thank the hon. member for his work on this issue; however, I will not be supporting the motion. Repealing these important pieces of legislation would not improve the property rights of Albertans and will have a significant negative long-term effect on our province's success. As such, I strongly encourage all others in this Assembly to vote against it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, you indicated you wish to speak on it.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this motion put forward by my caucus colleague the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. I'm a strong supporter of private motions, and I've always seized the opportunity to put forward my ideas, whether I was in government or whether I wasn't in government. Private motions are important because they are on the leading edge. They are on the frontier of where our Legislature is going. In this case this motion is a reminder of what should have been done in the first place, repealing bad land-use legislation.

Mr. Speaker, as a mom of two boys and a fairly rambunctious staff I tell them that if they make a mistake, apologize, fix it, and don't do it again. Quite frankly, this is a lesson that this government hasn't learned. We've seen time and again the stubbornness of the government and its refusal to see the error of its ways. It's really easy: apologize and fix the mistake.

The original mistake here was the land-use legislation. It can't be stated clearly enough that bills 19 and 36 were a mistake from the start. Since they were passed, this government has spent their time backtracking and amending and applying Band-Aids to stop the bleeding that this has caused. This is a case of: keep it simple, stupid. The simple solution would have been to repeal the bad legislation and keep what was working reasonably well in place.

Bill 36 was amended in the spring. Its changes, while welcome, were just not good enough. There were tiny, teeny changes made, but it really was like putting lipstick on a pig. Yes, the pig looked better, Mr. Speaker, but it's still a pig. The original Bill 36 allowed the government to "extinguish" someone's property rights. Bill 10 switched out the word for "rescind."

To introduce another metaphor, this is like shuffling the chairs on the deck of a sinking ship. The land stewardship legislation is flawed to a serious degree. Recourse to the courts is still not a viable option for landowners. That is a fundamental right of Albertans. Cutting people off from public avenues is just what this government does.

Alberta's retiring FOIP commissioner released his final report last week. He cautioned the government on its obsession with secrecy. With bill after bill in the House FOIP exceptions are placed to put the government behind the public eye. It seems like this government is more comfortable in the shadows, avoiding the light of day.

Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, is in essence a trump card, a flawed trump card that is even scarier and more tragic than first imagined. In my opinion, the ultimate trump card is the people and their rights, not the prerogative of the cabinet to rule Alberta as it sees fit, without consultation and without consideration. With such dangerous powers held in the hands of so few, the only sensible, simple solution is to rescind this legislation, the only good use of the word in land-use parlance.

An amendment to Bill 19 is being debated currently in this House. I said it once, and I'll say it again. Bill 23 should be called "replacing the screwed-up Bill 19 act," but I have to give some credit where it is due. Bill 23 mostly moves in the right direction of allowing landowners access to the courts.

The government likes to save face, rather than admit wrongdoing, by saying that the newest legislation clarifies any misunderstandings about the land-use framework. There is no misunderstanding or lack of clarity on the part of landowners here. It was clear the whole time how wrong the land-use legislation was. The only people who misunderstood what was going on, quite frankly, were the government. They had no idea how upset people were and how wrong the laws were until Keith Wilson started warning Albertans. When Keith began getting through the propaganda and connecting with Albertans, that's when cabinet should have started to pay attention.

But did they? No. They're like one of my boys was when he was a child. They plugged their ears and started yelling more loudly. We saw this when landowners had information meetings explaining the situation. Cabinet ministers would come to the event and then start heckling when someone made a criticism. This behaviour, quite frankly, is unacceptable. I would expect more from a minister of the Crown.

I would like to quote what I said in the debate on Bill 23 in the House last week. "Quite frankly, the best thing this Assembly could do is to repeal the Land Assembly Project Area Act . . . This would be a very, very simple solution to what seems to be a very complex problem."

I still feel the same way. Every session this Legislature debates land-use legislation because this government continues to go about this in the wrong way. There is no way of fixing something that is fundamentally, at the core, wrong. Landowners are still going to be ripped off by this government as the laws of the land say: if something isn't broken, don't fix it.

The Expropriation Act was the law of the land and has worked well for Albertans for a very long time. As I mentioned earlier, this cabinet likes its decisions made when it closes its doors. The necessity for large projects with large price tags is not run through one of Alberta's independent commissions tasked with the public interest, but it is decided in secret by a small, select group of people.

Mr. Speaker, this is not grassroots like the Alberta I know but, quite frankly, elitism. Elitism to me is thinking that only a few people know what the right thing to do is and not listening otherwise. That's the way this government behaves, quite frankly, and why I am no longer part of it.

This behaviour, like the game of Whac-A-Mole, is popping up again with the Health Quality Council act. Key decisions will be made in secret, behind closed doors, with no accountability.

Albertans expect better from their government. They expect humility and accountability and, quite frankly, an open attitude.

5:50

As to the last part of the motion, the entrenchment of property rights in the constitution, we need the Alberta government to do better. The Alberta Bill of Rights has protection for property rights, the only such province in the country to do so. While there is protection in the Alberta Bill of Rights for property rights, it is just a bill; it's not a constitution with court protection.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this motion motivates this House to take property rights more seriously. I also hope that this government decides to be more open and accountable in a real, substantial way rather than pretending to be listening to Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: Other hon. members wishing to speak on the motion? The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and share my thoughts on Motion 508, brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. We all know this motion urges the government to repeal the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the Alberta Land Assembly Project Area Act. As well, it would entrench property rights into the constitution of Alberta and make sure that all forms of property loss are compensated for.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I are committed to the protection of Albertans' property rights. It's one of the reasons we passed these two important pieces of legislation in the first place. The other main reason is that we wanted to ensure the protection and preservation of our natural environment. Both are of equal importance, and I believe our main objective should not be to deny one or the other but to strike a careful balance between the two.

The Alberta Land Stewardship Act, ALSA, and the Land Assembly Project Area Act, LAPAA, have certainly moved our province in this direction. With both of these acts along with the recent and proposed amendments Albertans' rights to private property compensation and access to the courts are stronger than ever, so much so that to repeal them would be a step backwards.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before, Motion 508 calls for property rights to be entrenched in the Alberta constitution to guarantee that all forms of property loss are compensated fairly. However, this issue is already covered under the two pieces of legislation that this motion wishes to repeal. For example, ALSA makes our province the first jurisdiction in Canada to compensate landowners whose property values are affected by conservation restrictions under regional plans. Section 19 of that act ensures Albertans have the right to appeal decisions by municipalities, provincial departments, and boards, further protecting their rights.

In addition, under LAPAA if a purchase price cannot be agreed upon, the landowner has the option to ask for an independent third party to determine the price. Repealing these acts would remove these and other protections, Mr. Speaker.

A concern some landowners have is that their property can be taken away from them without any compensation or consultation, but I can reassure you and the people of Alberta that this is certainly not the case. Their property won't be unjustly taken from them because under our current legislation this is simply not possible. Under the Land Assembly Project Area Act residents of Alberta are notified well in advance and consulted when their land is being considered as part of an area project. This law has been put into place to protect property owners from a long-drawn-out decision-making process. In effect, there are a number of protections that these laws afford Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, as a final point, I feel that Motion 508 is not only redundant as we already have strong property rights entrenched in our legislation, but this motion would also be counterproductive and even harmful as it leaves gaps in the recourse options available to Albertans when it comes to selling their land to our government. In addition, it would take away from our much-needed framework to ensure Alberta's land use is sustainable.

We can reassure Albertans that we are committed to our environment but not at their expense. It's necessary to work to create an appropriate balance. Along the way we surely will learn better ways about striking the right balance and will adapt our approach accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, our government is well aware that Albertans deserve to have safeguards in place to meet their needs. We believe in giving them the best possible protections for both their land and their right to live in a beautiful, healthy, and sustainable province.

I'd once again like to thank the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for his work on this matter, but I do not believe that repealing the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the Alberta Land Assembly Project Area Act is the right thing to do. I strongly encourage all of my colleagues to vote against this motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The 55 minutes for the motion is terminated, so I shall call the question.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 508 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, before I call on you, I would like to ask unanimous consent to revert to a brief introduction of guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly the one who makes it possible for me to be here in Edmonton, the one who looks after the land, the cattle, and our children while I'm not at home, my better half, my wife, Laurie. I'd ask the Assembly to please give her the warm welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I rise actually to make a motion, now that it is three minutes to 6, that the House stand adjourned until 7:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:57 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers .....	1595
Introduction of Visitors .....	1595
Introduction of Guests .....	1595, 1629
Members' Statements
Green Scholars of Alberta .....	1596
How Alberta's Grinch Stole Christmas .....	1596
Edmonton Catholic Schools Holodomor Memorial Day .....	1597
Jasper National Park Dark Sky Preserve .....	1606
Julia Bowen .....	1606
International Volunteer Day .....	1606
World Sledge Hockey Challenge .....	1606
Oral Question Period
Public Health Inquiry .....	1597
PC Party Benefit Plan Trust .....	1598, 1599
Impaired Driving Legislation .....	1598
Electricity Prices .....	1599
Grow Ops .....	1600
Emergency Medical Service Delays .....	1600
Support for Home Care .....	1601
Pathology Testing Services .....	1601, 1603
Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped .....	1602
Hydraulic Fracturing for Gas in Shale .....	1602
Misuse of Electronic Health Records .....	1602
Reporting of Gaming Revenue .....	1603
Highway Maintenance .....	1604
Gas Line on Highway 40 Bridge Construction .....	1605
PDD Appeal Panel .....	1605
Notices of Motions .....	1607
Tabling Returns and Reports .....	1607
Tablings to the Clerk .....	1608
Orders of the Day .....	1608
Motions for Returns
University of Calgary Budget .....	1608
Child Abuse Investigations .....	1608
Oil and Gas Sector Incentives .....	1609
Electricity Grid Expansion .....	1610
National Securities Regulation .....	1610
Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 205, Municipal Government (Delayed Construction) Amendment Act, 2011 .....	1611
Bill 207, Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act .....	1617
Motions Other than Government Motions
Property Loss Compensation .....	1622
Statement by the Speaker
Anticipation and Possible Duplication of Private Member's Motion 508 and Bill 23 .....	1622

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fourth Session

Alberta Hansard

Monday evening, December 5, 2011

Issue 46e

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 27th Legislature

Fourth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Hon. Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Hon. Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Hon. Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Hon. Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hon. Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC)
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Hon. Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Hon. Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Hon. Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Hon. Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (PC)
Stelmach, Hon. Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC)
Webber, Hon. Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Clerk	W.J. David McNeil	Committee Research Co-ordinator	Philip Massolin
Law Clerk/Director of		Sergeant-at-Arms	Brian G. Hodgson
Interparliamentary Relations	Robert H. Reynolds, QC	Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Chris Caughell
Senior Parliamentary Counsel/		Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Gordon H. Munk
Director of House Services	Shannon Dean	Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard	Liz Sim
Parliamentary Counsel	Stephanie LeBlanc

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 68      Alberta Liberal: 8      Wildrose Alliance: 4      New Democrat: 2      Alberta: 1

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Sustainable Resource Development
Janice Sarich	Education
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Rodney
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
Mason
Pastoor
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Ms Pastoor

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Ouellette
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, December 5, 2011

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

Bill 26 Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I have four speakers who have so far indicated they wish to speak. If you wish to speak, please let me know, and I'll add you to the list.

We'll start with the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, please.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to stand and record my comments into Hansard tonight. Much has been said about this bill so far. I'd like to add my comments as well. I'd like to start off by saying, probably like everyone else here, we've had some friends or relatives, loved ones, who have suffered death in car crashes, and it's always a traumatic experience. For anybody that's been in that situation, I'd like to give my deep regrets for the losses that they've encountered.

It's a very emotional issue, this particular bill. Whether loved ones have died in car crashes or traffic accidents caused by speeding, driving without due care and attention, distracted driving, carelessness, driving under the influence of either alcohol or drugs, the results are all the same; you don't come home. That creates a very traumatic and sudden loss for everybody else that's left behind. It's a little different than someone that's dying of an illness, where you almost have time to adjust to it. The sudden shock of having somebody today and not tomorrow is quite a thing to adjust to.

In my 31 years of public life as an elected official I have talked to a lot of families that have suffered these kinds of losses, and in many cases some of them were very close friends of mine; some were acquaintances. In a rural constituency such as mine you tend to know almost everybody, so when there's a tragedy like that, you are well aware of it. In most of those cases people are looking for some reason behind this. They're trying to make sense of this loss. In many cases they think: well, you know, I just don't feel comfortable having my child being involved in this, especially if there is some blame assessed because they went through a stop sign or whatever.

There's always some reason to go to government and try to make things better, like put up another stop sign or put up another set of speed bumps. I've even been told: instead of the speed ridges, they should be speed bumps like in a mall. You know, at about 40 clicks you'd probably be launched and go right over the whole intersection or end up in the ditch. People don't look at the unintended consequences of their proposed solutions, and there are unintended consequences no matter how good it is.

People in the middle of the day still continue to drive into trains, in front of trucks, drive too fast for the condition of the road. Some people drive with medical conditions when they're told not to. Even when the doctor has advised that registry or Transportation should take their licence away, they drive anyway. I had someone tell me just a week ago: sure glad we're getting rid of you because you took my husband's licence away, but we drove for the last 10 years anyway. I explained: "Well, I didn't take your husband's licence away. I don't have that authority. Neither can I give it back." But there was no convincing her. I took her husband's licence away, in her mind, and she's very angry about it. And they drove for 10 years anyway. It was a medical condition that could have caused serious damage or death to themselves plus anybody else on the road at the time.

I've also been told that some people have sleep disorders where they just fall asleep during a discussion or if they get bored with it and possibly while they're driving. If they don't report that to a doctor, you know, they continue to drive. I've encountered a number of seniors where it's a very traumatic thing when their licence is taken away from them and they're told they can't drive anymore. The one fellow was trying to get me to get him his licence back. I said, "Well, I can't do that, but I'd be happy to give you a ride home" because he was at the coffee shop. He said: "You don't need to do that." I said: "Well, how did you get here?" He said: "Well, I just got a new truck." So he was driving anyway and creating a danger to himself and others on the road.

I'm wondering. If we can use the confiscation for three days for an offence for this particular .05 to .08 and that's going to get people's attention, why wouldn't it get people's attention for speeding? A good many of us drive highway 2 or other busy highways. If I asked for a show of hands on how many drive 110 kilometres an hour in a 110-kilometre an hour zone, I probably wouldn't get much uptake in honest answers. People are speeding probably 10, 20, maybe 30 kilometres an hour over.

We know speed kills. It was even mentioned, I believe, by the Minister of Transportation that most of the accidents are in rural Alberta. Of course they would be. It's not because rural Albertans drive any much differently than urban Albertans, but whether you're an urban or a rural Albertan, you drive the highways, and the highways have much higher speed limits. A sudden stop at high speeds kills people. We all know that people drive too fast. We should try to get their attention.

Distracted driving: the same. I was going to a funeral in Red Deer on Friday, and between Olds and Red Deer a third tractor-trailer unit was in the meridian. A police car had signalled everybody to get in the right-hand lane to get by this so they could do their work. Black ice and very windy conditions: it was very slippery. Well, one guy decided he would try to get ahead of the lineup. So he pulls out back about a quarter of a mile, charges up, and is taking a video of the accident scene with his BlackBerry, going too fast, and he almost hit the police car. He just got stopped before he did that. I guess that would be distracted driving, driving too fast for the conditions, a number of factors. Usually, when there's a death, it can be a number of factors, not just one.

Now we get back to families wanting us to do something. They always want us to do something to make it better. Once we do something, I don't know if they feel it takes the blame away from their family member that was involved in it, that went through an intersection and T-boned somebody and killed them in the middle of the day with no alcohol involved, or what. I don't know. If we put a four-way stop or an overpass at every intersection where a fatal accident was caused, I don't think the coffers of the province could handle that, nor would it do anything but slow traffic down to a crawl.

I tabled earlier today the report Alcohol-Crash Problem in Canada, 2008. That report was finished in December of last year, so I would suspect it's one of the most recent reports that's out. It's a national report. I'm not sure if the ministries that are defending this bill have had an opportunity to study it or if their experts have looked at it. It's 225 pages, and I haven't had a chance to get through it all, but certain things have been said and certain statistics have been stated to support this bill.

There are some interesting things in this particular report. For instance, it's been said by the B.C. government that in the first seven months of their legislation fatal accidents involving alcohol were reduced by 45 per cent. I think last week the minister extrapolated that to a year, had some more recent stats that said that it was 40 per cent over the year. I'm not sure why B.C. published seven months. Probably they were more favourable statistics to back up their legislation and claim success over that.

It's interesting to note that in the report I tabled today, actually – and if you haven't got a copy of it, you can make notes; on page 54 there's a graph for British Columbia between '95 and 2007 – deaths involving a drinking driver were on the decline. It went from a high of 149 to a low of 125, which is a 16 to 17 per cent reduction right there. That was, basically, in one year. If you go from the absolute high to the absolute low, instead of 149 to 125, it's 160 to 125. So you'd have just over a 20 per cent reduction. If those were the same numbers when B.C. was claiming the 30 per cent, there's 20 per cent right there.

7:40

It was also argued by someone that there were job losses of 21 per cent in the hospitality industry in British Columbia as a result of this legislation. I believe it was the Minister of Justice that said that you can't really attribute all of those job losses to the legislation because it was a post-Olympic year. Well, would it be fair to attribute the total reduction in deaths due to alcohol in a post-Olympic year when the Olympic year was probably the biggest international party this country has hosted since the '88 Olympics? So there are a number of factors that I would contest when people are saying that there's a 40 per cent reduction in deaths over the course of the year attributed solely to this legislation.

It's interesting to note also in the report that nationally 86.7 per cent of drivers in fatal accidents are tested for blood-alcohol content. Provincially in Alberta it's 96.8 per cent, 10.1 per cent more. You would think that by Alberta testing more than the national average, our numbers would probably be relatively higher. Just for interest's sake, B.C., when I looked it up in the report, is at 87 per cent. So they're pretty close to the national average.

What does this all break down to? Well, among those fatally injured drivers who were tested, 61.3 per cent showed no evidence of alcohol. That leaves 38.7 per cent that had been drinking. Of those that had been drinking, 3.6 per cent had a blood-alcohol level of .01 to .049 – you can write this down if you want to; it's easier to look at – 2.2 per cent had a blood alcohol of .05 to .08; 10.3 per cent had a blood alcohol of .081 to .16; and over .16, 22.6 per cent. By far the over .08 and over .16 are the greatest numbers. But we continue to hear that we're going after the high-risk group. Looking at these numbers, .05 to .08 is the lowest risk group.

Nationally no evidence of alcohol is 61.3; in Alberta it's 61.1. So it's pretty close to the same. Nationally in the .01 to .049, 3.6 per cent compares to Alberta's 3.4 per cent, a .2 per cent difference. From .05 to .08: the province of Alberta is 2.3 per cent compared nationally to 2.2. But in Alberta over .08 is 11.7 per cent, which is a bit higher than 10.3. In the highest category of .16 we're at 21.8 per cent compared nationally to 22.6, so we're under there. I have a hard time believing that going after the 2.3 per cent that constitutes the .05 to .08 is going to have a tremendous effect on the outcomes that are being stated about this bill.

If you look at Alberta's figures on page 70 of that report that I tabled, there's another graph that shows between '95 and 2008, similar to B.C., a decline in fatalities – you could draw a line across the top, and there have been ups and downs just like B.C. – a decline trending right throughout that whole particular time, with the odd spike up in one or two years and, of course, some spikes down as well. I'm not sure what that is, but I don't think it can be attributed to any legislation here because we didn't have any.

The 45 per cent over the seven months that B.C. claimed amounted to 30 fatalities. This graph shows that in Alberta we've seen drops of, actually, 57 in a time period from one year to the next and no legislation to attribute that to. Basically, the last 10, 15 years both B.C. and Alberta fatal injury accidents have been in decline in a general sense.

The unintended consequences of this I'm starting to hear more and more about, the job losses, as I've already stated, but another one – and I know my time is running out here. I did receive one that was in favour of the bill, but he was in favour for a number of reasons. Primarily, it would increase his business in the towing business. He was concerned for the towing companies. The Alberta government is not paying the rates that they were, the same rates that they were for 25 years. A lot of these old junkers aren't being claimed because the charges are more than they're worth, leaving the tow truck drivers holding the bag for some money. They figure the best thing to do with some of these cars is just abandon them and let the province worry about them because they're not paying the rates. If this bill passes, I can probably expect to hear from that industry saying that we need to adjust the rates up, so there would be some increased costs going on there.

There are just too many questions, Mr. Chairman, and too little time to study all of this. I mean, we've been going quite late, and I understand there is time allocation on this bill introduced today, so there's only another hour after tonight to discuss this. I don't think this bill is near close enough.

A lot of my constituents – it went from 94 per cent a week ago to 98 per cent opposed to this bill – feel that they haven't had enough time. The Minister of Transportation said that three ministries have been working on this for four years. I'm amazed that in those four years somebody didn't come up with the idea of doing a public consultation so that our hospitality industry could have some input into this and maybe the tow truck drivers and everybody else that this might affect.

With that, I see my time is getting pretty close to being up. I'll take my seat and maybe speak again. In closing, in case I don't, I won't be supporting this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Calgary-Lougheed, followed by Calgary-McCall, followed by the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the debate this bill has had in this Assembly, including the comments we just heard from the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Mountain View.

Some Hon. Members: Three Hills.

Dr. Taft: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, which contains the county of Mountain View – isn't that right? – or the municipality of Mountain View. [interjections] Anyway, I won't waste time on that.

7:50

This bill has received pretty good debate, and actually there has been some good discussion. I think we all recognize there are legitimate issues in play here. I think a lot of the concerns come back to the rush with which the government is pushing this legislation through. It was introduced two weeks ago today, I believe, and, you know, it's going to be the law, by all likelihood, the day after tomorrow. In our view, that is too rapid a process for good legislation to be brought through.

There are all kinds of people and groups that need to be consulted. We think there's a risk of legal issues cropping up with this, and we saw that risk played out in B.C. just last week. So we are concerned, Mr. Chairman, that while the spirit or the intent of this bill is good, when it's put through this quickly, mistakes are going to be made. Our preference would be that the bill be referred to a legislative committee, that consultation with all the stakeholders would occur in a proper manner, and that it would come back next spring tweaked and adjusted to address those concerns and also, frankly, to allow public consensus to develop around the issues in this bill.

We saw that process play out over a number of years concerning the distracted driving/cellphone legislation. That legislation ultimately got implemented and, as far as I can tell, has been implemented quite successfully, but that's because the public had time to get onboard and to understand it. We haven't had that process here.

Recognizing that this legislation is very likely to go forward, I am moving an amendment on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre that is intended to help this legislation withstand a Charter challenge should it come down to that. I would like to propose an amendment, Mr. Chairman. I've got copies here, which we shall distribute, and I'll give a moment for the pages to do that. Thank you.

I'm glad to see that the Justice minister and the Transportation minister are here because we would like to co-ordinate with them on the issues that we're trying to address through this amendment. I'll just wait a moment, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We'll get the pages to circulate this.

Just while they're circulating it, I see we have some guests in the gallery. I'll just tell you that we are now in between two stages of debate. Between second reading and third reading there is an informal session, so to speak, called Committee of the Whole, during which time members are allowed to sit in other members' chairs and talk with other members. They are enjoying a cup of coffee perhaps or something else.

While those are being distributed, might we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: You have the approval to revert and do some introductions with the agreement of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Is that all right with you, sir?

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Proceed while we're distributing the amendment.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a great Edmon-tonian, Mr. Ian Crawford, who is running for the Wildrose Party in Edmonton-Whitemud. I'm sure he'll give that MLA all that he can handle. If we could all give him the warm welcome of this Assembly, that would be great.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, and thank you, members, and thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Bill 26

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011

(continued)

The Deputy Chair: I believe everyone has a copy of the amendment as presented by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and we will refer to this as amendment A3.

Proceed, hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I just want to check, Mr. Chairman, that I didn't lose three or four minutes in that process.

The Deputy Chair: No. You still have over 17 minutes.

Dr. Taft: Is that all? Okay. I'll try to limit myself.

All right. One of the concerns with Bill 26 that has been raised is that it's open to various legal challenges, whether that's due to overlaps with federal jurisdiction in the Criminal Code or whether it's due to other concerns such as those around delayed or slow administration of justice. Canadians do have the right to a reasonably timely access to justice.

This amendment is proposed in the most constructive spirit possible. I'll just give you a little background on it, but first I'd better read the amendment into the record, Mr. Chairman. I am doing this on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who will move that Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, be amended in section 12 in the proposed section 88.1 by (a) in subsection (3) adding "or until the expiration of a period of 18 months, whichever is earlier, subject to an extension under subsection (5)" after "subsection 2(a)" wherever it occurs – we will explain to you in a minute what this means – and secondly, (b), by adding the following after subsection (4):

(5) The Registrar may extend a disqualification or suspension under this section by periods of one year or less, but a disqualification or suspension shall not

(a) exceed 54 months, or

(b) extend beyond the time of the disposition of the criminal charge.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the proposed amendment.

Now, I would ask particularly the Minister of Transportation and, I guess, the Minister of Justice just to listen to my comments carefully because this amendment was developed, as I said earlier, in a spirit of improving the drafted bill and helping it withstand what could easily be some legal challenges. This amendment changes the way administrative licence suspensions and disqualifications are implemented for drivers found to be operating a motor vehicle with a blood-alcohol content where criminal charges are laid; that is, above .08.

The current bill proposes an indefinite suspension until criminal charges are disposed of, and we think, Mr. Chairman, that that could be a problem because an indefinite suspension is indefinite. It could go on for years and years and years while other issues are being played out. That could mean all kinds of implications for somebody who in the end is found innocent. One of the things that the courts in Canada have ruled is that Canadians have a right to reasonably timely administration of justice.

This amendment seeks to change that indefinite suspension to a definite period, that of 18 months. I think it's very important for the Transportation minister and the Justice minister to note that 18 months can be extended for three additional years by application of the registrar. As in the bill, the initial suspension can be appealed to the board. In addition to that, however, extensions can be appealed as well. So there are appeal mechanisms in this, which are also important, I believe, for pre-empting legal challenges. If a law is applied and there is no appeal process, then the courts are, I understand, inclined to say: "Well, that's not a very good law. Everybody has a right to at least one appeal."

As in the law, the suspension ends automatically when the driver is found either guilty or innocent of the criminal charge. In the amendment the definite time period of the suspension and the allowance of additional appeals upon extension both seek – and again I draw the Minister of Justice's attention to this – to decrease the likelihood of a successful Charter challenge on the basis of the law straying into the jurisdiction of criminal law and on the basis of arbitrariness.

I just want to comment briefly on the issues of drifting into or straying into the jurisdiction of criminal law, which is not the jurisdiction of this Assembly. If we pass through this Legislature a law that is seen to have criminal-like penalties without the basis of the Criminal Code, then we are likely overstepping our jurisdiction, and the courts will rule against us.

Last week the opposition caucus proposed a similar amendment, but it was defeated. In the interim there have been some discussions between our caucus and the government ministers responsible for this bill. I'm not sure that they've been convinced of the wisdom of this amendment, but we'll find out in a minute, when we vote on this. The Assembly, as we all know, cannot consider the same amendment twice, so on the advice of Parliamentary Council this new amendment, which I've just introduced, seeks to implement a similar procedure through different and, we think, better means.

8:00

Just some quick points, and then I'll take my seat. The amendment replaces indefinite licence suspensions for people charged criminally with 18-month suspensions, extendable to a maximum of four and a half years. We think it's important that the indefinite suspensions be given some definite definition or else they run the risk of being challenged in the courts.

Again, another quick point. It allows for new appeals to the board after 18 months and in one-year increments following.

Finally, it attempts to make the proposed bill more compliant with the Charter of Rights. Our position and our advice is that indefinite suspensions could both be considered arbitrary and an intrusion on the federal jurisdiction of criminal law.

That all sounded pretty technical, and I'm not a lawyer, Mr. Chairman. That probably shows since there are a couple of lawyers in the Assembly, more than that, actually. But I can tell you that the intent here is to make this a more effective piece of legislation. There have been times historically when this Assembly has passed legislation that has been challenged under the Charter and has lost. There's no point in that. Agree with a bill or not, there's no point in passing legislation that runs a significant risk of getting shot down by the Supreme Court.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I shall take my seat and see where the debate goes. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other speakers on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, please.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity to speak. Just as it takes a fair amount of gumption to follow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, the same could be applied to following the astute Member for Edmonton-Riverview, but I will do my best and attempt not to repeat.

The axis, or central point, of this amendment has to do with, as the hon. member mentioned, the length of suspension. To refresh people's minds, it (a) amends subsection (3) by adding "or until the expiration of a period of 18 months, whichever is earlier, subject to an extension under subsection (5)" after subsection 2(a), wherever it occurs. In other words, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview so eloquently pointed out, there has to be a timeline for this extension. It cannot just run ad infinitum. There has to be a recognition.

Within subset (b) by adding the following after subsection (4):

(5) The Registrar may extend a disqualification or suspension under this section by periods of one year or less, but a disqualification or suspension shall not

(a) exceed 54 months, or

(b) extend beyond the time of the disposition of the criminal charge.

Now, one of the unfortunate circumstances about justice in Alberta is the old axiom: justice delayed is justice denied. Granted, for a person that would potentially be caught under Bill 26, Traffic Safety Amendment, 2011, they could be caught at a .05 level. They could then have their licence suspended for a particular day, and then as the bill now reads, they could again at some later point have their licence and vehicle suspended. The more frequently – you'd think they'd eventually get the message – this occurs, the worse their case gets, and the due process of the law may not occur for some time. Though the person wasn't impaired technically speaking, they did blow over the .05 category.

It's that concern that the amendment, moved on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, has tried to point out. There have to be limits. Mr. Chair, I'm hoping that the government can see the wisdom of the limits. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has already pointed out that B.C. ran into trouble with their similar bill, that the Alberta government has basically cloned and is hoping not to face the same challenges. Instead of being concerned about those challenges, if this amendment were to be adopted, the court, I think, would look on it more favourably because a definite period of time would be set out in law. Anything that improves the law and sets precedents for judges to work from, I think is to the benefit not only of the justice system but to the Albertans charged, who should not have to wait forever for their cases to be heard, particularly in a .05 scenario.

As has been pointed out, and without further adieu, Mr. Chair, I believe this is what I would consider a friendly amendment to strengthen the intention of Bill 26, which is to save Albertans' lives.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity to speak on behalf of the amendment. I'm hoping that this House will see its intent and support it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A3 as brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I do appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments in response to this amendment. I want to first of all thank the members opposite for their diligence in preparing this. It's obvious that they've given it some time, but I'm sorry to say that I still have some difficulty with it.

This will just be a brief few comments. I want to say that the sanctions that we are taking here are related to traffic safety, and they are administrative. They are not criminal in their nature, and these are not intended to be penalties. We are tying the licensing to the determination of whether or not a criminal offence has been committed because that's the way we determine whether or not, ultimately, the person who is being charged is a safety risk on our highways.

It's not a lot different, though, I wouldn't think, than other examples of people who commit offences and end up, perhaps, in jail for a time. Again, we're talking only about criminal offences here. We're not talking about anything to do with under .08. We're only talking about over .08, which is a serious criminal offence. This isn't specifically addressing the amendment but generally to this debate. We feel as though sometimes the criminal offence of drinking and driving, the over .08, isn't taken as seriously as some other criminal offences even though it is the most prevalent cause of criminal death in Alberta.

As to the amendment itself I just want to stress that we are not talking about a punishment. We are talking about withdrawing the right to drive, which is clearly provincial responsibility. If a person has been charged with a very serious criminal offence, then the province of Alberta has the right to withdraw that privilege of driving until there has been an ultimate determination of whether or not this person has proven that they are not a risk on the highway.

This is all about traffic safety. That's really all I have to say on this amendment. Thank you.

8:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there other comments to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I guess, first of all, I want to thank the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for speaking in regard to Bill 26, the Alberta Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011. I think, quite frankly, it was a pleasure to hear him speaking on what truly his bosses, as the member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo always refers to his constituents, are saying. Obviously, he gets it. He's been listening to what people have to tell him and what his constituency has to tell him. It sounds like he's done as much research, quite frankly, as we have on this bill. It was quite refreshing to finally have someone wake up over there and speak from their heart and speak on behalf of their constituents. Seriously, Member, I really have a lot of respect for you for having the courage to speak up. I know the Education minister is making a few sounds, so I'm sure he's going to stand up and speak on behalf of his constituents. I look forward to hearing what he has to say.

On that, I'm going to speak. I see your hand signal. You know, Chair, you've only been in that chair – what? – maybe two weeks now, but you're doing fairly well. One of the things about being hearing impaired is that hearing impaired people tend to learn a lot of sign language, and they learn very quickly. So I get this. I'll have to teach you some more of the sign language I've learned as I've lost my hearing. I appreciate that you and I can communicate that way because if you were speaking to me, I probably couldn't hear you.

On the amendment, I guess. I listened to the Justice minister, and I was listening to him very intently. I still get confused, quite frankly, when I hear the government speak because they talk about the Criminal Code, that we're all very well aware of. I mean, I sat in the Solicitor General's chair for four years, and I know what's included in the Criminal Code. I know that impaired driving is a Criminal Code offence. I'm also well aware under provincial legislation of what can be considered a provincial offence.

I have spoken already in this Legislature in regard to the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, that I brought forward, and we had the charges under the Criminal Code but also had the ability to make charges under the provincial legislation. The police would go in, and they'd weigh what they thought they'd get the charge under. If it was under a Criminal Code offence – which, obviously, they wanted because then you have a criminal record versus under a provincial charge, where you don't have a record.

In reading what the member has brought forward, she's talked about section 88.1 of Bill 26, which I've read, and she talks about subsection (3), where she wants to add, "or until the expiration of a period of 18 months, whichever is earlier, subject to an extension under subsection (5)" after subsection 2(a) wherever it occurs.

Legislation can be quite confusing, and we tend to complicate a lot of things. I'm trying to figure out exactly what the Justice minister was saying when he was responding to the amendment. I still don't quite understand what he was trying to say. He talked a bit about going back to the bill and trying to again tell everybody the difference here between a Criminal Code and an administrative code. I'm still trying to understand from the Justice minister, or even the Minister of Transportation can speak up – yes, the Minister of Transportation is the one that's responsible for Bill 26 – on what exactly he does not like about this particular amendment. Is there some confusion where he thinks this is confused between the Criminal Code and what they're trying to do on a provincial level?

Then it goes on by adding after subsection (4):

- (5) the Registrar may extend a disqualification or suspension under this section by periods of one year or less, but a disqualification or suspension shall not
  - (a) exceed 54 months, or
  - (b) extend beyond the time of the disposition of the criminal charge.

I guess what I need to understand, Mr. Chair, is why the government doesn't like this particular piece of legislation, why they don't support amendment A3. I know the Justice minister is a lawyer. I know the Solicitor General is a lawyer. I'm not a lawyer, so I would really like, actually, for either of them or the Minister of Transportation – he stood in this Legislature a couple of times throwing figures back and forth in regard to all of the 24-hour suspensions they've done in regard to the legislation. I'm going to be asking him more questions about that, when they have somebody's licence suspended for 24 hours. He reeled out a lot of numbers, so I'm going to be speaking to him to get some answers on that.

If I could, Mr. Chair, I'd really like to hear from the Justice minister or the Solicitor General or the Minister of Transportation what they specifically don't like about this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Would you like to respond, hon. Minister of Justice, and we'll come back to you in a moment.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. I'll try to be a little more clear this time. My apologies if I didn't make myself well understood. What's important to reinforce over and over and over again is that this is an administrative action taken to withdraw the right to drive. That's something that's clearly within provincial responsibility. If you think about it, it's also important that that administrative action be tied to something like the outcome of a criminal trial. If we disengage it from that, so now you've just got some sort of suspension, then maybe you are getting closer to something that looks like a criminal sanction.

This is not a criminal sanction. This is the withdrawal of a licence that the province has the right to give and to take away. It's a question of traffic safety. That's the reason why I don't feel that I can support this. I acknowledge the rationale that went into the amendment, but I don't think that I can support it for the reasons I've given. I think it's very important that we make it clear that this withdrawal of the right to drive will be tied to something.

The other thing I would just mention is that if this amendment did pass, I'm not really clear on what terms or criteria the traffic safety board would use to decide: should it be extended or should it be shortened? Where would the criteria be? That's another thing that I have a problem with in this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. members, we are debating amendment A3 to the Traffic Safety Amendment Act. I don't have any other speakers on the amendment. Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to the main discussion at committee stage. I have the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed next on my list.

Proceed, hon. member.

8:20

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It is indeed an honour to rise tonight to speak to Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act. I have to tell you that I'm very pleased this bill is being debated, and in certain ways – and my family understands this – I've been waiting for more than half my life to make this short speech, since my cousin died in a car crash. I'm equally pleased with the quality of the discussions that we've had so far, from first to second reading and now Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Chair, I'd first like to reiterate that the fundamental purpose of this bill is plain, and it's simple. It is to save the lives of Albertans. Like most people across this province I've known far too many people who've died in car accidents due to drinking and driving, and I want that to stop. My constituents share this feeling. Many of them tell me that the so-called silent majority want this legislation, and they want it to have teeth. They want it to have a focus encouraging greater personal responsibility behind the wheel. If members or those out in the public were to google YouTube and Your Alberta, they would find a number of short videos from Albertans, impaired driving stakeholders, that give short testimonials on how this bill will positively affect Albertans' behaviour and ultimately save lives and families. If you think my language is or will be colourful, wait until you see some of those.

These people and my constituents and others have been telling me for a long, long time that certain progress has been made in recent years in this regard, and it's somewhat encouraging. But they tell me that more must be done, and they tell me that a little slap on the wrist is not enough. They know that last year alone there were at least 96 deaths – at least 96 deaths – and 1,384 injuries or more caused by impaired drivers on Alberta roads. Even detractors to the bill, I'm sure, will not counter this.

Mr. Chairman, these numbers alone, to me, indicate that the need to change this behaviour is obvious. It's very clear. Arguments about how this might negatively affect business simply don't hold a candle to this, and I dare say that they're not true.

The second point I'd like to make is that Alberta is not changing the level at which criminal sanctions will be applied as defined in the federal Criminal Code. The legal blood-alcohol content threshold remains at .08. Instead, Mr. Chair, we're strengthening our penalties for drivers who exceed these limits, but we also want Alberta drivers to keep the .05 blood-alcohol rate in mind before they make the decision to drive. In fact, we want them to remember that a .05 blood-alcohol rate is scientifically proven to be unsafe. People are impaired at that point.

Now, this is nothing new. Alberta already has administrative sanctions in place for drivers who fall in the .05 to .08 range. For example, Alberta currently can suspend for a 24-hour period drivers who are suspected of being under the influence. Just as society evolves, so does research, and we know that a driver, in fact, is impaired at .05, as I've mentioned.

Now, having chaired AADAC in the past, as you have, Mr. Chair, we know this is not new information. We're simply adjusting our approach based on evidence that impaired driving remains a serious, persistent problem for our citizens. Based on this evidence, the province is simply adapting and doing what it can to meet the safety standards that our friends and neighbours in Alberta want and deserve. Therefore, using the same example, the new rules would specify increasing sanctions such as a three-day licence suspension and a three-day vehicle seizure for a first offence.

Mr. Chairman, these are some of those teeth that I was referring to that Albertans have been asking me to ask this House to have this legislation enact. I hope and they hope that this will encourage more Albertans to not just be aware. That's not enough. They need to alter their driving habits for each and every one of us and all of our loved ones.

Mr. Chairman, our province is not unique in strengthening traffic safety standards. In fact, I hate to say it, but once again we're close to last when it comes to adopting such legislation. We're proud to be a leader in so many respects, but sadly this is not one of them. I can refer to laws in Ontario and B.C. and Saskatchewan as just three examples. As a matter of fact, Saskatchewan has implemented an even lower sanctionable rate of .04, and many countries around the world have even more strict rules in place, as our Minister of Justice outlined very well in second reading. Many of my constituents have read his speech. They were on the nay side; now they are completely on the yea side. Study after study in jurisdictions around the planet have demonstrated that no single approach – no single approach – to addressing impaired driving is as effective as a multifaceted approach such as the one that we're now considering.

Colleagues, we all know that this may be threatening for some Albertans right now. In the past our legislation involving things like smoke-free places, seat belts, distracted driving – there are more – were threatening for certain citizens as well, but over time our citizens have come to recognize that in each case legislation was extremely important, and it saved lives. In each case it has simply become part of our daily reality.

Mr. Chair, Bill 26 is designed to and will save lives. It will require a small culture shift, but it's well worth it. I truly believe Albertans are ready for this. I'm sure they don't want even one more person to die on Alberta roads due to drinking and driving either, and they know, as we do, that this is 100 per cent avoidable. This is just one of the reasons that I will vote strongly in favour of this legislation, and I encourage everyone in this Assembly to join me in voting yes to this. I trust colleagues will not be afraid of this legislation. I trust Albertans will not be afraid. Instead, I trust they'll be proud of it, and I believe that in the test of time they will be. I know that our kids already are, and they're waiting for us to do the right thing.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Solicitor General and minister responsible for Public Security.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and join the debate on Bill 26 in Committee of the Whole, particularly as this is my first speech in the House as Solicitor General. As we are in Committee of the Whole, I'm going to focus most of my comments on just dealing with amendment section 11, which is 87.1 as well as 88, and that deals with the .05 legislation.

Before I do that, though, I do want to share with this House some stories that I have received about drunk driving. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed mentioned earlier that last year 96 deaths and 1,384 injuries on Alberta's roads involved drunk drivers. I would challenge everyone in this Assembly to ask around, and I'm sure everybody has. I want to thank the past speakers from the Liberals, the NDP, and the Wildrose as well as from the government caucus. One of the things in this that I was most shocked by is the number of people who have been affected by drunk driving. I put this on my Facebook and my Twitter. I asked around. That's why I was talking about .05 as well.

I just want to share a couple of stories as they deal with this. We all know about statistics, but it puts a human side on it. I was contacted by a gentleman named Mike, who is a restaurant owner in Calgary. He was driving in downtown Calgary on June 8, 2009, right by the courthouse, ironically. A driver ran a red light. He swerved to miss him and in doing so, he crashed into the pillars right in front of the courthouse. The drunk driver took off. The police later apprehended the driver. Not only was he driving under the influence, but they found that this was the driver's second offence of driving drunk, which is particularly of relevance in dealing with the section on escalating penalties in this bill.

Mike was left with many injuries – broken shoulder, cheek, wrists – and is still in treatment to this day. Interestingly enough, Mike operates a restaurant. When I spoke to him about this legislation, I thought he was calling about a negative reaction to one of the particular sections here, but he was actually in favour of it.

The second story comes right from my own staff, my administrative assistant, Shannon Clarke. On Christmas Eve 2001 she was stopped at a red light at 105th Street and 97th Avenue in Edmonton. Suddenly, without any warning, she was rear-ended. The cops later estimated that the person hit her at 50 to 60 kilometres per hour. The vehicle was so badly damaged that she had to crawl out of the window. Back at the police station it was apparent the driver, unfortunately, had been drinking although the amount of alcohol in his system was not determined. Shannon suffered severe muscular injuries, TMJ issues, and to this day has pain in her knees as a result of the accident.

8:30

Now, Mr. Chair, the third and final story I'll mention was also on Christmas Eve but in 1997. When I was driving from Calgary to Regina just across the Saskatchewan border on highway 1 – it used to be two lanes – right by Piapot, incidentally, close to our family's homestead, I saw a driver trying to pass me. I quickly saw that there wasn't enough time to do so. I pulled over, but the driver hit the oncoming vehicle head-on at full highway speed. After I crossed highway 1 on foot, I noticed that there were many beer cans. I remember it was Extra Old Stock beer. I felt the bottom of one of them, and it was moist. Clearly, this driver had been drinking. Later the RCs called me and told me that the driver received six months in jail for drunk driving.

Now, I've also received information. Randy Shapiro has sent me an e-mail regarding his drunk-driving issue. My seamstress, Renee, has as well. I won't belabour the point, but the point is that there were three different people – one in Calgary, one in Edmonton, and one in a rural area – all affected by drunk driving, which is what this bill seeks to address.

These are on top of the single and often multiple fatalities related to drunk driving. Many families and friends are all too familiar with recent crashes in Grande Prairie and Calgary and this past weekend in Beaumont, where alcohol is believed to be a factor. Three young men are dead, and perhaps all too telling, the RCMP stopped another impaired driver while dealing with this particular incident.

Where does this take us, Mr. Chair? I would say again that what we need is a made-in-Alberta solution. We need a rather thoughtful, proactive, and preventative approach to changing behaviour. I don't think that it's necessary to impose fines like other provinces have. It's not a money-raising issue, and nowhere do you find that in the bill. This is a traffic safety issue. This is about changing driver behaviour for the better, as the Member for Calgary-Lougheed noted as well. It's a balance between enforcement and education. It's about making our roads safer and targeting high-risk groups such as repeat offenders and new drivers.

It's very important to note that our current legislation, section 89 of the Traffic Safety Act, allows for 24-hour suspensions, actually, at any levels, but every police district which I spoke to indicated to me that they only enforce this above .05. The limits would remain at .05 and .08.

At this time I just wanted to share a couple of thoughts. The .05 legislation is not something that is new or is really, really out there at all. Australia has .05. France has .05. Germany has .05. Greece has .05. Italy has .05. Japan has .03, even; Norway .02; and Poland .02. I just wanted to mention that as well.

We had three different ministries working on this one. I want to assure this Assembly that none of these sections here represent a knee-jerk reaction. This is in response to, unfortunately, persistently high levels of drunk-driving fatalities and injuries in this province. Police, in fact, are enforcing the existing laws, but the current penalties that they have are simply not working. To those who have said that police are not enforcing existing laws, the Minister of Transportation has pointed out 42,000 24-hour suspensions in the last five years. In addition, an article from the Calgary Sun this weekend quotes RCMP Sergeant Tim Taniguchi – I hope I got the name right – who says that one 1 out of 22 drivers on the roads at night is impaired. That is quite a telling statement as well.

The new driver with any alcohol under this new section will get a 30-day licence suspension and a seven-day vehicle seizure. It's particularly important to note that most new drivers are under 18. I was 16 when I got my driver's licence. At that time I was not legally allowed to consume alcohol anyway. That still is the case, and that is addressed in the sections of the bill. People who blow between .05 and .08: they'll get a three-day licence suspension and a three-day vehicle seizure.

What's more important here, Mr. Chair: it will deal with the fact that currently we do not have any escalating penalties whatsoever. A person can get a 24-hour suspension on Monday, on Wednesday, on Friday. I'd be willing to bet that out of those 42,000 24-hour suspensions, many are repeat suspensions. Under the new legislation there is an escalation in the penalties as well.

Many people have said that we should target people well over .08. I'd say that I'd have to agree with that. The legislation brings in ignition locks, which is the interlock system mandatory even for first offenders over .08, and the licence suspensions that remain until criminal charges are resolved. It also involves education and planning ahead and impact courses.

Mr. Chair, Alberta's traffic sheriffs, which fall under my department, will support the legislation. They will be able to use roadside alcohol screening devices. They will be able to take readings while waiting for the police to arrive. They will issue sanctions for people in the .05 to .08 range. This type of co-ordinated law enforcement and integrated peace officer service will help make enforcement more effective.

Now, some critics have said that the proposal gives the police too much power, and that is a valid consideration. We don't want to make the police judge, jury, and executioner. That's not the case. In this system everyone has the right to challenge the results. You can ask for a second test right back at the police station. There is also an appeal process to the Alberta Transportation Safety Board. This is a fully independent and quasi-judicial body. The police already give out tickets at the roadside for things such as speeding. And, yes, I may have received a couple of those in my life.

We can also already issue immediate suspensions and readings from scientifically approved devices. Officers train in accordance with the alcohol testing committee and the Alberta breath test committee and use devices that are rigorously checked, maintained, and recalibrated. They already use devices that convict drunk drivers.

B.C.'s appeal process or lack thereof has been criticized. We shall deal with it in a bit, but Alberta's legislation is not modelled after B.C.'s. We have a made-in-Alberta piece of legislation here as well. There was an article, actually, two weeks ago by Robert Remington, in the Calgary Herald, which indicates about an appeal process – and I'll just quote from the article briefly.

Albertans who have been given roadside suspensions can appeal to the Traffic Safety Board, a quasi-judicial body with members chosen through a qualification process and governed by a code of conduct. If a suspension is overturned, any fines, fees, towing, or impoundment costs must be returned. At the roadside, drivers can also request a second test or demand a breathalyzer. At the appeal board, they can demand proof of accuracy and certification of hand-held testing devices.

None of these provisions were in the B.C. legislation.

Critics often say that people can't enjoy a drink with a meal or after work before driving. Factually this is incorrect. I'm not after the person who has a glass of wine or a beer or a cocktail with dinner. The legislation is not about stopping responsible Albertans enjoying themselves. We're just asking people to know their limits and stick to them. Plan ahead.

I wanted to mention as well, two weeks ago I attended the Calgary Police Service alcohol unit, where I drank several alcoholic beverages and then took a breathalyzer. I'm 185 pounds. It took four drinks in 45 minutes. That's pretty hard-core drinking. In fact, some suggested that I was back in university again. When I fell below .08 I did not feel like I should be driving, and I was driven home by a friend. Above .08 I didn't feel like I should be driving, and when I was just still above .05, I didn't feel like I should be driving either. I would challenge members of the government and of the opposition to take this test if they are at all interested. I'm sure the Calgary Police Service or their local police force would allow for it.

I'm asking people to be responsible. Designate a driver. If you're unsure, get a cab. Take public transit.

I want to address as well that some businesses say that Bill 26 will hit their profits, particularly people in the hospitality industry. Mr. Chairman, I'm going to tell you: that's not the intention of this bill. There are similar laws passed all over the world. Earlier I showed a comparison of places like Japan with .03, Norway with .02, and Sweden with .02, which in my opinion goes too far. There are still thriving hospitality industries in all of those jurisdictions.

There has been also some criticism of sanctions for people who blow between .05 and .08. Driving at .08 is not responsible, in my opinion. Particular statistics as indicated in Remington's article: 20 per cent of traffic fatalities involving alcohol were of people who had .05 to .08. He cites a University of Western Ontario study indicating that that's 300 deaths between 1998 and the present. Mr. Chairman, that's not acceptable.

What happens is that over .05 a person's chances of a collision increase significantly. Hundreds of Albertans are needlessly killed, not to mention all those injured by people with alcohol in their system above .05 but below .08. I put to this Assembly: it's a disservice to families to suggest that tougher penalties are not needed. The federal government, in fact, in 2009 recommended that provinces strengthen their penalties. The evidence shows immediate consequences changes behaviour. Education and enforcement may prevent drivers blowing over .08 or even .05 along the road.

I also want to mention that we are not out of step with other countries, but we are also not out of step with other provinces. Every province except Quebec has .05 legislation. Saskatchewan actually has .04. I say as someone from Saskatchewan that there's probably not as much to run into there as there is here as well. In Alberta the current roadside penalty, as I mentioned, is 24 hours. This is weaker than any of the other jurisdictions that I mentioned. It does not escalate for repeat offenders. As you've heard, this legislation will change that. It will bring Alberta in line with other provinces. I mention that although we have not modelled ourselves after B.C., we cannot ignore their particular experience in bringing down the amount of traffic fatalities involving alcohol.

8:40

The penalties above .05 do not involve a criminal charge, do not involve jail time but, rather, the withdrawal of the privilege of being able to drive. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview and I were exchanging a glance earlier. I think we agree that driving is not a right, but it's a privilege in our society. The courts have also ruled in this respect as well.

About 80 per cent of traffic-related deaths involving alcohol are caused by people above .08, meaning again that the remaining 20 per cent are below .08, which this bill's detractors, unfortunately, do ignore for whatever reason. Again, I have taken a breathalyzer below .08. I did not feel I should be driving. Unlike B.C. the drivers will continue to face charges above .08. If they blow over .08, they lose their licence until after the criminal issue has been dealt with.

In Alberta people charged with serious offences are often remanded. It follows that if you have the right to withdraw a driving privilege and if you abuse it, you lose it.

In conclusion, I just want to make a couple more analogies. When my father and I used to come to Alberta when I was a kid, we would drive to visit family. He and I would often laugh at the time that there was no seat belt law. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed mentioned that, unfortunately, we're not leading the pack here. We're at the bottom of the pack here given the fact that almost every jurisdiction in Canada has similar blood-alcohol limits as well.

I do want to mention another thing as well. I do think a way that we can actually decrease the amount of drunk drivers on the road, although this is municipal jurisdiction, is that we should encourage the municipalities to open up more taxi licences. I think there need to be more taxis available to people on the road. Just this weekend a friend and I were heading out and couldn't get a cab. That's something that we may consider. I understand the Frontier Centre for Public Policy has written something about the number of taxis being low in a lot of jurisdictions, including Alberta.

We must act to prevent tragedies, especially the needless deaths that I've mentioned already. Interestingly enough, though, Mr. Chair, I do often solicit things through my Facebook, and I did receive an interesting comment last night from a defence lawyer who's from Goderich, Ontario. He indicated to me:

As a criminal defence lawyer, I can tell the social drinker that they have nothing to fear by this legislation. The whole notion that "I guess I shouldn't have had that second glass of wine" is Something else I won't say.

To blow over .05 after a three hour soiree a man would have had to have at least five drinks and a woman probably four. No innocent sipper is going to get nailed by this legislation. I charge 5,000 bucks. A cab is $20. Even after 10 drinks you should be able to do that math.

Interesting thoughts from a defence lawyer, which I've never been. At the same time, this defence lawyer, I think, does have a point as well.

The last thing I just did want to mention as well is just dealing with a recent B.C. decision on this particular matter, which is Sivia v. B.C. If you go to the second-last page, just in the summary here, the legislation really seems to strengthen the resolve of this government. I will just mention the one thing that the court did throw out, which was, again, the lack of an appeal process. B.C. didn't have an appeal process. I have to agree with the court; that was wrong. We do have an appeal process here. Most importantly, the court upheld this when it said:

The . . . legislation does not create an "offence" as that term is used in section 11(d) of the Charter. Therefore, the legislation does not trigger the application of s. 11(d) of the Charter and it is not necessary to address whether the [legislation] . . . violates the presumption of innocence.

That's what the court really had to say there as well.

I also just wanted to thank the Edmonton Police Service, particularly Arleen Yakeley, for sending me a letter thanking me for steps moving towards Bill 26. We have almost universal support, if not fully universal support, in this province from our local police services as well as the RCMP detachment here as well. The police are the people who are enforcing this on a daily basis, and I take their recommendation here very seriously, as should we all. The concept of drunk driving is very serious, and I think members in favour and members opposed to this legislation would agree on that much.

I'll just close by saying that I think that any one of us could be the next victim of a drunk driver with 1 in 22 people at night being impaired. We have to take this seriously, and I want to thank all members from all parties, all sides of this for doing so.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

I have the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on the main debate in Committee of the Whole at this time if you wish to proceed, followed by Calgary-Varsity, and I believe I have Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo after that.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm tired, honestly, after listening to the Solicitor General because he was speaking so fast that it was very difficult to try and write everything down and try and catch everything he was trying to say.

One of the frustrations I have, quite frankly, as the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek and a member of the Wildrose is how the government tries to confuse the issue. There is no question, Mr. Chair, that our party – and I can speak for the Liberals, and I can speak for the NDPs. None of us like the idea of people that are driving when they're drunk. There's no question. I mean, when you start weaving and start talking about what Bill 26 is doing and all of a sudden we don't support legislation that has got a BAC over .08: it's absolutely foolish. There is no question – and I can probably speak for everybody in this Legislature – that we all believe that one of the top priorities for the government is . . .

Mr. Anderson: Should be.

Mrs. Forsyth: . . . should be to crack down on drunk driving. When you're talking about cracking down on drunk driving, I would like the Solicitor General to explain how many checkpoints are going to be increased. We have – what? – one in Calgary right now.

Mr. Denis: They already are.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Minister, you talk about how serious you are about the issue of drunk driving. When you want to catch drunk drivers, guess what you do? You have checkpoints. It's real easy.

Mr. Denis: We do.

Mrs. Forsyth: How many, Minister? One? Two? [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Keep it at a high level.

Mrs. Forsyth: Then the minister talks about the fact that we don't support the police in the province. Mr. Chairman, I was the Solicitor General. I know what an incredible job the police do in this province day in and day out. I bet you if I spoke to the police, one-on-one, that instead of pulling people over and taking the time to see if they're blowing .05 to .08, they'd much rather be after the pedophiles that are hanging around the park, people involved in child pornography, organized crime, a thousand and one other things.

What the Solicitor General doesn't mention in all the times he's spoken is that Alberta has the second-lowest ratio of police in the country. I think the lowest one is Prince Edward Island. Then they start confusing the issue by throwing in the sheriffs and a bunch of other things. Police officer to police officer we have the second-lowest ratio in the country. I think that's real important. There's no question, absolutely no question, that the police and the peace officers, including the sheriffs and, for that matter, quite frankly, anybody that wears a uniform in this province, does an incredible job in very, very difficult situations.

I, too, Mr. Chair, can rattle off as well as the minister can about – and he spoke in regard to the Facebook messages that he got. Every single person that he referred to was impacted by someone who was legally impaired under the Criminal Code. He talked about the 80 per cent of deaths on the highway that were due to impaired driving, and the other 20 per cent he alluded to had something to do with drinking and driving. He talked about the 42,000 people that have over the last five years been pulled over with 24-hour suspensions.

Well, this question is to the Minister of Transportation. Minister, I'd like to see a breakdown of those 24-hour suspensions and those numbers you have in regard to how many of those suspensions occurred in rural Alberta. I think that's important because what we're hearing is that our RCMP in this province don't have the manpower, don't have the amount of people. So please tell us, of the 42,000 over the five years how many of those were pulled over in rural Alberta. I'd like to see how many. You know, you have all the stats, so tell us how many were pulled over in Calgary, how many were pulled over in Edmonton. Give me some ideas of some of your high areas. In Fort McMurray where we have – how many in the aboriginal communities were pulled over in those 24-hour suspensions. I know we have some problems. On some of the roads there have been horrendous accidents outside of Lethbridge, some of those things.

8:50

I still have not had an answer from the government, and I'm still waiting in regard to what they're going to do and how they're going to deliver the educational program that is mentioned in this legislation. So if the Minister of Education is here – I don't know if it falls under him as the Minister of Education. The minister of advanced education is also here. The minister of health may even want to say if it's coming under the health component, if something like AADAC is going to be able to deliver that particular service.

There are so many questions. We've just recently learned that in B.C. – and I've got my number somewhere. Oh, yes. Here it is. The B.C. police force announced on Friday – and I'm not sure what Friday – that they are recalling a total of 2,200 roadside breathalyzer devices to have them adjusted after learning there is a chance they could lead to invalid roadside suspensions. What are you going to do about that? I know when you start reading all the information that you have on the breathalyzers, they talk about the calibre and things like that that have to be adjusted.

The Solicitor General mentioned the fact that he's going to have the sheriffs pull over. Of course, we all know that the sheriffs don't have the authority right now under the act to do a breathalyzer, which means those same sheriffs that pull these people over for a roadside breathalyzer test will have to wait for an RCMP officer. It says clearly under peace officer, when it talks about the peace officer definition – it has the authority under the section of the act. I know that right now they do not have the authority to do a breathalyzer. Are we going to extend the scope of practice for the sheriffs? I know the sheriffs that I've spoken to obviously want their scope of practice extended. They would like to be able to do the breathalyzers and all of those things. So what are we going to do about that, Minister?

They talk in the act – and it's been mentioned here – in regard to the prevention and wellness that they're going to do under this particular piece of legislation, so I'd like to hear from the government about what they're exactly going to do under prevention and wellness? You know, it's all very well to bring forward a piece of legislation. This is a fairly large bill, and it's got lots of things in it, lots of fairly significant things.

You know, for us to pass a piece of legislation without being able to get the answers that I think are important in regard to: are you, Minister, going to increase your police force? If you want the police to start suspending drivers that are blowing over .05 to .08, are you going to increase the number of police officers or, for that matter, RCMP officers in this province so that they can be taken away from the work that they should be doing in regard to organized crime? I mentioned child pornography. There isn't a day that we don't open up the paper when we hear about another child pornography ring busted. Are you going to increase the ICE team? All of those things are what I think truly, really, resonate with Albertans, quite frankly. We hear about organized crime, the gang violence, so we'd like to know that.

I've already asked you about the sheriffs. Are you going to extend their scope of practice? What are you going to do about the educational component? What type of breathalyzers are you going to be using when you talk about roadside breathalyzers? We've had lots of information about breathalyzers: what breathalyzers work, what breathalyzers don't work. You alluded to I think it was an Alco breathalyzer.

It's all well and good for the minister to tell us that he had the opportunity to go and sit and have three or four drinks to find out exactly where he was on the scale of impairment. Most Albertans don't have that opportunity to be able to play that game. I mean, quite frankly, Minister, I can have a glass of wine with dinner, and I'm fine. It depends on what I've eaten. It depends on what kind of day I've had. I can go out and have another glass of wine, and if I haven't had anything to eat, I can be tipsy real quick. Then I know what I shouldn't be doing, and that, quite frankly, is driving.

You know what? I have to give credit where credit is due, and that credit is to Albertans. I think that most of them are pretty sharp that way. I think what we're missing here are the chronic, repeat offenders that we really need to focus on. I don't see anywhere in this legislation a plan of attack about what you're going to do about the chronic, repeat offenders in this province. I'd like to hear – I know both you and the Justice minister go to FPTs, which are your federal-provincial-territorial meetings – what plan you have to talk to your federal-provincial-territorial counterparts. I know the former Solicitor General had attended FPTs. It would be nice to see if that was one of the items on the agenda. As the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills alluded to, in four years you would think you would have a plan of attack.

As I explained, when I was in the caucus the first time I even heard any discussion about the .05 was when I had the opportunity to sit beside my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who was asking about bringing it forward in a private member's bill. As the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills has said, if you've had something about this in the plans for the last four years, I would think that you would be able to stand in the Legislature and tell us about the education plan that you have. All of the questions that we've asked previously – quite frankly, I stood up a few minutes earlier and congratulated the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Gutsy, by far, for standing up and bringing forward what his constituents have told him.

I can tell you that Calgary-Fish Creek has been inundated with phone calls. I had my first support for this legislation today. It was my very first call I had. When we pursued it further: don't live in the riding, just wanted to let us know. We're very, very careful about making sure that we're representing the constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek.

Every month I write on my website an article called What's on Your Mind. You can go back on my website probably for two years, and it's always been health, education, seniors. Once in awhile it might be education, health, and seniors, or, you know, we'll throw in something that's been a hot issue. Guess what was tied with number one in November? Justice. And guess what that justice issue was? On the .05 to .08 legislation, and 99 per cent of the phone calls that we got do not support this legislation.

I'm going to say what I've said before. I'm going to get this on the record because I know the Solicitor General is going to be door-knocking when the next campaign comes, and he's going to be saying to people: that darned Wildrose supports drunk drivers.

So I want to put it on the record, on the record right now, that the Wildrose – he's making funny faces because he thinks he's cute.

Mr. Denis: No. I'm not making funny faces.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes, you were. [interjection] You can speak up later. We do not support drunk drivers.

I can speak on behalf of Calgary-Fish Creek, and I can also speak on behalf of the Wildrose. What we would like the government to do is target the chronic, repeat drunk drivers. We would like the Solicitor General to get more police officers in the province and let them do the job that they should be doing, which is targeting organized crime, pedophiles, child pornography. We would like the Solicitor General to have more checkpoints out. We would like the Solicitor General to provide more support to the police in this province instead of telling them: "Well, this is what you're going to be doing. You're going to now be pulling people over and making sure that they may or may not be blowing over .05." We would like the government to be able to answer the questions that we've asked.

The Minister of Transportation I'm sure is going to provide those – he talks over and over again about the 42,000 24-hour suspensions over the last five years. Well, Minister, provide us with a breakdown. Who would benefit more than us on the breakdown is the police. So if you've got a high percentage of 24-hour suspensions we'll say in – pick a town or pick a city or anywhere because I don't want to be accused of picking on rural Alberta or picking on Edmonton or picking on Calgary. That will certainly indicate to you where we have a problem with people that are driving over the limit of .05. Then we can target as per the – I can't even remember the task force I chaired – Keeping Communities Safe report and recommendations. There was a very strong recommendation in there to target the areas. I'm sure the Justice minister's Safe Communities Secretariat would be able to provide us that information.

9:00

With those comments, Mr. Chair, I appreciate you telling me my time is winding down. I want to emphasize once again that the Wildrose would like to see the government of Alberta target the chronic, repeat offenders. We need to target the 20 per cent of the population, no matter what it is, whether it's involved in drinking and driving, B and Es, all of that, that causes 80 per cent of the problems in this province. We would like the Solicitor General to bring in more police instead of being the second lowest in the country police officer to police officer. At least, raise them up a couple of notches so that they can do their job instead of taxing them. There are a whole bunch of things that we'd like the government to do, but I think I'll have the opportunity to be able to speak some more because I know we're in committee. I'll continue to bring forward the issues that, quite frankly, the police and Albertans, for that matter, have told me about. I guess the two people that are important at this point in time in the debate on this legislation are Albertans and the police officers that have to do this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I have the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. In my offering of a pre-Christmas present to all members of this House, I'm going to be as uncharacteristically short as I possibly can be. I am going to try and provide, in addition to my concerns, questions which I hope the Solicitor General, the Justice minister, or possibly the Minister of Transportation can answer.

I and my Liberal caucus colleagues are supportive of legislation that will reduce carnage on the roads related to overconsumption of alcohol. However, Mr. Chair, legislation alone does not save lives. It's legislation in combination with enforcement that saves lives. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek pointed out, Alberta has, if not the second lowest – I'm fairly confident of her figures – one of the lowest numbers of police officers per capita. In order to make this legislation have an impact and take drunks off the roads, you've got to have checkpoints. You've got to have people in place.

Now, one of my questions has to do with the implementation strategy surrounding Bill 26. I'm aware, for example, that with the land assembly strategy the idea is: pass the bill, and then have the hon. Minister of Environment and Water go with the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod and consult the public. I refer to it as the cart-before-the-horse strategy. I realize that the government members have provided some statistical information from not only B.C. but from some of the other provinces, and they've noted countries that have below the .05.

With regard to the implementation strategy costs are associated. I would appreciate anyone from the government side who can give me an idea of the costs of the effective implementation of this bill. I believe, Mr. Chair, that health and safety are worthy of investment. We have recently debated the supplementary supply bill, and I do not recall any line items directly related to the implementation of this particular bill. For this bill to be successful, there will have to be dollars set aside for public education. There will have to be dollars set aside for the hiring of judges, the increased hiring of enforcement officers, and the training of existing sheriffs so that they can be brought up to the standard of the RCMP.

I note that within this legislation there seems to be a fear of fining. This legislation has to be paid for, but I think the government is a little bit shy of being accused of the cash cow argument, of this just simply being a money grabber as opposed to an impairment preventer. I would encourage the government, when they finally get this legislation right – that, in my personal opinion, won't happen until after a committee has had a chance to bring forward witnesses and make the appropriate amendments and changes that will see this thing fly through the courts unchallenged.

In addition to the amount of money that is required – and even a ballpark figure would be appreciated – I would appreciate it, again, if the Minister of Transportation or the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General can lay out a tentative timeline for bringing Bill 26 into complete action so that we can say that as of, you know, February 2012 we hope to reduce deaths related to impaired driving by such and such a percentage. I look forward to a timeline, and I look forward to attaching dollars to this bill because without the timeline, without the dollars the accountability portion of this legislation is missing.

I thank the hon. chair for this opportunity to discuss how we can reduce the carnage associated with impaired driving, and I'm hoping that any of the three hon. ministers who are present can answer the questions with regard to cost of implementation and also a timeline for implementation.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, and I look forward to their responses.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

I have the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I also thank the Member for Calgary-Varsity and the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who spoke very well and who are very informed about the facts.

Alberta accident statistics confirm that a vast majority of alcohol-related injuries and fatalities result from impaired drivers at twice the legal impaired limit of .08. The question that has to be asked is based on the statistics that only 2.2 per cent had blood-alcohol levels from .05 to .08. That's only – I repeat – 2.2 per cent of people who have been involved in some kind of accident.

The question is: what about the other 97.8 per cent? That's the fundamental question to the Solicitor General, the Justice minister, and the Transportation minister. Why are you ignoring the 97.8 per cent of people that are creating the majority of the accidents? What are you doing? You're going after the 2.2 per cent, the soccer mom or the mother and father who go out and have a drink of wine after work. Great. Their car ends up potentially being towed for three days to seven days. It's wrong-headed. Why are you ignoring the 97.8 per cent that are creating accidents and that are causing deaths on our highways?

An even more direct question is this: why are you trying to ram this piece of legislation through? Why, unlike other parliaments and Legislatures across Canada, don't you refer this to committee, where the proper statistical analysis, the proper review of it from other provinces is done? It seems to be that this government wants to shoot first and ask questions later, and that's so typical of the number of bills that I've seen in this Legislature. I'm glad I'm not part of that government today because they shoot first and ask questions later.

Well, this is the opportunity to get it right the first time. The question is: why doesn't the Solicitor General or the Justice minister or the Transportation minister refer this to committee? You can learn something, certainly, from what's taking place in other provinces and from what's taking place in the federal Parliament relative to this issue when it comes to a proper review, a proper analysis statistically, collecting input from stakeholders relative to: what is a good law relative to this? This may be the start of a good law, but right now it is full of holes.

9:10

What are you doing? The Government House Leader is invoking closure. Why are you invoking closure? "We want to ram things through because we're not interested in hearing what Albertans have to say. We're not interested in what anyone else thinks because – didn't you know? – we're a 40-year-old government, and we're entitled to govern." That's the attitude of this government.

The Solicitor General should be listening carefully. Rather than shooting first and asking questions later, why don't you just get the bill right in the beginning? What we are willing to do is work at the committee level with opposition members and with this government to get it right for all Albertans. Rather than ignoring the other 97.8 per cent of Albertans, what are you doing? You're focusing in on 2.2 per cent of Albertans and forgetting about the 97.8 per cent of Albertans that have played a role and have created the majority of accidents because they are over .08. Why don't you get it right, turn your head and squeeze it around so it's not crossthreaded, and actually send it to committee? Send it to committee. And who knows? We may actually come back into this Legislature in the months ahead with a good law.

Right now this law rates right up there with what the law was when it came to the land-use framework. I see members on the other side who saw that. In fact, I had the pleasure of being in Eckville when that took place, and I can only say to you: Albertans sent the government loud and clear messages that night. I'm glad to see that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod is still there because I think that night they had a rope around a tree waiting for him and the Member for Foothills-Rocky View. I remember that night. You may forget about it, but I'll tell you that you should guard against self-deception because, let me tell you, self-deception is going to come home to roost when the next provincial election is.

Solicitor General, on all of the laws that were put forward where you shoot first and ask questions later, why don't you for once try to get it right the first time? How simple is it to try to get it right the first time?

Mr. Chair, I would humbly submit that this member and the members of the Wildrose caucus, who are astutely listening to Albertans – Albertans are saying, "We want the government to take this law, put it in a washing machine, and go to a committee so it can be cleaned and so that it can be done right" rather than what we see in front of us. What we see in front of us is really nothing more than a bunch of legislation that was, like, drafted by kindergarten children as opposed to mature lawmakers that actually have given it thought, who have studied it. But what do they do? The Government House Leader this afternoon invoked closure to ram through bills. Isn't democracy just beautiful in Alberta?

Mr. Chairman, I can only say to you that this type of arrogance is unacceptable. This is a bad law. It'll be proven to be a bad law, just like the land-use framework was a bad law, and then it came in with about a hundred amendments. I don't know many; I lost track. You know, after you do one amendment, then two, then three, then four, you might maybe figure it out that: gee, maybe we got it wrong. Well, you got it wrong. Why? Because you're not listening to Albertans, and that's the difference between us and the government. In the Wildrose caucus we're listening to our bosses, unlike you people, who seem to think that: oh, well, they'll just listen to what we do and what we say because we're the government, that is entitled to govern.

Mr. Chair, I can only say to you that this bill is wrong. I humbly submit to the Transportation minister and to the Justice minister and to the Solicitor General: refer this to committee so it can be done right. I'm quite prepared as a member to work with members of government and opposition to get the bill right. Let's just do it right the first time rather than this ramming it through with closure to shut down and to run and hide. You're even afraid now to debate in this House because you're invoking closure. What does that speak about democracy in this province, especially on such an important bill as this? [interjections] I can only say that I think colleagues around here are saying: shame on you.

Therefore, the fact that you are violating the democracy of this Legislature by not going to committee, by not being willing to study it – it must be so beautiful to be perceived to be so bright on the other side that they don't have to study anything. They don't have to in fact do any statistical analysis.

Well, I can only say to you that if you've ever seen The Beverly Hillbillies, then you might have heard of Jethro Bodine. Let me tell you right now that I think it's Jethro Bodine who actually might have drafted this legislation because that's how poor it is.

Let's get it back to the committee. We'll actually get a bill together, study it, beef it up, and put some real meat on the bones as opposed to going after 2.2 per cent of the population rather than the 97.8 per cent that you're missing. This is wrong-headed, and clearly it's a wrong bill. Let's study it and get it to committee.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

I understood the hon. Solicitor General may have wanted to go next.

Mr. Denis: I actually just wanted to ask the consent of the House to go to Bill 21, after which we can go to the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere's amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Well, we'll decide that at the appropriate time. In the meantime, are you putting a motion to adjourn debate?

Mr. Denis: On Bill 26. I would like to go to Bill 21, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Those are two different things, hon. member. If you are rising to adjourn debate, you have the floor. You can certainly move that we adjourn debate on this particular bill.

Mr. Denis: I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 26.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 21 Election Amendment Act, 2011

The Deputy Chair: Are there any speakers at committee stage to this bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chair, if you could clarify, are we on an amendment right now, or are we on the bill right now?

The Deputy Chair: We are on amendment A3, and amendment A3 is the one that was moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, I believe.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. I have amendment A2, but I do not have amendment A3 in front of me, which is unfortunate. You know what? If we're on amendment A3, Mr. Chair, I'll just take my seat and let someone else speak to it.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you.

The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I'm finding it difficult to follow the hon. Deputy Government House Leader's blindingly fast moves here tonight. Could we be reminded about what A3 is? I'm trying to find it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, amendment A3 was moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. I'd be happy to get a page to take a photocopy and provide it to you while we recognize another speaker if you wish.

Mr. Mason: That would be wonderful. Please.

The Deputy Chair: This deals with striking out subsection (2) in the proposed section 38.1, and it further deals with adding something after subsection (2) respecting a fixed date of March 12.

I'll recognize Calgary-Fish Creek, who might elucidate somewhat on that, and then we'll come back to you, hon. member.

Please proceed.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Chairman, thank you. I will tell you that amendment A3 was proposed by me. The first section is:

A general election shall be held March 12, 2012 and on the second Monday in March in the 4th calendar year following polling day in the most recent general election.

What we're suggesting is that we're going to have a fixed election date in March and every four years after.

The other subsection is:

The date for any general election after March 12, 2012 may be advanced up to 7 days by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is cabinet,

on the advice of the Chief Electoral Officer if the date of the election coincides with a religious or culturally significant holiday."

What we were doing there is that we were mirroring that after another fixed election day, and I think it was in Ontario. For example, March sometimes could include an Easter holiday, so we wanted to make sure that we were covered.

9:20

Mr. Chair, I think, more importantly than anything, the reason why I decided to bring this amendment A3 forward was the fact that the Premier is quoted and has been quoted in the Canadian Press. I'll quote it again so that it's in the record, so that when we go to the polls in March or April or May or June, whenever she decides to call it, sometime – we really don't have a fixed election date, so it could be February, March, April. It could go from now till, actually, 2013, when you have to have the election under the five-year mandate. Anyhow, Redford said, and I'm quoting . . .

Some Hon. Members: The Premier.

Mrs. Forsyth: "Redford said she would commit to calling an election in March . . ." The Premier.

I'm quoting. Can I not use the name if I'm quoting?

The Deputy Chair: Well, it's not the best of parliamentary procedure. It's been done before, as you know. We prefer that you not.

Mrs. Forsyth: The Member for Calgary-Elbow. How's that? Good? Thank you.

"[She] said she would commit to calling an election in March 2012 and every four years from that date. She said Albertans are supportive of the idea and that several other provinces already use the same model."

I have to tell you, Mr. Chair, I was quite excited when I read that, actually, because that came out on Friday, September 23. I thought: "Hmm. Maybe we have got someone." I've been a supporter of fixed elections for as long as I can remember. I haven't had the opportunity to get our researchers to check because they're so busy, but it seems to me that we did speak about this particular legislation many years ago when I first stood in this Legislature. I spoke for that then, and I'm still speaking for it now.

I was quite excited by the fact that finally this Premier that talks about how much she's going to change democracy and she's going to change the way things are done in this Legislature – I thought: "You know what? I think that's something that I'm going to support about her." When people ask me about the Premier, I was saying after I heard that: she believes in fixed elections.

As I indicated in my previous speaking notes, when the Premier was taking a question from, I believe it was, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, she said, "Mr. Speaker, I really don't think that the hon. member," referring to Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, "wants to get into a debate with me about democracy or why it matters." Well, guess what? We do want to get into a debate. We do want to find out what she really considers democracy and what she really doesn't consider democracy. I mean, after all, this is the Premier that, when she was with Joe Clark, was sent over to Afghanistan, and as I said in this Legislature, even the people of Afghanistan knew when they were going to be voting on their first election.

Mr. Mason: They even knew the outcome.

Mrs. Forsyth: You know, Mr. Chair, we have a sense of humour. You've got to love my NDP colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. He's got the most wicked sense of humour. As I explained before, it's just been a real pleasure sitting in this corner because you get to know a lot about people, and he has got just the greatest sense of humour.

Anyhow, back to the bill and the amendment. This Bill 21: I count it as less than 150 words. These 150 words in this bill are supposed to be about democracy. Mr. Chair, they're not about democracy at all. Democracy is when you go over to Afghanistan and you allow the people to vote, and they know a date, as does the United States of America. They know when they go. The Ukraine: they know. Venezuela, Kenya, Mali, Mexico, Iceland, France. [interjections] The Education minister thinks democracy is really funny. They all have election dates, Minister of Education.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has the floor. The chair is struggling a bit to hear her over some of the other comments.

Please, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, if you would continue.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, maybe you'd like to speak to the Minister of Education.

Seven provinces have fixed elections, so why don't we focus on that?

Some Hon. Members: Eight.

Mrs. Forsyth: Eight. And Alberta doesn't, hence amendment A3. What we're trying to do is that we're going to give the Premier an easy way out. The amendment talks about having the election in March. It's amazing how you can talk when you want a job, and then all of a sudden you get the job, and you don't want to talk about it anymore. You know, people are starting to ask about all of the broken promises, and since we have to stick to one piece of legislation, we'll talk about the Election Amendment Act.

The quotes in the paper are in regard to how she was going to have fixed elections and how they were going to be March 2012 and every four years after because – and this is good, Mr. Chair – that's what the people of Alberta want. They want a fixed election date. She's going to have it March 12 and every four years after that, and she's going to follow the same model as several other provinces. I could read this article verbatim because she talks about fixed elections. She talks about democracy. You know, it just goes on. She talks about electronic voting so disabled residents, those in isolated areas, and those travelling abroad can cast a ballot. And she favours more power to her caucus. Well, the first time we've seen more power to her caucus was when the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills stood up and spoke.

Mr. Chair, I am going to once again ask the government members that are here to speak on behalf of their constituents and, for that matter, on what the Premier actually said. I keep repeating that over and over and over again because I want that on the record. Once we start campaigning, we're going to be posting these YouTube's, so we'll look forward to some of the other members speaking. I know the Solicitor General wants to get up and tell everybody what he thinks about fixed elections. We're anxious for him to get up and speak on that because I think that it's important the residents of Calgary-Acadia have that information come election time and that we can be able to hear what he has to say.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'm going to once again talk about encouraging members of the Legislature to support amendment A3, which is very simple and talks about a March 2012 election and every four years after and even builds in the seven days in regard to a religious holiday if that happens to come up. I encourage everybody to support that amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm rising to speak in favour of the amendment that is now before us. It's not ideal, from my point of view, but it certainly has the advantage of fulfilling the Premier's campaign promise for a fixed election day. It's beyond me how a fixed election day can last 90 days, but that's what the Premier has managed to arrive at.

9:30

What I find difficult about this is that it arbitrarily picks a day. The amendment that I made, which was not passed, unfortunately, talked about a consultative process. I think what's key here and what I think the act misses and which this one misses as well is that there's more than one political party in this province. I know that for some opposite that's hard to believe, but there is more than one political party. In fact, four of them are represented in this Legislature.

Dr. Taft: Five.

Mr. Mason: Five of them. Oh yeah, they're still around for the time being.

So there are five, which is probably more than in many, many years have been represented in the Legislature.

Dr. Taft: It might be the most ever.

Mr. Mason: It may be the most ever. That would be an interesting fact. Maybe when the Speaker does his moments in parliamentary history, he might want to address that at some point, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

The point is that there needs to be some consultation. There should have been consultation on this act, Mr. Chairman. There absolutely should have been some consultation. I was actually surprised. After being in this place for nearly 12 years, I don't consider myself to be a neophyte or particularly naive about how things are done. In fact, I was hopeful that the Premier was actually going to talk to the other political parties about the election. That didn't happen.

It may be ingrained in our political history. It may be ingrained in the British parliamentary system in the way that it's developed, the sort of sense that it is the advice of the government to the monarch or the advice to the monarch's representative that determines whether or not a government has the confidence of the House and whether or not there should be an election. That has evolved in that system to the point where, essentially, the Premier or the Prime Minister, the head of the government, has almost complete control over election timing. That's not always how it's been, but certainly that's how the British parliamentary system, including here in Alberta, has developed over the past few centuries. And it's that that people are starting to challenge. It's that that people are talking about when they say that it should no longer be the case that one person has complete and unrestricted control over election timing other than having to have an election every five years at a minimum.

So having taken the step that other provinces have taken and moved towards fixed election dates, the government fell short here, Mr. Chairman, and refused to go to an exact date, and they refused to consult with other political parties. I think that that's just wrong. I think there's something fundamental that we have to address in this House when it comes to talking about election dates; it's that it should not be entirely in the purview of the governing party. It affects lots of people. So we set the rules of the game by consultation with all of the participants, not just one person gets to set the rules of the game and then, you know, amazingly manages to win most of the games.

I think that that whole mindset that exists here, that it is really in the realm of the government to make these decisions, is what we need to challenge and what needs to go. So this amendment at least narrows it down to one date, and it is at least being debated in the Legislature, so that is progress, Mr. Chairman. That's why I'm prepared to support it. But it does not negate the disappointment that I feel when I look at how this Premier is carrying out her mandate, which, of course, only comes from the Progressive Conservative Party, not from Albertans at this stage at least, to bring in fixed election legislation. She's failed to do that.

You know, Mr. Chairman, it's a good thing that this Premier didn't promise Albertans a chicken in every pot because we would have ended up with a pigeon in every refrigerator. That would have been in her view keeping the promise that she'd made. It's not quite what was promised. What was delivered is not what was promised.

Mr. Chairman, I think that March 12 is as good a day as any other. The second Monday in March seems to work, and I like the clause in here, clause (b), that allows the date to be shifted on the advice of the Chief Electoral Officer if the election date "coincides with a religious or culturally significant holiday." I think that's a good piece to add in here.

On balance, Mr. Chairman, I think that it is a good amendment to a bill that is disappointing and that has fallen short, and for that reason I will support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm looking forward to having an opportunity to speak to amendment A3. I want to begin by thanking the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for not only attempting to save the government's face but their butt as well. Now, A3 proposes March 12, 2012, as the first of our designated election days and thereafter every four years. The thoughtfulness of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is very expansive in that she's allowed what I would call a week's wiggle room for government to cover potential religious holiday complications and considerations. Not only has she defined a day, but she's defined a week.

I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood had a little bit of difficulty around this particular date, but I believe his colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, based on her discussions, would like the idea of this election date occurring in March as opposed to May because I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was concerned about the number of students living in the area and was concerned that had the election been held in May as we'd originally proposed, there was the potential of students being left out of the process. We know, Mr. Chair, that the 18- to 24-year-old group is the least represented when it comes to voting.

Thirdly, hon. Chair, I want to talk very briefly about the law of unintended consequences. The Premier and her advisers, in proposing this electoral season, provided the opposition with the possibility of 91 amendments. The reason I say 91 amendments is that the period covered would include leap year. I think that possibly in addition to amendment A3 we should have an amendment A4 that would be very logical. That would be to have the fixed election date every February 29 because the consequence would be that it would naturally occur every four years and the chances of it interfering with religious holidays or other events would be greatly reduced.

Lastly, Mr. Chair, in recognition of our current season maybe the government could adjust their election anthem accordingly: 'tis the season to be voting, fa la la la la la la la.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on the amendment.

9:40

Mr. Anderson: That was riveting, riveting stuff. It's always great when we get the music going in here.

I'm going to obviously stand up and support this amendment because I'm in favour of fixed election dates. I feel that this probably in a lot of ways, I think, is the most egregious broken promise that the Premier has made. What is so frustrating about it, Mr. Chair, is that this is such an easy promise to keep. She made it right before a leadership selection where she was elected leader based on a platform of transparency and accountability. I just don't understand why she couldn't follow through with such an easy, clear promise that she had made. I don't understand. There are members opposite there that know – you know, they have enough integrity to know that this was dishonesty with Albertans. That's what it was. Everyone in this Chamber knows it, yet here we go. We're going to ram through a very silly piece of legislation that doesn't do anything.

Good grief. Even the previous Premier, who certainly to my knowledge is not a fan of fixed election dates, said that, yes, it will most likely be in March 2012, four years after the last one. He said that all along. I'm assuming he would have kept that promise. For this Premier to be that blatantly misleading to the public just says all I need to know about how much her word is worth, which is nothing.

It's sad, too, because new leaders, when they're chosen, get a completely clean slate in front of them. It's a white piece of paper, right? They can define who they are, and they can define what kind of leader they are, and they can define how they've changed things from scratch. One of the first things that she does is this. You know, first, she cancels the session; that's another issue. She cancels the session, recalls it for a couple of days, takes a month off, then comes back, and all that stuff. Now she's invoking closure on all this.

I guess that, technically, during the leadership she never promised to have a full fall session. She didn't make that promise. It was kind of implied because, you know, she talked about democracy, transparency, and respect for the legislative process. That kind of implied that you'd have some respect for the legislative process this year instead of this joke that has been the last two weeks and this final couple of days where we ram through legislation like it just means nothing. It's just incredible.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we're debating the amendment, please. Casting possible aspersions on the work of the House may not get you there, so please stick to the amendment. Thank you.

Mr. Anderson: So the amendment, as we know, calls for a fixed election date, which is a promise that this leader made during her leadership election. She made that promise several times. We've read into the record many instances from the newspapers and direct quotes from her that she would clearly set a fixed election date. She even mused about it being in March of 2012 – not mused, but really kind of just said: it's four years after the last one, which was in March 2008, so this one will be in March 2012. Then she comes back with this piece of rubbish, and that's what this bill is.

I find it ironic, Mr. Chair, that we can pass Bill 203, the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act and that we can have a fixed date on that. The Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend Act: we think that's important enough to have a fixed date. But for the most fundamental pillar of our democracy, which is voting, for some reason this Premier thinks that it's acceptable to give her government the hand up on opposition parties and on the democratic process. It is absolutely shameful. She has with that move as well as several others completely undermined her own credibility in this Legislature and in this House and in the minds of Albertans, and of course the party that goes with it are those that vote with her in doing this.

I hope that some will stand up and say: you know what – what's she going to do? I mean, you're supposedly independent MLAs that can do what you think is in the best interests of your constituency or do what's right.

You know, she claims – I've heard her say many times that she was wrong for kicking out the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for standing up for his constituents. Well, okay. Good. If that's the way she feels, if you trust her so much, then why don't you stand up and vote against this bill, that you know clearly, many of you over there, is wrong? It is wrong. This is a joke. Name a jurisdiction in North America that allows for fixed election seasons. It's insane. I mean, it's just dumb. That's what it is. If there was any precedent for it, but there's not. It's just such a slap in the face to the people of Alberta and to the democratic process. It just says: "Ha, ha. Fooled you. Guess what? I'm going to go do something completely opposite to what I just said. I'm going to call a fixed election season, so we still can have a couple of weeks, two or three weeks' head start whenever we feel it's in our best interest."

I tell you that this is one of those things. You know, not necessarily everyone in the province of Alberta wants a fixed election date. That's not what I'm arguing. There are some that say that they don't care if there is one or not. But I'll tell you what every Albertan should be concerned about, whether they agree with fixed election dates or don't agree with fixed election dates, is being deceived, blatantly being told something and then the opposite occurring right after, days after the election. If that doesn't make Albertans mad or distrustful, then who knows what will? And you do feel it. You do feel the current of: we don't know if we can trust it. They want to. That's the thing about Albertans. I think we can all testify to this. They so want to give people the benefit of the doubt. They so do. It's just natural. They're so optimistic, and they're so bright about the future no matter what the times, it seems, that they want to give people the benefit of the doubt.

I'll tell you that regardless of her past leanings or associations with whatever leaders or whatever party she was involved with federally and so forth, even with that, I still think Albertans are like: "You know what? Let's see what she can do. Let's give her the benefit of the doubt. Let's see if she's going to be honest." All they really want is honesty. All they want is honesty. You know, they don't mind if you're wrong about something. Just say that you're wrong or just say what you're going to do and do it. If you realize that you've made a mistake, say you're wrong and change it. Whatever.

The point is that they just want honesty, and this was just so blatantly dishonest. It's very frustrating because, you know, you want to think the best of people. I know Albertans want to think the best of people on this with this Premier. But now they have cause with this bill as well as others, this bill being the most blatant of dishonest things that this new Premier has done with regard to the people of Alberta: telling them one thing and doing another.

I absolutely will be supporting this amendment. March 12, you know, is as good a date as any. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said: it's as good a day as any.

I also think it's very important that you give that couple of days of flexibility to the Chief Electoral Officer. You know, if it falls on a holiday of significant importance or cultural importance, et cetera, we can shift it one or two days. That doesn't make a difference, but three months is just a joke. This Premier should be totally ashamed. I really do wish that that Premier would have the guts to stand and defend this bill. I just wish that she would have the guts to stand and debate this bill with us in this House. It's very disappointing that I have not heard from the member to this point on this bill. It seems like she's running and hiding, that she doesn't want to take responsibility for her actions when she doesn't stand and debate this bill.

9:50

So I'll be supporting the amendment, Mr. Chair. I hope everyone will support this amendment in this House. Let's set this date. Let's get it done. Let's not be a joke when it comes to democracy and comes to, you know, this Premier's word. Let's make an honest lady out of this Premier when it comes to fixed election dates and her promises.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: I don't have any other speakers to amendment A3. If there are no others, I'd ask if you're ready for the question.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're now back to committee. Are there any other speakers at the committee stage?

Mr. Anderson: Well, we've already talked, Mr. Chair, a lot about our feelings on this, so I'm not going to belabour it much further. But I do want to propose this amendment because I promised to do so for a constituent of mine who had some very clear ideas of what he thought would be the best way to proceed. I'm doing this for him.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Hon. member, we'll just wait for the pages to bring the amendment to the committee desk here.

We're going to call this amendment A4. I'll assume that everyone who wishes to now has a copy of the amendment.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on amendment A4 as presented by yourself.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Amendment A4. I move that Bill 21, the Election Amendment Act, 2011, be amended in section 2 in the proposed section 38.1 by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) Subject to subsection (1) and (3), a general election shall be held April 16, 2012 and on the third Monday in April in the 4th calendar year following polling day in the most recent general election.

And (b) by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) The date for any general election after April 16, 2012 may be advanced up to 7 days by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the advice of the Chief Electoral Officer if the date of the election coincides with a religious or culturally significant holiday.

Clearly, this is very similar to the last amendment, Mr. Chair, so I'm not going to spend a lot of time on it, and I don't expect any other members will. The reason this constituent proffered this idea, or proposed this idea, was simply because – well, there were a couple of things. He thought that it would be important every year for there to be enough time at the beginning of the year to pass a budget, to put a budget forward. He thought that, you know, by the time we came back to work on February 1 or thereabouts, not much later than that, maybe even a couple of days earlier, in late January, if we had this law, we would have enough time to get through at least the budget and make sure that there was money in the coffers, so to speak.

One of the problems that you can have with calling it too early during the budget process – and we may run into this problem this year. I don't know what the Premier has in mind. I don't know what the Premier is doing because she didn't set a fixed election. Ideally, what one would do in this case, I think, is that you would come back, and you would pass a budget. In this case let's say that we come back on February 10, and the Premier does a throne speech, and she – I don't know – puts out a budget, a proposed budget, and then drops the writ. Then all of a sudden all of those consultations that were done for the six months prior to the writ period, in the caucus and with stakeholders and so forth, are essentially lost if the government of the day is defeated.

So you're asking a new government to come in, if a new government was to come in, and essentially start the budget process all from scratch, which takes time if you're going to do it right. By the time you get the consultations and everything fixed, you know, go through everything and get a budget, it's probably going to be, assuming that the election period was, say, from February 15 to March 15 or thereabouts, into May or June before you even get the budget passed, which would be well into the next budget year. So you'd have to be bringing all kinds of huge supplementary supply bills, which I don't think are necessarily a good thing except in the case of real emergencies.

The point that this constituent was making, that I'm making, is that the fixed election date ought to be long enough away from the start of the new year so that the government of the day can bring in a budget, pass the budget, go through the proper process for that, and then go to the polls. It gives the public a very clear idea of what the government's priorities are because they've just passed a budget. They can't hide from their record. They can't cover their tracks, so to speak, of what their priorities are. Their priorities are what's in the budget. So they can campaign on what they've done for that budget year, and if they've done a good job, the people of Alberta will give them another term. If they've done a poor job and another party is voted into government, that party will have then, again, a full year to develop the next budget, with proper consultation and so forth.

That way, you know, we're not running around passing supplementary supply bills just to essentially keep the lights on and keep the health care system going and all that sort of thing, which is not the way to do things. Clearly, you want to make sure that you've got a good amount of time to go over estimates and to go through each departmental budget with a little bit of thoroughness to make sure you're doing a good job.

It's a little bit later than my colleague proposed. It's about a month and a half or thereabouts later, but I think that would give us a little bit of extra time to make sure that we get a budget, that we're not running out of money.

Again, I go back to the specific argument that this clearly was a promise made by the Premier. I would ask her and her caucus to please comply with her promise in that regard. She made the promise. I think the vast majority of the folks in this room know full well that it is the right thing to do, that a fixed election date is the democratic and honest thing to do for this Premier.

I would hope that, Mr. Chairman, in the interests of democracy, fairness, transparency, and all those wonderful things that we seem to hear from the other side from time to time – but actions speak louder than words. They haven't walked the walk. They've just continued to talk the talk, and that's not good enough for the people of Alberta. It's certainly not good enough for the people of Airdrie-Chestermere, who I'm honoured to represent.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, thank you also for indicating that this amendment A4 is virtually identical to the one we've just had significant debate on, A3, other than the date. So let's keep that in mind as we move forward.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Speaking extremely briefly to amendment A4, this is one, as you've noted, of 91 possible amendments. What this date, April 16, does suggest is that for the convenience of university students, while they would potentially be writing final exams, if polling stations were provided for their convenience in easily found locations on their campuses, I think the university students between exams could be encouraged to take the time to vote for their candidate. Also, speaking of university students, if they had the choice to vote for the candidate who represented them where they went to school and where their lives were terrifically impacted, they would appreciate having that choice as opposed to making arrangements to vote at some other location far from where they currently were attending school, possibly in remote corners of rural Alberta.

10:00

The April 16 date is another positive possibility. Mr. Chairman, other than the symbolic choice of April 1, which, of course, is April Fool's Day, I would suggest that any date selected within this election season would be preferable to the entire season. I'm sorry, Mr. Chair, but I don't have a song that goes with April 16.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Well, it may be a good thing because I used to adjudicate song contests, hon. member. You may not have liked my ruling. However, I appreciate the spirit.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on A4. Proceed.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chair, I'll stand up and speak. A3, with the March date, was voted down by the government, so I'm going to stand up and speak in support, obviously, of amendment A4, which is that "a general election shall be held April 16, 2012 and on the third Monday in April in the 4th calendar year following polling day in the most recent general election." My colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere has also included the same subsection as I did in A3, about the seven days that the Chief Electoral Officer has if it should coincide with a religious or, actually, culturally significant holiday.

I guess we could probably spend hours and hours in the Legislature debating dates. If we go back, actually, to the bill, we have the Premier's "I'm not sure when I'm going to call an election, but it may be between these dates" bill, where she talks about from March 1, 2012, and ending on May 31. Amendment A3 was March, amendment A4 is April, and possibly the opposition will bring forward an amendment for May, and then we've covered March, April, and May. We've covered all three months that are included in this bill. I think the government might like one of those months, hopefully, so that we can kind of track them down from the three months to the one month so that we can get the government in regard to a fixed election date.

We have talked over and over and over again in regard to all the countries in the world that have fixed election dates. We've talked about the eight provinces in Canada that have a fixed election date. I know that Alberta is very proud of what I would consider going it alone. We like to be innovative. We like to do things differently. We like to be what I would consider leading edge. I think that if we go back to the speech, to when the Premier was speaking – it was supposed to be on the state of Alberta, and I think it was on the economy. We had to have a special concession in the Legislature to have this. It was more a Speech from the Throne and didn't even talk about anything else that we were going to talk about when we were supposed to be talking about the economy. I think that's what it was.

One of the things that the Premier has bragged about consistently and talked about is how she believes in democracy, how she had no hesitation about mentioning in the past her work that she did in Afghanistan. I've alluded to the fact that even for the first vote the Afghanistan people knew what date they were going to vote. Even though the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said that they knew what the vote was going to be, they still had the opportunity to have a fixed date for an election, their very first election.

I guess what somebody has to ask is: what happens when you're charged with running the province and you become the head of the government and you start backing down from your principles? That's where I scratch my head. You talked about being the leader of the province. You were running for leader of the province, and you talked about fixed election dates. You talked about the Health Quality Council and the independent judicial inquiry. You know, there have been so many broken promises already in such a small period of time that it's hard for me to even keep up. The only promise that I think, quite frankly, has been kept is the $107 million on education, and that's sort of a half-assed truth. We wanted to know where the money was coming from. We know the money has gone into education, and quite frankly we're very pleased. It's the same money that was taken out of education. [interjection]

You know, we have this continuous echo in the background from the Minister of Education. He has not got the fortitude to stand up and speak in this Legislature, but he can certainly chirp better than any bird I know can chirp, continuously. I'm hard of hearing, Mr. Chairman, and I can hear him, and I haven't even got my hearing aids in, for goodness' sake. There's probably a good reason for that, to be honest with you.

I was talking about her half-promises, and that was on the $107 million that she promised would go back to the schools. A wonderful, wonderful idea, but I still don't know where the money is coming from.

Mr. Chair, on the A4 amendment I guess what I'm trying to get to is that the promises that are made are not the promises that are kept. It seems that once she becomes the head of the government, the Premier of this province, everything else changes. "We've just decided, Albertans, that – you know what? – I'm not going to keep my promises anymore."

I'm going to encourage the government again to support A4. We've done the March election: defeated by the government. I'm sure this April amendment will also be defeated by the government. Maybe we'll hurriedly put an amendment out for May, and then in that way we've covered every month in her three-month period. You can pick the best one out of the three, quite frankly. It gives the government options.

On that note, Mr. Chair, I'm going to encourage the government members to support this amendment. I will say thank you and sit down.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Is the House ready for the question on A4, then?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other speakers in Committee of the Whole in general with respect to Bill 21, the Election Amendment Act, 2011?

10:10

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, when I was an elementary student, there was a little poem on the back of our scribbles that would help us remember how many days there were in each month, and I think that the Premier and the government members need a little poem to help them remember how many days there are in a day. I've composed a little ditty for the members opposite to assist them in considering how to vote on this bill. It's called How Many Days in a Day?

Thirty days hath April.

The others have 31 except for February alone,
Which has 28 clear except each leap year.

Thus, the promised election date has 90 days
Except for 91 each leap year.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Is the committee ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 21 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Those opposed? That is carried.

Bill 24

Health Quality Council of Alberta Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any speakers at Committee of the Whole to this bill, or is there an amendment here? We are on subamendment A1. Are there any speakers to subamendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: I apologize, Mr. Chair. I thought you were asking for amendments to be made, and I hopped to it. I've previously spoken to A1.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you for that clarification. Sorry that I didn't spot that it was subamendment A1 quickly enough, but that is, in fact, what it is. It is a subamendment that was brought forward on November 29. Are there any other speakers to subamendment A1?

Is the Assembly ready for the question on this subamendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now going back to the main amendment, which I believe is called amendment A1, moved on November 29. Any speakers to this amendment?

Is the Assembly ready for the question, then? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: We're moving quite quickly here, so I just need to get a clarification that A1 is the government amendment that was brought forward, if I'm not mistaken, by the minister.

The Deputy Chair: I'm sorry. Just a moment. We're in the middle of a vote here, hon. member. Are you wishing to clarify something prior to the vote?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. I just want to get a clarification, if I may, that the one you're speaking of, A1, is the one that was brought forward by the minister.

The Deputy Chair: Yes. In fact, that's just what I was asking Parliamentary Counsel here to find for me. It was moved on November 29 by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, and it's A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back to the main discussion during Committee of the Whole on Bill 24, the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act. Any speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Just to be absolutely certain, Mr. Chair, I think you mean Bill 24 as amended by A1.

The Deputy Chair: Yes. Correct.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Chair, I would like to present an amendment to Bill 24. I will have the pages bring it to you so that it can be circulated, and then we'll discuss this proposed amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. members, we will await the arrival of the original and then have the pages distribute copies to everyone. We will appoint this as amendment A2.

I shall assume that everyone now has a copy of amendment A2 to Bill 24. If anyone doesn't and still wishes to receive one, would you please signal? Otherwise, hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, if you would proceed and tell us if this is on your own behalf or on someone else's behalf that you're moving it, we would appreciate it.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Chair, I am moving amendment A2 on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who is the Liberal health critic. The hon. member moves amendment A2 to amend Bill 24 as amended by A1 as follows: (a) in section 18 by striking out the words "unless the Panel determines, in accordance with section 19, that the hearing or part of a hearing is to be held in camera"; and (b) by striking out sections 19, 20, and 22(4).

Mr. Chair, the reason for this particular amendment is that if left unamended – and I'm including amendment A1 when I say unamended – these sections provide that all or part of a health system inquiry may be heard in private upon application to the panel. This is the first of a series of amendments that I'll be proposing that, at the very least, if the government will not consider what the Premier promised, a judicial public inquiry, then by accepting these amendments, the transparency and accountability will be provided such that whenever the panel runs into some degree of problems, they can't scurry through the door, close the door behind them, and have in camera discussions.

Mr. Chair, the Premier talked in her campaign for the position of Premier about the importance of transparency and accountability. We've talked at length about the current intimidation that medical practitioners, whether they be nurses, orderlies, or doctors, are experiencing. Unless they have what this amendment is calling for, the right to in some cases have their comments shared publicly, their concerns shared publicly as opposed to in camera or behind closed doors – and they're especially concerned about the people who have made their life so miserable and in some cases forced them to leave the province due to intimidation – and to have those statements recorded in public so that the public can in fact be the jury. The importance of the public acting in that jury position and deciding whether or not the best interests of Albertans, in terms of their health management, has been taken into account is an extremely important factor.

10:20

As I say, in this particular amendment – and I will not go into considerably greater detail given the lateness of the hour. It's 20 minutes past 10 on Monday night, and we have a series of amendments that call for this type of clarity and transparency, A2 being the first of the series. So I'll look forward to other members participating in the debate. If we have to go with the Health Quality Council, a counterfeit to the Public Inquiries Act, at least let's have that group accountable for their actions.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Calgary-Varsity.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chair, this is an interesting amendment. I think probably we had the discussion, I guess, last Thursday, when the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood brought up the fact that – you know, it's late into the night, 20 after 10, and all of the sudden you're getting all of these amendments thrown at you. As a member of the opposition you talk about being prepared and ready to speak on these amendments with virtually nothing in your hand, where the government can sit there and not really do anything about that.

I'm trying to look hurriedly into our Public Inquiries Act to find out just exactly what happens under the Public Inquiries Act, how they deal with hearings that are in camera versus out of camera. I'm going to suggest that I'm going to support this amendment because, as the Member for Calgary-Varsity has said, it's important that we have an open and transparent inquiry.

The Premier has talked about the fact that she wants everything to be open and transparent, how to establish a public inquiry, and all of the sudden that's all left in the hands of cabinet. So I would suggest that, you know, the talk about the fact that if it's an opinion of the board, et cetera, things like that, again, leave it in the hands of whether or not they should have a judge.

Then we go to the health system's inquiry under Bill 24, to the amendment A2 that the member has brought forward, and it talks about the hearings.

A hearing that is part of an inquiry is open to the public unless the Panel determines, in accordance with section 19, that the hearing or a part of the hearing is to be held in camera.

That's the part that the member is suggesting should be taken out.

Then it goes on: by striking out sections 19, 20 and 22(4).

Under considerations re in camera hearing it goes:

- 19(1) Where an application is made to the Panel to hold a hearing or a part of it in camera, the Panel shall weigh and consider the following matters, as applicable, before deciding to hold the hearing or any part of it in camera.

I think this is important to get on the record, Mr. Chair, as boring as it may seem. Albertans are very, very busy people, and a lot of them don't have time to read the legislation word for word or even to understand it. What they do understand, though, is whether we'll be able to tell them what is contained in this particular piece of legislation or not.

It goes on.

- (a) the private interests of a patient or person or, where the patient or person is deceased, of the patient's or person's next of kin.

I'm not sure exactly what relevance that has.

And then it goes on.

- (b) whether disclosure of all or part of the diagnosis, medical records or information of a patient or person is likely to result in harm to the patient or person or to the treatment or recovery of the patient or person.

So it goes on with, you know, disclosing medical detail and things. I guess that what my gut is telling me is that when you've gone this far and you're going into a full, transparent, judicial inquiry, it's important to keep the evidence open so the public can understand exactly what is happening. I always found from previous meetings I've been to – and I've been on a lot of boards previously appointed by the government and other work that I've done – that when all of a sudden you're going in camera, people always wonder what happens, like: "What are they talking about? What is it that they don't want the public to know when they go in camera? What exactly is happening?"

Having said that, I am going to be supporting amendment A2. I always rationalize or try and understand what exactly is behind what the government is trying to achieve, and under that section I can't really understand what the government is trying to achieve or if they're trying to achieve anything, to be very honest with you. Having said that, I am going to look forward to some more amendments that the member has said they're bringing forward. We're also going to be bringing amendments forward, and it will give me the opportunity to do some research on what is being proposed versus what's incorporated in the Public Inquiries Act.

With that, I will sit down, and I will look forward to more debate.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'm pleased to recognize the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's late, and I see a lot of ties undone here. I would therefore move that we adjourn debate.

The Deputy Chair: On amendment A2.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chair, I'd move that the committee rise and report progress on bills 24 and 26.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Zwodzesky in the chair]

Mr. Quest: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 21. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 26, Bill 24. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report presented?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any opposed? Accordingly, the report has been so ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that this House stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:29 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

Bill 26 Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011 ..... 1631, 1633

Bill 21 Election Amendment Act, 2011 ..... 1643

Bill 24 Health Quality Council of Alberta Act..... 1648

Introduction of Guests ..... 1633

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fourth Session

Alberta Hansard

Tuesday afternoon, December 6, 2011

Issue 46a

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta The 27th Legislature

Fourth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Hon. Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Hon. Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Hon. Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Hon. Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hon. Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC)
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Hon. Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Hon. Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Hon. Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Hon. Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (PC)
Stelmach, Hon. Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC)
Webber, Hon. Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

Clerk	W.J. David McNeil	Committee Research Co-ordinator	Philip Massolin
Law Clerk/Director of		Sergeant-at-Arms	Brian G. Hodgson
Interparliamentary Relations	Robert H. Reynolds, QC	Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Chris Caughell
Senior Parliamentary Counsel/		Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	Gordon H. Munk
Director of House Services	Shannon Dean	Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard	Liz Sim
Parliamentary Counsel	Stephanie LeBlanc

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 68      Alberta Liberal: 8      Wildrose Alliance: 4      New Democrat: 2      Alberta: 1

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Sustainable Resource Development
Janice Sarich	Education
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Rodney
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
MacDonald
Mason
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Dr. Taft

Bhardwaj
Blackett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Ouellette
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 6, 2011

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

On this day let each of us pray in our own way for the innocent victims of violence. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted.

Today we join with Legislatures across Canada in honour of the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women. This day of remembrance marks the anniversary of the 1989 massacre of 14 women students at l'École Polytechnique in Montreal. Hon. members, please join with me in observing one minute of silence.

Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a person who needs no introduction. Mr. Bob Maskell served in this House as the representative for Edmonton-Meadowlark and served us very well. Bob is probably just as well known in Edmonton for his service to the education community, having been the principal, I believe, of Jasper Place high school and then Victoria school of the arts, and he took that school into what some describe as the Juilliard of the North. Bob also has served us very well both in terms of connections between Alberta and China and in working within Alberta with our aboriginal peoples and aboriginal communities. I'd ask Bob Maskell to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and thank you of the House.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much. I rise with privilege to introduce to you and through you three guests in the members' gallery. Wendy Rodgers, who is the executive assistant to the Member for Calgary-Shaw, and her husband, Mark Meters, are joined by their friend visiting us from Bavaria, Germany, George Stretz. George is an air traffic controller at the Munich Airport. Mr. Speaker, through you I'd like to say auf Deutsch, in German . . . [Remarks in German] Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first is a young lady, a university student specializing in poli-sci and international relations and up until recently my constituency assistant, Miss Natasha Soles. Natasha has an exceptional level of political acumen, and she comes by it naturally as her parents Katie and Ian are amongst my and others in this Assembly's strongest supporters. With her today is my CPC assistant, Mr. Benjamyn McKay. I would ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

My second introduction today, Mr. Speaker, is Ms Jill Didow, the executive director of the Realtors Community Foundation. Jill, whose love of community, of humanity is exceeded only by the love of her dogs, is the topic of my member's statement today. Jill, would you please rise also and receive the traditional greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce through you and to you another Wildrose candidate that has joined us in the Legislature. This candidate is looking forward, actually, to the next election. We've been honoured over the last two weeks to have our nominated candidates join us in the Legislature as we debate legislation during the afternoon and long into the evenings. I'd like to introduce Rick Newcombe, who's the candidate for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I'll ask him to rise and receive a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. First, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly guests who have had a key role in the creation of an important new work of public art in Edmonton. Keith Turnbull was the co-ordinator and lead artist for a project of the Edmonton Coalition on Housing and Homelessness to honour the lives of the thousands of people who struggle to have decent homes in Edmonton and to challenge all of us to work to end the unnecessary shame of homelessness. Linda Dumont was one of the 20 artists who created tiles that cover this structure, each showing a personal experience of homelessness. Many of these artists are people who know the problems of homelessness from personal experience. With Keith is his spouse, Kathy Turnbull. I would like to ask Keith, Kathy, and Linda to rise now to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

I'd also like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a new addition to the Alberta NDP team. Adrienne King is familiar with the Legislature, having worked as a library page some years ago. Since then she has completed a BA in English at Concordia University College here in Edmonton as well as a master's degree in English literature at McGill University in Montreal. Today is her first official day as the executive assistant to the leader of the NDP opposition. I'd now like to ask Adrienne to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Realtors Community Foundation

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this is the season of heroes, when ordinary people leap tall buildings in single bounds and become more powerful than speeding locomotives. One particular group, however, who make very little noise about what they do but who do it every day is the Realtors Community Foundation.

I came upon this foundation shortly after being elected when its executive director, my constituent Ms Jill Didow, invited me to one of their celebrations, and since then, Mr. Speaker, Jill and I have had the opportunity to drive Smart cars full of diapers through West Edmonton Mall, buy large quantities of wine at fixed silent auctions, and participate in a number of other events as the Edmonton realtors show their collective commitment to the community.

Jill and her team at the Realtors Community Foundation provide support to charities working with shelter, homelessness, hunger, crime prevention, and other special projects. Since 1986 this foundation has contributed over $2.8 million to the community.

Some 30 groups are served by the foundation, and in 2010 they received $300,000 in support. Groups like the ALS Society, Habitat for Humanity, the Lurana Shelter, Our House Addiction Recovery Centre, the seniors' outreach centre, and the Youth Emergency Shelter, to name but a few: they all share in the generosity of Edmonton's realtor community. Projects have ranged from the replacement of windows at a rehabilitation centre to new furniture in a women's shelter. Realtors donate a portion of their sales to support these practical, pragmatic, and – my favourite part – largely bureaucracy-free projects.

I like this group not only because my wife is a realtor but because this foundation makes a difference where you can see it the most. The mandate of this foundation is that their funds be used for 75 per cent shelter, 15 per cent crime prevention, and 10 per cent special needs.

This is a group, Mr. Speaker, who quite simply put their money where their mouths are by investing in the very things that allow people to improve their lot in life. That is what makes them heroes every day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Public Health Inquiry

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since April the Alberta Medical Association along with Alberta physicians have been monitoring negotiations with this government before their current eight-year agreement expires in March. The Premier spent her leadership campaign talking about the importance of consulting with Albertans, but recent reports show that the negotiations between the government and the AMA have stalled, leaving funding for our physicians and our health care system up in the air. This government needs to get to work and commit to getting back to the negotiation table with the AMA so as to settle on a contract before the next election.

This government also needs to listen to the concerns of the AMA and place a renewed emphasis on primary care networks. The Wildrose believes that primary care networks are the next important step in fixing the health care system. PCNs do a superior job of treating patients with chronic conditions like diabetes. They also offer services like dietitians' advice, physical therapy, or a host of other health care services in a seamless way. Studies show that the PCNs divert patients from our overcrowded emergency rooms and hospital wards.

1:40

The conversations on PCNs and how to improve health care in our province will not take place if the government continues to brush aside the concerns of physician intimidation as mere workplace disagreements. With the culture and bullying prevalent in our health care system, it simply isn't right for the government to hold these negotiations over the heads of our health care workers and the AMA.

It's time for the health minister to understand that this isn't a workplace issue; it's a management issue stemming from the government level. It's no longer possible for the health care professionals in this province, who hold the entire system together, to trust this government. It's time for this Premier to finally fulfill at least one of her promises and call a full judicial independent public inquiry so Albertans have the answers before the next election.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Alberta Export Awards

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to acknowledge the winners of the 2011 Alberta export awards. It is a privilege for our government to be a proud sponsor of the Alberta export awards, which commends and celebrates the achievements of export leaders in our province. I recently attended the awards along with my colleagues the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and the Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations.

It takes clever people and talent-filled companies to open doors to create demand and markets for Alberta products throughout the world. It is successful exporters that help to generate wealth for our province and strengthen our economy through their ability to adapt, evolve business practices, and compete on a global scale.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta presently is the second-largest exporting province in Canada, with $78 billion in exports to other countries last year alone. One of the goals of the Alberta government is to continuously create, maintain, and build on friendly trade relationships. I believe that along with trade comes mutual benefits, respect, understanding, and peace.

Kudu Industries in my constituency won the title of exporter of the year. Other award recipients include Roswell Wake-Air Enterprises, Thermo Design Engineering, McCoy Corporation, FLYHT AeroMechanical Services, Axia NetMedia Corporation, and WMode Inc. The student award went to Michelle Cheng of the University of Calgary. The leadership award went to Norman Leach of Norman Leach & Associates.

I wish all of us to say thanks to Alberta exporters. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Our Lady Queen of Peace Ranch

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about Our Lady Queen of Peace Ranch. Three years ago OLQP opened a ranch for children financially or emotionally challenged and for those requiring special education.

For the last two years they have hosted a family Christmas party. This year's party took place on November 26, with over 1,000 kids in attendance. Each of them received a gift from Santa and a bag of winter clothes. Over 150 volunteers helped make the day a success, and I would like to thank them for their commitment and hard work. With tractor rides, a petting zoo, face painting, and other family activities it is a day for the children to remember.

I was honoured to present this organization with a $10,000 cheque on behalf of the government. The Doherty family made this ranch possible, donating most of the 72.5 hectares of land the camp occupies. Over the years they have donated an additional $30 million to the ranch. They are a modest and humble family as they do not like to see their name on any signage or donor lists. It was an honour spending a few hours with them. The family said that their business was a success because of the community, so it was only right to share and give back to the community. The Edmonton Journal wrote a great article on the OLQP Ranch, and I encourage you to read the copy provided to you.

I am proud that this ranch is in the Edmonton-Manning constituency. I hope business owners will look to the Doherty family as an example on how to give back to those in need, and I hope we will take a moment to give to charity this holiday season. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Lakeland Centre for FASD

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, or FASD, is an umbrella term used to refer to a set of birth defects caused by prenatal alcohol exposure. It is a critical disability in Alberta, affecting at least 1 per cent of the population.

Since 1994 the Lakeland area, which includes the communities of Cold Lake, Bonnyville, St. Paul, Lac La Biche, Smoky Lake, seven First Nations, four Métis settlements, one military base, and surrounding towns, has been working on better understanding the disability of FASD. The Lakeland Centre for FASD, based in Cold Lake, is an incredible example of the community collaboration that has taken place to establish and ensure that accurate information about FASD is readily available and that effective prevention, diagnosis, and support services are offered in the Lakeland area.

Mr. Speaker, this centre was the first FASD diagnostic clinic in Alberta and the first clinic to diagnose adults with FASD in Canada. It continues to be the only agency to deliver wraparound support to families, serving women with addictions, children, families, and adults. Serving approximately 400 individuals each year, the Lakeland Centre for FASD has diagnosed about 500 individuals since opening in 2000. The centre also provides training on all aspects of FASD to about 2500 individuals each year in addition to all grade 9 students as a part of the prevent alcohol and risk-related trauma in youth program. The centre has been instrumental in reducing the stigma of this disability and has increased the level of awareness surrounding FASD in our area.

By beginning to develop new and innovative services, including the development of a nine-bed residential alcohol and drug treatment centre for pregnant women, I am confident that the centre will continue to address the needs of those affected by FASD.

Mr. Speaker, this government has been very supportive of this centre.

Private-sector Spending on Health Care

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of misinformation and misunderstanding about spending on health care in Canada. If we as MLAs are to make good decisions, we need to be well informed. A few weeks ago one MLA compared Canada to North Korea for not allowing private health care. So I went to the nonpartisan, highly respected Canadian Institute for Health Information to conduct some due diligence. It turns out that the claims about Canada's public and private spending on health care are loaded with myths that need to be busted big time.

Here are a few facts from the Canadian Institute for Health Information. Canada ranks sixth in the world for combined private and public spending on health care in the middle of a large pack of developed countries. But when we look at public-sector-only spending, Canada ranks number 11 as a per cent of GDP and number 8 per capita.

Here's the zinger, Mr. Speaker. When we look at private-sector spending on health, Canada ranks number 4 in the world as a per cent of GDP. When measured per capita, Canada's private-sector spending on health care is third highest in the world. This is the exact quote from the report. "Canada, with private-sector per person spending of US$1,282, is among the top three countries with the highest per capita health spending funded by the private sector." Canada ranks only behind the U.S. and Switzerland for having the largest private health care sectors in the world on a per capita basis. This covers drugs, equipment, physio, dental, home care, long-term care, and on and on.

So let's look past the myths and ignorance when we discuss health funding in this Assembly and stick closer to the evidence. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just last week the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, a member of a proud visible minority group, read a member's statement about the importance of Human Rights Day. Premiers Lougheed and Klein understood this and strengthened human rights in Alberta. But in the mandate letter to the Minister of Justice this Premier ordered him to assess the appropriateness of amending or repealing section 3 of the Alberta Human Rights Act. To the Premier: what are you trying to achieve? Do you want to dissolve the Alberta Human Rights Commission? Yes or no?

1:50

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the most interesting part of the hon. Leader of the Opposition's question is highlighted by the fact that the letter I wrote with respect to the Human Rights Commission went to the Minister of Justice. One of the things that I'm very pleased that we've been able to do in this very short time is to move the Human Rights Commission, which is a very important part of institutions in Alberta, from where it was sitting, in the department of culture and community spirit, into the Department of Justice. We believe that this is a commission that matters to Albertans, that will protect human rights, and it should appropriately be in the Department of Justice.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that access to affordable legal representation is already a major problem for low-income Albertans, many of whom are single mothers, seniors, the mentally and medically ill, the indigenous peoples, visible minorities, and new Canadians, by moving the Human Rights Commission under the Justice department, are you planning to put this under the Criminal Code of Canada and send them to the court systems?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the Human Rights Commission has legislation that both constitutes the Human Rights Commission and that we observe with respect to protecting human rights in Alberta. The fact that we're managing the processes around the Human Rights Commission through the Department of Justice has absolutely nothing to do with changes with respect to the Criminal Code. It's a question that doesn't make sense.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, what's not making sense is this government, clearly.

To the Premier. You asked the Minister of Justice to assess the appropriateness of amending or repealing section 3 of the Alberta

Human Rights Act. That was the question. Is that your plan, to repeal it?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the letter was quite clear. This is an issue that matters to Albertans. It's important for us to consult with Albertans on this to make sure that we know how Albertans feel about this. It's very important for us to know that the intention must be to review or to consider what to do with it next.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears they have taken the Wildrose policy on this.

Federal Transfer Payments for Health

Dr. Sherman: Every year Ottawa shortchanges Albertans by over $900 million in health transfers even though we pay more per person to federal coffers than any province. Thousands of hard-working Alberta seniors want to stay in their homes, but they can't. If they need long-term care, there's nothing there for them but a long waiting line. Instead of talking about increasing premiums and taxes, nickelling and diming our seniors, our working families, and our students, why won't the Premier fight for Albertans and shake down Ottawa for money that it owes us?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we've been talking about as government and that the Minister of Seniors has been very involved in in the last two months is ensuring that we're putting in place a sustainable long-term care plan that's going to allow for seniors to continue to have a high quality of life. That's what Albertans want. We know that as a province in this country we do make transfer payments to Canada. We're proud of that because we believe that we have to be proud citizens and proud partners in Confederation. We'll be able to deal with our issues, we'll do it well, and we'll ensure that people have strong publicly funded health care and good long-term care.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our seniors are for sale or rent in this province – they are paying more than ever, they're having to get divorced, and you're removing the cap on seniors' living – and given that the Premier's friendship with the Prime Minister is well known, why can't you just pick up the phone and demand the billions of dollars Albertans are owed from your friends in Ottawa?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, these characterizations of what's happening in Alberta seniors' communities are entirely inappropriate. What we know is that Alberta seniors want to have choices with respect to accommodation, and they want to make sure that they're continuing to be able to be provided with public health care support. We're going to make sure that that happens within our own borders.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I understand that this is question period and not answer period. All we're asking for is a collection call, a collection call to Ottawa, Madam Premier, not a collection call to our seniors and working families. Why won't you unleash your horde of lawyers and sue the federal government for the money they owe us? Premier Lougheed would do it. Why can't you?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to speculate on what anyone else may or may not do. What I do know is that as a partner in Confederation, we have to have a relationship with other provinces in this country and with the federal government. I'll tell you that the approach that this hon. member is suggesting does nothing to support Confederation or Alberta's place in it.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

PC Party Benefit Plan Trust

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. The president of the PC Party reported last week that the party pays its leader an income above and beyond expenses. My first question is to the Premier. What is the leader's benefit plan trust, and how much will it top up the Premier's current total compensation package from Alberta taxpayers?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I've already answered this question. I have repeatedly said in this House – last week, this week, and press availability yesterday – that I am receiving no such payments.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: when will the Premier promise to taxpayers to release all the details on this leader's benefit plan trust that is being negotiated for her from the party and all of the details as well on the leader's benefit plan trust that was paid to the former Premier for the last four years?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, whatever situation may have existed before, I have no information on it. I'm not going to be providing any information because I have no information with respect to that. As I've said over and over publicly, inside this House and outside this House, I do believe that there are expenses related to being leader of the party that are appropriate for the party to pay through party donations and not through taxpayers' dollars, and if that happens, then I will fully disclose that. It has not yet happened.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, we're not talking about the expenses that are valid. What we're talking about, and this is my question again to the Premier: why does the Premier feel it is necessary to hide the details of the leader's benefit plan trust from the taxpayers, who are already paying the Premier over . . .

The Speaker: Okay. There could have been interjections, but the Premier chose to respond to those first two questions. But when you start talking about "hiding," I think we're going overboard here.

Premier, if you want to supplement an answer or add an answer, go ahead. If not, we'll move on.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I will say exactly what I said last week, yesterday in the House, and outside the House. There is no information for me to be disclosing because there is no information that I have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Impaired Driving Legislation

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the federal Liberal gun registry had good intentions after the '89 shooting in Montreal, but it failed Albertans and Canadians.

The gun registry criminalized law-abiding Albertans. And here we go again, heading down the track with the ill-advised impaired driving policy, going after soccer moms and dads and a couple who are having a glass of wine, who are well below .08, rather than going after the 98 per cent that are killing people on our highways. To the Premier: why aren't you going after the 98 per cent that are killing Albertans?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's very clear in this legislation that what we're doing is adding penalties to circumstances that already are against provincial legislation. At this point in time if a person is affected by impairment, under legislation, under the Traffic Safety Act they are already breaking the law. There are penalties attached to that. So this assumption that this legislation will in any way impact law-abiding citizens is incorrect.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. Given that the Premier has talked about a change in culture and listening to caucus members who don't support your policy, why wouldn't you be going after the 98 per cent that are causing so many accidents and who are well over .08? Why wouldn't we go after them first rather than the 2 per cent, the hockey moms and dads?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, regardless of what a person may do in their life, regardless of where a person may be volunteering, if there are people that are having their operation of a motor vehicle affected by alcohol, then they are at this point not following the rules. There is right now a test and provincial legislation that ensures that people can be penalized. What we're doing is introducing legislation that does, granted, have further consequences. We believe that's important in terms of changing the culture of drinking and driving.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, we want to save lives. To the Premier: will you refer this to committee, to go after the 98 per cent of Albertans who are killing other Albertans rather than the 2 per cent that your own caucus doesn't support?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, referring legislation to committee is not going to save lives on Alberta roads. This legislation will save lives on Alberta roads.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:00

Mental Health Services

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past few days two reports have given troubling insight into the difficult circumstances of people with mental illness seeking a good quality of life. Despite couching it in cautious language, the reports of the Auditor General and the Mental Health Patient Advocate office cannot hide the chronic failure of this government to care for Albertans with mental illnesses. To the Premier: will you admit that the record of the PC government has created a crisis that requires immediate resources and not another four years of bureaucratic planning?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we know that in society in general and, certainly, in Alberta in the past 15 to 20 years we have a better understanding with respect to mental health and the importance of having wraparound services available for people that are dealing with mental health issues. Through the safe communities agenda, through the work that's been done in Alberta Health and Wellness and Alberta Health Services, added resources for mental health beds, we are addressing those issues, and we are addressing them in a proactive way.

Ms Notley: Well, notwithstanding that, given that the mental health advocate says that right now the number one issue she's still seeing is people in much-needed hospital beds when they could and should be in the community and the lack of places and support services in the community for them and given that she reports how acute-care hospital capacity is chronically overwhelmed by this failure, why won't the Premier admit it's time to get beyond plans for plans followed by more round-tables for more plans and actually take action on behalf of these people?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this government doesn't have plans and round-tables. What this government has is action. We have been very clear that mental health matters to Albertans, that it matters to this government. We will continue to put resources into this. We will continue to work with the mental health advocate. We will always strive to do better. But you should also know that we have really accomplished a tremendous amount in the past 10 years, particularly in the past three, and we'll continue to do that.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that it's been four years, almost a full term in office, since the Auditor General alerted this government to the crisis in supports for people with mental illness and given that even though he's now telling us there have been virtually no improvements since that time and that AHS is saying there will be no action until at least 2014, will the Premier first apologize to Albertans being hurt by this continued indifference; and second, will she commit to having AHS move that date up significantly?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member is getting the information to suggest that no action will be taken until 2014. That's absolutely not the case. Mental health like other health sectors represents a variety of needs to be addressed. As the Premier said, we've focused extensively on wraparound services in schools. We are working to improve early identification of children and youth who may have mental health issues. We have a lot of work to continue to do with housing, providing a high level of support there for people living with chronic illness.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Impaired Driving Legislation (continued)

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, the hospitality industry is calling on the provincial government for help in extending late-night public transit services and cab availability. Now, while I understand that taxi licensing is under municipal jurisdiction, I am wondering if the province will help the industry out with the public transit piece of the puzzle. To the Minister of Transportation: will the minister commit extra funding for late-night transit service in Edmonton and Calgary to help patrons of the service industry adapt to this bill?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, we have talked to the hosting associations and the restaurant associations about the availability of public transit and taxis. It's not only about that availability; it's about how we can work with those associations to support individuals that are impaired and give them the flexibility to have a safe ride home.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given that yesterday the Premier had promised a civic education campaign on the new blood-alcohol limits, will the Premier commit to not enforcing this bill once it passes the House until this education campaign is completed?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's very important that when we introduce new legislation Albertans understand how it will impact them. It's going to be important once this legislation is passed to make sure that we have a deliberate plan with respect to the drafting of the regulations and the ultimate proclamation, and of course that will have to include a very extensive public education campaign.

Mr. Taylor: This all sounds like a lot of work. This all sounds to me, given that this bill is being rammed through this short session without much time for debate or contemplation and given that the hospitality industry is also calling for a delay in passing the bill until more consultation can take place, that the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was right. Will the government pull this bill and refer it to committee for further review and bring it back in the spring?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it was very interesting to consult with our Minister of Transportation today with respect to some of the concerns that people have had with respect to it. What I have heard over and over again from Albertans, whether they're in the hospitality industry or otherwise, is that they are completely supportive of the objectives that we're trying to achieve, they're completely supportive of what we're trying to do to protect families on roads, and that the legislation is the appropriate legislation. We will work with industry, and we will work with communities and Albertans to ensure that the impacts are very clear and that people understand the consequences as we move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 26 is before this House, and I'm well aware that question period is not to be used for debate on a bill, so this is about process rather than substance of legislation. My question: when does the Minister of Transportation expect that the provisions will be implemented if Bill 26 is passed?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have the exact time of when it'll be in effect. I can say to you that from the beginning of this bill coming forward, I have talked about how the most important aspect has been the repeat offender in the .08 and above level. I want to say to you that we are going to bring those areas forward first and ensure that those .08 and above . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister – I could tell that he wasn't quite done – on a related topic what is the expected timeline for implementation around provisions for .05 to .08?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt that that's going to take a little bit longer. We are bringing forward a new tracking system, and we need to ensure that the process is in place and working. I also want to say that our system is very much different than what B.C. has. We need to ensure that there are fair and consistent appeals and that they are consistent from Grande Prairie to Medicine Hat to Red Deer.

The Speaker: It's not inappropriate for a couple of members to just go to the lounge outside and relax a bit and then return later if they wish to, but in the meantime being overly excited is really not that much in order.

The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. I understand that you met with concerned business owners today. I'm wondering what you can tell us regarding plans to address their concerns around the legislation that is currently in place at this time.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, we did meet with business owners of the restaurant industry, of the hosting industry, and our direction was very clear. We talked about what was necessary for an education program and how we could work together with them to ensure that the message was clear so that their patrons and Albertans understood and also how we could bring forward the message that the present .05 level is the same level that has been in place for 12 years, how we could get this message to the patrons of their businesses.

Financial Contributions to Members

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, my questions will be to the Minister of Justice. The previous two Premiers received payments and benefits that raise serious concerns about the risk of conflict of interest; the case of True Blue, for example, a company solely set up to pay the former Premier. To the minister: is there any government policy or legislation that prohibits or restricts interest groups or corporations or individuals from paying money or other benefits to a Premier of this province that are in addition to the Premier's salary and party benefits?

2:10

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, again, we've been answering these questions for a week, a week and a half now. I can explain, if the hon. member needs me to explain again, that we have things such as the Conflicts of Interest Act. We have a Chief Electoral Officer, who's an independent officer of the Assembly. We have an Ethics Commissioner, who's an independent officer of the Assembly. We have a Lobbyists Act. We have all kinds of provisions for disclosure. Our government is fully compliant. This Premier is fully compliant. I don't think anything more needs to be said.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that there are holes in the legislation as big as this Assembly, let me ask this: as long as these payments are generically disclosed with no detail other than being, quote, over $5,000 per year, is there any limit on the value or nature or source of these potential payments?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, again, we've got the legislation there. It provides for full disclosure. No more needs to be said.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I don't think this minister knows his own legislation. Is there any government policy or law that prevents a shell company being established, collecting unknown sums of money from unknown sources and paying these to a Premier of Alberta in such a manner that their specific source and value are never known to the public? It certainly seems to be what's happening.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I'm trying to be polite here. This member first of all didn't know that a report had been filed and a discussion paper filed with the standing committee on leadership finances. He also doesn't seem to know what the legislation says. I've explained to him generally what the legislation is, but I'm not going to sit here and read it to him.

I also want to make a little point about private business. It is not the responsibility of this minister to look into private business.

Mr. MacDonald: Point of order.

Mr. Olson: This member has offended my department by suggesting that lawyers are somehow unethically appointed. There is only one way a lawyer gets appointed by this government, and that is if they are professionally competent and have professional expertise. This member should be ashamed of himself for . . .

Speaker's Ruling Legal Opinions

The Speaker: There was an interjection there for a point of order. If it has anything to do with providing a legal opinion, that will not be dealt with by the chair because Beauchesne 408 clearly says that members in asking oral questions will not ask a question that requires an answer involving a legal opinion.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Automobile Theft

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the people of the capital region and throughout Alberta said farewell to Ken Haywood, former entrepreneur, philanthropist, and president of Kentwood Ford. In the years following his service as a businessman, he undertook a mission to stop auto theft in Canada, and he was very diligent in visiting all the Legislatures in the country to try and get governments to generally recognize that we could do better. My first question, today, is to the Solicitor General. In fact, how effective have we been in Alberta in reducing the incidents of auto theft?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 there were 22,000 instances of auto theft in Alberta. This has gone down to about 15,000 in 2010. I want to give the police credit for actually doing their job, enforcing the existing laws, and getting auto theft down.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Service Alberta: what can the consumer expect in terms of prevention of buying any kind of car that has been stolen or was stolen and resold either at a used car mart or, in fact, as a new car from an auto dealer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are committed to protecting hard-working consumers. Something that the government of Alberta has done is create the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council to protect vehicle consumers. I'm very proud to inform this House that AMVIC is in fact establishing a consumer protection fund for consumers affected by stolen vehicles or vehicle misrepresentations. This fund will be active January 1, 2012.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Haywood in his time as an entrepreneur, in fact, was privy to receiving under improper circumstances some 30 vehicles that were sold to him as vehicles that were worthy of selling as a dealer. That really provoked him going further. We've heard about consumers' protection. What protection is there for dealers who might try to get those vehicles?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have in fact heard that at that particular time Mr. Haywood himself, actually, made it right for all of those consumers, so we applaud that. We applaud entrepreneurs in this province that are willing to take bold action to protect consumers.

Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, AMVIC is establishing this particular consumer protection fund. It's something that I think will affect all Albertans in a very positive way.

Incremental Ethane Extraction Program

Mr. Hehr: The Premier promised full public disclosure about changes to the incremental ethane extraction program, eventually approved by cabinet, but documents obtained clearly show that government staffers were writing press releases with industry prior to the approval. The information provided is a document showing that a closed-door meeting of the Alberta Competitiveness Council was held on March 8. Given that we do not know which, if any, of the industry players were in attendance, we still don't know if any companies were given an unfair advantage. Will the Minister of Energy release the attendance record of the meeting?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to release the attendance at that meeting. In fact, I would refer the hon. member to slide 5 of the slide deck there, that lists members and also makes it very clear that it's anticipated the government is going to change the policy. All this talk a few weeks ago about secret deals and inside deals – there was no inside deal. There's no secret. All industry players were fully advised of what the policy was that was coming.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I'll ask a follow-up to the hon. minister. Are the names of the companies who were in attendance at this meeting listed on slide 5?

Dr. Morton: Slide 5 makes it very clear what the forthcoming policy is. Whether the names of the companies are on slide 5 or not, I'm not sure. I have a list of everybody who was at the meeting. I'm happy to make it available to the hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I thank him for that. I wrote him a letter on November 14 on this. The Premier promised full disclosure, and I'd appreciate that information as soon as we can get it, all the industry players who were at this said meeting on March 8, to really clear the air and set us straight on this matter.

Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Dr. Morton: He's most welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Red Tape Reduction Task Force

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday the government announced a new task force to help cut red tape for small businesses, which we all know have an essential role in our provincial economy thriving. Over the years there have been a number of attempts to streamline paperwork and processes that can inhibit small-business growth in Alberta, yet a lot more work still needs to be done. As a former small businessperson I can certainly attest to that. My question for the President of the Treasury Board is: how is this new task force going to differ from what's been done in the past, and are we going to get it right this time?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question. He's absolutely correct. The government has done a lot of work over the last number of years to ensure that our regulatory system is as efficient and effective as possible. I'm very pleased to report that Alberta is regarded as one of the best places in Canada to invest and to create business. We have among the lowest numbers of regulations, but more can always be done. This isn't about the number of regulations that we have. This is about assessing the quality of those regulations and the impact that those regulations have on small business. We want to do everything we can to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Quest: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Good intentions for the task force, but how will Albertans really know that this committee isn't just going to waste a lot of time and taxpayer dollars while accomplishing very little?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the task force is very focused. It's going to be very tight timelines. The task force has to consult with business leaders across the province, and they have to prepare their final report by March of next year. Once that report is completed and has gone through the government review process that we have as a standard operating procedure, then we will be making that public.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that Alberta business owners, then, will be pleased to hear government is doing its best to cut through this excessive red tape. But what about the clients and the customers of these businesses? What assurances do we have that businesses aren't simply going to be given free rein to do as they please? What's the balance going to be?

2:20

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a good question. As I said before, the task force is about the quality of those regulations, not the number. It's about the assessment of whether or not those regulations make sense and whether they should be enforced. It's about having a competitive regulatory structure that is also ensuring that it's fair, efficient, and effective, and that's exactly what we intend to do.

Sexual Harassment Video

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, last week a teacher at a school in St. Albert showed a group of 11- and 12-year-old students a spoof sexual harassment video that is so explicitly vulgar and sexual that one has to be over 18 to view it on the Internet. In response to a parent complaint the teacher reportedly said that kids say these things all the time on the playground, and it was just awkward for the kids to hear those things in the classroom. Wow, what a great role model for our kids. To the Deputy Premier and MLA for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert: why has his government been silent on this issue, and what is it doing to ensure that this kind of garbage is not shown to our children in school?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I and many residents of my constituency were as interested in what the school board would have to say on this issue as I'm sure the hon. member is. I also happen to know that the school board, the duly elected officials for that jurisdiction, are looking into the matter, and an investigation is under way.

Mr. Anderson: Given that Alberta parents would like to know they can send their children to school without them being subjected to something out of a red-light district and given that this teacher clearly has the judgment of a piece of furniture and shouldn't be allowed to teach any students without close supervision, if at all, and given that the school in question won't disclose what steps have been taken to discipline this so-called teacher, will this minister commit to telling Alberta parents what is being done to discipline this teacher so that we can be satisfied that this government and its Education minister take this type of disgusting display seriously?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that through that statement we can all tell that the hon. member is very passionate about this, as am I. But I think perhaps some of those comments might go a bit too far.

Mr. Speaker, the school board is actively engaged in that investigation. They are responsible to those parents and to those parents that lodged the complaint. I expect that they will be getting their answer.

Mr. Anderson: Too far? I wonder which part was too far for you.

Given that I have had many parents from across Alberta bring to my attention that their young children are being exposed to explicitly sexual and explicitly violent books and movies in our schools and, worse, given that in almost every case parents haven't even been given a notice of such material nor the option to opt their child out, will the Deputy Premier get his Education minister to start doing his job and let us know what is being done to ensure that only age-appropriate material is being shown to our children and, if there is any grey area in this regard, that parents are given notice and the right to opt their children out of it? This is not appropriate for our children.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I believe that I would agree with the hon. member. From what I understand from the reports that I have seen, it was inappropriate for this to happen in a classroom. I am also comfortable and confident, being one of the MLAs for the area, that the school board is doing their proper investigation.

Mr. Speaker, I will take under advisement the balance of that question for the Minister of Education to consider.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Fort Chipewyan Health Study

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After almost a half-century of oil sands development impacts the Department of Health and Wellness finally announced on September 29 of this year a community health investigation into Fort McKay. This assessment comes years after the disturbing AHS reports on cancer rates in Fort Chipewyan, a report that only resulted yet again in inaction on this government's part. To the minister of health: what are the specific timelines for the promised Fort McKay community health assessment?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the specific timelines on hand with me in the Chamber. I'd be happy to get back to the hon. member on that. I can report to the House that the process is proceeding as intended, that the atmosphere is collaborative, and that I have every hope that we will achieve the objectives that were set in that agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the health minister. Given the recent tragic suicides and drug-related shootings that have affected Alberta's First Nation communities, will the health assessment cover mental health and addictions?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I believe the intention of the exercise is to cover as broad a subset of the health sector as possible. The factors that the hon. member raises are important factors in the analysis of any health issue. I have every confidence, as I said, that this review will address a comprehensive . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the minister, Mr. Speaker: given that residents in Fort Chip have been suffering from higher than average cancer rates, which were first revealed by Dr. John O'Connor, when will the minister order a community health assessment for the Fort Chip community?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the data that the hon. member refers to has been reported widely in the media. My concern, as with the situation in Fort McKay, is that we're able to work collaboratively with the community and arrive at a plan, an approach that will work for all people involved. I have every expectation that we will be able to do what we have done in Fort McKay eventually with the citizens of Fort Chipewyan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Country of Origin Labelling

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are livestock producers, and I continue to hear their concerns over mandatory country of origin labelling and its negative impact on beef and pork producers on our side of the border. Recently the WTO trade dispute panel ruled in Canada's favour on a WTO challenge to this rule. My question is for the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Could he tell us: what is the status of that trade challenge at this point?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of all of Alberta's producers I'm happy to say that the World Trade Organization ruled in Canada's favour. This is great news for Canada but even greater news for Alberta as Alberta makes up close to 50 per cent of the beef trade within Canada. MCOOL, as it's referred to, has created artificial barriers throughout North America, and it is a trade disruption. I want to thank the federal government for their action in getting this dismantled.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what happens if the U.S. refuses to comply with this ruling?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the U.S. could appeal, or they could comply. It's not my job to presuppose what their action will be. What I can say is that it's not normal for the World Trade Organization to be overruled on these matters. So I do believe we are on the path to opening up our borders and no MCOOL ruling on the U.S. trade.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. With many thousands of farmers in Alberta producing over 5 and a half million head of cattle and over 1 and a half million head of hogs per year, what else can we do to help these farmers and the livestock and meat industry succeed in this type of trade climate?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I would say on behalf of Alberta Agriculture that we are not sitting idly by. We are active in markets over in South Korea and China as well as India right now, trying to open those doors. I do believe we will have some of those open by the end of the year in South Korea. These actions just prove the point that we cannot solely rely on one market for either our agriculture or our energy. We have to diversify beyond the U.S. market.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Twinning of Highway 63

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the snow falls and the air gets cold, that doesn't mean that work on expanding our highways stops. Planning for next construction season continues and budgets are made. You know what else doesn't stop? Unnecessary deaths due to roads being dangerously over capacity. To the Minister of Transportation: will the minister tell this House the target year when the twinning of Highway 63 south of Fort Mac will be completed and why progress on this 350 kilometres long project has been slow?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very glad to be able to answer the hon. member's question. This government is continually looking at upgrading roads in Alberta, whether it's four-laning highways, whether it's ensuring that this province, which is a commodity-based province, has the accessibility of moving its product to market. Highway 63 is exactly that highway, and we are continually working on that highway to ensure its safety.

Mr. Kang: That is very slow progress, Mr. Speaker.

To the minister again. Given that according to the government's documents only 36 kilometres of highway 63 south of Fort McMurray are scheduled to be twinned by 2014 and that, as we know, this dangerous highway constrains our economy and is a contributing factor in far too many accidents, does the minister find this pace of development acceptable?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if the hon. member has ever been in Fort McMurray. I want to say to him that there are overpasses; there are roads that are being built; there are interchanges that are being built; there are bridges that are being built. We have a budget that we are adhering to, and if the hon. member suggests that we should take some of the funding away from the ring road in Calgary, then what will happen is that we will very much try to increase that road.

2:30

Mr. Kang: That's a ridiculous suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

To the minister again. Given that the government is planning to twin just over 10 per cent of highway 63 south of Fort McMurray by the end of 2014 – that is 10 per cent in five years, Mr. Speaker – will the government accelerate construction so that the project can be completed before the middle of the century?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we are very much working on the north-south corridor. We're working on the Canamex highway. We're working, as I said before, on the corridors from Fort McMurray to Edmonton. There are over, I believe, 30,000 miles of road in this province, and we are working very hard to ensure that this province is treated equitably and that this province . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Health Services for Immigrants

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several constituents have brought to my attention that the married spouses of Canadian citizens living in Alberta are required to prove their intention to immigrate before receiving Alberta health care coverage, but Canada Immigration does not even issue an acknowledgement of receiving immigrant applications, and their processing takes one or two years. To the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness: what proof does Alberta Health Services require from permanent residents of Alberta for their spouses waiting for the immigration process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I know that this is something that a number of us have encountered as MLAs in discussion with our constituents. Newcomers to Canada who are legally married spouses of Canadian citizens and have applied for permanent immigration status may be eligible for coverage under our Alberta health care insurance plan. These newcomers may be covered if they can provide the following documentation: confirmation of permanent residence – a permanent residence card, an active work study, or, under special circumstances, a visitor permit for Alberta – or a designation as a convention refugee with accompanying documentation. They must also prove residency and identity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good list of documents. Still my constituents show me that those who claim to have refugee status receive health care coverage immediately. Can the minister now look into a similar provision for Canadian citizens' spouses who are living right here in Alberta and are still waiting for the long process of immigration?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is, indeed, a long list of requirements. With respect to spouses resettled refugees and refugee claimants are covered by federal government health insurance. As mentioned in the answer to the earlier question, newcomers of Canadian citizens are eligible for Alberta health care coverage if they can provide the required documentation that I listed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I just want to emphasize that my constituents told me that they have provided all the documents, but they are still being told that they don't have the intention, that basically there's no proof that they want to be permanent here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm advised by my department that for those situations to which the hon. member refers, our Alberta health care insurance plan may provide coverage to individuals who have a legal right to be in Canada, make Alberta their permanent home, and are present in Alberta for at least six months. Our health care insurance plan, however, cannot accept the immigration application documentation as proof of legal entitlement to be in Canada. In order to process an application for Alberta health care insurance plan coverage, the applicant has to provide the same three things.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Farm Worker Exemptions from Labour Legislation

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's now exactly one year since two farm workers were electrocuted on the job east of Edmonton. No occupational health service, no fatality review has been done, nor were they done on the two other electrocutions in the past four years on farms. The Fatality Review Board refused an appeal for a fatality review stating that, quote, it was not in the public interest. End quote. To the agriculture minister: given that the Premier supported extending occupational health and safety standards to paid farm workers during her leadership campaign, when will the minister bring equal treatment of paid farm workers and save lives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last March, I believe it was, the former minister struck a task force, a committee made up of 15 prominent Alberta farm and industry workers, who are currently going through a consultation process and will be bringing back recommendations to me by the end of the year.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, we don't need committees; we need action. This has been decades of scandalous mistreatment of paid farm workers.

To the Justice minister: how can you allow even one electrical death in four years without an investigation?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, Justice prosecutes. We don't investigate.

Dr. Swann: Then to the Minister of Human Services: given that child labour in Alberta is completely unregulated in agriculture and that children are killed and injured each year working in the same industry, will the minister commit to legislation in Alberta related to child farm labour standards in 2012?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a tradition in this province of family farms and of families working on farms, and that's one of the issues that makes it very difficult with respect to legislation. Legislation with respect to hiring outside workers would be an interesting piece, but with respect to the farm I think all of us who have any rural background know and understand that everybody on the farm pitches in to help.

Now, what's really important is that we have a culture of safety in this province. Whether you're on the farm or off the farm, whether you're at the work site or anywhere else, people want to come home to their families safely. Regardless of where the work is being done, there needs to be a culture of safety, and there needs to be education to ensure that there is a culture of safety.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Grass Fires in Southern Alberta

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 27 grass fires driven by winds in excess of a hundred kilometres an hour tore through areas west and south of Lethbridge. There's been a lot of speculation as to the cause of the fires. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I'd like to know if a determination has in fact been made as to the cause of these fires.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The provincial fire commissioner's office was asked by the county of Lethbridge and the Blood Indian First Nations to help them do an investigation and prepare a report on the fire. I know that once the report is complete, it goes to those municipalities, who decide what they're going to do with it from there. So it would be inappropriate to speculate yet as we don't have enough information on what caused the fires.

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, knowing that fires can be very costly to municipalities and to volunteer fire departments that respond, I would like to know if, in fact, the fires and the costs associated are the responsibility of the municipalities or the individual or individuals that may have caused them.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that fires, since we've seen quite a few in the last couple of years, can be very costly. To begin with, the costs of the fires are the burden of the municipality since they're responsible for the fire services. But the province of Alberta does have a disaster recovery plan, so if there is devastation that is widespread, that is unique, and that hits uninsurable items, a municipality could apply to the province, if they qualify under those criteria, to recover the costs.

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, would the individual or individuals who caused a fire and, as a result, had surrounding volunteer fire departments respond to protect themselves be responsible for the cost of the responding departments that came out?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. If an individual receives a fire permit,* then they're not personally responsible if the fire gets away from them because they've gone through all of the proper protocols to have the fire. But if they don't go through a permitting process, they can be on the hook. I believe it's section 9(3) of the Forest and Prairie Protection Act or somewhere in that area that could hold the individual responsible for causing the fire.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-answer period for today. Eighteen members were recognized; 108 questions and responses were given.

We have a request from the Minister of Health and Wellness to supplement an answer given previously.

2:40

Fatality Inquiry

Mr. Horne: Yes. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition asked me a question with respect to two cases. Specifically, the question was whether or not these cases were the subject of a fatality inquiry. I simply want to add to my answer from yesterday, having been informed after question period that the two individuals named by the hon. Leader of the Opposition are cases that are, in fact, the subject of a fatality inquiry at the present time.*

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, you may ask one question.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. minister for answering that question.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm going to call on the hon. Deputy Speaker now to undertake a special Christmas recognition for our pages.

Page Recognition

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, each day of session we are served by the tireless efforts of our pages. Daily, often late at night, they show patience and understanding in our many work demands. On behalf of all members of this Assembly we would like to give each page a small Christmas gift to say thank you and also wish each and every one a Merry Christmas.

These gifts are from the personal contribution of each of the hon. members. I would ask the Speaker's page, Ellen McClure, to receive her gift and to distribute the other gifts from all of us. I now call on the hon. Deputy Chair of Committees to present the gift to Ellen McClure, and I ask all members to join me in showing our appreciation and recognition of our pages. [applause]

The Speaker: In 30 seconds from now we will continue the Routine.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, you have a petition today?

Mr. Hehr: Yes, I do. Thank you very much, sir. I have a petition signed by approximately 300 to 400 Albertans urging the government to make amendments to Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, "that remove all administrative penalties for individuals operating a motorized vehicle with a blood alcohol concentration between 50 milligrams and 80 milligrams." I believe it's in order, sir.

*See page 1724, left column, paragraph 8

*See page 1601, left column, paragraph 2

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to table for the benefit of the House the appropriate number of copies of the annual report 2011 for Alberta's Promise. Creating and supporting positive outcomes for children and youth in Alberta has always been a cornerstone of Alberta's Promise. Since 2003 the little red wagon has been the symbol of our organization, with the saying which so appropriately illustrates the impact we have on the world around us: "The little red wagon is a symbol of childhood, a helpful means for pulling the occasionally heavy load of life and a place to keep dreams, with a handle so an adult can help out from time to time."

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a newspaper article from the St. Albert Gazette of November 23, 2011. I'll be referencing this article in third reading later today in debate on Bill 23.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of letters to table today. The first is a letter that I had written on April 19, 2011, to the hon. Minister of Health of Wellness regarding the closure of the Grey Nuns community hospital therapeutic warm-water pool.

My second tabling is a letter that I received from the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness at the time, the current Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, and this is a response to my request regarding the Grey Nuns community hospital therapeutic warm-water pool.

The third tabling I have is a further letter on this matter dated September 29, 2011, including a detailed list of the management consulting fees that were paid out by Alberta Health and Wellness in 2010-11.

The last tabling I have is a letter dated November 15, 2011, from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, the current minister of health, regarding the same matter.

I appreciate that there could be some progress made. Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter from an EMS worker who confirms that almost on a daily basis in Edmonton now there's a red alert, meaning that there's no ambulance available to respond, and lamenting the fact that the current process is to pull in rural ambulances to serve the city under these circumstances, leaving the rural areas abandoned of an ambulance.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the appropriate number of copies of a report from the Canadian Institute for Health Information which relates specifically to my private member's statement today as well as copies of a letter I received from Don Thompson a couple of weeks ago. Mr. Thompson expresses his concern about exporting bitumen and crude oil rather than building a comprehensive petrochemical industry here in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, all letters from constituents, all expressing concerns about Bill 26 and its changes to blood-alcohol levels and various other points in the bill. One of those letters, from Richard Waller, also touches on the issue of public transit and taxi service, that I referred to earlier today in my questions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I referred to a number of tablings last night, and I'll be brief pursuant to your direction yesterday because there are five. The first I table today is a letter dated December 2 from the chair of the Edmonton Police Commission expressing support for Bill 26.

The second is a table of international blood-alcohol limits.

The third is an article by Robert Remington from the Calgary Herald, November 26, about the 300 people who have died since 1998, regarding people over .05 who have driven.

There's also an article I'm tabling from the December 4 Calgary Sun quoting RCMP statistics that 1 in 22 people after nightfall are, in fact, impaired.

Lastly, I'm tabling a decision of a court in British Columbia, Sivia v. B.C., which upholds the province's right to impose administrative penalties for drunk driving.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Denis, Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, the Alberta Law Enforcement Review Board 2010 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise, pursuant to the Conflicts of Interest Act the report of selected payments to the members and former Members of the Legislative Assembly and persons directly associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly for the year ended March 31, 2011.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Danyluk, Minister of Transportation, return to order of the Assembly on Motion for a Return 1, asked for by Mr. Kang on March 21, 2011.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Point of order, citations, et cetera.

Point of Order

Questions outside Government Responsibility

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon under Standing Order 23(h) and also (l). I would also like to point out Beauchesne's 409(6), which indicates that "a question must be within the administrative competence of the Government. The Minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his or her present Ministry and not for any decisions taken in a previous portfolio."

2:50

Certainly, when my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was again talking to the Minister of Justice regarding the matter of True Blue Alberta Ltd. and their role in taxable allowances that have been provided to the former Premier over a period of one year and to the Premier's spouse for two years, there was quite a general discussion about this. I certainly would argue that these questions are within the administrative competence of the government.

I would like to point out – and you, Mr. Speaker, I must say, encouraged me yesterday to do some additional reading, which I did – your concern about the lack of respect for legislative officers here. I thought I would look through the report that was made and some of the recommendations that were made to the Legislative Assembly by the former Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Gibson. Certainly, it is interesting to note what the gentleman points out, and I'm going to quote. This is for the Election Act, and I'll also get to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act in a moment.

The Chief Electoral Officer must consent to any prosecution under the Act. Currently, a prosecution cannot commence more than two years following the date of commission of the alleged offence.

This restricts the pursuit of justice in situations where the offence is not identified well within the two-year timeframe. It requires that the alleged offence is detected or reported, the matter investigated, and sufficient time is available for the Chief Electoral Officer to form an opinion that prosecution is warranted before the matter is referred to Alberta Justice and Attorney General. At this point, the Minister of Justice may very well want to conduct a further examination.

Now, I know it was in another question later on in question period that the hon. Justice minister said – I believe the quote was: doesn't investigate, just prosecutes. But this would lead me to believe that the Minister of Justice on occasion can investigate further.

If the Minister of Justice were to conduct a further investigation of the matter before deciding whether or not to proceed . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. I'm very, very pleased that you've done a lot of research, but we should have done the research on the subject at hand today in the question period.

Mr. MacDonald: This is not at hand?

The Speaker: You see, I read the Blues, and I see where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar interjected on a point of order. It has nothing to do with what the hon. member is talking about right now. Somehow the point of order has to relate to the matter. You raised a point of order at a certain juncture today as a result of certain words that were used, and they have nothing to do with what the hon. member is talking about. Relevance is one of those things that's important, too.

If you could bring it right back to where you – shall I repeat the words that caused you to rise?

Mr. MacDonald: You can.

The Speaker: It would probably help you, wouldn't it? I wouldn't want you to be carrying on in a variation.

Mr. MacDonald: No.

The Speaker: Here's what the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General said that caused the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to rise. We'll stay within that segment. It says:

Mr. Speaker, with respect, I'm trying to be polite here. The member first of all didn't know that a report had been filed and a discussion paper filed with the standing committee on leadership finances. He also doesn't seem to know what the legislation says. I've explained to him generally what the legislation is, but I'm not going to sit here and read it to him.

I also want to make a little point about private business. It is not the responsibility of this minister to look into private business.

At that point the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar rose on a point of order. This is the subject at hand here, not the benefit of all your research.

Mr. MacDonald: And I can appreciate that, Mr. Speaker – I really do – but what I'm trying to get at here is that the Minister of Justice does have the administrative authority to investigate these matters. It's quite a broad discussion between an office of the Legislative Assembly and the ministry and what the authority is of that ministry. For the minister to suggest that they have no authority to deal with these matters that were a part of question period today is wrong, and I would submit that that certainly is within the administrative competence of the government and a private interest. This is a matter of payments that were supposedly just for expenses during election campaigns.

The Speaker: Once again, I must bring up the question of relevance because the report in question that the hon. member wants to talk about, which had nothing to do with the question this afternoon, has in fact been considered by the Legislative Offices Committee. I think we're just going to move on. Is that okay?

Mr. MacDonald: That's fine.

The Speaker: Okay. Well, I'm glad that it is.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, might I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to allow the Deputy Government House Leader to move Government Motion 34 and Government Motion 35, which are on the Order Paper but not available until tomorrow? We'd prefer that they be moved today with the consideration of the House. The two motions essentially deal with membership on committees, in fact putting members of the Liberal opposition on the committees and replacing a member who is now a member of the government side.

The Speaker: The question is a request for unanimous consent to allow for consideration of government motions 34 and 35.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Motions

Committee Membership Change

34. Mr. Denis moved:
Be it resolved that the following change to the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services be approved: that Mr. MacDonald replace Ms Pastoor.

The Speaker: This is not a debatable motion, so I'll call the question.

[Government Motion 34 carried]

Committee Membership Changes

35. Mr. Denis moved:
Be it resolved that the following changes to the Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety be approved: that

Dr. Taft replace Ms Pastoor, that Dr. Taft replace Ms Pastoor as deputy chair.

The Speaker: Interestingly enough, this motion is debatable if anybody chooses to debate it. If not, then I'll call the question.

[Government Motion 35 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 24

32. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 24, Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just very briefly, time allocation is quite an appropriate . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Okay. Please. Just a second. You two fellows have been out here for the last few minutes. You walk in, and you start yelling. Go back out, okay? When we're finished, you come back in.

Mr. Boutilier: I'm entitled to be here, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Anderson: Take your whistle off for a second.

The Speaker: Hey, hey. [interjections] I'm giving you an opportunity. [interjections] Okay. This is the game. I've seen it before. The boys want to be evicted. You know what?

Mr. Anderson: What?

The Speaker: You may not get your wish.
The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They don't play well in the sandbox.

My point was, Mr. Speaker, that time allocation is an appropriate tool for the use of government in moving legislation forward. As everyone knows, bills can stay in Committee of the Whole for interminable lengths of time because members may speak more than once in committee. In this particular case, the bill has been in committee for a considerable length of time.

3:00

We can see a pattern developing in the committee in which the speeches are repetitive. They're going over and over the same topics again and again. Committee is for line-by-line analysis of a bill. It is an opportunity to bring forward amendments. We have seen some amendments, and we've dealt with those amendments. With one further hour of time there will be an opportunity to bring forward any further salient points that members of the House want to bring forward, but we do need to deal with the bill.

The Speaker: Standing Order 21(3) is very clear. Who shall I recognize on behalf? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the hon. House leader brought forward time constraint announcements yesterday, you might have heard my first response, and that was: hickory dickory dock, the minister struck the clock. Well, I should have said that the minister stopped the clock. By so doing, he stopped the democratic process, and that is what this government motion is all about.

Now, Mr. Speaker, possibly it has to do with the amount of time I've spent reading bedtime stories to my grandsons, Kiran and Rohan. Possibly it's my feeling of longing to be back with them during the evenings as opposed to spending until 1 o'clock of the following morning debating the government's inappropriate legislation, but the idea that we wouldn't be allowed to debate amendments that are designed to improve government legislation, which I must admit is very difficult to achieve given how flawed a number of the bills are, and to have the hon. Government House Leader refer to this as repetitive: I have great concerns.

Mr. Speaker, I had a very good conversation with the hon. House leader last Wednesday following midnight, and I said to the minister how pleased I was that the government had extended the time period basically by a week to give greater thoughtful debate to this. I thanked the minister for that allowance. Then when I came back on Monday, as we all do, we found that the time rug has been pulled out from underneath our feet again.

I had really hoped that this promise of transparency and accountability would be, at least, if not the only promise kept, the second promise kept. The first promise was restoring the money to education. But, Mr. Speaker, it's the same old same old, and that really worries me. What we have here – and again going back to my grandsons – is that we have the story of Little Red Ridingford, who promised transparency and accountability and then blew the whistle on the time allotment for debate.

Mr. Speaker, a variety of individuals have reported on the lack of democratic change. I truly feel betrayed because I felt that the newly selected Premier would honour what had been proposed in the campaign, and that was increased transparency and accountability, and instead we get more of the same. This is unacceptable. This government has taken for granted the fact that they have been in power for 40 years. The abuse of that power, rather than being recognized, has been heightened. Allowing insufficient time for debate, pushing debate into the wee hours of the morning night after night after night, deliberately grinding down the opposition's ability to speak on behalf of the constituents who elected them or the constituents throughout Alberta is the lowest form of democracy.

Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I commented on the government suffering from ADD, Alberta Democracy in Darkness. Well, yesterday they reached new heights. The parliamentary patient's prognosis has worsened. We've gone from ADD to ADHD, Alberta Democracy Has Died.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 32 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:06 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

For the motion:

Allred	Fritz	Leskiw
Amery	Goudreau	Liepert
Berger	Griffiths	Mitzel
Bhullar	Groeneveld	Ouellette
Brown	Hancock	Prins
Campbell	Horne	Rogers
Cao	Horner	Sandhu
Danyluk	Jablonski	Vandermeer
DeLong	Jacobs	Weadick
Denis	Johnson	Woo-Paw

Drysdale	Klimchuk	Zwozdesky
Fawcett	Knight
Against the motion:
Anderson	Kang	Sherman
Boutilier	MacDonald	Swann
Chase	Notley	Taft
Forsyth
Totals:	For – 35	Against – 10
[Government Motion 32 carried]

Time Allocation on Bill 26

33. Mr. Hancock moved:
Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 26, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the previous motion we had comments with respect to the death of democracy, and I really do need to address that concept. Democracy is not about people engaging in repetitive discussion, on and on and on. Democracy and debate in this Legislature really ought to be about bringing light to a subject, informing, bringing forward alternatives, pointing out potential problems or errors.

We've now had in Committee of the Whole five hours and 47 minutes of debate. We have dealt with a couple of amendments, but there have been many periods of time when there has been no amendment on the floor. It's just been continuing debate on the principle of the bill, which is the subject of debate in second reading, not committee. Again, it's not my place to judge the opposition's debating points or whether or not they're making sense. That's not up to me. That's up to the people who follow us on television and in the news media. The fact of the matter is that we have had five hours and 47 minutes of debate in committee. We are exceedingly repetitive in the discussion at this stage.

3:20

These are very simple bills, and this bill is a very simple one. It's a question of whether or not we should increase the administrative penalties for impaired drivers who, in the vernacular, blow a warning, over .05, and, of course, increase administrative penalties for those who blow a criminal sanction at over .08. That's what the bill is about. It's very straightforward. If there were appropriate amendments, they could be brought forward, but in nine hours and 46 minutes of total debate on the bill so far, five hours and 47 minutes in committee, we're not doing what the committee needs to be doing. We seem to have moved past that and back into the principle.

I would suggest that we end the debate in Committee of the Whole and move to third reading, where we can hear the wrap-up, if you will, with respect to those very points that have been made over and over again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. Certainly, this is the third closure motion that the hon. Government House Leader has provided on the Order Paper. Now, this is undemocratic. This is a major piece of legislation, Bill 26, and to suggest that less than six hours in Committee of the Whole is all that's needed – hon. members may be taxing the patience of the Government House Leader. He may feel that their comments are repetitive, but each and every member, regardless of what side of the House they are on, Mr. Speaker, has almost a duty or an obligation to speak out.

Mr. Liepert: And be repetitive?

Mr. MacDonald: No. I can't say that about the government members, about them being repetitive, because so few of them participate in the discussion and in the debate. I couldn't judge that, hon. Member for Calgary-West.

The opposition has limited resources. We have other places to be. We have other research projects on the go. We have other bills to research and to try to prepare debate and discussion on. It's unfair. It is undemocratic to suggest here with Government Motion 33 as well as 32 and 31 – it's clear that this government wants to exit the Legislative Assembly regardless of what the discussion is. It's got better things to do.

Now, how important is Bill 26? Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed asked a question today to the Minister of Transportation, in fact three questions, regarding Bill 26. I sat and I listened to the exchange. It was quite interesting, and I thought to myself: if it's such an urgent matter for question period, why is the government now wanting to invoke closure and shut down all discussion after 60 minutes in Committee of the Whole?

It's, again, undemocratic. It is disrespectful of this parliamentary institution. I think the government should be very, very nervous. We have a new Premier, and we have a new cabinet, yet we still have the same old practices. "We're tired of being in here. Let's bring down the closure hammer. Let's silence the opposition."

It would be fine, Mr. Speaker, if we had good legislation, but whenever we look at the amendments of recent legislation that's coming before us, whether it's on the land assembly act or any of the other property rights bills, we seem to be coming back very quickly with this legislation for amendments. The people read it, and they don't like it. Maybe we should spend more time in here discussing bills in committee, and the government wouldn't have the problem of coming back with amendments six months, eight months later. I'm sure the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake agrees with me completely. I'm sure he does.

Mr. Speaker, with Bill 26 there are many things that have yet to be discussed. The role of the police: should we have more check-stops? Would that be a better way to deal with this problem of drunk drivers and chronic, repeat offenders? Perhaps we should look at our liquor stores, the number of liquor stores we have in the province and where they're located. The Solicitor General is shaking his head over there. Those would be two suggestions.

Advertising of liquor. We haven't had a chance to have a good, thorough discussion on the advertising of liquor. We curtailed the advertising of tobacco products but not liquor. The targeted advertising towards young people, who, oddly enough, get their licence and drive: have we been effective in our education programs in high school to ensure that if people are of legal age and they are drinking, there is a designated driver?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 33 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:26 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

For the motion:

Allred	Goudreau	Liepert
Amery	Griffiths	McFarland
Bhullar	Groeneveld	Mitzel
Campbell	Hancock	Ouellette
Cao	Horne	Pastoor
Danyluk	Horner	Prins
DeLong	Jablonski	Rogers
Denis	Jacobs	Sandhu
Drysdale	Johnson	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Klimchuk	Woo-Paw
Fritz	Leskiw	Zwozdesky

Against the motion:

Anderson	Kang	Sherman
Chase	MacDonald	Swann
Forsyth	Notley	Taft

Totals: For – 33 Against – 9

[Government Motion 33 carried]

3:40 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 24 Health Quality Council of Alberta Act

The Chair: We are on amendment A2. Are there any comments or questions offered on amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Amendment A2 to the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, suggests that “unless the Panel determines, in accordance with section 19, that the hearing or part of a hearing is to be held in camera” just be eliminated. In camera meetings . . .

Dr. Swann: Hardly public.

Mr. MacDonald: They’re not public. It’s not that they’re hardly public; they’re not public. What could be more important with the Health Quality Council than having public meetings?

Now, a lot of people don’t know about the Health Quality Council – they’re beginning to understand a little bit about the council – but it’s an important organization. The Health Quality Council is supposedly a self-reporting organization. The Health Quality Council is a group that, certainly, meets on a regular basis.

The Health Quality Council of Alberta was established on July 1, 2006, under the Alberta Regional Health Authorities Act. The Health Quality Council is considered not-for-profit under the Income Tax Act and is exempt from payment of any income tax. The quality council is engaged in promoting and improving patient safety and health services across the province.

Now, it’s interesting to note that the Health Quality Council has a commitment with John W. Cowell Consulting Ltd. to receive executive oversight. It has a board – and I want to get to that in a minute – but it has hired this distinguished doctor to provide executive oversight. Now, the value of that commitment as of March 31, 2011, is $38,000 per month and extends until September of 2013.

It’s interesting. This board would be appointed, of course, by the government, and included on the board is a former government member of this Assembly, the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, I believe, Mr. Chairman, Bonnie Laing. There are a few other noteworthy appointments on the board, and of course then you have this staff complement. This organization has a budget of roughly, I think, $4 million, and about 10 per cent of it is, you know, one individual’s salary.

That’s the basis of the Health Quality Council. It reports publicly in the annual report for Alberta Health and Wellness. So why would we not have consideration of the hon. member’s amendment? The hon. member has a lot of amendments to this proposed legislation. I suspect that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has amendments as well and maybe the hon. member from the fourth party.

We have essentially 60 minutes to deal with these amendments. That is most unfortunate with this government’s track record of drafting legislation and doing so much behind closed doors, making so many decisions, executive decisions, behind closed doors instead of in public. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is going to help them out by saying: no, I want you to break this habit of having these supposedly in camera meetings.

No one knows what’s going on. No one has a right to know. People certainly should have a right to know. Even these children up here, who are going to be taxpayers in the not-that-distant future, will also at some point be very interested, Mr. Chairman, in the quality of health care that’s delivered in this province by mini-organizations, including the guidance from the Health Quality Council of Alberta.

I would ask that all hon. members please consider supporting amendment A2 because this amendment would essentially break this government of its very, very bad habit of doing everything behind closed doors. You’re in trouble with half of rural Alberta because you want to make all of these secret cabinet decisions on people’s property. You want to make decisions on where transmission lines should be sited and just pass the bill on to consumers 100 per cent. This tendency to do everything in secrecy behind closed doors has to be stopped. The hon. member’s amendment gives you that opportunity, and I would ask you respectfully to please vote for A2.

I’m not going to speak any longer because there are a lot of members with a lot of amendments, and it’s really unfortunate and draconian that we only have 50 minutes.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on amendment A2.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I think it’s timely that these young people came into the Legislature just as we’re talking about whether we should give the government permission to hold a public inquiry behind closed doors so that, in fact, the cameras and the media and other members of the public cannot hear what’s being said.

Mr. MacDonald: So it’s a private inquiry, not a public inquiry.

Dr. Swann: It should actually be called a private inquiry.

This is a new bill that the government is putting forward called the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act. They want to give special powers to the current committee that looks at the quality of health care. When there are serious allegations or serious problems in the health system, they actually want to move it into a true public inquiry where everyone can hear what's going on with intimidation of doctors, loss of quality in the service, long wait times, emergency medical services having difficulty providing ambulances in time for people perhaps because of mismanagement in the system. This quality council is supposed to hold a public inquiry so that everyone can hear the evidence. Is it a problem, or isn't it a problem?

Well, this particular bill wants to give the power to put that whole inquiry into a closed room where the public cannot actually have access to that information, where they will hear the information – even a judge might hear the information – from doctors, nurses, and patients that the system is working in this way or it's not working in that way and changes need to be made, but we won't necessarily know about it because the government wants to have the choice of making certain information public and keeping certain information private.

We're saying that that's not good enough if we are in a democracy, if we really believe that people have a right to know what's happening with their tax dollars in the health care system, and if we really want to honour the health professionals who are saying: "There's a real problem in our health care system. Money is being misspent. Doctors and nurses and other health workers are being intimidated and bullied to not speak about the problems." We want that to go to a public inquiry, but we don't want that public inquiry, then, to be able to say: no, this particular evidence we're going to keep private. We want to do away with that option for this Health Quality Council Act.

3:50

We're basically asking the members of the government to acknowledge that a public inquiry should be a public inquiry. The media should be there, and the public who want to come and hear the evidence from both sides. A judge makes his comments about what he's hearing. That really should stay public. I guess we're all hoping that the government will have a change of heart, that they will stop this movement towards keeping information secret from the public because it's embarrassing. It's embarrassing for the government to know that these problems are happening and that they want to keep it behind closed doors. We're saying: help us to make this amendment so that everything said in the public inquiry is public. That's why it is called a public inquiry. Don't pick and choose what you want the public to hear. Make sure that it's all open to the public.

That's basically what this amendment is designed to do: to ask the government to change its mind and keep everything public. I hope the members here will support this amendment by voting yea when we come to the vote.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Hon. members, may I request your consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly about 60 constituents that have joined us here this afternoon. These are folks who gave a lot of their time during the recent leadership race to man the polls. We ran seven polls in our constituency for the leadership race. These are folks that have come in from all over northern Alberta just to have dinner with us here tonight, meet the Premier, and tour the Legislature. They're led by the president of our PC Association, Carol Lund, and the deputy returning officer for our leadership contest, Kathy Yurdiga. I don't see her, but I think she's there. I'd ask you all to stand up, please, and we'll give you the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 24 Health Quality Council of Alberta Act (continued)

The Chair: The next hon. member speaking on amendment A2 is the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise and speak to amendment A2 that was introduced, I think, just earlier. I am taking into consideration what the previous speaker mentioned when I speak to this. We did hear allegations, as you said, hon. member, of physician intimidation and bullying. Those are claims the Health Quality Council is currently investigating. The allegations, I believe, have been taken very seriously, hon. member, especially if intimidation is affecting people's livelihoods. Like many Albertans the government wants to see details of the final HQCA's report.

In speaking to this amendment, I think it's important that you consider that we are providing an option to look into the health system matter that requires a broader public inquiry process. I know you'd be very supportive of this in that it does protect patient privacy, it provides similar inquiry powers to the Public Inquiries Act, and, importantly, it can be led by a judge. That's why the act itself overall is so important.

Now, the Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness made it very clear that they are committed to an independent public inquiry into the health system matters. The legislation that's before us now will allow us to do that though a process that takes into consideration important factors: protecting confidential patient information, providing the ability for the panel appointed to head the inquiry to subpoena witnesses and compel evidence, and allowing for the examination of information contained in nondisclosure agreements. It enhances the independence of the Health Quality Council of Alberta, and it also establishes that new inquiry powers are specific to the health care system. I think we should take that all into consideration with this amendment. Powers through the compelling of testimony and the subpoenaing of witnesses can get to the facts of the issue, Mr. Chairman.

Currently the HQCA is established, as you know, through a cabinet regulation, but the bill in its entirety changes that cabinet regulation process because under this bill the HQCA is going to operate under its own statute and report directly to this Legislative Assembly. That's an important part of the evolution of the HQCA. One of the things that the bill does as well is that it strengthens the position of the HQCA's work on the health system improvements to allow the council to fully stand on its own under its own statute. The council will continue to deliver on its core mandate of promoting and improving patient safety and health service quality on a province-wide basis, and because of Bill 24 it will also report on that important work directly back to the Assembly.

I want to reiterate to you, Mr. Chair, that the new inquiry powers under the bill will not have an impact on the council's work, and that's because a health system inquiry will operate independently from the HQCA. What the bill does is to use the HQCA's tremendous knowledge and experience in appointing the panel members. I know that that's what a part of A2 is about and what you're concerned about. Once the panel is appointed by the HQCA, the panel will be authorized to hire its own staff resources, including lawyers, to advise it. At this point, the HQCA will have absolutely no further role in the inquiry.

Another point I wanted to raise as well, that may make sense in regard to this A2, is that under the proposed bill the inquiry authority will guard against conflicts of interest. That's because if you look back to the bill at section 17(4), it prevents the HQCA from appointing anyone to the inquiry panel

who is or was

(a) a member of the board, or

(b) an agent, employee or contractor of the Council,

who has had any involvement in a matter that is the subject of the inquiry.

That's a critical piece of this with the principle of what the bill is about.

Also, Bill 24 will provide for a public inquiry that's best suited for the requirements of the health care system, and it will have similarities to the Public Inquiries Act. I know you've evaluated that as well as this amendment has been brought forward. It provides for cabinet to call for a public inquiry into health system matters. It gives individuals conducting the inquiry the powers, the privileges, the immunities that commissioners have under the Public Inquiries Act. It means that witnesses can be compelled to attend, answer questions, and produce documents in the same manner as under the Public Inquiries Act. The bill overall is designed to bring information forward so that an inquiry can get to the bottom of a matter. It is not trying to exempt certain people from appearing before an inquiry, as some members believe, Mr. Chairman.

I've emphasized the similarities between Bill 24 and the Public Inquiries Act, how that affects this amendment as well, but I also want to speak to some of the important differences. The differences were highlighted about why we could not just amend the Public Inquiries Act and that if we could, perhaps the members wouldn't have a need for amendments like A2 to be brought forward. But we couldn't amend that Public Inquiries Act. First of all, the current inquiry legislation would not be effective in providing for a full and fair inquiry into health system matters. For example, it may not provide for a full inquiry in regard to nondisclosure agreements. Information about those agreements may not be accessible under the Public Inquiries Act. To remove any doubt, Mr. Chairman, and to ensure all necessary information can come forward, the new inquiry provision in that bill as a total provides for information under nondisclosure provisions to come forward in an inquiry.

Fairness about this is an important consideration. I know that you're looking for the amendment, you know, to ensure that fairness is there. It is an important consideration. We do want to ensure that we are protecting health information, information not currently protected under the Public Inquiries Act. Bill 24 as a whole provides for the proper protection of the information.

The proposed legislation also allows a person to make an application for evidence to be heard in camera or in private. The application to have a matter heard in camera may or may not be granted as the individuals conducting the inquiry have to consider whether or not the circumstances merit an in camera hearing. That's the difference. When I go back to the Public Inquiries Act, that would not have met what you've brought forward in A2. The Public Inquiries Act has a mandatory provision for certain matters to be heard in private, and we've not followed that act in this regard. Members have to, I think, remember that a public inquiry is a very powerful instrument and that witnesses may be compelled to answer questions and produce documents on a broader basis than in a court proceeding.

4:00

Something else I'd like to speak to in regard to this amendment is who sits on the panel under the proposed legislation. Some members have suggested that the public inquiry provided for in the proposed bill will not allow a judge, for example, to be appointed to the panel. There's been an assumption by some, I believe, as I was listening to the debate, that under the Public Inquiries Act the appointment of the judge is automatic. That is wrong on both counts, Mr. Chairman, because nowhere in the Public Inquiries Act does it say that a judge may be appointed as a commissioner. When a public inquiry is called, a judge may be appointed in accordance with court protocol. The court protocol has been tabled previously by the minister and is in place because the courts are independent.

The court protocol provides information and guidance on the process for appointing judges to lead a public inquiry. It's been adopted by the Canadian Judicial Council to help ensure that the judiciary can continue to serve the public interest when asked to sit on a public inquiry while at the same time maintaining public respect and confidence for the judicial office and the independence of the judiciary.

Bill 24 as a whole – I go back to that – is more specific than the Public Inquiries Act in providing for the appointment of a judge, which is always subject to the approval of the courts.

Mr. Chair, I know that the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness introduced amendment A1 to the Committee of the Whole, and I know that he's appreciative and thanks the hon. members for supporting amendment A1, but I know it's A2 that we have before us. Please remember that part of amendment A1 made it clear that the health system inquiry can be carried out by a judicial panel, which is one that consists only of one or more judges. It underlines the commitment to providing for a judicial inquiry into current health system issues while respecting the existing court protocol.

Mr. Chairman, as we've said earlier, the Premier did make a commitment to hold an independent public inquiry into health care, and the overall bill, I believe, enhances the HQCA's independence. It sets the stage for the public inquiry into health system matters, and Bill 24 makes sure the public inquiry will be effective in addressing health system issues in a fair, clear, and objective manner.

I believe that the bill will meet public expectations for openness and accountability. In looking at amendment A2, I won't be supporting that amendment because, as I tried to show you in the comments that I've made, I believe that the bill is all encompassing.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to amendment A2. I want to begin by thanking the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for bringing forward this important amendment. This amendment essentially goes to the heart of what is so fundamentally flawed about this piece of legislation. We have a Premier who made a promise to the people of this province that she would appoint and ensure that we had a judicially led public inquiry.

I know it seems almost obvious, but let me just highlight one element of that promise. The word is “public,” and implied in that is transparent and open for Albertans to see. What this amendment does is that it proposes to remove from the legislation those elements of this bill which completely contradict the promise made by the Premier in her run for election. Those are the elements of this bill that would give this government a long, unending, extremely difficult to interpret but very easy to apply, heavy-handed mechanism through which to make sure the inquiry that might occur occurs behind closed doors.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is hardly a new action by this government. This government is all about keeping things behind closed doors. Forty years old, and they’ve become exceptionally skilled at ensuring that everything stays behind closed doors, where they believe that that is necessary, and this bill is no exception to that.

The Premier promised a public inquiry except – and here’s the fine print that she did not tell Albertans about when she was running to become leader of this governing party – where “the private interests of a patient or person or, where the patient or person is deceased, of the patient’s or person’s next of kin” might be put at risk or whether disclosure of all or part of the medical records could result in an injury or harm to the mental condition of a third person.

Let’s just be clear. Mental condition: what if it makes the Premier stressed out? What if disclosing pieces of information through this public inquiry causes anxiety for the minister of health? Well, the way this bill is written, they would be perfectly entitled to ensure that the whole darn thing goes behind closed doors. There’s the kind of thing that Albertans really and truly did not vote for, really and truly did not believe was going to be what this Premier delivered and, quite honestly, really and truly, I believe, as a matter of common sense don’t think forms the foundation of what most people would understand to be a public inquiry.

Another one: where “the holding of the hearing in camera is essential in the interests of justice or would be injurious to the public interest.” Well, how do we define public interest, Mr. Chairman? Is that defined by the re-election chances of the governing party? Is that the kind of thing that we need to be sure that we protect so that we carry on with the inquiry behind closed doors? I don’t know. But certainly that’s what this legislation says, and there’s nothing to suggest that that isn’t how it would be interpreted.

Here’s the kicker, Mr. Chairman. If they happen to interpret it that way, if they happen to decide that the public interest is not served by embarrassing the government, if they happen to decide that the public interest is not served by demonstrating that Alberta Health Services has in fact been engaging in a 25-year-long process of intimidation, should any of those things happen, we don’t get to appeal it to a more reasonable, objective forum to have that particular decision measured against the expectations of a reasonable group of Albertans. Oh, no, no. The other thing that this bill does is that it makes darn sure that these highly discretionary decisions around keeping everything secret are not ever going to be appealed to a court.

These two sections in particular, 18 and 19 – there are other sections as well – that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is proposing to remove from the bill, at this point exist within the bill to essentially gut and render meaningless, meaningless, Mr. Chairman, the so-called promise made by our Premier when she was a candidate for the purposes of becoming leader of the PC Party and, as a result, Premier of the province. It’s a broken promise, and this legislation makes darn sure that that promise stays broken, and it makes sure that Albertans have no recourse when that happens.

I’d just like to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View again for attempting to have the bill corrected and improved to remove this gutting mechanism. I certainly will be voting in favour of it and certainly also wish that we’d have a much longer period of time within which to properly debate this piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

4:10

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I can’t help but respond to some of the suggestions that have been made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. You’d think we were participating in the theatre of the absurd. You appoint an independent panel. There’s been a lot of discussion around how a judge might be appointed. In fact, amendment A1 to the bill made it clear that we were abiding by the protocols with respect to the appointment of a judge of whatever court, whether it’s Provincial Court, Court of Queen’s Bench, or Court of Appeal, that there needs to be a consultation, and then there needs to be an appointment by Lieutenant Governor in Council.

To have a judge lead a panel, either a panel chosen independently by the Health Quality Council or a judge that’s been at the request of the Health Quality Council selected by the court and appointed by Lieutenant Governor in Council, and then to suggest that you would read these mechanisms in 19(1) about when an inquiry should go in camera as to say that it would go in camera because of the mental state of the Premier is absolutely absurd.

What the hon. member doesn’t recognize is that in order to ensure a full, complete, and open inquiry that the public will have some trust and faith in, you want to make sure that every potential witness has the opportunity to appear before that inquiry and be comfortable that sometimes their private health information – and this is why it’s different, and this is why this bill is so important. This bill will allow for all of the elements of a public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act but does take into account that in this particular area of health sometimes matters are personal. Sometimes people will want to appear before a public inquiry, a panel, or an individual judge or otherwise and give evidence with respect to what they think is important to the inquiry, but they may not want to appear if it means disclosing their personal health records and their personal health situation.

However, the decision as to whether or not that happens is not up to government. It’s up to the appointed inquiry panel, whether that’s a judge or otherwise. So the hon. member’s submissions that some of these would be done in some nefarious manner is absolutely absurd, Mr. Chairman.

That’s one of the reasons why this act is so important. A public inquiry can be set up in circumstances where the Health Quality Council believes it’s necessary. It has powers of subpoena. It has powers to compel evidence. It has powers to ensure that everybody that needs to come before the panel comes before the panel. But it also has the ability for people who may or may not be known to the panel to volunteer to come forward and give evidence. We want to make sure that everyone has the capacity to do it and is encouraged to do it. In order to do that, you do need to have some provisions where the panel itself can say, on application, that this should be held in camera because it affects the personal interests of the person coming forward that are private interests and perhaps are private health matters.

That's what this section is set up to do. That's why this amendment being proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is so wrong-headed. [interjections]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek now on the amendment.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The government has finally woken up.

The Government House Leader talked about democracy. I think he said – I forget how many hours; I didn't write it down – that we've debated this particular piece of legislation for five hours and 37 minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: Five hours and 40 minutes in committee.

Mrs. Forsyth: Okay. So I'm three minutes out. Five hours and 40 minutes in committee.

In his statements he was talking about how important it was to bring closure. He talked about bringing closure in because of the fact that the conversations were getting a little repetitive last night. [interjection] Yes, you did. Check Hansard. I don't know what he said. We'll have to check Hansard on exactly what was discussed.

Now we're into closure. We've got one hour of time to debate what I consider probably one of the most critical pieces of legislation before us. Last night when we were debating, the chair at that particular time was very conscientious, actually, about making sure that all the members spoke on amendment A2. We had a very eloquent speech from the Member for Calgary-Cross that maybe in her 10 minutes of speaking talked about amendment A2 but gave a rundown in regard to the whole legislation and what was right about the bill, what was wrong with the bill, and then all of a sudden brought in A2 in every five minutes without you making any comments in regard to staying on the amendment.

Mr. Chair, you know, I sometimes feel like I'm in a boxing match over the last day and a half because it's duck and weave. We continue to stand up and bring forward what we think are important amendments in this Legislature. I'm going to take a different approach. I'm going to give the government what they want. That particular thing in government is that they only want to deal with their amendments. We dealt with their first amendment. I think it's quite funny that this is one of the most contentious and critical pieces of legislation brought forward into this Legislature, and we hadn't even started, but we had a government amendment brought forward, which we called A1, which shows to me that there wasn't a lot of thought process in regard to this piece of legislation.

Mr. Chair, I've been on the government side, and I have to tell you that I've sat on the Leg. committee where we go through legislation line by line. It's at that particular time that you catch what should be right and what should be wrong on that particular piece of legislation. Obviously, something was missed in this because of A1 brought forward.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View has now brought forward an amendment, that we're going to be calling A2. He talks about section 18 striking out "unless the Panel determines, in accordance . . ." I asked the Government House Leader, actually, why he thought this particular piece of legislation should stay in. He talked about the mental health of a patient. He talked about the fact that patient confidentiality is important. I'm not going to argue with him on that. I mean, it's also contained in the Public Inquiries Act that they have the ability.

Having said that and having said that we know we're going to lose this amendment – and I know that the Liberals have some more amendments they want to bring forward, as I do – I am going to pass on my speaking time. I don't know how long I have to speak, but I do want to make something very clear, and I will be bringing this up in third reading. We're not going to win this fight. I know we're not because there are 15 of us and we have a huge government, that's mostly asleep except for once in a while. It's like that Whac-A-Mole when they pop themselves up.

Given that, I'm going to put this on the table. Very clearly, Mr. Chair, in this legislation it says that the government has the ability to "set out the nature and scope of the inquiry, including the date by which the report and recommendations, if any, of the Panel must be submitted." Now, that I like. So what I'm going to suggest – we know all about the physician intimidation. We know all about the bullying that's going on in this province. I've fought that. We showed that clearly when we found out that physicians were being intimidated.

With that, I'm going to challenge the government because they seem to move very quickly when they want to move quickly and very slowly when they want to move slowly. We've seen how quickly they can by dropping – what? – seven pieces of legislation into the Legislature and then have about nine days of debate, including having us go on and on into the late hours of the night. I'm going to challenge the government because I know how quickly they work. Clearly in the legislation it tells them that they can set out the nature and the scope of the inquiry, including the day by which the report and recommendations have to be done. I'm going to challenge the government on that. I would like to see them have the date for the inquiry before the next election.

On that, I'm going to call the vote on amendment A2.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak on amendment A2?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the vote on amendment A2.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

4:20

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to put forward another amendment. In fact, what I would intend to do is put forward the amendment and then read into the record several other amendments if that's permissible, just so the other amendments are on the record, and then go back to this amendment. Is that permissible?

The Chair: First of all, probably since you introduced, you let the pages distribute the amendment that you introduced, the amendment now known as A3. If you want to go ahead, go ahead.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. Bill 24, Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, is amended as follows: section 1 is amended by adding the following after clause (i): "(j) 'Standing Committee' means the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices."

Section 17 is amended in subsection (1): (a) by striking out "Lieutenant Governor in Council" and substituting "Standing Committee," (b) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (a), and (c) by striking out clause (b); in subsection (2) by striking out "The board shall, pursuant to [an order under] subsection (1)(b) and" and substituting "The Standing Committee shall"; finally, in subsection (3) by striking out "board" wherever it occurs and substituting "Standing Committee."

Mr. Chairman, before we go on to those amendments, I'd like to just read into the record. Because of time allocation we're not going to get to the four other amendments. In respect to the other parties so that they can present their amendments, I'd like to read into the record a second amendment: move that Bill 24, Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, be amended in section 19 by striking out subsection (2). This allows for a judicial review of the panel's decision.

The third amendment I'd like to introduce and read into the record now is: move that Bill 24, Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, be amended in section 17 by striking out subsection (3) and substituting the following: (3) at least one of the persons appointed to a panel under this section shall be a judge of a court in Alberta.

The final amendment that I would like to read into the record: move that Bill 24, Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, be amended in section 7 by striking out section (3). This would further enhance the Health Quality Council of Alberta independence from government interference.

Sorry; there's one following amendment that I want to read into the record, Mr. Chairman: Bill 24, Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, be amended in section 4 by striking out subsection (7). This amendment would enhance the independence of the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act by requiring the appointment of only board members . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, may I interrupt you a bit here. We looked at the amendment that you just introduced, amendment A3, and we found that your amendment is addressing the amendment that has already been carried as amendment A1. So your amendment A3: I have to rule it out of order. You have a chance to introduce another amendment.

Dr. Swann: Very good, Mr. Chair. I apologize for that. The second had to do with section 19, striking out subsection (2).

The Chair: We will pass around the second amendment that you introduced. Hopefully, it'll be in order.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll go back to it and read it into the record so that it's clear which one we're dealing with: move that Bill 24, Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, be amended in section 19 by striking out subsection (2).

In the unamended form the bill prohibits any appeal of a decision made by the panel that all or part of the health system inquiry be heard in private. By removing subsection 19(2), our amendment allows for a judicial review of the panel decision. A decision to hold all or part of the purported public inquiry behind closed doors should be at least subject to review by the courts.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Chair: The amendment that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has introduced is now known as amendment A4, okay? Amendment A3 was out of order, so he introduced amendment A4. So let's speak on amendment A4.

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to speak to the amendment that's currently being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View referring to Bill 24, the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act. This is one of the most important issues before Albertans today. It's about honesty, integrity, and trust, trust in our health care system. The issues that the Health Quality Council is looking into and needs to look into, that all Albertans need answers to are the issues that I actually brought forward to the House over the past year in addition to issues that other members from this House have brought forward, that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View brought forward, and that many physicians and health care workers and nurses brought forward in public.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to give you facts. Four days after the election the hon. Member for Calgary-West and the deputy minister and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and the current health minister received an e-mail, a FOIPable e-mail, with 322 cases collected in a short period of time in one ER department at the U of A hospital of multiple delays in care, near-catastrophic delays in care. The minister of health: what was his decision? What was the Premier's decision? The Premier during the election, on a two-page PC letterhead, in a letter that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford helped write, that the Premier signed: to build 600 long-term care beds.

Mr. Liepert: You said it has to do with the patients.

Dr. Sherman: It all has to do with this, hon. Member for Calgary-West.

So these issues were brought forward. How did the government react? They said: we're going to do this; we're going to do this. The day after the election the hon. Member for Calgary-West was appointed health minister. His duty was to look into these issues. What did he do? He fired all the managers of the system. He brought in their code of conduct to silence all health care staff. He didn't perform his duty, and Albertans suffered unnecessarily. The system went unchecked.

