Second Reading -- 150-52 (Feb. 15 aft.), 161 (Feb. 15 aft., passed)

Committee of the Whole -- 185-86 (Feb. 16 aft., passed)

Third Reading -- 251-56 (Feb. 22 aft., passed)

4 St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act (Lukaszuk)

First Reading -- 236 (Feb. 22 aft., passed)

6 Property Rights Advocate Act (McQueen)

First Reading -- 236 (Feb. 22 aft., passed)

201 Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012 (Hinman)

First Reading -- 69 (Feb. 13 aft., passed)

203 Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012 (Sherman)

First Reading -- 69 (Feb. 13 aft., passed)

Table of Contents

Prayers	259
Introduction of Guests	259, 270
Members' Statements
Organ and Tissue Donation	259
Edmonton and Area Land Trust	260
Peter Watson.....	260
Dr. Marvin Fritzler	260
Distracted Driving	261
Health Quality Council Review Report	261
Roseanne Supernault	261
Oral Question Period
Minister of Health and Wellness	262
Health System Restructuring	262, 263, 267
Health Care System	263, 267
Public Health Inquiry	263, 264
European Union Fuel Quality Directive	264
Long-term and Continuing Care for Seniors.....	265
Electricity Prices.....	265
Land Conservation Trusts.....	266
Long Gun Registry	266
Health Quality Council Review Report	268
Education Funding.....	268
Residential Construction Standards.....	268
Heartland Electricity Transmission Project	269
Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees	270
Notices of Motions	270
Tabling Returns and Reports	270
Tablings to the Clerk	271
Projected Government Business	271
Emergency Debate
Health Quality Council Review Report	272

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fifth Session

Alberta Hansard

Monday, March 5, 2012

Issue 11

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 27th Legislature

Fifth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Hon. Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Hon. Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader,
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Hon. Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL)
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Hon. Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Hon. Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC)
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Hon. Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, Hon. F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Hon. Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (Ind)
Stelmach, Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, Hon. George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Webber, Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 67 Alberta Liberal: 8 Wildrose: 4 New Democrat: 2 Alberta: 1 Independent: 1

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

W.J. David McNeil, Clerk	Stephanie LeBlanc, Parliamentary Counsel & Legal Research Officer	Chris Caughell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Robert H. Reynolds, QC, Law Clerk/ Director of Interparliamentary Relations	Philip Massolin, Committee Research Co-ordinator	Gordon H. Munk, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Shannon Dean, Senior Parliamentary Counsel/Director of House Services	Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms	Liz Sim, Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Health and Wellness
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Ouellette
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
MacDonald
Mason
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Dr. Taft

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Rodney
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 5, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of the Legislature. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, please remain standing now for the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by our long-time song master, Mr. Paul Lorieau. Please join in in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, this past weekend might have been a weekend of celebration for some members. Thirty-one members marked the fourth anniversary of their first election, and two additional members marked the fourth anniversary of their second election on Saturday. So congratulations to all of them.

Statement by the Speaker

Member for Little Bow 20th Anniversary of Election

The Speaker: Today, March 5, 2012, however, marks a very special anniversary for the hon. Member for Little Bow. In 1992 on this date the MLA for Little Bow was elected in a by-election and since that date has subsequently been re-elected in 1993, 1997, 2001, 2004, and 2008. He has averaged a remarkable 58.2 per cent of support by way of votes in these six elections.

The hon. member joins a select few who have been honoured to serve the people of Alberta through their work in this Assembly for over 20 years. Seven hundred and ninety one members have been elected since 1905, and only 32 of those men and women to date have reached or surpassed the milestone of serving in six Legislatures. That is 4 per cent of all those who've been elected as MLAs in Alberta's history.

Little Bow is a riding with a rich legislative history. The constituency of Little Bow first came into being on an election map of Alberta in 1913. The voters of Little Bow are loyal and consistent. Only five members have been elected in that constituency in the 99 years of its existence. They are James McNaughton, who served eight years, from 1913 to 1921; Oran L. "Tony" McPherson, who served 14 years, from 1921 to 1935, and also served as Speaker from 1922 to 1926; the Rev. Peter Dawson, who served from 1935 to 1963, a total of 28 years, and served as Speaker for 26 of those 28 years, from 1937 to 1963, a number that will never be surpassed; and Ray Speaker, who served a total of 29 years, from 1963 to 1992, when the current hon. member commenced his service.

In his 20 years the hon. member has driven an estimated 1.6 million kilometres in the course of his work as a member of this Assembly. His constituency is 11,571 square kilometres in size, which is in comparison larger than the countries of Jamaica and Qatar.

Over his career the hon. member has served as the minister responsible for capital planning and the associate minister of infrastructure and transportation and is currently the parliamentary assistant for Agriculture and Rural Development. He has served on numerous committees and councils and, prior to his service in this Assembly, served as a municipal leader for many years.

The hon. member is a humble representative. A farmer from Carmangay, he pledged from the beginning of his legislative career to do his best and to work hard and to listen to his constituents. He's a friend to all of us.

I would ask that the hon. Member for Little Bow approach the podium, and I would also ask that the Premier of the province of Alberta approach the podium.

Hon. members, we have a 20-year special Mace pin, and I'm going to ask the hon. Premier to either present it to the hon. Member for Little Bow or pin it on him. [The Member for Little Bow was presented with a 20-year Mace pin by the Premier] [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For the first time in 20 years I get to introduce my whole family. [applause] Believe me, it wasn't supposed to be like this; I'm usually the hard one, you know.

First of all, I have two very special friends: constituency manager Lois McLeod and her husband, Rob. I'd ask that they rise. Lois is one of the sixth-longest serving constituency managers in Alberta, and she has helped me for 20 years.

I'll embarrass my wife next because she didn't want any of this, my wife, Mary, of over 41 years. She has spent all her life as a registered psych nurse and still helps people today. That's truly why I got the job; she's saving me a bed.

Our daughter, Shara, and her husband, Drew: Shara is an HR person with Pason Systems in Calgary; our son-in-law, Drew, is in sales and service with Swagelok. Please stand up.

1:40

I won't make you guys do this. I'll introduce the rest of you and then have you stand up. Our youngest son, Patrick, is a youth clinical mental health therapist, and his friend Keiko McCreary is doing MS research in Lethbridge. Going across to the other side, Brenna Jones is from Marsden, Saskatchewan, an LPN down in the Lethbridge area, and our second-oldest son, Sean, has got Prairie Custom Paint Works, a business of his own. Our oldest son, Ryan, is a regional director with employment standards, and his wife, Leslie, is a systems administrator with Enmax. Would you all please rise and receive a warm welcome.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a tough act to follow, but it is always great to see young people in our Assembly to witness the kind of commitment that a long career like that can take and also the family behind it.

It is an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of grade 6 students from J.J. Nearing elementary school in St. Albert. They are accompanied by teacher/group leaders Mr. Curt McDougall, Mrs. Christine Sowinski, Mrs. Renée Dewitt, Miss Brandi Kennedy and parent helpers Mr. Jason Krips, Mrs. Deborah Oke, and Mrs. Gabrielle Campbell.

I'd like to make mention of a special young man, Aidan Krips. Aidan was a mere eight months old during my first campaign and spent a lot of that time in a playpen at the campaign office while his father, Jason, worked as my campaign manager. His dad later worked for the government of Alberta as my executive assistant. So I've watched Aidan grow up to be the fine young man that he is.

Through Aidan and my own experience at J.J. Nearing I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when you ask any of these kids about their teachers, one word: awesome. They are in the members' gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of people from my constituency. I haven't actually spotted them yet, but I trust they're up there somewhere. The Camrose Christian home educators are here, 15 exceptional students along with their parents. Sir, I know these parents to be strongly committed to the education of their children, and I really appreciate them being here today to see the Legislature in operation. I hope that they have a wonderful time and enjoy their visit. If they would all rise if they're here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 13 of Alberta's brightest and best students from East elementary school in the city of Leduc. They are seated in the public gallery. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Trena Kiss, and educational assistant, Mrs. Shannon Giles. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly members of the Alberta College of Social Workers. March 4 to 10 is National Social Work Week, and it's an important opportunity to recognize the dedication of social workers and to thank them for making a positive and lasting difference in the lives of others. Those in the social work profession build on the strength of individuals, families, and communities to assist them in overcoming difficult and challenging situations.

I'd like to thank all social workers across Alberta as well as the ones here in the gallery today: Lynn Labrecque King, executive director of the Alberta College of Social Workers; Ernie and Sheila Schlesinger, true pioneers of social work who've received the Canadian Association of Social Workers' distinguished service award for over 40 years of contributions; Elaine Spencer, a social worker for over 25 years and a current educator at Red Deer College; Elizabeth Radian, a social worker for over 30 years and a current educator at Red Deer College; and Lori Sigurdson, an elected official at the College of Social Workers Council and a faculty member at MacEwan University. I'd ask them all to rise as representatives of social workers across this province and receive the thanks of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour for me to rise today on behalf of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, of course the Member for Calgary-Egmont, to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Jennifer Downing. Jennifer has been a resident of Calgary-Egmont since 1994 and has been on the Egmont constituency board since 2008. In addition to her board duties Jennifer is an avid traveller in Canada and the world though she is about to take a break from that as she's going back to school to earn her bachelor of commerce. Jennifer is seated in the public gallery. I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I had the pleasure of hosting the Alberta consumer champion awards. These awards recognize outstanding people, groups, and businesses that go the extra mile to educate consumers about their rights and to ensure Alberta's marketplace is fair for everyone. As the minister responsible for consumer protection I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you these Alberta consumer champions. I would ask that you please stand as I call your name. The winners in the business category: Mr. Don Kachur from Highland Moving & Storage, that created an online household inventory checklist called Click and Move to ensure consumers receive an accurate written quote for moving and storage services; and Sorin Mihailovici. I owe you that for the idea I gave you this morning, Sorin. He created the Scam Detector app, which is a free online service and smart phone application that provides information on how consumers can protect themselves from more than 500 different scams used worldwide in 80 different countries.

The winner in the media category is Julie Matthews from Global News Edmonton for a report she did on romance scams. Mr. Speaker, I had no part of such a thing. Julie spent several weeks investigating online romance scams and posed as a potential love interest to expose a romance scam artist in her report. Thank you, Julie.

The winners in the youth category, Mr. Speaker. Michelle Ku of Calgary is the first-place winner. Nicholas Yee and Eunil Cho of Edmonton are the second-place winners. The third-place winner in the youth category is Farzanah Allinoor. Two of the winners, Ron Hutchinson and Derek Hassay, could not be here this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of these individuals and of the work they do to ensure that our consumers are protected and that we have well-educated Albertans. I ask them to once again rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly five guests that are seated in the members' gallery, here in recognition of the National Film Board of Canada's world premiere of the film The Basketball Game, which debuted at the recent Global Visions Film Festival, which is celebrating its 30th year. I'd ask them to please rise as I mention their names. Hart Snider made his directorial debut with the animated short film The Basketball Game, a film he also authored and edited. He has a master's degree in media studies from Montreal's Concordia University and specializes in editing and writing in film, television, and interactive media. Hart is extremely proud to return to his hometown of Edmonton for the world premiere of this film. Hart is also joined by his father, Dr. Earle Snider; his mother, Ruth Snider; his brother Adam Snider; and Bonnie Thompson, National Film Board representative and producer in the National Film Board northwest office, located right here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to note that the National Film Board of Canada was established in 1939, and they have a rich history of collaborating with emerging and established filmmakers in every region of Canada. They are known as an award-winning organization. They have received 12 Oscars, 14 Webbies, and more than 90 Genies to name a few. They create interactive works and support many emerging artists and are a world leader in auteur animation.

I would like my guests to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly. Thank you.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Advocacy to Government

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to bully Albertans: Airdrie alderman Allan Hunter yelled at by the Finance minister; Linda Sloan, AUMA president, bullied by the Minister of Municipal Affairs and by the Premier's chief of staff; Shiraz Shariff, the PC party's own candidate, pushed out; and now the threatening letter from the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace to Betty Turpin because she advocated for students freezing in a school. When Albertans raise important issues and concerns, this government chooses to bully and intimidate instead of listening and addressing their concerns. To the Premier: what the heck is wrong with this government?

Ms Redford: It is important for Albertans to know that they can advocate on behalf of the people they represent. The people who were talking about the school and the work that needs to be done in Grimshaw were certainly entitled to take all of the steps that they did. I was, frankly, a little disappointed with our Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace in his comments. We had an opportunity to discuss this over the weekend. You may know today, Mr. Speaker, that we were very grateful to accept the member's resignation as chair of a cabinet policy committee because this is a government that is going to respond to what Albertans say in terms of what they need. We will listen, we will respond, we will be constructive, and that is the culture of this government.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace for doing the right thing in offering his resignation. To him: I thank him.

To the Premier: why is it more important for this government to intimidate and hammer local officials into submission and the other officials I've previously mentioned than to get our children heat for our gymnasiums?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what this government will do is to provide the essential services that students need, that our pupils need in schools, that our patients need. We're going to ensure that systems are working well, that we're responding to the needs of Albertans in this province. That is our priority.

We will always have challenges with respect to what those conversations will be. In fact, in a democracy we should have different points of view, and sometimes conversations get heated. Mr. Speaker, you know very well from this very Legislature that that happens. The important part is that we have the dialogue, we treat each other with respect, and we deliver better services for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier please be objective and look at the politicization of decision-making in Alberta and do the right thing and commit today in this House to fixing the school in Grimshaw and putting some heat in the gymnasium while we're at it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, be it known that I have actually had a number of good visits with the school board in question. I have visited the school. As a matter of fact, I had the unusual experience of crawling underneath the floor of the gym of this school just to see the state of this school. I'll be the first one to say it here, and I said it to the school board. This school is not up to our standard; the children of Grimshaw deserve a better school. It's something that I will be working on together with the school board.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Judicial Inquiry into Health Services

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now let's crawl under health care. The Health Quality Council report found that 51 per cent of doctors felt their ability to advocate had been limited, 20 per cent experienced active harmful obstruction for advocating, 30 per cent had a negative outcome, 10 per cent were simply ignored. AHS execs and administrators were involved in systemic harassment and intimidation. There was "bureaucratic and political interference" leading to a culture of fear and intimidation. These are the facts from the report, Premier. Will the Premier correct last week's blunder and include bullying of doctors and political interference in the judicial inquiry on health care?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council was very clear with respect to a number of things that need to be addressed in the health care system. Two weeks ago, when that report came out, we accepted all 21 of those recommendations. We are not going to include those issues in a judicial inquiry. The reason we have a judicial inquiry is because there is independent work that was commenced this morning, chaired by Justice Vertes from the Northwest Territories, to deal with issues of queue-jumping. We made that commitment. If there are issues around doctor intimidation connected to that, we know that that can be part of the report. That's in the terms of reference. That's our commitment, and we made that commitment.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council was very clear. In slick, legal double-speak here – given that the Health Quality Council report also states that safety margins for patients were substantially compromised, patients suffered due to long waits, palliative care patients received suboptimal care in the ED, where some spent the last hours of their lives in an ER department. Here are the facts, Premier. Will you correct last week's blunder and keep your promise to hold a public judicial inquiry into your government, that broke this health care system?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, in fact, the Health Quality Council report was very clear. It actually said that we didn't need to have a judicial inquiry.

We accepted all 21 of the recommendations that the Health Quality Council made. We will act on all of those recommendations, Mr. Speaker. In terms of our commitment to an independent judicial inquiry that would be up and running before the election, we kept our commitment.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Health Quality Council was very clear that this government has caused intimidation.

Given that a gross lack of public home care and long-term care are some of the prime root causes of the failure of our health care system, can the Premier please explain how a few pilot projects and a measly $25 million, an extra 12 bucks for our primary care networks, and 30 long-term care beds in Strathmore are going to fix our health care crisis?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member stood up in this House three weeks ago and demanded added funding for primary care networks. Our minister of health delivered on that promise because that's going to matter to Albertans. I'll tell you that the way to start good public policy is to begin a conversation with stakeholders and to introduce projects that will matter. We have committed to three family care clinics that will be up and running this year, an investment of $100 million. It speaks to access for families around health, wellness, and primary care. That's a commitment Albertans can rely on.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Madam Premier. A measly 12 bucks is better than a kick in the head.

Edmonton General Continuing Care Incident

Dr. Sherman: Last week family members of Audry Chudyk came to this Legislature to tell her story, a deeply disturbing story of severe senior neglect at the understaffed and underfunded Edmonton General continuing care centre. She had fallen twice. When Audry's husband Mariano went to see her on Valentine's Day, he found her unconscious, unresponsive, with black bedsores, laying in her filth, with feces underneath her fingernails. Staff had to be persuaded by her son to call 911. How could this government allow this to happen in the richest place on the planet, Premier? Come on.

Ms Redford: That is a terribly unfortunate incident. We never want to have these things happen in the health care system. That's one of the reasons that we have systems in place through the Minister of Seniors to ensure that these reports are made in a timely fashion at a time when it matters to the patient, Mr. Speaker, and not when people try to make political gain out of it three weeks later.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, my own father didn't get home care until the night before he died.

Given that this Premier told this House on February 9 that "this government provides public health care to seniors that allows seniors to live in dignity," the parents and grandparents and great-grandparents of these children up above, to the Premier: could you look Audry Chudyk's husband in the eye and honestly tell him that your government did everything so Audry Chudyk can live in dignity?

Ms Redford: The reason that we have a system that investigates unfortunate incidents where people are impacted is so that we can ensure that we identify what happened and that they don't happen again. It's an unfortunate tragedy when these things happen, Mr. Speaker, and no one is going to deny that. Our Department of Seniors is going to ensure that we take the opportunity to work with health care providers such as Covenant Health to ensure that there are systems in place that don't allow these things to happen again.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the only thing unfortunate is our failed seniors policy.

Given the deeply disturbing nature of what happened to Audry Chudyk, who is still fighting for her life today, it was deeply offensive to read that the Minister of Health and Wellness over there said, quote: I would certainly hope that as concerning as this particular case is, that no one would be allowed to cast doubt or criticism on the work of our nurses. Unquote. To the Premier: will you demand today that that minister over there, the health minister, apologize to the Chudyk family for suggesting that they should not be allowed to raise criticisms?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, if we take a look at the conversation that arose around this terribly unfortunate incident, the first thing and the correct response was to try to determine the facts. The context of who should or should not be held responsible must be determined in the context of those facts.

2:00 Judicial Inquiry into Health Services (continued)

Mrs. Forsyth: Obstruction by this government must end, starting with the bullying of our doctors and the broken promises made by this Premier. The Premier told Albertans several times that an inquiry would have to include doctor intimidation and political meddling. Instead, in her inquiry the government was given a way out by ignoring the issues completely. Now Albertans may never know who needs to be held accountable, and the culture of corruption will be allowed to continue unchecked. Why does the Premier insist on covering up her government's bad behaviour?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, today is an important day in Alberta. In the middle of the summer last year Albertans heard that there could be a problem with queue-jumping that would impact our confidence in an Alberta health care system. I'll tell you that I was quite pleased to support an independent judicial inquiry, which many hon. members in this House suggested we would never call. Today that inquiry was called. It is headed by a retired and well-respected judge from the Northwest Territories, the terms of reference are clear, and if there are facts to be found out, we will find them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the terms of reference of the inquiry completely ignore the cold reality that patients can no longer feel confident that the doctors can stick up for them, with over 20 per cent of doctors experiencing active harmful obstruction, does the Premier seriously believe that doctors and Albertans do not deserve answers for the bullying caused by your government's mismanagement?

Ms Redford: Not two weeks ago there were answers with respect to that. There was a Health Quality Council report, that many members in this House demanded be called last year. There was a report published that was quite frank with respect to the state of health care. As a result, we took 21 recommendations from that report, every recommendation in that report, and we accepted them. We are acting on those recommendations, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we are taking the advice of the Health Quality Council to act on them now as opposed to what the hon. member would suggest, which is a lengthy inquiry to avoid the issue. We are dealing with the issues now.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what Albertans are demanding: the truth.

Given that the AMA president says that your inquiry only bandages over the system and argued that the Health Quality Council's findings on doctors' intimidation can't be swept under the rug, does the Premier think Dr. Slocombe's comments are wrong, or are they just misguided?

Ms Redford: Anyone who has an opinion is certainly entitled to have that opinion. Our responsibility as the government of Alberta is to ensure that health care systems are working in this province for the good of Albertans, not for a doctor's agenda, not for a nurse's agenda, and not for the agenda of a political party, Mr. Speaker. We've accepted the recommendations, we're implementing those recommendations, and we have an independent judicial inquiry starting their work today on the issue that matters to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Criticism of Government

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When the Holy Family school board challenged this Tory government's refusal to replace a dilapidated and unsafe school, their own MLA tried to silence them with threats. This Premier promised that this government would be different, more open and accountable. It's odd how they keep promising that, but nothing ever changes. To the Premier: why are you misleading Albertans about doing things differently when your government uses the same old intimidation tactics as always?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what doing things differently means. It means that when these allegations came to light, I acted, and as a result of that people have had to accept responsibility for their actions. Both myself and the Minister of Education have been clear that we did not think these were appropriate comments. There have been consequences as a result of that, and that has changed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier's own chief of staff, her Municipal Affairs minister, and her entire caucus all attempted to intimidate the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association into silence about the partisan political nature of funding for cities and towns, how can this Premier stand there and, with a straight face, claim that her government does not attempt to intimidate its critics?

Ms Redford: I don't know if the hon. member was at the meeting with the AUMA 10, 15 days ago, but what we saw at that was a very good relationship between members of this Legislature, most on this side of the House, as well as with the minister, who, as I understand it, received the only standing ovation at the event. As we move ahead, it's going to actually matter that we're constructive about what that relationship will be, Mr. Speaker. It was demonstrated at that event that we have a strong working relationship on policy issues and not politics, and that's going to make a difference for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that after the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford phoned the president of the AMA complaining about the mental health of another member of this Assembly, she appointed him as the health minister and after the Minister of Finance fired three doctors for putting on a syphilis campaign that he didn't like, how can this Premier's claim that bullying critics will not be tolerated be anything more than just misleading pre-election propaganda?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, these are unfounded allegations. There is no basis for them, and I won't respond to them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Edmonton General Continuing Care Incident (continued)

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we were all appalled to hear last week, 67-year-old Audry Chudyk, a resident of the Edmonton General continuing care centre, was found unresponsive and lying in her own feces on February 14. Meanwhile, Auditor General Fred Dunn's 2005 recommendation that systems for monitoring the compliance of long-term care facilities with basic service standards be improved, while accepted, has been ignored for nearly seven years now. To the Premier: why have Alberta Health Services' recommendations, that might have saved Audry Chudyk and her family such suffering, not been implemented?

Mr. VanderBurg: You know, it was very clear earlier and it's very clear to all Albertans that if there are safety issues, if there are abuse issues, you report it. Everybody here and everybody out there has an opportunity to report it, and it's mandatory. We have an obligation to protect seniors together, not to publicize it in here.

Mr. Chase: Enough of apologies, enough of excuses. Let's have some action. When will the results of the investigation into the case, launched by the AHS's contractor, Covenant Health, be released to the public? The damage is done. When will it be released?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the results of that investigation will be delivered to me by Alberta Health Services when they receive them from Covenant Health, and they will be made public.

Mr. Chase: Will the minister of health commit today to implementing the Auditor General's outstanding recommendations so that other residents of long-term care need not suffer such abuse as has gone on for seven long years?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has made a very serious allegation with his last statement. I'm quite prepared to stand in this House and to listen to accounts of unfortunate, very unfortunate incidents such as the one that has just been mentioned and to join with my colleague in explaining to this House what action we are taking in response to that. What I will not do: I will not gratify erroneous and, quite frankly, dangerous generalizations based on these individual cases and suggest for a moment that this is rampant in the entire system. That's an insult to the people that deliver the care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Promotion of Alberta Energy Industry

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The relationship that Alberta has with the United States is an important one, especially when it comes to oil and gas. In fact, overall we have the largest trading relationship of any two countries in the world. With significant economic and employment benefits on both sides of the border we want to ensure that this relationship stays strong. My question is to the Premier. My constituents commented very favourably to me last week regarding your trip to Chicago, but I'd like to ask you directly: who did you meet with in Chicago, and really what was the outcome of these meetings?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, Illinois in the Midwest is a very important market for us. There are five refineries right outside of Chicago, where 70 per cent of the feedstock that's going into those refineries is coming from the oil sands. Illinois is one of our largest trading partners, with over a hundred companies that are delivering products directly to the oil sands, and we had a very good opportunity to meet with the Chicago Council on Global Affairs, with Midwest state legislators, with the council of executive officers to actually talk about how to continue to build and enhance that trade.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. While I was happy to hear that all the meetings went so well, there are other issues out there, and I hear about these and see these in the want ads in all of our papers. I believe there is much higher unemployment in many parts of the United States. Were you able to get any further in resolving some of the labour issues that exist?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, for most people in this Legislature who are actually concerned about our economic development and are as optimistic as we are about it, we need to know that within the next 10 years there will probably be 110,000 positions that we're not going to be able to fill from inside Canada.

We had very productive discussions with the trades union councils to identify opportunities in partnership with the federal government where we could put in place preclearance systems so that skilled workers were being prequalified in the United States and then could deal with the immigration issues coming up here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Premier. Because I truly believe that we must maintain and cultivate our relationships with our neighbours to the south, what is the purpose of your visit to Washington next week?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we had very good news last week when TransCanada PipeLines announced that they were going to proceed with the line from Cushing to Port Arthur. That's going to matter to the U.S. economy, and for us the really good news was that the White House made very favourable comments with respect to that. We believe that one of the reasons for that is that as Canadians and Albertans we've been working together to be very effective advocates for what's going on in the oil sands.

The work that we will do this week in Washington and in New York, attracting investors and speaking to people on both sides of the aisle with respect to why the oil sands matter for the United States and for Canada, I think allows these decisions to happen in a way that Albertans can have confidence in their economic future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Physician Services Agreement

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's 7,000 physicians have for a year now been without a contract that would give them a real voice for patients at the table when key decisions about health care are being made. Instead, the Minister of Health has imposed a one-year increase in compensation and primary care network funding, meant to shut doctors up before the election. To the minister: do you really believe this desperate pre-election attempt to silence physicians will work, and what are you afraid of?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are not afraid of anything. This government wants a long-term agreement with our physicians. We believe it is in the best interests of the public health care system to have a long-term agreement with our physicians, and in fact negotiations are continuing.

Dr. Swann: Quite so, Mr. Speaker. In rejecting binding arbitration and subverting the negotiating process, this minister thinks he's going to build trust with health workers. Is that what you're saying?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this government isn't subverting anything. I spoke to the president of the Alberta Medical Association as recently as yesterday. We have plans to meet later this week. The letter in question that the hon. member refers to was a letter I sent to the physicians of Alberta. This government said that we wanted stability and predictability in our health care system. That means addressing in the short term, prior to negotiating our long-term agreement, the resource requirements to keep our health system running smoothly. That started with a $12 increase for our primary care networks, which have not received an increase since 2003.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, how can this minister seriously believe that unilateral action is going to improve trust and patient care in this province?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we don't. That's why we are continuing negotiations with the Alberta Medical Association. If this hon. member wants to stand up and tell me and this House that $93 million in additional financial resources to support Albertans' physicians is a bad idea, I leave him to it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Promotion of Alberta Oil Sands

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans recognize that our prosperity and ability to develop our energy resources depend in part on decisions made in other jurisdictions. The infrastructure necessary to get our energy to market can only be built with the co-operation of others. All my questions are to the Premier. What are you doing to make sure that people have the facts on the oil sands?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we know that throughout North America there is infrastructure in place that is allowing our economies to thrive, whether it's in the United States or whether it's in Canada. We know that the regulatory decisions that are being made on both the west coast and also the United States need to be part of an informed public discussion. So we're talking about who we are as Albertans, how proud we are, what our environmental record has been, that we are proud environmental stewards, that we're continuing to build sustainable technologies, and that we're making investments with respect to joint partnerships with industry. Of course, we saw some very good news last week with industry coming together to say that they will share intellectual property with respect to this. This is the story that we need to tell in the United States. It's resonating, and that's why we're getting a good response from the White House.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: how do you intend to get the support of other jurisdictions in Canada?

Ms Redford: Well, Mr. Speaker, it was very interesting last week, of course, to see some of the comments that were made with respect to the oil sands. I was very pleased that within a couple of days there was an informed national conversation going on with respect to what the energy economy means to the rest of Canada. As we know – and we did talk about the fact – we're looking at a tremendous tens of millions of dollars going into at least Ontario with respect to economic development in the oil sands. When we do that, those billions of dollars are what's going to allow Canadians to emotionally connect and to ensure that we're all proud of what we're doing here.

Mr. Johnston: A final question to the Premier: will these efforts support the necessary pipelines being built?

Ms Redford: I believe they will, Mr. Speaker, because what we've seen now in the discussion with respect to pipelines, after much of the fanfare at the very beginning of these hearings, is that people who are getting jobs building and refining off these pipelines understand the importance to their communities of what these resources mean. It is important to connect the dots in a way, whether we're in the United States, British Columbia, or eastern Canada, that people are understanding that it all matters for a strong energy economy. We're having success, and I think that's good for Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Residential Construction Standards

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week I raised concerns that the glacial pace on improving construction and inspection was not protecting the homeowner or condominium owner. The Minister of Municipal Affairs responded by suggesting that last May's wildfire disaster in Slave Lake precluded the government from bringing in new homeowner protection measures as promised. Now, it has been the practice of Municipal Affairs for some time now to contract out the administration of disaster recovery programs to LandLink Consulting Ltd. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What's the real reason behind the snail-like progress on helping Albertans to be protected?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I was at our meeting of Municipal Affairs with all of our department staff. There was endless discussion about all the hard work that went into helping Slave Lake deal with what turned out to be the worst disaster in the province's history. I think every single person in Municipal Affairs who spent all their time and energy working to help the people of Slave Lake and region work on rebuilding would be very offended by the insinuation that they did nothing.

Ms Blakeman: All of your staff worked on that?

Back to the same minister. There are now too many examples of Albertans being assessed huge amounts in order to make their condo or house livable and safe to list in 35 seconds. I'd like to know why the minister won't implement an interest-free loan fund for folks that are faced with massive special assessments for substantial repair costs related to shoddy construction.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, that may be something we can consider down the road. It would be inappropriate to discuss that before we finish passing the budget because we can't really start to spend more money at least until we pass the budget.

In the meantime, as I've said before, we're working with homeowners in this province on a home warranty program, on extending the term limits for fines and limitations so that we can make sure that we protect home builders. They still have avenues through the courts to make sure that they can deal with those people, those construction practices that have left them with inappropriate housing.

Ms Blakeman: Well, let me follow up on that with the same minister. Given that the government has had policy recommendations in its possession since April of 2008 and the former Minister of Municipal Affairs first began revealing details of this forthcoming legislation as early as the fall of 2010, three different sittings ago, what exactly is the minister's excuse? What is the actual problem here that this ministry cannot move on this?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, I get to answer the question again. As I've said before, we have very limited staff in Municipal Affairs, who were distracted a bit by a crisis situation in Slave Lake and region with the fire.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, we have done extensive consultations, past ministers have as well, with contractors, with builders, with homeowners, and with banks to make sure that we get the system right because it's not just about enforcing a new homeowner warranty, that could drive up the costs and drive out new home purchasers. We make sure on this side of the House that we do appropriate consultation with all stakeholders to get it right the first time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:20 Canadian Oil Sands Innovation Alliance

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was really pleased this last week to see 12 companies announce a partnership to bring the Canadian Oil Sands Innovation Alliance to life. The goal is to break down barriers and to share environmental research and ultimately produce innovations in oil sands cleanup. Some critics may find this collective commitment to be more rhetoric from industry. Can the Minister of Environment and Water tell us how this alliance adds to the work the government is already doing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. This is actually excellent news. Whenever we can have many companies, in this case 12 CEOs, sign an agreement to work together and to pool their expertise and their resources to generate innovative solutions, particularly with the challenges around the oil sands, this is excellent news. It encourages integration of resources and building technologies so that we'll find solutions quicker as they work together and share those. We're very excited about this. We encourage more of these kinds of opportunities to happen in this province.

Mrs. Ady: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is to the same minister. It's great to see industry work together. Do you think that this is going to move into other sectors of the oil and gas industry? Are we going to see that kind of co-operation in others?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we encourage it not just in the oil and gas industry but in all industries when it pertains to environmental protection. We encourage all of this kind of collaboration to happen. We think that this is the first step. Industry in the oil sands is taking a big step to come together, and we encourage that practice in other industries across the province.

Mrs. Ady: Lastly, to the same minister: how do you plan on working with this group? They're a private industry group. Are you as government going to be able to work with them with the stuff you're doing?

Mrs. McQueen: Well, what we're very happy about is that the initial focus they're looking at is on our own issues that are important to us in Alberta Environment and Water, and that is dealing with the four main areas of tailings, water, land, and greenhouse gases. So we plan to continue to work with them so that they will find solutions that will meet the challenges we are facing in Alberta to reduce environmental issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Grimshaw Holy Family School

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An independent report to government on Holy Family school in Grimshaw uncovers a laundry list of problems that no family would accept in their own homes let alone in a place they send their children to. To the Minister of Education. This report shows there is both merit and urgency to the community's request. So if the reason for ignoring the school's unsafe condition isn't related to their video and isn't related to their, quote, upsetting comments, what else could it possibly be?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, a lot of things can be learned from that situation. As I've said on a number of occasions, I'm looking forward to working with that particular board. I myself have seen that school, and I agree that you don't need an engineer to tell you that this building needs to be replaced. But other things need to be learned. The oldest part of the school is 50 years old; the newest is about 20 years old. The whole building has to be bulldozed down. I also need to find out why. I think that not only this government but other school boards can learn to make sure that this doesn't happen again in any other jurisdiction.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this school has been talking to this ministry for 10 years.

Now, given that the report lists no fire sprinklers, deficient gas shut-off, inadequate heating, accumulated water under the floor, blocked sewers, and unsafe electrical systems and given that this description apparently represents the status quo that requires no attention within the next three years, will the minister apologize to Albertans for his government's long-standing failure to provide safe buildings within which our children can learn?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the member is correct. All the disrepair that she listed actually does exist. I've seen it for myself. All of that is happening while the school board has in excess of $7 million in their savings account. I will be working with that school board. We will probably be using this school as a model to make sure that infrastructure that is paid for by the taxpayers of Alberta is properly maintained in the future so that all children in the province of Alberta have buildings that are adequate for learning. This one is not.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace wrote local officials advising caution and diplomacy to so-called upset individuals to avoid delay of a new school and given that Infrastructure staff recommended the replacement of the school to their political masters only to be inexplicably ignored, why won't the minister admit that this government's decision-making is discretionary, arbitrary, political, and fails Alberta's families every day?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the only things political at this point are the comments by the hon. member. I pride myself on having a good relationship with school boards. They know how to contact me. They're always welcome in my office, and I will be visiting them as often as I possibly can. At the end of the day we have pressures for new schools throughout the entire province, and that school will be considered like all the other school boards are being considered. Plenty to be learned. Plenty to be done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education has stated that he always encourages every school to try to put the other one out of business, so I just want to ask: does the minister honestly believe that pitting schools one against another by encouraging schools to drive each other out of business is the best way forward for schools in this province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I would like to commend this member for reading Twitter because that's where he actually got it from. If he's forming his policy on 144 characters, then that's not a good thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, I have always said that having good, healthy, child-focused, curriculum-focused competition is what makes Alberta the NHL of education systems in the world. Parents have choice, and they choose where they want to send their children. That is healthy competition. Competition does not pitting make.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I got the quote from the Calgary Herald. Nevertheless, it was on Twitter. I should have been reading there.

Is the minister by his statement actually saying that he wants more kids going to private schools and more kids going to charter schools than to our own public school system?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I want kids going to schools that the parents approve. I want kids going to schools where they are getting world-class education, as they are. I want parents to have choice. Parents right now have the choice of home-schooling, private schooling, public schooling, Catholic schooling, charter schooling. The list goes on and on. That is what makes Alberta education strong, where parents get to make the choice that is right for their family and for their values.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, how can the minister justify this apparent embracing of an American-style education system by funding private schools, trying to pit schools one against another? Has he not reviewed any of the information on how this actually destroys the public education system and doesn't assist it?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, here they go again with the comfortable slogans that they've been using for other portfolios. As a matter of fact, there is a good reason why Alberta education is considered one of the top four jurisdictions in the world. One is that we have excellent teachers doing some fabulous work in the classroom. We have supportive communities and Albertans who support education. We have a government that makes Alberta education its priority, and we have choice that parents get to exercise. If the Liberals don't like it, that's too bad.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mental Health and Addictions Services

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the minister of health announced news of an investment into the Alberta Hospital Edmonton site, yet in the same announcement the health minister referred to the importance of Albertans with addictions and mental health issues getting the help they need in the community. Building a psychiatric hospital in a fairly remote part of Edmonton seems contrary to providing mental health services and programs in the community. Can the health minister explain why we continue to invest in this old, institutional way of treating mental illness?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the answer is: because we need it. We need to consider both services in hospital and in the community. As members of this House will know, for a number of years now there have been questions about the future of Alberta Hospital Edmonton. This morning's announcement, which will result in the creation of 60 new in-patient beds in that hospital, will provide some much-needed services that will not only address specialized in-patient care but will support transition for patients when they leave hospital to go back to the community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you. My next question is to the same minister, who also announced this morning increases to psychology and counselling services through primary health care. I have had constituents tell me that it takes weeks or even months to get access to a psychologist through their doctor's office because there are not enough of them and those that are available privately cost at least $150 an hour, which many of my constituents can't . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:30

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it is true that psychology services are not currently covered under the Alberta health care insurance plan, but as the hon. member points out, the demand for psychology and counselling services is increasing, has been increasing for a number of years. We feel there's an opportunity to offer psychology services along with other counselling through our primary care networks, through other primary care delivery models, thereby getting to people sooner and avoiding some of the very unfortunate circumstances we hear about when problems are not addressed.

Mr. Vandermeer: To the same minister. The announcement also talks about focusing programs on children and youth, yet nothing was mentioned about the PCHAD Amendment Act, a key piece of legislation that can help the children who are most vulnerable. My question to the hon. minister is: why haven't you proclaimed the PCHAD Amendment Act?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am in discussions now with the Minister of Human Services about that precise issue. This morning's announcement did provide an additional $8 million to support the mental health capacity building initiative, which is a tremendous project that encompasses many schools across the province, providing much-needed wraparound addiction and mental health services to children and youth. The Minister of Human Services and I will continue to work toward proclamation of the PCHAD legislation as quickly as possible.

School Board Funding

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in a letter written to a school board advocating publicly for a school in desperate need of repair, the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace said, "In order for your community to have the opportunity to receive a new school, you and your school board will have to be very diplomatic from here on out." It goes on: "Your comments could be upsetting to some individuals. This could delay the decision on a new school." What shameful behaviour from an elected member of this government. To the Minister of Education: what are you and this Premier doing to hold this member accountable for such blatant thuggery?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I think the Premier has spoken eloquently on this topic. I have made my comments as well. The member has done the honourable thing and has removed himself from a committee. This member has a record of serving Albertans with a great deal of dignity for many, many years. As a matter of fact, this unfortunate letter will not affect the relationship between this minister or this Premier or this government or the school board in any way.

Mr. Anderson: So no accountability whatsoever.

Minister, will you commit – commit right now – to immediately publish a list of all school board funding requests for new schools and school maintenance, from highest priority to lowest priority, right across the province as well as the set of objective criteria used to arrive at that priority so that communities and parents across Alberta can feel safe that you and your government will not politically extort or punish their children for their parents committing the cardinal sin of speaking out against the PC government? Will you do that, sir? Publish the list.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, I would advise this particular member to start adhering to the code of conduct that the member to whom he was referring has been adhering up to now.

Mr. Speaker, yes, as a matter of fact, we will be releasing a list of priorities for schools, and the members will see objectivity. But also, then, this member has to promise us that he will no longer be holding rallies at the front stairs of the Legislature, convincing the government that schools in his riding are the most important.

Mr. Anderson: Minister, we all know school boards all request funding for their top priorities. I'm talking about how you choose which boards to fund and for how much.

The final question: are you telling me that your government spends hundreds of millions every year on new schools and maintenance but has no objective priority list for deciding which school board gets how much? If you do have such a list, why won't you make that secret list public? Is it because you enjoy being able to hand out money to reward supporters and punish those who speak out? Publish the secret list, Minister, and stop the culture of corruption.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, yet another secret list. If it's so secret, how does he know about it?

I'll tell you one thing. There is no secret list. Schools are prioritized every year based on the capital plans of each school board. That's how decisions are made. Frankly, we will have to probably build approximately 40 schools per year for the next 10 years to catch up to the infrastructure pressure that we have. But if this member is questioning the objectivity, I would again ask this member, then, to stop holding rallies at the front stairs of the Legislature to pressure this government to build schools in his riding as opposed to in other ridings if he wants a decision . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Safe Communities Resource Centre

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A significant step was taken recently in reducing and preventing crime when a new Safe Communities Resource Centre was announced in Calgary, and that was to provide services to individuals that are indentified by their probation officers as being at high risk to offend. My first question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. How will this community resource centre's programs differ from those that you're already offering to high-risk offenders?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, thank you to the member for the question. One of the things that we've found is that we have many services available, but they're not always as easily accessible as perhaps they might be, particularly when we have repeat offenders who seem to be on a cycle in and out of the court system. We see this as an opportunity to innovate and to provide services in one place where we can be especially effective in breaking that cycle.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will you consider expanding this program to all offenders who are a risk to public safety?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the people who are the focus of the initiative, that was just announced about a week ago in Calgary, are people who are on probation, so they're under court supervision. That makes it possible for there to be some direction as to what programs they should become involved in, so this is an opportunity for them to have addiction counselling, mental health counselling, housing assistance, any number of other types of supports in one spot. We would like to expand that to many other areas of the province. This is a pilot project that will run for three years, and we hope to be able to expand it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that your ministry's programs will be aligned with Justice services – and the minister has mentioned some of the health programs that will be available – would you please let us know what else you'll be offering by way of community services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are participating in this in a collaborative way, as the minister had discussed in his previous answer. We are primarily concerned with addictions and mental health services, and we see the ability to provide those on-site in conjunction with probation as a tremendous support to the overall intended impact of this program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Administration of Elections

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Justice minister. The federal robocall scandal gives an urgent warning to this government about the upcoming election here in Alberta. After all, Alberta's election determines control of the largest energy reserves in the western world. When the stakes are so high, some people are bound to fight dirty. They could be anyone from anywhere, and it seems they can disappear without a trace. To the minister: will this government undertake an urgent review of the Election Act before the next election and bring forward amendments that reduce the risks of robocall-style election abuses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. I suppose it's not surprising that this might come up in question period just because of the headlines, but we don't make policy based on headlines. We are always interested in updating the Election Act. As a matter of fact, there are periodic reviews.

But in answer to the member's question, no, there is no plan to make any urgent amendments.

Mr. Chase: Lorne Gibson, 198 recommendations, all ignored.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, did you want to raise the question? I sure recognized Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: I appreciate that. Thank you.

Given that the courts have made it clear through a series of rulings that governments have an active obligation to ensure that the administration of elections is effective and fair, will this government consult with Alberta's Chief Electoral Officer to make sure he has enough funding and staff to handle the risk of a whole new type of election fraud?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, speculation and allegations on the federal scene about voter fraud do not translate to the same thing in Alberta. We are always aware that there may be risks, but that's why we have a Chief Electoral Officer, who is an independent officer of the Legislature, who oversees and manages this. I have every confidence that the Chief Electoral Officer can run a very good and fair election.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given the severity of this problem and the fact that it threatens the very base of democracy, the Official Opposition, at least, is prepared to fully co-operate with a review of the Election Act. Will this government do anything to prevent a replay of the federal robocall scandal here in Alberta? We should act now.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, after the last election there were a number of suggestions, recommendations made by the Chief Electoral Officer. This Assembly considered them very carefully. We actually adopted a number of the recommendations. They were made as amendments to the act. The Chief Electoral Officer will provide a report with recommendations after the next election, and we will certainly consider them. We had a very extensive debate before Christmas about amendments to the Election Act. Members opposite had every opportunity to raise this type of an issue, and I don't remember it being mentioned at all.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a request from the Minister of Finance to supplement a response to a question that arose on Thursday, February 23.

Land Conservation Trusts

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday, February 23, the Member for Edmonton-Centre as part of her question asked why conservation land trusts in this province are being denied casino licences, and I'd like to provide a brief response.

The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission has had three requests from land conservation trusts. One received a casino licence in 2012 and is slated for another later this year. Another application from a land trust from southern Alberta is currently pending, waiting for some follow-up information. The third application: the Edmonton and Area Land Trust applied two years ago and was denied a casino licence because of how the organization is structured. This group never appealed, and the file has been closed.*

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you have the right to a supplemental question.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that part of the problem might have been that they are structured as a part 9 company, and we are hearing rumours that the AGLC will no longer allow any kind of licensing to a not-for-profit organization that's registered as a part 9 company. Can you tell me if that's, in fact, true?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that information. I'll endeavour to get it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 17 members were recognized today for 102 questions and responses plus the three supplementary ones as well.

We are going to continue with the Routine, and we're going to return to Introduction of Guests.

Introduction of Guests

(continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's really an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members a great friend, and I have another introduction after that. My friend is Reverend Paul Kortenhoven from Grand Rapids, Michigan. He was a missionary in Sierra Leone from 1980 to 2002. I first met him in 1984 in Sierra Leone and have worked with him many times. He continues to work in Sierra Leone and consult in the peace and reconciliation process subsequent to a 10-year civil war.

Paul was also involved in the creation of the Kimberly protocol, which is the international agreement on marketing diamonds, especially those originating in Africa. Mr. Speaker, if you have ever watched the movie Blood Diamond, at the end of the movie there's a picture in Brussels, I think, or in Antwerp about the protocol for marketing diamonds. Paul was one of the members of the group that put together the international protocol. He's lecturing on west African history tonight and tomorrow night as well at The King's University College. I would like to ask him to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Some other guests that I have are Peter and Andree Verhoog and their children Ginelle, Micheline, Janice, and Suzanne. They're home-schoolers from Ponoka. They're interested in Bill 2, and they're with us as well today. If they're still in the galleries, I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to also introduce some special guests who were here for the education rally this afternoon and who also are home-schoolers and tremendous supporters there, too. Unfortunately, they had to leave a short while ago, but for the record I'd like to note that Kathrine Baer, Tylor Baer, Kristina Baer, Landon Baer, and Austin Baer were all here in support of home-schooling. Thank you very much for your attendance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you the Wildrose candidate for Sherwood Park, Garnett Genius. Garnett is executive director of Responsible Electricity Transmission for Albertans and an associate fellow at the Canadian Centre for Policy Studies. Garnett has told me that he's knocked on every single open-access door in the riding, and we're very proud to have him on our team.

Secondly, I would like to introduce Alison Landreville. Alison is a registered nurse here in Edmonton, working in medication safety and quality. She received both her bachelor's and master's degrees in nursing here at the University of Alberta. She's a mother of two children.

We're very happy to have them both here today. I'll ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you some members of a family from my constituency. Paul van den Bosch and his four children have joined us today from Red Deer for question period and to visit the Legislature Building. Paul and his children with him today in the gallery – Joseph, John, Frances, and Bernadette – are part of our province's home-schooling community. As a government we support home education and would like to commend Mr. van den Bosch and his family for their dedication and excellent work in educating their children as bright and talented citizens of our province. I would like to thank the van den Bosches for joining us today in Alberta's capital city to learn more about our democratic customs and political traditions. The guests are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like to ask them now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

*See page 266, left column, paragraph 8

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I have the great honour of introducing to you and through you some of my constituents, who were at the rally this afternoon. They are I believe seated in the public gallery. That's Patricia Bergen and her family as well as 28 other family members who are here today. I know they're very strong home-schoolers, and they produce the greatest and brightest children. I'd ask that they stand, if they are still here, to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

A Life in Politics

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the recognition you gave me today. Rarely do elected members of this Assembly have the opportunity on their anniversary to recognize and to thank people who help and support us in all the work we do. We are, indeed, fortunate to have dedicated people around us in our ridings and at home, and I want to thank all the Little Bow constituents who've supported me for 20 years.

I'm proud to have had some great friends throughout this building in all walks of life. I only wish there was time to mention all of them. Earlier I introduced one of our constituency managers, Lois McLeod, who along with Julie Annable has provided courteous, confidential, and capable assistance to our Little Bow constituents.

I've had a terrific amount of help in the past number of years, Mr. Speaker, from Dianne Wills, Tracy Kully, Brendalee Gardner, Phyllis Hennig, Peter Pilarski, Robyn Kowalski, and Ryan Osterberg.

Thirty-five years ago, in 1977, I was elected for the first time to the county of Vulcan council. I don't think my wife ever thought that 15 years later I'd be elected in a by-election to this Assembly. While I was here in Edmonton, Mary was making sure that our kids were getting a proper upbringing, commuting nearly a hundred miles each day to her psych nursing job as well as keeping our farm and our home operating.

Life for those in politics is no different when it comes to family sadness. During my time here my mother, Mary's mom and dad, and seven out of eight of my aunts and uncles have passed away, many times while I was right here.

I'm proud of my family. Not too many have a kid who could have won a gold medal in a Dominion hurdle championship at the age of 15 or have a son who can take a mangled piece of autobody work and turn it into a brand new, shiny-looking product. Our second son operates that business. Our daughter danced for 14 years in ballet, pointe, lyrical, and hip hop and worked while earning her degree in human resources. Our youngest son, one of the youngest black belts out of Lethbridge, is helping troubled youth and is going to work in July on his master's in clinical psychology.

Thank you, Mary. Thank you to all our family. Your grandparents would have been very proud. [Standing ovation]

2:50

Saving for the Future

Mr. Hehr: There once was a farmer named Jim. He had sections of land. Jim got married and started a family. He was extremely generous. They had the best of everything. Jim and his wife thought the good times would never end.

Although Jim had a great deal of land, he never brought in enough revenues to pay the bills. At the end of the year when Jim was getting his finances together, he was always short. So every year he would sell an acre or two, and that would seem to balance things off. Jim's children: they liked living on the farm so much that they never left. Because he loved his children, he did not ask them to contribute to the bills.

Jim had to keep selling off land to keep everyone happy. Then one year when he looked at the family finances, it finally became clear that he didn't have any more land to sell off. That farm was a memory. Nothing was left. By not asking the children to contribute and by living high on the hog, Jim was broke. This is not unlike the parable of Alberta.

One of the themes that we have seen emerge over and over again is that we need to manage our province's great wealth. This is about the long-term future of our province and whether after it's all said and done – when the oil has been pumped, when the gas is gone, and the bitumen has been dug up – we will have anything to show for it. For 25 years this province has spent all of its $225 billion that it has brought in in resource revenues. We pay our daily bills by spending the revenue, which is akin to Jim selling off pieces of the family farm.

If we're ever going to have anything left when it's all said and done, we need to save. In order to do that, we're going to need to ask citizens to pay for the things they use. They know public education and good roads cost money. They also know that once you sell a barrel of oil, you never have that barrel to sell again.

It's time to look at our tax code and to develop a fair model, a model that recognizes that it should not be our God-given right to blow every last dime of petroleum resources to pay today's bills. It's not fair. It's not fair to future generations; neither is it in the best long-term interests of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

National Film Board of Canada World Premiere

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 4, 2012, it was my honour and privilege to attend the Global Visions Film Festival in Edmonton. This film festival, in its 30th year, is Canada's longest running documentary film festival. It is dedicated to presenting socially relevant films from around the world, exploring issues of social, economic, and environmental development.

Mr. Speaker, this year's festival featured the National Film Board of Canada's world premiere of the film The Basketball Game. This film is produced by the National Film Board of Canada and features the directorial debut of our very own Alberta-born and -raised Hart Snider, an award-winning filmmaker.

This film is significant, Mr. Speaker, because it is based on the recollections of a nine-year-old boy coming to grips with hate and discrimination in Alberta. This issue is relevant within societies around the world. The film shows how children understand and can be impacted by hate and discrimination.

More importantly, Mr. Speaker, the film sends a profound message that when children are provided with an opportunity to resolve issues amongst themselves, in this case through a sports game, the real issues are better understood and potentially resolved by the children themselves. The film is also significant because it was done using animation, which is always timely, especially for attracting younger people to the story messages.

Mr. Speaker, congratulations to the National Film Board of Canada for their insightful decision to produce this short film. Also, congratulations and special thanks to Hart Snider, an Albertan filmmaker who profiled a deeply human reality message when he informed audiences on how hate and discrimination impact children and how children must be involved to help resolve these problems before they become their adult problems. The film is innovative, thought-provoking, and its filmmaker, Hart Snider, is definitely a living example of the Alberta spirit.

Thank you to all involved in the film The Basketball Game for adding immeasurably to our society as a whole.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Alberta Business Awards of Distinction

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak about an exciting event held on March 2 at the River Cree Resort and Casino. Hosted by the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, this year's Alberta business awards of distinction was the 21st annual awards gala celebrating the best in Alberta business. Awards were presented to a number of Alberta companies and organizations chosen for exemplifying excellence in their respective industries.

The hon. Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations presented the aboriginal woman entrepreneur award, which recognizes aboriginal businesswomen as positive role models. This year's winner was Isabell Ringenoldus of TAWS Security Ltd., a company based in Fort McMurray.

The hon. Minister of Human Services presented the employer of persons with disabilities award to Long View Systems, an information technology company with offices in Calgary and Edmonton. This award recognizes leading-edge practices in the hiring, training, and career development of employees with disabilities. The hon. Minister of Human Services also presented the employer of youth award and the very prestigious Premier's award of distinction to Alberta Blue Cross Benefits Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, this government is proud to support the Alberta Chambers of Commerce in recognizing excellence in the province's business community, and we look forward to continuing this valuable partnership for years to come. I would like to congratulate all of this year's winners and nominees for their tremendous accomplishments and important contributions to our province's diverse economy and, on behalf of this government, thank them for the outstanding work that they're doing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Donation to Olds College by Jack Anderson

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a remarkable act of kindness and generosity, one that will benefit future generations of Albertans. Mr. J.C. (Jack) Anderson, a Calgary businessman and rancher, is donating the proceeds from the sale of a hundred vintage cars and trucks to Olds College in my riding to mark their centennial in 2013. The auction of Mr. Anderson's prized collection, which ranges from a 1984 Rolls-Royce to a 1968 Corvair, is expected to raise more than $2.5 million.

This is not the first time Mr. Anderson has made a generous gift to the college. In 2007 he gave the school $1 million. This latest donation, the largest in Olds College's illustrious history, has more than monetary benefit. The auction of Mr. Anderson's collection will shine a bright spotlight on the college as it celebrates a hundred years of education excellence in the fields of agriculture, animal sciences, business, and technology.

Mr. Speaker, as a businessman and supporter of lifelong learning opportunities Mr. Anderson fully appreciates the programming offered by Old College and the quality of its graduates. In addition to employing Olds graduates in his business, at 84 he still attends seminars at the college, proving you're never too old to learn something new. Mr. Anderson shares our government's goal of inspiring Albertans to reach their full potential through advanced education. He is an inspiration to anyone at any age seeking to keep their mind and body engaged by actively pursuing knowledge and experience.

On behalf of this government and the citizens of Alberta, especially those attending Olds College, I would like to thank Mr. Anderson for his historic donation. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Bonnyville Primary Care Network

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to speak about the successes of the Bonnyville primary care network, or PCN. Created in 2005, it was the first rural PCN established in Alberta and currently serves a community of approximately 15,000 people. Led by a team of health professionals consisting of 15 family physicians, four registered nurses, and two licensed practical nurses, it provides patients with improved access to the right care from the right health professional at the right time.

The Bonnyville PCN plays such an important role in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, offering several programs, including the chronic disease management program, the well baby program, the well women and teen clinic, and the obstetrics program. The chronic disease management program is the largest program offered by a PCN and helps to treat patients with diabetes, obesity, kidney disease, blood disorders, mental illness, arthritis, and much more. In addition to this treatment, nurses also offer a public education program to help raise awareness about chronic disease, its management, and prevention.

Mr. Speaker, the PCNs play an important role in building a health care system that is sustainable, accessible, and provides quality care for all.

The Bonnyville PCN continues to strive for excellence in rural primary care and is interested in helping Alberta Health Services determine the direction of family care clinics in Alberta. I would like to thank them for the wonderful work that they are doing in my community and for the high bar they have set for PCNs across this great province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 7(7) has been arrived at. The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Could I ask the co-operation of the House to unanimously waive 7(7) to allow us to complete the Routine of the day?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. We're continuing on with members' statements.

National Social Work Week

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. March 4 to 10 is National Social Work Week. This is a time to acknowledge social work professionals for the exceptional job that they do. This year's theme is Social Work: Celebrating the Person and the Professional.

People in this field work tirelessly for the vulnerable Albertans in our communities. This line of work isn't easy, and their caring, hard work is often behind the scenes and goes unnoticed. What is noticed are the results of their work: happy children, healthy families, and people who are able to make positive changes in their lives and to create stronger communities.

In Lethbridge just recently a young man in his early 20s came by a residential home for youth. He had been a resident there about five years earlier. He wanted to thank the staff for all the hard work they had done with him. He is doing well and has not forgotten the difference made in his life by the social workers and youth workers who came into his life when he needed them the most and when he was so alone.

Like him I would say thank you to the people in this field for their dedication, professionalism, compassion, and for all the hours they put in that are far and above their duties.

I would also recognize the partnership that the Alberta government has with the Alberta College of Social Workers. This partnership creates opportunities for continued professional development, which is important to maintain our skilled workforce and leadership within that social work field.

In addition, there are many social workers with contracted agencies who work to make a difference in the lives of Albertans. Social workers in these agencies work directly with families, providing valuable services such as early intervention services for children, parenting classes, and in-home support. As dedicated professionals they have a critical role in our province. Alberta is a better place because of the selfless work that they do.

Thank you to our social workers.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Bill 5

Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 5, Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act.

Mr. Speaker, a seniors' property tax deferral program will help senior homemakers take advantage of their home equity to defer all or part of their property taxes. These freed-up funds can then be used by the homeowner for things like home repairs and modifications, which will help our seniors to remain in their homes longer.

Supporting seniors to remain independent and in their own homes for as long as possible is a priority for our Premier, our seniors' minister, and for me. A seniors' property tax program will help us to meet that priority.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

Mr. Weadick: I would ask that Bill 5, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act, as presented by the Member for Red Deer-North be moved to Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two today. The first signs himself unhappy voter, but his name is actually Robert Fitzsimmons. In it he makes the point that he feels that the government has "reduced the Natural Resources Royalties that were being charged American companies for the exploitation of the Tar Sands to save them money, and increase their profits – not ours." He also notes: "It means that more than $100 Billion per year is being exported to the United States due to the [loss] of personal, business, and royalty taxation for the benefit of American companies, and personnel."

The second tabling that I have today is from a constituent, Stephanie Reeves. She's a U of A psychology student. She is quite concerned about how inaccessible psychology services are, especially to low- and middle-income people and families, the irony being that these are the people that most often need it, and she notes that in the United Kingdom and Australia there has been considerable investment over the last couple of years to make these psychological therapies accessible to citizens.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the appropriate number of copies of a letter received from a constituent, and I'm tabling with permission the constituent's name, Mr. Hanno Hartmann. He has attached his power bill, which he describes as outrageous. He's deeply upset about the way that the electricity system is being managed in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Dr. Paul Parks, the first sentence of which says:

As a health care provider, and more importantly as a proud Albertan, I am extremely frustrated and angered that the current Premier insists on insulting all Albertans with her disingenuous . . . distracting terms of reference for the public inquiry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings. The first consists of e-mails and 15 letters from individuals who are concerned about the proposed logging in the west Bragg Creek area, all of whom believe clear-cutting will damage essential watershed and recreation area that thousands of Albertans use to promote health and fitness and be detrimental to wildlife and natural species. They come from George Cote, Lloyd Bossert, Alvise Doglioni Majer, Wendy Hagel, Paola Romanelli, Tom Nagai, Michael Ward, Dr. Stella George, Maureen Bildfell, Michael F. Milne, Carl and Gail Peter, Tracy Davis, Jennifer Rogers, Darryl Barr, Ian Oxtan, Ulla Allan, Dr. Ina Dobrinski, Mark Verbeek, and Lara Dziurdy.

My second set of tablings, Mr. Speaker, is a letter and a brochure from Sustain Kananaskis, a group involved in raising awareness of the proposed logging in the west Bragg Creek area. They are asking citizens concerned with the effects of logging on tourism, recreation, watershed, environment, local economies, and fire protection to request a complete and facilitated public consultation before any logging starts this summer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, do you have tablings today? Proceed, please.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings. First, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of letters regarding the Holy Family school in Grimshaw which were written by the MLA for Dunvegan-Central Peace regarding the conduct of school officials in relation to their request for funding.

I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a consultant's report on Holy Family school in Grimshaw dated January 2011. This is the executive summary. Again, this report outlines the desperate need for the rebuilding of that school. I referred to this report in my questions earlier today.

As well, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter received from Velma Wildman of Lloydminster in which she enclosed her power bill for December 2011 in the amount of $523.78. She says, "We are now faced with the dilemma of either having a roof over our heads or food on the table but cannot afford both."

3:10

As well, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Dennis Aquin of Edmonton, who enclosed his January 2012 electricity bill of $194.47. His remark: "I am a single parent of 2 boys and keep finding it more difficult to afford the basics of living."

I'd like to also table a letter from Mercedes Allen and April Friesen of High River. They enclose a bill of $367.51, and they note: "Despite having two incomes, a few more [bills] like these, and April and I may lose our trailer."

As well, the appropriate number of copies of a letter and bills from Stanley Nykiel of Calgary. The bills are from January 2011 and 2012, showing that the increase in electricity was $71.84. He notes that people "in their ivory towers making these increase decisions have no conceptions or care how others must contend to pay such bills."

That's all for now. Thank you.

The Speaker: Nothing more? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, do you have some?

Mr. Mason: No thanks, Mr. Speaker. Not today.

The Speaker: Okay.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Hancock, Minister of Human Services, a report dated November 14, 2011, entitled Alberta Veterinary Medical Association Foreign Credential/Qualification Recognition; pursuant to the Veterinary Profession Act the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association 2011 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Lukaszuk, Minister of Education, a letter dated March 5, 2012, from Duane Plantinga, executive director, Association of Independent Schools and Colleges in Alberta, to the hon. Mr. Lukaszuk, Minister of Education, expressing concerns regarding the scope of parental rights in the proposed Education Act; memorandum dated March 2, 2012, from the Association of Independent Schools and Colleges in Alberta to its membership providing an additional update on the Education Act; and an academic paper, undated, entitled Towers, Bridges and Basements: the Constitutional and Legal Architecture of Independent Schooling, prepared by Dale Gibson.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201

Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to present Bill 201, the Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012.

Property rights have been built into our laws for the past 800 years, since the Magna Carta. The purpose of the Bill of Rights is to guarantee every citizen the right to life, personal liberty, and enjoyment of property without intrusion from anyone or any group, including the government. John Locke said it best when he wrote that all mankind, being all equal and independent, ought not to harm another in his life, his health, liberty, or possessions. Although he wrote these words 300 years ago, around the time of the Glorious Revolution, when the right of property was secured for all Englishmen, his words still ring true today. Locke understood that for a free society to flourish, the security of property is as important as your right to not be put in jail at the whim of the Crown. There is nothing that is more important when we talk about good government than preserving and protecting these rights.

While the right to life and liberty are obviously important, the right to property is the cornerstone of a prosperous society in a fully functioning democracy. Alberta farmers, ranchers, and business owners became world leaders in their different industries based on the age-old understanding that these rights would be protected by the rule of law. As a result, collectively we have been able to build a province that is one of the best places in the world to live. When the Alberta Bill of Rights was passed in 1972, it acknowledged these historic rights to the enjoyment of property and the right to not be deprived of it or any other freedom except by due process of law.

Now, the need for an exception like this for property is as obvious as it is with personal freedom. The government needs to be able to take away the freedom of convicted criminals, for example, and sometimes needs to expropriate property for projects deemed essential for the common good like a public roadway or a water reservoir. However, over the past several years we have seen this government take incremental steps to infringe upon these rights by creating legislation that removes the due process law provision. Put simply, while the criminal is entitled to his day in court, the government can write the laws in such a way that landowners are not.

In the last few years bills like 19, 24, 36, and 50 have become notorious for the controversy that they have sparked with regard to property rights. Each of the opposition parties has echoed the assertions of various property rights experts that these bills represent an unprecedented undermining of the rights of landowners. Every single one of these pieces of legislation sought to take away the checks and balances in our system and give the decision-making authority on the individual's property to cabinet. Further, each took away the opportunity from landowners to challenge these acquisitions, to seek full compensation in a fair and timely manner, now without recourse to the courts.

What this means is that people owning land or running a business on their land cannot be sure that when the next land-use framework or the next declaration for a power line comes out, their livelihoods won't be ruined without any hope for full compensation and that whether they are in the minister's favour or not might decide their fate. It isn't hard to argue that in respect to property rights Alberta has stepped back three centuries, and landowners are subject to the benevolence of cabinet. It is these types of laws that infringe on the liberty and the freedom of all Albertans and hurt the reputation of our province as being home to a free and democratic society.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, just listen to the pieces of legislation that were passed that directly infringe on the property rights of Albertans. The passing of Bill 19 let the Minister of Infrastructure freeze development on your land indefinitely with no compensation if he thought there might be a project there in the future. I am going to say that again for emphasis. Bill 19 allowed a member of this cabinet to decide that an Albertan can't even build a shed on his land indefinitely without having to go through full compensation for them.

There were many other serious problems that the government finally amended last fall, but it's outrageous that it took two years of mounting political pressure to undo problems that should never have been allowed in the first place. That's what the Bill of Rights is for, so that individuals don't have to always rely on the vigilance of the majority to ensure that no unjust laws are passed. Mr. Speaker, this was just the first piece of legislation that Alberta landowners needed to worry about.

Bill 24 hands ownership of the pore space under their land right over to the Energy minister so that he now has the power to let companies store CO₂ under their land without needing to compensate them or even ask. It is offensive enough that the government is spending almost $2 billion of taxpayers' money on unproven technology, but it is even worse that they are asking Albertans to allow carbon to be stored under their land without being fairly compensated.

Bill 36 gives the Sustainable Resource Development minister the power to revoke water licences, mineral leases, development permits, et cetera, with no guarantees of adequate compensation. It also gives him the power to tell municipalities that they will have to pass all kinds of bylaws that coincide with his grand plan for their region. This type of centralized decision-making has made it extremely difficult for landowners to invest in their property with any sort of confidence and has played a heavy hand with our municipalities, forcing them to coincide with the provincial government's plan.

Last and perhaps not least, one of the most offensive pieces of legislation that is on the books is Bill 50, which gave cabinet the power to declare a series of enormous power lines critical infrastructure, thereby enabling them to skip the independent needs assessment and begin running these monstrosities over land without even having proven that we need them.

Even after the prairie firestorm told this government to immediately repeal these pieces of legislation, this government continued to stubbornly insist there wasn't a problem. Now, I believe that most of the people who voted for these bills and who stuck with the government line about the ministerial powers being necessary did so because they genuinely trust their government to do the right thing. Maybe they even trust the minister much more than they trust a judge. But you don't write laws that give the government this kind of power just because you like government. Even here in Alberta Premiers are forced out, and even if the same party is in power for 20 or 40 years, it changes from within and not usually for the better.

3:20

Bill 201 adds a clause to the Alberta Bill of Rights to ensure that the government cannot again create legislation that makes an Albertan's right to due process of law void. It ensures that all legislation includes full, fair, and timely compensation for those affected by government legislation and recourse to the courts to determine compensation when someone feels that the government is unfair. Why do we need any courts? If we listen to the Premier and cabinet, they declare that they will put the interest of Albertans first. This is nonsensical. It's ridiculous.

These are straightforward requirements that even the government members have been extolling, especially last year when amending Bill 19. They will also, I believe, help preserve the spirit of the Bill of Rights and its attempt to protect property. The argument that the government will make, in private if not in public, will be that this creates roadblocks to implementing policies and plans or that we cannot afford full compensation for the land and property that we're taking.

Well, here's what Premier Peter Lougheed said about the elements of the Bill of Rights, including property, when he was arguing for it back on May 15, 1972.

It's certainly [not going to be convenient] for government. Every minister and every department, I know, already is concerned with it. But these reasons are the very reasons why I feel so strongly we should propose it. Because in this modern day, and in our society today in Canada, almost every facet of our life seems to be involved with government law or government regulation, so the rights of the individual needs protection from the power of the state. And the basic philosophy that I have, as a Conservative and as a Legislator is to assure that those rights of the individual – those six rights of Bill No. 1 – are protected.

As we look around the world over the last 100 years, it's still true today. The places with the most centralized power are the poorest, have the biggest environmental problems, and have the fewest freedoms for their citizens. By passing this amendment, hopefully we will not need another prairie uprising to stop encroaching bills because they are not going to be passed in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill 201 is to entrench the pillars of a free and democratic society that enjoys peace and prosperity. Let's make sure we entrench property rights into the Bill of Rights. Never in Alberta's history has it been more needed than today.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the bill.

Dr. Taft: On the bill, yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe I have 10 minutes. Is that correct?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes, 10 minutes.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Well, I was interested in the comments from the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, and actually I find this an interesting bill that upon initial reading I am inclined to support. It seems to make sense, but as I think about it, I do have some questions and some issues. I think it's worth starting by reflecting on the Bill of Rights itself, Mr. Speaker, to which this proposed Bill 201 would be an amendment. Bill 201, which we're debating right now, proposes to amend the Bill of Rights, so I think we need to of course look at the initial Bill of Rights.

I might stand to be corrected on this, but I believe the Bill of Rights in Alberta might have been the very, very, very first bill introduced by this government in probably the fall of 1972. I think that was a visionary step, a bold step, and I must reflect on how visions have gotten smaller and smaller as we watch the nature of flagship bills in subsequent governments.

Anyway, this Bill 201 proposes to add another section to the existing Bill of Rights, and it would amend section 1. I think it's worth reading section 1 of the existing Bill of Rights into the record so that we know what we're amending. It reads as follows, Mr. Speaker:

1 It is hereby recognized and declared that in Alberta there exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely:

- (a) the right of the individual to liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law;
- (b) the right of the individual to equality before the law and the protection of the law;
- (c) freedom of religion;
- (d) freedom of speech;
- (e) freedom of assembly and association;
- (f) freedom of the press.

That is the full extent of section 1.

Now, this Bill 201 would add a significant further paragraph. I'm wondering as I stand here – and I would put this question to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore or one of his colleagues – given that the existing Bill of Rights already makes it clear under 1(a) that “the right of the individual to liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law,” then what does this Bill 201 add to that? Perhaps a bit of clarity, Mr. Speaker? Perhaps a little bit more detail?

I suppose that Bill 201, as we're debating it today, would take the phrase “due process of law” which is in the existing Bill of Rights and expand it, and it would describe what that due process might entail. So what I'm interpreting here, Mr. Speaker, to quote Bill 201, is that it would entail “full, fair and timely compensation” and “right of recourse to the courts to determine the compensation payable.”

I suppose that makes some sense, Mr. Speaker. It's taking a fairly general statement in the existing Bill of Rights, and it's making it more specific. As I look at the existing Bill of Rights, I don't believe that that level of detail would be covered anywhere else, so that does make some sense to me. I'm ambivalent about overreaching, as I would say, property rights into things like, say, bills of rights, which can be taken to court or can be used or abused.

I think the obvious example that the Member for Calgary-Glenmore anticipated is that if the public interest requires something to be built – a roadway, a reservoir, whatever it might be – we can't hold the public interest entirely to ransom because one landowner maybe doesn't want to sell their two acres of land. That doesn't make sense. I'm concerned that we don't set up a system where the right to property could be abused.

I also think it opens up other debates which would be very lively in here such as the right to bear arms, which I personally don't regard as a right but other people in this Assembly, I'm speculating, would. So is that a right, or is it a privilege? Is a gun a piece of property? Sure. Therefore, if we entrench property rights, are we entrenching the right to bear arms? That's the kind of Pandora's box that I worry about when we bring forward a piece of legislation like this.

On the other hand, I'm going to tell a brief account of an experience in my constituency and in the constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona with the extraordinary right that universities had to expropriate land. In this case it's the University of Alberta, which is in my constituency. In the 1960s the University of Alberta effectively expropriated an entire neighbourhood, insisting that they needed the land and all of the buildings on it to expand because they were expanding so quickly, so many families ended up being effectively forced out of their family homes to make way for the university's expansion.

Not three weeks ago I was talking to a man, who is now a senior partner in a major law firm, and his family home was one of those that was expropriated in the 1960s by the University of Alberta. What he told me, with some bitterness in his voice, is that the university, having expropriated their family home because they urgently needed the land, never did anything, and his family home still stands there. His family was pushed out, without wanting to be, on a supposed urgent need that was never fulfilled. Forty years later his family home is still intact and used as some kind of secondary office space for the university.

3:30

There's no question that governments and public bodies can overstep reasonable bounds when it comes to expropriation. My understanding of the compensation offers from the university in the 1960s is that they were well below market value. Some of the people ended up selling their family homes below market value, not realizing that perhaps they could have taken a tougher stand.

This is a complicated issue. I think about municipal controls. What is a reasonable enjoyment by my neighbour of his property? If he wants to build a disco next door, I'm not so keen on him enjoying that. But if he has unfettered property rights, can the municipality stop him? Are we running the risk of zoning laws getting challenged? Is this the kind of thing that could end up in the Supreme Court and cause a huge series of repercussions? I would hope not.

I think we need to go and look at the roots of this bill, which, as the Member for Calgary-Glenmore put it, are essentially bills 36, 19, and 50, the ramming through of transmission lines, and the cause of that problem is pretty clearly the drastically mistaken decision taken some 12 or 14 years ago now to deregulate Alberta's electricity system. One of the effects of deregulation is that transmission capacity has to be vastly overbuilt. It used to be, Mr. Speaker, that the same companies that built the power plants built and owned the transmission and distribution lines, so they would only build sufficient transmission capacity to fit with that.

Mr. Speaker, it sounds like I'm out of time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to say a few words today about Bill 201, the Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012. I want to thank the hon. member for bringing this important matter forward for debate, and I appreciate having the opportunity to discuss it here. I also want to acknowledge the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview because he very eloquently said a number of the things that I wanted to say.

I don't think there's any doubt that every member of this House supports the idea that property rights are vital to Albertans. It's one of the most important things that we can think of. That's why we have an Alberta Bill of Rights, and that's why that Alberta Bill of Rights does acknowledge the need to protect property rights.

We live in a complicated, complex world. The Speaker earlier on today mentioned the fact that a number of us were first elected almost exactly four years ago. I was one of those people. When I reflect back on why I decided to run, one of the things that I heard very often in speaking to people in my constituency and in my former life as a small-town lawyer was their concern about the pressure on Alberta in terms of our rapid growth. We are blessed; we are very lucky to live in a place in the world that has so many natural resources, so many natural assets, but it is a challenge to manage those assets. What I heard over and over again from many clients, many constituents was the need for a plan. We need to manage the growth of the province.

I support the idea of planning, of having a framework, an infrastructure. For that reason I support a lot of the legislative initiatives that have been taken in the time that I've been here. But as I say, it's a complex world, and we need to always be conscious of the need to balance the public interest against private interests. I think that this government has been very deliberate about that. We've done our best to pay attention to the need for planning while at the same time paying attention to the need to protect private interests.

Albertans have been very vocal on this issue, and they have had a lot to say. As you know, Mr. Speaker, our Premier created a Property Rights Task Force to go out and listen to the concerns of Albertans. I was on that task force. Our marching orders were to listen, and I'm quite proud of the work that was done by that task force because we listened and we heard a lot of good things.

It is true, as the hon. member has suggested, that there were a number of people out there who said: scrap these bills. Four bills are mentioned quite often, and one of the problems that I have with scrapping the bills is that it doesn't address the issues that we in Alberta have to deal with in terms of managing and planning our growth. There's a lot of very good material in that legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a rural landowner. I live on land that my grandparents homesteaded a hundred years ago. I'm a mines and minerals owner. So I understand the concerns that are expressed, yet I believe that this government has done a very good job in balancing all of these interests. The Premier has responded to the concerns that have been expressed; it's in a report that has been made public. There is a response to that report. In fact, there is legislation in the form of Bill 6, which addresses many of those concerns.

Even though I appreciate the intent of this legislation, the hon. member's bill, I believe that Bill 6 – and I know we're not debating Bill 6 here today; we're debating Bill 201 – does what the hon. member wants to see done and even goes further. It underscores the importance of the Expropriation Act, and the Expropriation Act remains in play. It underscores the right that a person has to have an independent tribunal, a court, adjudicate on their concerns.

In fact, it even goes further and creates a property rights advocate. That advocate will actually be a part of what my department is responsible for moving forward. I very much look forward to the development of this office, and I think this is going to be a great asset. Much in the way that the Farmers' Advocate for many years has been a great asset for farmers, this property rights advocate will be somebody who can listen to concerns of Albertans, report to the Legislature, and make recommendations and suggestions and explain. One of the things that we heard on the tour of the Property Rights Task Force was that people found laws confusing and that they needed somebody to help cut through some of the complexity. That's going to be, I think, one of the great benefits of the property rights advocate.

Once again, I applaud the hon. member for his intention to emphasize the importance of property rights to Albertans, but with great respect I believe we have a Bill of Rights in place that already does that, and we have a Bill 6 that is going to go even beyond what the hon. member is proposing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on the bill.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to support my caucus colleague's bill, the property rights protection amendment to the Alberta Bill of Rights. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore has worked long and hard for the rights of Albertans. As a farmer and a rancher he knows full well about the importance of property rights. I'm proud, quite frankly, to be a landowner in Alberta, and I'm concerned about the government's record in the last few years in regard to property rights.

3:40

I support this bill, Mr. Speaker, because it is doing what should have been done a long time ago, and that is very simple. It's protecting people's rights to the courts when their land is at risk. The basics of this bill are very simple. If the government passes a law that enables it to take your land or other property, you must get full, fair, and timely compensation for it. If you're not happy with the decision, you have the right to go to the court system. To the average Albertan – and this is the average Albertan – this makes perfect sense. Of course, if someone wants to take your land, they should pay you full price. If you feel like you weren't treated fairly, you can go to the courts.

Well, quite frankly, things are a little different here in Alberta. We have to pass this private bill because the government isn't doing its job. Worse, they're the same group that is causing the problem. Now, you want to ask: how are they causing the problem? They're passing bills that put cabinet before everyone else. I believe that we as members are elected to represent, quite frankly, our constituents' views. But I believe in checks, and I believe in balances; that's what the courts are for. The bills that they have passed in the last few years – and I mean the government – including Bill 24, Bill 36, and Bill 50, put cabinet ahead of everyone else.

Now, I know my constituents in Calgary-Fish Creek don't like that, and quite frankly neither do I. It's sad that the issue of property rights seems distant and remote because for me it's very real. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I own land in Alberta, and I'm very proud of the land that we own in Alberta. This isn't just about land owned by ranchers and land owned by farmers; it's that every homeowner has a stake in this issue. The new power lines that are going through Sherwood Park are going right over an elementary school.

There is an even bigger picture here, and it's not about land, it's about civil rights. It's about your rights as a human being in Alberta. What if one day cabinet decides that you don't get recourse to the courts on free speech? The reasons given by this government, quite frankly, aren't good enough. They just want projects to move faster. It's about convenience. It's like driving through McDonald's drive-through. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Bill of Rights is there as a check on a government tempted to pass laws that make things easier for them at the expense of individuals' rights.

Here's what Premier Lougheed, someone I still admire to this day, said about it here in the House when he was introducing it back on May 15, 1972. "The Alberta Bill of Rights restricts the power of the Legislature, in terms of imposing upon individual rights and freedoms . . . It establishes a procedure that restrains government from attempting to deprive persons of fundamental rights.” Government should do something because it’s the right thing to do, quite frankly, not because it makes their job easier.

Mr. Speaker, we’ve got an election coming up soon. It’s kind of like the fixed election date. I love that bill. The only one who knows when the election is is the government, yet they want to call it the fixed election date. It would be a lot easier to be in government with all of those pesky elections that keep coming up. The Premier, as I said, promised fixed election dates. Yeah. We got a fixed election period instead. Quite frankly, as my constituents have told me at the doors as I’ve been door-knocking, it’s a pathetic decision. It insults the intelligence of Albertans.

Every time the government gets caught doing a poor job of governing, they say the same thing: trust us. Well, Mr. Speaker, trust is earned. It’s based on the past, and it’s based on relationships. You can’t have a relationship with someone that never listens, tells you you’re wrong, and pretends they were right all along when they’ve changed their mind. It’s a recipe for disaster, and that’s exactly what we’ve had over the last few years. Look at the changes in the royalty rates in the oil and gas sector. The government was warned about what would happen if they made drastic decisions. Did they listen? No. They thought they had all the answers. Any criticism was wrong, and it was sour grapes. But you know what? They went ahead and did it anyhow, and we all know what happened. The oil and gas sector fired thousands of people. The government made change after change until it was back the way it was before. Did the government at any point take responsibility? Now, that’s a good word, Mr. Speaker, responsibility. Did they ever say that they made a mistake and why it happened? Another good point. No, never. No lesson was ever learned.

The government then decided to make changes to the way land was managed and power lines were constructed in Alberta. Did they listen? No. Just the same as always. Again concerned citizens brought legitimate criticisms to the government. Again the government said: “You’re wrong, Albertans. The critics are wrong. It’s just sour grapes. You’re being afraid.” Like a stubborn mule this government dug in its heels for years, but eventually the truth won out. The government started backtracking, making changes and amendments piece by piece. It was quite a sight to see, Mr. Speaker. For years people like Keith Wilson had been called a liar and a fearmongerer for explaining about the government’s own lands. Boy, did the government ever change its tune.

Why didn’t the government get it right and make sure the laws were sound? Because, quite frankly, that’s not how they operate. Listening is not what they do; that’s what Albertans are supposed to do. It wasn’t the government that didn’t understand; it was the average Albertan. The government wasn’t wrong; you, the people, were. Well, I have a little more faith in the average Albertan than I do, quite frankly, in the government. That’s why we need this bill, to keep the government accountable. I say that I’m accountable because I listen to my constituents, and as the health critic I listen to the doctors and people in the health care profession. You know what? Because I’ve learned why I have two ears and one mouth, I have finally figured out what the priorities are for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, governments that don’t listen don’t last. I hope that this government listens to the merits of this bill from my hon. colleague and sees the right arguments at the right time, and I hope they pass Bill 201.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake on the bill.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a privilege for me to rise today in this Assembly to speak to Bill 201, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. I think I want to start out by saying that I think Alberta is the very best province to live in, to raise your family in, to work in, and to play in. Unlike the hon. member that just spoke, I absolutely believe that this is the best province and that everything positive has been happening in this province. That’s why we’re the envy of the rest of the provinces and possibly the world. That’s why we have a low unemployment rate, and we’re going to at one point in time here very shortly be short of a lot of people to fill the jobs that are available in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I own land in the province of Alberta and probably will buy more because I honestly believe that I’m fully protected to own land in this province without changing anything. She was mentioning about years of all things happening, when a small two years ago she sat on this side of the House. I have to say that it’s very, very easy for someone to say that there’s a lawyer that’s running around the province and really telling people that they’re not protected. When people pay somebody, they manage to go out and do a job, but it doesn’t mean that their opinion is right. Probably with every single bill in this Legislature, if you have two lawyers, you’ll have two opinions. There’s nobody to say whose opinion is right in this case, when you’re standing in a town hall and there’s only one lawyer and no judge.

3:50

Do we think Keith Wilson is right? I don’t, but some people do. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that we don’t have to be redundant and keep putting in more and more and changing a Bill of Rights that has been in place since, I think the hon. member over there said, 1972 and that seems to serve this province very, very well.

Mr. Speaker, I ran in politics to make sure that everyone could have the same opportunities that I had. When my children were born, I wanted them to have the same opportunities I had when I was born. I’m going to be a grandpa soon. My son and daughter-in-law are going to be having a baby in July, and I hope that that grandchild has the same rights all through its life that I feel I’ve had and the opportunities that I’ve had because I’m an Albertan. I’ve got to say that most of my adult life and all of my business life have been under the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta, and I’m very, very happy with how this province has been governed.

I believe that now, with the amendments to some of the bills that the hon. member is trying to correct in a different way, we’ve corrected and we have some of the most compensable rights there are anywhere in the country, Mr. Speaker. I think Bill 10 did that.

For those reasons I thank the hon. member for bringing the bill forward. I think he has very, very good intentions by bringing the bill forward, but I believe it’s unneeded. Therefore, I won’t be supporting the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s a privilege, as always, to rise and speak to any bill in this House. It’s the same with Bill 201, brought forward by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Glenmore.

I guess that to start discussing this bill, we have to sort of know why it’s arrived here on the legislative floor. If we look, we can go back to starting this in about 2006, when the first discussions were happening in front of the Alberta Utilities Commission, where people were expressing their dissatisfaction with the transmission line process and were having what they assumed was a full and fair hearing in that regard into the siting of our transmission lines, the effects it would have on their land, and whether there were any other ways to go about doing that.

We all know what happened out of that situation. There were allegations made that the government, in fact, had hired a private investigator to go in and look at the process, to try and derail that full and fair hearing that those citizens wanted to have in front of the Alberta Utilities Commission.

We fast-forward a little bit. The government realized: "Oh, my goodness. It is going to be a real difficult thing for us to get through all these transmission lines. Can you imagine us having to have an open and accountable process, where every landowner, every school district, every person who may or may not be affected by these power lines will have a forum to come in and explain how this transmission line is going to affect them?" The government realized this was going to be not only a difficult process but a public relations nightmare for them.

It was with that backdrop that they went on to a series of bills – 19, 24, 36, and 50 – that essentially allowed for the government to make the decisions without this need to go before the Alberta Utilities Commission, the need for a public hearing into the placement of transmission lines and to actually go through a needs-based hearing. It was in this series of bills that a great deal of power was concentrated in cabinet. In the original drafting of those four bills it centralized the decision-making power within I think it's 24 cabinet ministers that now would have the decision-making power over this.

Well, that didn't sit well with Albertans, and even more of a public relations nightmare emerged. People were concerned about this concentration of power. They were concerned over the fact that this was no longer happening in an open fashion. They were concerned about the fact that this government could now make decisions not only about a power line but, in regard to the power line, possibly make a decision about the expropriation of land without due process as well as possible compensation in that process.

I full well admit that there were some politics at play that may or may not have always represented the issue as fair-mindedly as it may be. Nevertheless, that's the backdrop. The government realized that sometimes doing things in an open, accountable way is difficult. But democracy is difficult. It's messy. Sometimes you have to make hard decisions that affect people's lives, and it's not always easy.

I appreciate the hon. Minister of Justice recognizing that there is often a battle between individual rights and the collective good. There is no doubt that governments have to make decisions sometimes in the collective good that affect individuals deeply and irrevocably and can change their interests in a family farm or change their interests in a business that they do. That shouldn't stop governments from doing it, but they should be able to do this in an open, accountable, and transparent fashion. The original drafting of bills 19, 24, 36, and 50 was to allow this to possibly not happen in this fashion.

That's sort of the backdrop. That's why we see before us Bill 201. Property rights, whether they've been protected in this province before through the Bill of Rights, as we heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview say, or through Bill 10, that the government had, and now with trying to put even more lipstick on a pig with the property rights advocate – all that series of bills is trying to restore what transpired after 2006, when the government tried to do things behind closed doors. But, hey, if we look at this bill, it stems out of that background.

I tend to agree also with the Minister of Justice that the Bill of Rights as it is drafted protects property rights inasmuch as our enjoyment of property. It doesn't say much after that. But with our Expropriation Act, if used correctly and as it's applied to all the instances when governments expropriate land and if the government doesn't go behind closed doors and do things like it was doing in bills 19, 24, 36, and 50, this should be able to be handled through the Expropriation Act.

4:00

I do also recognize the hon. member's intent in this bill and almost even more his nervousness about this government's future course. It shows where he's trying to get this into the Alberta rights act. To be fair, I applaud his efforts to highlight an issue that was very concerning to people, and it still is. It was brought up very vociferously by his party, and I believe they did a good service to the Alberta people by highlighting some of the secrecy that was going on in our transmission process. As for this, I'm not so sure if it is necessary; however, it is a good discussion piece to remind us of how we got here and how we find ourselves debating property rights because of a series of bills that tried to do things behind closed doors.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll allow someone else to take the floor.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to rise and join the debate on Bill 201, the Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. I'd first like to say that I believe that this is certainly a very good discussion to have. Across this province there is great interest amongst Albertans to ensure that property rights are adequately protected. One thing that I do know for sure is that under this government Albertans' property rights are indeed protected and that our government would never – and I emphasize never – compromise on this fundamental principle.

Private property is at the foundation of our free market economy. It provides the legal certainty that is necessary for individuals to invest their resources, and it provides and enhances confidence in markets. For example, Mr. Speaker, I can't imagine that anyone would invest in something tangible such as land if at any time that tangible asset could be seized by other individuals or, heaven forbid, by the government. That is why one of the most important roles of government is indeed that protection of private property, and this government has a very strong record of promoting and protecting these rights.

Now, looking at the bill being debated today, the right to compensation and access to the courts, according to the author of this bill, would be inserted into the Alberta Bill of Rights. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Bill of Rights stands alone in Canada as the only piece of legislation that defines certain property rights and that these rights can only be deprived under, and I emphasize again, due process of law. This illustrates the strong value that Albertans place upon property rights and the protection thereof.

Immediately after being sworn into office in September 1971, then Premier Peter Lougheed initiated the drafting of the Alberta Bill of Rights. Mr. Speaker, this was the first Bill 1 under the new PC government at that time in the spring session of the Legislature in 1972. In speaking to second reading of the bill, Premier Lougheed stated:

The Alberta Bill of Rights, proposed before this Legislature, is the first and only provincial bill of its kind in Canada.

He further stated:

What is very significant about this bill, and I think not well understood, is that under The British North America Act, clearly and distinctly, the responsibility for property and civil rights is [indeed] the responsibility of provincial government. And so, in undertaking the course that is implicit in Bill No. 1, this was again Premier Lougheed continuing, we in the government are well aware that we are striking in very new ground with a very important bill.

Mr. Speaker, Premier Lougheed clearly understood that the protection of property was the responsibility of the provincial government, and he took this responsibility very seriously in a way that no other jurisdiction had, and I submit that our government has continued that tradition to this very day.

When the Alberta Bill of Rights was passed, it clearly emphasized property rights. Section 1 of the Bill of Rights states:

1 It is hereby recognized and declared that in Alberta there exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely:

- (a) the right of the individual to liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law.

Now, Premier Lougheed fully understood that it was the responsibility of provincial governments to protect property rights. However, when we look at other jurisdictions, we see that no other Canadian province has gone nearly as far as Alberta in recognizing this provincial responsibility and protecting this fundamental right. So I think we can be very proud, Mr. Speaker, of what we have in this province today.

In looking at the legislation in other provinces, British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, P.E.I., and Newfoundland fall short of protecting any basic private property rights. Saskatchewan affirms the legal right to sell real estate. Section 10 of the Saskatchewan Bill of Rights states:

Every person and every class of persons shall enjoy the right to acquire by purchase, to own in fee simple or otherwise, to lease, rent and to occupy any lands, messuages, tenements or hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, of every nature and description,

I'm reading the legislation, Mr. Speaker. This isn't my language.

and every estate or interest therein, whether legal or equitable, and probably a good reason why we need lawyers to interpret some of these laws, Mr. Speaker.

without discrimination because of the race, creed, religion, colour or ethnic or national origin of such person or class of persons.

However, Saskatchewan's Bill of Rights lacks any statement referring to the right not to be deprived of property or any provisions to due process.

Legislation in the Maritimes, Mr. Speaker, also provides minimal private property rights.

Quebec's Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms contains a number of statements in regard to private property, but like other provinces they, too, do not go as far as Alberta in recognizing the right not to be deprived of property or contain any provision for due process.

Although the protection of property is clearly the responsibility of provinces across Canada, we see very little property rights protection in provincial legislation.

Bill 201 as proposed would extend what was accomplished in the Bill of Rights to include the rights to "full, fair and timely compensation and . . . recourse to the courts" for when the Crown acquires private property. Currently, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Bill of Rights does not specify a requirement for just compensation or for court recourse to determine the compensation payable, nor does any other legislation across Canada specify these rights. However, I would suggest that the fundamental principles of fair compensation and access to the courts are enshrined in numerous other pieces of Alberta legislation that relate to land expropriation for public use. For example, in the land assembly act we see clear provision for fair compensation and access to the courts specified under section 6.

In the Alberta Land Stewardship Act we also see fair compensation and recourse to the courts. In fact, in section 1 of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act the very first statement of the act states:

In carrying out the purposes of this Act as specified in subsection (2), the Government must and I emphasize "must," Mr. Speaker, respect the property and other rights of individuals and must not infringe on those rights except with due process of law and to the extent necessary for the overall greater public interest.

Further to this, Mr. Speaker, we see the concept of compensable taking being inserted into this act, with compensable taking defined as "the diminution or abrogation of a property right, title or interest giving rise to compensation in law or equity."

4:10

Mr. Speaker, section 19.1 of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act specifies a right to compensation for compensable taking and the process for court recourse. Although the right to compensation and access to the courts is not currently defined in the Alberta Bill of Rights, I believe it is clear that this government has gone above and beyond any other jurisdiction in ensuring that these rights are protected in statute and, in fact, in practice.

I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore for introducing this bill, and I look forward to further debate and discussion on this topic, that is so important to many Albertans. While I can appreciate the intent of this bill, I believe that the proposed wording of the Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act would not be of measurable benefit to Albertans and given the work of this government in support of compensation and access to the courts for landowners, I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I will not be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, do you wish to join in before I recognize other hon. members?

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's Bill of Rights clearly seeks to protect the rights of Albertans to the enjoyment of their property as has been stated earlier. As with all bills of rights, the freedoms enumerated are protected from government actions as much as those from any other person or group.

In the last few years certain bills like 19, 24, 36, and 50 have become notorious for the controversy they have sparked with regard to property rights. Each of the opposition parties agree with various property rights experts who say that these bills represent an unprecedented undermining of the rights of landowners. The government has claimed, first, that there was nothing to these claims. It was a bunch of fearmongering, they said. Then when they realized that these bills were so offensive to the basic rights of Albertans that the opposition was only going to increase until the election, they admitted that there needed to be some changes. So they proceeded to propose bills in each session last year that revised the compensation provisions and scope of two of the main bills, significantly in Bill 19 but not far enough in Bill 36, and we're just hearing that they are essentially going to eliminate Bill 50 but only after ramming through the power lines the bill was created to make sure happen.

Let's be clear. The government would never have touched these bills if it weren't for the advocacy of people like Keith Wilson as well as the political pressure and threat posed by the Wildrose. If there weren't a fledgling party threatening the rural Alberta seats, you can bet this issue would have been ignored. The citizens of Alberta shouldn't have to rely on that kind of coincidence for their rights to be protected. That's the kind of thing a bill of rights is for. It's there to ensure that when government wields its enormous power, individual Albertans aren't unfairly damaged by it, and if they are, they can go to a court to ensure fair compensation.

The question that arises is: if property rights are protected by the Bill of Rights, how are these laws passed in the first place, and why did it require massive political pressure to get them even partially amended? The answer is that the Bill of Rights protects property in the following list of freedoms, one that ends with an important caveat: "the right of the individual to liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law."

Now, it goes without saying that the government needs the power to deprive citizens of their freedoms in certain circumstances, such as in the case of someone who poses a danger to fellow citizens. The hallmark of a free society is that this power to restrict citizens, to take away their rights, is strictly controlled and circumscribed very specifically by laws that respect freedoms. But the shortcoming in this clause has been illuminated by the passing of the controversial bills. All the government needs to do is to write a clause in the legislation stating that it need not fully compensate landowners or that compensation is at the direction of the minister with no right of appeal, and it has satisfied what the Bill of Rights termed due process of law, that requirement that allows the government to deprive Albertans of their property.

Bills 19, 24, 36, and 50 all have versions of this included in their original manifestations. Some have been altered since then. Only in Bill 19, for example, has the sweeping discretion of the minister or cabinet been substantially amended and placed under legislation, in that case under the Expropriation Act. We believe that it was not the original intent of those who drafted the Bill of Rights for Albertans that compensation rights could so easily be compromised by a simple act of the Legislature.

In fact, Premier Lougheed was explicit about this when he brought in the Bill of Rights 40 years ago. He said that the bill was intended to restrain government. It's to empower the courts to stand up for individuals against the government. It's a check on cabinet and the legislation passed by the majority. It was always meant to protect landowners, property owners, from the majority, from the Legislature. That's why we have a Bill of Rights, to protect those groups that can't protect themselves sometimes.

Here's a quote from Premier Lougheed on what the bill is supposed to achieve.

The purpose of the Bill of Rights, therefore, is to say to the courts, "here are the fundamental freedoms we intend to protect; if we haven't done so, then you, the courts, in your interpretation – which is certainly one of the major purposes of our courts – you interpret our laws in that regard."

But as the government has made clear in the last few years, they are perfectly willing to boldly write in clauses that take away the compensation rights of landowners, and without this clause it's too easy to hide behind the due process clause, as we examined earlier.

This bill seeks to make it more difficult for any legislation to undermine the rights of Albertans intentionally or unintentionally by making clear that the due process of law must include

- (a) full, fair and timely compensation; and
- (b) right of recourse to the courts to determine the compensation payable.

The government may have the very best of intentions in granting powers to ministers to adjudicate compensation claims, but we believe that this is not a responsible way to legislate. The simplest reason, that should resonate with all MLAs, is that even if the government of today were indeed utterly fair-minded, those powers will still be in place when a less trustworthy government is in power in the future, which is why we have to protect these rights. This is why the Bill of Rights was created, so that no matter how imperfect the government of the day, whatever their ideology may be, there are protections for individuals for certain basic and fundamental freedoms that will not change with the political winds.

We believe that the right to enjoy property is one of them, and I hope that all the members of this Assembly will support this bill so that there will be much less of a concern in the future about whether legislation fails to ensure that Albertans will have a process available to them to fairly adjudicate their compensation when government decisions cause them a loss of property.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill is timely, that it is needed. There is no reason why despite the political differences of the party that this hon. member belongs to and the governing party at this time – they talk about property rights. They talk about how important those property rights are to them. Let's work on this together, make sure that we put this bill forward and agree to it, and pass it so that Albertans can feel safe and secure, as you keep saying that they should feel. If that's the case, then prove it by passing this act and strengthening Alberta's Bill of Rights.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 201, the Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. This bill would amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to state that in cases where a law authorizes the Crown to acquire private property, the landowner is entitled to full, fair, and timely compensation and the right of access to the courts to determine the compensation payable.

Although it is a relatively short bill, it raises an issue that is absolutely fundamental in our province, that being property rights. As a landowner, farmer, and rancher the matter of property rights is extremely important to me and to my constituents in Strathmore-Brooks, and I've had many conversations with many of my constituents over the last several years with regard to the matters that were being considered in a whole range of areas and how it would impact property rights and the fact that over the last number of years there has been accelerated discussion with regard to the importance of this whole matter and how it related to a range of legislation and also the ongoing development of our province.

4:20

I would like to thank the hon. member for raising this important topic in the Assembly, providing an opportunity to discuss ways of supporting and protecting this important right. As we all know, the right to enjoyment of property and to not be deprived thereof except by due process of law is enshrined in the Alberta Bill of Rights. This right was established under the leadership of Premier Peter Lougheed in 1972, as a number of our hon. colleagues have mentioned.

In fact, we are one of the very few provinces that actually have this right protected under legislation. Even the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms doesn't protect this right. As an Albertan I feel fortunate to live in a place where these rights are protected, and I know the importance of having a government in place that takes property rights very seriously.

Our government has recognized that our energy industry will continue to get stronger, and consideration of the estimates with regard to the growth of the province raises the importance of good planning for the future. We have come to accept the fact that Alberta's population will also continue to grow. We've seen rapid growth in this province over the last number of years, and the estimate is that that will continue for years to come. This is a very dynamic and exciting opportunity for our province, and in many ways we're a privileged people to live in a province that is growing so rapidly. Our province has become more diverse and more innovative as newcomers bring fresh perspectives and ideas to our province. As our government has recognized these changes, we have adapted in a responsible way to ensure that we prepare and plan for growth in the province.

Mr. Speaker, I and, I think, our government will be the first to admit that it hasn't been easy developing a legislative framework that finds the balance between supporting property rights, conservation efforts, and infrastructure planning for the future of our province. That has been, really, at the centre of a debate among Albertans for the last number of years.

I recall the dynamic discussion with people in my area, prior to being the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, with regard to decisions and procedures that were in place for planning various kinds of livestock operations and other planning as well and the challenge it was to get approvals. That over a period of time led to, I think, the significance and the importance of planning for the future while balancing the interests of landowners and also conserving important parts of the province that have significance for environmental or conservation reasons.

I think this has been an important and necessary initiative. The growth pressures that Alberta is facing and will face in coming years are complex, and a complex issue such as this requires a thoughtful and broad response that takes into account all of the factors that will play out in our future.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 201 is not that response. I do not believe that adding several lines to the Alberta Bill of Rights is an answer to the challenges that our province will come up against. I don't see any problem with the bill per se. It sends an important message, that we will protect Albertans' right to compensation and access to the courts, but in actuality these two lines cannot be effective without strong legislation backing them up.

That legislation has already been put in place by government in the form of a number of acts that have strengthened Albertans' property rights while also ensuring that we are able to plan for the future. These acts include the Expropriation Act, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and the Land Assembly Project Area Act.

Mr. Speaker, when Albertans raised concerns about some of this new legislation such as the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the Land Assembly Project Area Act, we responded in a manner that I believe has been effective and really goes further than what is covered in Bill 201. First, we amended both the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the Alberta Land Assembly Project Area Act to clarify the intention of these pieces of legislation and the rights that they provide to Albertans, including stronger rights to compensation and improved access to the courts.

We also established the Property Rights Task Force, led by the hon. Minister of Environment and Water, to consult with Albertans with regard to what their concerns are and have been with regard to property rights. I was pleased to be a member of that task force and found a very dynamic discussion with Albertans over the course of the months of January and last December. In fact, some Albertans were concerned that individual property rights were not being protected as diligently as other interests.

With the results of the consultation now available to us, our government is taking further steps to effectively deal with these matters. First, our government has committed to taking steps to improve engagement with Albertans in property rights consultations going forward. We will do so by reviewing our engagement policies and procedures to ensure that they are meaningful and responsive to people's needs.

In addition, we will continue to strengthen landowners' access to compensation by reviewing both the Expropriation Act and the Surface Rights Act and the compensation guidelines that underlie them.

Third, our government will be creating a property rights advocate office, which will help people to determine the appropriate resolution mechanisms to deal with any property issues. This advocate will act as an independent and impartial resource for Albertans to access information and guidance related to property rights. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that at every one of the meetings that I attended, these concerns relating to the type of advocate that is being proposed here were raised by landowners and Albertans. This will include information related to the three very important areas that we're discussing today: compensation, consultation, and access to the courts.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the commitments our government has made to ensure that Albertans' rights are and continue to be secure. For me, these actions and laws are the real meat and potatoes of property rights in our province. Our consultation activities, our legislation and regulations and boards that support them are what really protect Albertans' property rights, and these are important. I'm proud to be part of a government that has shown time and again that we are willing to get out and listen to what Albertans want and need and to take action on their concerns, and we will continue to do that.

Again, for me, these two lines in the Alberta Bill of Rights are an important gesture, but to truly address the issue of property rights and managing our resources for the future, we really do need to look deeper. In light of all the work that government has done to ensure that Albertans' rights to compensation and access to the courts are protected, I will not be supporting this bill. I want to thank the member for bringing it forward.

Certainly, I want to speak, Mr. Speaker, to the importance of clarification with regard to what is intended. I think the discussions that I've had with constituents over the last number of years and particularly the last eight or 10 months have raised the importance with regard to Albertans' understanding of the legalities of the law. [Mr. Doerksen's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. An honour to rise and speak to this interesting bill, Bill 201, property rights protection, one that raises, I think, some very important issues for all of us as well as Albertans who have paid attention to the issues of the last couple of years. It certainly highlighted for me the difficulty we have in trusting this government. Bill 201 is really trying to address the need for protection of landowner rights and for fair compensation and access to the courts, which is inherent in the Alberta Bill of Rights.

But for a number of reasons – and I'll go into a few of them –

this government has been so negligent in addressing these issues and so parochial and self-serving in its decision-making that many Albertans have come not to believe that there will be an honouring of the spirit of the Alberta Bill of Rights.

4:30

The government has been, I would say, this last couple of years paying the price for three areas of malfeasance: one, the failure to follow due process in some of the policy-making decisions it has made. I would point to Bill 50 as a glaring example of problems in their process, a spying scandal that resulted in an overturning of that whole process, and then a leap to a bill that is very draconian and not seriously accepted by thoughtful Albertans.

The second area of malfeasance is the recurrence of policy based not on evidence and not on public interest but on political advantage. Examples are easy to cite here as well. We've been hearing about them these last few months in this province, with intimidation and bullying of people who disagree with this government, whether it's in the health system, the education system, or elsewhere; illegal donations to this party from municipal and school board sources, other government-funded bodies that are clearly out of line but feeling the effects of a government that cannot be trusted; and the high corporate donations that this party enjoys because they continue to listen not to Albertans and not to respecting the long-term well-being of the province but to thinking more short term and acquiescing, I would say, to the large corporate interests in this province.

There are some serious issues that are inherent in any discussion of human rights and property rights. This government has simply ignored the impact of years of – instead of evidence-based policy-making, we might call it policy-based evidence-making. They like to bring in decisions that support what they want to do, an ideology of, well, if I could say so, continued power. After 41 years they've stopped thinking about the long-term interests of Alberta and Albertans. They've stopped considering individual and community well-being, and they've simply taken onto themselves the right to make decisions without, as I say, expert evidence, meaningful consultation with Albertans, and a view to the long-term interests.

I will say that I don't share the concerns of my colleague for Calgary-Glenmore, who brought the bill forward, about Bill 36. I thought the land-use framework is an important step forward. I supported it. I still think it's an important initiative. We have to get on with planning and conservation and addressing the longer term needs of this province fairly and appropriately for the long-term interests of Alberta, ensuring that we have protected waterways, that we have protected areas for industry but that we also have residential and conservation areas and wildlife habitat that will ensure the long-term well-being of this province.

I don't share the same concerns about Bill 36 that my colleagues do, but Bill 50 is a glaring example of what happens when a government decides it no longer matters about due process or about evidence, evidence of many scientists and many energy producers who have indicated repeatedly that we don't need this much infrastructure, that we don't need the north-south focus, that has been so dominant over the years because of massive coal production. We can produce more power locally with shorter transmission lines, with a backup from other resources, renewables. Natural gas should be a logical transition fuel for us. It's cheaper, it's more environmentally friendly, and it allows more local and regional production and transmission, which would not only be more cost-effective, Mr. Speaker, but more environmentally consistent with what Albertans want.

I'm intrigued by this. I think it's an important recognition that the most fundamental issue that we're dealing with here is trust. This government has lost the trust of Albertans. This is one symptom. We have had to come forward repeatedly and push this government to do the right thing and, if not, now bring forward bills and motions to try to protect the public from a very abusive and manipulative and, I would say, corrupt government, that is using not only public dollars but also corporate dollars to continue at whatever cost to sustain their power in this province.

They're going to have their reckoning, Mr. Speaker. They're going to have their reckoning in the next six weeks. We're going to see some real change in this province. I think Albertans will have a chance to see and hear more about what this government is about, and it's not the long-term public interest but many other interests involved quite apart from the long-term public interest in this administration.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased at this time to support this bill and look forward to further debate on this important principle of public trust and due process for property rights as well as civil rights.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to speak today in this Assembly on the subject of Bill 201, the Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012, being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill would be to amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to supposedly further clarify the rights of property owners. In a democratic and entrepreneurial society the Bill of Rights is a fundamental document in the legal protection of our rights. The Alberta Bill of Rights clearly states that property is one of the human rights and fundamental freedoms which all Albertans are privy to. In section 1 of the act it is written that the individual has the right to enjoyment of property. The act states that a person may not be deprived of their property without the due process of law. This right is fully recognized by the Bill of Rights, and Alberta is rather unique when it comes to such forward-thinking legislation concerning property rights.

The member's bill would add a subsection for the purposes of further clarity, stating the right to timely compensation and access to the courts. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore mentions two of the Cs, yet this government remains committed to all three of the Cs – compensation, access to the courts, and consultation – and we have acted on each of those counts.

Mr. Speaker, we know what the values of Albertans are, and we know of our deep connection to the land. Landowners expect this government to treat them with respect and within the confines of the laws that were designed to protect them. They expect to be consulted on important decisions, and this government has continued to provide them with this. Alberta legislation already requires the government to pay the fair market value price for any such compensation, as we just heard from one of the hon. members of the Assembly.

Albertans continue to have access to the courts, and this right is reflected in several pieces of existing legislation. Albertans are still living in a democratic, free society and are able to pursue their rightful interests in a court of law should it become necessary. In speaking to property rights in Bill 201, I think the hon. member can agree with me that the enjoyment of property is one of the most treasured values of Albertans, and the protection of that right already exists in Alberta legislation.

The objective of the hon. member's bill is to amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to refer to compensation and access to the courts. However, I'm sure that the hon. member would admit that Albertans and landowners, in particular, want also to be consulted on their opinions. This government knows that consultation is a crucial element in policy and legislation development. People want to be assured that government is actively lending an open and responsive ear to their concerns.

Mr. Speaker, a recent sign of this government's commitment to continued consultation with landowners has been the Property Rights Task Force. This government stands by the notion that having this ongoing conversation is important and valuable. This task force recently spent two months gathering ideas, comments, and insights from regular Albertans. It toured across all the regions of this province, visiting many communities. It was met with an outpouring of participation and involvement from those communities. Albertans had the chance to write, e-mail, call, or complete an online survey. The open-house sessions had a very strong turnout of over a thousand people.

The task force delivered its report to government on January 31, and we have taken the time to assess all the comments and suggestions that we've received from the public throughout the last two months. Since Bill 201 claims to be concerned about property rights, I'm certain that the hon. member has reviewed the findings of this important report.

4:40

The task force has heard numerous comments from Albertans, and the results of this consultation with Albertans indicate a focus on four main areas. First and foremost, they indicated that they must be actively consulted about decisions that affect them. A listening exercise such as this task force was a perfect example of how Albertans expect consultations to take place. This government will continue to consult with Albertans in the future.

Albertans want to be reassured that their access to the courts continues to exist whenever they must negotiate actions that affect them. Granted, as we have heard, access to the courts is already protected by several laws, including the Expropriation Act. Mr. Speaker, in cases where use of land is required, Albertans want to be reassured that they will receive appropriate compensation. Again, there are several laws that already exist to provide appropriate compensation for Albertans.

Since Bill 201 professes to further clarify rights, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore ought to be pleased with the clarification on property rights that this debate has produced. I'm pleased to say that this government has acted on all these points.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Albertans have expressed the need for an advocate to help them navigate through the process of seeking compensation and access to the courts and to advise them on their rights. On February 22 the government introduced legislation that will create a property rights advocate for the province. Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act, supports the government's position that Albertans must have recourse to compensation, access to the courts, and consultation.

This will be a one-stop source for people requiring information and advice and will provide them with the support that they may need to make decisions in their best interests. The advocate will share independent and unbiased information about property rights. It will assist people in exploring the various options available to them in terms of compensation and appeal, and it will help them to identify the appropriate resolution mechanism that best suits their needs. This office will report to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, and there will also be a requirement to table an annual report in the Legislature every year.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the Bill of Rights that the hon. member is proposing seems redundant to me given what this government has already accomplished in terms of property rights.

This government is in tune with the values espoused by most people in this province, a deep connection to our land and the prosperity that it brings. This government has set forth a very clear and honest process that protects the property of landowners. There is no ambiguity with these laws, and Albertans' right to the enjoyment of property is already protected in the Alberta Bill of Rights.

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons I will not be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, do you wish to join the debate on the bill?

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A good conversation and, I think, a good debate relative to an issue, a very serious issue, in fact, facing Albertans. I think that inside of this Assembly sometimes we tend to forget the very solid basic reasons to enact the types of legislation that are being discussed here today and the regulations that follow them. Unfortunately, we tend to try and take political advantage of very, very serious issues that face our province and its citizens.

We need to go back, Mr. Speaker, a moment or at least a year or 10 to kind of get an idea of why this thing started in the first place, how we started, and how we arrived at a situation where a number of Albertans, so many of our colleagues and our constituents, got quite concerned with what it was that this government was doing with respect to what we're now calling property rights but what is really the land and water, what we would consider in many cases to be public.

Mr. Speaker, we had a need, a pressing need, for planning. The province of Alberta was growing more rapidly than any other jurisdiction in the country. We've gained about a million people in a period of time of about a dozen years. In all the time that this growth has been taking place, we've been attempting to deal with this issue: a growing province, expansion of industry, tremendous expansion of industry. In some cases the expansion of industry was taking place so rapidly that our infrastructure, our population, our opportunities for the deployment of capital were really being exceeded by the pace of that growth.

We required access by industry to public land and in certain circumstances, Mr. Speaker, to private land. This brought about a circumstance where we as a government were charged with the responsibility to make sure that as this land base was being more and more pressured, as this activity ramped up, there were opportunities for us to set aside certain areas, to be certain that there was species-at-risk protection for species like caribou and grizzly bear and others. It was a real, pressing, and overriding concern of this government that Albertans were not left in a situation where the federal government, in certain circumstances having overriding opportunities here, would come and make these pieces of legislation for us. We needed to do it, we wanted to do it on behalf of Albertans.

I think that when we come to this kind of new legislation and bring amendments to legislation that we've done, we are going back and we're trying to correct things that we have done, but, Mr. Speaker, I think it comes to a point in time where Albertans really do understand that what we've done here is the best that we can do given the circumstance we're in and given the tools that we have to work with. In my riding today most of the individuals that I speak to with respect to this issue are satisfied that this government has listened, that this Premier has listened, and that we're going to move forward and totally respect the rights of the individual in this province. The right to court access, the right to compensation: those things were never in question and are not now, and with some of the work that is currently being done, they will not be in the future.

Mr. Speaker, there was an issue brought up about pore space, about the injection of carbon. I would suggest to you that Alberta was one of the very last places, most certainly one of the very last places that has the kind of energy technology and energy industry that we have in the province of Alberta, that doesn't have some sort of legislation that governs pore space ownership. Pore space ownership in almost every jurisdiction that I have had the privilege to visit and talk with relative to this issue: that's been managed many, many years ago. The pore space a mile under your feet, unfortunately, does not in most cases and will not in the province of Alberta belong to any individual. It belongs to the residents, the people of the province of Alberta. I think that is pretty common in other areas.

4:50

Also, there's a discussion, and again I go back to this thing: let's politicize everything. A member has indicated that we were being very – I don't know – aggressive, rude, bullying, overpowering with the idea that we needed to build some transmission infrastructure in this province. Mr. Speaker, I do have to say that in all the period of time that we have worked on that program – and it's been in my case eight years – there has never been, that I'm aware of, on the part of this government, most certainly on the part of the members of this government, any malice with respect to that issue at all. We did what we did with the best interests of this province and the citizens of this province in mind every step of the way.

Mr. Speaker, I will close by saying about the pieces of legislation that we put in place: do they require amendment? Could they be better? Absolutely. Will they be better under this Premier and under this government? Absolutely. They will be. I have to say, as we conclude the discussions that we're going to have here around this new private member's bill on these particular issues around the rights of individual Albertans, that we're already doing it. I'm afraid that as a member of this Legislature I will not be supporting this legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, do you wish to speak?

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to speak to Bill 201, the Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012, brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. Bill 201 claims to further clarify the rights of compensation and access to the courts in the case of expropriation as amended by the Alberta Bill of Rights with the following clauses: "full, fair and timely compensation" and the "right of recourse to the courts to determine the compensation payable."

Mr. Speaker, this bill is purported to strengthen property rights, and I believe that it is imperative that we discuss what has already been done in this matter. In November 2011 the Property Rights Task Force was created to consult with and listen to Albertans and to get a better understanding of people's concerns on property rights. As a member of that task force I attended a great number of those meetings, and I determined that in a relatively short time the task force heard from well over 1,400 Albertans, both online and in person. Participants had the full opportunity to share their opinions in writing through an online survey or to come to one of the open houses. We attended those open houses as an opportunity for us to listen. In addition, two meetings with stakeholders were held in December, and face-to-face sessions were held in January in 10 communities across Alberta to give a good geographic sampling of where people were on this particular issue.

Mr. Speaker, on January 31 the Property Rights Task Force delivered its findings to the government. It was quite clear from that report that Albertans expect careful consideration of their concerns, suggestions, and solutions, which we have done. Furthermore, the viewpoints provided by the people of this province were consistent, and we heard concerns in four key areas. Albertans told us they must be actively consulted about the decisions that affect them. They need to be reassured that they have access to courts and the ability to negotiate or to appeal actions that would affect them and their land. Thirdly, when use of the land is absolutely required, they expect fair and appropriate compensation. Finally, they've asked for an advocate to help them navigate through the process.

These points are something our government has taken very seriously, Mr. Speaker, which is why this past February we introduced Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act. Now, it is my absolute belief and the belief of my other colleagues in this government that the Property Rights Advocate Act is the correct way to go. However, Bill 201, while it is an interesting and useful document, is incomplete, and as a result I will not be supporting this particular bill.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak?

If not, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore to close the debate.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been an enlightening discussion this afternoon. I must say that the government protests far too much for property rights and then says that it's all redundant. When you look at their past actions of the last two or three years, I guess actually going back to our last Premier – he was the one who started the discussions, saying that we needed a new royalty framework and at that time breached the mineral leases in the province, with no respect to those leases that were out there.

In closing, I want to address a few of the points this government has predictably raised as an excuse to defeat this bill to strengthen property rights. The government says that they fixed Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act. To a large extent that's true. But the purpose of this bill isn't about fixing Bill 19; it's about preventing another Bill 19.

They say that they fixed Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. Well, they did improve it with Bill 10, but they didn't fix it by any means, Mr. Speaker. There was nothing in Bill 10 from last spring that gives the rights or the protections to Alberta farmers and resource holders where the cabinet uses its new draconian powers under section 11 of ALSA to rescind water licences, feedlot and dairy barn approvals, forestry permits, gravel permits, development rights, mineral leases, grazing leases, et cetera.

Yes, property rights were protected, but leases and permits and other things were not. These are forms of property that the government can take with no compensation except what the minister thinks is appropriate. They showed that with LARC, that at any time one of these plans written up by the people – they can lose their livelihood; they can lose their land – will be made useless, and they have no recourse to the courts for fair compensation.

There is no link between the cabinet's new section 11 powers under ALSA and the Expropriation Act. None. So don't tell us that there's the Expropriation Act that gives recourse to the courts because you just didn't write it into the bill. It circumvents it.

Section 15 of ALSA says that no one can make a claim for compensation to a decision-maker, which the act defines as including the Land Compensation Board. In section 17(4) ALSA trumps all other laws, including the Expropriation Act. Therefore, they have not fixed anything substantial with Bill 10, and we need more to protect Albertans, something solid. The government could still pass laws circumventing the Expropriation Act if they needed to, but they couldn't escape the need to achieve the minimum standard of compensating Albertans for property they take from them.

The other argument I've heard is that the Bill of Rights is good enough as it is. I'll repeat myself. In the last few years the due process of law clause has been openly abused by this government. They simply write in clauses saying that the minister's decisions are government policy, therefore circumventing it, and that's the key. The hon. member talked about the pressing needs for planning, required access, the fear of federal government intrusion, and they talked about the consultation on policy. This is the key issue, Mr. Speaker, and why we need to entrench Bill 201 into the property rights, because when the government passes new policy, it circumvents all of these other rights. It's just wrong.

The Justice minister had the audacity to mention Bill 6, the setting up of a property rights advocate, as if that's an answer to this amendment. Bill 6 basically sets up an ombudsman that will tell Albertans when and why they have no property rights. When the South Saskatchewan plan comes through, this person will have the unenviable job of explaining why, despite the Bill of Rights, they have no recourse to the courts, which has been revoked by ALSA. People don't want an ombudsman. They want property rights. They want a Bill of Rights to help them stand up to the government when they are being trampled on. If the government really cares about this issue, if they really mean it, if they don't want to threaten property rights in Alberta, then they should prove it and support this bill. If they don't, they are showing their true colours. They do not respect property rights. They have no intent to respect property rights.

Most important, Mr. Speaker, Bill 6 has a very slim chance of being passed before the next election is called. Therefore, again, it's just a facade. They're saying: oh, don't worry; Bill 6 is going to do it. But Albertans want and need property rights. It's the future of this province. It's the leg on which prosperity and peace stand, where a draconian government can't come in, take those mineral leases, take water leases, take a feedlot permit, and fail to compensate those individuals fully and properly. We need this amendment. I expect every person who truly believes in property rights to strengthen them by supporting this bill. Anything less than that is, again, pure corruption.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair shall now call the vote.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Anderson	Hinman	Swann
Forsyth

Against the motion:

Amery	Fritz	McQueen
Berger	Goudreau	Mitzel
Bhardwaj	Griffiths	Oberle
Blackett	Groeneveld	Olson
Calahasen	Hancock	Quest
Campbell	Hayden	Rodney
Dallas	Horner	Rogers
Danyluk	Jablonski	VanderBurg
Doerksen	Klimchuk	Vandermeer
Drysdale	Knight	Weadick
Elniski	Lindsay	Woo-Paw

Totals:	For – 4	Against – 33
---------	---------	--------------

[Motion for second reading of Bill 201 lost]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Condominium Reserve Fund Studies

502. Mr. Quest moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to improve the accuracy of condominium reserve fund assessment studies by setting and implementing standards for persons who conduct such studies at a level appropriate for the complexity of the studies.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 502. I'm proposing this motion because I believe that protecting owners of condos is of the utmost importance. Motion 502 simply urges the government to set standards for those conducting reserve fund studies on behalf of condominium corporations. I believe that by doing this, the government would decrease the likelihood of condominium owners being faced with unexpected special assessments for emergency repairs.

Ensuring the proper level of expertise for conducting condominium reserve fund studies would help reduce the chance of unexpected special assessments. Potential problems which may be missed by underqualified service providers could be caught earlier, reducing the cost of future repairs. The government, by setting standards for conducting condominium reserve fund studies, would help provide greater certainty to condo owners about the likelihood of unexpected special assessments.

Mr. Speaker, this government has implemented many initiatives, legislation, and programs necessary to protect Alberta's home and condominium owners. For instance, this government put in place the legislative framework in the Condominium Property Act and regulations for the creation and operation of any form of condominium, including residential and commercial. In the year 2000 this government put in place requirements to ensure that all condominium corporations had reserve funds able to cover depreciation of parts of common property which need to be replaced within a 25-year time frame.

This might sound a bit complicated, but in reality the principle behind it is simple. Condominiums age just like cars. You might be advised by an automotive manufacturer that certain parts need to be replaced after a certain number of kilometres or a certain period of time. For condominiums repairing or replacing something such as an elevator, the carpet in the common areas, or the boiler can also be predicted to a reasonable degree with inspection and with expert knowledge. These predictions help the condominiums plan for these future repairs and replacements both financially and in the ability to plan projects in advance instead of waiting for emergencies to occur. The changes brought in by the government in the year 2000 have brought greater certainty to owners of condominiums about the costs in our province, and that certainly provides young families or individuals buying their own property for the first time a higher level of confidence and ensures that seniors, should they choose to downsize, will not be hit by unexpected costs when on a fixed income.

The certainty that condo owners already enjoy would be improved if the government ensured expert qualifications for conducting condominium reserve fund studies, by potentially catching deteriorating property years earlier than in the current inspection regime, and by properly costing property repairs and estimating replacement timetables. Many other provinces are much more specific about the qualifications of those conducting condominium reserve fund studies than Alberta. Some restrict the service solely to professional engineers. Some include a wide range of potential service providers amongst regulated professions. Still others take a hybrid approach between Alberta's broad allowance for qualified persons to conduct reserve fund studies while also providing specific examples of qualified, regulated professionals. I believe that by setting and implementing standards for those that conduct condominium reserve fund studies at a level appropriate to the task at hand, it would help protect condo owners while allowing those appropriately qualified to work, whether on concrete high-rises or on a community of bungalows in a subdivision.

Mr. Speaker, in the decade since the Condominium Property Act regulations were put in place by the government, the proportion of homes being built as part of a condominium corporation has grown steadily. We attribute this not only to changing consumer preferences driven by cost issues but to the quality of protections Albertans enjoy under the existing act. We certainly must be looking for ways to improve our act and regulations, especially as the proportion of condominiums as part of our housing stock grows. With more condos being built every year, that means the likelihood of inexperienced, unqualified individuals performing condominium reserve fund studies could perhaps be growing as new people are drawn to the industry to service the growing number of condo corporations. Setting concrete standards for those conducting studies would prevent condominium corporations from relying on inexperienced, unqualified individuals through no fault of their own.

Motion 502 builds on the initiatives that this government had already implemented in the year 2000 with the Condominium Property Act and regulations. In my opinion, Motion 502 would enhance current efforts to expand the protection of condominium owners in our province. Whatever the outcome here today, the debate and awareness surrounding this motion will be valuable. I hope the debate will inform current efforts to improve the protection of condo owners.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this government is already doing much to protect condominium owners, but why stop at what we currently do? Condominium special assessments for emergency repairs are still all too common today. To resolve this issue will require leadership, learning from other provinces' best practices that exist, and follow-through from our government. It's impossible to avoid all special assessments for emergency repairs or to account for every eventuality, but that doesn't mean that this issue does not require our ongoing commitment. I urge all hon. members to follow this debate with interest and consider fully the advantages of making the changes proposed within.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I'd like to thank the hon. member for bringing forward this motion. Once again, we see where this government fails to act to protect people and their property, their condominium being a major asset that for many individuals is their home. They've invested a great deal of their money, hoping that this condominium protection act is going to protect them.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that as I've been door-knocking this last week, when we were at home, I've been amazed at the number of people that actually talked about the holes and the problems with the Condominium Property Act and that there was very little protection in too many areas, too many holes that are of great concern to those individuals.

I think that this is a very good motion. It's disappointing that a government member even needs to bring a motion like this forward and that there isn't an actual bill coming forward to amend the Condominium Property Act. There are a few areas here that I guess I'd like to address and maybe ask the hon. member about. I've learned quite a bit in the last year about the condominium problems in Calgary and some of the challenges faced by those owners and how they struggle to make these payments on these extraordinary emergencies that need to be upgraded.

5:20

It's interesting. I guess it goes back to the root of one of the problems. Many of these condominium builders – and I shouldn't say many but, I guess, those that aren't doing the industry any favours. There are always a few bad apples in a box, but what do we do to ensure that they get pulled out?

One of the problems that we have is that there's no real assurance when a condominium is built that it really has been built to standards. I mean, an inspector has supposedly been through there, but we don't have the actual architect or the engineer sign off and have his credibility on the line. They don't have to have homeowner's insurance, that often people can get to protect themselves.

There's a lack, Mr. Speaker, in the ability of condominium owners to feel that safeguard, knowing that due diligence has been done, that these buildings are built to spec, and also that they're not deteriorating at a faster rate. This motion, we think, is very pertinent and should be certainly considered by this government by accepting it as we go forward.

Another understanding that I have. I had a realtor approach me last week, and he said that there's a real problem, that they don't have full disclosure before the close on what the problems are in a condominium and on how big the reserve fund is. There are just lots of areas there where it's very difficult to actually get to the actual knowledge or to have them reported during the AGM and to be able to get those notes and know what has been going on in the condo meeting and to know what could be addressed. People kind of have to almost go in and make an offer and do all of that blind until the very end, before that disclosure is there.

This is an area, Mr. Speaker, that is of great concern to many people. Again, not having this information has caused a lot of hardship to a lot of condo owners in the province and just shouldn't need to be. I think this is, like I say, a very straight-forward resolution.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to improve the accuracy of condominium reserve fund assessment studies by setting and implementing standards for persons who conduct such studies at a level appropriate for the complexity of the studies.”

It’s just one of those things where we should have good reports. We should know with accuracy what the problems are and not be where all of a sudden, like I say, someone makes a lifetime investment only to find out that it’s collapsing underneath them.

Again, one of the individuals I spoke to last week bought a condominium for $390,000. His job has transferred him. He needs to go out to British Columbia. Because of the emergency assessment on his building, the value has depreciated by $100,000, and he’s not sure he can even get $290,000. Plus, he’s got a $30,000 assessment on top of that as the owner. This is just unacceptable. Yet the builder, again, seems to be able to walk away. He’s not bonded. There isn’t any detriment to the builder, and they just slough it off.

I think it’s important that we look at this and other legislation to ensure that those people that are buying condominiums know what they’re getting before they make an offer, that there is full disclosure of the minutes, of what’s going on in the associations’ meetings: what’s in the reserve, what things are deteriorating, and what’s the repair level that is going to need to be addressed?

I would like to support this motion, and I hope that other government members will as well. Perhaps we can at least pass one bit of legislation today that might secure people’s property here in the province of Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of advanced education.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise today and speak to Motion 502 as brought forward by the Member for Strathcona, and I would like to thank him for bringing this motion forward.

The purpose of Motion 502 is to encourage the government to set standards for individuals who perform condominium reserve fund studies. It would help ensure that their level of expertise corresponds with the complexity of the study being done. Additionally, this motion will make sure that condominium reserve funds hold enough capital to adequately cover major repairs and replacement of any real and personal property owned by the corporation as well as any common property that is not normally repaired or replaced annually.

Mr. Speaker, reserve fund studies and the funds themselves have been mandatory since the Condominium Property Act and regulations were introduced in 2000 and for very, very good reasons. Before this time many condominiums had rainy-day funds to cover repair costs. However, it was not mandatory. As a result, some condominium boards and owners were left short of capital when it came time to make expensive repairs and replacements. I believe that these reserve funds are vital when it comes to condominium upkeep and consumer protection. In fact, that is why legislation was passed to make this mandatory.

With respect to the reserve fund studies section 38 of the Condominium Property Act 2000 states that a corporation shall, subject to the regulations, establish and maintain a capital replacement . . . fund to be used to provide sufficient funds that can reasonably be expected to provide for major repairs and replacement[s].

The legislation also set out definitions for qualified persons in relation to reserve fund providers. A qualified person means an individual who, based on reasonable and objective criteria, is knowledgeable with respect to the depreciating property, the operation and maintenance of the depreciating property, the cost of replacement or repairs to the depreciating property.

Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that those are not the only criteria set forth regarding standards for home inspectors in our province. The Fair Trading Act as of September 1, 2011, set forth stricter requirements, and home inspectors must now be licensed by the provincial government. To qualify for a licence, inspectors must have successfully completed training from an educational institution approved by the provincial government and passed a test inspection, or they have to hold a certified master inspector or registered home inspector designation.

Determining the qualifications of home inspectors is not an issue in Alberta alone. For example, Nova Scotia’s condominium property regulations, under section 46 of their Condominium Act, have strict limits as to who is considered qualified to perform a reserve fund study. In fact, in that province the only persons qualified to prepare reserve fund studies were professional engineers licensed to practise in Nova Scotia. As well, they must have experience in costing, cost-flow forecasting, building construction, restoration, and familiarity with condominium legislation. These are relatively strict guidelines, but I think they warrant our attention when determining the direction that we will take as a province with respect to this matter.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 502 suggests that a qualified person should be held to a specific set of standards that are consistent throughout the province. In addition, it proposes the accuracy of the studies by ensuring that the provider is experienced at a level appropriate to the complexity of the study.

I believe these are all very valid points. In fact, prior to being elected, I worked in this field. It can be extremely complicated as you have a variety of types of condominiums. For example, some condominiums will have lands around them. Some of the condominium studies I’ve been associated with include paved parking lots, roadways, street lamps. They include fences and exteriors of buildings, mechanical systems. They may include common properties like entire buildings that are held for common purposes.

Mr. Speaker, the requirements for knowledge, if you’re going to try to determine what the value of the present building is, what the state of all the various systems are, and what it would take to maintain and manage them long term into the future, can be quite complicated. In fact, we used to arrive on-site with a whole group of engineers and experts that could look at various specific things like street lighting or mechanical systems.

I believe that it is very, very important that people, when they invest in a condominium, in their home, maybe the largest investment in their life, have a reason to believe that they understand the condition of that facility and the amount of funding that it will take to manage that facility long term and what the major pieces of work that could happen might be. If you were to move into a facility and then find out that it requires a brand new roof – each unit could be tens of thousands of dollars, Mr. Speaker – if there’s no reserve fund study, you could be left with that cost.

So I’m very pleased today to rise in support of Motion 502. I’d like to thank the Member for Strathcona for bringing it forward. I am pleased to support it. I would ask the other members of the House to support it. I’m interested in sitting down and hearing the remarks of my other hon. colleagues.

Thank you.

5:30

The Deputy Speaker: Is there any other hon. member wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Yes, certainly. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise and speak to this very forward-thinking motion. As the Member of the Legislative Assembly for Calgary-Buffalo I can attest to the fact that many of my constituents live in condos and, in fact, face some of the challenges that this motion seeks to address. I know that many condominiums in my area have had significant things happen or go awry and that it has taken some astute financial planning and some creative financing to get things done.

With a motion like this set up first-hand, having a qualified person to analyze the true needs of what a condo reserve fund should look like and what it should actually be funding and some of the pitfalls and pratfalls that lie ahead for people in these dwellings is very, very important. I can attest to the fact that the condominium movement is just getting started. It is a more efficient, more economically viable, and also an energy efficient use by human beings living in their community. It can provide a lot of those options that people are looking for.

But some of the stories here in Alberta recently of possibly some situations where condominium reserve funds have not been sufficiently funded have caused people great concern. It gives them a great deal of unease when moving into a condominium. What are their liabilities? What are their future outputs? What are they like?

I would be remiss, too, if I didn't take this opportunity to dovetail some of this condominium legislation with some of the proposed stuff that is allegedly coming in next spring's budget under the Minister of Municipal Affairs and his department. I will note that B.C. has had condominium protection legislation since 1997. They have done sufficiently good work there to stem off some of the problems that they've had with rogue developers and things; in particular, with the building envelope and the like. I can attest that people in my community have had cash calls of $30,000, $40,000, and upwards of $100,000 to remain in a condominium. These are people who have oftentimes spent their life savings to move into these places. To have significant condominium deficiencies arise a short time afterwards, within even a 10-year period, appears to me to be something that this government should be moving forward to in a rapid direction, if it shouldn't have been here years before.

It's something I'm looking forward to. I hope it has some teeth in it. I hope it allows for some supports for people who have been dragged under by rogue developers and shoddy construction work. I'm hopeful that the legislation will also address future challenges in this area.

I agree with the motion and will be supporting it. It speaks volumes to the future direction, the way our communities are going to be built and developed.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have here on my list the hon. members for Calgary-Buffalo, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, and Calgary-Lougheed. The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, then.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise today to speak to Motion 502 as brought forward by the hon. Member for Strathcona. I'd like to personally thank him on behalf of so many people I know who live in condos. This is indeed an honourable member. He's made some great strides in this regard. I'd like to acknowledge him for that.

Now, the motion urges the government to set standards for individuals who perform condominium reserve fund studies. By ensuring that individuals conducting the studies are amply qualified and have the level of expertise and experience appropriate given the complexity of such a study, this motion suggests that the accuracy of these studies would see significant improvement.

I've actually seen both sides of this equation. Being a condo owner myself, I've been asked to support another $25,000 for a parkade just because we didn't see it coming. I've also been on the other side, where I've been on a condo board as well. This motion addresses examples exactly like that. It proposes that a qualified person should be held to a set of specific, consistent, and province-wide standards. I know this isn't something that's just local to me or to the condo I've been associated with or to the people in my constituency; it's right across Alberta. That's why this is such an important motion.

In the long run, Mr. Speaker, the goal of the motion is to ensure that the condominium reserve funds hold enough capital to adequately cover major repairs or any replacement of property owned by the corporation and common property that's not replaced or repaired annually. We see a lot of groups getting into trouble because that is not the common practice for a lot of folks.

I would like to address particular circumstances regarding condominiums as well as the current relevant legislation as it pertains to the motion. The Condominium Property Act provides the legislative framework for the creation and operation of both residential and commercial condominiums. The act applies to anyone who develops or owns or manages condominium property, and it outlines basic rules and responsibilities for the condominium corporations. Under the purview of these corporations is the responsibility for reserve fund studies and relevant planning.

This goes back a dozen years. The Condominium Property Act and regulations were implemented back in the year 2000, and reserve fund studies were made mandatory way back then to protect the interests of condo owners. These reserve fund studies are very complex documents. I've seen them. The studies have to include a number of criteria, including an inventory of all the depreciating property that, based on regular usage, might need repairing or replacing within a quarter century; the present condition or state of repair of the depreciating property; an estimate as to when the repairs or replacements may be needed as well as the corresponding estimated costs of these anticipated repairs or replacements based on costs not less than those existing at the time of the report; and finally, the life expectancy of each component of the depreciating property once it's been repaired or replaced.

Now, I can freely admit that, like so many Albertans, I do not feel personally qualified to make these kinds of assessments, and I can understand why the hon. member is proposing that certain parameters are established to protect condo owners from people taking on this important task when they have little or no expertise. But that said, there are certain aspects of the legislation that may have a pitfall or two. It's possible that taking this kind of legislative action might introduce technicalities that work against the system rather than for it by barring potentially qualified and competent individuals from performing reserve fund assessments simply because they lack the official qualifications should the qualifications be defined too restrictively. So that's one thing we have to look out for.

I'd like to explore for the House the ways in which this type of legislation is played out in other jurisdictions which have taken slightly differing approaches to guarding against unqualified persons assuming this responsibility. For example, the Condominium Act of our friends a few provinces to the east, in Ontario, states that it's mandatory that the person conducting a reserve fund study must meet one of the following criteria, and there are a total of five:

1. Members of the Appraisal Institute of Canada [with] the designation of Accredited Appraiser Canadian Institute.
2. Persons who hold a certificate of practice within the meaning of the Architects Act.
3. Members of the Ontario Association of Certified Engineering Technicians and Technologists who are registered as certified engineering technologists under the Ontario Association of Certified Engineering Technicians and Technologists Act, 1998.
4. Members of the Real Estate Institute of Canada holding the designation of certified reserve planner.
5. Persons who hold a certificate of authorization within the meaning of the Professional Engineers Act.

5:40

Mr. Speaker, I think you get the impression. There are actually more qualifying criteria, but in the interests of time I will stop there. As you can see, the point is that while the province of Ontario thought it was appropriate to impose some restrictions on who might qualify to conduct such an assessment, it has included an array of options, making the legislation rather inclusive.

For another example we can look to our neighbouring province immediately to the east. That's, of course, Saskatchewan. Its condo property laws and regulations are found in the Condominium Property Act, that goes back to 1993, and in the condominium property regulations, which are actually a little more recent, 2001. In Saskatchewan a reserve fund study must be conducted annually and include a record of all of the fund's transactions. Moreover, the regulations from 2001 define a qualified person a bit more broadly as an individual who, based on reasonable and objective criteria, is knowledgeable with respect to one of the following:

- (i) components or a particular type of component;
- (ii) the operation and maintenance of components or a particular type of component; and
- (iii) the costs of replacement of or repairs to components or a particular type of component . . .
- (iv) a licensed applied science technologist within the meaning of The Saskatchewan Applied Science Technologists and Technicians Act;
- (v) a member of the Appraisal Institute of Canada holding the designation of Accredited Appraiser Canadian Institute;
- (vi) a person who holds a certificate of practice within the meaning of The Architects Act, 1996;
- (vii) a member of the Real Estate Institute of Canada holding the designation of Certified Reserve Planner; and
- (viii) a licensed professional engineer within the meaning of The Engineering and Geoscience Professions Act.

What's interesting about this, Mr. Speaker, is that while the Saskatchewan government has designated certain professionals as qualified to conduct this study, it has not limited those eligible strictly to professionals. This seems to have circumvented the matter that I raised earlier pertaining to the potential for this legislation to be unnecessarily and, if I may say, harmfully exclusive.

Nova Scotia, the last example, by contrast has gone the other way. Under section 77(4) of their condominium regulations the only persons qualified to prepare reserve-fund studies are professional engineers licensed to practice in Nova Scotia, with experience in costing, cost flow forecasting and building construction and restoration, and familiarity with condominium legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this government believes in supporting the rights of property owners, and it's apparent that condo owner protection could be strengthened in this area. As such, it's possible that this legislation is both useful and necessary. There are a number of variables at work here. I would suggest to colleagues that all factors be considered before deciding whether or not to support Motion 502, but with the intent and the way that we can flesh this out, I encourage all members to support this bill. I thank the hon. member once again for bringing it forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to join the debate on the motion?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Strathcona to close the debate.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The goal of Motion 502 is to reduce the number of condominium owners facing emergency special assessments. Unfortunately, this does happen. It's not rampant, but there are many cases where condo corporations have commissioned people that they obviously believe to be fully qualified to do these reserve fund studies but, unfortunately, have found out a few years later that perhaps the people weren't necessarily qualified.

I can think of one example. I believe the special assessment for the condo owners in the project I'm thinking of was $10,000 a year for three years per unit to do major work on plumbing and on the roof that should have been caught in that reserve fund study.

I think it is important that we narrow the definition of qualified persons that are able to do these studies. Having said that, I appreciate the comments from all of our colleagues here in the House this afternoon, and I urge all hon. members here today to vote in support of this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 502 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. Seeing the hour and the great work we've done today, I would ask that we now adjourn to tomorrow at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:46 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers	285
Statement by the Speaker
Member for Little Bow, 20th Anniversary of Election.....	285
Introduction of Visitors	285
Introduction of Guests	285, 295
Oral Question Period
Advocacy to Government.....	287
Judicial Inquiry into Health Services.....	287, 288
Edmonton General Continuing Care Incident.....	288, 289
Criticism of Government.....	289
Promotion of Alberta Energy Industry	290
Physician Services Agreement	290
Promotion of Alberta Oil Sands	290
Residential Construction Standards.....	291
Canadian Oil Sands Innovation Alliance.....	291
Grimshaw Holy Family School	292
Funding for Private Schools	292
Mental Health and Addictions Services.....	293
School Board Funding.....	293
Safe Communities Resource Centre	294
Administration of Elections.....	294
Land Conservation Trusts.....	295
Members' Statements
A Life in Politics	296
Saving for the Future	296
National Film Board of Canada World Premiere.....	296
Alberta Business Awards of Distinction.....	297
Donation to Olds College by Jack Anderson	297
Bonnyville Primary Care Network	297
National Social Work Week	298
Introduction of Bills
Bill 5 Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act.....	298
Tabling Returns and Reports	298
Tablings to the Clerk	299
Orders of the Day	299
Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading.....	299
Bill 201 Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012	299
Division	311
Motions Other than Government Motions.....	311
Condominium Reserve Fund Studies	311

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fifth Session

Alberta Hansard

Tuesday, March 6, 2012

Issue 12

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 27th Legislature

Fifth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Hon. Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Hon. Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader,
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Hon. Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL)
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Hon. Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Hon. Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC)
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Hon. Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, Hon. F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Hon. Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (Ind)
Stelmach, Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, Hon. George, Whitecourt-Ste. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Webber, Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 67 Alberta Liberal: 8 Wildrose: 4 New Democrat: 2 Alberta: 1 Independent: 1

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

W.J. David McNeil, Clerk	Stephanie LeBlanc, Parliamentary Counsel & Legal Research Officer	Chris Caughell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Robert H. Reynolds, QC, Law Clerk/ Director of Interparliamentary Relations	Philip Massolin, Committee Research Co-ordinator	Gordon H. Munk, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Shannon Dean, Senior Parliamentary Counsel/Director of House Services	Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms	Liz Sim, Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Health and Wellness
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Ouellette
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
MacDonald
Mason
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Dr. Taft

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Rodney
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 6, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the privilege today of introducing some department folks who've been on a tour of the Legislature. As I read their names, I would ask that they stand and at the end of the introduction be appropriately recognized by members of the Assembly. We have with us today Nicole Hartfield, Jennifer Hansen, Alex Gainer, Nikki Knudsen, Pam Chaillard, and Jeannie Gulinsky. Wherever they are, I'd ask them to stand. Give them an appropriate response.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to rise today and introduce to you and through to all members of this Assembly two bright groups of students, teachers, and parents from my constituency of Edmonton-Glenora.

From Youngstown elementary we have 17 grade 6 students joining us today along with their teacher Ms Cindy Annala and parent volunteers. They are in the public gallery, so if they could rise, please, and we could give them a warm welcome.

I also would like to introduce to you and through you, Mr. Speaker, 21 students from the grade 6 class of St. Vincent elementary school, their teacher Mrs. Angela Whelan, and parent volunteers Mrs. Charlotte Bast and Joan Hertz. I would ask them to rise to receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

I hope both these groups have a wonderful time and enjoy question period today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to make today. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 30 future leaders in our province from York academic elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Manning. The students are accompanied by their teacher Ms Strasdin and parent helper Mrs. Dean. They're all sitting in the public gallery. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly very special guests from my constituency of Edmonton-Manning: Nicola Elniski, Andrew Parker, Marion McIlwraith, Stephen Parker, Matthew Kallio, Leeroy Gentles, and Ansar Bacchus. These visitors are teachers and former students from M.E. LaZerte high school. The Member for Edmonton-Calder will be speaking more on this group in his member's statement later on today. I believe they are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. I first rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some special members of Alberta's francophone community. As our province prepares to mark the Rendez-vous de la Francophonie from March 9 to 25, it is only appropriate that we acknowledge some of the wonderful people who make up Alberta's francophone community. Earlier today I along with the hon. Speaker had the opportunity to symbolically raise the Alberta francophone flag in the rotunda of this wonderful building to kick off the Rendez-vous, which celebrates French language and cultures across Canada.

Joining us for that event and in the gallery today are representatives from the Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta: Mrs. Dolorèse Nolette, president, and Mr. Denis Perreux, executive director. Also in the gallery are a group of young adults from Francophonie jeunesse de l'Alberta, the provincial francophone youth organization that is marking a special milestone this year. Thirty years ago they helped design the wonderful Franco-Albertan flag that we raised today and in more than 25 communities across the province last Friday. Welcome to Mr. Rhéal Poirier, executive director. Finally, I want to acknowledge some staff members from my ministry's Francophone Secretariat who work to support Alberta's French-speaking community: Mr. Denis Tardif, the executive director of the Francophone Secretariat, and Kate Peters, community liaison officer. I wish these individuals une bonne célébration and ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly my second set of guests today, students and teachers from Clé Sèniore choir. I along with many members of this Assembly had the opportunity to hear these talented young adults sing in the rotunda earlier today as part of the kickoff ceremonies for the Rendez-vous de la Francophonie. After their performance the group was given a French-language tour of the Legislature and are now joining us to watch today's legislative proceedings. The Clé Sèniore choir is unique in that it is made up of francophone high school students from two different Edmonton schools, l'école Maurice-Lavallée and l'école Gabrielle-Roy. Under the tutelage of Executive Director Véronique Duquet and choral leader Marie-Josée Ouimet these young people have the opportunity to express themselves through French language music to the delight of their listeners. I now invite them to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly three guests representing the Anatolian Heritage Federation and member organizations. We had an absolutely wonderful meeting earlier this afternoon. It is my honour to welcome them, and I would ask them to please rise as I mention their names.

Sukan Alkin is president of the Anatolian Heritage Federation of Canada. The Anatolian Heritage Federation is an umbrella organization for ethnocultural institutions having ties to the geographic region of Anatolia or Asia Minor. The membership strives to promote respect and mutual understanding amongst all cultures and faiths with a goal of influencing global peace and harmony.

Also, I'd like to welcome Ahmat Tamirci, director of the Intercultural Dialogue Institute. The Intercultural Dialogue Institute, Mr. Speaker, is an Anatolian Heritage Federation member organization. It's not for profit, headquartered in Toronto, and currently operating nine chapters across Canada with two chapters in the province of Alberta.

I'd also like to welcome Ibrahim Cin, executive director, Intercultural Dialogue Institute, Edmonton chapter, formerly of Harmony Dialogue (Group). The Intercultural Dialogue Institute, Edmonton, was founded by a group of volunteers concerned about bridging the lack of knowledge and unfamiliar traditions and beliefs so that it would act as a catalyst for mutual understanding within multicultural groups.

I would now ask my guests to accept the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly. Thank you.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you my visitors who are seated in the public gallery: Mrs. Lulu Bernal, treasurer of the Council of Edmonton Filipino Associations, or CEFA; Mrs. Tina Tolvay, president of the Friends of Edmonton Millwoods Multicultural Association, or FEMMA; Miss Dory Gonzales, our constituency assistant for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Miss Gonzales was responsible for opening our constituency office when I was elected in 2008.

Most of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like all of you to join me in welcoming a special visitor, who is also seated in the public gallery. As we all know, without the help of our spouses it is impossible for all of us to do our jobs as MLAs of this Assembly. My wife of 33 years, the pillar of my family, and to borrow a phrase from a religious song, the reason why I am able to stand on mountains and walk on stormy seas, the mother of our three children and my best friend: Estrella Benito.

I would like to ask all my visitors and my wife to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Thom Elniski

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is commonly believed that to succeed in basketball you need two things, height and heart. While in my family I am visibly regarded as having the height, there was another who had the heart. I speak of my cousin Thom Elniski, who sadly passed away at age 55 in 2004.

His legacy is the difference that he made in the lives of the students at M.E. LaZerte high school. Thom was more than an educator. He was a leader, a mentor, and a fine basketball coach, to such an extent, Mr. Speaker, that to this day, eight years after his untimely death, the students and alumni play an annual basketball tournament in the Thom Elniski gymnasium at M.E. LaZerte high school. This is the first year the tournament included senior teams. Senior teams were what Thom coached best.

Thom started his teaching career in 1973 at Victoria school, but his true love was the east end, the east end kids, phys ed, and LaZerte. Thom ran the phys ed program at LaZerte in the best interests of those who were the most important to him, his students. It's very easy for a kid to get lost in a school of 1,500 students, but Thom was always undeterred. His goal in all things was to help his kids, his teams be everything that they could be.

He has been described by alumni as a father figure and as a fair, if old-school, leader. Andrew Parker, one of the alumni introduced earlier, summed Thom up very well. Thom asked him: "How do you want to be remembered? Do you want to be remembered as the guy who had all the talent, got kicked out of school, and wound up doing nothing with your life? Or do you want to be the guy who went to college, went to play pro, and had his dreams realized?"

He rewarded effort, often at the expense of results, and likely never thought that his legacy in public education would go far beyond educating and focus on helping his students learn about life. As is evidenced by the group here today in the gallery, the work of my cousin Thom continues today, eight years after his death. It was nothing spectacular or calculated, Mr. Speaker. What he did, he did naturally. It's what we call heart.

Thank you.

Judicial Inquiry into Health Services

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the Premier keeps insisting she stands by her word. That's very nice. The problem is that Albertans are wondering just which of her many words she is standing by. Is it her words during the PC leadership when she said that the health queue allegations "when combined with earlier allegations of a culture of intimidation, has provided an impetus to call for an independent inquiry?" Or is she standing by her words stated three days before the first PC leadership vote to Rick Bell at the Calgary Sun when she said that she would call a "full-blown probe to look at whether docs who spoke out against screw-ups in the health care system were intimidated"? Perhaps it was her word in question period last fall when asked about the alleged bullying of Dr. Magliocco and she told this House

I'm pleased to see that . . . if someone does have concerns with respect to doctor intimidation, they would be prepared to come to an inquiry. The legislation will be tabled in the House today to ensure that that can happen . . . physicians are going to be able to testify with protection.

Or was she standing by her word 10 days ago when asked by Don Braid at the Herald if the inquiry would include the allegations of queue-jumping and physician intimidation and the Premier answered: "It has to be."

Now, I don't know what standing by one's word means in Ottawa, Afghanistan, South Africa, or any of the other places the Premier has lived, but I do know what it means in Alberta. In Alberta standing by one's word means actually keeping your word, otherwise known as telling the truth. When you make a clear promise to hold a public inquiry into physician intimidation in order to win votes during a leadership race, that means you call that inquiry, whether it's politically convenient or not. Premier, you have broken your word and have broken the trust of Albertans. Call the public inquiry into doctor intimidation as you promised and as doctors across this province are calling for. Anything less will show just how little your words are worth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Edmonton-Mill Woods Persons Case Scholarship Winners

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, every year the Alberta government awards Persons Case scholarships to students who are studying in programs that will lead to the advancement of women or those studying in nontraditional programs for their gender. This year 315 applications were received, and 44 of them were awarded scholarships.

This scholarship was created in 1979 to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Persons Case. The scholarships honour five Alberta women – Henrietta Muir Edwards, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, Emily Murphy, and Irene Parlby – who in 1929 achieved a very significant milestone for all women. Known as the Famous Five, these women took the Persons Case issue to the British Privy Council, where it was confirmed that women in Canada were allowed to be in the Senate and, as a result, were considered persons under the law.

The Alberta government recognizes how essential it is to support the advancement of women and the enormous contributions women make to all aspects of our society. We support a number of employment programs that, like the Persons Case scholarship, assist women in pursuing nontraditional occupations. For example, the women building futures program supports women pursuing careers in the trades. We know that supporting women in reaching their full potential is critical to the success of our province.

I would like to recognize three Persons Case scholarship recipients from my constituency: Ms Tina Cowan, who is studying for her master's in family and marital therapy at Loma Linda University's Canadian campus and received a $2,000 award; Ms Mandy M. Kahlmeier, who is studying law at the University of Alberta and received a $2,000 award; and Ms Gloria Leung, who is studying for her master's in engineering management at the University of Alberta and received a $1,000 award.

Congratulations to all recipients of this year's Persons Case scholarship. In my capacity as a former minister responsible for women's issues I wish each and every one of you the very best in your education and in your future careers. You are doing outstanding work on behalf of all women and all citizens in this area, and we are all very, very proud of you.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Departing Thoughts from Grande Prairie-Smoky

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and thank individuals who were instrumental in my privileged opportunity to represent the riding of Grande Prairie-Smoky: first and foremost, my wife of 46 years, Diana, and our three supportive children along with 10 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren; next are two very special friends, Tony Yelenick and Rita Boyer, who encouraged and counselled me over these years; then, all the members of my constituency association and the voters who gave me this honour; once here, the support of staff, notably Miss Stacey Leighton, Jason Ennis, and Marie Buck; and so many others who made this job enjoyable.

The riding of Grande Prairie-Smoky and, indeed, all of our great province has made impressive forward strides under the three leaders I have served, and now our Premier Redford is poised to move us to even greater success. This government's support for agriculture, forestry, energy, and other industries has maintained a robust economy, allowing for the very solid support this government continues to provide in my riding in crucial areas of health care, education, and social services, and infrastructure development in all these areas is required and appreciated. A special achievement is the union of Grande Prairie Regional College and the new medical centre.

Mr. Speaker, I have come to understand that politics is a matter of physics: you have to move a mass through a distance, and it takes enormous, focused energy to succeed, in this case human energy provided by all the members of this Assembly. To their great credit they have moved this province forward to the enduring benefit of all Albertans. It brings to mind a sign in Mr. Royce's shop: "Whatever is rightly done, however humble, is noble."

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I must thank you for your masterful management of this House. I thank all of my colleagues, the cabinet, and the caucus in this Assembly. [applause]

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Long-term Care for Seniors

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In spring 2005 Auditor General Fred Dunn's damning report on the dismal conditions in Alberta's long-term care facilities included a warning against overmedicating residents. Enforcing Dunn's recommendations could have saved Carol Pifko, who died on May 1, 2009, after receiving several double doses of the powerful antipsychotic drug Zyprexa, which is not approved for patients suffering from dementia. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: is it government policy to overmedicate high-needs seniors with dementia into a vegetative, a potentially lethal state as a management strategy for overworked staff?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I won't dignify the tone of that question by responding specifically to the question. What I will say is that I'm aware of what has been reported in the media about this very unfortunate case. I do not yet have any facts beyond that point. I have no reason to believe that any other patients in Alberta are in danger as a result of receiving overprescribed doses of this medication, but we're certainly looking into it. This matter is also the subject of a fatality inquiry, which is under way as we speak.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, dignity is all our seniors want, and they want to be dignified.

Given that the Minister of Health and Wellness knows full well that the number of seniors in Alberta and the complexity of the care that they will need is only going to increase, why then is it the minister's strategy to put seniors into private facilities, which provide fewer hours of care with a lower level health care provider and with no on-site registered nurses?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, it is the policy of this government to build affordable continuing care spaces for all seniors and to bring the health care to them as their needs dictate, including patients who require what is currently described by the opposition as long-term care. The reality is that we have continued to fulfill our commitment to open over a thousand continuing care spaces per year to meet our goal of 5,300 spaces in total. Many of these new spaces offer the opportunity to scale up health care provided as patients' needs change over time. This is what Albertans are asking us to do, and this is what we're delivering.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I'm a doctor who still works in the system. That's the problem. The minister doesn't understand it. Minister, how many more tragic stories like those of Audry Chudyk, who nearly died in her feces and still is struggling to live, and Carol Pifko must we hear before this government abandons its grossly inadequate and inhumane long-term care scheme and builds more publicly delivered long-term care spaces?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader seems determined to continue in his practice of talking about very unfortunate specific cases in this House and extending those to a generalization and a condemnation of all care provided in our continuing care facilities. This government will not participate in that sort of a discussion. We are happy to listen to constructive ideas about how to improve continuing care across the province, but beyond that, no thank you.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Municipal Financing

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this hon. leader will continue to stand up and fight for those bullied and without a voice. Despite the government's bullying of the AUMA president, the province's municipalities have shown the courage of their convictions with an ad campaign that respectfully asks for a new funding relationship with the province. What they need is simple. They need a fix for the problem that towns and cities receive only 10 per cent of the public's tax dollars, which doesn't even count royalty dollars. They're starving for critical funding in the richest place on earth. Will the Minister of Municipal Affairs follow the lead of the Liberals and start treating municipalities as equal partners instead of children to be berated and boycotted?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I've been very clear from the beginning, from the day I was appointed, that it's very critical that we work with municipalities to build better communities. That's what this is about. The Alberta Urban Municipalities Association works very hard with us to work on MSI. It helped write the formula in 2007, and right now it delivers $900 million to municipalities in this province, unprecedented anywhere else in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was a good start, Minister. Unfortunately, it's not working.

To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will your ministry follow the lead of the Alberta Liberals, who believe local government is the best government, and provide the tools our municipalities need to survive and thrive by introducing a new deal for cities, by giving them a right to share in Alberta's wealth rather than being reduced to holding their hands out and depending on the tender mercies of a government that bullies and intimidates and picks winners and losers?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I'm very glad that the hon. member listened to the speech that I gave at the AUMA breakfast a couple of weeks ago, where I got a standing ovation from the Urban Municipalities Association, that talked about the changes to MSI funding, that talked about a new Municipal Government Act that would deal with the challenges municipalities have, that would deal with the municipal sustainability strategy to help provide municipalities with the resources they need, and a new civic charter, all four pieces that now he advocates after I released them a couple of weeks ago.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that those poor municipal leaders had to stand up and clap after his letter because they were scared of losing their grants – they had no choice – to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: now that the AUMA are standing up to this government once again, can we expect the minister to deal with this in a mature fashion and sit down with them and, hey, you knock out a deal that's going to work best for our municipal leaders and municipalities?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I met with the AUMA this morning. We met again at noon with our rural caucus colleagues – oh, they don't have any – and we talked about the challenges the AUMA has and their ad campaign going forward. There was a mutual agreement that we are going to work on MSI, we are going to work on the municipal sustainability strategy, the Municipal Government Act, and the civic charter to help address municipalities' needs. We are working together.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Judicial Inquiry into Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Doctors are not usually a noisy, complaining lot, preferring to negotiate and reach a mutual accord, one that each side can live with. Today, however, the Alberta Medical Association has taken a very aggressive, full-page ad to very loudly express its beliefs about the Premier's promise for a public inquiry that involves doctor intimidation and mismanagement. This coming just before an election should be seen by the government as a very, very ominous sign. To the minister: will the government realize that the whole world knows exactly what the Premier promised . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the ad that appeared today in the Edmonton Journal, and what I will say is what I said earlier in this House this week and last week. The government continues to be in uninterrupted negotiations with the Alberta Medical Association and Alberta Health Services toward a long-term agreement. We said when we came in here in October that we were committed to providing a stable and predictable environment for our physicians and other health care workers. To that end we've invested $93 million to support our physicians over the next year. I have a difficult time finding anyone who wants to argue with that.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is not about money, and this minister knows it's not about money. It's about improving access and quality of care in this province. That's what they're negotiating about. Why won't the government follow the Canada Health Act and negotiate with doctors instead of strong-arming them and imposing yet another evidence of their control?

Dr. Sherman: It's about respect.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, it certainly is about respect.

The $93 million that I referred to, that will further support physicians over the next year, will see primary care networks get their first funding increase since 2003. That money will go to support the addition of other health professionals to work as part of the primary care teams. It will go to support additional chronic disease management and other programs that support patients and families and communities. We know our doctors are committed to that. We're prepared to continue working with them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No funding increase for nine years, and suddenly we come up with this just before an election. Isn't that interesting?

I'll go back to the first question. To the Deputy Premier: will the government realize that the whole world knows exactly what the Premier promised and exactly how she's dancing around the promise and broaden the terms of reference for the Health Quality Council public inquiry?

Mr. Horner: The Health Quality Council presented a very good report. This government and this Premier accepted all 21 recommendations in that report. And, Mr. Speaker, we took a step further because the Health Quality Council actually said that no public inquiry into doctor intimidation was required because those resources would be better spent on other measures. The Health Quality Council report made that comment, but we went a step further. The Premier made a commitment to do a judicial inquiry into queue-jumping. That's exactly what we are doing. A promise made, a promise kept.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

2:00

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose has been very clear on taxes: no tax hikes. Period. The PC government is obviously running scared. We've obtained an ad script, which I will table, for a new taxpayer-funded government ad intending to counter the Wildrose pledge to not raise taxes. This government ad isn't about a new program or a project. It's not even a public service announcement. It's a purely political ad using Albertans' hard-earned tax dollars. To the Premier: how much are you willing to spend on these partisan ads, and will you direct the PC Party . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier has the floor.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what the hon. member is referring to because I have not seen whatever document it is that he claims to have in his possession. I'm assuming that I will see it, but I will tell you this. The Wildrose went out and did a stunt. They said: oh, sign the pledge. Well, you know what? Every cabinet minister in this Legislature has signed a pledge to a budget. I look forward to those members supporting that budget in this House because there are no tax increases in that budget.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I have a suggestion for you. Why don't you save Albertans half a million dollars by scrapping these taxpayer-funded campaign ads? Instead, you should simply sign the Wildrose pledge to not raise taxes. Period. I have it right in front of me. Save us a whole bunch of time and wasted taxpayer dollars.

Mr. Horner: Again, Mr. Speaker, every year that we do a budget, we spend dollars on informing Albertans of what is contained in that budget and what it means to their lives. Albertans want us to do that. The amount that we're spending represents roughly around 10 cents for every Albertan in the province so that we can communicate and have a two-way dialogue with Albertans because that's what they asked us to do.

As to the hon. member's pledge again I say: where is their pledge not to privatize health care; where is their pledge to actually do the things that they're not telling Albertans they're going to do? Mr. Speaker, our pledge is the budget that's before this House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He can't hear because his Q-tips are falling in. No one is talking about 2012 except for you.

Premier, it's the four years after 2012 that people are worried about. Given you won't pledge to not raise taxes if re-elected, can you at least show Albertans a little respect and intelligence and tell us how much you are planning to increase taxes? Maybe you can run some commercials about that. It would be far more informative to Albertans.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, rather than stunts and political grandstanding, what we have done is presented a three-year business plan to the Legislature in this House. We're debating that as we speak. Again, I look forward to all of those hon. members passing our budget and three-year business plan because there are no new taxes in either the budget for this year or the three-year business plan. There is a $5 billion surplus two years out. Why would you be talking about raising taxes?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Judicial Inquiry into Health Services

(continued)

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Medical Association is challenging this government. It has just published advertisements in Alberta daily newspapers saying: how sick is the Alberta health care system? It's clear that doctors have lost confidence in this government over the handling of the health system. They know what we've been saying for a long time, that you cannot trust this Tory government with our health care system. My question is to the health minister. Why has this government broken its promise to Alberta's doctors and to all Albertans to hold a full public inquiry into intimidation . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Premier has already answered this question earlier in question period today. The fact of the matter is that a commitment was made by our Premier to hold a public inquiry into queue-jumping. As we have said before, to the extent that that mandate involves allegations around physician interference, those allegations will be explored as part of the inquiry. It is an independent process, and it would be very interesting and perhaps refreshing if other hon. members would care to consider that prior to inquiring further into its proceedings.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's clear from this ad that the government has lost the confidence of the province's doctors. It says, "Alberta's doctors have been threatened and intimidated with loss of their jobs and licences to practice when they advocate on behalf of patients" and that a promised inquiry has not been forthcoming. So my question is: why has this government so mismanaged the health system as to lose the confidence of Alberta's doctors?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Medical Association is quite capable of speaking for itself, and it has done so through the ad that the hon. member has referenced.

The fact of the matter is that over the past four months this Premier and this minister of health have been working very collaboratively with Alberta's doctors to make some specific improvements in the system that they have been asking for for some time. Those include the unconditional $12 increase in primary care network funding on a per capita basis, a 2 per cent increase for all other physicians, and a commitment to ongoing negotiations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that listening to this minister, you'd think they were just on a honeymoon together, it's surprising to read in this advertisement: "While the Alberta Government may not want to hear what Alberta's doctors think, we'd like to hear what you think." How can the minister stand there with a straight face and say that he's got a great relationship with Alberta's doctors when they put this out in a newspaper and pay to contradict your propaganda?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's physicians have been without a long-term agreement since March of 2011. That eight-year agreement was many years in the making. It was the result of a lot of collaboration and discussion and vision for the future of the health care system, vision that was shared by government and Alberta's physicians. Our commitment to the next long-term agreement, which we are continuing to negotiate, is for nothing less than that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Municipal Property Tax Relief

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through no fault of their own many residents of a condo in Fort McMurray have been forced out. Regardless of who's fault it is – it's certainly not theirs, and I think the municipality would be sure that they may share part of the inspection blame – the fact is that they are still required to pay municipal property taxes on property that they can't inhabit. My question would be to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Has he been approached or would he consider action that would exempt people who are unable to inhabit their dwelling because of situations like that to be exempted from their property tax assessment?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, that's a great question. I have been asked by one individual, I think, if there was an option there. Currently we don't have a program in place that would provide such relief. We had one circumstance which had occurred, but again it was a major disaster in the province and fell under our disaster recovery program because the impact was so great to the municipality. Our sympathies are definitely with the people who resided in the condo, and we're working very diligently on four different options that will help make sure we improve the quality of construction so that this doesn't happen again.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I think we've seen through the news in the last couple of weeks that there may be other projects that were built in the boom times that may not have undergone the thorough inspection that was there. So my question or suggestion to the minister, maybe, is that rather than getting further along in a situation that then requires a solution, would the minister consider developing a policy that would deal with these situations before they arise?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I think it's worth considering, and I'm willing to discuss it with those who would represent the condo owners who are in such a situation. The condo owners have to remember as well, as do people who are in this situation, that they can still work out a solution with their municipalities at the local level to deal with the challenges they have with tax. In circumstances like the situation in Fort McMurray it's before the courts right now, and I'm sure that they're going to be looking for restitution on that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Full-day Kindergarten Programs

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During her leadership campaign the Premier promised to reintroduce full-day kindergarten within one year of forming a government. To the Minister of Education: six months later what are the results?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, that tells you something about the member's involvement. We're midstream, mid school year. I don't imagine this member actually expected us to start a kindergarten the next day. We're working right now with school boards, and we're looking at how this will be implemented. Number one, there are obvious infrastructure limitations. Some schools that are at full capacity right now will not be able to embrace a whole new grade level. The fact is that the intention is there to make full-time kindergarten available to all Albertans, and the implementation of it will be done in collaboration with school boards.

Mr. Hehr: Well, my follow-up question is: will you be introducing full-day kindergarten in September to keep the Premier's promise?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, we will be working with school boards. The government has the full intention of making kindergarten available. Obviously, that may not be possible in some areas, where the schools are already at capacity. We will be looking at infrastructure options. School boards and this government will be working to make sure that all Albertans have kindergarten, and we will be implementing it in a way that is possible and doesn't obstruct provision of education to other students in the system.

2:10

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I need some clarity. The minister appears to be answering a question without really answering it. What percentage of our schools will have kindergarten in them this upcoming September?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I can't make it any more simple, so I'll say it slower. The Premier has made a commitment that children in Alberta will have full-time kindergarten paid for by the government of Alberta. I am currently working with the school boards to implement that initiative. We will be implementing it in a phased-in way because there is the natural fact that certain schools simply can't accommodate one extra grade level. It's a matter of physics. If a school has a capacity of 200, you cannot put in more students if there are already 200 students in that school. It's something we're working through, but the commitment is there and will be delivered on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Slave Lake Disaster Recovery Contracts

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we have put in millions of dollars to rebuild Slave Lake and region. In this rebuild we offer millions of dollars in two-year interest-free and payment-free to help local companies to rebuild or start a new business, which is great. Then we put out contracts like the FireSmart program for our three communities, and these contracts have been awarded to out-of-area and out-of-province communities. Of course, my question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What gives? What process is being awarded to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister, please.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta has a $289 million recovery plan for the Slave Lake region, and I'm very proud of the work that we've done to implement that plan. The plan also includes within it the FireSmart initiatives, and the contracts were awarded through the Sustainable Resource Development department. Those awards are essentially based on a request for qualifications and then chosen by the municipality. It's a very fair, open, and transparent process.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, although it may be fair and transparent, local contractors use local labour and use local businesses, which, in turn, helps companies and people to get on their feet. These contracts should have been awarded to at least an Alberta-based company and preferably local. Why was that not considered?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me be really clear. The process in Slave Lake is a process that's the same in any other forest protection area in the province. The FireSmart contracts are awarded in the same manner any other government contract would be according to TILMA and the New West Partnership and the agreement on internal trade. It follows the rules and the guidelines in a fair, open, and transparent process that allows contractors to bid.

Ms Calahasen: TILMA, TILMA, Mr. Speaker. Then why are our Alberta contractors being refused work in B.C. when they have the capability and willingness to do the work just like the people who come from B.C. to Alberta? To the Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. If there are Alberta companies that feel that they're being unfairly treated, I'd certainly encourage them to contact my office. We have trade agreements with all the other provinces to provide a mechanism to deal with Alberta companies that might be unfairly being shut out. We've been working diligently to break down trade and labour barriers across provinces. We always support Alberta companies just like we supported the Alberta CGAs in Manitoba in a recent intervention.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Westlawn Courts Seniors' Residence

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my hand I have a two-page letter dated August 31, 2011, from Orlan Weber, president of the Pillar society that runs the seniors' Westlawn Courts. The letter states:

The building is now approximately 30 years old. There are some very expensive major repairs required [over] the next few years. Unfortunately, again, the government has done a long term condition report and has not allocated any funds for upgrades in the next several years.

Up until 2015. There's mould in the building from leaking water. The carpets are old, and our seniors have allergies. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: when can you provide funding to fix this facility for my seniors?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy if the member would send over the information. I'm not aware of that particular circumstance. We work very hard in Municipal Affairs, where we have housing as well, to partner with the local housing groups in the community. So if they have an issue, I'd be happy if they brought it forward so I could address it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, here is a letter dated September 20, 2011. We did send a letter to the previous minister, at that time of housing and urban affairs, and he states in his letter that "Ministry staff is working closely with the Society to ensure maintenance and staffing issues at Westlawn Courts . . ." How can they solve these problems when they clearly state that there is no funding? We have been working with the ministry, Minister. When will you show leadership and fix this building for these good seniors?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, this is a particular case that I don't have any information on. I haven't seen it in the briefing notes, regardless of what they'd like to counter. If they'd like to send the issue over, I would love to work on it because there is nothing more important than providing adequate housing, especially for seniors, in our communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this was the neglect that I talked about that has led to a horrifying infestation of bedbugs for my seniors and my tenants, the tenants are furious after a second round of fumigation and disruption in the lives of these vulnerable people, good people. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: when can the residents of Westlawn Courts expect their unwanted and unwelcome bedbug companions to be gone?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has just said, he would be pleased to look into this. I would be pleased to co-operate with him in that. If the hon. member opposite wishes to table the correspondence that he's presenting here today, we'd be happy to look into the matter.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary-Fort followed by, if you're ready, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Workforce Employment Services

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is the land of prosperity. Many Albertans are taking advantage of great employment opportunities to enjoy a wonderful quality of life. But there are Albertans who, through no fault of their own, find themselves in unfortunate situations and truly need assistance before they can join the workforce and support a family. My question is to the hon. Minister of Human Services. Minister, in your very large department what is your priority for servicing Albertans caught in difficult situations and who don't know where to turn?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Budget 2012 says, "Investing in People," Human Services is all about serving people. We have nearly 60 Alberta Works centres across the province, located throughout the province and there to assist Albertans who are in the circumstances that the hon. member just described, Albertans who are seeking employment, seeking advice on getting a job, those who are temporarily out of the workforce. The staff can help with career counselling, can help with resumé services, can help people get a job, can help people who are unable to work with assistance to bridge their needs in their time of need.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Cao: To the same minister: given that Alberta is not an inexpensive place to live anymore, with ever-rising costs of food, shelter, and utilities, what is the status of income assistance rates now?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, income supports are temporary measures to help people in their time of need. This year the income supports benefit rates will be going up by an average of 5 per cent to deal with the rising cost of living, and as our economy continues to improve and more people are able to find jobs, we do expect that fewer people will access income supports under the people-expected-to-work or working category. The benefits that we provide are very comparable to our neighbouring provinces.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: given that a number of my constituents' cases were not accepted as being severely handicapped for AISH but they are not able to work due to medical treatment for a serious illness, are there government programs to help these Albertans? If not, are you going to look into it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that we want to ensure is that no Albertan in need falls through the cracks. So if there's an Albertan who through medical disability or other reason cannot have work, cannot do work, they can be supported under the supports for independence program. The level of assistance will depend on each person's situation, including their financial resources, their special needs, their ability to work, the number of dependents or children in the family. Someone who has barriers to full employment or is unable to work due to illness and meets the eligibility requirements will receive those benefits.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Residential Construction Standards

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I reviewed the exchange from yesterday between myself and the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and I find his responses quite puzzling. Now, I agree and am very grateful that the work was done on Slave Lake. It was important and urgent. To the minister. The minister seems to be telling me that every staff member in the department spent all of their time and energy working on Slave Lake. Really? MSI grant administration, all the legislation drafters, library services, public safety: everyone was seconded to this file? Nobody was left? Come on, Minister.

2:20

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the dedication of the staff at Municipal Affairs to the Slave Lake issue permeated the entire staff. Many were moved to work on the Slave Lake issue, but other staff had to move in and fill the gaps. A couple of things had to be put on hold. I'm sorry the member didn't understand it. I thought I made it fairly clear.

Ms Blakeman: No. I understood it. It was just a little murky coming from you.

Well, back to the same minister. Now, given that the same laundry list that's been repeated by previous ministers even in a media release from last June, nine months ago, has the same items as the list the minister gave me yesterday – mandatory home warranty, increased fines, increasing time limits, better education for safety code officers – some fairly limited changes, clearly the department knew exactly what it was going to do. Nothing has changed in the last nine months, so why isn't it done?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, as I said before – and I'm sorry that the member didn't listen – the new home warranty program is with the legislative drafters, and it should be coming forward any time soon. I hope it comes forward before the election, but it may be after. But it's coming soon.

The changes to the Safety Codes Act, which increases the fines and limitations, is proposed for this fall. Because there are some other changes to the act that we also need to make, we'd like to do them all at once.

The Safety Codes Council is providing education training to the safety codes officers; 92 per cent of them have received or are in the process of receiving their training.

We've made excellent progress, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Blakeman: Well, we still don't have the legislation we were waiting for, and you knew exactly what you were going to be doing.

The final question to the minister: given the extensive consultation that the minister says was done, why does this list not include the protections that Albertans told us were most important, like an interest-free loan fund that home and condo owners could apply to if they were losing their homes, literally losing their homes because of additional assessments due to shoddy construction? I have one constituent that's been assessed $34,000.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether it's the provincial government's responsibility to have interest-free loans for those sorts of circumstances. Our role is to make sure that we increase the quality of the production, which we're doing from the initiatives that I've listed before. That's our role.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Parental Choice in Education

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Prior to the break we were discussing in this House the importance of choice in Alberta's education system. This importance rings very true for countless families in this province, including many in my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake that choose to home-educate their children. They can share their family values and beliefs and build a continuous learning environment in all family activities. My question is to the Minister of Education. Does this minister and this government continue to support the principle of education choice and home education?

Mr. Lukaszuk: The short answer would be an unequivocal yes. We pride ourselves in Alberta on the plethora of choice that's being offered to parents. It is one of the pillars of Alberta Education that makes our system so renowned. Not only do we want parents to have choice between a variety of schools, but we want them to have the option to home-school. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I understand the members from the Wildrose Alliance don't want to hear my answers. Should I continue?

The Speaker: Hon. members for Vermilion-Lloydminster, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, Edmonton-Strathcona, Calgary-Currie, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, and Airdrie-Chestermere, if you want to have a caucus meeting, out, please. We'll continue with the question-and-answer period.

Hon. member, continue, please.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is even worse than my grade 8 class.

My second question is to the same minister. Given that parental and family choice on topics such as religion and human sexuality is absolutely fundamental, can this minister assure all parents, home educators included, that they will still maintain the right to exempt their children from such programming?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, thank you. This is very ironic. The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, who claims to be the proponent of home-schooling and religious rights, wouldn't even care to listen to the answer.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that it's personally important to me and it's important to the Premier and to every member of this caucus that any and all rights and protections that home-schoolers enjoyed in the past continue in the future. It's a very important pillar of Alberta Education, and nothing is to change at all. [interjection]

Mrs. Leskiw: Well, we'll talk about a detention for you later.

Allow me to ask this question bluntly and without equivocation. Is there any intention at all to change any aspect of home education in this province? Yes or no?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, no. The fact is that home-schoolers are providing fabulous education to our children in Alberta. They are enjoying the protection under the law, and this protection will remain just the same.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Judicial Inquiry into Health Services (continued)

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On page 9 of today's Calgary Herald there's a full-page ad taken out by the Alberta Medical Association. There it is in black and white: "Just How Sick is Alberta's Health Care System?" In it the AMA says that the Premier's promised inquiry into physician intimidation "has been scrapped." They quote the Health Quality Council's report, which says that doctors have been threatened and intimidated. To the Premier: are you going to deny the AMA's unprecedented public rebuke from Alberta's doctors, who are advocating for their patients because of your government's destructive political meddling and poor management of our health care system? Call a full public inquiry.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I answered this question already today. In the Health Quality Council report they did discuss the fact that there was intimidation of doctors. In fact, in some of the recommendations they talk about how we can change the policies around advocacy for patients as well as advocacy for other doctors and their departments and their college. We accepted all of those recommendations. Those task forces will be coming forward.

As to the judicial inquiry, Mr. Speaker, the promise was for a queue-jumping inquiry, and that's what we're going to do.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Albertans and the AMA and the opposition will keep asking the question until they answer it. Given that the Premier's current terms of reference for the public inquiry is about as useful as a doctor saying, "We'll see every sick person in the province, but we won't treat them," when will the Premier keep her word and call a full public inquiry, where senior health officials will have to testify under oath?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly the inquiry that has been called in terms of the queue-jumping, as has been alleged in the past. You know, the opposition over there is great at alleging a whole raft of things, and then when there's no proof, they allege something else, fearmongering for Albertans on this thing.

Here's where we're going with this right now. The Premier promised a judicial inquiry on queue-jumping. We're going to have one. It has already been launched. That's where we're going, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hinman: I would call that clueless to queue-jumping. That's not what it's about. It's about doctor intimidation. Again, the Premier has clearly failed the people of Alberta by standing on her word rather than keeping her word. The cover-up, the intimidation, and the corruption are real, and they continue. Stop putting yourself and the PC Party ahead of Albertans, and call a full public inquiry, where the Premier and the previous health ministers will have to testify under oath. A full inquiry.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what our Premier said last week and what I will say again today is that the government accepts all of the findings in the report with respect to physician advocacy. We are not putting the findings in dispute. We accept them. We recognize that they are a serious problem in Alberta.

What I find most remarkable, Mr. Speaker, is the opposition's total ignorance of all of the recommendations in the report, meaningful actions that were intended to deliver results on this issue, which is important to our physicians.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

PDD Administrative Review

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year after significant delay the previous Seniors minister released a report on the administrative review of the province's persons with developmental disabilities program conducted by KPMG. This report concluded that of the $592 million then spent on PDD, $142 million, 24 per cent, went to administrative costs instead of front-line service delivery. To the Minister of Seniors. As we heard two weeks ago during the debate on the Seniors budget estimates, current administration costs remain a whopping . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm very proud of the work that our PDD regions, their chairs, and their boards do around this province. There is no doubt that one of the issues that came up with the previous minister was to do a review of administration costs. I can tell you that they are valued members, and with our service providers they do great work on behalf of Albertans. I wouldn't want to be without them.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Awfully expensive front office when front-line servers aren't looked after.

When and what is the minister going to do to ensure that a program vital to vulnerable Albertans is, in fact, sustainable? Instead of all the money in the office, how about some on the front lines?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. Again, you know, the 9,600 people that we serve under the PDD file: 46 per cent, severe disabilities; 32 per cent, severe mental disabilities; many, many with both. I'm wondering if this member feels that we're better off not serving these individuals because, I'll tell you, we'll have a debate then. You and I will have a debate. These people are valued Albertans, they're vulnerable Albertans, and I'll stand up for them.

Mr. Chase: Mr. Speaker, it is the PDD clients for whom the money should be spent, not in the offices administering the programs. What steps since the release of KPMG's report has the ministry taken to enhance efficiencies to meet clients' needs, not pencil sharpeners in offices?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it's very well known that these PDD boards and regions and their valued members do great work on behalf of Albertans. One of the things that we've said very clearly is that we must make sure that whether you live in Lethbridge or Whitecourt or High Level, the services for our clients and the outcomes are the same. These fine groups of volunteers and individuals that run these organizations are striving towards that, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Skilled Labour Shortage

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A newly formed Alberta Coalition for Action on Labour Shortages consists of more than 15 major Alberta business groups. Since a projected deficiency of 114,000 workers over the next decade represents a serious threat to the future of the economic growth of our province, my questions are to the Minister of Human Services. What is your ministry doing to more aggressively recruit the needed skilled workers locally, internationally, and from the foreign workers who are already here?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That number of 114,000 workers over the next 10 years actually comes from the projections done by our department. We're working very closely with business, industry, the building trade unions, and others in the province to project not only the requirement for trades and what's going to happen as we build this province as the economy strengthens but also looking at how we're going to attract the workers. Obviously, we need to focus on Albertans and Canadians first, helping students get the skills that they need to move into the trades, but that's not going to provide all of the people we need.

Ms Woo-Paw: Would the minister inform the House of progress your ministry is making in response to the recommendation from a government of Alberta report on the impact of temporary foreign workers that calls for the development of a mechanism to work with employers in industry sectors to advocate for Alberta's labour needs and issues?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we have been working very closely with business, industry, and the building trade unions with respect to advocacy in this area. First of all, we're looking at our own processes to make sure that we carry out our processes with respect to temporary foreign workers and the provincial nominee program as efficiently and effectively as possible, with the least amount of red tape and the least amount of problems for applicants. But we also need to work with the federal government to make sure that our programs as part of the national immigration strategy . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Woo-Paw: Perhaps you'll have another chance to expand on it.

What is your ministry doing to advocate for Alberta's industry sector employers on reforming the screening process under the temporary foreign worker program as well as improving the efficiency of the application approval process for employers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're very proud of our immigration unit in Human Services. They do excellent work. In fact, while there was a review of the provincial nominee program across the country, for which the results just came out in January, and there were some concerns raised by the federal government about areas of fraud, language, and other issues, I can categorically assure Albertans that we do not have those problems. Our program is held up as the standard in the country.

Now, there's more work that we can do, but quite frankly it's not about expanding the temporary foreign workers – we have about 64,000 temporary foreign workers in the province now – but it's about finding those people who will come and make Alberta their home.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Revenue from VLTs and Slot Machines

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Since this government quietly changed the accounting method for VLTs and slot machines in 2000, $14 billion in gross profit has been generated. These accounting changes, unfortunately, hide the fact that the government takes 30 per cent in profit from gamblers who bet at VLTs. My first question is to the Minister of Finance, who is in charge of this program. Why are cash-in, cash-out totals for VLTs and slot machines not included in the information that's publicly disclosed in the government's books?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I've answered this question several times before. We account the way the Auditor General recommended, and we're going to continue to do it that way.

Mr. MacDonald: It was the board that made the changes, not the Auditor General's office.

Again to the same minister: given that the AGLC tracks cash-in, cash-out totals for each VLT across the province, why are these cash-in, cash-out totals, which tell the truth on the real government take in profit, not included in the information that's publicly disclosed in the government's books? What, sir, are you hiding?

Mr. Liepert: The member is right. It was the board that made that decision, based on the recommendation of the Auditor General.

Mr. MacDonald: I have the audit slips for the information of the hon. minister.

When will this government start telling the truth and tell the VLT players that the government takes in profit from their bets 30 per cent, not the 8 per cent that you declare publicly in the brochures to warn them of potential gaming problems?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, if this hon. member is suggesting that the Auditor General's recommendation is not telling the truth, then I think he's got a problem because, as I said earlier, the recommendation came from the Auditor General. We followed the recommendation, and if he has a question about telling the truth, then I suggest he take it up with the Auditor General.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Family Care Clinics

Mr. Allred: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. During the leadership campaign last summer the Premier proposed family health clinics. How do you see family health clinics functioning as opposed to the present primary care networks?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Family care clinics, as they're called, are intended as an additional enhancement to primary health care delivery in Alberta. They are not a substitute for primary care networks, which have been very successful. There are over 40 of those operating in the province at the moment.

Family care clinics are, again, a team-based approach to delivery of care. They include enhanced supports that support better health for all Albertans in related sectors like mental health and addictions, housing supports, links to community organizations, and are also expected to serve as training centres for health professionals.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They seem very similar, so I would pose a further question to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Do you propose to continue the primary care networks alongside family health clinics, or do you propose at some point in time to amalgamate them into one operation?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to discontinue support for primary care networks. As a matter of fact, the government has just invested $33 million in additional support for primary care networks across the province. Family care clinics are yet another enhancement to primary care delivery options for all Albertans. As we have always said, we are interested in offering services that are unique to the needs of the communities they serve. Family care clinics will be no different.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: what are the cost implications of family care clinics, and do they fall within the 6 per cent increase that was allotted to Alberta Health Services in next year's budgets?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the government's plan is to introduce three family care clinic pilot projects across the province. These pilot projects will be evaluated by an advisory committee that includes the Alberta Medical Association, the College and Association of Registered Nurses, and representatives of other professions. The total cost of the three pilot projects is $15 million, and yes, it will be accommodated within the Alberta Health Services budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Revenue from VLTs and Slot Machines

(continued)

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to the office of the Auditor General – and this is a direct quote – the board, the AGLC, ultimately changed the accounting policy. For the Minister of Finance to try to slough this off on the office of the Auditor General is, to say the least, politically incorrect. My question again to the Minister of Finance: why does the AGLC track the cash-in, cash-out totals for each VLT across the province?

2:40

Mr. Liepert: I'll repeat again: because it was based on the recommendation of the Auditor General, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: That's not true, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. minister knows that.

Now, again to the minister: are commissions to the VLT licence holders based on cash-in, cash-out totals or on cash played versus cash won? Which is it?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the accounting of the AGLC is done based on the advice of the Auditor General.

Mr. MacDonald: I can see, Mr. Speaker, why that hon. fellow is not involved in health care anymore, and thank goodness . . .

The Speaker: Okay. Let's get on with the question.

Mr. MacDonald: My question is to the Minister of Service Alberta.

The Speaker: Okay. That concludes the question period for today. Today we've had 18 opportunities for members to raise questions. We had – let's see – 106 minus one, the last one, so 105 questions and responses in all.

We will continue with the Routine in 30 seconds from now.

Members' Statements

(continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Alberta Hospital Edmonton

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whether it's directly or through someone we know, addiction and mental illness impact us all. Alberta has been a leader in its approach to dealing with these issues. Last fall this government announced an addiction and mental health care strategy. Yesterday at Alberta Hospital Edmonton in my constituency the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness announced an investment of $40 million in several initiatives, all stemming from the strategy, that will help some of our most vulnerable populations.

By focusing on counselling and prevention and treatment services in primary health care, we will help Albertans get the care they need up front and prevent problems down the road. By enhancing the mental health care capacity building in schools initiative, we will help increase student awareness and support for mental well-being and suicide prevention. The increased support for Albertans with complex needs offers a much-needed lifeline to those who need it most. Support like outreach workers will help clients live as independently as possible in their community.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, creating four specialized mental health in-patient units with 80 beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton will provide the best possible services for patients with specialized needs whose needs cannot be met in the community.

I am proud to live in a province where we take care of our most vulnerable populations and offer treatment and prevention right in our communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Integrity in Government

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Government thugs. This government has reached the height of hypocrisy with Bill 2, the Education Act, in which it proposes to eliminate bullying at the school level. When the biggest bully in Alberta's political schoolyard proposes to eliminate its own well-documented worst practices, Albertans must realize that this is a clear-cut case of: do as I say, not as I do, or suffer the consequences.

Over the past decade 60 children have died while in the supposed care of the Alberta government while hundreds more have suffered injury and neglect. The majority of these bullied and beaten children have been First Nations. Abuse has not been eliminated; it has simply been moved from government-controlled residential schools to government-sanctioned and -subsidized residences.

Alberta provincial government bullying begins at birth for the 73,000 children currently living below the poverty line and for surviving family members does not end with their loved one's death, far too frequently precipitated by inadequate long-term care and denied the dignity of affordable, available palliative care.

Injured workers who qualify for workmen's compensation are bullied back to the unsafe workplace where they were first hurt by real threats of having their benefits reduced or cut off by case managers who receive bonuses for reducing their files. Farm workers in Alberta do not even qualify for workmen's compensation or safe workplaces. Teachers, doctors, front-line caregivers, public service employees have contracts imposed upon them by this government rather than collectively bargained.

The input of publicly elected officials, whether municipal or school board, is only considered if they've bought tickets to the Premier's fundraising dinners or to their local Tory MLA's golf tournament.

Seniors are about to be given a pre-election break on their property taxes so that they have enough money left to pay for their long-term care after this government removes the cap.

Apathy is democracy's worst enemy. On election day end the bullying. Cast your vote.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition with the first 91 signatures. This was prepared by Marilyn Marks, representing the Alberta Grandparents Association. The petition reads as follows:

To the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, in Legislature assembled:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition to the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce legislation to provide grandparents with specific rights of access to their grandchildren to enable grandparents to maintain ongoing contact with their grandchildren.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition I would like to table two documents that he referred to during question period today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a letter to the attention of Gerry LeBlanc, signed by the president of Pillar society, outlining the tenants' concerns about stains on walls and ceilings, mould, cleanliness of carpets, and allergies.

The second letter is a response from the then minister of housing and urban affairs, noting that ministry staff "is working closely with the Society to ensure maintenance and staffing issues at Westlawn Courts are resolved." That's dated September 2011.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling a further 20 e-mails, out of the hundreds I've received, from the following individuals who are seeking the preservation of the Castle wilderness, believing clear-cutting will damage the ecology, watershed, wildlife, and natural species and that it must be prohibited at all costs: Elizabeth Miller, Barbara Boettcher, Michael Haack, Jennifer Kuzmich, Ben Murray, Brent Harris, Linelle Henderson, Monique Passelac-Ross, Olivier Graham, Patricia Cameron, Anna Cairns, Kameron Weicker, Dr. Johan Lindsjo, Michael Kolman, Leanne Anderson, Elmer Wolochaty, Beverly Kunz, Laura Hessel, Louise Broderick, and Karin Nelso.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a letter addressed to myself from the Association of Independent Schools and Colleges in Alberta, representing all Christian independent and private schools, supporting and endorsing Bill 2, the Education Act, in its current form.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In question period today I asked the Deputy Premier why Albertans are paying for a political ad of the government. I wish to table the proposed script of the government partisan ad, that would be paid for by Alberta taxpayers rather than the PC Party.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I have a number of tablings today, and they're all centred around the questions that I had asked earlier. The first is an audit report for VLT ID SO5826 from the Commercial Hotel in Edmonton. This one is dated the 18th of February.

The second tabling I have is an audit ticket from the Treasure Pot Dining Lounge & H2O Lounge. The VLT ID is W06341, and it's dated the 22nd of February. I also have one from the same establishment dated the 27th of February, and it indicates the cash-in, cash-out totals that are calculated by AGLC.

2:50

I have additional audit tickets from the Commercial Hotel for VLT ID SO5826 and its cash-in, cash-out totals here as well as cash-played, cash-won.

I also have another audit ticket from the Treasure Pot Dining Lounge, this one dated the 28th of February. It gives you a cash-in, cash-out read on this VLT as well as games played, games won.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: You have the floor, hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, but I'm having difficulty with the behaviour.

The Speaker: No, no. You're talking to me.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

The Speaker: There's no behaviour problem. If you're talking to me, there's no behaviour problem.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, there still is. There still is.

The Sherlock Holmes Pub on 98th Avenue, the audit ticket for VLT ID SO6083, this one dated the 26th of February, and it again gives cash-in, cash-out totals as well as cash-played, cash-won.

Then I have another one from Elbow River Casino lounge in Calgary. It's dated the 18th of February, and it again displays cash-in, cash-out totals as well as cash-played, cash-won.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Denis, Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, responses to questions raised by Mr. MacDonald, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and Ms Notley, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, on February 13, 2012, Department of Solicitor General and Public Security, supplementary supply estimates debate.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much. Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2012-13

Education

The Deputy Chair: Before I call on the hon. Minister of Education, I would like to remind members that today is day 10 of the throne speech consideration, which pursuant to Standing Order 19(1)(c) means that the vote must be called at 5:15 p.m. today. Therefore, Committee of Supply must rise and report progress prior to that time.

Also, at that time all officials on the floor will be requested to leave as quickly as possible, and once the Assembly has voted and Government Motion 10 has been addressed, we will return to Committee of Supply to continue consideration of this department's estimates, at which time ministry officials will be welcomed back into the Assembly.

Please note that we have a total of three hours allocated for this department's estimates, and as provided for in Government Motion 6, the committee may continue its consideration past the normal adjournment hour until it is complete. This means we may well go beyond the normal adjournment hour of 6 p.m. in order to conclude this particular set of estimates debate.

I will now call upon the hon. Minister of Education to begin. I'll just remind people that we will be following the same procedure as previous estimates debates in terms of the combinations of time and the allocations thereunder.

Hon. Minister of Education, I would invite your opening remarks.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure and an honour to be here before you and before our colleagues in the committee. Joining me today in the Chamber are Deputy Minister of Alberta Education Mr. Keray Henke; Mr. Michael Walter, assistant deputy minister of strategic services; and Gene Williams, executive director of strategic financial services. Up in the gallery listening very attentively and cheering us on are Ellen Hambrook, assistant deputy minister of education program standards and assessment; George Lee, director of budget and fiscal analysis; Kenneth Poon, senior manager of corporate budgets; and Janice Schroeder, director of communications. I'd say hello to all of them.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to present the ministry's 2012-2015 budget estimates and business plan. There are five programs in the budget. Our vote estimates begin on page 63 of the estimates book. We have two primary funding streams that are important to note, the government and lottery fund estimates, totalling about $4.4 billion, or about 65 per cent of the budget, which we will be voting on later in this session; and the education property taxes, which total approximately $2 billion. Approximately $1.8 billion of this amount resides in the Alberta school foundation fund. The remaining $270 million goes to local separate school boards that choose to collect their education property taxes directly from their municipalities. These amounts are outlined on page 65 of the estimates.

Mr. Chairman, in addition, $26 million is allocated to a work-in-progress for Alberta schools alternative procurement, or ASAP, schools and $327 million . . . [interjection] Did I read something wrong?

Mr. Hehr: I was just complimenting the hon. member on his tie.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Oh. He has a very nice tie, I agree, but maybe we'll focus now on Education. We'll discuss our ties later, and life will be good.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, through the chair.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, please, you'll have your turn at the appropriate time.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Just in case anybody missed it, Mr. Chairman, in addition, $26 million is allocated to a work-in-progress for the Alberta schools alternative procurement, or ASAP, schools and $327 million for the teachers' pension plan. These nonvote amounts are outlined on page 69 of the estimates.

When you combine the $4.4 billion voted in estimates, the $2 billion in education property taxes, and the $353 million in statutory expenses, support for the K to 12 education system reaches nearly $6.8 billion and will grow to about $7.1 billion over the next three years.

Excluding capital, the ministry's operating budget, Mr. Chairman, increased – and I have to underline increased – by $216 million, or 3.5 per cent, this year; $213 million, or 3.3 per cent, the following year; and $245 million, or 3.7 per cent, in 2014-2015. As desired by Albertans, for the first time in the history of this province we have a three-year predictable budget.

The breakdown of the ministry's five programs begins on page 64. One, ministry support services, the first program in our budget, represents the corporate function of the department. This program increases by 3 per cent due to the provision of a 4 per cent salary settlement. Two, operating support for public and separate schools, the second program: the voted portion of this program is $3.8 billion. If you include the nonvote amounts from education property taxes and the statutory obligation for the teachers' pension plan, operating support to the public and separate schools increases by $198 million, or, if you wish, Mr. Chairman, 3.4 per cent, to $6.1 billion.

What does this budget provide for school boards? Well, let me tell you, Mr. Chairman. It finishes the funding commitment for the 2011-2012 school year, provides 4.54 per cent for the base instruction and class-size grants for the remaining five months of this particular school year, and provides sustainable and predictable funding. Did you hear that? Sustainable and predictable funding.

3:00

It provides grant rate increases of 1 per cent, 2 per cent, and 2 per cent for the base instruction and class size grants over the next three years. Most other grant areas will see a 2 per cent increase. It addresses enrolment growth and cost-of-living increases. Enrolment is expected to increase by approximately 1.5 per cent, or about 8,300 new students, plus we expect a 10 per cent increase in the number of students that will require English as a second language programs, a 3 per cent increase in FMNI population, and an 8 per cent increase in early childhood services, children with disabilities.

Also, Mr. Chairman, it introduces a new inclusive education grant that provides $68 million, an increase in funding. This is the first step in implementing a new funding model that supports inclusive practices in schools across Alberta, and it ensures that boards have the flexibility to support the unique needs of every learner in their classrooms. Funding will be used to provide the supports and services that parents and teachers identify as most beneficial to students, including instructional supports and assistive technologies. School boards will continue to have the flexibility to meet their local needs, including enhancing the availability of supports such as speech-language and physical and occupational therapies.

There is a new way of calculating and allocating funding based on many different factors. What's important here, Mr. Chairman, is that this transitional year every board will see a funding increase. Going forward, we'll see how this new model works and whether we need to make changes.

Supports for rural schools is a significant feature of this year's budget. We upped our support through a couple of funding areas. The new equity of opportunity continues last fall's $107 million funding addition by focusing on supporting equitable access for students. The new grant has three components, the first one being a per-student component of $156 for all boards; second, a component that addresses distance funding; the last, a component that helps remote communities.

Student transportation funding also increased, Mr. Chairman, by $14 million, and some of this was specifically to help rural communities. In addition to providing a 2 per cent grant rate increase for transportation, grants enhanced funding in other transportation areas. The fuel price contingency program, which provides funding whenever the diesel fuel price is above 60 cents, will continue. We're expecting co-operative transportation funding to urban boards to encourage more efficient busing; in other words, fewer buses following each other through the neighbourhoods and shorter rides for children on buses.

We're addressing declining rural populations, special transportation for students with disabilities, and interschool transportation so that students can be transported to other schools if courses are not being offered in the school of their neighbourhood. As mentioned in the 10-point plan for education, Mr. Chairman, we are conducting two transportation trials aimed at reducing bus ride times and enhancing the educational experience of students on a bus by making Wi-Fi available.

Other provincial initiatives that support students continue: $48 million for the student health initiative to increase student access to specialized support services such as speech-language pathology or audiologists; $232 million for the small class size initiative; $41 million for the Alberta initiative for school improvement grant to support local projects that help improve students' learning. Funding was reduced in last year's budget. This year's grant remains at the reduced level plus a 2 per cent grant rate increase.

Funding for plant operations and maintenance of school buildings increases to $482 million, providing school boards with a 2 per cent grant increase.

As was previously mentioned, the government provided $327 million to the teacher's pension plan, an increase of $27 million, or 9 per cent. This increase is attributable to more teachers in the system and higher teacher salaries. An additional $447 million will also be provided by Alberta Finance and Enterprise for service earned before 1992, which saves teachers approximately 3 per cent of their salary. In total, government support for the teachers' pension plan reaches $774 million under Budget 2012.

Transparency and accountability are also very important. To increase transparency, we have posted detailed information about the performance and funding for school authorities.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. minister.

We will now go to the opposition members, who have one hour to go back and forth with the Minister of Education as they wish. We'll begin with the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: If we can just go back and forth, hon. minister, would that be all right with you?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Actually, just in lumps.

Mr. Hehr: Well, there we go.

The Deputy Chair: Agreed. Proceed.

Mr. Hehr: If we could sort of take up where I left off in question period in regards to the Premier's promise to fully fund kindergarten within one year of her coming to office, what are your ministry's plans in that regard? What is the money allocated for this? How many additional schools will need this? I guess you could get me some background. How many schools are currently getting kindergarten, and how many will need to be addressed in the upcoming school year or school years following if we're going to see this done?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, maybe I can answer those questions by completing what I intended to say because it talks about transparency and funding and also school facilities, which, as I mentioned in question period, are important.

To increase transparency, we have posted detailed information about performance and funding of school boards. This includes information sheets that identify trustees, student demographics, capital planning priorities, number of schools and teaching staff, operating budgets, and accumulated surpluses. There's also information about high school completion performance and provincial assessment programs and parental involvement. As was requested by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo – that would be you, hon. member – last year during budget estimates, we are now posting detailed funding information for every school board so Albertans know exactly how their tax dollars are being invested in education. So congratulations, hon. member.

Our third program is school facilities, which ties into kindergartens. Three hundred and sixty-two million dollars is supporting the construction of 45 new schools and 31 major renovation projects. That's part of the $1 billion investment in school infrastructure over the next three years.

September will see 14 new schools opening their doors to more than 10,000 students. This funding includes $96 million for infrastructure maintenance and renewal for existing school facilities. The government recognizes that communities change, and some need new or bigger schools. While Budget 2012 does not include new funding for new schools or modernization projects, we will continue to explore alternative methods of funding new schools and infrastructure.

Mr. Chairman, our fourth program, basic education, increases to $97 million. This increase is related to the government's commitment to increase bandwidth to school jurisdictions to access the SuperNet. Increasing bandwidth allows students to access media-rich content.

Ms Notley: Mr. Chair, a point of order.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, a point of order from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Citation?

Point of Order Clarification

Ms Notley: I'm sorry. I'm going to have to wing it a bit. The point of order is this. We have a very limited amount of time to ask questions of the minister. Specific questions were asked by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. The minister has been speaking now for about four minutes. He's not yet gotten to the questions specifically asked by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. So I would ask, moving forward, that there is more attention paid and a direction given to the minister to respond to the question.

The Deputy Chair: You're just seeking some clarification, and the clarification is this. They have one hour. They've agreed to go back and forth between themselves. They can speak on whatever is permitted under that particular agreement.

Ms Notley: Mr. Chair, I'm not talking about time.

The Deputy Chair: We will continue and let the minister finish. I'm sure he'll be brief.

Ms Notley: Could he answer the question, Mr. Chair? Could you direct the minister to answer the question?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, please. We've been in this House long enough to know how these rules work. The Minister of Education has the floor, and he will use it appropriately, I'm sure.

Hon. Minister of Education, please proceed.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thought we were to discuss the Education budget, and that's exactly what I was talking about.

The Deputy Chair: Merely a point of clarification. There is no point of order here.

3:10

Debate Continued

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Also, I know the member asked a number of questions during question period, so I'll address them right now, and then we'll go to more specific questions about accredited government schools. The government continues to support educational choice whether through public, separate, francophone, charter, private, or home-schooling. Our commitment to choice has helped make education, as you know, one of the best in the world.

This year's support to accredited private schools increases by $7.8 million to $192 million. This represents less than 3 per cent of what we spend on education, less than 3 per cent. For the 2012-2013 school year accredited funded private schools receive the same grant rate increases as public school boards, but it should be noted that they do not receive every grant that is allocated. More specifically to the member's question, the budget foresees $306 million in total, which breaks down as $161.6 million as base and together with ECS $306 million total.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Well, I asked about kindergarten, and I asked how much money your ministry expects it will take to roll out kindergarten in all our schools across the province. How much is allocated in this budget to kindergarten, and will we see kindergarten in every school system at schools out there in our province?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I attempted to answer that question already in question period, so let me try to elaborate here with having a little bit more time. This ministry has made a commitment through the Premier and myself that we will be implementing and making available full-time kindergarten to children throughout the province. The fact is that in order to roll out this particular program, one of the predicaments is simply space, infrastructure. When you have a school – and this member would know, being in Calgary – that is at 100 per cent capacity, adding an extra grade level to that school is physically impossible.

We are working right now with school boards on how we are going to unveil, unroll this program throughout the province to create this option for children as their parents desire to enrol them into this program. It is obvious that you just can't flick a switch and make it available September 2012. It simply cannot happen for all children, at least not in all schools. So in collaboration with school boards we will be looking at where it is possible now and how we are going to unroll it over a period of time.

The commitment remains that we will make kindergarten available to children throughout Alberta. We're also discussing the issue of choice because, as you know, not all parents may want to enrol their children in kindergarten, so we're looking at those numbers.

The number that I was initially tossing around – and it's not a guess; it's a guesstimate – was that if all children who are currently not in kindergarten were to enrol in a full-time kindergarten, it would be somewhere around $200 million, but that will not be required for September 2012, so it's not in this budget. We will look at the figures as we unroll it progressively throughout the province.

Mr. Hehr: Well, if you say $200 million is needed to provide this service throughout the entire system, how much is allocated right now from your government's numbers to funding kindergarten? If you guys have those numbers in front of you, I'd appreciate your getting those to the minister so he can inform me how much money in this budget is currently allocated towards kindergarten and getting this up and running.

Mr. Lukaszuk: In this current budget there is $306 million dedicated for provision of early childhood services, and that will suffice for enrolment as it is planned right now.

Mr. Hehr: Three hundred and six million. But I'm asking for kindergarten. Can you guys break it down specifically to kindergarten?

Mr. Lukaszuk: That is kindergarten, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hehr: Three hundred and six million.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Correct.

Mr. Hehr: And you estimate it's going to take another $200 million to get this up and running throughout the whole system because $306 million doesn't provide kindergarten anywhere near in the shape or form promised by the Premier. How much, then, does your ministry estimate extra from the $306 million it would take?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated earlier, providing that every parent would want to enrol their child in a kindergarten, above what we're currently spending, I am estimating that the cost would be approximately $200 million additional.

Mr. Hehr: Additional. That's a significant shortfall in this year's budget if we were to be able to fulfill the Premier's promise. Is that fair?

Mr. Lukaszuk: We're getting lost somewhere here, Mr. Chairman. As I said earlier, implementation of full-time kindergarten everywhere simply cannot happen in the fall of 2012. There simply isn't enough space capacity in many of the schools. Yes, many schools would be able to implement it because they have excess space and they could embrace an extra grade, being kindergarten, in their schools. Many schools simply won't. I can tell you that in my riding I don't believe any elementary school would be able to actually fit in an extra grade level because they are at maximum.

So as we unroll it over a period of time, once we reach the maximum and if every parent we anticipate has enrolled their child into kindergartens having available space, the additional cost then would be $200 million. However, since this possibility won't occur because there are infrastructure limitations, which we are working on with school boards, the initial cost over the next year or two won't be anywhere near that additional $200 million. We will be absorbing that cost within current budgets.

Mr. Hehr: I guess the $200 million is the programming cost, but have you guys estimated the infrastructure costs to get these additional spaces up and running?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, we're currently starting to engage with school boards in a dialogue on how current infrastructure could be used, as you know. For example, I'll give you a very interesting anecdotal figure. The Edmonton public school board, for example, has some 40,000 to 44,000 empty spaces in their schools. They can accommodate 44,000 extra students, but they have spaces where they don't have kids, and they have kids where they don't have schools. So school boards will be making decisions on how they want to implement kindergarten. Some school boards may designate certain buildings for kindergarten; some won't. This is a dialogue that we're engaging in right now.

Mr. Chairman, I don't believe Albertans expect that a whole new grade level, that would have curriculum implications, staffing implications, infrastructure implications, would simply be made available to all students throughout the entire province in every school as of September 2012. That simply would be unrealistic. But some robust work is being put forward to make sure that it comes to fruition.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I will point out to the minister that he's the fourth minister who's now studying the issue, so there should be some well-laid plans in the ministry going back. If you look at it, it's been well studied by the minister before you and the one before him and so on and so on.

Nevertheless, it appears that we won't have full-time kindergarten up and running in September of this year. When does the ministry expect, with the work that's in place and the deliberations that are happening, that this will actually come to fruition?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, 25 per cent of school boards by choice already do provide kindergarten, where they find that this is a program that is desired by the parents, within existing budgetary structure. Some school boards choose not to deliver it. Many choose not to deliver it simply because of space limitations. I will not put timelines on it, but I can undertake to the hon. member that the commitment is there not only from this government but from school boards to work towards universal kindergarten being available to all students as soon as practicable.

That fact is – it is no secret to anybody in this Chamber, I hope – that infrastructure is one of the key pressures in the provision of education. While we have a 30 to 35 per cent vacancy rate in schools throughout the province, unfortunately, those schools cannot be put on dollies and moved around to places where we actually need them. The Minister of Infrastructure, myself, and Treasury Board are looking at a variety of alternative options to be able to build more schools where they are required, and that in itself, then, will allow provision for kindergarten. I can assure you that the construction of new schools will definitely already implement a provision for kindergarten within the confines of the building.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. Thank you.

I note one of the Premier's promises in her leadership race was also to allow school boards to hire back teachers and support staff that were let go when the $107 million was cut from the budget back in I believe it was last spring. To date there are still 650 fewer teachers in our classrooms. Can the minister comment on why this has happened and what needs to be rectified, or is that a more appropriate staffing level, in his view, for what is currently needed in education?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, not only has the Premier made a commitment but this government has made a commitment to provide additional in-year funding of $107 million. A promise was made, and a promise was delivered. As a matter of fact, I would venture to guess that from the day of being sworn in as Premier, very few Premiers have managed to deliver on a significant promise like this as expeditiously as this one was delivered.

However, let's not forget the fact that the government of Alberta, particularly the Ministry of Education, is not the direct employer of teachers. Teachers are hired by school boards, and 62 individual school boards make staffing decisions as the direct employers of teachers, and they decide what is and what isn't an appropriate staffing level.

3:20

Now, $107 million was distributed to school boards in a very equitable – not equal but very equitable – fashion. Instructions were given to school boards that the dollars are to benefit children in the classroom in a very demonstrative way. A great deal of latitude was given to school boards on how the money will be expended, with the proviso that (a) a tangible learning experience improvement would be delivered and that (b) pressure spots, which the school boards haven't identified, would be addressed. Individual school boards made decisions that were most appropriate for their districts. Accordingly, the school boards have reported how they have spent every single dollar, and that was then further reported by myself to all Albertans vis-à-vis our departmental website.

So the commitment was delivered by the Premier, and the commitment was delivered by the government. School boards have done what they found to be a judicious expenditure. Now, in many cases it meant that – and don't quote me on the numbers – in excess of 800 additional teachers were actually hired from that $107 million. But in some cases teaching aides – we should never forget about the support staff in school that make education possible – were hired; some programming supports were hired; some English as a second language instructors were retained. The list went on and on. But at the end of the day the $107 million was expended as promised by the Premier.

Mr. Hehr: Nevertheless, there are 650 fewer teachers in our classrooms at this time. One has to assume that the boards are doing what's in the best interests of not only their students but with infrastructure needs and the like. Does that number alarm you? Is there anything your ministry is doing? With the growing population there are more students this September than there were last September, and those numbers just lead me to believe that if the system has fewer teachers, therefore larger class sizes and the like. Does the minister have any plans to rectify this trend?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, it's an interesting discussion, and I would actually love to spend more time sitting with this member to discuss this dilemma.

The fact is that for the first time in the history of this province we have a three-year predictable budget, which is something that school boards have been asking for for many, many, many years. I don't believe many, if any, school boards throughout the country have that available to them. So they have that predictability.

Also, let's not forget that this budget invests, not spends but invests, in education, an increase from $6.8 billion to $7.1 billion over the span of three years, with annual increases of more than 3 and a half per cent.

Now, in this province, like in some other provinces, we have locally elected trustees because we believe – and this member, I think, would agree – that locally made decisions are often more reflective of what the needs are in local schools, and those school boards make decisions on what is the best investment of those dollars. In some cases they choose to increase the number of teachers or staff or programs. The list goes on and on.

So to answer this member's question: am I concerned? I am concerned about the budget, which I am very happy to table today. That's one of my concerns, to make sure that the budget is adequate, and I am satisfied that, you know, this amount of money spent and invested in education is unprecedented. I am glad to see an increase. I am glad to see a sustainable budget. But the staffing decisions ought to remain at the local school board level, and they will do what is right for students. I don't imagine this member would want me to override local decisions by duly elected trustees and interfere in their personnel decisions and start either hiring or laying off teachers. That's something that we have trustees for, and as MLAs and as constituents we should be communicating with our trustees.

One thing, Mr. Chairman, that definitely allows me to sleep at night quite peacefully is the knowledge that Alberta education in all objective assessments ranks as one of the top four in the world. So whatever is happening in those classrooms must be good because our students, objectively tested by international agencies, are virtually second to none.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I take the minister's comments, but I also take them with a grain of salt a little bit. You're the organ grinder. You send the money. They just try to implement it. I think that at the end of the day you're the guy who's funding these things, and they're doing the best with their money.

Let's talk about your three-year funding agreement. In that is your base instructional grant, and your base instructional grant rises by 1 per cent in the upcoming school year. I think the ministry's own numbers said that there's going to be a 2.5 per cent increase in inflation, so based on the government's own numbers how do you square this circle in being able to keep adequate staff in our classrooms given this predicament that I just showed you?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, if one wants to analyze a budget, one cannot take one line item and look at whether it went up or down and then judge the entire budget by one line item. I have very clearly indicated to the member, although perhaps the member didn't have the benefit of hearing it because it was interrupted by another member, that the budget overall is increasing by more than 3 and a half per cent every year for the next three years. Yes, certain components within the budget may be going up and down, but at the end of the day school boards will be receiving an increase, on average, of more than 3 and a half per cent per year every year for the next three years, which is beneficial from the fact that now they have predictability.

It's much easier for them to run an operation knowing exactly how much money they will have to operate a school system for the next three years, but they also have an increase of more than 3 per cent per year. So we can look at individual envelopes, but individual envelopes are not indicative, are not measures of what the whole budget, that we will be voting on, will be. That's a significant increase, with predictability built in.

Mr. Hehr: Actually, I think those individual line items have more importance than the minister might suggest here. If you look at the budgets in regard to infrastructure funding, it's regarding the teacher pension funding and the like, which has nothing to do with actual bodies in a classroom. I think the minister would agree with that.

If we could return to that question, given that his budget has a lot of things to do without teachers in the classroom, how does he square this circle of a 1 per cent base instructional grant, which primarily deals with our teachers in the classroom, and a 2.5 per cent rate of inflation as well as increasing numbers of students being enrolled in our classrooms?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, the member also will know, because I know that he looks at Education budgets in close detail, that in our current Education structure a great deal of latitude is given to our local school boards. I often say – and maybe the member would have actually heard me in some of my communications – that even though today we will be voting on a budget and certain subcategories will be neatly put into envelopes for offset of fuel, for this and for that, the fact is that at the moment we actually transfer this budget, once voted upon, to local school boards. Local school boards will have a great deal of autonomy on how they will prioritize their spending and reallocate their funding.

This budget overall, Mr. Chairman, will give school boards in excess of a 3 and a half per cent or so increase per year for the next three years, which is 3 and a half per cent of $6.8 billion. It's a significant dollar amount that Albertans will be investing in education over the next three years. But the line item funding, as you will note, probably at the moment school boards start tabling their own budgets will be realigned based on what the local needs are. That's when school trustees will be making those critical decisions of what an appropriate staffing level is or what additional resource money needs to be spent.

That sort of very neatly ties ourselves back into the kindergarten conversation. Right now, as the member knows, Albertans invest only in part-time kindergartens in the province of Alberta, yet 25 per cent of school boards, Mr. Chairman, deliver full-time kindergarten, which means that those school boards at a local level have reprioritized a significant amount of money and have chosen to deliver full-time kindergarten, which is fine because that's what trustees are elected to do. They are elected to reflect local needs and to provide programming that is desired by local communities. So there is a great deal of latitude within school boards.

But the increase overall will be somewhere around 3 and a half per cent per year for the next years.

3:30

Mr. Hehr: Again, I could go back to the point that the overall increase encompasses a whole bunch of things like infrastructure, deferred maintenance, computers, different grants, and the like – it doesn't deal, actually, with teachers in classrooms – but I don't think I'm going to get anywhere on that question. Hopefully, the minister understands that what I'm reading and hearing from school boards and the like is that they're going to have great difficulty being able to find enough teachers to go into the classroom at this rate of increase on your base instructional grant. I'll leave you with that thought because it doesn't look like I'm going to get an answer on it, anyway.

Let's move on. The AISI funding has been cut. This has been recognized as one of those things the school boards have been particularly happy with, and actually I believe the former minister was very happy with this program. Can you tell me: why the cut? Where is this going to be cut? Where is it going to affect? What programs are being offered? Who is doing what with the AISI program? What programs are you going to fund in AISI, and what are not going to be forwarded?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member, with all due respect, is getting answers. He may not like the answer he's getting, but I'm giving you an answer that is actually a reality of what is in the budget and what we will be voting on.

If the member insists on focusing on certain line items, then I will give him another line item to focus on. For example, action on inclusion increases by 22 per cent in this particular budget, so you have a 22 per cent increase on one of the line items. As I said earlier, looking at individual line items and what is going up and what is going down as the appropriation of this budget is not reflective of the entire budget. When you sum it all up – and school boards will be able then to, for lack of a better term, rejig those numbers based on their local needs – the average will be about a 3 and a half per cent increase in the entire budget over three years, from $6.8 billion to $7.1 billion.

Now, on the grant that this member refers to as a decrease: actually, no. There were decreases in the past, but now there is a 2 per cent increase on the grant, and also there is additional funding for equity of opportunity, which will provide school boards with money enveloped for those particular programs.

Mr. Hehr: So with the money you're enveloping for equality of opportunity, you're saying that the school boards can then pump that back into AISI. Is that what you're saying, that your budget really means nothing here, that what you've directed them to do means nothing?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, a very good question. Yes, if they choose to do that, they will be able to do that. That is one of the reasons why Alberta Education functions as well as it does. Mr. Chairman, we fund our children equally, but we also provide for equity because there are different costs of delivering education in different parts of the province. The fact is that each jurisdiction has different needs, and each community has different priorities. The strength of the system to a large degree is the fact that locally elected – and let me underscore: locally elected – trustees get to make local decisions. If not this member, I think a lot of members from the Wildrose Party and others would be screaming and shouting if a Minister of Education would step into a school board and start overriding their budgets and telling school boards what their priorities ought to be.

Mr. Chairman, I know you were a Minister of Education, and sometimes maybe there is that temptation. You know, we don't always agree with every decision made by school boards and with what their financial priorities are, but at the end of the day we must respect the process. Parents and residents of that jurisdiction voted for those trustees, and those trustees get to make decisions, such important decisions as budgetary allocations.

Also, under AISI there is a $71 increase – it's a total amount – per student for 2012-2013. This is actually one of the programs, if you ever have a chance to visit a school, Mr. Chairman, that teachers really enjoy working with. There's $71 in funding per student for 2012-2013. For equity of opportunity, the program that I mentioned, there's a $156 per-student allocation under this particular budget.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I guess one of my concerns – and the minister's answers here reflect that – is that I think school boards are often set up to deflect what is actually happening in education and the funding dollars that are coming from the province. Whether they're adequate or inadequate, it becomes very easy just to say: well, that's the school board's problem, not my problem.

But on the actual school boards I'll note that one of the Premier's promises in her leadership race was to roll back fee increases that parents were to receive in the upcoming school year. I also note that the minister in an article in the Calgary Herald stated that he was very upset at school fees and at the fact that school boards were passing these along.

From the stats I have, I think the average Alberta parent receives a bill for $190 a child when they come into school every year. Maybe you have different statistics. What are you doing on school fees? Is this a school board problem as well, or is this something your ministry is looking to address? What's the deal here?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, it's very difficult for me to fully appreciate what this member is getting at. I don't want to put words into his mouth, but what he's really telling me, what I'm hearing, is to start overriding locally made decisions. "Never mind the school board and the trustees. You are the boss of education. You step in, and you right the wrongs if you perceive something to be wrong." It's not blaming. It's not setting up school boards for failure. They are capable politicians that have been elected as trustees, and their electorate expects them to have the autonomy that the act allows for. I think you would hear a great deal of discontent from Albertans if the Minister of Education would override locally made decisions simply because it doesn't meet the minister's priorities or the ministry's priorities.

The member keeps talking about the number of teachers. Is there an adequate number of teachers? Well, let me tell you, hon. member, in the entire system how many teachers there are. Again, from school board to school board those numbers may vary because local school boards will have made different decisions. Our class size guidelines: for K to 3 the guideline is at 17 students in a classroom. We are now on average at 19. For grades 4 to 6 the guideline is 23 students. We are now actually below that, at 22. For grades 6 to 9 the guideline is 25, and we're below that. We're at 23. For grades 10 to 12 the guideline is at 27, and we are now at 22. Frankly, when you look at it, there are enough teachers in the system, but how individual school boards decide to allocate staffing is an individual decision. Now, do I have the opportunity to perhaps override their decisions? Maybe, but the fact is that that is why we elect local trustees.

Now, relative to school fees – the member knows because I've spoken publicly on it – I personally am not very comfortable in a public system with parents receiving excessive bills, particularly for items that perhaps we will be voting on today that should be paid for under the provisions of Albertans' public purse. So I have asked my department to contact all school boards and receive itemized lists of what it is that school fees are being charged for. If we find that there is an issue where in some instances perhaps parents are being charged for items or programs or for certain provisions that are already included under public funding, we will be acting accordingly. I will be looking at some form of synchronizing what is allowable and what isn't allowable, and if you choose to discuss that with me at a future date, we will be looking at it.

The fact is that there are situations where school fees are appropriate when a child is provided with over-and-above services that are simply not included under the provisions of public education or with certain transportation to a program of choice where other programs are available in the neighbourhood or in a nearby school – those are justifiable – or for lunch programs that students may be provided with, and the list goes on and on. We will be looking at whether there is any double-charging, where the taxpayer pays for a certain program and then a parent pays again. We will be rationalizing them if there indeed is a problem.

Mr. Hehr: That's a good start, but I think it's also incumbent to realize that some of these charges that are going for core things that we believe should be taught in the education system are not simply a matter of you having allocated the dollars and the dollars not being adequately allotted by school boards. It may actually be a funding issue from this government. So I point out that that may be an issue.

If we get back to also the school fees – it was important enough for the Premier to talk about them in her leadership race, and it was important enough for you to address it in the Calgary Herald – do you think these will be resolved this upcoming school year?

3:40

Mr. Lukaszuk: Which?

Mr. Hehr: The school fees and your analysis of what is being charged.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I certainly hope so. We are now in contact with school boards, and we will be reviewing school fee practices and making a determination on what is and what isn't appropriate. I'm not suggesting that there are fees charged right now that aren't, nor am I confirming that all of them are. I simply haven't had a chance to make a judgment on this as I haven't yet seen the breakdown of school fees. But if indeed I find that there are fees that are inappropriate – and I'm underscoring: if I find that they are – then indeed we will do our best to make sure that those inappropriate fees are removed by September 2012.

I would also like to go back to the preamble of the comment that the member made, insinuating that simply the total of the budget may be inadequate; that is, the $6.8 billion, growing to $7.1 billion over the next three years. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have to tell you a few interesting comments. Actually, you know, the chairman of the Treasury Board is over here, and he can confirm these numbers. Over the last 10 years the student population in this province has grown by 3 per cent. Over the last 10 years, the very same 10 years, the teacher population has grown by 12 per cent. Quite reasonable because we've been looking at classroom sizes and all that. Funding for Alberta Education over the last 10 years has grown by 71.6 per cent. Mind you, it's not adjusted for inflation, but even if you were to adjust it for inflation, I have to tell you that Albertans make education their priority. Their investment in education has been phenomenal over the last 10 years, particularly in this budget and for the next three years. So the question is whether there indeed is enough funding.

You know, the hon. member's leader, from the Liberal Party, and I were having a very interesting discourse over Twitter over the last few weeks. As I'm listening to question period and questions posed by the Liberal opposition, frankly by many members of the opposition, to individual ministers, today we were going to build additional nursing facilities for every senior that needs one, we were going to hire a lot of doctors and pay them what they want because, apparently, they have ads in the Calgary Herald, municipalities are going to get more than the unprecedented amount of money that they get under MSI, and now this budget is not enough. I have a simple question to the leader of the Liberal opposition. What is your prediction for the oil price for the next year or three years? It must be somewhere around $300 per barrel if you're really planning on delivering everything that you're saying now, pre-election, that you would do.

Going back to the Education budget, Mr. Chairman, the increase from $6.8 billion to $7.1 billion, with the predictability built in, is a phenomenal investment in education. Now what we have to do as members of the opposition and definitely me as minister and my colleagues is to make sure that that money is spent in such a way that as much of it ends up in the classroom and that children benefit from those dollars as much as possible.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, just a reminder that there are about 23 minutes left in this particular exchange.

Mr. Hehr: I thank the minister for his comments. You know, I think that's part of this, to put the comment back on his comments, which are related to educational budgeting but, I think, also more to his government's budgeting on the whole. Part of having predictable, sustainable funding is not having to rely on oil and gas revenues to fund every last thing that comes up from the purse. I don't know if the minister was in the House, but I did a parable of the family farm, where we say that right now we're relying on fossil fuel resources to pay today's bills, which is akin to a family farmer selling off a piece of land to pay his bills. Eventually it's unsustainable. We should be asking the citizenry to actually pay for things like public education, public roads, and the like. That would allow us to have predictable and sustainable funding in order that you don't have to jump up and down and cut things and start things.

Why we have a fiscal sustainability deficit of $11 billion that we spend on oil and gas revenues every year to fund daily operations is beyond me. Why we tax people $11 billion less than B.C. is beyond me given that we are putting future generations at peril by not saving and by not having consistent, predictable, sustainable funding.

I hear the minister's comments, but I think it would behoove this government to ask people to pay for the public services that they use. I think that is a much more conservative principle than blowing every last dime that comes into the public purse.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Perhaps we're straying a little bit from the Education budget, but I think this government has tabled, not only for the Ministry of Education but all ministries in this House, a very responsible budget based on very small "c" conservative revenue predictions to make sure that we don't overpromise and underdeliver, which I'm hearing a lot of on the other side. The fact is that this government has been loud and clear that we don't need to dig deeper into Albertans' personal pockets and tax them more to deliver adequate services in this province. The fact is that we have a sustainable financial plan that is based on taxation.

Let's be honest over here, Mr. Chairman. The majority of our taxation comes from small business. The reason we have such a vibrant small-business community in this province and the reason why we have attracted 128,000 new Albertans last year is not because we're increasing taxes. British Columbia is not attracting those numbers. There's a reason why, actually, British Columbians are moving to Alberta. It's because we have a friendly business environment. It's because we have an environment where Albertans can actually have a job, and they can work hard, and they can keep most of their paycheque in their pocket and while doing so still receive one of the best education systems in the world, always within the top four in the world.

I'll leave the Liberals to themselves and let them devise their own numbers. It's obvious and clear that they would have to probably increase taxation by some $5 billion or $6 billion just based on what I'm hearing in question period that they would deliver over the next year or two. I'm not sure if we would have to worry about building more schools, Mr. Chairman. Maybe that's the method to the madness: increase taxes so high that Albertans will move out to other provinces, and you don't have to worry about building schools. Well, it may be worth considering but not by this government at this time.

Mr. Hehr: I hear the hon. member saying that people are coming here from B.C. for the low tax regime. It would behoove the hon. member to know that we have 97 per cent of Canada's oil resources located right here in Alberta, with many projects going ahead up there in Fort McMurray and the like. So I think it's ridiculous, his assumption that they're moving here for low taxes. They're moving here for jobs, and they'd be willing to pay, actually, for schools in their neighbourhoods.

You know, there was a day and age in this province when, if a neighbourhood needed a school, we built it. We didn't look at oil revenues and the like. We could get into the thick of things, but I think your hon. Premier actually recognized that in her throne speech. After this election, when you're done with the bluster, we're hopefully going to return to a day when we'll actually get to financial accountability, when people pay for what they use. I think the minister would agree that paying for what society uses would be much more practical than using other people's money, future generations' money, by blowing it all at once, okay?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, you know, you can paraphrase what the member is actually saying in a more colloquial term. He's saying that Albertans are freeloaders, that they are receiving services that they don't pay for. I would disagree with you. They are not freeloading. New Albertans are coming to this province and long-term Albertans are in this province – why? – well, because there are jobs available. Yes, it's based on natural resources, but those natural resources were in the ground for thousands of years. Our province next door actually had almost the same quantity of natural resources as the province of Alberta. It took a new government a few years ago to revive Saskatchewan and give it an opportunity, where they're actually starting to get investment from outside. They have for the first time in decades positive population growth in that province, and the economy is starting to chug along to where we were as Albertans for a number of years.

So, no, I don't believe that Albertans are freeloading. Albertans are investing in what is important to them. They're investing in education, and they're paying taxes at a rate that is competitive. By doing so, they enjoy a much higher quality of life than they would anywhere else. That's one of our advantages, and this government will maintain it.

3:50

Now, Mr. Chairman, this member is trying to read between the lines, but the fact is that, no, there is no plan to increase taxes by this Premier or this government. As a matter of fact, every minister on this front bench has signed a three-year business plan, and that's what we will be voting on right here, a three-year plan. This combined business plan of all the ministries will not require and will not be calling for any increases in taxes. So as much as the Liberal opposition wants to increase taxes by some probably $4 billion to $6 billion, and they feel that Albertans are freeloaders and that it's time that they start paying for what they receive, I will say that there is significant investment . . .

Mr. Hehr: Point of order.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Education, but the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has a point of order. What is your citation, please?

Point of Order
Factual Accuracy

Mr. Hehr: The minister has now said twice that I've called Albertans freeloaders.

The Deputy Chair: What is your citation?

Mr. Hehr: Beauchesne's 23.

The Deputy Chair: Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j)? Is that what I hear you saying?

Mr. Hehr: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Proceed.

Mr. Hehr: Clearly, I've never said that Albertans are freeloaders. I've never once said that. What I'm talking about is our tax system and our ability to provide predictable, sustainable funding to things like education and the like. At no time did I say that Albertans were freeloaders.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. I don't recall you having said that either, hon. member. I've noted here with Parliamentary Counsel the decorum in the House to this point, and I would ask that we continue on that vein and ask the Minister of Education to please clarify his remarks and we'll move on.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, of course, Mr. Chairman. That's why I was very careful to say – I never said that the member said that. I'm very careful, and check the Hansard if you wish. I said: to paraphrase what the member has said and to use more colloquial terms, Albertans are freeloaders. I would never insinuate that he has actually said it. I'm just paraphrasing what I'm hearing into a different language.

What the member is saying is that Albertans are receiving benefits for which they are not paying.

The Deputy Chair: So, hon. members, we've had some clarification here on this matter. Whether you're quoting someone or paraphrasing someone, let's be careful to keep the debate at the high level. Let's carry on.

Hon. Minister of Education, you did have the floor at the time of the point of order, so if you want to conclude that point, we'll get back to the hon. member and continue debate.

Debate Continued

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you very kindly. Mr. Chair, to conclude my answers, I believe that Albertans are investing in education at a very appreciable rate. I believe that there probably aren't any jurisdictions in Canada other than the Northwest Territories that invest more in children and education on a per capita basis, and the Northwest Territories is obviously because of the sparsity and lack of critical masses that they have. I believe that this budget is definitely reflective not only of Albertans' priority in education but this government's priority in education.

Mr. Hehr: Well, continuing on this point of predictable and sustainable funding for education, I think the minister will admit that there have been fits and starts over the last 20 years in terms of hiring teachers, laying off teachers, and the like not only in his department but everything else. The evidence stands clear. We spent $250 billion in petroleum revenues over the last 25 years and have not saved a dime. Some of that has come from going to a flat tax, which is not a fair taxation system, that does not allow for our wealthy to pay more into the public purse to ensure that there's predictable, sustainable funding and ensure that some equality of opportunity exists.

Would you not agree that going back to a progressive income tax system would allow us to have more predictable, sustainable funding?

The Deputy Chair: Education is what you're talking about. Is that correct?

Mr. Hehr: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Because we are debating the estimates of Education.

Mr. Hehr: I know.

The Deputy Chair: Please always tie your comments in with Education, and then we won't have any relevance points.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I was just wondering if the hon. member wants me to defend the estimates for the ministries of Finance or Treasury Board, which I'm quite prepared to do if he wants me to do so. But I will try to tie it into Education.

Mr. Chairman, as I indicated earlier, the numbers simply don't add up. I told you what the population increase of students and teachers was vis-à-vis the 71.6 per cent increase in education funding, obviously showing significant year-to-year increases in funding for the Ministry of Education, being the children in the classrooms.

The member brings up a very valid point. He talks about the fluctuation in funding and the lack of predictability. That was one of the problems that educators and particularly school boards always struggled with because they never knew how much money they would have beyond this year. It was very difficult for them to plan programs and definitely very difficult for them to make staffing decisions and particularly to extend continuous contracts to teachers not knowing what their financial position would be beyond this fiscal year.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I'm very proud of this budget. Not only because of the quantity of it but also because of the fact that for the first time in the history of this province and, I believe, unprecedented anywhere in Canada we are providing three-year predictability to school boards, which will now do away with this on and off of hiring, as the member refers to it, or perhaps laying off of teachers. School boards will be able to make a more meaningful long-term commitment not only to staff but also to programs within their jurisdictions.

Mr. Hehr: And the hon. minister is doing it by spending every last dime of fossil fuel resource that comes into the public purse.

Moving on, let's look at maintenance. Right now the Calgary board of education has reported deferred maintenance bills of over $800 million; Edmonton public schools, $242 million. That's a billion dollars. We brought up Grimshaw. Obviously, that adds to the bill. There are a large number of schools that are in need of repair. It looks like in his budget – and again it's looking at a line item – there is no funding increase for repairing or maintaining schools. How does the minister expect this backlog ever to be rectified?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, $482 million has been added to operations, Mr. Chairman, so that is not entirely correct. Also, the fact is that, yes, I have been the first one to say that in this province, and not only in this province, frankly, in every growing jurisdiction, one of the problems that comes along with success is the fact that you have a population that not only grows significantly; you have a province that attracts young families over here, workers with families. Unfortunately, none of them bring their schools with them. Also, what you have is migration of population to centres where the economy attracts families. You end up with the net consequence of having schools, as I said earlier, where you don't have kids and having kids where you don't have schools.

Mr. Chairman, I am very cognizant of the fact that there are very significant pressures in some jurisdictions requiring new schools, where all the schools in the jurisdiction are at their capacity. The chairman of the Treasury Board and myself and the Minister of Infrastructure are working right now, as we're speaking, on means by which we will be able to build more schools in this province to meet those critical demands because to continue providing this high level of internationally renowned education, we also need facilities that are reflective of the excellence that happens in the classroom.

Having said that, we also have a certain contingent of aging infrastructure, and because the pressure was always to build more schools, sometimes the priorities were more to just provide space to children than perhaps to retrofit existing buildings. So what we will be doing as part of our plan is looking at the state of infrastructure overall in the province of Alberta relevant to schools and looking at where some of the schools can be rationalized. You know, the cost of retrofitting an old building often is very close to building a new school, and in certain parts of the province you will have a large pool of aging buildings that, in order for them to stay and remain as schools, would have to be retrofitted. Often, there may be a good not only financial argument but educational argument to perhaps do away with some of those buildings and build one new school somewhere in the centre of the older facilities. Those are the types of analyses that we're doing right now.

The Grimshaw situation – if you want to delve into it, I gladly will – is a unique circumstance, but I think it's a circumstance that presents itself to us as a learning model because here we have a school that was built in three stages. I'm not sure if it's the only one of such type or if there are many others throughout the province; it's something we're looking at right now. The oldest part is about 50 years old, and the newest part, I believe, is less than 20 years old, yet the entire building is in a state of disrepair.

I want to find out – and we have instigated research into that – whether our schools initially, at least during that time period, were built to such engineering standards that they were to last longer than this, because I think that the taxpayers of Alberta expect their buildings to last longer than 20 years or even longer than 50 years, and also look at maintenance protocols for schools in Alberta to make sure that we allow those schools to remain functional for as long as possible.

4:00

You know, there are schools in Alberta that are much older than 50 years, and when you actually walk into those buildings, they're a pleasure to look at. They're properly restored, retrofitted, and even though the architecture very much resembles the time during which they were built, they are very functional, esthetically pleasing, and definitely functional buildings, so something to learn from. We will be looking at this, and we will be sharing what we have learned from this particular circumstance with the House in due course.

In the meantime my priority is the children. I want to make sure that children are not only in safe buildings – obviously, safe buildings – but also in buildings that are conducive to education.

Mr. Hehr: Now, obviously, I don't want to prejudice your negotiations with the ATA. I realize they're difficult. Coming to an exact number is awfully difficult, and I understand that. Nevertheless, you've budgeted 1 per cent, I believe, for salary increases. The contract comes up in September of this year, and the school boards are going to be on the hook for whatever deal you sign. Are there plans in place, if the 1 per cent doesn't come in, to get that additional funding to school boards to recognize whatever deal this provincial government comes to?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have to be very cautious when discussing this particular topic because, indeed, as the member indicated, I do not want to prejudice the outcome of negotiations. The fact is that what will happen – let me retract a little. My communication has been very clear for a number of months. When I say something, I mean it. My encouragement, then, to government negotiators but also school board negotiators and ATA negotiators was to hammer out a deal before the budget was tabled because that would inform the process of the budget.

What needs to be said here, Mr. Chairman, to put things in perspective, is that over the last 10 years I was giving you the numbers of 3 per cent for students, 12 and 71. Ten years ago the split between all salaries in the system and the actual provision of education was 60-40. Sixty per cent was salaries and benefits; 40 per cent was programming and operations. Now we're at an 80-20 split. Eighty per cent is salaries; 20 per cent is provision of services. When one is crafting a budget for a ministry of $6.8 billion, it would have been good to know what that 80 per cent of that $6.8 billion or so would be. It would definitely inform the crafting of the budget.

Unfortunately, a deal was not reached at that particular time, so I did not have the benefit of knowing what the numbers would have been in crafting the budget. I have asked the ministry to do an analysis of trends throughout the country of a variety of indicators, and numbers had to be put into the budget because at the end of the day the budget had to be tabled. The numbers that have been put into the budget right now, without the benefit of having a deal ahead of the budget, are 1 per cent, 2 per cent, and 2 per cent, and not necessarily all of that is for salaries.

I still expect that we will negotiate a good deal. I know that I have well-intentioned partners around the table. I don't question the good intentions of the school boards, the ATA, and definitely my ministry, who's there sitting at the table representing the best interests of the kids. I have full confidence that a deal can be reached that will benefit children at the end of the day.

Mr. Chairman, one thing needs to be highlighted. The last four and a half years of the long-term agreement that was reached four and a half years ago were probably the best four and a half years in Alberta education since past my memory. For the first time in a long time as partners in education we were able to talk about just that, education, and what's important for children: curriculum, pedagogy, and all that. We were not distracted by labour disputes.

I'm hoping that we will be able to reach this agreement. I'm having very good meetings and constructive meetings with the ATA, with school board associations, and with individual school boards. From time to time we will agree to disagree, but one thing, Mr. Chairman, that is unquestionable in my mind is that all of those individuals around the table are focused on what's good for the kids, and when you have that underpinning, I think a deal can be reached.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I think that goes without saying, you know, that everyone wants the best for our kids. It's nice and refreshing to hear you say that, but it doesn't mean a lot.

Nevertheless, let's look at sort of the numbers you quoted, that 80 per cent of the budget is going to teachers' salaries. I would note that the ATA does take some issue with those numbers. You may have read their report on that, where it says that it's closer to 65 per cent. Some districts say that it's as low as 52 per cent of money that actually goes to teachers' salaries. Maybe the minister would like to clarify those statements as to whether he actually believes that 80 per cent of it is going to salaries.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I actually quite strongly believe that what is best for the kids matters, and it matters a lot. I think that is something that should be preoccupying all of us no matter whether we're discussing money or policies.

The fact is that what the member is stating doesn't pertain to all teachers' salaries. The simple fact is this. Our teachers in Alberta are doing a phenomenal job in the classroom, and that is shown in the outcomes that we have vis-à-vis the performance of our system as compared to other systems. They are also very handsomely remunerated compared to any other jurisdiction in the country of Canada. Yes, they need to be remunerated to reflect the quality of work that they do.

School boards have a task of running a very complex education system that has pressures from time to time, and so does this ministry. But at the end of the day, because it matters, Mr. Chairman, what is best for our kids, I know we have the resources in this budget and I know that we have a basis of salaries which teachers are being paid right now and the goodwill of the school boards that will allow us to reach a deal within the parameters set out.

Mr. Hehr: I think I'll talk to some of the minister's comments there. Sometimes things cost more in Alberta for a reason. We're competing against an oil and gas sector that reimburses employees relatively well. I don't begrudge those people at all, but it drives up salaries and drives up costs in his ministry and other ministries that are sort of just one of the good fortunes of being an Albertan. I do know that. So I recognize that cost structure and why it's there, and I don't fault the government. It's just the nature of being in Alberta and running a department in Alberta.

I do take some umbrage when the minister sets up an equation where he says that 80 per cent . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much. The chair enjoyed listening to that first hour of debate, and hopefully it will continue in an enjoyable fashion.

We will now move to the next section. The next section will be with the member for the Wildrose, and that would be Airdrie-Chestermere. You have 20 minutes with the minister. Decide how you want to use it.

Mr. Anderson: If you'd like, we could go back and forth, Minister. It doesn't matter.

The Deputy Chair: There seems to be agreement. Proceed.

Mr. Anderson: Okay. Obviously, we don't have a lot of time. We only have 20 minutes, so we'll get right into it. I want to ask questions of you today, Minister, on this priority list. Now, you said something very interesting yesterday in question period, and I was excited to hear it. When I asked about the need for a priority list for new school infrastructure, a publicly listed priority list that put out from highest priority to lowest priority all the different new schools, infrastructure upgrades, all that sort of thing, you seemed to indicate yesterday in question period that you were arranging to do that or that you were in the process of doing that. I just was wondering if you could update me on that. I'd be very excited to know.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, a topic definitely worth discussing because this particular member has been insinuating in question period and outside of this House that this government has a secret list. Well, this list must be so secret that even I don't know about it, but oddly enough this member does. I think I have figured out what that secret list is, and I am making an undertaking – and it's the same undertaking that I made in question period – that within probably the next couple of months I will be releasing the secret list of infrastructure priorities throughout the entire province.

4:10

The reason, Mr. Chairman, that I will be able to release that secret list is because all of the school boards in the province of Alberta will be presenting me with their individual capital plans that will be listing their priorities for (a) construction of new schools, (b) renovation of existing schools, and (c) attaching portables to existing schools. As those are accumulated, I will be making them available, and the member will be able to see what each school board's priority is for new infrastructure.

Now, the member knows very well that with the current funding model and in order to not be criticized for deficit spending and going into debt, there are only so many schools this government and Albertans can build paying cash up front. What happens is that, obviously, not every school board's number one priority can be built because there would be 62 schools just for the public and Catholic school boards, not including francophone and others. So, obviously, some prioritizing has to take place. In the prioritizing, Mr. Chairman, first we look at the safety of existing buildings. Are there any buildings that are simply unsafe, that need to be either repaired or, often, replaced? Then we simply look at the numbers.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

I'll give you an example. In Fort McMurray there is a school right now that, I believe, has somewhere between 23 to 27 portables attached to it. There are more children in portables than there are actually in the school itself. Well, some would say that these portables are actually not bad, that they're very nice classrooms. The problem is that the core of the building can't handle that many students. You are running out of bathrooms, you are running out of space for parents and buses to pull up, your staff room or the library is not designed for that many, and the list goes on and on.

So when all those capital plans come in, you look at the priorities. Since school boards change their priorities every year because their pressures change as well, there is reprioritizing every year. I have to assure you, Mr. Chairman, that those decisions are difficult because you wish you could actually build every school. That is why the chairman of the Treasury Board and I are looking at the possibility of finding different vehicles by which we can finance schools so that we can build all those schools that they need. Frankly, those decisions are very objective. I wish I could build more schools.

That is the secret list. It's composed of 62 capital plans, which the minister has to look at every year de novo because their priorities change and decide who gets a school and who doesn't, a difficult decision to make because I don't question any school board's sincerity or any school board's need. They actually need those schools, but there are financial limitations on how many we can build.

The Acting Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. Okay. Let me see if I understand this. As you pointed out clearly, the boards every year set their priorities, and they submit those priorities to you, right? I'm not talking about that list. I understand that every board across the province says: "These are our top five, 10, 20 schools, whatever it is. These are our top maintenance needs, et cetera."

They send you all of their lists, and then you've got these 62 lists – I'm not saying that you keep those lists secret. That's not the list I'm referring to. But at some point you have got to take the $300 million or $400 million or whatever you budget for new schools and upgrades and you have to apply it to those 62 lists that you got from the boards. So at some point you have to make a decision: "We're going to give Calgary Catholic X amount, we're going to give Edmonton public X amount, we're going to give Rocky View X amount, Fort McMurray, whatever." That's the list I'm talking about.

Once you get these 62 priority lists, then you have to say, "Okay; everyone has got their priorities; we can't fund everything," like you absolutely correctly stated. How do you go and say: "Look, we're going to put the three top priorities of Fort McMurray here. The five top priorities of Edmonton are going to go here"? How do you make the decision? How do you take those 62 priority lists that you get from the boards and then condense it into: "Okay; as we see it as a province, these are the top priorities, one to 1,000, of school needs in this province"?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, we cannot make such a list. That's why the secret list, by virtue of the fact that it would be impossible to compose, doesn't exist. Every year every school board sends its capital plan with its priorities, and every year individual school boards' priorities change. What a school board wanted as their number 1 priority this year may be their number 3 priority next year, and they bumped up another one or perhaps even created a new school that they needed in a new subdivision or a new neighbourhood. So there is no such list because it changes every year.

What the Minister of Education has to do is take every year's capital plans from all of the school boards, look at their priorities, and then decide what from this year's capital plans as accumulated will be funded. The criteria that are being used are that, number one, you look at enrolment numbers, current and projected enrolment numbers. Second, you look at existing capacity within the district and within a reasonable geographic area where kids can be transported to schools. And last, but not least, you look at health and safety, whether the current buildings the school has, even though we may have capacity, are healthy work environments for teachers and learning environments for students and whether there are any safety issues.

Those decisions are made annually de novo from a new set of sublists that are provided by school boards. I wasn't being facetious when I was answering the member's question in question period. Having a rally and bringing parents from Airdrie onto the front stairs of the Legislature to communicate to the minister that we need a school – I don't question the fact that Airdrie needs schools. It needs schools badly. But rallying will not change the decision because the decisions are objective and not subjective and are not subject to political pressures.

What we need right now, Mr. Chairman, is actually some co-operation from the opposition to work with government in finding new funding mechanisms because right now we're paying for every school with cash up front. For me to build another school in Airdrie – although Airdrie is, I believe, getting three over the next year or so – I actually have to find the dollars in this year's budget. I estimate I will need 400 new schools over the next 10 years. I will never reach that number paying cash up front for every school. Obviously, we need some alternative financing methods to be able to build the schools that the school boards need so badly and to provide to those schools on objective terms.

Mr. Anderson: Well, thank you for the explanation. I guess I don't think it is impossible to create this list that we're talking about. I mean, this is pretty basic. You would have to update it. You would have to update it every year, for sure, based on the input that you got. But, I mean, any corporation, any business that runs has to update their budgets quarterly, even monthly. So if you're getting these once a year, all you would do is just simply re-input that information into whatever criteria you use to arrive at what your final priority list is for that year.

The point is that you would be able to see from year to year if there was inconsistency. So, for example, if Rocky View has – well, let's use a different example. Let's say that Calgary public has the top two priorities on your new schools priority list. Number 1, number 2. Then all of a sudden, magically, they resubmit their priority list the next year, and these two schools are still their top two priorities, but on your list they go down to number 5 and number 6 or number 10 or number 11. All of a sudden they're not a priority for the provincial government anymore.

There would have to be an objective reason for that happening. That might be the case. There might be nine new schools that became more of a priority than those two, but at least we would have some objective criteria that we could look at and say that the reason the government has moved them down, the reason they're not in the top 10, the reason that, say, Airdrie doesn't get a fourth school in the next five years or something like that, if that's what happens – there's an objective reason for it. It's because their student-to-school ratio isn't as bad as, say, in Fort McMurray or Beaumont or Edmonton or wherever. The point is that we'd be able to see that. We'd be able to see the criteria, and we would be able to see if the schools are being moved around on the list based on politics rather than on criteria.

I want to believe you. Trust me. I want to believe that these schools are handed out completely based on objective criteria. So just make it easier for all of us in the Assembly by posting the objective criteria, the formula, et cetera, and then have the list adjusted every year, year to year. That transparency will give parents, I think, a great deal of confidence in your government with regard to knowing that you're not using education as a political football. I'm not saying that you are. I'm just saying that the transparency will help with that.

4:20

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, we're getting somewhere because we started with an insinuation over the last few days that this government has a secret list, and now we're at a point where the member is stating that it is possible to create a list. So at least I'm absolved of the fact that I don't have a secret list, which is good. That's good. That's progress.

I agree that the funding of schools should not be political football. It never has been, and it won't be with this government. The only reason there are political-in-nature discussions about building schools is because – the member brings it up. Frankly, I have listed the objective criteria. So perhaps it's worth writing down, or maybe I should post it on our website. The objective criteria are: enrolment numbers in the jurisdiction and projections of enrolment, existing capacity within the school district and within reasonable distance geographically, health and safety in existing buildings and, obviously, the physical condition of the existing building.

It is not as simple, Mr. Chairman, as to just adjust numbers and adjust buildings from year to year and have a consistent list and have things bumped up and bumped down. It wouldn't give the viewer of such a list, if such a list existed, any predictability because the changes are drastic. Let me give you the example of a local district here in Edmonton since we happen to be here in Edmonton. One of the school boards, for example, has decided to close a school, a very large school, which would significantly impact their enrolment rates and capacity. They had the school slated for closure. As a matter of fact, if they sold the school or if they turned the land over to the city, that would actually even realize income for the system. But for one reason or another – I'm not questioning the reasons – the school board decided to keep that school. So that sends a chain reaction through the entire system of what their priorities will be when the system bumps a whole bunch of schools from one place to another.

Even further, now that they've decided to keep this enormous school open – and it's a very old school – they will be sending, probably in the next capital plan that will be coming over the next couple of months, an amazingly large bill to the government of Alberta to retrofit that school, which will probably be the equivalent of building two elementary schools anywhere else in the province. So that's how fluid the situation is in the system. Even though one may want to insinuate, for a secondary gain, that there are politics played with it, the fact is that, no, the situation is that fluid that school boards make autonomous decisions.

Now, in Airdrie the situation is rather simple. Airdrie needs schools. They don't need to close schools. They won't be thinking about closing schools for decades. They just need more schools, and they need more schools fast. So their number one priority can remain their number one priority for two or three years, although the community grows so fast that another school may become the priority.

In areas where there actually are surplus buildings, in areas where you have schools where you don't have kids and you have kids where you don't have schools and you have older buildings, school boards are making decisions on an ongoing basis. Today I was speaking with a chairman of a board who is going through a consultation on closing one school, moving the population from that school to another, and then unloading another. That's how fluid the situation is.

I'm glad the member acknowledges finally that there is no secret list. He still believes that one could actually compose such lists, and we do every year de novo, and every year that list will continue to change.

Mr. Anderson: I guess you publish the list of schools that you're going to build that year, obviously, but you don't publish what is coming after. If you did, then after those first schools in the queue got out, we would be able to see whether there was political manipulation going on after that. Those schools would necessarily probably be near the top the next year, and if they weren't, there would have to be a reason, which we would know because there would be objective criteria. I'm not just talking about – you listed some criteria. That's great. But I'm talking about actual numbers here, an actual formula. I'm not talking about safety. That's great. That's a great consideration. What in safety? How do you weight the system? How do you weight safety compared to student population? All of those things, a very simple, independent formula so that we can see it.

With regard to your note that schools have never been handed out politically, that's where I disagree with you. I don't say that you've done it politically, and I'm not even going to say that your predecessor did it either. But when I was still a member of your government, I had a sit-down with the executive assistant to the Minister of Education and was told flat out that the reason – I came to him before the 2008 election with numbers that showed the growth in cities like Airdrie and Calgary and Edmonton and so forth. If you looked at the way they were handed out, a public school board, for example, that had actually declined in enrolment over the last five years got the same amount of schools as a public board in another city of relatively the same population that had increased significantly in student population. They got the exact same number of schools. I asked the executive assistant after showing him the Airdrie numbers, which was one school in the last 10 years despite doubling in population: "How do you explain this? What's the deal here?" He said, "Well, they were political reasons." Those were his words, not mine. You know, maybe he was lying to me. I don't know. But that's what I was told, and the numbers backed it up.

Now, that was not a decision made by the previous Education minister nor by you. But there's no doubt in my mind that that 2008 announcement of schools was not apportioned based on some formula; in fact, it was apportioned based on politics. Edmonton got the same as Calgary. Regardless of what the student populations were and what the growth patterns were, they got the same amount because, God forbid, we wouldn't want to actually do it by formula because maybe Calgary would gain a couple of schools more than Edmonton would, and then – who knows? – there'd be a political price to pay. That's wrong. That's an example, one of many, where politics has been played with regard to schools.

Now, I'm not saying that I'm going to stand here, Minister, and say that this community – you know, Airdrie-Chestermere needs more schools, but I know that there are other needs around. I'm just one MLA advocating for my constituency. What would make it easier for all the MLAs in this Assembly would be if you would, like I say, publish every year after you get the 62 board priority lists, 1 through 500, whatever, just prioritize every single one of those on your master list, publish it publicly every year. On your master list this is 1 through 1,000 of what our priorities are for new schools and schools maintenance. We're going to fund these top 30 because that's the money we have. You take those out, you fund them, and then we can all look at it and see very transparently what should be there for next year subject to changes that will occur. I understand that. Why couldn't you publish not just what you're building that year but what the priority would've been had you had more money going forward? Would you be willing to do that?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Chairman, what the member is in essence asking me to do is to produce a list of schools that we didn't build. I think the parents in jurisdictions where they didn't receive a school and have a gaping hole on land with no school on it are pretty well aware of the fact that they didn't get a school. I don't think I have to produce a list to confirm for them that they didn't get a school.

The Acting Chair: Hon. minister, the time has expired. Thank you very much.

Hon. members, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I had the great pleasure of joining some of my constituents in a meeting with the Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations and the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development this afternoon to discuss some very crucial issues regarding traplines. They are members of the Driftpile First Nation trapline holders. I'd ask them to stand as I introduce them: President Raymond Giroux, Vice-President Earl Giroux, Director Bernard Giroux, and, of course, Lawrence Willier, Denise Giroux, George Giroux, and Perline Schaseas. Also with them is their secretary, Lana Bellhumer, as well as councillor representatives: from Sucker Creek, Lavern Willier; from Swan River, Kevin Twin; and from Sucker Creek, Russell Willier, who is already standing. These individuals from the Driftpile First Nation trapline holders have come to present their issues to these ministers. I'd ask this Assembly to please give them a huge hand for coming today.

4:30 Main Estimates 2012-13

Education (continued)

The Acting Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, do you care to combine your time, then, with the minister?

Ms Notley: Yes, I do. As the previous speaker noted, we have a very, very short period of time.

The chair that's in the chair now was not there previously, but to refer back to my previous point of order – I didn't have it in front of me – it was 23(b)(i), that a member would be called to order if they were speaking to matters other than the question under discussion. That was what I was referring to at the time. It seems to have improved somewhat in terms of the specificity, so I'm hoping that we'll get some pointed back and forth specifically answering the questions I'm asking because, as I say, I don't have a great deal of time.

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

I'm going to focus in on issues around special-needs education because we haven't had a chance yet to talk about that in a great deal of detail. My understanding is that there was a $68 million increase to special-needs funding this year, and I believe that brings the total amount dedicated to special-needs funding to roughly $370 million. I'd like to start by just pointing out that it was a little bit frustrating that my office tried to get the specific number dedicated to special-needs funding, and it took them two and a half weeks to get that answer out of the Ministry of Education. To me, that should be a separate line item, and the fact that it's not a separate line item is really a problem.

Having said that, we're at $68 million this year. I assume – and I'm hoping the minister will correct me if I am incorrect – that that $68 million is in addition to the $12 million that happened last year and that the combined $68 million and $12 million is now $80 million, that is dedicated to the process of implementing setting the direction or inclusive education or whatever it's being called right now. So my first question is: is that the case?

My second question is: out of the remaining pot of money that is dedicated towards special-needs education, could you break down for me the amount that is spent on those special-needs children who are coded as severe, so the amount that the ministry transfers to the school boards collectively on a province-wide basis for those who are coded as severe out of the remaining $370 million, and then also whether or not the moderate and mildly disabled students and/or the ESL students are also included in that $370 million figure? If so, if you could just advise me specifically what their breakdown is in terms of the line item. I'll just start with that question.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I must take umbrage with the member's suggestions that I wasn't staying on the topic.

An Hon. Member: Umbrage?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I love that word. Isn't that a great word, umbrage?

I thought and I continue to think that I have been on the topic throughout my entire discussion, but I guess it's for her to judge.

A couple of things, Mr. Chairman. If the member wanted to find out what allocation for special education was given to school boards and how the money was divided, it was very simple to do because, actually, on the day of the budget, the moment money was wired to school boards, we posted that detailed information on our website. It is available. It has been up since budget day. So I would strongly encourage that the member go to the website. I'm surprised that she's been trying to find that information for two weeks. All she really had to do was get on the Alberta Education website, and that information is very clearly and specifically posted. I have made a commitment to continue posting information in more and more detail so that not only members of the opposition but, frankly, parents and educators can look up the number.

The second reason why I'm very surprised that the member would say that she could not receive an answer on how much was transferred is because we have met. My department and my office staff have met with her staff, and that particular question was never asked by her staff. If she really wanted to know, all they needed to do is ask that question, and they shall receive the answer.

To answer the question more specifically relevant to what the facts are, the member should know – and I think we have briefed her staff on this particular item – the fact that we are actually moving away from coding children. The whole idea is to move away from coding individual children and attaching dollars to particular codes, and there are a number of very good reasons for it. She will be, I'm sure, following this exchange, checking on a computer what the funding is if she isn't right now.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I have to tell you that ESL is over and above. The dollars that she meant for special needs are being combined, so yes, it's $80 million altogether. ESL, English as a second language, is funded above that as a separate envelope, and it is up 11 per cent – 11 per cent up – to a total of $83 million per year.

Ms Notley: Okay. Well, first of all, my staff did contact your office. If it was so easy to find, I question why it took them two weeks to give us that information. That's the information that I have. However, that being the case, I'm still looking for the answer from you.

I understand that you are moving away from coding, but I also understand that at this point money is still going to school boards for severely disabled children. I would like the minister to please provide me the answer to the question that I asked. What is the global amount going for children who are severely disabled? What is the global amount going for children who are mildly and moderately disabled? If I could please get that answer, I would really appreciate it.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I won't even comment on the preamble, Mr. Chairman, but one thing I am very proud of is not only the department staff that are here and up in the gallery but also my office staff. If a question is asked, the question will be answered expeditiously. I will be making sure, as I have in this case, that more and more of that information will be on our website so that, frankly, no one needs to ask those questions.

Nonetheless, the manner in which supports, dollars, are being distributed is in a variety of categories. It's under instructional support, assistive technology supports and maintenance, learning coaches, literacy/numeracy support services, community support services, counselling support services, speech language support services, physical therapy support services, occupational therapy support services, mental and other health support services, and vision/hearing support services. Dollars are allocated based on forms of disability and the services required. Overall, Mr. Chairman, the goal of the system is to provide a welcoming, inclusive environment for all children in all schools at any time, making sure that all schools within all school boards can develop the capacity to provide superior services to children with special needs, and that goes away from coding.

Very often we know, actually, that children in socioeconomic strata/neighbourhoods who probably most need the support often don't have the parental and community support that would actually get them coded. Kids who really need financial support and extra help don't have the coding, so the dollars don't reach them, and others could.

A second issue, Mr. Chairman, is that there are many children that have special needs that simply are not coded. For example, exceptionally gifted children pose special needs and special challenges to teachers. This new funding formula will allow us to direct money to all school boards and allow all school boards to develop capacities to deal with needs. Currently the dollars have been distributed as indicated. For more detail I would encourage the member to look at our website.

Ms Notley: Okay. Mr. Chair, it's now eight minutes and 34 seconds, and I've not been able to get the minister to give me the numbers. I don't know if you don't know the numbers or what the problem is, but I'm looking for the numbers.

Now, I would like a yes or a no, if possible, from the minister. Is the coding finished now? The profile that applies to each school board for the number of children coded severe in each school board: is that profile now abandoned, and is there no more funding in this budget based on the profile that has been in place for at least the five years? Can you tell me: is that profile there, or has it already been abandoned for this budget year? Yes or no?

4:40

Mr. Lukaszuk: This is not a yes-or-no question, so there won't be a yes-or-no answer. If the member actually wants information, I will give her information at length. If she wants a yes-or-no answer, go on our website and get your answer.

The answer is this, Mr. Chairman. Per-pupil funding continues, and we are now migrating to a new funding model. We will be using the higher of the two. School boards will be funded this year, in a transitional year, with the higher funding of the two. I listed the old model of how the dollars were distributed. The new model will be looking at variances in: if a jurisdiction is below average income, percentage of homeowners, mother's average education, percentage of lone-parent families, percentage of non degree/certificate educated parents, low-weight gestation period for the child, FNMI/aboriginal children, refugee, children in care, and distance.

This year, Mr. Chairman, we're using the higher of the two criteria. The member should know how the dollars were divvied up in the past. With the combination of the new criteria, whichever is higher, that's how the school board will be funded. From now on we will be moving into the new criteria, which is much more equitable for all children in the system.

Ms Notley: To clarify, then, based on that criteria, which was going to be my next question, to get those criteria that are in place, I'm still looking for the answer – it's not on your website, by the way – to how much money last year was given for severe special-needs kids. I'm still looking for it. If it's on your website, then I invite you to give me the website address, to send it on over to me, and you can do that. I'm looking for how much money went last year per school board as well as globally out of that $370 million to severely disabled special-needs kids.

Now, is the minister telling me that in the interests of equity money that was previously going to children who were identified as having severe special needs will now be shared with those students who are actually also experiencing mild or moderate special needs, including low income, low birth weight, those kinds of issues? Is that what the minister is telling me now?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Should I give you a yes-or-no answer? I don't think so. Mr. Chairman, the member seems to be very energetic today, and she wants to get me maybe a little bit more engaged in a bit of a debate, but there is no debate. I will give her answers to her questions. Unfortunately, she's asking very complex questions about a complex system, and there won't be yes-or-no answers.

We're here to discuss this year's budget, but if she wants to look at last year's budget, last year we spent $270 million. This year we have upped the funding by $68 million to a new total. From last year the member should know the distribution. She's been in this House for a while. She knows how the $270 million was distributed. This year we will be looking at whichever is higher. So this additional $68 million added to the $270 million will be distributed either by the new formula or the old formula, whichever is more advantageous to the school board. In the following budgets we will be completely switching to the new formula, which will be using exclusively the criteria that I have listed, which is birth weight and many other socioeconomic indicators that allow for school boards to provide inclusion services in all of their schools.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Well, you're starting to get almost close to answering the question.

Last year a portion of that $270 million, which you talk about, was still going to kids who were profiled with severe special needs, and that money was going to boards based on a profile which had been frozen for the last four years. My question at this point, then, which you didn't answer yet, is: going forward, is that profile now abandoned, and is it the case that the criteria will have the money that was previously specifically directed to severe special needs now be shared with a larger group? I think that's a yes-or-no question at this point. I don't know why the minister is struggling to understand the question so much.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I don't feel like I'm struggling, Mr. Chairman. Do I look like I'm struggling?

Ms Notley: You sound like you're struggling.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, I cannot be more clear. Yes, in the past children were funded on a case-by-case basis based on the severity of the disability. This year in this budget children will be funded on a case-by-case basis only if it's advantageous to them in dollars. So if that generates more dollars, then the new formula for that particular child – that's how the child will be funded plus 2 per cent. If the new formula is more advantageous to the child, the child will be receiving the new formula. I don't know how much it will generate, but it will generate more, obviously, because it's advantageous.

The year after this all children will be funded on the new criteria, which, obviously, will continue to be advantageous to those who are on a per-file basis, and it will capture more kids because some kids simply were not coded and now will be able to benefit simply from the fact that they meet the criteria that are set out. That means that they either fall above the standards that are set out to be, quote, unquote, normal or below. So kids who are exceptional and kids who are disadvantaged by their disability or a variety of other factors will receive that extra funding.

Ms Notley: The reason I ask these questions – you know, I'm not trying to be intentionally antagonistic. The fact of the matter is that the only meaningful funding that comes from the ministry for children with disabilities in most cases is the funding that goes towards kids who are coded as severe. The other kids who are not coded as severe, who are acknowledged to have a mild or moderate disability, receive virtually no extra support in the classroom. The only way the parents, the teacher, or the administrator can touch or feel or see that additional support is by having the kids who are coded as severe and then having certain measures in place.

Now, if the money stays the same or about the same and it starts going in different ways, maybe you're making it more equitable, but what you're also going to do is make sure that that severely coded child no longer has an aide. So that's the problem that I'm trying to get at, and I still need to get the answer about how much was spent of that $270 million last year so that we can track it. That's all I'm looking for because I didn't have it last year.

However, before we get to that, the other question I want to ask before we get to the point that this is over is: the $68 million plus the $12 million, the $80 million, is that dedicated towards bringing into place the setting the directions framework? Is that what it's dedicated towards, or is any of it going directly to school boards for the per capita or per-child or per-profile basis, whatever the rules are, to go directly to fund up front? It appears from your press release that it's going to a sort of bureaucratic retooling to move towards setting the directions.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, first of all, relative to the initial comments of the member, the member insinuates that if a child was coded, that child actually receives the benefits of those dollars. Well, that ideally would have been true, but the member as an MLA who deals with parents would have known that that was not always the case. School boards always have had and always will have the ability to reprofile dollars. The fact is that even under the new formula, locally elected trustees will be able to reprofile those dollars as they see fit.

So just because a child was coded with a severe disability and a certain pocket of money was allotted to that particular child, that did not necessarily mean that the child in a tangible sense was receiving additional benefits by way of teaching assistants or aides or others equivalent to that dollar value. Those decisions often were made at a local level, where school board trustees were able to reprofile. That ability to reprofile dollars will remain.

To answer the member's second question, these dollars will be transferred to school boards based on per-child allocations based on the new criteria. Having said that, school boards will continue to have the ability to reprofile the dollars, but all of the dollars are intended to go towards providing additional special-needs services to children.

I believe I've answered the question. I think it's rather simple, but the member appears to be still dissatisfied. Maybe she should ask one more question.

Ms Notley: The fact of the matter is that often it did go to the children, but that's a whole different issue. We can have a discussion. You're right; it was totally up to the school board, and there was a relationship between the school board, the principal, and the parents in that decision. Now that's not there anymore, but that's not the point.

My question now is about the $68 million. How is that being used? The previous minister said that there would be a rollout of a framework and an accountability guideline and a structure for how that money is going to be used. I'm looking for an answer for how that money is being used. Is it in addition to the $12 million? So are we really talking about $80 million at this point?

4:50

Mr. Lukaszuk: The entire amount, Mr. Chairman, will be rolled out to school boards for the provision of additional special-needs services for children.

I don't know why this member would say that the relationship between school boards and principals and parents is gone. It seems to be slugging the school board day today. It appears that the members are not happy with any decisions school boards are making, yet our education seems to be firing on all cylinders. The fact is, I think, that the relationship between school boards and principals and parents will remain, and the new school act actually strengthens that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. The chair hesitates to interrupt the minister; however, we must proceed.

The chair does have an allocation here for a member from the Alberta Party or the independent member to join in if they wish at this time.

If not, then we'll proceed to any other members who wish to join in the debate. The first one that I had up was Calgary-Buffalo, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona. If any member wishes to speak, please indicate, and I'll add you to the list.

Calgary-Buffalo, please proceed.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I think one of those things that our education system is going to have to continue to adapt to is the increasing number of English as a second language students in our system. If we look at the government's own numbers, we'll need 100,000 more workers in this province in the next 10 years, many of them from out of province and out of country, and many times they're going to bring their families here. There's going to have to be a real concerted effort by this ministry to look at that.

If we look at the statistics coming out of Canada, people who do not have English as a second language skills or are coming from out of country are not doing as well as people who are more fluent in the language or were born here. Could you explain to me what our ESL funding is, what the percentage increase is, and what your future plans are in terms of continuing to support this endeavour?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, this member is entirely correct. This province has and will continue to attract immigrants.

An Hon. Member: Because of our low tax rate.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Because of the low tax rate that we have; that's right. Thank you for reminding me, hon. member.

Last year between immigrants and migrants to Alberta this province attracted some 120,000 newcomers. I have to tell you, Mr. Chairman, a bit of Alberta trivia that all members should know. Alberta has the highest rate of retention of migrants that come to Alberta. It's at 85 per cent. So 85 per cent of people who come to Alberta even for a while end up staying in Alberta permanently.

The number of children that we will have entering our schools who don't speak English as their first language, obviously, will continue to grow. That is why this ministry is increasing funding for ESL by 11 per cent, from $75.4 million to $83.9 million.

Mr. Hehr: How does that break down at the actual schools? If a person comes over here in grade 3, how many years of block funding does that person receive, and is this sufficient? I believe that program was reduced a couple of years ago, the amount of years they were supported. If that's not true, you can tell me, and we'll go from there.

Mr. Lukaszuk: The member would be correct. Some supplemental funding was removed at a certain point in time, but by far right now it's outstripped by the 11 per cent increase.

When a child is identified as an English as a second language learner, that child receives ESL funding for seven subsequent years. That funding follows the child within Alberta Education for seven years. It's a standard number that's being used. Some children acquire proficiency of the English language faster than others. Some would argue that having been in Canada for over 30 years, I could probably still qualify for English as a second language. But the fact is that seven years is the number that is allotted, and it seems to be doing well because you will find when you look at longitudinal studies of our kids that enter the system as English as a second language learners, they tend to be doing very well compared to the rest of the cohort of students.

Mr. Hehr: Well, let's talk here. You mentioned that we would need 400 schools in the next 10 years. I believe that's what you said. What are the ministry's plans to do that? If you have a number, what's the estimated financial cost of those 400 schools?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, you know, I have to underscore that the number right now, looking at capital plans, looking at growth projections and all that, is somewhere around 400. Don't quote me on that because I know the member from the Wildrose Party will now say that I have a secret list that has 400 schools on it. Not the case.

When you look at growth projections of kids, when you look at the state of infrastructure and the age of current buildings and growth patterns, the number hovers somewhere around 400 new schools over the next 10 years. So that is why we're working diligently with the Treasury Board right now on finding what funding mechanism we could put in place to actually allow for announcing all those schools. As you know, there's no ill will to building schools; frankly, everybody wants to build schools. You would like to cut a ribbon, I imagine, on a school in your riding if you needed one. The fact is that the current financial regime doesn't allow us to build as many schools as we need.

One of the differences between building schools in Alberta and most other provinces and then building other provincial infrastructure is that we don't amortize the cost of schools over a period of time, over the lifespan of the building, but we actually pay for them cash up front. If you were to build a provincial building or something else, you would be able to amortize. The reason is that the moment a school is built and ready for occupancy, we hand over the keys to a school board and no longer have the assets on our books.

So Treasury Board and I and others are working on finding a way that meets our Auditor General's requirements for recording financial expenditures on infrastructure and that would also liberate our ability to build that many schools over that short period of time. As you can anticipate, there will be those who will find objection with this, but the fact is that we need schools now for kids today and not falling further and further behind on infrastructure.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I would agree with much of what the minister says. It would be ridiculous not to build these schools where needed. I would suggest that it's fairly simple. There's nothing wrong with putting capital plans into a separate pool and allotment and borrow the money to do it, for crying out loud. Oftentimes we look at capital projects as being investments.

I think that part of the problem – and maybe we've done it over time – is that we've tried to amalgamate this into a paying-cash-for-everything thing. We recognize that the daily costs of running things, services, yeah, that's one thing, but actually investments in infrastructure, that you can pay over time by people who use them, would be a wise move for this government to do. Is that the plan? If it is, I commend you for it.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I'll tell you what. The plan actually goes even further because the other dilemma comes with: what do we do with existing schools that are perhaps no longer supported by student populations? So two things are being looked at right now.

When we build new schools, we have to make sure that schools are more than just schools because 30 years from now trustees and MLAs will be struggling with the same problem as migration shifts again. So I'm looking more towards a consultation with locally elected officials, municipal officials, with not-for-profit agencies to see whether we can create synergies and build more than just a school. Imagine building a school that has a medical clinic built into it and perhaps has a gymnasium built into it and some arts facility built into it. So we're looking at campuses. That is something that we're working on as well.

That still leaves us with the very unpleasant issue of empty schools. Often those buildings that are paid for by taxpayers still have a lot of life left in them. The problem is that they have no students. So we are looking as a crossministry initiative at the possibility of bringing other government wraparound services into those buildings, inviting not-for-profit service providers into those buildings so the buildings can still maintain their value and continue to provide the community with valuable services but perhaps no longer be places of education.

At the end of the day in this ministry – and I think our responsibility as government is to make sure that we provide the best education possible for children – when numbers drop to such a low level where it is impossible to provide programming and meaningful options and field trips and all that to children, difficult decisions have to be made by school boards. To ease that decision-making process for school boards, we're looking at creating an environment where other service providers can enter those buildings and perhaps provide equally important services to that community.

5:00

Mr. Hehr: In my view, deficit financing on schools is perfectly cool, and I think most people in these neighbourhoods would essentially agree. There are differences between capital and expenditures. Nevertheless, I realize every school is different, but you guys have an average cost of a school in Alberta, what that number would be just for the average school. If you guys looked at the 14 schools being built right now, what is the average cost of one school to go up?

Mr. Lukaszuk: You're right; it varies. An average K to 6 will cost you about $12 million. Those are probably the least expensive because of the specialized infrastructure that's not required. Gyms are smaller, and no science labs. When you're looking at high schools, for a capacity of about a thousand students you're hovering somewhere around $30 million for a building. They range. That is why often you will find elementary and junior high schools combined. Not only do they serve a wider cohort of students, but you find efficiencies in building two in one.

The range changes. As we are going to look at building campuses, you will be looking at partnerships with others, and that cost will be offset by that.

Mr. Hehr: A recent announcement on charter schools said that you were looking at eliminating the cap on student enrolments there. No?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Grow into the size of the building that they're in.

Mr. Hehr: Explain to me your announcement, so I get it straight again. Sorry.

Mr. Lukaszuk: The announcement, Mr. Chairman, was as such: number one, charter schools, I firmly believe, have proven themselves to provide a good quality of education to our children. Obviously, parents are voting with their feet. They're signing up kids into charter schools. The problem charter schools had is that their lifespan was five years, so by the time their charter was renewed, they had to start working and accumulating paperwork and be assessed to get their charter renewed. Now their charter is renewed for 15 years, where they will be able to plan, particularly from the side of infrastructure, longer term, maybe buy a building, enter into a long-term lease, and maybe find some efficiencies there.

The second part of the announcement was, Mr. Chairman, that certain charters were capped at a given number – let's say 300 students – but they were by default in a building that had capacity for 350 students. We will now allow the number of students to grow to the maximum capacity that the building can accommodate using our Alberta standards of how many children should be in a school building. So they can only grow to size.

Mr. Hehr: Do you have the numbers of how many more additional spaces, then, will be available in the upcoming year as a result of that change?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Hon. member, since it's not a budget number, I can give you that number later, but I have to tell you that it'll be negligible. Because of the popularity of charter schools most of them actually have grown to their maximum size. There are a few that haven't, so the number will be negligible, less than probably 5 per cent, by far, of the total enrolment of children.

Mr. Hehr: Okay. There's $192.5 million budgeted to support accredited private schools and early childhood services. How much is that, and has that been an increase since last year?

Mr. Lukaszuk: It's the same increase as all the other schools per child; however, they are not getting many of the other envelopes that have been given to the public and Catholic schools, so overall the answer would be no.

As the member knows, we don't pay for any infrastructure for private schools, and we fund them at 70 per cent of the per-student funding, the basic funding, but they don't get the additional envelopes. These schools have proven themselves, again, to be an asset and an asset of choice of parents, parents voting with their feet. Also, they don't get any allotment for class size initiative, and they get no transportation dollars either, so quite a significant overall difference in funding per pupil.

Mr. Chairman, you will find that the desire for charter or private schools stems from the fact that parents desire certain programs that may not be offered in a public setting, and even though charter schools are public, the public school board run schools always get the first right of refusal on a program. I am not suggesting that there will be a new charter application in Calgary, but I will give you a scenario where there could be one. Recently the Calgary board of education made a decision not to provide Arabic studies as a program of choice in Calgary. Well, I'm not sure how desirable that program is, how many parents are interested, but in a case where those parents were turned down, those parents, since it is so important for them to have their children learn their native tongue, may form a charter as a not-for-profit society for a charter application.

The same happens with private schools. In my riding we have an Islamic academy, which now has pretty well full enrolment. When I meet with the parents, this is the kind of program that they want for their children. We fund 70 per cent and no transportation, no classroom size, no infrastructure. They have to build or buy their own school. They do teach Alberta curriculum, and children are required to meet the same standards as kids in any other public school.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. I hear those arguments. Obviously, I come from a philosophical background that says: "Hey, you want a private school? Pay for it yourself." I don't think I'll ever be persuaded of that argument elsewhere, but sometimes if you grow up in a household long enough, you can't unlearn the stuff you've learned. We'll leave it at that.

I'd ask you, then. You know, you get up in question period, and you say: "We support choice. We love choice." Why is it you don't fund private schools to 100 per cent?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, because they have the option of being a charter school. That is the difference. I lived in a house long enough, too – and perhaps I won't change either – but the fact is that if parents want a specialized program that will be run as a nonprofit, governed by a board of parents or community volunteers, and if it's a program of choice that is not offered by a public system, they can apply for a charter and have a charter school that would be 100 per cent funded by the taxpayers' purse. If they choose to have a certain degree of autonomy and not be affiliated with any school board and have the school run by a board of directors that they elect, then there is a price that comes with that autonomy. Maybe that's somewhat in line with where your belief system is. If you want autonomy, you pay for it.

The fact is that we still expect children to receive basic education. Those parents pay property taxes. They pay for public education through their homes, through their properties that they have. They're taxpayers as well. We simply provide basic funding for basic education, but all the bells and whistles that the private school wants to offer, including a building, parents pay for themselves. The system seems to be working quite well.

That's why we have that wide range of options, you know. You can go into a public school that more and more offers individual programming, individual programs of choice. If those are not sufficient, go into a charter school. If that's not sufficient, then you go into a private school.

Mr. Hehr: Well, I argue that because this is upcoming and it relates to the budget. You know, Wildrose is now going to a voucher system. They're going to 100 per cent fund this stuff to help every person. Money follows the child into a private school. Money follows a child to a charter school at 100 per cent. I wonder if you can point me to the evidence where you're looking at societies that have gone to this funding model, full well knowing that Alberta has the highest funding of private schools throughout Canada. I can find very little evidence out there that says that this has an overall benefit for the whole of society's learning activities, which you as the minister should be in charge of, not worried about some individual family's needs or whether a religious sect or whatever wants a school, okay? If you can point me to that, maybe that will help me. I'll go read the study.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, you know, what they would do in the Wildrose is their thing. I firmly believe that education should not be driven by ideology. It should be driven by pragmatism. What's best for the children, right? So I don't entertain many of the ideas coming from that particular corner.

The fact is, I guess, that the best study that really exists, and I think the most conclusive study that exists, is the analysis of how our system performs vis-à-vis all other systems not only in Canada and the United States but throughout the world and the fact that having the system that we have and having the funding formula that we have and giving the parents this wide plethora of options that we give puts us in the top four position in the world. So I would say that it's very difficult to argue with success.

We should strive to improve our results. There are pockets of students that need additional attention. As you know, my personal passion is our aboriginal population, where we have a lot of work to do over a period of time. But at the end of the day don't fix it if it ain't broken. It seems to be doing very well.

5:10

Mr. Hehr: I understand the minister full well, and it's a credit to much of what we've done in Alberta that we're performing so high. Although I can say that you guys have screwed up health care 37 ways from Sunday, I can't necessarily say that about education. I do applaud you on that; nevertheless, it's the future.

Do you have any numbers of students of American descent who are currently going to private schools? What I see happening, at least in Calgary, are many Americans coming to our cities who are working in the oil patch, who are used to more of a private schooling option. They are choosing this more from a fundamental belief that that is it. I'm just wondering if . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I've been on the website since our last discussion, trying to track down the information that the minister says is there. It's still just for clarification; we're not getting exactly the information I'm looking for.

On your website you talked about $68 million being made available for the purpose of moving forward on your revised plan on inclusive education. In a time when conversations like this were accompanied with a great more clarity – let's just say that the previous minister was more inclined to that. He talked about the fact that the $12 million – and now I'm assuming it's $68 million, or maybe it's $80 million because I still haven't got an answer to that question – was really geared toward the process of revising and rejigging the system to implement the recommendations, which are far reaching and wide ranging and represent a significant change in the way things are done within our school system.

The idea was that first there'd be $12 million dedicated to that process, and now it appears from the website that $68 million is being dedicated to that purpose. So I understand, then, that we're looking at a total of $80 million although I've yet to get that answer given to me. But I'll try again. So you can tell me if that's what is being done.

My question is – because, again, in previous conversations with the Education minister last year I was told that we would be given much more clarity and description around the work that the government is doing with this $68 million or maybe $80 million and that we'd be told because, you know, it's $80 million; it's not a small amount. I think we're all interested in wise use of our dollars. The idea was that this was around the retooling process.

So I'm asking again if I can get some clarity around what the $12 million was used for last year and what the $68 million is going to be used for this year. Just that money. If I could get that information, I would really appreciate it. Hopefully, you won't take 40 minutes.

The Deputy Chair: As the chair I hesitate to interrupt, but the Government House Leader has caught my eye. As we're all well aware, pursuant to Standing Order 19(1)(c) the question must now be put on the motion for consideration of his Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech. Therefore, I will recognize the hon. Government House Leader for his motion.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply now rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Zwodzdesky in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the Department of Education relating to the 2012-13 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Does the House concur in the progress report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Those opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Hon. members, as you all know, under Standing Order 19(1)(c) the question must now be put for consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech. It's a procedural matter.

Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Fawcett moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Colonel (Retired) Donald S. Ethell, OC, OMM, AOE, MSC, CD, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Motion carried]

The Acting Speaker: Now, as indicated, we'll proceed with Motion 10.

Government Motions

Address in Reply to Speech from the Throne

10. Mr. Hancock moved on behalf of Ms Redford:
Be it resolved that the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne be engrossed and presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor by such members of the Assembly as are members of Executive Council.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other comments?

Seeing none, I would ask the hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Premier to close debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the Government House Leader, has moved a motion to close debate, so we'll vote on the motion.

[Government Motion 10 carried]

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the Committee of Supply to order now.

Main Estimates 2012-13

Education (continued)

The Deputy Chair: As you may know, the Committee of Supply has under consideration the Department of Education, and we are in the middle of the exchange between the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the Minister of Education. The chair is pleased to recognize the Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I've been trying sincerely to answer that question, and I'm not sure where the breakdown in communication is. Maybe I've been too long out of the classroom, and I'm not good at conveying information anymore.

Mr. Chairman, I want you to make note of the fact that today is actually quite an important day, with two breakthroughs. Number one, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has acknowledged that there is no secret list and now tells us that actually there is a possibility to create a list if I ever wanted to, so that is very important. The second one is that the member who is just asking me questions right now acknowledges that there is a website, that there is information on the website that was previously available, so that is a good deal, too, Mr. Chairman.

Let me try to answer the question in more detail. The entire $80 million will be going into classrooms. The money is allocated for provision of special-needs services. Tell me where I'm going off base. The money will be distributed in two ways. Historically it was on a per-file basis. Kids were diagnosed, they were coded, and certain codes allowed for certain additional funding. That's how money was directed to school boards. In cases where that form of funding is the higher of the two, that's how money will be distributed this year as well.

But we also have a new formula, which we are bringing into life starting this year, which will be the formula next year. You will be comparing funding vis-à-vis the old formula and the new formula. Whichever one is higher will be funding that child. Under the new formula the teacher will be making the call on whether the child requires additional services and what those services are. It's not the coding that will be determining, but the teacher will be making the decision what additional services the child needs.

5:20

The teacher will be making the determination of whether the child needs instructional support, assistive technology, learning coaches, literacy/numeracy services, community supports, counselling supports, speech/language support services, physical therapy supports, occupational therapy supports, mental or other health supports, vision/hearing support services.

The funding this year will be the higher of the two. The entire $80 million will be in the pot. That's how the money will be distributed. From the end of this fiscal year on we will be moving to the new formula, which will be looking at the child's demographic and the child's neighbourhood and the family that the child comes from, knowing that children from certain demographics do require additional funding and do require additional services, giving teachers that latitude to provide those additional services to a child who is not necessarily coded.

Those demographics that we will be looking at for extra funding will be: if the child is above or below the norm for average income; for the percentage of homeowners in that geographic area; for the mother's average education, because it's known to be a determining factor; for percentage of lone-parent families; for percentage of parents with no degree or postsecondary certificates; for low-weight gestation for the child; whether the child is aboriginal or not; whether the child is a refugee is not; whether the child is in care, in provincial custody; and also distance, and that is 40 kilometres from a major urban centre.

The child will be judged by those criteria, and if the child falls outside of the norm, additional funding will be provided to the school board. The entire $80 million will be going to school boards.

Ms Notley: I'm starting to see why I was perhaps a bit confused around this stuff. I'll be quite honest. In previous conversations with the previous minister, when we talked about setting the direction and action on inclusion, I specifically stated my concern, which continues to be quite significant, about this program and the merits of this program and the advisability of this program. One of the points that I would make, which, quite frankly, I have extreme support for amongst the teaching profession, is that teachers are not currently qualified to assess kids in their class.

For instance, we have speech pathologists, who go to school for years and years and years and years, and we have psychologists, who go to school for years and years and years and years, and they learn how to assess. Teachers, the vast majority of teachers, are in our classrooms right now without ever having taken a course on special needs, let alone distinguishing between the nature of special needs and the best practices and the peer-reviewed literature and the expert literature around the best mechanism for teaching different children with different special needs. Our teachers just are not equipped with that.

Now, when I'd had this conversation before, I'd always understood that this money, the $12 million last year and perhaps the $68 million this year, which now I'm hearing is different, would be dedicated to dealing with that gap. It would be dedicated to dealing with the fact that we're asking teachers to do something which they are absolutely not trained to do.

Maybe that's not what you're doing. Maybe what you're doing is that you are just throwing the full $80 million into the class, and you're just going to cross your fingers and close your eyes and hope that teachers who do not know how to engage in this process will simply learn it off the side of their desks by reading a couple of your online things. I have been on the website, and I have looked at some of the coaching literature and some of the lovely little online web courselets that are being offered for the teachers to read at home, you know, in their extra time and all that kind of stuff. Knowing what I do know about the expertise required to identify a learning program for children with special needs, I know that that's not enough. Maybe that's where the issue is.

You've got more money in there, but really what we've got is a profile that's been frozen for five years. Yes, we've now put $68 million into it, which is great, although if you do sort of population and inflation over the last five years, essentially this money has just now brought us back to where we were five years ago in terms of the funding.

There was a survey that came out from the ATA in December 2011, and I'm just wondering if the minister can speak to this. Given that the teachers are the ones who you anticipate carrying the load of this whole new area of practice for which they've never been trained and given that we really only put enough money back into the special-needs pot to bring us back to where we were in about 2007, 2008 and given that we have this survey where the number of teachers identifying significant deterioration in special-needs resourcing and special-needs support in the classroom has doubled – you know, in 2006 or 2007 25 per cent of teachers thought that special-needs education was in trouble; now over 50 per cent of teachers believe that special-needs education is in big trouble – I'm wondering if the minister can comment. Since that came out, you know, two months ago, how do you see this unfolding in a way that doesn't continue to compromise the educational outcomes of our special-needs kids?

The last question I'll ask on that. Last year I asked the previous minister about why we have no performance measures around special-needs kids' performance and holding ourselves accountable for how well our special-needs kids do. I see that indeed that's not changed one bit in the measures that you're using to keep yourself accountable even though we're in this incredibly chaotic change in your system. So why is that not in there? Why hasn't there been some work done on the accountability framework, that was specifically promised by the previous minister in the last estimates debate?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I have to tell you that the world does not look so bleak from this angle and from what I'm hearing and seeing. First of all, this member underestimates teachers' capacity and their ability to make decisions relevant to what the child requires. [interjection] I see the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo would like to contribute. I'll sit down and let him talk.

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, please. We're having a very good, high-level debate here, and the chair will do his utmost to keep it there. Hon. members, if you could keep your comments until your turn, that would be appreciated. At the moment the Minister of Education has the floor, and I would invite him to proceed.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that.

Debate Continued

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, teachers do have the capacity to make decisions as to what is required for the child, but it goes further than that. Under the current system, frankly, you will have a situation where you may have a child who is legally blind. Do you really need the child coded and going through the expensive assessments to determine whether the child is blind or not and what the child needs? Teachers can make those decisions very often.

Also, Mr. Chairman, teachers do receive significant in-servicing, and implementation of this particular model will perhaps require school boards and principals to make decisions on in-servicing teachers, at least particular teachers in a school, to develop that capacity, to be able to provide welcoming, inclusive schools for all children. At the end of the day the goal is that every school will have the capacity to be inclusive and to be welcoming to all students. That will be a skill that will be required of teachers as time goes on, and teachers can do this.

Also, that aligns itself very nicely with Bill 2, that is on the floor of our Legislature. As you know, one of the propositions of the bill, if passed, is the fact that parents' rights are being significantly elevated. Parents are now considered partners in education, where they will be making decisions relevant to the education of their child and will be provided access to information that will allow them to make well-informed decisions. The very parent of a child with a disability, who knows the child best, who has been involved in the medical treatment of that child supposedly for years, up to the time the child enters the school system, will also contribute expertise on what the child requires.

You will have collaborative decision-making between parents and educators, and I have full faith in the system that they can make those decisions. Some school boards may have consultants that they will be utilizing and using within the school board to make additional input on what devices and accommodations are the best for what child. But at the end of the day I have no concern that children will receive the help that they require.

5:30

Ms Notley: I wonder, Mr. Chair: could you tell me how much time I have left?

The Deputy Chair: You have five minutes and 45 seconds in this exchange.

Ms Notley: Thank you.

First of all, I don't want to suggest that I don't have confidence in teachers. I have all confidence in teachers, and I have confidence in teachers to teach the children that they themselves have been taught to teach. But I think that you are doing a disservice to the special-needs children of this province if you ignore the fact, the same fact that most teachers themselves understand, that the vast majority of them haven't been trained in special-needs education. Even for those who have been trained in special-needs education, most of them have not been trained in assessment.

You know, saying that I'm concerned about whether a bus driver can rebuild a carburetor but that somehow I don't trust whether they can drive or not is silly. They've been trained to do one thing, and that's what teachers tell me. They are worried about it because they have not been given the support and the training that is necessary to manage complex classrooms with a variety of children with special needs, a variety of behavioural needs, a variety of individual educational planning program requirements, a variety of different standards applied to their educational expectations. They haven't been given that training.

We've already heard about this ministry suggesting that class size is only relevant for the K to 3 population. I appreciate that the class size is not too bad right now for any population. That's fine although, again, we're looking at averages, so that's a bit concerning in those areas where the averages are not being met. But the fact of the matter is that, again, you know, special-needs kids have a different need for a proper class size, and teachers with three or four children who may have previously been coded as severely disabled in that class – it makes a difference. If they've got 20 kids and five who were previously coded severe and now no longer are coded severe, then the relevance of that class size is very different, depending on the composition.

The ministry's decision to focus on K to 3 for class size and to make that decision that 4 to 12 is irrelevant in terms of class size, according to the research and according to what the minister said to us last year in estimates, is an implicit systemic failure to understand the needs of special-needs children.

I'm not in any way critiquing teachers. Quite the opposite. I am here on behalf of teachers to give you the message that you are expecting them to create all the solutions with no resources and no support. They are frustrated and they are stressed and they are anxious because they know that the expectations of this current plan are such that ultimately it's Alberta's children who are going to suffer. That's my concern.

I'd like to switch quickly to the issue of predictable funding and the grant. I know the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has already raised this. You know, we've got the 1 per cent grant, and you guys are proposing 1 per cent, 2 per cent, 2 per cent. You're talking about three years of predictable funding, and there's a lot of self-congratulatory joy over there for having done that. But, of course, everybody has always said that it needed to be predictable, adequate funding.

My concern is that most estimates, conservative estimates, suggest that wage increases for 2012-2013, generally speaking, will be between 2 and 3 per cent, and for every 1 per cent miscalculation on your part I think we're looking at about a $50 million shortfall. If we want to have stability and we don't want the teacher salary and the funding of the teacher salary, not to mention the support staff salary, to continue to be a political football, the way it has been for the last three years, and to create the kind of chaos that it's created every summer over the last three years, how are we going to deal with that when you're currently planning for an increase that is much lower than what most – you know, the Conference Board of Canada is projecting a higher percentage wage increase this year for public-sector employees. How are you going to deal with that?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, let me deal with the first long comment. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that just because the funding formula will change for children, the provision of services doesn't necessarily have to be on a per-child basis. If a child comes to a school coded because the child is blind and now the child comes to school not coded but the child is blind, teachers still are making the decisions on what is best for the child and what adaptive devices and what assistance the child needs. When a child comes coded, it doesn't come with a list of devices that the child will need. Plus, there's funding for learning coaches that are being implemented throughout school boards. One of their jobs will be and is to work with teachers and to create that capacity so that proper decisions can be made for all children in all schools.

I still continue to believe that the system is in place to make decisions. At the end of the day there are consulting services that are available throughout school boards that can supplement that body of knowledge.

Relevant to salaries . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. I'm sorry to interrupt the hon. minister, but that concludes this exchange.

We now go to the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo or the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, whichever one is ready. Please proceed.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to continue and pick up where we'd left off last time. Just to refresh everybody's memory, we were talking about the fact that you had 62 school boards from across the province all submit their priority lists to the provincial government. We agree that that is occurring. The minister said that he would put those lists up online, which is great.

Then I was asking the minister about – every year he has to determine which of those priorities he's actually going to fund, in the order of the way the boards have laid them out, but of course you can't give the boards everything they want. You can only give them some, if any, of what they want, and therefore you've got to prioritize and say who gets what, which board gets how much money for what projects. He said: "Yeah, every year de novo we come and we make a new list from scratch every single year on the priorities for that year. Then we build those priorities with the money that we have in the budget."

My request was that not only would this minister on a go-forward basis put those priorities there, the one through 40, whatever, that he's going to fund that year, but also, based on criteria and so forth, that he publish the full list, well past what he is funding that year, on down the line from highest priority to lowest priority of what's next. What's the next priority for next year should all things remain the same? Of course, that would have to be updated every year and so forth; I understand that. But in that way it would be transparent. People could know why it's important to have a priority list, and it could be transparent that the education bureaucracy is not being used for political purposes. That's why I'm asking this very serious question. I hope I get an answer to it.

The minister was responding, saying: "You know what? People who don't get a school that year know they don't get a school that year. There's a vacant lot. You don't need to tell them." But maybe he misunderstood the point of having those other projects published. The point is transparency. It's to make sure that the next year when he de novo comes up with his new list, if the priority has changed from those schools that didn't make the cut the year before, if the priority in there has changed again, there has to be a reason for it. That will make sure that people can question the reasoning for it and say: "Look, this school was number two; it was the top school that didn't get funded last time. Why is it not being funded this year?" There would be transparency.

Would that not be a useful tool for parents and school boards and just Albertans in general? Would that be something that you'd be willing to put up, Minister, so that we could have that transparency?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, if the list was less static, I would agree with this member that it would make a lot of sense because if only 10 schools are being built and yours happens to be the 11th one, that in a sense would be a bit of good news because wait till the next batch of schools, and odds are yours will be funded.

If you were to print a list of schools you didn't build, what you would be de facto doing is actually setting up false and unfair expectations because there would be a fair degree of expectation, if you were that 11th school and only 10 got built, that in the next batch of schools you would actually be captured in the next 10 schools.

5:40

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that Albertans actually make very important life decisions, unfortunately in some cases erroneous, based on their anticipation of where a school will be built. I often speak with my constituents, and they tell me that a real estate agent promised them that where they're buying a house, there will be a school built one day. So they build their house because they're planning to have children, and they figure that by the time the kids reach school age, there will be a school. Well, 20 years later there is still a grassy field with maybe a soccer field on it. Now it gets to a point where those very same families don't want the school over there anymore because they're saying: "Frankly, I don't mind this green field. I don't need the noise of a school."

Setting up expectations that you will be receiving a school shortly, with the current funding model, would frankly be very unfair to families because families would be relocating to where they think schools will be built just to find out that their 11th school, which just didn't make the mark, all of a sudden is the 25th or 30th priority come the next capital plan because several school boards decided significantly to reject their own priorities.

Mr. Chairman, I don't think it would be transparent because transparency means providing Albertans with meaningful and truthful information. In this case it may be truthful, but it definitely would not be meaningful in any way because priorities change that significantly. If this member ever wants to sit down, I'll gladly do that with him and show him how priorities in school boards – I know he probably knows his own school board – throughout the province can change significantly and change the entire landscape of what's going on.

You know, if we decide to build a new school for Grimshaw, that will bump off another school somewhere. That's how fluid it really, really is. There's a better way of solving that problem, and I will ask this member and actually his entire party to be a little bit more open minded and co-operative on the issue of how we fund schools because there's a great deal of opposition coming from that corner of the Chamber on anything that resembles debt or debt financing.

The fact, Mr. Chairman, is that we need to look collaboratively at new ways of funding schools. If we continue funding schools cash up front, we will never ever build all the schools that we require, and we will be falling further and further behind in our infrastructure needs, assessing roughly that we will need some 400 schools over the next 10 years. We need to find innovative ways of building infrastructure so that his kids in Airdrie don't wait 15, 20 years for a school that they actually need today. Then what happens in 20 years when I finally have the money to build them a school? They may no longer need that school. Now instead of an elementary school they need a high school. That's what causes the fluidity.

We would actually need co-operation from the other side of the House to finally acknowledge the fact that some capital needs to be built faster than upfront cash payments would allow and that we need to be much more innovative. That is what the Premier has been talking about, looking at our fiscal plan. It's not about raising taxes but finding innovative ways of funding capital so that we can build schools today for children that need schools today. At the current rate it simply will not happen. Printing lists of schools that simply didn't make the cut is, frankly, meaningless because that list will be so different the year after that, for you, Mr. Chairman, to know that you are number 11 will mean nothing. That doesn't mean that your school will be built in the next batch or the batch after that.

Another reason for the fluidity was that we have introduced special projects where we have bundled schools, as you know, and we have used P3s, and those could be done in certain areas and not in others. So that also changes the priority plan when you introduce funding relevance and bundling and P3 projects. I'm hoping to be able to actually have schools financed directly through government and not through third parties and actually build adequate numbers of schools so that our kids have the spaces that they need and deserve.

Mr. Anderson: Well, I'm always looking for innovative ways to build new schools, but I'll tell you that I do not feel that debt is innovative. There are lots of ways to do things without mortgaging people's futures, and it's called reprioritizing. How many schools would that new MLA office across the way build, for example?

Mr. Boutillier: Three hundred million.

Mr. Anderson: Three hundred million dollars. I'd rather see that turned into schools.

Anyway, I'm glad that he's passionate about building new schools. That's good. But we should never sacrifice the needs of the here and now on the backs of future taxpayers. I just disagree fundamentally with that. I think you prioritize.

Mr. Denis: Do you have a mortgage?

Mr. Anderson: I have to explain this all the time to the House leader. He never understands. He says: do I have a mortgage? The difference is that after I pay the mortgage, I have a house that's worth something, that I can sell on the market if I need to. You can't sell a bridge, can you? Can you sell a bridge? No, you can't. So it's a big difference, a huge difference from a mortgage. It's just debt. In fact, the bridge actually costs more money to maintain as we go forward. Anyway, we're getting off track. I have this discussion with the House leader all the time. It's totally different.

With regard to transparency that was an interesting comment. I don't think transparency is telling Albertans what you think they need to know. I think transparency is telling Albertans what the truth is. So I think you've got it half right. When I say that, that means that they should see exactly why the schools that they requested got left off the list. There's criteria.

People in Alberta are smart, capable human beings that can analyze. They're rational about stuff. They know that the government can't build every school and every project that every Albertan wants. They get that. They really do understand that. But they will only understand it if the criteria is made public, the weighting system is made public, and they can therefore see why their school is not on the list that year, what moved it up, what moved it down. They'll be fine with that. Albertans just want to know what's going on.

That would be a lot more transparent than, you know, someone sitting in Beaumont or Castle Downs or anywhere else saying: "Why are we not getting schools right now? Our population is growing. We have new students that need schools, yet we're not getting our schools." At least then they would know why. The reason is because there are 12 schools in front of you that have a higher need based on these criteria and this weighting system.

I think that will only tell you what you need to know. I mean, that's typical of government, not just this government. All governments when they're in power don't want to tell people more than they need to know. Well, who's to determine what the people of Alberta need to know? They need to know all the information that you have in making your decision. Why shouldn't they know that? Why shouldn't they know why their school was left off the list? They should know that. Guess what? If you were that transparent, they wouldn't be mad at you for it; they would understand it. Well, I guess a few would be mad about it still, but I think at the end of the day the vast majority of people would be rational about it and say: well, obviously, these schools were needed more.

I just don't see the value in holding that information back. It's kind of like the Fraser Institute school rankings. The Fraser Institute rankings, we agree, are not a good indicator in and of themselves of a school's performance. They're not. They don't take all of the relevant information into account. However, that doesn't mean you hold back the test scores from the PATs from the Fraser Institute so that they can't make the rankings. And you haven't. Absolutely. You're not going to hold that information back as far as I know.

For that same reason don't hold this information back. Let Alberta parents know, and then let them decide whether your weighting system is correct. I bet you they will. I bet you that transparency will take the politics right out of schools. I won't need to organize or help organize folks coming up from Airdrie to protest for schools. I won't need to do that anymore because there'll be a transparent list with a weighting system. It'll all be completely transparent. [interjection] Well, then, publish it, though, hon. member. If you were doing it before, publish it. That's the point. More transparency. That's all I'm asking.

5:50

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, you know, this is quite interesting. I'm glad that this member had ample time to explain himself. Really, when you hear him say that, he's actually more concerned about me printing lists of schools that I didn't build, schools where children are crammed into portables or into Legion basements or into church basements because there are no schools, schools where kids are studying in hallways. He's more concerned about me printing lists of schools that we didn't build than actually engaging in meaningful dialogue on how we can build schools and provide children with schools right now, including in his own riding.

Because of his ideological narrow flaps he will not even consider the ability for creative financing of schools so that the kids in Airdrie can actually have a school maybe in two years, to satisfy all kids in Airdrie, that they actually need right now. I don't have to tell that member how crammed they are and how the space is inadequate. No. Ideology prevails. He will not look at alternative financing because he will not mortgage today's schools, that kids actually need today, on future finances.

The fact of the matter is that if you don't provide children with schools today, what kind of a future are you building? Yeah, maybe you will have a mortgage-free future, but you're going to have children with no schools in the meantime. I hope that this is not the kind of province and not the kind of vision that this government has in mind. The fact, Mr. Chairman, is that our kids throughout the province need schools today, and there are many ways of financing schools that are creative, that will benefit children today and their children into the future because these buildings will be standing around providing children with adequate education and adequate education spaces.

The ideological argument that you simply cannot either borrow money or use funding vehicles to build schools right now is, frankly, Mr. Chairman, ridiculous. The fact is that businesses don't buy factories and shops and stores with cash up front. Even if they had the money, they wouldn't do it because any financial adviser will tell you that often it is better to borrow money at an advantageous borrowing rate than to keep the money at a lower rate in your bank account, especially having the ability to borrow like the province of Alberta. Then you provide the service right now for children who need it right now.

On a consolidated statement, Mr. Chairman, the school is still an asset. Whether we're selling the school or not, the school is still an asset on the books, and your liability of $20 million to build that school shows as an asset that is depreciated every year on a consolidated budget like you would with any business.

You know, even the ideology that this member is so confined by, that will deprive our children of schools, doesn't make sense from a capitalist point of view because the fact is that you will find very few businesses anywhere in the world that are paying for their capital acquisitions with cash up front. Everybody amortizes the cost of their capital over the life of the capital. You write off the capital depreciation, and that's how you balance your books.

But, no, there is this ideological digging in your heels that: "We will not provide kids with schools. We will pay cash up front, and by doing so will not build enough schools, will continuously have a shortage of schools, will have children attending schools in church basements and Legion halls and have parents from Airdrie come over here to protest on the front stairs of the Legislature." But of paramount importance to this member and the Wildrose party is that they will only allow for paying cash up front, which allows me to build maybe 10 per cent of the schools that I need every year and to keep on falling further and further and further behind.

Mr. Chairman, what is even more mind boggling is that it doesn't allow us to maintain the schools that we have because every single penny that we have, we put towards building new schools. So we have schools that taxpayers actually spend money on that we don't maintain adequately because there aren't sufficient finances for that. It's a theory that makes no sense. It's a theory that's harmful to our kids. Our kids deserve spaces, and we will be looking into forms of financing that will allow us to build schools right now.

I really want that member to go to his Airdrie families – I met, actually, hundreds of them just a few weeks ago in Airdrie who desperately want schools – and tell them: "You know what? You may need schools, but my ideological limitations are more important than your desire for schools, than your need for schools, because I will simply not allow the government of today to enter into financial arrangements, that could be internal or external, to build the schools that they require.”

Well, if this member wants to be on the forefront of printing lists of schools that we didn’t build and have the parents have the satisfaction that this government is transparent and now they know why they don’t have a school, well, he may play and enter into that exercise. Mr. Chairman, I am more focused, with the Treasury Board and the Minister of Infrastructure, on spending our energy on actually printing lists of schools that we will be building where the schools are required, using whatever methodology we have to make sure that the children, the little guys, today have the proper spaces that they need today and into the future. That is what building the future of this province is.

We may find ourselves in a position one day, Mr. Chairman, of saying: “You know, I’m so proud of myself. I stuck to my ideologies so hard that I never borrowed a penny.” But you will be in a position where your schools will not be retrofitted, and you will be in a position where you will not have buildings and more and more kids will be in church basements and inadequate spaces.

Mr. Chairman, I think it’s obvious. With a population growing like ours, where 120,000 people came to Alberta last year, mostly young families with children, with the population shifting, we need to find more creative and more adequate ways of financing infrastructure, particularly school infrastructure, which is the foundation of our future. You know, passing a progressive piece of legislation like the school act right now and then not having the facilities that are required would be mind boggling.

I’m looking forward to my next meeting on this particular topic with the residents of Airdrie. I’ll tell them: “You know what? There are possibilities to build you a school, but for ideological reasons we simply won’t.”

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much. I’ve been listening to the comments of the tax-and-spend liberal, and my first observation is that I know the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere wants schools. What I find interesting, Mr. Chair, is the logic of this member and Minister of Education. I say that with a great deal of confidence as a teacher. My wife is also a teacher.

What I find interesting is that this minister thinks that it’s more important to take $350 million that could be used, Mr. Chairman, to build schools for little Johnny and Suzie, $350 million that is going to his government’s MLA offices and that could have been used to build schools. So the question I’m asking on this is about the fact that $350 million, which is very simply a priority: that could have been deflected to the minister.

Now, the minister did say, Mr. Chair, that he, of course, goes to the Treasury Board. So I would encourage this minister to go back to the Treasury Board before this budget is approved and as the Minister of Education fight for $350 million. It will not be debt. I am sure every Member of this Legislative Assembly would be willing to give up the $350 million of tax dollars that is being used for MLA offices when it could be used for schools, schools to help the folks in Airdrie-Chestermere and to help schools to be built in Fort McMurray.

I am pleased to see that the minister recognized earlier that here we have a school in Fort McMurray with 54 portables, yet they are spending $350 million for MLA offices. It’s very simple. We don’t have to go into debt. We can actually use the budget to be able to spend the money on schools. My constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, the member’s constituency of Airdrie-Chestermere, members of the Wildrose caucus, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona: we are saying that your priorities are wrong. We believe the priorities should go towards children and building schools.

I’m pleased that the minister thinks that it’s important to build schools, but the point is that it’s not ideological. It is quite simply that $350 million of this government’s budget is being wasted on MLA offices when it could have gone towards building schools. The reason I bring this up, Mr. Chair, is the fact that this member said that he goes back to the Treasury Board president. I see the Treasury Board president is here. So now it is the responsibility of the Minister of Education to go and fight and say: we want the $350 million directed towards schools.

Do you know, Mr. Chair, how many schools that $350 million could build? I will speak very slowly for the Minister of Finance because I know he’s not that good with numbers because he didn’t want to be the Minister of Finance. He wanted to continue to be the Minister of Energy. At an average of $40 million a school, we could have had almost – guess how many more – 10 more schools. That would have taken care of a school in Grimshaw, where children after 10 years still have cold hands when they try to go ahead and actually do assignments in that school. I heard the chairman of the school district yesterday talking about the fact. Ten years. The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace has been fighting for this, but obviously it’s fallen on some deaf ears of many ministers. I find it interesting, the fact that there was money.

6:00

To the Minister of Finance: did you hear this? Do you believe that 10 more schools could have been built? Not only that, but the member should have been aware of the fact there could have even been money used to build a long-term care centre. Or he might have forgotten about that when he was the wrecking ball in the ministry of health.

But that being the case, I want to not lose the focus of this minister. I’m sure that this minister wants to build schools. Ideologically, we do not have to go into debt. We can do this by taking $350 million. To the President of the Treasury Board, to the Minister of Finance, and to the Education minister: why don’t you have a meeting right afterwards, a Treasury Board special meeting, and say that with $350 million, we can build 10 more schools in this fiscal year. I think it would put a smile on the Minister of Education’s face because I know he was a dedicated teacher in his previous life. Deeply I do believe that this minister does want more schools. So to the Treasury Board president and to the Minister of Finance: I’m helping out the Minister of Education; we want 10 more schools rather than MLA offices for $350 million.

I think if the Minister of Education could get some help, if you want me to come over since I sat in Treasury Board, maybe – maybe – the Treasury Board president would readjust his priorities. To the Minister of Education: is he saying that it’s more important to have MLAs’ offices, wasting $350 million that could have been used to build 10 more schools? Ten more schools. To the Minister of Education: would the minister . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member who is speaking, but pursuant to Government Motion 6, agreed to on February 8, 2012, the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Zwodsky in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration resolutions for the Department of Education relating to the 2012-13 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Does the Assembly concur in the report? Please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Those who don't, please say no. So ordered.

Hon. Government House Leader, you caught my eye.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm being pressured to ask for unanimous consent to extend the day, but I think it more prudent to move that we adjourn till 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 6:04 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers	317
Introduction of Guests	317, 342
Members' Statements
Thom Elniski	318
Judicial Inquiry into Health Services	318
Edmonton-Mill Woods Persons Case Scholarship Winners	318
Departing Thoughts from Grande Prairie-Smoky	319
Alberta Hospital Edmonton	328
Integrity in Government	328
Oral Question Period
Long-term Care for Seniors	319
Municipal Financing	320
Judicial Inquiry into Health Services	320, 321, 325
Provincial Tax Policy	321
Municipal Property Tax Relief	322
Full-day Kindergarten Programs	322
Slave Lake Disaster Recovery Contracts	323
Westlawn Courts Seniors' Residence	323
Workforce Employment Services	323
Residential Construction Standards	324
Parental Choice in Education	324
PDD Administrative Review	325
Skilled Labour Shortage	326
Revenue from VLTs and Slot Machines	326, 327
Family Care Clinics	327
Presenting Petitions	328
Tabling Returns and Reports	328
Tablings to the Clerk	329
Orders of the Day	329
Committee of Supply
Main Estimates 2012-13
Department of Education	329, 342, 348
Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech	348
Government Motions
Address in Reply to Speech from the Throne	348

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fifth Session

Alberta Hansard

Wednesday, March 7, 2012

Issue 13

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 27th Legislature

Fifth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Hon. Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Hon. Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader,
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Hon. Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL)
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Hon. Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Hon. Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC)
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Hon. Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, Hon. F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Hon. Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (Ind)
Stelmach, Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, Hon. George, Whitecourt-Ste. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Webber, Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 67 Alberta Liberal: 8 Wildrose: 4 New Democrat: 2 Alberta: 1 Independent: 1

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

W.J. David McNeil, Clerk	Stephanie LeBlanc, Parliamentary Counsel & Legal Research Officer	Chris Caughell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Robert H. Reynolds, QC, Law Clerk/ Director of Interparliamentary Relations	Philip Massolin, Committee Research Co-ordinator	Gordon H. Munk, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Shannon Dean, Senior Parliamentary Counsel/Director of House Services	Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms	Liz Sim, Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Health and Wellness
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Ouellette
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
MacDonald
Mason
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Dr. Taft

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Rodney
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 7, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province, our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Water.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it is an honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some outstanding grade 6 students, teaching staff, and parents from Alder Flats elementary school in my constituency. This is the first half of their group. The others will be joining us tomorrow. They are here in Edmonton participating in the School at the Legislature program. I am so proud to have our guests here today, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker. I am so proud to rise today to introduce to you and through you one of my incredible staff members in the office, Rhonda DaSilva. I have to tell you what an honour it has been to have Rhonda in our office working with me for the past five months. Yesterday Rhonda passed a very special milestone, 25 years with the government of Alberta. Rhonda has worked in a variety of capacities at the Legislature throughout the years, ranging from the Premier's correspondence to serving as a legislative assistant, assisting committee chairs, working with the former minister, Greg Melchin, and with the former minister and hon. Member for Medicine Hat. Rhonda has been such an incredible part of our team. We are so proud to have her in our office. I'd like her to rise and get the extreme gratitude of this House for incredible years of service.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you today 48 visitors in all, 41 students from the great Deer Meadow school in Olds. They are seated in the public gallery, behind me. I might say that they have my back today. They are accompanied by teachers Mr. Greig Connolly, Ms Julia Robinson, Mrs. Joan Atkinson, and parent helper Mrs. Sandra Leatherdale. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some 23 very bright grade 5 and 6 students from the Christian school in Rocky Mountain House. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Mrs. Van't Bosch; assistant, Mrs. Piers; and parent helpers Mr. Harrold, Mrs. deRaadt, Mrs. VanderMeer, Mrs. VanGinkel, and Mrs. Klooster. I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you 54 students from Meyonohk elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. I had the pleasure of meeting these students just before the question period as part of their tour of the Legislature. In speaking with them, I'm assured that the future is in very good hands. They are accompanied today by five teachers – Mrs. Sylvester, Mr. Fairfield, Mr. Xu, Miss Kat, and Miss Houlgrave – as well as three parent volunteers: Ms Hanson, Mrs. Goldthorpe, and Ms Mosher. At this time I would ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Services.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to be able to rise to introduce to you and through you two very noteworthy individuals. These two gentlemen have worked incredibly hard to help pull off a wonderful event that took place February 28 to March 3 in our province, the 2012 Special Olympics Canada Winter Games. Our province had the honour of hosting this event this year, and without the dedication of people like my guests and hundreds of volunteers it would not have been the success it was. There'll be more in a member's statement later.

It's my pleasure to introduce Kirk De Fazio, president and CEO of Alberta Special Olympics, and Dan MacLennan, chair of the Games Organizing Committee for the Special Olympics Canada Winter Games. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like them to rise and receive the welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Special Olympics Canada Winter Games

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week, from February 28 through March 3, Alberta hosted the Special Olympics Canada Winter Games. Events were held in St. Albert and Jasper. It was the first time these two communities had the privilege of hosting Special Olympics winter athletes from across Canada. The province of Alberta was a proud presenting partner of the games.

Over five days 651 athletes competed in alpine and cross-country skiing, curling, figure skating, floor hockey, snowshoeing, and speed skating. These games were a qualifying competition for the 2013 Special Olympics World Winter Games in South Korea. There were cheers, hugs at the finish line, medal ceremonies, and an impressive spectacle at the opening and closing of the games. No less important was a sense of opportunity, achievement, and pure joy that prevailed among athletes, coaches, team staff, and family and friends.

Mr. Speaker, one of the major effects of any type of disability can be social isolation. Any event that highlights the strengths and capabilities of individuals with disabilities is something Alberta promotes and encourages. The Special Olympics movement has made a big difference in making our society more inclusive of all citizens. This was evident in St. Albert and Jasper, where the red carpet was rolled out for the games. In the two communities nearly 800 people stepped up to volunteer their time to make the games a success.

One small but telling example of the priceless social benefit of the games happened in St. Albert. After the last floor hockey event an unofficial pickup game took place between the St. Albert high school students who built the rinks and the Special Olympics floor hockey team from St. Albert. Not so long ago these people might have never met, certainly not as equals on the field of play, but there they were, spontaneously enjoying themselves, living the lessons that our society has learned. This is the legacy of the Special Olympics, Mr. Speaker, one that Alberta is proud to have supported and shared last week.

Finally, I'd like to congratulate the organizers, sponsors, and volunteers for their hard work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Integrity in Government

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me to rise and say how proud I am to serve the community of Fort McMurray both in this House and as the former mayor and councillor.

I've seen a lot over the years but nothing quite like the culture of corruption that has taken hold of this PC government. It's why I'm now on this side of the House. I've always been proud to stand up for my constituents. That's what I think we're all elected to do, and deep down I think that everyone in here would like to do that, but that's not allowed over there.

I was kicked out for standing up for seniors, for doing exactly what MLAs are elected to do. My colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere and my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek walked away from this government because they could no longer stand the smell. The former Treasury Board president, now the independent Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, got sick when the Premier used hard-earned Alberta tax dollars for a $70,000 pre-election junket at the Jasper Park Lodge.

School boards, municipal politicians, and doctors are now all coming forward and calling this government out for its culture of bullying, intimidation, and corruption. Mr. Speaker, a government that is only interested in power will do anything to try to keep it. That's what Betty Turpin, the superintendent of the Holy Family Catholic school division, experienced when she spoke up for school children. That's what the AUMA president, Linda Sloan, experienced when she told the truth about this government's pork-barrel politics and intimidation of doctors, and that's what Linda Slocombe and the Alberta Medical Association is protesting right now.

It all points to a culture of corruption, Mr. Speaker. The Premier said things would change, but the tone hasn't.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

1:40

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a more positive note, today more than ever I am proud to be an Albertan. Everywhere you look, people are working, earning a living, and contributing to Alberta's success. In fact, Alberta is leading this country in economic growth. Alberta accounted for about half of all the new jobs created in Canada over the past year and has one of the lowest unemployment rates in the world, at 4.9 per cent. Furthermore, Albertans continue to earn the highest wages in the country, almost 20 per cent above the national average.

Mr. Speaker, this is no coincidence. This government has created an economic climate where investors are willing to risk their capital, where businesses want to expand, and where people from around the world want to locate. For one, it's Alberta tax advantage that is a significant component of this success. Albertans and Alberta businesses continue to enjoy the lowest overall tax burden of all the provinces. Albertans and Alberta businesses pay the lowest income taxes in the country, the lowest fuel tax, no payroll tax, no capital tax, and no provincial sales tax. This low tax environment has spurred activity across this province, which is contributing to the revenue that funds the services that Albertans expect. Additionally, Budget 2012 projects a balanced budget next fiscal year and forecasts a surplus of $5.2 billion for 2014-15.

While the opposition speak gloom and doom about Alberta's prospects, Albertans know for themselves that today's Alberta is one where they can fulfill their dreams and look to the future, knowing that under the sound economic planning of this government, Alberta's best days are yet to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie

Dr. Brown: M. le Président, aujourd'hui je me lève à l'Assemblée pour souligner le début des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, une célébration nationale de la culture, de la langue, et du patrimoine français qui se déroulera du 9 au 25 mars. Établis en 1999, les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie témoignent des importantes contributions de 9.5 millions de Canadiens francophones et font la promotion des liens étroits qui existent entre les communautés francophones et les autres groupes sociaux au Canada.

Au cours des derniers jours plusieurs communautés à travers notre province ont organisé des levers de drapeaux à l'occasion des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie. Alors que nous hissons le drapeau franco-albertain à côté du drapeau albertain, j'encouragerais tous les Albertains à réfléchir au rôle important que la communauté francophone joue dans notre province.

Avec plus de 225,000 résidents qui parlent français, incluant notre Première ministre, la francophonie albertaine représente un groupe fort qui se tient ensemble et qui continue de croître, et des événements comme les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie nous aident à rappeler le rôle important que les francophones jouent dans notre société et leurs contributions à notre histoire et à notre croissance continue.

Dans les semaines qui suivront, je souhaite à tous les francophones des bonnes célébrations.

Merci.

[Translation] Mr. Speaker, I rise in the Assembly today to recognize the Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, a national celebration of French culture, language, and history that runs from March 9 to March 25. Established in 1999, the Rendez-vous de la Francophonie reflects the important contribution of Canada's 9.5 million francophones and promotes strong ties between francophone communities and other social groups within Canada.

Over the past few days communities across our province hosted flag-raising ceremonies to kick off Rendez-vous activities. As we fly the Franco-Albertan flag alongside Alberta's flag, I encourage all Albertans to reflect on the important role Alberta's francophone community plays in our province.

With more than 225,000 French-speaking residents, including our Premier herself, Alberta's Francophonie is a strong, close-knit group that continues to grow, and events like the Rendez-vous de la Francophonie serve to remind us of the important role French-speaking individuals play in our society and their contributions to our history and continued growth.

I want to wish all French-speaking individuals de bonnes célébrations in the coming weeks ahead.

Thank you. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-MacKay.

cSPACE Projects

Ms Woo-Paw: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to stand and speak about a creative initiative for and with Calgary's creative sector. The project is the result of an innovative partnership between the Calgary Foundation and Calgary Arts Development, who together purchased King Edward school, a distinctive heritage building, from the Calgary board of education for cSPACE Projects, founded as a nonprofit real estate enterprise dedicated to developing a network of multidisciplinary creative workspaces across the city of Calgary.

Creative reuse of school facilities for the expansion of the arts benefits our community in immeasurable ways, Mr. Speaker. It will preserve a historical sandstone school. It will ensure that more affordable workplaces exist for artists to create, rehearse, produce, and collaborate, enhancing cultural vibrancy in our city and our province.

As H.L. Mencken said: "The artist is not a reporter, but a Great Teacher. It is not his business to depict the world as it is, but as it ought to be." If artists are teachers, it is only fitting that many of them will soon be walking the halls of the King Edward school building. I truly believe that nurturing the arts in our communities is fundamental to the educational and social development of our citizens as well as the cultural and spiritual well-being of our society. I eagerly anticipate the transformation of this school into an exciting arts hub.

I would also like to highlight to the House that this project would not have been possible without the support of the municipal sustainability initiative, which enabled the city of Calgary to invest $5 million in support of this project. Our government is proud of the investments we are making in our cities, and I hope to see many more projects like this in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Level of Debate on Health Services

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to make a plea to our colleagues in this House to return the debate on health care to the civil discourse that it needs to enjoy. It's the most important issue that any of us will deal with in our lifetime here and in our private lives. We've let it become a political football that serves no purpose. The questions and responses are unbecoming, in my opinion, of what needs to happen. It is also a little troubling to me when you have an association like the AMA, who complains about political interference, take out an ad a week before an election and pretend that that's somehow not political.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think anyone has ever been elected to this House that didn't come here with the best of intentions, trying to do better for the health care system from every party that's in here, and I think Albertans expect from us the respect that they've shown us in electing us. I would say to those who use the challenges that face health care that those with all the answers don't fully understand the questions. That's the way it is.

I would ask all those who have the interest to get politically involved in health care to take a pill. Let the people who can deal with it deal with it. It's a very good health care system in Alberta.

It can be better, and it will be, but it won't be if we treat it like a second-rate issue in here.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of a motion, which I hope the House will deal with tomorrow pursuant to a memo that you had sent to all House leaders:

Be it resolved that

- (1) Mr. Rick Hansen be invited to the floor of this Chamber to address the Legislative Assembly on Monday, March 12, 2012;
 - (2) This address be the first item of business after the singing of O Canada; and
 - (3) The ordinary business of the Assembly resume upon the conclusion of Mr. Hansen's address;
- and be it further resolved that Mr. Hansen's address become part of the permanent records of the Assembly.

I trust we'll be able to deal with the motion in the House tomorrow.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Bill 204

Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2012

Mr. Allred: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 204, the Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2012.

Bill 204 would abolish from Alberta legislation all mention of the common law doctrine of adverse possession. This bill purports that the doctrine of adverse possession, often known as squatters' rights, is an outdated law that is arguably incompatible with the land tenure system in the province of Alberta. Abolishing adverse possession would assure Alberta landowners that they will not be at risk of losing land to a neighbour who has accidentally or intentionally been trespassing on their property. Alberta is the only Torrens jurisdiction of land registration in Canada that still recognizes the doctrine of adverse possession. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 seeks to remove outdated legislation, helping to ensure Alberta's laws are current and effective.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a first time]

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Advocacy to Government

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At Monday's press conference the Premier spoke about the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace's threatening letter to a local school superintendent. The Premier said, "If I have asked anyone who is a member of my caucus to take on any sort of leadership responsibility, I want their approach [to what they are doing] to reflect my values." To the Minister of Education: when you scolded the Holy Family school division because you didn't like their video showing the truth about the desperate conditions of the rundown school in Grimshaw, did that reflect the Premier's values?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I don't know, Mr. Speaker, what province the Leader of the Opposition is in that he thinks that I scolded anybody. As a matter of fact, the school board has produced a video. I have indicated to the school board that instead of producing a video, just invite me to the school. They have, actually, and I visited the school. I crawled underneath the gym basement and went into every nook and cranny of that school that you can find. That's how we do business. School boards invite me, I show up, and we work in collaboration.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, it was that $7,000 video and a scolding that was required for the government to look at the school.

To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: when you scolded and bullied the AUMA president, Linda Sloan, and threatened to have the entire government caucus boycott the AUMA breakfast because you didn't like something she said, did that also reflect the Premier's values?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's values have always been one of working in collaboration, not working on issues through the media or making insinuations that are completely inappropriate and incredibly inaccurate. We've always taken criticism on the budget or any other issue. But making slanderous accusations that aren't founded or warranted in any way, shape, or form: that's not the way we operate.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, only in this Legislature do facts become insinuations.

To the Minister of Finance. Another fact. When you yelled profanities at Airdrie Alderman Allan Hunter at a public meeting because you didn't like the question that he asked you, did your rude and offensive behaviour reflect this Premier's values?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I don't recall this member being at the meeting.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, a non answer is the only answer they can give.

Judicial Inquiry into Health Services

Dr. Sherman: Thank you. Everybody knows that we have among the best health care staff in the world, and once patients get into their hands, it's great care. Everybody also knows that we urgently need a fully independent judicial inquiry into why our health care system is broken, who broke it, and which politicians are responsible for the bullying of doctors and political interference. The Premier knows it. She promised it. The backroom puppet masters made her back down; another blunder. To the Minister of Health and Wellness. Now that the AMA has taken out a full-page ad slamming the Premier for breaking her promise to include bullying of doctors in an inquiry, tell me: why do you continue to disrespect Alberta's doctors? Why, Minister?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this province and this government have a very proud tradition of not only respecting but working collaboratively with our physicians, a history that includes a trilateral master agreement that had eight years' duration, a history that includes an agreement that saw the beginning of primary care networks, now numbering over 40, across the province. This government does respect doctors. This government is working with doctors. This government is not using our doctors as a political football in this Assembly.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, given that we're on the planet Earth, I'm not sure which planet this minister is on. The Health Quality Council clearly stated that there's a culture of fear and intimidation and found "bureaucratic and political interference" in our health system. Could the Minister of Health and Wellness please enlighten this House as to where the political interference comes from and why those guilty of this political interference should neither be investigated nor face consequences? These are bullies.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I won't take the House's time by responding to mischaracterizations of the Health Quality Council report offered by the hon. member. The fact of the matter is that the Health Quality Council investigated these allegations thoroughly. They provided a series of recommendations, which the government has accepted, to address that issue. What this government is interested in and what Albertans are interested in is action on those recommendations to improve the culture in which all health professionals practise.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I can't believe the minister just stood up and said that what the Health Quality Council said was a mischaracterization.

Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Perhaps it would be better to ask you this. Have you kept the issues of doctor intimidation and political interference out of the judicial inquiry into health care because you and the Member for Calgary-West are too terrified to testify? Come on, Minister.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what I find remarkable, as a matter of fact, is the fact that this hon. member, who a little over a week ago dismissed the Health Quality Council report as a whitewash, has the audacity to stand in front of his colleagues today, attempt to cite the report using his own words and characterizations, and cite it as a basis for further action. The government has accepted the recommendations. We accept the findings for what they are, and we're prepared to move forward along with our doctors and other health professionals.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the government's handling of the report is an absolute whitewash.

Provincial Budget Advertisement

Dr. Sherman: Well, Mr. Speaker, the blunders just keep coming. The PC scandal of the day: we had Donationgate; now we have Adgate. With an election call merely days or weeks away the government is ripping off Albertans to the tune of $425,000 by wasting it on pre-election campaign ads. Scott Hennig of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation called this ad, quote, bad in general and horribly insulting, unquote, while the Deputy Premier says that it's not about shameless self-promotion at all. Yeah, right. To the Finance minister. Talk about rude and offensive. Why do you continue to insult the intelligence . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, when the President of the Treasury Board and I travelled this province in the fall, what Albertans told us was that they wanted to know more about what the budget would contain. They wanted to have input. They wanted to know if they were listened to. What we are doing is ensuring that Albertans understand what's in the budget, because what we hear from the opposition is clearly not what's in the budget. The one way we have to communicate is directly with Albertans, not through the media, not through the opposition. That's why we are undertaking a campaign to ensure that Albertans fully understand what is in this budget.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance, one of the ones who broke the health system: given that, as you may be aware, the budget has not even passed yet, a budget you can't balance because you broke health care – although the good Lord knows this government has the votes to pass it on that side – just whose votes are you trying to buy with this $425,000 ad campaign mere weeks or days before an election?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, this government is very proud of this budget. What I have heard when I've travelled this province since we introduced the budget is that Albertans are very proud and very pleased to be living in this province when you consider what's happening around the world.

You know, it's very interesting to hear this member because we heard this member earlier in this House making a whole bunch of allegations that the Health Quality Council found were inappropriate and outright not provable. Where are those questions these days from this hon. member, who sat in the back making these kinds of accusations, Mr. Speaker? Now he doesn't have the courage to stand up and apologize to this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Put Dr. Winton and Dr. Ciaran McNamee on the stand and you get on the stand, and you'll get the answers.

Given that this PC government passed a law limiting third-party advertising yet according to the report on the March 3, 2008, provincial general election of the 27th Assembly it states on page 77 that the act is also silent on "the suspension of Government advertising during elections," to the Minister of Finance: how many more taxpayer dollars does this government plan to waste on pre-election advertising, and will this government be running election ads during the election campaign itself?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, this government asked the Health Quality Council to investigate exactly what the allegations were that this particular member made. The Health Quality Council did an excellent job in reviewing all of the accusations, came forward and said that there was no foundation to the accusations that this particular member made when it came to people dying on waiting lists and doctors being paid hush money. He does not have the courage to stand up in this Assembly and apologize for that, and until he does, we won't respond to those questions.

2:00

MLA Remuneration

Mr. Anderson: It's good to see everybody in such a good mood this afternoon.

This government is renowned for finding ways to give themselves pay increases and then hiding it from the average Albertan. To repeat what the Wildrose has been advocating for the last two years: MLAs should be paid a single, taxable salary – no extra committee pay, no tax-free allowances, just a monthly paycheque like all regular Albertans – MLA severance should also be cut by two-thirds, and the 30 per cent increase to cabinet salaries voted for by this Premier must be reversed. Premier, will you roll back your 30 per cent pay increase, cut your severance, and combine all MLA pay into one taxable amount that Albertans can easily understand?

Mr. Horner: As I recall, one of the people who asked for the review of MLA salaries was that opposition member and the opposition parties. In fact, our Premier has said that we will have a judicial review of the MLA compensation package, which you yourself, Mr. Speaker, have initiated as chair of Members' Services of this Assembly. We are fully aware of what's going on out there. We anticipate that that report is going to come back through the Speaker, and we will adjust that at that point.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that the taxes that we don't pay would actually end up going to the federal government.

Mr. Anderson: That's interesting. I like that one.

Given that this government has found a way to delay having to vote on Justice Major's MLA pay and perks report until – guess what? – after the election, will your government join with the Wildrose Party and commit that should Justice Major's report come back with a net increase in pay or perks for MLAs or cabinet, you will vote against such a recommendation? Show some leadership: you'll only take lower, not higher.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I find it incredible that the opposition members would call for an inquiry, call for a justice committee, call for it to be independent, and then say: oh, by the way, whatever he comes up with, you can't accept it.

Mr. Anderson: So you refuse to commit to no new taxes and to not raising your pay. Sounds like a great election platform. Good one.

Given that you claim to be listening to Albertans and given that 79 per cent of Albertans in a public opinion poll released last week want the current MLA severance packages tossed and 85 per cent say MLA salaries should be fully taxed, will this government commit today that you will cut the MLA golden parachutes, roll back your highest in Canada cabinet salaries, and pay MLAs one taxable monthly salary instead of this labyrinth of tax-free allowances and committee pay?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member has just proven why we have to have the advertising and the communication to Albertans. Because he once again is either ill informed or is not telling the truth about the fact that there are no new taxes in this budget. There are no new taxes in this budget.

I say again: what kind of hypocritical party would come out and say, "Get an inquiry going," and then say, "I don't care what it says; you'll do what we say"? Mr. Speaker, they're hypocrites.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Full-day Kindergarten Programs

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In last summer's bid for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party the Premier promised Alberta's young families full-day kindergarten. Well, the budget has come, and once again we see that there's no money for full-day kindergarten and that the Education minister is making no specific commitments for the fall of 2013. To the Education minister: why should young families trust the Conservatives after yet another broken promise?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I had plenty of opportunity to answer those questions yesterday. I have reassured that member and the entire Assembly that the Premier's commitment to full-time kindergarten has not only been met but is being delivered on. We are working with school boards on making sure that they can unroll kindergarten. The member may not appreciate it, but teachers have to be hired, classrooms have to be located, classrooms have to be equipped. We will be rolling it out and making it available to Albertans over time.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that 25 per cent of kindergartens in Alberta are already full-day at the expense of the school boards and given that many communities already have more than enough space to accommodate full-day kindergarten, why won't the government at least start to keep their promise by funding these areas this year?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, having gone over my budget yesterday, I hoped that the member would have noticed that the government of Alberta and the Ministry of Education have increased early childhood education funding to make paying for full-time kindergarten for those parents who are able to enrol their children in this upcoming year available.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, given that the Conservatives were told to start full-day kindergarten as early as 2003 and they've been making Alberta's children wait ever since and given that this minister is clearly ducking and weaving on making commitments for this year or next year, how can Alberta's young families expect to believe they will ever have full-day kindergarten under this PC government?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, let me make this perfectly clear to this member. The Premier has made a commitment. I have made a commitment. We are unrolling right now kindergarten through school boards. Kindergarten will be available to any child in Alberta, and it will be rolled out in co-operation with school boards. Twenty-five per cent of school boards already have it. Money is allocated in the budget. I have no idea why this member is concerned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Judicial Inquiry into Health Services (continued)

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This health minister is clearly in denial and desperately wants this inquiry debacle to go away. He knows that a task force and another plan are not going to create a, quotes, just culture in health care after a decade of abuse. A public inquiry with individual accountability and personnel changes in the system is the evidence that health professionals need to restore trust and start working on the problems together. To the minister: was it the Premier or the cabinet that decided to betray her promise to inquire into bullying and intimidation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hardly a question of government policy. But for the benefit of the hon. member once again I would submit to him that the findings that are necessary to understand the problem that exists with respect to physician advocacy and the potential problems for advocacy by other health professionals are to be found in the Health Quality Council report.

Everything we have done – the report; the acceptance of the recommendations; the calling of the public inquiry into the remaining, unexplored allegation of queue-jumping; and all of our work with health professionals today – is designed to do one thing which we should all be interested in: improving health care for Albertans.

Dr. Swann: Again, Mr. Speaker, what is the minister trying to protect? Who are you trying to protect?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding that the insinuations appear to continue, nobody is trying to protect anything. What we have said as a government quite clearly is that we accept the findings in the report for what they are. The Premier said so on a number of occasions last week. We are interested in moving forward. We are interested in moving on the very actionable recommendations. The steps are laid out in the Health Quality Council report. I think that is what our health providers want, and I think that is what results in better quality care.

Dr. Swann: Will the minister finally admit that he has been intimately involved with health care delivery for 25 years in this province, knows about the abuse in health care, and it's you that is trying to protect yourself from the health inquiry? Admit it.

Mr. Horne: This minister, this Premier, and this government are fully accountable for health care in this province, and we will continue to be so in the future. I think where the twisted logic lies, Mr. Speaker, is in the answer to the question: how do we move forward? How do we create the just and trusting culture that the Health Quality Council report talks about? That is what I would expect a health professional, particularly someone who is a health professional and a member of this Assembly, to be most interested in.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Cancer Drug Shortage

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A Canadian drug manufacturer has recently ceased production of medications that are critical for cancer patients so that they can manage their pain and nausea. Many Albertans are very concerned that they will not have the right medication for their treatments or that their treatments may even be cancelled. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: can you reassure Albertans that you are working on a solution?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. A generic drug manufacturer in Canada, Sandoz Canada, is currently refitting a number of its plants in Canada and the United States in order to comply with regulations of the federal drug administration in the United States. We are experiencing nationally a shortage of some drugs, not drugs that are used in direct cancer treatment but anti-nausea drugs that are administered to patients prior to chemotherapy. There are a number of other injectable anaesthetics and painkillers involved.

2:10

Ms Woo-Paw: Also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I've learned that there's a reason that these drugs are injected and not taken orally. Are these substitute medications sufficient for the pain and nausea that they may experience, and how will Albertans get access to them if they are outpatients?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we currently have two antinausea drugs that were previously made available to patients through injection, and we have had a situation arise where a number of patients have been asked by their physicians to switch to an oral medication that provides the same effect. This is being accommodated at present. We're monitoring the situation closely. Health Link Alberta is available to any Albertan who has questions about the situation both with respect to the medications that are involved and what other steps they may need to take in terms of contacting their physician to see how this could affect them.

Ms Woo-Paw: To the same minister. These medications are essential in our health care system. Why is it that the province has not sourced drugs from other manufacturers? Why have we put all of our eggs in one basket when it comes to these essential medications?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, earlier this morning I spoke to the federal Health minister about this very issue. A number of the provinces and territories are looking to the federal government to take a greater role in helping us to collectively secure alternate supplies of many of these drugs. While it is true that Health Canada licensed many companies around the world to produce these drugs, not all of those companies actually produce them because they lack sufficient volume in order to justify their business case to ramp up production. This is an issue that I'll be pursuing tomorrow when I lead a call of provincial ministers from other jurisdictions. It's something that we must address, I believe, nationally.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Vulnerable Albertans waited three long years for an increase in the benefits they're entitled to receive under the province's assured income for the severely handicapped program. Now we learn that residents of long-term care and other continuing care facilities won't be receiving the $400 a month increase recently announced. To the Minister of Seniors: why aren't those AISH clients who live in our continuing care facilities receiving the increase?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, as you know, the AISH increase was announced. The cheques will be going out March 27. Those that qualify for it medically and that qualify for it financially will receive their benefit.

Mr. Chase: Why don't they all qualify? Given the Premier's threat to remove the cap on accommodation fees in the province's long-term care facilities, how are vulnerable Albertans supposed to afford the continuing care they need? The sky is the limit.

Mr. VanderBurg: Listen, Mr. Speaker. It's very, very clear that this government protects vulnerable Albertans and low-income Albertans. We have programs in place. We have not changed anything as far as the accommodation rate, and I don't plan on changing anything on the accommodation rate. I've made it very, very clear to everybody that until there is a massive, province-wide and in here debate on accommodation rates, we'll leave them alone.

Mr. Chase: I hope voters remember those words.

Why have the prescription, dental, and other health benefits AISH provides only been increased this year by 1.8 per cent?

Mr. VanderBurg: Again, Mr. Speaker, the programs that we have under our AISH program are the most comprehensive programs around this country. We stand by them. There's an increase in the budget to make sure that we have adequate supply of supports for our AISH clients, and I stand by them, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Pharmaceutical Benefit for Seniors

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A large number of seniors in my constituency have asked me about the status of the seniors' drug plan that was proposed a few years ago. They remain uncertain about the government's intention about this plan. They don't know whether it was shelved, delayed, or cancelled. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: can the minister provide an update to the seniors in my constituency and to all Alberta seniors about the status of this plan?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the government has no plans to make any changes to the seniors' drug plan in Alberta. Seniors continue to receive premium-free coverage for prescription medications, ambulance services, and coverage of $300 per year for psychological services as well as $200 per year for home nursing care. The government pays 70 per cent of the cost of each prescription. Seniors pay the remaining 30 per cent to a maximum of $25 per prescription.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Many seniors who are on fixed incomes are having difficulty paying for their prescriptions and oftentimes are not getting prescriptions refilled because of the cost. Is there any assistance provided through the current plan to assist these individuals?

Mr. Horne: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is. There's a program called the special-needs assistance for seniors administered by the Alberta Seniors ministry. It provides assistance for what seniors pay for prescription medications who cannot afford to pay the regular copayment. Funding is available for low-income seniors for prescriptions above $45 per month for single seniors and $90 per couple.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the same minister: can the minister provide the Assembly with greater details about recent enhancements to the seniors' drug plan?

Mr. Horne: I'm delighted to provide that information, Mr. Speaker. Recently we announced funding for diabetic test supplies for insulin-treated seniors in Alberta. This includes coverage of up to $600 per year. It will be made available to all seniors and their dependants for test strips, needles, and syringes. We believe that if we want people to participate actively in managing chronic diseases like diabetes, we need to give them the tools to do it.

MLA Remuneration (continued)

Mr. Hehr: Several years ago this government was rightly ridiculed for paying their backbenchers tens of thousands of dollars for sitting on committees that never met, produced no documents, and made no recommendations. To the Deputy Premier. This government has now received the Teddy award for having a standing committee on privileges and elections that has been paid about a million dollars over the last four years for never meeting and never getting to the point of anything. I was wondering if you could comment on this and whether any corrective action will be taken by this government.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm in a bit of a quandary given the fact that this is an Assembly committee. This is a committee that falls under Members' Services. It's an all-party committee, and as such the committee falls under the purview of yourself.

Having said that, the independent MLA compensation review, that we spoke of earlier today, is going to take a look at all of those committees, and we expect, Mr. Speaker, that there will be some recommendations brought forward that may indeed deal with this issue when it comes forward.

Mr. Hehr: Well, nevertheless, we have no idea what that report is going to say, and this could, in fact, still be an issue outstanding. This issue makes us all look bad, Mr. Deputy Premier. I was wondering if we could get a commitment from you that if this is not dealt with in that report, we could have some sort of situation in place to end this practice, that would stop making us look this bad.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, whether I agree or disagree with the hon. member isn't the point. If he would like, bring a motion forward to the floor of this Assembly as it relates to the committees of this House or bring a motion forward to the Members' Services Committee. They have members on that committee, and I would encourage them to sit down and have that discussion with yourself.

Mr. Hehr: We also know that our standing committees are a majority vote, and the majority is controlled by this government.

Can we see some commitment by you, Deputy Premier, to maybe lead this charge to eliminate what is seen by the electorate as wasteful spending?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, again, I seem to be debating something that should be debated at the committees. As I would point out, all of these committees are recorded in Hansard, as I understand it, and the public can review for themselves whether or not these hon. members have ever brought this issue up at their committee meetings in the past. I doubt that they have. Playing to the media is not really playing to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Safe Communities Initiative

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The $60 million safe communities innovation fund provided three-year funding to 88 projects to support safe and strong communities by reducing and preventing crime through community and police partnerships. My first question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. How will the recently announced bridge funding make a difference in Alberta communities, especially those that are within my constituency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The safe communities innovation fund is an example of the innovative approach that our government has been taking in terms of crime prevention and crime reduction. The three-year program of the safe communities innovation fund was to find these innovative projects around the province. We're nearing the end of the three years, so it's necessary for us to now analyze the data that's been given to us by those projects that were funded in the early years. We need a little bit of time for them to get their information to us, and we need some time to analyze it, so that's the purpose of the extension.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. My organizations which receive this funding want to know: will bridge funding be extended to pilot projects from the second and third rounds once their funding expires?

2:20

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're focused right now on the projects that are nearing the end of their three years. We expect that we will not have the same issue in the second- and third-year funding because we will be encouraging, if not requiring, those projects to finish their data presentation at an earlier time so that we have time to analyze it before the end of the year.

Our focus right now is on the 28 projects that were funded in the first year. We're going to give them some extra time. Then if they apply for additional funding, we will be able to help them.

Ms Calahasen: Again to the same minister: given that the safe communities innovation fund is a significant commitment in accountability and transparency, that people are always wondering about, what evaluation tools are in place to ensure that pilot projects are providing value to their communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question, and it's one that we're working very hard on because we take that part of it very seriously. That's why all of these organizations are contractually obligated to provide us with this information. We are working on a model for social return on investment, which is an innovative model. We would like all of these organizations to then work on a business case so that they can be accountable not only to us but also to other funders in their community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Grimshaw Holy Family School

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A school that the Minister of Education admits must be bulldozed is being used to provide education to children. All parties agree this school has serious problems. The minister himself says that it needs to be, quote, junked. Will this minister commit to this project getting under way this year, and if not, will he specifically provide a commitment of a time as to when that school can expect to finally get the assistance and support it needs?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, unlike the hon. member my only priority is to make sure that the children receive adequate space for learning as soon as possible, in as short a time period as possible. I will be working right now with the school board to find out what are the best options. Yes, I am making a commitment that they will have appropriate space as soon as possible. We will be working in collaboration not only with the school board but also with the municipality. We have already engaged in discussions. I wish the member would join us constructively and actually contribute some positive ideas as opposed to trying to turn an issue of kids in schools into a political issue.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that what would be constructive would be getting some specifics out of this minister, oh, just once.

Now, given that it's taken local people to bravely speak out publicly about this unsafe and unhealthy school and given that we've already seen evidence of how this government operates to make sure school boards otherwise stay quiet, how can we believe that the refusal of this Minister of Education to make any kind of solid, specific commitment is anything other than continued retribution for this board's need to speak publicly?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of commitment, this member is the Education critic. I have yet to receive one memo, one letter, one phone call, or a visit to my office from this member to share some positive, constructive criticism or ideas.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what I'm doing. I met with that school board on a number of occasions already. I met with the locally elected municipal council. We're looking at a solution to provide children with space that the community will be proud of and that the kids will enjoy on Monday morning going to school.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that we've got no commitment yet, clearly, meeting with this minister provides no solution.

Now, given that there have been years of underfunding for maintenance and given that we wouldn't know about the health and safety hazards to the children at Holy Family had it not been for the public advocacy of that school board, why won't the minister make public all other schools where assessments have demonstrated significant health and safety issues that are threatening our children?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the school board finds a lot of value in meeting with me because they have met with me on several occasions. The school board is as committed as I am to making sure that kids receive adequate and appropriate space in as short a period as possible. We will be working on it.

But I do sincerely try to engage this hon. member. If she has any constructive ideas on how we can provide kids with that space sooner, I would more than welcome hearing them.

Conflict of Interest Guidelines for Universities

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, my questions are to the minister of advanced education. There are concerns about conflicts of interest in Alberta universities where professors and researchers are being paid by both universities and corporations. For instance, when research into lung cancer is funded by a tobacco company, there are pretty obvious problems. To the minister: does this government, which provides billions of dollars to postsecondary institutions, have a policy on conflicts of interest at postsecondary institutions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member knows, we have board-governed institutions in this province, and they do manage their internal operations. Many of the professors and researchers do work for a multitude of clients, including private sector and public sector, as they do their research. Often this research is done jointly and even between institutions both within this province and across the country and around the world.

Dr. Taft: Well, given the real-life instance, for example, of the head of the U of C School of Public Policy, Professor Jack Mintz, writing under the banner of the University of Calgary about oil royalties and the need to lower corporate taxes and simultaneously being paid hundreds of thousands of dollars to serve on the board of Imperial Oil, won't the minister admit this is a conflict of interest that should be brought to an end?

Mr. Weadick: Mr. Speaker, the fact that many of our academics and researchers have extreme talents and skills, which can benefit both public- and private-sector members of this country, I believe helps us to maybe get our message out from this province as well as across the country that we have people engaged in all levels and aspects of both business and academia.

Dr. Taft: Given that Imperial Oil is clear that it pays company directors some $200,000 annually to advance the best interests of Imperial oil, doesn't the minister see that when professors like this get themselves into positions of divided loyalties by taking substantial personal payment directly from private corporations while also holding senior positions at universities, the independence and credibility of universities is cast in doubt?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that our universities do maintain that academic freedom and that ability to question. These folks will have to be responsible for the decisions that they make with respect to their ethics, but I'll tell you that the institutions that I work with hold high ethical standards, and they expect the same from their employees.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Energy Demand-side Management

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've heard a lot of talk in this Assembly and in Alberta in general around the cost of electricity and the need for transmission in this province moving forward. What we do know is that there is going to be a huge increase in demand because of population and growth in the economy. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What demand-side management initiatives does his department have in place that would drive change in consumer behaviour, reducing energy demand overall and at peak times and ultimately reducing cost to consumers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to commend the hon. member for that question. Demand-side management and other related policies that achieve efficiencies in energy consumption are actually the best way to reduce both cost and emissions. Accordingly, the government of Alberta through Alberta Innovates: Technology Futures is working with both Enmax and EPCOR on studying the benefits of real-time electricity consumption monitors and ways in which this could help residential consumers reduce their consumption. This work is largely completed, and we expect . . .

The Speaker: I think we'll move on now.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same minister. Given that demand-side management is the cheapest cost of electricity that can be brought online to meet growing demand, does it not make sense to send a strong signal to the Alberta Electric System Operator and the AUC to work with electricity and natural gas retailers and distributors on providing appropriate incentives for demand-side management initiatives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I certainly agree with the hon. member's preamble. With respect to residential customers I've addressed that question in my first answer.

With respect to the larger industrial and commercial users they already have the option to track hourly rates and, accordingly, the incentive and the ability to manage use accordingly. They can go on and off the grid when they think it's appropriate or have local generation and generate locally when they can, when rates are too high, or go back on the grid. So on that score, we're already . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is actually to the minister of environment. Given that energy demand-side management is one of the least expensive strategies for consumers and taxpayers in reducing greenhouse gas emissions, will the minister vigorously pursue such initiatives in moving forward the province's climate change strategy?

2:30

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you to the hon. member for the question. I can tell the hon. member that I'm happy to say that through the Ministry of Environment and Water, through Agriculture and Rural Development, through Sustainable Resource Development, and Energy we are going to continue on with the next generation of energy efficient programs in this province. Alberta will remain a national leader. We're going to build on the successful programs that we've had. We've prevented some 1.5 million tons of GHGs from entering the atmosphere, which is equivalent to 300,000 cars on the road. We're looking forward to bringing this program forward and building upon the great work that has already happened.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Proclamation of Health Legislation

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The problems in our health care system have this government's fingerprints all over them. This government told Albertans that they would have a health advocate and a health charter to turn to when they passed Bill 17, the Alberta Health Act, over a year and a half ago. But here we are today with the law still not proclaimed, with no health advocate, no charter, and our doctors being left behind. Will your minister then please explain to Albertans why this government has put advocacy on the back burner as our health care system continues to suffer?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government did extensive consultation in the development of the Alberta Health Act. We fully intend to proceed at the appropriate time with both proclamation of the act and, more importantly, the implementation of the health advocate office.

As the hon. member knows, the legislation includes a specific requirement for consultation around any regulations that are introduced as part of that act. In the spirit of what is so often called for on the other side, we intend to honour that commitment to the consultation. It will take place.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that the health advocate would have given doctors and other health professionals a mechanism to air instances of bullying and political meddling, does the health minister want to explain to Albertans and the health professionals in this province why the Health Act has not been proclaimed?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a very interesting question given that the hon. member and her colleagues very vigorously opposed the Alberta Health Act and, if I recall correctly, suggested to this House in so many words that the office didn't have sufficient teeth to be of value to our physicians and our other health professionals.

We made a commitment to continue consultation with Albertans on this. We have done so, Mr. Speaker, and when the appropriate consultation is completed, we will bring forward the regulation to this House, and we will proclaim the act.

Mrs. Forsyth: With all due respect, Minister, you're wrong.

Given that over the past year and a half several instances of doctor intimidation occurred on this government's watch, did you not proclaim this bill because you already knew about the bullying and political interference?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, while it's refreshing to know now that the hon. member is in fact supportive of the legislation and the office of the health advocate, with respect to the hon. member's question, as members will recall, the health advocate was designed to assist Albertans with navigation of the health care system and to provide them with a place to go with respect to concerns that they have with the system. We intend to proceed with that act.

We also intend to proceed with the recommendations in the report that call for the creation of a just and trusting culture for our physicians and other professionals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Keyano College Land Trust

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Two weeks ago this government announced the transfer of land into the land trust for Keyano College in Fort McMurray. This is obviously a great step for this postsecondary institution that will generate a long-term revenue for the college. Will this land be used to help address the needs for more housing in Fort McMurray?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it certainly is a great step, and I was very pleased to be in Fort McMurray a short time ago with the minister of advanced education to announce this. The college plans to use the 600-acre trust for much-needed new residential and commercial development in addition to the revenues it'll generate for the college. It's an innovative move. It's a testament to the collaboration between our government and the institution and the community and is a real testament to board chair John Wilson and President Kevin Nagel and all the folks with the Alberta government and the oil sands secretariat that worked hard on this.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you. To the same minister: given that that Keyano land is just part of the land in the Saline Creek area that could be opened up for development, is the government planning to release more adjacent land in the area for Fort McMurray?

Mr. Johnson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, indeed. We're preparing and working hard on a strategic land release. We're going to do it in a strategic way, and we hope to do that very, very soon. The people of Fort McMurray deserve to see a plan, a plan that outlines what land will be released and in what phases. This strategy will help stabilize land prices, result in more housing and retail spaces at affordable prices, and help Fort McMurray keep affordable and sustainable as a community for years and generations to come.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you for that.

My last question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. How will Keyano College use the additional funding they are getting from this land transfer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you very much. I've got to tell you the smile on Mayor Melissa Blake's face when the Infrastructure minister and I were in town a couple of weeks ago to announce this was unbelievable. To a packed room we announced that this land trust was going to go ahead. I'll tell you that it was a very exciting time for me. It allows us to fulfill a promise that we made to Fort McMurray to create land availability that would allow them to develop residential and commercial.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, this relationship between Keyano and the town will also provide an $80 million to $120 million endowment to the Keyano College.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Impaired Driving Legislation

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few short months ago this government pressed ahead with new impaired driving legislation. The reason for the new law was to save lives. The Minister of Transportation spoke passionately on how this new bill would protect Alberta's citizens. To the Minister of Transportation: if this bill was passed to save lives, why is it not in force on our streets today?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said in the House when the bill was brought forward, the bill is going to be brought forward in stages. It does take time to bring bills forward. We need to go through the education portion. We need to have consistent training. We need to work with our traffic safety partners. We need to also work on a tracking system and consultation.

Mr. Kang: Mr. Speaker, my understanding was that the bill was supposed to be in force before the Christmas season to save lives. To the minister again: well, sir, what was the rush to pass the bill if this government had not properly consulted on the implementation of the bill with the public, industry groups, other stakeholders, or the education process you were talking about? What was the rush?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I've been very clear about what was necessary to bring this bill forward. I will say that the penalties for the .08 and above will be in place around July 1, and we're hoping that the .05 impairment penalties will be in place around September 1.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: with the deepest of respect, do you not find this a bizarre situation, having a law that was passed in the House to save lives still not implemented because of a lack of consultation or any other issues you have with it?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I think this is very interesting coming from the hon. member because some members opposite say that it's too soon, as the hon. member did. Some say it's taking too long. Some say it shouldn't. This bill is about saving lives. This bill is about safety on our roadways. We need to get it right, and we need to ensure that we are consulting with the stakeholders. We need to ensure that all of the stakeholders know what the process and direction are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Parent Link Centres

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Human Services. Parent link centres have been established in the Edmonton area and, I presume, throughout the province to provide assistance in parenting, particularly to new parents. I understand that no new funding has been allocated for new PLCs since 2006-2007. Is this program being mothballed?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. The parent link centres are very important. There was a plan to create 60 new parent link centres across the province. In fact, 46 centres have been established. We know that access to parent link centres is doing great things, helping parents with the assistance they need in special circumstances. We're working with the 10 child and family services authorities to identify locations for new centres, and we're reviewing our existing programs, including parent link centres, to determine how well they're meeting the needs of young children, youth, and families in Alberta communities. There's no plan to mothball them. In fact, helping families raise their children, helping them with the struggles that they have is a very important part of what we need to do.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister mentioned that only 46 have been established, but the original plan was to create 60 new parent link centres. What is the plan for the future expansion of the program?

Mr. Hancock: Well, at this point there have been additional areas identified such as southwest Edmonton, St. Albert, and other areas in the province. We've been working with other organizations. For example, through the CFSA in St. Albert the St. Albert family resource centre is providing some of the services.

It's a matter of making sure that communities have access to the services that they need, that parents and families have access to the services that they need. If the parent link centre is the best way to do it, then that's what we'll proceed with. If we can collaborate and work with others who are already in the community doing it, that's what we'll do. There's not a one size fits all, but we're committed to the concept that if we can assist parents in the struggles that they have from time to time and the particular things that they need to help support their families, that's what we'll be doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister has almost answered my question in mentioning St. Albert. Given that there have been considerable requests to provide services in St. Albert and that Edmonton PLC offices often refer St. Albert residents to the St. Albert family resource centre for parenting assistance, can St. Albert expect to get funding for a parent link centre in the very near future?

Mr. Hancock: As I said, Mr. Speaker, what we're trying to do is not necessarily establish new situations where there's somebody already doing the job but work collaboratively with the resources that are in the community, map the resources that are in the community so that we know what communities are missing and help to build on those resources. The family resource centre in St. Albert is doing a great job with assistance from the child and family services authorities. We are helping fund through the student health initiative partnership to train two staff members to deliver the Stepping Stones Triple P program, which is a parenting program for families who have a child with a disability. There's also online at www.parentlinkalberta.ca or www.triplep-staypositive.net. There are resources available, and we're working to continue to build right across the province a good network of supports so that parents can raise their children and get the help they need when they need it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 18 members who were identified today to participate, 108 questions and responses.

In a few short seconds from now we will continue the Routine.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of documents to support the question I asked in question period today. The document is form 10-K of the United States Securities and Exchange Commission, dated December 31, 2010, for Imperial Oil Limited. It explains the philosophy and objectives of Imperial Oil's directors' compensation program, which is to ensure alignment with shareholder interests. It indicates J.M. Mintz received $218,000 in total compensation that year and has a total combined at-risk value of holdings valued at $636,000 at the time of this filing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of tablings. I am tabling e-mails and letters from the following individuals who are concerned about the proposed logging in the west Bragg Creek area, all of whom believe clear-cutting will damage essential watershed and recreation area that thousands of Albertans use to promote health and fitness and be detrimental to wildlife and natural species. These come from Brian Rossetti, Susan Belyea, Joan Stauffer, Dean Cockshutt, Stephanie Hrehirchuk, Josefine Singh, S. Lawrence, Leanne Ross, Michele Hardy, Tania Sablatash, David Taylor, Tim O'Sullivan, Sharon Bayer, Eric Lloyd, Emma Barry, Nora McTague, Bill and Kitty Stillaway, Stu Schultz, Shelley Armeneau, and Mike Medwid.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter and a notice from Robert Lee, chair of the Elbow River Watershed Partnership, addressing misleading and false information contained in a letter from SRD and sent to members of the public with concerns about the proposed logging in the Bragg Creek area. The partnership was not presented with the harvest plan and has not undertaken any assessment of the impact of the forestry activities upstream from Bragg Creek, as SRD claimed in its letter.

My last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a retabling from Maurice Gaucher, Adam Storms, Susan O'Shea, Laryssa Warne, and Eric Tromposch, concerned about the west Bragg Creek area.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four sets of tablings. The first one is from Mr. Doug Moston, who is concerned about AISH and his federal pension being continued until age 67 should and when the federal government makes changes to OAS.

I have an e-mail from Mr. Mike Perz. He's concerned about logging in the Castle special management area.

I have a copy of a letter sent by Mr. Jim Pissot to the hon. Premier in regard to the bear population and how it can be compromised by logging in the Castle-Crown area.

I have a copy of an e-mail sent to me by Brenda and Dave Pernitsky, and it's regarding an issue they have with the motor vehicles complaint review process, considering it redundant and a switching of money and are suggesting improvements to the way the system could be handled.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Klimchuk, Minister of Culture and Community Services, additional information pertaining to Motion for a Return 4, asked for by Ms Blakeman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, on March 21, 2011.

Statement by the Speaker

Calendar of Special Events

The Speaker: Hon. members, on a monthly basis I usually read into the record the daily events or the weekly events or the monthly events that occur as some members do get up and do offer extensions of congratulations, but to make sure that no one is left out, might I just bring to the attention of all members that March is Colorectal Cancer Awareness Month, Fraud Prevention Month, Juvenile Arthritis Awareness Month, Kidney Health Month, Liver Health Month, National Engineering & Geoscience Month, National Epilepsy Month, National Social Work Month, Nutrition Month, Youth Science Month.

There are designations awarded to a number of days. March 1 was Self-injury Awareness Day. March 2 was the World Day of Prayer. March 4 was the International Children's Day of Broadcasting. March 4 to 11 was International Women's Week. March 4 to 10 was National Social Work Week, as it was Pharmacist Awareness Week. March 8 is Holi in the Hindu culture. March 8 is also International Women's Day and is also Purim, a Jewish observance. It's also World Kidney Day.

March 9 to 25 is Semaine nationale de la francophonie. March 11 will be daylight saving time, as it begins once again. March 11 to 17 is also Canadian Agricultural Safety Week, as it is World Glaucoma Week. March 12 is Commonwealth Day. March 12 to 18 is Brain Awareness Week. March 14 to 20 is National Farm Safety Week. March 15 is World Consumer Rights Day. March 17 is St. Patrick's Day. March 18 to 24 is National Poison Prevention Week. March 19 is Sun-Earth Day; that's the annual equinox celebration. March 20 is French Language Day at the United Nations. March 20 is also Journée internationale de la Francophonie, as it is also spring equinox, as it is World Storytelling Day.

2:50

March 21 is International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, as it is the International Day of Nowruz, as it is World Down Syndrome Day, as it is World Poetry Day. March 21 to 27 is the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples Struggling against Racism and Racial Discrimination. March 22 is World Water Day. March 23 is World Meteorological Day. March 24 is World TB Day. March 24 is also the International Day for the Right to the Truth Concerning Gross Human Rights Violations and for the Dignity of Victims.

March 25 is the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade, as it is also the International Day of Solidarity with Detained and Missing Staff Members. March 26 is Purple Day, the global day of epilepsy awareness. March 26 to April 1 will be World Salt Awareness Week. March 27 will be World Theatre Day, and on March 31 at 8:30 p.m. we will celebrate Earth Hour.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: Before the chair gets on to the business, I would like to ask for your consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to all hon. members for the unanimous consent. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two gifted, intelligent, and famous poets all the way from Lebanon. As you know, Lebanon is my birthplace. Today we have with us Mr. Tali Hamdan and Mr. Victor Mirza. These two individuals have written so many books over the years that really enriched the arts and culture in the Middle East. Accompanying our guests we have Mr. Nizam Saab, the president of the Yanta community association, and Mr. Kumal Shtay, the vice-president of the association. We also have Ziad Abultaif, Hayel Shtay, and Wassem Jaber, very prominent members of the Lebanese business community. My guests have risen. I would like to ask all members to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. [Remarks in Arabic]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2012-13

Health and Wellness

The Chair: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, before I recognize you, I want to remind you that we have 20 minutes for the Wildrose Party, 20 minutes for the NDs, and the first hour is for the Official Opposition. Also, for the exchange between the minister and the other members you can have a choice of 20 minutes in combination or 10 minutes each, so let the chair know that in advance. Before I call on you to start your speech, you may want to introduce your staff.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm very proud to introduce staff from my department and staff from my office as well who are here today: Marcia Nelson, Deputy Minister of Alberta Health and Wellness; David Breakwell, assistant deputy minister of financial accountability; Line Porfon, acting assistant deputy minister of health policy and service standards; Glenn Monteith, assistant deputy minister of health workforce; Martin Chamberlain, assistant deputy minister of corporate support; Margaret King, assistant deputy minister of community and population health; Mark Brisson, assistant deputy minister of health information technology and systems; and Charlene Wong, executive director of financial planning for the department.

I'm also very proud, Mr. Chair, to introduce members of my staff who are seated in the members' gallery: Dr. Carol Anderson, my executive assistant; Mr. Matthew Hebert, who is a special adviser in our office; and Ms Lindsay Wozney, who is a special assistant in our office. I'm very pleased to have all of them here today as well as my communications director, Mr. Andy Weiler.

The Chair: All right. Minister, now you have the floor for 10 minutes.

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I certainly appreciate the opportunity to make a few opening remarks and then, of course, look forward to the main purpose of this exercise, to answer the questions of my colleagues opposite and in the government caucus as well.

Mr. Chair, the 2012-13 Health and Wellness budget will make investments in people and communities. It reflects our government's commitment to making fundamental services in our health system work better. It will give Albertans more access to the health system close to home, will support greater services in mental health and addictions, and will enhance home care so that seniors can stay in their own homes, where they'll maintain their independence and are, of course, most comfortable.

Mr. Chair, there are many priorities outlined in the budget that is before the House at this time for Alberta Health and Wellness. As I said, it focuses on services that meet local community needs, promote wellness and supports, and also enable Albertans in the choices they make for themselves and their families as we all strive together to achieve better health. The proposed budget makes three key strategic investments – primary health care, addictions and mental health services, and continuing care – and I'll talk more about each of them a bit later.

Total spending in 2012-13 will be $16 billion, an increase of $1.2 billion, or 7.9 per cent, from 2011-12. This includes $15.9 billion in operating expenses and $118 million in capital equipment grants, amortization, and vaccine usage. The largest part of the budget, $10.2 billion, or 64 per cent, will be allocated to Alberta Health Services to deliver health care to Albertans.

Alberta Health Services will also be receiving an additional $0.3 billion, or 2 per cent of our budget, for operating costs at the south health campus in Calgary and at the Edmonton clinic south, both due to open later this year, and $3.4 billion, or 22 per cent of our budget, will go towards physician compensation and development. As you know, I recently announced a one-year funding increase for physicians in our province that will go into effect on April 1. There will be a primary care network per capita funding increase of $12 per patient from $50 to $62. Fee-for-service and alternate relationship plans will increase by 2 per cent. The total increase in support for physicians resulting from these changes will be $93 million, Mr. Chair.

3:00

We will also extend funding for all other programs and benefits currently in effect until March 31, 2013. We anticipate that our ministry will be able to find the additional $93 million in our 2012-13 budget. We'll look at demand-driven programs that may come in lower than we had estimated, and we will reduce discretionary spending as much as possible. The ministry will evaluate its financial position in late 2012, and in the event we cannot fund the additional $93 million, we will discuss options for Treasury Board as well as any other discussions that may be necessary in the event a long-term agreement is reached.

One billion dollars, or 6 per cent, of our budget will go toward drugs and supplemental health benefits for Albertans, including pharmaceutical assistance, cancer therapy drugs, specialized high-cost drugs, ground ambulance, prosthetics, and orthotics. The remaining $1.1 billion, or 6 per cent, of our budget is spent on everything else we do, from vaccination programs and tissue and blood services to healthy living programs and cancer research.

Looking at Alberta Health Services, they will receive $10.2 billion in base operating funding for front-line health services, which is a $578 million, or 6 per cent, increase. Mr. Chair, 2012-13 marks the third year of a five-year funding commitment that will see Alberta Health Services receive 6 per cent base operating increases in each of the first three years and 4.5 per cent increases in years 4 and 5. This is the first long-term stable health funding arrangement of its kind in Canada. Two hundred thirty-two million dollars will also be provided to Alberta Health Services for operating costs at the south health campus in Calgary and $35 million for operating costs at Edmonton clinic south. The funding reflects a commitment made to Albertans last year that when the south Calgary hospital and all other new facilities are ready to come on stream, the operating funds will be there in stages as they are needed.

As I said, one of our top priorities is increasing Albertans' access to primary health care. Improving primary health care is about providing more front-door options for Albertans so they can make that first point of contact with the health system. Through this proposed budget we're investing in people and in programs that will mean more ways to go through that front door. We will provide $75 million for projects that will strengthen primary health care throughout Alberta. Funds will be used for a range of innovative health care approaches such as enhancing our very successful primary care networks or adding more community-based primary health care providers.

In addition, Alberta Health Services will be using $15 million of its existing budget to establish three pilot family care clinics that will be operational by April 1. They will address local community needs through teams of health providers working under one roof to provide individual and family-focused care. Family care clinics will include an emphasis on wellness, addictions, mental health, and chronic disease prevention and management. We'll be announcing more details on these pilots very soon.

Another way we will improve primary health care is to enhance the role of our pharmacists. Starting July 1, Albertans will be able to go to their local pharmacist for prescription renewals. The change means Albertans will have more access to the health care system, more timely access to medications, and more convenience. Pharmacists will be finally recognized, Mr. Chair, as a full part of Alberta's health care team by working to the full extent of their education, skill, and experience. We will spend $20 million to compensate pharmacists for this service and enable them to continue their collaboration with physicians in delivering care of the highest quality.

Investments in pharmaceutical programs will come from savings by negotiating better prices for generic drugs. To help pharmacists in Alberta's remote communities expand their services and adjust to the lower generic drug prices, $5.3 million will be available in 2012-13 as part of a new three-year, $16 million remote pharmacy access grant.

Mr. Chair, a second priority for our ministry is to build healthy communities by increasing access to addictions and mental health services. I announced details about this $25 million investment on Monday. Initiatives include increasing access to psychology and other counselling services in primary care networks, expanding addiction and mental health capacity in our schools, investing in housing supports and homeless initiatives, and providing support for complex needs in the community and at facilities through Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

Our third priority relates to continuing care. We will invest $25 million in enhanced home care and rehabilitation services so seniors can stay in their own homes longer and avoid premature or unnecessary admissions to continuing care facilities and, most especially, our hospitals. To help seniors maintain their good health, we will also invest $7 million in subsidized chiropractic services for seniors, effective July 1.

To conclude, Mr. Chair, this budget supports our goal of more community-based care. It will give Albertans more and better access to the health system close to home. It will support greater access to mental health and addiction services. It will enhance home care so seniors can stay in their own homes, where they will continue to maintain their independence and where they are most comfortable.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I look forward to the questions from my colleagues.

The Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The next hour is reserved for the Official Opposition. Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, do you want a 20-minute dialogue?

Dr. Swann: I would appreciate an exchange so that we can actually have specific questions and specific answers if that's possible for the minister.

The Chair: All right. Go ahead with 20-minute chunks for an hour.

Dr. Swann: Very good. Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

Health is obviously on the minds of all Albertans. It's the largest budget item, it's considered the major issue for all governments, and it's a great concern to the professionals working in the system also. Three things we look for: access, quality, and cost-effectiveness. Those should be the basis for our measurements, our outcomes, and those are the standards to which we should be measuring ourselves.

Overarching all of this, of course, in the present context is the current focus and concern about the intimidation and bullying within the health care system over the last decade and the tremendous challenge this minister has had in dealing with this issue. Not only was I experiencing it, but others have come forward increasingly over the last decade and have raised the important initiative of a public inquiry – the Medical Association, the Health Sciences Association, together representing about 30,000 people in this province, those working on the front lines – indicating that there is only one way to restore confidence and trust in the system, and that is to hold a public inquiry.

Unfortunately, the Premier has betrayed those health workers by initially, during her campaign, saying yes and now saying no. I'm afraid to say that this minister, too, who was proud, and said so last night in the forum, of 25 years of contributing to health care policy and involved intimately with the health care system, has not removed himself from the decision-making and is in conflict over this very issue and avoiding the notion of a public inquiry at which he himself would be forced to testify.

This places a real conflict for Albertans and for the health care professions in looking at this minister, who continues to argue that there was no commitment, in the first instance, to a public inquiry looking into bullying and intimidation and, in the second instance, that he has no conflict of interest around this. It clearly smacks of disingenuity, lack of serious commitment to the role and the responsibility he has taken on, and an unwillingness, in the first instance, to put himself on the front line to address some of the questions and challenges that only people under oath would be able to raise and question. This colours everything, I think, in this coming year, and it has no direct bearing on the budget except to say that without a public inquiry we will not get to the kind of quality, access, and cost-efficiency that I think we all want to see.

So I leave that question with the minister and entreat him to recognize that you do not create a culture of trust and justice and camaraderie by setting a task force to draft new guidelines and new plans for those working in the system. When those workers are going back into the situations where they experienced abuse, where they saw abuse, where they saw the promotion of the very people that were guilty of the abuses, you do not fix a system this way, and you perpetuate a sense that there is no accountability, no transparency in this ministry and no ability to actually solve problems and move on.

3:10

This minister continues to protect those in his cabinet who were involved over the past decade, the Premier herself, and himself. It's a shame for the people of Alberta that we cannot move to what has clearly been a commitment and now a betrayal and has been recommended very strongly and demanded by those working on the front lines.

Having said that, I think one of the challenges that this ministry continues to face is clarifying roles and responsibilities between Alberta Health and Wellness and the Alberta Health Services Board. Part of the challenge has been ambiguity, interference to some extent, some ministers taking a larger role since 2008 and some a smaller role, some intervening when the heat is turned on in a specific area. We saw the results of that with the resignation of some board members over the past few years.

It also reflects, I think, the way the original constitution of the Health Services Board was created without adequate health services expertise. I think that continues today. I think we've had too strong a focus on business acumen, business background and not enough on a clear sense of management relative to policy at the health department, too strong an emphasis on bottom-line dollars and not on relationships and clear roles and responsibilities and accountabilities within the system.

As a result, I think we're going to limp along until that kind of clarity and that kind of expertise are there on the Health Services Board, so I would enjoin the minister to look seriously at how critical these next couple of years are. I think he knows very well the kinds of disasters that are emerging in our system because of those two areas, the lack of clarity around roles and responsibilities and adequate health services expertise and research infusing the Health Services Board.

In terms of questions about spending, it's clear from looking at some of the data that our health system is shifting in terms of its public-private ownership. According to a recent publication Canada ranks fifth after the United States and Switzerland in terms of its investment in private health services in Alberta. I guess that's a challenge to us to have said that we are committed in Alberta to a publicly funded system when we rank actually fifth in terms of the amount of investment in private health care. We are actually 18th globally in terms of per capita funding for publicly funded services, so anyone who says that we are dominated by too much socialism in this province or too much publicly funded service I think has to look at those statistics.

In the transition, also, between the original Alberta Health and Wellness and the nine regions to the Health Services Board there was a notion and an argument by the former health minister that we'd be saving some money. We would reduce administration. We would reduce boards and oversight, administration. In fact, we overspent by $1.3 billion just in making the transition, and given the consistent increases year to year – and we're now committed to four or five years more of consistent increases – I don't see that we have saved anything on administration.

I'd be interested to hear the minister's comment on how much now has gone into front-line services versus administration in our current system. I see that almost two-thirds of the budget is under Alberta Health Services. They're not here to answer to questions, so all we can do is hope to get them to Public Accounts at some point. They take the lion's share of the budget, and they're not accountable to Albertans, so that means that the minister has to be for why we're spending the same or significantly more and what we're getting for that in terms of front-line services. Might this not have something to do, then, with the delays in access and concerns about quality as well as cost-efficiency?

I'll maybe leave it there, Mr. Chairman, and see if the minister wants to respond to any of those concerns.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to respond to all of the things that the hon. member raised in the first 10 minutes. I'll begin with the first issue he raised, which is his desire for a public inquiry to include investigation into physician advocacy and allegations of intimidation in our health system. As we have said, we asked the Health Quality Council, with the support, I believe, of all members of this House on all sides, to look into the allegations that were made.

This was not the only one, of course. There were other allegations that were made with respect to deaths on an alleged waiting list for lung cancer surgery, for example, that were found to be unsubstantiated in the review. There was an allegation with respect to harmful effects of extended emergency department wait times on patient care. That was investigated thoroughly. The report of the Health Quality Council made 21 recommendations, Mr. Chair. The government has accepted all 21.

With respect to the specific issue around the public inquiry I will say again that the government accepts the findings in the report with respect to physician advocacy. We intend to act immediately on all of the recommendations that were put forward by the Health Quality Council.

With respect to the process of the inquiry I'd remind the hon. member that this House, in fact, passed a bill last fall called the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act. It confers upon the Health

Quality Council a number of new duties and responsibilities. At the request of cabinet that includes the requirement to appoint a board to conduct a health systems inquiry. The powers of that panel, once appointed, include many of the same powers that are found under the Public Inquiries Act; namely, the ability to compel witnesses. I would remind the House, Mr. Chair, that anyone, including any member of this Assembly – be they a member of Executive Council, be they a private member in the government caucus, or be they a member in one of the opposition caucuses – equally has the potential to be called and the duty to appear if subpoenaed by a panel under the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act.

With respect to the hon. member's specific concern around how the allegations with respect to intimidation of physicians and impediments to their ability to advocate for patients could be addressed, this panel has every opportunity to look at that issue as it relates to allegations of improper preferential access to health care treatment. If there are physicians in this province, Mr. Chair, that have been threatened or influenced or intimidated or otherwise prompted to act to make a decision to refer someone for medical care that they ought not to have made – in other words, a decision that is not based on assessed medical need – then this inquiry is going to have the ability to discover that. And any member of this Legislature could potentially be called to testify in that or in any other regard.

The point of the legislation, Mr. Chair, as you know, was to set up an independent process – independent of government, independent of the Assembly – to carry out these sorts of investigations. We have every desire and every intention on this side of the House to respect that legislation, to respect the independence of the panel, and to allow them to carry out their work without interference by way of public comment, without interference by any other means. We look forward to them presenting their report, which they are required by law to table with the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly by the deadline of April 2013.

The hon. member also talked about the issue of roles and responsibilities of the various stakeholders in the system: Alberta Health and Wellness, Alberta Health Services, the College of Physicians & Surgeons, and, I dare say, many others that are involved in the provision of health care or the governance of our health care system. I think the hon. member would probably know that the Health Quality Council dealt with this quite extensively in their report. They made a very specific recommendation about a task force to address this question of role clarity.

I will say to the hon. member that I do think it is a significant issue. We look back to the decision to form Alberta Health Services. We've seen many benefits as a result of moving to one health region for the entire province, but the Premier and I and many of my colleagues have acknowledged that the time for the transition was very short. As we've seen in the discussion about the cultural dimension of the health care system as outlined in the report, there was not a lot of time for our physicians and our other health professionals to have what they might consider meaningful input, an active role in making decisions about how this new entity would be shaped, and, most importantly, what kind of culture they wanted to build for themselves in order to support the delivery of the excellent care that Albertans receive each and every day in our health care system.

3:20

This is one of the 21 recommendations that the government has accepted. We intend to move on it quickly. I can report to the hon. member and to my colleagues that this is something that I've discussed extensively with the board of the Health Quality Council, I've discussed it extensively with the board of Alberta Health Services, and I've had some discussions with the College of Physicians & Surgeons as well. All are in agreement, Mr. Chair, that this is absolutely a critical issue.

One of the things that arises from this – and I think the hon. member mentioned it in his speech – is the question of who is responsible for assurance in our health care system. That responsibility, in my view, Mr. Chair, is that of the government. The assurance that the services provided are safe, that they are of high quality, that they are delivered in an appropriate manner, that there is appropriate funding for them – and we do have the first five-year funding plan in Canada to support the delivery system in health care – all of those things are clearly the purview of government.

In addition to that and, I think, arguably just as important, the role of the long-term policy direction for the health system is also the role of government. I take great pride in the work that my department continues to do to plan not only for the needs of the health care system in the next two years and three years and five years but, in fact, looking 20 years down the road, taking an active role in the mandate of the Minister of Human Services to develop a social policy framework for this province, looking at best evidence and applying that evidence to decision-making, including decisions that I need to make as Minister of Health and Wellness so that Albertans can have confidence that the services we offer are comparable to the best anywhere in Canada and beyond. I'm very proud of that.

The hon. member also made some comments with respect to the board of Alberta Health Services and expressed an opinion that the role of the board should not necessarily be a corporate responsibility in the traditional sense or in a business sense, that the board actually has a responsibility to chart the future course of Alberta Health Services, to understand quality as it relates to health care delivery at the community level, to have an understanding of quality factors that need to be addressed in our system on an ongoing basis, to have an understanding of what it takes to build a just and trusting culture for health professionals.

In that regard, our current board membership includes a third of members whose terms come up every year. Each year we work with the board to identify the necessary skill sets and capacities and then recruit suitable individuals to fill those needs. I think the knowledge component of the board in the future with respect to health care is going to be increasingly important, and in that respect I agree with the hon. member that these competencies need to be well represented on our board.

Equally, Mr. Chair, the stewardship of a budget of well over $10 billion is not a small responsibility. We do need people with appropriate financial expertise. We do need people who understand appropriate performance indicators, who understand governance issues at a high level, who are in a position to ensure that the stewardship of the vast majority of our health care resources that are afforded to Alberta Health Service are used wisely. I view it very much as a role of the board to not only fulfill that responsibility as it relates to AHS but to assist me in my role in being ultimately accountable for the health care system in Alberta.

So we intend to continue this discussion through the task force about the competencies that are needed on the board, about role clarity among the various stakeholders that I mentioned earlier, and to continue to pursue issues that were not addressed in the transition that need to be addressed in an inclusive way, involving not only the board and the stakeholders I mentioned but, most importantly, the very health professionals that deliver the care.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Thank you to the minister. In his message last night the minister highlighted the risks to the coming generation, alluding to the fact that they may be the first generation to have a lower lifespan than the current generation, and I agree with that. With 3 per cent of our budget invested in prevention, how do you explain this as a priority to Albertans, and what level of support are you currently giving to high-risk groups in the province to try to reduce the toll on our young people but also on our health care system?

What kind of support for change in terms of these health risks are we investing in schools, workplaces, and communities? I see that you've provided a 22 per cent increase in community programs and healthy living. What does that mean in concrete terms, and how are we measuring outcomes in terms of that investment? I see a 72 per cent increase in immunization support. Where is this going?

Perhaps we could focus for the next 10 minutes on some of the prevention and health promotion issues and how well we're moving in that direction.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the hon. member for raising issues that I know we mutually care about quite deeply. Specifically with respect to the last few questions Alberta Health and Wellness is currently working on a number of prevention initiatives.

Here are a few examples of some of them: the provincial healthy weight strategy for children and youth, which has been developed and is in the government of Alberta approval process; the aboriginal wellness strategy, which I think is well known by many members. A new version is under development with a purpose of creating a collaborative and more comprehensive strategy and action plan to improve the wellness of aboriginals living in Alberta. The Alberta nutrition guidelines for children and youth and the Alberta nutrition guidelines for adults assist Albertans in making healthy food choices. They promote appropriate portion sizes and set out ways to recognize foods that meet the criteria of the choose-most-often, choose-sometimes, and choose-least-often selections. The Healthy U food checker is another example.

With respect to immunization Alberta Health Services delivers immunization programs, as the hon. member likely knows. When influenza immunization was made universal by this government – that is, immunization being available to all Albertans six months of age and older – Alberta Health Services requested $9 million for the 2010-11 fiscal year based on predicted expenditures to administer the influenza vaccine. AHS used approximately one-third of this funding during the 2010-11 flu season. The remainder was carried over to support immunization during 2011-12. AHS has indicated that they will be using the entire amount and will provide a full written report by June 30 of this year. We anticipate the need to provide additional support of approximately $3 million for the 2012-13 influenza season.

Just on this point, Mr. Chair, one thing that we are concerned with and we continue to investigate ways to improve is the take-up, if you will, of the influenza vaccine among our population. As I've just mentioned, we have had less than predicted expenditures in the past on immunization in Alberta. We're working very vigorously with Alberta Health Services to investigate ways that might further incent Albertans to take up the vaccine themselves as well as to look at opportunities for their children and their parents to take the vaccine. I think so far this flu season, based on the reports that have been provided to me by the chief medical officer of Alberta Health and Wellness, we have fared fairly well with respect to the incidence of influenza although we have seen situations within continuing care facilities where there have been outbreaks that have resulted in temporary disruptions to access to continuing care beds, and that is of concern for the future.

If we take a moment to look at some of the selected health indicators among our population, we can see some tremendous progress. We can see cancer neoplasms at a rate per 100,000 of 144.26. I believe that places us second in the country. We can see a continued decrease in diseases of the circulatory system, specifically the heart. We are the number one jurisdiction in the country with respect to morbidity and mortality in this area. I think that's largely a reflection, Mr. Chair, of the vast investment that we have made in acute-care capacity and surgical capacity as well as prevention initiatives as they relate to heart disease, and I think Albertans should take great pride in that.

With respect to life expectancy in Alberta in 1996 the overall life expectancy was 77.2 years. In 2010 that has risen to 81.6 years, and that compares to the Canadian average, a lower number, of 80.7 years. So we are slightly better than the national average, Mr. Chair, but most importantly we have seen over that period of time, from 1996 to 2010, an over four-year increase in life expectancy for our population. I know the hon. member would agree with me that some of these morbidity and mortality indicators and life expectancy indicators, while long-term projects to try to show improvement, are very important indicators of the effectiveness of our overall health care system. So we continue to focus on the importance of public health.

3:30

Just a final comment, and I'll make this because the hon. member and I participated in a panel discussion last night in Calgary. One of the questions that was raised was with respect to the percentage of the public health budget that is devoted to wellness initiatives. That has been a traditional measure of the focus of the health care system on, specifically, the area of wellness. I think what we're going to see in the future, Mr. Chair – and we had a good discussion about this last night – is that, in fact, wellness can be defined in many ways, including the capacity of a population to manage chronic disease over time.

We are seeing higher and higher incidences across Canada of heart disease, of cancer, of chronic obstructive pulmonary disorder, and, most importantly, of recent note type 2 diabetes in our population. Our 40 primary care networks and our future pilot projects for family care clinics are going to place an increasing focus on supporting Albertans for them to actively manage new chronic diseases that they face living with for extended periods of time. That spells out an investment in the involvement of other health professionals working as part of multidisciplinary teams: nurse practitioners, dietitians, and others. It is seen in some of the innovative programming in our primary care networks across the province.

It is seen in initiatives at the primary care level that focus on early intervention for children and youth, not only helping children and youth to develop healthy behaviours at a young age but also helping the increasing number of them that are faced with mental health challenges. The opportunity to intervene earlier, Mr. Chair, is the best hope that any population has to improve its health status over time. I know I'm speaking on behalf of the Premier and the government when I say that we share the belief that ultimately the purpose of a public health care system is not only to take care of us when we are ill but to improve the health of the generation that follows us.

One of the statistics we talked about last night that certainly concerns me is the fact that the current generation of youth in Canada is the first generation in Canadian history that has a life expectancy that is lower than the generation that preceded it. It's a very, very startling statistic and quite a wake-up call, Mr. Chair, I think, for all governments and for all citizens across the country.

To sum up with respect to public health, the expenditure out of the budget formerly under the public health budget for wellness is about 3 per cent, but as hopefully I've been able to describe to my colleagues, wellness is embedded throughout not only my ministry in terms of the primary care system but also through many other ministries, including Justice and Attorney General, Human Services, Education, and others that have a direct role in influencing the social determinants of health.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, manpower is the key issue for the current state in our health care system. It consumes roughly 70 per cent of budgets. It's clear that we need to have some sense of where it's going and how we're going to fund it and whether people are actually going to want to come here. If they do come, will they stay? I guess I'd like to hear a few comments from you about it, especially with the culture of bullying and intimidation and the low morale in our current staffing and, parenthetically, the need to survey the state of staff morale in this province and make some comparisons over the last two years.

I think it's important that we address some of the insecurity that many of us feel around many of these services, particularly the lack of continuity, the lack of stability in the workforce, the part-timers, and now, as it appears, less and less commitment to the values and principles of Alberta Health Services because of this culture of fear and intimidation. I think it's going to be more difficult to both recruit and retain people.

Perhaps the minister can say something about what that means in terms of south campus opening and staffing in this coming year. Perhaps he can say something more about staffing for EMS and what that's looking like in the next year to take at least some immediate pressure while we await a more comprehensive review of EMS services, some comments about mental health and the shortage of community care as well as in-patient capacity. Last week, for example, I heard Calgary had to transfer four acute psychotic patients down to Medicine Hat because they simply didn't have the space.

So there's a need to address a number of issues around staffing, around manpower and, in a related way, to think more proactively about foreign medical graduates, foreign nursing graduates, why we cannot be more able to be flexible with some of the foreign graduates and customize their integration into the western medical framework. Many of them are frustrated with not being able to work, and many of their culture would welcome the chance to have a doctor or a nurse from their own culture with language skills and culturally appropriate understanding.

Those are some of the issues that relate to manpower and manpower planning. I hope the minister is giving that due consideration and can reassure us about how we're going to deal with this in the next six to 12 months with the growing demands both in population and aging and the morale issues that we're struggling with.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm really pleased that the hon. member has raised the question of how we better support and grow and retain our health workforce in Alberta. I know it is an issue for every province, but it becomes a particular issue in Alberta when we go through periods of high economic growth. I know in 2006 Alberta experienced significant challenges in recruiting licensed practical nurses and health care aides and a number of other health professionals from other disciplines as our economy grew very rapidly. We're certainly in line for rapid expansion of our economy again, and I think we'd do well to revisit this question each time that cycle ramps up.

First of all, just in terms of the workforce today – and I can provide more numbers to the hon. member if he wishes – I think it's helpful for all members to be reminded just about the volume of health professionals that are actually working in our province of 3.8 million people. We currently have, for example, 20,367 health care aides across the province, 32,400 registered nurses, 3,603 paramedics, a total of 8,045 physicians, 2,225 physiotherapists, of which my wife is one, 2,221 psychologists, almost 6,000 social workers, and the list goes on. So we have a very large health workforce, Mr. Chair.

I think the most important way – and I think the hon. member has described this – that we become competitive with respect to recruitment and retention of our health care professionals is to provide them with as ideal an environment as we possibly can for them to practise. The hon. member made a comment about the commitment to the values of Alberta Health Services and the ability for a health professional to be able to identify in a positive way with the values and principles of the organization that employs them. I think what binds all of them together, Mr. Chair, is simply the desire to help people, to deliver good care, and to go home each day feeling that they have made a difference.

I would be remiss if I didn't take the opportunity to actually acknowledge all of the health workforce in Alberta, both people who work in the professions and the people that we don't often talk about, the people who work in dietary, the people who work in housekeeping, the people who provide all of the support services that make it possible for people with a health professional designation or degree to be able to deliver care.

A number of specific issues were raised by the hon. member, and I'm pleased to try to address some of those here today. With respect to the south health campus I continue to receive positive reports that we are on track with respect to staffing for the south health campus. It is opening through a phased approach. It's a very large facility, Mr. Chair. It begins with the opening of family outpatient clinics. That's followed by the opening of the emergency department and then from there all of the in-patient beds in the facility. We are on track with respect to the professionals that are required, including physicians, to open on time and to open in accordance with the plan that has been laid out.

3:40

With respect to emergency medical services staff I think this is an issue in Alberta, Mr. Chair, as I discovered myself through a ride-along I took recently in Edmonton. I have asked the Health Quality Council to review EMS operations across the province. I've asked them to look at a number of issues. Resources and staffing is a significant one, particularly here in Edmonton as volumes increase. I've also asked them to look at integrated fire and EMS services across the province and what impediments the new model, if any, posed for the continued very successful operation of integrated fire and EMS services, which have actually been part of the very proud tradition of Alberta in delivering first responder services to our communities. We'll continue to look at ways to bolster the EMS workforce.

One particular thing I learned on my ride-along that was quite interesting was that there are a large number of emergency medical technicians that are working in our system that currently don't have access to a bridging program that allows them to become a paramedic. I think this is something that we need to pay attention to. I'm going to be talking further with my colleague the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology about this. In many cases we do provide bridging programs for other health professionals. For example, we provide extensive assistance for health care aides who want to take additional education and training in order to become licensed practical nurses in our system.

We need to continue to make this province a destination of choice for health care professionals. I think that means certainly focusing on competitive wages but also focusing on the opportunities that exist to make every health care position a position on a career ladder, a position that capitalizes on that individual's desire to provide good care, to make a career investment of not a year or two but, in most cases, a lifetime commitment to deliver good-quality care to our fellow citizens.

With respect to mental health and the availability of mental health services I think the announcement earlier this week of 80 additional beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton is going to be important in a number of ways. It's going to add resources to the facility, obviously, but these particular four units are also going to play a key role in supporting transition of patients from the hospital out to the community.

We have heard many examples in the House here over the years, Mr. Chair, of patients with mental illness or with addictions issues being returned to the community without the optimal supports in place to enable that person to live independently and to become resilient in doing so. One of the initiatives we announced earlier this week in connection with the budget was the investment of dollars to support complex patients with mental health issues who live in the community. If we look at, for example, the inner city here in Edmonton, we know that there are somewhere between 300 and 400 people who have been traditionally caught in a cycle between the emergency department in a hospital, Alberta Hospital Edmonton, interaction with the justice system, shelters, and other community organizations.

The dollars that we announced as part of this budget, Mr. Chair, are going to go to support people in place. Many of these individuals are taking advantage of the many affordable housing spaces that have opened up in Alberta as we continue to make progress in our 10-year plan to end homelessness. The challenge in this particular instance is to make that affordable housing spot a home, a sustainable home for an individual who is suffering from a complex psychiatric illness. That means using these dollars to provide more assertive community treatment, to provide peer counselling and support, to provide other measures which on a wraparound basis provide that individual with the assistance they need to make that temporary housing spot an actual home for them for the long term.

Approximately $450 million is spent annually from this budget, Mr. Chair, on mental health and addictions. The $25 million I've just talked about supports some of the initiatives I've mentioned. In addition, my ministry supports the safe communities initiative under the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General, providing $42 million to focus on prevention and community-based services throughout Alberta in many communities. Many of us as members know these projects because they have been funded in our local community through the SafeCom initiative.

To sum up, Mr. Chair, on this topic, then, with respect to workforce, there is further work to do. I would agree with the hon.

member that the culture that we offer to people to work in is paramount. That is why acting on the recommendations of the Health Quality Council is so important. It's important for doctors, but it's also important for all other health professionals. I'm very confident that the steps that are laid out here in addition to the very good work that's being done by our professional colleges and government and Alberta Health Services will help us to continue to build a culture that is stable, that is predictable, that is supportive, both for the care that is delivered and for the role of health care professionals, the legitimate role and the very necessary role they have in advocating for their patient needs.

I'll just make one final comment, Mr. Chair. The hon. member raised the issue of hospital capacity, in-patient capacity. As part of the response to the Health Quality Council of Alberta report I have asked Alberta Health Services to look specifically at how we can better manage our acute-care bed inventory across the province. There is certainly no question – and we talked about this last night – that the new beds coming online in the south health campus, those new acute-care beds, are very much needed and they will do a great deal along with the 30 treatment rooms in the new emergency department to support extended capacity within the hospital.

The Chair: This is the last 20 minutes. So carry on, hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thanks to the minister. Just before we leave the topic of beds and mental health, I hope the minister is aware that in terms of mental health if the temporary psych beds at the Rockyview are closed with the opening of the psych beds in the south Calgary campus, there will be a net loss of six mental health beds. So we've got some serious problems building towards mental health in-patient services in Calgary, and I hope we're addressing that. We have a larger population in Calgary and fewer psych beds, that I think are going to be creating more and more of a problem there.

I wanted to get on the record some of the issues around primary care network funding. I think I've already raised issues with the minister in question period about the timing of this injection for primary care networks. After nine years of no funding, what was the rationale behind giving the funding just now? What is the priority for primary care networks? How do they differ from family care centres? What is the need to try another experiment in the health system that looks so much like primary care networks but somehow needs to be seen to be unique and different? Perhaps you could comment on that, and then I'll come back with some others.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm delighted that the hon. member has raised this topic because I want to take the opportunity to do a number of things here. First of all, I want to once again acknowledge the excellent work that has been done by Alberta's 40 primary care networks. We have greatly appreciated the opportunity to support this initiative.

It has its roots, as a matter of fact, in the physician agreement, the trilateral master agreement between Alberta Health Services, Alberta Health and Wellness, and the former health regions, that was developed in 2003. That initiative, Mr. Chair, resulted in the recognition that team-based care was the way of the future in terms of leveraging the expertise of our health professionals further, particularly the expertise of our physicians in terms of better supporting our physicians to deliver the more complex care that is required in the primary care environment today as more patients present with multiple chronic diseases, as more patients come in who are older and who have other challenges, including mental health. I think we should all take great pride in the success of our primary care networks.

The program itself is part of the former trilateral master agreement. The government of Alberta, as we work toward negotiating a new long-term agreement, has continued funding for our primary care networks. As part of the announcement that the hon. member referred to, we announced a continuance of funding for all programs and benefits under the former agreement until March 31, 2013. The reason, Mr. Chair, for doing this was actually stated by the hon. member. The primary care networks themselves have not received a per capita increase since 2003. The increase that was announced moves the per capita amount from $50 to $62, for a total of $33 million over the one-year period.

3:50

The hon. member has expressed some reservations about the timing of the funding increase. What I'd say to the hon. member is that, you know, when I was appointed to this position by the Premier, I said that stability and predictability in the health system was our number one priority. I have tried my best to make a point of telling any audience I speak to or any Albertan I speak to that this government has no intention of restructuring or reorganizing or otherwise disrupting the structure of our health care system. I think that's very, very important.

So in the absence of a long-term agreement, as we continue to work toward that over the next few months – and I would reiterate that our discussions have actually been very productive, and primary care is a major focus of these discussions – it is necessary, if we're going to have stability, to provide physicians with additional financial resources to support their work. The $33 million that's supporting primary care networks over the next year will support physicians in terms of their ability to recruit other health professionals from other disciplines to work with them. We named some of them earlier – nurse practitioners and pharmacists and mental health workers and others, psychologists – which are now going to receive greater financial support.

It will assist the PCNs to further enhance some of the innovative programming they've put in place, to help develop support groups for patients suffering from chronic diseases, to help support specialized training programs for patients who are newly diagnosed with a chronic disease, and I think very, very importantly, Mr. Chair, to enhance their ability to intervene with patients who are on the threshold – patients who are on the verge of developing type 2 diabetes, patients who are experiencing borderline hypertension – assisting those individuals to pull themselves back with supportive staff and evidence-based techniques made available to them, to not in fact develop those chronic diseases and potentially suffer the complications of those chronic diseases that we see far too often show up in our emergency departments and in our acute-care beds, perhaps unnecessarily in some cases.

The hon. member also talked about family care clinics, and I'm delighted to spend a few minutes talking about these. As the hon. member knows, these were an initiative of Premier Redford. It is a concept that is very much in development. Contrary to popular opinion in some quarters in the House here, we actually have been working directly with physicians in the three communities where we will open pilot projects by the end of March, and we are hoping that those family care clinics will be sustainable. We have been working very closely with physicians at the community level. We have also involved the Alberta Medical Association, in direct consultation through my deputy minister and as part of an advisory committee to me, as an organization at the table, talking about how we are going to implement and evaluate these three pilot projects.

I guess, Mr. Chair, we may have a difference of opinion in terms of how good quality primary health care evolves in a province. I'm a minister who believes that we should be open to all models of care that are offered and that the most important standard of measure in any model should be: is it responsive to the unique needs of the community or the communities that it serves? I think that is very much true of the primary care networks in place today, I think it likely will be true of the family care clinics, and I think it is true of many of the other models that exist out there in Alberta to deliver high quality primary health care.

Our goal as a government – and I can't repeat this often enough – is to give every Albertan a primary health care home within the health care system. Many of the concerns we hear about or I guess the anecdote that we hear most often as members of this Assembly from our constituents is: "Once you get into the system, the care is great. It's excellent. I was never treated better. But my difficulty was getting into the system." We believe very much, as a result of the work on the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health and the principles laid out in the Alberta Health Act and all of the reports and investigations that have been done over the last several years, that ultimately the solution is to give our citizens an opportunity to be attached, to have a home within the health care system, a home that is in or near their home community.

Those needs can be served in a variety of ways, Mr. Chair. We are very much a government that is open to innovation. We are open to solutions that are customized to meet the needs of the communities they serve. We will continue to support our primary care networks and assist them to continue to evolve, to grow in number. We will look at family care clinics through the pilot projects that I've mentioned.

We will look at any other model that our health care professionals tell us they believe could have a meaningful impact on things such as the incidence of chronic disease, incidence of and support for people suffering from mental illness and addictions, models that can support better prevention and early intervention, particularly for children and youth, and models that can also support connections to community organizations that directly influence the social determinants of health. Of course, I'm talking about community agencies that deliver housing and income support and education and justice support programs and many of the other things that position us as citizens to enjoy the best possible health that we can.

We will continue to support our in-patient care through both the expansion that we've talked about with respect to the south campus and the new Edmonton clinic resources that will come online. But as much as possible, Mr. Chair, we want to strive to be doing things in the community that do not need to be done in a hospital. Again, that goes back to the basic principle of giving people a home in their health care system and appropriately equipping our professionals from all disciplines to support people in achieving the best possible health status they can achieve.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, it's still not clear to me what the difference is that the minister is talking about because the primary care networks are charged with much the same role as the family care clinics and are potentially going to be seen as undermining the roles and responsibilities of primary care networks. I think it needs to be carefully thought through and built into the local regions, how they're going to relate to the primary care networks and the kinds of interrelationship of IT and communications and planning together.

It may well be possible for them to complement each other and to take on some of the preventive and community health kinds of initiatives that are missing from a particular PCN. But from the outside it certainly looks like an attempt to try something that looks new but isn't really new, that needs a new face, a new image, and something that the government can highlight at the expense of potentially eroding further the confidence of those working in the primary care networks who have looked at almost a decade of no increases and suddenly the new kid on the block looks a lot like the old kid. I would caution the minister on some of the impact of that decision, but I'll leave it there.

The minister didn't relate to the foreign medical graduates and foreign nursing graduates, but one of the barriers for foreign medical graduates is residency positions. I think if we're going to get culturally appropriate and well-trained physicians, we need to establish some new residency positions, funded positions, and support for foreign medical grads. I won't ask any more questions about that. That's just a suggestion and a reality that I'm hearing about.

Medical research in the province has been greatly destabilized as a result of the disruption of the heritage medical trust. Many world-renowned researchers have left or are planning to leave. Some who have considered coming here are no longer planning to come here because of the uncertainty of funding and uncertainty of commitment through Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions, which is the new iteration of the heritage trust fund.

The instability and the lack of professional oversight, I guess, has also been a concern. Many of us have felt that the expertise in the heritage medical trust fund was next to none and now the question of politicization or lay involvement in the research agenda for medical research is not what it should be. We need to ensure that the very highest of standards and the very highest of expertise go into establishing what the priorities are in medical research and how we can gain more stability there to assure a more long-term commitment to research.

For the record, as I may be cut off soon, I also wanted to raise questions about how we're doing with our tobacco reduction program. It's at the end of its 10 years. I was involved, actually, in the inauguration of the strategy some 10 years ago, and I'm glad to see it's had some impact. I'm a bit disappointed to see the teen smoking rates go from 11 per cent back up to 14 per cent in the last couple of years, so we do need to redouble our efforts around prevention and tobacco reduction. I know the Premier has committed some resources, and I hope that as this current strategy expires, we'll see more commitments there to the tobacco reduction strategy.

4:00

In terms of seniors' care I know you've heard this ad nauseam, but the opposition is concerned that we have quality and affordable long-term care and that there's evidence that some people are being left out as a result of the costs of long-term care and that the private, for-profit long-term care may not be the best approach for those with medical needs. For those with medical needs I think we as a government have taken a commitment to provide for medically necessary services for all citizens, including seniors, and I want to be sure that we honour that commitment. I noticed that the seniors' drug benefits program was cut by $7 million. Maybe the minister could explain something around that reduction in the seniors' drug benefit plan when the numbers of seniors and, presumably, the numbers of prescriptions must be going up.

That covers the significant questions that I had, Mr. Chairman. I open the floor to the minister again.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll use the remaining few minutes here to try to answer as many of the questions raised by the hon. member as I can.

First, with respect to his question around the reduction in the budget for the seniors' drug plan, that reduction is actually as a result of the reduction in generic drug prices that Albertans are now paying. That has resulted in savings not only in this program but in a number of other drug benefit programs that are in fact administered by other ministries. I think that's a very important development, not only from the perspective of the taxpayer but from the opportunity that it affords us to fund a new pharmacy services framework, which will be announced very soon, that compensates our pharmacists as full health professionals delivering a broad range of health care services in partnership with physicians and other health professionals to Albertans. I'm actually quite pleased to see that that reduction in generic drug prices that are paid by government programs is resulting in some of these new opportunities.

The hon. member also talked about academic medicine and research in Alberta. I guess a recent development that I am particularly pleased with is the establishment of the framework for the provincial academic alternate relationship plan. As the hon. member would know, Alberta traditionally has been highly competitive because of our alternate relationship plans. These are compensation packages, Mr. Chair, that combine research duties, teaching duties, and clinical duties for physicians. Our success with these – and it is due in large part to our partnership with the Alberta Medical Association – has resulted traditionally in us being one of the most competitive jurisdictions in Canada and in North America to recruit the top talent in both research and medicine.

As the hon. member mentioned, the reorganization of research services a number of years ago brought with it a new structure to the awarding of research grants. When I was appointed as minister, one of the things I was very mindful of was that the transition funding from our former Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, of which we were all very proud, was set to expire at the end of March this year. Working collaboratively with my colleague the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, our deans of medicine, the deputy ministers from both ministries, the provosts from our two largest universities, and other stakeholders through a group called the Committee on Academic Medicine, we were successful in completing and jointly announcing with my colleague the minister of advanced education a new provincial academic alternate relationship plan framework for our academic physicians. This includes the contributions of the two medical schools, the College of Physicians & Surgeons, Alberta Health Services, and many other stakeholders.

I think what's important to recognize here, Mr. Chair, is that we were able to do this in such a way that the new provincial framework takes into account all of the major disciplines represented in the medical profession, including family physicians, which was something that was extremely important. A total of 700 MDs are part of this provincial academic alternate relationship plan now, and we expect that to increase to up to 1,300 in the coming years.

So we have re-established ourselves with an appropriate provincial framework that retains our competitive position, and I think, based on the feedback that I'm getting from some of the stakeholders I mentioned, it will allow us to grow in the future and bring in other disciplines to be part of this very important framework.

I guess we're nearing the end of the time here, but I just don't want to leave off without talking about tobacco reduction. We are in the process of updating the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy. We have had great success not only as a result of that strategy but as a result of some legislation that was brought in by a former Minister of Health and Wellness a few years ago that dealt with the issue of smoking in public places, the sale of tobacco in pharmacies, and many other issues that contributed to our success.

But as the hon. member mentions, there is certainly more to be done, and as we renew the strategy, I want to make it very clear that we will continue to look at things such as exposure of children to second-hand smoke in vehicles, the sale of flavoured tobacco products, and other issues that are before us.

Thank you.

The Chair: Well, the first hour has been reached.

Now we're going to the Wildrose Party. You have 20 minutes with the minister or 10 minutes each. Do you want to combine?

Mrs. Forsyth: I think I'll try the 10 minutes, 10 and 10, and then if I may ask the minister to provide things back in writing on things that he doesn't get to, because 10 minutes can be quite lengthy.

The first thing I would like to ask the minister. Yesterday at the forum we attended we had a disagreement in regard to the consultation on the five-year mental health strategy. I've been told by now five different psychologists, psychiatrists, and mental health workers that they were not consulted, including another doc in the mental health field that has just e-mailed me today and said that he is not aware of any of his colleagues being consulted. What they've asked me to do – if you would please table whom you consulted with on the mental health strategy, what psychiatrists, what psychologists you consulted with, then I can let them know. I know that they are listening in Hansard right now, and I know that they were listening last night because when we were actually coming home, they were already calling me to say that they needed an answer.

You alluded to the member with regard to the staffing for the south campus hospital. We would like to know where that staffing is coming from. What we're hearing – and this has been brought up in the Legislature before – is that staff are coming from other hospitals, whether it's the Peter Lougheed Centre, the Rockyview general hospital, et cetera, vacancies appearing there and not being able to be filled.

Minister, on February 17, 2010, the previous minister promised a cost-benefit analysis on hip and knee surgeries. We're still waiting for that. We wonder if you wouldn't mind tabling that in the Legislature and providing us the information on that cost-benefit analysis.

The other thing we want to know is about the family care clinics and financially how they're going to be funded. We talked about that briefly last night, and I think, if I recall, that during the health forum debate you talked about that they're going to be using existing health facilities. We want to know the costs in regard to the renovations and the infrastructure on the health facilities and also the wages that you're going to be having to pay along with the benefits for your nurse practitioners. We want to know if you're going to have a physician in there, how you are going to be paying them. Is it going to be through an ARP? Is it going to be fee for service, that kind of thing?

4:10

You were talking about seniors' drug benefits and the generic drug prices and the savings that have occurred. I can tell you, from what I'm hearing from some of the seniors that I'm dealing with at this particular time, the costs that they're incurring if they cannot take a generic drug. One of those generic drugs that some of the seniors are calling us about is blood pressure pills. While they appreciate the fact that it's better to take a generic drug – and I don't think anybody is arguing that fact – if a particular individual can't take that particular generic drug and they want to go back to the brand-name drug, they're being told that it's not covered under Alberta health care and that they would have to pay for it themselves. So I really would like some clarification.

I am dealing with a senior, actually, in Edmonton who's had three different prescriptions for three different generic drugs in regard to her blood pressure medication. It has caused her endless problems, even getting gout. So if you could please provide that.

We would like to know how many acute-care beds there were in Alberta as of December 31, 2011.

Again, back to the mental health beds. This is from the mental health providers and psychiatrists: how many mental health beds are in Alberta as of today?

That takes me to – and we discussed this yesterday and spoke again to a reporter – the long-term care beds. How many long-term care beds do we have as of today? How many assisted care beds do we have as of today? How many lodge beds do we have today? We've now gotten on the long-term care beds probably five different numbers in five different places, whether it's in Hansard, whether it's in the paper, or whether it's the numbers that you were given by your department last night.

I want to briefly talk about priority 1.1, and that's about clarifying the roles, relationships, and responsibilities of the ministry and Alberta health. Both you and I know that, actually, this was brought up in the Health Quality Council investigations, our doctors talking about intimidation. The report covered intimidation, the culture within Alberta Health Services, privileges, positions, contracts threatened. It just goes on and on.

Now, we had a report in 2007 that dealt with that. We had another one. The previous minister signed the Alberta Health Services mandate and roles document on December 2, 2010. The roles were very clearly defined then. I'd like to know why we are sending out a task force and yet another investigation when we've clearly had a minister that signed the mandate and roles document on December 2, 2010.

I've asked you about the long-term care beds. I'd like to talk to you briefly about patients waiting too long for surgeries. The target for hip replacements was 33 weeks last year, when it was actually 41. This year the target is 27 weeks. Last year it took 49 weeks to get a knee replacement, and that's from the December 2011 Alberta Health Services update. The target was 42, and now the target is 35. The government isn't meeting their target plans on what you're going to do. It goes back to the cancer patients. Radiation is four weeks this year. Last year it was actually six weeks to see a radiologist/oncologist from the time of referral. What are you doing about that?

Strategy 3, strengthening primary care. We know that you just increased the primary care network per capita fee. How do family care clinics improve the primary care networks? If you'd please answer that question.

Minister, I know we're throwing a lot of questions at you, and we appreciate that your staff is trying to get you all these answers.

Honestly, if you could just kind of provide us some of it in writing, we'd be more than pleased to see that. If we can have it in the next, you know, week to 10 days, I'd appreciate that.

Let's just talk for about a minute in regard to the budget and 1.1, the minister's office, the increase from $592,000 to $639,000, the deputy minister's office from $711,000 to $751,000, communications from $2.240 million to $2.740 million. Some of that, I know, is on the contract that has to do with staffing, but I can't believe that a lot of that has to do with all of the agreement.

A hundred million more for primary care, addictions, and mental health: the line item is new this year, yet primary care networks have been around since 2005. How is the funding broken down by objective? If you could provide me with that information, please.

I want to talk briefly about number 2, physician compensation and development. We understand that you're in negotiations with the AMA and have been in negotiations for the last year. You've said on the floor that you're in constant contact with Dr. Slocombe in regard to the negotiations of the AMA. I guess my question is that you show no increase whatsoever. What happens if, say, three weeks from now you get an agreement with the AMA in regard to some of the things? On the $93 million that you talked about giving to cover the increase in primary care – and some of that, I understand, was from last year's budget if I'm correct – I'd like to know where in the budget you receive that. We couldn't find this $93 million anywhere in the budget. Is it a cost saving that you somehow got from last year's budget?

If you could talk about some of the increases under your ministry support. We understand the Health Facilities Review Committee and an increase in that. Is that for them to go look at more health facilities? We've heard some horrible stories in regard to some of things that are happening.

The Chair: Hon. member, your 10 minutes are completed.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the hon. member for the questions. We do aim to please here, so we will try to answer as many of these as we can, and we'll be pleased to follow up in writing with the ones that we can't answer.

Some of the numerical questions. There are currently 8,037 acute-care beds in Alberta; that is as of September 2011. Specifically with respect to mental health beds, we are looking at in psychiatric stand-alone facilities 913 across the province, 617 acute-care psychiatric beds – these are beds in community general hospitals – and with respect to addiction treatment beds 817 across the province. We will follow up with a specific breakdown by zone for each of these and provide that information to the hon. member.

There were a number of questions that were raised here with respect to the cost-benefit analysis. We will be pleased to provide that in writing.

I wanted to take a moment to address the hon. member's question regarding the seniors' drug benefit plan and what happens in the event that an individual is actually prescribed a brand name drug and finds himself or herself in a position where they're only offered the generic equivalent. I've encountered this myself in my own constituency office. There is an exception process for this on a per patient basis. My department will get back to you directly to explain how that works. There is a process through Blue Cross. There are instances where physicians want their patients to receive a specific brand name drug for specific reasons as opposed to a generic, and our Blue Cross plan for seniors does accommodate that.

The hon. member talked about a number of other issues here. With respect to physician services and where the budget for that comes from, I think I mentioned earlier that the per capita rate for primary care networks hasn't been raised since 2003. The $12 per capita increase is equivalent to $33 million, the 2 per cent increase that is going to fee-for-service and alternate relationship plans is equivalent to $60 million, Mr. Chair, so it's a total of $93 million in additional financial support that is being provided to physicians as a bridge for this year while the negotiations on the long-term agreement continue.

4:20

With respect to the questions around the next long-term agreement the answer is quite simple, Mr. Chair. We don't know what the terms of that long-term agreement are going to be until the time – and I hope it is very soon in the future – we have a tentative agreement in place, where we're aware of all of the program elements as well as the fee-for-service elements and other elements that make up a master physician compensation agreement. It is not possible for us to project what the dollar amounts associated with that will be, so we will have to wait and see what the terms of the agreement are. Then I will obviously have to look within my budget to see what resources are available to me or what additional resources I may need to seek in order to be able to fill the terms of the agreement.

With respect to the $93 million that I mentioned earlier, that money will be found within the budget that is currently before the House. We have a number of demand-driven services that are within our health care budget. In many years those are underspent. We have factored in in physician compensation allowances for volume increases. There are a number of places, Mr. Chair, in the $16 billion budget for health care where we believe we can accommodate successfully the $93 million in that additional financial support.

The hon. member also asked for some clarification around the funding for family care clinics, and I wanted to spend a couple of minutes on that because I think it's important. The three pilot projects that are going to be opening by April 1 will all be funded by public funds through Alberta Health Services' existing budget, so within their current envelope. The approximate cost of each pilot is $5 million. That money, as I said, is within their current envelope.

The point, I guess, I would like to make, Mr. Chair, is that in the future we certainly hope there will be others who will come forward with other ideas about how family care clinics or other primary care delivery models could be formed. In the case of FCCs that could include community-owned family care clinics. It could also include physician-owned family care clinics that are perhaps directly affiliated with primary care networks.

As I said before, Mr. Chair, we are a ministry that believes strongly that form should follow function. The prime criteria for us is not to come up with a single cookie-cutter model and implement that across the province. We are here to enable models of care that can respond to the needs of specific communities, and to the extent that our health professionals, including our physicians, are willing to work with us on that, we're happy to do whatever we can through financial resources and through other means to support better primary health care for all Albertans, trying to fulfill that vision of a home within the health system for our citizens.

The hon. member also referenced the roles and relationships recommendation in the Health Quality Council of Alberta report. I would certainly agree with the hon. member that in the many reports that have been written about our health care system over the years, this question has arisen. It has not only arisen since the creation of Alberta Health Services. My interpretation of what the Health Quality Council is telling us is that we still lack sufficient clarity. I think it's reasonable for people to think that when we create a larger organization, in fact a single health region for the entire province, the size of the organization on its own requires some special attention to clarity around roles and responsibilities and relationships.

I know that in my own ministry my executive team and all of the 850 staff that work in this department are very committed to increasing the policy capacity within the department so that they can support not only short-term decisions that need to be made about the health system but, in fact, are taking a long-term view and working with other ministries such as Human Services to try to shape the health system and, in fact, the social services system of the future. So I support the recommendation and the need to provide further clarity around those roles and relationships.

I think the other thing that I certainly don't mind mentioning – and it was a key finding of the report – is that for health professionals that work in the system, particularly in the early days of Alberta Health Services, there was a significant lack of clarity about whom they were to go to with a question about how a decision was to be made or a question or concern with respect to a patient or a number of other matters. I think that confusion resulted in some of the problems that we saw that were identified by the Health Quality Council report.

As much as this may seem to some as an issue that is studied often, I think it is a critical issue to not only address the concerns that were raised in the Health Quality Council report but to put us on a solid course for the future, where people have a very clear idea about how things work, about whom they go to when they have a question or concern, about how they advance an idea or an innovation about health care that they may think is critically important for the future. I support that, Mr. Chair, because I believe it supports cultural change and cultural improvement within our health care system, and we will vigorously pursue that recommendation to those ends.

There were a number of other issues that were raised by the hon. member. Again, as I mentioned in answer to a previous question, with respect to staffing for the south health campus this has been something I've been keeping a close eye on. I have been assured repeatedly by Alberta Health Services that the recruitment process is moving along well, that it is not simply an attraction of staff from other sites within Calgary but that, in fact, this new facility – and if members haven't had a chance to tour it, I strongly recommend it – is going to be a destination of choice for many of our new graduates both from within Alberta and from outside the province. It is an amazing place for people to work not only because of the excellent clinical facilities but also because of the focus on wellness and wellness-related programs.

For members that don't know, there is a complete YMCA facility that is going to be located within the new south health campus. There are very strong linkages between the family outpatient clinics and the local primary care network that will support a smooth transition from community-based primary care to specialist care within those outpatient clinics to other clinical services within the hospital. As with most innovation in health care, Mr. Chair, the focus here is on integration, and that means appropriate staffing and staff working together.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, Minister. The 20 minutes for the Wildrose Party has been reached.

Now the chair shall recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Do you want 20 minutes together or 10 minutes?

Mr. Mason: I think I'll take 10 minutes. If the minister is unable to answer in his 10, he can provide it in writing, and that would be great.

The Chair: So 10 minutes.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Minister and your staff, my first question is about the East Edmonton health centre, which was intended to provide urgent care. Today, almost two years after it officially opened, many of the centre's facilities sit empty, including the urgent care clinic. There's clearly a need for urgent care in northeast Edmonton to alleviate the strain on the Royal Alex emergency department. My question is: given the wait times and that the Royal Alex has continually missed the AHS targets by a wide margin, when will the East Edmonton health centre's urgent care facility open to provide people on the north side of Edmonton with emergency care times and the urgent care that they require?

Does the health minister know what the cost is of leaving the urgent care facilities in the East Edmonton health centre dormant year after year? Has he considered the cost of opening the urgent care clinic against the much greater costs to the health system of the continuing overload of the Royal Alex ER?

The next section is on physician compensation. Physician compensation is budgeted at $3.2 billion, an increase of $110 million from last year's budget. On February 27 the minister imposed a one-year compensation arrangement which will increase per capita funding for the primary care networks from $50 to $62 and a 2 per cent increase in fee-for-service and alternate relationship plans. The increase for PCNs will cost $33 million, and the increase in fee-for-service and alternate relationships will cost $60 million.

The AMA said that these increases were insufficient. From the AMA's The President's Letter on February 28: "The 2% increase in fee-for-service funding and alternate relationship plans will not cover the increases in office overhead costs for the two years of the imposition." And further: "The increase in funding for PCNs to $62 per patient will help, but the $12 is no more than an inflationary adjustment to the original $50 set nearly nine years ago." The question is: does the budget cover the $93 million it costs for the compensation arrangement that the minister announced last month?

4:30

The president of the AMA, Dr. Linda Slocombe, has said that the AMA's main priority is to have physicians at the table where the key decisions about health care are being made. The question is whether the AMA did have any say in the compensation arrangement that's been imposed on them. I'm not talking about previous negotiations here, Mr. Minister, but the decision to impose an agreement.

The Canada Health Act requires that health professionals receive reasonable compensation for the health services that they provide. The act also states that disputes over compensation will be settled by conciliation or binding arbitration. The AMA has signalled its willingness to submit the dispute to binding arbitration. So the question is: why has the government rejected binding arbitration to settle the dispute? Is the government concerned that the failure to arrive at an agreement with the doctors could put it in violation of the Canada Health Act?

With respect to emergency room wait times and long-term care under the five-year funding commitment for Alberta Health Services its base operating grant will increase by 6 per cent, from $9.6 billion to $10.2 billion. The Health Quality Council of Alberta's report found that the delay in ED patients being moved to an acute-care bed after a decision has been made to admit them is the greatest constraint and, therefore, the issue that needs to be addressed first. Acute-care services are increasing $220 million, or 6 per cent.

Emergency room wait time numbers for last week remained well below AHS targets. The AHS target is that 75 per cent of patients are discharged within four hours by March 2012. In the Edmonton area only the Stollery children's hospital met the target. AHS also has a target of 60 per cent of patients being admitted within eight hours by March 2012. No hospital in the Edmonton area came close to the target.

Mr. Chairman, one of the Health Quality Council report recommendations for reducing waiting times in emergency departments is for Health and Wellness and AHS to review the need for long-term care and supportive living based on detailed forecasting methods. The most recent AHS performance report indicates 675 people waiting in acute or subacute beds for a placement in continuing care while another 1,140 are waiting in the community. The question. In the past few years we've seen the government back away from its previous commitment to expand long-term care. This shortage of long-term care is key to reducing ER wait times. What steps is the ministry taking to provide spaces for those individuals who have been assessed as requiring long-term care and are waiting in acute care or in the community? What is in this budget that will address the long waiting list for long-term care?

In terms of continuing care two years ago residents of the Edmonton General continuing care centre were told that they'd be moved to a new long-term care facility, Villa Caritas. That facility was then changed to a geriatric mental health facility. As a result, the Edmonton General residents have been left in a residence that is in serious disrepair, with leaky roofs, an elevator that often breaks down, and doors that won't open for wheelchairs. My question is: is there anything in the budget to give residents at the Edmonton General reason to hope that the problems in their facility will either be fixed quickly or that they'll be able to move to another long-term care centre?

The Health Quality Council report's recommendations concerning cancer surgery wait-lists are that AHS standardize surgical wait-lists and make surgical oncology wait-lists a priority, that it invite stakeholders to participate in the lung cancer surgery project so that stakeholder needs are considered, and that it develop a comprehensive physician staffing plan to ensure long-term viability of its lung cancer surgery project.

The most recent AHS performance report shows that the wait time for referral for radiation therapy to first consultation with a radiation oncologist is six weeks. The target is four weeks. The reported wait time from ready to treat to first radiation therapy is 3.6, which exceeds the target of four. Question. The performance report indicates the problem area is in wait times for a consultation with a radiation oncologist. What in this budget will help assist with an attempt to reduce those particular wait times?

According to the most recent AHS performance report hip replacement wait times were 39.7 weeks. The target is 27. Knee replacement is at 49.9, and the target is 35 weeks. Cataract surgery wait times are 36, but the target is 30 weeks. The difference in wait times between the zones is often significant. For example, the year-to-date wait time in Calgary is 44.1 weeks while in Edmonton it's only 35.9. The question is: does the greater reliance on private surgical facilities in Calgary for cataract surgeries have anything to do with a significantly longer wait time in Calgary as compared to Edmonton?

In terms of drug benefits for seniors: $552 million in Budget 2012, which is a decrease of 7.2 per cent, or $43 million, over the previous year. The government has made no changes to the seniors' drug benefit, notwithstanding that they've made a couple of false starts with respect to that, and the government is estimating a reduction of $43 million on seniors' drugs this year. The question is: given the increasing size of the seniors population and the increasing costs of prescription drugs can the minister give an indication of why the government's costs for seniors' drugs are decreasing by $43 million?

The Health Resource Centre in Calgary was a private surgical facility providing knee replacements. It closed in November 2011 after a legal dispute with Alberta Health Services, which ended in an out-of-court settlement. Earlier in 2012 AHS agreed to provide funds to the HRC to help it stave off bankruptcy. The media reported that costs to AHS could have been up to $4 million.

Network, the company that owned the HRC, claimed that AHS was the cause of its financial problems because it entered into a long-term lease agreement with the understanding that AHS would contract them with 3,500 procedures, which is triple the number they were performing in 2010. AHS disputed this and said that they honoured all contractual obligations. My question is: what were the costs to AHS in terms of legal fees and receivership fees in the Health Resource Centre case? How many hip and knee replacement procedures could have been performed with that money?

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my questions.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the hon. member for the questions. There are quite a number of topics raised there, and I'll attempt to address as many as I can here in the time that we have.

First of all, the hon. member inquired about the status of the urgent-care centre in his constituency at the new East Edmonton health centre. I'm pleased to tell the hon. member that I have been following up on this specifically over the last few months since I have been the Minister of Health and Wellness. The government is committed to opening that urgent-care centre. I hope to have some additional news about this very soon for the hon. member. As I think many people know, this is a tremendously needed health centre that serves a part of the city that has a very high number of unattached patients. What I mean by that, Mr. Chair, is that there is a large number of people in that community who are relying primarily on emergency departments, specifically at the Royal Alexandra hospital, in order to access health care, frequently on an episodic basis when a specific or an urgent need arises, without the opportunity for follow-up as we would like at the primary care level.

Part of the importance of that follow-up is the availability of nonemergency care, so urgent care, as the hon. member describes. I think that once the urgent-care centre is open and fully operational, we will begin to see a much better opportunity for residents of that community to be more connected on a more frequent basis to a health care provider in or near their home community. I think that is very good news and something, certainly, that we want for all Albertans.

The hon. member also questioned the reduction in projected costs for generic drugs as part of the Alberta Blue Cross for seniors plan. The projected reduction is $7 million. It's not $43 million; it's $7 million. The reason for it, hon. member, is that it is a result of the government's previous decision to pay less for generic drugs for government-sponsored programs.

We have been reinvesting these savings in a number of ways. One that was talked about earlier in the discussion this afternoon is in support for pharmacists, to offer them a full-scope pharmacy services framework that, in fact, recognizes their status as full partners of the health care team, offering a range of professional services to their clients and not simply the traditional notion of pharmacists as simply dispensers of medication. I am looking forward as we go into the future to looking at how we can invest some of these savings in other ways.

I'd point out to the hon. member that in this current budget before the House the projected savings on drug costs in other ministries is, I believe, in the order of $15 million. It's not only a savings experience within my ministry but in other ministries such as Human Services and Seniors that actually also have drug benefits programs for the Albertans that they serve. Again, I think that is good news.

4:40

The hon. member – and I want to spend a little bit of time on this – also talked about emergency department wait times. It is obviously an issue that we are all concerned about in Alberta. While I want to get to some of the specific strategies here in a minute, I think it's important to note for all hon. members that the volume in our emergency departments, the number of visits, is increasing. In the last year it increased by an average of 17 per cent across the province. That is certainly in part a function of the demand for emergency room care, but as the hon. member I think also pointed out by way of his last question around the East Edmonton health centre, it is also a testament to the need for more primary care available to our citizens close to home.

While it is true that the acuity level of patients who come into many of our emergency departments is very high, we believe that often that acuity is a result of not being able to have regular interaction with a physician and with other members of a health care team that can help someone manage a chronic disease to avoid an acute episode that results in the need to visit an emergency department. So improving the availability of primary care is absolutely one of the key strategies to reduce emergency department wait times.

We have also seen strategies that include search capacity protocols to meet demand, the real-time emergency department patient access and co-ordination system, to direct patients to emergency departments with shorter wait times, and new smart cards that provide emergency department physicians with quicker and secure access to patient health records. We are reporting real-time wait time information to the public for Edmonton hospitals to help patients steer themselves to facilities with shorter wait times.

Within the emergency department itself – and this is a credit to emergency department physicians and other staff – we have seen many innovations that reduce length of stay although the length of stay still varies across sites. I'm talking about length of stay within the emergency department. The volume of patients is also a factor in this, the complexity of patient conditions is a factor in this, and capacity limitations. We have seen greatly increased operational efficiency.

Those numbers don't always show up, Mr. Chair, when we look at the two key indicators that the hon. member referred to, and I can give you a very specific example. In one of my recent meetings with emergency department physicians and AHS they pointed out that there was actually quite a large number of patients who present at the emergency department with a specific need but that require assessment by specialists and require access to diagnostic equipment, to diagnostic processes within the hospital to provide the necessary information for a decision to admit or not to admit to be made. In some cases the time to do this exceeds the eight-hour target that we have set as the outer limit for admission of emergency in-patients within the hospital environment.

So one of the new initiatives that will be rolled out quickly is the development of what are called clinical decision units. These are separate areas outside of the emergency department where patients who are awaiting this extra assessment and diagnostic workup can be seen appropriately and cared for appropriately until such time as there is enough information to enable a decision to admit.

While some people, Mr. Chair, might think this is, you know, an unnecessarily detailed and arduous process, I think we have to remind ourselves that our population is aging. There are much higher numbers of people with not only one chronic disease but two and sometimes three chronic diseases, on a variety of medications, and some without attachment to a primary health care provider. What this results in is a much higher level of complexity for quite a few people that present at an emergency department. So I think this step, along with the others that we've mentioned, is absolutely key in reducing emergency department wait times.

The other thing I'll just mention quickly on this theme because it is such an important topic is the Health Quality Council's comments about the occupancy rates in our acute-care beds. While we have focused extensively on these two targets in the last year, the eight-hour target and the four-hour target – and they are very important – the quality council says that we need to do a better job of managing our acute-care inventory across the province.

Now, in Calgary there is a shortage of acute-care beds, and that will be greatly alleviated with the opening of the south health campus. We have seen a number of our facilities operating at 100 per cent, 110 per cent of occupancy for quite an extended period of time. That's due to volume increases, but there are also things that we can do, that were discussed in this report and that I've discussed with Alberta Health Services, to make better use of those beds.

Those include, certainly, attention to people who are waiting in acute-care beds – and I'm going to differ in language with the hon. member, and I'm sure that he anticipates this anyways – who are waiting for admission to continuing care or who are awaiting sufficient home care support at home because they don't have it through family or other means to be able to return home.

So the $25 million in this budget on top of the $450 million that Alberta Health Services already spends on home care we think is going to certainly make an impact for those patients waiting in hospitals who could return home if for nothing else than having a higher level of support. But we do need to keep the focus on this.

The last time I discussed this with Alberta Health Services, 8 out of 10 placements to continuing care in Alberta were going to people who were awaiting acute-care beds in our hospitals. Now, I say that knowing that we have to also meet the demand that is in the community for access to these spaces as well. We certainly can't forget about those people. But the priority for placement to continuing care is about 80 per cent for patients that are waiting in those acute-care beds.

The other thing that is being discussed that is going to be a function of the physician leadership and working with other professionals is optimizing discharge practices in our hospitals. Now, that does not mean sending people home before they are ready. It means sending them home in a timely way when the supports are available to them.

The Chair: Your 10 minutes are up.

You still have about a minute.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I will thank the minister for his comments with respect to the East Edmonton health centre, the urgent care centre. I await with great anticipation that happening because it is, as the minister mentioned, a very underserved part of the province in terms of health care professionals, and that is why they overutilize the ER. I hope this will go a long way towards helping the general health of the population in the area that I and some other members represent. So I thank him for that.

I just want to follow up with the long-term care thing. For the life of me, I can't figure out why the government is doing what it's doing when this is so key to solving the ER problem, which I think they actually would like to try and figure out how to do. So does this mean that the whole definition of long-term care is being thrown overboard by the government, that it's no longer a valid definition that you are using which involves nursing care and so on?

The Chair: Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. That completes the 20 minutes between you and the minister.

The next 20 minutes is for the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Do you want to use the 10 and 10 or 20 together?

Mr. Taylor: I think we'll go with the 10 and 10. I've been listening to the debate so far this afternoon, and the minister is giving rather complete answers, and I think there's some useful information in there. I'd rather take that approach than try to do it back and forth in a relatively short period of time, which is what 20 minutes is.

I'll start out by saying that there certainly is no shortage of money in this budget, certainly no shortage of money being added to this budget compared to last year. If money was all it took, I guess we would have a phenomenal health care system in the province of Alberta, one where not only everybody talked about the quality of care once they find the magic words to get into the system but where we wouldn't need magic words to get into the system, where we'd actually be able to access it and get appropriate care and timely care whenever we needed it. But the minister and I and everybody else in this House and everybody in Alberta knows that that, unfortunately, is not the case.

4:50

As I've been sitting here, Mr. Chair, listening to the debate so far this afternoon, it hasn't exactly sparked a whole lot of optimism and hope in me. It's not for lack of trying. I mean, the minister just a few minutes ago ran through quite a number of initiatives that he intends to try. The minister and the government have also adopted all 21 recommendations of the Health Quality Council of Alberta report. I want to acknowledge that because in the controversy around the limited terms of reference on the public inquiry that is to follow this, I don't think the government and the minister have been given enough credit, quite frankly, for saying that, yes, all 21 of those recommendations are valid, and we will accept them all, and we will act on them all.

Part of what troubles me here, Minister, is that when the Health Quality Council released this report, Dr. Cowell was asked in the media conference: if every one of these recommendations was adopted and acted upon, how long would it be before the people of Alberta actually saw tangible results, actually saw a noticeable difference to the better in the way our health care system operates? If I remember correctly – and I think I do – the answer came back from Dr. Cowell that it would be something in the neighbourhood of five years plus.

He referenced some of the practices of the old Chinook health region, which he referenced frequently throughout his media conference as a model for where we want to go. In answer to that specific question, Minister, he referenced the Chinook health region in terms of it taking two years for the initiatives that they took to make a significant difference in their region. That was one region out of what used to be nine, out of what used to be 17 before that. We're talking about a whole province. You want to talk about chronic, complex conditions. The province of Alberta, if it were a patient, would be a real challenge for its doctor, I'm afraid, where the health system is concerned.

I'm going to pull together here a few things that don't necessarily right at first glance look like they're meant to go together. This is mostly from the business plan, starting on page 39. I'll start with goal 1.1.

Ensure effective governance and accountability of the health system by clarifying the roles, relationship and responsibilities of the ministry and Alberta Health Services; providing health system policy direction and oversight; and strengthening the measurement and reporting of health system performance.

Then I will jump to and just throw in here goal 3.2. "Begin implementing Family Care Clinics." I'm still not clear, Minister, what these family care clinics are going to be, how they're going to operate, what they will consist of, what their goals will be. Most importantly, I haven't the foggiest idea how Alberta Health and Wellness and Alberta Health Services intend to measure the performance and the success of these three pilot clinics so that they'll know at the end of the pilot project whether this is a route that we want to go or not.

Also, goal 3.5, "Provide appropriate access to services across the continuum of care by increasing coordination of health and social support systems," which certainly sounds like a worthwhile initiative. I mean, the minister and I have been talking probably more frequently than he would like this close to an election about my proposal to move support services for the brain injured from Alberta Health Services to Alberta Seniors, where the model as practised by PDD, which lives under Alberta Seniors, is more of a community model versus the medical model that Alberta Health Services in many cases rightly practises, but in some cases it's not the most appropriate way to go.

As I look at this, I'm seeing a little sense here that Alberta Health and Wellness and, presumably, by extension Alberta Health Services – I'm never really sure where the lines are and the boundaries are and where they get crossed between AHW and AHS, and that brings me back to goal 1.1. How is this going to be defined, and how are you going to ensure that you've learned from your past errors, because there have been plenty, and how are you going to make sure that you actually improve the system with a little bit of political oversight, without political meddling, et cetera, et cetera? How are you going to restore the confidence of the people of Alberta, who, I think, feel that a good part of the problem with the health care system in this province is that politicians have been involved and have been messing it up?

This notion now that you're going to take a system that has been geared to the medical model, which is diagnosing what's wrong with the patient and curing the patient, and try to move it to more of a community model, that recognizes that sometimes the patient can't be cured, that sometimes the chronic condition or conditions the patient is suffering from have to be managed and sometimes the patient has to be managed in a different context, in a different environment – it's a different attitude from fix what is broken. Fix what is broken is so culturally entrenched in the health care system in this province now that I'm very intrigued to hear how this effort to co-ordinate between health and social supports is going to reframe the culture, reframe the mentality inside the health care system.

We have to touch on continuing care because if we've been paying attention, we have known for years and years that the population is aging, and as it ages, it is developing chronic illness and becoming more complex and more expensive for the health care system to manage. We've known that there is a looming shortage of continuing care beds, both nursing home and long-term care beds, and assisted living beds. We've known that there's a shortage of home care, yet we are spending $450 million on home care and adding another $25 million to that. What are we getting for the money that we're spending there?

Sometimes I can be a pretty black-and-white, simple, straightforward kind of thinker, to my detriment, but it strikes me that maybe part of the problem with this system, this monster that we've built here and its nearly $16 billion budget, is that we overthink a lot of stuff. I mean, if there's a blockage at the front end with emergency care because there's a blockage at the back end with people tying up acute-care beds because they can't get into long-term care because you haven't provided enough of it, isn't the answer rather self-evident, that at the tail end, if you will, you need to focus on providing the long-term care access and space that an aging population needs so that you don't clog up the system?

And, please, let's not refer to them as bed blockers because that blames the victim. The people who are stuck in these acute-care beds waiting for a placement somewhere in long-term care, we hear them referred to as bed blockers, and that's really a tragedy. That adds insult to injury because there they are completely powerless, and they're getting blamed for all the backlog, all the stoppage in the system because of that. I'd like to know why there is not more focus on that. I'll turn it over to the minister.

The Chair: Hon. member, your 10 minutes have been reached.

Hon. minister, you have the next 10 minutes.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the hon. member for the questions. I will endeavour to provide as many answers as I can.

I guess the first theme – and this was actually a theme, I think, throughout what I heard from the hon. member – was his concern with the total cost of the health care budget. The budget before the House, Mr. Chair, is for $16 billion. That is a very significant amount of money. It is, in fact, the highest spending on a per capita basis on health care in Canada, second only to Newfoundland and Labrador.

One of the things that I've observed over the years and also now in the role as minister in discussion with other ministers is a new way of looking at this issue. Traditionally we've talked about spending as a percentage of the total provincial budget; in this case, we're looking at almost 40 per cent of the budget. Ontario and Quebec are nearing 50 per cent of spending of their provincial budgets on health care. It's a lot of money, and it's a lot for people to deal with conceptually in terms of how to use the resources to improve the system.

What we know, Mr. Chair, very clearly now, based on the evidence, is that the outcomes from the health care system in terms of the health status of the population, health care outcomes as a result of the interaction with the system, and health system performance overall in terms of the broader performance indicators are not directly related to the amount of money that is expended on health care services. In the case of Canada, for example, we are the third-highest per capita spender in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries, but our performance indicators in areas like health status and health system performance are consistently at their best in the middle of the pack.

5:00

That is not to say that you don't need sufficient resources in government in order to deliver high-quality care, and we are very fortunate to have been able to do that in Alberta. But I think the discussion has shifted across the country from only the issue of cost to the issue of the value that is attained from the health care dollars that are expended. Those value indicators are in the areas of things such as wait times for care, but they are also expressed in the health status of our population.

As I said earlier this afternoon, a concerning fact for me, certainly, in my role is that this generation of children in Canada are expected to have a shorter life expectancy than the generation that preceded them. That tells me that we're not doing enough to prevent children from developing conditions which lead to chronic disease, conditions like obesity. It tells me that we still need to do more in the area of mental health and addictions. There are many things that we need to do, in fact, in some cases just doing more of what we know works, to provide the interventions that are necessary to show a marked improvement in the health status of our population.

As I discussed in answer to an earlier question this afternoon, from 1996 to 2010 the life expectancy of Albertans has increased. That is good news, but we also need to keep a check on many other factors that have an influence on our health status.

We talked a lot this afternoon, Mr. Chair, about strategies to reduce wait times in emergency departments, and I won't cover that ground again.

In terms of the Health Quality Council report and the health system as a whole I guess what I would like to say to the hon. member and, I guess, through him to anyone who may be monitoring this discussion is that the Health Quality Council in no way suggested that the entire health care system in this province is broken or dysfunctional. They were asked to look at three specific areas: emergency department wait times; allegations with respect to the deaths of patients on waiting lists for lung cancer surgery, which were found to be unsubstantiated; and thirdly, issues with respect to physician advocacy in the health care system. While those are three very important areas and they were areas that were thoroughly investigated, those findings are not an indication that we have not achieved and continue to achieve very significant success in this province in terms of what we're offering to Albertans.

If we take a moment, Mr. Chair, to look at the volume of services that are being provided, we can see that for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2011, we had 364,000 hospital discharges in this province. We had 117,000 urgent-care centre visits, 758,000 calls to Health Link, 3,156 primary hip replacements performed in a province of 3.8 million people, 4,395 knee replacements, 33,700 cataract surgeries in a single year, 333,000 CT examinations completed, and 177,000 MRI exams. The number of services on a per-patient basis in Alberta for the year ended March 31, 2011, was 12.37 services per patient. That compares to 11.95 in the fiscal year that ended March 31, 2007. So the volume of our health care services continues to increase.

One thing that we as a government are quite mindful of is the proportion of that volume that continues to increase in hospital-based care and acute care versus the increase in the volume of care that is delivered in the community. We are working very diligently with the various health professional faculties, with Alberta Health Services, with the quality council, and with other stakeholders to try to identify opportunities where we can provide care in the community that had previously been provided in hospitals.

We think this supports a better quality of care, Mr. Chair, where it's deemed appropriate for the patient by a health professional. It obviously supports the delivery of care closer to home. It supports a higher degree of attachment between the citizen and a family and a team of health care providers, doctors and nurses and others, that are trying to meet the needs of a given community. We think it gives our health care system the best opportunity to influence better health status for our population with respect to future generations. It really gives us an opportunity to get a handle on chronic disease management, to reduce the incidents there, to provide early intervention in mental health and addictions, and to do so much more because of the fact that we're working in a team-based care environment and that we're delivering as much of the care as possible close to home.

It also affords an opportunity, Mr. Chair, to improve linkages between the primary care system and the acute-care system. We have very successful examples of primary care networks in Alberta that have developed specialist linkages. They have negotiated relationships with individual specialists across disciplines that allow for speedier access to specialists by citizens who are part of the primary care network. We want to build on this as part of the family care clinics in the future.

The hon. member also inquired about differences between family care clinics and primary care networks. There are a number that I discussed in answers to earlier questions this afternoon. I would sum it up again, Mr. Chair, by saying that the attempt here is not to develop yet another cookie-cutter model and attempt to implement it in a uniform way across the province. Our family care clinics are noted for their innovation, for their unique programming. In the same way that primary care networks have been successful in this regard, family care clinics will be equally successful in the future.

The three pilot family care clinics will be owned and operated by Alberta Health Services, but opportunities do exist, Mr. Chair, for the FCCs to be community owned in the future and to be physician owned. That is a distinct difference from the current primary care networks, which are a program that is embedded in the former trilateral master agreement.

Through FCCs Albertans will have access to a wider range of care providers who are working in teams, including nurse practitioners, registered nurses, mental health workers, dietitians, physical therapists, pharmacists, and family physicians. That is not to say that other disciplines aren't represented in our primary care networks now, but we see an opportunity here, Mr. Chair, to expand that further, to provide Albertans with more direct access to those other health professionals, not always through a physician.

We see opportunities to improve linkages between family care clinics and community organizations that are not health-specific. I'm talking about organizations like the Canadian Mental Health Association, the Salvation Army, community housing organizations, employment training organizations, peer counselling and support organizations, our schools, and other organizations that have a bearing on the success we hope to achieve in primary care.

The Chair: The next hon. member on my list is the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. You have 20 minutes with the minister or just 10 minutes for you.

Mr. Webber: Well, let's just do the 10 and 10, Mr. Chair. That would work for me. I don't even know if I'll take the 10, but I'll focus on this.

I do have a couple of questions for the hon. minister regarding specifically organ transplants here in the province of Alberta. First of all, I want to share some statistics with regard to organ transplants here in Alberta. In the past five years, Mr. Chair, 214 people have died waiting for organ transplants here in the province. That is the third-highest number among provinces here in Canada. There are currently about 556 patients waiting right now for transplants here in Alberta, and that waiting list has doubled within the last 10 years here since 2002. Also, family consent has gone from 80 per cent down to 45 per cent since 2002.

5:10

Back in 2002, hon. minister, Alberta's organ donor rate was about 17 donors per million population. That, of course, has steadily decreased, and currently the Alberta rate is at about nine donors per million, which is, Mr. Chair, the worst in Canada. The national average was about 14 donors per million back in 2009.

Now, Ontario, British Columbia, and Nova Scotia currently do have organ donor registries, and Manitoba is currently setting one up. Of course, Alberta has a population of about 3.7 million people and recorded over a hundred thousand deaths from all causes in the past five years. Of those deaths, Mr. Chair, only about 180 donated their organs. That is less than .2 per cent of the population. As a comparison, British Columbia has a population of 4.5 million and has recorded 117 people who died while waiting for transplants within the past five years.

The current situation here in Alberta, Mr. Chair, is that in order to donate organs upon death, Albertans have to sign the back of their health care cards, of course, before they die. When donors pass away, the onus is on hospital staff to approach grieving family members to consider consenting to organ donation. Even if the card is signed, though, families have the final legal say as to whether or not they want their loved one to donate their organs and tissues.

The proposal that is out there, Mr. Chair and hon. minister, is to create a provincial government organ donor registry system to allow Albertans to register online their willingness to be a donor. It's definitely an opt-in way of indicating that you want to donate your organs. In this manner when donors die, hospitals can immediately access registry records rather than searching through to try to find their health care cards to see if they've signed the consent.

There are many benefits with regard to having a registry system here in the province, Mr. Chair. It will certainly ease the task, of course, of front-line health care workers who have to approach family members by demonstrating the prior consent of their loved ones. There is a consensus in the organ transplant community that a registry together with an awareness campaign is definitely necessary. An Alberta organ donor registry website could be linked to the already existing e-health records network to create a central database accessible to critical care staff.

The Alberta government has already agreed to an approved donation strategy, but it was never implemented. The report from the Alberta Advisory Committee on Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplantation was never implemented.

The Alberta government already does collect personal information on residents via registries, so it would be straightforward to co-ordinate the donor registry with Service Alberta or with Alberta Health and Wellness.

B.C., Ontario, and Nova Scotia already use this system to successfully manage a donor registry program. Of course, the costs of running a registry, I would think, would be considerably minimal compared to the escalating costs of keeping patients alive through incredibly expensive dialysis or ventricular assistive devices and, of course, hospital stays.

I guess what I have to ask the hon. minister is: where are we with moving forward and creating an Alberta organ and tissue donor registry, and can we expedite this process at all? Those would be my questions, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and I really want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills for raising this issue. It is something that we have started to discuss between ourselves fairly intensely over the last few weeks, and I expect we'll continue to do so in the future.

I think the other thing I would want to acknowledge is that there are members on all sides of this House that have done extensive work on this issue over the years. The notion of a provincial organ and tissue donor registry is not a new idea to be discussed in this House. That being said, I began some investigation into this area. I think one misconception that I became aware of, actually, as a result of my discussions with the hon. member was that the leadership for the development of provincial organ and tissue donor registries was actually coming from Canadian Blood Services, and while it is true that Canadian Blood Services has an organ and tissue donation strategy developed, they are very much focused on connecting provincial and territorial organ and tissue donor registries through the expenditure of funds that have been allocated for that initiative.

As the hon. member said, a number of our colleague jurisdictions have actually developed electronic organ and tissue donation registries with great success. As he said, the purpose of the registries is to allow citizens to affirmatively register online their intent to donate organs and tissue in the event that their organs and tissue become available through accident or through other unfortunate circumstances.

I think that when we listen to the statistics that the hon. member presented and listen to some of the personal stories, that he is aware of, of individuals that have been waiting for long periods of time for transplants, I think we have to take serious note, Mr. Chair, that this is an unmet need within our province and that the trend, in fact, as the hon. member pointed out, to donation is decreasing.

When we talked about this the first time, I asked him how that was measured. It's actually measured on the basis of the response of individuals at the time family members are asked whether or not they would consider organ and tissue donation. As we've heard and, I think, as all members know, all too often there is no affirmative declaration of intent on the part of the person because of the failure to sign the back of the organ donor card or lack of clarity or communication with family members about the specific wishes of an individual in the event they are placed in that circumstance. So I think there is a huge need for us to pay some immediate attention to this issue.

One of the things I haven't had the opportunity to do quite yet is to talk to some of the other ministers in the jurisdictions that have implemented the electronic registry. We've expended a lot of money in this province to develop Canada's first electronic health record. It would seem to me a logical conclusion and perhaps an expectation of Albertans that that electronic health record could be used to support this type of initiative. That being said, I know that it's a complex issue, and I am not yet in a position to say that I have a complete understanding of all of the issues that are involved.

Quite often in our discussions issues such as confirmation of the declaration of intent as an individual ages over time are sometimes raised. We also have to consider the plight of emergency room physicians and other staff who are charged with making requests of family or, in the absence of family, of other people who know the individual and the challenges there again sometimes in establishing the competency of the individual at the time they made their declaration known. I need to make more study of this, but I'm sure there are also challenges embedded in legislation in this province that govern patient confidentiality and privacy.

As much as I agree with the intent and the need, I need an opportunity to better understand the complexity, but it is something that I am committed to pursuing in Alberta. I am going to need the support of colleagues on all sides of the House to raise awareness about it and to deal with particularly the area of any legislative or regulatory barriers that may be in place. I think we have to look to our own citizens, the people that we serve, our constituents, to do the necessary consultation, to build on the consultation that has been previously done by others in this House, and to make sure that we have a clear sense of where Albertans want us to go on this issue.

I don't know any of my constituents or any of my friends or family that would not be alarmed by the statistics that the hon. member presented when he asked these questions. That decrease in the willingness to donate is something that we must be prepared to address.

5:20

As much as the information technology and the legislative and regulatory considerations and all of those other processes are a factor in this, I think a renewed public dialogue on this issue is also important. It will help to establish the case for what needs to be done. It will likely give us confirmation, I think, of the intent or the desire of Albertans to see government move on this issue, and it will propel us to find a solution faster rather than simply prompt further study on an issue that, in my personal opinion, has been quite extensively studied in this province.

I look forward to pursuing investigation of this further with the hon. member and to learning from him, learning from others in this House who have taken a close look at this over the years, and to establishing through dialogue with our constituents the intention and the willingness of Albertans for us to move forward on this as quickly as we possibly can.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Hon. member, you still have some minutes. Okay.

Then I shall recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Do you want 10 minutes?

Dr. Taft: Well, if I could ask the minister: if I promise to not make my questions too long, do you promise to not make your answers too long so that we can have a few exchanges? Okay. I appreciate that.

The Chair: So the dialogue will be 20 minutes.

Dr. Taft: We'll go for 20 minutes. That's right. So now the pressure is on me to be to the point. I'll do what I can.

First of all, I missed the introduction of your staff. I want to open with a couple of comments. I appreciate the minister's comments over the last few months since he became minister about the need for stability. Your deputy minister is now – I've kept track – the 13th deputy minister in 20 years. I hope she has a longer life expectancy than previous ones. This minister is at least the fifth minister in the 11 years that I've been an MLA. Stability would be welcomed, and I agree with the minister that that's important.

I also noticed the minister in response to one of the other questions talking about overall spending in Canada on health care compared to OECD countries. I want to start with this general comment just as a piece of information that I think is important for all of us to know. I was startled in doing some research last year that the CIHI actually compares Canada's spending on health care to other countries, as you say, and in total we're high. But what was startling to me was that the reason we're high is that we have a far larger private health care sector than I appreciated. So CIHI – and this is from their National Health Expenditure Trends, 1975 to 2011, which they published, I think, last year, and I'm just going to quote from that. "Canada, with private-sector per person spending of US$1,282, is among the top three countries with the highest per capita health spending funded by the private sector."

Actually, when you look at Canada's public-private portion – again this is straight from CIHI – Canada ranks 18th in the developed world for the portion of total health spending that comes from the public sector. That's just really important background, I think, for us when we talk about the need to introduce the private sector and so on and contain public health spending in Canada. Actually, I'm concerned that we've introduced a kind of a Pandora's box into Canada's health care system by opening it up to so much private health care spending and that that's driving some of the increases in costs. So that's a bit of background.

I also suspect that the large portion of private health care spending in Canada may correlate to our relatively weak performance. There is extensive research, despite some statements otherwise, that for-profit health care delivery tends to be more costly and lower quality, and we've got a very large portion of that.

Mr. Minister, with those background comments I want to ask this question. Over and over the Premier and the government talk about their support for publicly funded health care delivery. My concern is that it be publicly funded and publicly delivered. My question: does it make a difference to this government's policy whether it's publicly delivered or privately delivered for-profit or privately delivered not-for-profit?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you to my hon. colleague for the question. You know, with respect to your opening comments about the source of funding and a comparison to other countries I take the information that you presented at face value. I haven't had a chance, obviously, to read it.

I guess what I would say in terms of my approach to this is that, first of all, I'm not sure I would agree that the source of the funding is always what necessarily makes the difference in terms of the quality of care that's delivered. I recognize there's a high degree of sensitivity around this, you know, across the country in different areas.

My thinking, actually, in recent years is that too much of the focus has been on the question of the total cost of care, both from public and private sources, and not enough focus has been on the value achieved from the expenditures that are made both in terms of the health care outcomes for the population and the indicators associated with someone's interaction with the health care system for surgery or, you know, for any reason. So I'm actually trying to take that approach to my role now. I think that value is really where we need to be focused.

Again, you're obviously well read and learned in this area yourself, but I'm not of the opinion that simply increasing funding, whether it's from the private or public sector, necessarily equates with better outcomes in the system. I'm sure you would be in agreement with that.

I can tell you that there have certainly been shifts in recent years in what the cost drivers are in the health system. In Alberta I'm told that currently pharmaceutical spending is 15 per cent of all spending. The private-payer portion of that cost is 55 per cent. So from the perspective of opportunities for other private funding sources in the marketplace to contribute toward high cost drivers in the system, particularly pharmaceuticals, I guess I'm not of the opinion that we want to discourage employers and others who sponsor these benefit plans from providing this coverage because when we are dealing with something that is as high cost as health care, of course, the dollars that we don't take advantage of from those other sources become an opportunity cost for things that we could be doing in other areas of the health care system like prevention.

Your specific question about publicly delivered. I know this is something that's been debated in the House before. My notion is that the role of government in health care is primarily one of assurance. That means ensuring the appropriate regulatory frameworks. Obviously, it entails making sure that the services provided are safe and that they're of high quality. It involves making sure that programs are sufficiently funded and, most of all, that the regulatory framework that applies in the delivery of health care is the same regardless, that the regulatory framework and the quality measures are identical and that they are, in fact, indifferent to the sources of funding.

I'll just close because I promised to try to be brief. I think one area where Alberta has a proud tradition – and nobody ever really talks about it. We talk about private, but we don't always talk about not-for-profit. If we look at the history of continuing care across the country and particularly in Alberta, the early pioneers in this area that were investing capital were, in fact, not-for-profit organizations like the Good Samaritan Society, like the Bethany Care Society in Calgary. I think, you know, it's clear today that the same standards in those facilities apply in Carewest or Capital Care facilities. The inspection process is certainly as onerous for the operators regardless. My parliamentary assistant, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, is doing some work with the parliamentary assistant for Seniors to see what can be done to try to streamline some of those inspection processes and make them more effective but less onerous in terms of the demand on the operators.

I guess I don't share the opinion that the prime differential in the quality of care that's delivered boils down to the private versus public funding side. That's my view.

5:30

Dr. Taft: I'm not surprised. We'll just have to agree to disagree. I would take the position that it does matter who or what kind of organization is delivering that, and it matters for a number of reasons, but we won't belabour that in this setting because the time is so short.

I want to just go from those broad issues to a very, very specific one which illustrates perhaps some of the challenges between the private and the public systems. I have a constituent who over the last few weeks has had a very trying time with her father's care. He lives in I guess it's an assisted living, private, for-profit facility. It's a lovely facility. You walk through, and it's quite attractive. The staff are pleasant. But as soon as anything medically goes wrong at all, their response, since they have no medical staff, is to call 911, and then the person ends up in the emergency ward of a small rural hospital.

The hospital itself is filled, so the emergency room is backed up. I was there myself, and a person had been there for four days, in an emergency room in a small rural hospital. Something is wrong here. Part of the problem with the assisted living facility is that as soon as anything got at all complicated, their response was 911 – that was it – and the number of 911 calls is quite remarkable.

So there's a breakdown in the fit and the co-ordination, even in the very incentives between the two organizations. It's very clear that the quality of care suffers but also that the costs are ridiculously high. What mechanisms are in place to help resolve those kinds of issues? How do we know that all across this province the private assisted living facilities aren't just treating 911 as their kind of instant parachute whenever there's a problem?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would be very concerned about hearing about that sort of situation from a constituent myself. I guess there are a few things that come to mind and things that I don't necessarily know about the assisted living facility. If the facility is under contract to provide designated supportive living with Alberta Health Services, it is subject to a contract for the provision of that health care. That contract is backed by supportive living accommodation standards and continuing care health standards, which come under the purview of my ministry. Those standards apply to any facility in Alberta that is offering care.

In this particular case, you know, one thing that comes to mind for me is that if this facility is under contract, is it in a position to adjust the health care that they're delivering to residents as the residents' needs change over time? It sounds like that is probably not the case.

The hon. the Premier has introduced a concept called continuing care centres. A few months ago we announced two pilot projects in this area, one in Red Deer and one in Calgary. The continuing care centres are designed to facilitate aging in place. Hon. member, these two particular centres are going to be built by Covenant Health with support from the affordable supportive living initiative under the Minister of Seniors.

These facilities are actually built in such a way that the structure can be scaled up to offer someone what we have been calling in this House long-term care or a very high level of care in addition to supporting people with minimal needs. They assist in keeping individuals in their home communities and keeping couples together, and most importantly they're a model that is designed to allow for that flexibility to scale up care as someone's needs change, whether it's a gradual increase over time or whether it's in response to a specific episode, perhaps a complication from a chronic illness.

I don't know what happened in the particular case that you mentioned, but I think the way of the future and what I've tried to get across during question period is that we are trying to support a range of affordable living options for our seniors that bring health care to them in place. It is completely unacceptable that someone would have the experience that you just described.

Thanks.

Dr. Taft: How much time do we have left?

The Chair: You have six minutes.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you.

My point with this is that we have fragmented the system, in my view, and in greater or lesser degrees I've kicked around the health care system for a very long time. We've fragmented those edges of the health care system, and it's very costly, and it's also very painful. Maybe we need stability, but there needs to be a much better meshing here.

I'm guessing that with just a few minutes left, this is going to seem like an odd question, but as I reflect back over the experience of regionalization now over 17 years or whatever it is, I find myself increasingly doubtful. Initially I thought: well, this makes a lot of sense. Then as I experienced the system from the bottom, I'm concerned that we may have lost the class of people who used to make the hospital system run so well, and those were the local hospital administrators and directors of nursing. What's brought this to me is spending time in this smaller hospital and just watching the problems there, where you have people staying four days in an emergency room, ambulances coming and going from, you know, the assisted living centre and elsewhere, all kinds of local issues, and apparently no one clearly in charge at that site.

Now, that's an impression. I might be wrong. My question, then, is: with all of that background, who is in charge of those individual hospitals that are spread all over Alberta? Is there still a hospital administrator equivalent and a director of nursing, or have we pulled that whole class of people out? Are they now somehow reporting to somebody much higher up?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm really glad that the hon. member asked this question. I think there may be a chance that he believes, like me, that health care systems are actually made up of individual clusters in a community of related facilities and providers and community organizations that work together to provide a continuum of care for a community. It's my belief – and this is simply my own opinion – that in the early days of Alberta Health Services one of the problems that we observed was quite a rapid centralization of decision-making authority that was quite a departure from the former regional health authorities or even, you know, the previous days of local hospital boards. I think that the current chief executive officer, Dr. Eagle, has done an awful lot to change that.

I'm not aware of what the position names are in the local hospitals – I've heard site manager; I've heard other titles – but I think the important thing is that we are seeing a trend toward restoring some of the basic decision-making authority around resource allocation, around staffing, and around other basic decisions that need to be made on a day-to-day basis to deliver care, the restoration of that authority and the accountability that goes with it at the site level, and I am very, very pleased to see that.

You know, once you have this in place and with the power of a common platform like Alberta Health Services, it is actually possible to take some pretty significant policy initiatives that have been developed, both short term and long term, and implement them in such a way that all Albertans can benefit equally. Far too often in the past, in my personal opinion, we saw excellent innovation in our local regional health authorities but not a lot of attention to or necessarily success in leveraging that best innovation for the benefit of the whole system. I think that with the right balance of local authority for basic decision-making about patient care and very strong attention and strong policy capacity in government, we can actually have the best of both worlds, so that's what I'm hoping to see more of in the future under Dr. Eagle's leadership.

5:40

I know I've had the opportunity to talk about this with the board of Alberta Health Services on a couple of occasions. You might have noted in the throne speech that there was specific mention made of enhancing the role of our local health advisory councils. Currently those councils are set up to advise Alberta Health Services on operational matters within the local community, which is an important role, but in my opinion the element that is missing and the element that I want to talk to the chairs of those councils about is their role in long-term service planning for their own community.

If we live in a community with a very small hospital, for example, that's serving an aging population that has more episodic need for acute care, how do we plan for that as a community? What are the other options that are available to support that individual and perhaps avoid that hospital admission if it's not necessary? I think there are lots and lots of opportunities for those councils to play a greater role in the future.

I go back to my initial comment in this segment about the health system being a network of networks, if you will. I think many of the people that are serving on these councils are very key connectors in their local community. I think they're looking for a greater role, a meaningful role that recognizes their desire and their willingness to take on the responsibility for planning at the community level. In terms of the go-forward I will be doing all I can to support these improvements, hopefully resulting in the outcomes that you're looking for.

The Chair: Thank you, Minister. We've finished the 20 minutes.

Now I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. Do you want 20 minutes or 10 and 10?

Mr. Fawcett: I think we'll go back and forth. There are a couple of issues that I would like to engage the minister on.

The Chair: Okay. Go ahead.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I want to first of all congratulate the minister for delivering his first budget as the health minister. He probably has the toughest job amongst all of those along the front bench. There are a number of challenges, obviously, within his department both from a delivery and access point of view as well as from a financial point of view.

When I was elected to this Legislature back in 2008, I believe the percentage of the budget that the health care budget took up was about 33 per cent, about a third, and I think that with this budget it's up to 40 per cent. I know that I've made statements in this House before about studies out there that have been done by some of our universities and that sort of thing that show that in many of our provinces there's a good chance that sometime between 2020 and 2030 health care costs could take up close to 90 per cent of provincial budgets. I don't think we should allow those concerns to fall on deaf ears. You know, we do need to address those, and that's where I think the minister has a huge, huge challenge.

We know that at some point we've got to talk about cost containment within the health care system so that it is sustainable for future generations, but we need to do that at the same time as delivering services for what Albertans need today. That's a formidable challenge. I'd like to, like I said, commend the minister for trying to find that balance.

I guess the first question I would like to ask the minister is a pretty high-level question around the budget. What sort of initiatives, moving forward, can he undertake or is he starting to undertake that will find that balance in delivering greater access and health care outcomes for Albertans while ensuring that the financial costs of health care to us in this province aren't something that is going to cause us problems into the future and be unsustainable at a certain point in time? I just wanted to ask the minister to provide some feedback on that particular issue.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to my colleague for the question. We had some earlier discussion in the course of these proceedings today about the costs of health care. They are continuing to rise. To be quite honest with the hon. member, I think that they always will continue to rise somewhat above the level of inflation and population growth. I can tell you that in Alberta the average rate of growth in health expenditures over the last decade has been in the order of 10 per cent. That is similar to what we see in other jurisdictions across the country. In some it's actually growing higher. So I think the answer to this is not so much how you on an immediate basis contain the cost of care – and you acknowledged this – but I think it's how you begin to actually tackle slowing the rate of growth in costs in some specific areas as opposed to the system overall.

One area, that I think is interesting, that we can focus on – and it is acknowledged as a cost driver in health care systems everywhere – is information technology. If we take, for example, magnetic resonance imaging, there's a technology that's able to do all sorts of investigative scans that address different diseases, skeletal and muscular disorders, and many other things. If we look at the incidence of the use of magnetic resonance imaging in Canada, we can see that no matter how many more MRI units we put in place in our hospitals, the utilization of those units continues to increase.

A statistic that really worried me was actually a finding of our own Health Quality Council in 2007 when they found that 10 per cent of Albertans had actually had an MRI in that year. Ten per cent of our entire population. So what that says to me is not necessarily that we are irresponsible in our use of the technology but that we need to work with physicians and with other health professionals to develop some clinical protocols that clearly dictate the appropriate use of that technology in specific circumstances.

The really interesting thing is that our doctors are not at all resistant to that notion. In fact, if you look not just in Canada but in other countries like the United Kingdom, in many cases the approvals for the use of technology or the use of specific drugs or the use of clinical protocols in the treatment of disease are actually tied to adherence to evidence-based processes, and that can include the use of technologies. So I think you raise a really important point.

To go back to sort of my philosophy, it is about cost. But to actually get at cost, you have to get to the question of value. To get to the question of value, you have to take a really hard look at how you're using the resources that currently exist in the system, making sure that they're used responsibly but also making sure that you're using them based on well-supported evidence.

One of the recommendations of the Minister's Advisory Committee on Health was the establishment of an entity to support evidence-based decision-making in our health care system. One of the advantages of having a single health region to serve the entire province is that when we make those determinations about what the evidence actually supports, and that includes the cost-effectiveness, we can implement that on a province-wide basis. We don't have to go through a process of negotiating it and implementing it with individual health regions. So I think there's a lot of promise on that front.

The other thing, and I know my hon. colleague appreciates this very much, is that one of the distinguishing features of Alberta – and I can say this because I came from another province originally – is our strong sense of responsibility for taking care of ourselves, taking responsibility for our own health. Now, I say that acknowledging that people in society have different capacities to take that responsibility. Obviously, people who are severely ill, perhaps people who suffer from mental illness, or for other reasons, don't have the same capacity as most of us in the Legislature here today to take that responsibility. But I think we can capitalize on that Alberta value.

I think Albertans are very willing. They want to be informed. We see that. We see them wanting to ensure when they're diagnosed with something that they have all the information about the resources and medication and other things that are available to them. By and large, they have a really strong interest and a commitment to following prescribed courses of treatment, to connecting with community agencies that can help support them, to becoming informed and educated about their own health.

I'll sit down so that you can ask another question. That would be a beginning answer to your question.

5:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. That was very informative. I think that actually strikes a chord that I do get from a lot of the constituents in my area that are concerned that one of the big cost drivers within our health care system is that when it comes down to the management of the system, we're not making evidence-based decisions. You know, if only we could manage the system better, manage the utilization of MRIs and understand a little bit better as to when that is necessary and not necessary and know when it might be a bit excessive to utilize that in certain circumstances as opposed to others. I do think that's very important.

I'm going to touch on two things here for the minister. One of the biggest concerns, at least from my perception as well as from my constituents, within our health care system – and I know the minister is well aware of this; again, I've asked questions about this in this House before – is the utilization of our health care workforce. Investment into the primary care networks, into the pilot projects that the Premier has committed to as far as family care clinics in our communities: I think those are, obviously, good initiatives that will look at how we better utilize our workforce.

I know that when the minister was doing the Alberta health consultations, he had met with a number of constituents of mine in my office. We had a board from the College and Association of Registered Nurses, or CARNA. We had a physician, a former AMA president, I believe, at that meeting. We had the registrar for respiratory therapists here in the province as well as a constituent of mine, who I've introduced in this Legislature before, by the name of Schad Richea, who is the assistant athletic therapist for the Calgary Flames. I thought I was busy these days, but looking at their injury report, he seems to be a very, very busy guy.

The point of having this meeting with the minister, who at that time was, I believe, a parliamentary assistant and doing consultations on the Alberta Health Act, was to get a number of professionals in a room and talk about the issues. So, you know, what can their specific professions bring? The challenge I find is that as much as we as a government say that we need to utilize the workforce better to improve efficiency within the system and deliver better access, better health care outcomes, we also have to get their associations onside and get their associations in a position where there is less turf protection around specific roles, responsibilities, and authorities as to what they do.

My question to the minister is: I know we've gotten the primary care networks and the family care clinics to utilize more multidisciplinary teams, but what are we doing as a government to encourage the professions themselves to break down those walls, those silos, and allow greater participation of a much wider group of medical professions within the medical system?

That's one question. I guess we'll leave it at that. I'll let the minister answer, and I have one more short one afterwards.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, there's a lot being done with respect to the evolution of expanded scopes of practice and team-based care in our health care system, and I remember the conversation that you referred to.

What I'm finding is a tremendous amount of interest across the province in this. My own department is co-chair of the Collaborative Practice and Education Steering Committee, and they're also currently serving as chair of the internationally educated health professional recruitment forum. These are committees that include representatives from postsecondary institutions, the regulatory colleges, and other ministries in the government of Alberta in addition to employers in the health sector, AHS being one, Covenant Health being another. These groups are looking for the opportunities that you're speaking about, opportunities to enhance scope of practice as appropriate.

I think an interesting observation, perhaps not surprising, is that many of the young graduates that I meet or students who are about to graduate are very interested and, in fact, motivated by the opportunity to practise in teams and to work in an integrated way with other health professionals, and I think that bodes well for the future of our health workforce.

The other thing I'm finding is that there's a tremendous amount of interest in the question of: what is the value proposition for team-based care versus simply the value inherent in a number of different health professionals offering services independently but being co-located? What is the value of the team compared to the sum of the individual parts or the sum of the individual members of the team? It's actually the subject of a lot of research and discussion in Canada and other jurisdictions. Thank you for raising it.

The Chair: The chair hesitates to interrupt the hon. minister, but pursuant to Government Motion 6, agreed to on February 8, 2012, the committee shall now rise and report.

Before we do that, we'll have time for the staff to leave the Assembly.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration resolutions for the Department of Health and Wellness relating to the 2012-2013 government estimates for the general revenue fund and the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the motion by the hon. Member for Calgary-North-Hill, does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers	355
Introduction of Guests	355, 367
Members' Statements
Special Olympics Canada Winter Games	355
Integrity in Government	356
Provincial Fiscal Policy	356
Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie	356
cSPACE Projects	357
Level of Debate on Health Services	357
Notices of Motions	357
Introduction of Bills
Bill 204 Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2012.....	357
Oral Question Period	357
Advocacy to Government	357
Judicial Inquiry into Health Services	358, 360
Provincial Budget Advertisement.....	358
MLA Remuneration.....	359, 362
Full-day Kindergarten Programs	359
Cancer Drug Shortage	360
Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped.....	361
Pharmaceutical Benefit for Seniors	361
Safe Communities Initiative	362
Grimshaw Holy Family School	362
Conflict of Interest Guidelines for Universities.....	363
Energy Demand-side Management.....	363
Proclamation of Health Legislation	364
Keyano College Land Trust.....	364
Impaired Driving Legislation	365
Parent Link Centres	365
Tabling Returns and Reports	366
Tablings to the Clerk	366
Statement by the Speaker
Calendar of Special Events.....	366
Orders of the Day	367
Committee of Supply.....	367
Main Estimates 2012-13	367
Department of Health and Wellness

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fifth Session

Alberta Hansard

40 YEARS
1972-2012

Thursday, March 8, 2012

Issue 14

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 27th Legislature

Fifth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Hon. Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Hon. Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader,
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Hon. Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL)
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Hon. Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Hon. Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC)
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Hon. Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, Hon. F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Hon. Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (Ind)
Stelmach, Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, Hon. George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Webber, Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 67 Alberta Liberal: 8 Wildrose: 4 New Democrat: 2 Alberta: 1 Independent: 1

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

W.J. David McNeil, Clerk	Stephanie LeBlanc, Parliamentary Counsel & Legal Research Officer	Chris Caughell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Robert H. Reynolds, QC, Law Clerk/ Director of Interparliamentary Relations	Philip Massolin, Committee Research Co-ordinator	Gordon H. Munk, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Shannon Dean, Senior Parliamentary Counsel/Director of House Services	Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms	Liz Sim, Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Health and Wellness
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Ouellette
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
MacDonald
Mason
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Dr. Taft

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Rodney
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 8, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. As we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in the constituencies we represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statements by the Speaker

40th Anniversary of Alberta Hansard and Broadcasting

The Speaker: Hon. members, before the Clerk gets us into the Routine, I would like to make mention of a number of historic events.

First of all, 40 years ago today, on March 8, 1972, a motion was put forward as Government Motion 1, which read in part:

There shall be a printed record of the deliberations and proceedings of the sittings of the Assembly to be known as the “Alberta Hansard” which shall be compiled, edited, printed, distributed and administered under the direction and authority of the Speaker, in accordance with this rule.

Today, 40 years later, our Hansard has continued to produce transcripts for this House for 3,650 House meetings and 1,975 standing and select special committee meetings. To commemorate this special occasion, a special cover will be produced for today’s Hansard.

The second thing that occurred 40 years ago was unique, in essence, in that it provided for broadcasting of the meetings of this Assembly. Alberta became the first jurisdiction in Canada to broadcast their proceedings. The motion was introduced by Mr. Lou Hyndman, who was then the minister of education, and it was seconded by the hon. Don Getty, minister of federal and intergovernmental affairs, who at the time stated:

At a time in our history when Albertans can marvel at the view from the moon in their own living rooms, it is absurd that they are not able to watch their own Legislative Assembly.

So a bit of history with respect to that.

Member Anniversaries

The Speaker: On March 11, a few days from now, eight members of this Assembly will celebrate their 15th anniversary of service as an elected member of this Assembly. March 11, 2012, will mark 5,479 days of service for these eight individuals, and each of them has distinguished themselves in this Assembly over the years. I’m going to mention their names, and I’m going to have a page deliver a special 15-year Mace pin to each of them: first of all, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, who was elected 15 years ago to represent the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud and remains as the representative for the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud; the hon. Member for Sherwood Park, who was elected 15 years ago to represent the constituency of Sherwood Park and remains the representative of this constituency that bears the same name; the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, who was elected 15 years ago to represent the constituency of Calgary-Fort and remains today as the representative for the constituency of Calgary-Fort; the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, who, once again, 15 years ago was elected to represent the constituency of Banff-Cochrane, a constituency that bears that same name today; the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills – again, the constituency name has not changed in 15 years, and 15 years later we welcome and congratulate him today – the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, again the same constituency name for 15 years. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was elected 15 years ago as well, as was the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, but 15 years ago the constituency name was Fort McMurray.

Would you join me in congratulating all these members.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two visitors from the country of Lebanon, Dr. Assem Araji, Member of Parliament representing the Bekaa Valley, and Mr. Khaled al-Daher, representing the province of Akkar in northern Lebanon. The two hon. MPs are members of the largest political party of Lebanon, headed by the former Prime Minister, the Rt. Hon. Saad Hariri.

Mr. Speaker, the Lebanese community in Alberta has a very proud and long history in this province. As a matter of fact, the first Lebanese arrived in Alberta around 1860. Today I am proud to say that almost 42,000 Canadians of Lebanese descent proudly call Alberta home.

Accompanying our visitors are their administrative assistants and tour organizers: Mr. Omar Kaddah, Mr. Ibrahim Taliani, and Mr. Akl Kharib. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure today to make an introduction on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. We have 10 students and three adults with us from Alder Flats elementary school. They’re in the members’ gallery. They’re participating in School at the Legislature this week, and the first half of their group was actually here yesterday and was introduced by the hon. member. I am pleased to introduce these guests, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a distinct and great pleasure of mine today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 20 special people. They are interns with the municipal internship program who have almost completed the program. The program has provided them with an opportunity to gain real-life experience within municipal government, supporting our province’s towns, villages, counties, and cities. They will join more than 150 interns who have completed the program since 2002. This Municipal Affairs initiative ensures continued strength and success of our municipalities with employees who are trained and skilled professionals. These 20 people will be fundamental to building better communities going forward. They are joined by three exceptional Municipal Affairs staff: the manager of internships, Wendy Peters, and internship advisors Melanie Wood and Valerie Hope. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of students from Strathcona Christian Academy in my constituency. They are accompanied by teachers Jaime Peters, Alison Amos, and Ann Elzinga and parent helpers Kevin Wiens, James Vanderland, Shannon Stewart, Dan Tchir, Helena Myschuk, Judie Swinton, Maureen Kaczynski, Denise Wigmore, Pam Cholak, Patricia Stoddard, Jim Drew, Wanda Benterud, Donna Dziwenka, and Cathy Douglas. They are seated in the public and members' galleries because it's such a large group.

I'd also like to mention a couple of the students. Alyssa Stoddard and Alexis Myschuk are members of the Strathcona Basketball Association bantam Stingers, who just won a silver medal the other day, so congratulations to you. Again, they are seated in the public and members' galleries. Mr. Speaker, I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great privilege for me today to introduce two extremely impressive Albertans that I'm very proud to call my friends. Debbie Bosomworth was born and raised in the Lassiter-Rycroft area but has been proud to call Calgary home for the past 25 years. Her love of travel and meeting new people and entertaining has proven to her how fortunate we all are to be living in this wonderful province. She doesn't mind our snow, but she loves our summers, when she gets back to her farming roots in her garden. Debbie is a tireless worker. She has served as the treasurer for the Calgary-Lougheed PC Association for over a dozen years.

1:40

Jeanne Carter grew up in Calgary. She's lived in Canyon Meadows for over 20 years and been a member of the Calgary-Lougheed PC Association for over 25 years. She was encouraged to join our PC association by her daughter Nadine, who was the president of PCYA. She has served as our membership chair and is involved in provincial elections and obviously enjoys yoga and working out.

Mr. Speaker, Debbie and Jeanne have both climbed medical mountains in their lives. I would ask all hon. members to honour them with the warm welcome of our Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I had the privilege of serving breakfast, making pancakes for social workers working for the Department of Human Services in the north part of Edmonton. Today we have with us in recognition of National Social Work Week a number of registered social workers from the ministry.

Social workers play a vital role in Alberta communities. Their contribution to the health and well-being of our citizens deserves to be recognized not just during this special week but all year long. These particular staff work in some of the most challenging jobs in the field, supporting families so they can stay together or raise their child with a disability, helping to reunite families after they've addressed concerns related to the children's safety and well-being, and when needed finding loving families for children who've come into care.

Mr. Speaker, we have with us today Gail Appelgren, a child intervention supervisor in Edmonton; Leigh Chisholm, a child intervention caseworker from Rocky Mountain House; Laurie Lancaster, a family support for children with disabilities supervisor in Killam; Luisa Loria, a supervisor in the youth services unit in Red Deer; and Lisa Winsor, a child intervention caseworker in Edmonton. I'd like to ask them to rise and through them receive thanks from all of us to all social workers in Alberta, who do such great work for our children and families.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, a second introduction on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness and the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I'd like to introduce to all members of the Assembly five members of the Kidney Foundation of Canada, northern Alberta and territories branch, from here in Edmonton. They're here with us today to hear a member's statement from the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for World Kidney Day, which is today, March 8. Heidi Erisman, Flavia Robles, Don Charnaw, Tammy Fifield, and Sheelah Zapf, could you please rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly several social workers. Shamanthi Cooray and Heather Sweet are both social workers with the Ministry of Human Services, and both are active members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. Lori Sigurdson is a faculty member at MacEwan University, vice-president of Public Interest Alberta, and the professional affairs co-ordinator for the Alberta College of Social Workers. She is also the NDP candidate in Edmonton-Riverview. With them is Erica Bullwinkle, who is Lori's campaign manager for the upcoming election. I would now ask my guests to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

International Women's Day

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and recognize International Women's Day. Today provides us with an important opportunity to reflect on women's progress in various fields and industries and all aspects of society. This year's national theme is Strong Women, Strong Canada – Women in Rural, Remote and Northern Communities: Key to Canada's Economic Prosperity.

The Alberta government applauds the important contributions of women in both our rural and urban communities to all areas of society, including the economy. We also recognize aboriginal women, who constitute a vibrant and highly diverse segment of Alberta's population.

Mr. Speaker, the province has a number of initiatives that support the progress of women. For example, we recently announced a $17 million increase to the child care subsidy program, which will support a 42 per cent increase in income thresholds for those eligible for maximum child care subsidies. This increase strengthens our support for the participation of women in the workforce and their ability to access quality, affordable child care.

I'm pleased that our government also provides the Persons Case scholarships, which are awarded every year in honour of the Famous Five, the pioneering Albertans who fought for women to be deemed as persons under Canadian law. These scholarships award a total of $100,000 to several students whose studies and career goals contribute to the advancement of women or to those who are studying in fields that are not traditional to their gender.

The advancement of women is evident in Canada with more women continuing to enrol in postsecondary programs after completing high school. A greater percentage of women are also leaving these programs with a completed diploma or degree.

Mr. Speaker, women have come a long way in Alberta, and it is important that we continue to recognize their vital contributions to our province. We know that in order to have a strong Canada and a strong Alberta, we must continue to celebrate and support strong women.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Women's Equality

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 1977 the world has used this day to focus attention on the lives of women. So let's pay a little attention today.

For women in Alberta the wage gap shows women earning only 68 cents for every dollar a man earns. This is the very bottom in Canada, and it compares shamefully to Canada overall, where women earn 78 cents to the dollar of men's earnings. Women who graduate from postsecondary education here in Alberta have even more discrimination to look forward to. These women earn only 63 per cent of what men with the same education earn, and as women get older, the national average is that the wage gap diminishes so that women earn 80 cents on the male dollar, except in Alberta. Here older women only earn 67 cents for each dollar earned by a man.

When International Women's Day began, women were earning 62 cents for every dollar of male earnings. No other province in this country has made so little progress in 35 years. These startling statistics in 2012 must be considered by thinking of the human lives involved. Girls are growing up today facing an economic injustice that will hurt their achievement over their lives, and poverty among women means poverty among children.

We need to ask ourselves tough questions about why this government has not addressed the issue properly. Answers are near at hand. Alberta is the only province with no minister responsible for the status of women and no advisory council. Alberta is one of three provincial holdouts for a child benefit, a simple measure that addresses child poverty, which is more prevalent in single families led by women.

These things do not change by some matter or some chance of evolution. Government needs to say that this matters, that this is unacceptable. Government needs to develop long-term, sustainable plans to change the situation and then keep that promise.

In this House we need to pay attention to the limited number of women in politics. I'm very proud to say that nearly half the people seeking election with the NDP in this spring's election are women. Overall, however, it takes more than inspirational seminars to see women being elected to public office or achieving equality in the workplace. It takes commitment, accountability, and work . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

REDress Project for Aboriginal Women

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today on International Women's Day I am wearing a pretty red party dress. I believe I look pretty. That's how I'm sure many aboriginal women felt as they went on their last date.

This red dress I am honoured to wear is about all the forgotten aboriginal women who've gone missing in our country. In Canada young aboriginal women are five times more likely than other women to have their lives ended by violent means. Across the country there are 600 cases of missing or murdered aboriginal women, half of which have not been solved. This is heartbreaking and unacceptable. These women are valuable members of our communities and deserve respect and protection. These women are daughters, sisters, nieces, aunts, and mothers. They have families and friends who miss them dearly.

This is the reason that the incredible Métis artist Jamie Black started the REDress project. Ms Black has been collecting and displaying red dresses to symbolize women of the red nation, their lifeblood, which has been shed all too often, and women's ability to give life. Since 2010 she has collected and displayed hundreds of dresses, and now the project is catching on. Just this week students at the U of A collected and displayed over a hundred red dresses across campus to raise awareness about this important issue. This show of solidarity with our sisters not only warms my heart, but it gives me great hope that the future will be brighter for aboriginal women in Canada.

In the spirit of International Women's Day I will say that we must stand up for women not only internationally but right here at home. Our stolen sisters deserve to be found and their spirits laid to rest, knowing that our governments and our communities will do whatever it takes to honour and protect our aboriginal sisters.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Budget Advertisement

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In yet another clear example of how this government continues to bully and intimidate anyone who questions them, the Minister of Finance showed his disdain for accountability by braying about how the government won't respond to any more questions until I apologize. But I'm not going to be quiet, and I'm not going to apologize for standing up to this government on behalf of Albertans who deserve answers. To the Minister of Finance. Minister, let's try to stick to your ministry this time and answer the question. How much more taxpayer money does this minister plan to waste on pre-election ads, tours, and other schemes just to buy votes?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, about a year and a half ago this hon. member stood in his place in this Assembly and made some allegations that proved to be unfounded. The government moved forward in the way it should to investigate those allegations. They found that there was no foundation to them. I want this member to tell this Assembly: how much did it cost Alberta taxpayers to check into the unfounded allegations that this member left on the floor of this House and has not yet apologized for?

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, we have young children here. The minister needs to teach them to exercise the art of listening. The question, Minister, was to your ministry.

The question again to this minister, whose rude and offensive behaviour to Albertans clearly reflects this government's warped values: how can your government justify wasting 425,000 taxpayer dollars on PC ads, trying to peddle your fudge-it budget?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's important that Albertans know what's in the budget. We've got an election coming up, as the member rightly admits to. We have to ensure that our messages are communicated, whether there's an election or there isn't an election.

But I come back to it, Mr. Speaker. He's talking about taxpayer dollars. I'm asking him whether he's going to apologize to this Assembly for the taxpayers of this province sending the Alberta Health Quality Council on a wild goose chase based on unfounded allegations.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I will not apologize for something that led to evidence that this government has broken the health care system and caused intimidation of doctors.

Given that that question led to the truth coming out, Minister, and given that the AMA has taken out a full-page newspaper ad to tell the truth about this government's record of intimidation and bullying and this minister's record, how much taxpayer money is the Ministry of Finance, you, planning to spend on a PR campaign trying to make these doctors go away, the champions for Albertans?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we've been very clear and open about what our advertising campaign cost. This member has not been clear and open about the allegations that he laid on this floor, and I'm asking him to apologize to this Assembly, apologize to the taxpayers of Alberta for sending the Health Quality Council on a wild goose chase on allegations that were not founded.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Judicial Inquiry into Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2010 the Leader of the Official Opposition received an e-mail from Dr. Mark Joffe, the president of the Capital health region at the time. In his e-mail he conveyed the support of himself and Dr. Tim Winton, another physician, who "knows what it is like to [be] isolated, marginalized and challenged, even [when] you are right." To the Premier: will you now expand the terms of reference for the public inquiry to allow Drs. Joffe and Winton and other bullied health workers to tell their story?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we've answered this question a number of times in this House. The Health Quality Council did their analysis of the intimidation allegations, as the Minister of Finance has noted, the unfounded allegations that were made. The Health Quality Council has actually said in their report that no public inquiry into doctor intimidation was required. The resources that the hon. member is asking us about in terms of media, the resources that would be used up and that should be used to build the task force around advocacy, that doctors want to do . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why does this government dismiss the calls of the Alberta Medical Association, the Health Sciences Association, approximately one-third of the health staff in this province represented here, all of whom want a comprehensive inquiry into this health care system and intimidation and misconduct?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, the Health Quality Council has asked in their recommendations – part B, 7 to 9, I think, are the recommendation numbers – that a task force should be created to clearly delineate what is advocacy for a patient, what is advocacy on behalf of another doctor, what is the advocacy in the College of Family Physicians, what is the advocacy of the AMA? The AMA is in a bargaining position right now. We understand that. That's partly what's going on here as well. But we're going to go ahead with those recommendations. We've said yes.

Dr. Swann: Is this Premier trying to protect current and past ministers of health, the former board chair and CEO of Capital health, the chair of the Health Quality Council, the college registrar, or all of the above?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has been very clear that there is going to be a judge-led inquiry into the allegations that were levied in the past by these hon. members about queue-jumping. If there was intimidation that was related to queue-jumping, as the hon. members have suggested there was, this inquiry has the ability and the terms of reference to dig into that on behalf of all Albertans. The Premier made a commitment; she's following through on that commitment.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three months ago in this Assembly we passed Bill 24, the Health Quality Council of Alberta Act, legislation that allows the conduct of health system inquiries by panels empowered to compel evidence even from parties with nondisclosure agreements. Back to the Deputy Premier. Has the Premier broken her promise and narrowed the terms of reference of the recently called health system inquiry so that doctors McNamee and Winton, who were bullied into nondisclosure agreements, will never be called as witnesses?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference are very clear, what the Premier has said is very clear, what her promise was is very clear about the allegations, again, made by the hon. members across the way here about queue-jumping and if there was intimidation around that queue-jumping. That promise was made; that promise has been kept.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, will this government finally have the courage to commit today to comprehensive terms of reference that would require prominent government members, former ministers, the former board chair and CEO of the Capital health region, the chair of the Health Quality Council, the registrar of the college of physicians to disclose this government's widespread practice of bullying and intimidation in the health system?

Mr. Horner: Again, Mr. Speaker, the inquiry is going to have the ability to look at any evidence related to queue-jumping. If doctor intimidation or political interference is identified, then it will be looked at. The promise was made; the promise was kept.

Dr. Swann: We know, Mr. Speaker, why there's not going to be this kind of quality of account with this kind of public inquiry. This government are cowards.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting. You call for an inquiry, we do the inquiry, you don't like the answer, so we become the cowards. I would call them hypocrites.

Alberta First Nations Energy Centre

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, we're dealing with another case of cover-up and backroom deals that smell of corruption, and the only way out of this for the government is to table their own reports and be open and honest. This government recently withdrew support of the Alberta First Nations Energy Centre, a $6.6 billion refinery project here in Alberta. The Minister of Energy claims it's not economical, while the minister of aboriginal affairs tells the treaty chiefs they did not get a good enough deal for the people. Madam Premier, which of these phony excuses are you going to stand by?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll let the Minister of Energy respond as well, but I believe that the hon. member might want to get his facts straight. Perhaps the Minister of Energy might want to clarify that for him.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Table them – and we'd be thrilled – your behind-the-room deals.

Given that Engineers India Limited have completed an exhaustive 1,200-page, $15 million plus report that is also supported by Senator St. Germain, the China National Technical Import & Export Corporation, PricewaterhouseCoopers and even your own ADM of Energy's briefing report supported the project, would the Premier please be honest with AFNEC and all Albertans and explain the political meddling, and who is the chosen company that you're tossing AFNEC aside for?

2:00

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting to hear the members of the third or fourth party suddenly encouraging government involvement in upgrading. It turns out that the project they're referring to is modelled directly after the North West upgrader, the one they were denouncing so strongly before Christmas.

I would simply say that there are billions of dollars at risk here, and the program that was being proposed had not reached the point of development in terms of engineering, financial support, and so forth where the benefits outweighed the risks.

Mr. Hinman: That's a poor excuse. The fact is that they're guaranteeing feedstock price, which isn't what we're talking about. We're talking about the BRIK program.

Given the track record of broken promises, including a judicial inquiry into doctor intimidation, critical power lines, fixed election dates, to name a few, and given this government continues to break deals and fails to deal in good faith with the people and businesses of Alberta, how are we going to attract investment to Alberta when this Premier and this government keep breaking their word? You need to return to the table with AFNEC.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I think money talks louder than the words from this man over here. Investments in the oil sands in the past year: $19 billion. Land sales for the year that we're just finishing: 3 and a half billion dollars. Investment confidence has never ever been higher in Alberta than it is today. They better pay attention to the facts. [interjections]

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, I know there's a sunburst out there, and I know there's a full moon, but let's remember where we are.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Drilling Stimulus Program

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2009 this government instituted a drilling incentive program that went over budget by 60 per cent and ended up costing taxpayers $2.9 billion. In the meantime the industry lost over 10,000 jobs. This was the biggest corporate welfare program in years. To the Minister of Energy: who is accountable for a drilling incentive program that had exceeded its budget by a billion and a half dollars while doing nothing to increase employment in the oil and gas sector?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'd remind the hon. leader of the fourth party that this wasn't just a drilling stimulus program; it was a job stimulus program as well. Did it spend more than we anticipated? Yes. But it created more jobs than we anticipated, 75 direct jobs, 60 indirect jobs for every well drilling every day for every Alberta family.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, you know, the minister should know that Stats Canada data shows a loss of 10,000 jobs in the oil and gas sector during this program's existence.

Given that the far-too-cozy relationship between the Tories and the oil and gas industry is well known, it's no surprise that this program contained loopholes allowing companies to trade drilling royalty credits in an extra-legal market, allowing them to receive taxpayer cash they didn't deserve. Will the minister take action to recover those funds that some companies received by exploiting loopholes in your program?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, let's go to StatsCan and remind the hon. leader of the fourth party that unemployment went over 7 per cent – over 7 per cent – that year. The price of energy in 2008 dropped from $147 a barrel to $34 a barrel. Wells stopped drilling. I know this may come as a shock, but when wells aren't drilled, there are no jobs and there are no royalties.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, they gave $3 billion away, and it cost 10,000 jobs.

Given that the drilling incentive plan went way over budget and given that the government knew about it at the time, will the minister admit that while the Tory government imposes tough fiscal discipline on seniors and special-needs children, it recklessly pours billions of dollars into corporate welfare for its friends in the oil patch?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I don't quite understand what he doesn't understand. No drilling means no royalties and no jobs – no jobs – so we're not going to apologize for creating jobs during a period when unemployment in Alberta went over 7 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Logging in the Bragg Creek Area

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My office has been flooded in recent weeks with calls and e-mails from concerned citizens who are expressing their deep distress at the proposed logging in west Bragg Creek. The minister wrote me on February 15 that the proposed harvest blocks are all about fire containment, but on February 23 he told U of C professor Dr. Ralph Carter, in front of witnesses, that logging is about ensuring that the government's contractual commitments to logging companies are honoured and that the other arguments, including fire risk, are of minor importance. To the minister: which is it?

Mr. Oberle: Well, I can assure the hon. member that I said no such thing, Mr. Speaker. What I will tell him is that there is an allocation of timber that is allocated to Spray Lake Sawmills, that employs people, Alberta families. It sustains Alberta communities.

In addition to that, the harvest design on that landscape is there partially to protect the community of Bragg Creek from a fire, and the county and the regional fire department agree with the design there. They were consulted.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, since section 26 of the Forests Act gives the minister the unfettered right to “alter or vary any provision, condition or area” of a timber quota or even outright cancel the quota, licence, or permit in the public interest, will the minister commit to denying approval of this logging proposal in instructing Spray Lake Sawmills to log elsewhere in their forest agreement planning area this summer?

Mr. Oberle: I most certainly will not, Mr. Speaker. This is a well-planned harvest activity. It’s been vetted through our department. It’s been vetted in public consultation. It’s a good thing for the community, it’s a good thing for fire protection, and I will not cancel it.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, he must be talking to different people than I am – that seems to usually be the case with this government – because I’m hearing that the residents of Bragg Creek are feeling monumentally unconsulted, that it has been monumentally unsatisfactory consultation. The logging is proposed to happen this summer. Although SRD and the minister have not yet given final approval, I have to wonder on the strength of his answers: is the fix in?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, it comes as no surprise to me that that member is talking to different people than I am, but I’ve got to tell you that there has been public consultation on management plans. There is public consultation on general development plans and public consultation on annual operating plans. The company itself has been out there. It’s actually a requirement of their harvesting that they hold public meetings. We’ve been monitoring it, and in fact they have been holding public meetings, and they’ll continue to hold more. They work with stakeholders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

School Fees

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Education. Critics are claiming that the education system is underfunded and that schools have to rely on fees to provide basic busing and instructional material for students. Why are parents in Alberta paying even more than their tax dollars to ensure that their son or daughter can successfully complete public school?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have just a few days ago defended the estimates, the budget, for Alberta Education. As you know, this government has made a commitment for the first time in the history of the province to present a three-year budget, that will be increasing from $6.8 billion to $7.1 billion. We’re spending roughly $36 million per school day on education. However, I will be undertaking a review of all school fees charged by jurisdictions to see if any of them can be rationalized and if there are any charges that are perhaps outside of the scope of what should be charged.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. My next question is to the same minister. When will you require all public schools to operate within the allotted budget and ban public school fees once and for all?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, school boards do operate within the public funding scope. However, often school boards make decisions to deliver to students additional programs or additional services that are outside of the scope of public education, or often parents make choices to perhaps have a child attend a specialized program that is not in their community school. That may be a reason for some of the fees. But we will have the fees reviewed. Parents should not be charged for anything that is funded under the auspices of public education.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. The final question to the same minister: with school boards and schools able to decide for themselves what fees for service they may charge, how is a parent to know what is a legitimate, required expense and what may be questionable or, for that matter, who to turn to when in doubt?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, a school board’s autonomy is very important because the role of locally elected trustees is to make decisions reflective of community needs. Having said that, I will be publishing and I have already started publishing detailed budget information not only from the government of Alberta for the Ministry of Education but for all the school boards so that parents will be able to make decisions based on factual information, to see how much money is spent in each school board and how school boards allocate dollars within their system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

2:10

Funding for Private Schools

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year private schools will receive $190 million in public funding. The Minister of Education has created a website where Alberta taxpayers can hold our public school boards accountable for their expenditures to ensure openness and transparency. Having checked the website, I was distressed that no information about private school spending was on the website. To the Minister of Education: why is this information not available regarding private schools and how they are using public dollars?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, information about all schools will be publicized soon. However, I have to tell you this. Parents of children who go to private schools also pay property taxes, which in part pay for public education. Those schools receive only 70 per cent of public funding. They don’t receive any additional envelope funding for transportation. Private schools build their own buildings, which are often in excess of 20-some million dollars. At the end of the day Albertans have choice. The most important aspect of Alberta education is parental control and parental choice, and they will continue to have choice.

Mr. Hehr: Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, private schools do receive public funds. They deserve some public scrutiny. Why do we have our public school boards put their information online and not these private schools?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, Rome was not built in one day. I have already released the information on all school boards. We are accumulating information on private schools, and the public funding component of private schools will be equally published on our website as it is for school boards.

Mr. Hehr: That answer is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. He knows full well that private schools get money, roll it into a pot, and spend it on whatever they like. So with the deepest of respect, would you have private schools outline their entire spending money and what they're actually doing in those schools?

Mr. Lukaszuk: I don't know, Mr. Speaker, who's rolling pot, but I can tell you one thing. I know for a fact that candidates for the Liberal Party are very supportive of private schools much like most Albertans are. The very fundamental issue and fundamental block of Alberta education is choice. Parents are voting with their feet. They're sending their children where they choose to, and we support that choice by providing 70 per cent of public funding but not any additional contingents of funding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Protection of Job Seekers

Mr. Quest: Well thank you, Mr. Speaker. There've been a lot of stories in the news recently about the looming shortage of workers in our province. During the last boom many foreign workers that came to our province in search of jobs were in turn taken advantage of by unscrupulous employment agencies. To the Minister of Service Alberta: as our economy starts to heat up again, what are you doing to ensure that job seekers are protected this time from predatory practices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government works to ensure all job seekers in Alberta are treated fairly. That's why earlier today I announced strict new rules to strengthen protection for job seekers and to make employment agencies more accountable. Many people come to Alberta because of our economic opportunities. However, there are individuals that tend to take advantage of these folks, and that's why the changes in employment agency regulations show that this government is taking action to protect the most vulnerable.

Mr. Quest: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Given that the minister is making these regulatory changes only now, does this mean that our protections were weak up to this point in time? Why has it taken so long to act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not at all, hon. member. The issue was that just a few years ago we had 158 agencies working; now we have 528. Now, the majority of them are good people, working well in our industry. There are always a few who try to find a way around the law. What we've done is found those loopholes, found areas where they've been hiding behind the law, and found more protection for Albertans.

Mr. Quest: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's good that the government is making this law stronger; however, it's not going to work if it doesn't have any teeth. To the same minister: how will the minister make sure these rules are followed and enforced?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The actions we've taken will do exactly that. We have strict rules. People can face penalties of up to two years in jail and $100,000 in fines. The actions we've taken will ensure that we will have more evidence and more compliance with our rules. If people are not following our rules, we will have more evidence to prosecute them and bring them to justice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Cost of Premier's Swearing-in Ceremony

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville spent at his swearing-in ceremony as Premier in December 2006 $10,900 tax dollars. Five years later the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow spent at her swearing-in ceremony as Premier over $22,000. My first question is to the Deputy Premier. Why did this ceremony double in cost at a time when the Progressive Conservative Party racked up over $7 billion in deficits? [interjections] This is not a laughing matter.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of different places where the hon. member could be asking this question, none of which would be in question period. It's not a matter of policy; it's a matter of the budgets. I would encourage the hon. member to find the appropriate place.

Mr. MacDonald: It's in the Alberta Gazette, Mr. Speaker, and this cabinet is responsible for what is published in the Alberta Gazette.

I'll ask the Minister of Finance this next question. Given that this PC cabinet can spend tax dollars extravagantly on a swearing-in ceremony just like the current Premier, why did the swearing-in ceremony costs for the new cabinet double when you compare them to what the former Premier did in 2006?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to look into this outrageous expenditure, as the member seems to indicate. I think he said that it was 20,000 bucks, but I'll have a look at it and see what it was.

Mr. MacDonald: You look after the pennies, and the dollars will gather themselves.

Now, again to the Deputy Premier: why did these costs for these separate swearing-in ceremonies for both the Premier and the cabinet double – double – at the same time this government had racked up $7 billion in deficits? Do you not have any respect whatsoever for taxpayers?

Mr. Horner: As the hon. Minister of Finance has stated, he will look into those costs and will verify where the change or the variance was. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, that would come to Public Accounts. That would be my guess as to where that would go. The hon. member should know that, given his years of experience on Public Accounts, but there are many things the hon. member doesn't know.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Support for Front-line Social Workers

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. National Social Work Week is an opportunity to highlight the important work being done by social workers in this province. Within this ministry social workers continue to be challenged with caseloads involving children and families in extremely difficult situations. To the Minister of Human Services: what is your ministry doing to provide front-line workers with the support they need to do their jobs in a timely and exceptionally efficient manner?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the privilege of introducing a number of social workers today as representatives of that profession, and indeed the lives of thousands of Albertans are touched and changed for the better each day because of the commitment and dedication of social workers and caseworkers. Their work is not easy. I'm pleased to tell you that we're providing additional support for front-line workers by adding 30 new supervisor positions. Supervisors and front-line staff work as teams to review information, make decisions about services, and attend case conferences to discuss strategies for addressing complex cases.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That partly answered my second question to the same minister. However, how will 30 new supervisory positions help reduce caseloads for front-line workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, by working together, managers, supervisors, and front-line workers can address situations in a way that contributes to the best possible outcomes for families receiving intervention services. Supervisors are directly involved in day-to-day management of cases and work with their managers and front-line staff to manage the workloads. This comes from the report that we had about a year or so ago, which said that we needed to provide more support for the front-line workers, and that's exactly what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: assuming that many of these new supervisory positions will be filled by people currently doing front-line work, will you be hiring more front-line workers to fill any of those vacancies?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, absolutely. If there are any people from the front line who take these new positions, the positions that they vacate will be filled. We want to have a full complement of these very exceptional, hard-working, and dedicated staff working for the children and families of this province on a day-to-day basis. We want to make sure that they get the support they need and that they achieve the outcomes for those children and families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

2:20

Medevac Services

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Medevac services are very important to all of us, especially in my constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Lost minutes and lost seconds can mean the difference between life and death for people in northern communities like mine. Less than a year ago the Health Quality Council reported that patient care for medevac patients in Alberta has been compromised, and longer transport times were an increased threat to the well-being of Alberta patients. My questions are to the Premier. What progress has been made to date on fixing air medevacs and medevac services for northern communities?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely correct that this is a very important issue for residents of northern Alberta; in fact, for residents even north of Alberta because our medevac actually handles flights coming in from outside the province to the north. The Health Quality Council did have a recommendation that there had to be an alternate landing facility within proximity of the Edmonton International if the City Centre Airport was to close. We are aggressively pursuing two options at this point in time. That would be the Namao air base and the Villeneuve airstrip.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Deputy Premier: given that Dr. John Cowell publicly testified at that Public Accounts Committee that there is no way to force government to actually implement Health Quality Council recommendations, how can Albertans have confidence that your government is actually acting on what the Health Quality Council recommended for air medevacs?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we don't need to be forced to act. We're going to do it. We're going to create the alternate landing strip that needs to be done. My goal is to get the ultimate value not only for the medevac services but for taxpayers as a whole and to create a system that is safe and secure for residents of the north.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has failed to act on the Health Quality Council's previous recommendations, how can Albertans and my constituents trust this government? When you haven't acted in the past, how can we trust you to act in the future on Health Quality Council recommendations?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we have accepted all 21 of the recent recommendations from the Health Quality Council. We are actively engaged, as I've said. I know that the hon. member reads the papers and also is attuned to what's going on in the media. He would have seen that we are in discussions with the Department of National Defence and the Garrison at Namao although – I will put this on the table – the decision of Namao will be left with the general and the military because we don't want to do anything that would affect their readiness or their operational capability. As soon as they let us know what that decision will be, we will act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

First Nations Economic Development

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite Alberta's low unemployment rate First Nations' unemployment is significantly higher than for the nonaboriginal population. The Alberta Coalition for Action on Labour Shortages predicts that there will be soon 114,000 more jobs than people to fill them. To the Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations: how is it that with a looming labour shortage and the federal government's refusal to expand the provincial nominee program, your department is not putting more efforts into employing and promoting the employment of First Nations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. Indeed, it's an opportunity to talk about the many positive initiatives and discussions that we have with First Nations in terms of economic development opportunities throughout this province. Using opportunities like the First Nations development fund, First Nations communities are engaged in developing enterprises, labour training, educational initiatives, creating a readying workforce that can help aboriginal people.

The Speaker: Thank you. The hon. member, please.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Will the minister commit to tabling in this House detailed funding and enrolment for all Alberta provincial government-led programs that employ and/or promote the employment of First Nations?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the programming in this area would fall within our ministry. I won't commit to doing that without first taking a look to see what that might involve. That would be imprudent for me to do so.

I can assure the hon. member that there is much happening. We had a report which was done last year called Connecting the Dots, I believe, which talked about an aboriginal workforce strategy. A number of members of this House participated in that. We're moving forward with First Nations on that report. There are programs like Trade Winds, with the trade unions who are looking for aboriginal apprentices. There are a number of programs in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Hopefully, either the hon. Minister for Human Services or the hon. Minister for IAR will commit to providing that information in detail to this House.

To either minister, I suppose. It appears that this government is searching in the far-flung corners of the world for an employment solution that resides here at home. Why has funding for international offices gone up by 60 per cent, but funding for aboriginal programs has remained constant?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I remind the hon. member that while I've defended those budget estimates, we have not yet completed the budget process. It is true that we contemplate investments to increase our presence and to explore opportunities for all Albertans to increase their participation in this great economy that we have. Whether those are aboriginal groups or whether they're private enterprises or whether they're families, making connections around the globe is important to ensuring the success of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Agricultural Research and Development

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Much of agriculture is enjoying a time of unprecedented market returns. Many of my constituents understand the importance of strategic investment in research and innovation to ensure the industry's global competitiveness, and that understanding is the genesis of my question to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

What is your department doing to work with producers to ensure that the agriculture industry remains competitive?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As ag minister I'm very proud to be representing the best producers in the world, and we continue to invest in those producers in Alberta. Just last week we invested $30 million into crop research in the province of Alberta to ensure that our producers remain competitive in the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister. I'd ask for some more specifics. Those are big numbers. What are some of the specific investments that will contribute to competitiveness and forward-looking results for the industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although some would like to dis the farmers, I guess, last year Alberta farmers exported $7 billion worth of agricultural products throughout the world. It's imperative that we continue to invest in this, so we have invested into management research, pest surveillance, crop management, food and grain quality and technology, and food safety. All of these things are part of the social licence for agriculture to continue to thrive in this province and advance, and that's something we're proud of on this side.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we opened a new greenhouse facility at Crop Diversification Centre South. I'm interested to know from the minister what that facility is expected to contribute to agriculture's competitiveness in the future, and will it be available to my constituents who are involved in crop production research?

Mr. Berger: Thank you once again, hon. member. This new facility represents a $17 million investment on behalf of the government of Alberta into greenhouse technology in Alberta. For those on the other side who aren't listening, I'd like them to know there are 310 acres under greenhouse roof in Alberta. Some of this technology will actually work in Wood Buffalo if somebody is listening.

This, Mr. Speaker, is very important. We have the technology there in a modern greenhouse with unmatched capabilities for research, demonstration, development, commercialization, education, and extension.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Alberta Multimedia Development Fund

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. All of my questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Services. First, I'd like to give my thanks to the culture ministry for listening to me and the film and television community and making some much-needed changes to the multimedia fund, but snuck in there with these changes was a requirement that applications will be assessed by a panel for suitability. Now, this is new. To the minister of culture: can the minister explain to us how this expert panel is not a censorship panel to deny applications for films that might embarrass the government?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments about the Alberta multimedia development fund and the streamlining that we have done in that area. I think it's important to note that there are a lot of great projects that are being funded across Alberta, and these projects will continue to be funded based on the merits and based on the projects that are brought forward.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Well, can the minister tell me exactly what this section means, then? It talks about, number one, assessment and notification: "Department staff will convene an expert panel to assess applications and make grant recommendations to the Minister." That's an entirely new section, and it has to do with censorship. Could the minister please explain it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the depth and the wealth of productions that are being done here all contribute to what we have here in Alberta. The process that's in place is nothing about censorship because of the projects that come forward, the Global Visions Film Festival and some of the great film festivals that we have here in Alberta and around the world. This is not about censorship. This is about dollars being used prudently and making sure that the projects brought forward are thought out.

Ms Blakeman: So if there is a film with well-known and reputable production people involved with it that is presented to this expert panel but they are contemplating a film that may not be complimentary to this current government, are you telling me that they're going to be able to go ahead with full funding?

Mrs. Klimchuk: Mr. Speaker, I think it's very clear with the number of films that have been funded through this program for a number of years that there are some excellent productions. Again, this is nothing about censorship. It is about the process, it is about the dollars that are put aside in this fund, and it's about the creative energy we have in this province and the talent that we have and about the choices they need to make when they produce films in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Gasoline and Diesel Prices

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, the price of oil is on the rise again, and I'm getting a lot of calls from constituents about the price of gasoline at the pumps. My question to the Minister of Energy: since we have so much oil right under our feet, why is it that we have to pay such a high price, at well over a dollar a litre, for our gasoline?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. The bad news is that gasoline and diesel prices are going up again. The good news is, though, that in Alberta we still have among the lowest prices in all of Canada. Both gas and diesel prices are set mainly by supply and demand both internationally and locally. Internationally tensions in the Middle East and supply disruptions there are cutting back on supply. Locally, though, we benefit by the proximity of refineries to oil and, therefore, lower transportation costs. That contributes to our relatively low cost compared to other provinces.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be very interested to know: just where does Alberta rank in price, and what are the taxes that are associated with gas and diesel?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I'd be very happy to supply that information. We still, as I said, have among the lowest gasoline and diesel prices in Canada. This is due mainly to the fact that we have the lowest fuel tax, only 9 cents. To get right down to the details, gas in Edmonton and Calgary right now is averaging around $1.08 a litre. That's 30 cents cheaper than St. John's, 27 cents cheaper than Vancouver, and 24 cents cheaper than Montreal. For diesel, in fact, we are the lowest in Canada, around $1.16 a litre right now. That's 29 cents cheaper than Vancouver, 25 cents cheaper than Montreal.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for that information, but I'm curious: why is the price of diesel now higher than the price of gasoline when this is not the traditional ratio?

Dr. Morton: Again, the hon. member is absolutely right. Historically, diesel tends to be less expensive than gasoline, but again I'd repeat that last year we had the lowest average retail diesel price in all of Canada. The reason for the change is economic development. The pace of economic development in Alberta is so strong right now that the demand for diesel keeps going up. But I'm happy to report that, thanks to the work we're doing in working with North West upgrader, we're bringing on not just a new upgrading plant but that they'll also be producing diesel that will contribute to the increase in supply and reduce prices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Alberta Schools Alternative Procurement Program

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been hearing from school boards that there are major challenges with the new cookie-cutter P3 schools built under the ASAP program, that school designs are not flexible. For example, the Edmonton school board wants schools with cafeterias in them, where students can eat and meet, but there is no room in the new schools for this. To the Minister of Infrastructure: if every student is different, every school board is unique in its needs, why is every school built the same?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, every school is not built the same. Different school projects across the province are evaluated based on whether a P3 makes sense or not, whether a design-bid build makes sense, or whether it should just be a modernization. There are approximately 40 P3s that we're going to have in the province going forward. If there are specific issues with any of those P3 schools, I'd like to hear about it because up until now we haven't heard a lot of concerns.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It came up in the Public Accounts Committee meeting that there were issues with the designs.

Given that his department loves to crow about how much money they claim to have saved on these schools, can he tell this House how much of those savings comes on the backs of the students, who cannot have the cafeterias or extra classrooms which they need?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the savings that are coming from the P3s are coming in a number of ways. One of the things that it enables us to do is to build more schools for more students in more communities. At the end of the day everyone is trying to work to put the students at the centre of this, including the Minister of Education with his new Education Act, the school board trustees, and everyone on this side of the House.

Mr. Kang: Mr. Speaker, to the minister again: can the minister tell us why the decisions about where and how schools are built are made by the government in Edmonton instead of at local school boards elected by and accountable to Albertans?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the last time I checked, we are elected by and accountable to Albertans as well.

The entire priority list, how we decide on which schools are built, is done in consultation with the ministries and all stakeholders, Treasury Board. There are a number of people involved in that. No one can question the investments Alberta is making in capital in this province. It's significant and outpaces all the other provinces in the country. And we're doing that because we're putting the students first.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Skilled Labour Shortage

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's prosperity depends on having enough skilled labour to keep our economic growth on track. I'm hearing lots of talk about bringing immigration from outside of Canada to Alberta. All of my questions are for the Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations. What progress has your department made to address Alberta's labour shortage, and what are you doing to support Albertans?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, employing Albertans is always our first priority, but our approach in addressing labour needs is multifaceted. We work in collaboration with Human Services and a variety of other ministries in making sure that underrepresented groups in our population such as aboriginal people and mature workers have opportunities in the workforce. We also work directly with businesses, engaging them in finding ways to help mature workers participate.

When workers aren't available locally or from other parts of Canada . . .

The Speaker: I think we'll move on. The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Next question, same minister: if immigration is part of the solution, how are you ensuring that Alberta's needs are reflected in immigration policy that is set in Ottawa?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, I recently had the opportunity to discuss Alberta's concerns with the federal immigration minister, Jason Kenney, actually in Calgary about a week ago. We talked about a number of ways that skilled workers might come to Alberta, including American labour possibilities. We also discussed how businesses could play a more active role in identifying the skilled labour that they need. The federal minister is considering a number of changes that I believe would give employers more opportunities in selecting prospective immigrants. This is a . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's encouraging to see that the province and federal government are working together on this matter. My next question, same minister. Working together only gets us half of the way there. How are we going to ensure that Alberta's priorities are being addressed in Ottawa?

2:40

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, this issue is a priority. Of course, that's why my department is supporting our Deputy Premier, who will be travelling to Ottawa next week. He'll be meeting with the Alberta caucus down there and federal ministers, and immigration is going to be on the agenda for every discussion that the Deputy Premier will have.

Mr. Speaker, it's important that we continue to build these collaborative relationships with our federal partners. This has been incited by our Premier. Right from her initial instalment she made it a priority that we want to improve the tenor of our relationship, that we want to have open and constructive dialogue, that we want to continue to make progress.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that will conclude the question-and-answer period for today. Eighteen members were recognized, 108 questions and responses.

In a very few short seconds from now we will continue the Routine with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

(continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Heart Function Clinics

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today to inform Albertans about the great work that's occurring at two of our state-of-the-art heart function clinics. They've dramatically increased access and advancements in heart care for all Albertans. Over the past two years the C.K. Hui Heart Centre and the Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute have made remarkable progress and impact in the areas of research, professional knowledge growth, and preventive awareness among Albertans.

They've also significantly increased our province's heart patient intake capacity, improved collaboration between health care providers, and radically shortened referral times. Referral times for heart failure patients have dropped by 75 per cent, from eight weeks to two weeks, over the past two years. Individuals who are referred by a doctor to a heart function clinic are now able to see a specialist and begin a treatment plan much sooner than before, and of course this is invaluable since the quicker the start of a treatment plan, the better the long-term outcome for the patient. All of this good work adds up to 1,900 Albertans with heart failure receiving superior attention at these two heart function clinics at any given time. That's thousands of Alberta heart patients receiving the best possible opportunity to live longer and enjoy a higher quality of life.

I trust that all members of the House will join me in congratulating the doctors, nurses, nurse practitioners, and other health professionals within Alberta Health Services who've ensured that Albertans who have experienced heart failure will have a stronger and brighter future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Kathleen Sendall

Mr. Webber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize the achievements of Kathleen Sendall of Calgary, recently named a member of the Order of Canada for her contributions to the advancement of women in engineering and in the corporate sector. Ms Sendall is currently serving as vice-chair of the board of directors of Alberta Innovates: Energy and Environment Solutions. Before joining us at Alberta Innovates, she was senior vice-president of Petro-Canada's North American natural gas business unit.

She has also served as president of the Calgary chapter of the International Women's Forum and co-chaired their World Leadership Conference on Water, Wealth and Power in Montreal in October of 2010. She is past president of the Canadian Academy of Engineering and a former governor of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. In 2007 she was inducted into Canada's most powerful women top 100 hall of fame. Mr. Speaker, Kathleen remains an active member of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta and the Society of Petroleum Engineers as well as the Michaëlle Jean Foundation and the Calgary Opera. No wonder she has been named to the Order of Canada.

Please join me in congratulating this extraordinary Alberta woman for her many accomplishments and this well-deserved recognition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Judicial Inquiry into Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's time to blow the lid off this decade-long government cover-up of abuse and financial mismanagement in the health care system. Health professionals and the public deserve to know the truth. The inconvenient truth is that current and past ministers of health, the former board chair and CEO of Capital health, the chair of the Health Quality Council of Alberta, and the college registrar have knowledge and perhaps have not felt free to speak on these issues.

In a personal e-mail from Dr. Joffe, then president of the Capital Region Medical Staff Association, in November 2010 to the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark he said:

I've offered you support before and want to do [it] again.

I was called this morning by Dr. Tim Winton... heard you on 630 CHED. Tim phoned me as he was concerned about you.

As you may or may not know, Tim went through a Capital Health "process" similar to the one you went through some years ago. His went on for several years and ultimately destroyed his career. He knows what it is like to be isolated, marginalized and challenged, even though you are RIGHT. He also knows what it's like to have the College involved and have challenges to your mental health.

He is concerned for you, as am I. His direct advice to you is that it is time to go underground. You have made your position clear – further discussion... allows others to challenge and destroy... credibility. First they will destroy your credibility in the Legislature and then as a physician. The more you speak now, the more opportunity they will have to challenge and destroy you.

As mentioned, Tim has been through it. He understands the strategy of isolation, marginalization and then challenges to your mental health status. He's been through it all.

... He has come out on top, though with irreparable damage to his career. He is now an expert in these things and is more than willing to help you, as he has some others in similar situations.

Take care of yourself. We are here and willing to help.

Mark

This Premier must now do what she said she would do last year, include health worker intimidation and financial misconduct in the public inquiry. It's clear this PC government is more...

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cold Lake. [interjection] Go ahead.

World Kidney Day

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak about World Kidney Day. This year the Kidney Foundation of Canada's goal is to bring awareness to the importance of organ donation and the positive outcomes of transplants.

Kidney donation is the most frequent and successful type of living organ donation, yet since 2006 donor rates have become stagnant. With the number of Canadians being treated for kidney failure tripling over the past 20 years, organ donation is more vital than ever. About 2.6 million Canadians have kidney disease or are at risk of developing it.

In 2010, 1,248 people received a kidney transplant, but over 3,300 people were still waiting. Each day about 16 people are told that their kidneys have failed. Albertans with kidney failure spend a number of hours each day or week on dialysis and can wait anywhere from a few months to several years for a transplant.

The need for organs is far greater than the available supply, which is why the government of Alberta established the living donor expense reimbursement program to minimize the potential financial burden associated with the living organ donation process.

Today on World Kidney Day I encourage all Albertans to talk about organ donation with their friends and families and to make their wishes known. Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first one is on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. These are 10 separate letters outlining concerns by various individuals, and these concerns are related to mental health care and the resources provided. This is to the government of Alberta.

The second tabling I have is an e-mail dated November 26, 2010, from an A. Mark Joffe to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. That was in reference to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View's recent private member's statement.

The third tabling I have is information that I have from the Alberta Gazette indicating that the swearing-in ceremony for Alberta's 13th Premier cost $10,900 and the cabinet swearing-in ceremony at the same time in 2006 was $2,684.

The next tabling I have is also related to the questions that I asked in the Assembly this afternoon, which was the swearing-in ceremony for Alberta's 14th Premier on October 7, 2011. The cost of this was $22,147, a doubling in five years. Also noted here is the cabinet's swearing-in ceremony from October 12, 2011. It cost $5,500, again double from what it was in 2007. That's proof of what I had talked . . .

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. MacDonald: I have another tabling, sir.

The Speaker: Oh, sorry. You're not finished?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I'm not.

This is correspondence that I have written and received in my capacity as chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, and this is correspondence I have received from the current Minister of Finance and also the current candidate for Calgary-West, Mr. Hughes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings. My first is a further 20 e-mails out of the hundreds I receive from the following individuals who are seeking the preservation of the Castle wilderness and who believe clear-cutting will damage the ecology, watershed, wildlife, and natural species and must be prohibited at all costs. These e-mails come from Sue Arlidge, Nancy Dalgleish, Brian Danniels, Eva Torn Thomas, Sandra Clements, Chris Whelan, Jason Taylor, Teresa Looy, Daniel and Maxine Rudy, Kristine Kowalchuk, Stephanie Michaels, Susan Como, Gerard Drotar, Alexis Harper, Eileen Patterson, Lara Grinevitch, Nick Stanley, Darlene Robb, and Cherie Lowe.

My second tabling is an information sheet from the chair of the Greater Bragg Creek FireSmart Committee, Clint Docken, stating that the committee has been developing a greater Bragg Creek wildfire mitigation strategy since 2008 and recommending that proposed logging by Spray Lake Sawmills be planned with the collaboration of all parties in the west Bragg Creek land users group.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail received from Janet Quon, who is a University of Alberta pharmacy class of 2012 and identifies herself as one of my constituents. Ms Quon is particularly concerned about the inadequate reimbursement model for generic drugs and is very concerned that this is going to affect her ability to provide patient care along with other pharmacists' ability to do that at the same time and asked me to bring this forward.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased and, quite frankly, proud to table the required number of copies of a media release and letter of support for the Northern Gateway project that the Capital Region Board issued earlier today. The board consists of 24 member municipalities in the Edmonton region. They believe – and, in fact, they are correct – that there are significant and tangible benefits to the Northern Gateway project that extend far beyond Alberta's borders, and they are encouraging the joint review panel to approve it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings today. First of all, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of documents regarding the drilling stimulus program. They relate to my questions earlier today and indicate that there is a massive oversubscription to the program as well as showing that the number of rigs go up and down relating to oil prices, not to the program.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of some additional postcards that we've received from 50 Edmontonians calling on the government to provide full funding to open the family medicine and urgent care sections of the East Edmonton health centre.

Mr. Speaker, I have also today the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail and a power bill sent to us by Ann Baran of Iron Springs. Her power bill is for February 2012. Her electric energy charges were $498.19, and she asks: "How can anyone budget for such fluctuations in the price per kWh? Why are there such dramatic changes reflected in each bill?"

We have an e-mail from Sandra Kraus of Mossleigh, who sent us her power bill from February, 2012 in the amount of $245.44. She says: "Too many people are living high on the hog at the expense of the average hard working Albertan. Enough is enough!"

Mr. Speaker, I have an e-mail here that was sent by Tom and Michelle Bentt of Edmonton to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. They wrote:

The fact is deregulation benefits only the utility companies – not the consumers . . . Those of us who are on pensions, on disability allowances, single parent families, & the working poor – among others – are adversely affected by what can only be called unbridled greed!

Mr. Speaker, I'm also tabling a bill and comments from Suzanne Schmidt of Stony Plain. Her electricity charges for January 2012 were $611.39.

Mr. Speaker, there's also one from Dennis and Corinne Cowan of Sandy Lane. They have sent us their bill for January 2012, which, including distribution charges, came to $294.86.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also tabling a bill from Ryan Reich from Edmonton from February of 2012. His electric energy charges came to $211.97.

Mr. Speaker, we have a bill from Lee Fremont of Gibbons, who sent us his January 2012 bill in the amount of $483.96.

Also, John Biollo of Leduc sent us his February 2012 bill for $244.46.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a bill from Joyce Aitken of Calgary from January 2012, which shows her electricity charges for that month to be $421.47.

Mr. Speaker, Mickel Auger of Beaver county sent us his bill from January 2012, which came to $438.94.

Mr. Speaker, also Brad and Sonja Avramenko of Leduc county sent us what they consider an outrageous bill for January 2012 for $568.51.

Mr. Speaker, Edward Bieber's electricity bill for January 2012 came to $213.23. He sent us his bill.

Just a couple more. Debbie Paulon of Edmonton sent us her January 2012 bill in the amount of $501.02.

Two more. Bob Horne from Entwistle sent us his bill of $352.73, and Edmontonian Brenda Rogal's bill for February 2012 was $337.46.

Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of all of these electricity bills so that all members of the House can know what Albertans are facing on a monthly basis.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table five copies of the materials that were referred to in the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore's question earlier today.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, that took 17 minutes. Some of the tablings had to do with questions, which is quite okay. A lot of tablings had to do with other things.

Hon. members, remember that in the past the chair has oftentimes stated that in other jurisdictions the only tablings that are permitted are those which are legislatively required by the laws of the jurisdiction they're in. This is one of those great subject matters that could easily be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing for review.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this point I would like to ask the Government House Leader to share with us projected government business for the evening commencing the 12th of March, and this is under Standing Order 7(6).

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, on the evening of March 12 the Legislature will not be sitting, but the policy field committees will continue with estimates as referred to them. But on the 13th of March in the afternoon in the Committee of Supply what every member of the House has been waiting for with bated breath, the estimates of Human Services, will be the order of the day, and then as per the Order Paper if there's any time remaining.

In the evening we will anticipate, in accordance with the schedule that has been filed and in accordance with the motion passed by the House, that the votes on the main estimates would then be taken. Members of the Chamber are reminded that if there are any exceptions to the votes, I think there's a procedure in the standing orders for those to be identified a day earlier.

3:00

Following the vote on the main estimates, as per the motion passed earlier in this House, the House would rise out of Committee of Supply and would sit, and we would expect that we would continue with second reading on Bill 2, the Education Act; Bill 4, St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act; Bill 5, Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act; Bill 6, Property Rights Advocate Act.

On Wednesday, March 14, in the afternoon for second reading we would anticipate Bill 4, St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act; Bill 5, Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act; Bill 6, Property Rights Advocate Act; and perhaps in Committee of the Whole Bill 2, Education Act; and as per the Order Paper. In the evening we would anticipate the same type of rotation, with second reading of bills 5 and 6, Committee of the Whole on perhaps bills 2 and 4, and as per the Order Paper.

I believe that on Wednesday we would also have, the vote having been taken on Tuesday night, first reading of the Appropriation Act, which would mean that on Thursday, March 15, in the afternoon second reading of the Appropriation Act, and we would anticipate continuing with second reading of bills 5 and 6 and as per the Order Paper.

I would apologize to the members. I did distribute, as is our practice, a copy of this to other members earlier, but I note that it did not have on it the reference to the Appropriation Act. I apologize. That should be added.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Address to House by Mr. Rick Hansen

11. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that

- (1) Mr. Rick Hansen be invited to the floor of this Chamber to address the Legislative Assembly on Monday, March 12, 2012;
 - (2) This address be the first item of business after the singing of O Canada; and
 - (3) The ordinary business of the Assembly resume upon the conclusion of Mr. Hansen's address;
- and be it further resolved that Mr. Hansen's address become part of the permanent records of the Assembly.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I gave oral notice of yesterday, I had the privilege of receiving from yourself a memo dated Monday, March 5, indicating that Rick Hansen would be in Edmonton on his 25th anniversary tour, commemorating his tour around the world with respect to raising the profile of persons with disabilities and spinal injury. You noted in that memo that on a previous occasion he had been invited to speak on the floor of the House, so I would move Government Motion 11.

I think it appropriate, Mr. Speaker, to acquiesce in your request that he be invited on this 25th anniversary given that the House did have him before the House on the 10th anniversary of his circumnavigating the globe.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I will say at the outset that my caucus is supportive of this motion, but I just wanted to note the number of other groups that don't have the opportunity to come onto the floor of the Alberta Legislature and make their comments to us. Certainly, Mr. Hansen has done extraordinary work raising funds and augmenting research into spinal cord injury in Canada, and indeed other countries are able to benefit from his work, but I want to do a shout-out to the many other groups that work for a better quality of life.

We were very honoured today to have a wonderful presentation from the Member for Lesser Slave Lake talking about the REDress project, that is being done across Canada in memory of aboriginal women who have died or gone missing. There are also groups that are seeking equality across the country, seeking better benefits and support so that they can integrate appropriately, and there are a number of other groups that we could get into that are just advocating for attention and money.

We are fortunate to have Mr. Hansen here in Canada and, indeed, here on the floor, but I think it's important to recognize that there are a number of other groups who are not here and could equally be here and, I would hope, get as warm a welcome as I'm sure we will give Mr. Hansen.

Thank you.

[Government Motion 11 carried]

The Speaker: I appreciate that response from the Legislative Assembly. Mr. Hansen is unique. He's a Canadian icon. He's been in this Assembly, one of only four or five people to ever have been invited into this Assembly. He is not here to petition anything from anyone. He will be here to say thank you to the people of Alberta for supporting his quest of 25 years. No one is coming and I will never recommend that anybody ever be brought onto the floor to petition the members of the Assembly. There would simply be 47,000 requests. This is a unique thank you. That's the only purpose.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 5 Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today and begin second reading on Bill 5, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act.

As I said in December, when I brought the private member's bill forward in second reading, a seniors' property tax deferral program will help senior homeowners in our province. Seniors will be able to use their home's equity to defer all or part of their property taxes, reallocating that money to other areas of their lives and to other priorities. Freed-up funds could be used by the senior homeowner for things like home repairs and modifications and will help seniors remain in their homes longer.

We all know that the costs of living are on the rise while the incomes of many seniors remain fixed. While I'm proud of all the work our government does on a daily basis to provide support to over 425,000 seniors, this new program is an innovative way for us to do more. I say innovative because as the former minister responsible for seniors I know the demographic challenges we are facing in light of an aging population. The seniors population will soon outnumber the population of our children and youth. For the first time ever there will be more grandparents than grandchildren.

That's why a program like this, which offers so much opportunity and flexibility to senior homeowners, is a positive addition to our senior-related programs and services. Homeowners will be given the opportunity to take a loan to defer all or part of their property taxes until they sell their home or otherwise choose to repay the loan. The government will pay municipalities the property tax owed on behalf of that senior. There will be minimal interest charged to the senior for this loan, which makes it widely accessible.

While this program offers a fresh approach, I feel it's imperative to note that it is also in line with policy directions and research of this government. It is in line with the findings of the Demographic Planning Commission, which in 2008 heard from over 100 stakeholder organizations and 10,000 Albertans that seniors want to live in their own homes for as long as possible. The findings from the Demographic Planning Commission helped to form the aging population policy framework, that I released in 2010, and that framework is helping this government plan for current and future seniors by providing guidelines on the roles, principles, and key directions we are taking to meet the demands of an aging population.

This bill is also in line with the continuing care strategy, which is intended to provide more options to help seniors age in the right place, in their homes and in their communities surrounded by friends and family. I am proud that our government supports seniors' independence and that we are supporting a province where our seniors remain in our communities, where they continue to have many positive impacts on our younger generations and will have for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:10

Bill 4 St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you kindly, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 4, the St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act. As Minister of Education I often speak of the strength that educational choice delivers to our system. Public schools, separate schools, francophone, charter, private, and home education programming provide a rich diversity of options and opportunity for Albertans.

Like many other Albertans, the situation in the town of Morinville regarding educational programming and choice has been an area of important interest to me. Quite simply, I firmly believe that we must act to rectify this situation. We must act to affirm the quality education programming that already exists in the town, and we also must act to ensure educational choice and voice. With this piece of important legislation, Mr. Speaker, we are doing just that.

The Alberta we live in today didn't spring up all at once. It was composed slowly from diverse communities coming together over time, from counties merging and separating and small towns becoming bustling communities. Throughout this process the makeup of communities changed. When the public school district in St. Albert and most surrounding communities was first established, the denominational majority was the Roman Catholic faith. When the separate school district in St. Albert was established, the denominational minority was the Protestant faith. This differs from most of the province, where separate school districts were established by Roman Catholic minorities.

Since that time the overall demographics in the area have changed. The education system in these areas must also change in order to better meet the needs of these communities and ensure that students in these communities have choice and voice. As Alberta continues to grow and navigate through the 21st century, historical anomalies like Morinville's lack of secular education option start to stick out like a sore thumb.

Many people in Morinville are perfectly happy with the current arrangement and are indeed receiving the world-class education that Alberta is known for. However, it is understandable that parents and students have been advocating for a system that ensures everyone can access a learning environment that makes them feel most comfortable. Bill 4 represents a compromise between three school jurisdictions, and I must congratulate and express my gratitude to the Greater St. Albert Roman Catholic regional division, the St. Albert Protestant separate school district, and the Sturgeon school division for their commitment to developing a local solution.

Bill 4 reflects many of the elements of their collaboration and compromise. Compromise, Mr. Speaker, as you know, is not easy because it means that everyone has to make some sacrifices. But just because something has always been one way doesn't make it right. Not everyone will be happy with how the situation was resolved, and I acknowledge that, but it is still the right solution. Bill 4 will redefine education in the Sturgeon Valley forever, and that's a good thing.

Morinville's population is booming, and this bill accommodates the rapidly growing and changing face of that town. Just like the growing pains I spoke of earlier, progress is sometimes hard, but again it's a good thing.

Here is what the legislation will do. It provides the framework in which parents in these communities can exercise the right to a secular education for their children while enabling parents of the minority faith to exercise the separate school rights and privileges guaranteed under the Constitution of Canada.

It also recognizes that the educational needs of a community are best served by a democratically elected school board and that the right to vote for their school board gives parents a voice in the education of their children. Parents across the region will have choice between two different school boards, just like parents in communities across our entire province.

First, it will establish a public school district in St. Albert that will replace the St. Albert Protestant separate school district. Second, it will establish a Roman Catholic separate school district that will replace the Greater St. Albert Catholic school division. This change needs to happen because we cannot have two separate school boards covering the same area. Simply, you cannot have two minorities in the same area.

The new Greater St. Albert Roman Catholic separate school district will serve those geographic areas previously served by the Greater St. Albert Catholic regional division in addition to those served by two nonoperating school boards in the area, the Cardiff Roman Catholic separate school district and the Cunningham Roman Catholic separate school district. Roman Catholic parents in these areas will now be able to run for and vote for school board trustees, giving them a voice in the education of their children.

Finally, the Sturgeon school division will be expanded to serve the Morinville and Legal areas. This means that non-Catholic residents of Morinville and Legal will become residents of the Sturgeon school division, allowing them to run for and vote for the Sturgeon school division trustees. This does mean some changes as the St. Albert Protestant separate school district loses the protection of a separate school board. They did advocate hard, Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you, to protect their right, but ultimately they are focusing on ensuring a quality education for local residents, and they will be governed in the same way as other public school boards in the province. The legislation sets up these new arrangements separately.

Work will be needed and will be done on infrastructure, financial, and operational matters, and that work has already started. The Sturgeon school division will assume ownership of a school in Morinville. Parents choosing a secular education will have a space to call their own. The details of which school and what shared space arrangements might be required have not yet been determined.

The St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act is a targeted solution to a local issue. It's also a great example of the provincial government working with a community to find a legislative answer to a local issue. This is a decision that puts students first and affirms educational choice and educational voice. This is the most important thing, more important than building jurisdictional boundaries or religious differences. Our education system is ultimately about the child, and I hope that all members will consider that when voting on this bill.

I am proud of Bill 4, Mr. Speaker, proud of the partnerships forged, proud of the leadership of the three school boards and the towns and communities. Most of all, I am proud that we are doing right by our kids. That's what the Alberta education system is all about.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the support already expressed by members on both sides of this House regarding this legislation, and I encourage its passage as soon as possible in order that choice and voice can become a reality in Morinville.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 4.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 6

Property Rights Advocate Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the minister I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act.

This act supports the government's position that landowners must have recourse to an independent tribunal or the courts or both for the purpose of determining full and fair compensation for access to their land. At the heart of this proposed legislation is a property rights advocate office, that would provide Alberta landowners with impartial, independent information about property rights and help them navigate through the process. The establishment of this office is a direct response to concerns heard by the Property Rights Task Force these past months and directly reflects this government's commitment to listen to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, let me walk you through the proposed legislation and explain the rationale behind it. During the course of the leadership race the Premier heard repeatedly from passionate Albertans who were concerned that their property rights hadn't been respected in the past. Recently the Premier felt a need to move towards a more common-sense approach when it comes to property rights, so the Premier created a task force to listen to the concerns of these people.

That's exactly what we did. Members of this government travelled the province in December and January seeking input from Albertans on property rights. Our goal was to listen to their concerns and to find grassroots solutions to the property rights concerns that were raised. It was my privilege to participate in the task force with the chair, the hon. Minister of Environment and Water; the vice-chair, the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development; and all of the other ministers and MLAs on this task force. As well, several other members of government joined us on our tour of 10 communities across the province, from Grimshaw to Lethbridge.

3:20

We heard first-hand the concerns of landowners about their property rights at these open houses, and we heard from Albertans who completed an online survey. They mailed, they e-mailed, or they called in their feedback to our government. I'm pleased to say that more than 1,400 Albertans participated, and I believe that such a strong turnout indicates the importance of property rights to all Albertans. Recently we have released the document on both what we heard and our response to the concerns raised by Albertans.

The viewpoints provided by Albertans were fairly consistent and can be broken into four overarching themes. First, Albertans told us that they must be actively consulted about decisions that affect them. Landowners said that they sometimes are confused by legislative changes and also sometimes feel that decisions are made behind closed doors. They told us that their opinions must be taken more seriously through consultation and engagement in all property rights issues.

Second, landowners said that they need to be assured that they have access to courts. They said that they felt the current access to the courts is restricted and that fair and easy access is a fundamental principle of democracy.

Third, when use of land is required, landowners expect appropriate compensation. In cases of expropriation and compensatory actions, landowners felt that their rights are seen to be less important than the rights of industry regardless of landowner concerns.

Lastly, and most vocally and passionately, they asked for an advocate to help them navigate through the process and that this advocate would be the key to ensuring what we call the three Cs: consultation, compensation, and access to the courts. This strong desire for an advocate is the reason I am here today to discuss Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act. It is very clear that Albertans expect us to ensure their core values are represented when making decisions in the public interest. We believe that landowners should be consulted about proposed legislation that affects property rights, that public information about property rights and concerns should be readily available, and that appropriate consultation should be conducted in advance of projects undertaken for the public good.

We also believe that landowners should be appropriately compensated where their lands are affected by expropriation, and they should have recourse to tribunals such as the Land Compensation Board and the courts. Therefore, under the Property Rights Advocate Act a property rights advocate office will be established. The advocate will report to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General and will provide independent and impartial information about property rights. The office will help people determine the appropriate resolution mechanism, including the courts, through which they can have their property rights concerns addressed.

Additionally, the advocate will listen to complaints relating to expropriation of land and will review those complaints and prepare a report setting out findings and any recommendations that result. The advocate will be required to table an annual report on the advocate office's business each year in the Legislature. This will promote landowner confidence that the government is transparent and accountable for its record on respecting property rights.

The legislation that creates the advocate also makes it clear that Alberta's Expropriation Act takes precedence over any other land legislation and that all applicable rights to compensation in the courts remain in force. The work of the task force in the introduction of Bill 6 reinforces our desire to continually engage in useful dialogue that shapes how we approach property rights and other important issues, and it strengthens landowner interests as development throughout the province occurs.

Your continued support of the work of this task force is appreciated. I'm very proud that under the Premier's direction we are using the comments and solutions provided to us by Albertans to make improvements that will benefit all landowners now and into the future. This is a promise that the Premier has made and kept.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to adjourn debate on Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2 Education Act

[Debate adjourned February 22: Mrs. Forsyth speaking]

The Speaker: I've had three members advise me of their intent to speak: the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and then I would recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 2, the Education Act. Just some comments with regard to the bill. While the government claims the bill will strengthen public education, it doesn't do anything to stop public funds from going to private schools and will actually strengthen charter schools by allowing their charters to be issued on a continuing basis instead of just on a temporary basis.

Charter schools are further bolstered by the recent government announcement that charters will now be able to be renewed for a maximum of 15-year terms instead of just five. The bill also reduces transparency with regard to charter schools by moving the requirements for what must be included in a charter into regulation.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the Alberta Teachers' Association has raised other concerns about strengthening charter schools in this bill. It removes the right of first refusal, that school boards currently have, to request to offer an alternative program. The ATA has said that "if parents want an alternative educational program, school boards have the opportunity to offer the program first before parents can establish a charter school." This provision does not exist in Bill 2, which would permit charter schools to be set up with the sole purpose of pulling students from an equivalent public program. This change could also allow charter schools to shift from focusing on innovation and, instead, to simply compete with the public education system, much like private schools now do but with full public funding.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the current act requires that a charter school should have "significant support from the community in which it is to be located," but Bill 2 does not contain this requirement. It means that charter schools would no longer be required to actively serve their community's needs.

Third, the current act contains the following provision, that "the operator of a charter school established by the Minister must restrict its purposes to the operation of that charter school," and that provision is now gone in Bill 2. This change could allow operators to run charter schools in ways that enhance their personal profits. An example is that under Bill 2 a charter school could, for example, be run by a corporation that sells computers, thus ensuring that students use a specific brand of technology and in the process preparing them as future consumers of that product.

Mr. Speaker, the bill doesn't do anything to combat the significant school fees that currently exist, and the details of what these school fees can entail are being hidden in regulations instead of being included in the bill. The upcoming regulatory review on school fees that the minister has promised will not be subject to public or legislative scrutiny even though it's a very important issue. Although boards cannot charge tuition fees to resident students under section 13 currently, school fees on their own can inhibit access to education. According to a recent Edmonton public school board information report the average amount of instructional fees paid by the EPSB student family is $69, and that does not include other kinds of costs such as transportation fees.

The government is now making quite a big deal about how this bill will strengthen deterrents to bullying, but they haven't actually taken the most significant actions that are needed. We still, for example, don't have enough teachers. More teachers means more supervision, means fewer opportunities for students to bully each other. But we have 480 fewer teachers working in Alberta schools than we did at this time last year, and the Minister of Education is not encouraging goodwill around the bargaining table by saying that whatever amount of money is in the budget for teachers is basically the province's final offer.

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

Furthermore, the government is good at talking about bullying, but what of the implementation of these measures? What is the timeline for boards to comply? What are the consequences for boards that don't comply? What new resources and supports have been offered to help with bullying outside of schools since that's now covered in the act as well?

Much bullying focuses on sexual orientation and gender identity, yet neither of these things is contained in the Alberta Education program of study.

Also, Mr. Speaker, this act has not repealed the Bill 44 changes to the Human Rights Act that make it harder for teachers to deal with human rights related issues in the classroom, including important bullying-related issues such as homophobia. This bill simply updates the Human Rights Act so that this damaging provision can continue to operate.

3:30

Mr. Speaker, this bill contains no action on full-day kindergarten or removing grade 3 provincial exams. After copious amounts of consultation that preceded this bill, the government announced in January that they will be reviewing provincial achievement tests and examining the operational requirements of full-day kindergarten. Since then the minister and the government say that the government is moving forward on full-day kindergarten but won't have it in place for the beginning of the 2012-13 year as the Premier had promised during her leadership campaign.

It doesn't really seem that the province has its act together on full-day kindergarten, and it continues to drag its feet on making the needed changes to provincial exams. As Public Interest Alberta has pointed out, there's been plenty of time to examine and review. It's time for action on these important issues.

Neither this bill nor the government's recent budget show any leadership in tackling a huge problem in our education system, which is deferred maintenance. For example, in 2011 the Edmonton public school district's buildings were worth a total of $2.3 billion, and the amount of deferred maintenance on these buildings was as high as $242 million.

Since there are no major changes between this version of the bill and last year's, it looks like the current minister's recent consultation, Our Children, Our Future: Getting It Right, has been nothing more than a PR exercise.

I think there are serious deficiencies and blind spots with respect to this bill. I believe that the government is opening up the public school system to competition with similar programs from charter schools, with full public funding, that will divide the education system. It is not ensuring that charter schools have the required limitations to make sure that they truly make an additional contribution that cannot be provided in the public system.

They are, in fact, setting up the situation in which we're going to see much competition and division in the public school system, all funded by the taxpayer. That's not the kind of education system that we in the NDP see in the future. We are strong supporters of public education. The whole idea of corporate values like competition in the system are not the kinds of values that I think most Albertans would like to see in the system. In that sense, I think this bill will actually undermine our public education system, and I think that that is a very, very unfortunate development, Mr. Speaker.

That concludes my comments at second reading, and we will have more to say at the committee stage as well. Thank you and the Assembly for your attention.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Section 29(2)(a) is available should anyone wish to comment on or put questions to the previous speech.

Seeing no one under 29(2)(a), the chair is pleased to recognize Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been looking forward to and dreading the introduction of this act, looking forward to it because education is so important to me. It's important to my family; both of my parents were teachers. My mother's whole career was working for the Edmonton public school board in what they called the primary system then. My father came into the school system when they started the vocational trades high schools here in Alberta and then taught until his retirement. I have an expectation and a responsibility to education. I think it is our key to the future. I have seen it raise people out of terrible circumstances and set them on a path to self-discovery, creativity, and great success.

I'm dreading it because I've just learned over the years that when this government brings forward a bill, they will do some good things and then they will do some things that will offend me to my core, and I just am not sure which is which yet. This is a monster bill. Going by weight it's getting up there.

To be honest with you, just given the budget debates and everything else that's going on – I've got four other portfolios that I'm looking after right now – I haven't had time to read the whole bill, which is what I would usually do.

A couple of things. I'm sure all of us have started to get people e-mailing us. I'm always interested in why people from totally other parts of Alberta would e-mail me and want me to do things, but okay. One of the things that started to occur to me was the number of times people were talking about rights: "It's my right to do this. It's my right to do that." As someone who has studied the Constitution, when I hear that, "It's my right to," I always go back to the document that actually confers rights, and that would be the Constitution of Canada and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

When you go through the Constitution, it confers freedoms, first of all, but the freedoms are subject. Right before we even get into it, it says, "guarantees the rights and freedoms . . . subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society." So right there, right off the bat, the first thing, right at the top it says that there are limits to this. You don't get to swing your fist around no matter what's in your way. We put limits on these things right from the get-go, and they should be reasonable limits, obviously. Freedoms, rights – and there definitely are rights here. They're laid out; they're very clear.

But protections are also offered; for example, things like the equality section that we find in section 15. That's generally referred to as an equality rights section, but it does lay it out – and I'm just going to quote from it here – that people have “the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on,” and then it begins a long list. That's an example of protections that are offered as part of what we get out of this package. So freedoms, rights, protections, and privileges.

Privileges are what we extend as a sort of subsection out of a freedom or a right. A privilege is something that is granted and can be taken away. It's not something that you automatically get. It's not something that you can take to court and demand that somebody give to you. The presiding authority may grant it. The most common one here is drivers' licences. Nobody has a right to drive a car or to drive any kind of a vehicle here in Alberta. There is a process. There's a licensing process. There's a testing process that is set out by the province, who says, “Okay. Here is who we say can legally drive on our streets, and here is the way we're going to test them, and you have to pay a fee, and you've got to have insurance,” and there are all kinds of other things that are set out around that privilege. But it's a privilege; it's not a right.

There are also accommodations. Again, those accommodations are granted by an authority, whichever is the appropriate authority, that says things like, you know: “Here are the rules and the way we want things, but we recognize that that doesn't work for everybody, and we will offer an accommodation.” We will say: “That's okay. You can come and do this, and here's how we'll make it possible for you.” It's an accommodation. They want to bring a group in for some reason, so they will bend the rules or allow another rule that would accommodate a particular group.

Where you often see that is in building codes, for example. There are certain requirements of it, and then in accommodation of people who have mobility barriers there would be ramps and the doors that, you know, you hit the button and the doors open and that sort of thing. We're accommodating certain groups so that we can include them and have them with us in the building.

Now, all of those things go under one heading and are balanced by something on the other side, which is responsibility. So, yes, there are freedoms, there are rights, there are protections, privileges, and accommodations, and it's balanced by responsibility. That's an important part of what we do because it does say: “This is the give-and-take. This is the yin and the yang. We will do these things for you. We will pay for your public education, but you have a responsibility to show up and try and learn. It doesn't mean you have to be brilliant, but you've got to show up and try and learn.”

3:40

New in this education bill is the responsibility of students to do that and a code of conduct. I think, actually, that's a good addition to what we're doing here because it means it's quantifiable. It means that it's very clear what is expected of students. It's a way of measuring what they do. The students are clear, and the other people that deal with them are clear.

This is where it gets complicated. The other things that we have in, if I may say, the mix of offering education – and part of this hearkens back to education under section 93 of the Constitution. “In and for each Province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Education, subject and according to the following Provisions,” and they set out there a list and a minority list. It uses language like “at the Union,” in other words at the union of the provinces at the time, and the BNA Act is what it's referring back to. What we have mentioned specifically are Protestant schools, Catholic schools, and then we talk about minority schools.

If the Protestant school is the majority school, the Catholic system is the minority school. It protects minority rights there, and it spells it out very clearly in the Constitution and in the Charter and in your bill. We also specifically mention in the Constitution and in the Charter English and French languages, and again the minority of that. So if there is primarily English spoken, we have guarantees of protection for the minority language speakers, the French, again subject to limitations. The limitation that is spelled out in the Constitution, which I'm not going to find at my fingertips here, is essentially the number of students, and it spells that out fairly clearly. It does use language like: subject to the number of students. There's one other phrase that it uses there.

Okay. Those are the ones that are constitutionally protected. The language, the religions – and the religions, interestingly enough, are spelled out, and in that they're a little archaic in this day and age because there are far more religions that are in our society than Protestant and Catholic. Even inside of the catchphrase “Protestant” there are a lot of other particular sects that identify themselves very distinctly.

But this doesn't include Hindus, Baha'i, Muslims. I'm sorry; I'm going to get myself in trouble here because I don't have the whole long list in front of me. This is getting us in an interesting position in this day and age because at one point someone was a proponent of getting rid of the Catholic school board and it should just all be Protestant, but that doesn't include all of these other religions that are not Protestant. That seems to have not gotten its way into this bill, and for that I thank you. We know which ones are specifically mentioned in the Constitution and the Charter and protected there: Protestant, Catholic, English and French languages.

If you're equating with me and following along on my list, now we get into the accommodations and the privileges, and those are private schools, home-schooling, distance schooling, and, new in this bill, First Nations accommodation, Métis settlement accommodation in schools, and one more – I grew up really close to it – that has always been a part of this, and at one time the school was the personal responsibility of the Minister of Education of the day, the School for the Deaf.

So those are accommodations. Nowhere is there a constitutional right to home-schooling. Nowhere is there a constitutional or Charter right to a Métis settlement school. Nowhere in the Constitution or the Charter is there a right to distance learning or to home-schooling or to private schools. Those are accommodations that the province has seen in its authority to be able to say: “We will allow this. We will offer it.” We have to keep that in mind as we go through the rest of this act, and I'm assuming it's going to take us awhile to debate our way through here.

Anybody who wants to write to me now, I hope you read what I just said because I'm kind of sticky about this stuff. Don't come at me talking about your right to something unless you're going to be able to have read that Constitution before. Thank you so much.

There's a long list of things that are in here and not in here, and I look forward to continued debate on that. Some of the new things that are in here I'm happy to see were some of the things that the trustees were asking for like the personal power, power of the person, the legal thing that allows them to make decisions about stuff.

There are a couple of things in here. I've got a couple of minutes left. This is not a shell bill. Again, I refer to the weight of the thing. Yeah. It's about the same as my smallest cat. So, you know, there's some heft to this one. It's coming in at 200 pages, close to 200 pages. It's not a shell bill. It's not just, you know: this is the act and everything else comes under the minister. But it's close. There's a lot, a lot of stuff that is now deferred to the minister.

Why do I have problems with that? I have problems with it because he does not come back in front of the people. It does not come back in front of the Legislature for debate. The people may never know until it's a done deal. They may not have the opportunity for consultation. They may not have the opportunity to find out that there is something under consideration by the minister. It's just going to be done and announced because the minister may make regulations, and there is no requirement that regulations come before this House. I always have trouble with that, and I am right to have trouble with that because there are too many examples of where government has made those regulations – and that awful cliché – behind closed doors and out of the view of the people. But that's what happens, and I'm always going to rail against that.

The second part of what's going on here is the language. The specificity of language is very important to me. Some words that I have learned from this government to be very cautious about: choice, option, flexibility, partnership, responsibility. Those words have taken on an entirely new meaning in many cases under this government. Choice with seniors' programs back 10, 12 years ago became no choice. An option, no, was no option. Responsibility meant: you're on your own, toots. Partnership often meant delegated to you; it's all your problem now. The one partner is responsible for everything. Responsibility. Now, I started by talking about responsibility, and I think it's important. I know I'm going to run out of time here.

In second reading I am willing to support what I hope is a good intent in this bill, but I really look forward to Committee of the Whole to dig down on it. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Section 29(2)(a) is available should you wish to question the previous speaker or comment on her speech. The hon. Member for Edmonton Gold-Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I certainly was listening with interest to your remarks regarding Bill 2, and I have a couple of questions for you in the time allowed. My first question is regarding section 177 on page 122, authorization to levy and collect taxes. Some time ago the Progressive Conservatives removed the right of democratically elected school boards to tax. How do you feel about that? Do you feel that perhaps now is the ideal time under this bill to perhaps correct that Conservative wrong and allow school boards to again collect taxes as they see fit and as the voters see fit as well?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

3:50

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thanks very much, Member for Edmonton-Gold-Bar. I have spoken about this publicly before, and I believe it. I think that it is appropriate that school boards are able to requisition money to pay for what they're doing, and I think it should be locally based. A number of years ago – must be close to 20 now – under the leadership of then Premier Klein the decision was that it wasn't fair. They just weren't getting the resources that they needed, so the government was going to collect all the money, put it into general revenue, and then redistribute, and I've got little air quotes around redistribute.

So we watched to see if it did kind of even out across the province, and I would say that that has not been a successful experiment. As a matter of fact, the schools that were doing okay, usually in urban areas, are now doing not so okay as their money is taken and used to subsidize schools in other parts of the province. I don't believe in that.

All this time I get my beloved Conservatives on the other side – I just want to ruffle your hair a little bit, darling things that you are. For all the talk that I hear about so often, you know, "Pull yourself up by your own bootstraps" and "Do your own thing" and "You're responsible, blah, blah, blah" – okay. But when it comes to schooling, no, you guys are going to take the money, and they are going to have to live with what's left. I just don't agree with it. I think that schools should be able to requisition the funds that they need to do what they need to do, and they will be immediately responsive to the people they are serving, which is their local school board.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. I appreciate that.

Now, section 62 of the bill, closure of schools. You didn't have an opportunity to discuss this very important issue. You come from a central neighbourhood of Edmonton. All central neighbourhoods, older established neighbourhoods have had issues in the past with school closures. Would you like to see more warning written directly into this act for communities who are under threat of a school closure from a school board? Would you like to see more rules to give citizens an opportunity to perhaps improve enrolment in their local school before it is closed? Do you think this allows the school boards to act too quickly to close schools is what I'm trying to say.

Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: I think there needs to be enough time for the local community to get organized. Too much time and people go: "Oh, that's not happening right now. I don't have to worry about it. That's next year." So there is a sort of happy medium there.

As someone who has had a school close, I can tell you that it is devastation. I have a community that has never recovered from having its K to 6 school closed. It is literally a black hole in the community. The lights are off. The school ground is dark. The playground that I helped raised money to build when I was first elected – it was built the very first summer I was elected – is a hangout for drug dealers and people up to no good, as my grandmother would say. It devastated us. Even people in the community that don't have kids were involved in those kids' lives. They saw them walk by every day. They went to the Christmas concerts. They saw the kids in their Halloween outfits. They were connected to those children. They knew who they were, and they looked after them. When the kid was going by with a bloody nose and crying, they came out and said: "Hey, I've seen you before, kid. What can I do to help you? Can I phone your mom?"

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

I have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on my list next, please.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and speak on Bill 2 at this late point on a Thursday afternoon. This is a bill that has been, you know, long coming. I believe that the previous minister commenced the excessive consultation and discussion and inspirational group settings process about three and a half or four years ago. We had Inspiring Education; Setting the Direction for Special Education; Speak Out, the student engagement initiative; and Inspiring Action on Education, which all took place before the previous version of this bill was introduced last year.

We understood that because of the timing with respect to the leadership selection process of the Conservative Party there probably wouldn't be enough time in the Legislature to get this bill passed. So we weren't, of course, at all surprised to hear that it would be retabled subsequently. What was interesting, though, was that we decided not to retable it last fall. At that time the minister suggested that, you know, we hadn't done enough consultation, which I thought was quite confusing. Really, I don't know that there's a piece of legislation that hadn't engaged or involved discussion, not necessarily consensus or support, but certainly there had been tremendous amounts of discussion with the public around this piece of legislation or around sort of the precursor to it.

I think that the process from having the very large, big-picture conversations that took place at the various and sundry consultation efforts and then the translation of that to an actual act was maybe less transparent because I think, unfortunately, that a lot of the people that were involved in sort of the big-picture, visionary statements that were agreed to and through the Inspiring Education process, for instance, didn't really understand what that would look like in the course of an act. We didn't really have as much consultation with citizens around that process of translating and how you take big-picture vision A and then link it up to where you see it reflected in the act.

Nonetheless, the current minister then decided that we needed to have more consultation. Really, quite frankly, you know, we've had lots of conversation about how this government has been using Public Affairs Bureau money to essentially engage in pre-election campaigning. From sort of late last fall up until now that's really how I've interpreted much of the outreach and bonding with school councils and more advertising and more consultation that's gone on under this minister, essentially a form of pre-election advertising in an attempt to characterize this government, which has so significantly dropped the ball on education over the last two years, as in fact being a government that is sympathetic to and cares about education.

Now, I don't know that most people really bought it, but certainly there's no question that the current minister engaged in a plethora of media events with a number of children at his side in an effort to maximize the photo opportunities in the pre-election period. As a result, we are now having this conversation at this later date.

Having said that, let's talk a little bit about the bill itself. There are a few things in the bill which I think are reasonable steps forward which a lot of people had been looking for. School boards, I know, had spent a lot of time looking for natural person powers. I think the idea of defining the roles and responsibilities of students, parents, school boards, and trustees is certainly never bad. I think the idea of establishing student advisory councils is a good thing.

I think the fact that the school boards can appoint a superintendent without the prior approval of the Minister of Education is an excellent step forward, quite frankly, because I think there was some discomfort in certain settings of the relationship between superintendents and ministry staff in the past.

Ms Blakeman: But they can appoint trustees.

Ms Notley: Indeed, the Member for Edmonton-Centre points out that this bill allows them to appoint trustees, but I think they would argue that they already sort of had the authority under the old act to fire elected boards.

They continue to maintain a great deal of control in this act. But I guess I would say that on a day-to-day basis the slightly greater independence of the superintendents is not a bad thing.

Having said that, I think there are a number of things included in this bill which I am concerned about, and I'll try and list them off within the 10 minutes that I'm allowed. I'm allowed 15 minutes? Okay. Well, that's good.

The first thing is that the new act has removed the previously existing requirements related to the transportation of students and, in fact, the whole issue around the 2.4 kilometre walk distance. I know that's a very complex issue, and it does relate to financing and funding, but I'm a little worried about what the long-term implications for that issue are in terms of the issue that the previous members were discussing around school closures in community schools as well as the issue of funded transportation for our students.

Another issue that the previous members were talking about that I think is really important to talk about that's not included in this bill is the issue of how we deal with the relationship between the Ministry of Education, the community, the school boards which represent the community, the municipalities, and other arms of the government that engage in municipal planning and land-use planning.

4:00

In fact, what has happened is that this ministry has retreated to a silo form of conversation, which they use to deflect responsibility and accountability for the hollowing out that is going on within our urban communities as a result of school closures. To say, "Well, it's not my file; it's their file," and "It's not my responsibility; it's their responsibility," is profoundly short sighted. It crosses a number of different ministries as well as different levels of government.

I would have liked to have seen an Education Act that was forward looking and reflected an understanding of the critical importance that schools play in our communities as well as in our general urban development, something that needs to be shifted away from the hapless, anything goes, whatever the developer wants, urban sprawl, whatever happens happens kind of process that we have in place right now. Schools are a fundamental part of that.

The previous member talked about what happens when a school closes in a community, and certainly I've been involved in a number of campaigns in that regard. I really do believe that so many things are linked to the existence of the community school, and the failure of this act to even turn its mind to that issue in any fashion I think shows a continued form of inward, defensive, "it's somebody else's problem" type of thinking.

I'm concerned as well about the way this act treats charter schools. I believe that this is the first step towards sort of a continued Americanization of our education system. I understand that charter schools are publicly funded, but at the end of the day what we need to ensure is that our public school boards have the capacity to make decisions which are best for the communities. What's happened in this bill which raises a number of concerns for me is that we have significantly expanded the opportunities for charter schools, and in so doing, we're undercutting the role and the ability of school boards to make decisions around allocation of resources. What we will do is undercut the community school, something which I just talked about as being very, very important.

Currently in the absence of this bill school boards retain the right of first refusal when an application is made for a charter school. So if people go to the minister and say, "I want a charter school because this particular educational need is not being met in my community or is not being met anywhere," the school board has the opportunity to consider whether they are going to provide that type of education within their structure. If they don't provide it, then in theory the minister has the discretion to go forward and consider the introduction of a charter school. What's happening now, though, is that the school board no longer has that right of first refusal, so that's a problem.

The other thing that happens is that the charter schools then move away from their original focus as centres of innovation, and they simply turn into sort of competitors with the school board.

Another thing. The current act requires that charter schools have significant support from the community in which it is to be located. This new act will no longer suggest that there needs to be community support.

Just to be clear, charter schools do not have the obligation to accept everyone that comes to them. They get to pick and choose who they accept. They become havens of elitism because they get to pick and choose who they select. Maybe in some cases that's appropriate. It depends on the nature of what's being taught and the circumstances around why that was necessary. But those parameters are no longer included in the act.

The additional problem is that the current act contains a provision which suggests that the charter school established by the minister must restrict its purpose to the operations of that charter school. Well, that's being removed, so now what can happen is that Microsoft can create an IT charter school, and the minister can go behind closed doors to approve it because, of course, we're moving all the criteria into regulation. Then what happens is that their primary purpose is no longer to operate the school. It's the school, but they're also Microsoft. Then suddenly we have a marketing opportunity for a computer company, for instance. Currently the act would not allow that, but with the changes under this act, that could happen. So those are my concerns around the charter schools.

Fees. The act does nothing to deal with prohibiting school fees, which are a growing challenge and problem for many of our families throughout Alberta. The sort of vague promise of the minister to deal with it in the future is basically: talk to me after the election; we'll see what happens. You know what? As I've said, I outlined four and a half years of consultation and discussion that preceded this act, and you're saying that we couldn't have somehow got school fees included and addressed in this act, that now we have to do another set of studies and another round of consultation? Come on. It should be in there, and it's not.

Bullying. Of course, this minister has spent a lot of time talking about: well, we're putting in prohibitions on bullying. He's really patting himself on the back and making all these motherhood and apple pie statements about bullying. That's great. We all like motherhood and apple pie statements about bullying. But it really comes down to where the rubber hits the road.

Any educational professional will tell you that the way you limit bullying in the school system is that you have enough teachers and support staff there to provide structured programming – structured recess programming, structured noon-hour programming, whether it be intramurals or some kind of computer geek class or performing arts or whatever – stuff for kids to do at those key times when bullying is a problem. For instance, this year we've got roughly 500 fewer teachers than we had last year. If you maintain that situation so that the teachers are running around like chickens with their heads cut off and can barely see what's going on in the hallways, on the school grounds, or between classes, well, that's when bullying happens.

If you really care about bullying, you will properly resource your schools so that the staff there can do that work that's necessary to create the environment that prevents it. But that's not what this government is doing. They're doing what they always do. They're patting themselves on the back. They're making grand statements and gestures, but they're doing absolutely nothing to follow up with it. That's an unfortunate failure.

Full-day kindergarten. The Premier promised it when she ran. It's not talked about in this act. We have no commitment for it going forward. It's not in the budget. It's not there. Again, it should have been in the act. We've been talking about this for four years. Why isn't it there?

Ms Blakeman: Oh, longer than that.

Ms Notley: Well, we've been talking about kindergarten for a decade, but the consultation process that preceded this act would have been about four years.

Those are a few things. I have, I think, about a minute left.

The final thing that I haven't had a chance to really talk too much about but which really matters a great deal to me is that we have a fundamental problem in our school system with respect to how we are dealing with special-needs students. The setting the direction plan and now inclusive education is a recipe for profound failure on the part of our school system, and it's going to create many, many problems. I've raised this issue in a number of different sectors. Teachers know it; support staff know it. The fact of the matter is that this act does nothing to prevent this government from moving forward with a strategy which is going to be the equivalent of what we did to people with mental health issues in the early '70s. We're going to be cutting them loose in the classrooms, no accountability, no training for providing the appropriate kind of specialized support for these kids. They're going to get lost in the classrooms, and the overall quality of education is going to suffer.

This act allows that to happen, and it's a real problem.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available for questioning or comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Two things. I'd like to ask the member if she would just flesh that out a little bit. I'm wondering specifically what she's trying to get at, whether it's regulations or funding, around special-needs students. That also includes gifted students, by the way.

Secondly, I wonder if she was aware that Mike Strembitsky, when he was the superintendent of the Edmonton public school board, said that charter schools are fine, but they have to be in the public system, in the schools under the public system. That is the system that I grew up with, and it seems to me it worked a lot better. I had no idea that outside of Edmonton charter schools were on their own and were essentially private schools.

I'm wondering if the member could cover those two topics.

4:10

Ms Notley: I'll try and deal quickly with the charter schools. I think that charter schools can work and do work in controlled situations, in situations where they're working collaboratively within the context of what the school board is doing in that situation and are providing that type of expert curriculum or focused curriculum that can be sort of linked up appropriately within the overall public school board. I'm afraid that with the criteria going behind closed doors and being opened up, we're not going to get that and that there's nothing now to stop them from being these sort of competition-type scenarios. I won't get into a huge amount of discussion because I want to answer the other question.

The concern around special needs is not – we talk about inclusion. Inclusion is fundamental, and it's really important. In order to ensure inclusion, you need to start from the perspective that each special-needs child is going to require a separately developed and assessed curriculum, that may well take them to the very same place that every other typical child is going to. But the skill set for doing that is very different from what 95 per cent of teachers have learned when they got their education, and most teachers will admit that to you quite handily. Moreover, they're not trained on assessing the type of special needs, and they're not trained in curriculum development for special needs.

What we've got right now, where we're going, Mr. Speaker, is that we're just going to download that responsibility onto teachers, and we think that if we give them one online course and a weekend seminar, suddenly they're going to know how to do this. The best teachers know that, in fact, they probably need a good eight months to a year of additional training if they're going to take on that role, which is now being downloaded onto them.

What we're seeing in the classroom now because we're taking away the issue of coding and we're no longer attaching funding on the basis of disability, is that you have a teacher in a classroom who doesn't know how to assess situations. They'll have six or seven special-needs children. They don't know how to assess the severity of each one. They don't know how to manage the curriculum for each one. They don't even know how to manage the behaviour for each one, which, by the way, is not the primary task of the teacher. That's a secondary task. It's still about teaching and curriculum. It's not about behaviour management.

What happens then is that the class just starts to fall apart. People who have been teaching in that context over the last year, year and a half, two years – of course, it's been growing because this government has frozen special-needs funding over four years, and even the funding that went in this year barely catches us up to where we were in 2008. Since most of that is going to creating this whole new process that the government has developed, it's not going to the kids in the classroom.

With that being said, we've seen it evolve over the last four years that the quality of special-needs education is deteriorating dramatically, as is the experience of the other kids in the classroom. You know, the ATA put out a poll about a month ago saying that the number of teachers who believe that special-needs education has dramatically deteriorated has gone from 25 per cent to 50 per cent over the last four years. There is a reason for that, Mr. Speaker.

I grant that not all of that can be addressed in the act, but what the act doesn't do is stop what this government is doing. It doesn't provide enough clarity for the rights of special-needs children, for special-needs children to know that they have a right to get the support they need, to get the education they need, and that includes having people in their classroom who are trained to provide them with the support they need in that classroom.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. That concludes 29(2)(a).

Are there any other speakers to Bill 2, the Education Act, at this time? None?

I will then invite the hon. Minister of Education to close debate.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank all the members for this illuminating debate, and I would now ask for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, given the time I would propose that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, March 12, please.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:15 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 5th Session (2012)

Activity to March 08, 2012

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned a chapter number until the conclusion of the fall sittings.

1 Results-based Budgeting Act (Redford)

First Reading -- 4 (Feb. 7 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 31-38 (Feb. 8 aft.), 125-34 (Feb. 13 eve., passed)

Committee of the Whole -- 124-34 (Feb. 14 aft.), 160-61 (Feb. 15 aft., passed)

Third Reading -- 164-65 (Feb. 15 aft., passed)

Royal Assent -- (Mar. 5 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force March 5, 2012; SA 2012 cR-17.5]

2 Education Act (Lukaszuk)

First Reading -- 115 (Feb. 14 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 152-59 (Feb. 15 aft.), 187-88 (Feb. 16 aft.), 182-85 (Feb. 16 aft.), 256-57 (Feb. 22 aft.), 405-11 (Mar. 8 aft., passed)

3 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2012 ($) (Horner)

First Reading -- 115 (Feb. 14 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 150-52 (Feb. 15 aft.), 161 (Feb. 15 aft., passed)

Committee of the Whole -- 185-86 (Feb. 16 aft., passed)

Third Reading -- 251-56 (Feb. 22 aft., passed)

Royal Assent -- (Mar. 5 outside of House sitting) [Comes into force March 5, 2012; SA 2012 c1]

4 St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act (Lukaszuk)

First Reading -- 236 (Feb. 22 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 403-04 (Mar. 8 aft., adjourned)

5 Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act (Jablonski)

First Reading -- 298 (Mar. 5 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 403 (Mar. 8 aft., adjourned)

6 Property Rights Advocate Act (McQueen)

First Reading -- 236 (Feb. 22 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 404-05 (Mar. 8 aft., adjourned)

201 Alberta Bill of Rights (Property Rights Protection) Amendment Act, 2012 (Hinman)

First Reading -- 69 (Feb. 13 aft., passed)

Second Reading -- 299-311 (Mar. 5 aft., defeated on division)

203 Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012 (Sherman)

First Reading -- 69 (Feb. 13 aft., passed)

204 Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2012 (Allred)

First Reading -- 357 (Mar. 7 aft., passed)

Table of Contents

Prayers	389
Statements by the Speaker
40th Anniversary of Alberta Hansard and Broadcasting	389
Member Anniversaries	389
Introduction of Visitors	389
Introduction of Guests	389
Members' Statements
International Women's Day	390
Women's Equality	391
REDress Project for Aboriginal Women	391
Heart Function Clinics	399
Kathleen Sendall	400
Judicial Inquiry into Health Services	400
World Kidney Day	400
Oral Question Period
Provincial Budget Advertisement	391
Judicial Inquiry into Health Services	392
Alberta First Nations Energy Centre	392
Drilling Stimulus Program	393
Logging in the Bragg Creek Area	393
School Fees	394
Funding for Private Schools	394
Protection of Job Seekers	395
Cost of Premier's Swearing-in Ceremony	395
Support for Front-line Social Workers	395
Medevac Services	396
First Nations Economic Development	396
Agricultural Research and Development	397
Alberta Multimedia Development Fund	397
Gasoline and Diesel Prices	398
Alberta Schools Alternative Procurement Program	398
Skilled Labour Shortage	399
Tabling Returns and Reports	400
Projected Government Business	402
Orders of the Day	402
Government Motions	402
Address to House by Mr. Rick Hansen	402
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 5 Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act	403
Bill 4 St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act	403
Bill 6 Property Rights Advocate Act	404
Bill 2 Education Act	405

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fifth Session

Alberta Hansard

Monday, March 12, 2012

Issue 15

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 27th Legislature

Fifth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Hon. Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Hon. Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader,
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Hon. Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL)
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Hon. Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Hon. Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC)
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Hon. Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, Hon. F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Hon. Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (Ind)
Stelmach, Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, Hon. George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Webber, Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 67 Alberta Liberal: 8 Wildrose: 4 New Democrat: 2 Alberta: 1 Independent: 1

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

W.J. David McNeil, Clerk	Stephanie LeBlanc, Parliamentary Counsel & Legal Research Officer	Chris Caughell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Robert H. Reynolds, QC, Law Clerk/ Director of Interparliamentary Relations	Philip Massolin, Committee Research Co-ordinator	Gordon H. Munk, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Shannon Dean, Senior Parliamentary Counsel/Director of House Services	Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms	Liz Sim, Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Health and Wellness
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Ouellette
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
MacDonald
Mason
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Dr. Taft

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Rodney
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 12, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. As our members gather to begin a new week in our Assembly, we are reminded of the blessings which have been bestowed upon Alberta, and we give thanks for this bounty. May we conduct ourselves in our deliberations in ways that honour our province and all of its people. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Paul Lorieau, and I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

All hon. members will have on their desks a Commonwealth Day message from Her Majesty the Queen, Head of the Commonwealth.

Man in Motion 25th Anniversary Relay Mr. Rick Hansen's Address to the Assembly

The Speaker: At this point I would ask the Sergeant-at-Arms to open the main entrance doors of the Assembly pursuant to Motion 11, which was approved by this Assembly last week.

[Mr. Rick Hansen entered the Chamber and took his place at the bar] [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Hon. members, this day is of particular significance as it is the second time in our history that Mr. Rick Hansen has spoken from the Chamber floor. On May 8, 1997, Mr. Hansen addressed the members from the floor of the Legislative Assembly. He is the only individual in the 107-year history of this Assembly to have been invited twice to speak to the members.

Mr. Hansen is an exceptional individual who is committed to motivating people to recognize their dreams and to turn them into reality. Twenty-five years ago Rick Hansen established his Man in Motion tour across the globe. For 26 months he and his team wheeled over 40,000 kilometres through 34 countries, raising awareness for spinal cord research.

The Rick Hansen 25th Anniversary Relay is retracing the Canadian segment of the original Man in Motion World Tour. The relay, which started August 24, 2011, in Cape Spear, Newfoundland and Labrador, is travelling westward to British Columbia. The nine-month relay will cover 12,000 kilometres and visit over 600 communities in every province and territory of our great country. Today we invite Mr. Hansen to make a stop on the tour, to join us, and to say hello.

Mr. Hansen, welcome again to the Alberta Legislative Assembly. Would you please come forward. [applause]

[Mr. Hansen proceeded to the head of the table]

Mr. Hansen: Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Sir, the floor is yours. Don't worry about me.

Mr. Hansen: I hate to turn my back to such a distinguished Speaker.

[The Speaker left the chair and took a place on the floor of the Assembly]

Mr. Hansen: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you so much for this incredible honour.

Members of the Legislative Assembly, it is an incredible honour to be here to present to you an ongoing journey, a vision, values of this country. I feel so privileged to have been a young kid growing up in rural Canada who had a devastating accident that seemed to have shattered hopes and dreams. It was the values and the spirit of this country, family, friends, community, the medical profession, and role models all working together to help me rebuild my life, to have hopes and dreams, to be able to then look back and think about what I could do to make a difference, to pay it forward to the lives of others. It spawned the Man in Motion tour, to be able to find a cure for spinal cord injury, to make the world more accessible and inclusive for the hundreds of millions of people with disabilities just waiting for the opportunity to express themselves, to be welcome in families, in homes, and in communities.

All those years wheeling across the country and around the world were a tremendous experience. You know, I felt so buoyed because I was looked up to as a Canadian no matter where I went in the world. I felt proud of our values and what we stand for. I also was incredibly inspired when I came across this country in the middle of winter, facing insurmountable odds and obstacles, to see the wellspring of support from local citizens everywhere, people lining the streets, joining with me in a conversation about what this country aspires to be: a healthy and inclusive place for all, a country that also takes its rightful role in the world in leadership, in friendship, and in common spirit.

I'll never forget the incredible response that I received when the Premier met me at the border here in Alberta and welcomed me to this great province, the incredible support here at the Legislature, in universities, in high schools, in hospitals and rehab centres, and on the streets every single day, making me feel like that road wasn't long and lonely but that it was surrounded by family and friends, one country united with one common purpose.

When I completed the Man in Motion tour in May of 1987, I crossed a finish line that said, "Welcome Home, Rick," and above it there was a sign that said, "The End Is Just the Beginning." Well, you can imagine what I must have thought at that point, after having gone through all those miles and all those incredible challenges. In reality, the tour was over, but the dream had just begun.

It was a new conversation with our country, and millions of people picked up that cause and translated it into their own purpose and translated it into real change year in and year out, making fundamental progress towards a cure for spinal cord injury and accessible and inclusive communities. You know, it's hard to measure those profound moments of change in one year, but after 25 years, looking back, there is so much to be proud of, so much to celebrate. This is why we decided to conduct the 25th anniversary relay, going back to places all around the world and, of course, right across this great country, to be able to recognize local champions, to move from one man in motion to many, to make this a nation's journey, to continue to move forward for the next 25 years until we get to the goal.

I feel so privileged to be doing this cross-Canada relay and joining 7,000 difference-makers who have been with me and so many others for all these years, to recognize the spirit of Albertans, to see close to a thousand Albertans actually out there on the relay, each one of them having their own amazing story.

Of course, here in the gallery we have two amazing difference-makers that I'd like to recognize, Amanda Magyar and Benjamin Tumack. If you could stand up and be recognized. Amanda, you are an incredible difference-maker. You are someone who has set goals and chased dreams. You exercise leadership and self-esteem amongst young people. But you also believe in a healthy planet, and you're continuing to exercise stewardship of this great Earth here locally and inspiring others around the world.

1:40

Of course, Benjamin, I'd like you to stand up because you've also overcome many obstacles yourself from a physical disability, but we don't see disability in your attitude and spirit; we see only ability. You not only translate and overcome your obstacles with muscular dystrophy in so many amazing ways to make a difference, but you have aspirations of representing your country as an elite wheelchair basketball player in the juniors and also dreams of the Paralympic Games to make all Albertans proud.

You are the representation of 850 Albertans who have been part of this relay. I'd like to ask Members of the Legislative Assembly to join me in recognizing you and saying thank you and congratulations. We are proud of you.

In conclusion, ladies and gentlemen, we have come a long way, and there is much to celebrate. I'd like to say a special thank you to the members here in this Legislature. Each and every one of you is making a difference. You have stepped up to serve your constituencies, your province well. You're making change. You have been partners with us for all these years to make sure that Alberta has a world-class research organization with universities and hospitals, finding a cure and connecting with the world. You've made sure that your communities are accessible and inclusive for all, and you see it reflected here in this Legislature, with people who happen to have disabilities but are expressing ability in an inclusive way. These examples of success are worthy.

We appreciate your partnership. We look forward to the next 25 years together. It's going to be a fantastic, accelerating contribution that we all make. I'd like to say thank you so much for being part of my dreams, helping me to feel like our best work is in front of us. I look forward to one year at a time, one stroke at a time, one contribution at a time until we get to that end. Thank you so much, and never give up on your dreams. I really appreciate it.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

[Mr. Hansen left the Chamber]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise today after that wonderful speech and take a moment just to introduce some very, very special guests we have with us today. Our guests are accompanying Mr. Rick Hansen, who has come to Edmonton as part of his 25th anniversary relay. In your gallery today we have Amanda Magyar, who is participating in the Rick Hansen relay, and her sister Kassandra Magyar. We have Benjamin Tumack, who is also participating in the Rick Hansen relay, along with his mom and dad, Terri and Ken Tumack, as well as the following staff members from the Rick Hansen Foundation: Jamie Levchuk, Pamela Berg, Nadine Jarry, Colin Ewart, John Gibson, Doramy Ehling, and Christine Myatt. As they join us in the Alberta Legislature today, their presence reminds us that Rick's journey and his message of hope are as relevant today as they were 25 years ago. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm greetings of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a bright and enthusiastic group of 35 grade 6 students from Brookside elementary school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're here this week for School at the Legislature. I saw them very briefly earlier today. It looks like they're enjoying the opportunity immensely. Accompanying the students are their teachers Shirley Szeto and Tara Price and parents Kym Schreiner and Sharon Gritter.

Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that in recognition of Commonwealth Day these students were representing various foreign diplomats of the Commonwealth. In speaking with the students, I know they're going to have some wonderful questions for me when we get together later on in the week. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's a real treat for me today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly students from Lynnwood school. There are 44 of them here today. Lynnwood school is a terrific school. I always enjoy going there to read during Read In Week, and I hope to be back not long from now to speak to the grade 6 class, at least, about the Legislature. The students are accompanied by a couple of teachers, Ms Adamson Cavanaugh and Mrs. Afreen, and they have two parent helpers with them, Mr. Pascoe and Mrs. Boucher. I would ask them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, your guests will arrive later?

Mr. Benito: No.

The Speaker: They're here? Go ahead.

Mr. Benito: I have two introductions today, Mr. Speaker. Both of them are in the public gallery. On the date of March 4 four migrant workers from the Philippines are dead after a head-on collision in southern Alberta that police believe was the result of drunk driving. Two men, both 35, and two women, aged 52 and 39, were killed. The loss of Anthony Castillon, Joey Mangonon, Eden Biazon, and Josefina Velarde has left the Filipino community of Alberta heartbroken and in a period of mourning. Mandy Servito, our guest for today, president of CEFA, or the Council of Edmonton Filipino Associations, is leading the way in providing comfort and support to those who have been greatly affected by this devastating incident. As well, Mandy, through CEFA and in co-ordination with the workers' employers and all Albertans, is standing behind Josephine Tamondong, the lone survivor, through this difficult time. I would ask Mandy to stand and receive the traditional recognition of this Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is Ms Julie Kallal, media relations of the Council of Edmonton Filipino Associations, or CEFA. Through the leadership role of CEFA and the good media works of Ms Kallal the awareness and help from the community for the victims of the tragic accident of March 4 that killed four migrant workers from the Philippines is in full swing. More help is needed. The umbrella group of 24 Filipino associations is very appreciative and commending the full support of the media for this tragic accident. I would now ask Ms Kallal to stand up and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two important people in my life. Seated in your gallery are my father, Mr. Alvin Berger, from Nanton, Alberta, who at 89 years young still goes out to his shop and works on machinery every day, and my brother-in-law, Mr. Reid McPherson, who farms near Ardrossan. I would like the Assembly to please show them the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a family who travelled from Beauvallon in my constituency today for a tour of the Legislature Building and to watch question period. Marianne and her husband, Ross Amy, are here with their four children: Heather, Stephen, Sara, and David. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two constituents and close friends of mine, Arlene and Murray Barker. I believe they're seated in the public gallery near the entrance. Murray is a retired detective from the Edmonton police force, but he has been on disability for 15 years now as a result of his contracting multiple sclerosis. Murray is very interested in the CCSVI treatment, but because of his size and his disability it is virtually impossible for him to travel to the United States for treatment. Nevertheless, Murray is a very positive force in St. Albert, scooting about town in his motorized wheelchair no matter what the weather conditions are. Murray will be a participant in the Rick Hansen relay on Wednesday, enthusiastically carrying the Rick Hansen medal with pride in St. Albert. He is another difference-maker. I would ask Arlene to rise and ask members of the Assembly to give Murray and Arlene the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Alberta's Representative in Asia

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to welcome the Premier back to Canada. Lately as the PCs lurch from one scandal to another, the Premier has found a new hobby, throwing people under the campaign bus: the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, Shiraz Shariff, and now Gary Mar. I wonder who the next member of the under the campaign bus club will be. To the Premier: were there any other government officials or government MLAs involved in organizing this fundraiser or in donating prizes for the silent auction, and if so, will you please explain?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was certainly pleased to be welcomed back to the province by the hon. member. Our trip to Washington and New York last week was terribly successful – invited by FirstEnergy to speak at the East Coast Energy Conference to talk about the future of Alberta – well received, very optimistic, and pretty excited about what a good long-term fiscal plan looks like for this province.

With respect to a specific answer to the question of the hon. member if there is anyone who exhibits inappropriate behaviour that does not meet a code of values and ethics that matter to this government, then we will ask them to take responsibility for their actions, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier promised change, real change, and first she ripped into Gar Mar during the PC leadership race for his connection to Kelley Charlebois, famous for receiving a two-year $400,000 PC government contract to do nothing – Premier, you promised change – will the Premier please explain why she exercised such poor judgment in giving Mr. Mar a plum patronage post mere days after the leadership race was over and putting Kelley Charlebois in charge of the PC Party?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the future of this province will be opening markets, and we have had people in this province who've been public servants, who've done a very good job of doing that, and it's important for us to ensure that we can gather all of the talent possible. Now, there's no doubt – and I said it on Friday – that I have particular concerns about the information that was presented to me on Friday. We acted on it immediately. That matter is with the Ethics Commissioner, and that's where it should be.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is absolutely correct. Trade is so important.

A patronage position, a suspension of our representative, and our reputation yet again tarnished. To the Premier: given that accounts that that trip to Hong Kong was one of the fundraiser auction prizes and that it may have included a promise that Mr. Mar would show the winner around the city and make introductions to leaders, can the Premier say with certainty today whether or not this is true? Did a government representative attempt to profit from his office and his manner to pay his campaign debt?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the comments that the hon. member has made are at this point speculative. Now, I'm not going to say whether they are true or not true. That's why, I think by 2:30 on Friday afternoon, within an hour of hearing what had happened, I asked the Ethics Commissioner to look at that. If this did happen, there is no doubt that it is inappropriate. I've expressed my concern, and we need to ensure that there is due process with respect to this matter.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What was inappropriate was making that appointment in the first place.

Long-term Care for Seniors

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, before the last election, in 2008, a near crisis caused by the warehousing of seniors was making the news. How little things have changed. Back then the PCs promised to solve the problem by adding hundreds of new long-term care beds to free up beds and eliminate ER waits in the process, and the previous Premier put his name to this. Now, the headlines are the same today as they were in 2008, and today we actually have fewer long-term care beds than we had back then. To the Premier. You're not even building long-term care beds, except 30 of them and a whole bunch of for-profit beds . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier. [interjection] The hon. the Premier.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the reality is that there are more long-term care beds, there are more seniors in housing, there is strong, affordable public health care for seniors, and we have put in place plans to continue that program. We have had tremendous success. The only reason that the headlines might look similar today as they did four years ago is because, as we know, we are very close to an election, and there are a number of political parties that think that they can scare seniors into not supporting government, and that's shameful.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only one scaring the seniors and making them involuntarily separate and lifting the cap is you, Premier.

Given that the Premier spoke glowingly of privatizing the delivery of seniors' care, saying, "Allowing private industry to meet seniors' needs will create more jobs in many different sectors and steady growth for our economy," when will this Premier stop selling out our seniors and follow the Alberta Liberal lead by building publicly delivered, nonprofit, long-term care? Premier, our seniors are not commodities to be sold to your buddies.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, this government hasn't built only hundreds of continuing care spaces for seniors; we have built thousands in the last few years. We are on track to meet our goal of 5,300 spaces over five years. Unlike the opposition, that would prefer to warehouse seniors, apparently, in nursing homes of the 1970s, we intend to continue our plan to expand affordable services for seniors and bring health care to them in place.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The pot calling the kettle black, the guy who wrecked this whole health system to begin with.

To the Premier. Given that the case of Audry Chudyk made it very clear that this current government does not adequately staff or resource seniors' facilities already in place, resulting in such cases of severe senior neglect, could you please tell this House how you plan to upgrade the level of care and service in both existing and new long-term care facilities so that no senior ever suffers the shameful neglect Audry Chudyk did? How are you going to do it by reducing the level of care?

Ms Redford: A perfect example of what I've just been talking about, the hon. member standing up and using an unfortunate circumstance to scare seniors across this province. It is not appropriate. I am surely shocked that this is how we would have this conversation. I will go back, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that we are committed to publicly funded health care for seniors in appropriate accommodation that allows people to have choices and stay together. There is no doubt that the minister of health is correct. We have built thousands of new spaces, and we'll continue to do so.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Bitumen Upgrading

Mr. Hehr: The Alberta First Nations Energy Centre project, an upgrader to refine our bitumen here at home that would have led to the first refinery to be built in North America in decades, has been shelved by this government. Crazy, given that this project would have also connected us to Asian markets by using already established pipeline routes. Furthermore, government bureaucrats, cabinet ministers, the former Premier, and the Prime Minister's office were all enthusiastic about this project. To the Premier: how come your government has shelved this project that would have brought $110 billion into our economy?

Ms Redford: There are a number of projects that come forward to the provincial government and through the private sector to private investors that might make sense. Our job as the government has to be to ensure that we are spending taxpayers' money wisely. Although I know there was a lot of enthusiasm about this project, Mr. Speaker, our job is to take a look at the business case and determine whether or not it makes sense for Alberta taxpayers. Now, of course, we would have had a role and been asked to make a contribution, and we made the decision that in some cases while there might be those opportunities to have partnerships that provide for value-added, this wasn't one of them.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has sat on its hands for years, allowing our bitumen to be shipped south of the border to be upgraded and refined abroad, taking away jobs and revenue for our province. If not now for a project like this, Madam Premier, when?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, actually, the hon. member suggested that there's no bitumen upgrading happening here. You know, between 60 and 70 per cent of all of the bitumen produced is being upgraded right here. Certainly, the North West upgrader project is another example of a progressive attempt to increase that amount. The simple facts are that we have to gauge the merits of each project on a risk basis for the government, and obviously that translates into risk for taxpayers, so we make some tough decisions.

Mr. Hehr: Well, the simple fact of the matter is that if we don't start building upgraders or refineries, it's not going to be at that 60 to 70 per cent level. What are you going to do with all the bitumen that's being produced here if you don't get a refinery or project built right now?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we make investments in value-added and upgrading that make sense for Alberta taxpayers. We are going to make sure that we do not sell our bitumen at a discount, and we will not enter into any agreement on a commercial basis that doesn't make sense for all taxpayers.

2:00

MLA Remuneration

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, this Premier should look up the definition of hypocrisy in a dictionary because she just gave a textbook example of it. She has ordered her MLAs to not receive any committee pay for a whole, gasp, two weeks before an election. Meanwhile this Premier voted herself a huge increase in her salary in 2008 behind closed doors right after the election, pocketing hundreds of thousands of tax dollars. Premier, how about you show some real-life leadership and roll back the 34 per cent wage increase that you and your cabinet voted yourselves and your friends back in 2008?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, it's been very interesting the past three or four days to see exactly the point that I made in my leadership campaign last year. That was that we have a confusing system that doesn't allow Albertans to understand what a transparent and open process looks like with respect to MLA compensation. The fact that we've had random suggestions here and there as to how to fix it in the last three or four days speaks to exactly that point. That is why on November 30 of last year I kept a commitment. We called an independent commission that will examine MLA salaries and benefits, and we will take that recommendation seriously, accept those recommendations.

Mr. Anderson: A 30 per cent salary increase. Thirty per cent. Shameful.

Given that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, who make probably half of what you do, Premier, have informed the Speaker that they will be returning all funds paid to them as members of this committee, will you roll back the ridiculous 34 per cent increase you gave yourself four years ago, right after the election, and return that money before the election to show that you are willing to sacrifice some of your own wrongful gains and not just those of your caucus members?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we will do exactly what I've committed to doing, which is to have an independent commission make a recommendation to not only how government members are paid but all members in this Legislature. When we take a look at the circumstances around compensation, I think there are a number of people in this House that are reflecting today on whether or not the system that we had in place was a system that allowed everyone to be accountable to the people that elected them. I'm looking forward to the results of that report.

Mr. Anderson: You've been here since 2008. You could have changed it. You certainly could have changed it in the last six months. You haven't.

Given you are the highest-paid Premier in Canada and given you are the highest-paid Premier of Canada because you voted for a 34 per cent increase in your own salary just a few days after the 2008 election was over and given you seem so happy to throw your caucus colleagues and their paycheques under the bus, surely you are willing to show some real-life leadership and commit to rolling back your salary 34 per cent and to paying back the money you took from Albertans behind closed doors. Quit being such a shameless hypocrite.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, what I will submit is that this report is going to be very important in terms of setting a direction for transparency.

The other thing I'll say: I find it terribly interesting that a number of people in this House who today have come up with a convenient stunt to try to polarize an issue are people who were fully aware of exactly what they were receiving for payment and did nothing about it until today, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta's Representative in Asia (continued)

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, when the Premier won the Tory leadership, one of her first acts was to appoint Gary Mar as the province's trade commissioner in Hong Kong. She did this without an open competition and despite Mr. Mar's previous ethical violations. Now she has suspended Mr. Mar without pay, but she bears the ultimate responsibility for this situation. Why won't the Premier step up and take responsibility and admit that she appointed Mr. Mar because it was politically expedient?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of people that we appoint to trade offices all over the world that have a strong set of skills. You'll know that we also appointed the former Mayor of Calgary, Dave Bronconnier, to be in Washington, and he's doing a tremendous job. I think it's very important for government to be able to make decisions to identify a set of skills that matter to Alberta to advance Alberta's economic interests.

Mr. Speaker, when I appoint someone, I certainly expect them to follow all rules that are set out and codes of ethics. As I said, as soon as I was made aware of the situation on Friday, we took immediate action to get to the bottom of it. That's the first thing we need to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Mr. Mar was cited by the Ethics Commissioner for paying Kelley Charlebois $400,000 for work that was never done and given that Mr. Charlebois was recently appointed the executive director of the PC Party, will the Premier admit that she knew of Mr. Charlebois' actions when she approved his appointment as executive director of the PC Party?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is the continuing discussion with respect to allegations that are unfounded. Now, I'm not going to deny the fact that there have been discussions with respect to how people have earned income, and that's fine, but what I will say is that I believe that anyone that I ask to do a job is going to follow codes of conduct that are in place, and if that has not been the case, then there will be consequences.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I think the Ethics Commissioner would differ that these allegations are unfounded. They come right out of his report.

Will the Premier admit that she knew about Mr. Mar's previous ethical violations when she appointed him as Alberta's trade commissioner to Hong Kong without a competition, and if so, why did she do that?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the point. The suggestion that's been made over this weekend is that as Premier I should be jumping to a conclusion and making a decision without having all the facts before me. The preamble to this question did exactly the same thing. I'm not going to do that. We've asked the Ethics Commissioner to look at this. That is appropriate due process, and we should respect the process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

MLA Remuneration (continued)

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Jay O'Neill, a spokesman with the Premier's office, stated yesterday in the Edmonton Sun: "Cabinet ministers are not supposed to be collecting cash for sitting on committees." My first question is to the Premier. Is this statement correct?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I received no payment for sitting on that committee.

Mr. MacDonald: No. Again to the Premier: why did this spokesman from the Premier's office say that cabinet ministers are not supposed to be collecting cash for sitting on committees when we all know they collect on average $35,000 a year from sitting on government committees?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there's a compensation package in place with respect to all MLAs and ministers. I've said very clearly that I don't believe that that's the appropriate system. That's why we called for Mr. Justice Major to take on this report, and I'll stand by the fact that we're going to accept the recommendations in that report.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: will the Premier's office issue a retraction of the spokesman's statement made yesterday, which was, in all truth, very disrespectful and misleading to taxpayers across the province?

Ms Redford: There was nothing in that statement yesterday from my office that was in any way incorrect. The only reason that anyone watching this might think that there was anything suspicious or incorrect about it is because of the insinuation and innuendo placed on it by this hon. member, and that is not appropriate. Every single year there is a public document in which every one of us in this House discloses how we get paid and what we get paid. I certainly disclose that every year, as does everyone else. There is nothing suspicious or secretive about that. It is public.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I've said, it is not a system that I think we should continue with. We've asked for the independent commission, and I'm looking forward to the recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Spinal Cord Injury Research

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each year in Alberta hundreds of people suffer strokes or spinal cord injuries that leave them with varying degrees of disability. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. As the minister responsible for Alberta Innovates' research system, with all the world-class research that's being done in Alberta, can he tell us what's being done to find a cure for spinal cord injury and to improve the quality of life for these injured Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I sure appreciate this question, especially on a day when we've had Mr. Rick Hansen in our Chamber. This province is doing a large amount of spinal cord research; in fact, almost $40 million worth of research over the past three decades. On top of that, Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions has made a direct investment of $12 million into the Rick Hansen Foundation, working on unique research towards a cure for spinal cord injury. We've also funded the Rick Hansen network to help work towards cures for this very necessary thing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister, then. The $40 million is quite a contribution. Can he give us some specific examples of how the government of Alberta's contribution to this important field of research is making a difference for these injured Albertans?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the privilege of attending a Rick Hansen event about two weeks ago, where they highlighted some of the research that's been done in Alberta especially around spinal cord injury and stroke patients. There were two items I remember seeing. One was a joystick called ReJoyce, that allowed people that had an injury to play games with a joystick on the computer. It allowed them to gain the reuse of their hands, and as the game got tougher, they were able to coordinate and do a better and better job of it. Another product, developed right here in Edmonton, was a product called Smart-e-Pants, which allows people that can't move to stay away from having things like bedsores from inactivity.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Quest: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My final question again to the same hon. minister: apart from the obvious benefits that he was describing to these people with these life-altering injuries, what are the other advantages, specifically to Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We would like all of our citizens to be able to fully participate in our province and in our communities and in our environment. The annual cost of spinal cord injury to the province of Alberta is around $400 million. The research we do now, today, can have a direct impact on people's lives and on future budgets.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Tobacco Reduction Strategy

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everyone knows that the real solution to health care is not getting sick in the first place, prevention and wellness. Smoking is one of the leading causes of death and is responsible for a wide variety of lung diseases – asthma, emphysema, chronic bronchitis, lung cancer – as well as heart attacks, stroke, cardiovascular disease. Kids are especially vulnerable to second-hand smoke, and in Alberta despite all the work that we've done – and we've done some good work – the childhood smoking rates have gone from 10 to 14 per cent. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what is your plan to attack the childhood smoking rate issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is currently reviewing our Alberta tobacco reduction strategy. The strategy did see significant improvement in smoking rates and exposure to second-hand smoke in the last few years.

In addition, our tobacco legislation here in Alberta is among the most aggressive in the country, going beyond simple exposure to second-hand smoke and then taking into account, for example, issues such as the sale of tobacco in pharmacies or in stores that include pharmacies.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that there is first-hand smoke, where you're directly smoking and it's important to role-model for our young children, and given that second-hand smoke is an issue and there's evidence to say that it's bad for health and that now there's also evidence that third-hand smoke, just smoke on someone's clothes, is bad for our children, do you agree that protecting the health of our children in Alberta should be a top priority with respect to smoking?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, on this point the hon. member and I certainly do agree. As I was about to say, we are in the process of updating our tobacco reduction strategy. We're looking at a number of initiatives, including exposure to second-hand smoke as it relates to exposure of children in vehicles. We're looking at the sale of flavoured tobacco products and a number of other issues that we believe will have a particular impact on reducing smoking among youth.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister taking steps and looking at these issues. I have a private member's bill, Bill 203, the Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012, a special case of children being in small, enclosed spaces. To the minister: would you make it an offence to smoke in a vehicle with anyone under the age of 18 present?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I believe debate on the particular bill the hon. member refers to is on the Order Paper and may come up later this afternoon. I'll leave the debate on the aspects of the bill to that time.

What I will say, Mr. Speaker, is that the government takes this issue seriously. Rather than one-off initiatives, we are looking at a comprehensive update to our tobacco reduction strategy, and we'll continue to pursue that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Enhanced Support for Home Care

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Last week the minister announced new initiatives regarding home care and rehabilitation services. Mr. Minister, what is the mandate for this new program called destination home?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The initiative the hon. member refers to is part of a $25 million fund proposed in Budget 2012. Destination home is modelled after very successful programs in Ontario and other provinces that target a specific portion of home-care resources to seniors who may be able to return home if they have the proper support. In addition, it helps prevent seniors from having to, as a result of fall or injury, seek treatment in emergency departments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister: We're hearing concerns about long-term care and the long-term care beds that are required. Why are we putting money into this type of a program when it perhaps could be spent better elsewhere?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This funding is in addition to the over $450 million that Alberta Health Services allocates to home care at this time. These funds are important because they are geared specifically to the people that we spend a lot of time in this Legislative Assembly talking about, those people who through no fault of their own and as a result of lack of support in the home environment find themselves seeking treatment in the emergency department and hospital. In addition, we certainly hope that these funds will help divert from the emergency department people who are currently living at home and who just need that little bit of extra support.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Again to the same minister: how is this new initiative going to impact the employment of health professionals? Is it going to shift from registered nurses to personal support workers?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, we actually see a role for all staff disciplines in the destination home program. It will continue as an interdisciplinary team approach, that has been so successful in other aspects of the health care system. It is an initiative that will work in concert with other initiatives, programs, and services in the health system such as the 24/7 home-care RN on-call service that was announced along with the destination home program. There will always be a variety of needs in our communities. Therefore, we will continue to work with the most qualified health professionals who know the communities to meet these particular needs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

School Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to government policy, after health care the most important issue for Albertans is education. I'm hearing a lot of complaints about government building new P3 schools under the ASAP program. New schools like Esther Starkman and Johnny Bright in Edmonton are already full, and there's no room to grow. To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that there's absolutely no money in the government's three-year plan to build new schools or renovate old ones, where will we send our growing population of children to school?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I have communicated on a number of occasions that it is this government's plan to meet the needs of education. We do know that not only in this province but in this country we tend to have schools where we don't have kids and kids where we don't have schools. That's why we're working with Treasury Board right now in making sure that we provide our children with the adequate spaces that they need to receive the education that they are receiving right now in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister may be planning on busing kids to those old schools. Whatever his plan is, he should be clear.

To the minister again: given that the Premier promised full-day kindergarten but given that many schools just don't have the space for it, when will the space be added to accommodate full-time kindergarten in Alberta?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, my department is working with the Ministry of Education to understand what the implications of full-day kindergarten are and what kind of an inventory of infrastructure additions we're going to need to be able to fulfill those commitments. As the Minister of Education has made clear in the recent month and through estimates, we're working through that in a phased approach to deliver on the Premier's promise.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: given that I'm hearing from school boards that cookie-cutter designs of schools are not flexible enough to allow for boards to easily add extra modular classrooms, what is the minister doing to make sure that school board needs are met?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, that is a challenge. Not every school board is the same, and not every community is the same. We want to be able to use the infrastructure that we have and leverage that to be efficient for the taxpayer. But to be efficient for the taxpayer, we also need to be able to deliver as many schools and projects as possible. So whenever we can, we're looking at P3s, we're looking at creative ways to deliver infrastructure to make sure that we get the best value for the taxpayer and then that we can deliver more schools and more spaces for the students that need it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:20

Disaster Recovery Program

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In June 2010 – June 18, 2010, to be exact – hundreds of residents in Cypress county, Medicine Hat, and other communities in Alberta were hit hard by flooding. In the almost two years since this disaster some disaster recovery program applicants have contacted me with concerns about the assistance they're getting or not getting through the program. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. It seems like improvements could and should be made to disaster assistance, particularly for flooding. Will you order a review of the program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no doubt that we have a tremendous amount of compensation for anyone that's been affected by some sort of natural disaster or flood. We know that there have been some concerns expressed around the way some of our projects have run. We're doing a third-party independent review of how we deliver disaster programs. We've picked out specifically the southern Alberta disaster recovery plan and the central and Vermilion disaster recovery plans just to examine what has worked well. There are a lot of things that have worked very well but also things that might not have worked as well as they could have. We can learn from that and improve the programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we're now in 2012. To the same minister: thank you, but why did it take so long to order a review of the disaster recovery program?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, the three disaster recovery programs that are being reviewed right now just ended. They are not receiving any more applicants. It takes a while to assess damage, especially flood-type damage. It can take a couple of years to assess it all and come up with valuations and finish out the program. We want to make sure that when we are going to do a review, we have all of the pertinent data and information and all of the applications in so that we work from all of the information and not make half-guesses or changes based on half-information. We want to do it right, not just fast.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is also to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that I've also heard concerns about LandLink, the company that administers the program, will you ensure that they're going to be a part of the review?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, that's a very fair question. We are reviewing every aspect of the program, from communication about how the program operated to service delivery and customer service to whether or not the protocols of the program operated in place and if the appropriate information was out there. LandLink delivers quite a few of those services on behalf of the province. We've heard a lot of positive stories, but we want to make sure that they're doing the best they possibly can, too, so they'll be part of the review.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Private Operation of Continuing Care Centres

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week this government stepped into a labour dispute to block the rights of workers. In so doing, they protected a private long-term care operator diverting public funds meant for employee salaries into their profit margin. Now this government claims they are protecting seniors, but they are only protecting the company using taxpayers' dollars to pad their bottom line. To the minister of labour: why is he helping a private long-term care company to shortchange its employees by 20 per cent while pocketing the difference?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, my role as Minister of Human Services is to ensure that vulnerable Albertans are protected and to make sure that labour standards are effectively carried out. In this particular circumstance, it is very clear that the vulnerable individuals involved, those who are residents of the home, would not be well served by having to move if there are not sufficient staff to take care of them in their place. It's not clear that there would be sufficient staff to care for them in their place. Therefore, the most important thing to do is to ensure that the labour dispute that's happening is dealt with appropriately and, more importantly, that the individuals involved have a safe environment in which to live.

Ms Notley: To the minister of health then. Given that this government already funds the company on the basis of what AHS pays its employees and given that money clawed back from front-line caregivers will neither save the taxpayer any money nor improve services to these residents, will the minister admit that this is a perfect example that having the private sector deliver publicly funded services hurts the quality of service received by vulnerable Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the success of Alberta in the area of continuing care is a result of a partnership that involves government, not-for-profit organizations, and the private sector. To take this particular instance, which is an unfortunate instance and is under the disputes inquiry board that the hon. colleague referred to, and to generalize that as a failure of the system as a whole is a non sequitur that I'm not going to participate in.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the system has not been a success. Now, given that private companies will repeatedly attempt to divert public money for services toward padding their bottom line – that's what their shareholders want them to do – why won't the government really stand up for seniors and finally start funding more long-term care centres, or any, that are publicly administered so that seniors don't have to pay the cost of inflating a private company's profit margin through higher fees and compromised services? To the minister of health.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, with all respect to the hon. member, I do not think what Albertans want is a philosophical or an ideological debate about public versus private versus nonprofit. What they do want is a continuing care system and a range of options that work for them, that bring health care to them, in place in their own communities. That's what we're endeavouring to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the ministers of Transportation and Human Services. On February 16 the Minister of Transportation asserted that he did not believe it to be "legal for individuals, whether they be farm workers . . . to ride in the back of a pickup truck on our highways" when asked by the Member for Calgary-McCall. However, section 85 of the Alberta rules of the road regulation exempts those who work in agriculture. To the minister: will the minister admit he was wrong and tell this House why this group of Albertans are allowed to travel in an unsafe way on the highways?

Mr. Danyluk: First of all, Mr. Speaker, it is not legal for individuals to travel in open vehicles in the back unless in the exempt areas, and I think farming is one of them.

Dr. Swann: Thank you for admitting that. You didn't admit that last week.

Given the minister's very public position that safety on our highways is a high priority, why does the minister allow paid farm workers in Alberta to be treated differently from all other Albertans?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I very much believe that we have to have a common-sense approach, and that common-sense approach is very much about: there are a lot of businesses, whether it be a construction crew or whether it be farmers, that need to have individuals that are in the back of vehicles. There is no doubt that if you look at the recreation aspect of it or at individuals riding in the back of a truck, it's not allowed.

Dr. Swann: We just heard a nonsense approach, Mr. Speaker, not a common-sense approach.

Let's try the Minister of Human Services. Why is your ministry and this government perpetuating this discriminatory and dangerous double standard?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's important always to look at the context of things that are happening. I think it's very clear from the Minister of Transportation's response that in most circumstances it would not be appropriate for people to ride in the back of a pickup truck on a highway, and it's illegal in most circumstances. There may be short circumstances where you're moving from one field to another. There's no good reason for anybody to be in the back of a pickup truck, farmer or otherwise, if they're going to town. But if you're moving from one field to another or some contextual situation, it may well be appropriate as long as it's done carefully.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Charter Schools

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I was pleased to be at Foundations for the Future Charter Academy, where they received the good news that their charter was being renewed for a 15-year term, the first school to receive this extended term. Also announced that day was that the enrolment caps for charter schools were being reviewed and would increase for some schools. Can the Minister of Education explain what that means to schools like Foundations for the Future, which has thousands of children waiting for spots in this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct. The charters have been extended up to 15 years for those charters that meet the requirements of Alberta Education relative to the quality of education that they deliver, and most do. That was to diminish their bureaucratic nightmare of having to continuously apply for a charter renewal. We also have allowed the existing charter schools to rightsize themselves, meaning that if they were in buildings that simply had the capacity to absorb more students and their cap was below that capacity, we lifted their capacity to the maximum that the school can absorb.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If, as the minister says, the growth will happen only in a few schools, then why get people's hopes up that they may get an opportunity to have their child enrol in one of the charter programs that is already operating at capacity?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, that speaks very well to the quality of education and to the choice that charter schools offer. Obviously, parents are in some cases choosing charter schools over other modalities of delivering education. We will continuously be reviewing the uptake of students in charter schools, but we also encourage other education providers to look at some of the programs that are being offered by charter schools and replicate them so that more children in Alberta can have access to similar programs offered by a variety of school providers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister commit to providing funding to these schools so that they can buy or lease new spaces to expand their programs?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, right now charter schools are in a variety of lease or ownership arrangements throughout the province. At this point in time the budget has been tabled in the Alberta Legislature, and we have debated it. Subject to it passing, there are no specific provisions to increase funding for infrastructure for charter schools.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

2:30 Alberta's Representative in Asia (continued)

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know from the promotional advertising that Mr. Mar used his position to auction off a trip to Hong Kong to help pay off his leadership campaign fund. Was Gary Mar's plane trip back to Alberta from Hong Kong to attend this unethical fundraiser paid for by the Alberta taxpayers? To the minister of international relations.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, as we discussed earlier today, this matter was placed before the Ethics Commissioner, and I'm not prepared to comment until the Ethics Commissioner has concluded his work.

Mr. Hinman: They know that they paid for it. Again, cover-up and corruption.

Given that the appointment of Gary Mar was a pure political appointment and given that Premiers have fired other political appointments for far less, when will the Premier do the right thing and ask Gary Mar to give the money back and fire him?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how much clearer I could be about this. The matter has been placed with the Ethics Commissioner. We'll allow him to go about doing his work. He will report back, and we'll go from there.

Mr. Hinman: It didn't take so long with a letter to a school board, yet they need to review with the Ethics Commissioner. Unbelievable.

Given the amount of the scandal in the health care, MLA committees, and the Gary Mar affair that is now coming to light under what is clearly a PC culture of corruption, why is the Premier refusing to do anything about these scandals until after the votes of the next election?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, the matter is before the Ethics Commissioner. He'll do his work and report back.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Farm Safety

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Other members have alluded to and talked about farm safety, and farm safety week is upon us as we speak. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Does the minister have anything planned to heighten the awareness of farm safety?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Berger: Thank you. Plan•Farm•Safety is the theme of a three-year Canadian Agricultural Safety Association campaign, which started back in 2010. Mr. Speaker, 2010 promoted plan, with an emphasis on planning for safety. In 2011 the focus was on farm, with highlights on implementation, documentation, and training. This year's focus is on safety, recognizing that everyone has a role in farm safety.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what other steps is the minister taking to improve farm safety?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, adults and children all deserve a safe place to work and play. That's why our government believes that education and awareness are best suited to the practical realities of Alberta farming. This government provides annual funding to farm safety programming, including workshops, awareness campaigns, in-school presentations, and grants to farm community agencies. I recently announced a $2 million regional agricultural society grant to increase farm safety, to help the next generation of farm producers with farm safety programs and ongoing initiatives to that end.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a past agrologist I know that activities on farms are rapidly ramping up. We're going through calving season, and there is very, very little snow left out there, so crops and the cropping season will come upon us very soon. To the same minister: what more is the government prepared to do to improve farm safety during this important time?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of the farm safety council's recommendations, but our government will deal with that in due time. In the meantime, education and awareness, of course, are the best ways to deal with the practical realities of the farm. As I stand here this afternoon, my son will be at home doing chores, and what I count on is his awareness and his education on safety to protect him and keep him safe, just the same way I went through it because of the fellow that I introduced earlier pounding farm safety into me. That's how we'll do this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Midwifery Services

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. There are few seats for the one midwifery education program in Alberta, so many Albertans obtain their training elsewhere. Now, because Alberta has not signed on to the international midwifery preregistration program, our internationally trained midwives face a $32,000 bill to go through this process. My questions are to the minister of health. Given the shortage of midwives in the province is the minister aware of the number of internationally trained midwives seeking registration in Alberta?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, yes. I met with the college of midwives and their association representatives a little more than a week ago. It is true that there is a shortage of midwives in Alberta. We are concerned about that. We are also concerned about ensuring that we provide an environment that allows midwives to practise to their full scope of training and expertise. The health professions legislation in Alberta and the midwives' regulation are based on the parameters of the scope of practice in the Canadian midwifery framework. We intend to support our midwives in achieving the ability to practise to the full extent of their expertise.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Minister, for that answer. Again to the same minister: given that it appears that recently about nine applicants for preregistration were advised to apply to bridging programs, which would require that same $32,000, is the minister considering creating a made-in-Alberta preregistration program?

Dr. Sherman: Good question.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, it is a good question. I have not had any specific discussions with the midwives or their association about a bridging program. What we have discussed is making sure that the midwives who are licensed to practice in Alberta have the opportunity to go beyond the traditional maternity services, maternity support role in our hospitals and be able to practise in the community, supporting home births and other alternatives that Alberta women want and expect.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister: well, wouldn't the minister agree that this a perfect opportunity to consider this? We have the existing midwifery multidisciplinary project under review. We have a brand new college of midwives. Wouldn't this be the perfect opportunity to create a fair and unbiased preregistration program?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to take the hon. member's comments about a bridging program under advisement and use that idea along with other issues that we're trying to address in my discussions with midwives. As I said, our intention as a government is to do everything we can to support midwives in practising to the full extent of their training and expertise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Skilled Workforce Training Programs

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, one of Canada's leading business associations, declared that our nation's relatively strong economic standing will be in crisis if we don't take steps to tackle the impending skilled labour shortage as the growth performance and competitiveness of our businesses and industries are critical to Alberta's economic future. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What is your department doing to ensure that Alberta businesses stay competitive and have enough skilled tradespeople?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, it is critically important that as we come out of this slowdown, we have appropriately trained people in place. Over the past year my ministry has provided bridging funding of $17 million to our postsecondaries to keep positions available for skills training even though those seats were not full. We've also changed the ratio of apprentices to journeymen so that we could get more apprentices into the workplace, and we've started to put trades training online. We have four trades online now, with more to come.

Ms Woo-Paw: When employers are desperate to find more skilled workers, why aren't you adding more apprenticeship seats?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying earlier, we've managed to maintain seats for apprenticeships even though they weren't being utilized this year because we believe that as the economy comes back, we're going to need them. There's a critical importance of jobs and employment for apprentices to be able to train, so we do need our employers to step up to the table with us to make sure that we can have appropriately trained apprentices in place for the workforce.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third and final question is to the same minister. What about those that don't have a job yet like our youth and newcomers? Can they get started?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an important thing, working with newcomers to the province of Alberta. As part of that we've streamlined our processes for assessing the skills of people coming into the province and looking for ways to bridge their skills into our workforce.

Some of the other things that have been done along with our Premier's visit to the United States are looking for ways to prequalify people in certain trades from other jurisdictions like the United States so that when they come in here, we know what their skills are and can take them right into our workforce very quickly and take advantage of their skills within the needed trades.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

2:40

Provincial Tax Policy

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My questions will be to the Minister of Finance. This government is running deficits, raising tuition, deferring maintenance on public infrastructure, draining its savings, and spending a hundred per cent of its nonrenewable resource revenues. At the same time, taxes in Alberta could rise $11 billion and still be tied for the lowest in Canada. This is completely unsustainable. Given that this government has ruled out tax increases, how will this problem be fixed?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important, because this member started off with a preamble, that maybe I have a preamble to the answer. The preamble to the answer is this. This is the only province in Canada that has no net debt. This is the province in Canada that has the lowest unemployment rate. This is the only province in Canada that has a sustainability fund and a heritage fund. This is the only province in Canada that will be looking for workers, not having people unemployed.

The whole issue around taxation we've discussed thoroughly in this Assembly, and we'll continue to discuss it as we move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, the minister mentioned the heritage trust fund. Given that the per capita inflation-adjusted value of the heritage fund has declined 60 per cent since its peak in 1982, does this government plan to rebuild the value of the fund, and if so, how?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think that we've been very clear that as we move forward, we need to have a discussion with Albertans relative to not only taxes, not only the resource revenues and where they go and what they pay for but also the savings strategy of the province going forward.

We have to remember that in the past six or seven years this government has invested some $30 billion to $40 billion in critical infrastructure in this province. If this particular member is suggesting that we should not have done that, that that money should have gone into the heritage savings trust fund, well, then I'd suggest he stand up and say so so that constituents in Edmonton understand they would not have a ring road, they would not have an Edmonton clinic, they would not have a dozen new schools, and they would not have an LRT that goes to the south side of the city.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. [interjections] This is great fun.

I would not say that. What I would say is that taxes on the rich and on corporations should be raised. [interjections] I told you it would be fun, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] This is a serious question if I could have the floor.

Given the growing reports that the same technology that caused a glut of the natural gas market and gutted the government's natural gas royalties could do the same for oil in the next year or two, which would also hammer this government's treasury, what is this government's contingency plan for this significant risk?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's good to hear that more than just the leader in the Official Opposition are on the record that we need to tax people more. That's good to hear, and we want to hear that continually from that particular group as we move through the next 30 or 40 days. I think Albertans will make the choice. We will soon be asking Albertans to make a choice. They will have the opportunity of whether to vote for a group of individuals who don't want to spend any money on infrastructure or whether they want to vote for a group of individuals who want to tax more and put some money away in the savings account. They'll make the choice.

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. members, that concludes the question-and-response period today. Nineteen members were recognized, 114 questions and responses.

Statement by the Speaker

Member Anniversaries

The Speaker: We are going to move very quickly, but first of all, before we go back to the Routine, there is a recognition here for a number of members in this Assembly who were elected for their first time on March 12 of 2001, so their 11th anniversary: the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake; the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, the Minister of Transportation; the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster; the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central-Peace; the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky; the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw; the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs; the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert; the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow; the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne; the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview; the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview; and the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. Congratulations.

It's happy birthday time for the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Rick Hansen 25th Anniversary Relay

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to salute a truly inspirational Canadian, today's very special guest, Mr. Rick Hansen. Few people in the history of the world have demonstrated the vision, endurance, and effectiveness at the levels that Rick has. Twenty-five years ago Rick did something that was thought to be impossible. He wheeled himself 40,000 kilometres through 34 countries in 26 months on his epic Man in Motion World Tour, and as Rick just told us, that was just the beginning.

Ever since then Rick has cultivated innumerable powerful partnerships, including with our Alberta government. Over the past 30 years we've been proud to provide $34 million in support for spinal cord research, and we are seeing great results, including with Dr. Arthur Prochazka and his revolutionary ReJoyce rehabilitation system; Dr. Vivian Mushahwar, whose Smart-e-Pants prevent painful pressure ulcers; and Dr. Richard Stein with his WalkAide, which helps people with stroke or spinal cord injury to walk.

These are innovations developed right here in Alberta, with the spark supplied by Rick Hansen. Rick is now sharing his vision and his action with an entirely new generation via his 25th anniversary relay, which is shining the light on over 7,000 difference makers of all kinds clear across the country. Having experienced a back broken in six places myself in the past, it was a great honour recently to support the cause by carrying the medal in the relay with my family and to a mountaintop with a great friend.

With Rick's friends and fans around the world I thank him and his family and his team for kick-starting the race for a cure for paralysis, jolting people into changing their minds and actions, and, quite simply, making this world a better place for us all. Through continued collaboration we will live in a more inclusive world, a world in which the newly injured will walk away from spinal cord injury.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Second-hand Smoke

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every adult citizen has a duty to help protect children. Human beings have an instinctive awareness of this duty because we see that children are vulnerable, that they are our future, and that they have not yet developed the full capacity to care for themselves. One of the very best ways to protect children is to insulate them from the harmful effects of second-hand smoke. That's the goal of my private member's bill, which would make it an offence for adults to smoke in vehicles while anyone under the age of 18 is present.

Second-hand smoke leads to a wide range of health problems, including asthma, emphysema, lung cancer, stroke, heart attacks, and respiratory illnesses. As an ER doc I've seen kids suffering from asthma attacks, and I can't tell you how frustrating it is when the parents have smoked on the way to the hospital.

When adults smoke in cars with children present, it creates two problems. The first, of course, is that they're exposing kids to second-hand smoke in a confined space with no escape. In the winter you can't even roll the window down for some fresh air.

The second problem is that smoking in the car with kids sends the message that smoking is okay. It's about leadership and role modeling, Mr. Speaker. If my parents do it, why shouldn't I? That's the message. If adults stopped smoking in cars with kids present, that's one less place where kids can get the idea that smoking is cool, especially from their parents. That's important because we need to remember that teen smoking rates have been rising lately, and we must reverse that trend.

Prevention, my friends, is the key. It's the key to preventing tobacco-related illnesses, to lowering the cost of public health care, to raising the quality of life for every single Albertan in this province. I hope that all members of this House will see the wisdom in preventing second-hand smoke from hurting Alberta's children. We have not just an opportunity but a duty to protect our kids from second-hand smoke.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

2:50 Ethnocultural Inclusivity and Integration

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to recognize some dynamic community builders. The Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary acts as a collective voice for Calgary's ethnocultural communities towards full civic participation and integration through collaborative action. Its key initiatives include dialogue between community and government; supporting research and policy analysis on issues affecting their communities such as voter participation, racial profiling, and racial discrimination; as well as community-based primary prevention, that focuses on the root causes of domestic violence, as an example.

The Edmonton Multicultural Coalition aims to advocate for healthy and inclusive public policies and to build the participatory capacity for institutional/sector partners. Their Injera initiative with the Edmonton Police Service, Reach Edmonton, and the city of Edmonton enhances the capacity of the police to work with the community through a crime prevention project where stakeholders learn the culture of police and the cultural communities they serve.

Since 1995 the Edmonton Multicultural Health Brokers Co-operative has tirelessly supported immigrants and refugees to attain optimum health through education, community development, and programs such as perinatal outreach and multicultural family support for children with disabilities. These organizations possess incredible capacity and commitment to bridging between sectors, operate within a dynamic cross-cultural and multicultural framework, and also position themselves for continual innovation.

The leveling the playing field initiative between the Edmonton health brokers co-op, the Creating Hope Society, and Human Services through deepening the understanding of aboriginal and immigrant/refugee families aims to identify practice and policy changes most supportive of culturally respectful and responsive services for these families.

Mr. Speaker, these organizations came together recently to form DiverseCT Alberta, a network of Alberta cities and towns for diversity, focusing on advancing community-based and public policy solutions to issues affecting the province's diverse citizens.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Arctic Winter Games 2012

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pride that I rise today to recognize 230 members of Team Alberta North, including athletes from my own constituency, who travelled to Whitehorse for the 2012 Arctic Winter Games. The Arctic games are also known as the Friendly Games. Having hosted them in Grande Prairie in 2010, I know that this reputation is well deserved. These games are as much about sharing and culture as they are about athletic competition.

For six memorable days teams from northern Alberta, the Northwest Territories, Yukon, Nunavut, Quebec, Alaska, Greenland, Russia, and Scandinavia participated in events that celebrate northern traditions and promote active lifestyles. Alberta's athletes competed in sports like badminton, ski biathlon, cross-country skiing, curling, snowshoeing, and hockey and in Arctic sports and Dene games like arm pull, one-foot high kick, kneel jump, knuckle hop, head pull, and snow snake.

Placing fourth overall, Team Alberta North brought home a total of 104 ulus, including 40 gold, 37 silver, and 27 bronze. The ulu, a symbol of athletic achievement at the Arctic Winter Games, is styled after the traditional Inuit knife used as an all-purpose tool in the Arctic for centuries.

I want to congratulate all the members of Team Alberta for their many achievements at this year's games. These dedicated young people from north of the 55th parallel are the pride of our entire province. I'd like everyone here to give them a round of applause to show our appreciation and pride in all the members of Team Alberta North.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Greenhouse Research and Production Complex

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 1 I had the pleasure of participating in the official opening of the greenhouse research and crop production complex, GRPC, at the Crop Diversification Centre South in Brooks. This new facility is an investment of more than $17 million by the Alberta government into our province's greenhouse and crop research and production industry and is a valuable asset to our province.

The complex supports Alberta greenhouse growers by conducting scientific crop research and by growing test crops in a simulated large-scale commercial greenhouse setting. In touring this impressive facility, I saw production greenhouses where tomatoes and peppers were grown and research greenhouses where research into areas such as crop disease, molecular farming, greenhouse robotics, and aquaponics take place.

This facility will help to ensure that our province stays on the leading edge of applied and adaptive crop research, technology transfer, and technology commercialization. It is one of the most advanced facilities of its kind in North America, truly a world-class facility. Every aspect of its design and operation is equipped to create and test greenhouse innovation for scientists, growers, agribusiness, and educators. It is a place to go for solutions, support, and training.

Greenhouses provide other benefits to Albertans beyond supplying fresh and local food to markets. There are currently 328 greenhouses operating in the province, creating 4,800 full-time and part-time jobs and an annual gross revenue of around $160 million.

Mr. Speaker, this new research facility contributes economically to Alberta. It will also generate a significant amount of experimental data, invaluable technical information, and business models for the greenhouse industry in Alberta and western Canada. This government is working hard to ensure that our crop industry is among the most competitive and progressive in the world, and by investing in this world-class greenhouse research and production facility, we will accomplish that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When Albertans are in need, they can count on this government to stand up and do what is right. Recently our government took a big step in doing the right thing to improve the lives of severely handicapped Albertans. In Budget 2012 we announced an increase of $400 to the monthly financial benefit for the assured income for the severely handicapped. At the same time we also doubled the income exemption thresholds, allowing AISH clients to earn twice as much money without it affecting their benefits. This was a commitment that the Premier made to Albertans, and it is yet another example to show that when this Premier makes a commitment, this Premier keeps a commitment.

Mr. Speaker, AISH is important to many Albertans as it provides both financial and health-related assistance necessary to meet clients' basic needs. With this $400 increase AISH clients are now eligible for a total monthly living allowance of $1,588. Furthermore, in terms of health benefits AISH clients will continue to receive prescription drugs, dental assistance, optical coverage, diabetic supplies, and ambulance services. For those AISH clients living in long-term care, they will continue to have their room-and-board costs covered at the private-room rate of up to $1,700 per month plus a personal allowance of $315 per month for a maximum of $2,015 per month in benefits.

Mr. Speaker, increased funding to the AISH program represents our government's commitment to assisting our most vulnerable citizens and maintaining their living standards, which together will enhance their quality of life. As a government we have a responsibility to ensure that Albertans are able to meet their basic needs. I'm proud to say that under this Premier we are fulfilling this responsibility.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Alston Scout Park

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to acknowledge the Alston Scout park, located in the constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner, which I have been proud to represent. This park is named in honour of Louisa Grant Alston, who moved to Magrath from Utah in 1900 along with her eight children to join her husband, who had come to Alberta to live.

Louisa and her family were pioneers in the area, and Louisa was part of the first primary presidency in Magrath, an organization which taught Christian values to children. More than 100 years later, in 2003, the Alston Park Foundation was established, and it raised $25,000 in short order through golf tournaments, family and private donations. Over the next nine years additional funds were raised between numerous community fundraising efforts and grants through Alberta's community initiatives program which led to the building of the park and the official dedication of the park on July 22, 2011.

Mr. Speaker, the construction of the Alston Scout park in Magrath is a perfect example of how the spirit and support of community and government initiatives work together in benefiting Alberta communities. The Alston Scout park is located on main street in Magrath. The park features many scouting exhibits and serves as a great place for families to go to relax, spend time together, and reflect.

I would like to acknowledge the history of the Alston Scout park and commend the Alston family and community for all their hard work in realizing such a worthwhile project.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, I should point out that in a few seconds from now we will arrive at a situation where Standing Order 7(7) kicks in. "At 3 p.m. the items in the ordinary daily routine will be deemed to be concluded and the Speaker shall notify the Assembly." Having done that, shall I now recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader?

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can't even cite the rule number. You've taken it out of my mouth.

The Speaker: It's my job.

Mr. Denis: I would like to move for unanimous consent to waive rule 7(7) for today only.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the request is to waive the standing order so that we can conclude the Routine. It has to be unanimous so I'll just ask one question: is anybody opposed? If so, say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 20(2) of the Auditor General Act I would like to table five copies of a report by the Auditor General entitled Report of the Auditor General of Alberta, March 2012.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to table an op-ed from the March 11, 2012, Calgary Herald entitled A New Perspective: The Health-care Glass Is Not Half Empty, written by Dr. Tom Feasby, dean of medicine at the University of Calgary. The op-ed states: "Criticism of health care is fine, in fact necessary, if it is constructive and balanced. This has not been in the case in Alberta for some time." I would encourage all hon. members to read this op-ed.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition signed by 776 Albertans. The petition reads: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to take immediate action to regulate electricity prices, recognizing that electricity is an essential service." These are in addition to the 1,200 signatures for this petition that were previously tabled.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have six tablings. I'd like to table a letter to Cheryl Scarlett, director of human resources, information technology and broadcast services, tabling the return of $43,656.17 back to the Ministry of Finance, Legislative Assembly Office.

I'd like to table five copies of my cheque, that was delivered today.

With respect to youth smoking rates I'd like to table five copies of the youth smoking rates among Albertans aged 12 to 19. The source is the Canadian community health survey.

I also have five copies of an e-mail from the Canadian Cancer Society, Alberta/NWT division, dated March 9, 2012, supporting Bill 203, the Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012.

Five copies from the Lung Association, Alberta & NWT, dated March 9, 2012, again supporting a free vote on Bill 203.

Five copies from the Alberta Policy Coalition for Chronic Disease Prevention dated March 9, 2012, again supporting Bill 203.

Finally, I'd like to table five copies of Smoke-Free Vehicles: Protecting Youth from Exposure to Tobacco Smoke in Vehicles, from Campaign for a Smoke-free Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Hancock, Minister of Human Services, responses to questions raised by Ms. Notley, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and Mr. MacDonald, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, on February 13, 2012, Department of Human Services, supplementary supply estimates.

The Speaker: The daily Routine is now concluded.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 203

Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Health care accounts for 40 to 50 per cent of every provincial budget across the nation. In Alberta we can't balance our budget because we've got a lot of sick people here. What we need to do is focus our health care system and the way we think as a society not on a sickness system but on a prevention and wellness system.

Mr. Speaker, did you know that the leading cause of death in Canada is no longer heart disease? It's actually cancer. Lung cancer is one of those cancers. Some of the other causes of costs to health care are asthma, emphysema, chronic bronchitis, addictions. Smoking is a major cause of these problems, major costs not only in terms of health care dollars but actually in terms of human suffering. If you have a business, the health of your labour work force determines the economic productivity of your labour workforce. Lost productivity actually affects the bottom line of business. A healthy population is a wealthy population.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise for a second time to discuss Bill 203, the Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012. I move second reading of Bill 203.

When this act comes into force on January 1, 2013, the province will have taken one very large, positive step towards the protection of our children from a dangerous killer, second-hand smoke. Although the wording of the bill is quite simple, to amend the Tobacco Reduction Act in order to prohibit smoking "in a vehicle in which a minor is present," the outcome would be nothing short of monumental.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk about some facts and figures, and I believe that facts actually speak for themselves. It's incumbent upon us as policy-makers to make decisions based on merit, evidence, and fact. We in Alberta, I will acknowledge, have taken steps in the recent past to address smoking in public places. I believe that was a very good thing.

Smoking rates amongst children is where we are failing. We've failed to meet the youth tobacco reduction target for the last few years. We were trending properly. We went from 12 per cent to 11 per cent from 2007 to 2008, but in 2010 childhood smoking rates went up to 14 per cent, approximately a 30 per cent increase.

Alberta kids continue to be exposed to second-hand smoke in a number of settings, including motor vehicles. The levels of second-hand smoke in cars are worse than levels previously experienced in bars and taverns, especially in small, teeny, little child-sized lungs.

Tobacco use is a known contributor to many of the leading causes of disease and premature death in Alberta: cancer, heart disease, et cetera. Tobacco use cost the Alberta health care system an estimated $470 million in 2002 alone, and it's much more than that in 2012. We now have one of the highest youth smoking rates in the nation, and I just recently tabled this chart. Alberta and Quebec are the only remaining provinces without legislation to protect children from second-hand smoke in vehicles.

Real-life examples, Mr. Speaker. I will tell you that nothing bothers the bejesus out of me more than when I've got a four-month- or six-month-old baby suffocating – suffocating – and struggling to breathe 60 times a minutes, sucking in between the ribs, and the parents have been smoking on the way to the hospital. It's absolutely tragic. What's even more tragic is to actually know that this child is going to go home, and they're going to be smoking again. These children end up back in hospital.

You know, after 20 years of practising medicine, if there's one thing we're going to accomplish in the Legislature, we must stop this practice. We must send a message to our society. Please don't smoke in front of your kids, and especially in enclosed spaces. It's dangerous to the health of your children, literally. The health risk of second-hand smoke for young children: there's extensive evidence that it damages their lung lining and hurts their immunity.

3:10

Arguments against intrusion or private residence. Mr. Speaker, many people are going to say: "You know what? Get out of my bedroom. The government is playing too big a role in my behaviour.” You know what? We shouldn’t actually have to legislate common sense. We don’t want to get inside people’s homes. We don’t want to get inside people’s bedrooms, but unfortunately I believe that we as policy-makers must take steps to protect these young babies who have no voice. For those Albertans or hon. members who may have concerns with this act on the grounds that they view it as too intrusive or that their vehicle is an extension of their private residence, I would remind them of the need to balance the public interests and the private interest and our duty as a moral, civilized society to protect those who cannot protect themselves.

The maximum fine of $1,000 associated with the first offence will be consistent with all current violations of the Tobacco Reduction Act: smoking in a public place, smoking in a workplace, smoking within a prescribed distance from a doorway, window, or air intake of a public place or workplace. It is also consistent with the specific goals of this government’s tobacco reduction strategy that, I believe, all members of all political parties would support: preventing tobacco use by youth, cessation of tobacco use by current tobacco users, and protection of all Albertans from second-hand smoke.

Finally, there is no restriction on people smoking in their own vehicles. You can smoke all you want in your car. Please don’t do it in front of a baby or a young person. However, the confined space of a vehicle is not like the interior of a home or a big building. If someone is smoking at home, they can go out to the patio, and those who don’t want to be affected won’t be affected. They can move to another room.

There are no options for a minor in a vehicle but just to sit there and breathe toxic air: toxic, poisonous air. It’s a well-known fact that there are a number of carcinogens and very toxic chemicals inside cigarettes. The principle of protecting our children’s welfare should always be paramount. In fact, as an emergency doctor if we become aware of child abuse or suspected child abuse, it’s our duty to report it. I’m not suggesting this is child abuse, but I am suggesting that we must protect our children.

Mr. Speaker, role modelling. I’d like to speak for a moment about the power of role modelling. Anyone who raises children is familiar with the reality of monkey see, monkey do. I’m going to be honest. You know what? I smoked when I was nine years old. Why? Because I saw my father smoke. You know, I’ll make light of this. He gave me a beating. He did. He gave me a beating because I smoked, and I probably deserved it.

I wish my father had quit smoking. The one-year anniversary of his death is coming up on March 20. I will tell you that after three strokes, 15 heart attacks, two pacemakers, five brand-new blood vessels that they put in his heart, two brand-new blood vessels in his legs combined with diabetes and hypertension: I wish my father had stopped smoking when I stopped smoking. I stopped smoking at the age of nine after that beating. After his retirement – he’d worked extraordinarily hard – he really didn’t enjoy his life. It was so tough to see him suffer.

Not only should we not smoke in front of our children; people should take that sense of personal responsibility and, beyond that, role-model for our children. Mr. Speaker, when parents smoke in front of their children, especially in cars, our children learn how to smoke and are essentially smoking from the day they’re born. In fact, if the mother smokes, there is great evidence out there that it produces lower birth weight babies. That child has been smoking before it was even born. We’ve got to put a stop to that. We must put a stop to that.

We need a cultural change with regard to minors and smoking. It cannot be okay to smoke while pregnant, for youth to smoke, for parents to smoke in a confined area like vehicles when children are present. It’s an important preventative health step, the wisdom of which certain municipalities in this province, for example Okotoks, and many provinces in this country have already implemented. Mr. Speaker, sometimes Alberta shows leadership by leading; sometimes we show leadership by following. There are only two provinces that haven’t passed this law, Alberta and Quebec. We’ve got to get with the game here. This is a no-brainer.

Mr. Speaker, I know that sometimes we all get stuck with partisanship and accept good ideas because of where they came from or reject good ideas because of where they came from. When I was the parliamentary assistant to the minister of health, on that side, I tabled Bill 215, the same bill, in the Legislature. It was tabled. The Ministry of Health and Wellness supported it. The minister at the time, the hon. Member for Calgary-West, supported it. The bureaucracy supported it. It came to the floor of the House. Unfortunately, we ran out of time in 2008. It didn’t get to second or third reading.

I brought this bill up when I was on that side of the House and now on this side of the House. I would ask all members to please consider: this isn’t a Liberal idea; it’s not a Conservative idea; it’s the right idea. I would ask all hon. members to think about their children and our future and to support Bill 203, the Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012. I ask them: please do not let the opportunity in this instance to do the right thing, to protect our children from a very real killer, second-hand smoke, pass you by for partisan reasons.

We will argue and fight and debate on many other things. We will. We will disagree on many things and agree on many others. But this, I believe, we can all agree on. At least, I hope we can. I would plead with you, please, to not use the old excuse in not supporting this legislation that the government sometime in the future will introduce broader legislation with many other things lumped in, which would also be important. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford mentioned some of those today, and I would ask that he support this as well. I would ask the hon. members not to use that excuse, the overall tobacco reduction strategy, because I believe that would be a cop-out. The bill is here. We’re here doing the work. We’re going into the election. Let’s not wait and delay this any longer, because it would be leadership delayed. A decision delayed with respect to our children in this instance would be leadership delayed.

3:20

I’m going to give you an example. There was legislation tabled by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar about EpiPens. That’s a public safety issue. We have defibrillators in public places. Many people have anaphylaxis and life-threatening, severe anaphylactic reactions. This idea I supported, but it was rejected because of the source. It came from a Liberal MLA.

Mr. Speaker, I ask forgiveness from the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, but the day after I was removed from caucus, that hon. member had a near fatal anaphylactic reaction from a peanut, and we didn’t have an EpiPen on-site.

I was PA for Health and Wellness. This bill had the support of Alberta Health and Wellness and the government caucus but died on the Order Paper. You have a very straightforward bill before you, and if you agree with it, I would ask you to support it now. We can start saving our children’s lives today if we have the courage to act now. It’s the right thing to do, so why wait?

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity to speak on a very important issue that affects our children. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests before we move on?

I have two speakers that have indicated their desire to speak. One is the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and then the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. If others are interested, kindly send a note.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to combine my two introductions into one. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House participants and friends from the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary's leadership, engagement, action, and development project, the LEAD initiative. This initiative seeks to increase the level of community leadership, civic engagement, and volunteerism as well as cross-cultural collaboration in Calgary's ethnocultural communities to advance issues and point to them.

Our guests are seated in the members' gallery, and as I say the name of their society, would they please stand. I apologize that I cannot include all of the names because of the length of the list: the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary, the Council of Filipina-Canadian Women, connecting elders of ethnocultural communities project, the Calgary-Chinese Elderly Citizens' Association, the Bangladesh Canada Association of Calgary, the Calgary Japanese Community Association, the Calgary Korean Scholarship Foundation, the Calgary Korean Seniors Association, the cultural engagement project, the Peruvian Cultural Association in Calgary, Possibilities in Motion, the Vietnamese Christian faithful fellowship, the Excel Family and Youth Society, the Fountain of Orphans and Vulnerable Women, the India Canada Association, the AIDS Calgary African communities project, the Arsii-Oromo, the Assam community of Alberta, the Aweil Union Society, the Calgary Vietnamese Women for Friendship and Progress Association, the Canadian Latino Newspaper, the Coalition for Equal Access to Education, as well as representatives from the Edmonton Multicultural Health Brokers Co-operative, members of the Edmonton Multicultural Coalition, and representatives from the Creating Hope Society.

Mr. Speaker, as the founding member of the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary I'm very proud to have worked with many of these remarkable individuals and community leaders in past decades, and I'm very pleased to have had the opportunity earlier today to make a member's statement about the great work that these groups of people are doing to benefit Albertans from all corners of our province.

I would like to ask the members in this House to extend to them the warmest traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 203

Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles)

Amendment Act, 2012

(continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise to speak to private member's Bill 203. I've thought a lot about this piece of legislation, and quite frankly it's had me thinking a lot about my last 10 years as a Member of this Legislative Assembly. I actually find it somewhat humorous, I guess is the only way I could describe it, that of all of the pieces of legislation I've seen us debate in this House for the last 10 years, the sins are some of the most hotly contested and debated pieces of legislation.

To give consideration, we've just discussed upping the penalty, from a 24-hour suspension to a three-day suspension and a three-day vehicle seizure, for those people who have a blood-alcohol content of between .05 and .08. They are impaired when they're driving. Maybe they're not criminally impaired, but they're impaired. In fact, 300 people in this province have been killed by people with an impairment between that level. It's so hotly contested and debated. I can tell from other pieces of legislation on smoking that we've passed in the past that this is going to be a hotly contested and debated piece of legislation, maybe not in this House, but it will be on Alberta's streets. I find it very interesting.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

You know, I remember when we introduced in the legislation on smoking a setback from doorways, and there was so much controversy about it. Comments were made to me that we were taking away people's fundamental rights, that pretty soon they weren't going to be able to smoke anywhere but in their vehicle. Now they won't be able to smoke in their vehicle as long as there are minors present. I can tell that I'm going to receive many cards and letters for my position on this.

Mr. Speaker, this is a fundamental debate about responsibility versus rights. You have the right to smoke, but do you have the right to smoke when young people are present in a confined area where they have to breathe it in? You have a right to smoke, but perhaps you have a responsibility to not smoke in an area where young people are going to be forced to breathe in the second-hand carcinogens.

You have the right to drink, but does that mean you necessarily have the right to drive on Alberta's highways at a blood-alcohol level of .05, putting other people's lives at risk? Perhaps you have the right to drink but the responsibility not to drive on our streets when you've done so, when you're at a level of impairment that can damage other people's lives or put them at risk.

It's a fundamental debate, Mr. Speaker, where people will stand up and say: I have the right to do this. But there is also – and I've debated this among all of my Conservative friends – a responsibility to not harm others while you exercise your rights. That's what makes this such a challenge. I know that some people will argue for their rights. I hope they argue just as vehemently about the responsibilities they have in exercising those rights.

Mr. Speaker, we know that smoking is not a harmless vice. It causes all levels of health care concerns to individuals who do the smoking. We know just as much about second-hand smoke and how dangerous it is as well. There are countless studies that dictate and demonstrate exactly how harmful second-hand smoke is. I've seen videos of the testimonies of spouses who are 70 years old, whose wife or husband passed away 20 years earlier from lung cancer and had never picked up a cigarette or died of heart disease and had never picked up a cigarette, but the spouse that remained alive did smoke and testified: if only they'd known exactly how harmful second-hand smoke was. I heard one spouse say that they wouldn't have been responsible for killing the one they loved the most. That is a very powerful, emotional argument and demonstrates just what we would do if we knew what kind of harm we caused.

Now, smoking in a vehicle with a young person, Mr. Speaker, is a very confined space. There is no doubt that a young child will inhale second-hand smoke, which we know is dangerous. An adult can stand up and say: "Wait a second. I'm not smoking in the vehicle with you. You pull over and smoke outside." They can debate and protect themselves, but young people can't always do that.

Now, I know that parents or adults would not intentionally want to harm a young person. The majority of people really do want to protect their children or other young people that they have custody or care over, Mr. Speaker, but oftentimes we make decisions without appropriate information. Look; a grown adult who is having a drink at the kitchen table would never – if you told them to pour one-quarter of your drink down the mouth of the child that's sitting beside you for every drink that you have, not a single solitary adult with a bit of common sense would think that was a good idea. But most people fail to realize just how negative, how harmful the health effects are to young people who have to inhale second-hand smoke.

I think the ultimate discussion, the ultimate decision, Mr. Speaker, comes down to whose responsibility it is to protect those young people that would be in a vehicle and forced to inhale second-hand smoke.

The responsibility should be for the adults in the vehicle to not do it. But, Mr. Speaker, if they fail to do that and only when they fail to do that, that's ultimately when it becomes the government's responsibility to protect those who cannot protect themselves. That's ultimately the core responsibility for the government.

3:30

Again, I don't believe that anybody would deliberately try to hurt someone who's young, a minor, Mr. Speaker, which is why, although I'm going to support this piece of legislation, I encourage our minister of health, our government cabinet and caucus, and every member of this Legislature to continue to push for better education about what the harmful effects are.

It would be wonderful, Mr. Speaker, if we got to a point where everyone had enough information about the harmful effects of second-hand smoke and we as a government didn't need to pass legislation because people did the right thing, because they took the responsibility to protect young people who couldn't protect themselves.

I will be supporting this private member's piece of legislation and continuing to advocate and encourage that we educate all Albertans on just how harmful smoking and second-hand smoke are.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to rise today in the Assembly to speak on Bill 203, the Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012, being brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I'd like to thank the hon. member for his initiative in bringing Bill 203 forward as it highlights many important health and social issues.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure everyone in this House would agree that protecting our children is always a priority. Whether it involves their physical or emotional well-being, the safety of our most vulnerable population undoubtedly deserves our attention, and it's no different when it comes to the effects of second-hand smoke.

The objective of Bill 203 is to make it illegal to smoke in cars whenever anyone under 18 is present. A violation of this bill would result in a maximum fine of $1,000.

Mr. Speaker, the change in social norms regarding smoking that has taken place over the past decade is quite astounding. Our society went from a place where smoking was quite prevalent to one where the practice is now illegal in many areas such as public places, workplaces, and the entrances of many buildings. Not that many years ago you actually could smoke in a hospital. Moreover, minimal supervision is required to enforce those rules as the rate of compliance is high. People now limit the locations to where they smoke and are conscious of whom they smoke around because they see it as common sense and as a matter of respect.

More recently there's been an increase in the number of studies and reports looking at smoking in vehicles. One of the first studies to examine smoking in cars was done in 2008 by researchers at the University of Waterloo and entitled An Experimental Investigation of Tobacco Smoke Pollution in Cars. In this study levels of tobacco smoke pollution, more commonly known as second-hand smoke, were measured in 18 different vehicles.

Drivers smoked a single cigarette in their cars in each of the five controlled air sampling conditions. Each condition varied based on the car's movement, level of air conditioning, and whether the windows were open. With the worst ventilation conditions, windows up and the vehicle parked, the level of the smoke was higher than at most bars that allowed smoking. Under the better ventilated conditions, the side window halfway down and the cigarette held close to the window, the level of smoke was reduced but still posed a significant health risk. The researchers concluded that smoking in a car under any condition may potentially lead to high levels of second-hand smoke.

More recently another study was published in the Canadian Medical Association Journal, 2011, entitled Myths, Facts and Conditional Truths: What is the Evidence on the Risks Associated with Smoking in Cars Carrying Children? While trying to determine the risks involved, the authors first looked at the mixture of chemicals that make up second-hand smoke and its concentration in cars under different conditions such as volume, speed, and ventilation. They also looked at how long a person would be in the car and how long a person would be exposed to second-hand smoke. The difference between how second-hand smoke affects children compared to adults was also considered.

The authors found that the evidence does not show an absolute risk threshold because a range of environmental, biological, and social factors contribute to the risk equation. However, the authors did note that because of the small size of the interior space of a car, during the worst ventilation conditions smoking in a vehicle may constitute a health risk.

Mr. Speaker, the potential health risk posed by second-hand smoke is well documented, and it is clear that smoking within a vehicle poses a risk. Not many people today would refute those findings. However, the fundamental question we may want to ask ourselves while debating Bill 203 is not about the potential danger of second-hand smoke but whether this sort of legislation is the best course of action to mitigate the risk.

This is not to say that governments should be complacent or take no action at all; quite the opposite. As a matter of fact, this province already has a number of health initiatives in place to address this issue. Most of these programs fall under the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy. This strategy is a 10-year plan that was developed and implemented in 2002. It set goals and targets for reducing tobacco use among Albertans as well as methods for achieving those targets.

The goals of this comprehensive strategy relate to three major focus areas: prevention of tobacco use by youth; cessation of tobacco use by adults and youth; and protection of all Albertans, including children, from second-hand smoke. In order to achieve these goals, this strategy focused its efforts on education, collaboration, raising public awareness, and sustainability. By working with various community-based programs such as the National Non-Smoking Week events, these have spread positive information and have taught youth about the dangers of smoking.

The Barb Tarbox campaign, which was very effective in terms of its recall among adolescents, is another example of the multipronged approach of the strategy. By raising public awareness through a mass-media campaign, this innovative approach, which featured a former smoker, was able to garner significant attention and educate many people about tobacco.

As a result of such achievements this strategy and its stakeholders have had much success with respect to its goals. Four out of 5 Albertans do not use tobacco, and there are now more ex-smokers than current smokers. The percentage of youth in Alberta under 18 exposed to second-hand smoke in their homes also decreased by more than 50 per cent from 2001 to 2006. The number of nonsmoking Canadians who report being exposed to cigarette smoke in a private vehicle has also fallen about 25 per cent between 2003 and 2009.

These trends were not simply the result of legislation as the Tobacco Reduction Act was not implemented until 2008. Instead, they are the result of public education and collaboration, that have been successful in changing social norms regarding tobacco use.

Since 2012 is the 10-year anniversary of the plan, Health and Wellness is currently working with tobacco stakeholders across the province to develop a renewed Alberta tobacco reduction strategy. This renewed strategy will be conscious of the need to protect all Albertans from second-hand smoke but will focus on youth, young adults, pregnant women, and at-risk populations.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to reiterate that I agree with the intentions of the hon. member in wanting to protect children from second-hand smoke in cars. However, as I've discussed, there are also other approaches that are currently being used with great success.

I'd like to thank the hon. member again for bringing forth this important issue for discussion, and I look forward to the rest of the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I shall recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. You wish to join the debate?

3:40

Ms Notley: Yes, I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to get up and speak to this bill, again because I do believe, as the mover of the bill first noted, this has already been discussed at some length in the Legislature.

I want to say at the outset that this is a bill that I think includes a strategy which outweighs the concerns which are legitimately articulated about it. In short, it is a bill that we would support. I say that understanding that there are some legitimate concerns that people might raise with respect to the degree of sort of government oversight into their life and whether the car is an extension of the home and those kind of arguments, but notwithstanding those arguments I think that we need to be very clear about what's at risk here.

I want to begin by thanking the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat because he did a very good job of quoting a number of important studies which outlined the clear health effects associated with being exposed to second-hand smoke and, in particular, being exposed to second-hand smoke in a vehicle.

The fact of the matter is that we typically, less so in this province but in most responsible jurisdictions, regulate the exposure of the public in not only public settings but in private settings to hazardous chemicals. Many workplaces are private domains, but we still say that at a certain point you cannot force people to be exposed to chemicals and air quality that jeopardizes their health. It's quite understood that we have a practice in our society where when the health effects reach a certain point, it is considered reasonable and thoughtful to limit the exposure of people to those health effects and thereby limit the right of another person to expose people to those health effects. So it's not new that day in and day out we sometimes limit the rights of one person in order to achieve a better outcome for others.

Now, the fact of the matter is that there's also a lot of literature out there that shows that as we succeed in getting people to move away from smoking, ironically there's a greater income disparity amongst those who smoke and those who do not smoke. More likely than not you're going to have lower income people who are still smoking. More likely than not you're going to have people with lower rates of education who are still smoking. So I'm not unaware of the concern about bringing in this sort of fine/penalty approach against these people because it may actually in some cases make the situation worse.

One of the things I would say about this legislation is that in concert with going forward with this legislation, we need to develop a far more effective and aggressive prevention and cessation program with respect to smoking. Yes, we're all great at putting out advertising. This government advertises up the yingyang. Their favourite thing to do is advertise and educate. But in most cases regulation is that key linchpin of a strategy that makes for real changes.

The other thing that you need to do is that you need to understand that tobacco addiction is an addiction, and we need to be able to provide programs that assist people in breaking that addiction in a way that is nondiscriminatory on the basis of income.

I myself grew up with one parent who smoked, and I tell people the story. We lived about 15 miles out of town, and we would get into the front seat of our three-on-the-tree pickup truck. There would be me, my mom, and my two brothers. We'd be sitting along the bench of the old truck. It would be minus 25 out, so there was no frigging window open, that's for sure. We'd be driving into town, sometimes in second gear because my mom was not necessarily so good at moving us into third gear. She would find a way to smoke three or four cigarettes between the time that we left our place at Dunvegan and got into Fairview.

You know, I'm fully aware that this happened. You know, I love my mother dearly, and she was a very good mother, but at the time the cultural norms of what was acceptable were what they were, and nobody was telling her that that was actually something she could be fined for doing, so she did it.

It was interesting. I was one of those kids, when I was 13 or 14, who was very antismoking, and I was constantly lecturing her about the need for her to quit smoking. Finally, when I was 16, my dad bribed her into quitting smoking and said, "Tell you what; if you quit smoking, we can collectively agree to put this amount of money every month towards the church charity," that she wanted to give the money to, so she agreed to quit smoking. Interestingly, Mr. Speaker, within a month and a half of her quitting smoking, I started. I believe it was because I'd probably been addicted for some period of time because of the amount of exposure to second-hand smoke in our house.

So 15 years later, when I started attempting to quit smoking, I remember being at my workplace, and I was very pleased because they actually paid for these rather expensive smoking cessation programs. That was not something that everybody would have access to. The other thing that helped me quit smoking was the fact that there was a law against me smoking anywhere that was remotely convenient like – oh, should I mention it? – my car. At this point I was in B.C. Now, at that time there was no law against me smoking in my car, but there was a law against me smoking anywhere close to where I was. So that helped me quit smoking. Frankly, I think if there was a law against smoking in your car around children, that would also help people quit smoking.

The final thing that I want to say on this is that at the end of the day kids don't get to choose whether they pick up that cigarette or not. This is not about kids starting smoking when they're 16. This is about a three-month-old baby being exposed to smoke. This is about a four-year-old child being exposed to smoke. They don't get to make that choice. So we need to make sure, just as we would with other situations that put kids at risk, that we as a community step in and say: "You know what? We respect your rights and your role as a family, but at this point we're getting beyond that, which is in the best interest of your child."

Quite frankly, I think being in a truck and smoking four cigarettes with the windows rolled up is probably not a great thing for a child. I'm not suggesting anyone would have said that I shouldn't have still been living with my family, but it would have been helpful if my parents knew that there was actually a price to pay for engaging in that behaviour.

Knowing what we know about the research around the dangers of tobacco smoking, around the addictiveness of tobacco, around the long-term health consequences and the extreme cost to our health care system over the short and the long term, it seems to me quite strange that we wouldn't give very serious consideration to this piece of legislation.

For the sake of prevention, for the sake of our children's health, for the sake of our collective health, Mr. Speaker, I think this is a reasonable bill to consider, and we would support it. We would, though, also suggest that we would accompany support for a bill like this, were our party the one that was running this government, with a much greater investment in prevention programs not only just around preventing smoking but preventing all of those socioeconomic indicators that result in poor health and working on those issues up front to keep people healthy so that we're not paying for it at the greatest expense after the horse has left the barn as it were.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this, Mr. Speaker, and look forward to hearing more debate. Thank you.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I rise, actually, with a little trepidation to speak to this bill because I know at least one member in this House probably is not going to find my comments all that helpful. So maybe I should start by saying that I actually support the bill.

I wasn't going to at one point. Many, many years ago, back when I first started in this House and this bill was debated, before that hon. member sat in this House, I thought at that time: gosh, you know, can't parents figure this out for themselves? The very next morning I was in the parking lot of the grocery store in Peace River. A car pulled in beside me that had three little kids in it, windows rolled up, and the driver was smoking a big cigar. That just was beyond me, and I myself smoked for many, many years, Mr. Speaker. I guess my kids have things to say about me, I'm sure.

I do recognize the health impacts of smoking, obviously. You know, I think I can support this bill. There were some reasonable comments made by the members for Battle River-Wainwright and Cypress-Medicine Hat. I think this is a healthy debate.

The reason I wanted to rise today, Mr. Speaker, is because I'm just slightly insulted – well, okay, quite a bit insulted – that that hon. member, who is one of the most partisan members in this House, should rise and implore me to be nonpartisan in supporting his bill. That troubles me very deeply because that member literally rode his horse into the arena on the back of partisanship and has been viciously partisan in this House. For him to stand up and implore me about, you know, how to vote correctly in this House is, quite frankly, an insult.

3:50

To go on as he did, for example, as a doctor discussing the health situation of the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, especially seeing how the health situation he referred to has absolutely nothing to do with the subject matter of this bill, I find that a little bit insulting. Perhaps we should ask that hon. member to table his permission slip from the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul that allows him to discuss the health information of that hon. member on the floor of this House. I suspect that'll wind up being tabled when all of that other health information and evidence about the health inquiry that the Health Quality Council went on a goose chase over and that we're still waiting for is tabled.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize for my anger, but I find it insulting that a member like that would implore me to be nonpartisan. I have no problem being nonpartisan. I have no problem voting for what's right and doing what's right. That's why I'm here. I came here to make a difference, and I don't need any lessons from over there.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I will support this bill. I honestly thank the hon. member for bringing it forward. I'll take my seat now, and hopefully the atmosphere will calm down.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you wish to speak on the bill?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I would rise to support Bill 203. I think it is a very good idea. I was surprised to learn that only Alberta and Quebec had failed to provide this type of legislation, and I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for bringing this forward. Certainly, there are many, many examples that hon. members in the past have given, valid examples, as to why this legislation is needed.

You know, there was a time not too long ago in this country, hon. members, when perhaps a large family was in a small car like a Volkswagen. The windows were wound up because we know Volkswagens didn't have very good heaters in those days, and both parents would be smoking, coming home from a family outing. The inside of the car would be virtually blue. That certainly wouldn't be good for the passengers then, and it certainly wouldn't be good for passengers now. The hon. Member for Peace River talked about the gentleman smoking a cigar in a vehicle when he witnessed three children riding along as passengers or arriving at the parking lot of a supermarket. So there are examples.

It certainly is the right thing to do. The cost of this shouldn't be an issue. I think we would see over a long period of time significant savings to our health care budget.

Bill 203 as it stands I think should be passed in this Assembly. Hopefully it won't be like – and I'm going to have to get partisan here – other private members' bills and lie on the legislative shelf like some other bills that we know about, including some that were to provide tax credits to individuals, but for some reason or other, Mr. Speaker, were not proclaimed and put into force.

I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to please not only vote for this fine bill, Bill 203, but let's make sure that it becomes the law of this province quickly so that children, when they're driving with their parents in a car, are protected from second-hand smoke and the effects of second-hand smoke. Hon. members, this is a very good bill. It's a good initiative. Let's vote for this and move it forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I concur; this is a good bill. It is a pleasure to rise today to join my hon. colleagues on Bill 203, brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I'd like to thank him for bringing this bill forward.

Mr. Speaker, the protection of children is a major priority for this government. Quite simply, children constitute approximately one-quarter of our province's population but all of our future. While I commend any initiatives that make our children safer and while I strongly agree with the premise of the bill, I do have concerns about how this bill would be enforced.

I believe that in framing this issue, it's important to highlight tobacco use trends in our province. In particular, the smoking rate among youth aged 15 to 19 has decreased substantially in recent years, in large part due to our Alberta tobacco reduction strategy. The tobacco reduction strategy is a 10-year plan to increase the wellness of Albertans and to decrease health costs related to tobacco use. This age group, from 15 to 19, is key when you consider that this is typically the demographic with the highest rate of tobacco use.

Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, Bill 203 targets two main issues. First, it focuses on raising awareness of the negative effects of second-hand smoke, and secondly, it specifically targets adults who smoke in vehicles while minors are present. With this in mind I believe it's important to highlight the fact that levels of smoking are continuing to decline among Alberta's young people, and I believe we're seeing this result because of our tobacco reduction strategy and because it's working.

For the sake of debate, I also think it's important to look at what other jurisdictions are doing with respect to this matter. As many of you are likely aware, there are a number of Canadian jurisdictions that currently have legislation in place that prohibits people from smoking in motor vehicles when minors are present. I imagine that – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark can correct me if I'm wrong – Bill 203 seeks to replicate the initiatives made in some of the Canadian provinces and a handful of American states.

In addition to these jurisdictions, some municipalities in our province have taken a similar approach to Bill 203 and have mandated a ban on smoking in vehicles when children are present. Mr. Speaker, Leduc, Athabasca, and Okotoks have all passed these types of bylaws in recent years. According to the city of Leduc, by December of this past year about a dozen warnings have been issued to drivers in the city since its implementation this past summer, but no fines, stated to be $100, have been handed out.

In addition to Athabasca, Okotoks, and Leduc, the city of Medicine Hat currently is the largest municipality in Alberta that has banned smoking in cars carrying people under the age of 16. Mr. Speaker, I should point out that as of January 4 this year only one ticket for smoking in a vehicle when there were children present has been issued since Medicine Hat's bylaw came into effect on September 1. I'm not sure if this means that virtually no one in the city of Medicine Hat smokes with children in their vehicles or that the bylaw is too difficult to enforce. But these types of numbers lead me to believe it must be one or the other.

Mr. Speaker, laws such as Bill 203 can be part of provincial legislation. In April 2008 Nova Scotia became the first Canadian province to implement a ban on smoking in vehicles when children are present. It's now illegal in Nova Scotia to smoke while anyone under the age of 19 is in a vehicle.

Other Atlantic provinces in Canada – New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland and Labrador – have also passed similar laws in the last three years. Provincial regulations in both Ontario and British Columbia pertaining to smoking in vehicles carrying children under the age of 16 came into effect in 2009. Those caught committing this type of act in B.C. are subject to a $109 fine; in Ontario it's up to $250. Likewise, Saskatchewan and Manitoba introduced this kind of smoking ban in 2010, with Manitoba's fine nearing $200.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to address various U.S. laws concerning this debate on Bill 203. The southern U.S. state of Arkansas was the first jurisdiction in the world to ban smoking in vehicles carrying children under the age of 16. The fine for committing this offence in Arkansas is $25. Likewise, Louisiana law bans smoking in motor vehicles when children under the age of 13 are present. Other states like Maine, Oregon, and Hawaii also have similar bans.

My concern, Mr. Speaker, is the effectiveness of enforcement of a law like this. We've heard that many jurisdictions have barely issued any charges. I think it's fair to have concern that law enforcement will be spending time pulling over people who have a cigarette in their hand at the expense of other public safety issues that may be more pressing to address.

I acknowledge that the protection of children's health is and should continue to be a priority of this government, and I commend any initiative that makes our children safer.

4:00

I agree with the premise of the bill. I'm still unsure on how to vote on the bill at this time. For these reasons I'm looking forward to my colleagues' opinions on Bill 203 so that we can make a qualified and educated decision on what's in the best interests of Albertans and the children in our province.

Thank you again to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for bringing this forward, and I look forward to the rest of the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for St. Albert, do you wish to join the debate?

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I do wish to speak to this bill. I'm very honoured today to rise and speak to Bill 203, the Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012. Before I share some of my thoughts on this proposed legislation, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for bringing this important bill before the House for debate. In his opening remarks he made the comment that we should not have to legislate common sense. I agree a hundred per cent with that statement. Unfortunately, however, sometimes we do have to legislate common sense.

Sometimes it's difficult to enforce common sense, though. I guess, Mr. Speaker, that's where I'm coming from in this debate. It's really difficult to enforce common sense. Bill 203 would make it illegal to smoke in vehicles while minors are present. This would be accomplished by amending the Tobacco Reduction Act. I have no doubt that every hon. member in this House would agree that smoking in a vehicle with a minor is inadvisable. That being said, there are still a number of factors and variables to consider as we debate this legislation. We must thoroughly examine all of the issues that are relevant if this law were to be implemented here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I think there's been enough research done on this topic to support the claim that subjecting a young individual in an enclosed space to second-hand smoke can cause them health problems – that's not a question – and I appreciate all of the studies that have been referred to in the previous debate. Those studies have shown that smoking in a vehicle produces harmful levels of second-hand smoke even when the windows are down. Not smoking in the presence of children is a nonstarter. As the hon. member says, it's common sense not to smoke in the presence of children, especially in a confined space.

However, one of my concerns regarding Bill 203 is the challenges it would present to law enforcement officials, and that is the topic I will be focusing my comments on today. The issue of enforcement seems to always be raised during debates regarding smoking bans. This is largely due to the fact that in any jurisdiction there are populations of smokers that will be opposed to any type of law restricting their smoking. Because of this, there could potentially be challenges with enforcement.

Mr. Speaker, if this legislation is passed, even with a province-wide educational public awareness program, which I fully support, there will no doubt be individuals who choose not to abide by the new law. With any kind of legislation sometimes even just putting it in legislation becomes the educational tool to emphasize the importance of it, and perhaps enforcement then becomes a minor issue. The enforcement is just the fact that the legislation is there, and people will pay heed to it.

Mr. Speaker, because of this, we need to consider the challenges police might have when dealing with the enforcement of this law. For example, there is a question of allocation of resources for the enforcement of this law. Funding would be needed to inform and train officials so they understand the law and their role in enforcing it on a day-to-day basis. There's also the question of priority. How many police officers would be spending their time pulling vehicles over to issue fines for smoking in a vehicle with a minor?

The latter issue is one of my biggest concerns due to the fact that there are a number of other, more serious situations where a police officer would be needed; for instance, a severe car accident, an impaired driver on the road, or even individuals travelling at an extremely high speed. Someone might argue that the health of our children is even more important, and I won't debate that.

Mr. Speaker, I really do wonder how Bill 203 would affect the way law enforcement officials allocate their time, and that is an issue all hon. members of this House need to consider as well. Bill 203 would indeed require police officers to monitor and enforce such behaviour, which may divert their attention from other public safety issues. This is not to diminish the importance of the safety and health of our youth, but it is one factor we should consider. But the health of our children is primarily the responsibility of the parent, and we expect parents to be responsible. Unfortunately, some aren't.

Another issue that needs to be at the forefront of this debate is how situations would be assessed by police. How are law enforcement officials to know whether or not the individual in a vehicle is a minor? If a younger child were to be in a situation where one of their parents was smoking in the vehicle with them, the police would not have any difficulties coming to the conclusion that the child in the vehicle is, in fact, a minor.

Alternatively, Mr. Speaker, an individual might be in a vehicle with a driver who is smoking and may appear to be under 18 years of age. If a police officer were to pull them over because he suspects the passenger to be a minor and after checking the identification, if it was available, realizes that the passenger is actually an adult, then that police officer has done his due diligence. However, that police officer could possibly have used that time differently.

Similarly, there is also the scenario where an individual who is under the age of 18 may look older than they actually are. This creates another problem for law enforcement officials. How can police officers identify someone as a minor if they appear as though they are closer to 25 years of age?

In addition, many passengers, minors or not, may be unable to produce the appropriate identification. How would police proceed when they encounter that situation? These are all factors that take valuable police time. Further to that, how would police be able to tell if a passenger is smoking in the back seat of a vehicle if the windows are tinted, which is legal as long as the front windows are not so tinted? Tinted windows would prevent police from seeing into the back seat of a vehicle and would make it difficult for them to assess whether or not someone is smoking or if there is a minor in the back seat. Some smokers may even choose to keep the windows rolled up when smoking with a minor present just to reduce the risk of getting caught.

Because of this, I think this legislation might prove to be challenging to enforce in some situations. There is also the question of a minor smoking in a vehicle with his or her parents. If police were to pull that vehicle over to issue a fine, who would receive it, the parent or the minor?

Mr. Speaker, as you can see, there are a number of factors in this proposed legislation that may prove to be potential difficulties for law enforcement officials. But when the distracted driving legislation was proposed, we were faced with a number of very similar concerns with regard to enforcement. We passed it, and it is being enforced.

Although Bill 203 keeps the health and safety of our youth in mind – and I support that very much – the challenges it presents to police are still very real and need to be thoroughly considered, especially since Alberta's existing tobacco reduction strategy has been and continues to be successful in reducing tobacco use amongst all Albertans. I was somewhat surprised at the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark indicating that we have one of the highest rates of smoking in vehicles in the country. That surprised me.

I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark for all the hard work and effort he has put into this piece of legislation. It speaks of his commitment to public health and safety and also aims to reduce tobacco use in our province, which is always beneficial.

I am certainly in favour of its intent although I do have some concerns about overregulation. Common sense tells you not to smoke in confined spaces in close proximity to children, especially when it's your own children, but you can't legislate against stupidity.

Dr. Brown: Yes, you can.

Mr. Allred: Can you? Sometimes it doesn't work, though.

I always think more consideration needs to be given to the challenges this legislation would present to our law enforcement officials.

From the foregoing, Mr. Speaker, it will be obvious that I am of two minds on this issue, parental rights or parental responsibility.

That being said, I will conclude my comments and urge members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

4:10

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to get up and debate Bill 203. I must say that I wanted to sit back and listen because I never know which way the government is going to go on legislation. It's good to see the direction the discussion has gone, but I have a few other comments I'd like to make on the partisanship that was discussed a little bit earlier by the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

To get into it, I think we'll all agree that we would all prefer to educate rather than legislate. We'd all prefer to inspire rather than require. For myself as an elected representative I felt there were two duties on being elected. One is to protect the life, liberty, and the property of the citizens of the country, and the second one is to pass legislation to protect those who can't protect themselves. This bill falls directly into that category. We need to look at and view: is this something where a citizen of this country is jeopardizing their health or their future because of the actions of someone else? I believe this falls into that category.

Again, many members have gotten up and spoken with a little bit of trepidation because there's going to be some anger out there that we would even consider passing such a piece of legislation, that doesn't leave it in the parents' rights to make that decision for their children.

I just want to comment on a few of the pieces of legislation that we have passed. We're not allowed to drive to town with our children without having them in a seat belt or, if they're small, in a car seat. We're not allowed to go biking with our children without having a helmet on their head. We have many areas that we've looked at, again just the legislation that even adults aren't allowed to drive on their own without having a seat belt on. With all of these we come in and say – and they're not even endangering someone else's life – “Oh, no; this is a hazard, and therefore we're going to legislate it.”

When we look at the many bills that we have passed in order to supposedly legislate common sense, I think that this one is way up on the scale, where we have vulnerable children that aren't able to protect themselves. It's interesting that here in the province people have commented on: how are we going to enforce it, and is it a good use of the officer's time to enforce it? We have a bullying helpline, you know, 1.888.456.2323. That's to help protect our children that are in a situation where they need help. We have a child abuse hotline, 1.800.387.KIDS, or 5437. These are all things that we've put in place wanting to help protect our children and to give them a better future.

To comment a little bit on the dilemma of “Are we overreaching a parent's rights to expose their children to these things?” I don't believe we are. I think that it's interesting that we've come to that point here where everybody so far has gotten up and spoken on this and said that this is common sense, but it wasn't very common a few years ago, when we had this discussion, and it wasn't common back when we passed the legislation to ban smoking in public places. At that time it was also discussed, saying that we should be protecting our children, yet the government at that time said, “Absolutely not” and spoke out against it.

It's interesting how we've evolved to today, to where this is common sense. Everyone so far, I think, has basically stood up and said that they support this bill. One member said, “Well, I'll kind of wait and see where the discussion goes,” I guess, to decide on how to vote. But it's important that we realize what we are trying to accomplish here, and that is to protect vulnerable children from being exposed to a toxic substance that is going to have an effect on their quality of life going forward though many have been exposed and seem to be fine now. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona seems to be healthy and doing well and gets out for fresh air, walking every day. Good for her for doing that.

I want to revert to a few comments made by the Minister of SRD, where he said that he was insulted for being told not to be partisan on this. One of the things that I've found quite intriguing being in opposition is listening and talking to government members outside of the Legislature when they discuss or speak out against different bills that have been passed, and it is a problem, hon. minister. If you don't think it is – you yourself have gotten up and spoken on things that I know you have questions about. It's interesting that all of a sudden there's free thought and free expression that's able to go on in this province when we have a new leadership debate going on inside government. Two if not many more – well, many of them did – spoke out against Bill 50 and said that they knew that the process was wrong. They knew that it needed to go back to the Alberta Utilities Commission to have them make the decision and do a proper needs assessment. They need to have a competitive bid, yet now the new Premier has said: this is the way we're doing it. That common sense, that common knowledge that we had four months ago seems to have dissipated and is absent in this House.

Many of the members in here on bills 19, 24, and 36 – oh, great pontification in here supporting it, yet we've had Bill 10 come to amend it. We're looking at some more amendments that have gone on where there's been lots of problems on having what I would call the party whip say how people should be voting. To say that it's not a problem that one is insulted on this I think is an insult to Albertans because there are a lot of members in here that, in my opinion, do not represent those who elected them, because the party has said: “Oh, this is the way we have to vote. End of discussion.” That's until, of course, the next leadership election, and then we'll have a short period there.

So to go back to the bill – and I had to respond because government members have brought this up, Mr. Speaker. I see you're kind of edgy on your chair over that, and I understand that, but they're the ones who brought it up and discussed it, therefore needing to have some more discussion on it.

What we're looking at here is the importance of protecting those who can't protect themselves. We want the best for our children, and I think that this has come to the point where society is realizing that this isn't right. We're trying to educate young mothers, you know. One thing is to take folic acid when they're pregnant. We tell them not to drink while they're pregnant. We tell them not to smoke while they're pregnant. This has a major impact on the children. Our schools are being overwhelmed with children with learning disabilities that many experts are linking back to alcohol, tobacco, preemies that have come out prematurely because of various toxins that they may have been exposed to. So anything that we can do to ensure that our kids have their best opportunity to be all they can be I think is a reasonable thing to look at.

I'd also like to comment a little bit on the fact that this is a good use of a policeman's time. When you look at much of the other common-sense legislation that we have – pulling someone over because they're holding the cellphone, pulling someone over because they don't have a seat belt on, pulling someone over because their child is not in a car seat – I think this jumps ahead of all of those because the children are being exposed, and there is damage being done to them.

The human body is amazing, though. The ability to rebound after being exposed to these things is truly what has probably caused a long delay in saying: is this really that detrimental? George Burns, you know, smoked all of his life, lived to a hundred years of age. Before my time it was a cool thing to do. It was a healthy thing to do. It was a swanky thing to do. Hollywood used to advertise that and show what a wonderful life it was to have that cigarette or that cigar. It's interesting, as we evolve, to realize what is common sense and what isn't.

Then my other concern is that it's always incremental, one step at a time. Do we need to legislate that people have to walk a mile every day because they're healthier? Do we need to legislate that they're only allowed so many grams of sugar or fat? Those are the concerns that those libertarians have out there: where do we stop, and where do we start?

Again, though, I want to go back where this falls into, the category where we need to protect those who can't protect themselves. A little three-month-old baby doesn't have the choice to say: I don't want to be in this car. A three-year-old, a four-year-old doesn't have that choice. So I think that this is fair legislation, one that hopefully we continue to educate Albertans on so fewer and fewer parents seem to feel compelled to say: oh, it's good for them; it's not going to hurt them. We know that it does. We're jeopardizing their future. So it will be interesting to see if we get support on this.

I must make the comment, though, that if it does pass, we've got other protection for children, bills that have passed in this House but have not been proclaimed. The Mandatory Reporting of Child Pornography Act was passed two years ago, Mr. Speaker. It has not yet been proclaimed. That's very disappointing. The Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act was passed in 2009 and also not proclaimed.

The Deputy Speaker: Before the chair continues on with the business, the chair asks for consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

4:20

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to introduce a very bright young lady, Karen McDonald. She is a director of community services for SAGE, and as you all know, that means Seniors Association of Greater Edmonton. This organization supports seniors in Edmonton by providing housing and guardianship services. They provide important information, resources that seniors need. They assist with government forms. They help manage seniors' Safe House. They offer a broad range of programs and activities and courses. They provide volunteer opportunities performing social work services and engaging in advocacy on behalf of seniors. I'd ask Karen to stand and please be recognized by the Assembly. Thank you for all you do.

Mr. Speaker, Karen and her colleagues at SAGE do outstanding work for the seniors of this province. Thank you.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 203

Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012 (continued)

The Deputy Speaker: Is any other member wishing to speak on Bill 203?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to close the debate.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank all the hon. members who have stood up and spoken to the bill. Thank you for your honest opinion. I close debate.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair shall now put the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:22 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Ady	Griffiths	Mitzel
Allred	Groeneveld	Notley
Berger	Hancock	Oberle
Boutilier	Hinman	Prins
Brown	Horne	Quest
Campbell	Jacobs	Sandhu
DeLong	Johnson	Sherman
Denis	Johnston	Swann
Doerksen	Liepert	VanderBurg
Elniski	Lund	Weadick
Forsyth	MacDonald	Xiao
Goudreau

Totals: For – 34 Against – 0

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a second time]

Bill 204

Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2012

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour for me to rise today to introduce Bill 204, the Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2012, in second reading debate.

Bill 204 seeks to remove all reference to the legal doctrine of adverse possession from Alberta's legislation in order to ensure that it is no longer grounds for land claims. Adverse possession, sometimes referred to as squatters' rights, enables a trespasser who has been in possession of land without legal title for a specified period of time to be recognized as the legal owner. I brought this idea forward in the fall sitting as Motion 507, which the Assembly agreed to, and I'm very happy to now have the opportunity to introduce it as a bill.

Mr. Speaker, I'm bringing this bill forward because I truly believe that adverse possession has no place in Alberta legislation. If passed, Bill 204 would ensure that adverse possession would no longer constitute a legal basis for possessors to take title to land that does not belong to them. Currently in Alberta if a person possesses land that does not belong to them for 10 or more years, they may legally claim title to the property. The doctrine of adverse possession in Alberta has led to approximately 100 reported court cases in the course of our 106-year history, very few of which have been successful. The low rate of success in these cases relates to the fact that Alberta has a very efficient land titles system, with accurately marked boundaries, quite different from that used in England, where the doctrine of adverse possession originated.

As you may remember from my comments during the last session, the law of adverse possession was adopted in the late 19th century, when Alberta, then part of the Northwest Territories and originally part of Rupert's Land, was purchased by the Dominion of Canada. At that time we adopted the laws of England. The criteria used to decide which laws we would appropriate included the question of whether or not the law was applicable within the local context. Mr. Speaker, after a significant amount of research, it is my opinion that adverse possession was never applicable within the Alberta context and should not have been adopted by the courts in the first instance. I say this because although Alberta did adopt a number of laws and procedures from England at that time, we did not adopt the same land tenure system as was used in England.

Historically land tenure in England was based on boundaries indicated by general markers such as hedges, fences, and ditches. This is known as a general boundary system. As such, it was difficult to determine in any precise manner the true boundaries of a plot of land, and property disputes were common. Given that context, Mr. Speaker, it is easy to understand why England established the doctrine of adverse possession. In the absence of well-documented surveys, the court could resort to adverse possession, arguing that the possessor had lived on that land for several years without being asked to leave and, therefore, could retain the land as their own. The doctrine effectively limited the period of time during which a landowner could reclaim their land, thereby incenting them to be aware of the extent of their property.

But, Mr. Speaker, Alberta did not adopt England's land tenure system. Instead, we adopted the Torrens system of land registration, which originated in Australia in the 1850s. Under the Torrens system the title to land in Alberta is registered and guaranteed by the province based on accurately surveyed parcels monumented on the ground prior to the grant of title by the Crown. To this day the extent of a person's title is determined by those survey monuments, a measure which protects landowners from much unjustified loss of property.

In contrast to England's general boundary system, western Canada has a fixed boundary system where the boundaries were established prior to grants being issued to homesteaders for their lands. These grants were based on quarter sections defined by survey monuments on the ground. By reliance on this system, Alberta has avoided countless property disputes between neighbours, and in cases where disputes do arise, landowners can easily resolve the problem by verifying the original survey.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the issue that adverse possession was meant to resolve in England never actually existed in Alberta.

In Alberta we had a system of survey before settlement as opposed to the English system of settlement before survey. Yet the Alberta courts adopted the doctrine of adverse possession, relying on a case from British Honduras, that was upheld by the Privy Council in England. The British Honduras case decided that limitations law, which is what adverse possession is, could coexist in a guaranteed land registration system such as the Torrens system.

4:40

Unfortunately, however, Mr. Speaker, the early court actions did not argue the applicability of the adoption of English land tenure and only argued the question of the application of adverse possession in a Torrens system of guaranteed title. I am certain, even though I can only speculate, that if the case had been argued on the application of the North-West Territories Act amendment of 1886, the early cases in Alberta would have been decided differently, and that would have saved Alberta landowners 100 years of grief.

The doctrine does not offer any real benefit to Albertans; in fact, it has caused a number of difficult legal challenges in the past. For example, Mr. Speaker, in 1965 the city of Calgary lost numerous plots of land to an adverse possession claim, and in 1993 irrigation districts also lost land in two adverse claims. After witnessing the problematic conclusion of these cases, the Legislative Assembly amended Alberta legislation to ban future adverse possession claims against municipalities and irrigation district lands. These amendments made abundant sense under the circumstances. By passing Bill 204 and abolishing adverse possession completely, we will afford the same protection to private landowners that municipalities and irrigation districts already enjoy.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, an action for adverse possession in 1948 that deprived a landowner of some significant improvements resulted in an amendment to the Land Titles Act, which is now entrenched in the Law of Property Act, that is very beneficial to Albertans and, in fact, has been copied in other provinces as well. Section 69 of the Law of Property Act enables a landowner who mistakenly builds lasting improvements on a neighbour's land to lay a claim to that land so that they do not lose their investment. The legislation, however, requires the landowner to pay compensation to the true landowner for the land lost.

This, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion is fair and just and in keeping with Alberta's spirit of justice. This is excellent legislation because unlike adverse possession, it protects both the legal owner of the land as well as the neighbour who built on it by mistake. Section 69 of the Law of Property Act adequately solves the common problem of building encroachments. Knowing that the law of lasting improvements is in place, we can rest assured that the abolition of adverse possession will certainly not leave a gap in our legislation. Instead, it will make room for more modern and relevant laws to protect Alberta landowners and bring us in conformity with all other Canadian Torrens jurisdictions that currently ban adverse possession.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to say that Alberta has one of the best land tenure systems in the world, based on accurate land surveys and titles that are guaranteed by the government. Because of this there is no need to limit a landowner's ability to reclaim land claimed by a trespasser. Should a dispute arise, ownership claims can easily be proven through government-registered surveys. I believe that by eliminating the common law doctrine of adverse possession, we will further improve our excellent land tenure system. While this bill may not impact all Albertans, it will make an important difference to every landowner, who can now be assured that their boundaries are protected and can be determined by lawful means.

As such, I would strongly encourage all of my hon. colleagues to vote in support of Bill 204, and I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to join the debate? The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise to speak to Bill 204. Bill 204 seeks to remove all reference to the legal doctrine of adverse possession from Alberta legislation in order to ensure that it's no longer grounds for land claims. As I understand it, adverse possession, sometimes referred to as squatters' rights, is a law that Alberta adopted from England in the 19th century. Adverse possession enables a neighbour to acquire legal ownership of a piece of land should they occupy it continually for at least 10 years without being asked by the true owner to vacate the area.

It's understandable that the hon. member would want to eliminate this legal doctrine. As we've heard just previously from the member but also in the debate on Motion 507 last session, the doctrine has been used as grounds for land claims in about a hundred recorded cases in our 106-year history. Overall there is a very compelling case to be made that adverse possession is no longer a valid doctrine in our legal system.

Our provincial legislation has a long-standing history, and it's important that we continually review and revise it to ensure that it meets the needs of our residents and of today's times. That's precisely what the Member for St. Albert is doing here today, evaluating the modern-day value of this law that stems back a hundred years. I want to thank the member for raising this, and I will be supporting it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise in support of this bill, one that the hon. member educated me on just a couple of weeks ago. It was entirely a surprise to me to learn that this ancient tradition, known as adverse possession, continued in Alberta. Since then I've learned something about it. I don't claim to be an expert, but it seems eminently sensible that owners of property should not have anything usurped simply on the basis of occupation or squatting or personal advantage taken of this ancient tradition.

I've never run across the issue, and I guess many of the members here have not run across this specific example in their own personal lives or that of family or friends, but obviously given the information we've had around this bill and the fact that it's been used in many different parts of the province over these years speaks to the need for change. Certainly, I will be supporting it. It's eminently sensible and forward looking and updates us in terms of our property rights and ownership rights in the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call on the hon. Member for St. Albert to close the debate.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't expecting to do my closing.

Just a few closing remarks. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View indicated that he had not encountered adverse possession. In speaking to some of my other colleagues, some of them have. I admit it's a very rare instance. As was indicated by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, there have only been about a hundred reported cases in Alberta in the 106 years of our history, but there are a number of cases that go unreported, and if they're not challenged in court, they don't go to court. I know there are a couple of cases currently in southern Alberta, but I don't know that they will go to court. Sometimes they're settled out of court, and they don't get reported.

It is a very difficult law, and as I indicated, we are the only Torrens jurisdiction in Canada that has adverse possession. Even in England, where the law came from in 1870, they have now passed legislation – I believe it was in 2002 – which will abolish adverse possession after a 12-year period, I believe. So it is becoming obsolete even in the country that originally invented it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a second time]

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I was going to make a motion that we proceed with Motion 503. I don't want to say why I cannot do that because that would contravene another rule of the House, so I would presume that under the standing orders we will adjourn for 10 minutes.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned from 4:50 p.m. to 5 p.m.]

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Tax Incentives for Cultural Endeavours

503. Mr. Benito moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to examine the feasibility of creating tax incentives to support cultural endeavours.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and open debate on Motion 503. I am proposing this motion because I believe we should further explore the possibility of creating tax incentives in support of cultural endeavours. It is no secret that we are a very tax-friendly jurisdiction and that culture plays a significant part in the fabric of our province.

As you know, Alberta is a very multicultural province and is rich in cultural diversity. Culture is increasingly acknowledged as a necessary element of a healthy and balanced society. Many studies indicate that participating in cultural activities helps reduce stress, promotes increased health, and improves academic learning. What I propose with Motion 503 is to start a discussion that could lead to increased support of multiculturalism in Alberta and also to various cultural endeavours in the province. Mr. Speaker, a vibrant culture also gives our province an important advantage as we compete to attract and retain skilled workers and their families to our communities. I think we can all agree that our communities are also strengthened through cultural activity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly comment on our cultural policy, the Spirit of Alberta, and speak to how I believe it has set the groundwork for Motion 503. The Spirit of Alberta was developed in early 2008 and is the result of research and consultation with Albertans, cultural organizations and foundations, other jurisdictions, and various ministries in the provincial government. In these consultations Albertans have expressed a desire for culture to be a priority and for the government to play a lead role in creating and sustaining the conditions in which culture can flourish. Albertans have also said that government should work in partnership with other levels of government, the private sector, nonprofit organizations, other stakeholders, and individuals.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the input of Albertans into these consultations shows how involved and important Albertans view culture in our province. A recent survey indicated that 97 per cent of Albertans believe it is important for every child in Alberta to learn about the culture of the province. The cultural sector itself represents approximately 3 per cent of both the province's GDP and the province's employment. In 2010 more than 90 per cent of Albertans said that they had attended, participated, or performed in an arts and culture event or activity in the past year. Obviously, that means that millions of Albertans are either involved in or attend a cultural event each year. A large majority of Albertans, roughly 91 per cent, say that arts and culture activities are very or at least somewhat important in contributing to the overall quality of life in their community.

I believe that these types of cultural activities and events are very important and that they should be supported by Albertans in a financial capacity by way of tax incentives. While I acknowledge that there currently are tax incentives available for those who donate to cultural organizations that are registered as charitable organizations, I feel that as a province we can offer more.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer just a few more points as to what I view as the strength of Motion 503. I feel that this motion could raise awareness of cultural organizations and activities in Alberta, which could garner more support from Albertans. I also feel that Motion 503 could further enhance charitable giving among Albertans. I do not wish to propose anything too dramatic or unrealistic. I believe Motion 503 to be a very moderate and realistic step towards raising awareness of the great cultural organizations and events in our wonderful province. They should be able to rely on our continuing support.

With that, I would like to invite my colleagues to join in the discussion on Motion 503. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for bringing forward a motion that I believe is very much well intentioned. You know, the cultural communities of our province certainly play a very, very important role in the societal fabric of our great province, whether they be those cultural endeavours that have long been the traditions of this province or those of new people coming to our province from other areas of the country or other countries in the world. Certainly, as our province becomes more and more diverse, we as Albertans are going to become more and more exposed to some of the cultural differences that are out there, and for that our lives are definitely more enriched.

However, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if I necessarily support this motion. I don't think I will be, mainly for one reason. The Minister of Finance has talked significantly about, you know, the need for a long-term fiscal framework in this province where we evaluate what we're spending money on, how much money we're saving, what we do with nonrenewable resource revenue, and, of course, as the minister has indicated, our overall tax structure. I think that this should be more a conversation that happens as part of that. The reason why I believe that is that there's sort of, I guess, a hierarchy of decisions that you have to do when you talk about implementing tax policy, and that's essentially what this is.

First, the main thing that taxes are in place for is the obvious: we collect tax revenue in order to pay for the public services that the government needs to deliver to its citizens. That should always be the main purpose of our taxes, to collect those and make sure that what we're required to provide to the public is paid for through the collection of taxes. That can be done in a myriad of different ways. Of course, we know that there are sales taxes, income taxes, property taxes, payroll taxes, all sorts of types of taxes.

The second thing that must be considered when implementing tax policy, Mr. Speaker, is to minimize the economic burden that collecting that revenue might have on future economic development and growth of the economy and future prosperity. That's a very, very important consideration. We do know that in some circumstances, some taxes could be better for incenting certain economic activity or development.

The third thing, and what this member is getting at, is that tax policy certainly can be used to incent certain behaviour or certain policy choices within certain areas. We've seen through this House tax credits for physical activity. We've seen tax credits for incenting certain types of things, in this case investment into our cultural communities.

Mr. Speaker, the reason why I will not support this motion at this time is that I believe that the Minister of Finance, in some of his conversations around building a long-term fiscal framework, will include what this member is talking about. My real concern is that if you talk to any economist, they will say that the best type of tax structure is a low, broad-based tax structure, one where you don't have all of these different incentives and credits being provided to every sort of niche or group or whatever but keep the basic rate of taxes low so that we can incent economic activity that way. That's something that I believe this government has done particularly well over the last 40 years, and that's something that I would like to see this government do. That's why I think this conversation about the incenting of a certain segment of the sector needs to actually be held in the broader conversation that the Minister of Finance has indicated is going to happen when we discuss our long-term fiscal framework.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to sit down and let other members join the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's also my pleasure to rise today to speak to Motion 503, sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. This motion urges the government to consider the feasibility of creating tax incentives to support cultural endeavours in Alberta.

5:10

Mr. Speaker, as a past minister responsible for culture and community spirit and the MLA for Dunvegan-Central Peace I can attest that Albertans take great pride in the culture that has been fostered in this province. They have also expressed a desire for culture to be a top priority in Alberta as we move forward. That means that this government must play a lead role in creating and sustaining the conditions where diversity can thrive.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta boasts a number of cultural events and gatherings every year in hundreds of our communities. There are also numerous individuals and groups and organizations that are committed to supporting and expanding a vibrant cultural environment in Alberta. This government recognizes that supporting our cultural mosaic is a top priority, and that's why there are provisions in place to offer financial assistance to those who positively contribute to Alberta's culture.

Today I want to focus my comments on incentives and other grants that the provincial government currently makes available to support culture in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, in our great province Albertans have the pleasure already of tax advantages unlike any other jurisdiction in Canada. Because of this, everyone living in Alberta already enjoys the benefit of paying lower taxes. While many other jurisdictions in Canada primarily use tax credits to support cultural and creative industries such as film, television, book and magazine publishing, and sound recording, our province utilizes a different approach. Again, I remember as a past minister that instead of providing greater tax incentives to individuals, organizations, and groups to support cultural activities, our province offers already a number of grants through a variety of provincial programs.

For example, the Alberta Foundation for the Arts provides grant funding to artists, art organizations, and festivals to promote arts and culture right across the province. All eligible artists and organizations are encouraged to apply for those grants, and funding can be provided for both very project-specific activities and annual operating grants. In addition, Alberta's Historical Resources Foundation also has existing grant programs. It assists in the preservation and interpretation of Alberta's heritage by providing financial and technical assistance to heritage preservation initiatives. Another example is the Alberta multimedia development fund, which offers grant programs for screen-based media production, book and magazine publishing, and sound recording. These grants are designed to assist in the development of a strong and competitive cultural industry sector in our province.

In addition to those I have mentioned, there are several other provincial foundations and programs that offer financial support for our cultural organizations.

As I mentioned earlier, there are numerous ways individuals, groups, and organizations can secure funding to preserve and advance culture in our province, but there are also some tax credit offsets that are available in Alberta to help support culture. In Alberta many cultural organizations are also registered as charitable organizations with the Canada Revenue Agency, and as such those organizations are already eligible for the combined federal and provincial charitable donations tax credit that offsets 50 per cent of donations over $200 in one tax year. On the first $200 donated the organization receives a 10 per cent provincial tax credit in addition to a 15 per cent federal tax credit. As of January 2007 charitable donations exceeding $200 are eligible for a 21 per cent provincial tax credit in addition to the 29 per cent federal tax.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's approach to supporting the province's creative and cultural industries has been successful, and a variety of funding and grant options are available.

To conclude my comments, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for his commitment to the preservation and advancement of culture in Alberta and also for bringing this motion before the House for debate. I do agree with the hon. member that culture has great significance in our province. Right now I'm not sure if a greater tax incentive is the best way to continue to support cultural activities in Alberta considering that the current system is working quite well, but I'm receptive to the ideas put forth with Motion 503.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to stand and give comments that I hope will reflect the majority of the wishes of the constituents in our area of Little Bow. As many of you are aware, there's a rich history and many different cultures and groups coming to this province, and my comments are more from an historical perspective. I think that this could be a good discussion to have. There isn't any question about whether or not we should have tax incentives. I also believe that we already have had great strides made by people that have come to this province to be Albertans and to be Canadians.

If I could speak personally about it, Mr. Speaker, there were a number of groups that came to our area years ago to homestead. They came from many different countries. My best friend's parents came from Czechoslovakia. There were no programs available. There were no cultural activities. And what you saw was what you could relish and see in their homes, whether it was the few trinkets that they'd been able to save from their previous homeland, and they were very proud of it, but nobody had the ability at that time nor today to preserve that kind of thing except that they did it on their own.

I know that many of the people that came here from other countries – the Dutch Canadians are a very prideful bunch. To this day in Little Bow there'll be groups of hundreds that celebrate annually their freedom and comment on the things that happened after the Second World War when their villages were liberated, and they do it on their own, without any tax dollars, because they're proud and happy to have been liberated by the Canadian armed forces. They do their celebrations on their own, on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that cultural activities and events are very important, but I believe there are other ways that they can be supported by Albertans without taxpayer incentives. The Historical Resources Foundation is one truly good one that has been around for a long time that helps identify and preserve these kinds of valuable additions that have been made by many cultures, by many groups, and by many individuals.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, although I understand the intent of this motion by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods, I don't believe that tax incentives are necessarily the way to go. I believe that through continual celebration, events that happen today will continue to happen just for the fact that they have a profile of their own. If I might point out, this Saturday morning at 11 o'clock in Carmangay, Alberta, there will be the shortest Irish St. Patrick's Day parade in the world. There's never been a dollar put into it, but everyone comes down. We're getting people coming from a 60-mile radius, and they have GlobalTV and a free Irish coffee afterwards. This wouldn't have happened if it was a tax incentive-driven program because everyone would be using the program to get the dollars rather than just to celebrate something that would come naturally and be something to be proud of.

With those few comments, I'll sit down and thank again my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods for bringing this forward for discussion. But I don't think many constituents in my riding are happy to spend tax dollars on this in a direct way. They'd rather do it in a voluntary way.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it seems that culture is so important to the very fabric of our lives. Just in the last little while there's been a couple of events that I've gone to. I'm lucky enough to have the Calgary Irish cultural club in my constituency, so I was lucky enough to be there on Saturday night and join in the early festivities. The camaraderie and the close friendships that are developed there are so valuable to our community.

Another event that I was at recently was the launching of the second historical book for Bowness. This has been an enormous success, and they have been selling literally thousands of these great big beautiful books. Everyone just loves them. They spend hours and hours reading them. This is the Bowness Historical Society, and it is really the history of the culture that we have had in this little town since the turn of the last century. It's a very valuable part of our community, and it gives the deep roots to our community that add so much more meaning to our lives. Culture is so important to us, yet the way that it comes up, you know, is through the people, where people are getting together, they're supporting each other and coming together. Yes, sometimes they do come to the government for a little bit of money. These books that have been produced have a little bit of government money in them, but it's mostly the work of the people and the little bit of money that they collect.

5:20

I think that it is working so well now. You know, the richness of our communities is coming up through the grassroots, through the actual people. Even though it is so extremely important that we have this culture, I do believe that the way it's working now, where you have just ordinary Joe Blow stepping forward and getting together with like-minded people, is so effective, and I do believe that we should be continuing as we are.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wishing to join the debate?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton- Mill Woods to close the debate.

Mr. Benito: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and offer closing remarks on Motion 503. If Motion 503 is agreed to, it could demonstrate that the government of Alberta is supportive of multiculturalism and cultural endeavours in the province. This motion could also provide a platform to highlight the Alberta tax advantage.

The goal of Motion 503 is to start a discussion surrounding the creation of tax incentives in support of cultural endeavours in our province. This could lead to increased support for multiculturalism in Alberta and also the various cultural endeavours in our province. As I indicated in my opening speech, our province is rich in cultural diversity. This gives us vibrant culture, an important advantage as we compete to attract and retain skilled workers and their families to our communities.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that cultural activities and events are very important and that they should be supported by Albertans in a financial capacity. We can further encourage Albertans to do so by way of tax incentives. I also feel that by introducing this motion, we raise awareness of cultural organizations and activities in the province, which could garner even more support from Albertans.

I value and respect my colleagues' comments regarding Motion 503. Again, I would like to thank everyone who participated in this motion's debate today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the Deputy Government House Leader, I just want to remind our Assembly that the policy field committees will reconvene tonight at 6:30 for consideration of the main estimates of Transportation and Agriculture and Rural Development.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that we are finished today's business, I would move that we call it 6 o'clock.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:24 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers	413
Mr. Rick Hansen's Address to the Assembly	413
Introduction of Visitors	414
Introduction of Guests	414, 429, 436
Oral Question Period
Alberta's Representative in Asia	415, 417, 422
Long-term Care for Seniors	416
Bitumen Upgrading	416
MLA Remuneration	417, 418
Spinal Cord Injury Research	418
Tobacco Reduction Strategy	418
Enhanced Support for Home Care	419
School Infrastructure Funding	419
Disaster Recovery Program	420
Private Operation of Continuing Care Centres	420
Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers	421
Charter Schools	421
Farm Safety	422
Midwifery Services	422
Skilled Workforce Training Programs	423
Provincial Tax Policy	423
Statement by the Speaker
Member Anniversaries	424
Members' Statements
Rick Hansen 25th Anniversary Relay	424
Second-hand Smoke	424
Ethnocultural Inclusivity and Integration	425
Arctic Winter Games 2012	425
Greenhouse Research and Production Complex	425
Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped	426
Alston Scout Park	426
Tabling Returns and Reports	426
Tablings to the Clerk	427
Orders of the Day	427
Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 203 Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012	427, 429, 436
Division	436
Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading	436
Bill 204 Land Statutes (Abolition of Adverse Possession) Amendment Act, 2012	436
Motions Other than Government Motions
Tax Incentives for Cultural Endeavours	438

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fifth Session

Alberta Hansard

Tuesday afternoon, March 13, 2012

Issue 16

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 27th Legislature

Fifth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Hon. Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Hon. Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader,
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Hon. Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL)
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Hon. Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Hon. Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC)
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Hon. Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, Hon. F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Hon. Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (Ind)
Stelmach, Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, Hon. George, Whitecourt-Ste. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Webber, Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 67 Alberta Liberal: 8 Wildrose: 4 New Democrat: 2 Alberta: 1 Independent: 1

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

W.J. David McNeil, Clerk	Stephanie LeBlanc, Parliamentary Counsel & Legal Research Officer	Chris Caughell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Robert H. Reynolds, QC, Law Clerk/ Director of Interparliamentary Relations	Philip Massolin, Committee Research Co-ordinator	Gordon H. Munk, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Shannon Dean, Senior Parliamentary Counsel/Director of House Services	Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms	Liz Sim, Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Health and Wellness
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Ouellette
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
MacDonald
Mason
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Dr. Taft

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Rodney
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 13, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a particular honour and pleasure of mine today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly three guests who are seated in your gallery. They're members of the AAMD and C. They had a meeting with our rural caucus, and many urban colleagues came along, and we had a fantastic discussion. They are great partners in helping to build a stronger rural Alberta and better communities. I'd ask them to rise: Tom Burton from the MD of Greenview; Soren Odegard from the county of Two Hills; and the president of AAMD and C, a constituent of mine and a personal friend, Mr. Bob Barss from the MD of Wainwright. I'd ask all members to give them the warm welcome.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it's a real thrill today to stand up and introduce to this Assembly a friend of Alberta, a woman who spent 16 years in the Ontario Legislature, eight as a member of the opposition and the last eight years, before she retired in October, as Minister of Economic Development and Trade. Sandra Papatello was famous for building partnerships, not only getting clusters of Ontario businesses to come and work in Alberta, but she came to all of our national buyer/seller forums and arranged several partnerships. She continues to do that today as a member of the federal panel to review aerospace and is working for a number of Alberta-based companies.

With her today is her new colleague. She's now director of PWC, PricewaterhouseCoopers, and has one of their leading national managers out here today, Brian McLean. I'd ask my two guests to please stand and be recognized by the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the great privilege to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 70 visitors, 61 in the members' gallery and nine in the public gallery. These are students from Gateway Christian school in Red Deer-North, and they're fascinated and curious about their government. I spoke to the students earlier, and one young man told me that he likes guns and wants to be a member of the military, another told me that he would like to design and build his own car like Ford or Lexus, and another one said that he was interested in being the Premier of the province. In the members' gallery are the students of Gateway Christian school with their teachers, Mrs. Klaaske deKoning and Mr. Jim Driedger, and their parent helpers Karrie-Anne Brewster, Carolyn Lodewyk, Art Vriend, Mrs. Beatrice Vriend, and Mrs. Zara Wattenbarger. Would you please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, you know how much I adore and listen carefully to the seniors in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. Today in the public gallery we have with us a very wise group of seniors from Edmonton-Centre, and these are the people who attend the Minerva centre for senior studies, which is housed inside of MacEwan University. This includes, in fact, a high school teacher of mine, so I'm just thrilled that they're here today and that Janet was able to be their guide because she was another teacher, at Strathcona high school. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the riotous welcome of my colleagues.

The Speaker: Well, I was really hoping we could avoid riots this afternoon.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of hard-working Albertans from the workforce development and engagement division of corporate human resources and the Deputy Premier's department. He's off fighting on behalf of Alberta businesses in Ottawa today, so it's my pleasure to introduce Catherine Dupuis, Lauren Hobson, Diana Steele, Melanie Lacher, and Joanne Christiansen. They're seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I'd ask them to rise and be recognized by the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you and on behalf of the hon. the Premier to all members of the Assembly the winners of our most recent Premier's awards for healthy workplaces. This group of Albertans is being recognized today for making the health of their employees a top priority in their workplace. From wellness programs to on-site fitness facilities and educational programs these employers have made health and wellness easily accessible to their employees and are committed to making Alberta healthier.

These guests are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask each of them to rise as I call their names to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Nichole Collins and Gabriela Husch from Athabasca University, Lorraine Zoskey and Michelle Parker from the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Central Region Community Board, Susan Adam and Ray Pisani from Alberta Blue Cross, Heather Stickle from Hyatt Calgary, Lorna Milkovich and Krista Rechner from the Red Deer primary care network, and Fran Pedersen and Tom Burton from the municipal district of Greenview. Please join me in extending a very warm welcome on behalf of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Water.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two Albertans who have made outstanding contributions to this province and its ecological heritage. Present today are Dr. Howard Tennant and Dr. Ron Wallace. Dr. Tennant is a former president and vice-chancellor of Lethbridge University. He currently sits on the governing boards of many public and private organizations, including the National Research Council. Dr. Tennant also served as co-chair of the Alberta Environmental Monitoring Panel.

Dr. Ron Wallace is an aquatic ecologist whose 35 years of work on issues related to the oil sands have been widely published and recognized with an Emerald award. In addition to lending his experience to World Bank development projects in Russia and Venezuela, he has served as a board member of Wildlife Habitat Canada and as the former executive director of the Northwest Territories Water Board.

I am very happy to have these two members here. They will be joining us shortly – I see that they're not here yet – but I'd still like to ask people to give them the resounding welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Melissa Yurdiga, one of my constituents from Athabasca-Redwater. She's the daughter of our hard-working reeve, David Yurdiga. She's a NAIT student working towards a bachelor of business administration in accounting. Obviously, she's got her mother's brains and good looks, as you can tell, too. In addition, Melissa is the project manager for Hand over Hunger, Students in Free Enterprise, which she's going to brief me about after session.

She's accompanied by Liam Zahara, who's a NAIT student and is studying business administration. I'd ask Melissa and Liam to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House Mr. Matt Pechey, my assistant in Calgary-Mackay, and Barbara Letendre, my assistant in the Legislature office. Matt was previously with the federal government, Mount Royal University, and children's services. Barbara is a long-term employee of the government, and she's gorgeous and most capable. She told me to tone down my descriptions. She's been working with me since last fall. I'm most fortunate to have these very knowledgeable, experienced people providing great support to my office and to the constituents of Calgary-Mackay. I'd ask that they both rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly a friend and constituent of mine, Mr. Joe Demko. Mr. Demko is a trustee of the St. Albert Protestant separate school district No. 6. He is also a former superintendent of the Protestant district and taught in St. Albert for many years. I'd ask Joe if he would please stand and ask the members of the Assembly to give him the traditional warm welcome.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. The first set I'd like to introduce is two guests, Gail Cumming and Trina Firth. Trina has worked as a social worker for 30 years, receiving awards and commendations in the process.

Since being injured on the job, she has been subjected to video surveillance by the WCB, which was then used as a foundation for misleading statements to third parties by the WCB. Gail Cumming, who came with her, is a workers' advocate who's been working with a growing number of injured workers in circumstances similar to Trina's. She is here today to bring attention to the increasing incidence of worker intimidation by the WCB through the unjustified and intrusive use of video surveillance. I would now ask Gail and Trina to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Do you have another one?

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a second set. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two members of my team at the constituency office in Old Strathcona. Hannah Goa has been working as a constituency assistant since May 2010. I'm repeatedly approached by constituents throughout the riding of Strathcona who thank me for the incredibly effective and caring advocacy that Hannah has provided to them since she's been in the office. Jaime Phillips is our . . .

The Speaker: Hold on, Member. You're being disturbed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Would you kindly retreat.

Dr. Swann: My apologies.

The Speaker: Continue, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Jaime Phillips is our current field placement student from Grant MacEwan. I've been very impressed with the quality of her work, her maturity, and the enthusiasm that she brings to the office every time she is there. I would now ask both Hannah and Jaime to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dr. Peter Rodd and his son Alexander. Dr. Rodd began his medical career in the Canadian Forces as a medical officer and flight surgeon. He then served for almost 15 years as a family doctor. From there he provided care to patients in the forensic services at Alberta Hospital Edmonton and in the community. Dr. Rodd has a proven record of strong and vocal advocacy in an effort to put his patients first. He's the new Wildrose candidate in Edmonton-Manning, and we are thrilled to have him. With that, I would like to ask him and his son to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

Impaired Driving

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, today I voice my support of the former Bill 26, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2011, that strengthens the government's approach to impaired driving. I am disappointed that the issue has been politicized by those who should know better.

It is not just my voice but other voices as well such as the member who proposed the piece of legislation where drivers who blow more than a .05 blood-alcohol level would have their drivers' licences suspended for 24 hours. She noted that drivers are impaired well before they hit .08 and that moving to .05 will work in keeping drinking drivers off the road.

Another voice supporting the increase to enforce a .05 blood-alcohol content said in this Assembly that a .05 limit will keep drunk drivers off the road, making our roads safer for all Albertans.

Yet another voice in May 2008 in this Assembly said that in his experience Albertans were not so much concerned about enforcing our drinking and driving laws as they were worried about how to punish repeat offenders. "[Even if] they haven't hurt somebody or killed somebody . . . it's just a matter of time," he said. Mr. Speaker, this member asked whether this government could find ways to "make drinking and driving a very unattractive option. . . . especially for repeat offenders." The member in question noted correctly that the government of Alberta does control the driver's licence portion of the law and asked if the government could take action on that front.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that we have. Starting at .05, our approach makes drinking and driving a very unattractive option through escalating penalties for repeat offenders.

Lending their voices of support to Alberta's impaired driving strategy are the members for Calgary-Fish Creek, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, and Airdrie-Chestermere, and we do thank them for their support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Integrity in Government Leadership

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Premier likes to talk about real-life leadership. It's her election campaign slogan. It's plastered on the side of her campaign bus. Apparently she wants people to believe that she's experienced in the real world.

I have a problem with that, Mr. Speaker, because nothing that I have seen from this Premier bears any semblance to real life or leadership, for that matter. Great leaders lead by example and keep their word. Leadership isn't giving yourself a 30 per cent pay hike and then freezing public wages for two years. Leadership isn't refusing to give it back. Real life isn't making the laws and then living above them as we've seen with the illegal donation scandal and the subsequent investigations into the PC party. Leadership isn't making a promise for a public health inquiry or fixed election dates and then breaking those promises when you're looking square into the eyes of Albertans and declaring that you stand by your word. That's not real life. That's wonderland. That's certainly not leadership.

If the Premier wants a real lesson in real-life leadership, she can look to folks like Sergio Marchionne, who when his company, Chrysler, began taking on water, stepped up and led by example. He declined his own annual CEO salary and bonuses while the company attempted to get back on track.

I've got news for the Premier. Her party, her government, and our province are taking on water. They've run five successive budget deficits. Spending and waste are out of control. Our savings accounts are nearly gone. But instead of showing leadership, real-life leadership, that she likes to talk about, this Premier and cabinet continue to accept the outrageous pay raises that they gave themselves. In real life, in real Alberta people can't just decide to make more money or break their word because they feel like it.

Madam Premier, please show some integrity and real leadership. Call a full public inquiry where health officials and ministers will have to testify under oath. That's real leadership.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

National Buyer/Seller Forum

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak about a very important event happening later this year. From October 2 to 4 the National Buyer/Seller Forum will take place in Edmonton. Our government is pleased to be a partner in putting on this worthwhile event. Each year this forum provides an incredible opportunity for business leaders from across Canada to play a part in shaping the future of our energy industry. What a great way to showcase Alberta. This forum is an excellent opportunity to showcase local and national businesses such as Acklands-Grainger and Commercial Solutions, major suppliers located in Nisku in my constituency.

The theme of this year's forum, Green Opportunities through Innovative Partnerships, is truly indicative of the direction Alberta's and Canada's energy sectors have been taking.

Mr. Speaker, just a few years ago seven oil sands producers formed the Oil Sands Tailings Consortium, through which they now share tailings research and technology to help improve reclamation efforts and reduce the environmental impact of the oil sands.

In addition, earlier this year 12 major oil sands companies signed on to Canada's Oil Sands Innovation Alliance, which will look for ways to collaborate on environmental research, including new methods of carbon capture and land reclamation. These are just a couple of examples of how partnerships between key players can make a major difference in propelling ideas and technology forward.

Mr. Speaker, the National Buyer/Seller Forum adds yet another layer to these important partnerships by helping to connect oil sands producers, the buyers, with equipment suppliers, manufacturers, and drilling transportation companies, the sellers. Bringing all of these players together into one place creates a collaborative environment in which new ideas are formed which will further strengthen Alberta's energy sector and attract investment to Alberta and Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the National Buyer/Seller Forum is truly a unique and important networking opportunity. I encourage anyone interested in the energy and oil sands sector to attend and, more importantly, spend some money in our capital region.

Thank you.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Donations to Leadership Campaigns

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and the PCs talk about independence, transparency, and accountability while they carry on with backroom deals and warlord politics. The journey of former AHS board chair Ken Hughes is well known, and now we learn that in the PC leadership race a former AHS board member, the current acting chair, Cathy Roozen, personally donated $5,000 to the Premier's leadership bid and together with her spouse doled out a whopping $27,000. How can Albertans trust that the AHS board and AHS are independent of this government when these kinds of donations are being made and accepted?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the wonderful thing about the rules that we set out for our party is that we have complete transparency with respect to people when they decide to make contributions. I think what Albertans are concerned about is that when they don't have the information, they don't know what people's views might be.

We have a very strong chair at Alberta Health Services and very strong members on that board who have their own role with respect to corporate governance and understand what their legal obligations are.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is right. They're transparent. The more you donate, you'll get a job.

Given that the Southern family and the companies that they control donated at least $128,000 to the recent PC leadership campaign and given that the ATCO Group of companies are such large players in the electricity market, again to the Premier: how can you claim that accepting 128 grand does not jeopardize the independence of this government's policy on electricity deregulation, which ultimately is forcing Albertans to pay higher bills?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I'll say again that the important piece here is that we are completely transparent with respect to where everyone stands. We had an independent panel that made recommendations with respect to transmission, which then was supported as a result of decisions that were made by the AESO, AUC. This is important because what we are saying is that we are completely clear and open with everyone with respect to exactly where everyone stands on these issues.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this Premier is completely transparent. The more you pay, the more you get in contracts.

Given the Premier's recent transmission policy flip-flops and the fact that both the Premier and the Minister of Energy also received substantial donations totalling $20,000 from TransAlta during their leadership campaigns, to the Premier: whose interests are this Premier and the PC government really serving, the corporations making huge profits from higher costs or the people of Alberta who are paying through the nose for those bills? Whose interests, Premier? Those who fund you, or those who elect you?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, there is a wonderful opportunity in this province to continue to grow this economy. The AESO said it, this government has said it, and an independent transmission panel said it. We expect billions of dollars in investment to be made in this province with respect to the extraction of our natural resources, whether it's oil and gas, agriculture, or forestry. We certainly need the transmission, we need the electricity, and we have been very clear that we've supported that approach from the beginning. There is nothing that is unclear. There has been no change of policy, and we're proud of the policy.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Long-term Care for Seniors

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Growing the economy is exactly what this Premier is doing on the backs of our seniors. From Delivery Matters, a fact sheet put out by the Parkland Institute, national and international research clearly shows that in the delivery of health care, especially long-term care, the for-profit model leads to lower staffing levels, inferior quality of care. For example, bathing was skipped 10 per cent of the time; feeding, 20 per cent.

Residents were six times more likely to be bedridden, and those people were more drowsy, less socially engaged, ate less, and had more bed ulcers. Why, despite overwhelming evidence, does the Premier insist on defending profit instead of caring for our seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the report that the hon. member quotes from is a report that covered the period of 2006 to 2009. Without addressing the specific allegations that the hon. member made, I can tell you that today, in 2012, every resident has a registered nurse, an occupational therapist, or a social worker or a case manager. There is increased access to 24/7 home-care registered nurses. Nurse practitioners have been introduced and are managing medical needs. New strategies have been developed to reduce emergency department visits.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, let's bring this minister down to Planet Earth and down to the province of Alberta. Given that the Health Quality Council's Long Term Care Family Experience Survey, released January 2012, found that "on average, publicly operated facilities obtained significantly higher overall ratings compared to private and voluntary . . . operated facilities," again to the Premier: why is this PC government treating the health, safety, and well-being of our seniors with such flagrant, heartless disregard?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, you know, I take offence at the comments being made. It seems like it's a drive-by smear operation. I went to many, many facilities in this province. Take a look at Extendicare Eaux Claires. Go and ask the residents. See the smiling faces. Talk to the families. How about going down to AgeCare in Strathmore? People are very well taken care of in private settings. I would say very, very clearly that I'm proud of the facilities we have. The people that deserve great, great service are our seniors.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I take offence. The only smear here is a smear in the diapers of our seniors who are neglected in long-term care.

To the Premier. Yesterday you accused all of the opposition parties in this House of scaring seniors into not supporting your government. Can you please explain to me, given the overwhelming evidence and the human outcry from our seniors, who want to be cared for, fed, and taken out of bed, who is really scaring our seniors and who is smearing them? Come on, Premier. Stand up and answer the question.

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I stand in this House day after day, and I listen to this hon. member go on and on about how there are seniors in this province that are starving, that aren't getting health care, that do not have appropriate housing, and that simply isn't true. That is my evidence of this direct hon. member's comments in this House with respect to the quality of life of seniors. This is a government that is committed to a publicly funded health care system, accommodation, and choice for all seniors and an improved quality of life so that seniors can live their lives with respect.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Donations to Leadership Campaigns (continued)

Mr. MacDonald: The financial statements of the Deputy Premier in the recent PC leadership race were prepared to comply with the requirements of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. An individual campaign donation was not to exceed $30,000. To the Premier: why did the Deputy Premier in the leadership campaign accept a $35,000 donation from one individual, which is clearly $5,000 more than what the limit was set at?

The Speaker: I'm not sure how this applies to the question period, hon. member. Proceed with your next question, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is in regard to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, which is, again, a statute that the Premier had under her control when she was Justice minister.

Again, given that donations should not come from any corporation that does not have business in Alberta, who sent the Deputy Premier's campaign two money orders worth $15,000 in total from RBC Trust Bahamas?

The Speaker: The same reply, hon. member. Proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has placed Gary Mar in the penalty box on an unpaid leave because of concerns over leadership campaign fundraising, will the Premier now do the same to the Deputy Premier for exceeding the donation limit from an individual by $5,000 and cashing money orders worth $15,000 in total from RBC Trust Bahamas?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, I am first of all not going to confirm any of the allegations that this hon. member has made. This is not part of what I would consider to be appropriate business for this House.

But with respect to the last question, Mr. Speaker, the reason that the trade representative in Hong Kong has been put on a leave of absence without pay is directly with respect to his employment contract with the government of Alberta as a result of the code of conduct that we expect all employees to observe.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Alleged Intimidation of Physicians

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today Dr. Peter Rodd came forward with his own personal account of being bullied and intimidated by Alberta Health Services. Dr. Rodd, a psychiatrist, worked with forensic patients at Alberta Hospital Edmonton. Many of these patients were dangerous and, in his medical opinion, too risky to be released into the community. But, as usual, his advocacy efforts to keep these dangerous patients at Alberta Hospital were met with threats to his job and intimidation. To the Premier: why can't you see that your broken promise to hold a judicial inquiry into patient advocacy is seriously harming the health and safety of all Albertans?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we made a commitment to hold an independent judicial inquiry with respect to queue-jumping. We have kept that commitment.

With respect to these allegations I'm not at all surprised that a Wildrose candidate would be making these allegations about doctor intimidation, Mr. Speaker.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: A 420-page report about doctor intimidation. Read it.

Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that physicians have told the Health Quality Council that they need whistle-blower protection if they're ever going to speak out, when are you going to table whistle-blower legislation? There is a mysterious Bill 7 that appears to be on the Order Paper. Could that be it?

Ms Redford: There is a Health Quality Council report that did talk about doctor intimidation. This government has accepted that report. It has accepted the recommendations made in that report, and this government will actually find solutions to fix health care as opposed to the discussions that we seem to have in this House from the hon. members on the opposite side.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Premier, you're a disappointment to Alberta doctors and their patients.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Given that Dr. Rodd came forward today and confirmed what the Health Quality Council has already said, that patient advocacy in Alberta has been compromised by political interference in the system, what more proof do you need? By not calling the public inquiry that you promised, is that what you're trying to accomplish, stop physicians from coming forward?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, the proof is in the report that was presented by the Health Quality Council; we are not disputing that.

The way to fix health care in Alberta is not to politicize this issue by having people at one point talk about doctor intimidation and then 20 minutes later announce that they're a candidate for a political party. That does not fix health care in Alberta, but we will.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Long-term Care for Seniors (continued)

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A study by researchers at three Alberta universities has found that the health of people in supportive living is at greater risk than those in long-term care facilities. Lack of appropriate staffing in supportive living means that people are twice as likely to end up in ERs or be hospitalized. Will the Premier explain why this government is reducing the number of long-term care spaces despite a severe shortage and despite better health outcomes for seniors in long-term care?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, the study that the hon. member refers to is based on data from 2006 to 2009. As I said in answer to an earlier question this afternoon, a lot has happened since then. This government is committed to an approach to continuing care that offers seniors a range of affordable housing spaces and brings the health care to them, and we're having a lot of success with that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. The facts speak otherwise, Mr. Speaker. Given that the for-profit involvement in supportive living is much greater than in long-term care and that people are having to stay in supportive living for a wide range of health services that would keep them from needing hospitalization, will the Premier commit to end the handover of care for seniors to the friends in the for-profit sector who donate to her leadership and the PC Party and, instead, put the health needs of seniors first?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, continuing care in this province, whether it's provided by government, by the not-for-profit sector, or by the private sector, is all regulated exactly the same way. This government has very strict continuing care accommodation standards in place and very strict continuing care health standards in place. They are applied equally across the board. They are enforced rigorously by inspectors. On top of that, we have long-term care accommodation rate protection to ensure that nobody pays more than they can afford.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this government is cutting long-term care in this province despite promising a significant increase in the last election and is building assisted living facilities instead and given that those in assisted living are more likely to end up in the ER, why won't the Premier admit that its seniors' care strategy isn't intended to actually help seniors but, instead, the private interests that back the PC Party? This is to the Premier.

Ms Redford: This government's policy is designed to support seniors so that they can live in dignity with choice in the last years of their life. One of the things that we have found out, Mr. Speaker, from seniors in Alberta is that they want to have choice with respect to accommodation. We have a system that is regulated that allows for different models of delivery to a standard that's consistent across the province and ensures that there is public health care available for every senior living in any type of accommodation.

Bitumen Upgrading

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the government talks a good game when it comes to raising the fortunes of our First Nations communities and upgrading and refining more bitumen here in Alberta. That's why I'm shocked that the Alberta First Nations energy project, a project that could have employed our First Nations citizens and built our provincial coffers, has been shelved. To the Minister of Energy: why is this project being moth-balled?

Ms Redford: Mr. Speaker, we in this government are committed to diversifying the economy and to ensuring that we're investing in value-added for the good of all Albertans. We know that that has tremendous opportunities for Albertans and Alberta taxpayers across the province. Unfortunately, this particular project was a project that, when we assessed the benefit and the risk, just didn't make sense for Alberta taxpayers. We're not opposed to doing more, but we won't do this project.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the economics of this Alberta First Nations energy project compare more favourably than the North West energy project, why are we not proceeding with this project given that we went ahead with North West?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to answer that question. At its similar stage of where we approved North West, they had already secured the land, they had already secured regulatory approval, and they'd already secured a major partner with years of experience in the oil sands, CNRL. The current project that he's referring to has none of those, and as the Premier said, at this particular point in time the risks clearly outweigh the benefits.

Mr. Hehr: Well, my spidey sense is tingling on this, Mr. Speaker, in that politics rather than business acumen may be at play here given that this project could have been shelved because high-level PC Party operatives worked directly for competitors of this First Nations project. Has it been shelved for politics and not business?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I can see that the habit of making unfounded allegations by the Official Opposition leader is spreading to the rest of the caucus.

There's absolutely no competition between these two different projects. North West is already approved, as I said. Teedrum was very early in the process. As far as the two pipelines, they're totally different, and we support both of them. Northern Gateway is going to ship bitumen. Kinder Morgan is going to support refined products. We support both of them very strongly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-MacKay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Impaired Driving

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans support getting tough on drunk drivers. However, there are some who seemingly want to make it a political issue and ignore the lives that would be saved and injuries prevented through Alberta's new drunk-driving law. Some of the most vocal critics have been a few particular members in this House, which is odd considering they advocated for getting tough on drunk drivers the way we are doing with Bill 26. My first two questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. One of the areas focused on by the new law is tougher penalties for those who have a blood-alcohol content between .05 and .08. How does that line up with what the opposition members want?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Far be it for me to quote myself. I'm going to go to Hansard: "I hope this bill will start the process to move to a .05 legal limit." I recognize that drunk driving is not a partisan issue, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for her past support.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. That is just one quote from one member. Was there any other support shown for the blood-alcohol limit of .05?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, once again, I'm going to let Hansard do the talking. The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo stated in reference to a private member's bill cracking down on drunk drivers: "We should be doing everything we can to make it harder for drunk drivers to offend and to get [drunk] drivers whose judgment is impaired by alcohol off the road." That includes the danger zone between .05 and .08. Thank you to that member as well.

Ms Woo-Paw: My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Transportation. Given that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere was concerned about repeat drinking-and-driving offenders, quote, if they haven't hurt or killed anybody, it's just a matter of time, end quote, how does the province's new legislation deal with repeat offenders?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, this law very much targets repeat offenders. We are doing all we can to make the roads safer through education, enforcement, tougher penalties, ignition interlock, and other measures. This is good legislation, and we're doing the right thing to get Albertans home safely.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

2:10

School Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every day the deplorable state of our school infrastructure in Alberta continues to be of great concern. Across the province boards are forced to move students between schools while parents fight to save their neighbourhood schools. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why isn't this government co-operating with the cities, the school boards, and other government ministries to revive and save inner-city schools?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I think this ministry and this government is co-operating with all of the possible stakeholders to do the best that we can with the infrastructure and the budget that we've got in this province. We've got great examples of working together. For example, in Lac La Biche we're building schools and bolting those onto the community centre so that we can make use of the common areas like the field house and the library. We don't have to double-bill those and bill those to the taxpayer, and we can use that money to build additional spaces in some other community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: given that school boards across the province have maintenance deficits of over a billion dollars and half of our schools are more than 50 years old, what is this government doing to fix old schools, not just build new ones?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, there are numerous modernizations going on across the province. We need to keep working with the Minister of Education and all the school boards and all the stakeholders, and we're committed to doing that. I would love to build more schools. I would love to renovate more schools for the minister. The reality is that there's a certain budget that we work with. We roll about a hundred million dollars a year through to school boards to do maintenance, and they set those priorities locally. We'll continue to work with them and make those dollars go as far as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The problem is that the students are going into substandard schools.

To the minister again: why is your government not fighting to keep older schools open by finding creative ways to use them to their full potential such as making them community hubs and leasing space to community groups and Alberta Health, for example?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, let's not forget the most important aspect of it all, and that's the children's education. At the end of the day schools are there to serve our children. Decisions are made on whether schools are opened or closed based on the quality of the educational programs that are being offered. Yes, school boards from time to time have to make difficult decisions to close schools, but those decisions are made in the best interests of the children. When population is so low that teachers no longer can deliver valuable educational programs, those tough decisions have to be made, and they are being made.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Resource Revenue Projections

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A large portion of Alberta's finances is derived from oil and gas revenue. Some of my constituents have expressed some uncertainty with regard to how those numbers are derived. This was recently highlighted in a column by U of C Professor Jack Mintz in an article in the National Post. My question is to the Minister of Finance with regard to revenue forecasts he has presented. Has there been third-party validation of the numbers used to project revenue for the province with regard to oil and gas revenues?

Mr. Liepert: First of all, Mr. Speaker, with due respect, I think time will tell, but I don't think Dr. Mintz will be proven correct. Our forecasts are consistent with the growing Alberta economy. We've got growth that is twice the national average.

Now, three major Canadian banks in their assessments have praised Alberta's budget for having the strongest economic outlook in the country. A few weeks ago I tabled a document from RBC which said: "The government has left itself a solid cushion by using relatively conservative assumptions for key economic variables." I would say that that's a good third-party assessment.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are also interested in some of the mechanisms used to derive the revenue numbers. While that may be complicated to some extent, could the Minister of Finance expand on what mechanisms are used to derive the projections for oil and gas revenue?

Mr. Liepert: First of all, it's really in the Department of Energy. What the forecasters in the Department of Energy do is take the average of all the international forecast prices. I've stated this on a number of occasions in this House, Mr. Speaker. We then sit down individually with industry. We look at their production levels over the next three years and do the math. We then take a look in our Finance department at the increased revenues through both corporate and personal income tax.

We also have another situation, Mr. Speaker, which I won't go into details about now but I think might follow in the supplementary.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is with regard to the projections out to 2014-15 of nearly a 150 per cent increase with regard to bitumen royalties to close to $10 billion. Can the Minister of Energy explain some of the rationale that's gone into those projections, please?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I can. There are three factors that go into bitumen royalties – price, volume, and the royalty regime – and they're all going up. The price of bitumen is predicted to rise. Again, as the Finance minister indicated, our projections are consistent with private-sector ones. The second one is the quantity. Production out of the oil sands is predicted to grow 14 per cent this year, 8 per cent next year, and almost 9 per cent the year after. Most importantly, the royalty itself, the postpayout, is two and a half to three times more. It's a bigger slice of a bigger pie.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Long-term Care for Seniors (continued)

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Families desperately searching for the appropriate level of care for their aging loved ones no longer able to live independently face a mind-boggling series of loosely legislated government care options from supportive living to long-term care. A report coauthored by epidemiologists from the U of A and U of C points out that the health risk is double for residents in supportive living facilities than in long-term care. To the Minister of Seniors: do you consider this risk acceptable?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the one thing that I want you to know and all Albertans to know is that the safety and the care of our seniors is very, very important to me. I've stressed over and over in this House that if someone is unsure, a family member or an MLA advocating on behalf of a senior in a situation where it's unsafe or at risk, I want it reported, and I want it reported now. It's 1.888.357.9339: write that down. Report it, please. You have an obligation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's policy: load 'em and lock 'em.

Given that over half the residents in supportive living facilities were medically unstable and nearly 60 per cent have been diagnosed with dementia, how is your ministry guaranteeing that the residents and their caregivers are safe?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, it's very, very clear that in our ministry we set the accommodation standards. We do the inspections. Seven hundred and twenty-eight facilities were inspected last year. Very high compliance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the minister: do you consider it either ethical or economical that residents in supportive living pay higher fees, face additional costs for health-related supplies and services, and that family caregivers are forced to close the gap in inadequate service provision?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, once again I want to say that through our programs in seniors care and housing we have lots of options, and I stand by those options whether they be delivered through foundations, whether they be delivered through private care, or whether they be delivered through government care. All of those options and many more, including home care, are very, very important to our seniors.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Skilled Labour Supply

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Alberta businesses, some of them very close to home in places like Leduc and Nisku in my constituency, find themselves victims of Alberta's success. They can't find skilled workers. To the Minister of Human Services: what is the government doing to help Alberta companies find workers to keep crucial Alberta projects on schedule?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are several fronts on which we operate. Obviously, Alberta's unemployment rate is among the lowest in the country, in fact tied for the lowest at 5 per cent. Our participation rate is among the highest in the country at 73.7 per cent. But we still want to target those Albertans who can be better employed, so we have processes in place to encourage the untapped labour pool in terms of aboriginal people, seniors, older workers, youth, who have higher unemployment rates than the average. The youth unemployment rate is at 8 per cent, for example. So first we look to Albertans, then we look to Canadians, and then we look internationally.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Human Services: given that businesses are the ones on the front line of this labour shortage, they know best what they need, so why does it seem that our government strategies are working in isolation? Do we know best?

Mr. Hancock: I would agree with the hon. member that the front line, the people who are hiring people in this province, do know best, but I would disagree with him that we're operating in isolation. We've been meeting with business, with industry, with labour, talking about how we can work on recruiting the types of people we need and how we can work with the federal government to encourage them, for example, to increase the cap on the provincial nominee program and with other changes in the immigration program so that we can get those people we need from the international market.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's prosperity depends on having enough skilled labour to keep our economy moving, my final question is to the same minister. Businesses are calling for more immigration to Alberta to address their labour market needs. What are we doing to convince the federal government that this is a high priority?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first I should say that our immigration unit works very closely with the federal government's immigration unit to make sure that we're working towards the same end. We work very closely together, but we have been working to try and convince the federal government that we should look at the provincial nominee program numbers and we need to look at streamlining some of the other efforts.

I can say that the Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations met recently with the federal minister and had a very good meeting with him. In fact, just recently we've heard some announcements from the federal government in that area. Our Deputy Premier is in Ottawa today meeting with the federal Alberta caucus . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Alleged Intimidation of Physicians (continued)

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, this morning Dr. Peter Rodd, a psychiatrist and former flight surgeon for the Canadian Forces, shared that because he had objected to certain dangerous mentally ill patients being released into the community before they were ready, he was threatened with the loss of his job and blackmailed by AHS officials. Dr. Rodd has been as specific about the details as he can without risking a lawsuit and joins the Alberta Medical Association in demanding the protection and immunity afforded by a full public inquiry. To the minister: why will you not call a public inquiry into the rampant bullying and intimidation in our health care system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the Premier explained again earlier in question period today, an inquiry has been called into queue-jumping, and to the extent that physician intimidation was a factor in that, it will be considered by the inquiry.

With respect to the physician who spoke to the media earlier today, I have no direct information about the facts of his particular case. What I would say, Mr. Speaker, is that under the Health Quality Council review there was an opportunity under section 9 of the Alberta Evidence Act for that physician and any others to tell their stories.

Mr. Anderson: He was scared to death about coming to the Health Quality Council. That's why he didn't come.

Given that Dr. Rodd has noted that Alberta Health Services, after learning of his intent to run for the Wildrose Party, is delaying sending him his paperwork necessary to continue practising medicine in Alberta and given that he has been informed that the needed paperwork is finished and was ready to be released to him last week but is now delayed and given that the doctor has received several job offers from out of province but would much rather remain here in Alberta to treat patients in Alberta, Minister, will you please undertake to ask Alberta Health Services to release the paperwork he is waiting on so that this doctor can treat Alberta patients?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, there are processes within Alberta Health Services for any physician to follow who has a concern. With respect to the organization of medical staff, those procedures may be found in the medical staff bylaws. They include dispute resolution processes that I would expect could address this particular situation.

Mr. Anderson: Is it any wonder why doctors feel so intimidated in this province, Mr. Speaker?

Given that the Health Quality Council report, dozens of media reports, and now the story of Dr. Rodd clearly show that a culture of fear and intimidation is literally rampant in our health care system, will the minister do the right thing and call a full public inquiry on it so that we can not only hold accountable those involved in the bullying and intimidation but, even more importantly, provide Albertans with the health care they need instead of allowing them to suffer unnecessarily while you worry more about your political well-being rather than the well-being of Albertans?

Mr. Horne: Well, speaking of politics, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that this government has absolutely no interest in the candidacy or lack thereof of anyone running for any of the other caucuses. We leave that to them and to their internal processes, whatever they may happen to be.

With respect to the physician in question, as I mentioned earlier, there was an opportunity under the Health Quality Council of Alberta review. In addition to the protection of the Alberta Evidence Act, every physician who took part was offered, in writing, a presigned waiver from Alberta Health Services releasing that physician from any third-party contract that they may have had.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Water Allocation

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. If one is trying to figure out what water licences are being approved, the water allocation system in Alberta is definitely not transparent. The minister can both approve or stop a transfer of an allocation of Crown water without public review or consultation. The Alberta WaterPortal website does not show licences held in Alberta except in the South Saskatchewan basin, where there are no new licences, and in many cases the director of water management can approve water licences without any public review or consultation. To the minister . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjection] The hon. minister, please.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for the question, but unfortunately the preamble was so long that I didn't get to hear the question.

Ms Blakeman: I'll try again just so that the minister is good and sure she can hear it. Can the minister confirm that over 239 permanent water allocations have been approved over the last month?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure of the exact numbers that have been approved over the last month, but our government and our Department of Environment and Water ensure that when any allocations are given, it goes through a process, and they are very good at going through that process.

Ms Blakeman: They seem to be very good at it, going through it very fast.

To the same minister: why is the government making it easier to organize transfers of water licences in the South Saskatchewan basin, with all the details available on the WaterPortal, rather than concentrating on the conservation of water in that drought-stricken area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to finish off with the last question, our department is very efficient, and that's why they get a lot of work done.

With regard to this one here, certainly, we work with the closed basin in the South Saskatchewan basin. We increase conservation and actually encourage conservation. When we look to the irrigation districts, just for an example, who are large users in the south basin, they have looked at conservation and have really had a large amount of conservation in that area. We always look first for conservation, for sharing of water. We continue to do that throughout the province but particularly in the south.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Environmental Monitoring

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta recently announced a joint oil sands monitoring program with the federal government and today announced the creation of an interim working group to report back to government on how to ensure that the system has independent, credible oversight. My question is to the Minister of Environment and Water. Is this interim report just an extension of the Alberta Environmental Monitoring Panel since that panel already called for independent oversight?

The Speaker: The hon. minister, please.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure proud today. I earlier introduced a couple of guests that are working on this working group with us. Dr. Tennant and Dr. Wallace have joined us here, and certainly we're very proud. With their help we're now moving into the next phase of our work to bolster environmental monitoring in the province and develop independent, science-credible oversight. We must ensure that it is independent oversight, that it is effective and efficient, and that the policy and compliance remain with government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. How many more panels and committees need to be established before we see real results?

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, hon. member. We have seen results. The joint monitoring plan was announced in February with the federal Minister of Environment and myself. We moved to do that quickly, as I said before, to make sure that we do not lose the spring monitoring season. We've made sure that we've added additional dollars within my budget of Environment and Water, and industry as well has committed to dollars for this. The stakeholder group that we have appointed will report back to me by June 30.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. Why doesn't the government just set up an independent commission?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are looking at significantly changing the way that we do business. As the chair of the working group said in this morning's news conference, this is a very complex and challenging task, akin to stapling Jell-O to the wall. We want to build the best system, which is why we are taking a careful, deliberate look at all the options. We must ensure that we build effective, transparent, science-credible, independent oversight.

The Premier visited in Washington earlier last week, and certainly they look to us . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Family Care Clinics

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Primary care networks increase patient access and satisfaction with family physicians. They decrease the strain on the province's over-crowded emergency system. Yet rather than support consistently this area of primary care, this government has decided to reinvent the wheel. To the minister: what is the difference between a family care clinic and a primary care network that's worth $15 million and will serve 30,000 people as opposed to the almost 3 million people served by . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government is interested in providing a range of primary health care delivery models that meet the unique needs of individual communities across Alberta. To that end, as the hon. member points out, Alberta's primary care networks have done tremendous work over the last eight years. Through agreement with the Alberta Medical Association and Alberta Health Services this government as recently as a couple of weeks ago has indicated its willingness to provide additional financial support. Family care clinics are yet another model that will be of assistance in serving unique needs in communities, and we're happy to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:30

Dr. Swann: Well, let me try the question again since he continues to evade it. What is a family care clinic, and how does it differ from a primary care network?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, a family care clinic is another option for providing primary health care services. It includes, as do primary care networks, the opportunity to deliver care through multidisciplinary teams. It includes the ability to train health professionals through preceptorships offered in the family care clinics. It has the potential to include direct access to a variety of health care professionals, including nonphysician professionals like nurse practitioners, and it has the potential to serve targeted needs, particularly in areas of the province that have a lower socioeconomic status.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: why have physicians and physician representatives been shut out of the discussions around the development of family care clinics?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. Physicians have been consulted and are being consulted in the development of these family care clinic pilot projects. The Alberta Medical Association as an organization is a member of an advisory committee that is assisting with advice on implementing and evaluating these projects across the province. So physicians clearly are involved in this, and we continue to build on their involvement in the future in both improvements for family care clinics and our primary care networks.

Evanston Community Transportation Access

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, residents of the community of Evanston in northwest Calgary are concerned about the fact that there's only one road in or out of the community, and as a result access is a major concern for them. In the case of an accident or bad weather residents are facing long lines and congestion, and they're having delays getting in and out of the community, which may cause safety concerns. My questions are all for the Minister of Transportation. Why does this fast-growing community in northwest Calgary only have one route of access?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The safety of residents is a priority for my ministry. The city of Calgary allows a certain amount of growth, of development before an additional access is necessary. We continue to work with the city of Calgary in regard to the growth of the communities around the Stoney Trail. More importantly, we very much stay in contact with the city at all times.

Dr. Brown: Well, will the minister advise what his department can do specifically to address the transportation access issue in Evanston to make sure that there are no safety concerns there?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The province will look at any proposal that involves, of course, the participation of input from the city and input from the developer. As the community grows, there is an interchange on 14th Street. Like all new communities, both the city and the developer are key in planning.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise when we can expect the interchange at the corner of Stoney Trail and 14th Street to be completed so that the residents of Evanston can have better access?

Mr. Danyluk: As stated earlier, Mr. Speaker, the city determines when the second interchange is required, but to the hon. member I do want to stress that the interchange is in the plans for both the ring road and the community. You know, that particular interchange is in the plans, and when the development is large enough, then it will be built. We will always continue to ensure that our roads that include access to communities are safe.

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is probably the wealthiest place on Earth, but here we have a structural deficit that is covered off by the unsustainable use of our fossil fuel revenues just to pay today's bills. Since 1987 this government has spent all of the over $225 billion it has brought in from this one-time revenue source. To the Minister of Finance: do you believe it's fair to future generations and to the future prosperity of this province to spend all of this revenue as it comes in?

The Speaker: Personal opinion.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think the member needs to be corrected. I don't have the numbers in front of me; 1987, I think, was the year that he used. I can say that in the last six years the government of Alberta has invested some $20 billion to $30 billion in infrastructure. That's infrastructure that wouldn't be there today. I'd ask this hon. member whether or not he's suggesting we shouldn't have spent that money, whether he wants to go tell his constituents in Calgary-Buffalo that there should be no ring road around Calgary, whether there should be no south

Calgary hospital, whether there should not be schools in new neighbourhoods. I ask him if he wants to take that into the street.

Mr. Hehr: I'm not suggesting that at all, Mr. Speaker, but what I'm going to say is that given that we have a flat tax which sees a millionaire executive pay the same rate of taxation as his secretary and that we are the only jurisdiction in Canada that follows this practice, can the minister not see that this policy has contributed to our inability to save for the future and leads this government to spending all of this resource revenue as it comes in?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, as we approach the provincial election soon here, it's becoming very clear where various political parties stand. We have this particular political party, which is advocating increased taxes. We have a group over there that masquerades as a political party that is saying that we should cut 2 and a half billion dollars out of our infrastructure. This political party is standing on its record, one that sees the strongest growth in Canada, the best place to live, work, and raise children.

Mr. Hehr: Given that Albertans want predictable and sustainable funding and a savings plan for the future, would it not be a conservative principle to adopt a tax policy that asks citizens to pay for what they use rather than prejudicing our future generations and future savings plan by selling off one barrel at a time to pay today's bills?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the economic philosophies of this government are pretty clear. We don't tax any more than we have to. We watch our spending and ensure that we get good value for our dollars, and I've just mentioned a whole bunch of areas where we have invested in infrastructure. I think that within a very short period of time we'll ask Albertans to pass judgment on whether they want a government – well, they won't be government – whether they want a few MLAs who want to tax more, whether they want a few MLAs who want to cut all infrastructure spending, or whether they want a government that wants to deliver what Albertans are asking to have delivered.

A. Blair McPherson School

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, parents with young children who live in Tamarack and the Meadows in my area, including some of the surrounding areas, absolutely love their new school, A. Blair McPherson, and all of their teachers. In fact, this school has become so popular that it is bursting at the seams, and come September, they will be desperate for new space. They will probably have to allocate nonclassroom teaching space in order to accommodate all the students. This is not a good situation, so I have some questions for the Minister of Education. Since I already brought this matter to your attention earlier, what can I tell my constituents today about their desperate need for at least two modular classrooms?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a success story that we should be happy with that a school is built, and obviously the parents and children are satisfied with the school that they have. That school, actually, is drawing students from quite a large area. I also appreciate that parents are concerned about overcapacity. What the hon. member can tell the parents is that not only have I discussed this issue with the member at length, but I have also had the pleasure of meeting with the school board, with the superintendent, with the trustees, and the chair and discussed that very same situation in great detail with them.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Mr. Speaker, A. Blair McPherson school is so new that they don't even have a playground at this school yet, nor do they have a community league with whom they can partner. What would you suggest they do to acquire a much-needed playground space for their particular school and the 800 young students who need one?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, I wanted to go further with my first answer. The hon. member can also tell the parents of the children at McPherson that I looked at the capital plan, and I already communicated to the trustees and the chair that they will be receiving two additional portables to accommodate more students in that particular school and decant some of that frustration that is happening.

Relative to playgrounds, Mr. Speaker, in our 10-point plan, as you know, we are looking at a model of constructing new schools so that children will not only be receiving a K to grade 9 or a K to 6 school but also a playground that comes along with it.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm done. That's it.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, that concludes the question-and-answer period for today: 18 members, 106 responses and questions.

We'll continue with the Routine in just a few seconds from now.

2:40

Members' Statements

(continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Donations to Leadership Campaigns

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Five of the six PC leadership candidates released their list of contributions last Friday. This list, this long list, is a list of very generous donors. Power companies top the list. The Southern family and companies they control donated at least $128,000; TransAlta, $50,000. They certainly can afford to be generous when the price of electricity is as high as it is. Cathy Roozen, who has become interim chair of the Alberta Health Services Board, donated $5,000 to the Premier's leadership campaign. Another family donated $100,000: $40,000 in donations to the Premier, $30,000 to Mr. Mar, and $30,000 to the current Minister of Energy. Another donation to these three candidates also totalled $100,000 when you add it all up.

You have land developers. You have landlords. You have liquor store owners. You have casino operators, energy companies, law firms. They're all part of this list, and fortunately it is part of the public record. I would encourage citizens to please go online and check this list for themselves.

Do we need new laws for leadership campaigns? That is a good question. Is the generous donation cap of $30,000 too high? Should democracy be sold to the highest bidder?

In conclusion, I think we need to pay heed to the remarks from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who is absolutely right in suggesting and indicating that democracy is not for sale at any price.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Culture Forum 2012

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 24 and 25 almost 400 community leaders from across Alberta gathered in Red Deer for Culture Forum 2012. Represented were all facets of the broad cultural spectrum of this province, including the arts, heritage, recreation, creative industries, and the multicultural and nonprofit sectors. These community leaders came together in the first-ever crossdisciplinary discussion on Alberta culture to share ideas and experiences and to work together to formulate a strategy that will sustain and grow our cultural community.

Among those taking part were youth delegates from across the province, young people bringing their own unique perspective and their own unique vision of a vibrant cultural future. Also heard was the input from the corporate sector, which has sought and continues to seek new opportunities in support of Alberta culture.

Mr. Speaker, in survey after survey the message from Albertans is clear. Culture matters. It matters to those who deliver community-based recreational and social programs and services, and it matters to the children, families, and the most vulnerable Albertans who benefit from those efforts. It matters to the artists, performers, and technicians, and it also matters to those who applaud the efforts and are inspired by their works. It certainly matters to those who work tirelessly to conserve our heritage sites.

Mr. Speaker, culture connects our people, our communities, and our province, and that is why we are seeking ideas and input from all Albertans through the Culture Forum 2012 online survey. Albertans are encouraged to participate in the survey until March 28 by visiting the Culture and Community Services website at www.culture.alberta.ca.

Mr. Speaker, I also encourage all Members of this Legislative Assembly to take part and to encourage their constituents to let their voices be heard on the future of culture in Alberta. Thank you to the Premier and our minister for having the foresight and for their efforts to make this happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Retrospective on the Past Year

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is it, my last member's statement. Guess I'd better make it count. Guess I should try to say something profound, but I've got nothing because nothing profound has happened in this place in over a year.

We sat for 47 days last year. Even on a four-day week, that's still less than 12 weeks out of 52. The old leader announced he was leaving, and then it took the natural governing party nine months to choose a new leader. In between hardly anything of note was accomplished in or anywhere near this place. Since then what's been delivered by this government has consistently fallen well short of what the Premier promised: a fixed election range instead of a fixed election date; an independent, judge-led inquiry into this narrow little question of whether queue-jumping is happening in the health system today instead of the wide-ranging inquiry that the Premier led us to believe she would call.

As example after example of this government's arrogance and intimidation of and indifference to the people it serves have come to light over the past several weeks, all we've seen is crisis management where we should be seeing a commitment to real change and action. That's what the Premier led us to believe she would deliver if she was chosen to lead her party and this government, real change: really going through that tired, old, calcified government, cleaning house and bringing in a new culture and a new way of behaving and a commitment to be bold and innovative.

Mr. Speaker, nothing has changed, and it can't as long as this government is in power because like the Tin Man in Oz after 40 years the thing has rusted solid, only Dorothy can't get it to move again no matter how much she uses the oil can. Who knows? Maybe she doesn't even want to.

At the end of The Hunt for Red October, one of my favourite movies, Captain Ramius turns to our hero, Jack Ryan, and says: a little revolution from time to time is a good thing, don't you think, Ryan? We have an election coming soon and with it the opportunity for a little revolution of our own.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling five copies of Bill 210, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2000, which I spoke of in my member's statement today.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for St. Albert, you have a tabling?

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a document entitled An Argument for the Elimination of Adverse Possession in Alberta Made before the Committee on Private Bills and Motions. This is a document dated November 28, 2011, authored by myself. It lists all the citations that I used in the debates both on Motion 507 in the last session and any citations on Bill 204 in this session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings. My first is a further 20 Castle e-mails out of the hundreds I've received from the following out-of-province and out-of-country individuals who say that they are considering not visiting Alberta unless the logging of the Castle wilderness is stopped: Nancy Searing, Jane Culmer, Holly Marchuk, Jeanne Buzek, Christopher Deane, Karen Clark, Denise Day, Bernadette Keenan, Douglas MacLachlan, Mervi Rantala, Fritz Lehmborg, Nancy Goldsberry, Dallas Emard, Marina Sommer, Danielle Hallam, Heidi Stewart, Terry Newcombe, Nicole Boon, George Milligan, and Marilyn Hunter.

My second set of tablings, that the hon. Minister of Education appears so anxious to hear, comes as e-mails and letters from the following 20 individuals who are concerned about the proposed logging in the west Bragg Creek area, and they are requesting a complete, facilitated, and accessible public consultation: Sharon Henderson, Mike Stuart, John Drew, Breanne Moyer, Troy Delfs, Courtney Adams, Laurie Weidenhamer, Doone Watson, Gaynor Hoyne, Mike Wattam, Terry Markey, Samantha and Len Fleckney, Kris Marsh, Carl Johns, Katherine Brushaber, Claire Markey, Delsey Harvey, Steven Knudsen, and Martin Blades.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Strathcona, do you have a tabling?

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition signed by 546 people calling for a renal dialysis satellite unit at the Athabasca health care centre. They say that there are 17 to 20 patients who are forced to travel to Edmonton for dialysis three times a week, that family members must miss work, and patients' health is jeopardized by the travel. The signatures were collected by Dia

Hurren, Patricia Hurren-Hannah, Heath Hurren, Ben VanderBurg, Carla Weich, and Arlene Brost, all of whom visited the Assembly last week to drop off the petition.

2:50

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Zwodzesky in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to now call to order the Committee of Supply.

Main Estimates 2012-13

Human Services

The Deputy Chair: I would now invite the hon. Minister of Human Services to proceed with his opening remarks. We'll explain the procedure thereafter.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a privilege to be here this afternoon to discuss the 2012-13 budget estimates for the Ministry of Human Services.

Joining me today on the floor of the House is Deputy Minister Steve MacDonald. I just want to take a moment to say thank you to Steve because the Ministry of Human Services is a rather large ministry, and he has a rather large job and is doing it supremely well. We're joined here today by assistant deputy ministers Gord Johnston, Karen Ferguson, Susan Taylor, Alex Stewart, and Lana Lougheed. Of course, they are only several of the assistant deputy ministers who assist Steve in his duties.

We are joined by a number of other ministry staff – I won't name them all – who are with us in the members' gallery. I want to thank each and every one of you for the opportunity I've had to work with you over the last five months and for the service that you provide to Albertans and for Albertans. I have to say that this is a very dedicated group of people, and they represent a very significantly dedicated group of people in our department.

I won't spend any time talking about numbers because we have the budget tables in front of us, but I do think it's important to talk a bit about the mission and the story of our new ministry since it's the first time we're appearing before the committee. Human Services, as it's appropriately named, is all about people. The programs that are delivered by our 5,200 staff – that's 23 per cent of the Alberta civil service – touch the lives of your constituents every day. We keep children safe, help people get off the street, assist families so their children get a solid start, help individuals to be safe at work, and provide opportunities for people to gain the skills they need to get better jobs.

Our goals are to ensure that the right supports are available at the right time to Albertans who need them so that they can live in human dignity and have the opportunity to maximize their potential.

Under separate ministries our programs did a good job of assisting people. However, Albertans signalled to our Premier that they wanted change in the way government works. They wanted to have government departments work more cohesively together; they wanted easier access to all the services they need, in one stop where possible; and they wanted us to use our resources, both financial and human, more effectively, with a singular focus of achieving positive outcomes for people.

Bringing Alberta's people supports together under the Ministry of Human Services is helping us accomplish the change that Albertans want. In fact, Mr. Chairman, that is the motto for our department at the moment: Better Together.

Every day we're working to align our policies to better co-ordinate and improve programs that provide the safety, the jobs, and the opportunities to help people, families, individuals, and communities succeed. For example, our employment and services delivery staff are working side by side with child and family services caseworkers to support at-risk youth as they transition to adulthood. They're helping youth who may be facing a number of obstacles like unemployment, mental health issues, and disabilities, which require comprehensive supports.

Another example is easier access to financial support, now available to pregnant and parenting teens attending the Louise Dean and Braemar schools in Calgary and Edmonton respectively. In fact, Mr. Chairman, that's one of my favourite stories. We've been trying for a number of years now to get those supports aligned so that those young women at the schools can focus on their schooling and not worry about the financial issues and the child care issues and the other issues. It's taken a long time to put that together. When the Ministry of Human Services came together, we were able to complete that, to settle those contracts, and make sure that the funding is there for those children to continue their schooling. With income support and child care in one ministry, we're able to provide a new funding model that gives those teens the right supports at the right time and helps them achieve success in life.

Alberta is blessed with tremendous opportunity and a very bright future. At the same time we face complex social challenges and pressures that need to be addressed: a rapidly growing population and shifting demographics, family violence, poverty, homelessness, and a projected labour shortage. But Budget 2012 represents a strong investment in people that will help us protect vulnerable children, individuals, and families and support them in times of need; promote fair, safe, healthy, and inclusive workplaces and a skilled labour force; and continue working with partners to create opportunities that help Albertans succeed. Total ministry funding is $2.6 billion, an increase of $132 million from 2011.

We are the legal guardians of 8,700 children in provincial care. An additional investment of $75 million in child intervention will help strengthen families' ability to care for their children in their homes or place children in a safe environment until their home situation improves. Our budget will support more permanent homes for children in care through adoption and private guardianship and provide additional assistance to Alberta's 2,400 foster families. This includes foster parents like our own Legislature's Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Gordon Munk and his wife, Cecilia, two of Alberta's amazing foster parents. Gordon and his wife have helped over 250 kids in their home over the past 35 years. They currently care for three children, one of whom just won a Great Kids award as one of 16 inspiring young leaders from across our province. That is the job that our foster parents do.

Funding for foster care support is increasing by $11.4 million, allowing us to enhance supports for children in care who have family-based placements and helping us to continue support for foster parent mentoring and aboriginal caregiver training initiatives. We work closely with the Alberta Foster Parent Association to determine the best way to help foster families such as the Munks meet the needs of the children in care.

We also rely on contracted agencies to provide important services to vulnerable children and families. We are providing funding to support a 5 per cent wage increase and a $1,500 lump-sum payment for their staff to help agencies recruit and retain qualified employees in a tightening labour market. This follows the $1,500 lump sum to agency staff that was provided last September. Budget 2012 also outlines a commitment to additional agency funding to 2014-15, and we will work closely with our partner agencies to maximize this investment in the coming years.

On the homeless front since 2009 more than 4,800 Albertans have been housed through Alberta's plan to end homelessness. This includes Gordon, who ended up on the street because of a drug and alcohol addiction. His wife left him and took their child. His life fell apart. Eventually, he entered a detox facility, and then through help from the Housing First program he was able to get a place to live along with the support that he needed to stabilize his life. Today he is a different person. He reunited with his family and is in the second year of a four-year psychology program at university. His dream is to help others by becoming a drug and alcohol counsellor. He is succeeding. He is giving and will continue to give back to his community. Increased investment of $69 million in outreach support and services will help 1,800 more homeless Albertans like Gordon secure and maintain permanent housing.

3:00

One of the Premier's commitments during her leadership campaign was to provide the maximum child care subsidy to families making $50,000 or less. Increased funding in Budget 2012 fulfills this promise with an increase of $21 million for child care. We expect to provide more than 26,000 subsidies to low- and middle-income families this year, which will help more moms and dads who want to support their families by entering the workforce, which in turn strengthens our economy.

Funding for the family support for children with disabilities program is also increasing. An additional $12.6 million will help us to assist even more families so that they can raise their child at home and participate in community life. As of September 11 our monthly caseload for the program was about 8,500 children and youth with disabilities.

In an ongoing effort to build and educate tomorrow's workforce, we have budgeted $451 million for income supports, which will increase benefit rates by an average of 5 per cent. We expect to provide benefits to 34,000 Alberta households this year. This strengthens support for people who are looking for a job, training so they can get a job, or are temporarily unable to work, which is very important with Alberta's projected labour shortage of 114,000 workers by 2021.

In 2010-11 about 32,600 immigrants came to Alberta from around the world. With more than $54 million in funding this year we will continue to support immigrants as they settle into their communities and join our workforce.

Funding for the workplace standards program is increased by $4.4 million. This is a tremendously important area as our employment standards contact centre receives 130,000 calls annually. This investment will help us strengthen inspections and investigations so that workers are treated fairly in the workplace and go home safe and healthy at the end of their day.

We have a number of important priorities moving forward, including those in the Premier's mandate letter, working with Albertans to continue to develop a social policy framework, which will guide how social policy and programs are redesigned and aligned to better achieve outcomes for Albertans.

We also continue to build on significant steps to strengthen the child intervention system, including creating the Child and Family Services Council for Quality Assurance, independent experts who will make recommendations about how services could be improved.

We'll also strengthen our important partnerships with the aboriginal communities to support them in addressing complex challenges, including overrepresentation of aboriginal children and youth in care, higher incidence of family violence, and unemployment. It's the primary focus of our newly created aboriginal policy and initiatives division.

We have extremely passionate, intelligent staff on the front lines, who help Albertans directly along with those who provide support behind the scenes. We recognize that to truly improve our services for Albertans, positive change must continue within our organization as well. A big part of this is a culture of collaboration. We have and will continue to give staff opportunities to share their ideas about what, why, and how we are doing things and ways that we can continue to work better together.

We are committed to achieving better outcomes for Albertans and ensuring our investment of their tax dollars is truly making a positive difference. Together, I am confident that we will be there when Albertans need us to help them persevere through difficult times, give them opportunities to reach their potential, and contribute to Alberta's success.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Members, for the next hour we have the Official Opposition that can go back and forth with the minister. I don't know what your preference is, but if you would indicate so, we will chair it accordingly.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would appreciate the opportunity to go back and forth and welcome the staff for Human Services. I look forward to a productive few hours talking about this important ministry. I'll go by section. Perhaps that would be the most constructive way to proceed.

Just by way of preamble I think it's very interesting and very creative that all these human services have been brought together. It's not unprecedented. It's clear that many of the issues that you relate to have a lot of commonality. In fact, there needs to be a very good interrelationship between all the ministries that have now come together. You've eliminated some silos. You've opened some opportunities for communication. I guess the danger is that when anything gets too big, some of the small fry get lost, some of the most vulnerable. Of course, in many of our lives children have to take the number one position there.

In that context, perhaps, I'll begin with some questions around children and children's services. I've had some individuals certainly contact me, individual cases the minister has heard from. I won't be springing any new ones on him, but some raise questions about policy and about whether we have the right balance in terms of protecting children and families and maintaining them as long as possible in their most optimal environment.

Effective April 1 the household income that qualifies families to receive the maximum child care subsidy will increase from $35,000 to $50,000. This will allow additional low- and middle-income families to receive new or increased funding to offset the cost of accessing child care, which is a positive development; that is, of course, if they are able to find the child care space.

My understanding is that only about one-fifth of our young parents that are working – that is, about 70 per cent of the mothers that have children of child care age – can get access to child care services. Given that Alberta is experiencing a baby boom and continues to grow at a rapid pace, can the minister explain why the government opted to increase funding for child care by $17 million but hasn't funded any new child care spaces for two fiscal years?

Another question relates to the subsidy boost and the question about whether this subsidy boost had anything to do with the coming election. The timing of it, obviously, raises questions.

Does the minister genuinely believe that we have enough child spaces in Alberta at this time? According to an August 27 report from CBC, again I repeat: about 70 per cent of working mothers have children from newborn to five years of age. About 20 per cent of those children have access to daycare space. I'd appreciate hearing some comments about that.

When the creating child care choices plan concluded at the end of fiscal 2010-11, the former minister of children and youth services said in a Herald story that Alberta now has upwards of 90,000 child care spaces. Can the minister provide an update on these figures for child care spaces? Several recent media reports have suggested that some had to close, and there may not be the same number at all since a year ago, when this report was concluded.

While I support the decision to increase wages for contracted agency staff, is the minister prepared to acknowledge that daycare centres are also really struggling to find and retain trained staff because of the hard work and the low wage?

A growing problem in Alberta's large urban centres is that new neighbourhoods aren't being built to have a child care centre included in them. What, if anything, is the minister and the department doing to address the urban planning issue here?

Can the minister comment on media reports that some Calgary parents are having to pay for daycare months, more than months, in advance just to hold a spot for their child when the child is ready to need it or is born? Some are actually booking daycare spots while they're in early pregnancy, I understand. Does the minister consider this acceptable? If not, why isn't more being done to address the growing wait-lists that exist at many of the city's child care facilities?

I guess the other area that for me has been pressing as a medical officer is the standards in child care settings and the regularity of inspections, the rigour of inspections. I'd be interested to hear some comment about the standards which we are now expecting and whether they've changed since I was in practice about 10 years ago. That would be a good place to start.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it's so appropriate that we're starting with children as I continue to wear on my lapel, ever since I was sworn in as Minister of Education and now continue through Human Services, a pin which says Children First. I think it speaks to the fact that we can't lose sight of children regardless of the size of the department. We've got to focus on every child having the opportunity to meet and maximize their potential, and that's certainly what we're working towards doing.

The hon. member started on the daycare area, and I think there are a number of very positive things that I can respond to. First of all, he's saying that 1 in 5 parents are waiting for a child care space. The information that I would have is that there's an 80 per cent occupancy rate across the daycare system. Now, the problem may well be not in the question of whether we have sufficient spaces in the system but whether they're in the right places. That's always a challenge, obviously.

I know in my own constituency, for example, when we opened four new schools – if the Minister of Education is here, I'd just remind him that they're now full and that we need modulars – the first calls I got were from parents saying, "We have to leave our neighbourhood to get daycare spaces and out of school care spaces," and "How do we relay it back to the schools?" There's some work that we can do in assisting to co-locate and to make sure that there are daycare spaces in those neighbourhoods. But overall on a system-wide level there has been significant progress.

3:10

In fact, during three years of the creating child care choices plan approximately 29,000 new spaces were created as a result primarily of the investment that was made at the provincial level in encouraging those spaces to be opened. Nine thousand spaces closed, addressing the hon. member's question about closing spaces, so there was a net gain of 20,000 in that period. From April 1 to December 31, 2011, 4,602 spaces were opened, and 2,483 spaces closed, resulting in a net increase of 2,119 spaces. I can't guarantee this, but I would suspect that the closing of spaces is related to the changing demographics in areas, and that it's basically a shifting of spaces from one place to another.

I would suggest that while it's not all nirvana, there's obviously work to be done. In fact, we're seeing that being picked up in the community both by the not-for-profit and by the private sector, and that's evidenced by the fact that last year, as I said, from April 1 to December 31 so many spaces were opened without the benefit of the program that we had in place in previous years. So I think that that is actually happening. The take-up, as I say, of both the not-for-profit and the for-profit is in fact working.

With respect to urban planning issues I understand what the hon. member is saying. We had issues, for example, in Calgary where it was difficult to co-locate a child care facility on property that was zoned for schooling, for example. That's a continuing issue that needs to be addressed. That needs to be addressed both by the local communities, though, in terms of them talking to their local councillors about how they want to move forward, and we do need to address that as we plan for growth and, particularly, plan for new schools. As I said, in my neighbourhood it's very, very clearly an issue. You can put new schools in place, but if parents have to drive past them to drop their younger children off or if they need before and after school care, you haven't necessarily solved the problem.

The issue of Calgary parents and waiting lists and those sorts of things I think really are addressed by that question. Growth will happen to meet those needs, and it is happening in the system. We're in the process of completing an analysis of the implementation of an online wait-list registry for parents and child care service providers, and that will give us better data with respect to where the demand level is, which will assist providers in determining where they would like to locate and operate.

With respect to the question on accreditation I think we can be very proud of the fact that we have a very significant accreditation process in this province. Some people have decried that it's voluntary, but it's a voluntary process. About 96.5 per cent of daycares have reached that accreditation process. So I think there are very significant changes in the accreditation standards and a sincere effort on behalf of daycare providers to reach those accreditation standards. Of course, that sincere effort is complemented by the fact that we have wage top-up funding for those staff that reach accreditation standards. So $74.4 million is subsidizing daycare wages for those staff who are getting the appropriate levels of accreditation. I think that deals with most of the questions.

There was one question about the rigour of inspection. We have revised our child care inspection list. We have implemented policies and procedures on documenting inspection results and have developed training plans. So I think it's safe to say that we are significantly dealing with the question of standards, are achieving those standards, and are inspecting to make sure that daycares are safe, caring places for our youngest citizens.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, it still puzzles many of us why we would make such an important inspection voluntary. I hope the minister will look at that issue and give Albertans assurances that at some point we're going to see mandatory inspection as a standard. It's always been a puzzle to me that we would leave it up to individual daycares whether they choose or not choose to have inspections and accreditation.

Moving to child intervention, the total budget for child intervention increased 11 per cent over the last fiscal year, adding 30 new child intervention supervisor positions. Your last press release stated that funding for the 30 new positions will come from the $53 million increase to the child intervention services budget. Given that on June 30, 2011, the office of statistics indicated that the monthly average for children and youth receiving intervention services fell each year between 2008 and 2010, can you explain the rationale for increasing supervisory positions for a declining population? Given the stories that I've heard about the stresses on the front line, why would these not be the priority if indeed there are more complicated families – and I don't doubt that there are many more complicated families – to deal with? I guess I have serious questions about whether supervision is needed as much as front-line, intensive casework.

Is the boost to the child intervention budget an acknowledgement that we've been asking too much from front-line workers for too long and that the province hasn't been adequately supporting our staff in this work in a very difficult and challenging field? I'll have some more questions to do with your surveys over the last few years that reflect some stresses and strains in the system, particularly for children and youth.

Given that many of the 30 new child intervention positions are expected to be filled by promoting front-line child intervention workers, is the minister concerned that Alberta may be temporarily left with a core of front-line staff who are inexperienced and who don't have the necessary qualities to deal effectively on the front line?

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

Finally, a commonly held belief of parents who find themselves involved in the child welfare system is that child intervention workers are paid a bonus for every child apprehension they make. I don't believe that that's the case, but I needed to raise it for the record.

While I'm on the issue of child intervention, I'm sure the minister would be familiar with the name Phil Murphy, who's been at many of our doors asking for a serious commitment to a 16-year-old child who has mental illness, has drug addiction, has been involved in prostitution. He has given me permission to use her name on the floor – he is at the end of his rope – but she hasn't, so I can't use her name. I guess the question is: how well are we working between the ministries of the Solicitor General, Human Services, and Health? I have had both him and one other father approach me about what they felt were inefficient, ineffective actions in a potentially life-threatening situation, something I agreed to raise.

Clearly, there is a mental health component here. The physicians may have failed in some ways in taking action based on their powers under the Mental Health Act. It appears that the daughter is now in an unsafe home situation, and that's the question that, I guess, you folks have to assess. You have to make the call, and you have to take the hits if it isn't the right call. He cited the B.C. investigation of a father who killed three of his children, and he cited the lack of integration and the lack of supports that he was getting. I don't know that case, but he felt it was very relevant to his own.

Another apparent policy within your department is that child services – at least, he has this impression; I don't know – cannot communicate actively with estranged parents except in the case where they have been charged with something. That's a confusing issue to me. I know you have dealt with this in your office. He is not satisfied, so I feel compelled to at least get clear in my own mind what some of your policies are in relation to communicating about a child to the parents when the parents are estranged from the child.

Finally, one of the areas relating to these services is that this child has been in care and out of care, and I think many of us would like to know: what kind of evaluation are you doing on these institutional care settings to establish the degree to which they are assessing appropriately, deciding appropriately when and how to discharge, and what kind of support services will be wrapped around that minor – and I'm talking about minors now – when they are discharged from an institution? I'd be interested to hear any of your comments.

3:20

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, two things need to be said. First of all, it absolutely boggles the mind that the hon. member – and I know he's a gentleman, and I know he's trying to dispense with a rumour. But bonuses for apprehension? Give your head a shake. That could not possibly be right in any reasonable person's world, and it's not right in our world.

Secondly, I would caution the hon. member. He's referred to a specific individual and a specific family on the floor of the House, but I don't believe he has the permission of the daughter involved to identify her in that way, and it's not appropriate. I know it's sometimes constraining for the discussion of policy, but we do have to keep it at a policy level. I appreciate that sometimes it's useful to have specific examples, but we have to be cautious because people have rights.

In fact, this department and this government cannot just simply go out and apprehend somebody because a parent or some other person believes they ought to be, believes that they're a danger, because there's been a family breakdown, if there has been a family breakdown, in a certain circumstance. That's not sufficient to interfere with the civil liberties of an individual. I know previous members from that side of the House that I've had the opportunity to work with over the years stood very strongly on the concept of civil liberties and the individual rights that people have and that we should not be interfering with individual rights. I cannot just decide that I want to do something, and neither can people on the front lines of the child welfare system.

We can apprehend when we believe that someone is being harmed. We can apprehend when we believe that someone needs protection. Under the Mental Health Act, which comes under Health, an individual, a child or otherwise, can be apprehended under what I think is called a form 10 if that person is likely to be a danger to themselves or to others. The apprehension, of course, requires certification by two appropriate medical professionals as to whether that apprehension can stand, whether a person can against their will be taken into custody for treatment.

Another way in which you can take a child into custody for treatment is under the PCHAD Act, but that, again, requires a court approval and an appropriate process. People's rights, whether they're children or adults, are important, and we can't just interfere in those rights because we have intensive and caring and, yes, loving desires by a parent to do what they believe is right for that individual. There is balance that has to be undertaken.

I can assure the hon. member that the people who work in children's services, the people, certainly, that I have had the privilege of working with over the last five months in this area, take their responsibility very seriously to protect children, to work with families where they can and to repatriate children to their families, to help support families so that they can support children. If that's not possible, they work to find another safe place for a child, where they can live and grow and maximize their potential. You can't always be working in a command way. You have to build relationships. You have to work with children at all ages but particularly when they're essentially coming up to be young adults.

I think it's very important to understand that many of the cases that the hon. member deals with or hears about are not foreign to us. They are cases where there has been intensive intervention, intensive collaboration and co-operation working with them.

Again, I would end where I started, to say that if there are further this afternoon, I would trust that the hon. member would not give out personal information which serves to identify a child who undoubtedly has not given the permission and to label them in the various ways that you did with respect to activities that that child may or may not have undertaken. That's just inappropriate.

Now, the hon. member started with a comment about voluntary inspections. Inspections are not voluntary. Inspections happen when scheduled to happen. Accreditation is a process that's working very well in this province. We have a very high standard, and we're incenting that standard. We're very happy with the level. In fact, I don't think that if you mandated it, you'd get a higher level of accreditation. You know, there's always the argument of whether you legislate things or whether you achieve it in a different way. What's happening right now in Alberta with respect to accreditation and standards is at a pretty high level, and I think that most provinces would be proud to be where we are.

The hon. member referred to 30 new supervisor positions. The hon. member may recall that there was an expert panel that was convened to investigate a very serious situation in Calgary, and that panel reported just about a year ago. One of the recommendations of that panel was that front-line workers need more support, so what we have moved ahead with to do, because of the complexities and the demands of the front-line child intervention work, is to work in teams, with supervisors who act as mentors, as advisors, as supporters with a team of front-line workers. This is very much a team-based approach. Although we're calling these 30 supervisors, those will be our most experienced people, who can then assist the front-line workers by working with them in a team-based approach so that you're not out there by yourself with very complex cases, so you know you are surrounded by a team of good people who can help.

In that vein I would have to say that the AVIRT team, that's been set up in Calgary and now in Edmonton, brings not just the front-line social workers and child care workers together; it brings the police and other support people so that they can truly build a team around each child in need.

The hiring of the 30 supervisors is a very important step forward to help build the strength of our front-line teams. They will be supported. I can assure the hon. member that if any of those people – and I'm sure some of them will be – are directly from front-line staff, we will be hiring the people necessary to fill in those positions. We're going to make sure that we have supervisors and teams that have the qualities and the ability and the experience necessary to provide that strength to the front line that is necessary as our caseloads continue to grow. And they are continuing to grow. The hon. member referred to a decreasing caseload, but the caseloads are growing, albeit I think only by about 4 per cent last year in our intervention services. They also, of course, are very complex, so it's necessary to have that kind of front-line support.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was simply referring to the data from the office of statistics that suggested that 2008 had 13,000, that 2009-10 had 12,400, and that 2011 had 12,300 cases for intervention.

With respect to staff survey and staff morale a number of surveys have been held over the last four years. I congratulate the department of children and youth services for assessing them over the years and making those reports public. There are some serious signs of morale problems within at least the children and youth ministry in the past, and I think they have to be seen as connected to the quality of care and the effectiveness of our budgets. If morale among the staff is not what it should be, you're neither going to attract nor retain staff.

I'm referring to perhaps three highlights that I pulled out of the survey from 2010, where only 49 per cent agreed with the statement, "Innovation is valued in your work"; 44 per cent agreed that their organization provides the support they need to adapt to changes in their job and work environment; and 46 per cent agreed that ministries and departments are working together to achieve the goals and priorities of the government of Alberta.

That may be part of what stimulated the changes that we've seen, but I wonder if and when you're going to do another assessment and whether, in fact, a survey was done – it hasn't been reported, that I know of – in 2011. If and when you do the next survey, will you be repeating the same questions so that they can be compared? I think that would be a very valuable contribution.

3:30

Another concern that I've heard expressed is the standards for employees for child care and social workers. It sounds like it's variable and that in some cases you don't have qualified social workers to do some of the work. How do you decide, and what consistent standard do you have to hire people? What is your turnover rate? Can you give any indication of just how much of a turnover you have in the child and youth care sector? What do you see as having changed since becoming Human Services to help the retention of workers, to give them greater job satisfaction, a career ladder, continuing education, all of the things that tend to provide greater job satisfaction and retention?

With respect to the outcome-based services and intervention services – I forgot to ask this one in the last section – government appears to be moving to a new delivery model with outcome-based services. It seems valid and valuable. Many are private agencies that are being contracted to do more and more of the facework with clients, but the expenditure is hard to find in the budget. Can you give any indication of the proportion of those front-line, face-to-face workers that are now contracted out as opposed to managed within?

Many of the agencies lack the capacity to do the work that government employees do, and I guess the question is whether we are not developing the capacity in-house. What's the reason for that? How consistent can these services be if they're contracted out?

I'll leave those questions, then.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think the question around staff morale is a very interesting one to explore. What we are trying to accomplish by bringing together the Ministry of Human Services is to create a ministry where the work can be done, as we say, better together. There's a much higher degree of opportunity for people to be able to work with someone else very easily to achieve the outcomes that are necessary for the particular Albertan or Albertans that they're working for.

Whether it's in child services or whether it's in family support services or whether it's in income supports or those areas, it's the ability to come together like we've done with respect to the Terra foundation and Braemar school and to say: instead of a young mother having to come over here for income supports and go over there for child care support and go someplace else for transportation dollars and find it too difficult and not bother to continue with their schooling, we bring that together and find a way to do that so that we focus on making sure that each one of those children – I'll call them children – has the opportunity to be successful at school, which is the most important outcome piece for us, so that they can raise their children and have their children be successful. That's what's really happening.

When that happens, when you see those success stories, when you can take home with you on a daily basis that you've done something that's really assisting someone, that is empowering. That is really going to improve morale, I believe. We'll know this fall, I think, when there'll be another survey, and we'll know whether morale has improved. I can tell you from what I've seen already the excitement that we have in this department from people who feel empowered to use their judgment and skills and ability, not just follow rules, to achieve outcomes.

You talk about outcome-based service delivery, to be able to say to someone: "Let's look at what we're trying to achieve. Let's use our judgment and skills to achieve that. If there's a dumb rule in the way, let us know why you didn't follow the rule so that we can monitor that to determine whether or not that helped you achieve the outcome." Then we can either say, "Well, no; this rule or guideline has a reason," or we can say, "Let's change that, because others should know that that's not an effective process."

We know that people are complex beings, and you cannot write a set of checklists and rules and standards that work in every circumstance. So we say to people on the front line: we trust your judgment. We are hiring some of the best people. We have standards; we're not hiring just anybody. There certainly are standards and qualifications that people have to have before they're recruited to the position. As I said, we're supporting them now with additional supervisors who have a higher level of experience and service and capacity and who can be role models and mentors for them. We're freeing people up not just in the children's services area but in the income supports area and all across the department to use their judgment and skill and ability to achieve outcomes.

When we're talking about the question of outcome-based services, please don't equate outcome-based services in the same breath as hiring private services. Certainly, there are private services in some circumstances that are being employed, primarily by child and family services authorities, in the context of what we're talking here about. I think about 58 per cent of the front-line staff are actually ministry employees; 53 per cent are staff in the CFSAs. I'm not sure offhand how many of the people that would be doing that from the CFSAs would be contracted to other agencies, but even those other agencies are not always necessarily private, for-profit agencies. Some of them are contracted services, not-for-profit agencies.

Regardless, that has nothing to do with the outcome-based service delivery piece. That's not about privatization or about outsourcing. That's about focusing on every single challenge we have and saying: what is the outcome we're trying to achieve for Albertans? Fundamentally, that's what the social policy framework discussion is about: coming to a policy framework which outlines what kind of a society we want to have; what it takes for humans to live in dignity; what are the things that as a society we want to support; and what are the roles of individuals, of family, of community, and, yes, of municipal, provincial, and federal governments in achieving those things. Then how do we review our programs to say: are they designed to help achieve those outcomes?

I personally believe that we are doing well now, and I think that we will see that staff morale is going to be very high. I've been out to a number of locations with staff. In fact, I was flipping pancakes last Thursday morning as part of Social Work Week, saying thank you to some of our front-line staff, and I got into some exciting conversations with individuals there about what they're doing and how they feel about what they're doing and how they feel about a minister who says that there are two parameters, the Bible on one side and the Criminal Code on the other. It has to be legal, and it has to be ethical and moral.

Within that, we expect you to use judgment. Rules are for when brains run out. We want to achieve outcomes, and that's an important piece to say to people, that innovation is important. Doing things that make sense in the context of the people that you're working with is important, but it's also important to make sure that we know what's being done so that we can assess the results and determine if people are using their own judgment and are not achieving outcomes. Then we have to work with them in terms of improving skills and abilities. If they are using their own judgment and they are achieving outcomes, we have to look and say: do some of our program guidelines need to be changed?

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

We should be getting away from a context where somebody is not able to get the help they need because for some reason they don't fit a specific guideline. That, I think, frees up staff to achieve much better results, to feel empowered, and to not just follow dumb rules. Outcome-based service delivery is being modelled across the province in a number of areas, and the first phase in the process of that seems to be working very well. We're certainly looking forward to empowering staff so that they can be innovative, creative, and, most of all, use appropriate judgment in dealing with the circumstances that they're facing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I would be remiss if I didn't raise issues around WCB at this point. As I'm sure the minister has heard, there are some serious problems in the WCB. It appears that the balance is being lost between the interests of the worker and the interests of this organization we call the WCB. In some cases, I would say, both the worker and the employer are the losers in this.

I've had a number of communications from people who have formerly worked with WCB and felt they could no longer support the efforts of the WCB to act on behalf of individual claimants. Some concerns relate to the Millard Health rehabilitation centre and the adverse incentives to get people into that and the extra charges that are created once individuals are referred to that centre, sometimes inappropriately. Another has to do with the average duration of programs at the Millard Health centre.

3:40

Another concern raised is about the kickback to WCB, the benefits when they use the Millard Health centre. In some cases they're able to argue it on paper very well, but the end result is no different from the point of view of the individual receiving it, with surcharges of up to 260 per cent.

You may have heard some of these concerns expressed by some of the advocates for workers. There's a bonus and incentive program for treatment providers that is inappropriate and in many cases no accountability to that bonus and surcharge system. I guess there are so many issues there that I'm sure you would have some comments about where you can make some improvements in the balance between incentives for the WCB as an organization and those who run the organization, those who benefit from being in the organization.

Another area is the appeal process, a lot of concerns from workers who have been injured, ill, have to leave the country for whatever reason, and have only one year in which to sustain an appeal for injuries. Especially in a complicated case, it may be totally inappropriate to have a one-year restriction on appeals for WCB.

There are a range of issues that have been raised in detail, which I could outline in a letter to you, but it needs reform.

Mr. Hancock: I think it would be quite appropriate for the hon. member to outline any of the concerns that he might have about WCB in a letter or to work with me to arrange an appropriate time. Of course, WCB estimates are not before us, WCB being an independent body which assesses its employers and raises its money that way. It's not in my budget. In fact, the only piece in my budget relative to WCB would be the amount which is transferred from the WCB to us for the operation of the Appeals Commission.

But I would say this about the WCB. I've had discussions with the WCB board chair and its members of the board and with the CEO about the mantra of the WCB, that it's there to support injured workers, to get them back to work as quickly as possible and to support them when they can't go back to work at the same level they were at. That's its mandate. That's its motto. That's what it needs to do. That's what it should be focusing on.

The interesting part about the WCB is that as MLAs we often act as ombudsmen. People come to us for help when they get into trouble. I've often said that 25 per cent of our work as MLAs seems to be as ombudsmen for WCB claimants and 25 per cent for maintenance enforcement. But I have to say that over the past year or two that has not been the case. I have not had that level of complaint about the WCB. In fact, all of the statistics would show that it's actually performing very well and achieving very high levels of satisfaction rates with its clientele, injured workers. In fact, since I've become minister of this department, I have to say that I think we've had – I'll look for a nod up there – less than 10 complaints or issues raised with our office by MLAs or outside with respect to WCB. So the evidence would suggest that it is working well for most workers most of the time, and the satisfaction rate seems to be particularly high.

I will assure this hon. member that I will continue to look for board members for this independent organization who understand the motto, that injured workers should be supported in getting back to work as quickly as possible and provided income supports in the event that they can't go back to the same standard of work.

I would suggest to the hon. member relative to his concerns about WCB that he can communicate them to me, and I'd be happy to either sit down with the WCB and review those concerns or otherwise meet with him to discuss those concerns. But the estimates are not in our estimates book.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. I was going to raise something as well with respect to the estimates, but I think you've provided sufficient clarity, so we'll just move on.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would also be remiss in not raising some issues around farm workers at this time. It seems that there has been a systematic discrimination related to paid farm workers ever since the '60s in this province, and it appears in many ways that it's serving one group of interests over another.

Not only does occupational health and safety not apply to paid farm workers even in industrial farming operations; the labour code doesn't apply. WCB isn't necessarily present for injured workers. There's no standard for child labour, as we talked about in question period today. Farm workers can legally be carried in the back of a pickup truck, whether on farms or on highways. It's clear that this is an area where Alberta stands out and not in a very favourable light across the country.

Unfortunately, the beneficiaries are the big operations that can save money on the backs of injured workers, that can in some ways see themselves profiting from child labour, from injured workers, and from individuals who actually die and get no compensation. I could readily reference one woman from Black Diamond who continues to go to the appeal courts of Ottawa to receive some kind of compensation five years after losing her husband on such an operation.

The irony here, of course, is that the industrial operation carries a huge legal liability by not having WCB, which indemnifies them, by not having occupational health and safety standards, and by potentially being taken for millions of dollars with some of these. Yet we have a government here that seems totally resistant to looking at moving into the 21st century in terms of labour code and compensation and, primarily, occupational health and safety. We lose between 18 and 25 individuals a year, and we have hundreds and hundreds of injuries where if we had higher standards, if we had enforcement, if we had some reasonable 20th-century standards on some of these industrial operations in particular, we would see some change.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but if we could get back to the estimates; there's nothing in the estimates that I've seen . . .

Dr. Swann: Why is there nothing in the estimates relating to changing the status of farm workers?

The Deputy Chair: Okay. There's a good question. Hon. minister, would you wish to respond?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is not a new issue, as the hon. member has mentioned. You mentioned the irony of the fact that farmers could face huge liability issues and not have coverage. I would remind him that they can get coverage if they want. There is a voluntary subscription process, so farmers facing that issue could certainly opt in. One of the issues – and I understand the minister of agriculture addressed some of these issues in his estimates last night – is the fact that a lot of paid employees in terms of farm situations . . . [interjection] I'll wait until he's prepared to listen.

The Deputy Chair: Please give the floor to the minister.

Mr. Hancock: One of the real issues is designing a system which makes it easier for people to opt into that type of coverage. If you have temporary workers as opposed to full-time long-term employees, full-time long-term employees would be easier to deal with with an organization like the Workers' Compensation Board. One of the barriers to success may well be that if you have people who only work for short periods of time, to bring them in and take them out adds a real set of difficulties.

We can look at those sorts of things and say: "Is there a better way? Is there some other way of providing that kind of insurance? Would that be appropriate?" That may well be something worth looking at.

Certainly, the question of businesses as opposed to farms, the family farms, is something that one could look at and have an interesting discussion around how we could do that.

Dr. Swann: You've been looking at it for 20 years.

Mr. Hancock: Well, I've only been here for 15; I've got my 15-year pin. I don't know; I can't speak to the 20.

But I'd say this: there was a council which the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development put together to deal with this. As he's indicated, they've recently provided him with a report, and we've committed to sit down between the two ministries and work on that report, take a look at it. One thing that's very clear is that farmers have not wanted to be part of that regulatory process, but that doesn't mean we shouldn't look at some of the aspects and say: how can we do a better job? Obviously, injured workers, whether they're on the farm or off the farm, are certainly not something we want in this province, and we certainly don't want people to die with respect to work-related accidents.

3:50

Now, I would say to the hon. member, because he has raised this a number of times particularly relative to children, that one should not aggregate all those statistics. People do die on farms. Sometimes they fall through ice on ponds. Sometimes they die riding horses. Those are, one would say, home-related accidents rather than work-related accidents, but they seem to be lumped into the same statistics that the hon. member was referring to the other day.

There is work to be done, certainly, in terms of education, in terms of focusing on incidents relative to agricultural operations and perhaps in determining what type of operation it is and what type of work it is and how we can do a better job of providing opportunities for farmers to get the kind of support that they might need by way of insurance support. But that's certainly a work in progress.

Some of the statistics I looked at indicate that we are not substantively different – and I stand to be corrected on that; I'm going to have a look at this again – than other jurisdictions in the country which do have mandatory coverage. So I'm not sure it's the mandatory coverage piece that really will help us when it comes to the outcomes we want, which are fewer accidents and fewer deaths in agricultural operations.

Dr. Swann: Well, I guess the question then would be: why do we require that of all other workplaces if it doesn't make a difference? Why are we spending millions of dollars in this province on occupational health and safety standards in virtually every other workplace?

A couple of questions quickly about wages. Budget 2012 will see staff from contracted agencies who work with vulnerable children, youth, and families and with those with developmental disabilities get a 5 per cent wage increase and a $1,500 lump-sum payment. What type of hourly wage will this translate into for the average employee of one of these agencies, and will they be earning more than, say, someone who works at Tim Hortons? Given that the staff from these contracted agencies are already woefully underpaid, does the minister really think that boosting wages 5 per cent is going to be sufficient to keep people from leaving for higher paying jobs?

In relation to that I noticed that supports for independence or Alberta Works went up only 5 per cent after three years, since 2008. So the supports for people who are in dire need only went up 5 per cent, which, again, is inconsistent with what we have committed to ourselves, where MLAs get cost-of-living and inflation increases every year. Why wouldn't we give our most vulnerable people at least an indexed increase in their income each year?

But getting back to staff, what was the government's rationale for addressing the wages of contracted agency staff specifically? We know that staff morale has been low. I heard no comment on how that's being addressed. Certainly one of the areas is income.

The joint Human Services-Seniors release in February 2012 mentions that the "Budget 2012 also outlines a commitment to additional agency funding" for 2013 to 2015. What is the commitment that you identified between those three years for additional agency funding? Given that staff from contracted agencies who work with children and families had their wages increased in 2007, the same year that wages were boosted for staff working in licensed daycare centres, why are the latter being excluded from the province's generosity this year?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, just a reminder that we have about nine minutes left in this portion.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you.

Well, I'll end with the last portion with respect to the daycare workers. Daycare workers are being subsidized in a different stream to get accreditation, so as they move up their accreditation, there is income support provided. That would be one of the explanations there.

I appreciate the hon. member's interest in the wage gap but would indicate to him that we are working very closely with contracted agencies and others with respect to how to appropriately deal with this issue over time. Certainly, a 5 per cent increase plus the $1,500 bonus this year and the $1,500 bonus last year will go some way toward dealing with the wage disparity issue. But we do not want to create a different problem by increasing wages, and that's one of the things we're finding in discussions with our collaborative agencies. They want to work with us on how to apply their resources.

We have $25.7 million this year, which will assist with the wage issue, but we also have $50 million next year and $83.3 million in the following year to deal with this issue. We are working directly with the agencies involved, discussing with them how to appropriately utilize those resources in whatever way makes sense for them with respect to their staff. That's pretty important because we do not want to just simply put the money into a wage packet.

Particularly, one of the issues is that not all the people that are involved in those sectors are actually contracted by government, so you create, then, a wage disparity within an organization relative to who's paid and who's not or between two organizations, one of which is contracted and one of which is voluntary.

Dr. Swann: I don't understand that.

Mr. Hancock: Well, suffice to say, then, that there are a significant number of issues that have to be addressed there. Those issues are being raised by our partners in the process. We're sitting down and working with them through those issues to make sure that while we move towards achieving the overall policy objective of equity, we're not discombobulating the organizations in that process. I can assure the hon. member that that's a very important commitment of ours, to bring that disparity down and do it in a way that makes sense for the individuals involved.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. member, we have about six minutes remaining in this portion.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

Well, again, I'd like to hear more comment about the staff morale issue. I haven't heard any serious response about how things are going to change as a result of some of the declining morale that was indicated in the surveys. I know you can't say specifically if you haven't done a survey, but what have you put in place to deal with what appears to be a very serious morale problem, at least within the child and family services area?

With respect to the social policy framework the mandate letter to the minister instructed him to lead the development of a social policy framework, and I think it's very timely and important for Albertans to be part of that discussion. The minister references the policy framework in broad, vague terms but has yet to tell Albertans in plain language what it's all supposed to mean. I've heard it referred to as an integrated strategy, a comprehensive review, a public consultation, a transition to outcome-based service delivery, and lots of seemingly disparate issues. Can the minister explain what the social policy framework is, how long its development is expected to take, and what might happen as a result of the framework? What other ministries are involved in the initiative?

We've long advocated on this side of the House for a provincial school lunch program. Is that even on the map? It seems a pretty basic thing, that we ensure that all children at schools be nourished in order to learn. It's going to benefit everyone. I wonder if that's a practical application of some of the social policy review. Was the minister suggesting that a provincial school lunch program might actually be possible if, during the development of the social policy framework, Albertans do tell government they want this?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thought I'd addressed the issue of morale, but let me just say this. We're working very, very hard to ensure that the staff in our ministry, regardless of what sector of the ministry, are engaged and empowered to do their jobs. That in and of itself, we believe, will really work towards improved morale. People will feel valued in what they do, for their skills, their judgment, and their ability and will be able to do their work unencumbered by silly rules. You cannot write rules for every situation. I think that's something that detracts from the staff morale issue: when you feel that you're not able to actually carry out your job the way you want to. Well, we're changing that dynamic and saying: "We want to rely on your skill and your judgment and your ability. We want you to go in and help achieve the outcomes for those children or for those families, and we're going to support you in doing that." That's an incredible dynamic.

4:00

In fact, the deputy minister has made a personal mission of meeting with staff across the province in engagement sessions and learning and listening to the staff in terms of how we could do things better together and engaging them in the design of the ministry on a basis that really takes into account the learned experiences of the staff on the ground relative to what we need to do. I believe that will do a lot towards the staff morale.

We're looking at how we can better provide for learning opportunities to enhance staff training and ability where they want it, where they need it. I think that will go a long way. I can't tell you that staff morale is up or is going up, but I can tell you that from all the feedback that I've gotten – and I've made it a practice in every ministry that I've been in to go and talk to front-line staff and hear from them what's going on – what I'm hearing is that people are really excited about working better together, about being able to collaborate closely with the other people that they need, and about being empowered to use their judgment and skill to achieve the outcomes we want.

I'm quite convinced. I had some trepidation when the Premier called me to take on this portfolio. In fact, I ran immediately to my computer to see what was going to be involved. Thank goodness it isn't all of the things that were on there. I'm very much convinced now, having had the opportunity to work with the people involved, that we are actually going to achieve some very significant improvements in how we support Albertans to achieve their potential. I'm excited about that. I believe morale is going to go up. I believe it's already up.

Social policy framework is probably the most important piece of work we could undertake in government at this point in time. We've got great economic outlooks. We've got a tax and an economic structure, infrastructure support. All those things are in place. We've got an education system that's considered to be the best in the English-speaking world. It's one of the best in the world. We've got, certainly, issues in all areas that you have to deal with, but between health and education and the economic side things are going very well in this province.

The social. We have a lot of good social agency in this province, but what we don't have is a social policy framework which truly addresses what kind of a society we want to have, what it means to live in human dignity, what kind of supports there need to be for individuals and families to be able to achieve that. How do we ensure that every child has the opportunity, that in fact every Albertan has the opportunity to meet and maximize their own personal potential so that they can take care of themselves and their families and contribute back to their communities? A social policy framework brings that together and says: what are the outcomes that we're wanting to achieve as a society, and what are the roles and responsibilities in achieving that? Then we'll go back to check our program delivery piece to say: are our programs actually achieving those outcomes? Are we working together in the appropriate way, whether it's within the department or across departments?

You asked about the ministries involved: Health; Education; Seniors; Culture; Solicitor General; Justice; Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations; Tourism; Executive Council. They are all a part. We've pulled a pod together. We are working with that group of ministries internally on a fast-track basis at a high-priority level. We have a deputy minister's committee. We put a high priority on this, and I'd be happy to get back on the timeline.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Okay. The next 20 minutes are dedicated to the third party, and I would assume that you might want to go back and forth. The chair is pleased to recognize the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: To the chair, I wouldn't assume anything when I speak. On this note, last night I was actually using my 10 minutes. Actually, with the minister last night I wasn't getting real value for the dialogue going back and forth, so I used my 10 minutes. But in light of the fact that this minister and I joined the same government at the time, 15 years ago, I will go by your assumption, and I will try the dialogue. If I find the value of the dialogue is not proceeding, then I'll change that in the next hour or so.

With that, to the minister, congratulations on your new ministry. First and foremost, in looking at the plethora of your responsibilities and seeing the people that you have with you today, I think of the millions of dollars that are being spent. I'd like to know: would you like to be called Minister or Dave? I'd prefer to be called Guy, so feel free not to have to call me hon. member. You can just call me Guy.

Mr. Hancock: I'd love to do that, but I think the rules of the House preclude it.

The Deputy Chair: The rules would not allow it.

Mr. Hancock: I need to call you either hon. member or the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

The Deputy Chair: Let's proceed with the normal decorum, please, hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, I'm glad to see he would love to do that.

He did mention in his opening remarks and concluding remarks that there were some things when he looked at the ministry when the Premier called him to in fact take over this responsibility, which really, I believe – correct me if I'm wrong – was three ministries. Prior, it would have been children's services, with the hon. member from Calgary; then also the minister of housing, I believe, who is sitting on the front bench today; and then also the minister of employment. I believe those were the other three ministries that were combined. Is that correct, Minister?

Mr. Hancock: Well, actually, I suppose we certainly have all of children and youth services and all of employment and immigration. We have the program portion of the former housing ministry and certainly the responsibility for the program regarding homelessness, and we have Alberta Supports, which used to be in the Seniors portfolio.

Mr. Boutilier: With that, you said that you had some concerns when you first saw the ministry. From what the Premier talked to you about in that private conversation inviting you into cabinet to do this, you said that you had some concerns. What were the concerns based on the plethora of responsibilities in the new combined four ministries? What were your concerns? You had mentioned that you had some.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I won't go into the details of what went through my mind at the moment, but my biggest concern was whether or not we would have the opportunity to look at it from a holistic basis and say: you know, is this just going to be running programs, or is this going to be an opportunity to reshape how we think about our society and how we think about the role of government in supporting individuals to be successful? Will I have the opportunity in my mandate letter to talk about a social policy framework in the fullness of that context?

I have to tell you, Mr. Chairman, that I was absolutely delighted to be able to sit down first of all with the Premier and then with the leadership staff in the department to explore what the opportunities were, to be able to focus on how we bring together all of the social agency that's done within government, working collaboratively, because it's not all in our department – of course, Seniors has AISH and PDD, and there are other areas that certainly impact, and the social determinants of health, for example, are important – and to be able to bring together those departments and provide a leadership role and talk about the social policy framework, which sets a common understanding among Albertans of what's important to us in terms of our society and human dignity.

Mr. Boutilier: I guess we'll never be able to get to the inner voice of the discussion you had when the Premier called you. I was trying to get to your inner voice, to what you were thinking was concerning you about this new ministry that's combined. I'm disappointed that you didn't share with us what that inner voice was actually saying to you about what your concern was.

That being the case, the people that are with you today, I'm assuming, are assistant deputy ministers or deputy ministers. Is that correct? I would welcome the opportunity of the experience that they bring in helping Albertans. It's quite a plethora. I'm very proud to say that my colleague, who was the second minister of children's services, Calgary-Fish Creek, as minister of children's services has been certainly a wealth of information.

I'd like to be able to say that at the level that they are at and having been a minister for almost eight years and understanding the levels of bureaucracy, I'd really welcome – and I'm sure you would – you to share with me a story in terms of this budget and how it has helped someone and from each of the members of your team that are here on how they have helped someone directly, be it a family, be it an adopted family, be it someone with autism, be it someone in family and community supports, be it someone who is dealing with the WCB.

I would really like and I think Albertans would welcome the opportunity for every one of your team to talk about something that really makes you want to come back to work the next day. One of my greatest concerns as a minister was that sometimes I used to love – and I'm sure this minister does, and I'll ask this question – being able to meet with people on the front line and even at a director level or an executive director level or as an assistant deputy and then a deputy, and then it comes to you. I'd really welcome the opportunity.

4:10

In terms of the dollars we're spending, do you have people on the front line coming into your office, or is it always screened through the variety of levels of bureaucracy to get to you? For instance, an AR is an action request. Does it have to go through the deputy? Does it have to go to the assistant deputy, then the executive director, then the director, and then to someone in the front line, or in fact can you pick up the phone and talk to someone directly? What I'm really inviting today in a very polite way is a story where each of the senior members of your team has been able to make a difference in someone's life. I would welcome that, based on the dollars we're spending.

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Deputy Chair: Just before you go ahead, hon. minister, I know that we're here technically debating the estimates, and there has been a tradition of latitude to allow comments on the fiscal plan in general and on the three-year business plan, as you're well aware, but I don't know how these stories that have been requested from you might fit in to all of that. I look forward to seeing how you tie that all in with the estimates, which is what we're supposed to be here debating.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would presume that the hon. member opposite would be the one who would be asking about the estimates and that I would be the one who would be telling the stories of success. I will engage in that process because I think it's very important to talk about the success, about the real difference, that the money that's spent – and there's the tie to the estimates – in this budget actually does real things for real people, to help people be successful in this province.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hancock: I said earlier in my remarks that I've made it a practice in every department that I've been in to drop in on location and talk to people who are at the front end. I had the opportunity to go to Calgary a month or two ago and to sit down with some of the social worker team in one of the Calgary offices, the child and family services authority in Calgary, and hear about how they are now working together in an AVIRT team with the police, with professionals in health, with other necessary collaborations in the community to be there immediately for any child at risk.

If a child shows up at the hospital with injuries, there can be an alert, and there can be immediate action, and that's progress. One of the problems we do have and one of the mandates that I have from the Premier is on communication, in sharing information appropriately between the people who need to have it. We've got some real excitement now about the partnerships that are being created. We've had those opportunities to see those partnerships. I was on a cabinet tour – you might remember a cabinet tour – in late January, and I had the opportunity to drop in to offices in Lac La Biche. I wasn't actually in the offices, but I was meeting with people from the office. I was in the Provincial Building talking to some of our front-line workers about how they are now feeling empowered.

I'll use an example. We have a rule that says that they can provide up to $2,500 for an individual to achieve some education/training goals, and one of those goals is to achieve a class 3 driver's licence. What the individual said to me was, "If you've got a class 1 driver's licence, you can get a job here." I've worked with individuals and have said to them that if you can get your potential employer to sponsor $1,000, we'll sponsor the $2,500 because the class 1 driver's licence course process requires $3,500. He said, "Am I going to get in trouble for breaking the rules? You said that we could do that." I said: "No. That's a perfect example of an outcome-based result."

I talked about the Terra foundation and Braemar school, and Louise Dean school in Calgary is the same way. We went out to the school with the Premier at the beginning of March to see what's happening there, and there are some very exciting things. These are children having children, and their only success is going to be if they can successfully complete their education. Quite frankly, there were barriers to those successes. You had to go for income support over here. You couldn't actually apply for income support when you were pregnant; you had to wait until you had your child. You didn't know where you were going to go to live. You didn't know about child care. There were barriers to success.

We were able to work with the Terra foundation and say: how about if we provide you with the resources, and you work with these young moms and potential young moms and work those things out with respect to housing and transportation and child care and income support? They're doing it now.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you have about eight and a half minutes left.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

I certainly appreciate your enthusiasm. I also thank you for recognizing, of course, my colleague the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who I believe was key in working with people in children's services to start Amber Alert, which is something that I know she's still very proud of.

I would ask, in terms of the dollars that are being spent in the ministry in a variety of, you know, sections, does the minister take time as he assesses the dollars being spent as we are in budget debates to reflect on a weekly basis of what the successes are? How have we helped Albertans, be it someone in family and community supports or be it children as you described – and the story, I think, is a very good one – or be it someone in WCB? I'm just trying to understand the inner workings of the ministry relative to how connected the minister is with the front lines.

I'll wait till you finish the conversation because I know it's difficult to . . .

Mr. Hancock: I've got my ear on you.

Mr. Boutilier: Oh, do you? Okay. I wasn't sure. You do things in stereo?

Mr. Hancock: Yes.

Mr. Boutilier: Oh, okay.

I wanted just to be absolutely certain that in accounting for the dollars, there is a real sense of – do you as a minister, from the variety of ministries that both you and I have been in, feel really connected to the front line of what is taking place in Alberta and the dollars that are being spent? In fact, I would welcome you personally to share a story of where you feel good about this ministry and what has happened, be it from what you might have heard from one of the front-line people. I'm really interested, genuinely, in a story like that so that we can see the real value and outcome, saying: hey, this really is good value and is helping. I welcome that story.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, to respond.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I will tell the hon. member a story, and this one is a personal one as an MLA and now as a minister. In my own constituency a young lady, 12 years old, had an aneurysm. The family has been dealing with the issues that that creates for them and the love that they have for their child for the last four years. The young lady is now 16, had her sixteenth birthday just in the last week.

Most people in that circumstance wouldn't have survived, but this young lady has an incredible amount of resilience, and she's working through that. She is now able to be mobile, albeit with some assistance. She's back at school, albeit only for periods of time. In fact, she started high school this year. She was able to go to one period a day, and now she's up to two periods. Actually, I think as of recently she's up to three periods a day that she can go to school. She's getting some of her speech back and, as I said, she's getting some physical mobility back.

On Saturday night I was at a fundraiser called Build a Bedroom for Bethany. Because she can't access the second floor of her house and she's living on the main floor of the house in essentially the family area, the community has come together to raise money to build a bedroom for Bethany, to add onto the house. We don't have a program for adding onto people's private residences, but I can tell you that through our supports for FSCD, family support for children with disabilities, there have been so many ways in which we've been able to work together, between Education and children's services, to support a family in that sort of a circumstance.

You can imagine what happens to a family when they have that kind of a real tragedy happen, when they've got an alive and vibrant young lady and all of a sudden an aneurysm just fells her like that. So it's important to be able to work with families who face those challenges. They face some incredible challenges in their life, and we can't take that away. We can't replace that. But what we can do is be there to support in various ways with the assistance that they need, whether it's the occupational health and therapies, the various places. We've got some of the best facilities in the country, if you take a look there at the Glenrose, to help with rehabilitation and that sort of thing. That's how a community can come together to support, and government can be there with a lot of support areas.

4:20

I can tell you another story about another young man that I know who's going to graduate from grade 12 this year. This young man was in foster care, and then he moved to kinship care. He is really succeeding. He's succeeding because of teachers and others who worked to support him through the school system. He's succeeding because of the system in our department that has supported him in the various living relationships that he needed. I believe he's on his own now. He's going to graduate high school this year. He's going to go to university, and he's probably going to have an advancing futures bursary for youth in care to go there.

We have 610 youth from provincial care receiving advancing futures bursaries to help them go to postsecondary education. That's how Alberta society through their government can support these children and their families to be successful. That's exciting.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, and I appreciate your story. I'm sure all members, Mr. Chair, appreciate that story. I sincerely say that.

As we talk about stories, clearly, in helping such a magnitude of Albertans – really, it is quite a collective of a variety of different Albertans that you deal with – I would encourage you as minister and the dollars that are spent to continue to focus in on those stories. Really, no matter what we deal with in policy, be it fiscal or whatever, at the end of the day it really is about those individual stories. We can talk in here. I recall on that side talking about: I want to assure all Albertans. But when we come down to it, we want to really talk about Martha and Henry and their children and what their stories are. What you just did there I applaud, and in fact, I welcome even more.

The image that Albertans believe of the ministry sometimes perhaps is more perception than it is of what is really taking place. I do know that there is a lot of good that goes on. I will say this. From family and community support services, from friends of ours that we know that have been directly, positively impacted, I want to let you know that I think Alberta has a very good reputation by comparison to other provinces across Canada. I know that there are other members that also have said that. I say that that's good.

With that, I want to move on to a couple of things that I'd like to ask. Number one is on the financial dollars, if we can get back to the hard, cold facts. Did your ministry pay bonuses last year? I think the rule was that there were no bonuses. Is that correct? I believe there were no bonuses.

Number two, how much do you pay the CEO of the WCB, workers' compensation. He is the CEO. He reports to a board but ultimately falls under your purview as the minister. I'd really like to know what that is.

Also, just one final question that I would like to ask. The WCB president and CEO: have they received bonuses in the last year, and what would they be?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: You have about 20 seconds left right now.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, as I indicated, while it's my responsibility, the CEO of the WCB is the equivalent of a deputy minister – in essence, I have three deputies in this department: the chair of the labour board and the CEO of workers' compensation and the deputy minister that handles all the rest of the stuff. I just quickly would say that the hon. member can go to the annual report of the WCB. That's where their financials are, not on my statements. He can look and see what the chair and the CEO made.

The Deputy Chair: In case it didn't get noted, there's an annual report, the minister has indicated, for WCB, and there's information there for the member.

All right. We are proceeding to the next section with the fourth party. Twenty minutes are allocated. I would ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to just indicate: do you wish to go rapid-fire with the minister for 20 minutes?

Ms Notley: Indeed. Yeah.

The Deputy Chair: Indeed. All right. Proceed.

Ms Notley: Okay. We'll see how well it goes. I know this minister cares about his ministry and likes to talk about it and often will become very descriptive in his conversation about it, when sometimes maybe I'm looking for very specific answers. There are many things I want to go through. Of course, as I've mentioned this before, this setting, being in the actual Assembly, probably exaggerates that tendency a little bit from our otherwise more back-and-forth conversation. If periodically I get up and start talking while you're talking, it's absolutely not because I don't think everything you're saying is very interesting; it's because I'm acutely aware that we're debating a $2.6 billion budget in three hours, and there's a lot of stuff to go over.

I'd like to start, I guess, by just commenting on both the good and the bad around the reorganization of this ministry. I'm concerned that labour and employment standards and health and safety have been wrapped into this ministry. I think it's too much. I think we have some problems, significant problems, in that area in this province both in terms of establishing a balanced labour relations environment and also in terms of providing for real and genuine rights for working people in our province, and I am very concerned that it's been sort of swept into other extremely important areas. I'd rather see that separated out, but I'll get to that section.

What I'm going to ask you about and talk about first is the issue of income support and how that relates in a general sense to the issue of children and families, enhancement and those kinds of issues. I'll start with a more open-ended question, although I'm going to start with a specific description.

I'm glad that income support is now back with children and families. I used to think it was really kind of obnoxious the way we separated out children and families from income support because there was a lot of political support for spending resources on children, maybe not as much as I'd like but, you know, some, but somehow the parent who needed financial support, that was just sort of the dirty little secret, and it slowly got pushed off farther and farther into the closet, and we never had the two together. The fact that they are together now is good because, obviously, fundamental to successful child protection is the alleviation of poverty and dealing with those challenges.

I want to describe a situation that would exist under the current rules and regulations around what I understand your ministry does. If you have a single mom who has two children and she is expected to work, my understanding is that under your guidelines she would be paid $953 a month, and that's a combination of the core benefit and her private housing accommodation benefit. She would be paid $953 a month.

Now, if your single mom with the two children experienced what are referred to as barriers to employment, she would then be paid a little bit more. About $1,050 a month, we'll say. Those barriers include things like chronic illness, mental health issues, long-term disability, those kinds of things where the diagnoses are not quite so clear as to get them through the AISH hoop, but clearly they have significant medical issues.

You've got your moderately disabled single mom with two kids. One's three, and one's four. She receives about $1,050. Then, thanks to the federal government, they would also receive a further $461 a month through the national child benefit supplement, I believe. Then you've got your single mom with your two kids who's basically trying to live on $1,300 a month, and she's expected to look for work.

Let's then look at your child care subsidy policy. Your child care subsidy policy would subsidize her to a maximum of $546 a month for each preschooler, and the average cost of sending that preschooler to child care is roughly $756 per month, according to your own press releases. In essence, she's got a child care bill of about $400 a month. So we're back to the situation where mom is expected to look for work. Her national child benefit supplement has been completely exhausted by her need to get child care. She is trying to raise two children while looking for work on $953 a month.

I want to ask the minister how reasonable it is that you believe that that mother and those kids are going to be successful, that those kids are going to go to school well fed, that they're going to have the opportunity to learn like every other child living in a family that averages $75,000 a year in this province, whether that mom is realistically going to succeed in finding employment, whether she's going to be able to pay her heating bills, and where that money comes from? So when your child protection worker gets there and the kids are at risk and they're in clothes that don't keep them warm and there are holes in their boots and it's minus 40 out because we live in Edmonton, what do we do?

4:30

These are three things that have all now come together in your ministry, so I want to hear how you deal with that. Also, I don't want to hear about a strategy that you're going to write two or three years down the road with lots of consultation; I want to hear how you're going to deal with it right now. Then I'd like for you, if you could please, to tell me how many families there are in Alberta right now in that situation.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. minister to respond.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just because the hon. member raised at the beginning about how passionate I get and how long-winded I can be – that wasn't her language, but that's what it equated to – how many minutes are left in the first 20-minute exchange?

The Deputy Chair: You have 13 minutes and 20 seconds.

Mr. Hancock: There was a lot of detail in that question, and I understand what the hon. member is getting at. I don't believe the numbers are accurate in terms of what she's talking about. According to the numbers – and they are subject to being corrected because we're looking very quickly here – a single employable adult with two children would have a combined benefit of about $1,600. That's $1,030 in income support plus $333 in national child benefit and $237 in child tax benefit, so it's at $1,600.

The reality of what we're talking about is that when you have an individual who is in a circumstance where they are having trouble making ends meet, they need to come to Alberta Works to deal with their income issues. Of course, on the child care side, for the daycare and out of school care rates, the subsidy is going up to $628 a month for one to 18 months or $546, which, as I understand it, is just slightly below the rate that we might have, for example, at the YMCA child care in the city here.

What you're really talking about is how we are empowering the staff at Alberta Works to sit down with that young lady and say: "We understand there might be some issues, there might be some challenges getting the bills paid this month. What are we looking at longer term? How can we assist you with what you need to get into the right kind of place and space where you need to be to be able to have that quality of life with your children?"

We're not going to make nirvana by any stretch of the imagination, but we are seriously charged with helping each individual in that type of a circumstance to work through it and to get to a better place if they can. Do they need some assistance to perhaps improve their skills to get a better paying job? Well, we can work with that.

The bottom line is that it's not just about saying: "Okay. This is a single person with two children, and they have these kinds of bills, so we should write them a cheque." It's about sitting down and working with that person to say, "How can we work together to help you achieve a better place and to help you with the challenges that you face with your children?" and those sorts of issues.

While I understand what you're saying about amounts, certainly part of our overall process, which you don't want me to get into, is to determine exactly those things. What is the level that a person needs to earn to be able to live in dignity? What are the types of supports that we need to have? We will go through and review all of those.

Right now I'm satisfied that we can say that that individual can approach an Alberta Works office at any time and say, "Here's my challenge; can you help me?" and they are empowered to sit down and say: "Okay; what can we do to help that individual work through the challenges that they have?" whether it's challenges with paying the rent, whether it's challenges with respect to finding an appropriate daycare, or whether it's challenges with respect to improving their skills and abilities so that they can get a better paying job.

How many people are there in that position in Alberta? Well, right now we have 36,094 people who are either people expected to work or working or people with barriers to full employment. Of those, 20,000 of them would be what we would call expected to work, so they don't have significant barriers to employment other than perhaps their personal circumstances. So that's how many families. Now, how many of those would be single parents with two children I can't tell you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Well, a couple of comments on that. I think what would be really important – and the benefit of having these ministries merge together is that that's absolutely what you should be able to tell me – is how many of those people that are living at roughly half the low-income cut-off, as identified by most antipoverty organizations, have children in those households.

Mr. Hancock: I'd like to be able to get the hon. member that information, but I think that even with a binder this thick, Mr. Chairman, it would be presumptuous of her to understand that I might have that specific number at my fingertips at this moment.

Ms Notley: Again, I guess my point is that I would hope that that would be a priority number for you to identify because we're not going to deal with this multigenerational growth of children at risk if we don't deal with poverty right up front. My point, as I see that the minister understands, is that any child growing up in a household with that kind of income is going to have to be superhuman to break out of that. It's not going to be just a typical child or, God forbid, a child with special needs. It's going to have to be a superhuman child that breaks out of that situation that the current funding levels have put them in.

In terms of what the minister says about the numbers, the numbers that I quoted were right out of your press release in terms of average costs of child care. I used your updated child care subsidy numbers as a result of the increase that is included in this budget, and I'm reading off your website, that gives the core/accommodation rates. They don't talk there about the discretion of an income support worker, which is interesting. It would certainly be something that we would like to get.

I'll tell you something that was interesting. I don't know if the minister is aware of this, but you said: "Well, that mother" – and we'll say that it's a mother because in 90 per cent of the cases it is – "could just go in and talk to her income support worker and be told how we could figure out this problem." In fact, they can't do that. They have to make an appointment, and they have to get in line to make the appointment. Then after they've gotten in line to make the appointment, if they happen to get in line early enough, they have to come back another day.

The actual gatekeeping processes that are in place right now in your income support offices are extremely challenging for people, and they push people out. I'm certainly not suggesting that this minister was in charge of it, but I would suggest that there was a time when there was a concern about the number of people on income support. Some people suggested that perhaps those barriers to access to income support programs might well have been designed to result in the reduction of people applying.

Having said that, let me just get directly to the budget. In terms of income support there are some planned reductions, particularly with respect to line items 2.3 and 2.4, and those were the two line items that I was talking about. I'm concerned about what – I'm sorry. For line item 2.4, income support to people with barriers to full employment, there is actually an expected increase, which is slight, and then there is an expected decrease with line item 2.3, which is income support to people expected to work or working. I'm wondering where those numbers come from, if it's a change in benefits. Was there an increase in benefits? Are you anticipating a reduction in the number of people applying for benefits, or what's the case there?

Associated with that, line items 2.9 and 2.10 both anticipate going down at a rate much greater than their associated line items of 2.3 and 2.4. There I'm talking about health benefits to people who are eligible for income support, either for the go to work or the barriers to work programs. I'm wondering why the changes to the budget for those eligible for health benefits are different than the changes to the budget for the income for that same group of people. Does that make sense? Okay.

4:40

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On the first part, with respect to the lineups and appointments, I can't say that I've been to every Alberta Works office, but I've certainly been out to Alberta Works offices. I, quite frankly, have been impressed, both with the north Edmonton one and the one in south Edmonton that I visited, with the way they're set up to welcome people in a reception area, if you will, and then a counsellor will sit down with the individual involved and then get them tied into a counsellor.

I didn't observe the lineups or the appointments that the hon. member is talking about. I must have been there at just precisely the right time of day, I suppose. I can understand that if there are a lot of people who appear at the same time, there might be a need to make appointments. I don't think that there's anything inappropriate with that. Most of us have to make appointments for various things that we do in our lives. There are not sufficient resources in any world to have immediate access for everybody who needs everything all at the same time. I mean, there will be times, I'm sure, when there's a need to either take some time to wait or to get into a line or to make appointments.

I can honestly say that the two places that I was at were in active operation. The counsellors were working, the people were coming in, and I was very impressed with the set-up. In fact, I was surprised at how well set up they were and how they were actually working towards what we were hoping that they would be working towards, and that is bringing together the various resources, taking a look at individuals as a whole person, and saying: what is it that we need to do to help you be successful? You know, it's not simply a matter of: can you pay your rent next month? It's a question of: "How are we going to work with you to achieve success in the longer term? And, yes, we can help with the immediate-term issues."

With respect to lines 2.3 and 2.4, line 2.3, the income support to people expected to work or working, is in fact going down by about – what's that? – $13 million this year. There's an increase of 5 per cent to the rates, but there's an expected reduction of about 2,000 people in terms of those who will need support. That is probably as an amazing result of the fact that our economy is so good in Alberta, as a result of the policies of this government and the preparation that we've made to be ready to come out of the recession which has hit the global marketplace, that there are actually jobs that people can do. There are a lot of people focused on how we can assist people to get the jobs that they're capable of and to get the necessary skills and ability to move to jobs that they aspire to.

That's a very important part of working together with Advanced Education, with Education, with others in the system to make sure that we can get people and support them as they get to where they want to be and how they can use their potential. So we are actually expecting a reduction of about 2,000 people in the expected to work caseload.

There is an increase anticipated in the barriers to full employment caseload, so that balances that off a little bit. We have a $9 million increase in that particular area.

Now, with respect to the health benefits that's simply an expectation of saving money on generic drug costs. The hon. member will be aware that there are a lot of drugs achieving their – I don't know what you'd call it. They're running out of their protected status, if you will. There are a lot of generic drugs coming on the market, and it's anticipated that our drug costs will go down because of that and because of the work that's being done in health to lower generic drug costs generally.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we have about one minute left, not quite.

Ms Notley: Okay. Well, that's great. I'm obviously going to have to try and, hopefully, get another opportunity to question the minister.

On the issue of child care I'm just going to pepper a few questions at you, and maybe we can talk about it when I get a chance again. Your ministry has given the average cost of child care in Alberta for preschoolers. I'm wondering if you can provide us with information on the average cost per child that's in the zero to 18 month age, the 18 month to 36 month age, and then the 36 month to K age groups because, certainly, I know from personal experience that there tend to be significant differences.

As well, I'm wondering if . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Perhaps there will be an opportunity to come back.

The next 20 minutes, hon. members, is set aside for any members from any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent members should they wish to speak.

If not, then we'll open the floor up to any other member. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, Mr. Minister. You have been trying to be very informative so far. My questions are around the homelessness support. A new entity named the interagency council on homelessness appears in the Human Services budget estimates for 2012-13, page 157, line item 7.2, which presumably replaces the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness. I know that the Premier's November 3, 2011, mandate letter to the minister instructed him to create this new entity, but no specifics were provided beyond that.

Since the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness is absent from Budget 2012, can the minister please confirm that it has been or is being disbanded or will be replaced by the interagency council on homelessness? If so, what is the mandate of the interagency council on homelessness, and how will that differ from the role of the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness? Is this more than just a name change?

What is the composition of the council going to be? Will it be comprised of representatives from the province's seven community-based homelessness management bodies and the respective homeless serving agencies? Will it include any former board members from the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness to facilitate continuity? Is the council already operational, or are we in the midst of transition from the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness to the new agency?

If the council is not yet fully operational, when is it expected to be? What impact, if any, will creating a new provincial homelessness agency really have when Alberta's seven community-based homelessness management bodies are all pursuing their own local plans for ending homelessness and are expected to achieve that goal ahead of the province's 2019 target?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm glad we're going to be talking about the homelessness part of the ministry this afternoon. I think it's a very important story. It's a very important success story. I had the privilege just last week of being at the ROOPH awards. I would be challenged to say what ROOPH actually stands for. It has something to do with putting roofs over people's heads, but it's actually R-O-O-P-H. It's an acronym for something.

Anyway, the ROOPH awards recognize people who make outstanding contributions to homelessness and housing. Actually, one of the awards went to a gentleman who had previously been homeless and who had been through the collaborative processes of our department and social agencies and municipalities, had been able to go through detoxification to get his life together, and is now giving back in that area, Mr. Chairman. So a very good story.

I see the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo coming back and wanting stories. That was a very compelling story.

One of the other compelling stories that day was the fact that they gave an award to our former Premier, the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, for his leadership and this government's leadership on the homelessness issue. The 10-year plan to end homelessness and the leadership that the then Premier provided were recognized and awarded from this community agency. It wasn't something from government. It wasn't self-applause. It was community agencies in Edmonton recognizing, and that same member will be recognized nationally with an award for Alberta's emphasis on homelessness. With respect to the national award I can say that the nomination came from people who worked within the department and others who recognized that that leadership was so important on ending homelessness.

I'm really pleased I had the opportunity to get that on the record and to acknowledge the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and the work that he did and the leadership that he provided, which is recognized not just by members of his caucus and government but by all of our collaborative partners across the system of municipalities and social agencies.

With respect to the interagency council on homelessness our Premier promised last year that we would take homelessness from a provincial perspective to the next level. The secretariat has done an excellent job, and I think there are seven community organizations across the province, seven municipalities who work with community agencies to have homelessness action plans in their communities. They've worked collaboratively with the secretariat, the secretariat being in charge of developing and initiating and providing the impetus for the provincial action on homelessness, the 10-year provincial homelessness plan.

4:50

That secretariat has done good work. Its role right now, its current role, is actually one of monitoring implementation and reporting on annual progress. They do good work, but we need to take this to next level. So the Premier indicated that what we wanted to do was transition from a secretariat on homelessness, whose job was monitoring, to an interagency council on homelessness, whose job would be to work collaboratively together with all of the seven partnering municipalities and the social agencies involved to make sure that we keep the pressure on. We can't let up now. Even with the success of finding homes for 4,800 people and the services to support them in those homes and to work with them to achieve success for them, we still have more work to do. We need to take it to the next level.

We're in the process of transitioning. There's been a lot of work done. We've completed consultations with over 225 stakeholders, Mr. Chairman, including secretariat members, community partners from various sectors in Fort McMurray, Edmonton, Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, Calgary, Medicine Hat, and Red Deer. We're not taking this lightly. We're taking it very seriously, and we're doing it very conscientiously. We're working toward an enhanced collaborative approach to moving from the first phase of providing housing to end homelessness to a phase which includes a focus on preventing homelessness and providing specialized supports to targeted groups. That's very important.

First of all, we want to ensure that we can eliminate to the extent possible through our social policy framework and other processes the conditions which exist which allow the situation of people falling into homelessness so that we don't have the homelessness problem but also to understand that a certain segment of the homeless population will require support for most of their life. They've got significant comorbidities. They've got alcohol and addiction problems, they've got significant mental issues, perhaps, and they're going to need support. While we can try to eliminate homelessness with this 10-year plan, about 20 per cent of the people involved are going to need wraparound services and supports so that they can live in the community in a nonhomeless state, if I can put it that way.

The budget reflects numbers. It reflects that we'll be carrying forward support for the interagency council on homelessness instead of a secretariat on homelessness. The exact nature of how that council is made up has not been concluded yet, but we are working with agencies in terms of how to set up the governance structure on that in a very important way.

We have in the budget, of course, an amount for emergency and transitional shelter support, and the hon. member might have noticed that that went down modestly, and I say that went down modestly because, actually, the take-up of shelter spaces has gone down, which is a clear result of people being housed and less need for the emergency and transitional shelter.

The outreach supports, Mr. Chairman, are going up significantly. They're going up 28 per cent. That's a recognition of moving to this next phase. While we need to continue to work on getting people into housing and off the street and into a situation where they have a home, the housing first model, we also need to increase the supportive piece because you not only need to provide the wraparound services for those people that you're bringing into it, but you need to sustain the services for the 20 per cent that are going to need long-term support services.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think it's a very important area. It's one where I'm very proud of the fact that I was able to be there when our former Premier was recognized for the leadership role that he as Premier and we as a government have played in this homelessness area and the success that's been achieved to date and the model that we're developing, which is going to continue to build on that success and to achieve the results that we need, which is that we'll end homelessness within 10 years.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much.

Hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, continue.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. After fulfilling its initial mandate to develop the province's 10-year plan to end homelessness, the role of the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness arguably became somewhat murky. The secretariat's 2009 and 2010 reports to the minister made mention of its monitoring, assessing the implementation of the 10-year plan, regularly reporting to the public on progress, and providing strategic advice and recommendations to the minister, which could include suggesting revision to the plan. However, beyond developing the 10-year plan and producing those two reports, there seems to be little evidence that the secretariat was providing good value for the money. In retrospect can the minister cite even just one example where the secretariat recommended revision to the 10-year plan since it was first unveiled nearly three years ago?

Given that the Calgary Homeless Foundation, which is really at the epicentre of homelessness in Alberta, saw fit to revise and update its 10-year plan at the three-year mark in 2011, does the minister agree that the province would be well advised to do the same? Also, given that the Calgary Homeless Foundation unveiled its June 2011 plan specifically to end youth homelessness in the city and that the demographic is conspicuously absent from Alberta's 10-year plan to end homelessness, will the minister agree that a revision or addition which incorporates this into the province's plan is both appropriate and necessary?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. minister, to respond.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I can say with a great degree of certainty that the secretariat on homelessness has played an integral role in the initial development of the plan and has played an integral role in the ongoing discussion with our seven partnership organizations across the province relative to updating the plans. They report on an annual basis.

You know, we've moved from before the secretariat on homelessness to a question of sort of managing the homeless in terms of temporary shelters and that sort thing to a dedicated effort to transition homeless people into housing and to provide the necessary wraparound supports. That doesn't come just by sitting around a table as a secretariat. That comes with an integrated, collaborative approach between the municipalities and the province. There have certainly been a lot of resources put into providing housing units but also a lot of resources put into the collaborative support services that are necessary and to focus on how you bring them together to end homelessness. That work has been good work.

Indeed, we are moving to the next level, and we're recognizing the fact that we need to do more than just be monitoring and updating the plan. We need to be action oriented and engaged. The interagency council will bring the players together who are actually front line to help on the governance structure with input from the province and from our ministry and, perhaps, from others. We're working on that governance process, what will actually be involved in that, but the focus will be on how we work together to continue to build on the success to date.

If the hon. member thinks that any of the resources have been wasted in this area, I can assure him that there have not been wasted resources. There's been an incredible amount of focusing of resources because you're always short of resources and you need to get the results. They have got the results, and that's been acknowledged not only provincially but nationally. Alberta has played a leadership role in this area. That's not just the province; that's the province working with municipalities and with the social agencies, coming together and focusing deliberately on a problem, finding solutions, and achieving success. That is absolutely important.

Now, youth homelessness is obviously a key element and one that has certainly come to the forefront as one of the next pieces to focus on. As the next phase of the implementation of Alberta's plan we're absolutely working on developing a strategy targeted to end and to prevent, not just to deal with the homelessness that exists today but to work on the elements which result in homelessness. That's part of the work that we do, but it's also part of working together with the agency and working with the community support groups that are out there that are seeing these homeless youth as we speak and are helping to encourage them to get off the streets, to find the necessary supports that they need, whether it's to deal with alcohol addiction issues, to deal with family breakdown issues, to deal with drug addiction issues, whatever those challenges are.

We've alluded to some of those earlier in the estimates this afternoon, the need for collaborative work on that area, but one of the important pieces of it is the social agency on the street who is able to be there to provide that first stopping place and then to be able to connect right into the system so that we can zero in on the individual, what their particular barriers to success are, and help to remove those barriers to success.

5:00

I would say to the hon. member that the money that's been spent on the secretariat to date has been money well spent. We do need to transition to the next stage, and that's the interagency council. We're transitioning to the next stage. We don't want to spend unnecessary resources on administration. We want to focus the resources on the front end, but you obviously have to have some resources to build the plan and to develop the collaboration and, indeed, to do the planning framework that's necessary so that the resources that we do have in this area are well targeted and well used and achieve the same kind of result, the same kind of success that we have achieved to date in building towards ending homelessness in this province.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I was not saying that money was wasted. My question was just: did we get the value for the money? I was not saying that we were wasting money on that, Mr. Minister.

It seems that one key area where both the secretariat and the government have dropped the ball is in the ongoing co-ordination and integration of Alberta's seven community-based homeless management bodies. It was a big deal when we were talking about what is supposed to be the provincially executed plan for ending homelessness. A prime example of this has been the inability of the province to realize strategy 2 of the 10-year plan, which is to establish a provincial electronic information management system and to provide funding for its development.

The Calgary Homeless Foundation, as I'm sure the minister knows, has opted to develop its own homeless management information system, which is expected to be up and running within two years according to a February 6, 2012, Calgary Sun column quoting the CHF president Tim Richter.

Does the introduction of the interagency council on homelessness represent an acknowledgement that efforts to co-ordinate and integrate Alberta's seven community-based homeless management bodies have not always been successful?

Question 2, can the minister explain how the council is going to secure buy-in from Alberta's seven community-based homelessness management bodies in those areas where the secretariat has fallen short? Is the minister willing to admit the reason why the seven community-based homeless management bodies have not always been keen to co-operate on an initiative such as the electronic information management system is that beyond receiving provincial funding, those bodies wish to make their own decisions and retain local control?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the development of any successful organization there are always challenges and opportunities, and indeed in this one there have been challenges and opportunities. Those challenges and opportunities, though, have been met with an incredible amount of success in this area. The hon. member refers to a provincial-based information system, and indeed there is a provincial information system, and there's also a Calgary information system. The officials have been working closely together to integrate the data and the information so that they work together.

That's not an unusual approach. You have local organizations who have independence and want to operate in one manner, but I can say that we've been working very closely together and achieving success in that. I can also say that I had the opportunity – I was going to say a few days ago, but it's probably just before Christmas – to sit down with the seven partner agencies and people coming from each of those agencies and had a very good discussion on what the way forward looked like and on how we were going to work together, and there was no reticence at all from the Calgary organization or from any of the other organizations about working together collaboratively to achieve a common success across the province as well as success in their individual areas.

I don't know where the hon. member is getting the information from – I heard him say the front page of some newspaper – but I can say that certainly there are always challenges. I mean, you don't have passionate people working in an area without having some challenges. But those are good challenges and more often than not resulted in good successes. I think the outcomes-based agreements allow us to target the investments where we need them, and we're working very, very well with the agencies now.

The collaborative process I mentioned in terms of setting up the interagency council is meeting with a great deal of enthusiasm. In fact, I would suggest that the individual that the hon. member mentioned from Calgary with respect to the Calgary agency is very much a part of believing that we need to move to the interagency council as the new form of governance in this not as way of denigrating what went before but as a way of building on what went before and moving to the next level. I think there's a great degree of collaboration happening, very much good will, and very good success.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much.

The chair is pleased to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. I'm pleased to be able to have a chance to engage with the minister some more. I'd like to pick up where I left off on the issue of child care. I had asked about sort of the average cost for licensed child care to be broken down by age group. Before the minister has a chance to get up, I was wondering if I could ask just a few more questions on the issue of child care. Then I'll move on to a different subject.

One is: now that you've got employment and immigration as part of your ministry, I would hope or wonder – both, I guess – whether or not you're in a position to do a job of projecting child care needs of Albertans. There was a national agency that was funded out of Ottawa that did a fairly good job of projecting child care demand on an interjurisdictional basis. Thanks to the not-so-fabulous Stephen Harper government they've lost all their funding, so public access to a lot of the statistical information has now disappeared.

My question is whether your ministry, being in charge of employment and immigration, understanding, of course, that according to some in your government we have a projected human resource shortfall coming forth in the next two years, can assess how many families, either single-parent families or dual-parent families with both parents working, are expected to be here with how many kids. From that, you can basically do an estimate of child care demand, knowing that some people will find a way to get their aunt or their mom to take care of their child. Needless to say, that's an exception, not the rule. So I'm wondering if there's any work being done on that, and if you have any estimates on that basis in terms of going forward.

My next question is about accreditation. I've looked on the website, and maybe I'm looking at the wrong place. I'm looking on the website where it says Accreditation of Early Learning and Care Services, and that organization talks about doing this job on behalf of the Alberta government. They talk about having the validators who go out and inspect the accreditations. I'm wondering if there is some place where we can get online access to the reports of the accreditation visits?

I can see a list of who is accredited, but if I click on that place, all it says is that it's a daycare and it's been accredited. It doesn't say anything about what the report was, whether they were one of the ones that were first not successful and then subsequently were successful, what the concerns were, that kind of thing. Given that previous ministers – and I'm sure this minister would never do this – have suggested that parents have a buyer beware sort of obligation when it comes to child care. I wonder if it's possible to get access to that information.

Finally, the minister mentioned in response to a question from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View that there is an 80 per cent occupancy rate in child care and then started to equate that with the school issue, which I doubt is exactly the same. Nonetheless, I'm just wondering if there are any estimates within your ministry on what the empty spaces cost and whether we're seeing that 20 per cent nonoccupancy as being related to geography or whether it's related to them being higher cost positions or what the situation is. Is there an analysis of what that 20 per cent vacancy is caused by?

Associated with that is a request for information on an average wait-list because you know that there are lots of places out there that do have huge wait-lists, and people are waiting to get their kids in there. So I'm wondering if there is any similar data that's been put together on that?

One more question for you on child care. Last year I asked the previous minister how much money publicly traded child care companies had received from the ministry primarily through the accreditation grant funding but if there was any other start-up funding. My understanding is that at this point almost every publicly traded child care corporation has been bought up by one child care corporation called Edleun, which is the one that the ministry referred me to last year in answer to my question. I don't know if that continues to be the only publicly traded child care corporation. I'm getting a bit of a nod over there. I'm wondering if I could hear how much money they received in the last budget year.

5:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. minister, please.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member was interested in the average monthly fee for age group by type of program. I can indicate that for daycares, for example, for infants under 12 months the average was $837; 12 months to under 19 months, $861; toddlers 19 months to under three years, $768; preschoolers three years to less than 4.5 years, $728; kindergarten, which is 54 months to less than seven years and not yet attending school and grade 1 to 6, $700. Family day homes for those various selfsame categories would be $549, $587, $636, $611, and $589. Out of school care for the latter two categories, which is kindergarten, 54 months to less than seven years, is $479; school age, seven years plus attending school, $368. Those are the numbers with respect to the averages across the province.

With respect to the last question that the hon. member asked, the only publicly traded child care company that I'm aware of that's licensed to offer child care in Alberta is Edleun. It owns 41 licensed child care programs in the province, 25 daycare programs, 16 out of school care programs; in 2010-11, April 1 to March 31, 2011, $1.8 million accreditation and $4 million subsidy; in 2011-12, April 1 to December 31, $1.9 million accreditation and $4.4 million subsidy.

With respect to the online access to reports I'm given to understand that we don't actually put the reports online. That might be an interesting thing to explore, but you can go through a child care lookup tool, and with the child care lookup tool you can determine whether there were any violations, any problems identified. You can take a look to see what has come out of accreditation reports with respect to our inspections, with respect to whether there have been any violations or concerns raised, and you can use the child care lookup tool to do that. I am interested in the issue of whether accreditation reports could be put on, and if that's something we could do, I'd be interested in looking at that because I do think parents need to know what has happened.

With respect to wait-lists we're doing an analysis of the implementation of an online wait-list registry for parents and child care service providers. We're looking to see how we could implement that. Again, the key is to help parents make appropriate choices for their children, and we're certainly interested to the extent that we can do that. Our first priority for resources, obviously, would be to make sure that people had access.

There was another question in there. Predicting future demand: we don't actually have right now a good demographic analysis model for predicting future demand. It's something that we'll be looking at going forward in terms of how we can replace the information that was there. We do have a number of ways that we can use data that's readily available now. Just as an example, you mentioned people coming to the province. We know that, for example, with 5,000 provincial nominee certificates we get 7,400 people. You can figure out in that, you know, that a certain number of them will be children. So there are ways that we use existing data to help us with that process.

I know in Education we had a very, very good demographic modelling tool, and we can certainly access some of that information. We've had a baby boom in the province, so health has the information for us relative to how many babies have been born over the last five years. We can use some of that to model, but of course there's an extra piece that needs to go in that because not every child that was born is going to need daycare. There's some work that needs to be done on that, but that's an area that's certainly of interest to us to project what we need going forward.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. That's very helpful. There was one question that popped into my head that followed up there right before projection. Oh, yes, a waiting list. I think that's great if you can develop an online waiting list. I think that would be very helpful to parents to be able to sort of bounce around and check where they should go. I'm wondering if you can provide me with any information on child care availability, waiting lists, and/or extra space or shortfall, as far as you know, on a regional basis. That 20 per cent of open spaces: are they all in Edmonton? Are they all in Calgary? Are there parts of the province that have a tremendous shortage of child care versus areas of the province that do not? Again, I'm still wondering if you've done any analysis of that 20 per cent that's not filled, what the description is of those spaces that are not filled. What's their average cost, for instance, and where are they located?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister to respond, please.

Mr. Hancock: Yeah. I'm not sure I can give the hon. member the precise data that she's looking for. I can tell you that of our 25,803 daycare spaces, there's 82 per cent enrolment; of our 19,664 out-of-school care spaces, we have 73 per cent enrolment; of 8,512 family day homes, there's a 75 per cent enrolment; and for 14,834 preschool spaces, an estimated 80 per cent enrolment; so an overall 78 per cent enrolment for the 68,813 spaces.

With respect to regions I can tell you how the spaces are broken down by region. It wouldn't be a surprise to you that region 6, which, I believe, is Edmonton, has 31.5 per cent of all program spaces and that region 3, which, I presume, is Calgary, has 32.6 per cent of the spaces.

I can't tell you off the top the occupancy rates in each of those areas. Region 1 is 6.1 per cent, region 2 is 3.6 per cent, region 4 is 7.8 per cent, and region 5 is 2.9 per cent. The bulk of the spaces, obviously, are in the Edmonton and Calgary regions. I don't have at hand the occupancy rates per region, but I'm being advised that it's pretty consistent across the province in each of those areas at 80 per cent.

You'll appreciate that demographically within those regions there could be very serious shifts in areas. I mean, I know that, again, in my own area there's been huge growth in population. I have 74,000 constituents right now, a huge growth in the south end of my constituency, and there hasn't been a similar growth in daycare spaces. As I mentioned to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, as new schools open and people look at how they're going to do their planning for family and for their life in terms of how they get to and from work and school, et cetera, there's been considerable concern around how you get to school when there's no daycare in the neighbourhood.

So there are issues there. No question about that. The market is responding, as I indicated. When I say the market, I'm not just talking about the private sector. I'm talking about not-for-profit as well. Without government capital subsidy there were 2,000 spaces created over the first eight months of this year, 2,119 net spaces over that period of time. So the market is responding.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much for that information. That's helpful. I look forward to going back and crunching some of those numbers and seeing where to go from there.

I'd like to switch gears quickly – I always say quickly, and it ends up being a bit of a fruitless hope of mine – to the area of child protection, which, as you know, I'm quite concerned about. I'm wondering if I could just start, before we get into a discussion of it tonight – I hope we do get a chance to have a discussion because I think there are some sort of policy-based issues that warrant a good discussion. Nonetheless, I'm just wondering if I could get some information from you.

I was looking at your annual report from last year. Of course, we saw the number of children who in 2010 to 2011 had been receiving services from your ministry and who had experienced either an injury requiring hospitalization, or there was a fatality. I'm wondering if you can provide me with this most recent year's numbers. I realize that we've not quite gotten to March 31, but if you can give me the information there up to your most recent date possible, that would be very helpful.

In doing that, I'm also wondering if you could just clarify for me whether the term "receiving services" means the following: a child who is under a permanent guardianship order, a child who is under a temporary guardianship order, and a child whose family is in receipt of family enhancement services but remains in the custody of the family. That's my understanding of what receiving services means, but I just would like to be sure that we're comparing apples to apples.

5:20

My next question is related to some of your performance measures. In your annual report one of your performance measures is tracking, you know, how many children who have received services do not receive additional services within the 12 months following that. I have two questions arising from that. The first is: when you are looking at the numbers that I just previously asked about, the injuries and the fatalities, do you look at or track how those kids do within the year of not receiving services? For instance, if the fatality occurs of a child who is no longer officially receiving services because the file has been closed but it's still within that 12-month period that is part of your performance measure, are those numbers collected or reported anywhere?

The reason I say that is because it's a very blunt and not the most effective tool of measuring whether the speed with which files are closed is appropriate and effective. One of the reasons I raise that is that it does link up a bit to what some people are worried about as being the outcome of outcome-based services. It may or may not ultimately be the outcome of outcome-based services, but it's one thing to check.

The final thing that I'd like in this area – actually, I'm running out of time, and I suspect that you'll talk to the answer; I'm going to ask you about three more questions – is if you could just provide me with the number of children currently in your ministry that are covered by a permanent guardianship order, the number of children covered by a temporary guardianship order, the number of children who are receiving family enhancement services while still in the home, then how that compares with last year, and as well the number of foster families that you currently have and the number of those which are kinship care families. I'm sorry if the previous member asked that. If they did and you gave that information already, then just tell me. Anyway, the number of foster families and, of that, the subset of those which are kinship care families and whether that represents an increase or decrease from last year.

The final thing, which I hope we can discuss, but I think we're probably going to run out of time, is that I've had people who work in child protection raise to me the concern that essentially the acuity, for lack of a better term and to sound very technical, of the kids who are in care and/or receiving services has increased dramatically. I've had someone say – and this is just a ballpark figure, and by all means tell me if I'm wrong – that 10 years ago we might have had this number of kids that we were serving for this dollar, that what's happened over the last 10 years is that the number of kids we're serving has dropped by almost 50 per cent but that the number of dollars has almost doubled, that we're putting a lot of money into a very, very challenged group of kids, which is good because we need to – we can't not – but what's happening then is that other kids who might have received less intrusive but meaningful supports from the ministry are no longer getting that support because we're pushed into this situation of being intensely reactive.

I'm wondering if you're able to provide any observation on that, particularly from a statistical point of view, in relation to what I heard, which was that the per capita cost of children receiving services is going up and the number of children is going down. That's a proposition that's been put to me. If I'm wrong, then by all means clarify.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. We only have about 40 seconds left in this section.

Mr. Hancock: Okay. I'll start at the end and then maybe can just send you some of the data because that's easy to send. The last piece is particularly important. Acuity levels are going up, so fewer children, higher acuity levels, more resource intensive – absolutely – but that does not mean that others are being left behind. In fact, one of the things that I was very pleased with when the Premier asked me to take on the role of Minister of Human Services was that she alluded to the fact that I had previous experience in the health portfolio and the Education portfolio and that one of the things we were doing was building a wraparound services model so that we could help children and families before they got into that level of acuity.

I think there are great indications that that's working very well. Yes, the acuity levels are high and the resource-intensive piece is high, but we're also working on the other side with the wraparound services to help the other children before they get to that level.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is next, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Boutillier: Well, thank you very much. In reviewing the financial data, numbers are numbers, and of course this is important. I've seen some increases in some areas, some decreases in other areas. My first question would be: could the minister talk about an area that is concerning him and that has been identified from within his team relative to the numbers that have been presented to him as a minister; specifically, where Albertans could be put, potentially, by you not being able to fulfill your objective and your mandate? Is there any one area that you view within your ministry that you would have loved to have been able to see additional resources placed in to be able to help? That's either dollars or people.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, yes. That's a tough question. Obviously, in any portfolio there are always more things that you can do. You have to be very prudent with Albertans' resources. I think it's very important for us to have a policy framework so that we understand what the outcomes are and understand the roles and responsibilities, what things should be done by families and by individuals, what things are community issues, how we can as government support families and individuals and communities rather than trying to do things ourselves. But you can always utilize more resources, absolutely.

I'd hesitate to want to segregate out any particular area. Aboriginal children: you know, 67 per cent of our children in care are aboriginal, much higher than in the general population level. Now, that number is skewed a little bit by the fact that the numbers of nonaboriginal children have gone down, so the percentage has gone up, but that just masks the fact that we've got some real issues in helping young aboriginal children to be successful. That's an area that we need to devote some resources to, and quite frankly we need to find a way to get past jurisdictional issues and get right to the nub of helping children and helping children be successful. That's not just a matter of throwing more resources in it. It's obviously a question of how we work better together on that holistic level.

There's no question that, particularly for aboriginal on-reserve children, which are not in our jurisdiction at all – they're Alberta children, and Alberta certainly not only needs to benefit from their success, but we also pay the cost of failure – the social cost of failure is way too high in so many different areas.

I would love to see us be able to have more resources available and a better co-ordination of resources on the mental health side. Certainly, early access to mental health help for children and adults but for children particularly is important. While we've got some very good intervention processes and we're building better collaborative models and wraparound services and working well with Education – and I'm excited about the idea of school nurses, for example. I know we have a few experiences where we have mental health classrooms available, but that's an area where we could actually utilize resources very well.

On the occupational health and safety side I am chagrined by the fact that I get reports on injured workers and people killed in the workplace. Obviously, you cannot put an inspector on every corner – that's not going to do the job – but we do have to find some way to deal with that. I mean, we had, I think, three people who fell off roofs over the last year and had a security rope. They had a security harness, but the rope was too long. That's just unacceptable. It's not a matter, necessarily, of devoting more resources to it although we have hired more occupational health and safety officers last year and this year, and we're going to need to be able to put more emphasis on that side. We have a lot of businesses in this province. We've got a lot of young workers. We've got too high an accident rate, and we have to figure out how to deal with it.

Those are some of the areas where I'd like to have more resources.

5:30

If a page was available, I'd have a page deliver this to the hon. member. I have a whole package of drink coasters on pregnancy and alcohol. Fetal alcohol spectrum disorder in this province is a real issue; it's an issue right across the country. It's very preventable. I want to send these coasters over to the hon. member because members of his party are distributing coasters on .05. I really believe that if they want to engage in responsible alcohol advocacy, it ought to be where they send coasters which encourage people not to drink when they're pregnant out to the bars and the places that they're sending drink coasters to. Now, that would be a very responsible thing to do. That would save a lot of resources for this province because we have about 450 children born every year with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder. It's entirely preventable.

Those children face a lifetime of challenge, and we face a lifetime of challenge from those children because there are so many issues. When I was Minister of Justice, Mr. Chairman, I met with the Chief Judge then, Ernie Walter. He would tell me about the frustration that courts felt with these children and youth and adults with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder in their courts, with no significant thing that they could do in terms of dealing with those issues. Those people just cycle through and through and through and create more issues with respect to it.

There are ways of dealing with them, but they're very cost intensive to help those individuals lead a significant life and make a contribution and to support them in doing that. It would be better if we were able to find a way to prevent it.

I would urge the hon. member to talk to his caucus colleagues, distribute drink coasters that actually can make a difference, and invest in helping to save people from a lifetime of fetal alcohol spectrum disorder rather than encourage people to drink and then perhaps drive.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have to ask the chair about him talking about our coasters. Is that relevant to this particular budget discussion? I'd like to know. Since you've allowed that liberty, I'm going to take advantage of that liberty at this time.

Up to this point I actually thought the hon. member was acting quite ministerial, but then, based on his last comments, he actually started sounding quite political. That being the case, allow me to move on.

Obviously, the minister would like to partner with the Wildrose on coasters. It'd be my pleasure to partner with you on those coasters, for sure, on both coasters, because it is about keeping about our highways and Albertans safe. That is so important.

I'd like to move on for a moment to occupational health and safety, which is part of your responsibility, and in doing so, I want to share with you a story. It's a story from when I first was elected mayor of the oil sands capital city, Fort McMurray. It was back in 1992, when a tragic accident had happened in Alberta. I think it was on Christmas Eve. I don't know if you were aware, but it was an accident – and you don't really have to look for any papers on what the question is that I'm going to be asking – where a municipal worker in the greater Edmonton area had to do a sewer line break and went down into the excavation without the cage. Ultimately the Albertan suffocated.

I want to impart some wisdom, and I welcome his response on this. First of all, does the minister – and let us hope there are no workplace accidents, but statistically there appear to be – personally call the CEO of the company if, in fact, there is an accident or a death? Let's hope there is neither, but if there is, does the minister employ that tactic?

The reason I say that is that back in 1992 as the mayor we had municipal workers, and after seeing what had taken place in another municipality in the greater Edmonton area, I went around as mayor to work sites to see what was going on. In actual fact, there were a few situations where there was violation, in my view, of what our workplace policies were. What I did at the time was suspend the worker that was not following the actual workplace policy that was being violated.

But you know what I also did? I suspended the managers above him. You know why? I'm thinking that if this worker can feel comfortable trying to violate a policy and the actual supervisors are maybe allowing this to happen, why isn't there that type of accountability? No matter what worker is hurt, for there to be a culture where someone could get hurt, my question is: do you call the CEO directly and indicate that there has been a death in a company? It's not a phone call that anyone ever wants to make.

Really, what I found interesting was the culture, that I wasn't just holding the worker accountable; I was holding his bosses accountable, too. I impart that wisdom to you because it was a terrible situation. I would welcome the approach that you're taking as a minister in promoting this type of workplace safety so that you never have to make that call.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I think that's a very interesting approach. The short answer is that, no, I don't make those sort of calls. The longer answer would be that there might be a significant difference in workload between circulating through the sites of the municipality of Fort McMurray and visiting all the workplace sites in the province, even those where there are injuries.

But the point the hon. member is making is a very important one. Workplace safety is the responsibility of the worker, who has the right to say no, to not work in unsafe conditions, and who has an obligation to follow the safety standards that are required. But it's also the responsibility of the employer to make sure that safety standards are followed and that the right equipment is available and that safety standards are first and foremost on the work site. So it's a dual responsibility. There's no question. The point that the hon. member makes is extremely important.

Enforcement isn't the whole answer to anything, but what we are doing is moving forward with two pieces of an enforcement piece: a ticketing process so that an inspector or a peace officer can issue a ticket on-site to a worker who is violating safety regulations so that there is an immediate impact on that individual, drawing it to their attention – of course, they can issue a stop work order, as they do now – and we're looking at the ability to ticket the supervisor or the employer as well, the supervisor perhaps on an individual basis, but also, then, administrative penalties, to be able to look at what an employer may have done or not done and put in place administrative penalties.

One of the problems with immediate impact on the failure to follow safety regulations is that the investigative process and the process of issuing a stop work order, which may or may not have any impact or may have just a limited impact, or doing the necessary investigation to get to the seriousness of a prosecution is problematic. So ticketing penalties and administrative penalties – they're used in other areas; this is not an overly burdensome process – we're going to be bringing forward in the very near future, over the course of the next year, to make sure that we focus in on that.

We've had campaigns on commercial construction, on powered mobile equipment, on young workers, and on residential construction. Just to highlight the frustration in this area, I did an announcement last fall about the results of the residential construction inspection process and the violations that we found and the issues that needed to be dealt with, and it wasn't just a block or two from where that announcement was made that a worker fell off a roof and there was a fatality. What happened was that they had a safety harness, but his rope was too long.

We need to deal with those issues. I'm not dealing with them by phoning the CEO, but I am dealing with them by drawing to the attention of the company in a very dramatic way, with an administrative penalty, and to the workers in a very dramatic way, with a direct impact on their pocketbook, that they have responsibility equally for safety on the work site.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. Certainly, Mr. Chair, that's free advice. I found it to be significant when as mayor I would call directly the general manager of public works, indicating that we're holding the chain of people involved. I appreciate that.

5:40

I want to move on to another, totally separate topic. As I went back and looked at the four ministries that were combined into this one ministry that you're responsible for, I noticed that the minister's office budget – and I'm not sure how the number came up, with $903,000 for the minister's budget – has dropped by $300,000. I find this interesting.

I also find interesting that the deputy minister's budget dropped from $1.2 million to $800,000, which is $400,000. Now, my question is: have you laid people off in doing this, or where was this money actually going? Clearly, I think the minister can agree. Having been in three or four ministries myself, to see a drop from $900,000 to $600,000, I have to ask the minister: is this a shell game? Or is the work being done somewhere else, and it's just no longer in your office? Or is the work still being done, and it's no longer in the deputy minister's office? I need, really, to know where hundreds of thousands of dollars have gone.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I'm very chagrined to inform the hon. member that, notwithstanding that we went from two and a half or perhaps three ministers to one, the minister that remains in that portfolio has not had an increase in pay over the last four years.

I mean, there are obviously some salary issues. When you go from several ministers' offices to one minister's office, even though I have incredible support staff, we don't have the same number of support staff that all of the ministers' offices would have had. There are economies of scale. I wouldn't necessarily say that those were layoffs although, you know, certainly some people found employment in other areas as a result of the changes, and those are sort of the normal changes when there are shuffles or changes of ministries. We've reorganized it, obviously, and as I say, we're carrying on the workload with fewer people and with the same salaries.

In the deputy minister's office I'd suggest it's a similar piece. The deputy minister has now, I think, 13 assistant deputy ministers reporting to him. He obviously has some staff to help him with that. He's a man of many talents and abilities, but he still only has 24 hours in the day, so there are lots of staff working with him to achieve these things and to provide the co-ordination that we need. Obviously, there are economies of scale when you take, essentially, three and a half ministries and make it into one.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. I appreciate that, Mr. Chair.

I would offer the comment, with the latitude of the chair, that as you know that the Wildrose plan when they form the government, if successful, is to go to 16 ministries, which would mean even further consolidation. I would be very interested in the consolidation that took place in your area. The fact is that you can still provide the service?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, we have about two minutes and 30 seconds.

Mr. Hancock: Well, yes, Mr. Chairman. I think we can provide the services. I would point out to the hon. member that in any effective organization you can only have so many priorities at a time. So in terms of ministerial advocacy, you know, I don't actually have a much larger job than I had before. I can't say that for the deputy and the ADMs. I can only focus on a number of things. I can only be in so many places. There are a lot of invitations, for example, that come in from organizations that would like the minister to appear at an AGM or an important meeting for them. Luckily, I have a parliamentary assistant, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, who's done an incredible amount of work going around the province and meeting with business and industry in terms of the employment side. We have the chair of the secretariat on aboriginal youth.

Ms Notley: How about unions? Have you met with unions?

Mr. Hancock: I've met with the unions. I've met a lot with the unions, as a matter of fact. Mr. Chairman, I toured the plumbers' and pipefitters' new college, which is an incredible place. I've met with the leadership of the building trades union, a number of the leaders in that area, and had some very good conversations with them about things like how we can attract more workers to the province, how we can skill workers in the province. I'd like to say to the hon. member that, for example, we've met with the trade unions with respect to a project called Trade Winds. It's a cost-intensive piece but a very effective way of bringing aboriginal youth into the trades. I've met with them and actually had an opportunity to see the site when I toured that area.

I would caution the hon. member about, you know, looking at a cost-reduction strategy across government by reducing ministries. In theory, if you follow that, you could reduce it to one and just have one grand ministry. Well, of course, you're not going to be able to meet with the people who need to be met with and consult with Albertans in an appropriate way. You have to make sure that there's some cohesion to the way departments are brought together. In the Ministry of Human Services that cohesion is there, but I wouldn't say that that would be appropriate all across government.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much.
How much time do I have?

The Deputy Chair: Twelve seconds.

Mr. Boutilier: Twelve seconds.

Will the minister commit to provide in writing the answers, specifically, for any outstanding questions that haven't been answered today?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chair, I believe that I've answered the hon. member's questions rather fully and thoroughly, but if there's anything that I have not answered fully and thoroughly, in my opinion, then I would be more than happy to sit down with him at any time and continue the conversation.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Let the record show that the hon. minister did respond.

We now have about – let's see – seven minutes left in the three-hour debate, so we'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, bearing in mind that you have about seven minutes.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few questions relating to labour issues, the labour code review and labour shortage. The government recently had two Edmonton lawyers quietly conduct a review of the Labour Relations Code at the urging of a coalition of antiunion employers in the construction sector. The minister reported in question period on December 1, 2011, that he had just received the first report from those lawyers that same day and would be reviewing the material in short order. What was the report's principal finding, and what did the minister conclude about the effectiveness of the government's legislation; that is, Bill 26, the Labour Relations Amendment Act, 2008, that was enacted to put limits on MERFing, market enhancement recovery funds? Is the minister prepared to declare this matter dead and stop threatening to curtail the few tools that unions have in Alberta, and will the minister take that report public so that all Albertans can examine the objectivity of the claims?

With respect to the labour shortage a December 2011 Human Services news release reported that the province could face a cumulative labour shortage of up to 114,000 workers across all sectors by 2021. Some occupations with anticipated shortages include a variety of trades, health care workers, financial services, retail sectors, public service careers, restaurant- and tourism-related jobs. Aging demographics, a strong economy, and global competition for skilled labour are said to be some of the biggest reasons for the forecasted labour shortage.

Can the minister outline specifically what he's doing to improve labour market conditions for groups that we generally describe as harder to employ, including aboriginal people . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but could I ask the conversations to be brought down a little bit? It's difficult to hear the speaker.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

. . . youth, immigrants, mature workers, and people with disabilities? What is Alberta doing to press the federal government to raise the cap on the number of immigrant workers allowed to come to the province, and does the minister foresee any willingness on the part of the federal government to change this? We heard recently that it was boosted to 10,000. Where does that fit in the province's needs?

Can the minister explain where the federal government's arbitrary annual cap for immigrant worker admissions to the province comes from? It was reported recently in the media, as I say, that Alberta wants the federal government to raise the cap from 5,000 to 10,000. Does that still hold true in light of the latest labour shortage projections?

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll start with the last one. We, of course, would prefer that the cap was taken off, but we could live with a cap of 10,000 in the short term, moving up to 10,000 even. Any movement would be helpful because we do have a lineup of people who could be very good contributors to our province on a long-term basis, and we would like to be able to utilize that.

We've closed, for example, the family stream. If we had no cap or a larger cap, we could do a family stream or an entrepreneurial stream. We have temporary foreign workers who are ready, willing, and able to become Albertans, and they're leaving and going to Saskatchewan because they can get into the Saskatchewan plan or Manitoba because they don't have quite the intensity that we have, where they have the ability to have more flexible streams. Manitoba, for example, has the 5,000 cap as well, but they don't have the same intensity that we have in the need for workers, so they're looking at increasing their population. With a 5,000 nominee cap we get 7,400 people, and they get close to 11,500 people because they have different aims.

5:50

So, yes, we're still working on it. In fact, the Deputy Premier is down in Ottawa today meeting with the Alberta caucus, meeting tonight with the minister, and encouraging them to continue to work even though we're pleased that there's been progress made. We've had very good discussions with the federal government on this particular issue, and some of the changes that they're making on the federal level will certainly help us with respect to the Canadian experience class, with respect to moving trades into the education class, and in some of the other areas will help us with the worker piece.

With respect to employing Albertans, certainly there are strategies. I mentioned Trade Winds. There are other strategies. We have the Connecting the Dots strategy, which deals specifically with the aboriginal workforce and bringing aboriginal people into the workforce at a greater level. We have the mature workers strategy. We're working on a youth strategy. Those are three areas, in particular, where we need to focus more in terms of how we encourage and support workers coming into the workforce.

I suppose the other area that I think we need to be more effective in is helping persons with barriers to success, or disabilities, to use their ability. It's always great to be able to see that in times when there's a shortage of workers, there are more opportunities open because employers are more willing to embrace people that they might have not otherwise looked at. It's unfortunate that sometimes they wait for that, but we can take advantage of the piece that we have.

The hon. member mentioned reports. I don't remember specifically which one I was referring to in December, but there were two areas where we were asking for legal advice to the minister in areas with respect to the code. With respect to the area of competitiveness I've asked the lawyers involved to go back and do more comprehensive work relative to what is happening in our neighbouring provinces and those sorts of areas. Because that's advice to the minister, I'm not prepared to comment at the moment as to what that advice was. Suffice it to say that we're interested in competitiveness, and we're interested in looking at barriers to competitiveness. If some are brought forward, we will have a full and open discussion with all sectors of the work community, both employers and unions, relative to what, if anything, needs to be done.

With respect to MERFing, I can tell the hon. member that I'm having those discussions. I've met with the trade unions. I've met with contractor associations. We've had discussions on that, where I've asked for information with respect to the size of MERF funds and those sorts of things. [Mr. Hancock's speaking time expired] It's very unfortunate that my time is up.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much, hon. members.

Motion 6, agreed to back on February 8, 2012, requires us to now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Committee of Supply has had under consideration resolutions for the Department of Human Services relating to the 2012-13 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Does the Assembly concur with the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Those opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm tempted to move on with some legislation, but in view of the hour I would move that we adjourn until 7:30 p.m.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has moved that the Assembly stand adjourned until 7:30 this evening, at which time we will reconvene in Committee of Supply. Is that your wish?

Mr. Hancock: I understand we would reconvene in Committee of Supply in order to deal with the votes previously scheduled.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers	443
Introduction of Visitors	443
Introduction of Guests	443
Members' Statements
Impaired Driving	444
Integrity in Government Leadership	445
National Buyer/Seller Forum	445
Donations to Leadership Campaigns	454
Culture Forum 2012	454
Retrospective on the Past Year	454
Oral Question Period
Donations to Leadership Campaigns	445, 447
Long-term Care for Seniors	446, 447, 450
Alleged Intimidation of Physicians	447, 451
Bitumen Upgrading	448
Impaired Driving	448
School Infrastructure Funding	449
Resource Revenue Projections	449
Skilled Labour Supply	450
Water Allocation	451
Environmental Monitoring	452
Family Care Clinics	452
Evanston Community Transportation Access	452
Provincial Tax Policy	453
A. Blair McPherson School	453
Tabling Returns and Reports	455
Orders of the Day	455
Committee of Supply	455
Main Estimates 2012-13
Human Services	455

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fifth Session

Alberta Hansard

Tuesday evening, March 13, 2012

Issue 17e

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 27th Legislature

Fifth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Hon. Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Hon. Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader,
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysedale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Hon. Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL)
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Hon. Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Hon. Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC)
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Hon. Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, Hon. F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Hon. Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (Ind)
Stelmach, Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, Hon. George, Whitecourt-Ste. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Webber, Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 67 Alberta Liberal: 8 Wildrose: 4 New Democrat: 2 Alberta: 1 Independent: 1

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

W.J. David McNeil, Clerk	Stephanie LeBlanc, Parliamentary Counsel & Legal Research Officer	Chris Caughell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Robert H. Reynolds, QC, Law Clerk/ Director of Interparliamentary Relations	Philip Massolin, Committee Research Co-ordinator	Gordon H. Munk, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Liz Sim, Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard
Shannon Dean, Senior Parliamentary Counsel/Director of House Services	Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Health and Wellness
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Ouellette
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
MacDonald
Mason
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Dr. Taft

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Rodney
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:32 p.m.

Tuesday, March 13, 2012

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, please get to your seats. The chair would like to call the Committee of Supply to order. Prior to beginning, the chair will outline the process for this evening. The Committee of Supply will call on the chairs of the policy field committees to report on their meetings with the various departments under their mandate. No vote is required when these reports are presented according to Standing Order 59.01(7). Members are reminded that no amendments were introduced during the policy field committee meetings, so the committee will then proceed to the vote on the estimates of the Legislative Assembly as approved by the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services and the estimates of the officers of the Legislature.

Finally, the chair would like to remind all hon. members of Standing Order 32(3.1), which provides that after the first division is called in Committee of Supply during the vote on the main estimates, the interval between division bells shall be reduced to one minute for any subsequent division.

Committee Reports

The Chair: The chair will now call on the chair of the Standing Committee on Education, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, to present her committee's report.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As chair of the Standing Committee on Education pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(7) and Government Motion 6 I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2012-13 proposed estimates and business plan for the Department of Advanced Education and Technology.

No amendments to the estimates were introduced during our meeting for the committee's consideration.

The Chair: The chair shall now recognize the hon. deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Energy, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: This is just a very sweet moment for me, Mr. Chair. However, in my role as deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Energy and on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Shaw pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(7) and Government Motion 6 I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2012-2013 proposed estimates and business plans for the following departments – drum roll, please – Agriculture and Rural Development; Energy; Environment and Water; Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations; and Sustainable Resource Development.

No amendments to the estimates were introduced during our meetings for the committee's consideration. I'm so sorry about that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

I would now call on the chair of the Standing Committee on Finance, the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As chair of the Standing Committee on Finance pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(7) and Government Motion 6 I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2012-2013 proposed estimates and business plans for the following departments: Infrastructure, Service Alberta, Transportation, and Treasury Board and Enterprise.

No amendments to the estimates were introduced during our meetings for the committee's consideration.

The Chair: Thank you.

I shall now call on the deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, on behalf of the chair.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It has taken 12 years for me to get an opportunity like this, so this is a thrill – a thrill – to actually read a report. As deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(7) and Government Motion 6 I am pleased to report, although with slightly mixed feelings, that the committee has reviewed the 2012-2013 proposed estimates and business plans for the following departments: Justice and Attorney General, Seniors, and Solicitor General and Public Security.

No amendments to the estimates were introduced during our meetings for the committee's consideration.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

I shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, the deputy chair of the Standing Committee on Community Development, on behalf of the chair.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. As the highly acclaimed and hard-working vice-chair and on behalf of the Member for Red Deer-North, the chair of the Standing Committee on Community Development, pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(7) and Government Motion 6 I am less than pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2012-2013 proposed estimates and business plans for the following departments: Culture and Community Services; Municipal Affairs; and Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

No amendments to the estimates were introduced during our rushed meetings for the committee's consideration.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. members.

7:40

Vote on Main Estimates 2012-13

The Chair: We shall now proceed to the vote on the estimates of the Legislative Assembly as approved by the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services. Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 59.03(5), which requires that the estimates of the offices of Legislative Assembly be decided without debate or amendment prior to the vote on the main estimates, I must now put the question on all matters relating to the 2012-13 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013.

Agreed to:

Offices of the Legislative Assembly

Expense and Capital Investment

$135,541,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The chair shall now proceed to the vote on the main estimates. Those members in favour of each of the resolutions for the 2012-

13 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.
Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

I would now invite the hon. Government House Leader to move that the committee rise and report the 2012-13 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates and the 2012-13 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply now rise and report the estimates of the Legislative Assembly offices and the government estimates 2012-13.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I shall now recognize the hon. Member for Medicine Hat to do the report.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions relating to the 2012-13 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates and the 2012-13 government estimates for general revenue fund and lottery fund, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

The following resolutions for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013, have been approved.

Offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013: support to the Legislative Assembly, expense and capital investment, $65,414,000; office of the Auditor General, expense and capital investment, $25,650,000; office of the Ombudsman, expense and capital investment, $3,011,000; office of the Chief Electoral Officer, expense and capital investment, $23,200,000; office of the Ethics Commissioner, expense and capital investment, $940,000; office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, expense and capital investment, $6,288,000; office of the Child and Youth Advocate, expense and capital investment, $11,038,000.

Government main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2013.

Advanced Education and Technology: expense, $2,785,851,000; capital investment, $4,647,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $274,000,000.

Agriculture and Rural Development: expense, $626,384,000; capital investment, $2,196,000.

Culture and Community Services: expense, $210,492,000; capital investment, $2,500,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $2,820,000.

Education: expense, $4,429,269,000; capital investment, $4,395,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $9,834,000.

Energy: expense, $214,104,000; capital investment, $6,315,000.

Environment and Water: expense, $222,187,000; capital investment, $9,375,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $100,000.

Executive Council: expense, $31,461,000.

Finance: expense, $119,468,000; capital investment, $2,512,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $25,698,000; lottery fund transfer, $1,338,405,000.

Health and Wellness: expense, $15,894,912,000; capital investment, $77,226,000.

Human Services: expense, $2,542,180,000; capital investment, $5,698,000.

Infrastructure: expense, $1,230,571,000; capital investment, $388,867,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $193,000.

Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations: expense, $190,554,000; capital investment, $50,000.

Justice: expense, $498,252,000; capital investment, $6,835,000.

Municipal Affairs: expense, $1,265,067,000; capital investment, $5,190,000.

Seniors: expense, $2,457,348,000; capital investment, $160,000.

Service Alberta: expense, $314,573,000; capital investment, $53,073,000.

Solicitor General and Public Security: expense, $725,882,000; capital investment, $106,612,000.

Sustainable Resource Development: expense, $261,428,000; capital investment, $22,747,000.

Tourism, Parks and Recreation: expense, $158,214,000; capital investment, $13,582,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $400,000.

Transportation: expense, $1,495,560,000; capital investment, $1,246,818,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $20,976,000.

Treasury Board and Enterprise: expense, $164,371,000; capital investment, $491,000.

[The voice vote indicated that the committee report was concurred in]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 7:48 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For:

Ady	Elniski	Morton
Allred	Hancock	Oberle
Benito	Jablonski	Ouellette
Berger	Jacobs	Pastoor
Brown	Johnston	Renner
Campbell	Leskiw	Sarich
Dallas	Lukaszuk	Tarchuk
Danyluk	Lund	Weadick
Denis	Marz	Webber
Drysdale	McQueen	Xiao

8:00

Against:

Blakeman	Hinman	Sherman
Chase	Kang	Swann
Forsyth	MacDonald	Taft
Hehr	Mason	Taylor
Totals:	For – 30	Against – 12

[The committee report was concurred in]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 4

St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act

[Adjourned debate March 8: Mr. Lukaszuk]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, you still have 12 minutes.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to be able to rise again and speak to Bill 4. It is well known that as population was settling into our fine province, school boards and school districts were established. The settlement pattern was pretty well much the same throughout the entire province, with the exception of one very special area. That would be the area surrounding the city of St. Albert, including the town of Morinville, where the Catholic population, because of some great active work of Catholic priests, who were pioneers in that part of the province, had become the majority of that particular area. Being so, they have established a school board that was reflective of the majority. As a result of it, it became the public school board. Hence the non-Catholics, the Protestant community, was the minority numerically speaking, and they became the separate district. None of that was replicated anywhere else in the province as the opposite was actually true in the rest of the province.

This system has functioned quite well. However, Mr. Speaker, as you know, the demographics of the province have shifted significantly. When we look at statistical data from the last census from Statistics Canada and some preliminary numbers from the most recent one, we find, actually, that Catholic communities are in most parts of the province a minority. Even where they are a majority, on a school-board-wide basis they do not constitute a majority anyhow. So the anomaly of having a Catholic board being a public board and a Protestant board being a separate board simply could no longer be supported.

This government, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is a strong advocate of making sure that parents have not only the choice of being able to send their children to a variety of schools that includes the choice between separate or public school boards but also have the voice that they should be able to elect trustees that will represent their views on school boards to which they choose to send their children.

Unfortunately, again for historical reasons, in the town of Morinville the public school board was a Catholic school board, and public education that was nondenominational, that was secular, was not made available. So parents who chose to send their children to a public school had to de facto send their children to a Catholic school. If they were not Catholic, they could not run and/or vote for trustees for the school board to which they were sending their children, so definitely a limited choice and definitely no voice. This matter, as you know, Mr. Speaker, has been a point of contention in the community for a while.

Some choose to look at this in respect to numbers. How many people were inconvenienced by this fact? Well, frankly, Mr. Speaker, numbers really don't matter. Canadians have constitutional rights, particularly rights relevant to suffrage, and whether it's one person that's denied suffrage or a thousand people that are denied suffrage is irrelevant. The fact is that if there is such an anomaly, it has to be corrected. Bill 4 will resolve this issue once and for all.

What needs to be highlighted is the sacrifice that all school boards have participated in, to some degree voluntarily and to some degree perhaps not, in resolving this very important issue. Every single one of the three school boards – the St. Albert Catholic, St. Albert Protestant, and Sturgeon Valley public – have all given in something. They have all sacrificed something to make the system work. Now the system will be, with the passage of Bill 4, in line with the rest of the province.

Mr. Speaker, I'm hoping that members of this Legislature will vote in favour of this bill. It will give parents in Morinville not only choice but voice, and it will correct the historical anomaly. The school boards in the region, including St. Albert, will be reflective of the rest of the province, and children will continue receiving the excellent education that they have been receiving in their region except under a more standardized administration that is reflective of the rest of the province.

At this point I'm looking forward to arguments from other members of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, Minister of Education.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is, as always, a privilege to rise and speak to anything in this House, and this bill is no different. I appreciate the minister going through what was a fairly accurate description of the situation that has existed in Morinville for quite some time now. What established Morinville, which is north of Edmonton, was largely a francophone community and Catholic-based community. The Catholic majority created a situation where the Catholic board became the public school board.

For parents the only alternative to Catholic schools was the separate school board, which was Protestant. Parents wanting to send their children to a secular education in Morinville until recently had no ability to do so. They had to send their children to one of the four Catholic schools or move out of town or find some other accommodations. These parents really didn't have an opportunity to have the ability to have their political voice in the school system and also could not run for trustee. Under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, as the minister indicated, students are guaranteed access to public and secular education, which is the hallmark of any egalitarian society, the public education system.

I commend the decision of the minister. I believe it was probably the best decision that could be made in these circumstances. It aligns this school board district with what is happening throughout the province, having our Catholic and public systems available to our students. Having the ability of parents to run as trustees is also a step forward, providing that political discourse and that ability to take part in the democratic process that is very important.

If there is one concern that I'd just like to highlight, it's that this situation seemingly took a rather long period of time for what appears to be a rather simple decision. I understand that local politics are often messy and can be challenging. Nevertheless, we always have to look at these with the best interests of the students and what the people's fundamental rights are. I think the best interests of these students and their parents was to have the ability to go to a public school in Morinville.

This did not occur for some period of time, and in fact I will say that the government dragged their heels on this for a number of years, causing a lot of concern, a lot of angst, a lot of rancor, and the denial of parents' ability to send their children to a secular-school option, an option that is unfettered with religious teaching. That was unfortunate. In my view the government of the day should have moved much quicker on this. In fact, to have arrived at a decision so simple and that arrives at essentially making this school district in line with what all other school districts are in Alberta was essentially a no-brainer that should have been done quite some time ago.

8:10

Again, I will be supporting this bill, and I believe it's the right direction for the area of Morinville. I hope that the minister follows through with some commitments to getting an educational learning facility that reflects something in the character and kind that the community expects, a place where their children can go to school, hopefully with four walls, a working heater, a gymnasium, and the like, to take part and to learn to the best of their abilities to be able to participate as full citizens in Alberta going forward.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for allowing me to speak on this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I feel compelled to rise today to speak on Bill 4, the St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act. I intend to address this issue under three heads. Firstly, the issue of fairness; secondly, I will speak to some of the legal issues as I see them; and lastly, I want to talk about the bigger picture of religious and secular education.

Mr. Speaker, as the MLA for St. Albert I represent three school boards: the Greater St. Albert Catholic school regional division No. 29, which includes all of St. Albert and extends north to include Morinville and Legal and lies within four different constituencies; the Greater North Central Francophone education region No. 2, which has two schools in St. Albert; and the St. Albert Protestant separate school district No. 6.

In my capacity of representing the St. Albert Protestant separate school district No. 6, I feel compelled to rise today to speak on Bill 4, the St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act, and express some of their concerns even though those concerns may be contrary to the interests of another board in my constituency. But, Mr. Speaker, there is a wrong here, and it is my duty to address it.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is put forward with one purpose and one purpose only, and that is to resolve a problem in Morinville, where the public school board in that community has denied the legitimate constitutional rights of several families to receive a secular education for their children. Yet the fact is that the Greater St. Albert Catholic regional division is a public school jurisdiction, as the previous Minister of Education noted, with the same rights and obligations as every other public school jurisdiction in Alberta. The crux of this issue is that the Greater St. Albert Catholic school board has insisted that it will continue to only offer a religious education and has denied the parents the right to have their children opt out of religious education and classes since religious education permeates virtually every subject taught.

Instead, Mr. Speaker, in an effort to resolve the problem for the affected parents, a neighbouring school jurisdiction, the Sturgeon school division, has offered to provide a secular education for those parents that wish it and has arranged for temporary classrooms within Morinville to provide that education. Unfortunately, this is not an ideal solution for three reasons.

The Sturgeon school board does not have jurisdiction within Morinville, and hence the parents have no right to vote for trustees or otherwise be officially represented on that school board. Secondly, at the present time Sturgeon school division does not have adequate facilities within the town of Morinville to provide the kind of education that Albertans consider standard, and there is no rush to provide those adequate facilities. Thirdly, since Sturgeon school division is in Morinville by sufferance, there is no assurance that they will have adequate facilities in the future. I feel confident that the secular enrolment will grow in Morinville. On the other hand, the enrolment in this new separate jurisdiction may decline, and they may have excess space in the future.

The solution to this dilemma, as proposed by the hon. Minister of Education, is to involve another school board, the St. Albert Protestant separate school district No. 6, that has no involvement in the current dispute whatsoever, a board which in good faith came to the table to help resolve the dilemma. The St. Albert Protestant district, which has special rights under the Alberta Act as a duly constituted separate school board in Alberta, was prepared to have its designation changed from a separate school district to a public school district subject to the express caveat that it retain its duly acquired constitutional rights.

The solution proposed by Bill 4, however, takes away those duly acquired constitutional rights as a separate school district over the objections of that school board. Basically, Mr. Speaker, the government is saying in Bill 4: we can take away the constitutional rights that you've enjoyed for more than 50 years, but we won't provide a comparable guarantee.

Mr. Speaker, here we have a case where one school board, the public Greater St. Albert Catholic regional division, is denying the constitutional rights of its citizens. To solve the problem, Bill 4 proposes to take away the constitutional rights of the St. Albert Protestant separate school board, which is not even involved in the dispute in question. I ask you: is that fair and just? St. Albert Protestant is being punished, and Greater St. Albert Catholic is being rewarded.

Mr. Speaker, this has been labelled as a consensus agreement between the three school boards. Unfortunately, as I said, that is not the case. St. Albert Protestant came to the table at the request of the minister, but their agreement to any changes was always conditional on being able to retain their rights as a separate school district as guaranteed by the Alberta Act.

As the chair of the St. Albert Protestant school board of trustees clearly stated in her letter, which I tabled earlier in this session:

We want it to be clear that we did not agree to the compromise proposed. We believe that the rights afforded to our district when it was established could be protected and that continues to be our position. Although we are pleased that Bill 4 recognizes that our district's boundaries will remain co-terminus with the City of St. Albert, we are disappointed that no assurances regarding regionalization in the future have been made. This concern was our main focus in the caveat that has not been fully addressed.

Mr. Speaker, let me offer a suggestion. In 1990 this government adopted the Constitution of Alberta Amendment Act, assuring a land base for the Métis people of the province. This act provided that there could not be any subsequent amendment to the legislation unless the Métis Settlements General Council approved.

I suggest that we amend this legislation to specify four things about the new St. Albert public school district: one, St. Albert will never be amalgamated with another school jurisdiction without a positive plebiscite result among the people of St. Albert; two, St. Albert public has the right to elect trustees; three, St. Albert public has the right to levy property taxes locally, subject to the same conditions as applied to every separate school jurisdiction in Alberta; and four, the preceding terms will not be amended by the Legislature of Alberta unless the amendment is approved by the board of trustees of the new St. Albert public school district.

Mr. Speaker, our own government provides the precedent right down to the name of the legislation, the Constitution of Alberta Amendment Act. We can give rights even as we take former rights away.

This amendment, Mr. Speaker, would resolve the Morinville situation and would also satisfy the conditions that St. Albert Protestant brought to the table. In fact, this is the solution that St. Albert Protestant thought they were going to get during the deliberations.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 4 as proposed is a clear breach of trust. The St. Albert Protestant board entered into these discussions in good faith and were prepared to change their designation subject to one crucial caveat: that they would retain the rights duly conferred on them when they were established. This legislation is a clear violation of duly acquired constitutional rights. For this legislation to be asking to take away these rights by what appears to be an innocuous piece of legislation without due process is wrong, wrong, wrong.

Now let me turn to some of the legalities. This legislation is arguably a violation of section 17 of the Alberta Act of 1905, which states in 17(1):

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this Act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the Ordinances of the North-west Territories, passed in the year 1901, or with respect to religious instruction in any public or separate school as provided for in said ordinances.

Further, Mr. Speaker, the establishment of separate school districts is clearly set out in sections 212 to 220 of the present School Act. The establishment process clearly speaks of minority faith electors having the right to petition for a separate school designation. The process is quite specific and requires a petition, a public meeting, an accurate census, and a vote of electors, all of which must be carried out in accordance with the School Act. This is the process St. Albert Protestant went through some 50-plus years ago.

8:20

Similarly, there are very specific and detailed provisions for the dissolution of separate school districts which require, again, a plebiscite and a vote of the electors. There are, however, no provisions for the minister to arbitrarily either establish or dissolve a separate school district. For the hon. Minister of Education to come in and arbitrarily propose a new process for the establishment and dissolution of a school district without a public consultation process is without precedent and very heavy handed, to say the least.

The minister has clearly stated that you can't give minority rights to a majority. Mr. Speaker, minority rights were not given to a majority in the case of St. Albert Protestant. They were a minority when they acquired those rights through due process, and there is nothing – absolutely nothing – in the legislation that says they lose those rights if they become a majority.

According to the Alberta School Act separate school districts can only be established when the minority faith is either Catholic or Protestant. How, then, has it been established that the Greater St. Albert Catholic regional division represents a minority of electors in the Catholic faith as compared to the Protestants within their boundaries, which include St. Albert, Morinville, and Legal? Based on the 2001 census it is clear that electors of the Catholic faith are still in the majority within that region. The most recent census shows that Catholics outnumber Protestants by 615 persons in the three municipalities that make up the Greater St. Albert Catholic regional division. Since they are not a minority faith, they cannot – let me repeat that; they cannot – become a separate school district.

Our own government made a commitment last fall to conduct a complete census in the affected area, and we have reneged on that commitment. The census was to have been completed in December, and, as I understand it, it was put on hold. As the minister has stated, you can't give minority rights to a majority. How, then, can the minister give minority rights to Greater St. Albert Catholic regional district? How can he take away the rights of one district based on that philosophy but give them to another district based on the same philosophy? What's good for the goose is good for the gander.

The fundamental issue that brought this dilemma to the public's attention last year in Morinville is, however, really the crux of the discussion that we should be having here today. This brings up a further legal issue with regard to the current situation, which needs to be the focus of the discussion. That question is the basic right to teach religion during the school day in the first place, and it goes back to the constitutional roots of this province. The Greater St. Albert Catholic school division has adamantly stated that they have the right to teach religion throughout the school day, and religion permeates virtually every subject taught in that school division. This practice is presumably being allowed to continue under the proposed Bill 4.

As I said, this is a basic issue that brought this dilemma before the Department of Education a little over a year ago. That is with regard to the authority to teach religious education in schools in Alberta. Sections 137 and 138 of chapter 29 of the 1901 ordinance respecting schools states:

No religious instruction except as hereinafter provided shall be permitted in the school of any district from the opening of such school until one half hour previous to its closing in the afternoon after which time any such instruction permitted or desired by the board may be given.

Subsection (2) goes on to say:

It shall however be permissible for the board of any district to direct that the school be opened by the recitation of the Lord's prayer.

Section 138 says:

Any child shall have the privilege of leaving the school room at [any] time at which religious instruction is commenced as provided for in the next . . . section or on remaining without taking part in any religious instruction that may be given if the parents or guardians do desire.

Section 45 of the same school ordinance refers to the formation of separate school education in Alberta and says this.

After the establishment of a separate school district under the provisions of this Ordinance such separate school district and the board thereof shall possess and exercise all rights, powers, privileges and be subject to the same liabilities and method of government as is herein provided in respect of public school districts.

There is nothing in the ordinance and nothing in the Alberta Act that permits what is often called permeation, and I am not aware of any court decision in Alberta that upholds permeation. As I understand the situation, Mr. Speaker, the 1901 ordinance is still in effect in Alberta, and therefore I would suggest that compliance with this section would resolve the problem in its entirety without the need for Bill 4 or any further action.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to speak about the broader picture with regard to religious and secular education in Alberta. I'm concerned that Bill 4 only presents a Band-Aid solution to the problem of secular education in Alberta. It only addresses one localized problem.

We're becoming an ever more cosmopolitan society in Alberta and, in fact, all of Canada. We need to rethink our centuries-old laws and traditions and determine if they are still applicable in this day and age. We live in a multicultural society, and there's no justification for extending special privileges to one religious minority that we do not extend to all.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of comments or questions. The leader of the NDP.

Mr. Mason: That will do fine, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I listened carefully to the hon. member's speech. I find most interesting both its content and the fact that he is speaking so strongly against a government bill. I wanted to clarify, though, the status of the constitutional protection afforded to the Protestant school board of St. Albert. You mentioned this was in the Alberta Act, and I wonder if you will explain to me how the Alberta Act might be amended and whether or not this bill is amending the Alberta Act in some sort of legal way.

Mr. Allred: Thank you for that question. As I understand it, the Alberta Act and the 1901 ordinances are part of the constitution of Alberta, and therefore a statute of this Legislature cannot amend those constitutional acts.

I'd just like to go on, Mr. Speaker, and continue. I believe that we are obliged to obey the law and the Constitution as they are written, but neither the law nor the Constitution is perfect or written in stone. Even as we obey their current form, we have the right to talk about changing them. We have the right to change them when there is a public consensus that the time has come for change.

The Constitution once denied women the right to vote. At one time you had to be wealthy and own property to be a Senator. At one time Alberta did not have ownership of the mineral wealth beneath our soil.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge all of us to rethink the concept of mixing religion with education. Religious institutions do a good job of teaching their beliefs to people who wish to partake in their activities outside of the educational institutions. Why should we push religious education on those who are either nonbelievers or simply want to separate religion from the education system, as clearly is being demonstrated in Morinville today?

This is a serious issue that requires extensive debate in the public arena. Let us not continue to hang our hats on outdated constitutional decrees that apply to 19th century Canada. Let us debate the issues based on 21st century realities.

Just in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge the Minister of Education to review and rethink this legislation in view of the fact that it takes away the constitutional rights of one responsible school board in an attempt to remedy an injustice against the constitutional rights of the citizens of Morinville, rights that have been denied by the public board of Greater St. Albert Catholic regional division.

There are also several other issues that need to be resolved with regard to whether this proposed legislation is or is not ultra vires the current School Act. It is my understanding that neither the minister nor this Legislature has the authority to override existing legislation without specifically amending or addressing that legislation by virtue of a notwithstanding clause.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.
8:30

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the previous speaker for speaking so eloquently to his points. I disagree with most of what he said, but I do like the fact that there is some democracy happening here. It's amazing. Unfortunately, this good member has said that he's retiring soon from this House after his four years of good service in here. It's too bad that that can't happen just as a normal course of business because if he, unfortunately, was a member of the government, there would probably be consequences attached to his speech. [interjection] Oh, I think that's pretty much without doubt.

I would like to say unequivocally, though, that I do support Bill 4. I think that it's a good solution to a very complicated and uncomfortable problem. The Wildrose caucus, of course, believes very strongly in school choice and parental choice in education. We're very supportive of our public school system, of our Catholic separate school system, of independent schools, charter schools, private schools, both nonprofit private schools as well as the for-profit private schools although those are very much in the minority, and, of course, of the home-schoolers. We support all school choice. We think that it is actually not just a . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The five minutes for 29(2)(a) are completed.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, do you want to go on on the bill?

Mr. Chase: Yes, I would like to, but I don't mind if the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere would like to continue in his train of thought or possibly catch up to his train of thought.

Mr. Anderson: I was next on the list as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you want to continue on the bill, not under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Anderson: Sure. I'd love to. On the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Then go ahead.

Mr. Anderson: I would like to say that we support this bill because we support parental choice in education. Our understanding is that this bill will allow for students to finally have their own permanent secular school in the town of Morinville. It will allow parents that opportunity. Arrangements are apparently being worked on to ensure that a permanent school site will be up and running in September of 2012. Ownership of this school site in Morinville, as far as we understand, will be reassigned to the Sturgeon school division.

This bill indicates it will see the Sturgeon school division expand its borders and become the public system in Morinville and Legal. The Greater St. Albert Catholic regional division will lose its public status and, instead, become a separate school district.

We feel that this is a very good solution to this problem and a good resolution. There is nothing more frustrating for a parent than feeling that they don't have any option with regard to educating their children that is appropriate to them. It would be just as frustrating on the other side if there were folks in there who wanted to home-school their children, send them to a nonprofit, independent faith-based school or to a charter school, for example, and who didn't have that option except perhaps having to move in order to obtain it. It's very good to see that there's been choice in this regard because there are some parents that wanted to send their child to a full secular public school. I think that that's a very appropriate thing to want, I think it's a perfectly good thing to want, and therefore we support that.

I do want to note, though – and I would disagree with the Member for St. Albert on this – that we actually feel that school choice is a fundamental human right. In the UN declaration of human rights it says specifically that parents have the right to decide what education is appropriate for their children. That's in the UN declaration of human rights. [interjection] Yeah, it is. Absolutely. It's in there. I tabled it once. I'll table it again at another time. It is important. You know, we can't pick and choose all the time. Human rights are human rights, and we need to be respectful of them in that context. So that's something that we support.

I congratulate the minister on coming to a resolution on this. I'm not sure why this wasn't resolved before, but, you know, these things, I guess, do take time. I hope that as we go forward, there will be respect given to the separate school division as well as to any charter schools or home-schoolers in that area that want to continue on in those types of educational settings and that this won't be used in any way – and I don't think that's the intent at all – to subvert or replace other school choices in that school division.

On behalf of the Wildrose caucus – well, at least on behalf of this member – I'd like to say that we support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the bill or under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Chase: On the bill if possible.
Did you want 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Anderson: No, thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. We're being very conducive and collaborative and collegial tonight, wanting everybody to have all opportunities to speak.

I didn't get a chance during the 29(2)(a) – and possibly the hon. Member for St. Albert would want to reciprocate – but I was very interested, in fact intrigued by the hon. Member for St. Albert's explanation and reading of the various legislative acts going back to 1905, the Charter rights of separate and public boards. I thought he did a very good job in terms of delineating the problems associated with this particular school district.

Mr. Speaker, while I am not a Catholic, I strongly support the right of the separate school to exist. I support the historical rights. I understand very well from first-hand experience what it's like to be sort of shuffled into a circumstance from a religious basis that you don't necessarily agree with. When I was a student at Guthrie elementary school on the Namao air base in the 1950s, we didn't have a choice in terms of religious instruction other than that if you were a Catholic, you went off to one room, and if you considered your religion to be under the Protestant banner, you went off to another room. There was no ability to take into account whether one was Jewish or whether one was Muslim or whether one was Hindu. You had to basically divide up into Protestant or Catholic.

Therefore, as a member of a Protestant religion that did not necessarily fall into the similar categories of other religious groups, I found it rather laborious to have a minister of a particular faith speak to our group for approximately an hour on I think it was a Friday afternoon. This has happened to Protestant children for a number of years who have not been able to exempt themselves from the religious instruction portion of the separate, in this case public, school jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, I consider myself to be a religious person but a religious person by choice, not by requirement. The hon. Member for St. Albert raised an issue that had not occurred to me with regard to awarding a right to one group involving taking away the rights of another group. I believe in public debate and public input. I don't think public input can simply be in the form of marking an X on a ballot every four years; neither do I believe that everything can be solved by plebiscite.

We've seen examples, particularly in the States, in California – and I believe it was a plebiscite over Bill 21 – that very much diminished the rights of public schools and public school boards to collect taxes. The public school system was very much battered by plebiscites where with only 35 per cent probably a similar statistic of students or parents connected to a public school system were being constantly out-voted, and the necessary support for textbooks, for learning, and so on in California was tremendously undermined.

8:40

I believe that the hon. Member for St. Albert, in mentioning the problems associated with Bill 4, which was designed to give equal rights to the Protestant members of the St. Albert community, has a point. I don't know whether by his discourse he believes that Bill 4 is so badly conceived that it cannot be corrected by an amendment, but I would look forward to the hon. Member for St. Albert attempting to solve the problem that he has indicated exists with an amendment if it's possible to accomplish that.

The right of an individual to be educated according to their faith is important. That said, there is the discussion about the separation of religion and state and the separation of education and state. If we fragmented our school system to the point of recognizing every single religion and if every single religion that fell under the Protestant circumstance were to have its own independent school, then the collectivity of the public system would be so undermined as to segment or fragment the education. Having been a teacher in the public system for 34 years, I would not want to see that fragmentation occur.

I find myself in a quandary because I support the rights of Catholic individuals to have the religious instruction within their school which is a large part of their education system and has historically been so. I have gone to Catholic school board celebrations. I have seen elementary children interacting with junior high children, interacting with high school children, and bringing the idea of God and Jesus and disciples into every aspect of their celebration. I believe they should have that right to do so.

That said, Mr. Speaker, I also believe that we have become so politically correct that when schools decide that it's offensive to have or to use the word "Christmas" to refer to a concert, then I have troubles with that.

Mr. Speaker, when I was a schoolteacher, I would have what I called the international Christmas choir, and students were encouraged to be a part of it regardless of what their religion was. The songs that we sang were primarily – well, I shouldn't say primarily. There were some Silent Night versions in different languages. We also sang Jingle Bells in different types, in French and English, and O Christmas Tree, O Tannenbaum, and so on, but none of the students were required to be in that particular choir.

I was grateful that the schools I attended did not take Christmas out of the option. We've seen circumstances where, out of risk of offending other individuals, any iconography – crucifixes, et cetera – has been sealed and closed so as not to offend. I believe that religion for those who choose to have a religion can be very supportive in individuals' lives. I am grateful, for example, that my grandsons are exposed in a very dramatic way to the Hindu religion. My son-in-law Vivek Warriar is a Hindu. His mother and father are practising Hindus. I appreciate the fact that my two grandsons get a global perspective on different religions.

One of the stories that I'd like to very quickly recount is my eldest grandson, Kiran, expressing sorrow to my wife that she only had one God, and he was quite willing to lend her some of his from the Hindu religion. It's open-mindedness, it's tolerance, it's appreciation, it's understanding of all religions that is absolutely essential to a good education, not putting forward a particular view that you believe is superior to all others but accommodation. That to me is what a public system and under that public system the separate system, which is part of a public system, does so well. It accommodates.

Now, Bill 4 is an attempt to accommodate the religious rights of Protestant children in a public school board that historically was of a Catholic denomination, and I'm not sure based on the eloquence of the hon. Member for St. Albert and his very detailed research that Bill 4 can be all things to all people. I don't believe in sacrificing either a majority or a minority for the sake of one or the other. So possibly, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Member for St. Albert believes that Bill 4 can be amended to provide the solution that is absolutely necessary in Morinville, where children have a choice between a nonreligious education and a religious education, then I would be very interested in seeing that amendment, and I would most likely support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to participate in a debate which originally I thought was of a black-and-white nature but now has several shades of grey.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 4, the St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act. I think one of the most important things that we do here in the province is educate our children for the future. I think that everybody in here understands how important education is and, even more important, how exciting it can be for children to go to school, to have that desire to learn, to be able to express themselves, and to be able to intermingle with other children their own age. It's just really neat, and it's one of the things that, I must say, I truly enjoy as an MLA. Any opportunity that I have to go into the school and talk to students, I jump on it, and my assistant knows that any time I'm asked, I say: absolutely, yes. It has to be a pretty snowy day and I have to be a long way away before I won't make the effort to go to a school to be able to talk to children, though I myself wouldn't want to have to go back and be subject to the tests on whether or not we remember.

It's exciting in this bill that what the government is recognizing here is the importance of choice. There were parents in Morinville that have been struggling for some time and not happy with the choice that they had and were kind of caught in the system, so I want to speak in favour of this bill. It's excellent to have parents that are excited to be able to send their children to a school of their choice that isn't perhaps – again, we want that choice. The previous speaker just spoke about the importance of the Catholics being able to have classes where they can integrate their faith and their beliefs with their teachings and how they come together. Others may feel that that's not appropriate or not values that they want their children to be exposed to, I guess, or to be open to.

8:50

I think in today's world more and more parents are certainly realizing the importance of diversity and are wanting to be exposed, to understand why other people are doing what they're doing and to really understand them in a much more diversified way because that's how we become great neighbours. That's what has been the strength of Alberta, the diversity of the culture of belief and of opportunity here in the province.

I'd just like to say that I'm in favour of this bill. It's good to see that they're going to have choice and that those children will hopefully go to school there and will be excited and want to learn.

One other thing, and I believe my colleague spoke to this. One of the things that we keep pushing in the Wildrose, that we think is critical, is that this Premier said that she wanted to be open and transparent. I think that her dictionary and mine are very different, though, Mr. Speaker. Open and transparent would be to say: here's our priority list of schools; this is where we're at. Circumstances change, and this is a classic example of where if we had the top 12 schools prioritized, I think Albertans across the province would realize: look, we've just formed a new school district and we need to have a new public school in Morinville for these children to go to. All of a sudden that would pop to the top because with this bill I believe they're supposed to be in their new school by September 2012. The explanation would be quite clear. It would be open, it would be transparent, and it would be understood. Albertans are very good that way, I believe.

It is disappointing that we don't know whether this is just going to be another one of those hollow announcements, where the government says they're going to do something to placate citizens and does not really come forward. But, like I say, if we actually had a list and that went to the top of the list for Albertans to look at and see, then they would kind of be bound by their word and not have this loosey-goosey attitude that: "Oh, yeah. We promised that, but we can skip out of that. After the election it won't matter. We've got four years."

We seem to see this attitude being replicated day after day, month after month, year after year, and it's disappointing to many residents. I must say that the ones from Fort McMurray are still looking for their seniors' care facility that they were promised, are still looking for their twinned highway that has been years and years in progress, and little progress has been made on that.

In closing, I just want to thank the minister for bringing this bill forward and for providing choice for the children in Morinville. I hope that children across the province will be served well with our schools this year and in the coming years and that we'll prioritize our money in the right areas.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other hon. members wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments. I have to rise and disagree entirely with the hon. Member for St. Albert with respect to the comments that he made on this bill. I had the privilege of serving as Minister of Education. I had the privilege of working with the people in the greater St. Albert area with respect to trying to resolve what is, in essence, an historical anomaly in our province. The St. Albert Protestant school board is the only minority faith board of the Protestant religion in the province. That in itself is interesting because when people tend to think of separate schools, they tend to think of them as being Roman Catholic.

The act, in fact, does not refer to a faith; it refers to the rights of the minority faith to establish a board. Of course, it's talking about the Christian faith because that was what was extant at the time that the Alberta Act was put into place.

However, we are currently in the year 2012, and people are entitled to a public board that is not faith-based. Unfortunately, in the greater St. Albert area the public board was the Greater St. Albert Catholic board. Now, being a public board, as Minister of Education at the time I insisted that they had an obligation to public education, to provide public education choices. That board did not see it that way. They believed that they had a right to offer only permeated Catholic education.

Now, the hon. Member for St. Albert talks about permeation not being what was provided for in the Alberta Act, and he may well be right. But the fact of the matter is that over the years we've developed a minority faith school system around the province that's primarily Catholic except for St. Albert, and it's one where I would think it would be very difficult to remove your faith-based principles from the operation of the school. In fact, that's one of the bases of Catholic education in this province, that it operates on a standard in which the faith principles permeate what they do.

In almost all of Alberta parents and students have choice. They can choose to go to a minority faith-based school that's Catholic. Now, there are some parts of the province which don't have that because numbers don't warrant it, but there is a provision for establishing a minority faith school if the numbers ever did warrant it.

The problem in Morinville particularly is that there is not a secular school option, and people are entitled to that. People are entitled to go to school and to have school in a secular way without faith-based principles involved or, in fact, to ensure that their children are exposed to their own faith in their own way. That's one of the challenges that we always have in education is the balance between the role and rights of parents to teach their children their values and the role of the education system to ensure that children grow up having a fulsome understanding of the world that they're going to live in and the community that they live in and having respect and tolerance for others.

This is an issue that needs to be resolved in the greater St. Albert area. The fact of the matter is that the St. Albert Protestant school board does not exercise any of the rights of a minority faith-based school board. They don't exercise the right to hire solely Protestant teachers. They don't exercise the right to exclude others that are not of the Protestant faith. In fact, they operate very much like a public school board. One of the issues that was important to the St. Albert Protestant school board was the right to tax, but the fact of the matter is that even though minority faith boards have the taxation authority, there is no difference across the province between a public and a separate school board with respect to the funding for students under that board. So the right to taxation is a distinction without a difference.

No school board in the province has the right to determine exclusively their boundaries. So while the board may have had some concerns about whether or not they would ever extend beyond the limits of the city of St. Albert, the reality is that at some point in the future there could be in Alberta a reason to change school districts. I don't believe that that's the intention of the minister now. It certainly wasn't any part of the discussion. But there's no way that you can guarantee forever the boundaries of a board.

Here's a situation where you could do one of two things. You could under the existing School Act redraw the boundaries. But the interesting reality is that most of the parents served by the Greater St. Albert Catholic school board now approve of the educational opportunities that they have and, by choice, include their children in them. So just redrawing the boundaries would disenfranchise the majority of parents and students in that area who actually like the status quo. It's a very small number of people at the moment who want the secular option.

It really would not be in the best interests of the education of the children, which, after all, is what we should be focusing on in this discussion: what's in the best interests of the children? It would not be in the best interests of all the children in that area just to simply redraw the boundaries as some people have suggested we could do. It was suggested to me when I was Minister of Education, and I know it's been suggested to the current Minister of Education: "The easiest solution is there. You don't need to pass a new act. You can just redraw the boundaries." In fact, under the School Act you could redraw the boundaries, but that would not be in the interests of the majority of the people whose children are going to school there.

The only real solution is the solution that the minister is proposing and that this act is bringing forward, and that is to establish a public school board in St. Albert, currently the St. Albert Protestant board, make that the public board, put Sturgeon as the public board for the area outside of St. Albert, and then recognize a minority faith board to cover the areas that are currently covered by both St. Albert and the Morinville-Legal area and the other minority faith boards that have been established in the area and consolidate them into a greater St. Albert Catholic board. That's what is being proposed here.

It's the only logical solution. It's a current solution for the current times. It's not something that everybody agrees with, but it is in the best interests of the children in that area, which is what this ultimately is all about.

9:00

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I would like to address my question to the hon. Minister of Human Services, who has previously been Minister of Education. He and I share a number of values about the strength of the public system, which incorporates the Catholic system. He's very aware, for example, that you don't have to have a baptismal certificate or a letter from a priest to attend a Catholic school. A Catholic separate division does not segregate individuals based on their religious background, race, creed, colour, et cetera. That's why the separate school is part of the public school program.

I honestly want to indicate that this isn't a trap that I'm setting out for the minister, but I would be interested in how he feels about schools using religion as a requirement such that in order for you to attend the school, your parent has to regularly attend a Protestant church or you regularly attend a different type of school, and if you're not of a particular faith persuasion, then that school can draw a line and deny you access to their particular institution and still receive 70 per cent of public funding even though there is very much a case of discrimination.

I know the government talks in terms of: why choice? But when discriminating is used in the negative sense of limiting a person's opportunity to participate, Mr. Minister, can you talk to the House as to the legitimacy of a school that restricts based on religion?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Minister, we're talking about the bill of the Sturgeon and St. Albert school districts. If you want to answer, go ahead.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, very clearly, there needs to be a public school option that takes all comers, that's available for all students to go to. That has got to be paramount. But we also need to have choice in our system. We support choice in Alberta, and choice in our system in Alberta is what has helped to create the best education system in the English-speaking world. Not my words but the words of the Prime Minister of Great Britain when he spoke to the Parliament of Canada.

Choice has been one of the things that has helped to create that best education system in the English-speaking world. Choice involves religious choice in some circumstances, teaching choices, teaching methodologies, things that attract kids to school, perhaps, like sports schools and otherwise. As long as there's one public school system that's a top-quality school system that is available for everyone else, then the ability for parents and children to make that choice based on whether it's religion or otherwise is perfectly valid.

I would correct the hon. member. The minority faith boards are entitled to accept only students of the minority faith if they wish. What we find with most boards across the province is that they will accept any student that wants to come as long as they are prepared to accept the religion that's taught or that permeates the school process.

Choice is very important. What we need to do and what we have to do with this act is make sure that there is a public option that's available to all students and needs to be available in Morinville. That's what this does. After that the choices that are available through francophone schools, through minority faith schools, through charter schools, through private schools, whether they're faith-based private schools or otherwise, and through home-schooling are all a wide range of choices which help to make the healthy system that we have.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member?

On the bill?

Seeing none, hon. Minister of Education, do you wish to close the debate?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for this illuminating debate. It was interesting to engage in a variety of points of view. I think that with few exceptions we agree that Bill 4 is the right solution at the right time to provide the parents of Morinville with choice and with voice, and I would ask for the question on this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Bill 5

Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act

[Adjourned debate March 8: Mrs. Jablonski]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on Bill 5.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll keep my comments brief. This is a good bill. It's a good idea. I think it will help our seniors in their desire to live as long as they possibly can in their own homes. It will remove a financial obstacle that many of them face in the form of their property taxes, and it will do it without in the long-term burdening other taxpayers. It doesn't seem to have a lot of downside, and it has a significant upside, if I may put it in those terms.

I would just urge the government to put this initiative in a broader context for seniors staying at home. One of the challenges that seniors face is inadequate home care. The benefits of home care are enormous. I would strongly support an expansion of publicly funded, publicly delivered home care and have it implemented across the province. I'm very aware in recent weeks of the inadequacies of the home care programs in parts of Alberta and, frankly, the inadequacies of the assisted living facilities in parts of Alberta as well.

While the government is moving forward with Bill 5, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act, in a good way, it needs to also bring in other programs to help seniors stay in place, including home renovation and home health care programs and home support programs. I suspect one of the reasons the government isn't doing that more effectively is because of a philosophical resistance to that somehow. I think that's a mistake. I frankly think that those kinds of programs not only are good for seniors but actually save money for the taxpayer, Mr. Speaker.

With those comments, I will once again say that I will be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm grateful to speak to this bill, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act. Being an only child with an elderly mom, this bill resonates with me. I think our population is aging, and our seniors are a growing portion of the population. They have a unique set of circumstances and challenges that I think need to be addressed, and property taxes are, no question, one of them.

When we get to retirement age, we want to relax, and quite frankly we want to take it easy. Our seniors spend decades working hard and deserve to retire, but some have to worry. They're on fixed incomes, and money is tight. A fast-growing economy is a great thing to have. Great job prospects can't be taken for granted, but when the economy grows and so do the prices for all the things that they have to pay for, life gets tough for those on a pension.

9:10

Seniors have critical items that can't be skipped. They have to pay their mortgage. They have to pay the rent, and they have to pay for groceries. They also usually have to pay for medications. Property tax is something that cannot be avoided either, and the taxes go up with the rise in property values. Seniors end up feeling pinched.

There are some cold hearts out there that say: "Well, you know what? Sell your house or take out a home equity loan." Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not fair to our seniors. They deserve better than that. Seniors should be able to stay in their homes for as long as they can. That, quite frankly, is best for everyone. Our seniors are most happy – and I use my mom as an example – living in their home for as long as they can. They're healthy; they're comfortable. They deserve to be in their home. My parents lived there for some 60 years.

It is true that many seniors and my parents bought their home at a very, very low price compared to what my mom sold her house for today. But selling the home and moving doesn't really solve the problem. Selling at today's high prices means buying at today's high prices. It's a wash. You know what? It's a lot of hassle moving, and quite frankly it's not fun to uproot yourself, especially when you're in the comfort of your home and you're in the comfort of your friends.

I've seen these commercials for home equity loans on TV a lot. They seem like a great idea. You can travel the world by using the equity in your home. That may be good for some people, but they shouldn't be forced to do it just to meet their basic expenses. Going into debt to make it through the day is a bad situation, and we shouldn't encourage it.

A home isn't just a place where you live. Quite frankly, it's where your heart is. It's where your memories are. People want to keep property in the family. It doesn't always have to be a cottage or a cabin. It can be just a place, Mr. Speaker, where you and I grew up. Seniors want something to pass down to their kids and their grandkids. They don't want to sell their home or have a mortgage on their property.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I like and I know the Wildrose likes what this bill is aiming to do. It seems clear enough. Eligible seniors will have their property tax deferred until they move or until they pass away. In the meantime, the government will pay the municipality for the deferred taxes. It will become a loan agreement between the senior and the government. Quite frankly, that seems reasonable to me. In larger cities in Alberta property taxes are over $2,000 per year. Some cities get close to $3,000. Combined with utilities, you could get easily to $5,000 in total. This is a huge figure for someone living on a pension.

But for the Alberta government, which brings in revenue near $40 billion, this is more affordable. Government has a role to play in helping those in need. The cure here is the deferral. By deferring the property taxes, seniors have more income to spend on their essentials like their grocery bills and their prescriptions. The money will be paid back. The government is not losing here. It's clear in the bill that interest will be paid as well as the cost of running the program.

Mr. Speaker, I do have some questions, not about the intent but about some details. One concern that I do have is the eligibility criteria. Now, I've read through this bill, and I didn't find an age for eligibility, so one must assume that the age is 65. In B.C. it's 55. In New Brunswick it's 65. I think that is something that the government has to clarify. Is it 65? Is it 55? What age makes sense? I think most Albertans feel that 65 may be fair, but that's something that the government has to clearly indicate in Bill 5.

I do want to raise another issue in regard to income. I don't see any income or net worth requirements in this bill either. My hope is that we recognize that seniors on a fixed income can have a valuable home because they bought it 30 years ago.

On some days, Mr. Speaker, I've done a lot of door-knocking. You can walk into a home that's considered a million-dollar home, and I happened to do that a couple of weeks ago. They happened to pick a great neighbourhood at a great time at what we would consider a great price. I was door-knocking, and the seniors invited me into their home. She was 88, and he was 89. You know, it was a cold Saturday afternoon, and I decided I would have a cup of tea with them.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I've got to tell you that I saw some things that I haven't seen in a long time: shag carpeting throughout the house – in fact, it was orange carpeting – the furniture was old, and the house was well kept. So you can't necessarily judge a book by its cover. We had a nice cup of tea, and they were explaining to me how they're struggling day by day and month by month. Even though they had this beautiful home in Lake Bonavista, it's that cover that we can't judge.

I think all seniors, no matter where they live, should be eligible for the property tax deferral. I don't think we want to get into means testing. After all, no matter what the income is, no matter what the property value is, it will all be paid back with interest.

I think what we have is a good piece of legislation, and I think it shows that we're going to recognize that our seniors are struggling with their bills and may need some help. I've explained – and I'm looking forward to the debate – some of our concerns about the age. Quite frankly, I'm surprised, to be very honest with you, after we've done some research about other deferral programs across the country, that there isn't an age in this bill. I don't know if it's because the government forgot it or if they just haven't determined what age should be in this bill, but I think that's an important factor.

We have seniors at 55 that are retired. [interjection] Oh, I hear the minister talking again, so maybe he'd like to answer. Is it 55, like in B.C.? Is it 65, like in New Brunswick or, for example, some of the other provinces? I talked about: are we going to have this means test? Ontario has their deferral program only available to low-income seniors.

After these comments I look forward to hearing what the government has to say. I will put on the record that the Wildrose supports the bill and the intent of this bill. We would like to be able to tell our seniors in our ridings: "You're 56, and you qualify" or "You're 66, and you qualify" or "No, we're not going to have any income testing on this particular piece of legislation."

The bill talks about the eligible property owners. It says quite clearly: "an individual who is a resident of Alberta, has attained the prescribed age." I think that for us it's important to find out what exactly the prescribed age is. I look forward to either the Minister of Seniors or the member responsible, Red Deer-North, clarifying that.

Mr. Speaker, with those words, thank you, and I look forward to the rest of the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to put it on the record that the thoughts, the proposals behind Bill 5, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act, have been Alberta Liberal policy for some years. Obviously, we're therefore supporting the intent of Bill 5.

A bit of a history lesson. Going back to 1993, our Premier at that time, Klein, indicated to seniors, to public servants, to a whole variety of people that if they submitted to cuts in services to pay down the debt, in short order with the first surplus their sacrifices would be recognized. Well, Mr. Speaker, it's almost 20 years later, and the sacrifices that seniors made with regard to increased taxation in their property taxes are just now beginning to be dealt with through Bill 5.

There is no doubt that seniors can be house rich but economically impoverished, and for a senior to stay in their home as long as they physically can, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview pointed out, they need supports. One of those supports – and this is a small but significant support – is the deferral of their property tax.

9:20

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about the need for other supports such as a break in terms of turning their house into a more accessible circumstance. My wife and I, thinking ahead, have just made some significant renovations to our house, and one of the renovations involved taking out the bathtub and putting in a shower with a built-in bench so that in the situation where our mobility is decreased, we would be able to continue to live in that house. Granted, it is a split-level, which involves some stairs. Because we could afford it, we were able to accommodate for our aging lifestyle, but many seniors on fixed incomes don't have that possibility.

The federal government used to have a program that allowed, for example, individuals to have their roofs replaced, that being part of a taxable deduction. It also had a program whereby seniors could make their homes more accessible. The federal government passed on those programs to the provinces, and unfortunately in this province that program that improves the accessibility has been eliminated by this government.

Now, it is important that the government have a very direct role in supporting seniors in their homes, and it's in the government's economic interest to do so because a senior can be supported in their home for basically one-twentieth on a daily basis of what it costs to institutionalize them in an acute-care bed. We've had the discussion about how many long-term care beds have disappeared as the government allows them to be changed to supportive living or assisted living, which does not provide near the medical support absolutely necessary.

There are some wonderful volunteer organizations like Meals on Wheels, that I believe will be celebrating either its 45th or 46th anniversary this year. They do provide seniors with a degree of support in terms of an affordable home-cooked-style meal that is, obviously, healthy and will support them nutritionally. But I do believe the government should be stepping up to a greater degree, beyond Bill 5, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act, to allow those seniors who are able to stay in their homes to remain there.

For example, Calgary-Varsity, which used to be considered an outlying district in the city's northwest, now very much can be considered an inner-city area, and the taxes for even small bungalows or even wartime-style houses in the Calgary-Varsity constituency are extremely high and do not support seniors in staying.

Now, there have been proposals, which I support, in terms of increasing the density, but where it would be of great help to seniors is, instead of having a grandma suite or a grandpa suite, to actually have a student suite in part of the seniors' existing house, a secondary suite. It would be rather supportive of seniors to take in a young person and be able to accommodate them within their own home.

I know that my grandmother in Saskatoon had a basement suite circumstance, and over the years numerous students who went to the University of Saskatchewan stayed in my grandmother's suite and helped her with the chores. Because of that help, she was able to stay in that family home for a considerably longer time period than she would have been able to otherwise.

I support Bill 5, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act. I do have a degree of cynicism in that with the government not being willing to commit to not raising the daily living fee for long-term care homes, even with the money that seniors manage to save by deferring their property taxes, they could very well be systematically gouged for in private, for-profit long-term care if the government goes ahead, as the Premier suggested in her campaign for leadership, and removes the cap on seniors' long-term care residences. This may be giving seniors a little bit more time in their own homes, but when the taxes come due, will they have sufficient left to live in an alternative facility, whether it be an assisted living facility, whether it be a continuing care facility, whether it be a lodge or some form of long-term care? Will the seniors have sufficient money left in the end to be able to finish their lives with a degree of dignity?

That is a concern that seniors brought to my attention yesterday at the public forum debate on seniors' issues that Seniors United Now hosted at the McClure United church in Edmonton-Decore. Mr. Speaker, it's important to note that while I was the only seated MLA in attendance, there was representation from the Wildrose in the form of a young man by the last name of Genuis, and he upheld the Wildrose values very well. David Eggen, formerly the Member for Edmonton-Calder, represented the ND Party very well. The individual representing the Alberta Party was unable to attend due to an emergent circumstance. But as is so often the case, whether it's a public forum on seniors or a forum on health care, there was not a single representation on behalf of the Conservative Party.

I found that surprising because it appears that the government is being more supportive of seniors' needs through Bill 5, but in the whole city of Edmonton they could not find an individual to represent their policies at the seniors' forum. Now, there was no effigy placed in an empty chair – it was, after all, in a church circumstance – but knowing that seniors do vote and that seniors are passionate about their voting, it seems to me that in order to complete the debate, representation by the Conservative Party at that seniors' forum would have been appreciated.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak on Bill 5. It is Liberal policy, and it will help seniors, provided they have sufficient money at the end of the selling of their homes, to be able to afford the alternatives without unduly taxing their families.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the chair shall now recognize the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on the bill.

9:30

Mr. Boutillier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to stand today and say that I welcome many of the comments that have been made. The Member for Calgary-Varsity: I appreciate his comments as, certainly, I do the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's. Clearly, I really do believe that despite all political party lines that are here, there is a sense of trying to do something that's so important for the very people that have built this province, our seniors.

As saddened as I am that they have failed to honour the commitment of a long-term care facility in Fort McMurray, I am very pleased by this commitment. Hopefully, all parties will support this important initiative. It's not a perfect bill, but it certainly is a bill that, in my view, in the spirit of helping our seniors, is important. I wish only that the principle and the value and the spirit of what is intended in this bill could have been applied to seniors when this government made a commitment to them four years ago to build a long-term care facility and have failed to this point in time to even break ground. And here it is over four years later. I think that's shameful because of the fact that we are a city of over 100,000 people.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I support the initiative of this bill and the spirit of this bill, and I would encourage all members in this Assembly to do the same.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. leader of the ND opposition on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly concur with the intent of the bill, which is to allow seniors to remain in their homes longer. I think that this is a very humane direction. Certainly, in the past there was much more extensive support for seniors to stay in their homes, as has been alluded to, and that was taken away by Ralph Klein's government under the pretext that we all had to do our bit to balance the budget. Those things were promised to be restored once that had been done. During the period of time when there actually were surpluses in balanced budgets, these programs were not restored. Now, on the eve of an election, a partial move is here, and I think it will be welcome.

I just want to caution people because I know that when I was involved on the council of the city of Edmonton, there were instances where residents were able to defer additional levies that were put on their property tax until they sold their home, but in some cases these levies soon amounted to more than the cost of the home. Now, I think that will be less likely in this case because it was a separate matter; it was sewage and roadway improvements that were added to the property tax. The city had moved in an area that was old style, mixed use, where there was some industrial and commercial and residential all in the same neighbourhood. The city moved to turn it into an industrial park, so they put in heavy-duty sewers and other very expensive infrastructure improvements and put the cost on as a local property levy. Those costs mounted greatly, and the seniors that I tried to help at that time were unable to sell their homes because the debts had accumulated beyond the value of the home.

I would just like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that we are allowing seniors to defer these taxes and at the same time incur a debt against the value of their home. When they sell their home, they may receive very little for it, or they may have trouble selling it. I think that those are things that need to be taken into account.

I think, frankly, that we need to go a bit further than this if we're really sincere about keeping seniors in their own homes. Nevertheless, I think it will be helpful in many cases, and I join with other members here in indicating that I will support the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on the bill.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just will be very brief. I want to make sure that I'm on the record as supporting Bill 5, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act. Clearly, for the last seven years I've been very involved in seniors' issues, and I believe that this is a good bill. It has been pointed out by some of the members across the way that, certainly, caution would be used in thinking of the future when the seniors do sign up for this.

One of the advantages of this bill is that it is a choice. You will have the choice of whether or not you want to defer your taxes, and you also will have the choice of being able to look at it as the years go by. You may not want to do it right away, but you may want to do it five years out, when you think you may have to move. One of the cautions was that sometimes this money may have to be used for nursing home care, which is a very, very strong caution. People would have to be aware of that.

The other thing is that I know that many, many seniors are house rich and cash poor. I would like to think that when they did this, they would have a little bit of extra money not just to pay for their medications and not just to pay for their food but to actually be able to live as opposed to existing. For a couple to go out to a show at night, it's probably $25 just to get in for the show. A lot of them don't drive, so they would have to take a cab. Even if that little extra money would be able to give them one night out to something that they might enjoy, certainly to go out to watch their grandchildren doing whatever, particularly school plays and that sort of thing, although that isn't that expensive, I'd like to think that many of the seniors that I do see at this point in time who are really existing from bill to bill would actually be able to enjoy life.

That's one of the many reasons that I'm supporting this bill wholeheartedly. I think it's a good step forward. We'll be able to watch and see the effectiveness of it. B.C. actually has done this already ahead of us, so we can watch some of the things that they have done. In fact, there hasn't been a great pickup in B.C., but Alberta is not B.C., so we will see just how effective this is.

I am pleased that there will be a good evaluation system on this to be able to have good statistics and look at what the outcomes are, which is what this government would like to do in many other areas of their responsibilities. Let's look at the outcomes, and let's have good evaluations and audits, so to speak, in terms of how successful our programs are.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to support this. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to get up and speak on Bill 5, the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act. I must say that in principle I'm in favour of this bill, but as with many of the bills this government seems to pass when it comes to property, I don't know that they think things through very well and, certainly, leave some holes that are of concern.

The interesting thing – and my colleague has already brought it up to start off with – is that it doesn't define what a senior is. In a lot of places 55 is a senior in order to get into places; in other places it's 65. [interjection] Well, minister of education, you say you know the age? [interjection] Wait and see. Isn't that typical of this government? There'll be an election, and then wait and see. Unbelievable, the rhetoric that comes out of some of the ministers from this government.

We don't know what the age is and who qualifies. I mean, a senior member of the family? So if the parents are dead and the senior member of the family is 21, are they eligible? Perhaps there's a little bit of sarcasm in that question. Nevertheless, this government doesn't seem to define or realize or it takes this attitude that, well, we'll let the cabinet. Under Property Tax Deferral Loan, section 4(6) says, "The Minister, in consultation with the Minister of Finance, shall periodically determine the rate of interest applicable."

Another area of concern for me, Mr. Speaker, is: why is this government so compelled to think that the minister or cabinet needs to be able to have such powers to determine such things and not leave it up to the market or a formula so that it's actually, you know, based on prime or something like that?

9:40

That leads to my next question and concern, Mr. Speaker, and it's been brought up by several members now. What is the value of the home? How long are the loans going to be eligible for? I live in a part of Calgary that is very interesting. There are still a number of citizens there that bought their homes in 1958, '59, '60 through to '62, when they first got married, and they're still living in that home. There are several of them that are 90 years plus in their homes. They bought those homes for $15,000, $12,500, and now those homes are valued between $380,000 and, I would say, $550,000. They're astounded at the so-called asset-rich yet cash-poor position they're in.

What I want to point out to the government and what can happen is that we're getting to a time when people are retiring at 65. They don't have a lot of savings, and the pension plans are not keeping up to the rate of inflation in the government. If, in fact, they were to start doing that at 65, now at 85, 20 years later, at $2,000 a year and compounding that, you have to ask: what is going to be the total cost on that house? Some members have talked about that, especially the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who's had personal experience, being on city council. What is the cost of that house?

I've been in other areas both here in Edmonton and in Calgary where houses are actually a liability because these are neighbourhoods now that are being refurbished and where new houses are being built, so they actually tear down the old houses, and it's the value of the lot. How many seniors are going to be caught in that situation where today they think they have a house that's of value, but 20 years from now, when they're 85, or 30 years from now, when they're 95 and still living in their home, everything else in the neighbourhood has been rebuilt and looks new and up to date, yet here's this old house that is past its time and needs to be torn down and to be built up? There's nothing in here that talks about a cap that's going to I guess protect the taxpayers of Alberta on what the value is of that home and whether it gets exceeded and becomes a liability.

Again, going back to the Minister of Finance determining what interest rates they're going to charge on this home, I'm old enough, Mr. Speaker, that I remember when interest rates, depending on where you were borrowing from, in the early '80s were anywhere from 18 to 22 per cent. A lot of people might laugh and say: oh, we'll never see that again. Well, I would say: never say never. We're at a debt now where I can see interest rates shooting up, escalating at quite a rate. We can look over to Europe and see that some of those countries can't sell their bonds and how they've gone up to 10 and 15 per cent in short order because the government can't put out the bonds to buy back.

I would recommend on something like this that you would tie that loan to a 30-year bond rate or a 20-year bond rate, where there's at least some security not only for the government but for those people that are making the loan on their homes, not just stuck to the minister's whim or the fact that prime could go up. Now is a great time to secure, you know, offset this loan on the other side of the paper.

The eligible owner of the property "may apply, in accordance with the regulations, for a property tax deferral loan for the purpose of paying the qualifying property taxes on the eligible property owner's eligible residence." Again, how and when will the regulations be established? It's just concerning that that this has been brought forward almost hastily, and we just don't know what is going to be the whim of the minister on where it's set, what it's going to do.

We do not have it defined by age. I think that it's even set up such that a senior could own it, in fact, with their 30-year-old child and allow it to go forward on that basis. There are no parameters that would prevent that.

It's not defined by income. It's interesting in the other jurisdictions that have these. I mean, there's B.C., there's Ontario, and there's P.E.I. — it seems like there's one other jurisdiction here in Canada that has these — and each of them has addressed other areas. I wonder if the minister even looked at those other jurisdictions to realize, you know, that, yes, age is something to consider, that income is something to consider, a cap. The percentage of the value of the home is to be considered. Then again, like I say, that value can peak and then go down the other side once it becomes a liability because the home is past its purpose and being able to be renewed.

I used to rent in a home down in Rosedale that was built in 1912. I don't know that that house is going to be of any value. Someone will end up buying it purely to tear it down for the lot value. I don't know that that would be one where it would be wise to be saying, "Yes, senior, go ahead, and we'll pay your taxes for you on that home," especially one that's just turned 65 and just entering into that retirement age. It could go on for a long time.

I also think it's interesting when we look at the dilemma that we're in. This government now for the fifth budget is running a deficit totalling $16 billion. Since the tide started receding, instead of the money coming in, it's been pulling out faster than we're collecting the revenue. It's interesting as you look around the world at the economic dilemma that we're in. I kind of compare government and its spending to the dog chasing its tail. It makes you dizzy watching it, and eventually in exhaustion it will lay down and rest or whatever. This is the dilemma that we put seniors in, that because of government spending, inflation has kicked in.

The question is: with all of the monetary easement that's been going on for the last few years, what's going to be the value of the houses in a couple of years? On the positive side, I guess we maybe don't need to worry about capping the value of these homes because they could double and triple or quadruple again because of the monetary easement. On the other side, I have seniors that paid $12,000 for their home in 1959, and they are currently paying $2,200 to $2,400 in taxes on those homes. They've been retired, though, some of these people, for 20 years, and their retirement pension has not kept up with the cost of inflation because of the government's monetary policies and the inflation value that we've seen in homes.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly understand and appreciate the intent and the principle of this bill. I think it's a good idea, but I do not think that the government has done its due diligence to put the proper parameters around this bill. Of course, as the Minister of Education so eloquently says, just wait and see. I guess that when you've been in government for 41 years, you get that attitude of telling everybody: "Just wait and see, and don't actually worry about thinking things through because you haven't had to in the past. Why should you now?" It comes back to bite too many citizens here in the province. I do not believe they want to just wait and see. They want good legislation. They want to understand it. They want the parameters around it. They certainly don't want it resting with cabinet or with one or two ministers to say: "We'll pick. We'll choose. We'll decide what that interest rate or what that property value is or whether or not you can go to the courts to get your fair compensation."

It's just wrong, Mr. Speaker. Arbitrary law hasn't worked well anywhere in the world. It certainly isn't going to work well here. You need access to the courts in a proper, defined way, and I wish the government would define these bills a little bit better.

With that, I'll sit down and listen to any other comments that might be made.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This hon. member is waxing eloquent on how the Minister of Education is telling him to wait and see, but I'm wondering if he actually is aware what the answer to this question is and whether he realizes that the definition of a senior is actually well defined in Alberta's legislation. Perhaps he wouldn't have that many questions if he read other accompanying acts. Is he aware of the definition of senior?

9:50

Mr. Hinman: I would love for the Minister of Education to read in here that it's going by Alberta's definition of a senior and actually describing that in the bill. I doubt that the minister has even read the bill. If I've missed it, I'd be grateful. But with the amount of work that we have to do on this side because this government needs to rush things through, I'll be the first to admit that I haven't always gone through it with a fine-tooth comb. I have not seen the definition or where you would find the definition. I'll be happy to listen to the minister enlighten me on this subject.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House on the bill.

Mr. Lund: On the bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to congratulate the sponsor of this bill. I think this is long overdue. When the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore was making a number of comments about issues that will be addressed in the regulations, I found interesting the comments about a house devaluing. That is a real possibility. But likely if that is occurring because of the market value on the taxes, then the taxes are probably going to be going down. The one thing that isn't going to devalue to any great degree will be the lot itself. In many cases that will probably appreciate as opposed to devalue, so I think there are ways that it can all be covered off.

The only thing that I would suggest – probably it would even complement this bill – would be the ability for some people that have disabilities to be able to stay in a home under the same circumstance. Those types of people have a very limited income if they're on AISH. Now, the increase to the $1,500 would sure help, but to have to pay the taxes – I think that if those could be deferred, those types of people would also benefit greatly from this type of program.

I think these things can all be worked out. Certainly, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore did point out a number of things that have to be taken into consideration when the regulations are developed.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore under 29(2)(a), right?

Mr. Hinman: Yes, under 29(2)(a). I'm just trying to look through here because I thought that there was some mention about a family member with a disability. I'm just going to hopefully look through here and comment on that. As I answered the last question, I was disappointed but not at all surprised that the Minister of Education just wanted to pontificate, and he doesn't have the answers which he is expressing. He likes to pontificate and show his brawn but doesn't show his brains too often, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'll have to say that I can't see it quick enough. I thought I had it underlined, but I think there is something in here about those that have those disabilities.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This will be two for two today on a government bill that I'm supporting. I'm very happy about that. [some applause] Thank you. It's good to see I'm having an effect.

I'd like to speak in favour of the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act. This, of course, is a policy, and I don't by any means claim that our party is the only party in here that has been pushing this policy for a while. I do know that the Minister of Seniors absolutely has been pushing this initiative for a while, before he was Minister of Seniors, as have several others in that caucus on the PC side. It's certainly something that I actually campaigned on during my nomination back in 2007, when I was with the PC Party. Under my own seniors policy it's something that I would advocate for, and I was glad to see that under the Wildrose our seniors policy also became one of our policies.

This is a very good initiative. It's one that I think has broad support. It's obvious to me that the reason that Alberta is a great province, of course, has a lot to do if not a majority to do with the seniors that have built it. They've put their sweat into providing for their families, in creating a legacy that we can all be very, very proud of. We have a debt of gratitude that we owe to them, and I think this bill under debate makes an effort to repay our seniors in that way but does so in a way that is very fiscally responsible, which is something I like about this initiative.

The problem here is very clear. Retired seniors are quite often in a situation where they long ago paid off their home. They worked hard to own their own home, but because of a growing economy and inflation combined with fixed incomes, they are in a pinch. Essentially, they are asset rich but cash poor.

I don't think it's right that a senior would be put in a position where they would have to use the furniture for firewood, so to speak, or after paying off this home for so long and in many cases for years living in this home, essentially being forced out of their homes. That is, I guess, a part of life in some ways, and I understand, you know, that we can't always have what we want, but so many of these seniors have worked so hard to pay these homes off. To say, after they spend their whole lives paying off their mortgage, "You've got to move into a smaller apartment and give up your home" – if there's some way we can at least assist them to not have to do that, a fiscally responsible way of doing so, I think that that's a very worthwhile endeavour.

In my view, people are happier and healthier if they're in their homes. They shouldn't have to leave because of growing property taxes, which, of course, is a huge problem here because as their home value goes up and they're on a fixed income, they start having great difficulty paying their property taxes.

Alberta has a world-class economy. We are the envy of many around the world largely because of our oil and gas resources and the freedoms that that permits us and the resources that it gives us. We've had to make the most of what those are, and many of our seniors were part of doing that, of taking those resources and building something special here in Alberta.

I, too, feel that there are some unanswered questions about this bill. With regard to seniors I'm assuming that when we're talking about seniors, we're talking about age 65, I imagine, but if that's different, I would certainly like to know so that I could tell my constituents. It would be clear if it was directly in the bill, as my colleague was saying.

Let's say that it is 65. It would be good to know whether this bill only applies to those 65 and over and also at what income levels a senior would be able to utilize this program. What I wouldn't like to see, Mr. Speaker, is this program essentially abused by people. You know, if it's not lined out, I think that the system here could be abused and used as, essentially, an investment tool for folks that don't really need to defer their property taxes, whose income is such that they're fine paying them. They're still making a lot of income. If you're talking about seniors over 65, it's a small percentage of people, but it's just, I think, necessary to have some ground rules to make sure that no one is abusing the system, so to speak.

I would like to see those in committee. At least, I would like to see that more readily defined. You know, if a senior's income is under $80,000 a year, $65,000 a year, something like that, those folks could take advantage of it, but if it was over that amount, perhaps they wouldn't have access to that program. Whatever the line is – and I'm certainly not the person to make it – it would be nice, using empirical data, to see what would be the best way to go about doing that and looking at other jurisdictions but also just using common sense here.

10:00

At the same time, I don't want to see the threshold set so low that it essentially disqualifies seniors making $30,000 or $40,000 or $50,000 a year. That may sound like a lot of money to someone who doesn't have to pay a mortgage because it's paid off or whatever, but indeed with inflation, where it's at sometimes, and the rising cost of living and so forth $50,000 just does not stretch, even when the mortgage is paid off, as far as a couple might want it to.

So whatever that number is, it would be good to have that number going forward so that we could actually make sure that it was based on some empirical evidence and that we were all comfortable with it in here. I'm assuming what will happen now is that it will just be left to regulators in the bureaucracy to deal with. I think that that question should be something for this House to decide and not some arbitrary decision of the ministry.

That's kind of the main thrust of my support for the bill. I would like to note really quickly, though, that other jurisdictions do use this method. In B.C., for example, they have a program. The program is opened at the age of 55, but you can't collect your pension from the CPP until you are 65. So in a day and age when people are living and working longer, it makes sense to me that this program would kick in at age 65, which I'm assuming it does, but I would like some clarification on that if possible.

There were just a couple of other points, but by and large I just want to say congratulations to the minister for bringing forward this bill. It's a good bill. If we could get some clarification around those two little things, I think it would sail through committee very quickly as well and would be helpful to all those involved.

Let's pass this bill. For those in my constituency that might read Hansard after this or watch the video or whatever on this bill, what this bill allows seniors to do is to take the property tax that they owe to the municipality and essentially put a lien for that property tax against their home. When that home is eventually sold off after those seniors have passed on, then the property tax, that lien, is paid off, and therefore the government is paid back that amount. In other words, it allows seniors to use equity in their own home in order to pay property taxes and increasing property taxes.

Anyway, it's a very good idea. If this works well once it's set up, potentially there might be some other expenses that this could be used for. But, of course, property tax is the most obvious one, so let's start there and see how that goes and whether the program is working and get the kinks out, and then we can talk about other ways that we can help our seniors deal with the rising costs of living in Alberta as our economy strengthens, as we enter yet another welcome oil and gas resource boom.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah. I always appreciate the thoughts and the review that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere brings to these bills. He stimulates my thinking as he brings forward his ideas. The question that I have and what I was thinking about as he was talking: you know, should we set a limit on whether someone is eligible for this? I think that age is certainly something to look at.

When we look at the other four jurisdictions – P.E.I., Ontario, B.C., and I keep forgetting the other jurisdiction that has these – I guess I'm concerned because when I look back at history, in my neighbourhood, you know, in the '60s the house was worth about $12,000. By the '70s it had doubled and a little bit, and it was worth $30,000. By 1982, when we were kind of peaking in the housing industry, it had a little better than tripled to about $100,000 to $120,000. Then it kind of steadied off, and then we saw it accelerate again.

It's interesting because it's eligible income. If we go to that, you know, the pensions are kind of set, yet someone again might have invested a lot and have assets outside their pension plan, and therefore they can bring money in and out. In my mind I don't know that I want to see it tied to income level because of the variation. There are more and more people that are buying their homes late in life and maybe just barely have it paid off, so their income is at a good flow.

I guess I just have a few questions. You know, you talked about a formula or something to see whether or not someone is eligible on their income level. But for myself, I guess, I wonder whether that's really something to look at, that if someone has reached that age, they could just access this because they've chosen to. They might have actually put that into their plan, once this is set up and going forward. That income of $2,000 or by this time maybe $4,000 a year is something that they're planning on. Any other further thoughts or comments on that?

Mr. Anderson: Well, those are very good points. I guess I just worry about somebody who is, let's say, a senior who is very wealthy, making $120,000 to $150,000 a year or something like that – they do exist; there are more than you would think – just from their investments and so forth and then using this as essentially a tool to increase their income, frankly, kind of unnecessarily. I mean, there is a cost to government on this. It's not a total cost, but it's a deferred cost to the government. We don't want this to turn into some kind of . . .

Mr. Hinman: A gravy train.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah, essentially a gravy train for those. This is meant for a very specific group of people to cope with the rising cost of their property tax in their real home, you know, the home that they've paid off the mortgage for and so forth and have built some equity in. I just want to make sure it's not abused in that regard.

I'm open to ideas on that. I wish the government would give us the details on it prior to passing it, as you mentioned.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now put the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

Bill 6

Property Rights Advocate Act

[Adjourned debate March 8: Mr. Prins]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you. I welcome this opportunity to speak to Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act, in second reading. This one I'm going to vote for, so that makes three for three today of government bills. [interjection] I know. It's tempting. Maybe one day we'll let you come over with us. I mean, that can work both ways.

Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act, is certainly one that I'm going to support. However – I'm sorry – I'm not going to be too flowery in my language on how we got to this point. I know that will shock people. I don't give the government much credit in this regard for this act, and I'll explain why.

10:10

If the point of an advocate is to give a voice to vulnerable members of society, then there's perhaps no group of citizens in Alberta that needs greater protection from their own government than Alberta landowners if you look at this government's record over the last few years. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this government's flawed bills have stepped all over the rights of landowners, and they're still on the books today. An advocate, though a strong first step in recognizing that a problem exists, fails to tackle the real problem of the poor state of property rights in our province.

Bills 19, 24, 36, and 50, legislation that was passed by this very same government, still exist, and they are the very reason landowners feel that they are in need of protection. Let me tell you: it is incredible to see that even now, after all the different amendments and all the different bills and all the different marches around Alberta on the junkets, the travelling road show with all these different ministers, and so forth, anger with this government in rural Alberta over the property rights issue is stronger than it was even at the height, one or two years ago, because still this government has not listened.

Nowhere has that been more clear than with regard to Bill 50. This is a bill that this Minister of Energy as well as the current Premier went around Alberta – I don't know about the deputy Premier. I didn't notice that he spoke against it nor some of the others. Specifically those two individuals spoke against Bill 50, spoke against the way that it had circumvented the proper regulatory process.

The Minister of Energy gave a very fine, eloquent speech about it on his campaign YouTube website when he was running for the PC leadership, explaining very clearly and very correctly on every point that Bill 50 was absolutely wrong headed, that it circumvented the proper independent needs assessment process, that the lines were probably not needed. Although that would have to go through the regulatory process, they probably were not needed because of the ability to create electricity from local generators using natural gas such as is being done in and around Calgary with the new Shepard plant and so forth. That would probably lessen the needs for these new lines if not eliminate them completely, certainly the north-south lines between Edmonton and Calgary. Certainly, it would make it so that we wouldn't need both. We may need one but probably not both.

These were clearly laid out, and it was eloquent. It was correct. I know it's a position that that member held for a very long time prior to that. I don't know when the Premier decided to be opposed to Bill 50, but she was during her leadership race. No doubt about it. There was some hope although she made kind of a bizarre finding where she decided that the heartland transmission line was appropriate after she was elected. The heartland transmission line was apparently fine. Now, she did mention during her time running that she thought that one was needed. So although I disagree with her on that, she did mention that.

However, she specifically said that at least one of the north-south ones was not likely needed and that certainly we should go through the proper regulatory process before determining whether to go forward on that. So she froze those lines, and for a time there it looked like maybe she was going to at least cancel one of them for the time being or that maybe she would go back to the drawing board completely and have AltaLink and these other companies go through the proper regulatory process, a needs assessment.

Instead what we got is a group that was quickly appointed. Although they had some expertise in the field, they were no more knowledgeable than, for example, the Minister of Energy, who had just a few months earlier gone through and explained why these lines were not needed. So it's not like this panel didn't have a clue, but they were certainly not engineers. They were not people that were any more qualified than the Minister of Energy, the Premier, folks like Keith Wilson, or energy experts around the province, whether they were working for Enmax or even companies like TransAlta, who have frankly admitted that the regulatory process was not properly followed and that there probably wasn't a need for two lines. Even folks like that were very clear that this process needed to go back to the drawing board.

But she skips all that and goes to this committee. This committee comes back and says: no; we're going ahead with the two lines, but we do admit that the process used to arrive at these lines being built was completely flawed in virtually every respect.

They didn't go through the regulatory process. This is the government's panel. They didn't go through the proper regulatory channels. That can't happen going forward. Cabinet shouldn't have that unilateral power to circumvent the regulatory needs assessment process and so forth. In other words, yeah, you did it all wrong.

It was completely wrong headed. The system was totally bastardized, but: "Don't worry. We're going to still go ahead with these lines because we still think they're needed. Then the next time, 25 years or 34 years down the road, when you want to build more lines, then go through the process." At that time go through the proper process. It was absolutely stunning.

Of course, what that has led to is a lot of the anger that you see in rural Alberta, and that's very reflected in the polling that you see around the province right now. People are mad about this issue, especially in rural Alberta. So would it be nice to have a property rights advocate act to tell folks, kind of like a grief counsellor, why they've been aggrieved and why the government, yes, has stepped on your rights? Yes, you don't have due process; and, yes, they didn't do that proper independent needs assessment, which means there are these big, horrible lines going over your lands and taking up your viewscapes and all of that sort of thing.

Yeah, we can have an advocate, and that's better than nothing, I guess. But what would have been real leadership would have been this government saying: "You know what? We blew it on Bill 50." Repeal the bill. Go back to the drawing board and say to AltaLink and ATCO: go through the proper regulatory process. And if they pass that proper regulatory process, then they could go forward and build the lines. I don't think they would if it was a truly independent panel, but at least we would have actually had engineers and people that knew what they were talking about, electrical engineers and so forth, bringing their testimony forward before a panel, the panel weighing the evidence and getting to a decision that would actually be one that Albertans could respect and could be confident that they weren't being getting gypped, that these were lines that were actually needed to keep the lights on.

People are very upset about that. There is reason to be upset. Rural landowners are not the only ones that should be upset with Bill 50 in particular. Urban voters should also be upset with Bill 50 because these costs are all going to be on the bills of urban ratepayers. They calculate a very small – it's just a couple of bucks a month or whatever it is. Just a couple of bucks a month. Unfortunately, that's not necessarily true if the industrial users get off the grid because of increased expenses to their electricity bills and if they want to do on-site cogeneration and so forth and get off the grid. Those costs will then go to the regular ratepayers that are still on the grid, so those costs could go very high. It's just one more cost on their bill. What was once $2 or $3 becomes $10 a month, becomes $20, $30 a month. Who knows?

Pretty soon it becomes a problem for those seniors, for example, that we were talking about earlier and the problems that they have living on their fixed incomes as prices go up. So we should not be callous to just a few dollars more a month on our bills. It's always just a few more dollars. It's always just a few more tax dollars, a few more dollars on the bill. A few more this, a few more that. Pretty soon we're overtaxed, and there are too many fees. People can't afford their rent. People can't afford to put food on their tables and so forth. We've got to try to bring costs down, not find reasons to drive costs up.

So I hope that this property rights advocate will be able to do something constructive other than to be a grief counsellor for the lack of property rights that are enjoyed in this province.

10:20

I am shocked that this government did not see fit to pass Bill 201, brought by the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, to strengthen property rights in the Alberta Bill of Rights even further than they are right now. I thought it was a very reasonable proposal that should have been in there and would have made the property rights advocate's job a lot easier because there would be clearer definitions in the Bill of Rights as to what property rights entail.

There's probably not enough time to talk more in second reading about Bill 50, Bill 19, Bill 24, and Bill 36, but the one that really gets me is Bill 50 because at least with Bill 36 and Bill 19 and a little less so with Bill 24 there's a genuine debate and a disagreement of opinion on the ideas of that bill. Bill 50 is different. I know that the Premier – at least she said it during her leadership race – and I know that this Energy minister know that what happened with Bill 50 was wrong, yet they still went through with it. They still went forward with it. It's not right, and that's why Albertans in rural Alberta right now are supporting, at least if you believe the polls – and I know that polls are polls, but if you believe the one released most recently, the Wildrose is leading in rural Alberta, and there's a reason for that. [interjections]

I enjoy it when the other side laughs. I love it when the other side laughs at that. I'm just looking at the polls. Maybe it's a total lie, and they can go back to sleep; they have nothing to worry about. [interjections] You'll win 80 seats. You have nothing to worry about. Go back to sleep.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, let's talk about Bill 6.

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely. If they could just get it through their heads that one of the biggest reasons they are losing badly in southern rural Alberta and are now tied or losing in northern rural Alberta is because they have entirely butchered property rights over the last four years through these bills. Bill 50 is, in my view, the most egregious example of that.

If we are interested in having a property rights advocate, that's great, but it's window dressing. It doesn't get to the bottom of the issue, and the bottom of the issue is: repeal Bill 50 in particular. Repeal Bill 50. Repeal all of those bad land bills, but particularly Bill 50, and send those power lines back to the drawing board. Go through the proper regulatory approval process to see if we can't get away with not having to build all of those lines and save Alberta consumers money and save some of our viewscapes and save some of our farmland and save a lot of money for this province and still be able to keep the lights on. That is the whole point of why that bill needs to be retired.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Other hon. members? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. My hon. colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere did a very good summation in trying to show the damage that Bill 6 is attempting to correct. He rightly pointed out the problems with bills 19, 24, 36, and 50, which I don't think any single piece of legislation – this is probably the third or fourth attempt by the government to try and correct the problems associated with Bill 50, which is basically about expropriation.

After seven years in this House I was pleased to see that the government finally made the children's advocate independent of the ministry and had the children's advocate report directly to the Assembly. After the fact I'm assuming that's what this property rights advocate person is going to do, to be a sort of intermediary, hopefully an individual rights champion, to a degree a referee.

This government controls the powers of referees to a very great extent. We've seen cases of individuals such as our Ombudsman leaving before their term was up out of frustration in trying to advocate on behalf of Albertans. I'm not convinced that the individual who receives this position will be given the power to fulfill the position. Auditor General Fred Dunn left before his time was up because of the frustration of interacting with this government, that would accept his recommendations and then fail to act on them.

It seems that the government is being pressured to create other positions, for example a seniors' advocate. Now, good governance, in theory at least, should not require somebody outside of the ministry to advocate on behalf of individuals approaching the ministry for a resolution of their concerns, but we're seeing more and more external advocacy positions being created.

Another example of an individual who quit prematurely and talked about death by a million cuts was Frank Work, our commissioner for privacy, because of the way this government withheld information and blocked him.

We've had ministries interacting against each other in the form of occupational health and safety under the Ministry of Human Services getting static from the Seniors ministry with regard to hearings, so I'm not convinced.

While Bill 6, establishing a property rights advocate, heads in the right direction, the failure within ministries to serve the needs of Albertans and then the failure through crossministries to work together – a prime example of crossministerial failure is the Auditor General attempting to get information from the Securities Commission in order to complete an audit and being stonewalled for such a length of time.

So we can create this so-called property rights advocate sheriff, but if we only give him a tin star and no other powers beyond that star to advocate on behalf of individuals, then it appears that it's just more window dressing.

Now, what we've seen in the eight years that I've been here is a move of this government from legislation into regulation, to empower ministers to such an extent that they singularly overrule any other commission. A good example of a commission being sidelined and ignored is the Alberta Utilities Commission. Now, there have been problems, obviously, with the spying and so on and needing a whole battalion of sheriffs to defend the people on the boards from the advances of 80-year-old women who object to having their property expropriated, but we had the potential.

I have frequently praised the Member for Foothills-Rocky View for bringing forth the equivalent of a land-use framework bill that would, using water as the basis, divide Alberta into six regions and then determine, almost like a traffic cop, what was allowed in which of the various regions. In other words, there'd be a plan, a laid-out set of rules governing what went where and under what circumstances individual rights are superseded by public good. Maybe to a small extent Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act, will be able to a small degree be that traffic cop, but if we'd had the land-use framework established, then bills 19, 24, 36, 50, and now 6 would quite likely have been unnecessary. But what's happening now in the province, whether it's clear-cutting in the Castle or clear-cutting in Bragg Creek, is that it's, you know: go for broke; do whatever damage that you're allowed under legislation; first in right, first in time to undertake; and then we'll let your descendants figure out the problems afterwards.

10:30

In Bill 6 the property rights advocate powers are sort of in a position like the Human Rights Commission of being a quasi-judicial circumstance where they can't overrule a ministry. All they can do is potentially go on bended knee and open hands to a minister and say: you know, think twice about expropriating this person's land.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere talked about the lack of expert advice, the lack of outside scientific, empirically based knowledge, as he was talking about, circumstances.

Now, I know that there are a number of members in this House who represent Calgary constituencies who attended a couple years ago the presentation by Enmax about local power generation, this being natural gas, which is considerably cleaner and more efficient in terms of its power delivery than two lines hauling coal-based, prehistoric, emission-spouting energy from Wabamun all the way down to Calgary. Finally the government recognized and took the cap off wind power generation limitations that they'd put on it for so many years. But the reality is that Calgary, with a population exceeding 1.3 million, cannot only generate its own power through this gas-powered, locally generated electricity but will not suffer the power loss that questionable lines coming all the way from Wabamun do.

The government has committed to decommissioning these old coal-fired generating systems, and the government has suggested that, well, we only use clean coal in Alberta. I haven't seen any white lumps of coal, but that's what the government would have us believe. We are building these transmission lines to hook up with power sources that are going to be decommissioned. You have to question the logic of putting all this money into projects that lose power along their lines and are an environmental eyesore, which gives Alberta an even blacker eye.

Now, we've tried very hard to justify our oil sands and talk about alternative energy sources, and scientifically we know that the amount of emission from any oil sands development is minuscule in comparison to coal-generated power, yet here we go with two transmission lines using outdated heavy-polluting energy sources. It makes no sense.

How can the sheriff appointed by Bill 6, the property rights advocate, say to the government: you're using outmoded forms of energy transmission and outmoded transmission lines to bring this energy down south, which will magically then find its way to be connected to the Montana tie-line. Without the expertise, without the power this advocate is not going to be able to change the wholesale handover to TransAlta Utilities and ATCO energy that the public will pay for. The bill seems to vary between $5 billion and $15 billion. There's discussion as to whether some parts of the line will be buried or not.

Good luck to this property rights advocate in straightening out problems that this government has caused and failed to correct. I wish the individual well. I will be supporting Bill 6 because anything that intercedes on behalf of Albertans opposing this government's unilateral expropriation has got to be of some value, albeit limited.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Minister of Energy.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 6 and the three Cs and the A.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Five minutes. Go ahead.

Dr. Morton: That's right. Three Cs and the A: courts, compensation, consultation, plus an advocate. That's what Albertans have been looking for when it comes to property rights protection: access to the courts, due process, the right to fair compensation as provided under the Expropriation Act and under common law for takings and also consultation, and on top of that we've added an advocate, not in a department where there might be some taking going on but in the Justice department, where you have an independent advocate trained in legal matters and trained in property rights.

The opposition party here has spent two and a half years scaring landowners and muddying the facts. Bill 36, of course, protected property rights, access to the courts, compensation, and consultation. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere stood in this House and praised Bill 36 two and half years ago, and he has changed his mind.

Mr. Hinman: He's seen the light since. When will you?

Dr. Morton: Yes, he has, for fairly clear reasons.

Let me switch, then, to his comments on Bill 50. He commented on the fact that I was critical of Bill 50 last year during the leadership and prior to that. Indeed, I was. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Dr. Morton: I think part of being intelligent, Mr. Speaker, is knowing what you don't know, and I don't think either of the two gentlemen there would claim themselves to be energy experts. I certainly don't either. So when I ended up being the Minister of Energy and responsible for Bill 50, I did what I think an intelligent person does, and we appointed a committee.

The integrity of this committee has been impugned. I'd remind Albertans that one member is a professor emeritus at the University of Saskatchewan with five books on electricity and a member of the Royal Society. Another is the dean of the faculty of management at the University of Alberta. His research area is on energy economics. The third member was a member of the Alberta Utilities Commission. Three people, independent and well versed in different aspects of electricity.

They listened to all the groups, and what did they hear? Nobody disputed this – nobody disputed this – that the growth that Alberta is experiencing is the single biggest predictor of what we need in terms of new energy. Since the need for north-south reinforcement was first identified, 700,000 people have moved to this province since 2002. By the very earliest date that one of these lines could be in service, which would be 2015, another 200,000 people will be here. In the meanwhile, the GDP is growing at 3 per cent or 3 per cent plus a year, again the strongest single predictor of energy need. Nobody who appeared before this committee disputed that.

I would say this on the issue of gas. Will there be more gas-fired production? Absolutely. Will it be near Calgary? Absolutely. But it will also be up in some of the existing coal plants in brownfields. As older coal plants are phased out, you'll see greater use of gas. There is social acceptance already there. There are existing connections. They're concerned about money, saving hundreds of millions of dollars in connections. These brownfield sites are already connected to the grid. Perhaps most importantly, the existing brownfield sites have water licences. Water licences are hard to get unless you're Enmax. Water licences are hard to get in southern Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I can sum up very quickly. When I'm presented with facts that show that the opinion I previously held was wrong, I change my mind. I suggest some of these other hon. members do the same.

10:40

The Deputy Speaker: You have 30 seconds under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Anderson: Absolutely. Well, yeah, it's funny how his difference of opinion from a couple of months ago to now is completely based on principles and not knowing the information before, but the stand that I took when I wrongly took a speech that your office had prepared for me as a rookie MLA and read it and made that . . .

An Hon. Member: You were just a mouthpiece.

Mr. Anderson: Exactly. Unfortunately, I was just a mouthpiece.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the 29(2)(a) time is finished.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the bill.

Mr. Hinman: It is very interesting, that last question from the Minister of Energy on 29(2)(a), where he got up and wanted to explain why his ability to get new information and change was okay, but other people seem to do it for different reasons than that.

On Bill 6 I guess I have to disagree with my colleague in that he's going to vote for it. I'm going to vote against it because the whole purpose of Bill 6 is to try and put a Band-Aid on something that's wrong, and I don't want to put on a Band-Aid. I don't want to start a whole new property rights advocate at this point, with an election looming. Again, this government perhaps wants to go to the people – obviously, they do – saying: “Don't worry. We'll have an advocate for you now. You don't need property rights. All you need is an advocate because we're going to consult with you, we're going to give you the courts, and we're going to give you the compensation but not in all jurisdictions and not in all areas.” If you actually own the title to a property, you will, but if you have a lease, a mineral lease or a forest lease, other areas like that, the consultation, the compensation, and access to the courts, it's still up to the wonderful minister to decide whether or not they're fair. I'm astounded.

Mr. Anderson: He just said he doesn't have any expertise.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. And he has no expertise. That is a bit of a conundrum.

Mr. Anderson: He had to appoint a committee to figure it out.

Mr. Hinman: An expert committee.

So, Mr. Chair, I have some real problems with Bill 6 in the fact that this is purely a bandage for a wound that should be sewn up by repealing bills 19, 24, 36, and 50, which many have talked about very well.

Bill 36 is interesting. It divides the province into seven land-use regions and authorizes cabinet to implement sweeping regional plans for each area of the province that override whatever had previously been in place. This means that central planners – central planners – like our fine Minister of Energy at the Legislature rather than locally elected and accountable municipal councils will ultimately get to decide on what activities are going to be permitted or prohibited on private land in every region of this province. I've listened to him say that he would trust elected people over and above the judicial courts. I find that quite astounding, but it was enlightening when I heard him talk on that.

This act also allows cabinet to extinguish existing rights held under licences, permits, leases, and approvals with limited or no compensation. I spoke with one miner who really contemplated taking out a mineral lease in Alberta because he said that it's one of the worst areas. But he went to SRD and got their assurance: no problem; that area is not going to be under the lower Athabasca regional plan. He put two years of sweat equity into that mine only to have it swept out from under him because LARC changed its plan because another big business said: we might want to put in a hydro dam. So all of a sudden it was changed, and he doesn't have any compensation, he doesn't have any consultation, and he has no access to the courts. I'm sorry, but a land advocate isn't going to help him either.

It's just a joke. It's just wrong. How they can sit over there and say that it's okay, that these regional planners are going to look after the province. That isn't what this is about. It's about looking after investors. It's about looking after property owners. It's about looking after businesspeople who have leases and permits and other approvals to go forward. Yet this government and, again, their wonderful central planners are going to speak on that and say whether or not it's okay to go ahead.

The smaller acts of 1924 and '36 are trumped and are designed to give licences to Albertans to operate businesses. Whether it's the Forests Act or the Public Lands Act or the Water Act, each of them is mandated to distribute their licence for various industries in a sustainable way. The Forests Act, for example, is explained on the SRD website. “This Act establishes an annual allowable cut in coniferous and deciduous [trees]. It prohibits persons from damaging the forest in any way and allows the Minister to construct and maintain forest recreation areas.” So there are conservation provisions in it. Those who get a tree harvesting licence assume that they are granted the freedom and right, the licence, to harvest certain trees. This would be a reasonable assumption until now.

After LARP, the lower Athabasca regional plan, came out, we now know that these licences are liable to be extinguished if the minister decides suddenly that for whatever reason, because nobody can appeal or demand a rationale, he wants to extinguish their licence in his regional plan. What is in Bill 6 that changes this fact? Nothing. The advocate will simply tell the landowner: oh; there's no appeal, there's no consultation, and there are no courts. Then he might include his landowner's complaint in a report at the end of the year. How wonderful.

The point is that all kinds of industries and professions rely on these individual acts to plan their business and hire employees. They even base their decision on whether they want to come to Alberta to do business and hire people on the reliability of this framework. As indicated, there are stewardship provisions already built into them, but these new superacts, especially the Land Stewardship Act, trump all of this and throw it into doubt.

The argument is that we need to think about sustainability or stewardship or conservation, but the acts we are talking about include this consideration. Some of these acts we're talking about even have conservation in the title: the Coal Conservation Act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, the Oil Sands Conservation Act. If they're not doing their job, Mr. Speaker, why not bring each of them in to make the adjustments, like the government does all the time? We need rule of law, not an advocate to explain to landowners which superlaw takes his rights to appeal and gives arbitrary powers to the minister and the cabinet. It's just not right. Bill 6 isn't needed. Property rights are needed. An advocate isn't needed. We need the courts and the due process of law to ensure that investment will go on.

What's kind of interesting to me is that when I first got elected, one of the first I want to say draconian economic decisions of this government was to come up with a fair share for Albertans, and that caused us a lot of grief. We're still, I think, trying to struggle and recover from that in different areas. They went through many, many amendments. I think it was six. Was it six amendments to the new royalty framework?

Mr. Anderson: I lost track.

Mr. Hinman: They finally had to revert to what it was. I don't know whether we've got four amendments now or how many we're going to go through, I guess two amendment acts. This Bill 6 is a third amendment act. [interjection] I'm sorry; I'm confusing the former Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: You're confusing yourself. The royalty framework worked perfectly fine.

Mr. Hinman: Oh, listen. Now he's telling us that the royalty framework worked perfectly fine. So why on earth did we ever go through such a prolonged procedure and so many tweaks and keep saying, "Oh, we're going to change this, and we're going to change that?"

This is the problem with this government. They don't even realize the damage they do. They're like the bull that's gone through the china shop. It has no recognition of china, doesn't know that it's done anything wrong. Therefore, we have to worry about where the bull is going to run next. It's so bullheaded that it doesn't know that it doesn't belong in there.

The problem that we have with Bill 6 is that it's the third attempt of this government to bandage up the problems of ignoring and walking away from property rights here in the province. Although some are going to say, "Well, at least let's put the Band-Aid on," I'll say: "No. Let the bleeding continue. Let the damage be shown so that people will react sooner rather than later."

10:50

We've had two and a half years. It's interesting. The Minister of Energy talks about the fearmongering that's going on. I think of the fearmongering that this government has been doing to get a power line from Edmonton to Calgary for – what is it? – eight, nine years now, since 2002, and he's telling us that it's critical now?

What the report actually said was that we needed one, that a 500-megawatt line from Calgary to Edmonton would be more than adequate and probably would only cost $500 million, one-seventh of the current thing. [interjection] It's interesting that he says that no one denied the growth. What they all did argue about, except for those who were actually building the lines, is that we don't need the lines. We can build the power plants, level the playing field.

What's really most interesting about the critical line committee is that they said, you know, that they were given the parameters of this government to come out on that decision, but the parameters were wrong. Even they said: now that we've given the government the go-ahead which they want to have to build these lines, we still will say, as the Premier and the Energy minister said, that this belongs back at the AUC.

Even after they were forced, because the parameters say that you need to make a decision, they said: you know, future decisions should go back to the AUC. It was very plain, very obvious, and when asked about the economics of it, even they said: "Well, no. It's more about the footprint. It's not about the economics." If it was the economics and we needed that, one line would suffice. We don't need two. We certainly don't need two DC lines.

Technology has changed somewhat, but still the cost is exorbitant. It really has to be looked at as to whether or not that's the right thing. This Bill 6, the Property Rights Advocate Act, isn't going to address any of that. Those costs are going to occur on the bills of the residential people of Alberta, and it'll be a domino effect. As industry is driven out of this province, just like they did with our new royalty framework – they drove industry out. The taxation wasn't able to be brought in to meet our needs.

We're still at a $16 billion deficit because of the incompetence of this government and the legislation that they bring in that doesn't respect property rights or business licences in any form. They just look at it from their own selfish point of view.

We don't need Bill 6. We need property rights. We don't need a government that says that they're going to go out and consult after they pass new legislation. That isn't what the problem is. It's about having people with rights. That's what a constitutional democracy, Mr. Speaker, is all about, having the rule of law and being able to actually know in advance what the court should rule. We seem to have more and more arbitrary decisions. This government is fixated on the idea that if it brings it into the government policy area, we can therefore protect and plan for the future.

It's interesting. I've had a little bit of experience with land use and buying property in different areas of the province, and it's amazing how it changes over the years as elected people are brought in because they're not representing the local people. One thing I can assure you, Mr. Speaker. With this centralized decision-making in Edmonton the local people will not be able to reverse and change these laws.

Of course, this government is going to say: well, we know better. Central planners always do say that: "We know better. We can plan better for what you need in your area. You just don't understand." They're going to step on lots of rights going forward. It'll be to the detriment of the industry here in the province. It's wrong. It shouldn't be passed. I would just hope that we'll have an election before this government, because they're going to pass this bill, spends the money to set up a property rights advocate at the expense of the taxpayers when all we need to do is just protect the property of those people here in the province.

I'll look forward to some piercing questions under 29(2)(a) on this. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Hon. Minister of Energy, you have five minutes.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suspect that everybody in the Assembly here tonight would agree that in repeating things that aren't true, no matter how many times you repeat them, they're still untrue. I think that if any Albertans happen to be listening tonight, they would have no idea what's actually in Bill 6.

For the sake of clarity, I'd just like to read a few key sections from Bill 6 to put into context some of the misleading comments that we've heard from the hon. gentleman there. The preamble is very clear here:

Whereas the Government of Alberta believes that land owners should be consulted about proposed legislation that affects their property rights.

So consultation, the first of the three Cs.

Secondly, they believe "that land owners should be appropriately compensated where their lands are affected." So compensation, the second of the three Cs. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, the minister has the floor for five minutes.

Mr. Hinman: I heard lots from him when I was speaking.

Dr. Morton: That was somebody else.

Courts, compensation, and consultation. If there are any citizens of Alberta still listening, let me take them to section 2(1) of Bill 6, application of the Expropriation Act.

2(1) The Expropriation Act applies to an expropriation authorized by the law of Alberta and prevails over any contrary provisions that may be found in the law.

It prevails. The Expropriation Act prevails, and it provides very clear rights for an administrative appeal and, if you're not happy there, to the courts. This prevails over Bill 36 if that's his big concern.

Then I would take him to section 2(2).

Where a person has a right to compensation as a result of an expropriation or compensable taking . . .

I emphasize: a compensable taking in law.

. . . that person must have recourse to an independent tribunal or the courts, or both."

Now, a compensable taking, Mr. Speaker, refers to loss of value as determined in the common law. Expropriation is under a statute, and it sets out the rights to an administrative appeal and then access to the courts. This extends it to a compensable taking, and a compensable taking is a loss of value in land pursuant to it could be a private action or it could be a government action. It addresses precisely – precisely – the type of adverse impact that our friends in the third party have been complaining about. Again, it guarantees recourse to an independent tribunal or the courts or both.

Let me conclude, then, by going to section 4, complaints, which is the office of the property rights advocate.

A person may make a complaint to the Property Rights Advocate . . . relating to

- (a) an expropriation of that person's land, or
- (b) a compensable taking of that person's land.

Again, either under a statute or simply through an adverse impact of a government act that would negatively affect value.

This is section (2):

The Property Rights Advocate shall prepare a report . . . provide a copy of the report.

I skip down to subsection (5) now. If the advocate determines that there has been something wrong or if there has been misconduct on the part of a government authority, that report is admissible in a court of law or an administrative tribunal or both. So you have exactly what an independent advocate is supposed to be, somebody that helps a landowner. The landowner doesn't have to pay for this service. It's an independent advocate that will study the situation, file a report, and if a wrongdoing has been found on the part of a government act or government acts, that report is then admissible in a court of law or the administrative tribunal.

What else is there to say? They have spent three years confusing the fact here, and we have finally now put out the three key issues: compensation, consultation, and courts. I know why they're upset. [interjections] Without this issue how the heck are they going to get any votes? Courts, compensation, consultation, and an advocate to take the side of landowners: that's what Bill 6 brings.

The Deputy Speaker: Section 29(2)(a) is done. It's finished. [interjection] Hon. member, the five minutes for 29(2)(a) have terminated.

Is there any other member wishing to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, hon. Minister of Environment and Water, do you wish to close the debate?

Mrs. McQueen: Close the debate. Question.

The Deputy Speaker: All right, then. The chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

11:00

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 2 Education Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to move an amendment – I believe we'll number it as A1; the table clerks have the requisite number of copies for distribution – to Bill 2, the Education Act. We'll give some time for the pages to circulate that amendment.

The Chair: Let us pause a moment. The page will deliver the amendments to the members.

Hon. minister, you can proceed now.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. We all know, Mr. Chairman, that change can create concerns and anxiety among those impacted by change. We also know that in a society as diverse as ours, there is always a balance to be struck between individual values and beliefs and the values and beliefs of society as a whole.

Our education system, Mr. Chairman, must strike this balance. It must both respect individual values and beliefs and reflect the common values and beliefs of Albertans as embodied by foundational legislation such as the Alberta Human Rights Act and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I want to ensure that Bill 2 appropriately strikes this balance and addresses a concern that has been raised by many Albertans since the introduction of Bill 2; namely, the role of parents and family life in a child's education. This is important for all families in Alberta, of course, but for families who choose home education for their children, this is of special significance. For these students, learning happens in the home and is integrated into the family's life rather than at a set time of the day.

The crux of the matter, Mr. Chairman, lies in three elements already contained in the Education Act. One, the Education Act speaks to the government of Alberta's commitment to providing choice to Alberta families in education programs and methods of learning. Two, the Education Act also speaks about religion, and like in the School Act it allows parents to exclude their children from religious instruction or exercise. Three, there are certain elements in the Education Act, some new additions and some retained from the School Act, that reinforce the role of parents within a child's education. These concepts together play a foundational role in a child's education and, indeed, in a child's life. However, I believe that it is necessary to clarify and articulate the connection between these three concepts.

We heard from a number of home-schooling parents that they were concerned that the legislation was not clear. They were concerned that government was requiring that they teach things they do not agree with. Let me be clear, Mr. Chairman. We believe that parents determine the religious instruction of their children. Let me underscore that. We believe that parents determine the religious instruction of their children.

Accordingly, I propose to add a new statement to the preamble of the Education Act to read as follows:

Whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins in the home; that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children; and that these principles are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta to provide parents with choice in education, including public schools, separate schools, Francophone schools, charter schools, private schools and home education programs;

This amendment to the preamble honours the government of Alberta's commitment to choice, to respecting conscientiously held spiritual beliefs and ethical traditions, and to respecting parents' rights when it comes to these very important matters.

Mr. Chairman, at this point I conclude, and I adjourn the debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I shall call the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to report.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, does this Assembly agree?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, given the hour and given the progress I would move that we adjourn till 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:09 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Committee of Supply
Committee Reports	479
Vote on Main Estimates 2012-13	479
Division	480
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 4 St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act	480
Bill 5 Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act.....	488
Bill 6 Property Rights Advocate Act.....	494
Committee of the Whole
Bill 2 Education Act.....	500

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fifth Session

Alberta Hansard

Wednesday afternoon, March 14, 2012

Issue 17a

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 27th Legislature

Fifth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Hon. Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Hon. Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader,
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysdale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Hon. Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL)
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Hon. Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Hon. Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC)
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Hon. Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, Hon. F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Hon. Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (Ind)
Stelmach, Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, Hon. George, Whitecourt-St. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Webber, Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 67 Alberta Liberal: 8 Wildrose: 4 New Democrat: 2 Alberta: 1 Independent: 1

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

W.J. David McNeil, Clerk	Stephanie LeBlanc, Parliamentary Counsel & Legal Research Officer	Chris Caughell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Robert H. Reynolds, QC, Law Clerk/ Director of Interparliamentary Relations	Philip Massolin, Committee Research Co-ordinator	Gordon H. Munk, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Shannon Dean, Senior Parliamentary Counsel/Director of House Services	Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms	Liz Sim, Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Health and Wellness
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Ouellette
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
MacDonald
Mason
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Dr. Taft

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Rodney
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 14, 2012

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and privilege for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 39 students from Northmount elementary school in the fine constituency of Edmonton-Decore. The learning motto for Northmount school this month just happens to be Honesty. I know that these are exciting, exuberant young people that will be the future leaders. I am happy to say that they are joined today by their teachers, which includes Mrs. Norma Nay, Mr. Derek Lutz, and Ms Jasna Mandic, and also parent helper Mrs. Denna Gates. I would ask them now to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all my colleagues in the Assembly 27 grade 6 students and eight of their leaders from Taber, Alberta. These students have had about a six-hour bus ride to get here this morning, and I'm honoured to have them in our presence today. They are accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Selena Frizzley and Mr. Pat Pyne and parent helpers Mr. Kevin Pyne, Mr. John Muller, Mr. Perry Weinberger, Mrs. Shauna Pavka, Mrs. Larena Passey, and Mrs. Melanie Bos. I would ask these students and their leaders to please rise – I think they're in the public gallery – and receive the warm applause of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly representatives from Hockey Alberta and from Red Deer College. Rob Litwinski is the general manager for Hockey Alberta. He lives in Red Deer. He has three children, two boys and a girl. His daughter and his son both play hockey, and this weekend he has the honour of travelling up to Fort McMurray for provincials with his daughter. Then we have Len Samletzki. He's a board member and the CFO for Hockey Alberta, and he's from St. Albert. Also, we have Michael Donlevy. Michael is the vice-president of community relations for Red Deer College, and he's also the board chair for the Westerner Exposition Association.

They are here today, Mr. Speaker, to help celebrate and honour the new partnership between Hockey Alberta and Red Deer College that I'll be speaking about further in my member's statement. I would ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Anthony DiNunzio and Nicolle DiNunzio. I would ask them to stand at this time. Anthony is a recent arrival from Pennsylvania, and he has come to Alberta because of the tremendous opportunities here. He will be working in the medical field. Nicolle is a constituency assistant for Calgary-Hays and keeps me on track and ready for work each day. I'd like you to give them the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through to all members of the Assembly members of the Lapa family: Sarah, Natalie, Emily, and Andrew. They are a home-schooling family from Spruce Grove and moved to Alberta nearly three years ago from British Columbia. It's their seventh year of home-schooling. The Lapas are here today to observe the procedures of the House. I'd please ask them to stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour today to introduce a young lady I met very briefly prior to us coming in the House today. She arrived in her Roman chariot like I did today. Her name is Mallory Pavka. She's from Taber, and she goes to St. Mary's school and is a grade 6 student there. Would everyone please extend a warm welcome to Mallory and welcome her to our Legislature.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Timing is everything. I would like to introduce to you and to all members of this Legislature a constituent of mine, Mrs. Deborah Price. Please stand up. Thank you kindly. Mrs. Deborah Price has been a visitor also in British Columbia's Legislature, and she was introduced over there and made her way into B.C. Hansard. Now she lives in Castle Downs, a great constituent. Now she will be introduced and will be in Alberta's Hansard. I certainly hope that she's not moving eastbound and that she's not moving to Saskatchewan any time soon. So to you and through you, Mrs. Deborah Price.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Athabasca-Redwater it gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of agriculture producers from the Athabasca-Redwater area. They are members of the Athabasca-Redwater agriculture advisory committee, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly wherever they are.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Hockey Alberta/Red Deer College Partnership

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On January 19, 2012, Hockey Alberta moved into its new home at Red Deer College. Hockey Alberta, also known over its 104-year history as the Alberta Amateur Hockey Association, has a bold vision, to become the most progressive and innovative sport organization in Canada. By moving to the Red Deer College campus, Hockey Alberta took one more step in achieving this grand vision.

Hockey Alberta and Red Deer College believe that this partnership could become one of the most progressive relationships between a provincial sport association and a postsecondary institution in the entire country. Hockey Alberta serves a large membership of over 90,000 participants in this province through 200 local minor hockey associations and 200 teams in senior, junior, and female hockey.

Hockey Alberta and Red Deer College recognize that their partnership could further the mutual goals of both organizations. These goals include the development of leadership potential through the promotion of hockey and the enhancement of work experience opportunities for college students.

Also in partnership with Red Deer College a future sport administration village will serve as the hub of hockey coaching, refereeing, and leadership development for the entire province. Hockey Alberta along with Red Deer College plans to develop a facility that will act as a provincial training centre and provide resources to test new programming ideas, techniques, and delivery strategies.

The partnership of Red Deer College and Hockey Alberta's vision of a provincial training centre on campus at RDC is one that will help to carry Hockey Alberta towards its goal of becoming the most progressive and innovative sports organization in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate Hockey Alberta and Red Deer College for their wisdom in developing a partnership that will help Hockey Alberta become the most progressive and innovative sports organization in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

1:40

Integrity in Government

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's the Alberta Spring. After 41 years of PC government Albertans can see the rot and its dark cousin, cynicism, creeping into the province. The final straws for most people were the indecent 32 per cent income boost embraced by the Tory leadership, monthly pay for committees that don't meet, and a too-rich severance for MLAs, supported by the current Premier. To that add an antiquated electoral system that is totally controlled by the richest in the province. This government doesn't have the decency to reduce the $30,000 limit on election year donations that grease the way to consecutive Tory majorities. Alberta, the best democracy money can buy.

Add the disgust people are feeling about their health care professionals being bullied and in some cases dismissed for daring to challenge the mismanagement of our cherished health care system. There are credible reports of preventable deaths and a very demoralized health care workforce. A further insult is the Premier's reversal on her commitment to have a public inquiry to investigate the many instances of abuse of power.

Seniors' care would be an embarrassment if it weren't so serious and life threatening, with more cases coming forward of negligence, harm, and financial exploitation of our most vulnerable.

And now the revelations about the Tory leadership candidate misappropriating funds for their campaign. It's too much. Mr. Speaker, Peter Lougheed must be grinding his teeth. Some citizens have felt their trust betrayed and pulled away from the stench, perhaps not realizing the need more than ever to be engaged, to help elect members with vision and integrity. This PC government has gone too far.

What is needed is a made-in-Alberta revolution. Let's make the Arab Spring the Alberta Spring. If Egypt can do it, maybe there's hope for Alberta. I'm calling on all Albertans who care about democracy, public health care, public education, and our reputation as a responsible business and environmental province to meet with others in your constituency and investigate your candidates for these values. Yes, get mad.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays. [interjection] Calgary-Hays, you have the floor.

Retrospective by the Member for Calgary-Hays

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with mixed emotions that I rise today to give what is likely to be my final member's statement as the MLA for Calgary-Hays. I have had the privilege of serving the great people of Calgary-Hays since 2004 and have seen our province go through good times and hard times.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly comment on how well I feel we've done as a province while navigating through these difficult times and the downturn in our economy. I believe it's no secret that we were the best-prepared jurisdiction to weather the economic storm. Both our province's employment rate and average weekly earnings remained the highest in the country. Our population has also been growing at a rate higher than the national average, and our economic growth is once again the strongest in this country.

I would also like to mention the progress made in my home constituency and the Calgary area. From the Calgary ring road to the Deerfoot extension to the seven new schools built in my constituency and the new south Calgary hospital, we have followed through on the commitment to Albertans by responsibly investing in the infrastructure that our province needs.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to commend the work of my colleagues here in this House. Again, I'd like to commend the citizens of Calgary-Hays for allowing me the honour of serving them for the past eight years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Congratulations to that honourable member from Calgary-Hays.

Alberta's Representative in Asia

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, this Premier's indecision on the Gary Mar affair is embarrassing to herself and to Alberta's reputation in Asia, our most important emerging trade partner. As someone who lived in Asia for two years, honour and reputation are everything in these cultures, and this debacle is sullyng our province in those nations' eyes and making our provincial leadership look exceptionally weak.

The facts are not in doubt here. We know Mr. Mar had $262,000 in personal debts from his PC leadership campaign that he needed to pay off and that he held a fundraiser to help him with that. We know an invitation was prepared which specifically invited guests to a $400-a-plate dinner to hear Mr. Mar speak about business opportunities in Asia.

The invite also mentioned that a trip to Hong Kong was to be auctioned off, with the obvious implication that the trip would include hanging out with Alberta's number one man in Asia, obviously an inappropriate use of a senior government official's position to personally profit no matter how you spin it.

We also know that someone involved with the dinner figured out that the first invite looked bad and sent out a replacement invite that only mentioned an evening with Mr. Mar and his wife, with no mention of the trip auction. Despite that, the trip was still auctioned off for $20,000.

We know that Mr. Mar says that he didn't do anything wrong and that the Premier threw all of this to the Ethics Commissioner to investigate, only to find out that he has no authority in the matter. Now the Premier wants to refer this to one of her favourite things in the world – wait for it – a committee.

Honestly, Premier, how is this real-life leadership? It looks like an episode of The Three Stooges, starring Gary, Allie, and Moe Corruption. This shouldn't be hard. The facts are in front of you. Either Mr. Mar should be fired or sanctioned or exonerated by you, Premier, not by yet another committee and not after the election. Stop flopping around like a fish out of water and find your feet. If you are unable, I know a strong Alberta leader named Danielle Smith who is ready and able to step up and lead.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Seniors' Benefit Programs

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, today I want to speak about our government's commitment to seniors. Alberta is a great place to work, raise a family, and retire. However, for some seniors retirement years can be challenging. That is why our government is committed to helping Albertans age with the dignity and respect they so deserve.

Alberta provides government support to over 425,000 seniors. The Alberta seniors' benefit is the best in Canada. It provides financial support to single seniors earning less than $24,600 and to senior couples earning less than $40,000 per year. We provide dental and optical assistance to lower income Albertans to help cover the cost of dentures and eyeglasses. We provide Blue Cross health insurance at no cost for all Alberta seniors. We have an excellent program for prescription drugs. Seniors pay only 30 per cent of costs up to a maximum of $25.

We are the only province to provide assistance to low-income seniors with extraordinary expenses such as appliances. We're beefing up our home-care and nursing services to help those who have health challenges remain in their homes. We provide tax relief to all Alberta seniors by freezing the provincial portion of property taxes after 65 years of age, and we're bringing in a seniors' property tax deferral program as set out in Bill 5. This program will allow seniors to defer all or part of their property taxes until they sell their home, helping to free up money they would otherwise spend on property taxes. It will help seniors stay in their homes longer.

Mr. Speaker, our government will continue to improve programs and services so that Alberta remains the best place in North America to live and to retire.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Library Services

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to you about the continued investment being made to support the people and communities in Alberta through one of our most venerable institutions, the investment in this province's public libraries. I know how Albertans value libraries. I know how valuable they are throughout this fine province. They are one of our community meeting and learning spaces.

Public libraries enrich the lives of us all: families, new Albertans, people of all ages, incomes, and backgrounds. Through SuperNet and our partnership with the Alberta Library, TAL, and the Alberta public library electronic network, APLEN, public libraries bring the world to us.

Mr. Speaker, libraries are not just about books; they are meeting places in communities, and they are the hubs that help make these and keep these communities strong. Libraries help to break down social and economic barriers and are places where individuals, families, and new Albertans can search for a job, learn a language, or let imagination soar.

When my family and I enter our local Crowfoot library, I know that we are opening a door to possibilities. When I read to preschoolers, we're opening the doors to their future. Crowfoot library is a big part of my family's life and that of my community, and libraries play a big part in the lives of all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, support for Alberta's libraries continues. Within Municipal Affairs' budget for 2012-13 a 5-cent increase in per capita rates for public libraries is being brought forward, which is a total of $300,000. This increase is a reallocation of funds within the existing public library services budget in Municipal Affairs. It will go directly to public libraries throughout the province.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, libraries enrich our lives. The government recognizes this. This is why we direct funding to public libraries in the province, and we've increased it over the last four years. Work continues with valued library partners in this province to ensure that all Albertans, no matter where they live – from Coutts to Fort McMurray, from Hardisty to Blairmore – get to enjoy these most important institutions.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Long-term Care for Seniors

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I met Grace Denyer's family. They were horrified at her neglect and by this government's failure to adequately fund staff and resource seniors' care facilities. Mrs. Denyer stayed at Youville, where a urinary tract infection went untreated for six weeks. She was routinely left in a diaper, which led to her screaming in pain due to her open wounds. Finally, she had a stroke, which was not diagnosed until five days later. To the government: why do you insist on spinning this issue instead of admitting that this government is failing our seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this particular case, as the hon. member has mentioned, is a very unfortunate case, and the government certainly sympathizes with the resident and her family. What I will tell you is that we have very strict continuing care health standards in place across the province. They apply equally to residents in privately funded, publicly funded, and not-for-profit facilities.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, this is one of more stories. Given that this government has starved the public facilities for funding for staff and tragically failed Mrs. Denyer, eventually her family felt forced to turn to the private system, the go-to option for the PCs, and that incredibly expensive system failed them as well when the private operator evicted Mrs. Denyer by ambulance, sending her to the Grey Nuns hospital. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: don't you understand that when you starve the public long-term care facilities for funding, our seniors are going to end up in the emergency departments and acute-care hospitals, causing a crisis, costing us more, and eventually causing suffering for our seniors?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, in every attempt to respect the privacy of the family, what the hon. member fails to mention is that the private facility that the resident moved to from the Youville Home was, in fact, a private assisted living facility. It has been explained to me that this facility may have advertised itself as a nursing home or a long-term care facility. If that was the case, that was certainly not an accurate representation of the care provided in that facility.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As for privacy, the family was on page A5 of the newspaper today and the facilities that this minister has starved of funding. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that this government's seniors' care policies are an abject humanitarian failure, will you please – will you please – just listen and have the heart to follow the Alberta Liberal lead and double funding for public home care and significantly enhance public nonprofit long-term care?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose the notion that the hon. member would exploit the alleged facts of this case is probably not surprising to some members of this House, including myself.

What I will tell you once again, Mr. Speaker, is that the private facility to which the member refers is not publicly funded in any way. They are not under contract with Alberta Health Services to provide health care. They are in no way funded by this government to deliver any form of care. To the extent that they may have misrepresented the services that they provide to Albertans, we think that's very unfortunate for the family.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Alberta First Nations Energy Centre

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, in that babble I didn't hear any real answers. Let's change topics here. The First Nations have a history of co-operating with the oil industry, enabling activities on their land, but on Monday three Alberta Grand Treaty chiefs left the Premier's office angry and insulted after the Premier pushed the First Nations upgrader project over a cliff. The $6.6 billion project would have attracted investment from the state oil companies of India or China, a golden opportunity for aboriginal people to take an equity share in our oil wealth as well as for Albertans, a no-brainer. Since the Premier seems to be campaigning today, to the Energy minister: don't you realize your negligence and arrogance has threatened relations between First Nations and our government and our economy?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition could save us time and trouble if he would just read answers from last week and again from yesterday. We looked at this deal very closely. When the decision was made not to continue, it was nowhere near the point of development in terms of engineering, land acquisitions, siting, licences, and so forth that the other one was that was approved. Again, it was a business decision, opportunity versus risk. The risks were simply too high, too high for the taxpayers of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader, please.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This minister could save us all the trouble and just make the right decision.

Given that this would have been North America's first refinery in 30 years and would have created 7,000 jobs, a project to build real value into our economy, a project that just makes sense and improves lives of the aboriginal peoples and all Albertans, to the Minister of Energy: when you and the Premier killed the First Nations project, why didn't you first consider the effect that decision would have on our relations with our First Nations peoples? Why, Minister? Come on.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister of immigration and aboriginal affairs would like to answer this as well. Again, this is a 6 and a half billion dollar project. I think the people of Alberta, the taxpayers of Alberta expect this government to make prudent decisions when it comes to projects, and the prudent decision was that the risk clearly outweighed the benefits.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a prudent decision when other nations have billions of dollars to invest in Alberta. It's a very prudent decision. Given the well-known fact that Spotlight Strategies represents two other major projects of this nature and that the principal partners of that firm, Randy Dawson and Susan Elliott, are the former and current PC campaign managers, to the Minister of Energy: who's running this province? You guys or the PC Party insiders at Spotlight Strategy? Who is making these decisions, Minister?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. minister has clearly outlined the reasons that we weren't able to proceed on the refinery project, and those are the reasons. The conversation that we had with the grand chiefs and with the Premier was around the broader concept of economic benefit: too important, too broad to define by a single project decision. Too important.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Prices

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yet again this government has found a way to combine blunders, gouging, and scandal when it comes to electricity prices. Deregulation is ripping off seniors, families, businesses, and these young people's parents. Now the government is rushing ahead with a costly power line rebuild at a scale we don't need. The panel which said that these power lines are necessary is chaired by Brian Heidecker, former PC Party vice-president and PC leadership campaign manager of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. This casts great doubt on the panel's impartiality. To the minister: why won't you order an honest and open needs assessment on this project?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, not only is the hon. member a leading medical expert; now, suddenly, he's an electricity expert as well. We appointed a panel of three experts and Brian Heidecker, an Albertan with a distinguished record of public service. They took two months, listened to all of the information, all of the interested parties, and made impartial recommendations. They persuaded us of the need.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, the minister is right. What I am an expert at is looking at my utility bills, that have doubled.

To the Minister of Energy. Given that as an energy province we really should have the lowest power prices in the country and instead we have amongst the highest, and these will only increase with this expensive power line overbuild, why do you insist on rewarding those who finance your PC leadership election campaigns at the expense of our vulnerable seniors, working families, businesses, and eventually our economy? Why, Minister?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the price of electricity in this province, the regulated rate option, which is what about 70 per cent of residential consumers are on, has averaged 8 cents a kilowatt hour over the last five years. Numerous studies have shown that is very much a good average relative to other Canadian jurisdictions that don't have a lot of hydro. Guess what the regulated rate option is for this month? Why, it's 8.3 cents, so we're back on to our five-year average. We have succeeded in providing good, solid electricity rates with no debt. If you look at the debt that other provinces have, millions of dollars of debt.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, here's a minister who was caught speechless on that one.

Given that this government after lunch is still out to lunch on the issue of power prices and enforcement of our laws, I'd like to help you out, Minister, by providing another good idea. Will you follow the Alberta Liberal lead and bring in independent monitoring and raise penalties for companies that cheat Albertans, so breaking the law will never ever be profitable in this province again? Come on, Minister.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader is so in love with his own words that I'm sure nobody listening could possibly understand what he's even talking about except for me. I happen to know the incident that he's referring to, and I'm happy to report that it was detected in real time, and calls were made immediately, and that company has pleaded guilty. It has been charged and fined for the transgression.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

2:00 Alberta's Representative in Asia

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The PC culture of entitlement, cover-up, and corruption continues, and the Premier continues to show her lack of leadership. She pushed her own appointed Asian representative and fellow PC leadership candidate out into the street, hoping someone else would either run him over or clean up another PC fundraising mess. Well, as it turns out, Madam Premier, you are the one driving the bus. We have all seen the invitations sent for the fundraiser. We've all heard what Mr. Mar thinks. What are you going to do, Premier? Run over him or stop and pick him up? Show some real-life leadership.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding the string of unparliamentary language, innuendo, and accusations, that are totally unfounded, in the question, the hon. member should know that this government under this leader has made a very clear approach towards saying that everything is open and transparent. When the issue with respect to that fundraiser came to her, she did the right thing immediately and said: an investigation will take place. She did not say that a hanging would take place; she said that an investigation would take place, done by the right people.

Mr. Hinman: Well, she didn't take that long with the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace. What a surprise.

Given her track record of sending things that she knows are wrong but that she wants done to one of her compliance committees like the Critical Transmission Review Committee, the Property Rights Task Force, or the Health Quality Council, why doesn't the Premier just tell Albertans what she believes? Is he guilty or not? This committee is a sham.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, unlike other members of this House, one does not rush to judgment when people's reputations are at stake and when there are appropriate issues to be reviewed. No court passes sentence before examining the facts.

Mr. Hinman: Then she should exonerate him.

Is the reason the Premier continues to give such dithering responses and non answers because she agrees with Kelley Charlebois, your appointed man at the top of the PC Party, that the interpretation of ethical and unethical is very subjective? Albertans want to know if you can tell the difference between right and wrong.

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, despite this hon. member's attempt to drag the reputation of an employee of the government of Alberta through the mud, the reality is that this matter is under review, and it's inappropriate to make further comments at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, that's really interesting.

Private Operation of Long-term Care Facilities

Mr. Mason: No Albertan wants themselves or their family to be in Grace Denyer's position, evicted from a private long-term care facility because the fees were suddenly jacked up, yet this is exactly the sort of disaster invited by the Conservative plan to lift the cap on seniors' care accommodation costs and rely on private health delivery. Why won't the Premier admit that their scheme for more private seniors' health care will expose more Albertans to the same problems faced by Mrs. Denyer?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I think the hon. member well knows, the private facility to which he refers is not a long-term care facility. It does not operate under contract with Alberta Health Services. It is not part of the range of affordable living spaces that are funded by this government in accordance with the values that seniors have told us they want us to observe: aging in place, health care brought to them as they need it, standards to protect the care and the accommodation that they receive, all provided in an affordable framework.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, given that the daughter of Mrs. Denyer has some questions, I'd like the minister to answer them. Why is this facility allowed to advertise and accept long-term care patients when it's not licensed to do so? How can they increase their rent in excess of 44 per cent within weeks of her entering the home, and how can the facilities be allowed to dump a resident at the emergency room door when they decide they no longer want them? Answer those questions.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the first question I have exactly the same question, and perhaps that should be put to the people that own and operate the facility.

It is not a long-term care facility. It is not under the auspices of a contract with Alberta Health Services, and it is not subject to the standards that are present in all continuing care facilities that deliver health care in this province. We are proud of those standards, Mr. Speaker. We enforce them rigorously through a variety of inspection processes, which the hon. members can see that we defend.

Mr. Mason: Given the disastrous situation that affected this poor woman, why is it that this minister is just washing his hands of the problem and saying: it's not our problem; it's too bad, but it's their problem? Why haven't you protected people from this kind of facility, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member well knows, the unfortunate case to which he refers involves a woman who was transferred from a public facility, that is subject to all of the same rate caps and standards I referred to, to a private facility. There are routine procedures that are used by families every day in this province to facilitate transfer from publicly funded continuing care facilities to other continuing care facilities. The MLAs on all sides of the House advise their constituents regularly of how these processes work. For whatever reason, they were not followed in this case, and unfortunately the lady in question moved to a private facility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Long-term Care for Seniors (continued)

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, on Monday the minister of health told the House he's building thousands of continuing care spaces for seniors. Let me be clear. The experts, including Dr. Paul Parks, are saying that the urgent need is for fully medically supported long-term care beds. With 14,500 nursing home or long-term care beds we actually have fewer now in Alberta than we had in 2008. Why, despite having over a million people added to our population in 20 years and proportionately more seniors, does this province have only 74 more long-term care beds?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, as far as this government is concerned, the experts on what people want to see in long-term care and continuing care options across this province are our seniors, the constituents that we serve. If hon. members opposite want to continue to engage in an ideological debate, we certainly leave that territory to them. Our philosophy and our practice and the extensive infrastructure spending that goes to opening thousands of continuing care spaces is based on Albertans' expressed wishes to be provided with health care in place as they age, living together as couples and families.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, I didn't know that providing seniors with long-term care was an ideological position.

Given that most of the spaces announced in December are supportive living, not long-term care, when will the government realize that medically supported beds must be the priority to clear our hospital beds, not private, for-profit alternatives?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, providing our seniors with the health care they require, preferably in their own home if not in a supportive living or a long-term care facility in or near their home community, is exactly what this government is delivering.

With respect to the hon. member's fixation, if I can say it, on a model from the 1970s, that emphasized institutional care only, whether or not people had a requirement for that level of care, this government doesn't subscribe to that philosophy.

Dr. Swann: By some magic this minister seems to feel that seniors no longer need long-term care. Sorry; the reality is still there. Given that the shortage of long-term care beds worsens ER overload and operating wait times and demoralizes health care professionals, when will this government admit its total incompetence to deal with seniors' care issues?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, what this government believes in and what this government is committed to is providing people a level of health care they need in place. It may interest the hon. member to know that despite the fact that the nursing homes operation regulations specify a minimum of one hour of skilled nursing care per day in a long-term care facility, in 2008, even, we were providing an average of 3.8 hours of nursing care per day to those residents. So we will continue to adjust health care needs to the needs of our seniors as they continue to age in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday one of the opposition parties introduced one of their candidates that will run in the next provincial election. As part of their political theatre they also used the opportunity to later make more claims of physician intimidation from this candidate. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What can you tell us about these allegations?

The Speaker: Well, okay. Try.

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, despite the nature of the question I can inform the House that I have no information about these allegations.

Mr. Sandhu: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the same minister. If this candidate had concerns about advocating for his patients or, more importantly, if physicians who are currently working in Alberta have concerns, what options do they have to try to remedy that situation?

2:10

The Speaker: If this has to do with policy, go ahead.

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it actually is a question of policy. There are a number of processes that are available to physicians who have concerns about their ability to advocate on behalf of their patients. Alberta Health Services has a new set of medical staff bylaws that not only set out a process for advocacy in the case of physicians who have concerns but that actively encourage them in the process of advocating for patients. AHS has recently opened a hotline for physicians and other health care workers who have concerns about advocacy matters. It is also encouraging the sort of open and ongoing dialogue in the culture of the health care system.

Mr. Sandhu: To the same minister: as these concerns relate to the appropriate level of mental health services, can the minister share any action that the government is taking to improve access to these services?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, in addition to providing an appropriate process and an orderly process for health professionals to raise concerns, this government announced $40 million in funding a little over a week ago that will see the addition of 80 mental health beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

In addition to this, we've provided funds for the early detection and treatment of mental illness among children and youth in our schools throughout the province, and we've provided funds to support housing initiatives under the Ministry of Human Services to deal with the needs of complex . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Residential Rehabilitation Assistance

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I find it wacky politics to dump on one vulnerable group in order to achieve a much-hyped target for another. Now, this government has abandoned both housing adaptation for seniors' independence and residential rehabilitation assistance programs in order to fund affordable housing for a different group. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Why did the ministry choose to redirect funding away from these two programs, HASI and RRAP, both of which keep low-income seniors and others in their homes, to build affordable housing which neither group could now afford?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it was actually a federal program, RRAP, that was passed on to the provincial government on very short notice, so we didn't have time to create the program necessary to replace what the federal government had originally offered. On top of that, we realize that the Department of Seniors offers some incredible assistance to seniors, up to $5,000, to deal with emergent issues, so we chose to direct those resources, without the time to create a new program, into something that would be very effective for all Albertans that need housing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. But there was an agreement from the province to accept this money, so why did the government abandon those Albertans who had qualified for and were told they were successful in the residential rehabilitation assistance program when it was under the feds and were then told: go to the province; the province signed an agreement; get your money from them? What are these people supposed to do now?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to apologize on behalf of the federal government for them stopping their program. When they decided they didn't want to run the program anymore but they would provide the resources to the province, they asked every province if they were still going to run the RRAP program. We indicated we would do some exploration, but we didn't have enough time to set up our own program. So we put it where it would best be used: for people who need affordable housing.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister: how does building affordable housing for others keep vulnerable seniors and other low-income owners in their homes given that they can no longer access the very programs that made that possible like getting accessible bathtubs, grab bars, ramps into their homes? What are you talking about, Mr. Minister? [interjections]

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, if this member would do a little bit of research, they would realize that Seniors and Health have exceptional programs in this province already to help people stay in their homes. We do not have to model the exact same program the federal government had, that they had to abandon about a month before, that they turned over to us. We do exceptional work to assist those who need housing supports in their community.

The Speaker: Let me try and understand this again. I recognize an hon. member to ask a question. The question is asked. Then I recognize an hon. minister to respond to the question, and as he starts to respond to the question, a whole bunch of people start yelling at him. This is strange.

The hon. Member for Lacombe Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Farmers' Advocate of Alberta

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. From time to time our farmers, who are the backbone of our rural communities, may need help to navigate issues related to their farming industry and other agribusiness that they interact with. When farmers need this help, they can count on the Farmers' Advocate. This position has been vacant for several months, and I'm happy to hear that the government this morning announced a new Farmers' Advocate. My question to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: who is this new Farmers' Advocate, and how was he chosen?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Peter Dobbie, QC, has been appointed the new Farmers' Advocate for the province of Alberta. He brings to the position more than 20 years of experience as a lawyer advising farmers and agribusiness and as a resident of rural Alberta. Peter was selected through an open process. The position was advertised, and the candidates applied or were nominated by industry.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is my last question. What is the role of the Farmers' Advocate, and what can we expect the new Farmers' Advocate to do?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For almost 40 years Albertans have received assistance through the Farmers' Advocate's office, whether for consumer protection, pursuing rural opportunities, or fair process. The office also administers the Farm Implement Act, providing consumer protection. The advocate's office assists landowners with managing their land assets, mitigating business risk, and maximizing future economic activity and opportunity as it relates to the interaction with the oil industry as well. The Farmers' Advocate will work closely with the upcoming property rights advocate as well to assist rural Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we learned that despite the Premier's promise residents of the province's continuing care facilities will not be receiving a long-awaited $400-a-month increase in benefits under the assured income for the severely handicapped program. Now we learn that those who do receive that increase are too often subjected to another increase: in their rent. To the Minister of Seniors: why is it that institutionalized AISH clients are not receiving the $400-a-month increase that the Premier promised?

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Seniors I would be pleased to take that question under advisement and arrange to get the hon. member a response.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thanks. That answer would be appreciated. I tried it in budget. I tried it in the Seniors meeting this morning. It remains unanswered.

What is the government doing to protect AISH clients from being gouged by unscrupulous landlords?

Mr. Horne: Again, same answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chase: Nothing. Nothing. Maybe we should establish a committee to investigate, a panel to solve the problem.

When will this government commit to indexing all AISH benefits to the cost of living so that all AISH clients can live in dignity without the fear of losing their homes? Can you answer that one?

Mr. Horne: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is certainly the intention of this government that all clients receiving benefits under the assured income for the severely handicapped will live in dignity. That is precisely why the Premier fulfilled her commitment to raise AISH benefits by $400 a month, and it is precisely the reason that a range of other benefits, including health care benefits, are provided to those clients.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Foreign Delegations

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We may not realize how fortunate we are to live in Alberta and how great Alberta is on all fronts until we go outside of Alberta. Alberta is becoming increasingly important as a major player on the world stage. It is important that we are able to project a strong, positive, accurate message to all visitors whatever their purpose is. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations. As Deputy Speaker I've had an opportunity to host foreign delegates. Minister, how many . . .

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, we are very fortunate that virtually every week we're welcoming delegates, visitors, parliamentarians from around the globe, from across Canada. I don't know the exact number, but I can tell you that just in the last two weeks I've had the opportunity to meet with the economic minister from Finland and just yesterday with a parliamentary committee from Norway. We've had opportunities continuously.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:20

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why are these foreign delegates coming to Alberta, and what are the benefits of hosting delegates from other countries?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, it's obvious why they're coming to Alberta. Alberta is the economic engine for Canada. We can showcase key industry sectors. We can talk about the economic advantages of doing business in Alberta. There is a tremendous opportunity for everyone that comes, whether it's developing trade, attracting investment, or tourism. Tremendous opportunities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: how is the minister capitalizing on these relationships and promoting Alberta world-wide?

Mr. Dallas: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have 10 international offices located around the globe. We can connect with virtually any individual, any corporation, or any elected parliamentarian anywhere on the globe, and we do so regularly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Environmental Monitoring of the Oil Sands

Ms Notley: Thank you. Over a year ago a review panel confirmed that government has failed dramatically to protect water safety in the oil sands and that this task has to be handed over to an arm's-length body. Ten months later this minister's reaction is to appoint another panel to reconsider whether environmental protection in the oil sands really needs to be done by an arm's-length body. Will the minister admit that her plan is merely to ask the question repeatedly until she gets the answer that industry wants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member for the question. You know, it's really quite amazing. We met with the writer of the earlier report, Dr. Schindler. I met with him, invited him to my office. He commends the steps forward to moving from the policy recommendations that we received, 20 recommendations, to a working group that will give us recommendations on implementation, so much so that he commented yesterday on three of the members that he actually recommended to us to sit on that panel.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that one member of the panel gave $4,000 to the Premier's leadership campaign, that another member chaired the AEUB when it was spying on Alberta citizens, and yet a third was in charge while the government assured Albertans of so-called world-class monitoring, that has since been entirely discredited, how does the minister expect anyone to believe that recommendations from this panel will be anything but predetermined by your ministry on behalf of industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I'll say that Dr. Schindler, who has written this and has given his comments on this, has recommended three of those panel members to us. He spoke yesterday to the media as well that he's quite happy to see that we took his recommendation and that we appointed all three of those scientists.

Ms Notley: Well, speaking of Dr. Schindler, this week he released a report showing that government and industry claims about reclaiming lost wetlands are false. Given that the longer this minister waits to act on wetlands, the greater the loss to our environment for the sake of unmanaged industry growth, why won't this minister commit to independent mechanisms that will work for all Albertans on environmental issues rather than simply taking marching orders from CAPP behind closed doors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you again. As the House knows, industry is mandated by law to do reclamation. There are two experimental peatland fens under construction at Syncrude and Suncor, and they have teams of internationally recognized wetlands scientists working with them.

In addition, I met with Dr. Schindler, and I asked him what his advice would be about moving forward with the report, and he said, "Perhaps if you'd meet with the other two authors of the report," which I will be doing as well.

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Hehr: This government has implemented a taxation policy that has led to them spending the billions of dollars in fossil fuel revenue received in the last 25 years. They've spent all of it in the name of lower taxes. This government has abandoned our heritage trust fund and has seemingly lost sight of the fact that once you sell a barrel of oil, you never have that barrel to sell again. To the Minister of Finance: would it not be in Albertans' long-term best interests to commit to a tax policy that ensures sustainable, more predictable funding and allows for savings for the future?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing this member is, it's consistent. His question is exactly the same one that he asked yesterday. I'd be more than happy to repeat it, but I suggest he just read Hansard from yesterday.

Mr. Hehr: I'd like that, but I'm trying to enlighten the minister. I'll go through it again. Given that we have a flat-tax policy, that sees a person making a million dollars a year pay the same rate of taxation as a person making $30,000 a year, isn't that absurd given the fact that we have spent every last dime of fossil fuel resources over the last 25 years and have not saved a dime of that money?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, there's a reason that this province has the greatest influx of people in the entire country. It's because we have a taxation policy that attracts people to come here to work and invest their dollars in this province. We're not going to apologize for that.

Mr. Hehr: Well, this one's different, so he should listen here. Given that the Canada West Foundation, the Parkland Institute, even the government's own panel have stated unequivocally that in order to protect Alberta's future, this government needs to raise taxes, why is this government not doing the right thing and acting on what these experts are recommending?

Mr. Liepert: I'll just repeat myself again from yesterday, Mr. Speaker, but I'll say that very soon Albertans will have an opportunity to pass judgment on whether they want to elect MLAs who are advocating for increased taxes, whether they want to elect MLAs who are suggesting that we should not use our nonrenewa-ble resource revenues for critical infrastructure. We'll have that decision pretty quickly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Municipal Emergency Management

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week Cardston county repealed their emergency management bylaw after a group of residents complained that it infringed on their rights and freedoms. They said that under the bylaw emergency responders could enter or take their property without a warrant and without paying compensation. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: can you explain what repealing the bylaw means for my constituents in this area?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know I've heard from a few citizens in the area who are concerned. The local bylaw simply laid out how a local emergency would be managed and who would be responsible for it. But bylaw or not, the local municipality is responsible for managing the local emergency because there is still the Emergency Management Act in the province of Alberta that mandates that municipalities manage it. Those individuals in those areas will still be advised when a local emergency takes place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Many municipalities have built their emergency management bylaws based on the provincial Emergency Management Act. Will you look at amending the provincial legislation?

Mr. Griffiths: No, Mr. Speaker, we won't amend the legislation. It's been in effect since about 1974. It mirrors the national legislation and the legislation in every other jurisdiction across Canada. In fact, almost every jurisdiction in North America has this legislation in place. It is only enacted when there is a crisis situation, an emergent situation, and it empowers local people with the responsibility because they have the responsibility but also the power to protect people and lives. That's the only time this is used. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner is recognized. The next person I have here is Airdrie-Chestermere, but you seem to want to ask all the questions now, so we might just forget about you later.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is also for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Some of my constituents feel that powers granted to a local authority during a local state of emergency can be abused. What assurances can you give them that they will not be abused?

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I know from the hoots and hollers before that some of the members from the wild alliance indicate that this is about property rights. This is not about property rights. This is an issue where local municipal officials, local firefighters, local police officers, and local paramedics are trying to save lives. There is compensation provided in the rare necessary circumstance when property must be commandeered, but I can't think of a single Albertan that wouldn't want a vehicle commandeered if it meant saving their grandmother from a burning building. That's what this is about.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, with gusto.

Alberta's Representative in Asia (continued)

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Premier's indecision on the Gary Mar affair is embarrassing to ourselves and Alberta's reputation in Asia. We know that a $400-a-plate dinner to hear Mr. Mar speak about business opportunities in Asia was advertised and that it included the auction of a trip to Hong Kong, with the obvious implication that the trip included a chance to hang out with Alberta's Asia representative, obviously an inappropriate use of a senior government official's position to personally profit, no matter how you spin it. Premier: in your opinion, was Mr. Mar's use of his government's position to personally profit appropriate? Yes or no?

2:30

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, this is going to sound somewhat repetitive because I addressed this exact same question yesterday. The matter has been referred by the Deputy Minister of Executive Council, who has requested an independent review. Commenting, judging the outcome of that review – you know, these suggestions: completely ridiculous in the context that we must wait before making comment.

Mr. Anderson: This is what governing without principles looks like, right there.

Given that we now know that someone involved with the dinner figured out that the first invite looked so bad and sent out a replacement invite that only mentioned an evening with Mr. Mar and his wife but no mention of the trip auction but then the trip was still auctioned off for $20,000, I ask the Deputy Premier, who is also in charge of human resources: was Mr. Mar's use of his government position to personally profit appropriate, or is this just the latest in a long line of scandals showing just how corrupt the PC culture over there has become?

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, the employee in question has every right to a fair review of this. Commenting on this matter before that review is complete: inappropriate.

Mr. Anderson: This is a personnel decision. Cabinet ministers get fired all the time.

Given that the Premier clearly attempted to delay this being resolved until after the election by incorrectly referring the matter to the Ethics Commissioner, who doesn't have the authority to deal with this, and given that she is now wanting to refer this matter to a committee to come up with a recommendation after the election, will someone, anyone over there please help Albertans understand why such a blatant ethical breach is being swept under the rug until after voters have cast their ballots? It looks like yet another pre-election cover-up.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, this review will be conducted as expeditiously as possible. Judging the outcome of that, commenting on that review prior to that: inappropriate.

New School Construction in Calgary

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, residents in the growing community of Evanston in northwest Calgary have no schools in their community, and they're telling me that their school-age children are spending a lot of time on bus rides in order to get to class. All my questions are for the Minister of Education. Can the minister advise what his government's policy is on busing young children to school?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the policy is rather simple. Our policy is to build more schools. The problem is that in this province we have schools where we don't have kids, and we have kids where we don't have schools. Contrary to what the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere will say, we will be building schools right now for children who need schools right now so that we don't have to wait 30 years so we can pay for schools cash up front.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise what plans are in place to help these children in the community of Evanston, to build the schools that they need so that they don't have to endure these long school bus rides?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, a very, very important question. Right now the President of the Treasury Board, myself, and the Minister of Infrastructure are looking at a new fiscal framework to make sure that we can provide the children of today with schools for today so that parents can be proud of taking their children to buildings that are adequate for our educational programs and not have to wait for 30 years because some are ideologically so confined that they insist on paying for everything cash up front.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, can the minister inform the residents of Evanston when he will build an elementary school in Evanston?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the lineup is long and growing longer. In a number of municipalities like Airdrie, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray – yesterday I met with Leduc – and in many rural and urban areas there is a need for schools. The fact is that the need is undeniable; we don't question it. We need to find a fiscal framework that is responsible, that works for Albertans today, and that is responsible to little kids so that they don't have to be in basements and Legions just because some choose to pay for everything cash up front.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Electricity Prices (continued)

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The maximum allowable price for electricity under Alberta's deregulation scheme is $999.99 per megawatt hour. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Is the government considering lifting that cap or removing it completely?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, that's why we appointed a committee to review the whole matter of the regulated rate option and how it's constructed. We're happy to report to Albertans that the regulated rate option for March is back down to an average of 8.3 cents, which is the five-year average.

In terms of how the RRO is constructed – and there are a variety of ways that it might be done; the question of caps is one – we're waiting for some advice from the committee, that I hope to announce the members of next week.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Given that the TransAlta Corporation has recommended that the cap be increased or lifted to $2,500 and that recently TransAlta Corporation has donated $50,000 to five of the six PC leadership candidates, will this minister guarantee that the cap will not be lifted, as TransAlta suggests, to $2,500 per megawatt hour?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, these guys are always chasing their own tail. First they insist on committees, an independent look, and then they come and say that we won't listen to the committee in terms of what advice they give us. I think I can say with a high degree of confidence that you're not going to see the cap go above $998.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that TransAlta would also ask that the AESO consider complete removal of the cap by the year 2015 and given the fact that they have given a generous donation of $50,000 to five of the six leadership candidates, including yourself, will you guarantee that that cap will not be removed or increased? Guarantee it now.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we know that some of the other parties are so bankrupt of issues that all they can do is try and raise fears of what might happen in the next year. It appears the Liberals have now fallen into the same trap. We have no intention of caps or these other things, but we've appointed a committee. I'm not going to sit here and say that the committee can't look at all options, but I can't imagine the scenario under which we would abandon a cap.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Bear Management

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. In southwestern Alberta the ranching community is dealing with removal of dead animals to avoid the attraction of bears. Since the renderers no longer collect these carcasses for free, the collection is very costly for the ranching families. What is your department doing to reduce these costs for these ranchers so that they can follow the BearSmart best practices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to inform the House that my staff have been working pretty closely with the ranching community to reduce human/bear conflicts, which are a major cause of bear mortality. We've worked together with the community to purchase livestock carcass collection bins, and we've supported the pickup costs to reduce attractants.

I'm also pleased to announce, Mr. Speaker, that we just recently approved a $60,000 grant to put a wildlife carcass composting facility at the Cardston county Chief Mountain landfill site. This will greatly reduce costs to landowners.

Mr. Lund: Thank you very much for that answer. I hope that if there are bears crawling into those collection bins, they don't get rendered as well.

My second question is to the same minister. Mr. Speaker, as we know, the bears will soon be emerging from their dens, so they'll be looking for a source of food. With the ranching community in southwestern Alberta so close to these dens, what is being done to reduce the risk of conflicts?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the bears don't fall into the bins. They're bear-proof bins.

We're also working on putting bear-proof grain bins out there with bear-proof doors on them so that the bears don't get in there. We're putting out electric fencing. We've started a wildlife roadkill feeding program, a winter feeding intercept program. We collect through the winter deer and elk carcasses from roadkill, and we're going to start putting them out for intercept feeding to keep the bears away from private land and the food attractants that are there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lund: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for that answer.

I'm very curious because there's been a lot of talk about the population of grizzly bears. Could you enlighten the House as to what your most recent counts are telling us about the numbers?

2:40

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I can inform the House that we have a little bit of a conflict here, and that is that we have an abundance of anecdotal evidence about increasing bear populations in the southwest and a community that's concerned about that, but I don't have any scientific data that would back up that surge in population. What we're doing is that we're expanding our DNA testing that went on in the south. We've put out rub fences, and we're going to expand that DNA program across the south and try to get a more scientific count. I'm not prepared at this time to act on anecdotal evidence.

The Speaker: Well, that concludes the question-and-response period for today. Eighteen hon. members were recognized; 106 questions and responses were given.

We will continue with the Routine in just a few seconds from now.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 7

Appropriation Act, 2012

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 7, the Appropriation Act, 2012. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Bill 210

Early Childhood Learning and Child Care Act

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 210, the Early Childhood Learning and Child Care Act.

This bill will create a crossministry cabinet committee and will establish an early childhood secretariat, which will be tasked with creating an early childhood learning and child care framework. The development of the framework will require appropriate stakeholder engagement, and it will establish a number of performance measures to monitor its effectiveness going forward. The bill will also oblige the cabinet committee and secretariat to conduct a review of the existing child care subsidies and tax policy to ensure that there is no economic incentive in choosing one form of care over another.

Mr. Speaker, the early years of a child's life are of the utmost importance for development. I hereby move first reading of Bill 210.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 210 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, then Edmonton-Gold Bar, then Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a further 20 e-mails, of the hundreds I've received, from the following individuals who say that the Castle wilderness is still a very special place and that logging in this protected area should be stopped to preserve Alberta's natural heritage: Brent Miller, Dr. John Brazner, Lynda McMurtrie, Jan Draper, Brenda Fitzpatrick, Jeanne Keith-Ferris, Shirley Holman, Heather Parsons, Emilie Magnan, Janet Pattinson, Hugh Whiteley, Susan Diane, Rejean Quesnelle, Irene Friesen, Wesley Johnson, Peter Young, Paul Davis, James Heck, Philip Adamson, and Anne-Marie Kelly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have tablings today on behalf of and in support of the Leader of the Official Opposition's questions earlier today about the Critical Transmission Review Committee's chairman, Mr. Brian Heidecker. I would like to table five copies of the 2011 leadership campaign financial statement from the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, which clearly shows Mr. Heidecker was CFO of the campaign and that his company, Drylander Investments Ltd., made a $5,000 loan to the campaign at zero per cent interest.

As well, I have attached the biographies of the members of the critical transmission committee, which clearly state that Mr. Heidecker founded and owns Drylander. The corporate registration of Drylander Investments is also included.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings to back up my question to the hon. Minister of Finance. They are reports from the Parkland Institute, the Canada West Foundation, and the government's own report, all stating that our tax system is broken, the need for raising revenue, and how it will allow us to save for the future.

The first report is from the Parkland Institute, called Fixing What's Broken: Fair and Sustainable Solutions to Alberta's Revenue Problems.

The second one is by the Canada West Foundation, called Tax Reform.

The third is the government's own report indicating the need for raising revenue, Shaping Alberta's Future: Report of the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have here a bill and the appropriate number of copies of that bill from Camillo Esposito of Lac Ste. Anne. He shows us that his electricity charges for January 2012 were $256.

I have three more bills here: one from Tammy Westlin of Fort Saskatchewan, who was charged $250 for her electricity in January, another from Codados Heetun, whose electricity for January cost him $176, and, finally, a bill from Don Bosak of Black Diamond for January 2012 in the amount of $179.06.

Statement by the Speaker

Private Members' Public Bills

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm tabling today a letter that I received from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I'll just quote from the letter.

I write pursuant to Standing Order 8(7)(c), requesting that Bill 203, Tobacco Reduction (Protection of Children in Vehicles) Amendment Act, 2012 be granted early consideration and be called in Committee of the Whole on Monday, March 19, 2012.

I read it into the record because copies were not circulated to anyone else. But I do want to raise this matter. I'll bring it back tomorrow and talk about it further tomorrow.

This has to deal with a request not often exercised or asked for in this Assembly. Basically, comments are recorded in Hansard going back to 2001 by this chair, saying that this is a matter that needs some review because in essence what we potentially have is a conflict.

Monday is private members' day. It's the only day of the week that members can actually deal with bills. We have an order that is clearly defined in our standing orders that basically says that on one day a member's private member's bill comes up, then it's dealt with, and then it goes to the next steps. Usually we follow the second readings. Then we finally get to committee.

When a member asks that a stage be advanced over another, it may come into conflict with another private member who would necessarily have his or her private member's bill on the schedule. So I would ask that members look at Votes and Proceedings of November 23, 2009, and Hansard, page 1940, November 23, 2009, the last time that I put a ruling in with respect to this matter.

In almost all cases I basically, essentially, going back to 2001, have provided caution with respect to this request because of the conflict potential with another member. But in most cases it has been worked out as a result of consultation with the House leaders. In this case today is probably the first opportunity that House leaders for other caucuses would be aware of this. So I repeat again those comments that I've raised in the past. If I receive some advice by noon tomorrow on this particular matter, it would be helpful. If not, I would have to make a statement tomorrow and probably decide on Monday if that would be given, depending on would the interest conflict with another member with respect to this.

I should also point out again, for a number of times now, that I raised this matter in 2001, and I suggested very strongly that this matter be referred to a certain committee for further advice to be provided to the Speaker with respect to this matter. Eleven years: I say it again. Tomorrow I'll say more.

2:50

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 2 Education Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? We are on amendment A1.

Ms Blakeman: That's what I was going to confirm. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A1.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, indeed, sir. I am the Member for Edmonton-Centre, and I am speaking on amendment A1. Thank you for the reminder.

This, I understand, is – what's the word I'm looking for? – a compromise amendment that is brought forward by the government, and given the majority this government has, it signals that, indeed, it will pass. On casual reading of it, it appears to be a pretty straightforward, motherhood, common-sense kind of amendment. It essentially says that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised. Fair enough. A child's education begins in the home. Indeed, it does: potty training, you know, table manners. Yes, of course, obviously education begins at home. That the parents play a role in the spiritual and moral upbringing of the children: absolutely. Say please and thank you, follow the golden rule: exactly what we would expect.

At this point I'm starting to get a little curious about what all of this is doing in a bill about public education, which is the Education Act, Bill 2. Just let me double-check. Yes, indeed, the name does say the Education Act, and for that we're talking about education that's provided by the government, public education, in other words. So I'm starting to go: okay, what does this have to do with public education and a public education act? We're talking about what parents do at home with their children. Okay. Well, I keep reading. "These principles are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta" – okay; no quibbles with that – "to provide parents with choice in education."

All right. I'm getting a bit more nervous here because again the word "public" is missing from all of this. It appears, as we've had with the change in the lexicon around health care, that we're seeing it again in a change of language that's used around public education in this province, where we went from talking about health care in which we meant upholding the five tenets of the Canada Health Act to just talking about public administration of health care and the single pair.

Well, that's interesting because if you look at what's being left out when you list only one thing out of a list, you notice that we're not talking about public delivery of health care anymore. We're only talking about public administration of health care but not public delivery, which means the door got opened to private delivery of health care, and we know where that got us. I would argue from my side that it hasn't been entirely successful. Actually, I would argue it wasn't successful, and it didn't uphold public health care, and by public I mean following all five tenets of that, not picking and choosing what suits you on any given day.

So I'm really interested when I start to go through this act, which is about delivering education in the province, which I assume is public education. Why would we be talking about private education? That's somebody else's business. I think we're talking about public education, but, no, the word "public" is pretty much gone. It's certainly not found in front of the word "education," not in this amendment.

Let me just back up: "to provide parents with choice in education." Uh-oh. It's one of those big words that this government uses that always makes me nervous – yes; I can see the Member for Calgary-Lougheed is agreeing with me – because choice took on an entirely different meaning under this government. Choice went from meaning that on a standardization, on a level playing field, all things being equal, all those other provisos in there, a choice was between two things that were on an even footing. That's completely gone out of this province.

Back to education as a way of understanding how this government operates. Choice in health care went from being a choice of two equal things to a choice of two unequal things. Instead of looking at whether you were going to get your MRI inside the government system, well, no, there are so many problems with that now that you get it privately, but then you're paying out of your own pocket, which wasn't one of the tenets of health care that we started out with, one of those five I was talking about.

The word "choice": there are a number of them, and the list is getting longer. When this government uses the word "choice," my antenna goes up, and I think: uh-oh, that's not going to be the best thing in the long run for Albertans. When they use the word "flexibility" now, that also makes me start to look around to see how Albertans are going to end up paying more out of their pockets for the same thing they used to get before covered under health care.

A responsibility, that's the other one. When I spoke on this bill before, I talked about that concept of responsibility. But responsibility under this government has come to mean an entirely different thing. It means: "You're on your own, babe. Deal with it." It's kind of a take it or leave it situation.

Once again I'm looking at this amendment: "to provide parents with choice in education, including public schools" – there we have it – "separate schools . . ." Okay. I'm assuming we're talking public and private school boards and the offering of Protestant and Catholic education as is found in the Charter and the Canadian Constitution. Let me just dig that out again so I've got it here. I did flag all of this before to make sure I knew what I was talking about. Yeah, section 23 covers minority language education rights, in which education is to be provided in English or French according to the majority, but the minority is also to be recognized and instruction given in the minority language where the population merits it. There are guidelines there.

The other place you find it is under section 29. Oops, sorry; no, it isn't. Section 29 is making sure that nothing that's in here derives from the rights and privileges that are guaranteed under the Constitution "in respect of denominational, separate or dissentient schools," which is part of the religious proviso, which is the Catholic and Protestant.

Let me just find that specific right. It looks like it's in section 93. Oh, yes. Protestant and Catholic schools. So that's what's actually guaranteed in the Constitution to be provided. We've got public schools and separate schools, which is the religious concept of Protestant and Catholic. We all understand that that does not include any other religion because once you start a list, if you're not on the list, you're not there, so public and separate, francophone schools, which, again, I gave you the section in the Constitution which covers that. Then we've got charter schools, which do not appear in the Constitution or in the Charter, and private schools, which do not appear in the Constitution or the Charter.

3:00

For those people that have written to me, thank you for your interest and for following me, but you actually have to have it in the Constitution. You can't read another part of the Constitution and assume that means that it covers you. That's what I mean by lists. If it's not actually in there, it's not there, and it's not covered, which is why you end up with people campaigning to get more things covered under the lists: charter schools, private schools, and home education programs.

I'll go back to what I was saying before about freedoms, rights, and protections. That is what is actually in the Constitution, where it lays out the freedoms. Of course, everything that is in there as a freedom or a right is "subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society." So we always have to remember that there are limits, and there are reasonable limits to everything that is given here. You know, the common example of that is that my right to swing my fist around ends at the end of your nose. I'm not allowed to swing my fist around and bash you in the nose.

An Hon. Member: It should be before the end of your nose.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, it should be before the end of your nose.

So there are reasonable limits that are set out here. These are not absolute freedoms and rights. Of course, the freedoms are freedom of conscience and religion; freedom of thought, belief, opinion, and expression, including freedom of the press and other means of communications; freedom of peaceful assembly although that's very difficult to do in this day and age given the amount of security in this building; and freedom of association, to get together with whoever you want. You can't say: you can't meet with that group or meet with this group. Those are your fundamental freedoms. That's what's in here. That's all that's in here. Okay? If it isn't in that list, it's not here, and it's not a freedom that is granted by the Constitution.

Now, rights is the next section. That's where you get into things like democratic rights, which is the right to vote. And these are rights. You need to read it carefully because sometimes it's citizens; sometimes it's individuals. "Every citizen of Canada," not every person in Canada, "has the right to vote." Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election, et cetera, et cetera, and then it goes on with how they write that.

You've got mobility rights, the right to come in and remain in and leave. Again, that's every citizen, not every individual. Every citizen.

You've got legal rights. Watch the language here. "Everyone" – everyone, not every citizen, not every voter, not every man or every tall person – "has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice." Then it goes on to talk about your other rights.

This wording becomes really important when you're trying to interpret this stuff. It's important to know that in our Constitution we give legal rights to everyone whether you're a citizen or not, whether you're tall or short or a man or a woman, whether you're abled or differently abled. Everyone gets a legal right, but everyone doesn't get a mobility right or a democratic right. So the language gets really important here.

By the way, folks, this is not hard to read. The Constitution is not a hard document to read. I'm reading it out loud to you now. It's not filled with really cumbersome language. It's actually a really easy document to read.

Equality rights is the next issue. Again,

Every . . .

Every.

. . . individual is equal before the and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination . . .

And here comes a list.

. . . and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age, or mental or physical disability.

And onto this has now been written sexual orientation as a protected ground. Now, that appears as a right, but the list is actually a list of protections. So, remember, I talked about freedoms, rights, protections. The list is actually protections.

Then we go into official languages, French and English, and on we go in the rest of the Constitution: minority language rights, enforcement, general, application of the Charter. Then you're into the whole rest of it: the distribution of legislative powers and the division of regulation of trade and commerce, raising of money, borrowing of money, postal service, census and statistics, et cetera. So I recommend it highly. This is not hard to read, and it's not a long document, but it does get really important when we start looking at stuff like this.

So we know that the public schools are definitely protected and listed specifically. The separate schools are. The francophone schools are. But charter, private, and home-education programs are not. Well, what are they? If we're going to put them in a preamble, what are they? Well, I believe – and I'm going to, I hope, get corrected by legal jurisprudence experts – they would be called an accommodation, or a privilege that is extended by a body such as this government. So this government is going to agree to accommodate them. There's no requirement that the government do that, but they can accommodate, and they have here included them as an accommodation: charter schools, private schools, and home-education programs.

I think what we need to be very, very careful about here is that we continue with an understanding that this is about public education, and the point of this act is public education. I as an individual do not believe that private schools should receive any public dollars. I just don't believe it. If you're in a private school, you're in a private school, and you pay for it. I understand that a lot of the private schools in Alberta, in fact, are not big, fancy, highfalutin schools with uniforms and all of that how-de-do. They are several families getting together and having their children schooled in a particular religious ethic, if I can put it that way. Sometimes it's because of distance that they are getting together and sort of having their own private school. I just don't believe public funding should be going into it, and I'm not ever going to believe otherwise.

I fundamentally believe in public education, and I think it is one of the services, one of the programs, one of the major values that government should be providing for everyone, not just its citizens but everyone in the province. What we need to know at the end of this is that when you as an employer are hiring someone, and they say, "Yes, I went to school in Alberta," we know what their qualifications are at the end. We know generally the program of study that they've had. We know what they're expected to be able to do. That's what I expect from a public education. If you want to come to me and say, "I've got a private school education," I'm going to look at what you did because I'm going to expect that it was not in the public system.

Home education. There are reasons for doing home education. I know two people quite well, one who was home educated and one who did home education for their child. They had very good reasons for doing so. Here's my hesitation. I want to make sure that kids that are home-schooled, in fact, end up with that same level of education. I do not want to hear, as some of the letters I've received have pointed out to me, that they are offended that they might be restricted from teaching their child that the homosexual act is a sin. That disturbs me to my core. It is not something that I would like to think we are educating our children to believe. Children are born without discrimination. I don't want to have it in Alberta, in my province, that we would be having a publicly funded system in which that is being taught as part of school, as part of education.

Now, let's go back to the preamble that we're debating. The government recognizes that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins in the home; that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children; and that these principles are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta to provide parents with choice in education, including public schools, separate schools, Francophone schools, charter schools, private schools and home education.

I can agree with most of that, but I'm really struggling with the last three.

3:10

Now, if charter schools are going to be in the public system, as they are in Edmonton – and here we do a little shout-out to Mike Strembitsky. God bless him because he anticipated this. He made sure that all the charter schools in Edmonton are inside of the public system. They exist in the Edmonton schools. I have one. The Nellie McClung charter school for girls is in the junior high portion of Oliver school in my fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. So grades 1 to 6 are regular kids from the neighbourhood, and the junior high is the Nellie McClung school for girls. They're drawing from across the city. Charter school, yes – parents raise additional funds for them and do different kinds of programming with them – but it's part of our school system. It's run out of one of our schools. Very good. I just think the world of that particular program, but it's in the system.

Outside of Edmonton these charter schools are not part of the public school board. I don't know how you guys handle that. I think this is where it starts to get away from us when we're putting taxpayer dollars, collecting it from their property taxes, and putting it into schools that don't seem to want to be part of our public system. That's where I really start to struggle with this. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] Oh, shoot. We'll try again.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on amendment A1.

Mr. Anderson: On amendment A1. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm happy to stand on behalf of the Wildrose caucus and will start out by saying how much we support the rights of parents to educate their children in the manner which they feel is best. We feel very strongly about and with conviction believe in the UN declaration of human rights, which says very clearly that parents have a prior right – a prior right – to choose which education is best for their children. That is a very important human right. As someone with four young boys it's something that I hold in the highest regard.

Potentially, in my view, it's one of the most important human rights that there is. I can't imagine what must have gone through the hearts and minds of our First Nations people when their children were stripped from them, taken and forced into residential schools to be educated in a way that was not in line with their parents' beliefs or according to their parents' wishes. I can't imagine what I would do. It's horrifying to think of it.

That and many other reasons is why I feel very strongly that when it comes to the education of our children, when it comes to what they are taught, the government should be, oh, so absolutely hesitant to interfere in any way with a parent's decision on how to educate their children. It should be a last resort. Only in the most absolutely obvious circumstances should the state ever regulate a parent's right in that way, much like we only regulate our freedom of speech when that speech is calling for a violent act.

Only then do we regulate free speech, just like these other rights: our right to freedom, our right to liberty, freedom of movement, freedom of mobility. Only when we take someone else's freedom away: only when somebody kills another or steals from another or breaks a law do we take that person's freedom away, when he has affected somebody else or taken their freedom away. Only then do we interrupt or interfere with those fundamental freedoms.

So, too, in education, which to me is a human right. It is in our Human Rights Act here in Alberta. It is in the UN declaration of human rights. I believe with all my heart that it is something that we need to respect. We cannot in a tolerant society – we hear a lot about tolerance, and tolerance is important, and equality is absolutely important. What about being tolerant of those that have different viewpoints? Where's the tolerance of them?

Now, I myself choose to have my children educated in a public school. We have a phenomenal public school in Rocky View school division, Nose Creek elementary, with an amazing reading program in particular, that has just been fabulous. The quality of the teaching, the quality of the school is something that my wife, Anita, and I feel is fantastic. We want our children to experience that.

However, if they were ever in a school where the quality of that education diminished or if there were values being taught in that school that were reprehensible to the values that I hold – that's certainly not the case now – if that were to happen, I would absolutely reserve the right to remove my child from that school or from whatever school it might be. Then I could choose to put them somewhere else for their schooling, whether that be in a home-school setting where myself or Anita would school them personally or whether it be in a nonprofit private school like a faith-based school, for example, or a for-profit school if we could afford that, which we can't, or a charter school, an independent school, which may focus on a subject matter that we felt our child needed – I don't think we are able to go to a Catholic school because I don't have any relatives that are Catholic – or, of course, a public school.

I think that it is something that we need to protect very carefully, and I commend the government, that historically has been very supportive of parental choice in education. I want them to know that as much as the Wildrose and PCs disagree on several different things, this is one where we have agreement. Parental choice in education is critical, and we will always support this government whenever they are moving in a direction of enshrining, protecting, enhancing school choice and parental choice in education.

Now with regard to the amendment from the minister, it's a good start. The amendment that the minister brought forward says in the preamble:

Whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins in the home; that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children; and that these principles are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta to provide parents with choice in education, including public schools, separate schools, Francophone schools, charter schools, private schools and home education programs.

Now, this is a good amendment, but it could be improved, in our view. How we choose to improve it is, in fact, the subject of a subamendment that I will bring forward now. I have the requisite number of copies, and we'll go from there.

The Chair: Hon. members, we'll pause for the distribution of the amendment. This is now known as SA1.

Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, you may continue now on the subamendment.

3:20

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Subamendment SA1. Let's go over what this will actually do and how the preamble will change if this amendment is passed so that everyone understands. Essentially, if you go to the preamble of Bill 2 as it currently stands and go to the eighth recital of the preamble, it says, "Whereas parents have the right and the responsibility to make informed decisions respecting the education of their children." That would be removed from the act. In its place at the very top in the first recital, right under Preamble, before any of the other whereases or any of the other recitals in the preamble, it would then read as follows:

Whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes that parents have the paramount right and responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of their children, which includes a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins in the home; that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children; and that these principles are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta to provide parents with choice in education, including public schools, separate schools, Francophone schools, charter schools, private schools and home education programs.

Essentially, this would slightly alter or add to, just making it even clearer how important and how paramount the rights of parents are with regard to choosing the education that's right for their children and how important that responsibility is. It would just tweak it slightly to make sure that that foundational principle – because the original amendment from the government is very well worded, and the principles are all there, or enough of them are there.

If we can put that as the foundation at the top, I think that would clearly state to the parents of Alberta, regardless of whether their children are in public school, whether they're in charter school, francophone school, whether they're in faith-based schools, other private schools, or home-schooling, that this government will respect those decisions and that they will respect not only the decisions of parents to choose those options but also, importantly, that a bad option is no option at all. So, most importantly, the government of Alberta will never think to come into their home-school setting, whether it be through regulation or whether it be through an individual, to come into their faith-based school, to come into their Catholic school or any other school and tell those individuals what they can and cannot teach to their children with regard to their beliefs, specifically in faith-based schools and Catholic schools, where the faith part of that schooling is intertwined throughout the entire curriculum. I forget what the Catholic system says about it. Permeates. That's it. It permeates the entire curriculum.

Never should the government of Alberta or any bureaucrat who perhaps is abusing his position – I'm not saying that they do, but it just takes one – come in and say: "You know what? That part of your faith that you're teaching is wrong, and we're not going to let you teach it anymore." That is a very, very slippery, slippery slope.

We can all agree that we should not be teaching our children racial supremacy, that we should not be teaching them violence or disobedience of the law. I'm absolutely in agreement with that.

Again, going back to what we talked about before, the state should only limit a parent's right to choose the education for their children in the absolute most extreme circumstances, where it essentially turns from the parent's right and starts actually harming the child. Teaching violent acts and teaching protest of laws through violent means as opposed to nonviolent means should never be done, and we all know that. But with regard to teaching them the principles of their faith, of their parents' faith and so forth, that should not be limited except in those most extreme circumstances.

So that is the intent behind this subamendment. I hope that the government and all parties will support it and support the families that feel that their right to choose education for their children is one of the most fundamental rights that they enjoy. I'll tell you that I personally value this right as much or more than any other human right that I enjoy as a citizen of this country and of this province.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: On the subamendment, SA1, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I can't do this. Either we're going to talk about public education, or we're not, but if we're going to talk about public education, then it has to meet a standard that satisfies the societal expectation or need for a certain standard of education and everything that goes with that. I can't support interjecting the paramouncy clause into the clause that we have with amendment 1, especially when it contains that list.

I guess if you want paramouncy, then go and have paramouncy in private schools, but I don't believe in that paramouncy when we're talking public education because I think it's almost impossible to meet that standard. It's wrong as far as I'm concerned, so I can't support the subamendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's indeed my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some guests from Grande Prairie that are here today and had a meeting with the Minister of Finance a short time ago: from Evergreen Park, Bridget Henniger; from the county of Grande Prairie, Bill Rogan; Ross Sutherland; and I see that your partner, Everett McDonald, just stepped out. Would you all please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 2
Education Act
(continued)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, it's a pleasure to rise in this Assembly to speak as a teacher pertaining to the subamendment put forward by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. I think it is an excellent subamendment, and I certainly hope and pray that the government and the Minister of Education will in fact listen to this very good subamendment. I understand by his facial expression that it appears that he's not going to.

That being the case, I would like to say that I believe in the support of faith-based schooling, that I support the paramount parental right of parents. I might add that my wife has been a teacher for over 15 years and, I'm proud to say, myself a teacher for over 15. But even more important than just being a teacher, which is of such paramount importance, I will say that the fundamental right of parents is paramount, that parents should be able to have the right to educate their children from both a moral and spiritual foundation in helping build our children. I believe this subamendment is doing something that the government has missed.

3:30

In fairness, if the government missed this before, well, I'm pleased to say that the Wildrose has been able to capture this. We hope that the actual government and the Minister of Education will support this subamendment because I think it is a fundamental value of all of us as parents, a parent's right to be able to both morally and spiritually teach our children. It is a foundation of our society.

As a teacher who has taught in the public and Catholic schools and – no matter what school, be it home-schooling, be it francophone, be it charter schools, be it public or Catholic, faith-based schools, it is so important to our society as well that parents have that right. It is a fundamental right that I think is so important for any parent, and that's why I as a member of the Wildrose caucus support this fundamental right in this subamendment. I pray and hope that the government will take heed of this subamendment, even though they overlooked this and the concern that has been brought forward, so that we can make the best law that gives parents the right to educate their child and also pursue other options available, be it through, as I mentioned earlier, faith-based schools, charter schools, francophone schools, public and Catholic schools – there's a variety of schools; parents have a choice – or home-schooling.

And I do believe that home-schooling – to the parents that are teaching their children at home, I just want to say that I applaud them. I do believe that as we go forward, this subamendment will be greeted with acceptance by this government because it is value based, it is nondiscriminatory, and it is essentially giving the paramount right to a parent to choose how they educate their children, and I think that is so important.

I might add that our child will be going to kindergarten next year. My wife and I started our family late in life, so next year our child will be going to kindergarten. I enjoy the freedoms as a parent. I enjoy the freedoms of the options that I have under the Education Act for that, be it in faith-based schools, public, Catholic, charter, francophone, home-schooling. It is all the right of a parent to make.

I will say that in the Wildrose caucus we do not support discrimination of any sort. We believe that parental rights are paramount to the building of our society. Consequently, I hope that all members of this Assembly – and I offer to you as a teacher and as a parent that I believe that this subamendment is truly something that will strengthen the law of this Education Act that's coming forward. I trust and hope that everyone in this Assembly can agree on this subamendment put forward by the Wildrose caucus and the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: On subamendment SA1, the hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to speak to this subamendment. You know, parents in Alberta have the right to determine what type of choice they have for their children's school, as has been mentioned before, whether it's Catholic, whether it's public, whether it's home-schooling, whether it's a charter school, whether it's a private school. We also have the ability to choose their friends and pick their clothes. We have the ability to decide which areas we're going to live in. But they're not all enshrined in legislation. Sometimes common sense has to prevail.

Back in 2009 we had Bill 44, about the Alberta Human Rights Act, brought before us. A large issue on that bill was the parental rights, which was supported by this government caucus, which was passed in this Legislature. We had a provision in there, section 9, that allowed for the opting out by parents on issues with respect to religious education, what we're talking about, and also sexual orientation and sexual education. Since September of 2010 there has not been one single, solitary, complaint by a parent in this province on that issue.

As we've debated this bill in the Legislature, one of the things that I remember saying is that we have to rely on the common sense and on the tolerance and values of Albertans to make the right decisions, and they have. I believe that the preamble that the Minister of Education has put forward adequately addresses this provision.

This act, as everybody knows, is somewhat superseded by the Charter of Rights and the Human Rights Act. Clearly, parental rights are specified there, and there is adequate provision. So if we're allowed to opt out of any program or anything in the curriculum with respect to religion, then we can't expect that a teacher would be a force. Whether it's home-schooling or any of those different forms, whether it's a charter school, private school, public school, Catholic education, French immersion, you name it, they would not have that imposed on them, especially home-schooling. So I don't think there's a need for that.

I certainly agree with the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere about the importance of parents in education. We all, I think, agree in this House about the importance of parents in education and the importance of their determining what type of education they want. I just do not agree with the wording in this particular subamendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to this bill in committee. I was going to originally speak to the amendment but now to the subamendment, but I expect the comments are not dissimilar in both cases. You know, there is a lot of conversation going on about this bill and the preamble of this bill. Frankly, there are a lot of people who, in my view, are exaggerating the implications of the preamble, exaggerating the implications to some extent of what was in the bill prior to this amendment.

I actually received an incredibly thoughtful letter from a member of my constituency, who is a home-schooler, who wrote at much length about the legal implications of the bill and the concerns that were raised by a subset of home-schoolers around the implications of the bill that were not actually founded in law, that the threat that somehow this bill meant that people would be coming into their house and telling them how to teach their kids was simply not accurate and that, in fact, the human rights code and the application of the Charter don't actually apply, frankly, in these cases. So it was interesting because it was a much more reasoned approach.

Also, though – and I was very pleased to see this – she said that as far as she's concerned, home-schooler or not, the values inherent in the human rights code and the values inherent in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms were absolutely something that she wanted to ensure that her children learned regardless of the setting in which they resided. And I agree with her.

Frankly, I think that the minister's attempt with the first amendment to change the preamble is largely window dressing. The Supreme Court of Canada has turned its mind to the issue of the legal relevance of preambles, Mr. Chairman. In most cases they almost never consider preambles in the course of interpreting and applying legislation. Really, what we are looking at is something that is attempting to deal with a political problem in a highly politicized pre-election environment. So that's what that's about.

Now, what the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is trying to do is that he's actually trying to add a little bit of oomph to this preamble to potentially confuse the courts a little bit more, you know, to outline this issue of parental rights. As people in this Assembly would know, I don't know that there were two people more opposed on the issue of Bill 44 at the time that we had the conversation about Bill 44 than the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on one side and myself on the other.

Mr. Anderson: And we're still friends.

Ms Notley: The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere notes that we're still friends. I like to think, you know, that I'm slowly opening his mind to certain issues. Who knows? At a certain point we might actually develop a consensus on that.

However, the bottom line is this, Mr. Chairman. This is not a simple issue, and any efforts to inject legal implications of some of the phrases that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere or the Minister of Education are throwing in there are not simple issues.

3:40

You know, there's been incredibly heated debate in Ontario about how the school system there deals with publicly funded faith-based schools that, as a matter of their faith, insist on female students being separated from the remainder of the class at certain times of the month. Mr. Chairman, I say that that's not something I can support, yet to suggest that, is to be accused of not respecting people's faith. Of course, I do respect people's faith. The fact of the matter is that it's not black and it's not white. It's very complex.

What I do say, though, is that in this House, a public body, when we're talking about a public statute and the administration of public funds, I will always – always – look to our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, I will look to our Constitution, and I will look to our human rights code. In that case I will always look to the fact that nobody should be discriminated against, that no child should ever learn that it's okay for someone to be discriminated against, and that that code applies always.

The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere talked about extreme circumstances. We'd never want our kids to be taught that violence was okay. But is the general acceptance of Nazi thought okay as long as you don't attach it to violence? It's an interesting question. We don't ever want our kids to learn that physical gay bashing is okay. But is refusing to talk to people because they're gay okay? The fact of the matter is that if you breach the human rights code, if you discriminate against somebody overtly with violence, overtly by not letting them have a job, adversely by simply not letting them into your group of friends, and it just works out that coincidentally they never get employment in a certain sector, any of those ways, Mr. Chairman, are wrong.

In my view, any question that we would subject our Education Act to considerations which would undermine those fundamental principles – principles in the Charter, principles in our human rights code – is something that our party, the NDP, cannot accept. I just don't think there's a document or a concept or a group of values that more widely encompass and embrace all Canadians and all Albertans than those simple, fundamental notions of equality and human rights, and they are not notions that can be modified or exempted, where you can apply degrees of extremism to decide whether or not they should be respected. I'm a little concerned, as a result, that some of the conversation that's come up thus far suggests that there are degrees in certain publicly funded, publicly legislated settings. I would suggest that I can't agree with that.

So for those reasons I can't support either the subamendment and likely will not support the amendment either on behalf of the NDP caucus.

We remain very, very committed to public education. We respect the rights of parents to teach their kids about their religious beliefs and values in the home, and that's something that's very important to all families in Alberta. I also remain convinced that in our public sector, where all of us have to come together regardless of our religious background, there are certain simple concepts which must apply to all of us, and I would not ever want to see that jeopardized. So on that basis I'll be voting against the subamendment and, if I don't get a chance to speak on the amendment itself, also against that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: In the tradition of alternating government and opposition, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill if you wish.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do have some concerns with the subamendment as it's phrased. I would like some clarification from the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere about what his understanding of the word "paramount" would be, whether that is in the sense that we would use it in a constitutional context, whether it means the ability to override or to veto. As the hon. member knows as a member of the bar, preambles are often referred to by courts in interpreting the legislation to which they're affixed. Would the hon. member concede that there is also a paramount right and a responsibility for society as a whole to ensure that every child has a reasonable level of competency and skills in order to succeed in a modern society, that being a minor, that society has an interest in ensuring that they achieve some educational skills, skills like reading and writing and mathematics, which would give them the opportunity to pursue a trade or skills or higher education?

In the context of the phrase which the hon. member is proposing, I'm wondering whether "the paramount right and responsibility to make decisions" really means to make all decisions because that's the inference that one could gain by the wording, the plain meaning of it. If one has the paramount right and responsibility to make all decisions, does that include the overriding ability not to require the child to go to school at all? Does it include the paramount right to have your child not pursue mathematics, which they may have a distaste for? Does it include their ability to keep their child out of English classes or learning how to write and so on?

I would just ask for some clarification there because I do have some concern with the use of the word “paramount” in that context in terms of the parents’ rights.

Mr. Anderson: I’d be happy to answer that.

The Chair: You want to answer it?

Mr. Anderson: I’ll answer the question, and then we’ve got lots of time to debate, so we’ll all be good.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Anderson: A very good question. There’s a lot of information in this preamble and in this act, tons of information, tons of rights, responsibilities. Lots of it is in here. There are some rights, in the view of this member, that are paramount. Obviously, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms governs this document, and obviously the courts, therefore, will interpret this document. However, within this document I think that it is completely within the purview of the Legislature and certainly it is appropriate here to assess which rights are going to be given the most weight. In answer to your question I absolutely, fundamentally believe that parents do have a paramount right over the decisions regarding the education of their children.

Now, it does go on to explain what that includes in the same clause. It says, for example: “The paramount right and responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of their children,” which includes “a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised.” So I do think that within the amendment itself it does clarify what this applies to.

I think that at some point rights do come into conflict with each other – there’s no doubt about it – and a lot of times courts are asked to judge which rights supersede others. Do I feel that parents have the right to take their child out of school at a certain point? Yes, I do. I do believe that. I have an autistic child, for example, and if I ever thought that he was being bullied, if I ever thought that he was being harmed in any way in a school setting, I would reserve my right, whatever the law is, to take that child out of that setting and to protect him.

So I guess the answer is: yes, I do believe it’s a paramount right. If I had a child that who suicidal and who was being bugged and bullied in school and so forth, obviously I would try to work with that school to help alleviate the problem, but if it wasn’t relieved, then I would hold paramount my right as a parent to remove that child from the school. If there were no other options – perhaps it was in a rural area, for example – perhaps that means that that child would not be in school, and I would choose to home-school that child.

3:50

At some point you have to say: whom do you trust? At the end of day whom do you trust? Who has paramountcy in these cases? I think that except in the most extreme circumstances it’s parents, with the exceptions that are obvious; for example, child abuse, violence against children, et cetera, those types of things.

Obviously, when children’s rights are being taken away from them by their parents, that’s when government steps in.

In the absence of that happening, I believe that a parent has, without any doubt in my mind, the right to decide how their children will be educated and if they will be educated in a public school, a charter school, a home-school setting, what that home-school setting will look like and what will be taught in that home-school setting, with, of course, the caveats that if that goes into something where that child’s rights are being taken away or where it becomes abuse – I would include in the definition of abuse any type of teaching where you are teaching some sort of racial supremacy, where you are teaching that you should be violent against any group or anyone, for that matter – that is where the line is drawn, in my view. That’s where it becomes abuse and where the parent loses that paramount right.

Just as with, you could say, the Charter rights that are out there – the right of free speech, the right of freedom of assembly – all these different freedoms that we enjoy by virtue of being in the Charter are paramount to other things that go on in society; for example, driving on the road or some of these other rights that we enjoy because we’re allowed to do them. But they do not take the right over other rights that are more paramount that are listed in our Charter or listed in the UN declaration of human rights in some cases, which includes that parents will have the human right to educate their children as they wish.

I hope that answers your question.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, do you want to get on the list?

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. My learned friend has given some specific examples where there would be a right for a parent to absent their child where they were being abused or where there was some misconduct or some malfeasance or perhaps where the child was perceived to be in some difficult situation. Would he not concede that if you give the paramountcy right to those parents, everyone would have those?

Does the hon. member take issue with the fact that we do have compulsory education in the province of Alberta, that until the age of 17 years one is required to give their child an education? We’re not talking about home education versus public education but the requirement to give kids the basic skills that they need to succeed in society. Are you saying that there should be no such thing as compulsory attendance at school for children?

Mr. Anderson: Of course that’s not what I’m saying. Of course not. I just gave the examples that I reserve the right to remove my child from school and bring them into a home setting and educate them there as per the act. I mean, this is not about whether there should be compulsory education – I think we can all agree that there should be compulsory education – but that how that education is conducted is up to the parent. That’s why we allow for home-schooling. That’s why we allow for faith-based schools and Catholic schools and public schools and private schools and francophone schools, and you can go through it.

In answer to your question, yes, I believe children have a right to be educated as well. We’re talking about those rights clashing. But when it comes to how their children will be educated, I feel parents have the fundamental, paramount right to decide how they will be educated excepting in the extreme circumstances where it turns into abuse of that child by either not giving them any education at all or by abusing them and so forth, the examples that I used earlier.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Kang: My question is: what kind of an education standard are we going to have if everybody starts to do their own thing? That's my question. If the parents pull their kids out of school and bring them home and start educating their own kids, what kind of an education standard are we going to have?

Mr. Anderson: As the member was asking, what if everybody starts doing their own thing? Well, the law right now, hon. member, is that you are allowed to bring your child home to educate them. That is the law now. I'm not saying that that should change. We should continue to allow that. Some home-school parents choose to follow a specific Alberta Education curriculum; others do not. There's a different track of education that they use for their children. It's not completely verbatim from Alberta Education. That exists now. It works, and people are happy with it.

In fact, the results that home educators get out of their children are fantastic. I would venture to guess – and it is just a guess. I will get statistics to back this up, or I will see if they're out there. If you took all the folks in public school and you tested them for the quality of education at the end of grade 12, I would bet that our home-schooled children in this province and those attending faith-based schools and so forth would be every bit as strong as those graduating if not stronger.

Parents care more than anyone else how their children are educated, and they will move mountains to make sure that they're educated in a way that's beneficial to them. For the state to assume that it knows best what's best for kids over and above what parents know about their child is, in my view, not a value that I can support.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on subamendment SA1.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chair, I'm pleased to stand up, actually, and speak. I guess the unfortunate thing is that I'm following a couple of lawyers, and I have to tell you that I'm not a lawyer. They talk from a legal perspective. What I'm going to do, I think, is talk as a parent and grandparent about what I think is important, and that's about the rights of the parents.

You know, one of the things that I have found interesting with this Education Act is that I can't even remember how long it's taken for it to come from when it started to where we are now in tabling the piece of legislation. I'm sure the Education minister would be able to provide us the stats and all of the consultation that's taken place on this particular piece of legislation.

What always amazes me when we get a government bill tabled – and I can think of several since I've been a member of the opposition . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, we have subamendment SA1.

Mrs. Forsyth: I know. I'm getting there if you'd listen, please. The important thing is that we have already got a bill that's just been tabled, and we've already had an amendment put down on the table as A1. Now we have another amendment, sub SA1. So that's where I was getting to.

Amazingly enough, Mr. Chair, we have a 186-page bill. It has been on the floor for a very short period of time, and the government has already put an amendment down as of, I think, late last night. Now, what's interesting is that the preamble that the minister has brought forward is, I think, exactly what people are thinking. You can talk about some of the things when you listen to the debate, and as one of the things I think the member over there talked about common sense. What the Wildrose is bringing forward is the fact that all we're adding is that we believe it is "the paramount right and responsibility [of the parent] to make decisions respecting the education of their children, which includes," and it goes on from there.

4:00

Being with the Wildrose, we end up working long hours or late into the night doing our own research because of the budget, so I was up bright and early this morning doing some research and pulling some documents from the Alberta Education website. Some documents that I pulled off their own website that I found very fascinating talk about school choice. It says:

When it comes to selecting a school, parents and students can choose from a wide range of options. They can select from public schools, separate schools, Francophone schools, private schools, and charter schools. They can also access a number of unique and innovative programs – including home education, online/virtual schools, outreach programs and alternative programs. Parents can also opt to home school their children.

Then it lists the schools and school boards, and it says: "Choice is one of the most important principles Alberta's education system is built on," a very, very telling statement, to be very honest with you.

I think anyone in this province can say that we probably have one of the best education systems in this country. My boys are older and went through the public school system. We were very lucky with the teachers they had, and I liked the education program my children got in public school. My grandson is in public school.

What's interesting is the list of schools that you start going down. It talks about public and separate schools, and it goes on quite eloquently about francophone schools.

Under the law, parents whose first language is French have a constitutional right to have their child educated in French where there are enough students to warrant it.

Then it talks about private schools, charter schools, and then home education.

Parents who choose to educate their children at home assume primary responsibility for delivering and supervising their child's courses of study and work as partners with a school board or accredited private school to ensure the child's educational goals are being met.

It goes on to talk about other online learning programs and outreach programs, alternative programs.

I think one of the nice things, Mr. Chair, about living in this province is the choices that we have. With education choices I think that one of the things that we as parents – and it says very clearly in the preamble that the government recognizes that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins in the home; that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children; and that these principles are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta to provide parents with choice in education . . .

And then goes on, as I indicated earlier.

. . . public schools, separate schools, Francophone . . . charter . . . private schools, and home education programs.

All that my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere is asking for in his subamendment SA1 preamble is just repeating. Honestly, when we had our lawyers talking, they talked about preambles and all of that in the courts, and I for the life of me tried to understand what my colleague from Calgary-Nose Hill was talking about on the paramount rights and children not being able to attend school. I think the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere covered it very well. I mean, we have the right as a parent to pull our child out of class if there are some problems.

Many, many years ago my son's best friend committed suicide. Mr. Chair, I read that suicide note in the House because his parents asked me to read the suicide note in the House. It was a very troubling time for my son at the time. Obviously, he had some difficulties with it because they were best friends and always together. We chose at that particular time to pull our child out of school, and we did that because we felt that he needed some intense counselling. He was a pallbearer at that particular time for that child. You know, I never thought I'd have to come to that decision where I would be pulling my child out of school for a couple of weeks to provide what we considered the intense counselling that he needed.

There are hundreds of cases when that will happen in this province. I remember when I was a member of the government and I was bringing my bullying bill forward, which I'm very proud to say is incorporated in Bill 2 now. It started as a private member's bill. Fascinatingly enough, when I brought the bullying bill forward, I remember the Calgary public board of education was up in arms about this bill. It was going to be a disaster. In talking to the Minister of Education at that particular time, Edmonton-Whitemud, the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill stood up and spoke against my bullying bill at that particular time, so it will be interesting for him when the majority of what I incorporated in the bullying bill is included in Bill 2. I'm going to look forward to hearing him speak about that.

Having said that, I think what the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is only trying to do is just to make it very important and make it very factual that always "the paramount right and responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of children, which includes" – and it goes on – is the parents' number one priority and number one choice.

So, you know, we can listen to the member talk about the child not attending school or all of that. That's also included in the act, Member. It talks about when you're skipping – and I can't find it right now – or if the child is missing in action. I, like many people, have had a lot of phone calls on this particular issue. I think it's telling when people call us in regard to parents having the rights and the responsibilities to make decisions respecting the education of their children.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to sit down. I'm going to continue to listen to some of the debate and hear what people have to say, and I look forward to that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Anderson: Yes. After my comments here I would like to invite the Education minister to respond to this subamendment if he is willing and tell us why he is or is not supporting it. If he is supporting it, that means that we can sit down and have a vote or can keep talking about it for a little bit, but I'd like to understand his reasoning for supporting it or for not supporting it. If I can't convince him, if I haven't convinced him yet, then maybe a little bit more time will convince him, you know, a little bit more talking, a little bit more argument and debate.

4:10

Why do we need to put it that parents have a paramount right to make choices with regard to education, to decide how their children are educated? You know, I brought it up a little bit earlier very briefly, but choice is not enough in this context because choices are great, but choices can be taken away. They're very different – choices are different – than rights.

It's very good that the current government of Alberta is in favour of school choice, very good. It's very good that they provide these choices. We've talked about separate Catholic schools; public schools, of course; faith-based schools; francophone schools; home-schooling; private schools; et cetera. But these choices can quite easily be taken away in certain circumstances. Actually, not in certain circumstances; they can be taken away at any time. I'm not saying that this government has any plans to do so, but the fact remains that they can be taken away. That's why it's important to recognize in our language the difference between a clause in a bill and what the government of Alberta actually considers to be fundamental rights.

You know, I think that if we are serious about saying that parents have the right to educate their children, to make decisions regarding their children's education, then I would say that it is very important that we show that by the language that we use in the School Act. It was mentioned earlier. This is Bill 2, the Education Act. This is about public education. Well, the Education Act, of course, does not just encompass public education. It incorporates all education, as was pointed out by the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. It says in here that until you're 17 years old, there's compulsory education for children.

Mrs. Forsyth: And attendance.

Mr. Anderson: And compulsory attendance for an education program for a child.

It does very much include home-schooling, private schooling, faith-based schooling, Catholic schooling, francophone schooling, all these different school choices, and, of course, obviously, public school. So I think that it's very important that we put this new language in the preamble, put it at the very top where it belongs because you have to start from somewhere.

Let's look through the different preambles here. The first one:

Whereas the following visions, principles and values are the foundation of the education system in Alberta;

Okay.

Whereas education is the foundation of a democratic and civil society;

Whereas education inspires students to discover and pursue their aspirations and interests and cultivates a love of learning and the desire to be lifelong learners;

Very important. Good stuff.

Whereas the role of education is to develop engaged thinkers who think critically and creatively, and ethical citizens who demonstrate respect, teamwork and democratic ideals, and who work with an entrepreneurial spirit to face challenges with resiliency, adaptability, risk-taking and bold decision-making.

It's getting a little prescriptive, but I agree with it as a parent.

Ms Blakeman: And as a citizen.

Mr. Anderson: As a citizen.

Whereas students are entitled to welcoming, caring, respectful and safe learning environments that respect diversity and nurture a sense of belonging and a positive sense of self;

Okay.

Whereas education is a shared responsibility and requires collaboration, engagement, and empowerment of all partners in the education system as necessary to ensure that all students achieve their potential;

Now, let's look at that one for a second. It sounds good. Education is sometimes a shared responsibility. Not always. Sometimes it is.

It isn't really if you're a home-schooling parent. You're not really sharing the responsibility with the Ministry of Education. You're not really sharing the responsibility with the local school board or any teachers per se. If they are in a public school, then yeah, sure, they're a shared responsibility.

We can go on. There are many more.

Whereas the educational best interest of the child is the paramount . . .

Oh, here we go. I didn't notice this. Check this out. I didn't see this. This is interesting.

Whereas the educational best interest of the child is the paramount consideration in making decisions about a child's education;

There you go. We can use "paramount" there.

Whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes the importance of an inclusive education system . . .

And it goes on and on and on and on.

Ms Blakeman: It's the paramountcy of education.

Mr. Anderson: Yes; I'm sorry. I did read through this bill when it was first tabled last fall, and I'd forgotten that they did use the word paramount in here. But that's good. So we know that paramount can be used.

I would say that the best interests of the child are best determined by the parents – that's what I would say – except in those situations where, clearly, the parents do not have the best interests of the child, they are abusing them and so forth. I would say that it's important, given this language that's being used here, that we make it very clear that parents have the paramount right to the education of their children.

I would challenge the other side. I already know what the Liberals feel about this, and I know what the NDP feels about it. We'll just agree to disagree on it. But I want to hear from the other side why they don't think we should use the word "paramount" when describing the rights that parents have to choose the education for their children. What's the reason? Do they not think it's paramount? What right supersedes it, other than in situations where abuse is occurring, where the child is being harmed, abused, so forth? Their rights are being taken away, in other words.

Should we not have that in there? Should we not show, should we not conclude or make very clear in the language that it's parents that have the paramount right? I mean, someone's got to have the paramount right. Who has the paramount right? Is it the state? Does the state have the paramount right?

Ms Blakeman: The educational interests of the child.

Mr. Anderson: Who determines the educational interests of the child? Who?

Ms Blakeman: The act.

Mr. Anderson: Who? No, no, no. Not the act. Who? The act is a piece of paper. Who determines the – and I'll let you speak to this. This is an interesting debate, I agree. You say that it's all about the educational interests of the child. So my question to you, my question to everyone here: who is in the best position to determine what the best interests of the child are? Is it this dead piece of paper? Is it some bureaucrat in the Ministry of Education? Is it the teacher or the school board trustee? Is it the principal of the local school? Is it everybody in this Assembly? Is it me for everybody in Airdrie-Chestermere? Is it the Minister of Education for everybody in his riding? Who determines that?

My argument is that the person or persons who are best able to determine what is in the best interest of the child is, in almost every circumstance, the parent. Unless the parent does something to forfeit that – by abusing the child, by hurting the child, by taking away the child's rights to an education, to anything, unless the parent abuses that right, in which case they then lose that right – they have the paramount right to determine what's in the best interest. Because if we don't do that, who do we leave it to? Who is ultimately in charge? Who ultimately decides?

We can't just use things like whatever's in the best interest of the child. Who determines it? Is it the Child and Youth Advocate? Is it the Minister of Education? Is it the Speaker? Is it the chair?

Mr. MacDonald: The Speaker.

Mr. Anderson: You know what? I bet you it might be the Speaker. Maybe he thinks that. But the point is – sorry, Mr. Chair. I'm sure you do a very good job in most cases, especially with your own children. Especially with them.

The point is that as a society we have to decide who is the foundational block, essentially: who gets first crack to make that decision of what's in the best interests of the child? My feeling is, without any doubt, that the individuals that are best in a position to make those decisions of what's in the best interests of the child are parents, unless they give that right up through abusing it.

4:20

And the examples are simple. Again, this is just a piece of paper. But what if the act says that – what if it's changed one day, and it eliminates home-schooling? You can't do home-schooling by this act. No home-schooling allowed, or it has to be done a specific way, there can be no values taught. It has to be done specifically in the way outlined by the Ministry of Education. Let's pretend that that happens. So essentially what you're saying at that point is that you are taking away the parent's right to determine what's best, and you are saying: look, we've determined that the state is going to determine what's best for our children. Okay? That's what that would do, in my view.

If I have an autistic child, which I do, and if the act told me that I had to have that child in a public school that was failing my autistic child, if that was the act, if that's what the Ministry of Education regulation said, or if some civil servant in there said, "You know what; we can't trust parents with these autistic kids because their needs are just so complicated; we've got to make sure that they're getting exactly what they need; we, the state, know what that is," I would say that I would be absolutely mortified at that point if the state was overriding what I thought was best for my child, for that particular child, if I, say, would want to bring them home and said: "That school is failing them. I'm going to take care of them and teach them from home, doing home-schooling."

So we agree one hundred per cent on – and this is going to shock a couple of the members in the Assembly, specifically the Member for Edmonton-Centre. I agree with you that the interest of the child is paramount, no doubt about it, but who determines what that interest is? That's the question in my view. You can put your faith in government to do that. Fair enough. That's one way of looking at it. You can put your faith in the locally elected school board. Fair enough. There are people that have that view. But I think that the very foundation of our society is built upon families, is built upon parents or guardians taking care of their children, and that means a lot of different things. There are a lot of different types of families out there. But you have to start somewhere, and for me it's the family, and it's the parent or guardian of that child that has that fundamental human right to determine those things.

I would ask again of the other side: whose rights are paramount with regard to determining what's in the best interests of our children if not parents? I'd like to know that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening with interest to the discussion this afternoon. I actually wasn't intending to participate in this debate. However, given that there is a significant amount of interest on this matter in my own constituency – in fact, I have agreed to meet with a number of parents who home-school when I return to Medicine Hat on Friday – I wanted to listen to both sides of the argument this afternoon so that I would have a much better understanding from a legislator's perspective and perhaps a better ability to have an informed discussion with my home-schooling parents when I meet with them on Friday.

I find that the subamendment that is before us is confusing the issue rather than enhancing the issue. The amendment that the minister brought forward is intended to clarify that nothing in the Education Act diminishes any rights or responsibilities that parents had under the former piece of legislation.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the Education Act is actually to update and replace the former School Act, and concerns were expressed. In section 16 there is reference to human rights legislation in Alberta and federal human rights legislation that didn't appear in the previous legislation. Well, the reason for that is that these pieces of legislation were actually passed by both the federal government and provincial government subsequent to that legislation and do have paramourcy.

That's where it's very clear that paramourcy applies. That's what the Constitution is all about. That's why we have a Supreme Court that determines whether or not legislation that has been passed by both the federal government and provincial governments and, indeed, even municipal governments conforms with these paramount pieces of legislation. So it wasn't in the legislation specifically, but it was still there. It still applied even though it wasn't there. Now all we've done is we've updated and modernized the legislation and we've reflected that these pieces of legislation do exist.

What we have proposed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is that we would say that the paramount right and responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of children lies with the parents. The concern that I have there is that I believe the options that are outlined in the amendment that was brought forward by the minister are very clear that the government recognizes that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions of their children and that education begins at home and all of the things that we've been describing this afternoon. And then parents have choices to make. They have an informed choice to make. They can choose a public school, they can choose a separate school, they can choose francophone schools, charter schools, private schools, or if none of those things fit with their doctrine, they can choose a home education program.

I believe that by putting this paramourcy in place, we could potentially be compromising all of those other choices in the interests of ensuring that the home-school program is not compromised, and I believe that it is not. By saying that the parents have a paramount right to make decisions respecting the education of their children, that could bring chaos into all of those other choices. If a parent decides that something is being taught in a way that they don't agree with or that doesn't agree with their ethical traditions, as others have made reference to today, if this were to be interpreted literally, that would mean that virtually every school and every classroom would have to have a separate set of rules of engagement for each child in the class, which is practically impossible for anyone to abide by.

We have generally agreed that the School Act will provide for some direction to school boards and to teachers to ensure that we have the kinds of programs offered in these kinds of group settings so that we don't impair the ability to educate the group by overemphasizing the individual rights of the members within that group, an interpretation of those rights. But we say that if, in the opinion of the parents, they believe that their children are not going to be educated in a way that they feel serves the best needs of their child and/or their belief system, they still have one final option, and that is home education.

That home education is flexible in the extreme. Parents have a multitude of ways that they can educate their children. They can do it in a classic way, you know, school goes from 8 in the morning until 5 in the afternoon or 8 until 2, or they can say that the home-schooling that we are dealing with with our children goes on throughout the entire day, and we never miss opportunities to have educational opportunities with our children. Therefore, they can do whatever they like in the best interests of their children to provide an education. At the same time, just like they have been up until this new legislation comes into place and just like every one of us within this room, they have to do so within the context of our human rights legislation.

4:30

It has nothing to do with whether they're home-schooling their children or whether their children are in a publicly funded public system. There are some basic beliefs that we as Canadians have entrenched in our human rights legislation that say that there are some limits on freedom of speech, and some of those limits have been identified and talked about today. You cannot write or encourage people to cause harm to others. Those same limits rightly should apply to all, whether you're in a public education system, whether you're in a home-schooling situation, or, quite frankly, whether or not you're standing up in government in one of the provincial Legislatures or in the federal Legislature. You do not have the right to cause harm to be done to other individuals through the things that you say, the things that you teach, the things that you espouse.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that this subamendment improves the amendment that's been brought forward. In fact, I believe that it will impair the ability of the system to provide a proper and thorough education for our children. Therefore, I will not be supporting the subamendment.

By extension, I just want to say for the record, because I probably won't get up and say it again, that I do support the amendment. I will not be supporting the subamendment, but I will be supporting the amendment that's on the table.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, do you wish to speak to the subamendment?

Ms Notley: Well, yes. Sure. I was sort of incited into getting back into the debate by some of the comments of the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, and then, of course, we had a bit of a conversation afterwards, so I'm not sure how much more of it is necessary. I mean, there are very, very interesting issues that are brought up in this when we talk about sort of the paramourcy of parental rights. I wonder if it's black and white. You know, I don't know that the answer is always black and white.

I was just suggesting to the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere: what happens in that case where you've got a family who has a child who's in the school system and the school system has actually managed to find one of those very, very rare speech pathologists and psychologists that still reside within the school system – and they are becoming an increasingly infrequent breed, unfortunately. Nonetheless, they're in the school system, that has repeatedly assessed and reviewed and examined the child and has concluded that, in fact, the child is autistic and does need very specialized support. As most people know, there is about a two- or three-year window in which you can see 85 per cent of the improvement in a case with that particular disability, and that will occur if it happens right away, but the parent, unfortunately, concludes that for whatever reason they're not prepared to accept that diagnosis; they're in denial.

The literature on sort of the process of parenting and grieving amongst parents who have disabled children shows that that's a natural part of the process, but what if that process continues long enough, and the parents say: "You know what? We don't agree that that's what's going on with our child, so we are going to pull him or her out of the school, and we're going to take them home"?

To be clear, as I was saying to the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, they're going to be loving, they're going to be caring, they're going to spend all their time with that child, and they're going to do everything they can to expose that child to books and whatever. But at the end of the day what's happening is that that child is not getting the kind of one-on-one intervention that could actually bring about a significant improvement in their projected educational and cognitive outcome. What do we do at that point? Do we say that it's the right of the parent to make that choice even though we know that the child may well pay for that in terms of really important life skills throughout their life because the window is not a big window in which you can significantly change those outcomes?

I mean, I see both sides, and I've talked to parents on both sides. It's not black or white. I guess that's my point. It's not black or white. I would struggle mightily if I was a teacher and I watched a parent refuse to let a child get access to that more sophisticated and effective and peer-reviewed intervention that would make a difference.

The other example I gave – and I'm not talking about home-schooling at all. Just to be clear, I have lots of home-schoolers in my constituency, and I know that the vast majority of them do a fabulous job of educating their children. I have no doubt that those children would score very highly on the kinds of tests on how you did at the end of the 18 years. I don't question that at all.

But what about that situation where, again, you've got a child in school, and the teacher phones home and says: "You know what? This child won't learn these key concepts in this grade around math and literacy unless there's more work done at home and more support given at home to help them get through that. We'd like to have him or her stay after school a little bit because we've got a special class that can help them just get over that bump in terms of literacy. If they don't get over that bump, then they're going to fall farther and farther behind." Let's say that happens. Then the family says: "Well, you know, that'd be great, but we don't have a lot of money, and our kid has just gotten a job at McDonald's for 15 hours a week. We need that money, so he can't do it." Well, you know, probably you're going to ultimately side with the parents. But it's not an easy decision.

You know, we had a long debate here yesterday about children's services. We didn't get the exact numbers, but I think we've probably got well over 10,000 children who are in care right now. Those children are in care because, unfortunately, the parents were not best placed always at all times to be the paramount decision-makers. Hopefully, they will be again. Hopefully, the system works very hard to get to the point where that can happen really quickly. If that's the case, I do believe we are part of a community. I do believe the theory that it takes a community to raise a child. That doesn't mean it takes the state to take the child away. It doesn't mean it takes the state to reach into every family and say: we want you to teach this and this and that. No, no, no. The community needs to recognize and tolerate and embrace and celebrate diversity. But there is a balance, and I think it should be thoughtfully applied. I think that strident statements one way or the other, when we're talking generally about raising children, doesn't help anybody.

I just wanted to throw some of those examples out there because I think it demonstrates why it's not quite as black and white as people suggest. There are times when children can benefit from having a neighbour or a teacher or a doctor come into their life and say: "You know what? This is not going to be the best for you unless some other people step in." That's what we hope happens in our communities generally on a day-to-day basis anyway. We don't want to see families entirely isolated and children paying the price of that. We don't. That's not how we see our communities interacting with each other.

Anyway, my fundamental reasons for not accepting this remain those which I outlined before, which talk about how I am concerned about any language that would undercut the paramountcy of the human rights code and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms within our education setting generally.

Just to be clear, the Human Rights Commission would have no jurisdiction over this other than that slim amount that was given through Bill 44 because the Human Rights Commission has no jurisdiction over schools or this act. It only administers the human rights code, which is limited to employment and tenancy and – I don't know – one or two other things.

Ms Blakeman: Government services.

4:40

Ms Notley: Government services.

Ms Blakeman: Which wouldn't be public education.

Ms Notley: No, no. The human rights code does not apply to government services.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. That was Vriend. He wasn't offered the services of the Human Rights Commission.

Ms Notley: Okay. We'll have to have a conversation about that. Yeah. Interesting. I think we have to have a bit of a back and forth.

Anyway, all that said, it remains my concern about the paramountcy of the human rights code as we go forward in this important task of educating our children across the province. That would be my reason for not supporting this subamendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have spoken a bit already about this act in detail, but a few things, I think, are worth highlighting once and for all. Number one, I want to thank the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for highlighting the fact that this government has historically been and continues to be supportive of home education. That is exactly the fact. As a matter of fact, I also agree with the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere – and I thank him for the compliment – in saying that this government has been a big proponent of choice. That is true as well.

As a matter of fact, I venture to say – and I hope that my colleague counterparts, other provincial ministers of education, don't take it as an offence – that I believe Alberta does offer the widest choice, the widest array of educational options for parents. The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has quite eloquently listed all that are available. The fundamentals of Alberta education actually stem from choice, the fact that we recognize that we're not all the same, that we recognize that we all learn differently, and we recognize that we have different family values and beliefs and religions. As Alberta is becoming more and more cosmopolitan, our education system is so flexible that it actually accommodates all of that.

Now, the amendment that I tabled, not the one that we are debating right now, was meant to further highlight the fact that in Alberta Education we recognize that the fundamental right is that of a parent in shaping a child's moral, religious, spiritual education and that this happens primarily at home for parents that are sending kids to regular school-board-run schools or private or charter schools. But for those who choose to home educate, it also happens at home. Those are the things that we teach our children from the day they're born, and we will continue doing that as families. There is no room for government to be stepping into that at all.

This amendment further highlights the fact that that is an exclusive right of parents, and parents have been doing a good job for a hundred years in this province and will continue to do that.

The amendment that I have tabled is also to highlight the fact that nothing – and let me underscore that, Mr. Chairman: nothing – is to change in the delivery of home education. I thank the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for highlighting that.

I'll tell you, Mr. Chairman, what frustrates me a little. This bill, that is known as Bill 2 right now, has been on the floor of this Legislature as Bill 18 for about a year. The now Minister of Human Services has done, I would say, a pretty thorough job of consulting on that bill through Inspiring Education and others. Then this bill was tabled here in the Legislature. There was some limited debate on it. But in a rare circumstance I had taken the bill off the floor of the Legislature and had given all Albertans one more opportunity to look at the draft Bill 18 and further consult on it. We have done that. We had seven town hall meetings throughout the province. A letter was sent to every child, so de facto every parent, in Alberta schools. We had parent telephone conferences, where literally in excess of 1,000 parents called in. The list went on and on and on.

What is really, I have to say, disappointing and perhaps even somewhat frustrating to me is that up until this moment I have had zero – zero – input from the Wildrose Alliance caucus. They have not sent me one memo on what they think should or shouldn't be in this new bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Did you invite them to your consultations?

Mr. Lukaszuk: By all means. Everybody was invited.

As a matter of fact, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, your caucus was generous enough and contributed individually in many different ways.

But not one memo, not one letter. One meeting with the MLA from Airdrie-Chestermere, but not highlighting any amendments to the bill. Now that the bill is in its second reincarnation on the floor of the Legislature, amendments are being tabled. It's somewhat disappointing because, again, I'm venturing to guess that this bill is probably the most consulted piece of legislation that this Legislature has ever seen, and I'm proud of that because this is one of the most fundamental laws that this Legislature will ever pass, that being the Education Act. It's unfortunate that that caucus now has such grave concerns, but they weren't raising it before.

Mr. Hinman: Point of order.

Mr. Lukaszuk: What further concerns me, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere now admitted to the fact that he hasn't read the bill for over one year.

The Chair: Hon. minister, we have a point of order. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Point of Order

Allegations Against a Member

Mr. Hinman: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). Saying that they had no contact. I mean, it's just totally wrong what he's saying about the Wildrose. Most important, we're amending a government amendment. How on earth were we supposed to know ahead of time that he was going to do this? It's just absurd that he'd even bring that up. This is a government amendment that we're making an amendment to, but somehow we're supposed to go to consultation when he's the one who changed the bill. It's unbelievable. He has to retract what he said.

The Chair: A point of clarification, Minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, let's be clear. The Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has indicated that he is not happy with sections of the bill proper, and I know that he already has advised me that he will be tabling amendments to the bill proper as well. I don't need to retract anything. It is abundantly obvious that they are not happy with the bill proper and that they also will be tabling amendments, when they had a year and a half opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, what troubles me even further is the fact that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere is on the record saying that he hasn't read the bill in over one year.

The Chair: Hon. members, I heard the two sides. My ruling is that this is a point of clarification. Both sides have explained.

Minister, please stay on subamendment SA1.

Debate Continued

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I was earlier saying, the fact is that this bill was well consulted. The one goal of this bill relative to home education is to maintain that as a bona fide option. We want parents to have that option. We pride ourselves on the fact that home education has such a flourishing history in this province. There is no intention by word or spirit of the act to curtail or change it in any way, and we will continue to do that.

Now, for anyone to insinuate that somehow parents' rights are in jeopardy because one day the government of the day may change that is quite disingenuous, Mr. Chairman. Any member of this Chamber, particularly the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere being, well, at least trained in law, if not practising law, should know the fact that any government of any day can change any law as long as they bring it to the floor of the Legislature with amendments or with another piece of legislation to replace it. So to be reassuring parents that whatever we put in this act will be cast in stone and will never ever be changed by any future government is simply not being frank and forthcoming with those parents.

Going back to his earlier comments, the fact is that we do have a history of a Progressive Conservative government in excess of 40 years now that has actually grown the home-schooling program and supported it and any aspect of it. There is no reason to believe that this government would want to change the path in any particular way. I can tell you on the record right now that there is no intention among any members of our caucus to make any changes, and we won't be making any changes.

I hope that home-schooling parents have the satisfaction of knowing that they have a government in place that has supported and will continue to support their options as they have exercised them up until this point. We hope that they will continue exercising them into the future because they have proven to us and to the rest of Albertans that home-schooling is a viable option and is the right option for some children where they choose to exercise it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is truly an interesting discussion, and I cannot believe the direction that the Minister of Education just went in. I'm going to have to clarify a few of the utterly incorrect statements that he just made. I want to start off by asking the chair whether the Minister of Education just received this – I don't know whether it's 20 pages – the concerns from the Calgary board of education that just came in. Is he going to get up there and slander the Calgary board of education and all the other people that are bringing and sending information to us. Does he not receive any?

This government is notorious – notorious – for coming up with legislation and then saying that they're going to go out and consult. It's an insult to Albertans. It's an insult to children. It's an insult to all of the school boards out there. It's just one insult after another, Mr. Chair, what this member got up and spewed out of his mouth.

Let's get back to the amendment, which is an amendment . . .

4:50

The Chair: Subamendment SA1.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, but to government amendment A1, which just shows how incorrect he is. It's the government's amendment that we want to amend. Oh, we're supposed to consult because we're clairvoyant and knew what he was going to bring forward. This is just remarkable, the stuff that he wants to try and bring out here.

The Calgary board of education, again, has pages of concerns with Bill 2 that they just put out, oh, after a year and a half. Again, this government has such a poor track record, Mr. Chair, that they can say, "We've only changed section 16 and section 2," but the fact of the matter is that until they've gone through it meticulously, there isn't a school board, there isn't a parent, there isn't a teacher in this province that will trust this minister on the open face saying: "Trust me. Nothing has been changed." They've lost the trust of Albertans. They don't deserve the trust of Albertans because of their past behaviour.

I want to go on a little bit about subamendment SA1 and to read it in here again. Oh, we get to the small letters, the big letters; we're changing back and forth. What we're wanting to do here is to substitute "as the first recital," and we want to put in here "the paramount right and responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of their children, which includes." We want the paramount right to the parents.

Because I was in meetings in my office, I haven't been able to listen to everything, but the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre started off by talking about the 1982 Constitution Act and where our freedoms are and who is responsible. Everyone uses the analogy – she used it today – that I have the right to swing my arm until it hurts someone else. So you've got to stop just before the nose of someone else is what she talked about earlier. [interjection] Because you are scaring people. When you've gone into their personal space and they're worried, it crosses over.

Arguments are going forward by many of the members about what's the right of the parent and where it is when a parent is starting to do damage to a child – there's physical, there's emotional, all of these areas – but we have a child's advocate, and there is a process for them to be protected.

So to think that we need to have a School Act that's going to say that the state will supersede and step in on choosing, you know, where these kids need to go or who has the ultimate right – is it the Minister of Education, or is it the parent? That's really what this is about. Albertans are very concerned and rightfully concerned because of the track record of this government on infringing on the individual rights of the citizens of this province.

Mr. Hancock: That's ridiculous.

Mr. Hinman: The Minister of Human Resources says that it's ridiculous. I want to put that on the record because he truly is ridiculous in his comments with what he has said.

I remember when I was in Eckville how he got hammered down when he made those same comments to one Keith Wilson by making such . . .

Mr. Hancock: That was also ridiculous.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. A year ago. And he likes to interject and put in these ridiculous statements on truth. [interjection] It would have been a much better one.

The Chair: Hon. member, speak to the chair.

Mr. Hinman: Yes, Mr. Chair. [interjection] You know what that word means? That's surprising. [interjection] No. The other one that he was using.

What we want to talk about is: who has the paramount rights over our children and who's going to make the decision? I want to go back and maybe change the tone a little bit here. Albertans are grateful and I'm grateful for the system that we've had. Historically we've supported home-schooling; we've supported choice. I think that, as they like to echo all the time, this is one of the best places that provides one of the best educations for our children here in Alberta. Why? Because we've respected parents' rights to choose and then the choice of individuals to start other schools if they want to.

I know a wonderful lady who, in order to keep their public school alive in Warner, went out and did a lot of work and raised a lot of money to specialize in a hockey school for women. That's what we want. We want innovative Albertans to be able to come up with and look at new ideas and ways in which to keep their schools open or to meet the needs of their children so that they can be the best they can be.

Choice is just so critical if we really want to compete and keep up because that entrepreneur, those parents that are out ahead are going to come together and say, "We need this." Perhaps they can make that pressure on the public school board and say, "Provide this for our children; we want to have this class in our curriculum,” or they could come and start their own private or charter school in order to do that. But we need to protect the parental right to make those decisions.

I’m always nervous when someone says that the state has greater interest in the children than the parents. Usually there’s again . . .

Mr. Hancock: We’re not saying that, though.

Mr. Hinman: Well, there is one that was kind of mentioning that, you know, they need interference and perhaps a doctor needs to step in or the school board or someone. The innuendo was certainly there that sometimes the parents aren’t informed.

That’s another interesting word here. On page 12 we have: “Whereas parents have the right and the responsibility to make informed decisions.” Again, it’s another part of the concern here, that they could say: “Well, they’re not informed enough. I’m an expert, so I can supersede that.”

What all of this amendment is and what the concern is – I know that the minister had the rally out front and again accused different members of instigating these rallies when, in fact, it’s his own bill and what they put in it that has caused the uproar, and it’s the past behaviour of this government that’s caused the uproar. The mistrust is why people are concerned.

Just today we had a question here on emergency services, and the Minister of Municipal Affairs made the comment that he wouldn’t know of an Albertan that wouldn’t want the government to come in and confiscate their car in order to save somebody. I say: “You know what? That’s what happens in a police state.” In Alberta I can assure you that what would happen when they came and said, “Can we use your car because we need to do this,” is that Albertans would give. You don’t need the authority to have the option to say: we’re confiscating this car. That’s offensive, yet that’s what this government wants. They want the authority to break and enter, to confiscate and do all of that.

Therefore, this loops over to why these same people don’t have trust in this government and say: “What is it? Why do they need legislation that’s so strong and worded such that there’s this loophole that would not allow the parents to make that choice for their children?” The Minister of Education knows better. He’s going to say: “This is what needs to be taught to your children. We know better.” Parents need to have that choice, and if it’s not protected and we don’t see it in here as paramount, we run into trouble.

Again, going back to the Member for Edmonton-Centre when she was talking about the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and going through that, as she eloquently said, it’s one of the few bills that actually reads quite easily. Albertans can pick it up and read through it. It is understandable. It goes through:

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

- (a) freedom of conscience and religion;
- (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;
- (c) freedom of peaceful assembly;

Again, she made the comment that with all of the security here, she didn’t know if that one was being respected, and I can understand her concerns and her comments on that. And

- (d) freedom of association.

Those are laid out there.

She also was very articulate in saying – and this is so critical in the rule of law – that if you have a list created and you’re not on that list, you’re not on that list. That’s the concern here. What is the list, how is it prioritized, and is this government going to possibly infringe on the rights of parents by saying: “You know what? We know better. We don’t think that you’re teaching your children the right curriculum. You’re not teaching them the right arts. They need to be taught cooking,” whatever might come in as a new curriculum, saying, “This is what we need to do.” That’s fearful for many Albertans, especially those that are in the private and home-schooling area, where they want to have that right as a parent to make that decision on what is going to be there for their children.

5:00

Again, we know that in the Constitution and we know that under the rule of law you can’t teach hatred, and if parents are doing something like that, then there are already laws in place that we can do something about that. We don’t need these things in print and listed in this bill, the Education Act, yet they keep wanting to weave those things in, and because they weave those things in there, Albertans, parents become concerned.

It’s a simple amendment. It’s the right amendment. It’s very close to what the government has tried to do. Again, he’s accusing us because we didn’t consult with him. I guess, I have to say that, you know, let’s change that a little bit.

It’s an insult, usually, to try and talk to them on many of these things. They’ve been in here long enough that they just laugh at most of these things. Let’s just talk about bills 19, 36, 24, and 50. They laugh and mock about those. The Minister of Human Resources: I’ve been to the meetings where he does that and says that’s not true.

Mr. Hancock: Well, it wasn’t.

Mr. Hinman: He still wants to stand by that.

Mr. Hancock: That’s the worst abomination I’ve ever heard.

The Chair: Hon. members, the substance of the debate is subamendment SA1.

Ms Blakeman: Where are we?

Mr. Hinman: Keith Wilson in Eckville.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. All right. Focus in.

Mr. Hinman: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre wants me to focus back in here. I will try and do that, but it’s difficult with the government and all of their past behaviour. That’s why you make judgments, Mr. Chair. Because your relationships and the things that you’ve had in the past have an impact on your judgment, and the people of Alberta, thankfully, are going to be able to have a judgment on this government and their ridiculous bills that they pass, saying that they’re protecting rights when all they’re doing is protecting their power. All they’re doing is protecting their authority. They’re entrenching that power and authority over and above the citizens of Alberta, saying: “Trust us. We’re the government and we know best.”

That’s what the problem is. Many Albertans are phoning. They’re e-mailing. They’re writing letters. They’re concerned where the line is drawn on parental rights.

If they’re hurting their children – again, I do understand. I’ve seen the homes of parents that are illiterate that don’t want their children to go to school. We know that that’s wrong. That’s where the government and the child advocate can step in and say: “No. This child needs to be brought out and go to school.” And that’s appropriate. We understand that. But it doesn’t mean, though, that they can come and say: “You know what? We want you to teach this curriculum in here because we think that this is right.” Those parents might not agree with that. Do we have that cultural diversity? Do we have that religious freedom that allows people to do those things? Parents are very concerned that they don’t.

I believe that it’s right, so what we need to do is look at this amendment, and we need to accept subamendment SA1 to the government’s amendment A1, and put in there, “the paramount right and responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of their children, which includes,” and then we can read through the bill. We all know what it includes going forward.

We would hope that others would continue to speak on this. It’s a very small change, but again as the Member for Edmonton-Centre says, if it’s not on that list, if it’s not written in there, it doesn’t exist. That’s why there’s a concern, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you have patiently been waiting.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, I have.

I appreciate the opportunity to participate in debate on this subamendment. I would like to compliment all members from various parties for their contribution to the debate and the discussion this afternoon, not only on Bill 2 but also on this subamendment that has been proposed to us by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

I have been looking at this legislation for some time. I’ve had consultations with various groups. On the public record I certainly appreciate hearing from constituents. I’ve heard from home-schoolers, and I’ve heard from other individuals who have been expressing their opinion on this legislation. Certainly, I welcome their observations. I welcome their phone calls and their e-mails regarding this bill. It’s a very important bill, and it’s a very important discussion that we’re having this afternoon.

Certainly, we have heard various hon. members talk about the paramount right and responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of their children. Now, I can understand where the hon. member is coming from, but I really don’t think that when we look at this bill and we look at education in general – we’ve got to remind ourselves that we’re not necessarily just talking about public education like we should. Public education is a foundation of our multicultural community, our multicultural province, and our multicultural country. Without public education multiculturalism will not work.

Has the government accommodated home-schoolers? I believe they have. There is within the public education system in our constituency a school that is delegated to providing support for home-schoolers, particularly as they get into the subjects that one generally encounters in junior high and in high school. This program for home-schoolers for both the pupils and their parents seems to work quite well.

I have an opportunity on occasion to visit this facility and to visit during graduation time, and it is interesting to see the diversity of the student population, if I can call them that, and the communities that they call home. Some of the students come from as far south as Sylvan Lake, and certainly there are cases where they come from well north of the city of Edmonton. They do gather for their graduation ceremony, and both the pupils and the parents are very proud of their accomplishments, and so they should be. That would be one example of an accommodation that has already been made by the province.

Home-schoolers have every right to question the direction that this government is taking with this bill, as do citizens who do not have their children enrolled in home-schooling programs.

When we look at this bill and we look at the hon. member’s subamendment, I would certainly remind members that there are other parts of this bill that are important. It was touched on by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. There is a section in here, and there’s a section in the current legislation, regarding compulsory education.

7(1) Every person who

- (a) is a resident of Alberta and has a parent who is a resident of Canada,
- (b) at September 1 in a year is 6 years of age or older, and
- (c) subject to subsection (2), is younger than 17 years of age, shall attend school.

Not may attend school, but shall attend school. It’s compulsory, and so it should be. I don’t know why if this bill is to become law, it is necessary to have this amendment.

5:10

When you go further into the bill, Mr. Chairman, you will see where individuals have responsibilities. Let’s start with part 3, section 31. Students have responsibilities, and they’re outlined here in this proposed legislation. Parents have responsibilities. School boards have responsibilities. Trustees have responsibilities. It’s outlined here, but let’s look at parent responsibilities.

Parents have the responsibility to

- (a) make decisions respecting the child’s education,
- (b) take an active role in the child’s educational success, including assisting the child in complying with section 31,
- (c) ensure that the child attends school regularly,
- (d) ensure that the parent’s conduct contributes to a welcoming, caring, respectful and safe environment,
- (e) co-operate and collaborate with school staff to support the delivery of specialized supports and services to the child,
- (f) encourage, foster and advance collaborative, positive and respectful relationships with teachers, principals, other school staff and professionals providing supports and services in the school, and
- (g) engage in the child’s school community.

Sometimes in my work here I may be guilty of violating that because I’ve been busy, and perhaps I was not as engaged in my three children’s school community as I should have been.

These are legislative requirements that are in this bill already, so to suggest that we need to change this and make sure that parents have the right and responsibility to make informed decisions respecting the education of their children, that is what I see in here already. That is to be eliminated or struck, and we are to replace this with the subamendment as proposed.

There seems to be some thought or some chatter that there will be issues of discrimination. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about this earlier today. What happens if something goes wrong? Maybe this is what the hon. member is trying to attempt here with this subamendment, but when something does go wrong, the courts come into play.

All Canadian jurisdictions stipulate that no person may deny or discriminate on the basis of religion, creed, or a related concept in the provision of any service, accommodation, or facility that is customarily or ordinarily available to the public. This would of course include our entire school system. How have the courts worked in the past? I’m not going to take up the House’s time on this, but . . .

Ms Blakeman: Yes, you will.

Mr. MacDonald: No. But I will point out a case of a young Sikh student. Recently in the context of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms religious discrimination was found by the Supreme Court of Canada where a school council of commissioners – the decision prohibited a traditional Sikh student from wearing his kirpan, sealed and under his clothes, to school.

The student in this case genuinely believed that he would not be complying with the requirements of his religion were he to wear a plastic or a wooden kirpan. Ultimately the court found the interference with the student's freedom of religion was neither trivial nor insignificant as it deprived him of his right to attend a public school.

The court found that while protecting the safety of students was a pressing, substantial objective and the prohibition against weapons was rationally connected to this objective, the prohibition did not minimally impair the student's rights as there are ways of wearing a kirpan without threatening safety in the school context. That's one example. That's how the courts worked. In another example no discrimination was found by the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal when a complainant was prevented from travelling on an airplane with a kirpan that was considered dangerous to the public. So there are examples here of give-and-take in the system. I think we should be aware of that when we're discussing the Education Act and this amendment.

Now, this is another rather interesting example, Mr. Chairman. It has been held that provisions in a will that provided for establishment of bursaries for students who were practising Roman Catholics did not violate human rights legislation or public policy. The Court of Appeal in Ontario reached a different result when they found that a trust established to provide for education of persons of white Christian Protestant and of British heritage violated public policy.

As you can see, when we have a look at discrimination in human rights and some of the case examples, there certainly are decisions made, and the decisions that have been made have been, in my view, wise and respectful of not only the individuals but the laws that we currently have. I guess what I'm saying is that I think we should have confidence in the courts, that we should have confidence that the courts will be flexible in adjudicating cases, and for that reason I really don't think that the amendment as proposed here is necessary at this time, nor is it needed.

Whenever you go through this bill, there are sections that certainly, in my view, would satisfy the concerns of a number of different groups. Certainly, as we work forward into this legislation or we go beyond the preamble, I will listen with great interest to the Minister of Education and others who may or may not want to comment on section 58, which is centring around religious and patriotic instruction or exercises and what a school board can do.

Now, with that, there is a definition of board in here that, in my view, does not include private schools. We do know that there is a lot of money going into private schools. We do know that the budget is going up. I believe the last time I looked, it was in excess of $170 million, and that's what we need to have a look at.

Hopefully, Mr. Chairman, we will have more time during Committee of the Whole to discuss the role of private schools which are funded by the taxpayers within the entire school system in this province.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on subamendment SA1.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I think I originally put myself on the list to rebut something that was about an hour and a half ago, so I've sort of lost my train of thought, but I did make a couple of notes. Oh, yes, I know what it was. It was: who gets to make the decisions?

Mr. Hinman: That wasn't an hour and a half ago.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, it was. That was.

A couple of points I want to raise about this subamendment, for starters the word "paramount" or "paramountcy." This is from Random House. I'm sorry that it's an American dictionary, but that's okay. Let's pretend it's all right. If you look at the word "paramount," it says: chief in importance or rank; chief; number one; top; foremost; primary. You can't have two number ones. You can't have two chiefs, two primaries, two top-of-the-totem-poles. It's not possible. We already have one paramountcy in here, and that is: "Whereas the educational best interest of the child is the paramount consideration in making decisions about a child's education." I'm pretty sure this amendment is not striking that out. No, it's not. You can't have two paramount clauses.

5:20

One, I would argue that this amendment is – I guess I can't say out of order because Parliamentary Counsel said that it was in order, and I would never argue with Parliamentary Counsel ever, at least not on the record. I think that's part of the argument here. The question that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere was making is: where does the buck stop? Who gets to make the final decision?

I think what we've been wrestling with all afternoon here is that in your home with your child, outside of exact educational time, a parent does, obviously. Maybe it's not obvious, considering how long we've been talking about this. But I would argue that as a citizen in this province, as an employer, as a legislator, when it comes to public education, on behalf of citizens we legislators make the policy that gives forth those decisions.

In other words, I would say that when it comes to public education, the citizenry as a group makes the decision about what's in the best interest of the child so that we have a consistent standard. When a 25-year-old goes to apply for a job and says, "I was educated in Alberta," you say: "Okay. Then I will believe that you know math 30 or its equivalent, science 30 and its equivalent, social studies, English, whatever. I think I know as an employer generally what kids in Alberta are taught, and I will believe that you know that."

That's what I expect as the product, a consistency there. You know, don't misinterpret me there, that I'm somehow degrading people or something when I talk about product. You guys know what I mean here. There has to be a consistency of the outcome of what we're trying for, and to allow it to be up to every individual parent as to what they determine is the final educational outcome of their child is not a consistency here. It flows against the idea of a general public education.

My concern about this entire discussion and, to a large extent, this bill and particularly the government's amendment A1 is that it is moving us away from the tenets of a public education. The reason that I kept bringing up and walking everybody through what a freedom is, what a right is, what a protection is, what we must provide as education, and what an accommodation is is because I think we should not be putting the accommodation of home-schooling and private schooling and charter schooling, if it is outside of the public system, on the same footing as those public educations which are guaranteed in the Constitution and the Charter. They are accommodations, and I do not think they should be on the same footing.

As I said, I understand that there are sometimes good reasons for home-schooling a child, but I think that should be the exception, not the rule. I disagree with the government bending over backwards to offer – here we go with the air quotes – choice to parents around education. I expect children will go to school and get the same education. What is wrong with our public education that we the government – my own government, my hon. colleagues opposite me – feel that we have to give everybody an out, that we have to allow anybody that wants to do it differently to do it differently? Why aren't we defending public education? That's what we're here to do.

I don't understand. You have not given me a good argument, Mr. Minister, as to why we should be opening the door to everybody that wants to do a different education and gathering it and funding it under that chapter heading of public education. It's not. Private education is not public education. It should not receive one dime of public funding, in my opinion. A private school is a private school is a private school. No public funding.

I can see the reason for home-schooling, but I believe it should fall exactly under public schooling. You know, it must produce exactly the same outcome. If they want to do it over a 12-hour period instead of a six-hour period, fine and dandy, but the outcome should be the same. If there's a reason for doing that, okay; then don't put your kid in public school. But I expect the same result out of it.

I have failed to hear a compelling reason from any of the home-schoolers or from the government as to why we would put them on the same footing as public education. It's not. Unless they can meet that same test, then, no. That is the way I put it. Now, obviously, I'm going to be willing to make that consideration, but I'm not going to put them on the same footing. Definitely not private schooling. It should not be considered in what we're doing here. It's not public education. It should not be funded that way.

Charter schools, as I said, should be under the public school system, or they're not counted in either. What I see are constant exceptions, constant opting out. I mean, we still have section 11.1 under the Human Rights Act, which allows parents to opt out of everything. Why? It's public education. We have designed this to be the best possible education we can offer in this the richest of all possible provinces, so why are we allowing everyone to opt out? Do we really believe in our public education system so little that we have to allow anybody that wants to get out to get out? I just don't think our system should be degraded that way.

I think the more we do this, the more we end up with the Swiss-cheese system. The more people you allow to opt out, eventually, like with public health care, if you allow enough people to go out into the private system, now you only have the people in the public system who need very specific care and often more expensive care. I don't want to see that happen to my public education system in my province. I don't think that's what we're here to do as educators, to allow that system to degrade, to be Swiss cheese, to have holes constantly poked in it as we allow this group out and that group out and this group out. Why? Why are they allowed to be getting out? Why are we allowing them choice? What's wrong with the system we have? Why can't we support that system? I think it diminishes the whole. So, no, I won't support this.

One last thing. You know, there have been some digs taken at bureaucrats here. For the most part, I think people that work in the education system, that work in the ministry here, that help us develop policy and give us advice on it, and the people that administer that policy by working for the school boards, by being elected officials on those school boards, by interpreting that again, and by being teachers in the classroom deserve some respect. They work hard for our children. They are doing their best for our children. I'm tired of people taking digs at them as though somehow they're sitting in a backroom trying to create the worst possible scenario for our children.

They're working hard for us. I mean, honestly, do you really believe that somebody that's hiring in the Department of Education goes: "Gee, how much do you hate this system? You really hate it? Good. I'm going to hire you so you can screw up every kid that comes through our system?" That's not true. They're working very hard to produce the best possible system. Why aren't we believing them? Have they really produced such terrible outcomes? Do we really have that many children that are out on the street right now that are terribly educated? Really? That's just not true.

Most of our kids do very well in public school, like, 99 per cent. They go out there, and they do us proud. Many of them go into the trades. They go to college. They get diplomas and certificates. They go on to university. They become citizens of our province and do very well for us.

5:30

Get some backbone, folks. Protect that public system, that has served us so well for so long, and quit allowing this very good public system to be opted out of by anyone who wants to get out. Defend the system that we have and insist that people adhere to it.

I'll climb down from that high horse. Sorry about that. But, honestly, I just think there's something wrong with what I'm hearing this afternoon, and that is a lack of respect and support for a public school system. I think that's what's important.

I'm going to be coming back on you, Mr. Minister, because I think you have caved in a number of other places in this act in which you should be upholding a public system. You can look forward to that. I know you're thrilled.

Just to bring this to a close, I can't support subamendment SA1, and further to that . . . [interjection] Yup. Yeah, that doesn't mean you're right, by the way. It just means you're wrong on both accounts. Let's get that clear.

I'm going to come back tonight, Mr. Chair. I thought I wouldn't, but I'm going to come back tonight because I want an opportunity to be able to speak on the main amendment again once we vote subamendment SA1 out.

I hope that's clarified what my position is just so that I'm not misunderstood. Okay. Leave it at that, Laurie. Sit down.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. This is a good debate, a good discussion. Or maybe not. Maybe it's not a good discussion. It depends, I guess, on who you ask.

It's too bad that it has to get personal, but the rhetoric that this Education minister, who is supposed to be looking after our kids, sometimes uses is just incredible. The games that are played. You know, he talked earlier about this amendment, that we somehow didn't give him amendments. In reality, Mr. Chair – and I'd be willing to table this – we gave our amendments to this minister two weeks ago, after studying Bill 2 and getting feedback from stakeholders and so forth. We wanted to make an effort to send those amendments to him through his staff so that he could see them. Actually, his staff asked us: what are your plans on the amendments? Two weeks ago we gave him those amendments, so what he said earlier was patently untrue. It's just brutal.

He also talked about that nothing had changed from Bill 2. He was just on an online forum saying that I hadn't read Bill 2 in over a year. Bill 2, of course, wasn't introduced until this year. Bill 18 was tabled last year, and we had an opportunity to look at it. Of course, it has changed, including, he might want to note, the preamble that we're talking about today. The preamble has changed. For example, you added the word "informed." Where parents have the right to make decisions regarding their children's education, you put "informed" before decisions, which changes the meaning. So you did change it, and we looked at it, and we got feedback on it.

What it shows to me is the disdain that this minister and others in the government have for this process here. I look at this process in a perfect world as an opportunity to amend these bills, to make them better, to give the opposition and government members, including noncabinet members, an opportunity to bring forth amendments, have discussion, go back and forth both in the House and out of the House, discuss how to make the bill better, and then bring it here and make amendments.

That's the Legislature that I wish existed because I think there are tons of phenomenal ideas over on that side of the House and over on this side of the House. The problem is that you've got a kind of God complex that exists with certain ministers over there, where they think: "No. I've ruled, and what I say has got to be the right way. I have done my consultation and my forums, and that is good enough."

You know what? The problem is that you didn't consult the people of Alberta because everyone in this room represents the people of Alberta. The point of being in Committee of Whole debating these amendments is so that the people of Edmonton-Centre can have a voice in this matter and can suggest some amendments, and the people from Bonnyville-Cold Lake will have an opportunity to be represented by their member and offer amendments and comments as will the people of Calgary-West or Calgary-Greenway or Banff-Cochrane or anywhere.

Yet we don't treat it like this. We don't treat each other – certainly, the government, this minister don't treat the opposition with that respect. We're here, apparently, to play games. That's all that we want to do is to play games. Well, that's baloney. We want to improve the bill.

My first comments on this amendment were very congratulatory to the minister. They were saying: thank you for getting most of this bill right and most of the preamble right. I even complimented the idea and the thrust behind his amendment. And then he comes back with these childish little comments and makes it into a big political theatre. Well, guess what? That's not what this is about.

We're trying to introduce a very simple amendment that is going to strengthen and enshrine further the rights of parents with regard to choosing what education is right for their children. I think that's a laudable effort. Instead, all we get is yipping from the minister. I thought that when the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill stood up and gave some comments and questions and so forth that those were very fair comments, very gentlemanly, very statesmanlike. We disagreed, but that's okay. The comments from the Member for Medicine Hat: the same thing. I disagree with him, but they were gentlemanly, and he had his point of view.

I just wish for a second that the partisan hat might come off of this particular minister, who's obviously a little bit concerned about the polling numbers and the fact that, you know, he may not have his position very much longer if he continues to be so chippy and arrogant. That, I think, is what his real worry is. Hopefully, we can get back to having a discussion, a gentlemanly discussion, on this bill.

Back to the bill. I thought the comments were very interesting from the Member for Edmonton-Centre. I certainly did not agree with them, but I can see a little bit more of where she's coming from, and I respect that opinion. I don't think that supporting school choice or the rights of parents is mutually exclusive or contradictory with or is saying that there's something wrong with our public schools. I don't see it that way. In fact, I think that school choice is a great strength to our public schools. I think it has made them better. I think the competition that has existed because of school choice within a publicly funded education system has really strengthened our public schools to the point where parents like me are completely confident in my current public school, which is why I choose to send my children there.

However, if you took that competition away, if you made it a monopoly on education, I think what would happen is that we would slide back into some of what you see in other jurisdictions around the world and particularly in Canada, where their education results aren't as good in their public system. I think that a classic example of this, in my view, is that the Edmonton public system is one of the best systems in the world. It has an incredible number of choices in it. There are faith-based schools within the public education system. It's fantastic that they've been able to find that balance because it's a tricky one, and it takes a lot of work and a lot of, you know, mistakes being made, and then you've got to go back and make sure you're okay and the parents are okay and everyone is feeling included and everything else. I think that's fantastic.

5:40

I think that the reason the Edmonton public system is so world renowned is because of the strength that it has derived from having to compete with other systems in this province to show parents and to prove to parents that it is the best place for their kids to be educated.

I know that in Rocky View school division I've had this debate with my trustees. They used to be my principal and vice-principal, at the same time, if you can believe that, when I was in school. They're now the trustees that I work with as MLA for that area. They would disagree with me on the aspects of the need for competition in the system, but I always tell them: "Look at Rocky View schools. Look at the reading program in Nose Creek, for example." Well, that program was derived from several charter schools in Calgary that do it.

It's having these little units of competition, these little innovative kind of petri dishes out there, that allows innovative ideas, education ideas, different pedagogies, different ways of educating children. Allowing that to occur has greatly benefited Rocky View school division. In fact, Rocky View school division just this last year put together in one of their schools a very, very innovative pedagogy where they essentially had four main themes. One was more sports-based. One was more science-based. I think space was another one. Nature and environment was another one. They would use these overall themes, and the parents would choose which kind of theme the Alberta curriculum would be taught through. It was an interest of a child. So when they learned physics, for example – that's a bad example because you don't learn physics then.

Pardon me?

Ms Blakeman: But we should. It's much more equal.

Mr. Anderson: Well, there you go.

Math, for example. A math problem about, you know, calculating how much distance someone covered in a certain amount of time. If you went through the sports model or theme, you would learn how fast the hockey player is when skating from the blue line to the blue line if it's this distance at this speed. All this sort of thing.

They would use that whereas someone who was in the kind of a nature and environment track would say: "This is the distance between two mountains. If there's a horse going through it at this speed, how long would it take? What would be the incline?" And so forth. It's very interesting.

At first people were kind of like: whoa; what are they doing? But there are a lot of parents that were very, very happy with it. My kids aren't in that school; they're not old enough yet. It's a middle school. Anyway, I thought it was very, very innovative.

There was a problem with that because our schools are so overcrowded in Airdrie. Of course, you get first dibs if you live within the jurisdiction that's assigned. Some parents who were concerned with that and wanted to move to a different public school were a little bit upset about that, but that's a different problem. That's a problem of lack of school space rather than the innovation that was being shown there.

Anyway, that's certainly something that, in my view, I don't think we would have gotten if we didn't have the influence of charter schools because essentially that's what charter schools do. They are public schools as well, publicly funded, and it's first-come, first-served, and there's no tuition, so they're more like public schools than a private school. But they focus on something, whether it's music or new languages or whatever it is, that allows the child to kind of have a little bit of a different pedagogy or curriculum focus and so forth. I think it's very good, and I think that's why you see such innovation going on in our public system.

I hope that that clarifies at least where my viewpoint is coming from on this with regard to why school choice and parental choice actually are strengths to the public school and not detriments to it.

Now, why should we put this at the top of the preamble? Getting back to it, the hon. member made a very good point, I thought, when she said that the educational best interest of the child is the paramount consideration when making decisions about a child's education. Then she noted that it's kind of hard if you have two paramountcy clauses in the same one. I thought that was a very good point, actually.

Ms Blakeman: You'd just like to switch those.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. Let's switch them out. No, no, no. What I think would be good, actually – and perhaps we can talk about this over dinner; well, maybe not; I'm sure you have dinner plans, hon. member, but maybe we can all talk about it as a group here this evening – is that perhaps we can define what "best interests of the child" means and when the parent's paramountcy ends.

You know, it would be interesting to say, "Look, parents have the right to make these determinations until they infringe upon the rights of the child or hurt their legal rights or take away their legal rights" or whatever the wording is. I think that would clarify it and say, "Look, parents actually are the ones that have the paramount right to determine what the best interest of the child is until they lose that right through abusing it, through breaking the law, by taking away their child's right or not respecting their child's right" or whatever. That would be a very interesting conversation, and then we could come back to that. In that way, they wouldn't be mutually exclusive.

You could say that, yeah, the paramount right – I agree with the hon. member that it should always be in the best interest of the child. Of course, in the courts we use that, best interest of the child. That should be the paramount consideration, not the paramount right but the paramount consideration, in making decisions about a child's education, and then maybe go on to say that it is the parents that have the paramount right to determine what that best interest is with regard to education until they've given that right up through harming the rights of the child and so forth under law. Anyway, something like that might be a very honourable and worthy thing to have in here to improve the wording of this bill.

Again, this is good debate. I would like to see some additional subamendments, for sure, on the preamble because I think I'd like to get the preamble right. I mean, we always just assume that the preamble is right. How many times have we just kind of all said: "On the title of the bill, are you agreed?" "Agreed." "On the preamble of the bill, are you agreed?" "Agreed." Well, I don't agree with the preamble here, and I think that we need to change it. I don't think that it adequately reflects, even with the amendment from the Education minister, the paramount right that parents have to determine the education that is best for their children.

I think that it would be a very interesting exercise in democracy, Mr. Chair, if we would as an Assembly come together and actually find something that works for more than just the governing party, perhaps have some kind of compromise that takes into account some of the things that some of the members of the Liberal or the NDP caucuses have said because I think that there might be some commonalities, at least on the best interests of the child. In my view, I haven't heard anything from the Member for Edmonton-Centre or the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that would disagree with the fact that parents are the ones that are in the best position to determine what the best interest of the child is unless they hurt that interest of the child, unless they take away the rights of the child in question.

I'd be interested and very curious to hear some more debate on this issue if you think that you have anything to say, hon. member. But you have to promise to be nice – okay? – because we're getting back to gentlemanliness here and are actually having a good discussion and not sinking, you know, as mum says, to fighting the pigs in the mud, right? Okay.

Thank you.

5:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere has made numerous points, and I certainly hope that the Minister of Education is listening intently, no different than we expect of our children when they're in school, to listen intently in terms of what we refer to as teachable moments.

I do believe on this important issue that I support faith-based schooling. I support the absolute, paramount right of a parent to raise their children and educate their children in no matter what way, be it through home-schooling like parents that do home-schooling, be it through charter schools, through public, Catholic, separate schools. Faith-based schools are so important as well.

I think that this subamendment that the member on behalf of the Wildrose caucus has put forward is an important one because it comes down to the foundation of our society. We all recognize the importance of the role of a parent in terms of determining, you know, how they bring up their children, and teaching is an important part of that.

As I mentioned earlier, I'm very proud to say that at one point in my life I had been trained in school to be a teacher, as has my wife, who has been a teacher for many, many years. In fact, that's where I met my wife, in an academic institution called Keyano College, that does a very good job. In our schools I also must admit how much I enjoyed it when I used to substitute teach as well. In terms of the important role that teachers play, I thank all teachers who play a role in educating. But at the same time the almost paramount role that a parent plays – I come from a family where my father was a teacher and then went on to be a vice-principal and a high school principal for many, many years. I'm proud to say that my father was well respected in the role that he does, just like so many teachers and parents that do an excellent job in educating their children.

This is really the foundation of our society, the idea that we have the right to be able to stand up here in this Assembly and say: I support faith-based schooling. I support the paramount right of a parent to raise their children, to educate their children, to ensure that the child gets the fullness of life by so many people in terms of whom they will encounter in their lifetime. But they also will learn the independence. It's like letting the birds go free from the nest. Ultimately, I know all parents believe that they have an important role in feeding the bird in that nest and having teachable moments so that as they go out into society, they go out into society well prepared.

I say that as a parent. You know, my wife and I were late starting our family, and someone said that, oh, well, I'm just a slow politician. But I will say that being 51 years old with our son Marc, who will be just entering kindergarten next year, I often talk about the importance of the role of a parent, but that is not in any way, shape, or form about the importance of so many other factors that influence our children.

I want to say that I don't know how many members of the Assembly are up at 6:30 or 5:30 in the morning, perhaps at my age, you know, up watching Treehouse. Be it parents or grandparents, watching that is something. In fact, it was kind of interesting. I made the comment, Mr. Chair, that someone said: you know, Guy, you watch Treehouse in the morning, and then you come to the Legislature and see Treehouse in the afternoon. The only difference, though, is that I'd say that my four-year-old has been giving better answers.

But in the spirit of collegiality here, I will say that it is truly – I believe it to be – a foundation of our society to be able to have that right to choose as a parent what is best for your child. I am convinced that every member of the Assembly that is in here today, I hope, does not disagree with that tenet relative to what is so important.

Mr. Chair, I want to say that I support faith-based schooling. I support schooling in the public sector, which I had the honour of being a teacher in. I support the educational systems that are in place, having attended a Catholic university, St. Francis Xavier University in Nova Scotia, which I'm proud to say was in fact considered to be the best undergraduate school by Maclean's magazine six years in a row. So important are home-schooling, charter schools, francophone schools, and our public and Catholic and separate schools as well as, of course, faith-based schooling.

It's so important. That's why I stand here today to indicate that I support the subamendment that's put forward by my Wildrose caucus member, the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, because clearly I believe he is on the right track.

I want to say that in raising our children, clearly, all of us bring a wealth of training, be it from the lives that we have come from prior to entering this Assembly, no matter what profession that is. I know that every profession, no matter if you're a teacher or not, brings that wisdom of our society. The experiences that parents bring to their children I believe are equally important, and that's why it should be a paramount right of a parent to be able to raise their children. That is in both a moral and a spiritual way, which I believe are equally important, and at the same time ensuring that we follow the laws of this great country of ours and follow the laws of this great province of ours or the municipality where we live, you know, another building block of teaching our children.

There are many, many moments that we may use, but I do believe that this subamendment will reassure parents. This subamendment will reassure Albertans and will reassure Canadians of the fundamental right of being able as a parent to raise your children and the fundamental right of faith-based schooling and the fundamental right of making a choice between home-schooling or public school or Catholic school or separate school or charter school or francophone school. No matter what type of schooling it is, the fundamental right of a parent to be able to do that is really what this subamendment is all about. I would hope and pray that that is what everyone in here wants to achieve.

With that, we want to respect all Canadians, all Albertans in coming forward with this subamendment, and I think this really does do that. I really think that it's a teachable moment for the Minister of Education and his government. It's a teachable moment for him to actually listen intently to what the purpose of this subamendment is and take it not because it's coming from the Wildrose and the opposition party but because it's coming from a parent that cares deeply, no differently, I'm sure, than the Minister of Education cares deeply about the children of Alberta and his own children. That is so important, and that's very admirable.

That being said, Mr. Chair, I truly do believe that as we move forward with the Education Act, some of the positive things, feedback I've received from teachers – I have received a considerable amount of feedback. I especially want to thank Pastor Glen, who, in my view, provided me with some incredible insight into the importance of faith-based schooling. I thank him publicly here for his comments and support.

I find it so interesting that as we go forward, we want to make sure we don't rush into a decision, that we actually make the right decision for our children and our grandchildren. I know many people in here have grandchildren, and as much as I may be watching Treehouse at 5:30 or 6 o'clock in the morning, like the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere as well – I know the member from Calgary clearly does that – in fact, I will say that speaking to grandparents has provided such . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but it's 6 o'clock. The committee is in recess until 7:30.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Table of Contents

Prayers	503
Introduction of Guests	503, 518
Members' Statements
Hockey Alberta/Red Deer College Partnership	503
Integrity in Government	504
Retrospective by the Member for Calgary-Hays	504
Alberta's Representative in Asia	504
Seniors' Benefit Programs	505
Library Services	505
Oral Question Period
Long-term Care for Seniors	505, 508
Alberta First Nations Energy Centre	506
Electricity Prices	506, 512
Alberta's Representative in Asia	507, 512
Private Operation of Long-term Care Facilities	507
Patient Advocacy by Health Professionals	508
Residential Rehabilitation Assistance	509
Farmers' Advocate of Alberta	509
Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped	510
Foreign Delegations	510
Environmental Monitoring of the Oil Sands	510
Provincial Tax Policy	511
Municipal Emergency Management	511
New School Construction in Calgary	512
Bear Management	513
Introduction of Bills
Bill 7 Appropriation Act, 2012	513
Bill 210 Early Childhood Learning and Child Care Act	513
Tabling Returns and Reports	514
Statement by the Speaker
Private Members' Public Bills	514
Orders of the Day	514
Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole
Bill 2 Education Act	515, 519

If your address is incorrect, please clip on the dotted line, make any changes, and return to the address listed below. To facilitate the update, please attach the last mailing label along with your account number.

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 Street
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4

.....

Last mailing label:

Account # _____

New information:

Name:

Address:

.....

Subscription information:

Annual subscriptions to the paper copy of Alberta Hansard (including annual index) are $127.50 including GST if mailed once a week or $94.92 including GST if picked up at the subscription address below or if mailed through the provincial government interdepartmental mail system. Bound volumes are $121.70 including GST if mailed. Cheques should be made payable to the Minister of Finance.

Price per issue is $0.75 including GST.

Online access to Alberta Hansard is available through the Internet at www.assembly.ab.ca

Subscription inquiries:

Subscriptions
Legislative Assembly Office
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1302

Other inquiries:

Managing Editor
Alberta Hansard
1001 Legislature Annex
9718 – 107 St.
EDMONTON, AB T5K 1E4
Telephone: 780.427.1875

Province of Alberta

The 27th Legislature
Fifth Session

Alberta Hansard

Wednesday evening, March 14, 2012

Issue 18e

The Honourable Kenneth R. Kowalski, Speaker

Legislative Assembly of Alberta
The 27th Legislature

Fifth Session

Kowalski, Hon. Ken, Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, Speaker
Cao, Wayne C.N., Calgary-Fort, Deputy Speaker and Chair of Committees
Zwozdesky, Gene, Edmonton-Mill Creek, Deputy Chair of Committees

Ady, Cindy, Calgary-Shaw (PC)
Allred, Ken, St. Albert (PC)
Amery, Moe, Calgary-East (PC)
Anderson, Rob, Airdrie-Chestermere (W),
Wildrose Opposition House Leader
Benito, Carl, Edmonton-Mill Woods (PC)
Berger, Hon. Evan, Livingstone-Macleod (PC)
Bhardwaj, Naresh, Edmonton-Ellerslie (PC)
Bhullar, Hon. Manmeet Singh, Calgary-Montrose (PC)
Blackett, Lindsay, Calgary-North West (PC)
Blakeman, Laurie, Edmonton-Centre (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Leader,
Official Opposition House Leader
Boutilier, Guy C., Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo (W)
Brown, Dr. Neil, QC, Calgary-Nose Hill (PC)
Calahasen, Pearl, Lesser Slave Lake (PC)
Campbell, Robin, West Yellowhead (PC),
Government Whip
Chase, Harry B., Calgary-Varsity (AL)
Dallas, Hon. Cal, Red Deer-South (PC)
Danyluk, Hon. Ray, Lac La Biche-St. Paul (PC)
DeLong, Alana, Calgary-Bow (PC)
Denis, Hon. Jonathan, QC, Calgary-Egmont (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Doerksen, Arno, Strathmore-Brooks (PC)
Drysedale, Wayne, Grande Prairie-Wapiti (PC),
Deputy Government Whip
Elniski, Doug, Edmonton-Calder (PC)
Evans, Iris, Sherwood Park (PC)
Fawcett, Kyle, Calgary-North Hill (PC)
Forsyth, Heather, Calgary-Fish Creek (W),
Wildrose Opposition Whip
Fritz, Yvonne, Calgary-Cross (PC)
Goudreau, Hector G., Dunvegan-Central Peace (PC)
Griffiths, Hon. Doug, Battle River-Wainwright (PC)
Groeneveld, George, Highwood (PC)
Hancock, Hon. Dave, QC, Edmonton-Whitemud (PC),
Government House Leader
Hayden, Hon. Jack, Drumheller-Stettler (PC)
Hehr, Kent, Calgary-Buffalo (AL)
Hinman, Paul, Calgary-Glenmore (W),
Wildrose Opposition Deputy Leader
Horne, Hon. Fred, Edmonton-Rutherford (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Horner, Hon. Doug, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert (PC)
Jablonski, Mary Anne, Red Deer-North (PC)
Jacobs, Broyce, Cardston-Taber-Warner (PC)
Johnson, Hon. Jeff, Athabasca-Redwater (PC)
Johnston, Art, Calgary-Hays (PC)

Kang, Darshan S., Calgary-McCall (AL),
Official Opposition Whip
Klimchuk, Hon. Heather, Edmonton-Glenora (PC)
Knight, Mel, Grande Prairie-Smoky (PC)
Leskiw, Genia, Bonnyville-Cold Lake (PC)
Liepert, Hon. Ron, Calgary-West (PC)
Lindsay, Fred, Stony Plain (PC)
Lukaszuk, Hon. Thomas A., Edmonton-Castle Downs (PC)
Lund, Ty, Rocky Mountain House (PC)
MacDonald, Hugh, Edmonton-Gold Bar (AL)
Marz, Richard, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills (PC)
Mason, Brian, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood (ND),
Leader of the ND Opposition
McFarland, Barry, Little Bow (PC)
McQueen, Hon. Diana, Drayton Valley-Calmar (PC)
Mitzel, Len, Cypress-Medicine Hat (PC)
Morton, Hon. F.L., Foothills-Rocky View (PC)
Notley, Rachel, Edmonton-Strathcona (ND),
ND Opposition House Leader
Oberle, Hon. Frank, Peace River (PC)
Olson, Hon. Verlyn, QC, Wetaskiwin-Camrose (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Ouellette, Luke, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake (PC)
Pastoor, Bridget Brennan, Lethbridge-East (PC)
Prins, Ray, Lacombe-Ponoka (PC)
Quest, Dave, Strathcona (PC)
Redford, Hon. Alison M., QC, Calgary-Elbow (PC),
Premier
Renner, Rob, Medicine Hat (PC)
Rodney, Dave, Calgary-Lougheed (PC)
Rogers, George, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon (PC)
Sandhu, Peter, Edmonton-Manning (PC)
Sarich, Janice, Edmonton-Decore (PC)
Sherman, Dr. Raj, Edmonton-Meadowlark (AL),
Leader of the Official Opposition
Snelgrove, Lloyd, Vermilion-Lloydminster (Ind)
Stelmach, Ed, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville (PC)
Swann, Dr. David, Calgary-Mountain View (AL)
Taft, Dr. Kevin, Edmonton-Riverview (AL),
Official Opposition Deputy Whip
Tarchuk, Janis, Banff-Cochrane (PC)
Taylor, Dave, Calgary-Currie (AB)
VanderBurg, Hon. George, Whitecourt-Ste. Anne (PC)
Vandermeer, Tony, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview (PC)
Weadick, Hon. Greg, Lethbridge-West (PC),
Deputy Government House Leader
Webber, Len, Calgary-Foothills (PC)
Woo-Paw, Teresa, Calgary-Mackay (PC)
Xiao, David H., Edmonton-McClung (PC)

Party standings:

Progressive Conservative: 67 Alberta Liberal: 8 Wildrose: 4 New Democrat: 2 Alberta: 1 Independent: 1

Officers and Officials of the Legislative Assembly

W.J. David McNeil, Clerk	Stephanie LeBlanc, Parliamentary Counsel & Legal Research Officer	Chris Caughell, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Robert H. Reynolds, QC, Law Clerk/ Director of Interparliamentary Relations	Philip Massolin, Committee Research Co-ordinator	Gordon H. Munk, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms
Shannon Dean, Senior Parliamentary Counsel/Director of House Services	Brian G. Hodgson, Sergeant-at-Arms	Liz Sim, Managing Editor of Alberta Hansard

Executive Council

Alison Redford	Premier, President of Executive Council, Chair of Agenda and Priorities Committee
Doug Horner	Deputy Premier, President of Treasury Board and Enterprise
Dave Hancock	Minister of Human Services
Ted Morton	Minister of Energy
Verlyn Olson	Minister of Justice and Attorney General
Fred Horne	Minister of Health and Wellness
Ron Liepert	Minister of Finance
Thomas Lukaszuk	Minister of Education, Political Minister for Edmonton
Diana McQueen	Minister of Environment and Water
Jonathan Denis	Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security
Cal Dallas	Minister of Intergovernmental, International and Aboriginal Relations, Political Minister for Central Alberta
Evan Berger	Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Political Minister for Southern Alberta
Frank Oberle	Minister of Sustainable Resource Development
George VanderBurg	Minister of Seniors
Ray Danyluk	Minister of Transportation
Jeff Johnson	Minister of Infrastructure, Political Minister for Northern Alberta
Doug Griffiths	Minister of Municipal Affairs
Greg Weadick	Minister of Advanced Education and Technology
Jack Hayden	Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation
Heather Klimchuk	Minister of Culture and Community Services
Manmeet Singh Bhullar	Minister of Service Alberta, Political Minister for Calgary

Parliamentary Assistants

Naresh Bhardwaj	Health and Wellness
Alana DeLong	Seniors
Arno Doerksen	Human Services
Kyle Fawcett	Treasury Board and Enterprise
Art Johnston	Executive Council
Barry McFarland	Agriculture and Rural Development
Len Mitzel	Transportation
Dave Rodney	Health and Wellness
David Xiao	Energy

STANDING AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ALBERTA

Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Chair: Ms Tarchuk
Deputy Chair: Mr. Elniski

Anderson
DeLong
Groeneveld
Johnston
MacDonald
Quest
Taft

Standing Committee on Community Development

Chair: Mrs. Jablonski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Chase

Amery
Blakeman
Boutilier
Calahasen
Goudreau
Groeneveld
Lindsay
Snelgrove
Taylor
Vandermeer

Standing Committee on Education

Chair: Ms Pastoor
Deputy Chair: Mr. Hehr

Anderson
Benito
Brown
Cao
Chase
Leskiw
Marz
Notley
Sarich
Tarchuk

Standing Committee on Energy

Chair: Mrs. Ady
Deputy Chair: Ms Blakeman

Hehr
Hinman
Jacobs
Johnston
Lund
Mason
McFarland
Ouellette
Webber
Xiao

Standing Committee on Finance

Chair: Mr. Renner
Deputy Chair: Mr. Kang

Allred
Anderson
Drysdale
Fawcett
Knight
Mitzel
Prins
Sandhu
Taft
Taylor

Standing Committee on Legislative Offices

Chair: Mr. Blackett
Deputy Chair: Mr. Lund

Blakeman
Brown
Evans
Hinman
Lindsay
MacDonald
Marz
Notley
Ouellette
Quest

Special Standing Committee on Members' Services

Chair: Mr. Kowalski
Deputy Chair: Mr. Campbell

Amery
Anderson
Elniski
Evans
Hehr
Knight
Leskiw
MacDonald
Mason
Rogers

Standing Committee on Private Bills

Chair: Dr. Brown
Deputy Chair: Ms Woo-Paw

Allred	Kang
Benito	Knight
Boutilier	Lindsay
Calahasen	McFarland
Doerksen	Sandhu
Drysdale	Sarich
Evans	Snelgrove
Groeneveld	Swann
Hinman	Xiao
Jacobs

Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing

Chair: Mr. Prins
Deputy Chair: Mr. Snelgrove

Amery	Mitzel
Boutilier	Notley
Calahasen	Pastoor
DeLong	Quest
Doerksen	Stelmach
Forsyth	Swann
Jacobs	Tarchuk
Knight	Taylor
Leskiw	Zwozdesky
McFarland

Standing Committee on Public Accounts

Chair: Mr. MacDonald
Deputy Chair: Mr. Goudreau

Allred	Kang
Benito	Mason
Calahasen	Rodney
Chase	Sandhu
Elniski	Vandermeer
Fawcett	Woo-Paw
Forsyth	Xiao
Groeneveld

Standing Committee on Public Health and Safety

Chair: Mrs. Fritz
Deputy Chair: Dr. Taft

Bhardwaj
Blakett
DeLong
Doerksen
Forsyth
Notley
Rodney
Rogers
Swann
Woo-Paw

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:31 p.m.

Wednesday, March 14, 2012

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, the chair shall call the committee to order.

Bill 2 Education Act

The Chair: We'll resume the debate on subamendment SA1 on Bill 2. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity to speak on amendment A1. What amendment A1 does is that it legitimizes the illegitimate. The worst piece of legislation that I have come across in my eight years in this Assembly was Bill 44. Bill 44 in one sense attempted to recognize the equality of GLBT community members while at the same time not allowing students of those persuasions to have a voice in a public school setting.

I have no trouble, Mr. Chairman, with religious schools. I indicated my support, being a public school teacher for 34 years, which includes the separate school system. I support the fact that the separate school system brings religion into every aspect of their school experience. They have the Charter right, as does the francophone school, to have that support.

But when we start fragmenting the public education system by putting out 70 per cent of our per-pupil grants to a series of small religious schools that restrict entry into their systems based on religion, based on special needs, based on grades, then I don't see how we could possibly pay for and support those systems.

What this amendment A1 does is that despite the Education minister's discussion of bullying, it completely facilitates the bullying process. Children in a public school are not allowed to have any spontaneous discussion on matters of religion, matters of sex education, or on sexual orientation. Any spontaneity, any opportunity to discuss these matters could very well land a teacher before the human rights tribunal, and it puts a horrid cloak or cap on spontaneous discussions.

When I taught grade 7 social studies, I talked about world religions. I talked about the membership in those world religions, and I talked about some of the basic principles of those world religions. I didn't push a particular religious affiliation onto my students. I talked about it in generic terms, and I provided information. What amendment A1 does is that it prevents such discussions.

So while Bill 44, which amendment A1 is attempting to legitimize as part of the School Act . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I heard you say A1. We are talking about subamendment SA1.

Mr. Chase: Subamendment SA1. Okay. Thank you. I'm sorry for my mistake in not saying subamendment SA1.

What happens with subamendment A1, which is basically an offshoot of A1, is that it overrides individuals' rights. I have no problem, Mr. Chair, with parents choosing to home-school, and if they home-school on religious principles they believe in, they have the right to do that. I don't have a problem with that. But where I have a problem is when children come loaded with baggage into a public school system and then basically hold their class and their teachers hostage from any discussion that involves sexual orientation, reproduction, whether it be human reproduction or evolution in general, or protection for individuals of the GLBT choice.

Our public schools are there for everyone. They've been established for over a hundred years in this great province. When we start ghettoizing or segregating our education system into little packages, then the fabric of our public education system is undermined and destroyed.

What I see in both A1 and subamendment A1 is an undermining. When I spoke of Bill 44 and the damage it did, and the subamendment A1 relates to it, I spoke about the fact that at the time – I think it was 2010 or 2009 Alberta, but now we are in 2012 Alberta. We're not in 1925 Tennessee. This isn't the Scopes monkey trial. Forget the Planet of the Apes, Mr. Chair. We've got the province of the apes. We have people putting their apish, bully behaviour into our public school system and saying that if a topic such as transgender should arise in a classroom, we all have to put our hands over our ears, our eyes, and our mouths and run in horror into the hallway for fear of being brought before a human rights trial circumstance.

Mr. Chair, when our right of free speech is compromised, when politically correct becomes religiously correct according to a potentially fundamentalist viewpoint, then any open discussion is gone.

I am not a regular attendee within the four walls of a particular church, but when I went to the University of Calgary, I prepared weekly sermons for the religious group that I was affiliated with at the U of C. We didn't hang out signs, and we didn't pass around literature: come one, come all. Many of the discussions I had at the university involved Biblical discussions with members of the Campus Crusade, who felt that the only way for individuals to enter the kingdom of heaven or maybe the gates of the U of C was to be born again according to their religious principles. I have a lot of trouble when people use religion as a stick, and that's what I see happening in both amendment A1 and subamendment SA1.

7:40

Religion is a matter of choice. It's a matter of privacy. Using the Christian example, Jesus decried the Pharisees for their open display of religiosity. He talked about doing your prayers in the quiet of a circumstance such as a closet as opposed to beating people over the head with it.

Mr. Chair, I consider myself to be tolerant of all religions, and if people believe in their values and it helps them on a day-to-day basis, I don't have a problem with it. Where I draw the line is the public school system being subjected to particular persuasions. As I say, I appreciate the separate system and their charter. I appreciate the francophone system. But when discussions on science or discussions on human preferences are held hostage because teachers fear to talk about the various lifestyles of individuals – and I'm not suggesting that they promote a particular lifestyle, whether it's heterosexual or homosexual, but they should be at least allowed, if it arises in a classroom discussion, to have an open and frank discussion with their students.

When I taught elementary school, we sent home a form when we got into the plumbing of human sexuality. Parents were permitted to pull their child out of those discussions, but it was a very definite time frame and very definite planning. Parents were invited to a meeting beforehand, and we outlined the curriculum choices. I don't have any problems with that. But, Mr. Chair, if a student brought up a circumstance in my classroom with regard to what I had taught in a previous class, I didn't shy away from it. I did my best to explain it without overlaying my particular moral principles or moral stance on it.

When science gets interfered with by religious beliefs or when social studies is limited because of religious overtones or a fear that someone is going to offend or, according to Bill 2, trying to prevent bullying, when a child is bullied based on a perception of their homosexuality, then we're in deep trouble.

Mr. Chair, among the subjects I majored in were French and art. A number of students in the art courses would appear to be less likely, for example, to be on my wrestling team that I coached for 25 years. That was their personal choice. But when we start trying to suggest that one lifestyle is superior to all others and damn those literally and figuratively who don't follow those particular religious precepts, then we're turning our public education system into a fragmented, ghettoized bastardization of what the public education system is supposed to be.

If people have strong religious beliefs, then they have choices. They can choose to home-school. They can search out a school that offers the same beliefs that they hold dear. They can attend the churches of their choice. They can have their services at home or in community centres as so many churches do because they can't afford the physical structure. But religion is supposed to be the way we conduct ourselves. In the New Testament we talk about loving thy neighbour and doing good to others even though they would potentially do us harm. When people have not got past the Old Testament of an eye for an eye, a tooth for tooth, then religion in that case is promoting violence, and that violence has been the basis of the greatest loss of life over thousands of years.

In the Crusades momentarily Christians were united, and they went over to beat up the Muslims. Then when the Crusades were over, they beat each other up, calling each other various heretics. The Spanish Inquisition was probably one of the worst examples of torturing a person till they confessed and then killing them. It was particularly hard to be a Jewish individual during that time period. You know, we see, for example, in Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice the beating up of the Jewish moneylender, Shylock, and the pound of flesh.

These topics such as The Merchant of Venice and the prejudices should be open for discussion and debate within a public school system. When we start banning books and suggesting, for example, that The Catcher in the Rye is inappropriate, then that type of censorship is extremely disconcerting to a public system. We are fortunate to live in a country where the rights of freedom of assembly and freedom of speech have been fought for, and if we lose these rights due to amendments like A1 or SA1 or attempting to change the public system into something that it is not, then I am extremely concerned.

Mr. Chair, having been a public school teacher for 34 years and with my grandsons continuing on, I don't want them to be limited in their discussion. I don't want the fact that my two grandsons are involved with a Hindu religion to be held against them within a public institution.

Last Saturday I had a visit from a very friendly couple, a man and wife of the Jehovah's Witness persuasion. I said to them: "Thank you. I have my own religion. I'm a Christian Scientist. My wife is a Presbyterian." They respected my individual choice, and they went on to the next door. I respected the fact that they felt the need to talk about religion on doorsteps, and I had that discussion with them. But, Mr. Chair, when it comes into a public school system and discussions are limited based on religious principles, then we've lost our public system, and our democratic rights have been eroded.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity to speak on subamendment SA1, which attempts to repair the damage of amendment A1 but falls short.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Allred: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I guess I'm getting a little tired of the repetition coming from the other side here.

Mr. Chase: It was my first time. I apologize.

Mr. Allred: No, it wasn't from the last speaker; it's from previous to the break.

Mr. Chair, I initially had no intention to speak to Bill 2, the Education Act. However, my concern over Bill 4, the St. Albert and Sturgeon Valley School Districts Establishment Act, has drawn me into the debate on this amendment and subamendment. This amendment as well as the subamendment appear to be intended to address the concerns related to the teaching of religious values in schools.

7:50

Mr. Chair, much of my focus and debate on Bill 4 was the need to separate religion from education. The debate and many of the concerns I have received in the constituency about Bill 2 relate to the teaching of religion and religious doctrine in the schools. Upon reflection on this issue, it seems to me that the solution to this problem is staring us in the face, and that is the total separation of religion and schooling.

If we go back to our historical roots, it is clear that our learned forefathers saw the dilemma in mixing education and religion when they allowed separate schools to coexist with public schools. In allowing separate schools, they made a very clear proviso in the 1901 ordinance respecting schools when they decreed that the teaching of religion could only occur in any school, either public or separate, in the last 30 minutes of the day, and at that time those students whose parents didn't wish them to participate in the religious teaching were exempted from attending.

Mr. Chair, I'm just going to read again section 137 of the 1901 ordinance respecting schools. It states:

No religious instruction except as hereinafter provided shall be permitted in the school of any district from the opening of such school until one half hour previous to its closing in the afternoon after which time any such instruction permitted or desired by the board may be given.

It goes on to say that students that didn't want to participate or whose their parents didn't want them to participate were exempt and could go home.

It's unfortunate that we have allowed schools over the years to ignore this fundamental restriction on the mixing of the educational curriculum with religion to the extent that the religious doctrine permeates virtually every subject in some school programs. Churches and other religious institutions do a good job of teaching religion, and that is their bailiwick. Why do we usurp their rights and authority by allowing religion to be taught in the classroom?

What is the downside to removing religion from the classroom? Well, Mr. Chair, other than the obvious concerns that we are hearing at the doorsteps about the rights of students not to be taught certain religious beliefs, there is a larger problem that directly affects the teaching of a true educational curriculum. What is that? Well, every year there are more and more requests to cram more and more subjects into the educational curriculum. We no longer teach only the three Rs: reading, 'riting, and 'rithmetic.

We teach home economics. We teach shop, automotives, a multitude of foreign languages, careers, and many other great subjects that are of value to students in the future.

My pet peeve, Mr. Chairman, is the need to teach financial literacy. Financial literacy is relegated to a very small segment of one course that teaches about careers and an amalgam of other things. However, what could be more important in this day and age than the teaching of some basic fiscal criteria, a subject that is fundamental to our very existence in this money-oriented world? If there was ever a topic that could and should permeate every subject, it is the subject of finance and money.

Mr. Chair, in raising this issue, it is my thesis that if we return to our roots and relegate the teaching of religion to the 30 minutes after regular education instruction, that would free up time to teach some of these other, more relevant educational subjects. I don't mean to imply that religion is not relevant. I only mean to say that it's extra and always has been intended to be an add-on at the end of the day.

If we were to adhere to the constitutional provisions of the 1901 ordinance and the Alberta Act, we would solve a number of issues. We would have more time in the school day to teach a wide variety of other valuable subject matter. We would be satisfying those that have concerns with the teaching of religious principles in schools. In all likelihood we would eliminate the hot-button issue of human rights, and we would be complying with the constitutional principles set down by our forefathers, constitutional principles that still bind us 101 years later. As a plus, Mr. Chair, we would probably be doing the religious institutions a favour by allowing them to broaden their reach and fulfill a more complete role in society.

Mr. Chair, in conclusion, I would suggest that the obvious thing is to go back to the ordinance of 1901 and require religious education to fall at the end of the classroom day, and that would probably solve all of our problems. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: On subamendment SA1 the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. It's been an interesting discussion, and, yes, I'll kind of work backwards, being the last speaker. I think that he kind of exemplifies what the problem is and the frustration with why this very subamendment is going forward. He's sitting here saying that it's about religious rights when this whole amendment is about parental rights and who gets to make the decisions. I can appreciate him trying to explain that there's a religious influence in the school and permeating, as he says, through all the different courses.

I think that one has to take a step back and realize that everybody has their own belief values. Everyone has their own principles. I don't know whether you call that religious in all aspects because if you look at an atheist, who says he doesn't believe in a god, he still has values that drive his principles. Whatever those values and principles each of us as individuals have adopted in our lives we use to guide ourselves, our own conscience.

I do want to go back to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the very first one, fundamental freedoms.

2. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:
 - (a) freedom of conscience and religion.

I think they put those two together in the first one because it is our conscience that's guided by our personal beliefs and values, where here we're talking our religious values, where some people want to say, "Well, I'm nonreligious," yet they still have values. So their conscience is still part of the guidance in their decisions on what they do every day.

The whole purpose of subamendment SA1 is to prioritize who's going to have the final say on a child's education. It was interesting. The Member for Edmonton-Centre got up and talked at length and said that she absolutely believes that there should only be the public system that's being funded by taxpayers, and all of those other ones: I don't care about them; they can fund their own; if they want to do that, that's fine but not with taxpayers' dollars.

Mr. Hehr: I'm going to say that, too.

Mr. Hinman: That's fine.

What we're looking at here, though, are two things. One, who's actually in charge of the children? Is it the state or is it the parent? Two, what type of choice does that parent have? Again, according to how this bill is passed, what kind of choice will that parent have inside this new legislation on whether or not they can send them to a faith-based school or to an arts-based school or an athletic school or whatever they might choose to send them to?

There's a great deal of concern by Albertans with this government that they continue to infringe on those rights. The way this is written, though, it's trying to address those issues. We're still getting many e-mails, many phone calls from individuals who say: no, this isn't covering it. There was a home-school couple here before supper that I spoke to afterwards. They said: "Thank heavens that you're down there speaking to protect our rights and our choice as parents. Thank you very much." That's one couple here in Alberta that was here earlier. The purpose of the rule of law is to protect everybody and to allow that family to have choice.

Then we get the fearmongering from those who are saying: oh, but there are parents who make poor choices for their children.

Mrs. Forsyth: And there are.

Mr. Hinman: There are, but that doesn't mean you take away the choice for all the other good parents. We have legislation in place that if a child is not being raised properly, the government has a role to step in and take that child out, but they don't always do that. I've had to speak several times on a subject that I didn't appreciate at all, where the government and children's services failed to save a little child, a three-year-old child, after pleas from doctors and everyone: look, you need to get this child out of this dangerous situation. And they failed to act.

8:00

I personally do not believe this idea that because I'm elected or any of us in here are elected, we're all of a sudden superior to those people who aren't elected and that we're going to be able to make decisions and say: "Oh, this is in your best interest. You must realize that, and the reason why is because we're elected; therefore, we know better what's best for you." That just isn't the case, Mr. Chairman.

The basic question and the basic purpose of subamendment SA1 is to prioritize who is going to be the ultimate person to decide on the education of a child, what they're going to be exposed to, what they're going to be taught, and where they're going to be taught. If we listen to some members in this House, they say: "Oh, no. The government is going to come in, and we're going to do all of that." I just want to first state that government is comprised of human beings, no different than a family, and we're not immune to making mistakes. So that freedom of choice and that freedom of religious beliefs and conscience that are instilled in your children need to have that diversity and that allowance to go forward whether that's a family that believes that meat isn't good and they want to be vegetarians, whether they want to dress in such a way to say that you shouldn't use bright colours and be that way, or whether they believe in the length of their hair, or whatever else. We should be willing to tolerate and accommodate those things so long as they don't hurt other individuals.

I'm somewhat disappointed that we haven't been able to progress on this subamendment. I just want to read in once more that what is being proposed at this time is that we put in the sentence the paramount right and responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of their children, which includes . . .

Then this is the amendment of the government:

A right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins in the home; that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children; and that these principles are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta to provide parents with choice in education, including public schools, separate schools, Francophone schools, charter schools, private schools and home education programs.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre brought up – again, the word that is being used here is “paramount.” Perhaps those with a better legal background than my own can clarify this. If in the preamble or section 1 it declares what is going to be paramount, I think any section after that would be subject to the one prior. So if, in fact, we're going into a subclause where the interest of the child is paramount, it's after the parent was paramount in making that choice. It would kind of go through the process: okay, it's being breached in this subclause, so we go up to the one above it, and move forward. Much like in the reverse case, if someone had a case locally against their school board and they didn't like it, then they'd appeal it to the provincial Court of Appeal and then the federal Court of Appeal. There's an order that we know that we go through in order to try and make things right if we feel that we've been wronged.

It's a very simple but important amendment. The real question isn't about freedom of religion on this one. It's about who ultimately has the authority and the responsibility for raising and educating a child. That parent can make that choice and say, “I choose to teach my child at home” or “I choose to send them to a private school” or “I choose to send them to a charter school, a francophone school, a separate school, or a public school.” That's what we want to entrench and protect in this new act, Bill 2, the Education Act. It's just very simple.

I'll also ask the question. This is kind of what consensus is, when you communicate back and forth. You're sitting there and listening and asking, you know: “Where's our misunderstanding? What's the definition of those words, and why are they defined that way?” If, in fact, that's what the government is trying to do with amendment A1, what is the fear of putting “paramount” in there unless everything that we're saying is actually true? That's why they don't want to accept this simple amendment. They don't think it's paramount, and they want to be able to overstep that at some time in the future for whatever reasons. At this point I won't even speculate on what those might be.

It's a simple amendment. It's straightforward. It just clarifies for those people that are worried who is paramount. Is it the state, or is it the parents?

With that, I would hope that the government would reconsider this and accept subamendment SA1 to their amendment A1 so that we actually know that priority and there is no further clarification. If they vote against this amendment, they're voting against all of those people in Alberta that at this point have that fear, thinking:

the state does want to pre-empt me as a parent, saying that I must teach them this or I must do that because that's the new curriculum.

That does remind me of something else on why it's so important to have choice and diversity. The way we progress as human beings is by those that are willing to take the risk and try something new. You know, they try something, and someone says: oh, that's crazy to do. They try it and, wow, it worked. And all of a sudden everybody beats a path down there.

It wasn't that long ago that my oldest son went to grade 1, and that was the year that they decided to switch the curriculum. They were now going to teach whole language. “Phonics doesn't work. We're going to teach whole language.” We went in there, and we fought with them, and we tried to get them to change and said: “Our son is struggling with that. Let's teach phonics.” But could we do anything? No. Because of where we lived, there was no choice to go to another school.

So for the first two years he went to that school, struggled, didn't learn to read, couldn't comprehend the whole-language bit. He needed phonics. Then we moved. When we moved, we got to a second school, and they didn't want to do it. But there we had two schools, and we had choice and were able to send him to a third school because the opportunity was there.

There are times when the government is going to say: “This is what the curriculum is, and this is what we need to teach. We know best. We're the new experts.” If, in fact, you think that that's not correct, then why do we have so many people working on curriculum, constantly tweaking and changing and bringing in new things, saying, “This is the new, proven truth, and this is the way we need to do everything, and this is the way we need to understand everything,” only to find out a few years later, “Oh, my goodness; there are such things as black holes.” There are quasars. There are all these other things that people will argue about until we discover them. Then we're enlightened. A new door is opened, and new information and new knowledge comes forward. We can't force everybody to be the first through the door or to be held inside that box. Choice is critical. Parental choice is paramount.

I hope that they'll accept this amendment. I want to thank the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for bringing this forward. It's critical. Once again, I want to remind the government that if they vote this down, they're saying no to all of those people that are concerned and that they're not willing to make a simple concession here. If, in fact, that's not what they're trying to do, then let's accept this amendment and move on to make some further improvements on this bill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's always a privilege to discuss issues in this Legislature. When we discuss bills, when we discuss amendments, and when we look at things, in the main I try to always remember: well, Kent, you don't always have the corners centred around good ideas. Nevertheless, in my view, part of the neat thing about this Legislature is that we don't all think alike, and we don't all come at things in the same way. I think that this bill truly highlights some of those differences.

8:10

In my view, this amendment to this bill clearly falls out of the parameters of what I would consider good legislative procedure, good policy for an inclusive school environment. Not a good preamble if you're wanting to build a society based on shared values and learning opportunities to come together and care, share, and play together.

When I looked at this, at first blush I said to myself: is this really happening? I had read the initial act, and I didn't see any of this language contained in it. In fact, if you look at the original drafting of the preamble, I really liked some of the stuff that was contained in there. For instance:

Whereas education is the foundation of a democratic and civil society.

That's great. Okay?

Whereas the role of education is to develop engaged thinkers who think critically and creatively, and ethical citizens who demonstrate respect, teamwork and democratic ideals, and who work with an entrepreneurial spirit to face challenges with resiliency, adaptability, risk-taking and bold decision-making.

You see, that kind of stuff is what an education system is supposed to provide. The education system is not a church. Okay? Let's repeat that. Our education system is not a church. You go to school to learn how to read, write, reason, and get along with your fellow man. That's it. That is the role of education. I would say that the government's job as it plays a role in education is to provide those things that are required to provide a good education. They should support those endeavours which lead to a person becoming skilled, becoming educated, learning how to read, write, and reason and take part in a democratic society, and encourage them to be able to work and be ready to face the challenges of intellectual rigour that they will face later on in life. That is it.

It is not the job or role of government to either be involved in religious matters or actually be funding mechanisms that are of a religious nature. In fact, I think that's pretty much reflected in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms and other documents that clearly outline what our roles and responsibilities are. When you throw around terms like freedom of speech – sure, we all know we have freedom of speech, but it has limited rights of appeal to that. Sure we all have freedom of religion. You're allowed to teach your child what you want in your home. You're allowed to take your child to church, to Sunday school on Sunday, and stay for a worship service after. By all means. That is your freedom of religion, and I support that a hundred per cent.

But the government or the state should not involve itself in, to use a term that this government likes to use, picking winners and losers in a religious setting, funding these organizations that tend to divide society rather than uniting them. Mr. Chair, can you imagine an Alberta where we have a school system – let's just think outside the box here – for Mormon students, for people of the Sikh religion, for people of the Hindu religion, for people of the Jehovah's Witness faith, for people of the United church, for people of all sorts who want to start their private religious schools and go about doing business in that manner? Just imagine that. Does that seem like a society that a government should be trying to create or even fund? This doesn't seem like it fits in with the goals of what we want our school system to look like.

I'll go back to what our school system should look like, to what it says in the original drafting of this.

Whereas the role of education is to develop engaged thinkers who think critically and creatively, and ethical citizens who demonstrate respect, teamwork and democratic ideals, and who work with an entrepreneurial spirit to face challenges with resiliency, adaptability, risk-taking and bold decision-making.

That is it, and that, in my view, is what the government should limit itself to. Stay out of religion. Stay out of that. Let parents truly have their individual freedom, and let that be their responsibility. It is not the government's responsibility to indoctrinate people or to fund situations that would indoctrinate people in any one point of view. That is the parents' responsibility.

On that measure, I have followed up on that line, and it fits in well with a discussion on this amendment. Currently we are funding private schools to the tune of 70 per cent of our public education system. Essentially, in my view, it has been a bit of a sop to people who choose on their own behalf to not go to public schools. It's been a bit of a vote-getter for this government. They said: "Oh my God. You'd better vote for us. You don't want those Liberals or New Democrats, who don't want religion in the school system, getting power."

But now – guess what? – these guys have one-upped you. They're going to 100 per cent fund these things. They have a new champion, okay? They're going to give him a whole hop. They're going to 100 per cent fund private schools. So your half measure, although it was good for vote buying, not necessarily good for society, has now led to you being one-upped by the Wildrose Alliance. You're no longer champions for these people despite the fact, so I don't understand why you're bending over backwards for them now when it creates the difficulties that I see.

Let's talk directly to what this says. This is the original A1. Then I'll get to how it fits very closely with what's in SA1.

Whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes that parents have the right to choose the religious and ethical traditions . . .

Sure. Why do you need that in the Education Act? Everyone knows that. Okay? You don't have to tell parents how to parent. They know how to do that.

. . . that a child's education begins in the home;

Sure. Yeah. Great. You're supposed to help kids with reading and writing, and reading to them at nighttime helps their educational development. Yup, parents don't need to be told that.

. . . that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children;

Yes. Having been raised by a lapsed Catholic and a Christian Reformed person, I know that those spiritual and moral values were instilled in me, and I find myself attending the United church nowadays to reflect my spiritual beliefs. But, now, here's where this bill goes completely off the rails, from my perspective. And that these principles are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta to provide parents with choice in education, including public schools, separate schools, Francophone schools, charter schools, private schools and home education programs.

8:20

Well, if we go back to my initial point, that governments have no business telling people what religion they're going to view or what their freedom of conscience should be, why is this preamble in an education act to begin with? There is no necessity. The state should not play a role in these principles of how children are raised at home.

If you're talking about state intervention in religious matters, this actually does it. This actually, it looks like by my reading, compels the government to be committed to these different types of schooling and commits them to funding these programs – charter schools, private schools, and home education programs – for, I guess, the duration of this bill.

If you look at the Constitution Act of 1867 and if you then go further to our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, there is no right. There is a right for a public education system and, because of its historical roots, a separate system, which is the Catholic faith. That's it. That's all. All the rest we have made accommodations for.

We've done that through home-schooling, which, if a person has a real, fundamental bent with the education system, I can see some small role for that occurring in some cases. But there is no right for the state to have to fund private schools or to go out of their way to do this. There is none. We've decided to meddle in the religious element for some reason.

In my view, Mr. Chair, the thing is that I don't think it moves society forward. When I get back to what I said earlier, when you have 47 different schools with 47 different types of religious organizations running them and the like, well, I don't think that's good for society. It doesn't lead to cohesive neighbourhoods, to individuals learning about diversity, to individuals learning to respect others, to individuals actually coming together and having to work together.

You know, when we send our kids to schools where everyone looks the same, everyone believes the same thing, and everyone goes to the same church, what happens when they all get out into the work world and that doesn't happen? What really happens then? If we're really trying to build a school system – again, I go back to one of these.

Whereas the role of education is to develop engaged thinkers who think critically and creatively, and ethical citizens who demonstrate respect, teamwork and democratic ideals, and who work with an entrepreneurial spirit to face challenges with resiliency, adaptability, risk-taking and bold decision-making.

I don't see how any of this serves to do that.

The government has done this for years through the funding of private schools. First off, they started at 50 per cent, then went to 60 per cent and now 70 per cent. The party beside me is going to go to 100 per cent. Any of the literature I read out there – if someone can point me to some study that says that fracturing your education system with private schools is good for the society, please forward it to me. Please do that, because I'd be very interested to read them. Okay? Just find them, any unbiased opinions reflected by educators, by people who have done the analysis of how society's education system works. It starts with one publicly funded education system.

Leave all this religious stuff to the parents. That is their role. That is their responsibility. That is their right. The government has no obligation to be doing this other than some, I guess, idea that people in the backrooms want to indoctrinate, actually – I'll say the word "indoctrinate" – the other way. They want to indoctrinate religion into the educational sphere, which, in my view, Mr. Chair, is ridiculous. It's absurd. In my view, it is long past the day where it serves society to the betterment of us moving forward.

Alberta is not the Alberta of 1920, when we were primarily of two religions, the Protestant or Roman Catholic faith. We have 100,000 new people coming here in the next 10 years. We need 400 new schools built. People of all faiths and of all different communities are going to come here. They're going to read this preamble, and they're going to say: well, we should build our own school, where all of our people can go, where we can all hang out, you know, and can all think alike, and we can all do that. That's what this is setting up. In my view, these two amendments, both A1 and SA1, move society in the wrong direction.

I'll start where I began, that I'm glad we all had the opportunity to speak about this, that we all shared our views. Hopefully, the government is doing its own studies as to whether funding private schools and creating this type of system, where we separate people on the basis of religion in an education system, is actually good for society. Ask yourself: is this actually good for society, or does it make you feel better that you're following your religious tenets? If it's making you feel better that you're following your religious tenets, well, that's not your place to be deciding that. Go to church on Sunday. Figure that out for yourself. Don't bring this in to an education system that is supposed to deal with educating children.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on sub-amendment SA1.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise again and speak on Bill 2, the Education Act, and especially to subamendment SA1, which has been brought forward by the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. It's been interesting listening. I think we've been on this bill for the majority of the afternoon, and it's after 8.

I've just heard the Member for Calgary-Buffalo speak, and democracy is a fine thing. People are a wonderful thing because everybody is entitled to their opinion and how they feel about this particular piece of legislation.

I'm going to say that I'm proud to be an Albertan, and I'm proud to be standing in this Legislature debating a bill that offers parents so much choice. I think it shows that in society we have the ability now to offer so many things to so many people, whether it's public education or Catholic education. We've got francophone education, we've got charter education, we have private schools, and, of course, we have home education, which is one of the things that I think is pretty unique, for a parent to be able to teach their children at home.

I have had the opportunity over the last six weeks or so to be door-knocking and the opportunity to actually meet parents at the doors who are home educators and meet their children and talk to them. They seem to be doing pretty good considering that they're home educated.

We're having this discussion, and I think what's more important than anything – and I've again pulled some stuff off the Alberta Education website. I've lost it in the act, so maybe my friend can help me here on the side. Anyhow, the act talks about student responsibility. It talks about parent responsibility. It talks about the board responsibility and the trustees' responsibility.

8:30

You know, you go to the student responsibilities, and it's "a partner in education, has the responsibility to," and they have a long list. Then you go to the parent responsibilities, and it says:

A parent of a child who is a student or enrolled in an early childhood services program, as a partner in education, has the responsibility to

(a) make decisions respecting the child's education.

I think that is key. That is in section 32(a) of the act, part 3.

Clearly articulated on the Alberta Education website, they go into the role of the parents. "Parents play an important role in the education of their children. Their involvement and encouragement can help a child excel." Then it talks about taking an active role. Then it talks about the government of Alberta respecting parental choice. "The Government of Alberta believes parents have a right and a responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of their children." From the Alberta Education website I pulled off yet another one, and it talks about what home education is, and it goes on to talk about the strengthening of home education. It continues to talk about the roles and the responsibilities of parents.

After extensive consultation, from what I can remember and from what I understand from the minister, about Bill 2, I found it quite interesting how quickly he was jumping to his feet and accusing us of not consulting and not co-operating and bringing an amendment forward. But what was interesting was that he brought an amendment forward first. We're just responding to his amendment.

What is even more interesting, now that people are starting to hear a lot more about Bill 2, the Education Act, are the responses and the e-mails and, quite frankly, the phone calls that we are getting as MLAs. Lo and behold, this afternoon what arrives in our e-mail? A four-page letter from the Calgary board of education addressed to the minister. Then behind that are 14 pages in regard to the bill. One must say: I guess they didn't let anybody know how they felt, and they're just all of a sudden reacting to the bill. The funny thing is, Mr. Chair, that I know how this government thinks. They think it's okay to tell people what they're going to put in a bill without asking them what should be in the bill, and I find that quite irresponsible if I may say.

If this bill was the perfect bill, quite frankly, we wouldn't have brought the first amendment, and we would not be here debating and debating and debating. The amendment that the government has brought forward: I think everybody that has spoken up in regard to this has read into the record what the amendment is because it's important for people who may be watching or actually reading Hansard. I know that there are thousands of educators out there, thousands of parents that are watching and listening and following this. I've tweeted twice now in regard to the amendment, and it isn't long before everybody else is wondering what the heck is going on.

In the amendment the government talks about recognizing that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins in the home; that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children; and that these . . . are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta to provide parents with choice in education.

And they go on to that. Now, that's a pretty good amendment, actually, from the minister.

What our colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere brought forward was just a couple of lines that talked about the government of Alberta recognizing that parents have "the paramount right and responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of their children." I think that's where we go back to it being common sense. Of course the parent has the right to make a decision on education. The parents have a right to make a lot of decisions on behalf of their children, especially when they're young. You know, it's like: don't be touching that stove because it's pretty hot. As the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere mentioned, we want to have the right and responsibility to make decisions respecting the education of our children.

Having said again a few words – I spoke this afternoon – I'm going to ask everyone in the Assembly to support our amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on sub-amendment SA1.

Mr. Anderson: Well, it appears, Mr. Chair, that this government and this Education minister clearly do not have any intention of passing this amendment. That is too bad. I know that there are other amendments, so we're going to get to them right away.

I just want to say that I'm disappointed. I thought this was a very reasonable amendment. I can't imagine why on earth this government would vote against giving parents the paramount right over the educational choices of their children. I cannot for the life of me figure that out. It is inconsistent with what they've been saying. It's like this Premier, with the little wiggle room language that she often uses to get out of things; for example, the public health care inquiry. She used wiggle room there although I guess everyone in Alberta, you know, called her on it, and she's suffering some serious unpopularity because of it.

But this is why we need the amendment, because of the wiggle room in here that basically says in this amendment by the minister: "whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes that parents have a right." Well, what does "a right" mean? There are rights to a lot of different things in this world, but where do those rights rank? A parent's right should be paramount. It should be considered a paramount right, not just a right. It should be a paramount right, and then you work backwards from there.

In other words, if there are reasons to take away that parent's parental authority over how their children will be educated, then we do that, but you start first with the assumption. It's just like: presumed innocent until proven guilty. Well, this is the same thing. The presumption is that parents are going to make responsible, solid, good decisions for their child's education, and then you work backwards from there. So it's not just about a right; it's about a paramount right. Language does matter, and this government has once again failed to give any recognition to that fact.

You know, we have other amendments, that I hope they'll be more willing to look at as we go forward here, and I hope that they will continue to let us debate this bill until we are finished, until it has a good vetting. By the amount of e-mails and phone calls – you know, I've got to say that besides the royalty framework, for which I received the most negative mail at any time over the last four years, other than that one, I have not received more e-mails and communications than I have on this Bill 2, the Education Act. That says a lot about Alberta parents. It says that they care. It says that they love their children, that they want them to have the best education possible. But it also says that they want the paramount right to decide how their children will be educated, and they don't want that right superseded by any other right or any other principles that are listed in this very long preamble.

8:40

A lot of good things in the preamble, but essentially you're putting a parent's right to choose their education, a universal human right, on the same par as some other things which clearly are not in the same ballpark, important but not in the same league, as parental rights. That is very disappointing.

I hope people will support our amendment. We'll obviously have a standing vote on it so that we can all get on the record in this regard. With that, I'll close debate on this amendment unless someone else has something else to say.

Hon. Chair, for this one, if the bells go, can I move that we shorten the period of time to one minute for a standing vote? Would that be okay?

The Chair: We need to have unanimous consent. There's a motion to reduce the division bells to one minute.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: The division bells shall now be one minute.

We'll get back to subamendment SA1. Any others?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:42 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

For the motion:

Anderson	Forsyth	Hinman
Boutilier

Against the motion:

Allred	Drysdale	Mitzel
Benito	Elniski	Notley
Berger	Evans	Olson
Bhardwaj	Fritz	Pastoor
Blackett	Hancock	Rodney
Brown	Hehr	Rogers
Campbell	Johnston	Tarchuk
Chase	Leskiw	VanderBurg
DeLong	Lukaszuk	Woo-Paw

Totals:	For – 4	Against – 27
---------	---------	--------------

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Chair: Now we are going back to amendment A1. Any hon. member wishing to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Because of my initial confusion I was already speaking to A1 under the context of subamendment SA1.

My concern, Mr. Chair – and I'll not repeat my whole concern – is that when the government comes up with statements like this, which are the residue of Bill 44, which should never have been introduced into a freethinking provincial Legislature and which drives Alberta back into the backwaters of history at a time when evolution was considered in direct conflict with religious beliefs, then this regressive piece of legislation removes the right for this government to call itself progressive or conservative. Potentially some of the conservative aspects remain.

8:50

But we're in 2012, when rights and privileges that have been established historically – the freedom of separate schools, the freedom of public schools, the freedom of francophone schools – are part of our Charter of Rights. There aren't such charters that recognize, either historically or in a modern sense, that religious schools or charter schools or private schools have the same type of rights as the established schools. When the argument of choice is used to exclude as opposed to broaden individuals' selections, then that is unacceptable.

I've said before – and I don't want to hammer home the issue – that in some people's minds there is a confusion between the public system and the separate system. The separate system is just a Catholic version of the public system. It's historically had those foundational rights, and I support those foundational rights.

It concerns me when aspects of religion are permeated or osmosed into a public system that has wide values, that is inclusive as opposed to exclusive. What I see in amendment A1 is separating, excluding. I use the term "ghettoizing."

People have the right to their religious beliefs. In the case of the Catholic separate system they have the historical rights that have been given by law. I appreciate those protections given to them. When it suits the needs of the separate system to share space, possibly divided by a community centre or possibly divided by a gymnasium, fine. When their faith-based taxpayers determine that they require a separate facility with a separate gymnasium, that's their right, too.

It's interesting throughout the province how different groups have gotten together. For example, in Lethbridge there is a high school with a shared library. There is the example of a school in Canmore. Those are examples where the Catholic faith-based individuals worked it out with the public system. There was no enforced circumstance whereby you won't get your funding unless you agree to share this common space. But that's the beauty of religious freedom and religious rights, to make those choices.

While I appreciated a lot of what former Education minister Dave King said about schooling when he suggested that schools should be completely secularized, I felt that that was going a step too far. Other provinces, I recognize, such as Newfoundland have tried in a fashion to secularize their systems. Quebec has moved some ways in that direction.

But respecting individual and religious rights does not give the right of one group over another to silence, whether it's a minority or a majority.

Whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins in the home; that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children; and that these principles are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta to provide parents with choice in education, including public schools, separate schools, Francophone schools, charter schools, private schools and home education programs.

There isn't a sufficient separation between what is permitted in a public school. While the Charter rights are recognized, the ability to interfere, the leftover of Bill 44, still resonates in this amendment, and it changes the nature and historical reason for being of the public school system.

So, Mr. Chair, I will be voting against this amendment, which, as I say, takes us back to 1925 Tennessee and the Scopes monkey trial. I value our public education system, and I don't want to see it fractured or fragmented and broken up for the sake of a person's religious beliefs trumping the rights of individuals to have different beliefs but operate, hopefully collaboratively and collegially, as is the basis of most religions, under the same roof. Tolerance is absolutely essential, and A1, unfortunately, like Bill 44, in attempting to create tolerance, actually creates exclusion.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on amendment A1.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll be brief because I outlined many of my arguments in my comments that I made on subamendment SA1 to this bill. Nevertheless, when I look at this bill and this preamble, it doesn't seem to serve the best interests of Alberta going forward, building an inclusive society that sees a role of public education as being a unifying factor in your local communities, being the locus of where kids learn reading, writing, and arithmetic and get the skills necessary to not only compete in the labour force but be part of a democratic society.

As indicated earlier, in my view government should limit its role in education to providing public education that provides for kids to come into a place where they can learn how to do those things, learn how to learn, and also learn some of those softer things, how to care, share, and play together in a society that recognizes them not only as individuals but as having some sort of responsibility to their fellow man. There's no place to learn that better than the public school.

If I can touch briefly on the Constitution and therefore the Charter of Rights, in 1867, when this great nation came into formation, the only thing protected by it was the right to a public school system, secular education, as well as our traditional Roman Catholic schools. That's it. We have made an accommodation for home schools. If people do not see an opportunity for their children in that, they can go to home-schooling. I understand that to an extent, that if you just can't handle the public school system, well, there should be an option.

Nevertheless, where we've muddled in this murky middle ground of funding for private schools – and the private schools that can set up shop were basically a religion of, like I said before, a Hindu religion, a Jewish religion, a Sikh religion, a Mormon religion, a United church school – it simply doesn't seem to serve the overarching goal of what our government should be involved in.

9:00

The government should be involved in providing educational opportunities for the children in a manner that leaves religion out of the equation. If the people choose to do it otherwise, well, they choose to do it without government funding. Okay? That is their choice. If they can fully fund this, then government funding for these mechanisms that serve to divide communities on arbitrary characteristics should not be included.

This bill basically is sort of a call to arms for people who want to do this sort of thing. When they open up this act and see this language at the beginning, they'll come and say: "Well, I guess that's what we're supposed to do. The government wants us to set up our own shops, to have our own schools and to not take part in a public education system."

If you break this down by the actual wording,

whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins in the home; that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children, that's fine. That's great. I understand that. Why it would be in an education act is another question. I think that's just a universal understanding that's enshrined under our freedom of religion in the Charter of Rights. Why do you need to be redundant and say something that everyone knows right in an education act?

By putting it here and then by adding this clause:

and that these principles are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta to provide parents with choice in education, including public schools, separate schools, Francophone schools, charter schools, private schools and home education programs.

Like I said, the only things that are protected under our Constitution are the public and francophone schools. All this other stuff is government made, meddling into areas that they don't need to be meddling into, supporting operations that have no fundamental role.

The primary role doesn't appear in many cases to be with the provision of education but the provision of religious teaching in some cases. The government should not be meddling in that business, should not be financially supporting these institutions. It only serves to divide our communities and does not move society forward.

Furthermore, I would still appreciate the members of the government recognizing that religion is great but – you know, I, too, go to church. I go to the United church, and I do that on my own time. If others choose to do so, that's great. That's freedom of religion. You have freedom of religion to teach your kids whatever you want at home. But an education system that the government provides should not be involved in those things, in the funding of those mechanisms.

If you look at the statistics coming out of how governments which have gone down this path of splintering communities and offering a voucher system or a money-follows-the-child model, that the Wildrose is advocating, that is not something that, at least in the studies that I've seen, adds to an overall good education system of that society.

I can't just point out the Wildrose in this session. This government has enabled this with their half measure of 70 per cent funding to these schools, which, in my view, has served to divide communities and not bind them.

Like I said, I got most of these points out on the subamendment. That's my story, Mr. Chair, in this element, and I, too, will be voting against this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow on amendment A1.

Ms DeLong: Yes. There has been quite a bit of discussion recently in terms of how we should be just supporting a public system because all of the studies show that that is what's best for society. Well, if you want to find the data to support funding going to other sources, it's right here in Alberta.

You know, I often disagree with the Calgary public system, the Calgary public board. That's my local board, and I often disagree with some of the things they do. But bottom line, Calgary public provides one of the best education systems in the whole world. The result that we get out of the Calgary public board is comparable to Finland. It's comparable to anywhere in the world in total. Sometimes we come in third. Sometimes we come in fourth. A lot of the time we come in first. That public board produces some of the best education in the whole world. Okay?

That is a public board who is in competition with all these other choices that we as Albertans provide to the parents. What we have done there is put all of our public boards on notice that they have to – they have to – produce the best education that they possibly can. So all of our public boards are striving. They're working hard. You know, they believe in what they're doing, and they are working hard to produce the best possible education in the world. It's because we are providing that choice that they have really stepped up. We have to admire what they're doing, but it is because we have set up this overall choice where the parents have the control and the parents can send their children to the school of their choice. As a result, our public system is the best public system in the world.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to join the debate on amendment A1?

Hon. Minister of Energy, do you wish to speak on amendment A1?

Dr. Morton: Yes.

The Chair: Please go ahead.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Chair, it would appear that there is considerable concern on the parts of some Albertans about the inclusion of the reference to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act in section 16 of the act. They're concerned that this potentially abridges or erodes the authority of parents to choose what their children are taught. I'd like to say that I share this concern and that I respect this concern, and so does the majority of our PC caucus. That's why we've brought the amendment that's before the House today.

This amendment for the first time in Alberta and, really, for the first time in Canada provides an explicit recognition of the right of parents to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised. After declaring the principle that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised, it elaborates on that principle. It states:

that a child's education begins in the home; that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children; and that these principles are reflected in the commitment of the Government of Alberta to provide parents with choice in education.

So it states the principle, and then it goes on to elaborate on all of the different choices, the policies that follow from that principle. These choices include public schools, separate schools, Francophone schools, charter schools, private schools and home education programs.

I would ask the members of the Assembly: in what other province can you find this type of choice in offering students and parents and families choice in education? I would suggest that not only is this right in principle, but it's right in practice, too. Why is it that Alberta consistently – consistently – outperforms every other province, every U.S. state, and indeed most of the rest of the world? In standardized tests our kids, the graduates of this program, are the top five in the world, and I would suggest it's because, one, there's choice, which creates competition between the different systems; and, two, it involves the parents. Speaking as a previous social scientist, I can tell you that the strongest predictor of success in children's education is parental involvement. This is what choice does. It makes the parents partners with the teachers in education. So I think Alberta should be recognized and this bill should be recognized for being the first province in Canada to explicitly recognize parental rights.

9:10

I'd like to go on, then, to point out that there's a second provision in public policy in Alberta that also acknowledges the importance of parental authority and parental responsibility when it comes to what their children learn. I'm referring here, Mr. Chair, to the Alberta Human Rights Act, section 11, which was amended in what's known as Bill 44 in 2009. This section – again, this is the Human Rights Act of Alberta – requires that in matters that are done . . . [interjection] Yes. Some good support over there from our hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

It requires that when school boards or teachers are dealing with matters of religion or sexuality, parental notification is required and, if the parent is concerned about that, the right to opt out for the students. Here again, I would suggest, you see a strong, explicit protection of parents' rights to guide the ethical and religious traditions in which their children are raised.

Importantly, the inclusion of reference to the Alberta Human Rights Act inside section 16 of the Education Act embeds that principle of parental authority inside the act. So not only does the new preamble that we're discussing now recognize this right to parental authority; it's put into the text of the act by inclusion of the Alberta Human Rights Act. Again, I think this is something we can be proud of. I ask those who are critical here: what other province has this type of protection for parental authority when it comes to the ethical and religious instruction of their children?

Thirdly, I would like to point to an article by Professor Dale Gibson, distinguished professor emeritus at the University of Alberta, Belzberg professor of constitutional studies, and a member of the Royal Society of Canada. I'm referring here to a paper that he is the author of called Towers, Bridges and Basements: The Constitutional and Legal Architecture of Independent Schooling. Professor Dale Gibson makes the case, and I'll read it from page 3 of the copy I have here.

Although the question cannot fairly be said to be beyond doubt, there is a strong reason to conclude that parents have the constitutional right to determine the shape of their children's education. That right is, I believe, rooted in at least three distinct provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Now, I'll go on and point out what those three provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms are. It's freedom of conscience and religion, section 2(a); freedom of expression, section 2(b); and the right to liberty in section 7. Professor Gibson points out how the Charter of Rights protects in different ways that right to parents.

I'll give you one example here. This is quoting from page 6 of Justice La Forest's decision in the case of R. versus Jones.

Those who administer the province's educational requirements may not do so in a manner that unreasonably infringes on the right of parents to teach their children in accordance with their religious convictions. The interference must be demonstrably justified.

There under section 2(a), freedom of conscience and religion, Justice La Forest finds protection for the right of parents in the Charter. Again, for those Albertans who are concerned about the inclusion of the Charter in the text, section 16 of the Education Act, it's the actual inclusion of the Charter that can protect that freedom of expression for the rights of parents.

I turn now to freedom of expression, section 2(b), quoting from page 8. This is Professor Gibson's view:

I am strongly of the opinion that both parental decisions that their children should be educated at home or in an independent school and the educational activities themselves, are, even in the absence of any religious component, constitutionally protected as important exercises of expression within the meaning of s. 2(b) of the Charter.

In other words, just the way section 2(a) protects the parental authority for those families who come at this issue from a religious tradition, a religious perspective, he's suggesting that freedom of expression protects the same right, the equal right, for parents who come to this issue from a secular perspective. So there's a balance between equal protection for families that have a more religious tradition or those who have an ethical position but based on secular principles.

Last but not least, I'd like to turn to section 7, the liberty perspective. I'd like to quote here Justice Bertha Wilson, again in the case of Jones, the same case. Justice Wilson, referring to section 7 of the Charter, the right to liberty and not to be deprived thereof, says:

Without doubt, it denotes not merely freedom from bodily restraint but also the right of the individual to contract, to engage in any of the common occupations of life, to acquire useful knowledge, to marry, establish a home and bring up children, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and generally to enjoy those privileges . . . recognized [as central] to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free men.

Again, to those Albertans – and I understand their concerns – who worry about the inclusion of the Charter of Rights or the Alberta Human Rights Act in section 16 of the Education Act, the Charter of Rights actually protects freedom of religion, freedom of conscience, freedom of expression, and each of those have been interpreted as protecting the right of parents to exercise that choice. So I think this strengthens the case.

Finally and lastly, I'd like to turn to a slightly different perspective. A lot of Albertans and a lot of Canadians, when they look at the Charter of Rights and the Alberta Human Rights Act, see it as a threat to parental authority, but there are many other Albertans and many other Canadians who, when they look at the Charter of Rights or the Alberta Human Rights Act, see it as a badge of protection and a badge of equal protection of the law. I'm referring here to new Canadians, families who have emigrated from overseas, families who are of a different skin colour, a different ethnic persuasion, a different religion. They see the Charter, the equal protection of the laws, and the Alberta Human Rights Act, which prohibits discrimination based on race, religion, or colour, as at the highest level a badge of inclusion in Canadian society – Albertans and Canadians are proud of that – and, at a minimum, protection against racial, ethnic, or religious discrimination. This isn't just a simple symbol. It's a constitutional symbol in the case of the Charter and statutory in the case of the Human Rights Act.

9:20

I would suggest that this is good, that it's something we can be proud of and that we should be proud of, and that's why it should be included in the Education Act. Mr. Chair, I'd go on and point out that these new Canadians – in fact, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo referred to the many different faith communities in Alberta. They're in the immigrant communities, the ethnic, multicultural communities: Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Ismailis, Buddhists. They are part of that group who, when they look at the Charter of Rights and look at the Alberta Human Rights Act, see this positive protection, this symbol of inclusion, equal protection of the law.

But also, most of these people, not all but most, come from a tradition of strong families – it's one of the reasons for their great success – and they want to pass on their religious and ethical values to their children, indeed to preserve the very diversity that they're proud of, that the Charter protects, by passing on the religious and ethical values from one generation to the next.

Mr. Chase: Sharia law?

Dr. Morton: In other words, many of these same new . . . There we have the Liberals – I'd like the record to show this – making fun of Muslims. I'm glad the record will show that.

In other words, many of these same new Canadians who want the Charter of Rights and Alberta human rights included in section 16 because they see it as a symbol of inclusion, of equal protection of the law, also want their parental rights included, not just in the preamble but also in section 16, as it is included in the Alberta Human Rights Act.

Mr. Chair, for all of those reasons I'm very proud to say that I think that with this addition, the amendment adding to the preamble, Albertans should be proud of this. It recognizes the concerns that many Albertans have – and we understand those concerns – about parental authority, and it puts Alberta in the lead, in front of all other provinces, in recognizing the right of parents to choose the instruction matters in areas of ethical and religious values that their children are instructed in. I support very, very strongly this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on amendment A1.

Mr. Anderson: Yes, on amendment A1. I want to thank the Minister of Energy for his comments. I agree with almost all of what he said, and I respect the work that he's done on that file throughout his career. Parental rights are something that I think were underprotected for a very long time, and it's good to see that, hopefully, there's a little bit of a renaissance going in that regard. The UN declaration of human rights . . .

Mr. Chase: More like the Dark Ages.

Mr. Anderson: I guess the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity thinks the United Nations universal declaration of human rights is something out of the Dark Ages. In the universal declaration of human rights it specifically states that a parent has the human right to choose the education that's best for their children. That is in the UN declaration of human rights. I don't think that's out of the Dark Ages, but it's good to see that that's actually being remembered now.

Where I disagree with the minister: although I think the language can be improved in this amendment – and we brought in a subamendment to that effect – this amendment, although an improvement, is just in the preamble. I mean, let's call a spade a spade. The fact that it's just in the preamble is really symbolic. It's good – I'm glad it's there – but it's really symbolic. I'm worried and I think a lot of people are worried that if we put something in the Education Act that, essentially, tells parents what they can and cannot teach their children with regard to their faith, which section 16 does, in a lot of people's view, indirectly do . . .

Mr. Hancock: So much is in the interpretation.

Mr. Anderson: Well, it is, but it's all about interpretation. That's the problem, that there are multiple interpretations of it. Some people might use that as a sword in the Education department to essentially instruct and tell parents and Catholic or other faith-based schools that they have to teach a certain . . . [interjections] Sorry, Mr. Chair; I'm losing my train of thought.

The Chair: The hon. member has the floor, please.

Continue, Hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, and louder.

Mr. Anderson: Thanks. I wish the Government House Leader and others in here would participate in the debate instead of just yipping across the way.

Anyway, if I look up section 16, it says: "all courses or programs of study offered and instructional materials used in a school." Well, what is a school? Let's go back to school. It says specifically that a school means a structured learning environment through which an education program is offered to a student by

- (i) a board,
- (ii) a person responsible for the operation of a private school,
- (iii) a person providing an early childhood services program,
- (iv) a parent providing a home education program, or
- (v) the Minister.

That's what a school is. It applies to home-schooling, faith-based schools, private schools as well as Catholic schools and public schools. It includes everything.

All courses or programs of study offered and instructional materials used in a school must reflect the diverse nature and heritage of society in Alberta, promote understanding and respect for others and honour and respect the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act.

Now, that is something that according to most interpretations, certainly those interpretations that I have, would be fine. However, as we've seen over and over again in courts, it can also be used and interpreted a different way, as we've seen in British Columbia, for example, to force faith-based schools and home-schoolers and others that want to give their children a faith-based education to teach things that are not in line with their faith.

Anita and I are confident enough in our local school right now and with the relationship that we have with the principal and the teachers there that we can have our children go to that school without their faith being trampled on. However, that's not the case in every school and in every situation. The worry is that this will be used as a sword. If all programs must include a certain interpretation of the Human Rights Act or the Charter, look at some of the things that have gone on in our Human Rights Commission in the name of the Alberta Human Rights Act.

Frankly, I would call them violations of freedom of religion, freedom of speech, freedom of conscience in the name of the Alberta Human Rights Act by the Human Rights Commission in their interpretations of that act and of the Charter. I worry that this will be used as a sword to interfere with a parent's right to teach their children according to their faith. [interjection] Oh, man, the Minister of Human Services just can't help himself.

9:30

I would say that you did point out how Bill 44 changed the Human Rights Act here in Alberta. That's fine and dandy. It's good. We shouldn't put something in this act that would make it necessary for parents to have to use the Human Rights Commission or the Human Rights Act to protect themselves, and I fear that this does that. It sets up kind of a showdown, so to speak. I don't think it's necessary, especially if you look at the previous definition that was under what was once the diversity and respect clause in the act that's being amended. It was essentially that education programs offered and instructional materials used in schools must not promote or foster doctrines of racial or ethnic superiority or persecution, religious intolerance or persecution, social change through violent action, or disobedience of laws.

I think that's a great definition. It's clear. It's not vague. It's not subject to any kind of real interpretation, in my view. I think that's pretty darn clear. A Catholic school or a faith-based school or a home-school: I don't think that would ever interfere with the teachings of their bona fide religious beliefs. So I don't see the need to change that definition from what is in there now to this one in this current act. I don't feel the need for it.

I know that it does scare a lot of folks. Like I said, I have not received more e-mails about any other subject except the royalty framework. This has really been something that's hit a nerve with folks. It's not just home-schools at all. It's a very large faith-based school group. I know that we have AKCS. It's a great school. We have a private school, a faith-based school in Airdrie. I've just been inundated by them with calls on this.

I know that we also have some Catholic groups that are very concerned about it as well, not the least of which is an individual, Bishop Henry, in an article that he did for the Herald this last week.

I do respect and I know the commitment that the Education minister brings to parental rights, and I think that this amendment to the preamble that we're on right now is better than what was there before. I really wish they would have accepted our subamendment that we brought in earlier, but they didn't.

However, I would hope that in addition to this the government would understand that because this is just in the preamble, we also need to look at section 16. We also need to make sure that we're not setting up an unnecessary battle between parents of children who are involved in faith-based education, whether it be home-school, private school, or Catholic school, and the Human Rights Act in Alberta. I think it's an unnecessary conflict. I think that by not recognizing that or by ignoring that and putting this section 16 in there, it sets up that potential problem, and I hope that we can consider that later on.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am very pleased to rise to speak in support of amendment A1. This amendment makes it very clear, particularly in the way it starts out. It says:

Whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins in the home.

I believe that is a very profound statement. It's a very clear statement that speaks to the intent of this government in this bill, that we respect parental rights and that we are enshrining those rights in this bill.

I'm proud to live in this province, proud to live in a province where diversity is recognized – it is encouraged – and the fact that we have choice in this province, Mr. Chairman. We have choice in the way that we as parents educate our children, the greatest choice of any jurisdiction in this country. We have a strong public system. We have a strong system that recognizes the constitutional rights of Catholics to have a separate education system. We also have a francophone system that recognizes the rights of one of our founding peoples, French Canadians, of their mother tongue, to educate their children in that language.

We have charter schools, we have private schools, and home-schooling, which is specifically recognized not only in this preamble but also recognized in this piece of legislation. Mr. Chairman, home-schooling is the choice of many of my constituents, and this amendment leaves no doubt of our government's intention to respect and protect this choice. I'm proud that this act recognizes the supremacy of the Human Rights Act, the same act, which in itself, guarantees and protects these freedoms.

I will be voting in support of this amendment, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy on A1.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to, first of all, compliment the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for his articulate defence of the amendments. Again, he points out as a member of an ethnic minority the value that the inclusion of the Charter of Rights and the Alberta Human Rights Act has to minorities.

Mr. Hehr: As a minority I'm a wheelchair user, Ted.

Dr. Morton: Yeah. Respect that as well.

These communities whose success in Canadian society is based on strong family traditions value the Charter and value the Alberta Human Rights Act and at the same time value the recognition of the rights of parents that the amendment, the preamble adds.

I would like to address a couple of points raised by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere. His discourse would give the impression that somehow section 16 is totally different from the original or the previous section in the School Act on diversity. In fact, it's completely the same up to a certain point. I just want to indicate for the record what that point is.

Mr. Hinman: What page are you on?

Dr. Morton: I'm on page 29 of the bill, okay?

I quote here from section 16.

All courses or programs of study offered and instructional materials used in a school must reflect the diverse nature and heritage of society in Alberta, promote understanding and respect for others and honour and respect . . .

Up till that point the wording is identical to the previous wording in the analogous section of the School Act. You then have the new wording, which is after respect.

. . . the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Alberta Human Rights Act.

Now, as I've already indicated, the Canadian Human Rights Act protects freedom of religion, freedom of conscience, freedom of expression, and the right to liberty, all of which have been interpreted by various courts and by a number of our Supreme Court justices as protecting a right of parents. So the inclusion of the reference to the Charter of Rights in section 16 supports parents' rights. Similarly, in the Alberta Human Rights Act we've referenced that section, section 3, put in by Bill 44, which again recognizes the right of parents to be notified and the right of students to opt out.

Now, the concern that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere had is that this is all fine, but again it's subject to interpretation, which means it's subject to misinterpretation, and what are we doing about that? Well, Mr. Chair, precisely one of the purposes of a preamble is to give interpreters, in this case judges, a sense of the intent of the legislation; in other words, the words like in section 16: what is their intent? That's where the value of the current amendment is.

The amendment states very clearly that the intent of the government is to recognize that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins [at] home; [and] that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children.

That will act as a signpost to judges in the future to make sure that they interpret section 16 and the reference to the Canadian Charter of Rights and the Alberta Human Rights Act in a manner that is not only consistent with but actually protects parental authority.

Thank you.

9:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. In all this discussion what has been lost – and it's been lost in this province – are the universal rights of the child, and I'm not suggesting that they trump the rights of the parent, but Alberta was the very last province to consider the universal rights of the child. The excuse they used was that the universal rights of the child applied to countries as opposed to provinces. That was the lame excuse they used for not recognizing the universal rights of the child.

When we're talking about universal rights, the Vriend decision back in the late '90s extended the rights to individuals of the GLBT, transgendered, et cetera, circumstance. Now, Bill 44, which is all about amendment A1, says that, yes, we'll recognize your rights except in the classroom. We won't allow you to discuss sexual orientation. We won't allow you to discuss anything that might broadly be based on religious interpretation. We won't allow you to discuss in any particular depth evolution versus religion, and heaven forbid sexual education topics come up, which of course never happens at a junior high school, where my primary teaching experience was.

Now, when we're talking about rights, one organization's rights do not trump that of another, whether it's a minority or a majority. I support the rights of parents to home-school their children. What I do not support is the right to have some child, based on his religious beliefs, hold the other students in his classroom hostage because of amendments like A1, that in proposing to recognize each individual's rights, prioritize the rights. You do not have the right to discuss sexual orientation for fear of interfering with someone else's religious beliefs. You can't get into depth talks in terms of science and evolution because there might be some child who believes that man walked with dinosaurs and that God built everything in seven days. You know, for fear of being turned into a pillar of salt, you're not supposed to talk openly or objectively about a discussion.

If teachers are handcuffed by little Johnny or little Suzie, who is going to blow the whistle to the Human Rights Commission because the teacher defended a child who was being bullied and called a fag or some other deplorable circumstance because some other individual thinks their God-given right to discriminate trumps that of an individual to have an objective discussion on a wide variety of topics, then we're in real trouble.

Now, the hon. Minister of Energy talked about parental rights. In his political science class at the University of Calgary I'm sure that he didn't shut down topics when religion came into it. I'm sure he didn't shut down the class and say, "You two guys over there are holding hands; that's not acceptable in my classroom," or if someone was talking about gender discrimination, I'm not sure that he'd say: "Well, sorry. You can't write about that in a paper because that's not acceptable." But those are the same restrictions that he's willing to place under the name of parental rights into public school classrooms.

I realize that there are sensitive topics and there are appropriate places for those discussions. I respect parents' rights to decide at what point they have the discussion of the birds and the bees or the size of the stork that brought their little brother to the house and dropped him down the chimney. But, Mr. Chair, if we subject our public schools to such restrictions that topics cannot be brought up because they could potentially offend someone else in the classroom, then the majority of the topics of discussion are being frozen. They're being discriminated against, and the whole point of this so-called liberating piece of A1 does exactly what it's not intended to do.

It does not provoke freedom; it promotes priorities of prejudices. It does not allow objective discussions to take place. If someone is offended, they can drag the individual off to the Human Rights Commission. Our courts are the appropriate place because they are actual judicial centres as opposed to quasi-judicial. When we start meddling in public schools' objective, open debates and discussions and have that cloud of a human rights tribunal hovering over the right of teachers and students to engage in open discussions on a variety of topics, which might on an impromptu nature come into the classroom, then the whole point of education is lost.

School boards and the members of the Alberta Teachers' Association are not trying to take away parents' rights. If they feel that a public school is discriminatory and doesn't share their same values, parents have the right to go to a private school of their choice. They have the right to go to a charter school. They have the right to home-school. What they don't have is the right to interfere with the learning processes and objective discussions of the other children in that class. That's reverse discrimination. That's one individual holding hostage, based on his religious beliefs, the whole class and the teacher of that class. I don't know where this fear comes from in Albertans, that their rights are going to be trampled by open discussion.

Mr. Chair, I've been in this province for the better part of 50 of my soon to be 65 years, and I find this A1 an embarrassment. Alberta is a progressive province. It has all sorts of things to offer. As many individuals have pointed out, one of its strongest features is its public education system. So why are you driving a wedge into this public education system with this particular amendment A1?

Who is so afraid that their rights are going to be lost that this has to be put as a preamble? Does the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of this entire nation not override the need for such a preamble? Why is it that a small minority of individuals who feel that their religious rights are potentially compromised – in other words, the tail is wagging the dog, and the tail is now in the form of a preamble into an Education Act that affects all the children of this province.

This is prejudice, Mr. Chair. This is not transparency; it's not accountability. I'm ashamed to be a part of a province that would preamble and prejudice the education, the public education, of students in this province. Individuals have the choice. They don't have to go to a public school. Don't bring the prejudices and indoctrination and beliefs into the public system. Don't break it up.

Thank you.

9:50

Mr. Anderson: Sorry. I do have to respond to this just because, you know, this is exactly why there are home-schoolers right now and private schoolers and Catholic school parents and so forth listening to this debate. This is exactly why they are so frightened, because they hear an individual . . . [interjection] Oh, trust me. They are frightened. They're frightened, hon. member, because, basically, this member just stood up and said that any individual – any individual – that would dare bring into a classroom their beliefs, any child who happened to be educated as a Muslim or a Christian and had a certain world view about a certain issue and had that belief and expressed that belief, that that somehow would be bigotry and bullying and persecution and so forth.

Ms Notley: Well, it might be.

Mr. Anderson: Well, it might be in a certain context, absolutely. But this is the problem. In so many cases it's not; it's just an expression of opinion. It's not an expression of violence. It's not bullying. It's just: yeah, this is what I've been taught; this is what I've read.

Then to hear this member – you know, I don't begrudge his opinion on it, but this is a schoolteacher coming in here and saying that if any child who believed in, say, just any kind of teaching that they had been taught in their faith that doesn't accord to his world view, essentially, they should naturally be subject to a human rights complaint, or they should be forced to be taught the truth, the truth according to that member or that teacher, whatever teacher it is.

Ms Notley: Is the Human Rights Code right or wrong? Is it the truth or not?

Mr. Anderson: Well, the thing is that tolerance is a two-way street. You can't just say: you have to tolerate my view. You have to be able to tolerate people that disagree, people that do have a faith background and so forth. This is exactly why we need protections in the Human Rights Act for parental rights. It's exactly why we need to make sure when we amend this Education Act that we're doing so very carefully and that we are making sure to protect the rights of parents and folks in that regard.

I remember very, very clearly in school being bullied in a classroom by a teacher as well as other members, who had a certain faith, because their world view saw something that I had been taught growing up, that I believed in, as being multiple different adjectives that I won't repeat here. As a child I remember it very strikingly. Boy, oh boy; it made me very uncomfortable and almost ashamed, because I was so young at the time, of who I was because some insensitive teacher had decided to take it upon himself to straighten a few things out. I'm not saying that this hon. member would have done that. I don't think he would have. But there are those out there who do not have that sensitivity, and they use their position to bully people who they disagree with into submission.

I mean, think about what has come through the Alberta human rights tribunals. There has been controversy after controversy after controversy with regard to criticizing the Sheldon Chumir foundation all the way to, you know, right-wing commentators all agreeing that these human rights tribunals have exceeded their authority when interpreting the Charter of Rights and interpreting that Alberta Human Rights Act.

Now we're saying in this legislation that we're going to make sure that those interpretations of the Alberta Human Rights Act, those values enshrined in what those interpretations were, must be taught and must be accepted in our classrooms. They must be taught to our children. That's what some parents, not all parents but a lot of parents, thousands of parents across this province, are very concerned about.

I think that if we're going to go forward and debate this, I hope that we can use rhetoric that's not designed to be – let's not be intolerant in the name of tolerance.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I want to make it clear that I'm talking about objectivity, not subjectivity. I would like to think that every child in every classroom would have the right to raise their issue and have their issue discussed. What I am not in favour of is one child's rights and beliefs shutting down an entire class's discussion.

I realize that in all professions there are bullies, and part of this Education Act is about bullying. I would hate to think that in any of my classroom experiences I bullied a child, and I know the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere was not suggesting that I bullied. He did mention a circumstance in which he was bullied.

But the idea that somehow I am trying to limit parents' rights and to limit children's rights is the exact opposite of what I'm trying to accomplish. I want an openness, an opportunity to discuss, an opportunity to debate. When I taught in school, whether it was language arts or social studies, the importance of stating an objective, the importance of supporting an argument, the importance of coming to a conclusion based on an argument that you provided, that had some verifiable basis, was important. I realize that when it comes to discussions of religion, the verifiable nature of it potentially interferes with the mystery of it, which is part of the reason for religion.

I want to make it very clear that what I am saying is that I want the public system be open to a variety of beliefs, a variety of discussions, and to not be shut down by a particular viewpoint. The beauty of the public system is that there aren't filters. It doesn't filter you on the basis of your religion, it doesn't filter you on the basis of your IQ, it doesn't filter you on the basis of your ability to pay the extra tuition costs. Anything that infringes upon the ability for a discussion to take place where all opinions are valued and a student isn't put down or chastised because they have a particular belief may seem overly simplistic. In my classroom in a less than well-to-do socio-economic area, where bullying was prevalent because establishing your pecking order, frequently with fists, was a way to establish your personal value, I had a little sign at the front of my classroom with thumbs-up. There were to be no put-downs, that sign said, in my classroom, and I believe in that.

It is absolutely essential that the public system be able to discuss a variety of issues and not be gagged or handcuffed by a person's views or beliefs. All views should be openly discussed and people left to judge their own merits, not a teacher assigning a mark to the discussion but allowing it to take place in a transparent fashion.

I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, whose parents are both teachers, would love to have an opportunity to weigh in on amendment A1 and the public system support.

10:00

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much for recognizing me, Mr. Chair. I think what is going on tonight is an excellent example of why religion should be kept out and separate from things that the government is involved in providing like public education. This is an excellent example of the divisiveness and the strife and the angst that this causes. It's been caused tonight by the language put forward in the government amendment and by the subamendment SA1.

If I can dovetail quickly to some of the comments made by the hon. Minister of Energy, they were comical although absurd when he was trying to shoehorn various one-line quotations from case law to support the argument of certain rights into a school system. Really, it was my view that those quotations do not reflect the overarching case law that stems from the interpretation of our Constitution Act, which I said recognizes that the state has a role to play in public education, Catholic school representation, and francophone education, and that's it. That's all. The language coming out of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms recognizes the state's role in playing an agnostic arbitrator in the provision of educational services. When the government is involved in these provisions, it is to be nonreligious in its basis.

So when the hon. minister tried to shoehorn certain quotations from various cases, I found that, again, comical, a little bit absurd. If he would do some reviewing of the language around the provision of education and quote from those cases – and actually the hon. member from the Wildrose is correct. The decisions in B.C. reflect what the jurisprudence has overwhelmingly been in regard to public and separate education and what is allowed in those situations. The Supreme Court has been clear on this, and to suggest otherwise is utterly ridiculous in my view.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to take this opportunity to share my perspective on section 16 of Bill 2. First of all, I would like to say that section 16 includes wording such as that we “must reflect the diverse nature and heritage of society in Alberta.” For someone like me it speaks to the fact that in this very key legislation we recognize the significant role of our First Nations and some of the founding nations of this country. It also recognizes the diverse nature of our society, which is just critical for an increasingly culturally and racially diverse society and province such as ours.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to stress the fact that policies and words impact different people differently. For me I think it is significant to our diverse student population in our society that we include wording such as that we recognize the importance of promoting “understanding and respect for others,” that we “honour and respect the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.”

For the increasing population of newcomers and people of minority membership in our society the Charter stands for our dedication to equality and fairness. The Alberta Human Rights Act is one of the very few formal protections that disadvantaged groups in society have that recognize their disadvantaged stature. Currently that would include women, people with disabilities, aboriginal people, and visible minorities.

For those students who have to endure stereotyping, racial profiling, and racial slurs on just too many occasions, I think this symbolic way of including these groups in our legislation would help these people to develop a greater sense of belonging, which is significant and critically important.

I would also like to say that when this House says that we support the development of an inclusive and welcoming society and we would not stand up to protect the basic respect and dignity of people and students, I think we're being unprincipled and inconsistent.

I believe the preamble proposed by the minister is a balance between recognizing and providing protection to the disadvantaged . . .

Mr. Hehr: Did you read the amendment?

The Chair: Through the chair.

Ms Woo-Paw: I'd like to say that I support the minister's proposed preamble because it is a balance between recognizing the fundamental rights of parents and the need to recognize and provide protection to the disadvantaged and also to recognize the increasingly diverse nature of our society.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I'm compelled to get up and speak more on the amendment after all that's been said. Again, my colleague said it best: you know, the intolerance of those who are preaching to be tolerant is an ongoing problem. I want to talk a little bit, I guess, about this so-called fear of religion that's being talked about and how it's, you know, stopping teachers from talking or discussing important issues in the classroom. Again, if I go back to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, 2(a), the very first of the fundamental freedoms is the freedom of conscience and religion. That's the very first one on there.

You know, you can ask, “What's religion? What's worship?” and all of those things. I have friends where I would say that what they worship and what is most important in their lives is sports. Everything permeates that. When they talk about it, their examples, everything they do somehow has a sports connection. That's what they put into it.

A few people I know are into the fine arts. They love going to, you know, see the productions and whatnot. Everything rotates around that. When you're around them, that's what the discussion revolves around. It's about the arts and the great artists and the great musicians. That is what's around their lives.

Each of us has our core beliefs. So, you know, what is religious freedom? Is that belief freedom? Is it the freedom to worship who or what or where you want to worship so long as it doesn't infringe on other people's freedom to do so also?

10:10

The discussion that we're talking about here: I have to say that I'm very concerned about the direction it's going in, Mr. Chair. When we look at the government's preamble, I would have to say that when we were first moving back to it, I was against the preamble because it wasn't strong enough, and it didn't go paramount for the parents. But after listening to those who are speaking against the government's preamble, I have to go back to the fact that, yes, it is far better than not having it in there.

Obviously, we're to the point now where we're going to have to vote on that versus what many in here are saying against it, saying: “Oh, no. This is terrible. This is overriding the teacher's ability and the curriculum, and it's all going to be taken askew here if we don't vote this amendment down." Because of that I'm going to have to now say, I think, that I'll be voting for this amendment though I'm disappointed that it doesn't have the clause that parents are paramount. That, to me, would make it one step stronger. The argument that's often said, "Well, if we've got people upset on both sides, I guess we've kind of settled somewhere in the middle": I guess that's better than either way on the two far extreme ends.

I want to talk a little bit more about classroom bullying because that's what a lot of this seems to be rotating around, the intolerance and the classroom bullying. Again, I'm always amazed at the bullying that goes on just on people's political views. I've got a son who is right now going to a university and taking political science. He very much has to write in accordance with what the professor wants, and his marks are reflected . . .

An Hon. Member: What school is he going to?

Mr. Hinman: Here in Alberta.

To think that teachers are above their own views is comical. I've gone through school. I've listened to the teachers who want to tell you what's right in poetry or what's right in English. I mean, what I loved was math, I loved physics, I loved chemistry, and I loved biology because there we had a textbook definition, and you could go back there, and you know: what stage is a blastula? And you can go and argue and say, "No, it's at this stage," and then: "Oh, yeah. You're right. I remembered it wrong."

But when it comes to a poem, when it comes to social studies and English or political science, heaven help us, we have what I want to call this bullying for the marks. If you want to get a good mark, you need to follow what the teacher is saying. It's the reality, Mr. Chair.

So for people who seem to think that if we just have this one principle in here, we're going to remove people's bias: that's ridiculous. We're all going to continue to carry what our core beliefs and biases are. Hopefully, as we become more enlightened, we become closer and closer together on that. I usually find that the reason why people are furthest apart is because they have the least understanding of the subject that those two individuals are arguing about. But if we can bring the facts together like lawyers, you know, what can we agree on?

Mr. Hehr: A great place to do that is the public school.

Mr. Hinman: But let's not say that someone doesn't have the right to have that child pulled out of a class that they don't want them exposed to, whether it's grade 5 or grade 7 or grade 3. Again, we see in British Columbia something getting woven into the whole system because that's their new level. This is what was acceptable, and government says that this must be in all of the curriculum, and it must be rewritten to reflect one point of view.

What we're trying to say here in amendment A1:

Whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes that parents have a right to choose the religious and ethical traditions in which their children are raised; that a child's education begins in the home; that parents play a foundational role in the moral and spiritual formation of their children.

This is what they're putting in there, and it's critical that parents have that right.

We have members in here that are basically saying that, no, they shouldn't, that when their child goes to school, they need to be wiped clean like a blackboard and not allowed to carry any of those beliefs that have been taught to them at home – they're going to get reindoctrinated – that therefore we just need to have one public system, that's going to cover it all, and not allow charter, not allow private. It's wrong.

Mr. Chase: Allow it; just don't pay for it.

Mr. Hinman: Well, that's not allowing it because most of those families can't afford to pay for it, hon. member. They pay their taxes – and those are probably the ones that are paying the majority of the taxes – and you don't want to give them their right to the education of their choice. That's what this is about. What's probably the worst is that these individuals are saying that these parents shouldn't have the choice, that they know best.

Again, it goes back to what I was talking about when my child was in grade 1, that they know best. "We're going to teach whole language now. Phonics is thrown out." We make errors. It doesn't always work, so we need to have that tolerance. We need to let the different groups try the different things that they find that are new. There are always new things in learning, and we don't need to wait until the central curriculum board figures something out. That's why teachers are professionals. They have that ability to adapt and to realize that this child is having trouble learning in one area, and the best teachers can go through and relate to all the different kids in the class, not just the majority that are able to learn under the regular curriculum.

I just have to say, Mr. Chair, that I have been compelled to say that I'm going to support this amendment because it's far better than what we had before. I guess we'll get into the discussions further on the bill, after we've voted on this amendment. I can totally understand why I'm getting the e-mails that I am, because of the discussion that has gone on here. That, to me, is just showing the signs of intolerance that many groups have in saying: "We know best. This is what needs to be taught in the curriculum, even in the home-school." That's the way it's defined in this new bill, that the government will have the reach all the way into home-schools to say: this is what you must teach because this is our new curriculum that's going forward.

With that, I'll sit down, and perhaps we'll vote on this amendment.

The Chair: I recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I wasn't totally prepared to speak to this amendment at this point in time, but something has been said over there that made me think. What the Member for Calgary-Varsity has said is that where good discussion, where people can express their ideas, should be done is in the education system. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore has sort of argued against it. If a child has been educated properly in the values of their parents, they should be able to discuss those values because when they're older they're going to want to explain what their beliefs are.

I'm sure that we all in here have our own beliefs, and I can explain mine. I can probably defend them. But you should be able to explain to me why you believe what you do. Whether I agree or not is totally immaterial. The point is that I will understand someone else's thinking. I think that we're missing the whole point, being so narrow minded that we are afraid to defend what we believe in. If we have trained our children properly, they will be able to defend their beliefs and their actions in any kind of a conversation. Maybe not at the elementary school, but they will go home and say blah, blah, blah about the classroom, and the parents will be able to say: "You know what? This is one thought, but this is what we think. This is what we believe. Therefore, this is how we are going to live."

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Yeah. Just to clear it up for the record, the Alberta Liberals are not against private schools. I believe in everyone's right to go start a private school, to send their kids to a private school. I just don't believe the taxpayer needs to be on the hook to pay for that private school.

Thank you.

10:20

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I guess I need to articulate myself a little bit better because what I'm talking about is parental rights and parental choice if they choose not to have their child exposed to something at the time the government says that they need to.

She hit the nail right on the head. She's saying: oh, we're not going to do it in elementary school? There are many jurisdictions where they do. Where does it come through, and when does a parent lose his right to say, "No, I don't want my child exposed to that"? Unfortunately, the real problem why these individuals are sending the e-mails and are concerned is because subjects come up and they're not told in advance. I think there's been lots of debate about that in the past, that it's amazing how all of a sudden someone in the classroom asks a question, and off it goes into one of those areas because little Johnny or little Suzie asked the question, and the teacher thinks, "Oh, my goodness, I have to address this," and steps forward.

What we're talking about here with amendment A1 is parental authority versus the state authority and who is going to have the paramount responsibility for that child. Not all children mature and grow at the same time. I've got some nieces that, to me, are very naive compared to some of my other ones that live in the city or some that live out in the country. They come through at a different age. You cannot say that, well, in grade 7 this is what needs to be taught because that's what's needed in a place like Calgary whereas if they're down south, down maybe in Coutts or somewhere, they're not exposed to all of the problems and the drugs that they might have in Calgary, and parents choose to do it at a different time.

This goes back to the problem of saying that one shoe fits all. It doesn't. Maybe a size 3 child's fits all children at a certain time as they're growing, but size 3 doesn't mean that because they're three years old, they have to have a size 3 shoe. They might be into that when they're one. They might be into it when they're four. This is the problem when we have the state saying: "This is the curriculum. We know this is what needs to be taught, and this is the year that it needs to be taught."

The other interesting thing. For many of the home-schoolers the reason why they've actually brought their kids home is because of bullying problems. We seem, to me, to almost want to stick our head in the sand. We passed legislation and said that there's no bullying, that it doesn't exist. There's lots and lots of bullying that still goes on, and I don't know that we'll ever be able to stop all of it. Despite all of our efforts and all of our legislation about that, it can still go on. So children can be kept home. They might have a learning disability and are being just tortured by their classmates at school, so they're brought home. It's real. It happens.

One bill doesn't fit all, and therefore, you know, parental authority needs to be paramount. This amendment definitely brings that forward to a higher level because it's in the preamble. As the Minister of Energy is trying to say, that's the spirit by which the bill is to be interpreted, by reading the preamble and looking at it and saying: okay; what are we trying to do? This preamble is a major improvement. I think it could have been a little bit better, but it is an improvement, and thank heavens for that. Because of some of the discussion that has gone on here tonight, I'm very concerned.

[Mr. Zwozdesky in the chair]

Mrs. Leskiw: I wasn't going to get up and discuss it at all, but I feel I have to as a parent and as a teacher of 36 years, first of all as a parent and someone who's of Ukrainian Orthodox background that followed their traditions, followed their language, and instilled it in my own children in my home. My children went to French immersion; they learned Ukrainian at home. They were brought up in the Orthodox faith at home and the rites. I would even go back further, to what my father said, that in Canada he was allowed to be the Ukrainian and the Orthodox person he could never be back home in Ukraine. We have those freedoms.

I like Bill 2, and I like what is said in it. I think the amendment addresses concerns from some parents who were a little bit uncomfortable with Bill 2 as is. As a teacher in a classroom we know that our different children's viewpoints come in, and we respect them. You will never get rid of bullying a hundred per cent no matter how hard a teacher will try, but I try to express the views of all the students and encourage them to express their views and encourage respect and tolerance in my students for all types of students.

I had Christians in my classroom, I had Muslims in my classroom, I even had children who were atheist, but they were never put down. They were told to respect one another even if they have a different point of view. Our curriculum does that. We taught different types of government. We taught how people did things in Japan, how people did things in China, how they did it in the Soviet Union. We encouraged our children to role-play and take the views of different people and learn about their different views and then try to think about how they would answer if they were standing in front of the class.

I resent the fact that one group is going to control what everybody else has to say and think. I respect everyone. We have francophone schools in my jurisdiction, we have Catholic schools in my jurisdiction, we have public schools, we have Christian schools, we have a charter school, and we have a lot of excellent, excellent constituents of mine that are home-schooling.

I may not be able to talk the legal jargon that some of the lawyers in this room can talk, but I can tell you as a person who strongly believes in democracy, who strongly believes in a good education system, which I think we do have in Alberta, that we are bringing up our children to be tolerant of all folks regardless of their religion, regardless of the colour of their skin or sexual orientation.

In school parents always had the right. When we got up to say the Lord's Prayer and sing O Canada, my Jehovah's Witness students would just get up and go into the hallway, or they would just stay there and bow their heads and think whatever they'd like to think at that time. When we had Halloween, the parents would choose not to send their children to school for Halloween or the Christmas concert. We respected the parents' rights to do that. There is nothing in here that takes the rights away from any parent. As a teacher of 36 years I don't see it in here; I don't.

An Hon. Member: Have you read it cover to cover?

Mrs. Leskiw: I have read it cover to cover two or three times. I even enlarged it to an eight and a half by 11 so that I could make notes in between the lines. Yes, I have read it. I have read it.

I really think I am a very open-minded person who respects everyone. Personally, I don't even think we need the amendment, but because there is an outcry that we need something – to me, I believe that my colleagues did an excellent job of addressing concerns of some parents in this province, and I thank them. I am going to support the amendment, I'm going to support Bill 2, and I think the government did a really good job of putting this together.

Like I told my parents that are home-schooling: "There is nothing to worry about. The rights you had before you have right now." No government is going to my house and tell me that I can't speak Ukrainian, that I can't celebrate Ukrainian Christmas or Ukrainian Easter, that I have to do it on the 25th when I know I do it on January 7 and that my Easter this year is a week later than everybody else's Easter. I'm going to still follow those. I thank this country for giving me these rights.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere on amendment A1.

Mr. Anderson: I really enjoy the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake when she gets up and says what's on her mind. I appreciate that passion. Maybe it's because she reminds me of my mom or something when she gets all excited about stuff. It's very great to see that kind of passion in the Legislature on a bill. I wish we saw more of it from different folks on different issues. Anyway, I do appreciate that.

I will say that we do have to focus a little bit on what we're talking about here. We're not talking about whether teachers in our schools, by and large, don't do a good job of respecting people's different religious beliefs and backgrounds and so forth. That's not what we're talking about. I think we all agree that they do. We're not talking about the fact that this government doesn't believe in school choice. They do believe in school choice. We've seen it. There are a whole bunch of things that have been brought up here that this bill or this amendment in particular is not really about, and I don't think anyone is arguing that.

10:30

It is a little naive to think that these – there was a statement given that because some parents had a concern with this, we had to do something, and now they're going to be happy about it. Well, I can tell you that's not the case. I don't think that there was any real consultation done on this amendment with the folks who have the problem with the original wording. I know that for a fact. I've received over the past hour well over 50-odd e-mails. Here; I'll read you a few to give you an idea of what we're hearing. They're listening in. There's actually quite a large group listening in live and just e-mailing away. It's crazy. I cleaned out my inbox this morning, and now I'm up to over 200 messages, mostly on this. It's just incredible.

I will say that it is naive to say that there's nothing for these parents to fear, and this is why. Ms McColl was contacted by a reporter and was asked whether this act would affect whether Christian home-schoolers could teach their Biblical beliefs in the home. The response that they got – because, obviously, there are some Biblical beliefs, as was pointed out very clearly earlier on, that don't necessarily conform with certain teachings, certainly, in the typical Alberta Education curriculum but are beliefs that are not extreme beliefs as it was mentioned that they were. No. A lot of these beliefs are held, in some cases, by a majority of Albertans but, certainly, a very large minority of Albertans in most cases, depending on what issue we're talking about.

When asked about this issue and if this act would force individuals in home-schooling settings to teach things contrary to their Biblical beliefs to their children, this reporter reports that according to McColl Christian home-schooling families can continue to impart Biblical teachings in their homes as long as it's not part of their academic program of studies and instructional materials. What they want to do about their ideology elsewhere is their family business, but a fundamental nature of our society is to respect diversity, she added.

Okay. So what is a home-schooling family or a faith-based school supposed to think about a quote like that coming from I think it's the deputy communications officer of the Department of Education? You can correct me if I'm wrong on that. If that's what that individual is saying, then how exactly is a Christian home-schooling family supposed to take that? Are they supposed to say, "That's okay, then"? What it sounds like to me is that this says that apparently there are two kinds of things that happen in the home-schooling setting or in these faith-based settings: one, you teach education over here; then after you're done teaching your children education, you can go over here and talk about religion or talk about your Biblical teachings. That's what it sounds like.

I'll tell you what. There are a lot of folks that, frankly, are not too happy with the idea of an official in the Ministry of Education making a comment like that because it's worrisome. I think it's worrisome. There was a comment here. It was Donna McColl – I hope I'm saying that right – the assistant director of communications, I should say. The same reporter is quoted as saying, in fairness to the Minister of Education, that the comments by this individual were unfortunate. Okay. Good. They were unfortunate. You can see why there is a little bit of worry among some parents.

This act is opening up a door for department officials to be able to essentially force faith-based schools, including Catholic schools, private Christian schools, private schools of other faiths, as well as home-schooling families that want their faith to permeate throughout what they teach their children – they're worried that this is not going to allow them to do so, that they are going to be somehow penalized or sanctioned or what have you. It's very worrisome to them. They are very passionate about it, as we saw on the steps of the Legislature a little while ago, where at least 500 folks came out with their kids to protest this act. I think that they have a good case to be worried. It's a slippery slope – that's for sure – for these folks, and they have a right to be worried about it.

I don't home-school my children. My kids go to public school, as I've mentioned. You have to understand that this is something these folks lose sleep over. This isn't something like where most of us go home tonight and go to sleep and we're happy. We know our kids are going to go to school in the morning, and we're fine about that. These parents are losing sleep over this, and they came to us. It's not like the Wildrose is out there advertising: oh, be scared; be afraid. They came to us and said: this is our concern. I think they have a right to be concerned. Now, I could say, "No, you've got absolutely nothing to be worried about," and then the deputy communications individual says that.

Frankly, a couple of the comments in this Chamber, not just from the Liberals but from over there on the Conservative side, are a little worrisome with regard to how they view parental rights in education. I thought they were worrisome, anyway. I know that a couple of the individuals right now speak so eloquently about how wonderful section 3 of the Human Rights Act was. I no doubt had a hand in penning that and am very proud of being involved in that amendment to the Human Rights Act. These same individuals when I was in that caucus spoke against that exact amendment.

You might be surprised at who they are. The point is that not everybody over there in the government feels the same way about parental rights as, say, the Minister of Energy does or, say, the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka does. I could go through them.

There are very diverse opinions. That's why it's important, in my view, to make sure that we are absolutely clear when we write anything to do with the education of our children that it is very, very clear that parents have the paramount right with regard to choosing what education is right for their children. It is in the UN declaration of human rights. It is a human right. The Supreme Court has said that it is a human right. Do you want me to read some quotes from the Supreme Court on this?

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Anderson: Are you sure? They're really good ones. Let's see. This is Richard B. and Beena B. versus Children's Aid Society of Metropolitan Toronto. Okay? Here; I'll find this again. I just had it.

An Hon. Member: We're sure interested.

Mr. Anderson: Well, you should be interested because you signed up for this job, and if you run for this office, you had better be ready to debate these issues and not be bored to tears. If you're bored, leave.

This is what they said. It's from the same decision, 1995, the Supreme Court of Canada . . .

An Hon. Member: There's intolerance.

Mr. Anderson: I'm saying if they're bored, leave. That's intolerant?

10:40

An Hon. Member: It's the attitude.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, through the chair, please.

Mr. Anderson: Well, the attitude is that apparently this isn't important enough. You don't think we should be here discussing it. You're not interested in what the Supreme Court has said about parental rights. That's what I heard. I would expect that if you're bored, you could just go. There's nothing holding you here, is there? Perhaps the whip.

Some of us are concerned about this, and parents are at home, literally dozens of parents at least, are listening to this conversation.

This is what the Supreme Court said in 1995 in the case I just mentioned.

The right to nurture a child, to care for its development, and to make decisions for it in fundamental matters such as medical care, are part of the liberty interest of a parent. The common law has long recognized that parents are in the best position to take care of their children and make all the decisions necessary to ensure their well-being . . . In other words, parental decision-making must receive the protection of the Charter in order for state interference to be properly monitored by the courts, and be permitted only when it conforms to the values underlying the Charter.

Then this is a Supreme Court decision on an education matter involving parental rights.

Those who administer the province's educational requirements may not do so in a manner that unreasonably infringes on the right of parents to teach their children in accordance with their religious convictions.

Mr. Lukaszuk: There you go. It applies.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. Absolutely.

Mr. Lukaszuk: It's on the books.

Mr. Anderson: Yeah. You didn't seem to be in favour of that a couple of years ago, Minister.

Mr. Lukaszuk: It's already on the books.

Mr. Anderson: That's right. Thank goodness it is. Thank goodness somebody was willing to . . .

The Deputy Chair: Let's continue talking through the chair. I'm enjoying listening to all sides on this. If you could direct your comments here.

Mr. Anderson: It's clear that parental rights need to be paramount, and we need to make sure that we do not do anything in our laws that challenges that. I've heard nothing but challenging that.

It's funny. We've been debating this amendment from the minister, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has been standing up and essentially saying that after hearing some of the stuff in here, he is now supporting this, yet still there are some government members over there that seem to be attacking the Wildrose for our strong position on this. I'm not quite understanding that. I thought maybe there would be some back and forth, but it seems that apparently we're on different sides of this issue. We're saying that we think we need to strengthen this further, that we need to make sure that parents feel comfortable that they will have the paramount responsibility and the paramount rights with regard to the education of their children.

I do not trust this minister or any politician or any human being who says: just trust me. I don't buy that. We have laws for a reason. We pass laws for a reason. This minister has not, in my experience, shown time and time again . . . [A cellphone rang] That's all right. Start dancing. There's music being played in here.

I don't see that this minister has an overly strong track record, in my view, of standing up for parental rights. He seems to have gotten religion, so to speak, with regard to parental rights since becoming Minister of Education, but I would like to see a little bit of a longer track record before I say: "Oh, yeah. This is just fine. I'll trust you." I think parents around this province who care about this issue feel the same. So we will be bringing other amendments.

I have no qualms about supporting this amendment that the minister has brought because it's better than what's there now, but it should be stronger. It should recognize the paramountcy of parental rights and education, and it does not do that. But it is a stronger language than what is in the bill now, so I will sigh and reluctantly support the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Chair. This is something that I've been interested in for quite a while, and that is parental rights. I am always looking for opportunities to strengthen parental rights. This government has been moving in that direction very strongly, but I am really concerned that there is so much misinformation around this – so much misinformation – and there are people working, it seems, to create more misinformation.

You know, something that just blows my mind is that people are concerned about section 16, which is the Alberta Human Rights Act. It is not the Ontario human rights act. It is not the Canadian Human Rights Act. It is the Alberta Human Rights Act, and in the Alberta Human Rights Act parents – parents – are the ones who have control over religion.

Let me actually read what is in the Alberta Human Rights Act, section 11.1:

- (1) A board as defined in the School Act shall provide notice to a parent or guardian of a student where courses of study, educational programs or instructional materials, or instruction or exercises, prescribed under that Act include subject-matter that deals primarily and explicitly with religion, human sexuality or sexual orientation.

What this orientation is that it puts the parents in the driver's seat here.

Let me go on.

- (2) Where a teacher or other person providing instruction, teaching a course of study or educational program or using the instructional materials referred to in subsection (1) receives a written request signed by a parent or guardian of a student that the student be excluded from the instruction, course of study, educational program or use of instructional materials, the teacher or other person shall in accordance with the request of the parent or guardian and without academic penalty permit the student

- (a) to leave the classroom or place where the instruction, course of study or educational program is taking place or the instructional materials are being used for the duration of the part of the instruction, course of study or educational program, or the use of the instructional materials, that includes the subject-matter referred to in subsection (1), or

- (b) to remain in the classroom or place without taking part in the instruction, course of study or educational program or using the instructional materials.

- (3) This section does not apply to incidental or indirect references to religion, religious themes, human sexuality or sexual orientation in a course of study, educational program, instruction or exercises or in the use of instructional materials.

The thing is that this is the Alberta Human Rights Act. Now, I know that generally in some parts of society human rights legislation has a bad name. It really does. It has a bad name for actually persecuting people, you know, and sort of pushing things in a direction that they don't want to be pushed in. But this is Alberta. This is the Alberta Human Rights Act. In Alberta we actually believe in parental rights. We believe that parents are the ones who should decide and should be in control when it comes to religion and when it comes to sexual orientation.

You know, there's this message that's going around the Internet saying: oh, it's terrible that our new Education Act refers to the Alberta Human Rights Act. But it's the Human Rights Act which actually protects parents. And they want that taken away? Shouldn't they be insisting that the Alberta Human Rights Act be referred to in this act? I mean, if they really do care that parents are the ones who should be making these decisions, then why aren't they insisting on it? You know, there's just way too much misinformation out there. Somehow we've got to start getting the actual facts out there.

10:50

So if there is anyone at 10 to 11 at night who is watching what's going on here in the Legislature, please – please – talk to your friends and actually get the message out there that this is Alberta. We're not talking about what's happening in Ontario or Quebec or wherever else, somewhere down in the States. We're talking about Alberta, where we really care about parents and their rightful place when it comes to their children.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I just want to read into the record the universal declaration of human rights, article 26(2). We've heard quite a bit about article 26(3), but I'd like to put on the record article 26(2), which has a rather broader view.

Article 26(2) of the universal declaration of human rights states:

Education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. It shall promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among all nations, racial or religious groups, and shall further the activities of the United Nations for the maintenance of peace.

Now, Alberta isn't an anomaly when it comes to respect for individual rights. Somehow it's being suggested that in other provinces they have less concern for parental rights than we have in Alberta. It worries me to think – and I'm not being facetious here – that there are parents losing sleep over the fear that they'll no longer have the right to home-school their child. That worries me. It also worries me that in a similar manner individuals felt that the long gun registry gave the police the right to come to their homes, kick down their door, and take their registered long guns.

Mr. Chair, I see this as a degree of paranoia that is not brought forward by the laws and protections, whether it's the Alberta Charter of Rights or whether it's the universal rights or whether it's the Canadian Charter of Rights. If we have people who feel so isolated and so harmed by a system such as the public education system that they think their rights are going to be eroded, then we need as an Assembly, as a government to communicate to these people that they are equal participants in the larger discussion in Alberta with regard to education.

The individuals who came and stood up for their rights to home education had every right to do so, and there wasn't all of a sudden a descendance of sheriffs hauling them away because they were concerned about their right to home-school their children. Somehow the public education system is being portrayed as intruding on individual families' values, whether religious or secular values. I don't know how it has come over the hundred years of the existence of the public school system in Alberta that suddenly now it's being viewed as the oppressor, and therefore we have to make sure that amendment A1 is there to keep those public education trustees, teachers, violators of human rights from interfering with the God-given rights of individual parents to educate their child both in terms of their curriculums and their religious views.

The public system upholds the rights of all individuals regardless of creed, regardless of race, regardless of religion, regardless of the size of their wallet, regardless of whether they decide to pray to multiple gods or to a single god. They're welcome in the public school system, and that is the strength of the public school system.

Having a strong public school system does not suggest that other systems are disenfranchised or that they do not have a right to exist along with the public school system. The majority of Albertans send their children to the public school system, whether it's the separate version of the public school system or the secular version of the public school system, by their personal choice. In the same manner other individuals have equal rights to send their children to a private school, to a charter school, to a religious school, or to home-school them.

I don't understand where amendment A1 is coming from that suggests that those rights aren't already here, why it feels the need to add an extra clause or preamble to guarantee rights that currently exist, whether they're universal rights, whether they're provincial rights, or whether they're Charter rights.

What I fail to understand, Mr. Chair, is the reason for the fear in this province that somehow their rights are going to be relinquished. I don't think that's the intent of this government. I don't think it's the intent of the Wildrose Party should it form the next government. It's certainly not the intention of the Liberals, and I don't see the NDP suddenly appearing and kicking in front doors and hauling off home-schooled children, kicking and screaming, to be placed in the prison of the public school system.

At some point, Mr. Chair, we have to get the paranoia out into the open, and reach out to these people who feel that their rights of religion, their rights of education, their rights to bring up their children are being somehow taken away by the public school system. Paranoia is an unfounded fear. We obviously need to do a better job of educating our populace about what public education in Alberta stands for. Amendment A1 doesn't do it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other speakers to amendment A1?

If not, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We're back to the main Committee of the Whole debate now on Bill 2. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Bill 2, like I said at the beginning of the debate before these unfortunate amendments from the government side and then to pile on the Wildrose side the unfortunate amendments that, in my view, were unnecessary to do what's needed to provide quality education here in this province to our students – you know, the bill had some good things in it. Some of it I couldn't always disagree with.

11:00

Nevertheless, if I look at the bill in its total, it is a very prescriptive bill. It, in fact, leaves a lot to regulation. I guess from the Alberta Liberal side, we were disappointed that it didn't have more teeth to it in the fact that it would say things or even aspirational goals like would be in the preamble on class sizes, on issues like that that we believe are of fundamental importance to the future direction of bettering Alberta student outcomes and allowing our students to achieve to the best of their abilities.

I guess one of those other things we would have liked to have seen in the Education Act was some recognition by the government that school fees should not be charged at our local schools. From our side of things we believe that school is a basic right and an obligation for governments. It's a good thing for governments to be involved. It allows people from all walks of life, whether they're rich or poor, to go to the local neighbourhood school and to take part and learn how to become engaged citizens, critical thinkers, and participants in a modern economy as well as a democracy.

We think those are good things, but we believe there should be something that is provided at least for the public education system and the constitutionally protected separate and francophone situation which should be paid for out of the coffers of the revenue generated by the province. When you add an element like school fees to it, that detracts from equality of opportunity, the ability of a child to take part in the education system whether they're rich or poor, whether they're born of a rich family or not, an ability for parents to know that the one thing that they don't have to worry about is at least the cost around education.

We've seen over the course of time school fees gradually creep up. I hate to always be the person talking about when I went to school, but when I went to school, there were no school fees. You showed up on day one, and oftentimes even the school contained the notebook, the pencils. All that stuff was provided for in our education system, and that has changed somewhat, Mr. Chair. In fact, we see families now facing bills sometimes of up to $185 per child to go to a local public school. If they have two or three children, possibly four, this is a significant impediment, we believe, to the concept of equality of opportunity and the goals of what a public education system should be.

This extends not only to what I say on school fees in terms of what they do at the school but also to transportation fees that have been summarily passed along by either a lack of funds by the school boards or the school board passing along those costs to parents. We believe it's an obligation of the government to provide free public education. To be fair, if you're not going to build a school in a neighbourhood where children reside, then you should be on the hook for the transportation costs as well.

You know, we believe the government has a role to play in creating educational opportunities, and these fees detract from that principle and detract from people being able to ensure their ability to attend school with the impact of what has happened or what their financial status may be. You can imagine the case, even in some instances where the difficulty of a parent comes in when they can't afford school fees. I have heard that in Sturgeon county that school board has enlisted bill collectors to actually enforce school fee payments. Now, that is what I have heard. I do not have confirmation of that, but I heard it from a fairly good source that this is happening. That is some of those things that I find would be unfortunate here in Alberta, a province with the wealth and the forward thinking that many people have in this province, to have that occur.

On that note, I would like to pass out this amendment to all my colleagues in the House and then if I could speak to that. I'll just read it in so that people can have an advance before I speak to it. It says:

Mr. Hehr to move that Bill 2, Education Act, be amended in section 13

- (a) in subsection (2) by adding "Subject to subsection (4)," before "A board may charge", and
- (b) by adding the following after subsection (3):
 - (4) Tuition fees charged by a board under subsection (2) shall not include an amount for
 - (a) textbooks,

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, before proceeding, it sounds like a lengthy one. Why don't you present it to the pages and then continue with your reading of it? This will be amendment A2.

Mr. Hehr: King Solomon could not have offered such a wise suggestion, Mr. Chair, so I thank you for that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. With the permission and concurrence of all members, we'll allow him to continue reading it so that we can get a little bit of a head start on understanding it.

Continue on.

Mr. Hehr: Well, hopefully, the page brings me back a copy so that I can refer to it and go from there.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, would you just wait one second, and we'll return one copy to you. Then we'll invite you to continue reading it into the record.

Okay. Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, we invite you to continue with what will be called amendment A2.

Mr. Hehr: Okay.

- (b) lab equipment,
- (c) school maintenance or renovation,
- (d) transportation, or
- (e) any other items prescribed by regulations.

The hon. Minister of Education has stated that he is against school fees and believes that – I'm not trying to put words in his mouth. I believe that he believes that these should not be charged for at our local school boards: things like textbooks, lab equipment, school maintenance or renovation, transportation and the like. So I think by adding this into the act, it would provide some guidance to school boards and, more than guidance, it would outright say: here's what you're doing, and you better follow the Education Act on this process or you're going to hear about it. I know the minister has stated that he is having conversations with boards right now, trying to get to the bottom of what's being charged. This would be the clearest, easiest, most efficient way to ensure that this practice is not followed or happening in Alberta.

Those are my comments, Mr. Chair. I'd appreciate hearing other members weigh in on this issue, whether they believe this amendment fits within the kind and character of the Education Act.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, please, on amendment A2.

11:10

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking in favour of amendment A2. Based on my 34 years of experience in the school system, I think it's important to go back somewhat in history. I'm not going to go back to the creation of the first wheel or the discovery of fire, but I would like to go back to 1992-93 Alberta. Prior to 1992-1993 school boards collected half of their funds from the education portion of local property taxes, and the government supplied the other half. Now, in 1993 the opportunity for school boards to assess and collect their own fees was taken away, and at that point, in taking away the local autonomy of school boards to make decisions as to how their funds were to be collected and expended, the government took over the responsibility, the entire responsibility I would add, of funding for education.

Now, I know in my experience as a teacher – first at Jerry Potts elementary, then at Langevin elementary-junior high, at Sir John A. Macdonald junior high school, and then finishing up at F.E. Osborne junior high in Varsity – that parents felt the need, the necessity, to augment the money supplied by the government in order to buy sufficient sets of textbooks. F.E. Osborne was in a fairly well-to-do, middle-class to upper-middle-class district, yet we did not have sets of textbooks for each of our students. We had a class set, and at the end of the day students, first-come, first-served, could sign out a textbook to take home. At the high school level textbooks were basically rented, and if the textbooks were returned in a reasonable condition, then the fee for the rental would be returned.

Parents at F.E. Osborne, as I say I note the middle-class socio-economic circumstance, felt that it was necessary to supplement the money provided by the government to purchase textbooks, to purchase lab equipment, to provide maintenance or renovations for the school. Half of the children that attended F.E. Osborne school came from Hawkwood, so transportation fees were a concern of those parents, and the school board gradually started expanding the walking distance to schools for students in order to qualify for busing.

Now, we had a very strong parent council – and I was the teacher representative on that parent council for a number of years – and the parents felt that it was necessary to fund raise. We sold the traditional entertainment books, we adventured in magazine subscription sales, and the parents applied every 18 months to be a part of a . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, are you rising on a point of order?

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Chair. Relevance. The section that's being amended is a section with respect to fees charged to out-of-province students. Clearly, in the section it says: "A board shall not charge any . . . fees with respect to the enrolment in a school operated by the board of its resident students or the resident student of any other board or the Government." The section that's being amended is section (2), which refers to fees charged to students that are not resident of any board or the government; in other words, out-of-province students.

The fact that they were selling books in their local neighbourhood and there were perhaps fees to rent textbooks in the local neighbourhood is entirely irrelevant to the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you for that irrelevance note. I enjoy, actually, on CBC the Irrelevant Show. Maybe that's how I got sidetracked, hon. Minister of Human Services.

The point I was trying to make, which I personally thought was highly relevant, was that it's because of parents' desires to have the total education costs covered by the taxes that they pay into the system that, unfortunately, their education property taxes and those of their neighbours find their way into general revenue, and the whole reasoning, back to 1992, of the education portion of the property tax has been lost.

School fees, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo mentioned, whether they be for transportation or for basic necessities such as textbooks and lab equipment, are a surcharge upon the public system.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you for attempting to clarify that, but I think it's a good cautionary note that has been raised. If we could make it just a little more focused on what the actual amendment is and tie it in better, it would be easier to follow the debate. Thank you.

Mr. Chase: Okay. I will attempt to use either a reef knot or a granny knot to provide greater focus. [interjections] Maybe considering the constitution of tonight's Assembly, I should be using a sheet bend. Anyway, so much for my scouting knot-tying directing abilities.

Debate Continued

Mr. Chase: Parents are being charged a surcharge for students' education because the province does not provide the necessary funding for educational basics. The Liberals are suggesting that the school board is not the one at fault for trying to make up the fees that the province doesn't provide, yet they're the ones that oversee the fee collection, that has been passed on to them by the province. What A2 is suggesting is that school fees be eliminated, that the province use the funding from the educational portion of the property tax, which now only accounts for about 35 per cent, I believe, of the true cost of education, and increase the allotment such that these extraneous fees are no longer required.

Hopefully, hon. Chair, I have better focused attention on the need to eliminate school fees. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other speakers to amendment A2 as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo? Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, are you rising on this amendment?

Dr. Swann: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: On A2, then.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will speak to the issue of school fees. I'm hearing from especially some of the lower income constituents in Calgary-Mountain View and some very close to my grandchildren, who inhabit the school near where I live, that school fees are a burden and that many of the people living in the inner city, as I do, struggle with the extra costs associated with elementary and junior high school, where my grandchildren go.

I guess the question for us is to consider the investment we're making in our young people, the investment we're making in especially those who are struggling in our society to not only get the financial means together to live a healthy life and to feed their children well and to pay their bills and to provide some reasonably stimulating activities for their children but also the whole investment we're making in future generations. There is no better investment that we can make than in our children.

If we are forcing families to scrimp and in some cases not get proper nutrition, not get the kind of recreational opportunities, the field trips, if they're compromising the kinds of quality-of-life issues that many of us have enjoyed, we are not serving the long-term best interests of this province, and we're not serving the health and developmental needs of children. It strikes me that education is the very most foundational service that all governments should provide for their children.

11:20

The fee is now ranging between $300 and $500 in some schools – and it's about $300 in the school that my grandchildren go to – to cover field trips and extra materials in the schools and artistic endeavours within the schools and so on. I'm not sure about the transportation issues, but clearly some students are either putting their families in an embarrassing situation, or they are forgoing some of these activities which bring the students together, which help them have a shared experience, sometimes outside the school, and enrich their lives in ways that are really hard to measure.

From my point of view, there is no more foundational a contribution that government can make, that the public purse can make than to a stable, fully supported educational system where we are not either nickel and diming people or forcing them into positions where they are making tough choices in their families about what they can and cannot participate in and share in with their friends and colleagues.

Mr. Hancock: Alberta should front those for B.C. and Saskatchewan students?

Dr. Swann: For every student who is here. I mean, how long do you think they're going to stay? We don't know if they're going to migrate here, and I would hope that anyone in Canada would fund the supports that are necessary for children to reach their potential.

It's distressing to me to think that we're going to nickel and dime or actually compromise family life because of these impositions, which for us in the upper and middle classes are not a barrier. But I know from my own family's experience in some of these schools that it's a serious barrier and an embarrassment and a shame, actually, for many in these lower income families who are simply not able to share in those experiences with others.

I don't see why we would discriminate between children of the province and children outside the province who have moved here to do whatever months or years of school they will be taking here. Their families are struggling, and we are putting them into the position where we're saying: "These activities in the school are a little bit elite. These you may not be able to participate in. With these you may not be able to feel equal to other students in the school." Of course, kids are merciless in their judgments of others who can't meet the same standard or participate in the same activities or who don't have the same skills as a result of not participating in some of those same activities.

That's what public education is. It's an equalizer. It's providing the same foundational base for all citizens. To me, the psychological well-being and, obviously, the physical well-being of children and choices around good food and activity opportunities as well as the specific formal learning opportunities have to be supported. It flies in the face of what we say we want for the future, which is a healthy, well-behaved, articulate, well-rounded population, when some are increasingly strained by their own financial circumstances.

The recent book by Kevin Taft highlighted the notion that income for individuals in Alberta has not gone up very significantly at all in real dollars since 1989 whereas corporations' has gone up about 434 per cent in terms of their net real dollars. Real dollars for 2009 was the measurement he was using, comparing the last 20 years up to 2009.

I think the reality is, especially in Alberta, where we see a tremendous disparity now between the wealthy and the less wealthy, is that we're seeing much more of this pinching at the bottom of the income ladder, where parents and families are having to choose between very important recreational, artistic, and in some cases essential activities around, say, computing and new technology, that some schools are simply not sharing in. A school in my neighbourhood is a case in point. They don't actually have more than a couple of computers.

The question becomes: how do we enhance the capacity of all these children and their families? Investing in the children is investing in the families. They all become more capable, more esteemed, more healthy and balanced families and contribute to the community when they feel supported, when they feel included, when they feel equal to the rest of the students.

It's basically trying to eliminate discrimination, eliminate inequality, eliminate the great and growing disparity, in this province more than perhaps in any other province, between wealthy and lower income, which Taft has expressed very well. Richard Wilkinson has indicated very, very well in his book around income inequality in populations the social, educational, and developmental problems. Inequality, more than poverty itself, creates the kinds of environment in which tremendous social problems develop.

I'm really disappointed that there is even much of a debate here. Our goal should be to try to create social capital, create social equity, create reduced income disparity. We express that in our commitment to children, to this most foundational of all our developmental experiences, which is the school system. I hope people in this Legislature are getting that. I think most people here do value this. It seems like a small point to eliminate these school fees, and it is a small point for most of us. That's the problem. We don't live at the ground level, where as a doctor I used to see people struggling to meet their basic needs, to make choices between utilities and rent and activities and nutrition and recreation and creative pursuits.

This is translated very much into increased behavioural problems, learning problems, acting out socially, criminal addictions problems. We don't seem to see the ramifications of inequity, if I could put it that way. Again, it's not a burden for 80 per cent of our population. Why are we not creating at least one institution in this province where everyone is equal, where everyone is given exactly the same opportunities unless there are extra things parents can afford and want to do?

But within the school system there should be no disparity, there should be no inequities – and I'm belabouring the point – that create unnecessary stress in a society that's already stressed and competitive and finding itself alienated and divided as a community. We're simply adding to that by not recognizing the need for eliminating this relatively minor thing called school fees, which is a symptom of a society that still believes so strongly in individualism and competition and trying to be better than the other. This just feeds that notion that if your dad isn't earning enough, you don't get certain things in school that your peers get.

Well, surely, there is one institution in our society that should be able to come to grips with this and say: "This is the leveler. This is the level playing field, where we're going to make sure everyone feels equal up to the age of, well, at least grade 9." In high school there are all kinds of extra issues that come up and expensive sports and artistic endeavours that we perhaps can't fund, but surely in kindergarten through grade 9 we could create a really level playing field, an equality, a sense of co-operation and community building and support and encouragement, which is what this is all about. We're building a Canadian and an Albertan dream. We're building a sense of real solidarity, where we appreciate you regardless of what you are able to afford in terms of activities.

11:30

I don't need to go on further, Mr. Chairman. I've said what I needed to say, and I appreciate very much the sentiments behind this. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has indicated in his amendment, we on this side of the House happen to see a world where there's greater equity, greater equality, and a greater sense of community. The other side seems to value competition, individualism, and the market over everything else. It's a symptom, I guess, of the differences and why ultimately Albertans are going to have to choose what values they see reflected on the two sides of the House. It's coming up very soon.

I hope Albertans will come back to their roots and recognize that notwithstanding the tremendous amount of money these folks will be able to throw at the election, notwithstanding the amount of hype and promises that this government continues to make to people, they simply are not able to follow through on the centralist values of equity, sustainability, community building, and a real sense that we have to do this in a different way if we are going to move into the 21st century without even more social problems, even more costs related to learning and behaviour and lack of productivity and mental illness. We have to make a fundamental shift in what we are trying to do as a society. Alberta stands out, it seems to me, in Canada in terms of the kinds of social indicators that suggest we are not building a health society, we are not contributing to equity, we're not contributing to a stronger sense that we are working together for a common purpose and that everyone has to succeed for us to be a healthy, sustainable, prosperous province.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

I have the Minister of Education next on the list.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've reviewed the amendment carefully. I'm not sure if the hon. member who tabled the amendment recalls, but in question period, when he asked questions relevant to school fees, I thought I was clear, but I will repeat for the record that I have asked the Department of Education to review any and all school fees that are being charged in the province of Alberta by all of the 62 school boards and to analyze whether the school fees are in any way duplicating any of the funding that is provided through the Ministry of Education by the taxpayers of Alberta for provision of public education and, where there are duplications, to make sure that we set forth a policy for all school boards outlining what is and is not an appropriate fee placed on parents and students in our schools.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, as is well known, we're passing a budget right now in the province. The budget has increased from $6.8 billion to $7.1 billion every three years. It's the first budget ever in the history of the province that is sustainable for three years and predictable. It's not a skimpy budget by any standard compared to any jurisdiction in North America and, frankly, world-wide.

We need to look at school fees and see why they're being charged. There are instances, Mr. Chairman, where school fees are appropriate, where parents are choosing programs that are definitely of choice or choosing schools that are of choice, that are more distant than the nearest one available – transportation in that case is appropriate – where there are extracurricular activities offered, which are optional. School fees may be appropriate. But there ought to be no fees for provision of what we consider in Alberta to be basic education. The word "basic," actually, is the understatement of the year because we know that what we consider basic actually is world-class education. No fees ought to be charged for provision of that public education, that is required to graduate and obtain an Alberta high school diploma.

We will be reviewing that. Simply putting about five line items of what one should not be charging fees for is one way. The amendment will be one way of addressing it, but it's not detailed enough. We will be looking at the actual fees that are being charged, what is and what isn't appropriate. We'll also get parents involved. We'll consult with parents to find out what they feel is or isn't appropriate, and we will have a policy developed on school fees in this province over the next few months.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

I have the Minister of Human Services next.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I rose earlier with respect to relevance when Calgary-Varsity was speaking, and I want to say that for the most part I really enjoyed the speech by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View about the need for equality and equity in our system and his view on school fees. Unfortunately, both of them were referring to something entirely different than what's the subject of the amendment.

Just a quick review. Section 13 is about tuition fees, not actually school fees but tuition fees. Section 13 provides that "a board shall not charge any tuition fees with respect to the enrolment in a school operated by the board of its resident students or the resident student of any other board or the Government." In other words, resident students of any board, which covers most of the province, or the government, which covers those areas in the province that are not covered by a board, cannot be charged tuition fees.

There are no tuition fees charged for a resident student. So who's a resident student? Well, a resident student, Mr. Chairman, is defined in the act, surprisingly. It's "a person who is entitled to have access to an education program under section 3 and who meets the requirements of section 4."

Well, what does section 3 say? Section 3 is:

Every person

- (a) who [was] at September 1 . . . 6 years of age or older and younger than 21 years of age,
- (b) who is a resident of Alberta, and
- (c) who has a parent who is a resident of Canada.

A person is "a resident student of the board of the school division in which the student resides." That's a very important change in the act that should be pointed out. Previously you were a resident defined by where your parents live. Now you're a resident defined by where the student lives, so if the student lives in Alberta, by definition they're a resident student, and they're a resident student of a board if they live within the confines of the jurisdiction of the school board, which covers most of the province, or a student of the government if they're in one of those areas that's not covered by a board.

Under section 13 no tuition fees shall be charged by a board for any student who actually lives in Alberta. What is subsection (2), then? Well, subsection (2) allows a board to charge a tuition fee for anyone who is not a resident of Alberta. By that, your parents could be in Newfoundland as long as the student lives here. Call that the hockey team amendment if you want. They came to play hockey at a school in southern Alberta, they're a resident student, and we don't charge tuition fees. But if you're a foreign student who is coming here for an education because we have an excellent education system here, that's not the purview of the taxpayer of Alberta. Therefore, school boards are entitled to charge a tuition fee. So it's a foreign student, essentially, from outside the country, because if you're a student from inside the country, you live here, and you're a resident student.

What the hon. member's amendment is attempting to do is to say that those tuition fees that we're charging to students who come from the United States or some other part of the world should not include costs for textbooks, lab equipment, school maintenance fees. This is not the school fee issue that the hon. member was addressing very eloquently. This is a question of tuition fees for foreign students. I'm not sure if that's what he intended to amend, but that's what he's trying to amend.

I would suggest that Alberta taxpayers are wonderful people. They fund a wonderful education system. But I think you have to draw the line somewhere at what they're expected to fund in terms of students of the world. So this section 13 allows for tuition fees to be charged to students who are coming from foreign countries, essentially. It's not about the school fees at all.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Hehr: There's a saying in politics: why let the facts get in the way of a good story or a good question? So I will stand by the amendment, and I'm sure if the hon. Minister of Human Services with his legal acumen and the like could find a better place for this in the act or a more appropriate place, that would be – well, if he agrees with the spirit of what the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View stated, which it sounds like he agreed in principle with, I'm assuming that this amendment will be showing up, then, from the government side as they go forward and, with his background, get into the legislation.

I guess from our side, you know, we would still stand by the spirit if our exact placement is not correct in that we would like to see this in the legislation to provide for some of those things that we believe in. Equality of opportunity: whether you're born into a rich family or a poor family, you get one place where everything is equal, where you can build your life. You can go forward and build your life to the best of your ability not impeded by wealth or other constraints that are, frankly, sometimes because of your circumstances. So I appreciate the hon. member going through, I guess, the technical faux pas of our amendment. Nevertheless, I believe the thrust of it is clear enough and the intent of it is clear enough that this could be redrafted if the government wished.

11:40

I also appreciate the hon. minister's comments in that he is trying to look into this matter regarding school fees. I believe that if he is looking into it, it will have to continue to be regularly monitored, vigilantly covered in that his budgeting process is going to have to recognize that education has certain expenses attached to it. The minister did mention his three-year budget and how it was going to provide the necessary sustainable funding to education. There's a saying in insurance contracts that sometimes what the large print giveth, the small print taketh away. There are many things in the Education budget that are funded, you know – for instance, the teachers' pension liability, some maintenance issues, some other infrastructure issues – that don't necessarily apply directly to classroom funding. I will remind the minister that for that there is only a 1 per cent increase this year when there is a 2.5 per cent inflation rate – at least, that's what the government numbers say – and that we'll have an increase in students to our population.

Nevertheless, those are my comments. I appreciate the minister looking into school fees and the hon. Human Services minister for pointing out the error in our ways and that possibly this will come back as a government amendment because he seemed to support what the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was saying.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: I'd just like to assist the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. It's section 57 that school fees are under. Just so you realize, it's all subject to regulations. There's nothing in the act that actually addresses school fees. It's going to be in the regulations. There isn't anything in here. It doesn't say that. "The Minister may make regulations respecting school fees," and "Notwithstanding section 13, a board may charge a parent of a student fees in accordance with the regulations."

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity is next.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I just wanted to thank the hon. Minister of Human Services for detailing the specifics of my irrelevance. Quite often my irrelevance is dealt with in a very generic fashion as opposed to specifying that we were wrong in talking about school fees under section 13. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for pointing out the correct section, being 57, but then also pointing out that it's in regulations and, to the best of my knowledge, the regulations aren't printed within the bill. Therefore the whole issue of school fees and how they're assessed and why they're assessed and their justification is in another document that is not open to the public system although it's the public system that is being discussed in Bill 2. So my concern now has to do with the relevance of an act that puts things into regulation which are not available for the general public to see and interpret and understand.

Mr. Chair, this goes to a larger issue of the government's usage of regulations, a rulebook to conduct a game that only the government knows how that game is to be played out. While I appreciate the hon. Minister of Human Services, formerly the Minister of Education, pointing out the lack of relevance of the section we chose on school fees, it would be interesting if either the Minister of Education or the Minister of Human Services, previously the Minister of Education, could explain to the general public that pays taxes towards education why the regulations that govern school fees are not covered in the act because that's at the heart of the matter that we as Liberals are trying to resolve.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other speakers to amendment A2?

Mr. Lukaszuk: To answer that member's question so the Liberals can focus on something else and have that question answered . . .

Mr. Chase: I'll be able to sleep tonight.

Mr. Lukaszuk: That's right. The member will be able to sleep tonight.

The member will probably agree that this particular act has been the most consulted piece of legislation in the history of this province. It went through two rounds of consultation as a bill, Bill 18 first and then drafted, the actual draft went before Albertans, and they had a chance to comment on the draft, and here we are with Bill 2.

Not similar because not as robust a process, obviously, will take place relevant to drafting regulations. The day-to-day operations – and operations of a school system of this size cannot be fully legislated. Imagine, hon. member, if a school board all of a sudden wanted to engage in some extracurricular activity or some program, some international travel opportunity for students, and then all of a sudden the act wouldn't allow them to charge extra fees. We would have to gather here in this Chamber and legislate additional fees. So matters like these are regulated, and regulations can be changed.

One thing Albertans should know – and I've already made that undertaking publicly to all stakeholders. When I talk about stakeholders, I'm not only talking about school boards and the ATA, but I'm talking about parents and students directly and not-for-profit communities, business communities, coaches, and community leaders and others. We will be consulting on drafting the regulations to this act to flesh out what the legislation actually means. There will be over the next year to year and a half a series of public consultations with stakeholders on the regulations that will be accompanying this act, so any and all parties involved will be able to comment.

One thing that this act actually puts into place that wasn't under the old School Act of 1988 is that it gives parents a real voice. Parent councils now will be directly feeding into the minister's office. As you would know, at my last town hall meeting teleconference over 1,000 parents actually called in. A very good exercise. The next one, by the way, is on March 19, and I imagine that many parents will call in again.

We're also formalizing student councils, students' unions that will now be feeding directly into the minister's office, so they will be consulted directly on an ongoing basis. Obviously, the ATA and the ASBA and the school boards have a direct line to the minister's office. So the drafting of regulations will be very well informed by the taxpayers – and, frankly, the stakeholders are all Albertans – and those who are directly involved in education.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I want to thank the minister for extending the consultation to parents and to students as well as school boards and the Alberta Teachers' Association. The problem, Mr. Chair, that I see is that again we see consultation after the fact. What the hon. minister is suggesting is: "Trust us. Pass this bill. Accept it in all its glory or lack thereof, and then after we pass it, we'll come back to you, and we'll consult on the regulations. We'll have you provide your input, whether it's an electronic town hall or to a website or a direct conversation."

I'm pleased that the minister welcomes this after-the-fact participation, but my question to the minister is in all sincerity: after the consultation takes place, will the final regulations be published so that parents, school boards, students, and teachers know what the regulations are that govern the collection of fees at their particular institution?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. Minister, did you wish to comment?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Sure. Just very briefly, what is and isn't acceptable under school fees will be consulted on as a stand-alone item, and it will be consulted on prior to actually passing new regulations. I made an undertaking. I find it inappropriate that there is such a variance between school boards, and I want parents throughout the entire province to have a level of certainty of what is and what isn't appropriate. So this matter, frankly, may not need to be even regulated. We will have a decision on it, and we will have all school boards adhere to the same standards relative to what is and isn't appropriate for school fees.

11:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Chase: I realize it's 10 to 12, but I want to indicate both to Hansard and to anyone tuned in that am I still lucid.

The question I asked the minister – and I'm very pleased, Mr. Minister, that you're attempting to answer my information request. But when all is said and done and the consultation is over and it's been thorough, et cetera, et cetera, will the regulations be published so that school boards understand what their limitations are so that students and parents know what they're being charged for if, in fact, charges were made? We hope they won't. How can you regulate a fee or any other kind of circumstance when the individuals who are being regulated don't know what your regulations or rules are? That's my question.

Mr. Lukaszuk: They definitely will be published. Once we draft what is and isn't appropriate, that will be not only on our department's website, but it will be clearly communicated to parent councils, to the ATA, to school boards, and to any stakeholders, outlining what is and isn't an appropriate fee.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The School Act, based on the majority the government currently experiences prior to the election, will be passed. There is no doubt that that will occur. Can the hon. minister potentially project how long these extended consultations on regulations are likely to take place? Do you in your mind as Minister of Education hope to accomplish this consultation and the publishing of regulations within a particular time period? For example, would you hope to have them in place by the end of the 2012 year?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I would remind you that we're still on amendment A2. As soon as we have that voted, then we can proceed with the larger discussion in Committee of the Whole.

I'll invite the hon. minister to respond briefly if he feels that it's appropriate to do so.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, the only thing I can comment on at this point is that the Member for Calgary-Varsity is being very presumptuous at this stage that this bill will pass in this sitting of the Legislature. If our friends from the Wildrose and others continue to file amendments on a very narrow aspect of the bill – I know, based on this robust consultation that we had throughout the province over the last year and a half, that this bill is very popular. Your presumption may be wrong. So my commitment to any timelines at this point in time would be inappropriate because, frankly, I am not as confident at this point, at midnight, that this bill indeed will pass. I certainly hope so. There are hundreds of thousands of students and parents and stakeholders who hope that this legislation will pass, but that will be subject to the opposition, how long you want to sit here and debate it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

I wonder, with that bit of a deviation, as I will refer to it, if we could get back to amendment A2.

Mr. Chase: Yes, and to refocusing on A2, which had to do with school fees.

Mr. Chair, it was suggested that I was being presumptuous, and prior to that it was suggested that I was being irrelevant. Therefore, I am wearing an awful lot of adjectives tonight.

With regard to the presumption, based on my eight years of reality in terms of debating a whole variety of amendments, it has been my experience, Mr. Chair, in every single session, whether it be spring or fall, that the government in some fashion or another has either brought in closure or time allotments to ensure that their bills are passed. For the hon. Minister of Education to suggest that the almighty combination of the Wildrose, the NDP, the independent, and the Liberals would prevent the important Bill 2 from being passed would be in my wildest dreams. The reality is that this government, unless it deviates from its previous courses of putting the hammer down in terms of the time left to debate and accusing the members of the opposition of frivolous amendments to interrupt the progress of the almighty Bill 2 – I actually find that rather presumptuous, Mr. Chair.

The education of Alberta students has been a key focus of my life for 34 years. It's been a key focus of the chair of our committee tonight. Fees and the cost of education to parents, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View pointed out, are a hardship. Whether or not we chose an irrelevant section or whether I have been determined to be presumptuous on the passing of this bill, the problem remains that schools fees, as A2 points out, are a hardship. It is our hope that the minister in consultation with the various groups – parents, teachers, students, and school boards – will work towards the elimination of those school fees through the proper funding and investment in education.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for your patience.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I gather by the comments from hon. members opposite that there's some, shall we say, quibbling about calling textbooks, lab equipment, school maintenance, renovation, transportation, or other items tuition fees.

Mr. Hancock: No. The section you're amending has nothing to do with school fees.

Ms Blakeman: It says "tuition," and we're saying "tuition." Well, okay. Thank you for that very much. I appreciate that because, you know, I stood up, and I didn't know what I was going to talk about. Now I do.

Mr. Hancock: That's better than when you talk and you don't know what you're talking about. [interjections]

Ms Blakeman: That's why I'm here, you guys, to wake you all up, get you all focused again on the bill.

That's interesting. Yes, indeed, the section that we're trying to amend is tuition fees. I look at what, for example, is covered under what most of us think of as tuition fees, which are our university fees, our college fees. Even the fees that you're paying as an apprentice when you go back to NAIT or SAIT for that period of schooling time are called tuition fees. Does it include your pass into the sports arena? Yeah, it does. Does it include your student union fees? Yes, it does. Does it include the U-Pass?

Mr. Hancock: Just admit that you have the wrong section on this one and go on to the next one. There's an error made.

Ms Blakeman: No. I'm arguing that we're within our rights to call those tuition fees because that's what they're called everywhere else. It's true. When you went to university, did you pay a tuition fee? Yes, you did, and it included all of those other fees. So we haven't done anything – and, you know, I would never say that Parliamentary Counsel . . . [interjection] Thank you very much, but, you know, I noticed that there was a little mark on the bottom of what was handed out, and that mark is like a gold star. It's like a sheriff's star. It's Parliamentary Counsel, and they allowed us to do this. So I've got to say that I know that they are perfect in every way, and they would never allow me to make a mistake. I'm going to keep on this one because you guys are going to pass it.

One of the things that has been brought to my attention is collections and that school fees are now sent to collection agencies. Somebody phones you or shows up at your door . . .

12:00

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Honestly, I have to rise again on a point of order with respect to relevance.

Point of Order Relevance

Ms Blakeman: And your citation would be?

Mr. Hancock: Relevancy.

Ms Blakeman: The citation is?

Mr. Hancock: It's a relevant citation. [interjections]

Ms Blakeman: No. The number is? [interjections] The citation: I'm sorry; I can't hear it. I'm waiting to hear the citation.

The Deputy Chair: Excuse me, hon. members. I'm hearing somebody trying to say 459, but I'm not sure that's what I heard.

Mr. Hancock: It would be 459, yes.

The Deputy Chair: Of Beauchesne? Proceed with your point of order.

Mr. Hancock: I know it's not appropriate for me to refer to the presence or absence of a member, so I will not. I'd just indicate that the hon. member missed the explanation on the section that says that this section only applies to tuition charged to out-of-country students. I would suggest that there are very few tuition fees sent to a collection agency to collect for unpaid tuition from a student from China. I mean, it just would not be a relevant thing for a school board to do.

This section is about tuition fees for out-of-country students. What you've tried to do is amend it with this amendment to say that it won't include various things. I know from the speeches that were made by other members from the opposition Liberal Party that what they're really talking about is school fees. That's a laudable thing to talk about. We had a wonderful speech except for that last part, where he tried to differentiate between the philosophy of the parties, from Calgary-Mountain View about school fees.

This really is the wrong section for what you've been talking about, and it would be great if we just realized that, voted on it, and moved on to your next amendment, which is probably on the right section you want to amend.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. So it's just a point of clarification at this point, then. In the amendment there are tuition fees, and then there are all these other things that are perhaps normally referred to as school fees. Perhaps, hon. member, you might comment on that.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I would love to, now that I've finally heard a citation out of the Government House Leader.

In response to that, I would refer him to page 620 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice.

It is not always possible to judge the relevance... of a Member's remarks until he or she has spoken at some length or even completed his or her remarks. In practice, the Speaker allows some latitude – if the rules are applied too rigidly, they have the potential for severely curtailing debate.

That, I know, would be just unthinkable, a terrible thing for everybody sitting in this Chamber.

Debate Continued

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Fair enough. Relax. Relax. The error of my ways has been pointed out to me by one of my colleagues here, and indeed we have amended the wrong section. What we really wanted to do was amend I think it was section 57, which was on the school fees. You have to admire us for a good try at it, but we have erred in the reference that we've given and what we've tried to do.

Before we close, however, I do just want to note, taking my latitude, the issue around collections, whether it's for tuition fees or school fees, both of which I think would fall under the same category here. I'm quite concerned to hear that schools are sending tuition and school fees to a collection agency. I know that these are often a hardship for people, especially when they're coming in at about $450 per child. To have someone phoning you and/or showing up at your door, probably phoning you in this day and age, to collect that means that the school has sold the debt. It's not the school that's going to get the money anymore. It's collection agency ABC or XYZ or Triple-A or whatever it is they are going to be called. The school has sold the debt for 10 or 20 cents on the dollar to begin with, and now a collection agency is trying to collect it.

I always have problems when the government sells a debt to a collection agency because at that point they've given up on it. I don't know why they allow a collection agency to then hound an individual, especially around the collection of school fees, which I should have referred to in this amendment in an entirely different section.

Given that, I'm going to take my seat and let you vote on this.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other speakers to amendment A2? If not, is the House ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back to the Committee of the Whole discussion on Bill 2.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. No surprise to you, I have another amendment. I'll distribute this. I'm keeping the health of our security personnel in mind. I know it's good to get up and move around every now and then so that you don't get leg clots, so ever mindful of you, I'm going to hand out these amendments and talk about them.

This amendment is near and dear to my heart, and I guess this will now be called...

The Deputy Chair: Amendment A3. I was just going to clarify for the House as it's being distributed that this will be amendment A3. If you'd like to read it into the record while it's being distributed, that would be helpful.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. I'd love to do that. Let's hope I amended the right section. This is actually under my colleague's name. On behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo I would like to move that Bill 2, the Education Act, be amended by adding the following after section 16, which is appearing on page 29 if anyone is following along at home or indeed here in the Chamber:

16.1(1) A board shall provide notice to a parent or guardian of a student where courses, programs of study or instructional materials, or instruction or exercises, prescribed under this Act include subject matter that deals primarily and explicitly with religion, human sexuality or sexual orientation.

For any of you that were around a few years ago, this is going to ring a bell because, in fact, this is what we would usually recognize as section 11.1 under the infamous Bill 44. Now, you'll remember that I talked a lot about Bill 44 when it was before the Assembly. Part of it was because I was so incensed that this particular section would be under the human rights code. It more rightly belongs under the Education Act. That's where it should be. It's about education. It wasn't about human rights.

If you actually follow along behind it, this is talking about and reinforcing the ability of parents to pull their children out and the requirement of school boards or schools to provide alternate educational materials for students whose parents have opted them out of particular classes. Now, I would rather see this entire clause burn in hell out of both acts because I just think it is inappropriate from the get-go. We already have protections in the old School

Act and in this current Education Act. [interjection] I don't know. Maybe it's all the Biblical references I've been hearing today.

12:10

You know, we already had protections in the old act and in the new act to allow parents to remove their children if they were uncomfortable with the subject matter. That was already in there. This section, what was 11.1 and that now I'm trying to add in under section 16, was overkill and was entirely inappropriate in that at the same time as we were trying to do what the courts had ordered for us under the Vriend decision – I'll just pause here, and we'll do a little historical vignette just to remind everybody.

In 1996 or so we had a young gay man who was working as a lab assistant, I believe, or as a lab instructor at The King's College here in Edmonton. When his sexual orientation became common knowledge for the school, they fired him. The young man tried to take his complaint about being fired to the Human Rights Commission here in Alberta. The Human Rights Commission said: sorry; we can't hear your case. He took that up to the appeal boards and all the way through all of the court proceedings to the Supreme Court saying that he should have protection against discrimination for the areas that are generally covered, that being employment, housing, and access to government programs and services. He was not given access to a government program and service, that being the Human Rights Commission. In fact, the Human Rights Commission's comeback on that was: we don't have that written on our list.

Earlier this afternoon we were talking about how important lists are when you get into constitutions, charters, and writing out legislation. If there's a list and you're not on the list, your particular section or whatever you're concerned about, if your thing is not on that list, it's not there. It's not covered. It's either not empowered, or it's not protected. That's what the Alberta Human Rights Commission was saying: "Hey, we can't help you. Because sexual orientation is not a protected ground under our human rights code, we couldn't help you."

What happened was that the Supreme Court did two things. One, they said: "Yes, it is. Sexual orientation is covered under the Charter because the Charter is a living document, and it has been expanded to take in sexual orientation as protected grounds." They went one step further, which they've never done in any other Supreme Court ruling. I'm going to do a little Laurie Blakeman paraphrasing here. They did not trust the government to actually write it in, so they said: "We are going to read it in. We're going to go on as though it is written there, and it will be a protected ground from now on. Furthermore, Alberta government, hop to it and actually write it in because it's read in as of now."

So the Alberta government, in its usual turtlelike rush towards inclusion and diversity in this province, took about 13 years, and they came up with Bill 44, which was to add sexual orientation specifically under the human rights code onto that list of protected grounds. Snaillike: maybe that was a better description because it leaves that slimy little thing. [interjection] Oh, I'm sorry: slug trails.

Anyway, we got to this wonderful moment when the Alberta government actually had legislation up where they were going to include this, and they did put it in. Then they included this horrible clause, which was just so misguided and backwards and evil.

An Hon. Member: Evil?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, it was evil.

Mr. Chase: Satanic.

Ms Blakeman: No. I didn't say that. Uh-uh. I didn't say that.

There we were on the one hand saying: "Okay. You're in, folks. We protect you." On the other hand we're saying: oh, well, actually, no. Whenever any discussion of sexual orientation comes up, so the very grounds that we're now saying that you're protected on – "You're in; you crossed to the right side of the street, kids" – we're now going to go ahead and say: "No, not quite the right side of the street. Any parent that wants to yank you out of school because that word is mentioned can do it." Huh? Left hand, right hand. Give, take. Two steps forward, four steps back. That's exactly what this clause was. So, overall, this whole clause is evil, evil, evil.

However, I am not in the party that won the most seats, and the party that won the most seats got to pass Bill 44, so I'm going to try and fix this because this should not be in the human rights code. It should be in the education code. It has one hundred per cent to do with education, not to do with human rights, so put it in the right place. If you have to have this here, as evil a thing as I think this is, please put it in the right place because it's embarrassing at a minimum and horrific at a maximum to have this in entirely the wrong act. Other countries, other provinces look at us and go: "Huh? Why on earth would they put it there? I don't know." But these are my wonderful colleagues in the Legislative Assembly, so I'm giving you the opportunity to correct this wrong and put it in the right place because, I mean, it does refer entirely to education.

So we had the first bit about how a board has to provide notice to a parent if there are instructional materials, programs of study which deal primarily and explicitly with religion, human sexuality, or sexual orientation. Then it goes on:

Where a teacher or another person providing instruction, teaching a course or program of study or using the instructional materials referred to in subsection (1), which I just described to you, receives a written request [from] a parent or a guardian of a student that the student should be excluded from the instruction, course, program of study . . . the teacher or other person shall in accordance with the request permit the student to leave the class and take something else. Sorry. Subsection (a) is just to leave the class or the program or not read that material and get something else taught to them or to remain in the class but not take part in the actual instruction.

Once again, is anybody hearing anything about the human rights code in this? No. You're hearing about class, study, teachers, boards. Is any of this ringing a bell here, folks? It's about education. So if this is what you want – and you all said that it was – then put it in the right place.

The last section, section (3), was the saviour clause, the Hail Mary clause that you guys put in when I was able to stand up and say that you couldn't teach biology under the first things you'd done because, you know, what those worms get up to would essentially qualify this clause to be brought into being. So you put in the Hail Mary clause, which is:

This section does not apply to incidental or indirect references to religion, religious themes, human sexuality or sexual orientation in a course, program of study, instruction or exercises or in the use of instruction materials.

You know, that was: ha, ha, Laurie; now be quiet because we solved your problem.

Finally, the last part of this amendment, which I am moving, by the way, is:

- (b) in section 263 [of the act] by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:
- (2) Section 11.1 is repealed.

Boy, you get into a lot of numbers in this game, don't you? Okay. Section 11.1 is repealed, which means it's taken out of the Human Rights Act and put into the Education Act, which is where it should be.

12:20

I'm asking you to do the right thing here. You know I wasn't keen on what you did in the first place. I still don't like it any more than I did, but at least if you could put it in the right place, please, so when people go looking for it, at the very minimum, it's going to be where they expect to find it. You've still got it, but please put it where it should be, and get it out of the Human Rights Act.

Now, I did supply this to the minister in advance because often the government members say: "Well, gee, Laurie, if you just would have given it to us in advance, we could have talked about it in caucus, and maybe we might have passed it." So I did, and I had a very nice letter back from him today saying: nice try, Laurie, but, no. But I'm still going to bring this before you and move it and say: "Please consider this. Please do this. Please do the right thing because, well, there are a number of reasons."

I think it would take a black mark away from what this province did in doing that give with the right and take with the left, or one step forward and two steps back, or however you want to describe it. It would take that away, and it would allow us to move forward. I bet I could even get support from the Wildrose because it would still be there; it would just be in the right place.

Mr. Anderson: Unlikely.

Ms Blakeman: Well, let's try it because I think this is important; I really do. I mean, I'm cheerful and I'm smiling and I've got a nice tone of voice here, and I'm not calling you expletive-deleted phrases. I'm trying to be warm and friendly. But I really think this is the right thing to do. I have come in here today to . . .

Mr. Chase: To save their reputation.

Ms Blakeman: Well, my colleague is suggesting that I came in here to save your reputation. No, I didn't. I came in here to ask you to do the right thing.

This is something that was very important to you. I understand that in your caucus there was a great deal of discussion, and it was an agreement that you came to that you really wanted this clause. I'm saying: "Okay. If you really have to have it, which I think you shouldn't, please put it in the right act." To continue on with this – you've all heard it. I've read it out. Anybody who is watching the live streaming at home or who reads this in Hansard afterwards will understand that this is entirely about education and teaching and course materials, and it belongs in the Education Act, not in the Human Rights Act.

I know that somebody on the other side earlier today did stand up and say that we have had – maybe it was the previous minister – absolutely no complaints brought forward under this. Fair enough. I don't think that's a judgment of whether or not this section is in the right bill. You can still bring complaints forward if you want to. It will still have the same effect if you put it in the Education Act. But, really, I think that's where it should be.

It's 25 after 12 on Thursday morning. I understand that, you know, we're not as bad as the Americans, so we can all be grateful for that, where they get into all these tag-ons – is that the word for it? – add-ons or tag-ons with their budgets and things.

Now I've got people on the other side signalling how many minutes I have left. It's okay; I have a timer. Don't worry about me. That's all right. I appreciate the concern.

But I think this whole thing came about wrongly. You know, this was a compromise. Whatever decision you guys came to in your caucus, fine, but don't compound that by putting it and leaving it in the wrong place. It's inefficient, it makes for crappy legislation, it makes for court cases, and I hate that kind of inefficiency.

I love that perfection of writing a good bill and having everything where it should be. It's a thing of beauty. It has motion to it. I hate it when this government screws that up, when they do stuff and I tell them, "This is going to be a constitutional challenge" and they go, "No, it won't; we do it perfectly." And, sure enough, it rolls around, and it's a constitutional challenge. That bugs me because then you guys use taxpayers' money to go to court to defend your stupid thing.

Okay. Let it go, Laurie; let it go. Please don't make me do that to you again when you could be doing what is correct by way of drafting a legal document, which is what this act is, correct in the moral sense that it is where it should be and not in the wrong place. This act could be thing of beauty, but it's not, so please approve this amendment.

Thank you very much for being fairly good listeners to me tonight. A few people are drifting off and there are a couple of conversations, but generally you listened to me, and I appreciate that because you don't always.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has the floor next.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much for this opportunity. I want to dedicate A3 and my standing up upon the request of the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, who asked that I rise to the rescue. So I have risen. Oh, that's rather a Biblical expression.

Ms Blakeman: Rescue? Point of order.

Point of Order Clarification

The Deputy Chair: Citation?

Ms Blakeman: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j).

Excuse me, Member, but there is no need of rescuing here. If you want to get up and debate this, get up and debate it. But you don't need to impugn any motives toward me as needing rescuing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, do you wish to comment?

